A FEW REQUESTS.

*Our Father grants
Us still another year, just coming in.*—David H. Smith.

With this issue we begin the work of another year. Just what we shall accomplish remains to be seen; but in common with others we aspire to do a great deal of good and to do no wrong.

We are very earnest advocates of the idea once expressed by the apostle Paul, to the effect that we are all laborers together with God. That means a united and concerted activity in which God and all his true followers participate.

One man can do but a small part of this work; and no man can do any part of it without God's help, or when he pits his strength against God and against his brethren.

When we put our shoulders to the wheel, as it is so often expressed, we must do so simultaneously with others; and we must all urge the chariot forward in one general direction, and that must be the direction in which "our God is marching on."

When we fly at obstacles we must endeavor to make the point of our impact such that it will not interfere with others whose zeal, integrity, and wisdom equal our own.

In a word, the power of each individual should be expended in strictly concerted action with all other individuals of the organization and with the Great Commander—even as in a well-drilled army.

We recognize that the Editors of the HERALD are but individuals among many laborers. That is the very point we wish to make—that we are among those who labor together with one great aim in view.

As such we are entitled to the same spiritual guidance which is promised to others.

So we want to say to you at the beginning of this new year that we desire to be thought of and remembered the same as other ministers are thought of and remembered.

We often hear prayers in behalf of the preachers but on only one or two occasions have we ever heard the Editors of the church publications remembered in prayer.

Yet every week they address a larger audience than is reached by any one elder—perhaps larger than is reached by many elders. Their sermons are down in black and white, beyond revision or recall, to be quoted by future generations. More than that, perforce they are made in a sense judges of other men's work. Of the multitude of manuscripts coming to them, some must be accepted and some must be rejected. Space would not permit the publication of all, even if no other considerations entered into the case; and every man who ever sat at the editor's desk a single week knows that space is not the only factor to be considered, however much he might wish it were. Such judgment as the editor has, be it good or bad, average, below the average, or above the average, he must use. When in doubt, like other ministers he ought to be able to say, "Lord, what shall I do?" When his decision is finally made it ought to be conceded that no unworthy motives have determined its nature; if an error is made it is an error of the brain and not of the heart.

What is described as the ghastliest wreck of the year occurred December 30, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, at Terra Cotta, only about three miles from Washington, District of Columbia. Thirty-five are reported killed. Eight empty passenger-cars collided with a heavily loaded passenger-train.

Certain much-to-be-desired results and conditions are made dependent upon the army of the Lord becoming very great and very terrible. Possibly that means very great in numbers; certainly it means very great in spiritual strength.

It is the work of the HERALD to help reach those yet in the world, be they few or many, who are willing to become members of that army. It is also our work to help those already enlisted that they may obtain that soldierly precision, endurance, and invincibility which make even a small army great and terrible.

Those who are acting as recruiting-officers, enlisting men and women, and those who are placed as drill-masters, to instruct and teach the recruits, should cooperate with us and we with them. We can help each other by an exchange of ideas. If one laborer discovers an improved way of doing work, it is public property. And if one elder or branch succeeds wonderfully in attracting and reaching people, while Folly may whisper, "Envy them!" Wisdom says, "Study their methods; they may help you." That is why we have taken considerable pains to advertise through the HERALD and Autumn Leaves any especially successful work which came to our notice. It is an incentive.

A man may say, "I have delivered my message; my duty is done." But his duty is not done, if it be true that by a great deal of careful thought he might have made the delivery of his message more convincing and soul-stirring.

We desire that the church paper should maintain a high spiritual plane, dispensing true instruction, consolation, and admonition. There are some things to be avoided as well as some things to be done if we would accomplish that, and as a possible help we express some wishes in the matter.

We would request that the nature of the HERALD as a religious publication be not forgotten. Do not write advocating the interests of some particular political party or directing the Saints to vote for some particular party. Obviously the church is not publishing a political paper.

We would also request that you do not attempt to attack some particular political party or parties through these columns. We have members of all parties in the church, and some one or many will resent every such attack.

We repeat that the HERALD is a church publication and it will not be dragged into the political arena to be used as a weapon of aggression or of defense.

In the religious field we desire to secure an expression of ideas without contention. We request that you do not write in reply to individuals. Express your own ideas on any particular subject without reference to others. If Bro. A writes on the subject of consecration, for instance, and Bro. B differs from him, let Bro. B write out his own ideas absolutely without reference to Bro. A or his article. It can be done in most cases; and thus the church will secure the views of both men without the appearance, real or imagined, of controversy; and without arraying Bro. A and B against each other in open debate in such a way that each feels it his duty to get the last word. Prolonged and useless discussion will thus be avoided.

If in the course of your travels you find some branch that might properly be benefited by severe castigation, we request that you make your charges to the branch, through its presiding officers or personally in a public branch meeting. Do not send the evil report to the HERALD to be scattered broadcast where it will be remembered perhaps long after the branch has reformed.

If some of the ministry who come your way fail to conduct themselves properly, do not send your complaint to the HERALD; make your charges to the man's quorum or to his missionary-in-charge or to such tribunal as is indicated in the law.

In any case be slow to administer the gall and wormwood; be swift to pour in the wine and oil.

The man who would break the bread of life for general distribution must be careful or in his case the Devil will reverse the miracle which was demanded of Christ and will turn his loaves into stones.

The preaching-service is introduced with prayer, and God is asked to send his Spirit to inspire the speaker. When the sermon is ended the benediction is pronounced and God is asked to bless the words spoken. Would it not be well for the writer to pray for light before he begins his article, to refrain from teaching by the written word when the Spirit is not given, and finally when the article is finished to invoke God's blessing to go with it?

Our best wishes are with the ministry, whether traveling or local; and with that great army of workers who have no conference appointment yet who are none the less laboring with God. Religious workers, Sunday-school workers, workers in the ladies' aid societies, singers, organists, cup-bearers, care-takers, may God bless them as well as the Twelve, the Seventies, and all the others by him set in the church.

This is an excellent season for us all to take stock. The merchant does that at the beginning of the year. He makes a careful accounting. Otherwise he courts ruin. It is not enough that his sign is brightly painted and that he is busily running from counter to cellar. Is he making any gain?

So with the church-member. The fact that his name is written in the church record and that he seems rather busy in church-work should not satisfy him. He should examine himself and prepare for the future.

Like the business which keeps an extremely wide margin of safety so as to be ready for any panic or stringency which may come, he should fortify himself for any trial which the year may hold.

"For its lips refuse to tell,
Of the joy or grief it brings;
Whether its song has a major swell,
Or moans in the minor strings."

A WARNING TO THE SAINTS.

It is not often that we feel called upon to warn the Saints in regard to individuals. But now and then it seems advisable to do so.

Bro. W. P. Robinson, of the field in Wisconsin, under date of December 17, informs us that one Albert Blakely, of Chicago, Illinois, and whose street address is No. 773 West Sixty-sixth Street, is circulating a pamphlet, purporting to be a revelation, and headed, "Thus Sayeth The Lord," and dated at Chicago, August 29, 1906. This pamphlet closes with a request: "Come and help Us."

The article purporting to be a revelation is a crude affair. Addressing some body of people, it does so in the following strain:

"I, the Lord, have heard thy petitions, I know thy heart and according to thy firm decree to do my will so will I, the Lord, your God, council with thee; yea, the council of high Heaven shall be given thee and through my chosen servant whom I cause to write these things unto you, for he shall not speak anything save the things which shall be given him or which I, the Lord shall command him."

This installs this man Albert Blakely as a new revelator, and as such he proceeds to scatter this pamphlet, as Bro. Robinson writes, among the isolated ones, whom Bro. Robinson fears may be disturbed and possibly perplexed.

We can have no possible objection to the Lord speaking to his people through any one, or many, as he may choose; but he having set "some in the church," to whom he has admonished us that he would manifest himself in behalf of and for the benefit of the church, we are warranted in declining to give such self-seekers of place spiritual credence, or support. And in order that the Saints may know who this man is, so that if they choose to hearken to him they will have none to blame but themselves if he fails to make good his pretensions, we state of him that a few years ago he was expelled from the church, by due process of church law and procedure; and that up to date he has not been restored to membership; nor can he be so restored until the branch directly concerned shall be satisfied that he is again worthy of fellowship. He and his wife were at Independence, Missouri, some time this last summer, staying in the city for about two weeks, as they informed us; but we neither saw, nor heard of their being here until the last day of their stay, when they called to see us and had a short talk, leaving one of these pamphlets with us. We thought at the time that if there was anything of worth in the message which they bore, and the wife seemed to be as much as the husband, it was due us and the Saints that some evidence of the message should be granted to us. However, no evidence has been vouchsafed to us, hence we warn the Saints, gathered or isolated, that they be neither disturbed nor moved in mind in regard to this message, for it is of that number against which the Savior warned the disciples, as found in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew:

"Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect."—Matthew 24: 23, 24.

The Saints should be of the "elect," and therefore they will not be deceived, nor disturbed by this man or any others coming in a similar manner.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

The Philadelphia Bulletin comments on the experience of certain politicians, as follows:

I
Man in congress,
Great chap.
Voice of thunder,
Heap scrap.

II
Caught in landslide,
Clean sweep.
No more congress,
Scrap heap.

A clash between blacks and whites occurred at Scooba, Mississippi, on Christmas Day. Several lives were lost. These episodes occur almost daily. The great Civil War did not settle the negro question, and perhaps never at any time since the close of that war has it seemed more full of sinister threat than it does now.

The Salt Lake Tribune comments on the return of Heber J. Grant, one of the Mormon apostles, to Salt Lake City. His return was rather unobtrusive. A warrant for arrest for unlawful cohabitation has been hanging over his head for two years. He was visible at Cheyenne and declared that he was glad to be within hailing distance of Zion, but for reasons above stated he failed to hail as he drew near to Salt Lake.

In a speech before the Nebraska State Teachers' Association, at Lincoln, Nebraska, December 26, Senator Beveridge declared: "There are, at a low estimate, a half million children under fourteen years of age at work in cotton-mills, glass-factories, sweat-shops, mines, and other like industries. Those whom such toil does not kill, are being literally ruined for citizenship. We are turning out, at a low estimate, two hundred thousand adult London 'Hooligans' every year, and these become in turn parents of hundreds of thousands of other degenerates, and so this civic pestilence riots and spreads.

"It has got to be stopped—if not for the sake of those children themselves, then for our own sake; if not for common humanity, then for the sake of the republic's safety. For this republic is based on citizenship. We can not sow winds to-day without reaping the whirlwind to-morrow."

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Branches, Sunday-schools, and Religio locals, before whom the elders have taught the Word of Wisdom, never offer plug tobacco, cigarettes, or beer for sale at fairs or socials. Why not give further honor to our instructors and remove hot drinks from the bill of fare, and also meats, excepting in times of cold or famine?

The HERALD editors have received news items from the Omaha Branch, but unfortunately the name of the correspondent was not given. Come again, Omaha, and do not forget to "sign up."

We are advised that Bro. U. W. Greene is severely afflicted with abscess of the stomach. Relief was to be sought through prayer and administration at an appointed hour, Sunday, December 30.

Elder E. A. Stedman reports large audiences at Crescent, Iowa.

So many letters have come to hand during the holiday season that some are unavoidably crowded out.

News From Branches

ADELAIDE, SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

Adelaide Branch is outside the limits of any organized district of the church, Adelaide (the city) being nearly five hundred miles westward from Melbourne, the capital of Victoria.

The first real mission work for our church was commenced here in the year 1903.

We came here under the direction of Apostles J. W. Wight and C. A. Butterworth, both of whom have visited this city and labored a month apiece. Brn. Mackie and P. M. Hanson of the Seventy have also labored in this mission for periods of five months and one month respectively.

Our progress at first was slow, but it has become more rapid each successive year. During the first year's labor only three accepted the gospel. The second year five obeyed. The third year eight, and the fourth (present) year twenty persons. These figures will no doubt interest Bro. J. W. Wight should they catch his eye.

We have a Sunday-school of about fifty scholars, which has already furnished several candidates for baptism.

The branch is officered by wise and capable men, who are doing their best during the limited spare hours at their disposal to push forward the work of God.

It is gratifying to note the steady yearly increase in our numbers, and it is a proof of what may be done by steady, plodding work in the heart of a city.

When the writer and wife came here we had only about four friends in this city of one hundred and seventy thousand inhabitants. Ofttimes the wife held the street torch while the writer preached to hostile crowds, and it seemed for a time that we would never break down the opposition and secure converts, but by persistent labor on street, in parks, and in halls we have at length, with God's blessing and the assistance of the before-named brethren, and also the aid of a noble band of local workers, succeeded in planting Zion's flag firmly in the "city of churches."

Much has appeared in your columns lately concerning the duties of the traveling ministry; seemingly some have the idea that a seventy is not doing his duty unless he is continually on the move from place to place. My experience teaches me that "circumstances alter cases." When a lone missionary is set down in a city of two hundred thousand inhabitants, he does not need to travel much, for even if left there for "the term of his natural life," on street-corner and from house to house, he can, if he desires, find fresh people every day. If he travels it simply means that he is occupying time and spending money that could be far more profitably used. I was one time a fisherman, and it was quite an understood thing among us (fishermen) that if a man did a lot of traveling he did little real fishing. You can not make a journey and fish at one and the same time. You must stop and make preparation to cast your net and if you "strike" fish the best thing to do is to remain "right there," as you Americans say, and work, work, work so long as you are getting a payable quantity.

In this country one has to pay at the rate of about five shillings and upwards per night for a place to preach in, and if he can not advertise extensively, which would involve him in a further sum, there is little chance of success; so traveling from place to place under such conditions would be simply waste effort. We must work from a center, or base, and I feel assured that as the center increases in numbers its circumference or sphere of influence will widen. In this way and in this alone can we (in this country) hope for success. When some of the brethren scatter from the city to country places, and form a base of operations, then, other conditions being equal, we may safely and successfully move out.

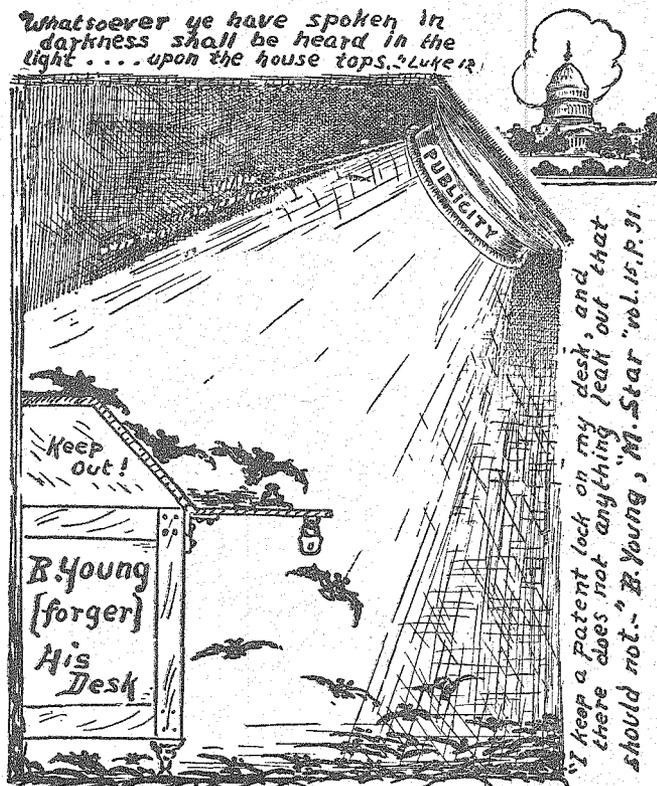

J. H. N. JONES.

BRIGHAM YOUNG; HIS DESK.

DARK SECRETS OF THE PAST ARE EXPOSED IN THE BRIGHT LIGHT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER.

Drawn by Elbert A. Smith.

The doctrine of monogamy was torn from the book of Doctrine and Covenants, and the doctrine of polygamy inserted in its stead. . . . In order to induce his followers more readily to accept this infamous doctrine, Brigham Young himself invoked the name of Joseph Smith, the martyr, whom many sincerely believed to be a true prophet, and ascribed to him the reception of a revelation from the Almighty in 1843, commanding the Saints to take unto themselves a multiplicity of wives.—Senator Burrows, before the United States Senate, December 11, 1906.

CALLED TO THEIR OWN FUNERAL.

Ministers have often resorted to unusual methods in order to arouse their parishioners, and the advertising which fills theaters and circus-tents has often been used to advantage. Among the many peculiar devices to arouse an interest in church-work the one used by a Methodist minister at Bluffton, Indiana, is not without its unique features. Discouraged by the lack of interest in church-work in his community, and having exhausted the usual means of bringing the unheeding ones to a realization of their duty, the minister went to the church at an early hour one Sunday evening and began tolling the bell. Immediately people gathered to learn who had passed into the great beyond. The minister remarked that while he knew of no one who had physically died recently, he knew of a great many who were morally and spiritually dead, and it was for these that he tolled the bell. A number of those who gathered to learn the news admitted that they belonged on the roster of the deceased and expressed a desire for a resurrection.—The Commoner, December 21, 1906.

THE MISSIONARY, HIS WIFE AND FAMILY.

"I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord.
Over mountain or plain or sea.
I'll say what you want me to say, dear Lord.
I'll be what you want me to be."

So sang the assembly at General Conference two years ago, after the appointments of the missionary staff had been read. I saw the tears course their way down the cheeks of our beloved President as he sat facing his brethren of the ministry as he sensed the importance of the agreement between God's servants and their Master, the Captain of their salvation, voiced in song. I saw strong, stalwart men convulsed with emotion as they too listened to and sensed the importance of the promise thus made, and at the close of those strains there was a moment or two of solemn quietude which no one seemed willing to break.

How far the mind can travel in a moment of time! What a combination of circumstances will surge through the mind as momentous questions confront us! The solemn obligations that bound those men to their Master, the church, and their fellow man made the occasion one of serious thought. There was to follow this the departure of the husband and father from his home, leaving there his wife and family to struggle without him; he to face whatever of trial and test awaited him in his duties to the church and to his God. He enters upon his year's work with feelings of hope, joy, peace, assurance, fear, apprehension, or dispondency, regulated largely by the home conditions he leaves behind. If the sacrifice thus made is a mutual one, and temporal conditions are such that no very serious questions arise as to the making of both ends meet, and the children are fairly loyal to home and mother, the heart of the pilgrim is fairly light. But if the reverse of this obtains, there is a possibility that the step is less firm and the heart somewhat heavy. The church allowance figures very prominently in the conditions thus existing, and no one but the missionary and family knows where the shoe pinches in this matter.

I have heard hints of extravagance when a missionary's wife or child has appeared in a new dress, suit of clothes, or hat; and that too from those who were decked in the finest attire. I have seen the missionary's wife and children time and time again going to their meeting clothed in ill-fitting garments worn by others attending the same meeting until they were cast aside and handed over to the missionary's wife. And not until the children had grown up and could earn their own living did they know what a new garment was, or with few exceptions. But through the kindness of Saints handing over their cast-off clothes, and the skill, tact, and hard work of "mother" the children have been kept at school until the children would commit the sin of asking for a new dress or suit of clothes like "Bessie" or "Johnnie" is wearing, and there had gone out the alarm—look at the extravagance of that missionary's family.

Tell it, you thoughtless ones, where the possibility of extravagance comes in from a missionary's allowance. I think the church has guarded itself well against extravagance along this line. I believe each understands his home affairs as well as does his neighbor who may live fifty miles from his home. I will give a few figures and facts from my own experience.

My family allowance is forty dollars per month. Our family at home is wife and four children, with an occasional visit from the missionary or father. Rent is twenty-two dollars per month, leaving the enormous sum of eighteen dollars to uphold the extravagance of the family for thirty and one half days. The coal-bill for the winter averages ten dollars and fifty cents per month. There is then left seven dollars and fifty cents for the month's expenses, or a trifle less than twenty-five cents per day to feed and clothe the family and meet other incidental expenses. Three of our children are working and paying their board. The one is at school and should be kept there for at least four years. Ours are good children, and are sharing the burdens of their mother.

Now if accusations of extravagance reach the ears of the elder's children who are growing into usefulness in the church and from whom the church may look some day for its defenders, can you wonder if under such conditions these boys should say, "Mother, I will never be a missionary. If I marry I will never bring my wife to this kind of life."

The church is perhaps doing all it can; but this "missionary basis," so called, needs a revision. Where a missionary lives in or near a city where rents are very high and every other commodity in proportion, it makes the allowance a very serious matter.

Some of our useful men have been forced to quit the field, and have borne unjust blame and criticism for so doing, when no alternative presented itself.

Saints, do not make heavy burdens unbearable by unwise and unjust criticism. Do a little more visiting of the "widows and fatherless," (for the missionary's families come under that heading,) and "bear ye one another's burdens and thus fulfill the law of Christ."

Then the missionaries will be able to sing without so much apprehension, "I'll go where you want me to go."

ONE OF THEM.

"THE REORGANIZED CHURCH VS. SALVATION FOR THE DEAD."—LETTER No. 3.

LAMONI, IOWA, November 28, 1906.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother: Mr. Joseph F. Smith, Jr., after having used nine pages of his pamphlet in striving to show the consistency in the church which he represents with the result set forth in my two preceding letters, comes on the tenth page to the point indicated by the title of his book, and makes the following statements and quotation:

Having shown the consistency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints with regard to the doctrine of salvation for the dead; and having shown that the keys of this work, and all other keys pertaining to the salvation of mankind have continued with the Church, we will now consider the attitude of the "Reorganization" in relation to this grand and eternal principle of the redemption of the dead.

At first the founders of the "Reorganized" church appeared to favor it and declared that when the "Reorganization" was established that this principle would be practiced, for as the "rejection of the church produced an effect on the dead," said they, "as well as on the living, so will the reorganization." But when the "reorganization" took place the change that was promised in regard to the dead was not fulfilled, and since that time to the present day—over forty-five years—baptism for the dead, Temple building and Temple work, have never been, by that organization, practiced or entertained. In fact they have turned about face and have rejected peremptorily the doctrine of baptism for the dead and now declare that it is not binding on them.

In a resolution adopted by that church, April 9, 1886, the following startling declaration was made: "That as to the alleged 'Temple building and ceremonial endowments therein,' that we know of no Temple building, except as edifices wherein to worship God, and no endowment except the endowment of the Holy Spirit of the kind experienced by the early saints on Pentecost day.

"'Baptism for the dead' referred to belongs to those local questions of which the body has said by resolution:

"'That the commandments of a local character, given to the first organization of the church are binding on the Reorganization only so far as they are either reiterated or referred to as binding by commandment to this church.' And that principle has neither been reiterated nor referred to as a commandment."

In February, 1904, the president of that "organization" declared that baptism for the dead was a permissive rite, and that it was taken from the Church, "and if subsequently it was to be engaged in," said he, "and enjoyed by the same people, it must be restored again by revelation and command, and could not be assumed as being held over by suffrance. We do not know of any revelation or command authoritatively promulgated renewing the privilege."

Mr. Smith here admits that the Reorganized Church at an early date declared that the reorganization would affect the dead as the rejection of the church had previously affected them; but after making this admission, with unpardonable lack of courtesy he undertakes to define what the Reorganized Church believes, and that, too, in opposition to the declared statement of the church which he himself quotes. To support his assumption that the Reorganized Church has turned about face and "rejected peremptorily the doctrine of baptism for the dead," he quotes a resolution adopted in 1886. This is a part of a report of a committee appointed to consider the proposition of certain parties who wished to withdraw from the church; and as these parties had made criticism upon the doctrines of ceremonial endowments, the building of temples and baptism for the dead, and so forth, the church by adopting the report of this committee declared that they knew of no temple-building except as edifices wherein to worship God. Would Mr. Smith have us to understand that temples were built for any other purpose than that of worshipping God? The church further declared that they knew of no endowment except the endowment of the Holy Spirit. Would Mr. Smith have us believe that there were other endowments than those accompanied by the Holy Spirit of God? The church does not say in the adoption of this report that they believe in no ceremonies connected with it; but state as to the alleged temple-building and ceremonial endowments, that they believe the temples were for certain purposes, and the endowment was the endowment of the Holy Spirit. Of course that there are ceremonies connected with the endowment is understood; nor is there a word in the resolution against them. The church also by adopting this report declare that they believe that baptism for the dead referred to belongs to the local questions. And is this not true? It will be conceded that in no other place except Nauvoo, Illinois, was baptism for the dead practiced during the lifetime of the Seer; and Mr. Joseph F. Smith, Jr., and his associates, will now locate the places for performing this ordinance where temples are built which they recognize as being such. It is not now, nor never has been a commandment to be carried into effect in a general way, or in every place where the gospel is preached. While the baptism of converts is provided for wherever an administrator may be, baptism for the dead is localized in places appointed for the purpose.

In the adoption of this report the church further declares that this commandment is not binding upon the Reorganized Church until by direction of God the time and place are designated for its performance.

The people in Utah did not practice this principle until they had a place which they accepted as a place dedicated of the Lord for the purpose; and, if Mr. Joseph F. Smith, Jr., is correct, not until a commandment of God was given to them. As before quoted on page 7, the first commandment to them from the Lord was to build a temple to his name, where the ordinances of salvation for the living and for the dead should be performed. This was after they arrived in the valleys of the mountains; and they had suspended the practice until such command was given and such place appointed, so that really they occupy the same ground that the Reorganized Church does, only they have accepted, according to Mr. Smith, a revelation which the Reorganized Church has never had the privilege of seeing; and which Brigham Young declared did not exist. The real issue, then, is not when and how and where to perform this ordinance, but it is on the revelation said to exist somewhere, but we have not even a citation as to its location.

Mr. Smith goes on to criticize a statement made by yourself in SAINTS' HERALD for February 17, 1904, which declares that baptism for the dead is a permissive rite, but fails to give your qualifying words in connection with that statement, but leaves them out of his quotation entirely. Your statement was as follows:

"Baptizing for the dead was a permissive rite; or to write more plainly, the church was permitted by the Lord to baptize for the dead under certain rules."

If Mr. Smith had quoted what you declare more plainly expressed your thought than the words that he did quote, he would have understood that there were certain rules governing at the time under which they were permitted to operate, that were temporary in their character; and as you set forth in this article, these certain rules admitted of baptisms for the dead in the river. I think Mr. Smith will admit that baptizing for the dead under certain rules was permissive and not mandatory; for as I understand you, you do not take the position that baptism for the dead would not be mandatory when the temple was built and dedicated; for you state that "after the completion of the temple, baptisms for the dead were to be performed in it."

What seems strange is that Mr. Joseph F. Smith, Jr., before offering his criticism on your statement that it was permissive, makes the same statement himself (see pages 6 and 7 of his book) where he says:

After the Church settled in Nauvoo, baptism for the dead was instituted, the Lord, at first, permitting the ordinance to be performed in the Mississippi River, but later revealing to the Saints that the proper place for this and other rites for the salvation of the dead, must be performed in a temple built purposely for such ordinances, and that only in times of their extreme poverty could these ordinances be performed elsewhere by his people.

After the quotation at the beginning of this letter, Mr. Smith says that by your acknowledgment baptism was not to be practiced at the present time, or until commanded, that you thereby admit that you do not hold the keys of this work, and that they can be received only by revelation, but just a few lines after he affirms that the Twelve received them in 1844, and yet they waited, according to Mr. Smith, until they were commanded before performing this ordinance, and that command came to them after they reached the valleys of the mountains. Did the Twelve admit that they did not hold the keys because there was a time when they did not perform the ordinance? If not, why take the position that you so admit, because you were not performing the ordinance until commanded of God to do so?

Mr. Smith, after defining for us what we believe, and quoting the resolutions inserted in this letter, and your statement that it was a permissive rite, and so forth, goes on to prove that the Lord ordained the ordinance of baptism for the dead, which we have not denied; nor can the quotations which he uses be construed into a denial. He conveniently, however, fails to notice a resolution of the Quorum of Twelve, in 1892, published on page 17 of the conference minutes for that year, and which reads as follows:

Whereas, inquiry is being made concerning the teaching and practice of baptism for the dead, and, Whereas, we understand that the observance of said ordinance was prohibited for a time, by command of the Spirit, Resolved that as a quorum we put ourselves on record as being ready to promulgate the doctrine as soon as the Lord shall so direct and enlighten us as to time, place, and conditions for its observance.

This defines the position of one of the leading quorums of the church, and this quorum is doubtless better qualified to represent the position of the body than is Joseph F. Smith, Jr. It may be that Mr. Joseph F. Smith, Jr., has not seen this resolution, and therefore has been misled into error. But had he possessed a proper sense of courtesy and propriety, he would have inquired what the position of the Reorganized Church is, of some authorized representative, instead of trying to define it himself. The question now is, will he stand corrected when he does see it and acknowledge that he misunderstood the Reorganized Church when he stated that they had turned about face, rejected peremptorily the doctrine of baptism for the dead, and now declare that it is not binding on them?

One other observation here: If as affirmed by this Utah contingency the full powers and keys of the holy priesthood by which work for the dead can be performed can be received only in a temple built and completed for the purpose, then Joseph Smith never possessed them, for he never had the privilege of entering a temple of the kind, hence he did not bestow them upon the Twelve in 1844 as they claim. Further, unless they can show that their temples in Utah were built by the command of God and have been accepted of him they have not these keys yet. Brigham Young said that no such revelation was necessary, but Joseph F. Smith, Jr., says that such a revelation was given. Let the latter produce this revelation, and thus settle this controversy between himself and his chief.

It would be better for this young author if he would come out boldly as Brigham Young did, and say "that there are keys that the written word never spoke of, nor never will." (Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p 667.)

Why not raise the real issue and say that while the Reorganized Church stands on the written word, that keys that the written word never spoke of nor never will have been received by the Utah people? We would not dispute this, we would only inquire from whence did these keys come, from above or from beneath? This is the real issue. Why indeed should our opponents pose as the defenders of the policies of Joseph Smith, when Brigham Young declared as early as 1845 that "Joseph in his lifetime did not receive everything connected with the doctrine of redemption, but has left the key with those who understand how to obtain and teach to this great people all that is necessary for their salvation and exaltation in the celestial kingdom of our God." (Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 955.)

Why then will not these men confine themselves to these additional things that Joseph and the written word knew nothing about, and cease this twaddle about being on the platform of Joseph Smith, a thing they disclaimed years ago?

Respectfully,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

THE WISE MEN.

A circumstance occurred a few years ago—while here in the Islands—that caused me to look into the subject of the visit of "the wise men" to Jerusalem in search of the "Messiah of the Jews," and I have wondered why it was that their arrival at Jerusalem and Bethlehem had been taught from generation to generation as having taken place at the nativity, and that the shepherds and the wise men visited the infant Jesus at the same time. Luke makes no mention of the wise men in his version of the nativity. And in Matthew, third chapter (Inspired Translation), there is more in evidence that their coming was not at the time of the birth of Christ than that it was at that time.

The following words as found in Matthew 3:1, Inspired Translation: "Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem," would imply that their coming was at the time of his birth, were it not that the next verse shows plainly that the child they were in search of was born before they left the East, as we shall see. Verse 2: "Saying, Where is the child that is born, the Messiah of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and have come to worship him." Hence, the first quotation affirms only that it was in the days of Herod the king when Jesus was born, and also that the wise men came; that they came from the East, and that they saw the star in the East, which strongly implies that they had not started on their journey to Jerusalem until they saw the star, the token of his birth.

It will be remembered that they were in Jerusalem when making the inquiry, which was west from their own country where the star appeared to them, hence they speak of seeing the star in the East, (not necessarily that it was east from them when they saw it,) If then those men came from the East and saw the star in the East, it was not over Bethlehem when they saw it, else they would not have said "in the east." And again; to see a star over Bethlehem from the eastern country would be an impossibility. Moreover, there is no record of the star being over Bethlehem until it went before the wise men when they left the presence of Herod to go to Bethlehem. Nor is there anything to sustain the thought that those men were led by the star on their journey from the East to Jerusalem, according to verses 9 and 10, which say, "When they had heard the king, they departed; and lo, the star which they saw in the east, went before them, until it came and stood over where the young child was. When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy." This plainly signifies that they had not seen it since it appeared to them in the East. Furthermore, if the star appeared to them before his birth, it would be no definite sign of his birth. But their language was definite, "Where is the child that is born, for we have seen his star." Again, if the star had led them on their journey at all, it is but reasonable to suppose that it would have led them direct to Bethlehem. Another obstacle in the way of their reaching Jerusalem and Bethlehem in the self-same night is that it is not now, nor ever has been the custom of kings to receive visiting strangers without more or less delay and formality that would consume more time than a single evening, much less to accommodate them at once by calling together all the chief priests and scribes. And one might reasonably ask, What need would there have been for them to go to Herod to learn where the child was, if the star was shining over Bethlehem, only six miles distant? For they knew "his star" and would have followed it. But if it were so, that the wise men went directly to Herod, and were admitted, how could "all Jerusalem" be troubled about a matter that had not gone abroad, and was not known to them? And if it was the evening of the nativity that the wise men reached the court of Herod and also saw the star, why should Herod have been so particular to inquire of them when the star appeared, since it would be embraced in the one evening? We find also, that the place over which the star stood when it went before the wise men was not a manger but a house. (See verse 11.) Luke's version of the nativity is as plain and straightforward as a narrative can be, (and so is that given by Matthew of the coming of the wise men, if one reads it as referring to another time than that of the nativity); he, Luke, speaks plainly of the child Jesus having been taken to Jerusalem to be presented to the Lord when the days of Mary's purification, according to the law of Moses, were accomplished, the number of which were "three and thirty" (see Leviticus 12:4), which would necessitate the wise men remaining in Bethlehem all that time, and until Joseph and Mary had taken the child to Jerusalem to the temple, and returned to Bethlehem again; for it was "when they were departed" (verse 13) that Joseph was warned by the angel of the Lord to "arise and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt." Which meant to go without delay, and he did so. Now it will be remembered that Herod charged the wise men to return to him with the tidings when they had found the child. Therefore their warning not to return to Herod must have been given the first time of sleeping after finding the object of their search; else they would have returned to Herod. And to delay their departure from Bethlehem, for over a month after having received the warning does not look probable; neither that Herod would have waited that length of time before issuing the edict to slay the children.

Luke does not speak of the holy family returning to Bethlehem at all, but says, "And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee to their own city Nazareth."

Therefore, it seems conclusive that the visit of the wise men was not at the time of the birth of our Lord, but took place when he was either one or two years old, during one of the passover seasons; since it was upon those occasions that the holy family would be in Bethlehem. Luke informs us that Joseph and Mary, with the child Jesus, went to Jerusalem every year—at least till he, Jesus, was twelve years old—to attend the feast of the passover; and they being of the house of David, would, according to their custom, lodge in Bethlehem.

Herod's order was to slay all the male children in Bethlehem, and all her coasts, "from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the wise men." If two years, as mentioned above, was the time given Herod by the wise men as the time when the star appeared to them, signifying the birth of the Messiah, their coming would have taken place when the child was two years old. But unfortunately the statement is not sufficiently definite as to whether two years was "according to the time" of which Herod made the inquiry, or whether "under" two years was "according to the time." It seems more probable that it was upon his first natal anniversary; and Herod, in his determination to include the child he wished to destroy, gave a broad margin of a year each way, lest his men should be deceived in the age. Yet, if the child was an infant of only a few hours when Herod made the inquiry, two years would be almost too great a sweep for even Herod.

The true time of the Savior's birth, that is, the time embracing the circumstances of which Luke wrote, seems not to have been recognized by the people of Bethlehem, or of Jerusalem. True, the shepherds are said to have "noised it abroad," and that the people who heard it "wondered," but whether any believed or remembered it, is not known; it seems not to have been sufficiently heeded for any to attend him at the temple to do him honor or witness his being presented to the Lord. Simeon, who was led by the Spirit to enter the temple at the time, and Anna are the only ones who are spoken of as recognizing his Messiahship. The event was so quiet and unassuming, together with their immediate departure from among the people to their own city Nazareth, that little may have been known of it. It looks as if that time had been lost sight of—except by a few—and the coming of the wise men had been handed down as being the time of Christ's nativity; (which may have been the cause of the disagreement of the early fathers in regard to the time of his birth). We learn from Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, volume 1, in notes on chapter 3 concerning the birth of Christ, that there is a disagreement among historians of one year, according to the dates given by some, and two years by others, as to the time of the Savior's birth. And he says further, "Respecting the month, and the day of Christ's birth, we are left almost wholly to conjecture. The disagreement of the early fathers is evidence that the day was not celebrated as a festival in the apostolic times." On page 279 of same volume, among the quotations given, we find different conjectures as to the day and month of Christ's birth. By some, the 20th of May; by others, the 20th or 21st of April. After those quotations, he says, "After the establishment of Christianity by Constantine, and among the new institutions which were intended for the benefit of the church, we seem authorized to place the commemoration of Christ's advent. This the Oriental Christians generally assigned to the 6th of January, on which day they supposed both the birth and baptism of Christ occurred, . . . But the western Christians observed the 25th of December as their festival of the nativity."

But we (Latter Day Saints) have heard the intimation that April was the month in which Jesus was born; and there is, in the scriptures, a link or two in the chain of evidence to that effect; and holding to those, we can wait for time to reveal the rest.

Luke says of Christ, that he "began to be about thirty years old" when he entered his ministry. The word about is indefinite, and may, as Mosheim says, "mean 29, 30, or 31," but the "began" would signify that it was very near the beginning of one of those years. His time of ministry was three years; and he was crucified in April. Now to count back three years would make April the time he started in his ministry; and the time of his natal anniversary also.

Another hint is found in verse 42: "And when he was twelve years old he went up to Jerusalem, after the custom, to the feast." It does not here say, when he was about twelve years old, or past twelve years, but when he was twelve years old, which would bring his birthday near the feast-time.

Another thought in favor of April is that Jesus was born when his parents went to Bethlehem to be taxed. And it is presumable that the tax-collectors for the Jewish nation would arrange for their taxation to take place in the first month of the Jewish year, which we understand to have commenced with the moon in March, and ended in April,—more especially, since that was the month of the passover in the which the Jews gathered from all nations to Jerusalem. Be this as it may, it is certain that the child Jesus accompanied his parents to attend the feast of the passover every year during his babyhood and childhood; and could have been seen in Bethlehem by the wise men upon either of those occasions.

EDUCATING THE INDIAN.

It is not the observation of those who are studying the Indian problem that education is a failure among them. On the contrary, the tribes of the Five Nations have become so thoroughly Americanized that they themselves use the term "blanket Indian" as a badge of inferiority. The Cherokees and some others of the Southern Indians have become sufficiently civilized that they are taking an active part in the organization of the new state of Oklahoma, and are showing themselves adept politicians.

The Northern Indians have not been so ready to take on civilization. Perhaps the most tenacious of the reactionaries are the Sacs and the Foxes, who, in the heart of Iowa, maintain all the ancient customs of their tribes with more insistence than the followers of Black Hawk and Keokuk. They refuse to send their children to school, or to adopt any of the ways of their white neighbors. Every superstition of a century ago is alive and flourishing. The Sacs and Foxes were in some respects the most marked of the Indians of the Mississippi Valley. They are the last to abandon savagery.

But generally speaking, the Indians of all tribes are becoming civilized, and education is no more of a failure with them than it is with other races. There are communities of white people, the product of generations of civilized life, where education is not all that might be expected of it. If the Sioux had only one Doctor Eastman to their credit, they would be able to prove their claim to a high order of talent. But the Sioux have been able to contribute several musicians and writers of real capacity, measured by any standard, and the younger generation will be competing in many walks.

There are several prejudices of long standing with regard to the Indians. One is that they are dying out, when in fact it is believed that there are more of them in the United States than there were when Columbus landed. Another is that they are incapable of civilization, when at least one of the great tribes of the Five Nations is as far advanced as certain portions of all other races the world over. These prejudices will be slow in disappearing. It will require several generations of educated Indians to convince people that the Indian is not inevitably a savage.—Register and Leader, December 24, 1906.

THE FATE OF ZION CITY.

Long ago it was prophesied that Zion would last only as long as its master mind controlled it. When John Alexander Dowie lost his power the foundations trembled. The city was his conception. It was a part of a dream which made his life. His own influence rather than the ideas he set forth drew people to Zion. Belief in him as in some sense gifted with unusual spiritual strength led many to sell all they had and bring the money to him for investment in his dream city. The hopeful converts to his faith came from all parts of the country, many a town and village now recalling the earnestness of some poor, deluded mortal who let everything go at a sacrifice in order to get away quickly for the promised land of Zion.

The shock which came with the announcement that the idol was nothing but common clay was a terrific one. "God's anointed," the "reincarnated Elijah," had preached that sickness was the result of sin. When disease seized him he was in a difficult position theoretically; when charges of misconduct were freely made his influence as a spiritual leader was lost for ever. In such a situation no ordinary man could hope to be able to rally a discouraged people, inspire them with fresh courage, and lead them forward to success along practical lines. Without the peculiar personality and the peculiar power of "the Elijah" Zion was nothing.

The last act in the drama seems near at hand. The white-robed choir has sung its last chorus. The white-bearded prophet has departed. The pageantry is forgotten. In their place the cold of winter, the desolation which attends despair when dreams and hopes have failed, and the importunate creditor. Another failure is to be added to the long list of American communistic experiments. The result is exactly what was freely predicted when the plan was first announced. It occasions no surprise. The only feeling is one of sympathy for the good souls who were deluded into thinking the ideal of Zion capable of realization.

Three propositions are submitted to those interested. One is to sell out under the hammer with a prospect of saving eleven cents on the dollar. A second is to put the property in the hands of real estate agents, a slower process, bringing perhaps twenty-five cents for each dollar represented. The third is to form a trust association with four Zion men, two outside business men, and the receiver as managers. These trustees would run the town as a corporation and seek the best possible results for all concerned. It is a case of "save who can." The Zion project as originally planned is a failure. For the benefit of those who are watching the approach of poverty it is to be hoped that something may be saved from the wreck by divorcing religion from business and attempting to establish matters on a practical basis.—Chicago Daily Tribune, December 22, 1906.

MARRIAGE NO GOOD, IS CLUBMAN'S VOTE.

By a unanimous vote, rendered after long and earnest debate, the Cathedral Club has decided that marriage is a failure.

The club, composed of lawyers, doctors, and other professional men of Brooklyn, gets together once a year and talks over the same old question.

Last night was the first time in the history of the club that it has decided that marriage is a failure. Even married men voted against the married life champions.

The debate was by no means a joke. It was so serious that the debaters went home rankling under personalities.

For the married men the exponents were Peter P. Smith, ex-assistant district attorney; Edward Taylor, Milo S. McDonald, and Louis E. Drummond. For the benedicts were John J. Kuhn, C. B. Campbell, Edward Cassin, and Edward J. Connelly.

The decision was based solely on the presentation of the argument, and after the judges had delivered their opinion the one hundred odd men present took a vote and found themselves unanimous in deciding on the argument that marriage was a total failure.—New York Journal, December 16, 1906.

CONSUMPTION'S DEADLY WORK.

BOSTON, December 19.—Speaking before the Twentieth Century Club to-night, Doctor Thomas Darlington, health commissioner of New York, said:

"It has been estimated that four hundred persons die every day in the United States from tuberculosis. This does not mean to-day only, but yesterday, the day before, the countless days before that and to-morrow and the countless days to come. Were we in the midst of a devastating war with a battle every day leaving the field strewn with four hundred dead, the type of our daily newspapers would prove inadequate in size to emphasize the horror of the calamity. The country would rise in its might and demand that the carnage should cease. This carnage is premeditated, for the disease is preventable and could be entirely eradicated."

Doctor Darlington advocated in combating this disease:

First, the education of the state and the education of the individuals. The States must be appealed to on the ground of political economy. It has been estimated, he said, that in the United States the annual loss in money from death from tuberculosis is three hundred and thirty million dollars.

"Second, instruction by public lectures, circulars and other methods as to the true nature of the disease, its prevention and cure.

"Third, the coöperation of the department of education distributing to each child in the public school of the city a small simply worded card giving easily comprehensive rules for the prevention and cure of tuberculosis."

"It is almost an undisputed proposition," said Doctor Darlington, "that were all sputum from tuberculosis patients cared for and disposed of in the proper manner, tuberculosis would vanish from the face of the earth."—Kansas City Journal, December 20, 1906.

CHRIST, THE ONE NEVER FORGOTTEN.

Nineteen hundred and six years ago a child was born in a small nation little known to the rest of the world.

That child's entire life was devoted to others.

As long as he lived, he worked, talked, and suffered for those in distress. He died for them finally. The world has never forgotten him, it never will forget him.

What is the chief lesson for us in this wonderful life which we reverently and thankfully celebrate to-day? It is this:

By working for others only, eternal remembrance and gratitude are secured.

Since Christ died, emperors have ruled, carved out great empires, done everything for themselves, and their names are forgotten or fading away.

Since Christ died, generals with courage and genius and murder have written their names as high as they could on the wall of fame. But they are forgotten, or soon will be forgotten. Those that work for themselves are forgotten by the world. Those that work for others are remembered.

And chief among all those whom men remember is the Child of nineteen hundred years ago, and the Man who died for the sake of the weak and the friendless.

The centuries will go by, and that name, emblematic of self-sacrifice, of brotherly love, of the duty that the individual owes to his less fortunate fellows, will grow brighter and brighter. We only begin to understand the marvelous character of Christ. We only begin now to feel dimly what he stands for, real brotherhood among men, solidarity, the responsibility of each toward all.

How can a man prove his sympathy with this day? How can he try to show himself worthy of the progress that has been achieved—thanks to the teachings of Christ?

The simplest, most direct way, is to show kindness to some one of the children that need kindness. There is a duty which should animate men throughout all the days and years of their lives, the duty to all of the race to which they belong. On this individual day it is appropriate to do some individual thing for some individual child, to make the day bright for some sad, disappointed child of poverty.

Never think that "One little kind act makes no difference in the long run." It is the millions of kind, separate acts that make human life possible. —New York Evening Journal, December 25, 1906.

THE HARDEST WORD.

Let us get ready for New Year's Day and New Year resolutions by discussing to-day one word in the English language.

Readers, which is in all our language the word most difficult to pronounce?

Which is the word that we hardly ever say when we ought to say it? Which is the word so hard to pronounce that many men can never get it out, even when the mere pronouncing of it might mean happiness to them and others?

Don't search among the longest words.

The hardest word in our language is not PSEUDO-PARTHENOGENESIS, although the word looks hard.

It is not MICRORRHEOMETRICAL, although that word is used rarely.

The hard word is not DIPHENYLAMIN, although that word looks like one to be used on Sundays.

The word in our language hardest to pronounce, used with correctness most rarely, is a very simple, short word, and, as you all know, that word is

NO.

MAKING PARENTS ACCOUNTABLE.

In suggesting that a law should be passed by the Missouri legislature providing punishment for parents who are directly responsible for the delinquencies of their children, Judge McCune, of the juvenile court, is following distinguished precedent. Experience as a children's judge has impressed upon this jurist the fact that nearly all children are either deliberately trained in crime by their parents or the little ones wander from the path of rectitude by reason of neglect and indifference on the part of those who should guard and protect them.

It has been proved time after time in the juvenile court that boys and girls of tender age are led into crime by their parents. It seems almost beyond belief that a father or a mother would deliberately blight the life of a child, yet we have Judge McCune's word for it that such is too often the case. Scarcely less reprehensible is the parent who makes a false assertion of necessity for keeping a boy or girl from school, thereby setting the example of perjury before the child and at the same time needlessly denying that child a chance to gain a public school education. This is a common form of parental cupidity for which there is not sufficient penalty.

When the machinery of the law takes cognizance of the fact that the faults of the child almost invariably start with the delinquencies of the parent, a long step is gained in the direction of making a better citizenship. There is no question in the minds of many that if the "long-haired boy" of recent memory had been brought up normally, sent to school instead of being forced to sing on the streets as an adjunct to the "lectures" of his parents, and taught respect for law, he would not have been so much in the juvenile court. This is only one of many cases where parents stubbornly resist the efforts of the authorities to save their own children from careers of crime.

The Missouri Legislature two years ago had a good opportunity to pass about the same sort of law as that now being advocated by Judge McCune, but it was defeated, largely, in the opinion of Judge McCune, because the penalties were considered too severe. In this connection the judge of the juvenile court says: "I don't think it could be much too severe. To teach a child to steal, to bring an innocent up in the way of crime is about as serious an offense against society and the child as can be imagined."—Kansas City Journal, December 25, 1906.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Notice.

Dear Mothers and Friends of the Children: Are you a friend of temperance and a lover of this latter-day work? If so you can not fail to include among the gifts you intend for your own and the children of your friends at this holiday season, the seventh number of the Birth Offering Series soon to be on sale at the HERALD Office. It is the story by Frances which has been lately running in the Hope, entitled, "Object-lessons on temperance; or, the Indian maiden and her white deer," and is a story intended to teach the young to abhor even the name of liquor. With one exception, every incident in it is taken from real life. Through the courtesy of Mr. C. H. Engle of Hartford, Michigan, the book embodies an epitome of the beautiful love story told by the Indian chief, Pokagon, in his book entitled, Queen of the Woods.

It may also interest mothers to know that the names of those little ones who have Birth Offerings to their credit, and which have not appeared in other volumes, will be in this.

Will you not send fifty cents to the HERALD Office for this volume, and by so doing place good reading in the hands of your child, and at the same time help the office to publish other books for your children? All money sent for books, or as Birth Offerings, is used for that purpose. Price of book, neatly bound in cloth, 50 cents.

The Faithful Few.

'Twas Sunday morning, cold and wet—
A rainy, windy, autumn day,
The kind which poets often say
Is sad and drear.

A day when some are wont to fret.
But faithful Saints, on duty bent,
Put on their wraps and forth they went
To church, most dear.

And during services, they saw
On a winow (lowered for pure air)
A little bird alighting there,
As if to take
A note, and some conclusions draw.
It seemed a messenger from heaven
Came down, and with commission giv'n
To record make.

The sermon o'er, it flew away.
'Tis well for the few that braved the storm;
For whether by bird or angel borne,
This much is sure;
A record true was made that day,
Oh! may we all be good and true,
And be among the faithful few
With Christ, the pure.

ETHEL I. SKANK.

MRS. M. WALKER, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sister: Christmas will soon be here, and I pray we may all be willing helpers, and swell the Christmas fund, so we may have several thousand dollars toward the erection of a home for the dear homeless ones; for, ah! how my heart yearns in pity for those dear children who are deprived of the care of a mother.

But how thankful we should be to know we are permitted to help make a home for these little ones, and know that we have the approval of our heavenly Father.

My little ones have been more zealous this year than ever before in saving their Christmas offerings, and although it is not so much as we hoped for, (being poor in this world's goods,) yet never did they think of spending one of their hard-earned pennies for buying things for self; but their sole aim has been to help build a home for the homeless.

Pray for me that I may have wisdom to direct their little feet aright that when they reach the years of maturity they may be valiant soldiers in the army of the Lord.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

SOPHIA POWELL GUNSOLLEY.

MARYVILLE, Missouri, December 21, 1906.

One Such.

It was Horace Mann who declared that when things are in the growing stage, one former is worth a dozen reformers. "As the twig is bent the tree's inclined," has become a truism. The habitat of the child must allow for expansion under directing influence, if growth is to be normal. Parents are held responsible for the welfare of the children, but what of the fatherless child? To-day a man, one of our own number, is killed in a mine; yesterday our brother went down to death in the waters; to-morrow you, father or mother may be in one of those train wrecks which elicit a half-column article in a big daily. What of the child thus thrown on his own resources? Being a man child he can not roam the forest as a cub, living on a law of give and take. Yet, child that he is, it takes higher conceptions of duty than he possesses to let future good take precedence of present utility. Who is going to help him with lessons of forbearance and self-control? Who will "lean down and lift him higher"? Let him who can trace the full significance of human life declare what is the value of one such orphan child.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" Shall we have a children's home to care for our very own? Graham Taylor, the great settlement-worker of Chicago, is wont to say, "We can reach no farther up toward God than we do reach down and out in service to our fellow men." Shall you and I ever have any better chance to reach down and out in service, than this very chance to help God's little ones?

As for theory, every one of us cries out, "Give the little ones a chance!" But let us be practical. How is our plan to materialize? It seems to me three conditions must pre-determine the existence of such an institution. First, we must believe so much in the need of this home and in the possibility of it, that we are ready to pray for it. "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, uttered or unexpressed." We work hardest for the things for which we pray hardest. Second, let us interest the children themselves in this work. This year Bishop Kelley promises that all the Christmas offering above three thousand dollars shall go toward this home. The children can be a veritable host in themselves. Last year their offering was something over six thousand dollars. This year the little ones will gladly exceed that amount if we older ones will only explain the situation to them and drop a suggestion here and there as to ways and means. For the child's sake we should encourage him to earn his own offering. Many have been saving for that purpose all the year, and those who have not will joy to commence. What more fitting than for little children to bring their gifts to the Christ-child by way of helping some other little child? The very sweetness of the lesson may be made to appeal to the giver with such intensity that such lesson will become his own best Christmas gift.

Third, we older children must help in a material way. Not one of us is absolved from responsibility in the matter. Let us impart freely of our encouragement and our means for the establishment of this children's home. Some few of us are going to be called upon to give up other plans and ambitions and consecrate ourselves to this work. It is good to know that whatsoever we find it in our hearts to do for one of these little ones, Christ accepts as service to himself.

Letter Department

VALES MILLS, Ohio, December 20, 1906.

Editors Herald: Since writing last, I have endeavored to speed the gospel plow as it seemed wisdom under the circumstances. On my return from the Hocking Valley to Columbus, October 27, I found postals of invitation to come to Middletown and Dayton, from Bro. J. M. Baggerly, awaiting me. I left the city at once to meet the appointments already out. Bro. Baggerly had walked, and with the aid of one of Bro. Countryman's little boys had distributed two thousand handbills announcing the series of meetings. Saints at Middletown have a neat and very convenient chapel, fitted out with the most modern furnishings, and located at quite a distance from any other church, in the residence part of the city.

Bro. Thomas Wren is in charge as president of the branch, with Brn. William Countryman (priest) and Stacy Rhodes (deacon, I believe) as his helpers.

We began our series of services on Sunday evening, and continued for three weeks, omitting only Saturday evenings. Bro. Baggerly's attention was divided between Middletown and Dayton, so was present some of the time, and in charge, and preached a few times.

Bro. Arthur Koehler came during the progress of the meetings and aided with his musical talent, and preached some three times. Most of the Saints attended the services faithfully, while others were more deliberate. A number of our young people here make music and keep the Sunday-school and Religio work moving. And their talents should continue their course of development along these lines, and not smother their light.

During the meetings quite a number not of the faith heard the gospel. Some at Middletown remembered that the servants of the Lord can not go from place to place on wind, nor can they get writing-paper, postage-stamps, and pens just for the asking, nor their laundering done at that rate, so contributed to my necessities. A brief visit to Amanda, to the home of Bro. Morton Jones, and to the Excello Paper Mills, brought vividly to memory a visit to that villa some thirty years ago, and of being healed of a severe illness under the hands of Bro. M. B. Williams, in a few short moments, at noon, he being sent by the Spirit to his home from his work, some half a mile away. I went that same night and preached in the old Middletown Armory to three hundred persons present. I could not have filled that appointment had it not been for our Father's love and mercy.

But let us return to this side of those thirty years. They have winged themselves away for ever, and what will their harvest be as related to me, and my labors? Who will answer? Bro. Williams and Bro. Wren, and Bro. Bruce Jones, then in the faith of the gospel there, have stood firm till now, also some others. Have I failed? Good thoughts to dwell on as the eventful period of thirty years, with me closes, closes! Will my reward be good? Have I forfeited it by unfaithfulness? Have the hearts of any of those "little ones" that trust the Master been offended, and made sad, by my acts? Some, no doubt, mistook me, when I contrasted sin with Christ's ideal of good and right, and thought I was finding fault or "scolding." They forget, perhaps, that he said the Spirit would "reprove the world of sin," as well as of "righteousness."

Monday, November 19, Bro. Koehler and I left Middletown, and went to Dayton, where arrangements had been made by the Saints and Bro. Baggerly for a two weeks' series of meetings, in a hall they had just rented and fitted up at 1800 East Fifth Street, and that cost them ten dollars a month, of which the owner of the hall gives one dollar per month. Here for nearly two weeks Bro. Koehler and I divided honors in preaching, he allowing me the greater portion.

On one occasion as he sang that touching hymn: "Will there be any stars in my crown," the Spirit rested down on us as a crown of glory and great joy filled our hearts. This was the case on two occasions while we were at Dayton. Thanksgiving Day was observed by Saints at Dayton as a day of humility, fasting, and prayer. A meeting was held and all but one or two took part, and God's blessing and power were there. All rejoiced in the Lord and his goodness.

Bro. Koehler went his way to the Kirtland District to aid in the work there. I stayed another week in Dayton by invitation and vote of the branch, Bro. Baggerly occupying once at Dayton during the three weeks, and looking after the work at Middletown.

Brn. Baggerly, Jones, Warren, Durand, and Hornish, Bear, Bartlett, and Pugh, with their companions, are coöperating to keep the work moving there. Nor must I forget to name Bro. Davis, who is of note as a preacher on the streets of Dayton.

At Columbus at the late branch business-meeting, Bro. Josiah Matthews was chosen to preside, with Bro. L. C. Lewis as priest. Bro. Harrie French is still retained in the city's employ, in the "Bertillon" police department, and although he was elected to the branch presidency, declined, and Elder Matthews was chosen.

A faithful, active pastor could do a good work in Ohio's capital city, as the branch officers can give but an occasional evening or Sunday afternoons to missionary work. Columbus is an ample field for a steady effort. Four Brighamite elders have found plenty to do all the time when there.

I came with Bro. S. J. Jeffers, district president, from Columbus to this place, Saturday, December 15, where I have preached each evening since, and twice on Sunday. We expect to go to Jackson County this week to labor as the way opens up to us. I should not forget to mention that the Saints at Columbus contributed to me a needed suit of clothing, including hat, shoes, and other wearing apparel. I pray our Father to reward them for their liberality. Saints at Dayton contributed to my necessities. Paul commended such liberalities in his day; we are glad to do so in this age. May God abundantly bless his Saints, and may we not be slothful in walking up to the new commandments, to erect at an early date the sanitarium and the children's home.

Business conditions in the Ohio District are such as to scatter many of the Saints of the branches, and this militates somewhat against some features of development. But so far as I can state, the Saints are making efforts to go forward in the service of the Master.

Brn. E. E. Long, J. M. Baggerly, F. J. Ebeling, and I. N. Roberts of the general ministry are aiding in this district. Whether Bro. I. P. Baggerly will remain the remainder of the conference year, I am not now apprised. Hopefully,

C. SCOTT.

OMAHA, Nebraska, December 24, 1906.

Editors Herald: I left home on September 29, and tarried in Sioux City until October 1. Then I went to Akron where two families of Saints reside. Charley Anway will not let the missionary be idle. His neighbors are soon notified that there will be preaching at his house, and the only way to get out of preaching is to leave the town.

On Sunday, October 7, I spent the day with one of my Sunday-school home classes at the home of Bro. E. C. Dougherty, near Hudson, South Dakota, and also preached to them. On the 8th went to Brookings to the home of Bro. and Sr. Delapp to make an effort to reach the people; my companion, Bro. L. G. Wood, came to be associated with me. Bro. Delapp rented the G. A. R. Hall two nights for five dollars, Sunday, October 14, and the 16th. We paid fifty cents for a notice in one paper and got it in free in another, and distributed several hundred pieces of literature and cards of invitation. About twelve came out, some of them personal friends of Bro. Delapp. On Tuesday about seventeen came. We could not continue because we could not pay the hall rent. While here we found one of the isolated ones, Sr. W. A. Henry.

The Methodist Episcopal State conference was in session, about one hundred and eighty preachers present. Four of them, young men, boarded with Bro. Delapp and we formed their acquaintance, had some talk with them, and gave them some of our literature. They had the appearance of being earnest, zealous men. I thought of the contrast between their number of preachers as compared with our two lone missionaries for half of the State. We heard several sermons; one of which was especially forceful in denouncing the present-day greed, and closed with this expression in substance: "O God, deliver us from the lust of money and curse of greed."

Brookings is a progressive city; the State Agriculture College is located there, and saloons are barred out. It owns the water, electric-light, telephone, and steam-heating plants. There is a noticeable absence of the common work-a-day people of the various churches. As citizens and neighbors the Delapps are held in the highest esteem, but of their religion the people want none of it. How strange that they do not want a religion that makes good neighbors!

Bro. and Sr. J. W. Perrin lived sixteen miles from Brookings, and it was seventy-six miles by railroad and nine miles of a walk out in the country, so we concluded to take the "overland route." A farmer directed us to go twelve miles south and four west. After traveling five miles we read a sign, "nineteen miles to Colman." It was the road for us to go, but we reasoned that the farmer ought to know as he lived six miles from Bro. Perrin's, so we disregarded the sign and went west, and when we arrived at our destination we had traveled four miles out of the way, and were foot-sore and tired. We thought that was about the way of the world following other men's advice instead of the way pointed out in the Bible, and in not following a "sign," when we could see it.

Our troubles were not all over yet. Their household goods and farming utensils were loaded to move, rain prevented them leaving next day, and Bro. Perrin took us to Colman, and here we found Sr. Vickerman's house "topsyturvey," waiting for it to quit raining so they could move.

We concluded to separate. Bro. Wood went to Artesian and I to Madison to Sr. Cole's, and that did not change my luck, for they were about ready to start for Washington, and I tarried with them until the rain and mud ceased to make traveling unpleasant, and then went to Sr. Nellie Mosher's, nine miles out in the country. I remained there nearly four weeks. The conditions were very unfavorable for holding meetings. On my way south I called at the home of Bro. and Sr. B. C. Rooker, near Spencer, and was glad to realize that my work last year had been very beneficial to them. I also visited Bro. F. M. Campbell, now in his seventy-eighth year.

By invitation from Bro. Lytle I went to his home near Canistota. Arrangements were made to hold two meetings on Sunday, and on Tuesday and Thursday nights. The attendance was about the usual size for this country, twenty being the average number, and among them was the customary "small boy" who is looking for something "new." The order and attention were good.

On the 12th I went to Springfield and visited Bro. and Sr. Crosley and Bro. and Sr. Allen, and held one preaching-service in the home of the latter. While there, in company with Bro. Crosley I attended the service at the Episcopal church. There were present nearly forty Indian girls, members of the Hope School, which is controlled by the Government. In personal appearance they were as neat as their white sisters.

This is my second year in this State, and while I can perceive that we have made some friends in the world, the most good will come to the scattered Saints where we are always welcome. More fruit will be visible in the future. Many of these isolated ones and their children have never been in a branch or Sunday-school, and they greatly appreciate the visit of the missionary.

If a good reliable young Latter Day Saint that can furnish a good recommendation who wants an eight months' job on a farm, in the home of a good Latter Day Saint family at good wages, to commence next April, will write me, I can assist in securing such a place. Here is a good chance to earn money to go to Graceland College.

Editors Herald: Daniel was a good man and could not be induced to do wrong. He refused to defile himself with the meats and viands of the king and proved that he could be in health and appearance better without than with. So it would be better for all to refrain from defiling themselves by imbibing alcoholic liquors. Have courage to say no to the temptation of drink; for if you let it down your throat it will down you. If drunkards entice thee, consent not; for the way of the drunkard is not the path of peace, but is a hard and dangerous road to travel. Then refuse; avoid it; shun it; turn from it. Neither go with nor vote with drunkards to do evil; but help to pry the country out of the rut of intemperance.

Editors Herald: I have been kept quite busy during this conference year; and am traveling through the State. I find it is indeed a large field to labor in,—so much to be done, and a call for the preaching of the gospel in many places. At this juncture I, in company with Bro. W. P. Robinson, am in the northern part of the State, where we have been laboring during the last month. I truly am glad to find so many good-hearted Saints in this northern district, and also feel glad to know that God's Holy Spirit is being enjoyed among the Saints here. We have enjoyed some very spiritual meetings, and I believe God has blessed our labors, and that much good has been accomplished. So in faith we press on, believing the victory shall be ours, if we continue faithful and humble before our heavenly Father.

GEORGE J. BROOKOVER.

ANDERSON, Missouri, December 18, 1906.

Dear Herald: I am glad to know that I belong to the church of Jesus Christ. I am not ashamed to own my Lord, and by the help of God, I am trying to do the will of my Father as best I can.

Dear Saints, I desire your prayers that I may be healed of an affliction and I firmly believe that God will heal me in his own due time.

One day while I was sitting here at home, alone, it seemed like some one had touched me on the arm and whispered, Go and kneel down and pray, and you will feel better. I did as I was commanded and when I arose I felt better, and I hope and pray by the help of my heavenly Father that I may be healed.

There is no branch of the church here, and I wish some brother would come and preach here. There could be a branch raised up here, I believe, by a little work.

Your sister,

E. M. PATRICK.

ST. CLAIR, Michigan.

Dear Herald: Last week we were called to lay aside one of our number, by the death of Sr. Dewhurst, who was known among us as a faithful Saint. She was the only one of her people that belonged to the church. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn their loss, the youngest being only two years of age. It seems sad to see one that is needed so much called away; but God knows best.

We can not always keep our loved ones with us, but we can prepare to meet them where parting will be no more.

Your sister,

GERTRUDE MAXWELL.

PLATTSBURG, Missouri, December 17, 1906.

Editors Herald: A few lines may be of interest to the readers of the HERALD, if it meets with your approval and that of the Spirit of God directing you for the edification of those who read. Elder Pickering of Stewartsville has been holding meetings here among the few Saints, (there are about nine of us here,) and the Lord is blessing us with about a dozen souls that seem to be greatly interested. Some of them gathered with us on the Lord's day when we had prayer-meeting and the Lord's supper, and the Spirit was with us from the very opening, to such an extent that all outsiders present confessed in open meeting and testimony that they had never known before what it was to be in the presence of the Spirit, and prayed that they might be shown the way clear to become one with us. We all felt that this was one meeting of Saints during which Satan was completely banished. But we had a neighbor who is afflicted with heart-failure that takes on the most violent form of convulsions, and the Spirit of prophecy rested upon one of our brethren and spoke to him and another neighbor extending to both of them great blessings and health if they obeyed the gospel call, as the Spirit was directing them to do. Afterwards the Spirit of prophecy also rested upon Elder Pickering and spoke to one of the same brethren and to another young man, grown son of Sr. Riddle, and after meeting he asked for baptism, which will probably be attended to Tuesday afternoon. Referring back to our afflicted neighbor, as soon as the meeting was over Satan began his work, and we had to carry him half-way home. As soon as we arrived at his home, two of us Saints, his wife, and another neighbor who had been present at the meeting, knelt and prayed and the Spirit seeming to me to direct a call for Bro. Pickering, I asked his wife if she had a desire to have him sent for, and after an evasive answer and a stern rebuke administered, she rather plead for him to be sent for, and Bro. Pickering administered to him, and in about fifteen minutes the heart began to exercise its normal functions, although somewhat irregular for an hour or more. I know not what they will do, but I do know that they desire to obey; but Satan is exercising his best efforts and using his best henchmen to frustrate their otherwise honest desires, and they are hearkening to the voice of blinded friends instead of the Spirit striving within them.

Editors Herald: I have been silent for a long time, so will try to inform you that I am still in the faith, and am trying to sow the seed by distributing the SAINTS' HERALD that Elder Isaac Morris and Sr. Mary Morris of Zenith gave me to distribute to my acquaintances. I am visiting my daughter, Mrs. Eliza Bing. She is a member of the Christian Church. She was blessed under Bro. M. H. Forscutt's hands, at Glenwood, Iowa, when she was a babe. There is a revival-meeting going on here by Reverend Kemper, of the Methodist Episcopal Church North, and the Holiness or Free Methodist are working together in the Baptist church. I went to the Christian church at eleven o'clock Sunday, to hear Bro. I. E. Story. He does not believe it right to run down other denominations. He did not know anything much about the Latter Day Saint doctrine. He said that he knew there were two branches of the church, and that one of them baptized for their dead, but he did not know which one of them did.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my companion, Alie Chaney. Her health has been poor ever since she had the measles six years ago.

Your brother in the faith,

I. K. CHANEY.

LAMONI, Iowa, December 18, 1906.

Editors Herald: I learned a good while ago that the trials of the minister who is able to give his time to the work (and they are not a few nor trifling in their character) are not to be compared with the trials of him who holds the office and is anxious to labor, but on account of physical inability, or for any other cause, is not able to magnify his calling.

Perhaps I never made a stronger effort to do ministerial work than I did last summer, still I accomplished but little.

Besides the little which I have done at home I have given blessings and done some preaching at Hiteman and Centerville, in the Lamoni Stake, also at our reunion and the reunion held at Stewartsville, Missouri.

At all these places, Sr. Estella Wight was with me, faithfully performing her part of the work. I count myself to have been very fortunate in laboring with six or seven different stenographers, all of whom had faith in God and bore the trials and difficulties incident to the work, patiently and with becoming resignation.

This fall I have been unable to go away from home to labor. Of course, I could do more at home than I do if in the judgment of those in charge it was needed and wise for me to do so. I have made it a rule to respond to kind invitations given and cast in my mite whenever it was practicable for me to do so. How far have we learned the lesson of true economy in spiritual matters?

In my struggles and efforts and failures to do more than I have done for the good cause of truth in which we are engaged, this thought has occurred to me: If I had succeeded in being able to work as I once did, as a missionary in the field, would it not have demonstrated that it was a mistake to place me on the retired list?

There are difficulties and embarrassments connected with one part of our work, as patriarchs, as there are in all other departments of church labor; with this difference, I think, that some of them are of more frequent occurrence and unusually embarrassing; nevertheless, under existing conditions, which should always be considered, I am well satisfied with my position, enjoy my work, and have surely been blessed of God. Do not tell me that this part of the work is not of divine appointment, only as a decent expression of your belief, with the reasons therefore, which, I trust, I shall always be willing to bear and consider, so far as able.

What can be more consoling and encouraging to us than the well-established fact that God, whom we are trying to serve, is more deeply interested than we are, and when we make an intelligent and honest effort to do our part of the work, according to his revealed will, he never fails to work with us, and in some way, or ways, and at some time, and to some perishing and needy soul, or souls, give the increase.

O brethren, let us be men and take care of the work which has been committed to our sacred trust!

In gospel bonds,

J. R. LAMBERT.

NEW HARMONY, Indiana, December 10, 1906.

Editors Herald: Only of late have I become a reader of your welcome pages. I have been reading the Ensign about eight years. I was baptized into this work June 20, 1896. The few Saints that live here are isolated, not having the privilege to meet on Sunday to worship God. It makes us feel very lonely, having to undergo many things hard to bear. We have preaching, on an average, about twice a year. Our worthy Bro. C. E. Harpe came among us in October and preached twenty-nine sermons, held one sacrament-meeting, and the Spirit was present to bless, and I was made to rejoice. Bro. Harpe is the right man in the right place. He takes well with the people here, a good preacher and a good man. May the Lord bless him, and all his coworkers.

FRANKLIN, Nebraska, December 13, 1906.

Editors Herald: I came to this place from Eustis on Tuesday, and have been having a hard battle with one of my worst enemies, neuralgia. And truly if there is anything in the way of affliction that can make one feel any more blue and worthless, I pray the Lord to spare me from it. But I have not failed to occupy every time my appointments have demanded it of me, and the Lord has blessed me with excellent liberty in the presentation of his work. I labored in and about Farnam and Eustis, Nebraska, for nearly a month, and found the people usually willing to come and hear the old story retold. Some were baptized, not alone the result of the labors of the writer, but that also of Brn. Paine and Prettyman, and manifestly the Godly walk of the parents of those baptized. But there are others in that region of country who will obey the gospel ere long, I am sure.

I preached the Thanksgiving sermon for the Saints at Eustis and a very pleasant time was had. Brn. Johnson and Keller are endeavoring to keep the work moving at that place, and are meeting with a degree of success.

There is great demand for labor in Western Nebraska at this time of the year, and we have endeavored to occupy nearly all of the time. I trust that the brethren in all parts of the great field are being blessed.

In gospel bonds,

J. R. SUTTON.

OTWAY, Ohio, December 17, 1906.

Editors Herald: I love to read the letters but I do not see many from elders that I know. I suppose they are busy, as all have a certain work to do. There is no place to stand still. The writer went to Crabtree on Saturday, the 8th, and found Bro. Baggerly there. I was glad to meet with the Saints of that place. They are but few in number, about six, I believe, but they are alive to the cause.

I do not write for the purpose of benefiting Saints alone; for our Savior said he did not come to call the righteous but sinners to repentance. In Acts 2:38, we find Peter saying something like this: "Repent every one of you and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ." We might ask, "What for, Peter?" He says, "For the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." This is for us in this our day, for Peter said it was to "you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

I can truly say this is the work of God. It is in harmony with the word, for he whom God sends speaks the things of God. (See John 3:34.)

Dear Saints, let us by the help of the blessed Christ live in obedience to all the commands. As Jesus said, Ye are the light of the world. Our light to the world is in our daily walk and teaching and conversation among men.

I desire to grow in grace and in further knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, our living head.

Dear Saints, let me as one that loves your immortal souls entreat you to obtain more of the Spirit of Christ, and let there be no divisions among you.

We have our trials in this life, but we have the promise that Christ will go away with us, even unto the end of the world.

I ask your prayers in my behalf, not as a form, but because I need them to help me to overcome the evil one, that I may be able to endure to the end and gain the reward.

R. F. D. 2.

J. T. MITCHELL.

PALOUS, Washington, December 23, 1906.

Editors Herald: Perhaps some of the Saints would like to hear from the "Edenic" man once more. It has been several years since I wrote, and from the number of letters I received it would seem that some of the Saints were interested. I like to read the various pieces in the church papers in regard to proper living physically as well as spiritually, but there is an old saying, and I think a true one, that an ounce of practice is worth a pound of theory. I told the Saints years ago how I was living, and some of the blessings I had received, but perhaps I had better tell them once more. Ten years ago I was so badly diseased that I did not want to live unless I could get relief. I had rheumatism, catarrh in head, throat, and stomach and other severe afflictions. I went to the Lord in humble prayer and asked him to give me wisdom to know how to live to get rid of my diseases. Thanks be to God, he gave me wisdom and I put the wisdom into practice. I went to living on raw food. I ate four ounces of rolled oats and four ounces of wheat per day, with fresh milk, and a little sweetening, mostly honey, and in three weeks I could feel all my diseases giving way, and in three or four months I was perfectly well. I have remained well for nine years. The Lord said wheat for man; and science says, wheat is man's only perfect food; it contains all the fourteen properties of the human body, and perfectly feeds the same.

I got me a steel mill and grind my own wheat. Now I can eat four ounces of wheat and work twelve hours in the harvest-field and not feel hungry; eight ounces per day I think is enough for any man. Of course as the Lord has said all fruit and vegetables are good for man, but everything in the season thereof. I have not eaten any flesh, fish, or fowl in nine years, and but very little cooked food. I hate to read of the Saints being sick, knowing as I do that there are only two causes for all the sickness and misery of the human family and outside of accident, namely, ignorance and willfulness, and the Saints ought not to be ignorant; for James says if any man lacks wisdom let him ask of God, and he will give it.

But let me tell you, dear Saints, do not ask God for wisdom until you are prepared to use all you have got, and all he gives you. If the Saints would all live as I have lived the last nine years, they would save enough every year to build a home for the little ones and the sanitarium and have money left to aid in building the temple. I can live on three or four cents per day, and less if necessary. I have worked in the harvest-field and just ate eight ounces of raw grain and two or three apples per day. Wheat is the king of grains and the apple is the king of fruit. Ten years ago I was a fit subject for the sanitarium; but now it suits me better to labor every day, which I do. I am what the people call old—seventy eight to-day, December 23, 1906, but I do not feel as old as I did twenty years ago.

I am yours truly,

B. R. TURNBOW.

HARMONY, Indiana, December 16, 1906.

Editors Herald: I united with the church February 9, 1893, being baptized by I. P. Baggerly. I have tried to live a Saint and do what I could for the Master's cause, and as the people of God are called upon to build a home for the homeless little ones, I will try to help all I can.

The name orphan is a very familiar one, as when seven years old I was left an orphan; there were one brother and seven sisters of us and we were all small. When father died, on his death-bed he asked me to take his baby, my youngest sister. Not only did I provide a home for baby sister, but three others besides. My sister grew up and married, and she is a member of the church. And so having responded to the call of my earthly father, I am willing to come to the help of the Lord, to do what I can to help build a home for the homeless children. I have no children of my own.

HARRIET C. HYATT.

Observations.

Dear Herald: By solicitation I pen a sketch of some of my observations since October, at which time I was at Hartford unloading the infections gathered up during the summer from the swamps. Here I enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. and Sr. Chronister.

As soon as I was sufficiently strong,

I scaled the crests of Sugarloaf;
On Protean heights I stood;
I groped my way down in the mines,
As far as I thought 'twas good.

Of course these mountains do not vie with the snow-capped sky-scrapers in the West; but it took from three to four hours of good hard climbing to reach the coveted elevations; and we felt rewarded when we gazed down into the valleys on each side, checked with farms, specked with dwellings, striped with thoroughfares and railways, adorned with hamlets and woodland, and tufted with pillows of smoke from mills and mines.

When away down in the low, dark, narrow passageways in the mine, with a stream of smoke more in evidence than the dim light issuing from the little grease-pot which hangs to the miner's cap, I first bumped my head against the roof, and then my toes against the cross-ties and switch-bars; and, try as I would, even though my eyes seemed to look both ways at once, I could not fix one above and the other below so as to prevent the collisions. When I found that my oil was about to disappear, my keen interest to explore farther disappeared also. When I again straightened myself up in God's beautiful sunlight, I felt a deeper love and a more enduring sympathy kindling in my heart for these swarms of underground workers.

I was eating supper on November 1, when a buggy was driven up to the door. A man jumped out and, walking straight to where I sat, took my extended hand in one of his, and seemed to take me by the collar with the other. "I've come after you," he said earnestly. "Our speaker has disappointed us, and feeling that we must have an address at our miners' meeting to-night, I am sent by our committee to solicit your presence."

After music by the band, and a formal introduction by which I learned I was expected to "speak on the economic questions of the day," I tried to convince them that "no question is ever settled until its settled right"; and that no question can be settled right until it is settled without respect to persons.

On the 7th I went to Wilburton, Indian Territory, to view the district records. I was warmly received and entertained by H. R. Harder and sons, A. Z. Rudd, and others. On the 12th in company with Bro. and Sr. Crawford I went to Adamson. Here I observed an exhibition of Scotch grit. I know not a more fitting name, when in these days of keen and wicked competition poor men will make the hit that Elders Peter Adamson, Sr. and Jr., have made. Twelve years ago Elder Adamson befriended one Edmond Lewis, a poor colored man, when in trouble. In process of time, Mr. Lewis took allotments of land from the government where lay rich deposits of coal. Now to show his appreciation of the favor, he refused to lease it to any others than Elder Adamson and son, who leased as much as they could from Lewis and his neighbors but they had no money to operate with, so they sold two hundred acres of their lease for twenty-five hundred dollars which put in the necessary spur and sidings. They then borrowed two thousand dollars, and on the first of October, 1905, commenced work on a tipple. Trams, houses, pond, etc., have since been built, stopes sunk, and cheap machinery put into operation. And in two weeks, ending November 20, 1906, they mined and sold forty car-loads of coal.

Will this frail craft escape the giant icebergs that surround it? Will the all-seeing eye protect it? Prayerful devotion and much of it, exact justice and stainless lives, sandwiched with Scotch grit, may work a miracle; and according to the writer's observations, therein lies their only safety.

I was invited to preach and celebrate Thanksgiving at Wilburton, but got another invitation from Elder Hansen to attend his debate with Bynum Black at Gravelley, Arkansas; so Thursday morning found me at Waldron. And while others were giving thanks and picking the bones of the turkey, ye missionary was thanking God for health, endurance, and will power to pick his feet over the thirty miles that stretched out before him. Got a ride the last five miles, and arrived at the seat of war in time to offer the opening prayer.

Black is an audacious enemy; rapid, witty, cunning, with a great memory, with sarcasm at times bordering onto the savage. His perception enabled him to size up his congregation at a glance. He has no scruples, but will resort to any foul means to make a point. We think we see in him a coming adversary of no small proportions.

He is the author of Sixty-Four Loaded Bomb Shells in the Mormon Ranks. Some of them are loaded so carelessly that if Bynum's bombs ever burst they will blow Black to "Bungay."

I presume the good Master will suffer him to advertize this latter-day work by blowing his bombastic bugle until Black's brains are butted out against the Gibraltar of truth.

Elder Hansen was equal to the emergency. He ably defended the truth, and laid bare the pretentious fraud, and bursted the glittering bubbles as fast as Black could blow them.

There were two very disgusting features connected with the debate; namely, Black's blatant, blistering misrepresentations, and their accompaniments were the pools and rivulets of amber that well-nigh flooded the Campbellites' amen corner.

Black begged out of a two hours' session on his affirmative.

On Monday, the 3d, we went to Stringer and preached at both Friendship and Lamb until Saturday, when Elder J. W. Jackson (our moderator) went to Gate, and on Monday Elder Hansen started for home.

I spent the most of Tuesday in Potean trying to find a couple of sisters whose signatures I wanted, but I despaired, and took a late evening train for Fort Smith, visited a sister-in-law, and on Wednesday came to this place.

I have preached at all of the above-named places, except Gravelley, Potean, and Fort Smith.

I have gleaned some historical items, and am doing my best to get others that lie buried in the forgotten past.

Bro. and Sr. McCormick, of Denning, have raised a large family of their own; they have met with reverses and lost a valuable home. All they own is a team, yet they are cheerful and full of love. The sister was directed to two homeless little waifs, girls, destitute of clothing, their feet and hands crusted with scales, their persons neglected until their appearance was frightful, and the scent offensive indeed. The motherly heart with no home of her own, adopted the repulsive little things, and now they are warmly and nicely clad, well-fed, happy, and clean.

One of Sr. Fulton's sons came near losing his life about three years ago. He was shot at several times by a drunken wretch, who soon after did murder a man and was sentenced to prison, after which his wife died leaving a little boy who has since enjoyed the motherly care of Sr. Fulton. If all of the Saints were to make one half the sacrifice for homeless children that these two aged sisters are making, the orphans' home would materialize at once.

If all wage-earners who are Saints would dedicate the proceeds of one good faithful day's work, and others contribute accordingly, I think we would be proud of our achievement to know how many wretched homeless children were made happy.

The weather is warm; frequent thunder-showers cause seeds to sprout and grow, and flowers to bloom like springtime.

I wish all Saints in unorganized portions of Arkansas, who are scattered, would correspond with me. My home address is Ravenden Springs, Arkansas.

D. R. BALDWIN.

BOONE, IOWA.

Our branch is in good condition, both spiritually and temporally, and God has blessed us.

The sisters of the branch have done a good work. To begin the work we held a "rummage sale," and the last day of the sale served refreshments, and on this sale we made sixty-three dollars and sixty-five cents. Thus encouraged, we continued our efforts, making and selling quilts, until we had accomplished the end we were working for, making our church presentable. Carpet was placed upon the floor, new seats purchased to replace the chairs, a new pulpit for the stand, with a large Bible to place thereon. And as an outside offering we sent fifteen dollars to Bishop Kelley: five dollars for the children's home, five dollars to the Saints' Home, and five dollars to the sanitarium. Recently we also placed a new sidewalk along the church lot.

Our district president, Elder M. H. Cook, was with us part of one week. From here he went to Fraser, where part of our branch is located, and at that time Bro. Frank Walters, one of our young men, was ordained to the office of priest.

The Sunday-school opened the Christmas offering box December 23, and it contained fourteen dollars and fifty-two cents.

The superintendent of our school here, with several workers and visitors, went to Fraser one Sunday in November and assisted the Saints there in organizing a Sunday-school, and the attendance at some of the sessions has reached thirty.

LYDIA L. HALL.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Bro. E. L. Kelley was here Sunday, December 9, and occupied the pulpit in the morning and evening. It was quite a treat to have him with us.

A ten pound girl was born to Bro. and Sr. J. R. Epperson, December 5. Also, a baby girl was born to Bro. and Sr. Charles Johnson, December 16.

A chart, showing the drawing of the tabernacle and the placing of the twelve tribes of Israel, was presented to the Sunday-school by Bro. Ray Chandler.

The ladies' aid society has been doing some very good work in the way of helping the poor and needy, making clothing for those in want, and helping the church in many ways.

Sr. Ethel Vance, daughter of Bro. and Sr. John Vice, left for Cheyenne, Wyoming, December 18, where she will reside.

The Sunday-school gave a Christmas entertainment at the church Monday evening, December 24. It was enjoyed by all.

The death of little three-year-old Edith Moses, daughter of Bro. Alexander Moses and wife, occurred at their home on West Twentieth Street, Sunday evening.

The district Sunday-school librarian, residing in the city, recently shipped to the Sunday-school and church at Packard eleven volumes of the HERALD, sixteen volumes of Autumn Leaves, a complete file of the Religio Quarterly, with several volumes of the Sunday-school Quarterly. The secretary of the Sunday-school in acknowledging receipt of the shipment says, "We thank you very much for the literature sent."

LAMONI.

The Christmas exercises held in the church Monday afternoon and evening were well attended. The high order which the Sunday-school has always maintained in their programs heretofore was still in evidence. In the decorations a landscape scene sketched by Miss Viola Allender is worthy of special mention.

All services are being held in the church basement on account of the repairing of the upper auditorium. "Coming events cast their shadows before." The "fixing up" is the "shadow" of the "coming event"—General Conference.

Among the home-coming college students is our Church Librarian, Bro. Heman Hale Smith, who is a sophomore at the State University of Iowa. Bro. Hale has special work in the University Library in connection with his studies.

Bishop E. L. Kelley came in from Independence, Missouri, Thursday evening. He was the speaker on Sunday morning. Bro. Earl D. Bailey, of Skiatook, Indian Territory, who is visiting relatives here, was the speaker in the evening.

The funeral of Bro. F. D. Young was held Sunday afternoon at the church. Bro. H. A. Stebbins delivered the sermon.

Bro. M. M. Turpen and family are now numbered with the residents of Lamoni.

The college faculty is now better equipped than formerly. Professor John A. Larsen, instructor in the normal department, has found that which seemed necessary in the beginning to make the perfect man. He and Miss Emma L. Cook, of Schaller, Iowa, were united in marriage on the 22d.

Bro. W. H. Kelley departed for Salt Lake City, Friday night; his little daughter, Loneta, is recovering nicely from her sickness.

David and Howard Dancer, the little sons of Sr. Anna A. Dancer, are spending their vacation in quarantine. They were taken down with scarlet fever on Christmas Eve.

KEOKUK, IOWA.

It is some time since the HERALD readers have heard from this branch. At one time there was a large, active branch here but most of the Saints have moved away.

I arrived here October 30, and soon found several of the Saints. I learned there had not been any meetings here for over a year and there were only a few of the Saints here. I consulted with them as to having a series of meetings; all seemed willing. There was a good turn-out, and we discovered a number of Saints of whom we had no knowledge. Keokuk has a little band of noble workers, who are willing both to sacrifice and to do.

There are several who have moved here lately, Sr. Peters and daughter Isabelle, who were baptized at the Nauvoo reunion, Sr. Dawson, daughter of Sr. Wallace, Bro. and Sr. Hyde who are from Indiana, and Sr. Himes from Montrose.

On the 4th of November we organized a Sabbath-school. Sr. Alice Jacobs was selected as superintendent; Sr. Hyde was chosen as her assistant; Sr. Peters secretary. We had a Christmas entertainment. If you were privileged to see what a beautiful tree we had, and also the decoration, and to hear the program rendered, you would conclude at once that there were some lively Saints here. Sr. Bogue furnished the beautiful decoration for the tree. Bro. Dawson furnished the tree. We call him "brother," but he is only brother-in-law at present. We hope ere long he will be a brother in full. He is a willing worker, as is also his wife, who is acting chorister of our branch. Sr. Early and Sr. Peters were program committee.

On December 2 Bro. McKiernan, our sub-missionary in charge, was with us and delivered a fine sermon. He appointed the writer to labor principally at this place. On December 6 we met in business-meeting and proceeded to organize a branch. The following officers were elected: A. C. Anderson, president; Sr. Daisy Early, clerk; Sr. Alice Jacobs, treasurer; Sr. Fannie Anderson, organist; Bro. Robinson, janitor.

The writer is now located at Keokuk with his family. Any one coming here will find us at 1306 Carroll Street. We have Sunday-school at ten o'clock in the forenoon, preaching at eleven o'clock, and preaching at half past seven in the evening, also prayer-meeting Wednesday evening at half past seven. Our chapel is located on corner Bank and Thirteenth Streets. We will be glad for any of the elders to stop when they are passing through.

A. C. ANDERSON.

"Do not think of your faults, still less of other people's faults. In every person who comes near you look for that which is good and strong; honor that, rejoice in it, and, as far as you can, try to imitate. For the rest, you will find it less easy to uproot faults than to choke them by gaining virtues. If, on looking back, your whole life should seem rugged as a palm-tree stem, never mind, so long as it has been growing and has its grand, green shade of leaves and weight of honeyed fruit at top."

Request from Lamoni Branch for ordination of Roy E. Haskins to office of priest was granted, and his ordination referred to the stake presidency. Requests for ordinations were received from the Hiteman, Centerville, Greenville, and Allendale Branches, and were referred to the stake high council and presidency. Sr. Annie Allen was chosen to succeed herself as a member of the auditing committee. Adjourned to meet at Lamoni, Iowa, at the call of stake presidency.

VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA.—Conference held at Geelong, Victoria, October 6, 1906, W. Mackie presiding, assisted by Elder Butterworth. Statistical reports: Richmond 92, Hastings 72, Queensferry 43. Ministerial reports were received from C. A. Butterworth, W. Mackie, J. H. N. Jones, and Elders Jenkins, McIntosh, and Trembath; Priests G. Eden, A. H. Ford, P. Rouse, G. Hailey; Teachers F. D. Rutherford, M. Carmichael. Bishop's agent's report: Income for six months, £87 7s. 1d.; expenditures, £87 9s. 10d; due agent, 2s. 9d. By motion it was resolved that a letter of condolence be forwarded to the widow and family of our late Bro. Evan G. Jones of Hastings, extending the sympathy of those assembled in conference to her in the sad loss sustained by his death. It was resolved that we petition the First Presidency to bring before the next conference the advisability of taking action in the courts of the United States for an injunction to restrain the Utah church from using the words Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as the official title of their organization. By motion it was resolved that Elders C. A. Butterworth, E. McGurk, and W. J. Trembath act as a committee to prepare the resolution. Moved and seconded that a committee consisting of Elders Butterworth, McIntosh, and McGurk be appointed to prepare a reply (to be inserted in the local papers) to the misrepresentations that have recently appeared therein concerning the reported arrest of President Joseph Smith. [Elders Mackie and Butterworth had in the meantime replied to these reports.—A. H. F.] The committee reported that as the misrepresentations had been fairly well answered we utilize the money (collected for the purpose named) for the purchase of tracts for the use of the missionaries laboring in this district. Resolution was read from Richmond Branch that delegates be instructed to choose Elder J. W. Wight to represent this district at the next General Conference, and in the event of his being chosen by more districts than he can satisfactorily represent, that he be instructed to choose another representative in his stead. It was resolved that we hold our next conference on the Saturday and Sunday, Easter, 1907. Election of officers: D. McIntosh was elected district president; W. J. Trembath, vice-president; A. H. Ford, sustained as district secretary. The Sunday sacrament-service in charge of Elders Mackie and McIntosh was spent in prayer, testimony, and praise, the spirit of prophecy being present to a marked degree, to the edification of those present. Albert H. Ford, secretary.

SOUTHERN INDIANA DISTRICT.—Convened at Pilot Knob, Indiana, December 22, 2.30 p. m., P. A. Flinn in chair. J. W. Wight was chosen to preside, with P. A. Flinn as assistant. John Zahnd was chosen secretary of conference. New Marion Branch was disorganized. Motion prevailed to grant letters of removal to all Saints of New Marion Branch. Motion prevailed for district officers to investigate and show why several branches have not reported as per law in Doctrine and Covenants, and report such action to next conference. Motion prevailed to allow $1.71 expenses to district secretary, no money being in treasurer's hands same is carried over for next conference action. Bishop's agent's report was received and adopted. Motion prevailed to accept C. E. Harpe's resignation as district president, also to release Bro. John Zahnd as district secretary. W. H. Kelley was chosen president for the remainder of term; Ed. O. Byrn, secretary. Byrnville was selected as place for next conference, time to be appointed by district president and district secretary, in June, 1907. Delegates to General Conference: J. W. Wight, W. H. Kelley, David Baggerly, W. C. Marshall, J. J. Boswell, J. P. Sappenfield, J. A. Ferguson, John Zahnd, James McKenney, P. A. Flinn, C. E. Harpe. Delegates present to cast full vote; in case of division a majority and minority vote.

MINNESOTA.—Conference convened at Amor, Minnesota, November 24, 1906, at 10 o'clock, H. A. McCoy in chair, assisted by Birch Whiting; Irene Whiting secretary. Robertson, Birch Whiting, F. D. Omans, H. O. Smith, Lurrett Whiting, T. J. Martin, Sr. S. A. Nye, Penn Martin, Sr. Eleanor Whiting, Sr. Birch Whiting, and Fred Green. Adjourned to meet last Saturday of the reunion, June 22, 1907, at Clitherall.

The Presidency.

MISSIONARY RELEASES.

By concurrence of the authorities concerned, Elder J. D. Erwin has been released from missionary appointment.

By concurrence of Presidency and missionary in charge Patriarch Ammon White has been granted partial temporary release from appointment given him by last General Conference. A portion of his time is being given to church-work, but his temporary engagement in other work demanding his attention will prevent his reaching some appointments previously made. Those concerned will hereby understand what might appear as his failure to keep appointments.

By understanding between the presidency and the missionary in charge of the British Mission, Elder F. J. Pierce, who has for five years been doing continuous missionary work in the British Mission, has been granted permission to return to America in time for the General Conference.

FRED'K M. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, December 27, 1906.

Died.

HUHN.—Bro. John A. Huhn was born in Baden, Germany, September 28, 1832. Came to America in early manhood; served his country three years, three months, and nine days in Company G, Fourth Maryland Regiment. Married Miss Anna Hoofnaugle March 1, 1870. Of them were born ten children; eight still living. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church July 23, 1905. Was a faithful member to his death, which occurred at Philo, Illinois, November 29, 1906. Was buried at Nevada, Iowa, December 2. Sermon in the Christian's new church, to a packed house of very attentive listeners, by J. S. Roth.

WRIGHT.—Sr. Laura C. Wright; born September 10, 1876, at Farmington, Missouri; married to Bro. Wright at the age of twenty. Two boys and two girls were born of them, and remain to miss the love of a mother. Sr. Wright united with the church March 4, 1901. Left the earth life, December 8, 1906, from her home near Seiling, Oklahoma, to rest in company with Saints gone before. Husband, parents, sisters, kinsfolk, and friends remain to endure the separation till the final happy union just beyond. Funeral-service at the home, conducted by James Yates, assisted by R. M. Maloney.

MACKLAND.—Elizabeth Mackland was born October 24, 1830, at Motram, England. Baptized March 30, 1864, near Council Bluffs. Died December 6, 1906, in her seventy-seventh year, leaving two sons and four daughters. Funeral-services conducted by Charles Fry, at Boomer Cemetery Church, near Council Bluffs, Iowa.

BURKLOW.—Bro. Newt. J. Burklow, Tunnelhill, Illinois, born in Jackson County, Illinois, October 1, 1855; died November 20, 1906. Baptized and confirmed by John F. Hanson, February 26, 1896. He was one of our most highly respected citizens. As a Christian, he was upright; always proving himself by right living. His lifework was one worthy of imitation, and we feel that as a citizen he was an honor to his community, and as a Saint was worthy of the welcome, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." His wife and five children survive him.

HEISTAND.—Gideon T. Heistand was born January 14, 1861, in Fountain County, Indiana. Came to Iowa in 1884; married to Amanda Jarred in 1885. Passed away Thursday evening, October 25, 1906. He was a good man, a good husband, a good father, and had a faith that would not shrink. He joined the church October 14, 1899. Was ordained teacher and strove to fulfill his duty. He leaves to mourn, wife, two sons, five daughters, one granddaughter, five brothers, and a host of friends and other loved ones. Funeral-services at Pisgah, Iowa; sermon by George Shearer.

MILLMAN.—At Plymouth, Massachusetts, November 22, 1906, Sr. Emma S. Millman, daughter of Bro. and Sr. N. R. Nickerson. She was born August 25, 1882; was baptized June 2, 1895. Funeral-service was held at the home of her parents, conducted by Elder Richard Bullard. She leaves to mourn her departure, five sisters, two brothers, and a son, besides her parents, who mourn, not as those without hope.

"I may not know why death should come,
To take the dear ones from my home,
But tho' mine eyes with tears be dim,
The Lord knows why—I'll trust in him."

ANTWISTLE.—Bro. Thomas Antwistle, born May 7, 1837, at Blackburn, county of Lancashire, England; died at his home in Weir City, Kansas, November 26, 1906. Services were conducted from Latter Day Saint church in Weir City at 2.30 p. m., December 2, 1906, by Elder E. A. Davis, Pittsburg, Kansas. Mrs. Sarah Antwistle, his wife, died in 1900. Surviving their death are six children, and many friends to mourn.

PHILLIPS.—At the home of her sister, Sr. Margaret Campbell, Cleveland, Iowa, November 2, 1906, Sr. Catherine Phillips fell asleep, after a long and tedious illness, of heart disease. She was born June 26, 1873, at Wellsville, Missouri. Baptized May 5, 1890, at Lucas, Iowa, by E. B. Morgan, who also preached her funeral-sermon November 4, when she was followed by a large cortege, and interred at Fry Hill Cemetery, old Cleveland.

MILLER.—Sr. Seleta Miller was born June 15, 1829. Died September 26, 1906, near Theodore, Alabama. Was baptized January 22, 1893, by F. P. Scarcliff. She leaves two sons and two daughters. She was faithful unto her death. Funeral at the grave, by W. L. Booker.

TILLMAN.—Sr. Sarah J. Tillman died near Theodore, Alabama, October 12, 1906. Was born September 3, 1846. Was baptized June 13, 1895, by G. T. Chute. She leaves husband, three sons, and four daughters to mourn. Funeral at the grave by W. L. Booker.

FORD.—Jacob Ford was born May 11, 1830. Was baptized November 13, 1887, at Wirt, Indiana, by T. W. Smith. He fell asleep in Christ November 25, 1906. He leaves wife, two daughters, and a neighborhood of sympathizing friends to mourn their loss. Funeral-sermon by J. J. Boswell. Was laid to rest in McKay Cemetery, to await the final call of the faithful.

STAPLETON.—Sr. Sarah Alice, daughter of Thomas W. and Susan Lewis, was born in Boon County, Indiana, May 2, 1864, and died at her father's home Scranton, Iowa, December 25, 1906. She was married to Mr. Albert N. Stapleton, February 18, 1890. Of this union were born six sons and one daughter, the son and the daughter preceded her to the land of rest. She was baptized about seventeen years ago. She died in hope of a glorious resurrection. Funeral-services were conducted in the Friends' church, December 28, 1906, by C. E. Butterworth, the Friends' minister and choir doing the singing.

France and the Church.

It may be that, even admitting all its attempts at conciliation, the French government might have dealt a little more gently with the great, historic institution which has been bound up so much with the national life of the French people. It might have been possible to have negotiated more directly with the Vatican in the matter. And yet the real issue is not whether the church shall or shall not accept a certain form of organization in its purely material affairs. The form to which it now objects in France is practically the same as that which it has long accepted, and that under which it has enjoyed and is enjoying to-day great freedom and prosperity in other lands. The real question is whether in France, where the church was long superior to the state, the church shall now be subject to the civil power. Some years ago very much the same issue was fought out between the state and the army. It was a bitter fight, and it threatened the stability of the republic, but in the end the republic won, and won absolutely. Now it is to be seen whether the authority at Rome, which should be purely spiritual, instead of the civil power at Paris, shall, hereafter, be supreme in governing the republic.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for January.

"Cuba's Malady."

Friends write me from the North, asking: "How did it happen? What is the truth? Foreswear your journalistic pyrotechnics and forget for once the existence of Ananias." The National shall answer them all. 'Tis a tale Arcadian in its simplicity. A weak executive, surrounded by unscrupulous politicians, ergo, grafters. Palma, a dear old gentleman, was not by character or training fit to govern men. He never did, even in the days of the Cuban Junta in New York, when brainy men, like Rubens, swayed him at their will. He was their show piece, and put forward on account of his earnestness and almost fanatical patriotism, and unquestioned moral rectitude. Palma was forceful only in pleading for Cuba and asking for financial assistance. One day he decided that it behooved him to buy a hat, after being urged to do so repeatedly by his intimates. He espied a small shop on Broadway, and, vaguely thinking that the price would be small in proportion, selected a hat and, without asking the price, had his initials, stamped on the band. The salesman said, "Five dollars!" It was a Knox. He excitedly rushed into the offices of the Junta, exclaiming: "What do you think, gentlemen; five dollars for a hat!" This incident, insignificant per se, serves merely to show how unworlly he was. How, then, could he govern and check the intriguing Latin-American politician and office-seeker? But Roosevelt knew that he was honest, and as the chairman of the Junta, he was the logical candidate for president. The men he confided in became bolder, and planned to perpetuate the Moderate party in power for ever. They resorted to methods of oppression and persecution. They did not play fair. They wanted it all, and the Liberals, who would have been contented to take the leavings, found that, like the boy in the cereal advertisement, "there ain't going to be no leavings," and took to the woods. In justice to Cuba's first civil war, whatever the ultimate object may be of its projectors and leaders, there was some excuse and justification. There was really an armed protest (they claim); a militarily-organized strike to attract the attention of the United States to the real condition of affairs. They succeeded, and it was assuredly a most bloodless war.—John Vazasour Noel in National Magazine for January.

Sketching the Sultan by Stealth.

Homer Davenport visited Constantinople several months ago to endeavor to make a sketch from life of Abdul Hamid, Sultan of Turkey, for the Woman's Home Companion. The Sultan has never been photographed and the alleged portrait of him hitherto published is really one of his brother. Mr. Davenport risked his liberty in the attempt but succeeded. The portrait, together with the artist's description of the incident, appears in the January number of the magazine. This is how Davenport saw the Sultan:

An open carriage comes through the gigantic palace gates that sparkle like gold as they swung open. Surrounding the carriage are guards with drawn swords and tightly clinched fists. Hitched to the carriage are two fine bay horses with docked tails. Their coats are as golden as their harness, and they prance as if they need exercise. They were the first Arab horses we had seen on the trip, yet they went unheeded by.

I was there to see the Sultan, and here he was, not twenty-five feet away. It was the supreme moment and I had all the fears of the artist who feels that the chance of a lifetime has arrived, and the result either will be a success or a ghastly failure. I experienced all the eager longing and excitement attending an opportunity to get a picture which nobody else in the world had ever made. And I had only a moment to do it in. I was afraid my eyes would not register. Suppose a smarting fly—and there are many of them in Constantinople—should get in my eye for just that brief moment; suppose I should sneeze!

Well, I just stood there in that open window overlooking that scene of gorgeous ceremony and riotous color, and looked and looked at the frail little man in the carriage. I did not miss a line of his features. To take out sketching pad and pencil would have been fatal. Spies stood back of us watching every motion of our hands.

The carriage passed slowly, and I had what a photographer would call a "time exposure." It could not have been more than two minutes, but it seemed as many years.

As the Sultan passed up toward the big golden palace gates of Turkish design he glanced toward us as if in recognition. His personality was that of an old man who might be knitting. He caused you to believe that you had actually known him a long, long time.

But how to make the picture which I had come all these thousands of miles for. Our first effort was to get out of the palace as quickly as possible. It would be necessary for us to get quite some miles away, as we were already looked upon by the Turkish spies as men sent by the President of the United States to investigate the American trouble.

But after twenty minutes' ride from the palace, Moore suggested that I should not risk going further, that I ought to draw the impressions of this remarkable old gentleman before anything faded from my memory. So, still in my carriage, guarded by these two big, stalwart young men, I made the picture, which pleased us beyond expression. I knew instinctively I had caught something that made my drawing of him, not of an idealized Sultan. The boys at once said it was a fine likeness. There was nobody looking, so I had time to finish it then and there, just as it is reproduced in connection with this article.

The Woman's Home Companion took up the cause of child labor reform as an editorial feature in May, 1906. In sympathetic cooperation with the National Child Labor Committee, the Woman's Home Companion planned a series of investigations of child labor conditions, with the idea of first telling our readers the truth about child labor and the enlisting their active support in reform measures. A corps of trained investigators was sent to every important industrial center in the country and the results of their investigations have appeared from time to time in the pages of the Woman's Home Companion.

By INDEPENDENCE COAL MINING COMPANY

In order to develop and open up the new coal-mining interests near Independence and also make necessary preparations for homes for mine-workers, it is necessary that sufficient capital be secured within a short time. The amount sought for is very small compared with the capital of other coal-mining interests and, for various reasons, the directors of this company desire to keep the working and controlling power with the church members, if possible. The opening up of an undeveloped coal field at the edge of a densely populated community of 400,000 population is a matter of considerable consideration, as the product is part of the necessities of life, with freight rates practically cut off, making this enterprise an exceptional one.

Five hundred and sixty-nine acres have been leased for fifty years and one hundred and fifty-four purchased, making in all seven hundred and twenty-three acres of coal-land in one body, on the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, two miles east of Independence.

The company already has coal-mines at Napoleon, Missouri, in operation and a successful and prosperous retail business, making this a bona fide, paying investment.

Money seeking investment can find no better place, and will bring the best kind of satisfaction, as it will bring good returns to the investor and results that are much sought for, also benefitting the unemployed, scattered, pressed-down, poor church members by placing them in a position to help themselves.

The 154 acres are intended for homes for mine-workers, to be sold at a reasonable price, and we solicit the co-operation of miners to purchase stock, according to their ability.

The promoters of this company are not working for any selfish interests. There is no watered nor fictitious valued stock. The company is incorporated under the laws of the state of Missouri. Capital stock, $40,000.00; shares, $100.00 each; amount paid up $35,000. The capital stock must be increased to the amount needed. Parties sending money can do so by bank draft. ### THE HERALD OFFICE BURNED.

It is no very good news that we have to convey to our readers through our second number for the new year.

The HERALD printing and bindery plant was entirely destroyed by fire, Saturday morning, January 5.

The fire started in the pressroom in the basement but its exact origin is not known and may never be known. It is suspected that a gasoline explosion may have been the cause or possibly it was started by the furnace. No one was in the room at the time, although two or three employees had left the room shortly before and they were not aware of any signs of fire and no lights were left burning.

Fire was first discovered by the girls working in the mailing-room just above the pressroom and Bro. John Garver gave the alarm at about twenty minutes of eight o'clock. In about sixty minutes from that time the building was burned, the walls had fallen, and the HERALD Office was in ruins.

The fire company, the office force, and the citizens did all that could be done to check the fire, but in vain. Efforts were at first directed toward extinguishing the fire and when it was discovered that it was impossible to accomplish that it was too late to prosecute any successful work of salvage. Within fifteen minutes from the time the fire was discovered the most of the rooms were filled with such dense smoke that no one could enter and live.

The most of the bound books in stock in the manager's room, together with his accounts, cash on hand, and mailing lists, were saved, but nothing of value was saved from the pressroom, composing-room, bindery, or editorial rooms. Presses, paper, type, machines, books—everything went up in smoke.

The total loss is estimated at forty thousand dollars, ten thousand of which is covered by insurance. This was about as heavy insurance as could be obtained, as the office was considered a heavy risk.

The most lamentable feature is not the financial loss.

The church library, containing many rare and valuable books, was destroyed. Many of these can never be replaced. Bro. Heman Hale Smith, Church Librarian, succeeded in rescuing a few volumes, numbering with those loaned out about fifty volumes.

Nothing was saved from the office of Bro. Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. The work of years on the part of the Church Historians is lost. Many old historical documents were destroyed, which of course can not be reproduced.

Nothing was saved from the Church Secretary's office, and very valuable church documents and papers were destroyed there.

Nothing was saved from the editorial rooms. All manuscripts there awaiting publication were destroyed.

Bro. D. J. Krahl succeeded in saving most of the contents of the Bishop's room. The Bishop's books were in the fire-proof vault.

The books containing the records of church membership, in the care of Bro. C. I. Carpenter, Church Recorder, were in the fire-proof vault, and if it really proves fireproof they are safe. It has not yet been opened. Records of the Lamoni Stake and branch are lost.

It is safe to say that when the walls of the old historic building fell with a crash and a roar a sickening sensation visited every heart in the great throng of spectators. All stood hushed and awed and many were observed to weep. To many the HERALD Office had been a landmark all their lives long. Many of the spectators had worked in the office, some of them for nineteen consecutive years. More than one couple had formed the acquaintance there which resulted in marriage. It was like witnessing the death agony of an old friend.

Events move rapidly at such times. The destruction was about complete at nine o'clock; by ten o'clock headquarters were established down-town in the France Block, Bro. F. B. Blair, Bro. John Garver, Sr. Berta Johnson, Bro. W. R. Dexter from the Manager's room, assisted by a mixed force of compositors, binders, proof-readers, and pressmen, were arranging the rescued stock of books upon shelves, a few customers were being waited on, and the Editors were going through the morning mail in search of "copy"; and at one o'clock the compositors began in the "Chronicle" Office upon this issue of the HERALD—a paper without a home but with great expectations.

At eleven o'clock a citizens' meeting was held in the Farmer's State Bank to devise ways of helping the church to rebuild the establishment. A committee, consisting of W. A. Hopkins, Daniel Anderson, J. W. Smith, D. F. Nicholson, B. D. Fleet, F. W. Newcomb, R. J. Lambert, W. A. Grenawalt, Ferd Rauch, and M. P. Tilton, was appointed to solicit subscriptions. As a result of this meeting a mass-meeting of citizens was held in the basement of the Brick Church, Sunday morning, January 6, at eleven o'clock.

At this meeting speeches were made by D. F. Lambert, Heman C. Smith, Fred B. Blair, J. W. Smith, John Smith, and W. A.

Hopkins. Tellers were then appointed, and under the direction of W. A. Hopkins began the work of taking subscriptions.

The subscriptions ranged in amount all the way from fifty cents to one thousand dollars. They came from middle-aged people, young people, little children, and very aged people. Rich men and poor widows contributed. The total amount subscribed at the meeting was thirteen thousand forty-five dollars and fifty cents.

The committee was given power to appoint other solicitors for the purpose of canvassing the town and country. The esteem in which the Saints are held in the community was evidenced by the very generous way in which nonmembers donated.

These subscriptions are made payable on condition that the HERALD Office be rebuilt at Lamoni; and they are payable in cash or in bankable notes to be paid in three periodical payments, three, six, and nine months from the date of acceptance by the church.

The citizens' soliciting committee met at the home of the chairman, W. A. Hopkins, Sunday afternoon at five o'clock, and selected fifty-two additional solicitors to canvass Lamoni and adjacent territory, Evergreen, Oland, Lone Rock, Eagleville, Pawnee, Greenville, Davis City, Leon, Grand River, Kellerton, Mt. Ayr, Andover, Tuskeega, Lee, and Pleasanton. The committee will endeavor to double the amount subscribed at the mass-meeting. They also ordered a special published giving a report of the speeches made at the mass-meeting and a list of subscriptions to date.

The HERALD Office will be rebuilt and it will be a better building than the one which was burned. In time it will be better equipped than the old one was.

The HERALD will continue to be published we presume without serious delay. This issue is smaller than usual, but just as full of determination. Some plans which were about to be put into execution for the immediate improvement of the paper have been temporarily disarranged; but in time we will get back to our old standard and we fully expect to rise above that standard.

In the meantime, patrons of the office must be patient. An immense amount of work was done at the old plant. Many books, tracts, and pamphlets were printed, besides the regular publications, the SAINTS' HERALD, Autumn Leaves, Zion's Hope, the Exponent, and the Gospel Quarterly. This output of course can not be kept up with any equipment now at the disposal of the Board of Publication without some serious delays.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

MEETING OF THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

Board of Publication met at the home of F. B. Blair at 9 a. m. Members present: E. L. Kelley, T. A. Hougas, Oscar Anderson, H. R. Mills, and F. B. Blair. Also F. M. Smith of the Presidency, H. C. Smith of the Twelve, and E. A. Blakeslee of the Bishopric.

On motion F. B. Blair was chosen secretary of the meeting.

An informal expression of those present was had touching the issuing of the regular publications.

Resolved that it is the sense of this meeting that the Board of Publication take such steps as they deem necessary to continue the issuing of the regular church periodicals without interruption. Carried.

Resolved that it is the sense of this meeting that the Board of Publication secure at once plans, specifications, and estimate for the erection of a proper fire-proof publishing-house and building.

FRED B. BLAIR, Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 7, 1907.

ADDITIONAL FIRE NOTES.

For many years nearly every subscription paper that has been circulated through the town or country has visited the HERALD Office, and few, even of the little children who came selling candy to get a Christmas Offering, have gone away empty handed. Why should not the community respond when the office is in need?

Saturday certainly saw a saddened people in Lamoni, and the office force had as much cause as any to feel the blow, because it might ultimately mean to them the loss of employment and perhaps of homes; yet when they rallied in the France Building they faced the situation cheerfully and each one indulged in a smile at some one else's expense. The Assistant Editor was heard to ask the Associate Editor if the blue pencil was saved. It was not, and so a new one was speedily provided. The old one perished with its friend, the typewriter, and with its natural prey, "copy submitted for publication."

The Editors want copy, "good copy," short articles on gospel topics, plainly written with a pen or typewriter. Our views as to the character of these articles have not changed since we wrote the editorial in the number of the HERALD just preceding this one.

Copy contributions to Autumn Leaves were mostly in the office of the Editor at his home and so escaped; some few, however, were at the HERALD Office. Some of the HERALD articles which were burned and which we were expecting to publish were valuable and we deeply regret their loss. Concerning some others we maintain a profound silence.

A pleasing feature of the citizens' mass-meeting was the well sustained rapid fire of subscriptions from Graceland students and faculty.

The loss of the HERALD Office means more to the community at Lamoni than it does to any others of the Saints. The welfare of this town is indissolubly connected with the HERALD Office, and the citizens propose to see that the loss is more than made good.

The valuable original manuscript of the Book of Mormon was in the fire-proof vault at the time of the fire.

Sunday-schools in need of Quarterlies for the present quarter should write the office at once. If a sufficient number is needed they will be reprinted. State what grades are needed and the number of each.

The mass-meeting at the Brick Church, Sunday, demonstrated what might be done if the whole church were aroused to build a sanitarium, a children's home—or a temple. At that meeting the average donation was about thirty dollars for every individual present, and there were numbers of children and aged people present. It is a fact too that the congregation was composed mostly of poor people. When the heart is touched a "surplus" can be located.

The mass-meeting Sunday morning ran over into the afternoon so far that it was impossible to hold the regular sacrament-meeting and it was held in the evening. Fervent thanks were offered for the generous way in which the people were rallying to the aid of the church in rebuilding the HERALD Office.

The Board of Publication met at Lamoni, Monday forenoon. All members were present; also E. A. Blakesley of the Bishopric, Fred'k M. Smith, of the Presidency, and Heman C. Smith, of the Twelve.

LIGHTS AND SHADOWS.

How checkered are the scenes of life with the falling athwart each other of lights and shadows.

The beauty of a picture on the blending and harmonizing of light and shade, as well as of grace in outline, or correctness in detail, or harmonious coloring. The perfect artist is the one who is skillful along all these lines, and if we trust the life-picture to the Master Artist, we may be sure the lights and shadows will be given in correct proportion.

Too many think their life-picture requires more light and less shadows, and so create artificial lights of worldly pleasure and sensual delights, endeavoring thus to dispel the shadows of care and responsibility; thus giving their life-pictures an unnatural, and sometimes even a lurid glare, not at all harmonious nor pleasing to the Master's eye. And oftimes the shadows are darkened and deepened by our foolish tampering.

Excess in those things that are legitimate pleasures will cast across the picture dark shadows of sickness and poverty and despair.

Estrangement of friends, the misunderstandings that sometime will arise in the minds of our loved ones are only shadows, some darker and denser than others, which often may be dispelled by the light of truth being shed over the matter, that we may see things as they really are—to see, perhaps, a right motive behind what seems like a wrong, or a foolish act.

The dark shadows of death, unless illumined by faith, cast a dark background to every picture; but it seems as if the saddest of all the shadows that darken the life-picture, is the shadow of sin, whether cast by our own sin, or that of our loved ones. Ah! that is the shadow that always mars the perfect harmony of blended coloring, and mingled lights and shadows. But the Master Artist can correct even this, and in the place of this evil shadow set the lights of truth, purity, and virtue, if we will but submit our work to his hand.

Health, friendship, neighborly kindness, and brotherly love, are lights that will illumine our life-picture, even if under the shadow of poverty which only these lights to a better advantage. Had we no needs, we would never know the pleasure of having our needs supplied.

“We measure our wealth by the wants we have known.”

Were it always high noon there would be no rosy dawns, no restful, soothing twilights.

I love the dawn with its renewed possibilities for joy, peace, and service; for without service there is no true joy, and peace follows service faithfully performed.

I love the calm twilight after the toils and cares of the day, a fitting time for the visit of the angels of comfort and consolation; and after a day well spent, how near they sometimes seem. Though our eyes be holden, we can feel the fanning of their wings cooling our fevered brows, and hear their gentle whispered words of commendation and encouragement.

But the fresh, inspiring loveliness of the dawn, and the calm, restful beauty of the twilight, are both only the blending of lights and shadows, by the Master hand.

How lovely the morn of youth; but how quickly does it give place to the strong, high lights of adult life, the noontide of our little day; then how swiftly the twilight of old age comes on, softening the midday glare with the first faint but fast-approaching shadows of the long night that awaits “after the day is over.” How sweet if we can, in that twilight hour, sit with folded hands, and hear the gentle whisper of the angel who will speak to us of the "rest that remaineth," and will cheer our souls by telling of the glad morning that will dawn for those who have been faithful during their day.

Some lives seem to have too much shadow; especially does this seem to be the case when the shadows are cast by the wrong-doing of our loved ones, thus mar- rying what the Master has meant to be beau- tiful. But even these shadowed lives may be made bright, for the Master knows how to correct even this, and has ways of send- ing light into the darkened lives, by his servants. The pleasant "good morning," the kindly smile, the gift of just a flower, or a loving token of remembrance, ofttimes brings light into just such shadowed lives. So then, as his servants, we should never check nor repress these little tokens of good will and sympathy. How careful should we be that no word or deed of ours should cast an unnecessary shadow across the life-picture of any.

We, the Saints, are the light of the world, or we should be, obtaining our light from Him who is light and who has com- manded us to "let our lights so shine that men may see our good works." Our lamps must be kept filled, and clean and properly prepared, if we would have our light to shine clear and steady, with no shade of false doctrine, nor of uncertain opinions of men.

ALICE R. CORSON.

A SHORT HISTORY OF THE HERALD OFFICE.

The printing-office was moved from Plano, Illinois, to Lamoni, Iowa, in the fall of 1881. The building had been erected that summer from brick burned at Lamoni.

The original building was a frame struc- ture, brick veneered, and was thirty by seventy feet in size, two stories high.

At first the presses were in the room which was afterwards used as a bindery.

Several years later a wing was builded on the west, two stories high, and with a basement which was used as a pressroom. The mailing room, Bishop's office, and Recorder's office were located on the first floor of this wing; and the editorial room, Presidency's room, Historian's room, and mailing-list and stereotype-room were on the second floor. The floor space of this wing including basement about equaled that of the main building.

President Joseph Smith acted as manager for several years, and was followed in succession by David Dancer, Frank Criley, John Smith, and Fred B. Blair.

The writer acted as secretary of the Board of Publication and handled the finances of the institution for nearly fifteen years.

Among those who came with the office from Plano, were John Scott, who was foreman of the composing room, Lawrence Conever, who acted as secretary until the winter of 1883, W. H. Deam, foreman of the pressroom, and William Crick, now of Independence.

The building was destroyed by fire Jan- uary 5, 1907.

Letter Department

INDIAN RIVER, Maine, Jan. 2, 1907.

Editors Herald: It was my privilege to attend the conference of the Eastern Maine District which met at this place December 22 and 23, 1906. To me it was a great pleasure once again to meet with Saints and friends of precious acquaintance and with whom I had spent one year in gospel work. The people of Indian River are noted for their hospitality, and whatever their creed may be, they mingle freely together, especially at conference time. The conference was presided over by Elder S. O. Foss and was seemingly enjoyed by all who attended. The preaching was by Elders S. O. Foss, Eugene D. Braun, and the writer. No flattering reports of progress can truthfully be made of the gospel work in this State so far as known to me. There are many things to discour- age, not the least of which is the continuance of evil and immorality among our people. Here as elsewhere, those on the outside who are favorably impressed with our work, attempt to justify them- selves in not obeying the gospel by pointing out sinners and evil-doers in the church. They for- get that every person must give account to God for the conduct of his own life. However, the Savior has said of his disciples, that the world in seeing their "good works" would be led to glorify God. It follows as night the day that if they see "evil works" it will increase their doubt and unbelief. Members of the church who continue to do evil, deceive themselves if they think that the fact of their holding a certificate of baptism, and having their names on the church records, will be sufficient to insure their passport into glory and to obtain the promised inheritance in the kingdom of God. The door is to be shut against the "foolish virgins"; the bad fish in the gospel net are to be cast away; the angels are to gather out of the kingdom all that offend and those that do iniquity. If we want a crown of life we must be "faithful unto death"; if we want to be saved, we must "endure unto the end"; if we do not want our name blotted out of the "book of life" we must overcome the sins and evils with which we are surrounded. It matters not how much we may boast of our faith in this latter-day work; of how we can flay our opponents as champions in understanding and explaining the scripture; we may pay tithing and drink not a bit of tea or coffee; we may pray long and loud and outwardly appear as righteous among men. But God's word says that no fornicator nor adulterer nor thief nor covetous man, nor drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God. The Psalmist prayed thus: "Create in me a clean heart, O God! and renew a right spirit within me." A clean heart is one of innocence and guiltless—possible for any one to possess who simply resolve to do right. A right spirit may easily be changed to a wrong spirit by lust, jealousy, anger, spite, malice, and other influences. The Bible stands alone as the unique index of character. Its chief aim is to develop in every human soul the elements that constitute the highest and best manhood and womanhood. Whosoever looketh into the perfect law, in the light of its requirements, can in a large measure see himself as others see him. This gospel of the kingdom is truly a wonderful thing; its truths are deep and inexhaustible. My love, understanding, and admiration of it grow with the passing years. I held services last Sunday with the Saints at Beals Island and have appointments at Jonesport for next Sunday, after which I will return from this brief holiday trip to my field proper, in Western Maine—my headquarters at Stonington where mail will always reach me.

Sincerely yours,

W. E. LARUE.

DELOIT, Iowa, January 7, 1907.

Editors Herald: Your card received this morning. Word had reached me yesterday at four o'clock of the great loss to the church by fire.

Words fail me to tell how greatly I deplore our loss by that fire. Good to the church may come from it, but I can not see how. I spent a wakeful night after hearing the sad news.

I have enjoyed the articles, editorials and general make-up of the HERALD. The good Lord has blessed you.

Am assisting Elder Turner hold meetings here this week.

Sincerely,

C. J. HUNT.

News from Branches

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

New Year's Eve will long be remembered by Independence Saints who celebrated the event by attending the prayer- and testimony-meeting held at that time. The service lasted from nine o'clock in the evening until after midnight and the time was none too long. A baptismal service at the beginning of the meeting added three more to our branch membership. The suggestive theme of the meeting was relative to the duty of the Saints here in redeeming this particular part of Zion. The meeting was in charge of Frank Criley, R. B. Trowbridge, and J. A. Gardner.

Last Wednesday night, Bro. Criley was selected presiding officer of the young people's prayer-meeting, also the long talked of Doctrine and Covenants Class was organized with a charter membership of forty.

The Sunday-school met on New Year's night for election of officers, and by their vote sustained all of the old officers who are as follows: Superintendent, Earl Corthell; first assistant superintendent, Lester Brackenbury; second assistant superintendent, Sr. B. C. Smith; third assistant superintendent, Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser; secretary, Daisy Booker; treasurer, John Charles May; librarian, J. A. Gardner; library treasurer, Sr. M. T. Short; chorister, E. C. Harrington.

On the following Friday night the Religio cast their ballots, and surprised themselves by making some unexpected changes. The officers elected are as follows: President, William Pitt; vice-president, J. A. Gardner; treasurer, John Charles May; secretary, Pearl Gardner; librarian, John Lentel; chorister, Frank Criley, Jr.

For both organizations the outlook is promising and it is up to us all to make a success of these auxiliaries.

Among other New Year's visitors, were Sr. Mary Smith, and Bro. and Sr. Morton from St. Joseph, Sr. E. S. McNechal from Atchison, and Bro. Royal Brocau of St. Louis.

The Sunday-school gave $332.00 this year as their Christmas Offering. J. A. GARDNER.

The Bishop.

Bishop Kelley requests the HERALD Editors to announce that nothing of value was lost from his room in the recent fire. He desires the Saints to feel no uneasiness about his accounts.

God's Spirit works. Have faith; begone my fears.—David H. Smith, Autumn Leaves.

Conference adjourned to meet at Webb City, Missouri, Friday before full moon in February. Mollie Davis, secretary.

Church Secretary.

TO DISTRICT PRESIDENTS AND SECRETARIES.

Inasmuch as all blank forms and many other papers in the Church Secretary's office were destroyed in the loss of the HERALD Office building, all district officers, and officers of branches not in districts, are requested to send in their General Conference credentials. Blanks will not be sent from this office, hence district officers will please make up and forward credentials, in the following form: To R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary, Lamoni, Iowa: At a conference of the _____ District, held at _____ 190-, the following named were elected as delegates to represent said district at the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ to be held at Lamoni, Iowa, April 6-, 1907. The total membership, including scattered members, is _____.

_____ President.
Dated _____ 190-. _____ Secretary.
Please do not fail to include total membership.
Secretary's post-office address: _____

District secretaries are requested to include their post-office addresses in all cases, for general use.

R. S. SALYARDS, Secretary.
LAMONI, Iowa, January 6, 1907.

Historian's Notice.

Permit me to call the attention of the Local Historians throughout the world to the fact that all the reports of Local Historians on file in Historian's Office were consumed in the late fire, and it will therefore be necessary to rewrite all of them. I hope each of you will write a history of your respective district, or territory, and forward to this office where complete, or in parts, as in most convenient.

Let us not be discouraged because of the arduous work, but resolve to go to work with a will determined to make if possible a better record than we had before. Those who have kept duplicates will not have so much trouble as those who have not; and I wish here to urge that in the future each one keep a copy of what he sends to this office, and let the copies correspond in paging to the originals, so that we can refer to the record conveniently when correspondence is necessary between you and this office.

As soon as you read this write us, giving your address, as our record of names and addresses is lost, and we wish to reproduce it as soon as possible.

I trust that none of you will give up the work in this emergency, but that we will work together with a will until our work is brought up to date.

Will the ministry and branch and district secretaries help the historians to complete their work?

I hope, too, that all who have papers, old letters, or manuscripts, which throw light upon any feature of church history, will forward them to us at once. We would like also to hear at once from all who have loaned books to this office, stating what books you had here, and stating what you claim for damage is if anything.

Any having church books of any kind that they are willing to donate, please send them to Church Library. We as well as others can have access to them there.

With confidence in God and the truth unshaken,
Your colaborer,
HEMAN C. SMITH.

Church Recorder's Notice.

In the destruction of the HERALD Office by fire some reports and communications to this department were destroyed before being recorded, and as it is impossible to tell from memory just what districts or persons they were all from, I therefore ask that all district or branch clerks who sent me reports or corrections and all elders sending items of scattering baptisms or deaths or marriages, will please obtain and furnish me with duplicate copies of all branch reports, and other items which were sent to me between the dates of November 25 and January 1.

C. I. CARPENTER, Church Recorder.
LAMONI, Iowa, January 7, 1907.

Third Quorum of Elders.

To the Third Quorum of Elders; Greeting: Your secretary would be pleased to have a full and complete report of your ministerial work performed in the conference year ending March 15, 1907. Last year only forty-two members reported. We should have had ninety at least. Resolve now that you will report this year. If you have not a blank report, send to the secretary, who will promptly forward one to your present address. We expect to hear from each member. If you are aged you may tell of your desires. We wish to hear from you. The Lord has been good to us, and blessed us in the past. Let us prove faithful to him.
CHARLES P. FAUL, Secretary.

STEWARTSVILLE, Missouri, January 5, 1907.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Southwestern Texas District will convene at San Antonio, Texas, February 22, 1907. O. D. Johnson, president.

The conference of the Little Sioux District will meet at Logan, Iowa, Saturday, February 2, at 9 a. m., for prayer-service, and at 10.30 a. m. for business. Send reports in advance to secretary. James D. Stuart, Magnolia, Iowa.

Northern California District conference will convene at Oakland, California, March 2, at 10 a. m. Each branch should report to this conference that the full standing of our district be included in the general church report. May all give special attention. Let all who can attend in person, and let us have a joyful time. Send reports to our secretary, E. S. Chase, Irvington, California, or to the writer. J. M. Terry, president, 1237 Union Street, Oakland, California.

Far West conference will convene on the 2d of February, 1907, 10 a. m., with the St. Joseph Branch in their chapel, corner of Seventeenth and Faron Streets. This being the last conference before convening of the General Conference, delegates will be chosen. Will the several branch secretaries see that their branches are represented together with the reports and credentials. Ministers will please forward their reports to the undersigned one week before convening of the conference. All will receive a warm welcome by our brethren of the St. Joseph Branch. So let us have a good representation. Charles P. Faul, secretary.

NOTICE.

The First Presidency hereby gives notice that the subject of removal of the principal place of business of the church will be presented to the General Conference to be held in April, 1907. Section 3 of article 5, of the Articles of Association, provides that such removal may be made by the Presidency, the Bishopric, and the Board of Publication.

While the question of amending section 3 of article 5 of the Articles of Association above referred to was being considered by the last General Conference, the Bishop made a statement which was understood to be a pledge upon his part that he would not favor a removal of the principal place of business of the church except it was by vote of the church unless in case of emergency.

In what form the question may come before the conference we do not undertake to state, but presume it will appear in proper form to determine the will of conference.

The Presidency assures the church that the accounts and papers of the HERALD Office, and the essential books and papers of the Recorder's office, and all papers and accounts of the Bishop's office, were preserved, and are in the hands of the proper officers. The monetary loss sustained by the fire is not irreparable. The losses in the offices of the Presidency, the Historian, the Secretary, and the library are to a great extent irreparable; but patience is enjoined, and a proper regard for the proprieties, and a spirit to meet the exigency as men of God should do.

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

F. M. SMITH, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., January 14, 1907.

BUSINESS NOTICE.

The management is not yet in position to give definite information concerning the business department. Arrangements have been made to continue our periodicals without interruption at Lamoni, Iowa. The HERALD will soon have its regular size and form and we feel sure that all will be patient at this time.

About one-half our books were destroyed by the fire, and some of them will be reprinted as soon as arrangements can be made. The enlarged Hymnal we hope to have ready in about sixty days.

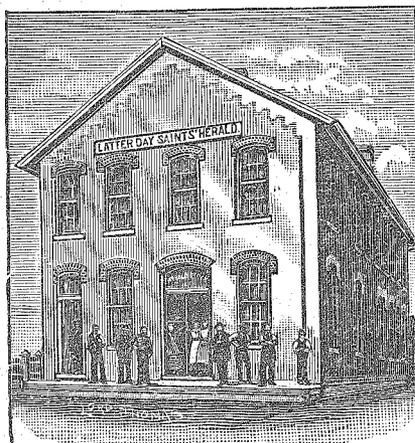

We earnestly trust that every member of the church will subscribe for the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves, and thus assist in meeting the expenses of the publishing department.

A full report will be published as soon as the information can be gotten ready.

F. B. BLAIR, Manager.

STILL AT WORK.

The citizens' soliciting committee which made such a commendable effort in securing pledges from those who are willing to contribute for the rebuilding of the HERALD publishing plant at Lamoni, as reported in last week's HERALD, is not idle. The work is being pushed vigorously, and it is confidently expected that next week's report will show a still greater increase than is shown this week.

evening) of $14,720.50. Saints and friends have responded liberally. Especially gratifying is the spirit of helpfulness, and the kindly feeling of those who are not members of the church, emphasizing as they do so unmistakably the truth of the thought expressed by one of the speakers, Bro. D. F. Lambert, at the mass-meeting Sunday, the 6th, when he said, "I know of no place in the world, at any time since the organization of this church, where this people has been as well understood, and as universally and warmly welcomed as they have been, and are to-day, at Lamoni."

The Saints abroad have not as yet been called upon for donations, although some volunteer contributions are being received. But there is a way, outside of donations, in which the Saints can very materially help, that is by subscribing for all the church publications. It may mean to some a small sacrifice to begin with, but you will receive full value for your money before the year is ended, and thus while helping the publishing house you will be benefiting yourself. Some of the Saints have already grasped the situation, as indicated by the following from a letter received this morning:

"Regret very much to learn of our great loss in the destruction of the HERALD Office, and hasten to forward you my subscription to 'Autumn Leaves.' Seems to me that none will allow their subscriptions to lapse under present conditions. If all will pay up promptly, it will no doubt do more good than all the sorrow they may express or the sympathy they may offer. Let us all show our sympathy in some practical way. Every one must admire the pluck manifested by those in charge in recovering from the shock so quickly, so that we were able to receive the HERALD on time as usual, though reduced in size—not a single issue omitted. Surely this is worthy of praise. Now let us all show our appreciation of such work by doing our part."

How many will "go and do likewise," and be prompt in forwarding their subscriptions?

L. A. G.

THE Associate Editor is at present quarantined at home, suffering from a light attack of scarlet fever. It will be several days before the law will permit him to be at large, and in the meantime his correspondents will understand why their communications are not promptly answered.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

The vaults containing the Bishop's books and the Church Recorder's books, and the vault used by the business manager have been opened, and everything found intact.

It is the intention of the Department of the Census in its published report of statistics and general information concerning religious bodies to include a general statement prepared by a leading authority in the denomination, concerning its history, doctrine, polity, and work. Our readers will appreciate the importance to us of such an opportunity to be represented in the official records of the government. Events seem to be shaping themselves toward a proper representation of the faith among the people of the world in general and consequently to a better understanding of the position of the church.

THE RESTORATION.

SYNOPSIS OF SERMON BY G. H. HILLIARD AT LAMONI, IOWA, OCTOBER 27, 1903.

Jesus, giving one of the signs of the end of the world and of his coming, uses this language: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

It is a fact that ought to be apparent to every one that if what Jesus said be true that the gospel should be preached as a sign of the end of the world, and of his second coming, he evidently foresaw and knew that there would be a falling away. For if there should be no falling away and the time should not come when the gospel that Christ preached was not preached, then it could be no sign, when it was preached just before the end should come. In other words, if the gospel has been preached by any church or people all the time from the apostolic days until now, and is being preached as it has been, the words would have no signification, and it could be no sign whatever; simply be a common occurrence. Jesus said to the Jews as recorded in the twenty-first chapter and forty-third verse of Matthew: "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." This evidently referred to the Gentiles. And after the gospel was committed unto the Gentiles, the apostle says in the eleventh chapter of Romans that the Jews failed because of unbelief. And he says that they should abide if they continued faithful; but if not they should in like manner fail. He says, "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in."

The writer in Luke 21:24, telling us of the fate that should befall Jerusalem and the Jews, that the Jews should be scattered to every nation under heaven, fall by the sword, and so on, says, "And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." And at the time when the fullness of the Gentiles should come in, then something else was to occur. The Protestant world stands as a living testimony that this falling away spoken of has occurred. Paul said that the time should come when they would not endure sound doctrine, but of their own lusts, their own liking, they would heap to themselves teachers having itching ears, who would turn their ears from the truth and be turned unto fables, having a form of godliness (not the form), a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. Now a form would be anything that was not in harmony with the form given by Christ himself to the apostles. And hence any church, it matters not which it is, or what the name may be, that is not organized according to the scriptural pattern, with apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, bishops, elders, teachers, and deacons, has not the form, but has a form.

And the Savior prophesied that the gospel should be preached; and when he said, "this gospel" he referred to the same gospel he was preaching, not another gospel, nor a perverted gospel, nor a partial gospel, but the same gospel Peter, Paul, and John preached. And if it be a fact that there came a time when the mother church did not preach that gospel themselves, as stated by the Protestant denominations of to-day, then there was a necessity for a restoration of the gospel; and as the Reformation failed to bring about this condition and restore the primitive gospel, with all its ordinances and power, with its organization and blessings that God bestowed upon his children, it was evident that this must be brought to pass before Christ could come. It was the avowed endeavor and object of the Reformation to bring this condition about. Mr. Campbell says in his Christian System on page 5, "Not until the present generation did any sect or party abandon the thought of reformation, and propose to restore the gospel; but now," he says, "a band of believers have come together for this object." And on page 8 he tells us that the time has come when this gospel shall be restored with all its ancient ordinances and blessings and power, and the church stand as a light to the world; and the gospel shine out as in primitive times, is the thought. He had the idea of restoration. And God has told us how this restoration should come to pass. If it is a fact that men, in order to officiate in the name of Christ, and their administrations be effectual in the life to come, must hold authority that binds on earth as well as in heaven, if the apostate church could not confer authority, then the Protestant world can have no authority from God unless they receive it directly from him. And as they have told us from their own lips that there is no such thing as revelation since the New Testament was written, it is clear that God had not commissioned them to restore the gospel.

The apostle John here has seen the time when the gospel would not be had among the nations. When I speak of the gospel I do not mean the law as written in the Scriptures. They may have had the law, but "our gospel," Paul says, in 1 Thessalonians 1:5, "came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." And if the Christians of to-day of the different denominations, all combined, were honest in their expressions, and wanted to restore the gospel, and to have the church brought back to its primitive condition, they ought to hail with joy and gladness that which would bring it to the condition they have been laboring for, and praying for.

We read here in Zechariah, second chapter, where the prophet saw the angel, and he is talking about this same period of time, this restoration. He saw the angel go out and speak to another angel, and he said to that second angel, "Run, speak to this young man [referring to some young man], and say to him, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein."

We are going to try to find out, if we can, one angel that was to come and speak in this generation in which we live, when this time of restoration should come. We read in the fortieth chapter of Isaiah:

Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain: and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

Farther on he says:

O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God! Behold the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him: behold his reward is with him, and his work before him.

Just before the Lord shall come to accomplish this work spoken of here, he will send one before him. The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord. This one referred to is the forerunner of Christ, John the Baptist. That has been so stated by all ministers that I know anything about. But they apply this to the first coming of Christ only. And this reading has no reference to the first coming of Christ. It is speaking of the time of God's restoration, when Jerusalem has received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins. At Christ's first coming, when John came to prepare the way, she indeed had not received this, but did receive the curse of God. The Jews were scattered to every nation; Jerusalem trodden down; and the Lord said it should remain so until this period when the fullness of the Gentiles should come in. Then this forerunner must come before Christ again.

Now, let us see what Malachi says on this in the third chapter, beginning at the first verse:

Behold, I will send my messenger before me [that is John, the messenger, again]: and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in; behold he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap. And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment.

You discover that he is going to send his messenger before him, when he comes in judgment, when he comes in glory. And unless this messenger comes to some person, there never will be a people prepared for the coming of Christ in glory.

Did Christ say anything about this himself, when he was here? He certainly did. You remember reading in the seventeenth chapter of Matthew that Christ went upon the mount and took with him Peter, James, and John. And there appeared unto them Moses and Elias in that wonderful vision, when they saw the kingdom of God in power presented to them; and Christ was transfigured before them, and there Moses and this Elias, which was evidently John the Baptist, appeared to them. And coming down out of the mount the question was asked by the disciples, saying, "Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?" He had charged them to tell the vision to no man, till the Son of man be risen from the dead:

And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew it not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.

Now Jesus Christ said to them, after John the Baptist had been here the first time, was put to death, and they had this vision in the mount—as they came down from that, he said to them, "Elias shall truly first come, and restore all things." And he told them that Elias had already come and they had not recognized it, but done unto him as they listed, and likewise the Son of man should suffer. They then perceived that he spake of John the Baptist. Christ said this Elias shall come again, and here they say that was John the Baptist. The prophet said he should come, Isaiah said he should come, Malachi said he should come just before Christ's second coming. Jesus said he should come. Now did these prophets, and Jesus Christ, the greatest prophet of all, tell the truth? If they did, we ask the question, Who did he come to? Did he come to the Catholic Church? No, they tell us they have had an unbroken succession from the days of the apostles down to the present time. Do the Protestant churches say that the angel has come to them? No. No ministration of angels to them. They do not claim it. How are we going to account for this? If we come before you claiming that this scripture has been fulfilled in the restoration of this gospel, and it is now a matter of history that it has been fulfilled, why should people blame us?

Now, we have in this generation a boy, a young lad fifteen years old, who got interested in the gospel of Jesus Christ for the salvation of his soul. The thought never entered his mind that all these people were wrong. But he read here, "If any man lacks wisdom, let him ask of God." And he sought God in fervent, earnest prayer, and asked him which of all these churches are right. And in the answer given to him he was told there were none of them right. A great many people believe just what the angel said to that young man; and nobody believes that they are all right. So we see there was reason why God should send a heavenly messenger to make this declaration. And he said to this boy, If you are faithful I will make you an instrument in my hands to restore the gospel. He was a poor, insignificant, unlearned youth. I will not say he did not have talent. But he was not a boy of high standing in society.

He was a poor boy, and was illiterate, and a young fellow at the time. I ask, Is it unreasonable to suppose that God would answer prayer? And can you not believe now that a person may have a heavenly vision just as well as believe Paul had a heavenly vision?

We are told by this young man, after he had gone on as God had directed him, that on the fifth day of May, 1829, when the sun was shining in its strength, the heavens opened and a glorious personage came down from heaven, clothed in glory, and declared that he was the same that is called John the Baptist in the New Testament; and there he laid his hands upon these two men, the first two elders of this church, ordained them to the same office and authority that he held himself, authorizing them to go forth and preach the gospel of repentance for the remission of sins, with the promise that additional authority should be conferred upon them afterward, that they should have power and authority to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Now that begins to look like God was doing what the prophets and Jesus said would be done; that this same Elias should come before Christ's second coming; that he should come as the messenger from heaven, and confer the authority necessary to empower men to go forth with God's authority to administer the gospel ordinances, for the remission of the sins of the sons and daughters of men.

We ask, If this messenger did not come to anybody else, if none else claimed that he had come to them, if Jesus and the prophets told the truth, and the time has come when the Jews should begin to gather back to Jerusalem and receive the blessings of God upon their land again, if that time has come,—and we know it has for the Jews are gathering back, and the former and the latter rains have returned to that land; and they are doing just what the prophet said should be done,—and the heavenly messenger came to this young man and made the declaration, we ask,

Should we not receive the heavenly messenger that God himself has sent in fulfillment of his word as contained in the Bible that every Christian in all the land claims to believe? There is no reason why we should not.

We are told in section 26, Doctrine and Covenants, the revelations to this church, "And Peter, James, and John whom I have sent unto you, by which I have ordained you, that you should hold the keys of this ministry," as they held it. And then he authorizes them to make the proclamation of the gospel just as he authorized the apostles in primitive times. He says he sent and ordained these elders to be apostles and special witnesses of his name in all the world. Now he says in section 83, Go, and when you can not go, send, that this may go to all nations, and give the same promises: and here he authorized the proclamation of the same gospel, as he commanded in the primitive church to the ancient apostles. We argue, in all candor, if a man were to make such a claim as this, and go out and make that proclamation, he could not compel God Almighty through the administration of himself and those that labored with him to send the Holy Ghost according to this promise. If God had not authorized the proclamation, could they compel God to comply with what they said, and would the Lord confirm their message, confirm their work by sending the Holy Ghost like he did in the primitive apostolic church, if they were not telling the truth? In other words, would an imposter dare to make such a promise as that? Can you find a man in all this broad land, I do not care what church he belongs to, or whether he belongs to any church or not, can you find a man in all this broad land that will stand up and make that promise to the sons and daughters of men to-day, outside of this church? Why, yes, says one, some of them make that promise. Well, when they make that promise, are they in harmony with God's truth in other respects? Have they the same apostolic gospel? Do they come to you and offer you the church of Jesus Christ according to the apostolic pattern, preaching "the" faith, not "a" faith; or do they come with "a" form?

Now, this church offers the world the same gospel, in the same way. They invite the people into the same church organization, and like Jesus the Master says in John 1:17, "If any man will do the father's will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." These men made the same promise.

I remember full well when the gospel was preached to me, and the man that offered it to me (he was laid in his grave a few days ago) said, If you will obey this gospel, as this church holds and teaches it, God will confirm the truth of it to you, and you shall know. Well, you know that appealed to me. I was left without excuse then. It was in my power to know. If I did not know, it was because I did not seek to know. And now these elders, going out with this message, would they dare to tell an intelligent man he could know, if they did not know that God would ratify what they said, and confirm it by giving the Holy Ghost, as in ancient times?

I have sought to defend this work for the last thirty-five years, and I have had men meet me in discussion by the week, and canvass the ground. I have never found a man but that was compelled to acknowledge that we teach the original apostolic gospel according to the pattern laid down there in the book. But they think that this was not to continue just that way; some of it was to be left off. And somehow they think it was to be left out by divine appointment. And when we ask them to show the divine appointment, they can not show that, because it does exist.

The reason, I apprehend, that God took a man with no education, was because an education a great many times gives a man what we call "the big-head" in a kind of vulgar way. And the Lord can not do anything much with that class of men. This boy tells us when he grew to be a man he could not do God's work unless he kept himself just right. When it came to translating, he could not translate unless he kept himself just right. Now the trouble with many to-day is that God can not do anything with them, for they think they know it all themselves. They bar out the coming of angels; God does not send heavenly messengers, they say.

Now all they have against this boy is that he said that God had sent a messenger to him, just like Zechariah said the message should come to somebody just like Isaiah tells us the message should come, too, just like the prophet Malachi tells us the messenger should come before the second coming of Christ. That was all they had against him; he claimed to get his authority direct from God; he claimed to preach the same original gospel; he said that the gospel had all the power that it ever had; he said that God would confirm this message to every honest soul that received it; that is all they could justly offer against him.

And that was the testimony of these men that began the work. They said, "Last of all this is our testimony, that Christ lives, for we saw him, and we conversed with him in a heavenly vision and he is the same unchangeable one." He lives. They saw him. They conversed with him. They predicated their faith on their knowledge. The church is founded on that knowledge. And we know that Jesus Christ is, and hence we are prepared to stand as witnesses for him in the proclamation of this holy gospel that was committed to the sons of men, and given to the earth through the son of Mary.

And I trust, to-night, that you will begin to think along these lines. And let me assure you that unless you put yourselves in harmony with God, you can not work with him. You must put yourself in harmony with God, and you can not do that unless you conform to God's way, to his order, to his doctrine, to his philosophy, and strip off your self-dependence, and depend on God Almighty, for his power, his help, and the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, using your intellect, and asking God to help you.

The sole meaning of life is to serve humanity by contributing to the kingdom of God, which can be done only by the recognition of the worth of every man.—Tolstoi.

Choice and service—these are demanded of you—these only; in these are the whole of life.—Mark Hopkins.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCIS.

Dear Saints: When you were reading the last HERALD did you notice this.

"The mass-meeting at the Brick Church, Sunday, demonstrated what might be done if the whole church were aroused to build a sanitarium, a children's home—or a temple. At that meeting the average donation was about thirty dollars for every individual present, and there were numbers of children and aged people present. It is a fact too that the congregation was composed mostly of poor people. When the heart is touched a 'surplus' can be located."

Ah, how true it is! It is confirmation strong and positive of what was published weeks ago in this department of our paper when we said: "The church is abundantly able to build both the sanitarium and the children's home, if only each one was ready to make some personal sacrifice to accomplish that which the Lord has commanded us to do."

It is in times of our calamity (for the loss of our publishing house is a calamity to the whole church) like this that man is made to realize his common brotherhood. To know that the good of one is the good of all and that evil and loss is the heritage of all. When men realize this it is then that they are willing to take up the battle against these common enemies of mankind and to labor in harmony with the promptings of the Spirit of God.

Why, oh, why, can not each member of the church to-day—yes, to day, when the Spirit of God is prompting, when the needs of the work are so great, send in their free-will offering, even if it be at a sacrifice of some greatly-needed, greatly-desired personal comfort?

What is to hinder him who sends monthly his tithing of ten, twenty, or even eighty dollars, from sending a part of his principal also? What? Is not this a time to test whether indeed self is cast out and Christ is all in all?

Can we be justified in making answer to God, "We were not able to do what you asked of us," until we have done all in our power? Let us think of it as we will, the only answer bearing the stamp of truth is: No; we can not.

Prayer Union.

The sisters of the Prayer Union are requested to exercise their faith and prayers that if it be God's will he may heal Sr. Ada M. Daley's infant son of a very sore lip. He is less than four months old, and for the last two months, or about that, his lower lip has been sore and seems to be continually growing worse, and appears to be very painful.

St. Louis, Missouri, January 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: Lamoni certainly has our sympathy in the loss of Saturday. Bro. Tanner as well as myself feel broken up and are wondering how serious it may be. The money loss may be considerable, but presume the larger part of that is covered by insurance; but how about the records in the Historian's office? and also some of the rare volumes in the library? Some parts can doubtless be replaced. But it is that part which can not be replaced that causes us the greatest anxiety. It is useless to multiply words because such can not express our feelings.

Sincerely yours,

S. A. BURGESS.

DES MOINES, Iowa, January 7, 1907.

Editors Herald: Feelings of sadness were freely expressed as the report came to the Saints that the Herald Publishing House with the many valuable books and documents of the Librarian's and Historian's offices had been destroyed by fire and a willingness to bear their share of the loss so far as they had ability was as freely expressed. We were all glad that there was nobody hurt, and that such a generous feeling exists with the business men of the town to assist in rebuilding the plant. God can take things that are naught things that are, and just as easily can he take this loss and bring to pass much that shall be of value to the Saints and the church. Such is our faith.

For several weeks past the increased spirituality of the Saints has been quite prominently manifest. Last Sunday the gifts of the Spirit were manifest to the edifying and instructing of the Saints. And these gifts have been seen in several ways of late, especially in the healing of the sick. While we have met with some sad experiences in the death of several of the members of the branch, yet the Lord has been very gracious to comfort us in extending such deliverance as he has in several cases within the last few weeks.

Some pleasure is felt at the present attitude taken by the Associate Editor, and I pray that God may assist in carrying out the good intentions advertised in the nature of the material that enters into the HERALD. A noticeable improvement is seen in the Autumn Leaves for the last few issues, which we are happy to see. We believe that the young people of the church should have the choicest literary food. They need it, and it can be had for them. Many of them are capable of rising still higher in their literary capabilities, and furnish that which will answer the present pressing demands.

We feel the great need of tracts written especially for the city mission work. Brief and pointed tracts that are prepared to attract and to impress are much needed, and especially upon the principles of the gospel, and the moral and social attitude we as a church occupy. There is as much of a need to prepare tracts upon the latter as upon the first. If these are all treated affirmatively, and in an attractive style to catch the eye and attention of the busy thinker, and in a way to impress the prominent points that will lead to repentance, much good will follow the use of them in city missions. We have used some in this mission, and can see the results. Would have used more but lacked the means and time to provide and make use of them. We see that the seed is sown, and in some places is beginning to grow. It seems slow, but we remember that it is toad-stools that grow up in a night; and it is the mighty oak that is years in becoming a useful article. We have never yet learned the use to be made of the toad-stool, but who does not know the use of the mighty oak? In our mission work we are seeking for the lost, and we must await the drawing influence of the Father before they come to Christ, and that drawing influence does not exhibit itself through the preacher alone, although he is a factor in the process, and realizing this what manner of ministers we should be—yes, wise servants, yet harmless as a dove.

The results of the Chapman meetings in the city are not so noticeable as the week after his departure. The "Daily News" printed a cartoon that fitly represents the conditions as seen by many others as well as by the cartoonist. It was the picture of the police judge with the same criminals passing before him for judgment as before the meeting, and this sentence below: "And Chapman gone only two weeks."

It is stated in the daily that there has not been quite so many negro prisoners as before the meetings. It is generally thought that the negro is not so abiding as the white, but among the criminal class it is thus far reported that in this city it is otherwise. We are willing to thank God for whatever good has been done through the means of the revival or any other means, but the future will have to make known what permanent good is done here. In attending one of the meetings held at the Auditorium by Mr. Chapman I could see no originality displayed, but the same old chestnuts that have been used for years—the signing of cards, and rising up and sitting down, and raising the hand. He seemed to hurry the process more than usual; it may be that this is original. From reports I learn that two hundred meetings were held, and the average cost of each meeting was from $40.00 to $80.00. One report had it that the meetings cost over $4,000.00 and another report had it that they cost something over $8,000.00. Which is correct I could not say. During the time of the services banquets were held by the different evangelists for the ministers of the city, then the ministers of the city must do as well, and these banquets were held at the leading hotel of the city, or one of the leading hotels of the city, the Chamberlain, at which place the chief evangelist had his room. Opera houses were freely used, but the understanding was that they were not to say anything condemnatory of the theater or vaudeville, and they announced before they began the meeting that they would not say anything about those doctrines upon which churches are divided. You can imagine what a "broad way" they occupied. It was a way in which the sinner was called to occupy that all could agree upon that pretended to be followers of Christ no matter how far away from Christ they were following, and how much of error they were believing and practicing. I have not heard whether the liquor trade has diminished or increased in those saloons where the meetings were held, yet I can say that none of them have had any occasion to appoint a receiver yet, and I will guess that there will be no need of one, and the bankrupt law will be of no value to those men representing the saloons occupied by Mr. Asher and his wife. Could we have the money to conduct missionary work that was expended in these meetings I feel assured that much greater results would be seen in the day of judgment; but we labor on with hope that none who desire the full salvation will be deprived of hearing the gospel here. God will make especial provision for the hereafter, about which we have no especial anxiety.

The writer and family have been generously remembered by the Saints of the city in a material way that has given us great reason to believe that God has in answer to prayer put it into the hearts of his people to know our needs and to have a disposition to supply them, and the delight with which it is done makes it a pleasure to receive, although it is more blessed to give than to receive. Such expressions of the appreciation of efforts made are encouraging. The most that I can see that has been accomplished is the effort made, but hope that more than is seen will be the results of the efforts. The help that has been given will materially aid in the future efforts that we anticipate making.

Some results from the tent-work that was done last summer can be noticed, and it is contemplated that an active campaign with the tent in the city will be carried on next summer, the Lord willing. Prospects for doing missionary work in the city were never better, but it will take some planning and means to reach the end desired, and which we believe that God wishes attained. The power of living is being realized by the Saints, or some of them, as never before, and it is appreciated that these some have been as a light that can not be hid.

How greatly we miss the active workers who have departed from us, some to their rest so fully prepared for, and others to other fields of labor! Others are rising up from among the young to occupy their place, for which we are truly grateful. We are soon to lose one of our helpers, Mr. James H. Mather, who though not as yet numbered with us, yet his heart and all that he has in this world is with us. Surely his reward will be great does he not willfully resist the light that may come to him, and because of the integrity of his soul we have faith to believe he will not do that. God bless him for the sacrifices made for the work in the city, when such a friend as he was a necessity. We know that wherever he is the work he loves so well will not be forgotten. He has been promoted to the position of General Claim Agent with head quarters in Chicago of the Chicago and Rhode Island Railway, system.

The help of the sisters' aid society has rendered the lives of several to be made more comfortable. The sacrifices that some of the sisters are making to do their part of the work are very commendable, and God is blessing and will bless them for it.

The article in the last issue of the HERALD entitled "The missionary, his wife and family," is and will be of benefit to the Saints. It will give them a view of the situation as the missionary has to meet it, and help them to determine whether they are bearing their share of the work whereunto they are called, for we learn that all are called of God. Truly, those who are called as the traveling councils of the church, and filled with the spirit of their calling and willing, yea, anxious to go wherever God wants them to go, conditions are not always at their homes so that they can go wherever appointed, or if going feel entirely free from account of indebtedness accruing to meet the necessities of the families. While it is hard to be actively engaged as a missionary, yet it is much harder not to be active when one feels the burden of responsibility that comes to one associated with such a calling. Home conditions under our present scattered situation makes it impossible to live on as small an allowance as they would desire. While the Bishop is doing all he can to send forth more laborers already sent, yet we notice that during the last year several have been compelled to withdraw from the field of labor, some only for a time, but others for the year. The allowance that fully supplied the family five years ago does not supply them now, for two reasons; one is that the cost of living is higher, and the other is that if there were any children then they are larger now, and their board, clothing, and schooling all costs much more. Who would wish to take a full-grown child and board, clothe, and school them for $6.00 or even $8.00 per month during the three last years of their schooling? This is what some of the missionaries' wives are endeavoring to figure out, and they have decided that they can not; and that their children may not be deprived of their education the time of the missionary is required, or the Bishop is under greater obligations to that family, and this necessitates a greater supply to be placed in his hands, and when this is done no missionary will be compelled to leave his field of labor to look after tables. Saints should assist to bring about an answer to the prayer that they are offering that God may send more laborers into the vineyard, by furnishig the means to care for those left unsupported when the laborer is sent. O God, cause thy people to know the true meaning of the prayer, "Lord, send forth laborers."

Special kindness should be shown the young missionary who may have not been associated with his life's companion long enough for them to understand each other and to grow into each other's affections so that they can bear the necessary sacrifice occasioned by a separation without a feeling of mistrust, and sometimes an expression of this mistrust in such a way as to finally destroy all confidence and thus destroy the influence of the missionary, and sometimes to destroy the future enjoyment of the home. May God bless with a double portion of his Spirit those who are called to lead an unnatural condition of life, for it is an unnatural condition of life for one to be separated from his wife and children born to them, and for the wife and children to live as a widow and as fatherless. God be merciful to the lonely companion and children of the missionary, especially when they have not sufficient to supply the real necessities of life and the burden of debt hangs over them.

The time is near when those whose calling it is, will be expected to choose others to enter into the vineyard of the Lord, some of whom will be called from a comfortable home, a lucrative position, and loving wife and children; and think of what grace they will need to accept of such a calling, and think of the wisdom and direction those need who have the responsibility to select such ones as will make the necessary sacrifice; and when you think, pray that God may do the necessary work to prepare all things that both those through whom the calling comes and those who are called may not hesitate to do their whole duty.

May God in his infinite wisdom keep his children in the line of duty, and feel after the wondering ones, that though they may have faltered they may not fall.

RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The usual rate of one and one third-fare, round trip, certificate plan, has been granted to "Annual Conference and Auxiliary Conventions, Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, Lamoni, Iowa, April 5-20, 1907," by the Western, Southwestern, and Central Passenger Associations. The usual rate of two cents per mile from Pacific Coast points to Missouri River points will also be granted by the Trans-Continental Association.

TO SAINTS EAST OF PITTSBURG AND BUFFALO.

The Trunk Line Association, covering territory from Pittsburg and Buffalo to New York City, has declined to grant the rate because of very limited attendance hitherto from that territory. Those interested should take up the matter and notify me concerning number who will attend, and if a sufficient number can be secured the rate will be granted.

The New England Association depends upon the action of the Trunk Line; those in New England should do likewise, as attendance from that territory will also influence action of Trunk Line people.

SOUTHEASTERN ASSOCIATION.

Those residing in territory south of the Potomac and east of the Mississippi Rivers should notify me of any who will attend the conference. The rate can be obtained if a moderate number will be present.

Full particulars concerning all territory named in later notices. R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 12, 1907.

Delegate Credentials to General Conference.

Because of loss of lists of addresses of district officers in the late HERALD Office fire, credential blanks will not be sent to district officers as usual. Officers of districts and of branches not in districts are therefore requested to make up credentials in the form used heretofore, which was given in the HERALD of January 9, in Secretary's notice, and forward the same to the undersigned as soon as possible after delegates are appointed. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and of those to be appointed, immediately after appointment. All credentials should be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

Secretaries and presidents of districts are requested not to omit "total membership, including scattered members" in their credentials; also to include their own post-office addresses.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district or branch, and names of delegates, signed by president and secretary of district or branch, and place and date of conference or business-meeting, is sufficient. Separate, individual credentials to delegates are not necessary.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting" provide as follows:

"Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every twenty five members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. [Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, who are not recorded as members of other districts, may be included in the enumeration of membership.]

"The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast the full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference.

"Provided, that in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation (the full delegation not being present), they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

"No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes.

"Each regular organized branch of the church not included in an organized district, shall be entitled to one delegate, who shall have the same privilege as delegates of districts. But when the membership of such branch exceeds twenty-five it shall be entitled to one delegate for each twenty-five members."

For further information concerning representation, choice and instruction of delegates, etc., see Rules of Order, chapter 17.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 14, 1907.

Proposed Resolution.

Notice is hereby given that a resolution will be introduced at the next General Conference as follows: "Resolved, That no member in consequence of being placed upon the retired list shall lose his office or title, all other things being equal."

OUR LOSS.

Two weeks have passed since the disastrous fire that destroyed the Herald Publishing House and Bindery, and order is gradually being restored. While our building was yet in flames the proprietors in the France building, where the books that were saved, amounting to $2,000, were moved.

Bishop William Anderson has tendered us the use of a vacant room for a press-room, free of charge, and it is now ready for occupancy. The Leon "Reporter" loaned us a large quantity of type; the American Type Founders Company, a large cylinder press and power paper-cutter; and Mr. W. H. McElroy, an eight-horse-power gasoline-engine, all free of charge. They will likely be in place ready for work before the week is out. This will enable us to issue all of our periodicals promptly and possibly to reprint our tracts and paper-cover books.

We have placed orders for two linotype machines,

VIEW OF THE HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE AS PHOTOGRAPHED ON THE MORNING OF JANUARY 5, SHORTLY AFTER EIGHT O'CLOCK.

of the Lamoni "Chronicle" and "Independent Patriot" kindly offered us the use of their printing-offices for our work. By noon our workmen had commenced work on the HERALD that appeared January 9. Arrangements were made for a temporary office and two of our employees are now at the factory in Brooklyn, New York, learning the mechanism of the machine. Our bindery foreman has gone to Chicago to try to better qualify himself in book-binding during the time that he will be compelled to be idle. The remainder of our force have remained in our employ though they have not all worked full time. However, we will soon be very busy.

By conference time, we expected to have paid in full all debts against the publishing department, both HERALD and Ensign, but the fire has sadly upset our plans.

However, we are far from being discouraged. It is not intended by the Board of Publication to ask for donations toward the rebuilding of the HERALD Office, though we will not refuse money that may be offered for that purpose. You can help us in another way.

We want every family of Saints to subscribe for the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves, and if this is done, the publishing department will soon recover its loss. Let every one lend us his help to the accomplishing of this object. At the same time you will be benefited spiritually by reading the periodicals, and the church will be greatly strengthened thereby.

If you are a HERALD subscriber, send in your subscription for the Ensign as it will help us just the same. Some of our friends are already securing splendid results in obtaining new subscribers for the HERALD. A united effort will bring the reward. We feel confident that before the year 1907 is gone the Herald Publishing House will be better equipped than ever before to send the restored gospel in printed form to the four corners of the earth. We earnestly invite your help.

F. B. BLAIR, Business Manager.

A WORD TO THE CHURCH.

We are authorized to say to the Saints at large that no subscriptions from the different churches for the purpose of aiding in the rebuilding the HERALD Offices have been authorized by either the Bishopric or the Presidency.

As already has been stated, in the first issue of the HERALD after the fire, an effort is being made by the citizens of Lamoni to raise $25,000.00 for the rebuilding at Lamoni. With this effort the general officers of the church have nothing to do as such officers; neither the Presidency nor the Bishopric.

With the efforts being made at Lamoni the general authorities have no disposition to interfere. The citizens have undertaken to show their appreciation of the Saints as citizens and as neighbors; and as no definite steps towards building could be taken before the sitting of the April session of Conference, it will be as well to wait until that body sits before making efforts among the churches, districts, and branches.

In a late conversation with Bishop Kelley he assured us that if the Saints did their duty in a general way to the treasury, there would be no difficulty about rebuilding the HERALD Offices. It is very encouraging to know this. From the revelations we gather that buildings of that sort are to be built out of the tithes and offerings of the membership, in much the same way that the Temple will be when that edifice is erected.

There should be enough in the treasury, at any time, to tide the church over a financial loss like that which has occurred in the burning of the HERALD plant. That there is not such amount shows that possibly we are still a little doubtful.

Some one may ask why was it that the various offices of the general authorities of the church were all crowded into the office which should have been used for the purposes of the HERALD publishing plant. It is obvious that the loss of the library, and the rooms of the Presidency, the Historian, and the Secretary, were the ones we could not witness as necessary to the success or failure of the HERALD as a church organ; but the plant had grown by almost imperceptible degrees and at different times; additions had been made from time to time, and first one and then another of the different departments of church work was taken in until about all were under the one roof, and subject to the same conditions. This coupled with the fact that the general officers of the church were extremely diffident about expending the people's money except upon an enforced emergency and meet the criticism which would have followed, led them to defer any action which would involve the outlay required. It may be said that these officers should have done what was obviously their duty without regard to criticism. This may be true; but the reiteration of the aphorism comes with poor grace after what some of these general officers have been subjected to within the past few years. For one we are quite willing to plead to any necessary charge of neglect, and dilatoriness which any may choose to inflict upon us and the people; but think the better way is to let the losses go as the inevitable possibility to happen to those who have, and look forward in hopefulness, that out of our misfortune the Lord may permit us to reap a reward of experiences which will enrich our after-lives together in the work we all are called to take part in.

Recrimination, faultfinding, backbiting, and useless speculation as to who may be blameable for a given calamity which falls on all pretty much alike are blameable, no matter who indulges in them. So let us look up and by resoluteness and continuity of purpose win victory from seeming defeat.

"It might have been worse." No life was lost, no one seriously hurt, the things most essential to a financial recuperation of the publishing plant (those appertaining to the business side of the department) were saved, and in a comparatively short time all things will be adjusted to the changed conditions, and we may be led to wonder that we did not see the purposes of Providence in the affliction which the burning of the office caused us to suffer.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Independence, as a stake, has a membership of about thirty-five hundred, gathered in thirteen branches; the Independence Branch alone having seventeen hundred of the number. One branch was organized quite lately. Baptisms are constantly occurring, sixty-one having been received by baptism within the last six months. Outside of the regular branch preaching-place there are now seven other places where missionary work is provided for and kept up under the supervision of the stake authorities. These officers have arranged for a regular succession of labors covering the entire circuit of the branches each in its turn, including the services of the stake bishopric by agreement. This arrangement began some time in December, we believe, and so far it has been productive of satisfactory results. A well-defined system properly understood and carried into effect, the object being good, is usually conducive to the best results.

The baptisms referred to above took place in the Independence Branch. There are four missions in different localities in and adjacent to the two cities, Kansas City and Independence. All this speaks well for the exhibition of the energies of the people for whom the Lord has promised "to bring again Zion." There is no special need to cry, "How long, O Lord, how long?" He is even now redeeming Zion, the pure in heart, and will continue, if the Saints will do their part and let him do his, without too much interference by officious meddlers who not only mar the work of others, but spoil their own as well. "Let every man learn to do his duty," is a divine injunction good to follow. And we have no objection to men learning what the duty of the Lord is. Neither do we object to these teaching the Lord what his duty is after they have learned it; but we must be excused if we entertain doubts as to the Lord preferring their teaching to his own conception of what he has designed to accomplish, and the best means to reach the end designed.

It passed into an axiom among Latter Day Saints long ago, that the Lord knew his own business the best, and though it may be an old-fashioned notion of ours we are now of the opinion, as we have ever been, that the axiom is a true one. As to the gloom and doubts that beset our way and apparently prevent our onward progress, we are reminded of a song sung for us by a young sister, the daughter of one of the old church force, when we were young in the missionary work, in an hour when it required more courage to be a member of the Reorganized Church than it does now and our spirit was tried by "the contradiction of sinners against the faith":

"Then don't be sorrowful, darling;
Don't be sorrowful, pray,
For taking the year together, my dear,
There isn't more night than day."

The light and the life of the sunshine are about equally distributed by divine intention and rule; and while it may not be possible to be in the sunshine all the time, we do not need to get into the dark shadows and stay there because we prefer to do so. The shadows may be beneficial if we can but learn of their uses; but the sunshine we know was designed to give life, and the Spirit to give "life more abundantly"; so let us get out of the gloom and into the sunshine that we may have life.

UNITED STATES CENSUS, 1906.

The attention of district officers—secretaries and presidents—also of officers of branches not in districts, is called to the effort of the Census Department of the United States Government to collect statistics in regulation to all the churches in the country, including those of the Reorganized Church. For particulars, see notice of the Secretary of the church, which appeared in the HERALD for December 26, 1906. The Secretary has furnished the Census Department with lists of names and addresses of all district secretaries in the United States, and it is the intention of the Director of the Census to obtain from the district secretaries names and addresses of all branch secretaries, who will be furnished with necessary instructions with a view to making up reports in harmony with the general plan of the department.

It is hoped that all concerned will give the requests of the government for full reports their prompt and intelligent attention. We are interested in being competently and fully reported in the statistical information to be published by the Government. Such reports go out to and are studied by students of social and religious facts throughout the civilized world. It is in harmony with the policy of the general church to be well represented before the public in all legitimate lines, and the co-operation of our local secretaries is requested in the instance referred to. No doubt all local secretaries are well qualified and equipped to furnish the data necessary.

We are requested by the Census officials to call attention to this matter and to urge it upon the attention of the proper officers.

The Department Circular states: "In connection with the regular statistics of each denomination, it is the intention to publish a statement prepared by a leading authority in the denomination, concerning its history, doctrine, polity, and work." "A complete and accurate census of all the religious denominations in the United States is desired, but in order to secure this result the Census Bureau must depend largely, of course, upon the hearty support and co-operation of those in each denomination who are in a position to aid."

Provision will in due time be made for the statement referred to in the foregoing. The report of the local branches is respectfully referred to the proper officers thereof.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Bro. John W. Wight reports of his field: "As a rule we are doing fairly well in the field." There have been eighty-nine baptisms in his field the last quarter.

From Bro. W. H. Kelley, writing from Salt Lake City, January 11, we learn that the brethren at work in that Rocky Mountain region have been exceptionally busy for the last quarter. Sixteen have been added by baptism. There have been nine openings, which argues well for the enterprise of those out on the front of the line. Of the loss of the HERALD Office he writes: "We are anxiously waiting for items about burning HERALD Office; we hear only that it was burned. Regret does no good; so might as well just hold our breath and bear it—seems too bad, however."

The amount subscribed to rebuild the HERALD Office at Lamoni is $15,690.00 to date.

Bro. J. W. Rushton wishes to announce that his address while in America will be care of the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Elder F. G. Pitt's address now is 142 Grant Street, Buffalo, New York.

Elder Amos Berve, Kewanee, Illinois, reports twenty-three to have been baptized there of late, and the work moving along fine.

The Christian Advocate, New York, January 17, 1907, publishes its annual "Statistics of the Churches of the United States," in which the Reorganized Church for the year ending December 31 is thus given:

Ministers 900, churches 553, communicants 46,354. Gains: ministers 40, churches 11, communicants 3,107.

The statistics of the Utah Mormon Church are given by the Christian Advocate as follows:

Ministers 752, churches 775, communicants 350,000. Gains: ministers 52, communicants 50,000; losses: churches 21.

In connection with the foregoing the Advocate has this to say, under the heading, "The Mormons":

"The statistics of the Church of Latter Day Saints are changed this year, the first time in a number of years. They are from official sources which have not hitherto been accessible. The decrease in churches or meeting-houses is probably only apparent and the increase in the ministerial force and in members is not to be taken as the gains of 1906, but of a considerable period. Further statistics from the same source show throughout the world 55 stakes, 650 wards, 22 missions, 55 stake presidents, 650 ward bishops, 22 mission presidents, 1,500 missionaries, 3 of the First Presidency, 12 apostles, 7 of the First Seventies, and 3 of the Presiding Bishops. Including 1,410 stake and ward councilors there are, in all, 3,662 officers, and the number of souls is estimated at 400,000. The number of meeting-houses is 800.

News From Branches

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

The recent event bringing misfortune to the church interests is keenly felt by Independence Saints. Bro. Hilliard sounded the keynote of wisdom and courage in his sermon the following Sunday evening when he said, "If a few of us should have to bear this misfortune it would be heavy, but if we ALL bear it, 'twill be a mere nothing."

At the branch business meeting last Tuesday evening, a long-looked-for event took place, namely, the calling to the priesthood of ten of our young men. Bro. J. A. Dowker to the office of elder, Brn. J. C. May, Paul Craig, John Lentel, James Gray, George H. Hulmes, Jr., and Leonard Harrington to the office of priest, and Brn. William Eastwood, E. C. Harrington, and George Tryon to the office of deacon. The branch, by its unanimous vote, gave expression to an unlimited confidence in approving and providing for these ordinations. We are sure they will meet the demand that is made on all sides for earnest workers.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.

Apostle Joseph Luff spent some time in our city, and preached the first sermon in the new church, speaking in the basement December 23, 1906. He gave us an excellent sermon.

The work is being rushed along on the church, and at present writing it is expected the auditorium will be opened Sunday, February 10. We had intended to close the Majestic services when the church was opened; but think it would not be wise to do so, as the church though large (45 by 85) would not accommodate half our Sunday evening audience.

Last Sunday evening the Methodists opened their opposition campaign in the Grand Opera, just a few doors east of us on the same street. On December 16, they announced in the Metropolitan Methodist Church that they were opening in opposition to the "Mormon Apostle." One reverend gentleman said he had attended the Majestic for three nights; and there was absolutely nothing to attract the crowds, no music, no singing, nothing but the eloquence of the speaker. The man Evans was stirring up the city as it never was before. Religion was being discussed everywhere, and something would have to be done to stem the tide of "Mormonism." We were somewhat anxious to see the opening night. Before seven every seat in the pit and first gallery of the Majestic was taken; and many were turned away. The Grand got the benefit of the overflow from the Majestic. Papers reported their audience at thirteen hundred, while we had over twenty-three hundred. Elder Evans' subject was, "The eleventh hour, or restoration of the gospel," closing by answering the usual budget of questions. Doctor Potts was the speaker at the Grand, using as his text Acts 3:6 to show Christ's power to bid the sinner rise from his low condition to

LEARNING BY THE THINGS WE SUFFER.

And my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if needs be, by the things which they suffer.—Doctrine and Covenants 102:2.

It seems that the most impressive and effective lessons that come to humanity, and especially to the people of God, are those that come through suffering. This is manifest from our childhood down to old age. A child never fully learns to shun the fire until it receives a burn. After we have grown up, there are many lessons we will not learn, only by this same process.

The recent loss of the church library by fire is an illustration, and I think we shall learn by it; but oh, at what a cost!

After hearing of the burning of the HERALD Office, almost the first thing we thought was: "The library. Could it have been saved?" And knowing its location, we had little hopes of hearing of any part of it being saved.

Then, how we could remember! We remembered how our librarians had repeatedly asked General Conference to make better provisions for our library, which contained so many rare and valuable books. We remembered that at our last conference, the present Librarian called attention to the necessity of making provision for the safety of the library. As a member of that body, we confess our guilt, in that we were a party to permitting the request made to pass by unheeded. Not because we did not value our library, but because it seemed then that there were other matters of more importance demanding our attention. "If we had just had any idea that this fire would have occurred——" Oh, yes! Then——!

"Of all sad words of tongue or pen
The saddest are these: It might have been."

Our Librarian certainly has a clear conscience in having done his duty.

Well, this is only one of the many such incidents in our lives. It is all right to view the mistake we have made, but it is all wrong to become discouraged or despondent over the result of our mistake, and cease our efforts; that would not be learning by what we have suffered. We believe that we will have learned by our recent suffering, although our loss is incalculable. Will our Father forgive us?

A NEVER-FAILING RECIPE FOR HAPPINESS.

There are many earnest Bible students who wonder how it is possible to live a really happy life, amid the surrounding evidences of want, sin, sickness, and every sort of error. But God has asked of us nothing impossible, and he has asked us to be cheery and bright, and always ready to give an answer for the glorious sense of peace and happiness which at times is so much more real and tangible to us than at other times. And if we will look carefully at our condition of thought, at such times as we seem to be so uplifted in spirit as to forget material conditions entirely, we can see clearly that Paul was inspired to say that "neither height, nor depth, nor things present, nor things to come," can separate us from the love and truth which can and will lift us above the sinning sense of the material world, and material man. The Proverbs are full of admonition to search for wisdom; make the effort to gain wisdom and understanding that we would make for gold, for money, for the treasures of earth, is the thought conveyed. And later on Christ tells us this wisdom is not worldly wisdom, but the understanding of God, or how to be good; how not only to believe, but to grow, to develop, to prove our position in the household of faith, to prove past all doubt that God is an everpresent help, that there is no condition that we are called upon to meet wherein godly wisdom will fail to meet our need, when we have sufficient understanding to apply it. And still later in the world's history comes the loving call, and more plainly, "Come up higher." It is not enough to believe,—prove your work.

God says, Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; not money, not power, not fame, not personal aggrandizement, not anything that this material world has to offer us, in fact; but something far beyond its reach, beyond its power to bestow upon mortals—that peace which passeth understanding. When that sweet sense of peace steals into our hearts, then the disturbed condition of the struggling mass of humanity who are seeking happiness in this world's goods recedes from our view, and we are not made unhappy by their cries, for we are above the mist as it were, and we can see plainly that they are only children crying for what can only add to their discomfort, struggling for the things that so quickly perish, thinking perhaps that they are trying to serve God, but utterly blinded by self,—self-will, self-love—but as one comes into the consciousness that this is not what God made, that this condition is only what seems to be, but is not, that what God made stands for ever perfect and pure, and that everything which God did not make must go down, must be uprooted, must give place in our individual consciousness to the truth of things, and that true wisdom is to know the truth which makes us free from just these conditions, then we can see that back of all this seeming unreality is the real, the pure, the good, or what God really did make—man in his image and holiness, and that man is pure, lovable, meek, just, and mighty for good. And when our hearts are so filled with love and truth as to raise us above the clouds of material beliefs, then, and then only, can we really rejoice. For we know that God and not evil rules, that in God's world there is nothing to mar our happiness, to make us afraid, or to disturb our perfect sense of rest and joy and peace; no matter what error tries to argue to us, we know better than to listen, we know that all we have to do is to listen to one voice, the voice which speaks to us of Truth, of Love, godly, intelligent love which thinks no evil and works no evil, and which never fails to meet our every need.

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

The Book of Mormon is a wonderful book, and contains historical matter from the days of Adam down to the close of the fourth century of the Christian Era.

The oldest historical accounts found in the Book of Mormon are extracts quoted by its inspired writers from the writings of Moses and the prophets.

Nephi and his people had in their possession the five books of Moses and the writings of the prophets, down to the days of Jeremiah, in what was known to them as the records of the Jews, engraved upon plates of brass which were taken by Nephi from his uncle, Laban.

The history of the Nephites and Lamanites and other tribes as contained in the Book of Mormon, was written by command of God by Nephi, and many other prophets and kings following him in succession. This account was commenced about six hundred years before Christ, and its writers quoted from Moses and the prophets as we quote from the Old and New Testaments, which was a very necessary thing to do, as it gives the force of proof to their statements.

The book of Ether, found in the latter part of the Book of Mormon, dates back to the time when the Lord confounded the language of the people at Babel, about twenty-two hundred and eighteen years before Christ, and extends down to the days of their last writer, Ether, who lived about six hundred years before Christ.

The Book of Mormon is an abridgment written by command of God, by Mormon and Moroni, the last prophets of the Nephites, abridged from the records or plates kept by the Nephites and Jaredites, and the history of the book closes about A. D. 400.

Its coming forth was in direct fulfillment of the predictions of the prophets of God whose words are found recorded in the Bible and Book of Mormon. It came forth at the right time, in the proper way, and is found in the hands of the right people upon the much favored land of Joseph. It came forth by direct command of God as a "marvelous work and a wonder," and was the ushering in of a new dispensation, known in scripture as "the dispensation of the fullness of times," when God shall gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him. "It came forth by the power and inspiration of God, which was witnessed both by men and angels, and the Holy Spirit bears witness to the humble followers of Christ that the record is true. It is the sealed book of Isaiah, and the stick of Ephraim; or, in other words, it is "the stick of Joseph in the hands of Ephraim." That is why the Book of Mormon is now found in the hands of that part of Ephraim which had been gathered out from among the Gentiles.

The Bible, that book of books, is good, because it contains the word of God, a revelation of God's will to man. The word "Mormon" is said to mean "more good." More of the word of God. The Book of Mormon is, therefore, in some ways, a more full expression of God's will to man. The Book of Mormon thus becomes auxiliary to the Bible as a second witness that Jesus of Nazareth is indeed the Christ, and his gospel the power of God unto salvation. The book is worthy the confidence of all men; and to follow its teachings will make them purer and better.

In its make-up, the Book of Mormon is historical, prophetic, and doctrinal. Its historical matter is reliable, its prophecies true, and its doctrine correct. In all these points it is in harmony with the teachings of the Bible.

Like the Bible, it teaches that God the Father, Jesus Christ the Son, and the Holy Ghost are one God; all wise, loving, good, true, everlasting, and eternal; knowing the end from the beginning, and working "all things after the counsel of his own will."

In harmony with the Bible, it teaches that God can and will reveal his will to whomsoever he chooses, and whenever he wills.

It teaches that it was necessary for Christ to do for man what he could not do for himself, by making an infinite atonement for his redemption. This was done when Christ as the great High Priest "who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, to purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God." It teaches that he should be born in the land of Jerusalem, and that his mother should be a virgin called Mary, and that God himself should be his Father, thus beautifully blending in Christ both the human and the divine natures. That he should receive of the Spirit, even a fullness, and go about doing good, lead sinners out of darkness into light, establish the true religion, and organize the church of God and set it at work to teach and save a dying world.

It teaches, like the Bible, that Christ would choose twelve men and ordain them apostles to be the chief officers in the church, ordaining them by the laying on of hands to the Melchisedec priesthood; that pagan Rome should make war against the saints and crucify the Son of God, and put him to an open shame; that he should be buried and rise again the third day, that he might ascend to heaven and continue his work, until death, the last enemy, is subdued, sin destroyed, sinners saved, the people of God perfected and sanctified, and the "kingdom delivered up to God, that he might be all in all."

It teaches that salvation is conditional, that those conditions are found in the doctrine of Christ, and in the gospel of the Son of God. It teaches that the first principles or conditions are faith, repentance, baptism, the laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment.

It teaches that the true disciples of Christ should receive the Holy Spirit as an abiding Comforter; that the Spirit will manifest itself in the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, faith, gifts of healing, prophecy, discerning of spirits, divers kinds of tongues, and the interpretation of tongues, all given by the same Spirit; "dividing to every man severally as he will"; that the presence of the Spirit may be known by its fruits which are: love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance.

It teaches that if we would retain a remission of our sins, walk with God, and enjoy eternal life in the world to come, as a final reward, we must be humble, faithful, prayerful, watchful, truthful, merciful, just, honest, pure, and good; that we should be true followers of Christ, and collaborators with God, interested in the well-being and salvation of all mankind, doing all in our power to bring sinners to Christ, that we might help them to walk in the way of life.

It teaches that we should love God with all our heart, and with all our soul, and with all our mind, and our neighbor as ourselves; that this is necessary to bring about that condition of things that shall exist when the Spirit shall be poured out upon all flesh, and "the will of God be done on earth, as it is done in heaven." ### MIRACULOUS GIFTS CLAIMED BY THE "FRIENDS."

News of the ousting of three demons from Mrs. Mary Stough, 8120 Wade Park Avenue, NE, has put a damper on a movement that might have ended in removing from the Friends church, Cedar Avenue SE, the two Akron revivalists "who speak in unknown tongues" and claim to "cast out" actual black demons.

The controversy had been brewing since Wednesday, when the two Akron ministers arrived in Cleveland with Miss Rosa Adams, an Akron girl who "speaks in unknown tongues," and herself cast out one of Mrs. Stough's demons.

Members believe in "gift of tongues" and ousting of demons as a doctrine, but a good many of the Friends expressed much doubt about the demonstrations here. They felt that the local demon-baiting was becoming too much like a popular sport to be the real thing. One man prayed loud and long in open meeting that the devil-chasing revivalists be sent back home to Akron.

Reverend Calvin R. Choate, the assistant pastor, was one of those who had his doubts about the "unknown tongue." He was won over Friday night.

Meetings are going on day and night. A young man named Smith was speaking and singing Saturday morning in a "tongue that none could understand," and every few minutes a demon was announced to be cast out in shouts of "Glory! Glory! Glory!"

"Seven in all have received the gift of tongues," said Reverend J. E. Sanders Saturday. "Smith's songs in the unknown tongue are most inspiring. I can not doubt that it is a real language, though none of us at the meeting can understand.

"After the meeting Friday night Reverend Choate called me aside. I knew he had been doubtful and I feared that he was about to tell me that we must go. But he put his arms about me and said that he had been at last convinced.

"The movement here is gaining in force. The demons we are casting out are real. To most of us they are invisible, but some declare they have seen the demons with their own eyes."

Mrs. Stough, who had been in bed for months before two demons were cast out of her, assisted by Miss Adams, was sitting up Saturday. She declared she was gaining in strength.

She was "speaking in unknown tongues" while Miss Adams sat with pencil and paper ready to jot down any interpretation that might be received.

"I fear," Miss Adams said, with her big blue eyes cast serenely aloft, "that this photograph I give you shows too much my wordly state of mind before my own devils were cast from me.

"There were five of them. They went from me only after a great struggle. I felt a rending and tearing as from my very bones, and the room was filled with the rushing winds described in the Bible.

"It was so when we cast the demons from my aunt, Mrs. Stough, wasn't it, auntie?"

"So it was," said Mrs. Stough. "I felt the rushing of winds. Though I had been unable to move in bed without assistance, my limbs threshed about beneath the covers. I sat right up. I would have sprung from bed had it not been for those who knelt by me."

"I speak two unknown tongues," resumed Rosa Adams. "I sing in a third unknown tongue. I think one of the tongues is Russian, but I can not yet be sure of it.

"I sang in the unknown tongue the first night we were here at the Friends' church. A hymn was being sung by the congregation. They were on the chorus when the inspiration came to me. Then Reverend McKinney stopped the others.

"Alone, while the others listened, I sang aloud the second verse in an unknown tongue, this great gift gave to me.

"A girl sat by my side. I could see she was in a struggle with a demon and I cast it out. The power of casting out demons comes now to all who have this gift of tongues."—Cleveland (Ohio) "Press," January 5, 1907.

OUR BOYS.—NO. 7.

"It is the business of father and mother, teacher and friend to start the boy in the line of his apparent ability and inclination if these be reasonable and sensible."—Nathaniel C. Fowler.

It is of the first importance in any business undertaking that the individual be rightly started. If our boy is to make a success of life (looking at it now from a purely business standpoint) it is a matter of vital importance to both the boy and his friends that no mistake be made in selecting the one thing for which his inclination and ability best fit him. In order to do this it becomes necessary that from the first dawn of intelligence he be carefully studied—that the bent of his mind be noticed and, as Mr. Fowler has said, it is the business of those most interested in him not only to do this, but if possible to see to it that his desires and aspirations be not hindered, but that they receive all proper encouragement.

In some children the predisposition to certain vocations (as many parents can testify) is very marked, and if there be no absolutely hindering cause, no valid reason why the boy should not follow where his inclination most strongly leads, it is certainly unwise, if not a positive sin against the boy, should parental authority (or even influence) be exerted to hinder him from carrying out his choice. Let it be once for all distinctly understood that we are referring only to such business and such occupations as are honorable in the sight of both God and man, for no other can ever enter into the heart or mind of a true parent.

Upon this point Mr. Fowler in his book, The Boy, How to Help Him Succeed, has this to say:

"There never was a boy worth the finding who did not present to a close observer some indication of a fitness for something. This fitness, or inclination, soon crystallizes into action and this action soon creates a definite desire which in its turn builds up a proficiency for some one thing for which the boy is naturally adapted.

"Study the boy; watch the boy; analyze each action and inclination. Do not force him; do not hurry him; do not fit him to a calling; find a calling that fits him.

"There are a thousand means of livelihood. The boy has but one prominent ability. Discover that ability and feed it with the kind of food it needs that it may develop into a good thing for the boy and a good thing for the community. Do not start the boy in business at haphazard speed. Better wait a year too long than to crowd him into the first opening, when he does not fit that opening.

"Success may mean money, or statesmanship, or power, or philanthropy, or leadership, or position in anything honorable. There are more of the harmonious elements of success in the best man in town than in the richest man in town. Anything is successful, which has reached the height of its capacity, which is the flush result of his consummate ability and energy. . . . The best possible at its time is the best success of its days."

Is there in the foregoing anything which our readers are not prepared to admit is true? We surely think not. If true, then how it should impress upon parents the important part they themselves have in the making or marring of the lives of the immortal spirits intrusted to their guidance. And just here we feel strongly impressed to ask each father, each mother who reads this, to enter into a class analysis of his or her own life. Go back into the past—as far as memory will take you, and study carefully the influences which were brought to bear upon you and which in a large measure shaped your future and helped to form your character. Why should you do this?

To find fault with or cast reproach upon your parents? To charge to them the mistakes of your life? No, a thousand times no! It is an old and we believe a true adage, "By others' faults wise men correct their own." If in this study—this analysis of your own past life—you find the key to what you feel reasonably sure would have prevented the mistakes which you made, then use it in helping your children to avoid making the same. Use it in such a way as shall stop the consequences of the error entailed upon you being left as a heritage to be passed on by yours to their own children.

It has been a hard battle for you—the overcoming of the mistakes made in your childhood—and you know that all these years you have been handicapped by them and that some of them never can be as though they had not been. If you are wise, then, will you not see to it that you do not perpetuate them—entail them upon your children? We surely think so.

But in order to do this you will need to have firmly fixed in your own mind a standard—and a high one—to which you make all your actions conform. And as there is "no other name given among men" in which we can trust for salvation, so is there no other standard by which actions should be tried (and by which they finally will be tried) than the gospel of the Son of God.

In order to the obtaining of success in any department of life, it is necessary—or largely so—that the boy and his parents mutually understand each other. The boy has rights and so have the parents, and in order to secure the best results the rights of each should be respected. If your boy is a boy of sense, he is worthy of being trusted and of having his individuality respected. We do not wish, however, to be understood as affirming that control is not needful. "The boy without a master is as unsafe as a ship without a tiller; but the boy with an incompetent master may be in more peril than a ship without a rudder."

"Our present civilization," says Mr. Fowler, "progression though it may be, too often robs the foundation that it may artistically build the superstructure. The boy is entitled to a fundamental education. He must learn to read, to write, and to figure, and to be familiar with the common school studies. Without the principles of education he can never branch out, or enter anything. He must receive these fundamentals willingly or otherwise: the law so rules it and the law is right. But the boy who has to be forced, so long as he needs force, will neither contemplate nor accomplish success. It is neither right nor fair nor good policy to force the boy into a classical course, or into any other higher learning against the boy's reasonable objection. Force on the part of parents is seldom justifiable when it goes beyond protecting the boy from danger, keeping him in health, and within the law of reason and of the land he lives in, and of giving him educational essentials. If necessary he should be forced through the common school, but seldom a step further. Parental love, sensible love—and any other kind of parental love is unworthy of the name—the love which has trained itself to proper regulation and is competent to administer itself, has done a thousand times, yes, ten thousand times more good to the boy than the arbitrary dictation of might.

"It is the parents' business to encourage the boy, to teach him the way he should go, to boost him up the common tree of life, and to let him climb through the branches of his own choosing, and to help him while he is climbing, and even to hold the nets of safety beneath him lest he fall.

"Half of the blundering, ignorant, out-of-place lawyers, doctors, and ministers are but the product of wilful and conceived parents who hadn't brains enough to let the boys walk upon their own legs, but insisted upon propping them up upon crutches for life and the suffering world, with the boys, pays the penalty.

"Better that the boy be the best machinist in town than the poorest lawyer. Better a good carpenter than a butchering doctor. Better that he till the soil well and enjoy a profitable harvest, than that he in his ignorance and inadaptability misrepresent religion.

"Binding the boy against his natural grain means mental or physical deformity. Every boy who is good for anything is better for one thing than for any other. Along the line of his capacity is the road to his best accomplishment. Forcing him to be what nature never intended him for means failure. The boy's inclinations may and may not correspond with the boy's capacity. He may be mistaken about himself, and so may be his parents, and his teacher may not diagnose his case correctly. Certainty is impossible. Probability is probable. The boy who wants to do what he ought to do is pretty sure of success. The combination of desire and capacity leads on to profit. Most failures begin either by doing what one does not want to do, or by doing what one ought not to do. The success of almost every boy is dependent upon his inclination working in harmony with his real capacity; and the sooner this combination is discovered, the quicker the boy will reach results.

"If the boy shows a mechanical bent, he should have something mechanical to do about the house, and be encouraged in every way along the line of his inclination. The more mechanical things set before him the better, provided they do not interfere with his regular duties or his health. The handling of machines and the seeing of them in action, and the atmosphere of the workshop even though he be but a visitor, and not an actor, will be of much use in fitting him for the life he is likely to follow.

"If the boy enjoys the farm and outdoors is more than all the rest of the world to him, there should be impressed upon him the advantage of being a good farmer and not a drudger; and he should be allowed to see the difference between working the land and allowing the land to work him.

"If he appears to be a trader, he should, when of reasonable age, meet men of honest business and be kept away from the jockies of trade, that he may learn the right side of business and the wrong side of barter."

And, to be brief, what has been said of mechanics, of the farm, and of trading will apply with equal force and truthfulness to each and every vocation of life. Let the boy live, as far as he consistently can, in the environment of his chosen occupation.

Questions on February Reading.

Of what importance is it that a boy be rightly started in a business course? Why? What constitutes a right start? Whose business is it to see that he is thus started? What is necessary upon their part to qualify them to do this? What evidences do children sometimes give of predisposition to certain vocations? Is there any boy that has not a fitness for something? How may this fitness be discerned? Should a boy be fitted to a calling or a calling be found to fit him? Who will profit by the developing of the boy's most prominent ability? Who is more successful, the best man in town or the richest man in town? How do wise men profit by others' faults? What may prove a help to parents in the guidance of their children? What is the only true standard in these matters, as in all others? Of what importance is an understanding between a boy and his parents? Has a boy any rights to be respected by his parents? How is the foundation of a boy's education frequently robbed? How must he receive the fundamentals of an education? How far is force on the part of parents justifiable? What is a greater power for good with a boy than arbitrary dictation? Who are probably responsible for many men in mistaken callings? Upon what does the success of almost every boy depend? How should a boy of mechanical bent be encouraged? What should be done for the boy who enjoys the farm? What help should be given the natural trader?

Letter Department

DES MOINES, IOWA, January 8, 1907.

Herald Editors: We read in the evening papers on Saturday of the loss of the publishing house, and Bro. Hale Smith was with us on Sunday and told us of the extent of the loss. I had thought to write you at once, but I am almost sure that you are burdened with letters. We feel the loss as much as any one can, being removed from the scene of the loss.

Very kindly,

A. A. REAMS.

CHEHALIS, Washington, January 3, 1907.

Saints' Herald: We have been since November 2, 1906, isolated ones indeed. We have not seen one Saint during that time. So far as we know we are the only Saints at this place. If there are any Saints living at or near Chehalis, we would like to have them call on us.

We would like to know what district we are in, also who the missionaries in the district are.

Would like to have any of the elders call on us any time.

Your sisters in the faith,

MISS HATTIE WARD.

MRS. NORA CROWN.

STANBERRY, Missouri, January 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: It has been six years since I covenanted with my heavenly Father to obey him and keep his commandments. Oh, the joy, the grandeur, and the magnificence of the many "exceeding great and precious promises" that he will verify unto the Saints if they will humble themselves so as to merit his divine approbation. "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." We understand Zion to be the pure in heart. Jesus said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

We make a convincing argument to the world on church organization, etc., but, dear brethren and sisters, there are other things we must look well to. We must have all ingratitude and selfishness eliminated from our hearts and love one another, not "in word, neither in tongue only; but in deed and in truth," and purify ourselves even as he (Christ) is pure.

To-day, while the bells of the sectarian churches are tolling in this city, I long to be where there is an assembly of Saints, so that our little boys might go to church. I hold the priesthood and would gladly work in a branch if the Lord saw fit. But there are opportunities to do good everywhere, regardless of environments. We have been holding Sunday-school in this city from house to house for five years. I have preached several times in the Adventist church, with an invitation to "come again," besides going to schoolhouses and making efforts to preach the restored gospel.

May God bless the Saints and help us all to "come up higher" and meet at last where parting will be no more, is the prayer of your brother,
JAMES D. SCHOFIELD.

MCTAGGART, Saskatchewan, January 5, 1907.

We are doing our best to advance the gospel. Have now a membership of forty-seven in our Weyburn Branch. Elder T. L. Mortimer was with us a few days in December. He has a home-stead in our county and is doing well. He will be in the field overseeing his mission until the first of April.

Ever a sister in the one faith,

FLORENCE TOOVEY.

CORBIN, Montana, January 1, 1907.

Dear Editor: As this is the season for the making of good resolutions, only to be broken or forgotten later on, I shall try instead to write a few lines for our paper, the SAINTS' HERALD.

We are among the isolated ones, there being no Saints here; but we hope and pray and ask an interest in the prayers of all Saints, that we may be able to hold out faithful to the end of the race.

Bro. L. G. Holloway was here about the first of September and stayed two weeks, and preached every night during that time except two, preaching some very spiritual and forceful sermons.

I have been much pleased with the HERALD of late for I think that the instructive and entertaining manner in which it is edited should not fail to please any, however fastidious. I was especially pleased with the Editor's article on "How Saints should live," and hope that the Editor will continue the discussion of this subject, as I consider it the all-important one before God's people to-day.

The question of how Saints should live enters (when fully considered) into every act in life, whether in the church or out of it. For we know that the acts or works of the Saints are more closely watched by those from without than that of any other people. Although their motives may differ, all outsiders seem to rejoice at the downfall of the Saint.

Since I have been at this place I have been sorely afflicted; first by the loss of an eye by an accident; and for the last four months past have been so afflicted with rheumatism that I have been unable to do any work. I do not write this by way of complaint but that all may understand why my name will not appear in the Bishop's report of the year just passed. But I believe that under ordinary circumstances every one able to labor should contribute to the forwarding and upbuilding of Christ's church on earth.

Yours,

I. M. DUNGAN.

BRULE, Oklahoma, January 1, 1907.

Dear Herald: Happy greetings for the new year to our dear old HERALD. May its steady course as a powerful factor in the establishment of righteousness and truth in the earth flow on through the year that now is new, lending strength to the weak, light to the darkened, and courage to the strong.

The holiday season finds us in the western part of this mission, laboring in a field so broad in opportunities to do that the laborer is sometimes at a loss to tell which of many important tasks is the most urgent. Have recently been among the "salt of the earth" as so well represented by Elder C. H. Blakesley and his estimable family of son and daughters, the last remaining single one of whom we had the pleasure of uniting in marriage on Christmas Eve to a genial and accomplished young man, Mr. Thomas Sumpter, who as yet is not of us in faith, but who we trust sooner or later will come to know the glad reality that this beautiful gospel which we preach is not founded on a myth —not a "cunningly devised fable," but is as sound and strong as the Rock of Ages. Thus we hope for him, as also another husband of one of the fair daughters of this household, Mr. Clyde Newcomer, that they may be privileged to behold the light as revealed from heaven, that the joy of their newly made unions may be complete; lacking nothing, in that husband and wife are one in all things.

Another worthy family of Saints here, whose hospitality is open for the gospel messengers, is Bro. Richardson's, near May. Also Bro. Willie Barrett, and others whom we did not visit at this time.

Our meetings closed at West Otter Schoolhouse last Sunday night with a large crowd in attendance.

Bro. Marion Hancock and Elder Blakesley assisted us with the meetings. We are now located with Bro. James M. Richardson, near Brule, where we expect to commence to-night, January 1. Bro. Richardson says that the elders find this locality only when they get lost. If that be true, our dearly loved Bro. J. H. Baker of this western part must get lost pretty often, for he has baptized a number of noble people out here where the sod houses shelter as honest souls and warm hearts as ever turned primitive wilds to habitable homes. Keep on getting lost, Bro. Baker, and thus help in saving the lost.

In gospel hope,

JAMES E. YATES.

TAYLOR, North Dakota, January 6, 1907.

Dear Brothers and Sisters: I am a Saint and take great pleasure in reading the letters that are in the HERALD. I have two sisters and my mother that are Saints. I have never lived with God's people, but I often wish I could go to Lamoni to live.

We used to live within about sixteen miles of the Clifford, North Dakota, Branch, but we moved farther west, out here where there are no Saints for miles. Oh, I wish some of our elders would come out here and build up a branch.

This morning while I was getting breakfast I was thinking of my Savior, and how good and merciful he has been to me, how he has guided me and shielded me from temptation, and, dear young sisters, if you have any trouble, any trials, take them to Jesus in prayer; he will help you always. Just trust him. I made this rhyme out of my thoughts this morning:

I will put my trust in Jesus,
He will not forsake his own,
I will put my trust in Jesus,
He will lead me to the throne.
If I am his humble servant
He will lead me to the end.
I will follow, follow Jesus,
He will lead me o'er the way,
He will lead me to the Father;
And with him I'll ever stay.
Jesus is our blessed Savior,
We his humble servants be,
He has promised for to lead us;
He will lead us all the way,
If we only trust him and obey.

Your sister in Christ,

OLIVE MOFFIT.

BUFFALO, New York, January 12, 1907.

Editors Herald: Regret very much to learn of our great loss in the destruction of the HERALD Office, and hasten to forward you my subscription for the Autumn Leaves. Seems to me that none will allow their subscriptions to lapse under present conditions. If all will pay up promptly, it will no doubt do you more good than all the sorrow they may express or the sympathy they may offer. Let us all show our sympathy in some practical way. Every one must admire the pluck manifested by those in charge in recovering from the shock so quickly so that we were able to receive the HERALD on time as usual, though reduced in size—not a single issue omitted. Surely this is worthy of praise. Now let us all show our appreciation of such work by doing our part. The Editors call for matter to take the place of that which is destroyed. Long articles are nearly always at a discount. Let us begin with short ones, and steer clear of that "blue pencil."

Mr. Editor, please call attention to my new address. The severe illness of my wife made a change necessary. She is now at home with our children in Chicago, while I am in this city in response to a call for help from a little band of Saints who are trying to let their light shine and do all in their power for the spread of the work. I have been here only two days. Meetings are held at present in private houses, but an effort is being made to secure a hall, and we hope to be able to report something good from Buffalo in the near future.

In gospel bonds,

F. G. PITT.

CHEROKEE, Oklahoma, January 14, 1907.

Editors Herald: I had heard of the conflagration at the HERALD Office before seeing the issue for the 9th inst., and therefore was not the least surprised to see such a small paper, resembling the "little HERALD" of thirty five years ago. In fact it was more than I expected. I feel to congratulate the management and editorial staff in doing so well under such trying and discouraging environments. The undismayed spirit made manifest is commendable. May God bless you, my brethren.

I am holding meetings near here at two different points, both new places. Weather conditions somewhat against us. Expect to go to the neighborhood of Bro. James Ferguson, near Yewed, about the 16th.

May all Saints be encouraged and move forward in the line of duty. No use to brood over losses, nor indulge ourselves in vain regrets. Sometimes it takes something like a financial loss or reverse to wake some of us up. We still have the gospel, and the assurance that this is God's work, and this is worth more than many publishing houses.

H. E. MOLER.

Editors Herald: I was sorry to hear of the loss to the church—the HERALD Office, and as I read how sorrowful the Saints felt, tears came to my eyes also. For eighteen years, ever since I came into the church, I took the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Hope; and how many times I have been cheered by their richly-laden pages. Yet we were glad to hear that there was such sympathy felt, in the effort to rebuild at once. If there is means needed, more than can be raised near, let us know and we in this district will do a little, as we always have done, for other purposes. And may God bless our prayers as well as our efforts.

I came here the 5th of this month by request of the branch officers to try to encourage the Saints, for there were some cold and indifferent, while the few had the burden to bear. It seems it was well for me to come here. I have spoken every night, and there are always some strangers present. I visited nearly every Saint in the city, encouraging them to faithfulness, praying with them, also visiting outsiders, telling them the gospel story.

Bro. More, priest, went with me one day. I think I can truly say the Saints are going to do better this year than for some time. There is new love and fellowship existing. May it continue. Oh, for a closer walk with God! Oh, that Saints of God would erect family altars, gather their households around them, whether children or their hired help! It would tell in time in the church being more spiritual, as the poet says:

"Arouse, arouse, why idly stand,
Why sit at ease with folded hands,"

They voted last Sunday for me to stay this week, so I will have to obey orders, I guess.

The Sunday-school is small; even children of the Saints are absent.

The health of the Saints is mainly good, but all have to work hard to keep soul and body together. This branch might have been large, had not some believed adverse doctrine and tried to teach it.

May this new year bring much good to the church.

Your brother,

JOHN HEIDE.

Extracts from Letters.

Mollie Davis, Pittsburg, Kansas: "I sympathize with you in the inconvenience brought upon you by the burning of Herald Publishing House. May heaven assist you in your labors."

M. R. Shoemaker, Beardstown, Illinois: "I am truly sorry of your loss by fire, and I think I can sympathize with you as last spring my entire business was burned out, and it has been only about six months since I have been back in business. The Saints as a rule are not a class of people to weaken under adverse circumstances. Our hope leads us on to victory, and I trust that the HERALD will soon be better than ever."

C. E. Ball, Rock Island, Illinois: "Was very sorry to learn of your misfortune, but we must hope for the best, looking upon the bright side. No cloud so dark but what it has a silver lining. We are struggling along here in the Tri Cities as best we can. Many are the trials and discouragements we have. We have been made to mourn by the sad and sudden death of Sr. F. A. Needham, stricken with paralysis on Sunday, January 6, 1907, and died Wednesday, the 9th."

Emeline J. Davidson, Robinson, Utah: "I was very sorry to learn of the loss by fire of the HERALD Office. Wish I could help in the rebuilding, but at present it does not look as if I could as I am a widow living with my son, who is a widower with three children and nothing but his daily labor to depend on for a living. If I could I would earn something myself, but am sick most of the time, not able to do the housework."

Church Secretary.

REQUEST FOR CHURCH PUBLICATIONS.

The undersigned desires to obtain for general church uses in the Secretary's office volumes of the Conference Minutes from 1891 to 1906, the General Conference Resolutions, bound or unbound volumes of SAINTS' HERALD, and other church publications, including publications issued by the old church and by the various factions. Any one having such books or publications of whatever character to donate will please communicate with the undersigned. Any surplus will be turned over to the church library, should the library be lacking volumes received. The library will also be given first consideration where books are donated not yet in the library.

R. S. SALVARDI, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, January 14, 1907.

Historian's Notice.

In consequence of our reports and records being destroyed by the recent fire, we are under the necessity of asking the ministry, and others everywhere, to please report the organization of branches and districts, with dates, places, and officers; also debates, time, place, questions, and disputants; also church dedications, with any other items known to be important to church history.

We respectfully ask that the missionaries, and local officers generally, render all possible aid to local historians in writing anew the history of their respective districts.

We have in the office a supply of the speeches of Senators Burrows and Dubois, of Michigan and Idaho, the printing of which is paid for by the Bishop. We are instructed to send a copy of each to all General Conference appointees. We have done so, so far as addresses either mission or home were known to us. Those who have not received the speeches at either address, will please send us their addresses and they will be supplied.

In order to cover the expense of printing and mailing the nominal sum of thirty cents per dozen is to be charged for copies other than the foregoing; and those desiring them may be supplied while they last.

We again call attention to the great need of this department for all documents of historical importance. We are continually missing something we had not missed before, and stand in need of all the information it is possible to obtain.

Our local historians so far as heard from, have unanimously responded to the demand, not a single one having made excuse or declined; and we feel hopeful that with this spirit prevailing, we will have even a better record than we had before in due time.

In the hope of final triumph,

HEMAN C. SMITH, Church Historian.

Church Librarian.

We will appreciate any donations of books for our library. We want books of all sorts suitable for a reference library, but we need especially books treating on "Mormonism," and old and rare church publications.

The following books have been sent to the library since the fire, besides several which have been promised:

Millennial Star, Vol. 1, Heman C. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa.

O. Pratt's Works, Heman C. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa.

Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, Heman C. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa.

Tour of the World in 80 days, L. Pierson, Lamoni, Iowa.

History of England, L. Pierson, Lamoni, Iowa.

Five Branch, III, Heman C. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa.

Kansas Historical Collections, Kansas Historical Society, Topeka, Kansas.

Millennial Stars, IV-XVI, Richard Farmer, Magnolia, Iowa.

Census of Iowa, D. F. Lambert, Lamoni, Iowa.

What the World Believes, D. F. Lambert, Lamoni, Iowa.

Creasy's Battles, D. F. Lambert, Lamoni, Iowa.

American Communities, D. F. Lambert, Lamoni, Iowa.

The World Atmanac, D. F. Lambert, Lamoni, Iowa.

Beyond the Verge, D. F. Lambert, Lamoni, Iowa.

Smoot Case, Volume 4, W. P. Hepburn, Washington, District of Columbia.

"Temple Lot Case," Transcript of Record, E. L. Kelley, Independence, Missouri.

"Bryan, Sewall, and Free Silver," D. F. Lambert, Lamoni, Iowa.

LAMONI, Iowa.

INEZ SMITH, Assistant Librarian.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

I wish again to speak to the Saints in the Central Michigan District, as the month of January is fast passing and as yet not much tithing has reached me. And, realizing the necessary part each one should take in this great work, I make this appeal and kindly ask each one to look this matter up for himself and contribute according as the Lord has prospered him, remembering that Jesus has said, "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."—John 15:7. Now, dear Saints, do you wish to be in a condition that when trials and afflictions come upon you you will have the Lord on your side, that you can go into your secret closets and ask your heavenly Father in secret and he will reward you openly? Jesus says, "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love."—John 15:10. The commandment is, All of our surplus properties as a consecration to the Lord, and one tenth of all our interest annually. This to be a standing law unto the people of God for ever. This to carry on the Lord's work. (See Doctrine and Covenants 106:1.) Again, in Doctrine and Covenants 64:5: "A day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned."

Now, dear Saints, what are you building on? Here is something that will stand the fire. What will you choose, hay, wood, stubble, gold, silver, precious stones—what will you have? Will each one contribute something? Will sub-agents of branches try to get the name of every member this year? Will those that read the HERALD show this notice to those that do not take the HERALD? On our book we have two hundred and twenty names out of a membership of over nine hundred. Where are the other seven hundred? Elder J. A. Grant has a receipt-book and all money paid to him will reach me the same as though sent to me. Trusting this will meet the approval of all and that we may all be workers together with Christ for the advancement of his work and the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your brother in the faith,

E. S. WHITE,

Bishop's Agent, Central Michigan District.

High Priests' Quorum.

Dear Brethren: The time has arrived to arrange the program for our quorum meetings next spring. In this we earnestly ask for your assistance. Kindly send us such topics as you would like to have discussed, or questions you desire answered. And please do this right now, while this notice is before you, lest you forget it, or put it off till it is too late. It is desired to make these quorum meetings both interesting and instructive, but this can hardly be accomplished without your help.

Any suggestions as to the arrangement of the program, or the character of the meetings, will be thankfully received. Kindly let us hear from you.

F. G. PITT.

142 Grand Street, BUFFALO, New York.

Fourth Quorum of Elders.

I desire the address of each member of our quorum. If you have changed your address please state former address when you reported last. There will be no circular letter issued this year; an explanation will be given in my report to the quorum at General Conference.

W. C. CHAPMAN, Acting Secretary.

HIGBEE, Missouri, R. F. D. 3, Box 92.

First Quorum of Teachers.

The third quarterly session of the First Quorum of Teachers convened in the Saints' church, Independence, Missouri, December 30, 1906. Number present, nine; number reporting, twelve.

A motion prevailed requesting the committee on "teachers' report blank" to report to the president and his counselors, with the committee to approve and have same ready for the next meeting. Assistance to a committee on minutes of April 13, 1906, to assist in making up a third quorum, was taken up and the following resolution adopted: "Resolved, That whereas there was a larger number of teachers present at the reorganization of the First Quorum than was required to form a quorum, and whereas such teachers desired to join a quorum, they requested the First Quorum to assist them in collecting the names of those who desired to be enrolled in a third quorum." According to the resolution the First Quorum has continued the appointment of Brn. R. A. Penney, of Independence, Missouri, and C. A. White, of Hieman, Iowa, to assist in such capacity. Those desiring to be enrolled in a third quorum will correspond with above brethren who will confer with the proper authority. A motion prevailed authorizing the secretary to have the above resolution published in "Zion's Ensign" and the SAINTS' HERALD with the report of this meeting.

The First Quorum will please take notice that we are on our last quarter for the year, and some have not reported at all. We especially urge all that are behind with their reports to make a complete report of their labor at our next meeting, of which due notice will be given. Please remember that the secretary desires to make a full report of the year's work at the coming General Conference.

If this report comes to the notice of Brn. G. M. Rhonemus and Charles Crabb, will they please send their addresses to the secretary.

B. F. RESCH, Secretary.

100 Bowen Street, INDEPENDENCE, Missouri.

Notice.

To Saints of Clinton District, Missouri: The last district conference instructed the tent committee to look after the purchasing of a new tent. We accordingly circulated subscription lists, and those who have signed same and have not yet paid will please forward same to my address promptly, as we want all paid in by our next district conference to be held March 2 and 3 at Eldorado Springs, Missouri. Also those whom we have not reached with the list, please assist us all you can with your contributions.

JESSE W. PAXTON, Treasurer of Committee.

HOLDEN, Missouri.

Died.

GAMET.—David Gamet was born January 1, 1836, in Otsego County, New York. He with his parents came to Harrison County, Iowa, in 1853. He was baptized at Garner's Grove reunion October 12, 1884. Was married to Nancy Hutchison October 24, 1855. She preceded him to the beyond the 25th of last June. Of this union ten children were born. The nine surviving sons and daughters are Sr. William Stuart, Hannah F. Derry, Alice I. Gonsolley, Harriet E. Garner, James F., Ira D., Parley L., and George L., all of Mondamin, Iowa, and Miriam E. Coffman of Pisgah, Iowa, Sarah E. having departed earth life thirteen years ago. Bro. Gamet's earth-life closed November 9, 1906, after a lingering illness, at his home in Mondamin, Iowa. Funeral services were held from the Congregational church, Sunday, November 11. A large assembly gave token of their esteem for an honorable man, a worthy friend and citizen. The sermon was delivered by Bro. J. C. Crabb, a friend of half a century. The father of the deceased, David Gamet, Sr., was one of the earliest bishops of the Reorganization. The name of Gamet has long been honored in Western Iowa.

KELSOE.—Willie Kelsoe was born in Alabama, August 24, 1873; baptized April 8, 1898. Died October 27, 1906. He was a noble Saint, loved by all who knew him. He always looked after the needs of the elders, and was always glad to have them visit his home where they were made comfortable. He leaves a wife, two children, an aged mother, and several brothers and sisters to mourn their loss. Funeral-sermon by E. A. Erwin.

ANDERSON.—Anna M. Clawson was born in Sweden, September 30, 1830. Died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. George Everett, near Union, Nebraska, December 22, 1906. She united with the church in her native land and emigrated to America in 1864, walked across the plains to Utah, where she met and married John Anderson in 1865. Becoming dissatisfied with conditions in Utah, she with her family came back to Nebraska City in 1876. Her husband died in 1888. She leaves two sons, one daughter, and ten grandchildren. She joined the Reorganized Church August 6, 1876. She died firm in the faith. Funeral in charge of C. H. Porter.

STANLEY.—At Kewanee, Illinois, January 12, 1907, Joseph Hiram Stanley. He was born April 25, 1865, at Kewanee, Illinois; departed this life at the age of 41 years, 8 months, and 18 days. He leaves wife, six children, mother, four brothers, and four sisters; also, many other relatives and friends. Funeral at Andover, Missouri, schoolhouse the 15th. Sermon by R. M. Elvin, from 1 Peter 1:25. Singers from Lamoni.

SEVERIN.—Zoula Margretta, daughter of Bro. and Sr. J. C. Severin of near Hallowell, Kansas, died on Sunday morning, December 23, at 6 o'clock, of membranous croup; aged 4 years, 6 months, and 23 days. She was an exceptionally bright and intelligent child, and she will be greatly missed from the family circle. The family has a double sorrow, for only three weeks before they lost their little grandson of the same disease. Little Zoula was buried on Christmas Day. The funeral was held at the family residence at 11 o'clock; sermon by Elder E. A. Davis. It was surely a sad Christmas for the bereaved family. Little Var-nel Armstrong was born June 3, 1904, and died December 3, 1906. He was the son of Bro. and Sr. Arch Armstrong of Scammon, Kansas, where he died. Interment of both children was in the Columbus Cemetery, side by side. Both are gone but never will be forgotten.

PICKLES.—John Pickles was born October 20, 1831, died January 7, 1907, aged 75 years, 2 months, 27 days. Deceased was born in England. Came to America over thirty years ago, locating in Chicago. Married Elizabeth Reese, April 14, 1891. Came to California in 1894, locating in San Diego. He leaves a wife (Sr. Elizabeth Pickles) and one sister to mourn their loss. Funeral-sermon by T. W. Williams.

WILCOX.—Bro. Amasa R. Wilcox was born November 15, 1838, at Norig, Ontario. Was married to Mrs. Sarah J. Willis in 1866, at Byron, Michigan. Was baptized into the church August 20, 1876. Died at Plano, Illinois, January 27, 1907, after a brief illness, aged 69 years, 1 month, and 23 days. The remains were carried to their resting-place in the Plano Cemetery on January 10. Funeral-sermon was preached in the Saints' chapel by J. Arthur Davis.

CHRISTENSEN.—At Council Bluffs, Iowa, January 8, 1907. Donald C., son of Bro. James C. Christensen, at the age of 8 years, 9 months, and 19 days. Services conducted at the home by Charles Fry and Peter Anderson.

VAN SICKLE.—January 13, 1907, at South Omaha, Nebraska, Clifford M. Van Sickle, grandchild of Sr. Marsh, aged 4 years, 5 months, and 2 days. Services at the home by Charles Fry assisted by C. M. Hollenbeck. Interment near Woodbine, Iowa.

OSBORNE.—Lyman Osborne died January 16, 1907, near Thurman, Iowa. He was born near Success, Ohio, January 10, 1841. United with the church May 1, 1892, being baptized by Bro. Henry Kemp at Bartlett, Iowa. He was patient in affliction and rejoiced at his approaching change. Wife, three daughters, and one son remain to mourn. Services at the Leeka church, near Thurman, by Charles Fry, assisted by C. M. Roberts.

HUMBLE.—Sr. Mary Humble died at her home in Weir City, Kansas, January 1, 1907. She was the widow of William Humble deceased. Was born March 7, 1850, in England; baptized May, 1893, at Weir City, Kansas. Services at Latter Day Saint church, January 3, 1907, conducted by Elder Taylor. Interment in Weir City Cemetery. The deceased was a faithful member, esteemed by all who knew her. She leaves three daughters, two sons, and many friends and relatives to mourn her departure.

WILLIAMS.—Martha Williams was born July 15, 1837, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Departed this life December 24, 1906, aged 69 years, 5 months, and 9 days. She had been a constant sufferer for years before death came to her relief. She was baptized by W. W. Blair. She leaves an aged husband, four sons, and three daughters to mourn their loss. Funeral-sermon by L. G. Holloway from the family residence, a large crowd of relatives and friends being present. Interment in the family burial grounds. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

HAWS.—At Barke's Sanitarium, Santa Rosa, California, November 3, 1906, Bro. Alpheus P. Haws. He was born in Canada, 1825, was a man of faith, defending the doctrines of the Reorganization with great pertinacity. With his parents living at Nauvoo, he became well acquainted with the two Martyrs. He always testified as to the purity of their characters, remembering many interesting events which he was witness to, among other things saw at a meeting the Martyr lead his son Joseph by the hand and heard him saying, "This is your future prophet." Interment in old soldiers' plot at Santa Rosa.

The February number of the Travel Magazine takes us chiefly to different parts of our own continent, but as usual does not neglect foreign countries. "To Norway for a vacation" by William Morrow describes how two American business men found novelty and relaxation in the bracing land of fjords. Robert G. Weyh, Jr., tells of a personal "Two-months trip to the Pacific Coast for $250.," and we realize that we hear so much about cheap European tours that we fail to notice that a very extensive tour to the Pacific Coast can be made very cheaply. In Campbell Macleod's "Mardi Gras in New Orleans," we hear about the merry carnival preceding Lent—an American survival of an old European custom, "Atlantic City," the typical American resort, is entertainingly described by Grace Isabel Colbron, and Katherine Browne describes a European pleasure resort of a different character, in "Monte Carlo," the country of chance. George R. King describes and pictures for us "A trip down the Yukon River," an outing among natives and wood choppers in the Arctic Circle. As usual we have in the "Calendar of Travel," an interesting account of where to go and what to go for in February. Beginning with Robert Louis Stevenson, by James H. Collins, we have a new series of articles entitled "Gypsy men of letters," which will appear from time to time and treat of the rambles of literary men as described in their books. "The sugar cane industry in Cuba," by G. Harvery Seward, tells us of the figures and present conditions of an investment from the inside as investigated by a business economist. Many other useful and interesting articles about traveling complete this valuable issue.

Good Timber Sold Cheap.

In the effort to check the pine bark beetle, which has been severely attacking the forest in parts of the Black Hills Forest Reserve, South Dakota, the Government is resorting to drastic measures. For the first time under the Forest Service, actual cutting, skidding, and burning of debris have been carried on by Government employees. Insect infested timber, both standing and already felled under Service direction, is offered for sale. Large quantities of it can be secured at a fraction of the price charged for green wood.

Yet this wood is just as good for lumber and railroad ties as green wood and would ordinarily bring an equal price. Small sales have not been numerous enough to remove the infested timber; hence it is necessary to offer special inducements if the timber is to be saved. Timber not now accessible can be reached under extensive operations which would warrant the building of the necessary railroads.

This action followed upon a study of the insect situation on the reserve by Doctor A. D. Hopkins, in charge of forest insect investigations in the Bureau of Entomology, who recommended that the Service push the cutting and disposal of infested timber as the only means of preventing the spread of the beetles through wilder and wilder areas. To broaden the market for the timber a clause in the agricultural appropriation bill, last winter, permitted the exportation of timber for two years beyond the borders of South Dakota. But even this has not brought enough or large enough applications to take the timber which should be disposed of. Hitherto the Government has waited for a bidder before advertising for competitors. This procedure, through delay, threatens too serious a loss in the waste of trees now infested and in the spread of the beetles to fresh stands. The Forest Service will now take the initiative and advertise for bidders, in order to draw attention to this timber, which is a menace to the future supply on the reserve.

By securing prompt purchasers for the infested logs and standing trees, and destroying the insect broods by firing the bark and sash, it is hoped that the surrounding forests will soon be saved from further insect attack.

The timber attacked by the bark beetle has not lost its commercial value. There is no reason why the desired sales should not more than reimburse the Government, besides utilizing a large amount of pine which would otherwise be wasted.

The Specter of Constant Jealousy.

When a man is afraid to remark at the breakfast table, even mildly and casually, that, from what he has heard, Cleopatra was a beautiful woman, it is fair to assume that the specter of constant jealousy dwells in that household. When a wife fears to look at the moon because she may be accused of admiring the man in it, the husband needs to be gently reminded that he is taking a very rapid short cut to killing the love he seems to hold so sacred. Love is fed by confidence, trust, faith and serene, restful reliance, but morbid jealousy is a poison of doubt, suspicion, and injustice that dulls the love it does not deaden.

Jealousy is a disease that can be cured only by the subject, not by any one else in all the world. No matter how gentle, kind, forbearing, forgiving, and forgetting the object of it may be, this in itself will not cure the attacks. The subject whose heart is thus swayed by fierce gales of jealousy must first awaken to the folly of it, the injustice of it; must be conscious of the trail of bitterness and unhappiness it brings to both, must realize the cruel continued assault on the tolerance, love, loyalty, and patience of the other, and, when the next attack comes, seek by strength of will, by force of character, by every weapon in the armory of the soul, to kill the feeling. Jealousy must be killed in the thought. In the mind, the battleground of the soul, must the fight of extermination be waged. In the thought must the jealousy be neutralized by faith, conquered by justice, and transformed by trustful love into a restful, abiding confidence that only absolute proof and certainty of just cause for jealousy can ever awaken.—William George Jordan in the February Delineator.

better things. The service closed with the characteristic "hand-shaking" and "stand up" performance, followed by an "experience" from an English emigrant, recently converted.

The prominent feature of the Majestic advertisements is: "Come and hear the old Jerusalem gospel!" while the Grand is: "Come and have a good sing." A. F. McLEAN.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLORADO.

A few items might be of interest from this famous health resort, where a small band of Saints are maintaining a branch organization.

The keenest regret is felt for the loss sustained by the burning of our principal publishing house.

Our worthy branch president, Elder W. C. Duncan, while able to be about his daily task, is complaining of threatened nervous prostration. He is as faithful in his presiding capacity as he is in visiting and comforting the membership.

The Sunday-school is ably presided over by Elder J. E. Lalonde, assisted by Sr. E. J. Clarke. Enrollment about thirty-five.

Elder E. J. Clarke, late from Grinnell, Iowa, is at the helm of the Religio. Two classes are maintained, and a lively interest manifested.

The writer, for the past eleven months, has been nursing a case of pulmonary tuberculosis and is domiciled at the Union Printers' Home. His condition at this writing is such that he is able to be around and eats three full meals a day. Prospects fair for some years of life.

Elders J. W. Morgan and J. D. Curtis have been holding nightly preaching-meetings at the church and in cottages for the past two weeks. Good interest and attendance have been had.

As a health city Colorado Springs is unsurpassed. People from all parts of the world come here, especially for lung affections. The Saints always welcome other Saints desiring to locate here. Church privileges are good. A. B. HANSON.

FIRST KANSAS CITY BRANCH.

At our last business-meeting we issued thirty-three letters of removals to Saints living at Ivanhoe, converts of Brn. F. C. Warnky, B. J. Scott, and others. Last Monday Brn. I. N. White and the stake presidency organized them as a branch, H. Gould, president; L. Fowler, priest; William McGloughlin, deacon, and George Kern, teacher. They hold their meetings in Walmon's Hall, Thirty-eighth and Woodland Avenue.

Brn. Parsons and Bond are holding a protracted meeting this week in our church, but the storm is raging and greatly interferes with our success. Still the turnout is very good.

F. C. WARNKY.

DENVER, COLORADO.

Elders Shupe and Kemp are in the city assisting in a series of meetings. When these meetings close the former will go to Lamar and Rocky Ford, and the latter to Delta.

Elders Morgan and Curtis are doing missionary work at Colorado Springs and Colorado City.

Teacher I. A. Lytle having removed to Independence, Missouri. Bro. Homer Shupe has been elected to fill the unexpired term.

At the election of Religio officers the following were chosen for the ensuing year: M. A. McConley, president; Homer Shupe, vice-president; U. B. Barrett, secretary; J. C. Powers, treasurer.

E. F. SHUPE.

ROSSENDALE AND TREHERNE, MANITOBA.

We have bought the Rossendale Methodist church, the one Bro. R. C. Evans was locked out of while on his trip out here through Manitoba and the North West, two years ago.

We have had the church thoroughly cleaned and renovated on the inside, and on Sunday, December 9, held our opening services, followed by a supper and a concert Monday evening. Our supper and concert were a grand success. Every one said it was the best ever held in that part. We took in over fifty dollars, and, as the preacher had received his salary in advance, we had all of the money to pay on the church.

What surprised us most was that the very man who locked the door on Bro. R. C. Evans was present at our morning service.

AN EXPLANATION.

We are asked by the writer of the following letter to explain what we have hitherto believed was plainly stated at the time it was written. Whatever we may now attempt to put forth as an explanation, may be "an explanation that does not explain." We give the letter for the reason that the brother is an "elder in the field," who may have met a species of carping criticism either based in disbelief or a spirit of inquiry which asks questions without relevancy, and which the questioner knows no one can answer, or if answered the knowledge obtained from the answers given could not "profit the hearer withal."

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH.

Independence, Missouri.

Dear brother in Christ: Will you please write a concise explanation of your meaning in the following statement of yours in your account, according to your belief, of the "strange development" of a belief in, and practice of, polygamy by those who were associated with your father "during the later years of" his life:

"That my father may have been a party to the 'first step' in this strange development, I am perhaps prepared to admit, but that he was in any other wise responsible for plural marriage, plurality of wives, or polygamy, I do not know, nor are the evidences so far produced to me conclusive to force my belief."—Life of Joseph the Prophet.—Tullige, p. 800.

This is used, by opponents of the work, as an admission that your father was responsible for the introduction of polygamy, or so I have heard it once used in public debate.

An explanation of what you mean by "the first step" would be appreciated by me, and I believe it would be helpful to many, so if you think well, let us have it in the HERALD, if not, a reply to me personally will be highly appreciated.

Yours in bonds,

T. C. KELLEY.

BERRYDALE, Florida, December 21, 1906.

"I believe that in the later years of my father's life there was in discussion among the elders, and possibly in practice, a theory like the following: that persons who might believe that there was a sufficient degree of spiritual affinity between them as married companions, to warrant the desire to perpetuate that union in the world to come and after the resurrection, could go before some high priest, whom they might choose, and there making known their desire, might be "married for eternity," pledging themselves while in the flesh unto each other for the observance of the rights of companionship in the spirit; that this was called spiritual marriage, and upon the supposition that what was sealed by this priesthood, before which this pledge was made on earth, was sealed in heaven, the marriage relation then entered into would continue in eternity. That this was not authorized by command of God, or rule of the church, but grew out of the constant discussion had among the elders; and that after a time it resulted in the wish (father to the thought) that married companionship rendered unpleasant here by incompatibilities of different sorts, might be cured for the world to come, by securing through this means a congenial companion in the spirit; that there was but brief hesitancy between the wish and an attempt to put it into form and practice. That once started, the idea grew, spiritual affinities were sought after, and in seeking them the hitherto sacred precincts of home were invaded; less and less restraint was exercised, the lines between virtue and license, hitherto sharply drawn, grew more and more indistinct; spiritual companionship if sanctioned by a holy priesthood, to confer favors and pleasures in the world to come, might be enacted and put to actual test here—and so the enjoyment of a spiritual companionship in eternity became a companionship here; a wife a spiritual wife, if congenial; if not, one that was congenial was sought, and a wife in fact was supplemented by one in spirit, which in easy transition became one in essential earthly relationship. From this; if one, why not two, or more, and plural marriage, or the plurality of wives was the growth. That so soon as the Prophet discovered that this must inevitably be the result of the marriage for eternity between married companions, which for a time was perhaps looked upon as a harmless enlargement upon the priesthood theory, and rather intended to glorify them in doing business for eternity and the heavens, he set about correcting it. But the evil had, unnoted by him, taken root, and it was too late. What had been possibly innocently spiritual became fleshly, sensual—devilish. He was taken away. The long train of circumstances burst upon the people. He and Hyrum placed themselves in the front of the impending storm and went down to death. That which in life they were powerless to prevent, rapidly took the successive forms heretofore stated, and polygamy after eight years of further fostering in secret, rose in terrible malignity to essay the destruction of the church. That my father may have been a party to the first step in this strange development, I am perhaps prepared to admit, though the evidence connecting him with it is vague and uncertain; but that he was in any otherwise responsible for plural marriage, plurality of wives, or polygamy, I do not know, nor are the evidences so far produced to me conclusive to force my belief.”

In what is set forth above I have given as fully, as briefly, and as plainly as I was able to do at the time the statement was written which I am now asked to explain, a mere fragment having relation to what had gone before it, as a basis on which to base that statement.

The first step, on which stress is laid, and to which I referred, was the talked-up theory among some of the elders that a man and his wife, being happily married and living in harmony with each other, if they wished that their married life should continue after death and in the resurrection, might go before a high priest and there covenant to be each other's companion, husband and wife respectively; this was called sealing, and the wife became a “spiritual wife.”

None of those who claimed to know all about my father being the responsible author of polygamy as practiced in Utah ever stated to me that he taught them this, that I now recollect. Some few stated that Hyrum Smith, my father's brother, was the one who taught it to them. Elder Howard G. Corey, a school-teacher in Nauvoo in the lifetime of my father, and to whom I went to school, stated to me at the home of a Bro. Gammon, in Provo, Utah, in the presence of Elder R. J. Anthony, of the Reorganized Church, Bro. Gammon, and a nephew of Judge Dusenbury, a resident of Provo, who came with Elder Corey to be present at the interview, that he was taught this phase of the sealing theory by the prophet's brother Hyrum, and that he and his wife were so joined in this spiritual contract before Hyrum Smith, he officiating in the ceremony. This act of sealing was not done in the “temple” at Nauvoo, nor in the “Masonic Lodge Room”; nor in the “Old Brick Store”; but was performed on Main Street, about a block and a half up the street from the Mansion House in which the prophet Joseph lived, Uncle Hyrum Smith standing on the sidewalk and Corey and his wife standing up in a buggy in which they were taking a ride. It was Hyrum, not Joseph who taught him, it was Hyrum who performed the sealing ceremony. These men Corey and Dusenbury were of the Mormon, or Utah church. There was another member of the Mormon church present, a counselor to the bishop of his ward, whose name does not matter now, and might embarrass him if known.

When questioned in regard to the scope of this theory, Elder Corey stated that it was not taught publicly, but privately; that it was intended for those already married and not for any others; he knew of one other couple and they old married people who were thus sealed to each other for eternity; it was not intended for nor as a marriage ceremony for time between those desiring to be married; nor was it for the purpose of marrying other women to a man already a married man having a wife living; no such thing was contemplated, or talked of, or known, or practiced, to his knowledge before the prophet Joseph's death.

Two other men made similar statements to me; one, Uncle William Smith, who stated what the theory was, but could not tell from whom he heard it definitely. He was certain, however, that he did not get it from his brother Joseph. The other man was David Seeley, living at the time he had the chat with me at San Bernardino, California; and of whom it had been stated to me by more than one that he could tell me all about it; and that when I should see him, I would no longer be able to say that nobody had ever told me that my father did have more wives than my mother. I saw this man in San Bernardino, and had quite a long talk with him. He stated that he became satisfied that there was something of the sort, a kind of sealing between husbands and their wives for eternity; he could not give me names, day, nor date of any single transaction. He thought that father must have known of it, but had never heard anything of it from father, in teaching or practice; it was not taught publicly, nor preached from the stand as a church tenet; but was just talked of by some, whispered around like, as you know such things will be. He did not, and could not locate it with father at any time or place. At the close of a conversation lasting an hour and a half he straightened himself up, and with a sigh said, "I wish I did know."

Here was the opportunity I had sought, and this was the result. The one who could tell me "all about it" could tell me nothing positive and definite, by which I could implicate Joseph the Martyr, "with even this first step" in the "strange development" resulting in polygamy or plural marriage; and when he had told me all he knew, he involuntarily gave the fact of his ignorance away by a deep-drawn sigh of conscious incertitude and the expression, wrung from his long-continued and long-repressed desire for knowledge, "I wish I did know." I sought for information whence I had been frequently told that I could obtain it and I failed, not because the man was not willing to tell me, the son of the prophet, what he knew about the prophet father's connection with this strange theory, but because he did not know, but wished that he did.

This will suffice to show the sort of evidence with which our opposition to polygamy, or plural marriage, has been met by those who have claimed that Joseph Smith was the responsible author of that dogma and practice. This kind of evidence "is vague and uncertain," and I may safely add, unsatisfactory. It was the consideration of this sort of evidence that caused me to write, as quoted by Elder Kelley, "that my father may have been a party to the first step in this strange development, I am perhaps prepared to admit."

privilege of examining the witnesses who testify, and weighing the evidence presented, as a lawyer might do for the purpose of testing the witnesses and verifying the evidence, I might be convinced in such a way as to admit without further dispute what would be thus proved. The reasons herein given are those upon which I then wrote "that my father may have been a party to this first step." I did not know then that he was. I do not know now that he was. I have no personal knowledge that he was in any way whatever responsible for the introduction of polygamy into the beliefs of the Latter Day Saints of any shade of Mormonism, so called, and the proofs to compel my belief that he was, are not forthcoming. In the language of Attorney Parley P. Kelley, who was the counsel for the Reorganized Church in the Temple Lot suit, and who conducted the cross examination of the witnesses put on the stand before the Commissioner who took the evidence of the witnesses in Salt Lake City, "If your father had anything to do with polygamy they can not prove it."

It seems to me that the statement was plain enough before, but if this explanation will serve to make my position any plainer to the elders who may have to meet those who cavil over it, I will be satisfied that the inquiry was made. I do not agree with Talleyrand that "language was invented to enable men to conceal their thoughts," but was given of God to enable men to come to a "unity of the faith," and the "watchmen on the walls of Zion to see eye to eye"; and for this result I write, with the prayer in my heart that we may understand.

SEEKING TO KNOW.

Many times when a member of a family is sick, other relatives are very anxious to know whether the one sick will recover, or is destined to die. The elder or elders who are called to administer to the one who is sick, sometimes share in the anxiety of the family or friends, and in their prayers importune the Lord to reveal to the anxious, waiting friends whether the sickness is unto death, or will the sick recover. And sometimes the elders go farther than this and ask for the revelation of the cause or causes why the sick one is afflicted, and the faith of the friends and relatives so peculiarly tried.

Our early experiences in administering to the sick, in the church and out of it, for we were frequently called to attend those who were not members, all went to discourage this peculiar species of inquiry, and the after occurrences to which we have been a witness or have been made acquainted with upon the testimony of others, have also confirmed those early experiences. Our experience even at our earliest acquaintance with the exercise of the power of God in the healing of the sick went to show that, more frequently than otherwise, the continued importuning of the friends and elders for a witness as to whether the sick would recover or not, was followed by bad results. Sometimes, prophecies were delivered respecting the recovery of the sick person which were not realized; and immediately speculation would begin as to who was in fault, the friends, the sick one, or the elders; and grave questioning would take place as to the source whence the prophecy came; and unfortunate loss of faith would seem to be inevitable. We reached a conclusion at that time that it was no part of the duty of the officers administering to the sick to ask the Lord for a manifestation as to the recovery of the sick one, or his departure from this life. Our subsequent experiences and our observation have confirmed us in the conclusion reached at that time, and subsequent events have clearly gone to show us that what sometimes followed then has continued to follow; more dissatisfaction than blessing has resulted from the importuning prayers referred to.

It may be said that "the Lord need not answer such prayers, unless he sees fit to do so." This is true, but the better reasoning clearly is, that as the Lord is the one whose power is exercised every time any one is healed who is administered to, it is also through his wisdom that the power is given unto healing or withheld leaving the patient to live or die without divine intervention, the Lord must be left to exercise both wisdom and power as he deems best; and, he also should be trusted to exercise the same wisdom as to the giving of testimony for or against, as in his judgment is best; and if it is wiser for the friends of the sick to be informed as to the prospect of death, or the promise of recovery, as would be best for the friends and the sick one, he best knows.

We have in times past tried to tell the elders what we conceived to be the true, or the better way to proceed in cases of administration, but fear to an extent that the advice and argument were either premature, or have not been appreciated. We fully believe now as we have for these many years that the office of the eldership is best conserved by the simplest form of administration compatible with the conditions surrounding each case to which they may be called; but that in no case are they justified in importuning the Lord for a promise of recovery, or a manifestation of the Spirit foreboding the death of the person administered to. Death usually comes as an unexpected visitor in any event; and is ever unwelcomed in the great majority of instances; why should a loving Lord be importuned to precipitate the sorrows of suffering kindred and friends by a forecasting of impending death? Why should not men and women who have faith enough to ask for the rite of divine unction, be also willing to trust their sick in his hands without importuning a wise Lord to give them a promise that he would heal the particular individual in whom their solicitude is centered?

The supposition is an absolutely fair one, that if the Lord whose power is invoked for the healing of the sick, and whose wisdom is to be exercised in the sending or withholding that power, knew that it was necessary for the father, mother, sister, or brother, a friend, or the elders administering, to know what the result of the administration would be, he would be sure to give such evidence of that fact as would be amply sufficient to give the desired knowledge. In cases that have come under our observation assurance that the prayers had been heard and the sick should recover, without the previous importunity of prayer for such evidence being offered, has been given. And we have also witnessed many cases where testimony was asked for and none was received. We also have seen cases where testimony was persistently sought and even demanded, in which a manifestation has been given promising full recovery, and in which death followed close upon the cessation of the prayer. We have frequently been asked why this was suffered to occur. Our only answer has been, that we did not know. The only conjecture that looked feasible to us was that the importunity of the elders and friends gave rise to a species of enthusiasm, easily mistaken for the Spirit's influence, and under this influence the strong wish for the recovery of the sufferer took on the form of a prophecy. We are not ready to accept the thought, advanced by some, that the adversary of souls being on the watch to catch the Saints unawares takes advantage of the conditions of such a case and sends an evil spirit to deceive, and thereby destroy the faith of some in the elders and the ordinance alike.

When the elders are sent for to administer to the sick, they should go, if it is practicable; they should administer in faith nothing doubting; anointing with oil and laying on of hands; they should earnestly pray, and so far as in them lies do all that is possible to make the administration acceptable to the Lord; but we can not see that it is any part of their duty to seek for a sign. It lies with God to exercise the power and send relief; he can be trusted to do this without answering to prayer that the patient will either recover, or is appointed unto death. Over-anxiety on the part of friends, including the elders, produces a condition in which it is possible for some one to be misled to the injury of the parties to the incident and to bring a reproach upon the faith. This should be avoided, and the surest way is to submit the sick member to the tender mercy of the Lord in prayer, and then leave him in the hands of God without asking a pledge for recovery, or a warning to die. It is no part of a consistent ceremony to insist in prayer that the Lord shall give a sign that he will hear and answer according to the anxious desires of those who are interested in the sick one receiving administration.

It may be inquired, Have not the elders and Saints a right to pray for what they feel they want? To this we must answer, No, not always nor of necessity. No man should pray for that which his judgment assures him he is better off without. No man should ask God to do what his wisdom teaches him would be to his disadvantage in a spiritual sense. No man should pray for God to do what his own wisdom teaches him God would not be acting wisely to grant. We put nothing beyond the power of God. He is able to accomplish whatever it may please him to do. Notwithstanding the fact that God can do anything he chooses to do, we are quite confident there are a number of things he will not do, for the reason that it would not be wise to do them. We believe that very many of the cases in which administration is had, and prayers offered that there might be a revelation of the will of the Lord, are not successful, so far as the revelation is concerned, for this very reason; that the prayers asking for a sign in regard to the fate of the sick one are not consistent with the mind and will of the Lord; it would not be wise for him to so grant and answer the prayer. The prayers are not answered because they are prayers "asking amiss."

We write thus because we have been at times requested to ask of the Lord to reveal why certain loved ones are so seriously afflicted. If he would but reveal what the reason was the difficulty might be removed; and if he would but show if they would recover, so that the anxious ones might be relieved of their anxiety; and if it was his will that the dear ones were to be taken away, then these anxious and sorrowing friends would be prepared to submit to that will and be reconciled to their loss. We can not comply with these requests with consistency believing as we do, and as we have presented in this writing; that it is not a part of the administration service to pray for a revelation from the Lord giving assurance of recovery or admonishing of approaching death; it might be equally out of place for us to seek to know what the Lord reserves within the secrets of his own will and wisdom.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

The branch at Philadelphia, Walter W. Smith pastor, is conducting a vigorous revival, beginning with the dedication of the church on Sunday, the 27th. The preaching-meetings, however, are held in the Odd Fellows' Temple. The Philadelphia Enquirer for January 21 contains a three-column write-up of the campaign, illustrated with pictures of the local church, of President Smith, of Joseph the Martyr, of Walter W. Smith, of the characters sent Professor Anthon, and of Sr. W. N. Robinson who is to sing at the meetings. Joseph Smith and F. M. Smith of the Presidency, Apostles F. M. Sheehy and J. W. Rushton, and Bishop E. L. Kelley are named as speakers. We trust that these meetings may be very successful and that they may be a type of many more broad-gauged efforts to give our faith publicity.

One of the most important articles to appear in the church periodicals for some time will be Bishop Kelley's article on equality, February Autumn Leaves; it is written for the young people but it will interest all. An illustration of extraordinary interest in the same number will be a picture of the "Wailing-Place of the Jews," taken by Paul Hanson.

The amount subscribed for the rebuilding of the HERALD office is now $16,237.50.

A Response.

[Published by request.]

TUNE.—"Let us pray for one another."

Yes, we'll pray for one another,
With united hearts we'll bow,
For we know our Savior's waiting;
He is listening to us now.
Yes, he loves his children dearer,
And his blessings can not stay
When in faith we all draw nearer—
For each other let us pray.

Yes, we'll pray for one another,
When the foe grows strong and bold,
When the weak are faint, and falter,
Trying hearts of purest gold;
When destruction is around us,
Sword and famine have their sway,
When the wicked rage against us,
For each other let us pray.

Yes, we'll pray for one another,
When the clouds look dark and drear,
When the sun dispels all sadness,
When the moon shines bright and clear;
And when Zion's land will glitter
With a holier, brighter ray—
That we live in love together,
For each other let us pray.

When the powers of heaven are shaken,
Lakes and rivers cease to flow,
When the pure and just shall waken,
And the earth in beauty grow;
That with robes which never fade—
Brighter far than King's array—
We may mingle with the ransomed,
For each other we will pray.

AN APOSTASY: OR HAS THE CHURCH REMAINED ON THE EARTH.

Has there been an apostasy since the days of Pentecost? Some say, "Yes," Some say, "No," and some say, "I do not know."

Apostasy is to turn from the truth. The effect to each individual who abides not in the truth, but turns from it, is the same as if the truth had no existence,—the same as if Christ had not been.

Jesus Christ came to instruct mankind upon those things most essential to the building up of the kingdom of God on the earth, and to inform them of future events as seemed to him necessary. One of the important future events was that the kingdom of heaven would be taken forceful possession of by violence. He said, "From the days of John the Baptist, until now, the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."—Math. 11:12. The spirit of violence with which John had been opposed would take the kingdom of heaven out of the hands of God's servants, either by destroying their lives or corrupting them so that they would have no right to represent God. It was at the time of this prophecy being represented by Jesus Christ and his chosen ministers under God, and in their possession, but the change predicted for the kingdom of God was that forceful possession would be taken of it by those who are here called "the violent."

When this would occur the world would be in as bad a condition as if the kingdom of God had never existed upon the earth, and the apostasy would be complete, none existing on the earth holding the right to represent God or his government, neither could such authority exist except it was reconferred.

That class of religionists who believe contrary to this prophecy of Jesus, do so largely because of an erroneous conception of the Scripture, "And I say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Math. 16:18. By this same class it is understood and advocated that hell is a place as well as a condition, and in this view they were correct. The "gates of hell" would be the place of entrance. These would be closed against the entrance of an enemy. The Christ came to destroy the works of the devil (see 1 John 3:8), hence the gates of hell would be closed against him and his work so long as it could be. But this statement gives us clearly to understand that "the gates" of that condition or place could not continuously prevail against the power of the Christ, and that the time would come when he would enter. Peter testifies that he did enter and

"preached to the spirits in prison." (1 Pet. 3:19.) Paul agrees with Peter when he says that, "When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto his men. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth?)." (Eph. 4:8,9.) And with these two apostles agrees the testimony of John who says that the Christ-work has entered into hell so that he has "the keys of death and hell." (Rev. 1:18), and they should be so used that in the second resurrection both "death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them." (Rev. 20:13.) It is thus proved that the gates of hell could not nor did not prevail against the power by which or upon which Jesus Christ built his church, or the power through which Peter received the knowledge that Jesus was "the Christ the Son of the living God"; but all this does not contradict the prophecy that the kingdom of heaven or church would be taken control of by those who were opposing God's work on earth, and for a time would control, as foretold in Rev. 12:1-6, after which the government professing to be the church, now under the control of those moved by the spirit of violence, would be changed as represented by another woman who had made "war with the Lamb," and was "drunken with the blood of the saints," but the Lamb would finally overcome, "for he is Lord of Lords." (Rev. 17:1-18.)

There will be a restoring of the kingdom of God on the earth previous to the fall of Babylon, and the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory to reap the earth. (See Rev. 14:6-15.)

"WHO THEN CAN BE SAVED?"—MATTHEW 19:25.

"With men this is impossible; but with God all things are possible." So said Jesus in reply to this question of the apostles, who thus expressed their surprise when the Savior told them how hard it was for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of heaven; and they learned from the experience of the rich young man that righteousness arising from a literal obedience to the law of Moses could not save him or make him perfect.

"With men this is impossible; but with God all things are possible." In other words men can not perfect a plan of salvation; but our heavenly Father can and has Let Paul start the answer to the question for us. In Rom. 10:13-15 he says: "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent?" We learn from this, then, that God in his plan of salation has provided a way by which man can hear the gospel,—by sending a preacher.

In the first chapter of John we read that "there was a man sent from God, whose name was John." Many seem to think from the reading of this that he was about the only man God ever sent; but if we turn to the last of Mark, we find there eleven other sent when the Savior commanded them: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," or the last of Matthew when he said: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations. . . . Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Now it is very reasonable to suppose that these men who were thus commissioned and sent would teach the things of God; or in other words, would answer their own question to the master, "Who then can be saved?" For as John the Baptist said: "For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the spirit by measure unto him."—John 3:34. This spirit was to guide them into all truth. (See John 16:15.)

Now I like a logical gospel, a consistent gospel, a rational gospel. While it may be and is necessary to exercise faith on our part, God has designed to give us something to create faith in us, namely: preaching by one sent. We can not believe in anything of which we know nothing, hence our heavenly Father has commissioned men to proclaim his word—sent them to teach the way of salvation.

Let us now examine the way pointed out to us by those who walked and talked with Jesus in Galilee, in Judea, those to whom he said, "And ye also shall bear witness because ye have been with me from the beginning."—John 15:27. Let us see what was the word they preached, the witness they bore, and also the results, regardless of any personal feeling in the matter, regardless of any opinions of man, even regardless of any private opinion of our own; for he who stands to represent Christ and his doctrine must not present anything contrary to the written word that has been given to us by the spirit of revelation. He may illustrate it by anecdotes (Christ often spoke in parables when the truths he desired to express could be more firmly implanted in the mind that way), but if he deviates from the message he is sent to bear, he is not representing the one who has sent him.

The disciples asked, "Who then can be saved?" thinking at the time they asked the question that the requirements must be very hard to meet. A few short years afterward we find them gathered at Jerusalem, on the day of Pentecost, and we read in the second chapter of Acts the first gospel sermon delivered after the rising of the slain Savior. Peter preached Christ, telling the Jews that this Jesus whom they slew had risen from the dead, proving by the scripture that he was the very Messiah that had been so long looked for. And what was the result? Why they were pricked in their hearts and said, "Men and brethren what shall we do?"

Listen to the answer, short and to the point: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

Let us analyze this a little. We have here a preacher sent by Christ, commissioned to represent him, to speak for him, and what do we find? First, that he preached the word, bore witness of Christ. Next, that through this preaching faith came to the hearers, "They were pricked in their hearts," and desired to know what to do. Then comes the command to repent, to be baptized; and then the promise of the Holy Spirit that should also bear witness to them of Christ and his gospel. (See John 15:26.)

Again we read of great persecution of the followers of Christ at Jerusalem, and how they were scattered abroad by it, and went everywhere preaching the word; how Philip went down to Samaria and preached Christ unto the Samaritans; and Luke records in Acts 8:12: "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." Here we have the same thing before us, the word preached with the same effect. They believed, had faith, were baptized in the name of Jesus Christ. And this was not all, for as we read on we find that "When the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John; who, when they came down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost. . . . then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." Another principle here mentioned, namely, laying on of hands.

Again take the case of that very devout Roman who was so righteous that God recognized him by giving him a vision, in which an angel appeared to him, telling him that his prayers and alms had come up as a memorial before God, and also telling him to send for one Simon Peter, who would tell him what he ought to do. Notice this: the angel did not preach the gospel to him, did not instruct him in the way of salvation. Christ had called and sent men to do this, had given men authority to act for him, to speak in his name, to initiate members into his kingdom. So we next find Peter down in Caesarea preaching Christ to this devout centurion, and the result while he was yet speaking the Holy Ghost fell on them, and then we hear him command them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. We might also notice the plan followed by the apostle Paul at Ephesus, where we find the same plan followed—Paul who certifies to the Galatian saints that the gospel he preached was not after man, but that he had received it by the revelation of Jesus Christ.

The logical line of reasoning as outlined in the foregoing then is simply this: That the gospel must be preached by one having authority to represent Christ; that the design of this preaching is to create faith in God, faith in Christ, faith in the gospel, and in God's power to save. Then with this faith cometh the desire to do the things that will lead us to salvation. Those of old taught that we must then repent and be baptized. Paul in Romans 6:4 says: "Therefore, we are buried with him by baptism into death," etc. Not only making this form a symbol of the death and burial of Jesus, as we are buried under the water, and a symbol of his resurrection, as we come up out of the water, but it is also significant of our death and burial to the world and the sins of the world, and then we have risen to walk in newness of life, forsaking those things that would hinder our progress toward a life with Christ Jesus. And then comes the laying on of hands, that as we have received the baptism of water, so also we might receive the baptism or gift of the Holy Ghost. Is this all? No, just the beginning. This is necessary, because we must start right, if we desire to end right, for "there is no other name given under heaven or among men by which we can be saved." "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today, and forever." God is unchangeable, and just what it required to save a man nineteen hundred years ago it requires now. Therefore, after we have obeyed these first principles of the gospel, let us follow Paul's advice given in the sixth chapter of Hebrews, "Let us go on to perfection." How Paul? Why, by "adding to our faith virtue, to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity." Charity has been well defined as the true love of Christ.

Who then can be saved? Those who obey the gospel. Those who keep the commandments. Those who do all that is required of them by Christ. The young man could, had he not thought more of his earthly possessions than he did of the Savior. Not by any means man could provide, but by the plan

God has formed; for "With God all things are possible."

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

The HERALD is a welcome visitor of our home each week therefore it was with a great feeling of sadness we received the news, "the HERALD is home-LESS."

This morning as my thoughts were dwelling upon the gospel and its progress. I concluded to pen a few lines to your pages; and I asked God's blessing upon the words written, that they may be of good to some one.

Am I my brother's keeper? Although those words were uttered many centuries ago still may they not be brought up and rehearsed for our profit and learning today?

In the first place what is it to be our brother's keeper? Is it not to stand in the position of God and know the intents of the heart, to be able to say, I am my brother's keeper; and yet how many will judge a brother's actions, not knowing the heart that prompts the action.

Of-times we hear the words, "Well I don't think I shall pay anything until I see where it is going. I don't want my hard earnings to go to keep up the extravagance of missionaries' families, nor to support those able to work."

"Extravagance of missionaries families, and supporting those able to work! Oh my brother or sister, whoever you may be uttering those words, stop just one moment and consider. Even if there may be a few unworthy, should we withhold from the worthy? The wheat and tares must grow together until the harvest.

Am I my brother's keeper? Do I know who is worthy, or who is not? It is with them and God if they do not do right with the Lord's money.

First let us consider: Are we not all one body laboring together for the work of the Lord? Must it be only the poor missionary who shall make the sacrifice? No, indeed! If the missionary were not laboring in the field of the gospel, he might be laboring for the means with which to supply his family with all the extravagance(?) they desire without having to depend on the tithes individuals may deem wise to send.

The missionary and his wife are human beings. They want to see their children educated, and brought up in a civilized manner. The wife, too may want a modern-style hat or new dress in keeping with the community where she lives.

I was not brought up a missionary's daughter, neither am I a missionary's wife; but I believe in looking at both sides of the question. We have no right to judge hastily as to who is extravagant or able to work, and who is not. Our duty is to look at ourselves, first. What are we sacrificing for the spread of this glorious gospel? Are we sacrificing the companionship of husband or father? No. As lay members we are sacrificing only a few penny dollars. Then if we are all of the body, and part refuses to do its work, is the body not crippled?

It is the duty of the lay members to send in their tithes and offerings, and unless we do we are robbing God; for he has so spoken it in his written word.

If all we have to tithe is a dollar, we should not withhold the ten cents thinking we are aiding some one of more means or ability. Let us first stop and say: "Am I my brother's keeper? God has commanded me to pay my tithing, and what am I that I can withstand God. I will do my duty though all the whole world should fail."

If we could all be more watchful and more prayerful, and remove the beams from our own eyes, then our vision would be so much clearer; and notes, if there be any in our brothers' eyes be not nearly so annoying. A. M. S.

HOW WE MAY PREPARE THE WAY BEFORE US.

It is evident that the Lord was speaking to the Saints in a collective sense when he told them to have all things prepared before them. If we will examine the revelation in the Doctrine and the Covenants on the subject of the gathering, we will see that they can be understood in no other way. If this is true, then our preparation must be made collectively, and as God's house is a house of order, we should do things in an orderly manner. And this we can not do without organizations. Then let us organize ourselves, and put ourselves in condition to do something, and no longer waste our time and energy as we are doing now by everyone trying to make this preparation in his own way, and without any knowledge of how the poor are going to be cared for.

We all of us know that there is no one of us who can carry this burden alone, and since we must help each other in this great work, let us go at it in an intelligent manner, having some system whereby the effort of every one of us will become effective. In our present condition we are wasting much of our substance that might be saved to the church; for the profit on nearly everything we consume goes to enrich others. This is a leak that could and should be stopped; and this can be done by the Saints organizing themselves into co-operative associations, having their own stores, mills, factories, etc. And it is the only way that we will ever be able to successfully care for the poor; for it is the Lord's plan. But there will have to be some consecrating done to put all this machinery in motion; as the money put up will have to be consecrated to the Lord, for there will be no dividends coming back as there is after the present system of doing business, but the profits will all go into a fund to be known as Zion's redemption fund, to which all will have an equal right, according as they may need.

The managers and contributors will be expected to make the same sacrifice as our brethren of the missionaries are making; for we are all co-workers together with God. Why should we expect the missionary's family to do with any less of this world's good than we are anxious our own families should have.

In my estimation of this great plan of the Lord's, I fail to find where he has granted any special privileges to any one; but all are expected to do their utmost according to their calling. The missionary dedicates himself and family, if he has one, to the Lord, whom he serves. The wife denies herself the companionship of her husband and very many of the comforts of this life in order that her husband may be kept in the missionary field. Now if the Lord requires all this sacrifice from the missionary and his family, does he require any less from the rest of the laborers in his vineyard? For mind you, we are all, as I said before, laborers and co-workers together with God.

I have heard some who are considered very good Latter Day Saints say, I could not live on what the missionary's family has to live on. Well then if the missionary's family does not get enough to live on comfortably, whose business is it to see that they do have enough? Is it not the other laborers in the vineyard, who are the producers of the necessities of life? This is the work the master has allotted to them, to see that his storehouse is full, and contains abundance for all. I have no right to buy a sealskin coat for my wife, while the missionary's wife has to wear an old, faded, woolen one. I have no right to sit down to a table supplied with all the good things that the market affords, until my brother missionary's family can have the same things. You may ask, Why? Well I will tell you why. Because we are all of one family, God being our father; and being even more perfect than an earthly father he intends that all his children shall fare the same.

Now when we can come to look at it in this light, then we will be in a condition to become united according to God's law which he calls his celestial law.

In Doctrine and Covenants, section 102, paragraph 2, we find this: "Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer."

Now we see it is just as I have been trying to make plain, that this preparation must be made by the church in a united way, or organized according to the plan required by the law of the celestial kingdom. I think I hear some one say, How can I contribute anything for the support of the poor? It takes all that I can make to keep the wolf from my door. Just let me tell you how you can do something that it will not cost you any extra effort more than you are making now. You must buy everything you use now. Just do as I have outlined above, get in and help us to organize those co-operative associations, and purchase everything from your own store, instead of from strangers, as you do now. There may be some who will laugh at my idea; but before they do much laughing, let them present some better plan, then I will be ready to laugh with them.

HILL'S FIVE-DOLLAR SLAVES.

In one of the Wall Street circulars which drift down upon the editorial table—the circular of Dow, Jones & Co., of December 19, 1906—we find a significant estimate, by financiers and not by cranks, with reference to the iron ore deposits which the steel trust has leased from James J. Hill. According to this estimate the royalties in 50 years will amount to $1,190,000,000. This sum is equal to the earnings of one man, at the extraordinary high wages of $5 a day, for about 800,000 years. Or, if that amount of labor be calculated for 50 years, it represents the annual work for half a century of 16,000 men. In other words, the royalty that Mr. Hill (or his representatives) is to get for 50 years to come, on the basis of this one transaction will be equal, year by year, to the total earnings of an army of 16,000 five-dollar-a-day workers. . . . For the earnings of a labor force equal to 16,000 men yearly for 50 years. Mr. Hill gives nothing but permission to utilize natural bounties, and in the last analysis that is nothing; for those bounties would be just as useful if he and his assignors had never lived. What, then, is the essential meaning of the fact that in this way he commands a labor force equal to 16,000 five-dollar-a-day men for fifty years? Simply that he owns 16,000 slaves whose labor he can sell for $5 a day. That no particular five-dollar-a-day man is his slave makes no difference. That he does not personally know his slaves nor they their master, makes no difference. The essence of it all is that he commands that much labor force without returning an equivalent in labor force of his own. The totality of labor force loses some of its product if any of its product is diverted from the earners. And if this is true of Mr. Hill's ore mine instance, it is true in greater or less degrees of every instance in which some men receive products for allowing labor to utilize natural advantages or the industrial advantages that monopoly of natural advantages commands. Aggregate these instances and instead of slavery to the extent of 16,000 five-dollar-a-day men, we have a demonstration of slavery to the extent probably of many millions of men.—The Public, January 19, 1907.

LAWSON AND KNISLEY IN DEBATE.

[The following is especially interesting since it was evidently written by a Phoenix reporter, not prejudiced in favor of either side.]

The debate last evening at the Saskatoon hall, between Rev. S. G. Lawson, Presbyterian, and Elder Alvin Knisley, Latter Day Saint, was immensely exciting for those who enjoy violent and virulent theological disputations. Both speakers seemed in lively fighting moods and the discussion was not allowed to drop for a moment. The whole evening's argument was based upon the Latter Day Saint article of faith, "we believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, interpretation of tongues, etc." The Latter Day Saint attempted to show that miraculous events are still an element of religious life, while his opponent, with might and main, insisted that all supernatural demonstrations ceased long ago, that nothing would make him believe differently but the actual performance of a miracle before his eyes by this mighty elder. "If he can work wonders," said this upholder of the orthodox religion, "let him put his hand to the flame and not be burned, or let him make this dead mouse jump out of my pocket, or let him drink this vial of poison and not be killed." The timepiece put an end to this form of conjuration, and the second speaker took the floor.

There was nothing either marvelous, or demoniacal about his appearance, except a phosphorescent light which played about his lips as he talked, and which to one's disappointment was afterwards found attributable to natural causes. Stating that he had not been the challenger, and that he was only there to defend his church from attacks, Mr. Knisley added that he was pleased to have the chance of publicly making known something of the Latter Day Saint doctrine, and that since there were only a handful of his people in Saskatchewan, and probably not two of them in the audience, he should appeal to the intellectuality rather than the sympathy of his listeners. All consented that he should stand on the merits of his arguments, and he proceeded to put a damper on the man who had asked for a miracle from him. "He asks that I perform a miracle, for instance that if a devil is in him I ought to cast it out. Well, friends, nothing restrains me but my strong conviction that if I cast out all the devil from him nothing would be left to return to his wife but his boots!" And while the storm of applause raged, the mischievous gleams were flitting about the debater's lips.

Then he continued more seriously. If my friend across the platform is a Christian, why does he speak so disparagingly of miracles when they are divinely instituted? As for his demand that I make a display here and now I might reply, a wicked and adulterous generation seek after these signs. As for my restoring a dead mouse, or a dead man, let him recall the man who was in torment looking up to Abraham, and asking that some one be sent to warn his friends. He was told, they have Moses and the prophets, let them hear them, neither would they be persuaded though one rose from the dead.

The speaker continued by claiming his opponent inconsistent with biblical principles in wanting miracles on which to found his faith, when in olden times faith of necessity preceded miracles. Besides, in 1 Cor. 12, miracles are only one out of a dozen spiritual gifts, or manifestations of the Spirit. All of these powers, Paul said, were to continue in the Christian church, till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. Then he talked of Noah being shown his duties by divine revelation, and of Moses bearing the phenomenon of the voice from the burning bush as he watched Jethro's flocks. He would have heaped up instances of personal revelation all down through Judges and Kings, but for the inexorable clock.

Then Mr. Lawson arose again in all the venerable dignity of white neckcloth, shining spectacles, and what Mark Twain calls balditude of head. This time he was intensely wrathful, for the remark about being cast out all but boots was still stinging. He started in to prove that miracles are discontinued because miracles are no longer needed, and, expanding his chest, look at the stature we have attained; the church is no longer made up of babes. Then he quoted 1 Corinthians 14:22: "Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not," and asked why the Saint did not show the miracle then and there, for he considered the people present unbelievers.

Mr. Knisley's other points were disposed of by a flat denial accompanied by an ominous shaking of the fist. As for Moses and the prophets, it simply means that we need no more but them; we don't need revelations from Joseph Smith, and Alvin Knisley, and Brigham Young. Then the excited gentleman read extracts from the Book of Mormon and from a Latter Day Saint pamphlet and spoke of Aaron's rod that budded, and more vehemently than ever called for one or two miracles with a promise to prostrate himself before the performer, and with another reference to the dastardliness of a speaker who would call a man all devil down to his boots, he was done.

And so the dispute grew complicated. At one point in Mr. Knisley's talk his opponent called time, the speaker turned to the chair but it was vacant, and while the speakers grew clamorous for right of way on the floor, the audience were boisterously demanding a chairman. Silence was restored by the older speaker apologizing for have interrupted before the twenty minutes of his rival were up.

This toothsome bone of contention, miracles or no miracles, was picked at most relishly, till nothing of it remained, and the orthodox minister came back to his bottles of poison—enough to kill an elephant or a whale—and seemed as if he couldn't give up the idea of having his rival take it; and he felt again in his pocket to see if the mouse were yet becoming enlivened and playful.

There are still twelve Latter Day Saint articles of faith remaining to be threshed out.—The Daily Phoenix, Sackatoon, Canada, January 16, 1907.

One of the opening remarks which Mr. Lawson made last night on resuming the debate in Sackatoon hall was, "If last night was hot for my friends, tonight shall be hotter still, and tomorrow night the hottest of all." A still greater crowd was present than on the first night. It was a more serious, thoughtful crowd, too—with a greater sprinkling of the town's coonskin-coated men. The speakers went at debating with extreme delight, and there was no suggestion of a let-up. In fact, the younger combatant pledged himself to stay till spring if bread and butter were furnished him, and if his opponent did not admit himself vanquished before then.

The discussion last night was confined pretty closely to statements found in the Book of Mormon, and because that book is dear to the heart of every Latter Day Saint, its defense was quite as masterly as its attack was bitter. Mr. Lawson's first stand was that the Book of Mormon was contradictory to the Bible, and even at variance with itself, proving it fraudulent on the face of it; that it represents Christ coming down seven different times after the crucifixion to the Indians on the American continent; that it has the Comforter come down before Christ was glorified; that it makes the Latter Day Saints even greater than the former day ones, and, continued he, working himself up to a glow of eloquence, yet this saint before us couldn't work the playey little miracle I asked for last night.

When the quiet-voiced elder took the floor, he first thanked the people who had driven in so many miles to hear the debate. Then he spoke of his regret that the charge at the door was needed. But because the hall rent for six nights amounts to ninety dollars it became necessary, though it is the first time during Mr. Knisley's missionarying on the savannas that he has required to set a fee for attendance at his meetings. Then he flattened out the point that had been raised about baptism, and then very entertainingly quoted a humorous poem of John Godfrey Saxe about six blind men who compared their impressions of an elephant which each had touched. He thought Mr. Lawson's estimate of Biblical truths about as complete and correct as the blind man's idea of the elephant. Then he gently suggested that Mr. Lawson get his Bible down off its dusty shelf and read it more intelligently. Clearly and orderly he broke down one by one the criticisms which had been advanced against the Book of Mormon, and then gave a brief review of its origin and contents.

When Mr. Lawson took the platform again, 'twas only to hurl abusive and coarse language at the head of his rival and of all the followers of Joseph Smith. No attempt was made at keeping a thread of logic or reason running through his disconnected tirade. But the loudness of his tone and the unfairness of his invectives did not disconcert the elder, who was rocking quietly through all this pandemonium of insult. Mr. Knisley's pertinent quotation upon rising was, "Let not him who putteth his armor on boast as him who taketh it off." And then he went into ancient history, quoting Josephus and a whole library of archaeologists on the early people of the American continent. With consummate self-control he ignored the malignant names which had been heaped upon his sect, merely reproving his reverence for having descended to so low a base.

The facile speakers in their two hours managed to cover a pretty wide area. The theory of evolution, the skeletons of mastodons, Catholicism, early Calvinism, the Douay Bible, the tower of Babel, all came in for a share in the learned dissertations. One rather amusing error crept into Mr. Lawson's side. While searching for flaws and inconsistencies in the Book of Mormon, he had seen the name Sam. Stupidly enough, he thought the author was talking familiarly of the prophet Samuel. Retaliating, he abbreviated the names most sacred to the Latter Day Saints. He was rather badly disconcerted to find afterwards that Sam was a distinct character with his name—and it's not a nickname—engraved on some early stone tablets, according to Mr. Knisley.

Thus it continues, and the crispness of the air and the lowness of the quicksilver has no power to cool the controversial ardor of these ecclesiastics.—The Daily Phoenix, January 16.

SOME "SAINTS" WHO ARE LATTER DAY SAINTS.

ALLIANCE, January 5.—The remarkable discovery was made through visions Friday night by Rev. Levi P. Lupton and his eight saints that the "gifts of tongues," in which they have been rejoicing, is after all the gift of the Devil—a confusion of tongues like that which filled the mouths of those who built the tower of Babel.

Thereupon the nine were immediately gifted with one tongue, a language which all can understand, and which is the tongue, they say, of the Holy Ghost.

It was at a special meeting of the nine in the secret chamber of the home, held between the afternoon and evening sessions, that the discovery was made.

Reverend Lupton was preaching and praying. He referred to the eight as "his saints," in that they had received the "gift of tongues." Suddenly there was a pause, a silence. Miss Mary Corlett raised her hand.

"The Lord suggests something," she said. "Let us think of him."

For a long time all was still. Reverend Lupton turned the leaves of a Bible, and now and then read in subdued tones passages which warned against those works which seem of the Lord but are of the Devil.

Of the processes of his mind, which throw light upon the events which followed soon after the lull, Reverend Lupton later said in an interview:

"As I turned the leaves of my Bible I was thinking of a vision I once had in England while on my way to Africa. It was concerning this home which I built. Up to that time I never had done anything without advice from God in a vision. I prayed to him for money to build the home. He showed me the way and I got money enough to start it. The money gave out. I had none to pay the workmen. I prayed and prayed, but God did not appear. So I went into debt and finished the home anyway. That was wrong. It was the work of the Devil."

It was of this that Reverend Lupton was thinking. Then he lifted his head and said to the saints: "Let us be still."

Then he turned a few pages at random, and read: "Let all tongues praise God."

The saints tried to obey the injunction. Each spoke in a different tongue. No one saint understood what any other saint was saying. It was "the babel of tongues."

A great fear fell upon the saints. They trembled and shook. They fell on their knees. They groveled on the floor. They prayed with a fervor never before reached by the people of this strange sect.

And praying, they passed into a trance and lay as dead a long time. They rose from their sleep all together, as though wakened by the same sound, though the secret chamber was filled with a grave-like stillness.

And straightway they began to speak in one tongue, where before they had spoken in nine. And they understood each other, and laughed and cried for joy. Translated, this is what they said:

"I am the spirit. I will be with you always. I will reveal myself in full to ye when the time cometh when ye shall go forth to teach the world in the tongue of the Holy Ghost."

Rev. Lupton is now convinced that the Devil sent them the "gift of tongues," but that God has cast out the Devil and has given the "gift of one tongue."

The professions of these holy linguists have attracted many strangers to Alliance. Thirty or forty trunks were taken from the depot to the home Friday, and last night the house was full of visitors. New faces were at last night's meeting, including a number of children of all ages, who sat wild-eyed and trembling, filled with fear and wonder by the strange scene before them.

The search of the seekers after the "gift" can not be described. They grow tense. Their eyes are glazed and staring. The veins in their temples stand out and throb.

"God is coming! Don't give up!" they cry to the discouraged ones.

They follow no rule or routine of physical contortion. They kneel, roll or run about, as the spirit moves. Deaver, one of the saints, got discouraged the other day and was pacing the floor of the meeting room disconsolately, his hands behind his back.

Deaver is a tall, lean, Lincoln type of man, a steel-worker by trade. He had prayed long and earnestly, and the "gift" had been withheld.

Mrs. Lupton saw him pacing to and fro, and, running to him, she cried: "Don't give up! Don't give up!"

With a shout Deaver threw himself backwards into the air and stretched his length with a loud crash on the floor, and lay there, waving his arms and praying. Later he received the "gift," which, it now develops, was but a gift from the Devil, after all.—Cleveland (Ohio) Press, January 5, 1907.

A CHICAGO PROPHECY.

"When Christ comes back, and he is due in a short time, this earth is going to be thrown back into its natural position in its relation to the sun. The rocks are again going to be rent asunder. Where the city of Chicago stands, before the crucifixion of Christ, when the earth was thrown out of plumb, there was at least fifty feet of water covering the ground. When Christ returns the whole city will be suddenly overflowed and all of its two million people who have not fully accepted and secured the Spirit of Christ in their hearts will perish."

This utterance, the climax of a prophecy by Doctor William D. Gentry, yesterday afternoon, caused an awed silence to fall over the dingy little room at 124 Clerk street, which had formerly been occupied by a justice of the peace, and is now given to the little band of worshipers who compose the Central Free Gospel Mission.—Inter Ocean.

Life's Mirror.

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

Give love, and love to your life will flow,
And strength in your utmost needs;
Have faith and a score of hearts will show
Their faith in your work and deeds.

Give truth, and your gifts will be paid in kind;
Give song, and a song will meet;
And the smile which is sweet will surely find
A smile which is just as sweet.

Give pity and sorrow to those who mourn,
You will gather in flowers again

The scattered seed from your thoughts outborne,
Though the sewing seemed in vain.

For life is the mirror of rich and poor;
'Tis just what we are and do;
Then give to the world the best at your door,
And the best will come back to you.

Mailing-Day in the Islands.

Dear Readers: Yesterday was our mail-day. I wish I could give you a glimpse of our mail-days. They are interesting to us I assure you, and more so now than ever; that is, there is more of it since both of us missionary wives have the same relatives, and from the letters received by each we both get news that we would not get if alone. But let me take the day in order, that you may enter, with us, into the enjoyment of it all. Remember we have been anticipating this day for a month, and as it draws nigh it brings a flutter of excitement. We always like to get a good night's sleep the night before this eventful day, so all our mental faculties will be in good trim. And because I was in such a hurry to get to sleep, that fickle goddess evaded me until a way in the small hours of the night, and then it left sticks in my eyes in the morning. But the mind was too active for repose, and the "sticky" eyes were forced open at ten minutes of five a. m., for I wanted to get the morning's work done while it was cool, and before Alberta and Charlie came. Perhaps some of my readers may not know that we are not now living in the same house, or even locality. The Saints at Faoa were urgent in their request for them to live in their branch, about four miles away. And the understanding is that they must come in each mail-day (and as much more often as they can), so we will get each other's news, and it is so much more enjoyable to have some one to share the good things with. Our good native brother, Roo, goes out for them each time they visit us, and brings them in his cart, and they get here by seven in the morning. Therefore I had barely got through my morning's work when in rushed Bertie. How it does seem like having a visit from one of our own children! Then after the greeting of both, she went in the little kitchen and finished up the work while I did my ironing, for I had washed on Monday. Got through in time to have a cool-off—for the day was a warm one—and have a little chat before time to get dinner, which we ate at eleven a. m. Charlie could not wait to finish his pudding, it was too hot, and he was in a hurry, so he left it and caught up the market-basket, and went to the post-office for the mail for us both. For though the steamship arrives early in the morning, we do not get our mail till after eleven. Our dinner work was done up, and I was just finishing my afternoon toilet as I heard an exclamation of delight from Bertie, and a "Come, Aunt Emma, and see the mail! Such a lot of it!" I was then in the act of lifting a collar to my neck, but it did not get there till sundown. It fell from my hands, and I rushed out to where the three of them were fairly gloating over the contents of that basket. There were twenty letters and two cards for the two young people, and sixteen letters and two cards for uncle and aunt. Then there were the months' HERALDS, Ensigns, Hopes, Exponents, Autumn Leaves, large rolls of daily papers, and some magazines. Those of the latter that came to us were sent by kind, thoughtful friends, who wish to keep us posted in current events. Charlie is the mail distributor; we stand near with open hands and he hands to each according to the address. I had brought in a small table extra for their mail. Joseph takes his to his table, and I mine to my writing desk, so they do not get mixed. This was an extra large mail, it being near Christmas-time, you know. Then, after the flurry of excitement, the little pleasantries, and bantering about one getting more than another, was over, there was a dead calm, while each devoured the contents of his or her letters. Occasionally a dainty Christmas present would be held up to view, accompanied with words of appreciation and exclamations of delight. Then inclosed slips found in the other letters would be passed to its owner, and occasionally reading out items that were of more than ordinary interest, in which all shared. Joseph's letters were mostly typewritten, so he got through with his, had piled up a fortification of wrapping papers, and was deep into the HERALDS before we had finished our letters. How we tried to read three papers at once; that would not do, so we gleaned out choice scraps, and exchanged letters, and all too soon four o'clock came. I set a lunch for my visitors before going home, then Roo came to take them home, after which supper time came, then meeting time. And being enthused with the good news from our loved ones and the many good and cheering words from dear friends, some of whom we never met in this life, we both enjoyed telling the Saints of the good things so far as we had read; that the work of the Lord was onward, and the Saints striving to do their best, in following the example and precepts of the Lord Jesus Christ. For my own part, I felt a new desire to work diligently, faithfully, kindly, and patiently to fulfill the part allotted me in this work, not so much for the sake of a reward hereafter but for a good free conscience, a knowledge of having done what I could. And as the words of others had imparted light and strength to us, so I felt that our words did to them.

After returning from meeting, I took the Leaves, and read with pleasing interest the leading article by Bro. William Pitt, and as I read I enjoyed its elevating, refining influence on the mind. It seemed to me that such instruction, if acted upon, given in such well-chosen words, was equal to a course at college, aye, better, for there were no offsetting influences accompanying it, and to put such instruction into practice in every day life would be to transform the ordinary into the excellent.

Such was, and as a rule is, our mail-days. My words have failed to convey the joyousness and enthusiasm that characterize these recurring days. But after that one feast, we must of necessity compel ourselves to fast four days. And how tempting it is to see so much reading matter at hand, and still keep steadily at the writing till the steamer leaves. And notwithstanding our joy at her arrival, it is something of a relief when she is gone again, and we resume the daily routine again, with its due portion of reading.

What is Gained by Having Children Blessed by the Elders.

The elder asks God to protect the child from sickness and dangers, of various descriptions. We are told to ask, and if we ask in faith and waver not, we shall receive.

The Lord says, "Every member of the Church of Christ having children, is to bring them unto the elders before the church, who are to lay their hands upon them in the name of Jesus Christ, and bless them in his name."—Doctrine and Covenants 17:19. God knows what is best. He knows what evils there are to meet in this life. He wants to protect the children from harm.

I know of one case where the parents do not belong to the church but have had their children blessed by the elders. And from observation it is my belief that the Lord has blessed the children. One of them is quite a worker at times in the Sunday-school.

I was blessed when an infant by the elders, and I know God has cared for me and guided me all my life.

The parent that takes his or her child to the elders, before the church, to be blessed, has done one thing at least that the Lord has told us to do, and is therefore one step nearer to Christ. Our heavenly Father knows who are doing his will, and every advance step we take is credited on our account in heaven. We gain God's approval; we gain his special care; we gain help in the care of the child. The child gains a heavenly guardian—one who will never forget to help in every present need—a friend that is closer than a brother.

When a child is blessed by the elders, it is a good beginning. It is the best kind of a beginning that one can have. It is much better than growing up without being blessed, not having heard the true gospel. How hard it is to unlearn anything! If we are started out at our birth in the right direction, we need not be without the Spirit of light and truth. If we continue to walk in the light, we will have nothing to unlearn.

It is our duty to have our children blessed by the elders in the church, and every time we do our duty, whatever it is, we gain God's approval.

H. A. SHAW.

Dear Sister Frances: Also to the Sisters of the Home Column: Although the loss of the HERALD Office seems like a great calamity, we rejoice that our home paper is not utterly destroyed, and perhaps it will be better and brighter for passing through the fire. We will try more earnestly to hold up our sister's hands while she labors for it. A little word of cheer and appreciation helps a long way, and the Home Column is worth much to the mothers and homes of the Saints. It seems to me that the work of the gospel takes on a new earnestness among us since the weekly instruction which the Column gives of the application of the gospel to everyday life in the homes of our people. And the church reaps the benefit in retaining the allegiance of the children when they grow to be men and women. They can not help but be faithful if rooted and grounded in its truth and its spiritual and moral loveliness, while yet children.

I was very much pleased with a late article, "Workers With God." None better than parents can be such workers, and to think that in bringing to the world immortal souls and training them for God, we work not for time, but for eternity; that when we cross the river and lay those children in the arms eternal, they are still ours, though death should dissolve other relationships! We venerate the mother of our Lord, though we do not worship her; for yet she is, and forever she will be, his mother. And we mothers are the mothers of kings and priests unto God. May we renew our courage and be faithful to our high calling.

The Training of a Boy.

By C. S. Carr, M. D.

The boy should be held to the same state of virtue as the girl is held. To admit for a moment that the boy must have a season of sowing wild oats is to unfit any parent to bring up boys. There is no reason in the world why the life of the boy would not be just as free from taint or irregularity as that of the girl. Rude language or vulgar behavior of any sort is just as inexcusable in the boy as in the girl. He should not be allowed for one moment to think that things are decent for the boy that are indecent for the girl.

Of course it is very easy to fall into the habit of establishing a double standard of morals for the boys and girls. We have become so accustomed in this generation to see boys do things every day, and hear boys say things which no self-respecting girl would do or say, that we have unconsciously become reconciled to the idea that purity in the case of a girl should be higher than in boys.

But there is no real foundation for such an idea. There is every reason why the boy should be as neat, as polite, as modest as the girl. Boys should never be allowed to think that they are excusable in doing things or saying things that would be unfit for their sisters to participate in. Boys reared with this idea in their minds are much more apt to make good men, successful business men, healthy men, than the boys that are allowed to indulge in coarse conversation or questionable recreations.

The boy should be on good terms with his mother. He should be a chum with his mother, if possible. Her sensitiveness and feelings concerning questions of morality should be imparted to him as much as possible. Then when the boy comes in contact with rude boys, who have not been so reared, he will be able to see for himself the folly and degradation of immorality.

We are aware that this is ideal, but this is the standard that should constantly be kept before the parent. Make the boys, as clean, as modest, and respectable, and obedient as the girls are. There is no reason in the world why they should not be. There is every reason in the world why they should be.

But it is upon the father mainly that the rearing of the boy depends. If the father be a good man, a gentleman, a man who likes life and makes the best use of life, a man who has not forgotten how to be a boy, and how to play with boys, a man that likes fun but takes a serious view of life in general, the boy will scarcely need any other instruction than association with his father. The boy naturally emulates the father. The masculine qualities of the boy begin to develop early, and even during infancy he sees in the masculine portion of the family traits that attract him more than feminine traits.

There are some things the boy can tell his mother easier than he can tell his father. There are other things that the boy can tell his father better than he can tell his mother. Blessed is the boy who has both father and mother who are approachable, who are sympathetic with his phases of growth, who are ready to forgive, and patient to begin over again. If the boy has not found these things in his father and mother it will be very doubtful indeed if the Sunday school or church, the day-school or teacher, will be able to supply his loss.—Purity Advocate.

A Temptation and How it Was Met.

By Susan Hubbard Martin.

It was with a strange and new unwillingness that Edith Gordon faced the usual duties of that Sunday morning. It had been snowing since dawn, and as she drew her curtain aside, she looked out upon a sea of swirling snow flakes.

All her life Edith Gordon had been a worker in her church. Even her marriage which had occurred seven years before, had proved no obstacle. It might have been, but she did not permit it. Sunday after Sunday found her in the Sunday-school, ever punctual and faithful. Her husband did not think as she did, but he did not oppose her. She went to the little church she loved, but many, many times she went alone, and often with an aching heart.

It was indeed a heavy trial to Edith Gordon that the one she loved best in the world had no desire for the things spiritual, that were as meat and drink to her.

At first her husband had gone with her, but now he rarely, if ever, attended church. When he did, he went solely to please her and she knew it.

As she looked out at the snowy streets that Sunday morning, a strange apathy took possession of her. Unconsciously she sighed a little. "I'll not go to teach my class this morning," she resolved. "Like enough there will be only a boy or two there, and—"

She broke off with another sigh.

"It can't be I'm getting indifferent," she went on. "Well, at any rate, whatever the feeling is, I believe I'll give up to it. I'm certainly entitled to do as I please for once. I don't feel well, the church will be chilly perhaps, and once in a term of months I ought to have a little respite."

She smiled a little. "I didn't know one could get up so many excuses for not going to church," she added.

She twisted her beautiful hair into a soft knot, slipped into a dressing sacque and went down to breakfast.

Her husband greeted her cheerily. "The first snow of the season, little wife," he said. "How does it look?"

"Beautiful, but somehow I don't feel like going out in it."

Her husband looked at her half quizzically. "Why, I thought nothing short of a cyclone, or the end of the world, would keep you at home on Sunday morning," he said.

"I know, but to-day I feel differently. I'm fearfully tempted to stay at home."

"Come round to my way of thinking, have you?" laughed her husband, but Edith did not reply.

After breakfast she went into the parlor and sat down in a big easy chair. "I'm going to be just as lazy as I please," she told herself. After a while she came into the sitting room. Her husband was there with his morning paper. She sat down and took up a portion of it.

"Not going to Sunday-school, really?" he asked.

"No, I'm going to take a vacation to-day."

"How does it feel?"

"Oh, it's too early too judge. There goes the first bell now."

She sat a moment or two longer, then went out and had a short conversation with her cook regarding her dinner. The sky was darker now and the snow was coming down faster and in fine little flakes that ere long would wrap old mother earth in a mantle thick and white.

She went into the parlor again. "Its nice not to have to hurry away on Sunday morning," she thought, and then—the second bell rang.

"I wonder if those boys will come?" she whispered. She rose and looked out at the weather again. "They might come," she mused, "and if they do, how sorry they will be not to find me there." And then she tried to settle herself again, but it was all of no use. A row of disappointed childish faces seem to look back at her, saying reproachfully: "You didn't come—we did."

She turned away. "I'll have to go," she added. "I'm being tempted and—I must not give up to it. If I do once, it will be easier next time." She glanced at the marble clock. "Twenty-five minutes only until Sunday-school opens, but I'll go. Stephen," she called to her husband, "I'm going after all."

Twenty minutes later she came down in her pretty brown suit and hat.

Her husband looked up at her. "Don't forget your rubbers," he said.

"No, good-by, dearest." She kissed him. Eight minutes later she was in the Sunday-school room.

Most of the scholars were there, but where were the teachers? At a glance she saw that all her boys were present. Her heart bounded. "How glad I am that I came," she thought.

The superintendent came to meet her. "It's good to see you here, Mrs. Gordon," he said. "After all, I need not have feared. You are one of my few faithful ones. I'm in need of an organist," he added. "Miss Andrews has not come. Will you help us?"

"Certainly." Edith removed her gloves without another word and stepped up to the organ. "Sing your best, boys," she whispered as she passed her own class.

"Isn't Mrs. Gordon fine?" whispered Jimmy Titus to Bobby Kent. "I'm glad I came, ain't you?"

"Yes, I am. We needn't have been afraid our teacher wouldn't be here. A little snow don't scare her. I wouldn't care much about Sunday-school if my teacher missed every other week like some teachers do."

"No, neither would I."

Edith was a fine musician. The Sunday-school room was soon full of the melody she drew forth from the organ keys. The superintendent's worried countenance lost some of its anxious lines as he listened to the beautiful music. "If we had only more helpers like Mrs. Gordon," he thought.

He came to see her again before the lesson began. "I wonder of you could manage a few extra boys?" he said. "Miss Price's class is without a teacher. She did not come and there's nobody to take it."

"Of course," she answered in her sweet way, "we'll be glad to have them, won't we, boys? You know," she added, turning to her class, "we want to help all we can, and if those boys have no teacher, we must let them share our good times."

The boys nodded heartily, seeing the situation in a new light, because of their teacher's graciousness and tact.

So she taught two classes instead of one that morning; acting as organist besides.

Sunday-school over, the congregation gathered for church. Old Mrs. Roberts whispered to her: "Did you know the minister's wife is gone?" she said. "Her sister's awful sick; they sent for her last night."

"No," returned Edith, "I had not heard of it."

"Well, she is," replied the old lady, "and I just wonder where he's goin' to get his dinner?"

Someone came in just then and the conversation dropped, but Edith could not forget it. She thought of her own pretty home, her pleasant dining-room. She remembered how she was going to have roast beef, and she had made her dessert yesterday. She was too conscientious a Christian to desire an elaborate Sunday dinner. Her servants always loved her for her consideration to them, especially on this day.

Dinner was always served early, and a plain one at that, so they could have a long afternoon out.

"I'll ask him myself," she determined, and then she rose and went over to where he stood.

"I've just heard your wife is away," she began, extending her hand. "Now, I know what bachelor's hall is. You won't like it. Please come to dinner with me?"

The minister's tired face brightened. He remembered the breakfast he had struggled over that morning.

"Thank you," he replied gratefully, "I was just dreading going home to my lonely house. I'll be very glad to come."

She brought the minister home through the snow that became deeper every moment.

"Stephen," she said gently, coming in to where he sat. "I've brought the minister home to dinner, dear; his wife is away. Help me to make him welcome."

Without a word he arose and followed her in. Stephen Gordon was a fine fellow and he loved his wife. He would have preferred this Sunday alone with her, but he was too courteous to show it. But under the charm of the minister's manner, he soon forgot all about that, for the minister knew how to talk, and how to interest too.

The three had a dainty, well-cooked dinner in the pretty dining-room that snowy Sunday, and a flow of words that was better than any temporal feast.

The minister had a funeral at three, so he could not stay long, but he shook hands warmly before he left. "I'll not soon forget this hospitality, Mrs. Gordon," he said, "but then it's just like you. We can always look to you for just such thoughtful acts." He took Stephen Gordon's hand in both his own. "God bless you," he said a trifle unsteadily.

They had such a happy, quiet time that snowy afternoon, Edith and her husband.

When the bells rang for evening service, Stephen looked at her. "What would you say if I were to go with you to-night?" he questioned.

The look of joy on her face was good to see. "Oh, Stephen, will you?"

He lifted her face to his and kissed her reverently. "All honor to the little woman who would not yield to a temptation," he said. "Edith," he added, "I was watching you to-day, and making this Sunday a sort of a test case; if you had failed—"

Edith drew her breath. "Oh, Stephen!"

"But you didn't. You braved the storm, leaving your own warm fireside, and—it had its effect on the one who sat at home. The minister, too, set me to thinking. Religion does mean something after all; that is, the kind my wife has (bless her), and I respect and love her for it. So, realizing it to-day as I have never before, I too am going to follow."

Before Edith Gordon went to sleep that night, she turned to the Bible with wet eyes. "Oh," she whispered, "what if I had not gone to Sunday-school to-day? What if I had yielded to the temptation to stay at home?" And then she fell upon her knees. "Dear Father," she murmured, "help me to be faithful, not to shirk, not to be unwilling, but be ever ready to work for thee. Help me always to realize that true service means a putting away of all selfishness, a dying to one's old earthly nature, and grant to make me, in all my weakness, one of thy useful ones. For Jesus' sake."

Still on her knees she turned to her Bible. "Where is that verse," she whispered. "Ah, here it is: Revelations 2:10: 'Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life.'"—Selected.

Editors Herald: I saw in a dream two men who said for me to climb their three ladders. I thought there were three ladders. Each one was about three hundred feet high I thought I climbed to the top of the third one and never looked back. Then I came down the second one, there I met two men and I stopped. One said, "I will give you work, now; we want to see if you could climb to the top."

I thought that I went off rejoicing.

Now, Saints, there is something for us to be doing.

I have much to thank my heavenly Father for. He has blessed me with the light of the gospel and a portion of his Holy spirit which helps me to overcome all trials and difficulties. May I live faithful to the end.

L. L. GOTT.

Cookburn Island, Ontario, December 28, 1906.

Dear Herald: It is with joy that I take up the papers of the church and therein learn of the onward march of the great Latter day work. It is truly a delightful thought to know that it will not be many years before the earth will be given to the Pure in Heart, and they will see God, for he has said he will dwell upon it. This was the hope of the former day Saints and it is the joy and hope of the Saints of these Latter days.

In my last letter to you found in Herald of November 28th, 1906, I stated of the interest there was in the work of the Lord upon the Island. Well, I must tell you my experience is, whenever the five Saints begin to show their light to the world. The Devil will be sure to try to overthrow the effort. Since I came upon the Island, a new man of the church called the Presbyterian church was sent to try and overthrow our work. He was a so-called smart man, of much learning and could speak with many flattering words. He thought he could soon destroy us five saints. So he went to work and gave notice he would lecture upon the church of the Latter day saints. We were invited to the church (that was built as a Union church, but the Elders of the Latter day Saints were not permitted to speak there). We went to the first lecture and the great learned man read his lecture, taken from the Bible's works and the Encyclopedias. When he got through, I rose to my feet and ask permit to speak. He said, "No—this is the house of God."

I had the chance to speak to him later, however, and I asked him if he would meet me in the town hall and prove the position of his church, as being the true church of Christ, and he would not, so we rented the town hall for the following Monday, got out bills announcing this subject, "Was Joseph Smith a Prophet of God," and stating that any question might be asked at the close of the meeting.

I labored hard putting these at the homes and stores. The time came, it was a stormy snowy day, I prayed much, and at evening it calmed down and the hall was well filled.

The preacher was invited out but he never came. The Priest and Teacher were with me upon the stand. I took Matt 7th, 15 to 20 was proving the prophets mission as a divine one by the fruits He brought forth and for two hours was blessed with the spirit of my calling in rightly dividing the word of truth. Some enemy let off two large fire crackers while my service was in session and before I left I gave any one the chance to ask questions or offer a reply. All was quiet but after we got outside the snow balls came fast and thick, but while they went to my right and left, not one of them struck me.

We gained friends, however. Many have come out to hear me, and the friends are opening their homes and inviting me to come and preach in them. This I am doing and the dear Lord is blessing our work, so much so that I have been permitted to baptize five and our meetings are well attended. Because the five that went to hear the other preacher. He stopped his lectures.

We have some thirty-one members on this island. We have a fine school and I have just organized a Religio to call, got orders for $18 worth of church books, sold them all and got subscribers for some papers of the church, seven in all and we hope in a little while to organize them into a branch and the five saints thus far take the lead in spiritual things upon the island and they are desirous of building and intend to build a church in the spring.

R. B. HOWLETT.

Dear Herald: I am pleased to see the progress our work is making in different parts of the country, and only wish that we could report the work in a flourishing condition here in this part of the Lord's heritage. Religion does not occupy a very prominent position in the minds of the people here in the mountains. Pleasure and greed for wealth seem to interest the people most, and for that reason it is hard work to get them interested in that which is for man's eternal good. However, I can truthfully say that there are some noble Saints among those who do not care for the gospel. While all are not alive and working as they should, the greater part are united and working with a zeal that is encouraging to the missionary. We have become discouraged many times when we see the adversary getting in among the flock and causing hardness, back-biting, evil-speaking, etc. among those who have tasted of the good words of life. The work that we all love is brought into disrepute, and many good honest souls are kept from obeying the truth. I fear in the great day of accounts that some of us will not only lose our reward, but will be held under condemnation for living in such a manner that others have rejected the truth as a result of our conduct.

Bro. Isaac M. Smith and I have been here for the past three weeks; having been preaching nearly every night to the Saints and the few that are not members of the church that come out. On December 25 I was called to Willow Creek to preach the funeral of Sister Martha Williams, wife of Brother Clinton Williams. She had been a sufferer for years, and death came to her relief on December 23. An aged husband, five sons, and three daughters survive her. May the Lord comfort them in their bereavement. The Saints here in Bozeman seemed anxious to hear some gospel once more and have encouraged the preachers by their presence.

We go from here to Rees creek, and will hold some meetings there, after which we will return to Deer Lodge to be in attendance at the conference. On our return to the above named places we expect to stop at Willow Creek, Whitehall, and Butte.

I find some of the branches practically in a disorganized condition for the lack of officers, and as a result some of the Saints are spiritually dead. We need some good, live, energetic workers in this field to carry on the work in local branches. The missionary is always willing to do all he can but it is almost impossible to visit all the branches and scattered members more than once a year, and sometimes they can not do that. The work needs to be pushed into new fields, but the members need some spiritual food, and for that reason it takes a great amount of time laboring among them when we should be out warning the world.

Some of our people who think that a missionary should not labor in the branches, should come to Montana and examine the condition of the work here, and I am sure he would say that it is necessary for us to labor among them some-time.

I hope to see the time speedily come when the scattered Saints will be gathered to Zion. I have often wondered how they remain as faithful as they do under such environments as they have in many places here in the west.

Hoping to be among those who are accounted worthy to stand for the Master and his work, I am in gospel bonds.

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

Ardorse, Nova Scotia.

Editors Herald: I have just been reading the letters in the HERALD from different parts of the field, and wondering why it has been so long since a word from this part has appeared. I am getting old, have to work every day, and am compelled to take a good deal of time each day for rest. This latter-day work is as dear to me as ever it was. I have lived my allotted time, and if I am permitted to live four score years it will not be because of my physical strength, for I never was of a strong constitution; but I am trying to follow the Word of Wisdom. I never did, and never will I hope, indulge in strong drink, tobacco, tea, or anything that would defile this body or make it an unfit place for the Spirit of God to dwell in.

I have received many testimonies of the truth of this wonderful work. I often think our heavenly Father has done all he could do for one so weak as I; and now I know it is my duty to line up and try to keep pace with this great and grand work, taking more heed to myself and to the doctrine, that when I think I stand I may take heed lest I fall.

No doubt it is thought the work is dull here; and right it is. But when we take into consideration that our members are scattered from Maine to Missouri we are not discouraged, if they only remain faithful to their covenant. We hope that Bro. Davison will be freed from his afflictions so that he may be sent to Nova Scotia next summer.

Yours in the faith,

J. W. DIMOCK.

Saskatoon, Sask., December 31, 1906.

Editors Herald: I have noted the point raised by Bro. Nunley in the HERALD of November 7, with reference to Genesis 5:45 in the Inspired Translation, where it reads: "And thus all things were confirmed unto Adam by an holy ordinance; and the gospel preached and a decree sent forth that it should be in the world until the end thereof; and thus it was. Amen."

I note also the answer of Bro. Crabb in HERALD of December 19, which is both plausible and conceivable.

The answer, however, which occurred to my mind very readily was that the phrase, "until the end thereof", has reference simply to the antediluvian period, which, in Christian parlance, is not uncommonly spoken of as a world distinct. See 2 Peter 2:5: God "spared not the old world"; 3:6: "the world that then was"; and Genesis 6:13, if you like, where it is similarly said: "I will destroy them with the earth." If, then, the period prior to the flood was by scriptural writers and by scriptural usage spoken of or alluded to as a world, and the Noachian deluge as an end, a destruction of that world, are we not therein furnished the best foundation for believing that the quotation in question had in view or covered no more? Evidently so; for the quotation terminates by saying, "and thus it was." Not "will be in the world until the end thereof"; but "was"—past tense, something already achieved.

The prophecy was made in the morning of the world before the flood. The fulfillment was recorded by Moses many years after the flood.

It may be this solution will come to light from some other pen before mine reaches your columns.

It is not merely a question of the possible solution, but the necessary solution. Men too often make the mistake so universal today of arguing necessity from the sheer possibility. Or, as is sometimes the case, probability from possibility and necessity from probability. I should hardly undertake to affirm the necessity of my solution, though I deem it both possible and probable, unless necessity may arise from the occurrence of the verb "was" which we have commented on.

But the possibility alone of either solution debarring all necessity will disarm any opponent of the church who attempts to discover an incongruity between the text in question in the Inspired Translation and our unyielding position that there was an apostasy.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

Myrtle Point, Oregon, January 10, 1907.

Editors Herald: We think perhaps you would be pleased to hear something of the Saints out here in this country of rain and mud. Yes, rain and mud, for it rains at least two thirds of the time at this season of the year, and the roads in many districts become impassable for wheels, the mail in those places being carried on pack horses. But, notwithstanding these inconveniences, the restored gospel has found its way to the people of this place and surrounding country so remote from the headquarters of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Through the faithful teaching of Bro. E. Keeler and others who have come this way, we have gained favor with the people until we have as good standing as any church in the town. We have a comfortable place of worship which we will be able to have dedicated during the coming district conference, which convenes here in February. We also have an organ paid for.

We gave a very satisfactory entertainment on Christmas Eve; had the room beautifully decorated with evergreens, Christmas bells, etc. The young people acquitted themselves admirably. The program consisted of songs by the choir and recitations and songs by the different Sunday-school classes. After the program ended came the lighting of the candles on our beautiful little tree, and the distribution of presents, which, though simple and inexpensive, brought joy to the hearts of the little ones. Our efforts were well appreciated by the audience, which was as large as we could accommodate comfortably.

Bro. and Sr. Keeler have been absent from this place for several months and we miss them sadly, but we have tried to be faithful. Have kept up our weekly prayer meetings and our Sunday-school. May the young in the Sunday-schools grow up to be useful laborers in the Lord's vineyard is my prayer.

Your sister in Christ,

LEAH M. CONOVER.

Palestine, Texas, January 20, 1907.

Editors Herald: It has been quite a while since I contributed a line to the HERALD. I am sorry because of the sad calamity that occurred recently. I hope that the office will soon be rebuilt better than before, for the HERALD is the only preacher we have, and I enjoy it very much.

Wife and I are the only members at this place, so the work is on the decline here, for it never stops on a level; it is either going up or going down. I have a little one at my home I want blessed; if an elder can come here I will do all I can for him. The district president may have expected a report at conference from me, but I had nothing to report. There is not a quorum to be got. What can I do? I am president of this branch, but the members have moved away. I hope something will be done soon to get it in order. I don't know what it will take unless it is a lot of new material to build with, but I am glad to say there is plenty of that here and some is very good.

In bonds of truth,

A. B. DUNNAM.

Phoenix, Oregon, January 1, 1907.

Editors Herald: Having just finished reading to my wife and babies the last issue of the HERALD, my mind runs back over the last ten years of my life, ending the tenth day of this month. On the tenth day of January, 1897, at Stanley, Indian Territory, in willing obedience to the the command of "the gospel of our Lord and Savior," I walked into the waters of the Kiamichie River, led by Elder E. D. Bailey (truly a minister and servant of the Lord) and was there buried with Christ in baptism. A happier mortal was not to be found then or there. After a short time, however, I went away, falling in with my old associates of Baptists and Methodists. The persuasion and persecution soon began to be what I thought unbearable, and, not being in touch with any of the Saints, I soon moved back to my old home—in Babylon. There in a short time I became recognized as an able minister and debater, standing identified with the Advent Christian Church, though during all this time (strange to say) the words spoken by Bro. Ellis Short at my confirmation were burning fresh in glittering letters of gold in my mind.

A few months previous to my hearing the gospel in its purity I was addressed personally by the Lord in a vision. A people was shown to me and I was commanded to go to them and there learn and do my duty. I told the vision to several who only laughed at me and said it was only a dream. I knew better. But I (or Satan) kept trying to persuade myself that it was only a dream. I kept trying to do all I could to drive it out of my mind, but could not; it was there to stay.

After disagreeing with the Advent Christian Church on "Age to come," etc., I took my stand in the Church of God, or Restitutionists, and came from Nebraska to Oregon to preach for them at Central Point, ten miles from here. I preached only a short time until my conscience got the best of the conflict. I took the stand, preached the truth as I saw it, came down, resigned, and quit, and ever since have been praying for forgiveness, which I am sure I have received from the one who showed me the way, ten years or more ago.

After I came to Oregon, Bro. Stubbart (whose address I do not know) wrote to me, asking me not to quit the church. In answering this letter I was very saucy; perhaps I insulted him; and many, Oh, many are the times I have thought of that hateful letter and sorely repented of it. If I could only have another letter from him, freely for giving me, as I know the Lord has, one more weight would be lifted off a much-burdened mind.

Well, my letter is already too long. I could write all day and still have faults to confess. Many Saints may read this who are personally known to me. Dear ones, when you read it, then pray for me. I am all alone here. Wife is awaiting the coming of an elder that she may be baptized. We have seen but one Latter Day Saint since coming to Oregon. That was Elder T. N. Chapman of Hood River, Oregon, who called on us last summer when wife was sick.

I ask you all, dear brothers and sisters, when you approach the divine throne of grace, to please remember your once erring but now penitent, isolated brother in the one faith.
C. A. WALRUFF.

Burnside, Michigan, January 9, 1907.

Dear Herald: I have thought for some time that I would write you a few lines, as I never see any letters from this part, and let you know that some are still trying to serve God and keep his commandments. I have been in the church over twenty years, and today my mind wanders back to the day when I was led down into the waters of baptism by Elder Gordon E. Duel, who has passed on before, there to await the first resurrection, when the dead in Christ shall arise. Oh, that we all as Saints may so live that we may the number among the few who will reign with Christ a thousand years! We will have many trials, but those who endure to the end will be saved. I can remember when I was a little child, how I used to lie awake in the night and think how terrible it would be if I could not be good enough to be with Christ here on earth. Many, many nights I used to cry myself to sleep, and now I feel to praise God that he ever gave me a chance to obey his gospel, and my prayer is that I may so live that I may be an example to others. God has revealed many things to me since I came into his church, and I have been told by the Spirit that he would reveal much more if I was faithful, and I am trying to be. My prayers are always for the Saints of God and the upbuilding of his work.

We have prayer meeting every two weeks, and our last one was one long to be remembered—a time of rejoicing—and we hope this coming Sunday that the Spirit will be with us again. It gives us strength to press on.

It does me much good to read the letters in the HERALD from different parts of the world, and I think there are others who should write. We do not know how much good our letters will do. It makes me think of a HERALD I got some time ago (I think it was about the last of October), and as I scanned its pages I saw a letter from Sr. A. McKenzie, St. Clair, Michigan. I believe I will never forget how the Holy Spirit rested on me when I read of the time of rejoicing they had at their prayer-meeting when Elder Lake was present. I have never met the sister, but would like to see more of her writings.

We are looking for Elder G. E. Shippy through here this winter to hold a few meetings. Ever praying for the welfare of God's people, I am,

Your sister in gospel bonds,

CORA E. JOHNSTON.

Sarepta, January 8, 1907.

Dear Herald: I address a few lines to you to let you know that I am still in the faith; and am free to say there is nothing in life so dear to me as the gospel. I have been associated with the church shortly after Carlingford conference. I suppose Bro. W. H. Kelly will remember me, as I am the person who offered him the oil of vitriol; but was as honest then as now. I did so because I had two sisters connected with the church, thinking if the preacher refused to swallow the dose it would change their faith.

Extracts from Letters.

Alvin Knisley: "My debate with Reverend Lawson began last night, with one of the leading barristers in the city as chairman. Noteworthy among other things is the presence in the audience of my old opponent, Father Sinnett, who has come many miles. I have an inkling that he intends to engage me again when I get through with Lawson."

J. A. Anthony, 231 Castro Street, San Francisco, California: "Just received the HERALD bringing the sad news of the burning of the office. We do not understand it, but we are satisfied good will come out of it; for all things work together for good to them that love the Lord and keep his commandments."

J. F. Mintun, 1211 East Twelfth Street, Des Moines, Iowa: "I enjoyed the 'little HERALD.' The hope and confidence breathed on every page will do good. It did me good. May it increase in size and usefulness."

G. M. Shippy, Applegate, Michigan: "D. E. Dowker and myself have concluded a series of meetings at Cash, resulting in the baptism of ten, three of whom are from the Roman Catholic ranks. Several other at that place are apparently very near the kingdom. From Cash the work has been revived in Applegate, where a goodly interest has been awakened. My home address is 370 Hunt Street, Detroit, Michigan."

T. W. Williams, Gardena, California: "Regret that you had to have a fire this winter, but trust it may eventuate in an enlarged field of service. Admire your pluck. Success to the homeless HERALD. May its enforced wandering be of short duration, and its future home permanent and abiding."

Sr. D. S. Riley, Cleburne, Texas: "Having read of the great loss occasioned by the burning of the Herald Publishing House, and wishing to add my little help as God has blessed me, I send one dollar, praying that each member may give 'cheerfully' according to their means. I feel that the dear Lord heard and answered prayer, enabling me to send this mite, and I pray that it may do good, and that God's blessing may rest upon all in this time of need."

News From Branches

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

The regular semiannual election of Sunday-school officers occurred Sunday, December 30, and resulted as follows: Superintendent, H. D. Ennis; assistant superintendent, Coventry Archibald; secretary, Mary Kinnaman; treasurer, Oliver Worden; librarian, Lloyd Hopkins; organist, Grace Kinnaman; chorister, Roy Tilden. All these officers have served before and have given general satisfaction.

Our Christmas Offering amounted to over forty dollars. Seventeen dollars was the yield of a birthday-box for the benefit of the poor.

We are steadily pressing on, gaining in strength and numbers as we go, and rejoicing in a bright prospect for the future.

The South St. Joseph school is a promising one, and the mission in charge of Bro. John Bear has a very encouraging outlook. There has been considerable preaching done there of late, with good results. We are informed that a fund has been started for the purpose of building a house of worship in that mission, also, that a unanimous resolution was passed at a meeting of the members, held recently, that they make application to the missionary in charge to be organized into a branch.

The young people of the church here celebrated New Year's Eve, by having a waltz party at the home of Sr. Pauline Ripple.

The Religionists held their annual election of officers the first week in January. Those chosen were David Wilke, president; Austin Dobson, vice-president; Ruby Jackson, secretary. Renewed interest is manifested in the Religio, and Bro. Wilke is making a brave and determined effort for advancement.

Sunday, January 6, we had the pleasure of hearing two excellent sermons from Bro. Frederick A. Smith. He brought the sad news of the destruction by fire of the Herald Publishing House. All hearts were moved as the loss is ours also. But we were encouraged by the next brave and sturdy issue of the HERALD. All honor to the courageous hearts, that in the midst of disaster can put their trust in God and look into the future with undimmed faith, the while they put their shoulders to the wheel to start the work of reclamation.

Bro. Moler is holding a series of meetings at Zion's Hope Mission. He is encouraged by the good attendance and good interest.

We are looking forward to the Sunday-school convention and conference of the Far West District, which will be held here February 1, 2, and 3.

EDITH M. FIFER.

The following resolution was read and on motion was ordered spread on minutes: Realizing the improbability of Bro. T. W. Chatburn being returned to this district the coming year, be it resolved that we extend to him our heartfelt thanks for his earnest and effectual work in this district during the past three years; for his wise and fearless counsels and sound doctrine, and for his upright and Christian conduct at all times; and that we do hereby express our confidence in him as a brother, and that we heartily indorse his teachings while among us; that we present him with a copy of this resolution, and it be spread on the minutes. Adjourned to meet the last Saturday and Sunday in June, 1907.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To Saints of Little Sioux District, Iowa: We take this method of thanking the Saints of the above named district for their efforts whereby 1906 was made the "banner year" financially, in this district's history, and to the scattered members in Canada, Idaho, Missouri, and other States that assisted in making it so. We not only take pride in greater amount of moneys received, but believe it to be a spiritual index as well. The first fifteen days of 1907 gives us forty names enrolled for nearly $500 in tithes. So let us begin early and "stay late" to make 1907 even better. Our sub-agents of branches are S. B. Kibler, Woodbine; Dr. C. S. Kennedy, Logan; C. F. Pratt, Missouri Valley; J. P. Garner, Mondamin; G. M. Scott, Little Sioux; J. Vernon Newberry, Sioux City; Joseph W. Lane, Pisgah; E. R. Outhouse, Moorhead; Bert E. Fry, Beglers Grove; Joseph Seddon, Persia. We also thank the sub-agents herewith for their kindly efforts. Yours,

MAGNOLIA, Iowa.

ALMA M. FYRANDO, Bishop's Agent.

Second Quorum of Seventy.

It will be remembered, that we had adopted the reports of our members as published with the ministerial reports, as reports to the quorum. Also, that at the last conference the provision for the further publication of such reports was dispensed with.

Also, that we, as a quorum, neglected to make any provision for further reporting.

Therefore, under these circumstances, I take the liberty of asking the brethren to send to the undersigned on March 1, a report of labor done since your report to the last General Conference. Give whole number of services attended, number of sermons preached, baptisms, confirmations, blessings of children, administrations, marriages, ordinations, etc.

We urge the brethren not to neglect this, as we wish to keep trace of the amount of work done by the quorum.

Will those who were ordained since last General Conference send me the items of their birth, baptism, and ordination to the office of seyenty, with their present permanent address.

Box 396, HOLDEN, Missouri.

H. E. MOLER, Secretary.

Should there be any locals not receiving a report blank we wish their officers to please make out and forward to the General Secretary a report of their work in the following form: Local at ..... For year beginning ..... Total enrollment ..... Number of meetings held ..... Average attendance ..... Gain ..... Loss ..... Name and address of president ..... Name and address of secretary.

Died.

TAYLOR.—Andrew Jacks Taylor was born December 23, 1833, at Logan, Hocking County, Ohio. Married to Miss Juliet Thompson, July, 26, 1857. Of this union were born five sons and five daughters. He was a kind and considerate husband and father. He joined the church in Blue Rapids, Kansas, January 25, 1877, in the pioneer days of the work there, and was even after fearless in advocating its cause. He was familiarly known as Uncle Jack. Died November 8, 1906, at Blue Rapids, Kansas. Funeral at Saints chapel; sermon by Samuel Twombly.

JOHNSTON.—Sr. Elizabeth Johnston was born in Scotland, January 1, 1836. Was married to William Johnston in 1855. Was one of the suffering band cart brigade that crossed the plains to Utah, but soon saw the error and came east to Atchison, and joined the Reorganization, and was ever a faithful follower of Christ. The last eight or nine years, she was deprived of the power of speech, but with patience bore her trials. The missionary was always welcome with her and her sons. Four sons and a daughter are left to mourn her departure with a host of friends and Saints. Died January 23, 1907, at Atchison, Kansas. Funeral from house; sermon by Samuel Twombly.

At the regular monthly business-meeting of the Lamoni Branch a committee of five was appointed to have entire charge of the arrangements for entertaining General Conference visitors. Their announcements will appear later. The names of the committee are: W. A. France, C. I. Carpenter, John Garver, Clarence Skinner, and George Hill.

The Herald Publishing House is not the only sufferer by fire. The printing establishment of the Burning Bush, a Holiness paper, published at Waukesha, Wisconsin, was entirely destroyed by fire on the morning of January 22. Nothing was saved excepting from the composing room.

The Philadelphia Enquirer refers to our Walter W. as "Rev. Walter Wayne Smith, D. D. M." We presume that Bro. Walter will take such action as the case may require.

Editorial

FOR GRACELAND.

(A synopsis of the address of the Associate Editor at the opening of Graceland College for winter term, January 2, 1907.)

Doubt no longer that the highest is the wisest and the best.—Tennyson.

I am aware that addresses of welcome and opening addresses are apt to be formal and possibly at times you are glad when the hour comes to leave the chapel. In this song-book which I have picked up at random, it is written on the flyleaf, "Graceland College; leave in the chapel." Some one has marked out one word in the last line so that it reads, "Leave the chapel." I do not know whether or not all the song-books in the chapel read according to the revised version.

At first thought it would seem more appropriate if this address were to be made by a college man; yet perhaps those who, like your speaker, never had the advantage of a college education or even a high school education, have as lively a realization as any of the value of a thorough education—this because of the odds against which they fight every day.

One of Iowa's editors, Mr. George Long, recently came into possession of a legacy, or at least a competency which leaves him independent. He is about fifty years old and has been an editor for about twenty-eight years, yet his first act after obtaining his happy release from the daily grind was to announce his intention to take a course at the State University. His deficiencies had been drilled into him so often and for so long a time that he seized the first opportunity to obtain that which in youth was denied him.

When President McLain lectured here in the Brick Church he spoke of the difficulties encountered by the pupil in the poorly equipped country school. It was my experience to be a charter member present at the founding of one of these little country schools, and I am tempted to relate some personal experiences, because they will illustrate some truths which may well be presented here.

When I was about five years old my people moved into a new country where neighbors were few; but it is the glory of the pioneer that he plants a school along with his first or second crop of corn. A school-house was builded, and in time it was equipped with a Webster's Unabridged Dictionary and a map of the United States.

The first term of school, however, was held in an unfinished room, up-stairs in my uncle's home. The school was rather a family affair. There were three scholars—I was one of the three, my cousin John was another, and his brother Will was the third. It remained that way for several years, until another cousin became of school age, and finally some neighbors moved in until at one time we had as many as eight or ten scholars.

Now permit me to relate the experiences of which I spoke. During the first term, while we were yet in my uncle's home, John and I occupied seats upon a good substantial tool-chest while Will and the teacher sat in chairs. One day John did something which he should not have done and the teacher picked him up and sat him down on the chest with what John thought was unnecessary force. He remonstrated as follows, "My father will go for you if you break his tool-chest!" John did not risk much on paternal love but he had great confidence in a carpenter's affection for his tool-chest.

That was our first but not by any means our last taste of discipline outside the family. That is one of the great missions of every school, large or small, to come between the discipline of the family and the discipline of the state and fit the child for citizenship. The school takes the favored child and teaches him that he must respect the laws which govern all members of the community.

This our first teacher had one peculiar method of encouraging cerebral activity. She would press a thimble-tipped index finger against the ball of her thumb until the tension became considerable, then she would release it and bring it into abrupt contact with the cranium of an absent-minded pupil.

The impact of that old brass thimble seemed to scatter every faculty of the mind to the four winds; and when they returned to coherency an entirely new train of thought was born. Whatever the subject of contemplation may have been it was gone for ever.

I do not know whether modern instructors would approve or condemn her methods; but I do know that she held our respect and affection and as a rule we paid heed to her requests.

I remember that one day at the noon hour John and I wandered off over the prairie toward a little lake or slough. When the hour was up the teacher rang the bell, but we were too far away to hear it, so she sent Will to tell us to return. Presently, when we were entirely ready, we returned. The teacher took us to task. She said, "Did you not hear the bell?"

We could truthfully say no, because we took good care to be out of reach of the bell.

"Well, did not Will tell you that I had sounded the bell?"

John replied, "Yes, but Will lies to us so much that we could not believe him."

There was no answering that excuse, because, though straightforward with other people, Will unfolded tales to us younger pupils that did great credit to his imagination.

That incident impressed me with the thought that it is a bad thing for one to get where he is not believed even when he tells the truth. It is a bad thing for one to get where he is not trusted even when he is trying to be honest.

I think it was during the second or third term that the school was visited by an epidemic—an epidemic of swearing. Every member was violently affected. I remember one of the first paroxysms of the disease. It was at the noon hour. One of us stumbled over a rock in the school-yard. We all three surrounded that rock and proceeded to express our opinion of it in language that should have moved a heart of stone.

I am happy to state that we recovered from that affliction—some people never recover. Pardon a little sermonizing from a preacher: We think it terrible when we hear a little child swear a horrible oath, or when we see him wrestling with a cigar or drinking beer; but he does not know any better, and let me ask you, Is it not ten times worse to see one doing these things who is older and does know better?

This incident is mentioned merely to introduce the thought that no matter how small or how large the school, no matter how young or how old the scholar, side by side with the opportunities and incentives to do good will be found the opportunities and temptations to do evil.

Here I will present what may be called my text, a line from Tennyson, "Doubt no longer that the highest is the wisest and the best." It is the province of education to so enlighten students that they may determine for themselves what is high and noble and also that they may have the force of character to choose the highest and to abide the choice. Any system of philosophy which would induce you to be content with anything below the highest is a failure.

By and by in our little school we found that we had "gone through" all the readers and spelling-books and geographies and other text-books then in vogue, and we aspired to algebra. John and I purchased a text-book on algebra, but we found that our teacher knew no more about algebra than we did. But the teacher kindly gave us an hour to study algebra by ourselves. We had the same experience with bookkeeping. And I want to say that any one who has wrestled with the mysteries of algebra and double entry without a teacher is prepared to support Graceland College, or any other institution which will supply teachers for those who wish to be taught.

It is written that on a certain occasion Philip, the preacher, overtook a man who was reading the Bible, or a part of what is now the Bible, and Philip asked him, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" The man replied, "How can I, except some man should guide me?" That is the mission of teachers, to guide those who are seeking knowledge. If they really fill their position they are men sent of God and can aspire to something higher than a salary or a reputation.

A great part of the value of school life is in this association with teachers and with fellow students and in the experiences of school life. One might memorize rules and read text-books by himself but he would miss many valuable lessons that are learned even in the smallest country school; and if there how much more in a college or university.

But permit me to suggest the thought that a student need not limit his association to his little circle of school fellows. The idea is expressed in modern revelation that men should seek learning "even by study and also by faith." That is a correct and true principle. The one who seeks learning should co-operate with the Being who created those things which are the subjects of his investigation and study.

One man with whom I am acquainted, and who for a time was principal of a large school, told me that when he was laying the foundation of his education he had great difficulty in the study of language. He was deficient in grammar. He did his best to understand the theory of language but he could not, and his future as a student and a prospective teacher seemed about to be ruined by that one deficiency. Other studies were easy. But he took that matter to God in prayer and a flood of light seemed to illuminate his work so that he had no further trouble in that line. If I am not mistaken he secured a better grade in that study than in any of the others that had seemed so easy.

In speaking of faith I do not refer alone to faith in God but I would also include faith in the things which God stands for. If we examine the life history of those great statesmen, artists, warriors, poets, historians, and orators who are remembered and loved because they did good in the world, we will find that each one of them had faith in some one or more of the great principles of truth. They may not have subscribed to any creed and they may not have been church-members, they may not even have made any public profession of faith in God, but they did have faith in some great truths, and that faith made them great. Cynics, skeptics, doubters never have been of permanent service in the world. Christ himself was the perfect teacher because of his faith in principles of right. For instance, he believed that the present system of every man's hand being pitted against his neighbor should be replaced by a system of every man loving and helping his neighbor—he had such faith in that truth that he was willing to give his life to teach it.

We must not however neglect study under the impression that some higher power will come to our aid in the hour of need and miraculously fill our minds with a knowledge of facts that we might long before have made our own by observation and investigation.

It requires work to get an education; and more than that the education when obtained simply fits one for more work. It is not the object of education to fit men for lives of ease but rather for lives of toil and usefulness. No work can be done without an education. We can not even dig a ditch without learning how. On the other hand the old idea that the world owes any man a living is a fraud; and if every man subscribed to that doctrine the world soon would be a vagabond, without visible means of support.

Returning now to our theme: Young men and women who are about to start in life are often taught false ideals. The world says, "Get money! Get it honestly if you can; but get money!" We are told that one can not succeed in business and be strictly honest. That he can not have a good time and be strictly moral. That one must deviate a little to right and left. All these are teachings that are far, far below the highest. If you have given them any credence, then "Doubt no longer that the highest is the wisest and the best."

May God bless Graceland, and may those who study here aspire to high ideals; may they be satisfied with nothing lower than the highest.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

President Smith reports that the dedicatory services in Philadelphia, January 27, passed off pleasantly and successfully and that he is enjoying good health.

The Associate Editor is free once more. Quarantine for scarlet fever seems to be one of the editorial privileges (?) as it is not many months since the Senior Editor was in quarantine. It does not seem necessary to add anything to what was written on the subject at that time.

The insurance adjusters have allowed the claim of the Herald Publishing House, in full—ten thousand dollars.

Correspondents have expressed considerable interest in the "Elders' Note-Book." It will be resumed in the next number of the HERALD. We have another department in mind which will appear soon, intended especially for investigators. We intend to make the HERALD worth your money and you can help the Publishing House by subscribing for it for yourself and your neighbors.

People at a distance can hardly imagine the difficulties which the Business Manager and the HERALD force generally have met and to a great extent overcome during the past few weeks; but happily affairs are beginning to be adjusted at the expense of patience and hard work so that the work can be done with more order and ease.

The HERALD Editors and the Church Secretary occupy in two excellent rooms over B. D. Fleet's store. Bro. Fleet very generously loans these rooms free of charge. Many such favors have been bestowed upon the HERALD, not the least of them coming from the Lamoni Chronicle, where a temporary home was found for the homeless.

Numbers of cash donations toward the rebuilding of the HERALD Office have been received. These are appreciated as expressive of a desire to be of immediate help. But it should be remembered that the Herald Publishing House is a business concern which places several products on the market. The best way to help is to buy those products. Get subscribers for the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves.

The "Wailing-Place of the Jews," the rock-walled inclosure in Jerusalem, where Jews from every land gather to bewail their national decay, was visited by Elder Paul Hanson, who describes it in the February number of Autumn Leaves. An excellent photograph of the scene as he saw it, is reproduced with the article. You can help the Herald Publishing House by signing for Autumn Leaves. Your neighbors will enjoy reading it.

At the Sunday afternoon sacrament-meeting in Lamoni, February 3, a very interesting and spiritual prophecy was given through President John Smith. The Saints were told that God had planted the work in Lamoni and that he would still care for it if they would continue faithful.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

A young man by the name of Jack Mason is reported fatally injured in a boxing-match held in the gymnasium of the parish house of St. Bartholomew Church (Episcopal) New York City. This is a very fashionable church and the affair has created a scandal.

The Chicago Record-Herald for January 30 states that the Jewish population of Jerusalem has doubled during the past twenty-five years. The Zionsfreund, a German-Jewish publication, in a recent issue stated that fully one third of the soil of Palestine is again in Jewish hands.

The Chicago Federation of Labor has declared a boycott of the Methodist Book Concern, the reason as stated by the Northwestern Christian Advocate being that the managers of the Western Methodist Book Concern, at Chicago, have refused to discharge nonunion men.

The Senate will vote on the Smoot case February 20, at four o'clock in the afternoon.

It is reported that there are fifteen thousand cases of scarlet fever and diphtheria in the city of Chicago.

Persistent rumors of impending war between Japan and the United States have held the public ear during the week. The trouble arose over the exclusion of Japanese children from the public schools of San Francisco.

News From Branches

[Correspondents with whom we have arranged for regular reports will please remember the dates assigned them. We are again getting in shape to handle correspondence. Others to whom we have not written who have interesting items to report from live branches will find a welcome. With the exception of Lamoni and Independence, branches should not report oftener than once each month. State the news briefly and do not attempt to give a schedule of who preached and who assisted or was in charge excepting in the case of meetings of unusual importance.]

DES MOINES, IOWA.

The loss to the church, recently sustained through the burning of the HERALD Office, is keenly felt by the Des Moines branch; but we believe through a united effort and much sacrifice that a larger and better printing-office may be erected.

Bro. Heman Hale Smith spent Sunday, January 6, in Des Moines. We were glad to have him with us.

Bro. M. T. Jamison and wife spent a few days visiting relatives here during the holidays.

At the regular quarterly business-meeting, held January 14, the following officers were elected: Bro. E. O. Clark, president; J. R. Epperson, branch priest; George Davis, teacher; Fred Chandler, deacon; Ray Chandler, clerk; Pearl Shannon, organist.

Bro. Charles Church of Lamoni, and Sr. Doss of Perry, Iowa, were with us Sunday, January 20.

A series of meetings was held at Youngstown, Iowa, January 20 to 27, conducted by Bro. J. F. Mintun. Also, a Sunday-school was organized there January 27 by the superintendent of the Des Moines School, Sr. Hattie Clark. IRENE F. REED.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

[Bro. Fred H. Johnson furnishes us the following transcript of two prophecies; both we understand being given at meetings of the Central Branch, in Chicago. Though not from the regular (Continued on page 101.)

THE YEAR'S WORK.

THE OLD AND NEW.

The year nineteen hundred and six has now passed into history. What we have done, and what we have failed to do of duty, are parts of that history, and by this each must "stand or fall" when the rewards are made up, according to the part he has performed in making this record.

Each ought to feel grateful in the fact that he will not be called upon to answer for the sins of omission or commission of any of his fellows, unless perchance his own bad or neglectful work has been the means of dissuading others from duty; and all ought to have sufficient charity for others to make us feel doubly gratified in the fact, that no one else will have to answer for the sins of omission or commission which we have done, neither are any permitted to reap the reward of others' labors; for it is well written: "So then every one of us shall give an account of himself to God."

The apostle wrote to the saints at Corinth, "For we are laborers together with God." The language is just as applicable to Saints today. . Not only applicable, but we are directly instructed:

"ALL are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that toileth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all."—Doctrine and Covenants 119:8.

It is right then to inquire what have we done which must have place upon the record of the year just passed? What is better, however, is that each make the inquiry of himself and answer it to himself, "What have I done that the record will unfold?" We shall be measured by our works. It is further written: "And every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor." Opportunities to help as laborers in the cause of Christ have, the past year, been most abundant.

First: The general work has been as prominently and urgently before us as it was before our fathers. The gospel messenger is in home and foreign fields. His work is difficult and his requirements much. To accomplish the task before him he must have implements of warfare; and all may aid, even in this proselyting work, and receive due reward. The ready means of communication in the world to-day brings the chief place of business, and the foreign and home missionaries, in close touch. Members and ministers are near together wherever they are in the world. It is a day and time when "The law may go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem," and reach all. Are we helping in this labor? There is not only opportunity but necessity for all to help. How is the record of each one?

Second: Special opportunity was afforded the Saints during the past year to enter upon the special benevolent work of caring for the unfortunate, the sick and afflicted, by the erection of a sanitarium, a place for the proper watch care, comfort, treatment, and blessing of those needing godly surroundings. It is fitly spoken of in the divine command as "a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted." Efforts have been made to prepare and enter upon this work, but the majority of Saints, as yet, have failed to answer to this direct appeal.

There is nothing more needed for the good and welfare of the poor and helpless of the church to-day than this institution; our Saints' Home is crowded with patients whose place is the hospital or sanitarium. It is an injustice to these sick and afflicted ones to keep them in a home where we lack equipment and accommodations and can not give them the needed assistance; and it is an injustice to the aged worthy Saints at the home to be crowded by so many sick, as to unfit the home for a home for them. There are very few private families who would enjoy one sick and helpless person brought in among them to be cared for; but what of making a hospital of the home we have prepared for the aged worthy homeless of the Lord's people?

We are directed touching the work of building the sanitarium as follows:

"This should be done as soon as it is found to be practicable, and without unnecessary delay."—Doctrine and Covenants 127:1.

This instruction was accepted by the church and duly honored as a part of the law of Christ, and therefore is of as much binding force upon those to whom it is addressed as any other command given. Why should there then be found one who is slow or negligent in the performance of the enjoined duty to help?

It may be said by some that it is not so important as some other things. But such a position reflects upon Christ who gave the law. After that we have decided, as in this case, that it is the word of God, our work of discrimination ceases. If not so, no law which he has given to the human family could serve its purpose. Upon this the apostle James well taught: "But if thou judgest the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge."—James 4:11.

Again: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."—Ibid., 2:10.

We can not justly say that we will comply with the law of repentance, but not with that of baptism because we deem it nonessential; and if this is true with one part of the law of Christ, it is also true of every other. When we set ourselves up as judges of the law and brush some part of it aside as being nonessential, we turn down the Law-giver. Such an assumption can not fail of the severest condemnation. It is quite common for the elders to teach as did Jesus: "Man shall not live by bread alone but by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God." Is it not well that we practice what we preach?

Some say, I know, that they do not care for the sanitarium, but prefer to give to the children's home, or something else. But the Lord gave the preference in time of building to the sanitarium; and certainly there is ten times the demand for the sanitarium to-day that there is for the children's home. It will be better for us to drop the sentiment for a while, and meet our obligations as they become due; not select from a divine injunction what we will do and claim this is a fulfilling of the law. A full compliance will bring to us commendation of the Master, and we shall all be gainers by a hearty obedience to the law.

There is now paid in for the sanitarium about seven thousand dollars ($7,000.00); but it is not sufficient for the building, heating, furnishing and equipping of the institution. An opportunity has been given to all to labor in this work. Will all improve it? Please let us hear from all, and may the Lord bless all.

Third: The children's home has its place and is also known in the divine will expressed to us; it, too, will soon be fully provided for; but let us not neglect more urgent work and duty as set forth in the law either in the general work of tithes and offerings, or the sanitarium, for this work. We should always bear in mind that "the tithe is the Lord's." No one can properly divert this from its divinely directed use and application, but all must render to the Lord that which is his own. Outside of this, however, we should freely sacrifice to aid the cause of Christ; he gave all for us; and thus we may show that we are indeed "laborers together with God" in planting and building in his house.

Fourth: While we contemplate upon the fact that one year has passed and its deeds are graven and sealed according as each has wrought, it is well that we awaken to another fact—a new year is before us; the Lord is gracious, and if we have failed in the past, another opportunity has been opened to us and we may now, as wise children, move forward to retrieve to an extent, the failures of the past, and through the divine clemency enrich our lives with a year of strenuous labor and devotion to the cause of humanity and the truth.

It may be inquired by some, "Will we be called upon to help in something else?" "Is there something else to do?" But think for a moment; are there any who want to escape helping along the work of the Lord? Are there any who would like to have the Master say to them: "There is nothing more in which you can help"? Do we indeed ever feel so selfish as to wish we were relieved of the labor essential to a live gospel life, that we might devote all our service to ourselves in a worldly way? I do hope and pray that there is not to be found one such among all the Lord's people. The efforts of the Saints the past few years have been such as to move us along to the accomplishment of some things, and to better prepare us for entering upon the task of others.

The general missionary work has been carried forward and the families of missionaries and the necessitous duly provided.

For the worthy aged and homeless a good home has been prepared so none need suffer.

An institution of learning has been provided where the young may be properly instructed and directed until they are fully fitted and qualified for the accomplishment of the work before them in life.

Due efforts are being urged to furnish an institution for the unfortunate sick and afflicted.

The children's home is being rapidly provided for so that the homeless, needy orphans shall have due watchcare and proper advantages in life.

All this is meritorious and highly commendable if the work has been well done and placed upon a stable, living basis. But the gospel work does not stop here. On the contrary it must enter every home and continue its mission of leveling distinctions and administering to the necessitous, until every heart is gladdened, and every soul made free.

As due preparation has been necessary to the placing these institutions in a helpful condition, so will hopeful, courageous, energetic sacrificing work be necessary to the accomplishment of this further undertaking.

The question is often propounded to the Bishopric, "Why does not the church start some co-operative business for the benefit of its members to help them along?"

What the church is actually doing in the work of true co-operation the questioners seem to have entirely lost sight of, on account, doubtless, of the deceptive glasses through which they view things. An undue credence in the brilliant advertising schemes sent out over the country, colors the vision, and failing to give proper thought to the proposition, the conclusion is hastily reached that many of these would be a good thing by which to enrich the church.

A brother forwarding the advertisements of one of these, under the title of "League of American Homesteads," enquires, "Why would this not be a good plan for the church?" The answer is, for several reasons. A sufficient one is, this "League" is not incorporated along lines that are harmonious with the rules by which Christ directed his people to work. In some ways its plans are more fanciful than practicable, and but few if any who enter into it are ever likely to realize their fond expectations.

It is just as essential that the church perform its work in the manner directed in the law as that the work be done at all. Christ could not accept the work if performed by any other rule than that which he has laid down. To work then in the way often suggested, in the usual schemes of co-operation, would necessarily end in failure; and the Saints may prove sufficiently the truth of this assertion by watching the career of many such undertakings.

Failure and disaster in financial ventures in the world are common, and from every section, but they are soon forgotten. This can not be true with the church. The church must build upon such lines that its work will stand for ever. "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Jesus.

Whatever we do, then, must be in pursuance of such divine principles as will conduce to the formation of that high and noble character which will stand triumphant in the time when "All things which can be shaken shall be shaken, that those things which can not be shaken may remain."

Temporary and experimental building will not answer in God's work. We should not deceive ourselves, neither permit others to deceive us. The only true guide is "the law and the testimony."

It is a worthy object to organize an association in the interest of certain classes, giving them advantages in obtaining employment, homes, and wealth. But it is a much more worthy one to pursue the heaven-born rule that comprises in its bounds of beneficence all classes and conditions. "Therefore, in all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."

Wealth and a home of the finest fittings obtained outside of this principle renders the life a failure; but a life of toil and labor in strict harmony with this rule, although at the loss of home and all worldly riches, makes of the life the grandest possible success. It is not so much then what a person has, as it is the course pursued in getting it, that will weigh most when tried in the balances of true success.

In the work of the church due provision is made to meet the wants and needs of every faithful follower of the Lord, and answering to these demands in this present life as well as upon the other side; but we have been slow to enter upon the work outlined; being more ready to trust the numerous get-rich-quick schemes to meet the emergencies of life than the plain directions furnished in the law of Christ.

The Lord has promised to bless and make his people rich if they fail not to continue their trust in him, abiding in his law; but outside of duty and a righteous life there is no promise.

The preparation enjoined for the benefit of the Saints in our time has a simple beginning. Means must be gathered up for the purchase of lands, establishing industries, arranging stewardships, and providing inheritances. The law is clearly before us, and if we can not see how that all shall be accomplished at once we should take the first step.

A too prevalent idea among the Saints is that the first step is to gather to the land of Zion. This is incorrect. The first step is to make preparation to gather. "Let all things be prepared before hand." And if the Saints in all the world will abide in this there will not be so many disappointments and trials of faith as to-day.

Let the preparation be made and let all help to make it; then every brother and every sister will be made satisfied when they do come.

The law provides that the monies of the Saints shall be sent to the bishop to purchase the lands and thus make provision for the people.

The books are open for this purpose, and if any are found who are bold enough to say it can not be done, let us tell them that we shall try. It is the Lord's work and there are not more obstacles in the way of accomplishment of this than there are in preaching the gospel to all the world, and he is doing this. With loyal Saints the other will be much more quickly done. With a courageous, faithful response from every member and helper in the Lord's work, the work will be fully performed.

LETTER AND REPLY.

Joel H. A——, of Goshen, Indiana, is a Baptist minister (superannuated) and an attorney at law, formerly editor of an anti-secrecy paper, to whom I once sent a Book of Mormon. He says in his letter:

"My Dear Brother in Christ: Trusting that you still linger on the shores of mortality, I write to you. . . . I kept as a treasure the Bible you gave me. We are no doubt very near the end, or the coming of Christ. There are but a few here that were here when the stars fell, November, 1833. I was then seven years old. Christ said: This generation, that is, the generation that was here when the stars fell shall not have passed away till the son of man come. Every prophecy is fulfilled. Let me hear if you still remain."

MAGNOLIA, Iowa, July 27, 1905

JOEL H. A.—, Goshen, Indiana:—Yes, dear brother, I still linger on the shores of mortality, being sixty-six years of age. I received your letter a few days ago. I took it over for Bro. and Sr. Lockling to read.

You say, "I kept as a treasure the Bible you gave me." I suppose you mean the Book of Mormon, which may be called the Bible of America, as the Old and New Testament may be called the Bible of Palestine or of the Jews. The world has called the Book of Mormon the "Golden Bible," because it claimed to be translated from golden plates. However, I am glad you have kept it, and I can not help wishing you would read it carefully and prayerfully, laying aside the prejudice you may feel from false reports concerning its origin, and the humble instrument chosen by the Lord through whom to bring it forth. For "not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God has chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise," etc. 1 Corinthians 1:26, 27). And in this case the Lord acted like himself by choosing the weak and unlearned to do his work. If you will do as I have suggested, asking the Lord if it be true, I believe he will manifest its truth to you, by his Spirit. For he has promised to do that with those who really and earnestly wish to know of its truth, and will ask in faith. And the promise is also recorded in John 7:17, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."

The Book of Mormon will tell you many things to take place in our day and in the near future, connected with the great latter-day work of the Father and the coming of Christ, which, as you say, is near at hand. That book will make plain many prophecies of the Bible, and also the gospel and doctrine of Christ. That book is indeed a treasure worth keeping, and may be laid side by side with the Jewish scriptures; for they go hand in hand, and one substantiates the truth of the other. And they will go together in the Lord's latter-day work to confound false doctrine and establish the truth. The Book of Mormon is a history of ancient America, and an account of God's dealings with the former people of this land, and a sacred record of his words to them through prophecy and inspired men that he raised up among them; and by such it was written and handed down from generation to generation. And it contains the gospel of Christ in plainness, just as the Bible is the sacred record of a small part of the Eastern Continent and an account of the Lord's words to, and his dealings with the people of ancient Palestine.

The Book of Mormon was designed to go from the Gentiles to the (as yet) untutored and simple natives of this land—the Lamanites or "Indians," as they were mistakenly called, as well as for the poor and meek of the earth in general; and it is worded in simple language for their better understanding. It will show to the Indians who their forefathers were, and how they came to this land from Jerusalem six hundred years before Christ, and that they are descendants of a chosen race, and what the promise is to Israel, and that this is their promised land.

The golden plates on which this sacred record was engraved, and from which it was translated in 1830, were hidden up in the earth for safe preservation, by the Lord's command, some four hundred years after Christ, when the people had turned to wickedness and would have destroyed them. In 1830, the time having come for the Lord's preparatory work to begin, its hiding place was revealed by an angel of God, and it was translated by his (God's) gift and power, and published to the world; and the true Church of Christ was set up and organized as of old, with prophets, and apostles, etc., led by inspiration, Christ being the chief corner-stone. See Ephesians 2:20, also 4:11-14, showing that these inspired offices and gifts were for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ," and that they were intended to remain "'till we all come in the unity of the faith, and the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ," that we may not be deceived by false winds of doctrine. And we all know that that time of unity and perfect knowledge has not yet been reached, and that therefore if these things (inspired gifts and offices) are not found in the churches they are done away by apostasy, and not by the will of God nor because they were no longer needed.

The gospel, as preached by Christ and the early apostles, and as found in the New Testament, is now being preached to warn the world of impending destruction by fire, and to call out the righteous from mystery Babylon, that they may not be partakers of her sins, nor receive of her plagues. (See Revelation 18:4.) This is a day of warning, and not of many words; as it (also) was in the days of Noah, a "preacher of righteousness," who warned the world of coming destruction by a flood for one hundred and twenty years. And unless the days are shortened for the elect's sake, it is probable that the world will now be warned for an equal length of time—if so, one hundred years from the beginning of the latter-day work in 1830 would reach down to 1930, (and one hundred and twenty years to 1950,) as approximating to the coming of Christ. There is a great deal of prophecy yet to be fulfilled, as I view it, and many great and wonderful events are yet to take place, connected with the gathering home of literal Israel to their ancient promised lands and the downfall of mystery Babylon, or all churches and combinations built up by man and the Devil for power and gain and the vain things of the world.

The Jews are to be gathered back to Jerusalem. Many of them have already gathered there. The Jews are now lenders and not borrowers. They hold much of the money of the world. After they have gathered out of the nations with their gold, armies will go up to Jerusalem to "take a spoil." If I have got things together right, they will for a long time be baffled in their effort (to take Jerusalem) by the power of God possessed by two prophets, called in Revelation the "two witnesses," who will have the same miraculous power as Moses and Elijah. And their witness and testimony for the truth will condemn the world. These two prophets will finally be killed, and the wicked world will rejoice over them for three days and a half, while their bodies will lay unburied in the streets. Then their bodies will be resurrected, and Christ will come to the rescue of his people. His feet will again stand upon the Mount of Olives at Jerusalem, from which he ascended. The Jews will behold the scars in his hands, and will know that it is the Jesus that they rejected and crucified. Then will be a time of mourning among them.

But before that time, as I suppose, the "lost tribes" of Israel will come forth from their long hiding-place where the Lord has taken them, in the far north, as I suppose, led by a prophet, as Israel was led out of Egypt, and miracles will be manifested in their behalf. Through the power of God the barriers of ice will be broken down and a highway be cast up in the sea.

Before they come forth, there will be great destruction among the wicked, Gentile world, by the judgments of God visited on them, by fire, tempests, storms, and lightning, and by earthquakes, and by bloodshed among themselves, through wars of nations, and also by the power for evil of many combinations, that are binding the tares in bundles for the burning. "Their bands are made strong." You and I have had a little experience in trying to loosen their bands. We do not know just what form or forms they may yet assume, for the end is not yet, though there is some new turn in that line nearly every day, so we can not keep track of the new forms of "trusts" and secret combinations. Even now it is difficult in some quarters for men to "buy or sell" their labor, their beef, etc., or to do business of any kind without having the "mark" or grip and sign of some "union," "trust," or other combination.

Is not this the day of the Lord's "preparation," spoken of by the prophet Nahum (2:4), when the "chariots" seem like torches and "run like the lightnings"? apparently foretelling the steam and electric cars of our day.

Because of the righteousness of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and God's promises to them, literal Israel is not cast off for ever, though trodden down by the gentiles for many generations as salt without savor. The Lord's power and favor will now return to them, and the Gentiles who reject his word and the warning now being sounded to them, will be left like salt without savor. Their power and dominion in the tents of Shem will depart. Israel will become the head, and not the tail, as they long have been, among the nations.

The American Indians are of Israel, and descendants of Abraham by way of Joseph of Egypt. We see by the blessings on the head of Joseph and his sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, that his posterity was to inherit a choice land. America is that choice land. And it will yet be restored to the American Indians, who are remnants of Joseph's posterity or the tribe of Joseph, when they shall turn to righteousness. And the curse of a dark skin, put on them because of their wickedness aforetime, will be removed, and they will become a white and delightful people. And they, assisted by those Gentiles who will accept the truth, will build up a holy city on this land, called New Jerusalem.

The Lord is a God of miracles and revelations, and he "changes not" (Malachi 3:6), but is the same "yesterday, to-day, and for ever," (Hebrews 13:8), and "with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." (James 1:17.) And when he has a work to do on earth he works through prophets as of old. For "surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." (Amos 3:7.) You believe that he is yet a God of revelations and that the day of miracles is not past. You remember how you once asked the Lord earnestly something concerning me, and that the Lord said to you by his Spirit, in answer to your prayer, "My grace is sufficient." Will you not now ask him with the same simple faith and earnestness concerning the truth of the Book of Mormon—the holy scriptures of ancient America—the "Stick of Joseph," as the Bible is the "Stick of Judah"? and whether he now has a true church on earth, set up by him in 1830, through the humble instrumentality of Joseph Smith and others whom he called to that work, and whom he led by the inspiration of his spirit; and of which church the Reorganized church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is a continuation in doctrine and organization, with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa; and propagating the same "principles of the doctrine of Christ" as Jesus and his apostles taught and ministered in of old, and as mentioned in Hebrews 6:1, 2. The church with headquarters in Utah, with its polygamy and other evil doctrines and practices, is the apostacy from the truth as publicly taught by Joseph Smith during all his lifetime and as now held and taught by the Reorganized Church, over which the oldest son of Joseph Smith has for over forty years been presiding elder. Neither the widow of Joseph Smith nor any of his sons followed Brigham Young nor accepted his evil doctrines.

As you believe, so do we, that the generation in which the latter-day work and its signs began to appear will not all have passed away till the coming of Christ. But as we frequently read of persons one hundred years old and over, the days of warning to the world may be prolonged for a hundred years, or more, as in the days of Noah. But of that day and hour knoweth no man. I know I am not prepared for it, being far from what I should be spiritually.

The book of golden plates, from the unsealed part of which the Book of Mormon was translated by Joseph Smith by the gift and power of God, contains a revelation from the beginning down to the end of the world; but that part of the book of plates was sealed by the will and direction of God, and is not to come forth to the world in the days of wickedness, till there is a people prepared and worthy to receive it,—the Book of Mormon being but a small part of the entire contents of the book of plates. Thus the Book of Mormon is "the words of a book that is sealed," spoken of in Isaiah 27:11, 12. And Joseph Smith is the one spoken of in Isaiah 27:12 as "him that is not learned," to whom "the book that is sealed" was delivered, when the Lord should proceed to do his own work in his own way, and not by the learning of men. Thus you can understand why the book of plates, being sacred because of its contents yet to come forth, had to be carefully preserved, and was only viewed by a chosen few, as the Lord directed,—whose testimony is found on the first page of the Book of Mormon,—and after the Book of Mormon was translated from it, was delivered back for sale keeping into the hands of the angel Moroni, by whom its whereabouts had been revealed.

I have tried to outline briefly here a few things as I understand and view them, without having time to look up and review the scriptures connected with them, (as we are crowded with work), thinking that your familiarity with scripture would enable you to judge safely of these things, and would suggest to your mind wherein I may have erred in my conclusion.

You know that after the primitive Christian church had so far apostatized or fallen away from the truth as to lose the spirit and its gifts and manifestations which Christ in his last commission said, "shall follow them that believe," (Mark 16:15, 18), the claim and pretense was put forth that it was because they were no longer needed, and because the day of miracle and revelation was past, to justify its continued existence in its fallen and barren condition. And in order to make this position appear consistent, the Bible prophecies pointing to future miracles and prophets, and many other scripture passages, had to be spiritualized, or given a "private interpretation," (2 Peter 1:20), or a meaning not generally found or understood in its simple words by the common-sense reader. Thus for instance, the "two witnesses" of John's revelation (chapter 11) were said to mean the Old and New Testaments, etc., etc.

Yours truly for truth,

C. W. LAMB.

"THE REORGANIZED CHURCH VS. SALVATION FOR THE DEAD."

LAMONI, Iowa, January 22, 1907.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH,—

Resuming the consideration of the booklet of Joseph F. Smith, Junior, entitled, "The Reorganized Church vs. Salvation for the dead," I invite your attention to a foot-note on page 12 where Mr. Smith quotes a part of your testimony in the Temple Lot Suit, and tries to make it to appear that you denied in toto any ordination by your father as his successor. Had Mr. Smith exercised sufficient fairness, however, and quoted the whole statement, your meaning would have been plain, and exactly in harmony with what you have heretofore stated as I have understood. Your language is quoted upon page 79 of Plaintiff's Abstract, and is as follows:

No, sir, I did not state that I was ordained by my father; I did not make that statement. I was not ordained by my father as his successor; according to my understanding of the word Ordain, I was not. I was blessed by him and designated, well, in a sense chosen, and the word Ordained could not be applied in any other sense than by the act of pointing out or indicating only, and he indicated or designated me as his successor.

This is in harmony with the statement made by you as early as October 1, 1868. In an editorial in the SAINT'S HERALD for that date, you wrote as follows:

We were baptized into the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, by Joseph Smith, in 1843; confirmed by A. W. Babbitt and another, at a meeting of the church, held in front of the temple at Nauvoo. This baptism we believe to have been valid, and a legal act of admission to the church or body of Christ.

The gospel under the preaching of which we were born of water and the Spirit, was the same as that taught at the time we were born of the flesh in 1832, hence we are frank to say that we were a native born subject of the kingdom.

This gospel under the influence of which we received the love of the truth, had no polygamic principle in it; hence we have never learned to accept the latter as sacred, while the former has ever been dear.

In Liberty jail the promise and blessing of a life of usefulness to the cause of truth was pronounced upon our head, by lips tainted by dungeon damps, and by the Spirit confirmed through attesting witnesses.

This blessing has by some been called an ordination, from the usual predilection to confound names and terms.

The blessing which marked Moses as the deliverer from Egyptian bondage, was not that which Jethro pronounced upon his head.

Subsequent to our baptism in 1843, upon two occasions was the same blessing confirmed by Joseph Smith, once in the council room in the brick store on the banks of the Mississippi, of which we have not a doubt there are witnesses who would confirm the present testimony; once, in the last interview Joseph Smith held with his family before he left Nauvoo to his death. A public attestation of the same blessing was made from the stand in the grove in Nauvoo, some time prior to the murder in Carthage.

We have always felt reluctant to speak in attestation of the position as President of the church, for three reasons.

1st. Every aspirant for that position since the crime that left the church a prey to aspirants, has been loud in his defense, and has each in turn, run into vice and folly, thereby causing the cause to be evilly spoken of.

2nd. Words are but cheap, protestations are but the breath of one's lips, and wisdom is never open-mouthed, and the unsupported testimony of any man must fall.

3d. If the Lord has promised, and the work is his, the Spirit which bore testimony to it at the beginning will continue its ministrations.

The silence which in this respect we have hitherto kept, has been variously construed, according to the bias of the minds of the Saints who have been under the various circumstances attendant upon the history of the people since 1844.

In this you set forth then as now in what sense you were ordained by your father.

Mr. Smith in quoting part of your words makes it to appear that you denied any ordination of any character.

Mr. Smith takes several pages of his work in an effort to show that baptism for the dead was ordained of God and appointed to the church by revelation, which, I presume, no one will deny who has faith in the latter-day work.

On pages 17 and 18 he quotes a statement said to have been uttered by Joseph Smith the prophet, on January 20, 1844, at the southwest corner of the temple, and reported by Wilford Woodruff. As to the genuineness of this quotation we are not prepared to say; but if correct, it sustains our contention, namely, that this baptism for the dead with its attendant privileges, was not to be enjoyed outside of a temple of God. In this extract the prophet Joseph is made to say:

And I would to God that this temple was now done, that we might go into it, and go to work and improve our time, and make use of the seals while they are on earth.

The Saints have not too much time to save and redeem their dead, and gather together their living relatives, that they may be saved also, before the earth will be smitten, and the consummation decreed falls upon the world.

This certainly not only sustains our contention as stated above; but it indicates most clearly that the time when this privilege would be granted would be limited.

If the contention is correct as based on the revelation of January 19, 1841, that the full power of the priesthood was not to be revealed except in the house of the Lord, and in connection with the anointings, washings, baptisms for the dead, assemblies and memorials for sacrifice by the sons of Levi, then not only does this reflect upon the position of the Reorganization, and logically show that yourself and those connected with you have not the fullness of the priesthood; but it reflects just as forcibly upon the people of Utah; for the house of the Lord wherein these things were to be received and done was not completed as we have shown in Nauvoo. They can lay no claim to that which they declare we do not possess in this regard, unless they can establish the fact that temples have since been built by direction of the Lord and accepted of him. This they have never undertaken to do except in the book now under consideration, where in Joseph F. Smith, Jr., declares that the first commandment to them from the Lord was to build a temple to his name wherein the ordinances of salvation for the living and the dead could be performed. All the proof we have ever had presented to us is this declaration. That commandment or revelation has not been produced, and the declaration of its existence comes into conflict with the statement made by President Brigham Young, as heretofore referred to. Until some further evidence is given of the Lord's direction and action in the matter we will have to conclude that no such commandment has been received from the Lord, the declaration of Mr. Smith notwithstanding.

So far as this controversy is concerned, the whole question resolves itself into this: Were the people in Utah commanded to build temples after they arrived there? If not they had no authority to do so; for the Lord has said in the revelation referred to above when speaking of ordinances of his house, "which my people are always commanded to build unto my holy name." Hence temple-building without command from him is not acceptable to him, as we have before shown. The facts are, as shown by a retrospective view of the history:

1. Baptism for the dead is appointed of God to be performed in a house builded, dedicated, and accepted of him.

2. The people at Nauvoo were for a time permitted in the absence of such a house to perform this ordinance in the river.

3. They were given a sufficient length of time to erect a house, after which their baptisms for the dead were not to be accepted in the river.

4. They permitted this time to pass without having finished the house of the Lord.

5. It was officially announced by the Prophet that the time had lapsed.

6. A temple font was erected in the unfinished temple where some baptisms for the dead were attended to; whether accepted of the Lord or not is a question.

7. When the saints left this place all agreed that for a time the ordinance of baptism for the dead was to be suspended, or at least it was suspended in practice.

8. The people who went to Utah resumed its practice without having shown any authority for so doing, while the Reorganized Church waits for the revealed will of the Lord before assuming to practice it.

9. Mr. Joseph F. Smith, Jr., recognizes the strength of the claim of the Reorganized Church by making the statement that the people in Utah were commanded, which is in contradiction of positions heretofore taken by them; so that so far as the controversy between Mr. Smith and us is concerned, it is narrowed down to the one issue: Did the people of Utah receive the commandment Mr. Smith states they did? If so, let him bring forward the commandment authenticated properly, and present it to us, and we will consider it. Until such time as he shall produce the evidence in favor of his contention, we are justified in saying, as you, Mr. President, did say, that you knew of no "revelation or command authoritatively promulgated renewing the privilege."

There are some minor points in this booklet that might be noticed more specifically, but it is not worth the space. I therefore submit these letters to you for you to make such disposition of as you see proper; to publish or otherwise.

We might say, however, before passing it, that Mr. Smith grows quite eloquent in his exhortation to us to repent and receive the gospel and save ourselves with our dead by becoming saviors on Mount Zion, before the consummation decreed falls upon the earth, etc.

We might return the compliment by inviting him to comply with the requirements of the gospel so far as received, and to cease running without tidings, and making claims in regard to what God has done which he can not substantiate.

HEMAN C. SMITH.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Little Feet.

By Elizabeth Akers Allen.

Two little feet, so small that both may nestle
In one caressing hand;

Two tender feet upon the untried border
Of life's mysterious land;

Dimpled and soft as peach-tree blossoms
In April's fragrant days—

How can they walk among the briary tangles
Edging the world's rough ways?

These rose-white feet along the doubtful future
Must bear a woman's load;

Alas! since woman has the heavier burden,
And walks the hardest road,

Love, for awhile, will make the path before them
All dainty, smooth and fair;

Will cull away the branches; letting only
The roses blossom there.

But when the mother's watchful eyes are shrouded Away from sight of men,

And these dear feet are left without her guiding—
Who shall direct them then?

How will they be allured, betrayed, deluded—
Poor little, untaught feet!

Into what dreary mazes will they wander?
What dangers will they meet?

Will they go stumbling blindly in the darkness
Of sorrow's tearful shades?

Or find the upland slopes of peace and beauty,
Whose sunlight never fades?

Will they go tolling up ambition's summit
The common world above?

Or, in some nameless vale, securely sheltered,
Walk side by side with Love?

Some feet there be which walk life's track unwounded,
Which find but pleasant ways;

Some hearts there be to which this life is only
A round of happy days.

But they are few. Far more there be who wander
Without a hope or friend;

Who find their journey full of pains and losses,
And long to reach the end.

How shall it be with her—the tender stranger,
 Fair-faced and gentle-eyed,
 Before whose unstained feet the world's rough highway
 Stretches so rude and wide?
 Ah! who may read the future? For our darling
 We crave all blessings sweet,
 And pray that He who feeds the crying ravens
 Will guide the baby's feet.

Among Our Letters.

It is not always unmingled pleasure which comes to us in the perusal of letters, some are perplexing, some are saddening, while others make upon us demands so insistent that every nerve, for the time being, is strung to the utmost tension and we wish for nothing so much as for solitude and quiet in which to look squarely in the face the problems they have presented.

But there are others—and blessed be the loving hearts which have dictated them and the hands which have penned them—which come to us as benedictions from heavenly sources—as rest to the weary or the overflowing cup from a cool fountain to him who is parched with thirst. Many such have come to us during the twenty or more years that we have edited this column in our church paper, and never do we remember having read one such when our heart has not been bowed—melted as it were within us—with an overflowing sense of gratitude that we were permitted to enter into the labors of those who through all the centuries have been striving to lift mankind to a higher level and to labor as well as to pray for the coming of his kingdom.

We can not but hope that in the present crisis of our publishing interests every member of the church will feel a largely awakened interest as to the immediate future. In time we all expect to see our publishing house rebuilt. Not only this, but we expect to see it better furnished and equipped for the work it has in hand than ever it has been before. In time—yes, but what are you and I doing to hasten this time?

To the readers of this column we have already had something to say about sacrifice. We believe the scriptures—the word of God—and because we believe them we also believe that the time is coming when the people of God will be gathered unto Him, and we also believe (because we find it in his word) that this people who are gathered will have made a covenant with him by sacrifice.

Looking upon his people and realizing to the fullest extent the great need of sacrifice upon the part of those called to be co-laborers with him in the redemption of mankind, the Lord commanded certain works to be done, a building for the relief of pain and suffering and one for the proper care and training of homeless children. In order to build and establish these, the church has neither to incur debt nor cripple the fund for spreading the gospel. One day last week there came to our table the following list of names and amounts, which had evidently been—in a measure at least—incited by the appeals in this column. It is only just to say that our young and energetic sister, Estella Wight, was the moving spirit in this. But the question comes: If one could do so much as this, and she one of those whose days are filled with the labor of bread-winning and many hours of the night given to gratuitous work for our children's paper, what is there to prevent hundreds of others from doing likewise? What is there to prevent our young men, whose opportunities are greater, from doing more than this? Think you that any dollar, any penny of this will ever be missed? Never!

But now in the midst of our efforts to establish a sanitarium for the afflicted and a home for the homeless little ones, comes the entire destruction of our publishing house and bindery. Saints, do you understand the full meaning of this? Do you know what our church publications are doing for you, for the work; and if so are you willing to stand by and see their usefulness crippled while refusing to lend a helping hand? Are you willing to do even worse than this—raise your voice among those who cry "it will be rebuilt," and yet fail to contribute a dollar for the purpose? Truly we are persuaded better things than this of each one who has taken upon himself or herself the name of "Saint."

We asked if you knew what our church publications were doing for you—for the world—but we had no thought that you could answer even approximately this question. It is a question which will never be answered until the clearer light of the great hereafter shall dawn upon us, aiding our imperfect vision. But we are glad to insert just here from a letter received this week the following:

"As to the church papers: We have all of those paid up for some time. It may not be so, but I am inclined to think that the fact of our family all being in the church is partly due to our always having had the church papers. My parents have taken the HERALD since 1868; the Ensign and Autumn Leaves since the first issue; and the Hope, either by subscription or at Sunday-school since its first number. I must mention this as a point in favor of the church papers being taken by the Saints."

And when we tell you that the writer of this is one of a large family, all more or less actively engaged in sustaining church work, ought it not to carry weight with it to influence those who may even now be debating as to whether or not they can afford to subscribe for the church publications? Reverse the question, my brother, my sister, and let it be, "Can I afford to do without them?" A former question we were not equal to answering. But in the light of much observation, much personal experience, to this question, we unhesitatingly answer, "No, you can not." Our church publications are not perfect by any means, but they are helps, and great helps, to all who are "contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the Saints," and if our observation teaches us anything in regard to this matter, it teaches this: that those who through neglect or indifference cease to subscribe for or to read our church publications, soon cease also to contend for that faith.

And now in conclusion we extract a few paragraphs from another letter. This letter was not sent for publication, but as we withhold the name, we feel quite sure that the writer will not only not object to our using it, but will be glad we took the liberty of doing so, if it shall be productive of good to others—and this we fully believe it will be:

"Dear Sister Frances: After reading in the Mothers' Home Column the plea for the children's home, made up my mind to send what I could as a Christmas present for the benefit of the home; but with a family of eleven to do for, the time passed so quickly I see it will be too late for the Christmas-tide, but it will help swell the funds just the same, so send it now. I cannot tell you what help and strength I find in the Home Column, and the Daughters of Zion. For years I have turned to them for help, and have always found that which has cheered and comforted me and given me new courage to push on; and each time I read one of those splendid articles in the column, I am encouraged to try a little harder to make home what it should be. I have eight children from one year to twenty years old. They are a comfort to me, and if our home is a haven of rest and peace, a good amount of thanks or credit is due the Mothers' Home Column, and I tell you how we appreciate your every effort in the interest of the home."

In the aid of our publishing house, subscriptions to our church publications are being asked for, and with a view to aid we have taken from recent letters the above unsolicited, unexpected testimonials of their worth to others hoping to show (if you do not read them) a little of what they are doing for others and desire to do for you.

Faithfulness in Common Duties.

Faithfulness is one of the great words of our language. It indicates the standard by which everyone must be judged when we all stand before the great white throne. "Thou hast been faithful" will mean honor and glory in the presence of the universe. "Thou hast been unfaithful" will be a brand of dishonor.

A web is woven of countless threads. If the web is perfect each thread must be faultless. A life is but the aggregation of numberless acts, small and large. If the final judgment upon the whole life is to be that it is faithful, its acts, one by one, must bear the same white mark of the divine approval. The whole cannot be better than its parts. It is important that in everything we do we shall be faithful. This must include our business, our friendships, our social life and all our acts of whatever sort in our week-day life. We are too apt to think of religion as having to do only with spiritual matters; it has to do with everything.

In a passage in an interesting little book, "Hiram Golf's Religion," this truth is well illustrated. The young minister, who had just become pastor, went to talk with Hiram, the shoemaker.

"Well, Hiram," said the minister, "I have come to talk with you about the things of God. I am very glad a man can be in a humble occupation and yet be a godly man."

The shoemaker stopped and looked up at him and said: "Don't call this occupation humble."

The minister thought he had made a mistake and quickly said: "Excuse me; I did not mean to reflect on what you do for a living."

Hiram replied: "You did not hurt me, but I was afraid you might have hurt the Lord Jesus Christ. I believe the making of that shoe is just as holy a thing as your making a sermon. I believe that when I come to stand before the throne of God he is going to say, 'What kind of shoes did you make down on the earth?' and he might pick out this very pair, in order to let me look at them in the blazing light of the great white throne; and he is going to say to you, 'What kind of sermons did you make?' and you will have to show him one of your sermons.' Now, if I make better shoes than you make sermons, I will have a better place in the kingdom of God."

The old shoemaker picked up a pair of shoes which had been left by a neighbor for mending. "If that boy should catch cold some day and get pneumonia, his father, who is poor, would have a doctor bill to pay and might lose his child. I propose to mend this shoe as though my salvation depended on it. I would not like to have to meet that boy up yonder and have to tell him that he died because I was not a faithful shoemaker."

The old man was right. The religion which pleases Christ must go into everything we do. The shoemaker's lesson applies to every occupation. One man is a plumber. "Religion has nothing to do with plumbing," some one says. Ah, it has a great deal to do with it. Suppose the man does careless plumbing one day and typhoid fever or diphtheria creeps into a household, causing suffering, perhaps death and sorrow, will God take no account of the plumber's neglectful work in putting in the drainage?

Another man is a carpenter. It is the carpenter's business to build houses just as Jesus would build them if he were a carpenter again. A Christian man in this occupation is required to be a good carpenter, to do the very best work he can possibly do at every point. If he is negligent, if he does careless carpentering—imperfect, slovenly, skimped, slurred, loose-jointed, slighted carpentering, he is robbing God and leaving imperfect work where he ought to have left work wrought perfectly.

The truth has wide application. It may be applied to every life and to every piece of work that any of us do. One is engaged in a factory, one in a machine shop, one in an office, one in a shop, one on a farm, one is at school. Whatever our work is, we cannot be faithful to God unless we do it as well as we can. To slur it is to do God's work badly. To neglect it is to rob God. The affairs of the universe do not go on quite perfectly without your little work well done, if it be only blacking shoes, making a pudding, digging in the garden or dusting a room.

Thus the faithfulness which Christ requires must extend to everything in every life. "Be thou faithful" is the word which rings from heaven in every ear, in every piece of work we are set to do.—Selected.

Letter Department

Eldorado Springs, Missouri, January 21, 1907.

Editors Herald: I am sorry indeed at the calamity of the burning of the publishing house, yet feel glad you have the courage and perseverance to so promptly meet the emergency in furnishing our worthy paper to its anxious readers, leaving no gap in the volume of 1907. So I hope that in the wise providence of our merciful God, that all shall work for good, though hidden from our view at the present.

Some things must happen to prove the fidelity of the Saints, and to try them if they are willing to awaken. To make sacrifices to the work they profess to love and admire above all else.

At the present time the demand is greater for financial aid than any other in the history of the Reorganization. The demand for our sanitarium and the orphans' home, coupled with the missionaries' demands, come to all to put their shoulder to the wheel to move on this tremendous load which Bro. Alexander Smith saw some time ago. So, Bro. Smith, the old wagon is loaded now for a long pull. Praying for the triumph of all the Saints of God,

Your brother in bonds,

ABNER LLOYD.

Carmen, Oklahoma, January 22, 1907.

Editors Herald: I am now making an effort nine miles northeast of the above named place, at Prairie Valley. There are two churches here, close together—the Christian and the Methodist. Bro. James Ferguson, with whom I am staying, obtained the Methodist church for me, after having been denied the use of the Christian church. But after occupying twice, the pastor came on Sunday and vetoed the action of the trustees and we were turned out, much to the apparent chagrin and regret of the trustees; for all seem to hold Bro. Ferguson in very high esteem. But it so happened that two of the trustees were directors of the schoolhouse, just at hand, and granted us the privilege of using it. Accordingly we made announcement, and at night we had a house full of attentive listeners. Last night there was a temperance lecture at the church, and tonight we resume our effort in the schoolhouse. Not many seem to approve the action of the pastor in shutting us out. There is some mutterings over the matter on the part of the trustees. We do not know what the result will be, but are hopeful of good.

H. E. MOLER.

Warrington, Lancashire, England, January 15, 1907.

Editors Herald: Trusting space in your valuable paper will permit, I desire to send a few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard. We have, I am sure, a very promising branch at Warrington, presided over by Elder J. Schofield, with whom the editor is personally acquainted, having stayed with him during his visit to Warrington, when on tour in the British Isles Mission. He and his dear wife, Sr. Schofield, were the means in our Father's hands of bringing the "angel's message" to this town, and right well indeed do they uphold the "Living Word." They live it; and may God bless them in the noble work.

We have a branch of twenty-five members, nearly all of whom are in active service, and striving to do their duty in the midst of many trials. We were made to sorrow last year through the removal of Bro. and Sr. John Grundy. His work took him to the Manchester District. We all loved them and their two dear little ones; and they left behind them an epistle written in "flesh and blood," and they are writing another one in their new home at Monton Green, Eccles, having succeeded in winning enough converts to the truth to justify the Manchester District in organizing a branch there, and John Grundy is its lively president, and well he deserves the honor that God has placed on him.

We have an efficient Sunday-school of about thirty-two members, organized by the authority of the Manchester District and under the supervision of the Warrington Branch of the church. It is fully officered, and with such men behind it as Walter Byfield, Gilbert Gleave and William Brown, with Sr. Gleave as organist, it should bid fair to rival some of the schools of the Manchester District. They held their first annual tea and concert on December 29, 1906. It was indeed a real treat. The tea was indeed a real spread. The room was gaily decorated, thanks to the many Saints who contributed to the decorations; and last but not least the entertainment was provided chiefly by the children of the school; and under the able tuition of Bro. Andrew Fleming they succeeded in giving an entertainment of the highest order. Just a word at this point about Andrew Fleming. Twelve months ago he crossed swords with the writer on Book of Mormon propositions. He undertook to prove that Solomon Spalding had a hand in writing the Book of Mormon; so arming himself with one of the "popular encyclopedias," and a "drop of the crayture," he proceeded. After about four hours he gave up the unequal contest, and determined to investigate further. The result was that the whole family were won by the power of love. He is now a bright, intelligent, and sober man; and may he ever remain so is my prayer. We held our annual branch party on New Year's Eve, commencing at 6:30 p. m. After tea a capital entertainment was provided for us by the efforts of Bro. Gleave. At eleven o'clock we assembled for a watch-night service, and we spent the last night of the old year in thanking God for his many mercies.

We have a "mutual improvement" class belonging to the branch, and some very able papers have been given, among which are the following: "The care of the little ones," by Bro. Gleave; "The rise and fall of empire, as depicted by the prophet Daniel," by A. Fleming; "Disease," by Bro. Wm. Brown; and on January 19 we are to be favored by "Courtship and marriage," by our president, Elder John Schofield.

We have just completed the organization of a "Band of Hope" in connection with the branch. Bro. G. Gleave is the president. He is a young and energetic worker and deserves to get on. I feel confident of his ultimate triumph, if he will concentrate his power of mind on the work he has been called to. I pray for the onward progress of truth, with all that one word carries with it, and may God teach us all to say truthfully: "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God."

Respectfully yours,

WM. H. CHANDLER.

Botts, Florida, January 22, 1907.

Editor Herald: As you will likely desire to hear from these parts, I will pen you a few lines.

I have labored in quite a number of places in Alabama and Florida, and visited as many of the scattered Saints as I could, and, where I could, I pushed out in apparently new places, yet perhaps not really new, for a good many elders have been over this part of the south and for a good number of years. Some places I have visited two or three times.

I can not say the field is "white unto the harvest," as we are not gleaning many ripened sheaves. It rather looks as though many are "ripe unto destruction." Wickedness abounds to an alarming extent. Whiskey is master of many and knives and pistols are its chief instruments of cruelty. "Without are fightings, within are fears," and Death follows after. Christmas time left its tale of folly, sin and woe. And if we could only say the Saints were free from such things, we might rejoice; but how sad to hear of them giving way to the tempter and getting drunk and even fighting and using pistols. I never saw the need of advocating prohibition as I see it here. Intoxicating liquor in all its forms truly "biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder. The Saints surely should abstain from its use.

There may be times when wine and other intoxicants could be used as medicine to benefit, but there are so many chances of people being tempted to use them to their own destruction that it is best not to have them around. The Lord has said that wine and strong drink are not good for men, neither meet in the sight of your Father. (See Doctrine and Covenants 86:1.) Christ said: "My word shall judge you in the last day." Paul said, "Neither drunkards nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God."—1 Corinthians 6:10. Therefore the Saints who are seeking that kingdom should not deceive themselves, thinking that they can get drunk occasionally and have entrance in.

Part of the time I was associated in the work with E. L. Hensen and found him a pleasant co-worker: At brief intervals Bro. T. C. Kelly was with me.

On the 25th of February Bro. T. C. Kelley is to begin battle with some Goliath of the Campbellite persuasion; one Doctor Cothorn signed the propositions, but is looking for some giant to "do battle." The debate is to be held in the new Santa Rosa church, near Berrydale.

The weather has been mostly too fine thus far in the winter. Spring work began January 14, and it looked as though spring had truly come; no frost nor ice this year till this morning, when we have frost and ice. A good many days were too hot for comfort. But these cold spells here are truly killing times. The daisy, violet, haw, plum, and other blossoms are pinched; and how the hogs do suffer! Well, it is butchering time.

I hope to visit a number of scattered Saints in the south part of western Florida before the debate, and then Bro. Kelley and I expect to call on Bro. Joseph Ward in northern Arkansas and wend our way on toward home and general conference.

Yours in the faith,

J. M. STUBBART.

Los Angeles, California, January 20, 1907.

Dear Herald: The Los Angeles branch recently held a series of tent-meetings. The brethren voluntarily built seats, which can be, with little trouble and expense, used again next year. Gasoline torches were purchased and an organ rented. The young sisters came nobly to the front and distributed several hundred printed announcements at houses in the vicinity. The singers as usual lent their aid, and Bro. Williams was blessed with good liberty in presenting the message in a way to allay prejudice and prepare the soil for the seed; but at the end of a week the rainy season set in and the meetings were discontinued perforce.

The meetings were well attended and orderly, and though much difficulty was had in getting tent dried and housed again, and the expense was heavy for the short time, the Saints responded nobly, and we feel the effort was well repaid, and we have had valuable experience for next summer. We wish one or two extra speakers might be found or sent, so that the work could be systematically carried on all next summer. Believe the movement would be well supported and the city partly "warned."

At the recent quarterly business-meeting Bro. T. W. Williams was unanimously re-elected branch president for the year; subject to reappointment by General Conference. Bro. J. I. Spencer, a new and valued addition to our ranks, was chosen first priest to assist the three newly ordained priests, Bros. H. F. Backer, Hugo Adam and Frederick Adam, in their work, Brothers R. T. Cooper, Wm. Crumley, S. H. Gamber and J. H. Haxton were elected branch teachers. Bro. Wm. Shade was re-elected deacon, Bro. Nels Paulson assistant deacon.

We now have four priests and four teachers, all of whom partake of the spirit of activity which dominates the president of the branch, and good results are hoped for this year.

Bro. Williams was called to San Diego last week to preach the funeral of Sr. Pickels' husband. Sr. Pickels has been a staunch supporter of the church in San Diego, although practically alone of the faith in that city. She deserves the prayers of the Saints for direction in her affairs. May the Master give her comfort in her hour of sorrow which passeth human understanding.

The Salt Lake church has a flourishing branch there, and we wish our faith might have an exponent, too.

The Saints all feel the great loss of the HERALD Office, but the most profound and continued regrets we hear expressed is that the documents of the Church Historian's office had not been properly safeguarded in a vault. It must be most disheartening to Bro. Haman C. Smith; but we trust he will not allow discouragement to overcome his ardor.

R. T. COOPER.

Independence, Missouri, January 26, 1907.

Editors Herald: The misfortune of the burning of the HERALD office comes with sadness no doubt to all. The man that cannot be faithful when reverses come is not the true man, and the same with the church. It will not do to be untrue to our post when hardship comes. Thus we say, true Christianity is best displayed in adversity. It is a good time to test our loyalty. If our pocketbook was included in our conversion, all will be well; and judging from the past I think we will be willing still to sacrifice for the good of the cause, that has contributed so much benefit to us.

My year's experience in the Texas field has been varied. The success we have achieved can only be told by him who knows all mysteries. We have had plenty of opportunity to preach and talk the gospel. Some new ground has been gone over that from appearances has and still will result in good. The state is very large, and the labors of six missionaries together with a few local men of course has not revolutionized every town and city. I think, however, that much good has been done toward the furthering of the cause and its permanent establishment. We have some opposition, but of a nature to do the work no injury. The brethren of the missionary force as well as some of the local workers, have done well, and so far we have reported about forty-seven baptisms. Our success, however, is not to be measured wholly by this fact.

In September, in connection with Bro. B. F. Renfro, we were driven overland by Bro. John Robinson about one hundred miles to Dumont, south of Estillene, where Bro. Chas. Hand resides, who operates a small ranch. This section of Texas is a cattle country and sparsely settled; yet we had a fair hearing and interest. It was at this place that the coyotes gave us a serenade during the progress of the service; a like experience I never had before. At Vernon I formed the acquaintance of several families of Saints who seem to be striving in the gospel welfare. From there I went to San Antonio. Here I renewed the former acquaintance I had had with the Saints, and endeavored to do some good by preaching a short time to them. With Bro. D. S. Palmer, now on the missionary list, I went to Pearsall, south west of San Antonio about sixty miles. Near this place we had two very good meetings, leaving quite a number interested. One was baptized, Bro. Jerry McWhorter. At this place we were challenged for discussion by the Campbellites. Propositions were submitted and signed and a debate registered for June 1, 1907, to last fourteen sessions, on church propositions. Their man, W. F. Lemmons, is the editor of the Eye Opener, a non-progressive organ of the Campbellites, published at Hamilton, Texas.

We made a point southeast of Pearsall, twenty-five miles where Bro. and Sr. G. W. Wallis and daughter live, and did some preaching. We feel that some good was done there at least.

My association with Bro. W. H. Mannering was quite pleasant indeed. With him I labored at Katy and Patterson. At Katy the only family of Saints is that of Bro. and Sr. John Post, also their daughter, Sr. Horton. At Katy the "Apostolics" have made some headway. This sect was started about seven years ago at Topeka, Kansas, by one Parham, of recent fame in Zion City. They make a hobby on the gift of tongues. They have no organization. They are somewhat similar to the "True Followers," a sect started by John N. Burton. While preaching at Patterson we found at the homes of the two Srs. Yarbrough (whose husbands do not belong) a welcome which we will not forget. We made some endeavor to get a place for a meeting at Brookshire, but failed, largely, I think, on account of prejudice. From there I went to Hearne, by way of Galveston. The kindness of the Saints there I will ever remember. Bro. S. R. Hay and his son Johnnie, who live here, are to be commended for their interest and sacrifice in the work.

Since coming home I received a copy of the Eye Opener, and from the pen of W. F. Lemmons, the editor, is a write-up on Mormonism. It starts out by saying: "Mormonism is the greatest fraud that has ever been perpetrated upon the religious world since Mohammedanism, and Joe Smith was the greatest fraud the world has had since Mohammed. * * * Smith could see that the people could be deceived and led into believing anything. He acknowledged with a oath that he had the people fooled." This is a specimen of the slop we will have to meet June 1. This generally is a fair sample of Campbellite tactics when it comes to our history and faith. Thus occasionally is presented to their readers a digression on what they are pleased to label Mormonism. That men pose as critics, and have done so for ages, is no new thing under the sun; but when men persist in grandiloquent (?) appeal, without proof to sustain that which they are trying to down, is an unavoidable position the men who represent the faith are called upon to meet. But seldom do they make any distinction between us and the Utah Mormons, which they know to be true, but have no disposition to tell. Such doctors and divines predicate their affirmation upon their reputation: "Am I not a preacher?" "Do I not represent Christ and his gospel?" "Do I not speak where the Bible speaks?" etc. Thus in their pandering it is based upon their selfish and lowest instincts. Upon this hypothesis (of their seats in the synagogues) a mere statement from them is voucher enough for its truthfulness, and no one dare gainsay it. In too many instances we fear the people receive it in just this way. I must confess I have tried to experience a degree of patience and charity to all such, but at their display of egotistical pomposity, patience sometimes ceases to be a virtue, and we wish to occasionally schedule a few facts to set the thinking and honest people aright and draw a respectable limit, if possible, to their dishonesty and pretense in what they call right teaching. The theme of Joseph Smith and our religious polity is made to play the part of a kind of scarecrow-bogy to frighten and delude the people away from the truth. There has been no name in modern history that has been rolled over tongues with more splenatic ferocity and downright doggedness than the name of Joseph Smith. With what venom they can say the name! When anything is wanted on Joseph Smith, they start out with a muck-rake to stir over the putrid rot of their own creation. They do love to play the part of "gutter-pup." The whole lot, with few exceptions have mistaken their own noise and clatter for the beck and call of the people to swamp our position. They have fomented, spewed, and stewed to think we have the audacity to claim for Joseph Smith the direction of heaven, yet the facts of the case are still standing untouched, a monument of true integrity.

To say the least, we have presented and are perfectly willing to still hazard our interests in the arena and lime-light of investigation in honorable controversy, and accept the inevitable chances of dishonor or defeat; but when men persist to wield the dissecting knife without precision, or rush to print with hearsay evidence without chance for a respectable retaliation, or to daub the truth over with muck and filth without a chance to wash it off, is the most serious feature of their dishonesty, and thus we wish to record the gospel of our discontent and protest. Their jaundiced rhetoric is polluted indeed when it comes to their penny-a-liner on our faith and belief. Such is low-grade, contumacious deportment that glitters and makes a big noise, but registers ninety-five per cent dishonesty, intolerance, and injustice, and five per cent honesty, tolerance, justice, and brains. To say the least, it has the tincture of polluted dishonor and unfairness, and partakes of the fascinating influence of uncertainty. They created a muck-heap about seventy years ago, which they deliberately rake over to their own satisfaction every time they want something rank on our people or belief to relieve the monotony. Their flagitious motives towards us seem quite sincere at times, and they guild their reasoning with sophistical cant so beguiling some would think angels (?) had indicted it. Two things of great importance are expected of the clergy by the world, and that is common honesty and to tell the truth; but to our sorrow with some, this is lacking. Modern research and thought has brought nothing new to light of importance the last fifty years. This should cause more than a passing reflection. The old junk of ungodly and false criticism has only been rearranged and given a new name of deceive-ability.

The fact of the matter is the public has been slow to recognize the truth and mass around the ensign of God's army, but many have come, and still more are coming, and something has had to give. What has that been? Has our position wavered? No, but as the language of King Edward was when he invited the "peerless orator" to "say the jolly piece, you know, about the cross of gold," his majesty, it is said, commented thus: "Quite ripping"; just so has the truth returned freighted with its ripping vindictiveness and given the lie to pious (?) divines who have assailed Joseph Smith and this latter-day work. These religious buccaneers have assaulted the citadel of eternal truth with mud-slugs and muck-rakes and have besmeared themselves more ten-fold than the object they attacked.

They dumped their scrap-heap of antiquated ideas, and each successive generation has clawed it over with good relish without questioning its validity for diamond truth. Should their religious pedigree be called in question a howl goes up of indignant rage, that surprises the natives and can only be quelled by letting it expend and exhaust in its own sulphurous atmosphere.

All that we want is our honest dues, whether that be great or small. We do not envy any church the good they have accomplished; but we do not want any restrictive strings on us from doing good by Campbellites. We want only a square deal in every question of religion and history. Why cannot we have a chance as a church according to our abilities and worthiness without arbitrary hindrances imposed by self-appointed pharisaical teachers who divine for hire? In a few words, we want free individualism as a church the same as the rest, with credit marks for our honesty, decency, and spiritual acquirements.

With these so-called Church of Christ people the doctrine of the "survival of the fittest" is their unmistakable policy, and as it was said in the early days of their reformation: "They seek to tear down everything and build up nothing": we also say the same thing today. This "dog in the manger" policy, which snaps and growls at another, "live and let live," only too well illustrates the creed and text-book of their ostentatious religious enthusiasm. Their tomtoms have sounded to deafen the wayfarer, confusing and befogging the real issue, and thus deflecting some from the highway of right conclusion and action. It is to be expected of these noisy serenaders that they would sound some notes of facts that would be meritorious. Their deplorable plight is egregious indeed when it comes to pettifoggery and lying to attract attention. What! Have the preachers lied about the Latter Day Saints? We answer deliberately in the affirmative, without any equivocation or hesitancy. They have told falsehoods on our people, and especially Joseph Smith, and we can prove it. This may seem harsh, but it is a truth nevertheless.

They pick up a live wire when they oppose the truth, and they generally have the hot end; this is indicated by their loud howling when near us. If they could be coaxed, influenced, induced, or goaded to act fair and on the square and to always tell the truth when it comes to writing our history or expostulating on our faith and belief, it would be an accomplishment of no mean proportions to us. But on our faith, belief, and existence as the church of God and of Christ, slander, abuse and hatred are the flint and punk for the fire of their devotion.

The apparent peace-thirsty attitude of some denominations (as they advocate it) is suddenly transformed into dark, murky war-clouds when a Latter Day Saint elder comes into their community to preach. Their modesty and purr of kitten-like propensity suddenly dies away and in its place comes the bulldog growl, and loudly is barked the modern slogan of "delusion," "deceiver," "old Joe Smith," and "the Joe Book," etc., etc., when we preach the true gospel among their parishioners. The writer has seen a transformation of this character take place in more than one instance in doing missionary labor. Yes, they are men of peace, but as it was said of William Penn in dealing with the Indians for land: "He was a man of peace, but always wanted the biggest one." So it is with them.

Their hyperbolic writing and reasoning lacks sincerity and true Christian fervor when it comes to us, and by reason of its unreliability they must step over into the ranks of the fictionists. Bancroft says in his history, on page seven, after quoting twenty some odd pages of titles of authority on the Latter Day Saints: "Most of these are written in a sensational style, and for the purpose of deriving profit by pandering to a vitiated public taste, and are wholly unreliable as to facts." So long as such periodicals as the Eye Opener can "pander to vitiated public taste," and their editors get the cool cash thereby, so long as they can put on a long face (corresponding to their long coats), and write, lecture, and say false things of us and still be respectable, so long as men slander Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon, wholly predicating it on the fumes of "hot air" without the proof, they are still unregenerate, sensual, and devilish; and of course void of Christian instincts. We would like to see a little less hypocrisy and a little more Christian action, a little less cant and a little more proof as a starter, in fact a higher average of honesty, righteousness and true Americanism, and not so much portentous "braggadocia" over befuddling falsehoods, and Mother Grundy stories. We hardly think this method a satisfactory answer to us, and we insist they give us something solid that will bear assimilation. This cloak of glamor and selfishness will not portend to success and get at the facts generally. Their chimera has only gendered unjust hatred and persecution. We hope to be able to forgive if we never forget, and always be optimistic in policy so far at least as persecution is concerned.

This injustice in the literary field and from the pulpit will doubtless continue. We have no indication of its cessation immediately. Let us hope this unjust tendency will be lessened, at least that which may be given will partake of more broad-mindedness, charity, and reason, and not be flouted by injustice and pessimistic action. We are the victims of a world-wide prejudice. Popular judgment has largely been based on the strategy of those inoculated with the antipathy of religious hatred. No wonder we have been hated and persecuted when but little chance has been given for being understood.

Nearly all ages have had their martyrs. What age is exempt from sacrificing some of its noblest members? We have had to prove that we are good, the supposition always has been that we are a bad lot.

With the same propriety and authority that Mr. Lemmons in the Eye Opener has said our faith is false and to be compared as being similar to Mohammedanism, we can also make a similar comparison of his faith. If dogmatic assertion is to be accepted as proof on any matter, the same unqualified statement he applies to Joseph Smith can be reversed to apply to Alexander Campbell. If our faith and belief is a fraud, let him prove it and stop this clatter about impostures. "Prove all things," says Paul, and possibly Mr. Lemmons as well as all others who attack Joseph Smith can profit by this advice, for his scandalous diatribe like many others of its kind, has ignored facts. This policy, and those who perpetrate it, is fed and fattened like buzzards on foul carrion, such as slander, false accusation, and prejudice. Facts are easily obtainable, but this is not what they are looking for. In his over-zeal to forward the interests of his venal sheet he has offended an innocent people. We know he has falsified us, for we have faith in God and love his word. No command in the word can he or his brethren show that we have failed to reverence and obey. If from this procedure, we are to be classed with Mohammedans, then the teaching and application of God's word makes Mohammedans and not Christians. His statement about Joseph Smith "acknowledging with an oath that he had the people fooled," is not even "high-falutin humbuggery," it is silly twaddle of low rank. He might scare up a statement of this character, but from what authority? It comes from the enemy, and for the sole purpose of slandering, also to "pander to a vitiated public taste."

Some may think my letter too plain and harsh in its statements, but I do not. Should those who think so be placed on the firing-line and meet their insulting tactics, they, too, would be anxious to tell a few plain, straight-forward facts.

Hoping and praying for a better condition to obtain in the world, and the church march onward to perfection, I am,

Yours respectfully in bonds,

S. S. SMITH.

Almora, Minnesota, January 25, 1907.

Dear Herald: And never in my life until I read the letter that told me of the fire did I realize how dear you were to me; then I knew how much depended on you to bring me the news from far and near of the work I love so well, and I find I am not alone in this, but every Saint that reads the HERALD feels like I do. But when the little HERALD came bringing us full particulars and the cheerful words of the editor, we felt better. Some things were saved that were of great importance, but some just as important were lost. Well, the financial part will be easily repaired; not without sacrifice, but then we will sacrifice. I am already receiving money to help build a better HERALD Office. The Saints, some of them at least, seem anxious to give, so let us all be patient and await the time when from the ruins will arise a better and safer building.

As I have not written to the HERALD this year, a few words about conditions and work here will be of interest.

Bro. E. F. Robinson and self worked together this year in this field. After the reunion in June, we began tent-work, but rain and other causes combined soon put a stop to tent-work. Freight rates are so high that it is no use trying to ship a tent around, as they will simply eat it up. Then we went wherever we could find work; and I must say we have found but little interest anywhere this year, only with the Saints either in new places or old. I never have met just such conditions. Religion seems to be the last thing thought of up here. The dance, a show, or a summer resort generally gets the crowd; in the city or country just the same; pleasure and amusement first. If there is no place else to go, some will come to meeting. And since winter has set in, there has been some excuse for not going to meeting. Weather cold, snow from two to three feet deep, making it almost impossible even for the Saints to get to meeting. Teams could not be left to stand out. (If Bro. Fred M. sees this he will know that mosquitos are not biting up here now.) Only thirty below this morning. No trains for forty-eight hours. None reported yet. I expect to leave for Iowa when I can get a train, as my health is very poor, and the incessant cold is proving too much for me. Bro. Robertson has gone to Nebraska, Bro. Whitacre is in Wisconsin, and I am here alone, snowed up. Even the tax collector who was to be here today cannot get here; business is at a standstill, no wheat or grain coming in, nothing doing only freezing, freezing; that is going on lovely. Ice is thirty inches thick, and had it not been for such early snow falling, it would have been much thicker. I believe this is the worst winter for many years up here. Iowa can look for high water next spring, when the snow melts up here. Audubon, Minnesota. H. A. McCoy.

Editors Herald: Lamoni certainly has our sympathy in the loss of the Herald Publishing House; but we are glad to see the willingness of the Saints, and also the non-members to help in rebuilding. I do not know as I could get along without the HERALD and Autumn Leaves. We have taken them, I think, ever since they were first published. They are a spiritual food to all those who read them.

The Lord has blessed me and my family through the administration of his elders, when near death's door, so I feel like pressing on, dear Saints, and never giving up till the goal is won. Let us pray for one another..

Inclosed please find two dollars and fifty cents for HERALD and Autumn Leaves for one year.

Your sister in the faith,
M. CLAIBONE.

Monmouth, Iowa, January 24, 1907.

Editors Herald: I have taken the paper for over a year, and find grand reading in it. My wife and self obeyed the truth two years, being the only ones in each family, Oscar Case doing the baptizing.

We have had no preaching here since Oscar Case left. Churches and schoolhouses are too good for the truth.

AMOS RORAH.

The Dalles, Oregon.

Dear Saints: I wish to say a few words through the HERALD. I have had the privilege of reading the HERALD for a good many years, and now I feel that the hastening time has come, and all God's people must be about their Father's business. I will say that we now all know that God has spoken to us servants in regard to a sanitarium for the afflicted ones, and a home for the homeless little ones. He requires the means from his people, the Saints, to build the home and also the hospital for the afflicted ones. He, our Father, our true Guide and ever-abiding Friend, knows the extent of our possessions, and also the willingness or unwillingness to give. The Bible tells us that the Lord loves a cheerful giver. As we are only stewards over what we possess and we are the Lord's, and all we own is his, why should any of us withhold what would if given bring us many blessings? Jesus said: Whatsoever ye do unto the least of these, ye do it unto me. Dear Saints, give willingly, and soon there will many a homeless little waif be brought to the home, where they may receive the blessing of their heavenly Father. Do a work for the Master, and gain an eternal reward.

It should not be said of the Saints, that they had to be urged to give their means to do a work that God had required to be done by his people. I am only one among the Saints, but the Spirit has spoken, and I have obeyed, and there are others who will also speak, for the Spirit of God will work among his people.

I send a letter taken from the Comfort. I ask you to publish it in the HERALD to see if there can be anything done for such cases as this. I should think the traveling elders might reach them and preach to them, and give them hope of a better home in God's kingdom, if they never have one here. Your sister in the gospel.

MRS. M. DAWSON.

Our monthly shut-in letter is an unusually sad and pathetic epistle.

Dalton, Ga., Whitefield Co., Sept. 4, 1906.

Dear Uncle Charlie: I thank you for the writing outfit that you sent me last Christmas, and, Uncle Charlie, I thank you a thousand times for putting my name in Comfort. You have caused me to get many helpful, cheery letters, and also interesting books, cards, stamps and some money; and last, to my surprise, on April 25th, I received a nice invalid's reclining and rolling chair, sent by Mr. G. W. Whyland, South Junction, N. Y.

My chair was a grand present and I appreciated it very highly. I haven't been able to use my chair but very little. I have been in very feeble health all the spring and summer, not able to sit up or turn myself in bed, being compelled to lie in one position, flat on my back, not able to move or raise my head off the pillow; and most of the time not able to talk above a whisper or feed myself. And besides my spinal disease I am a great sufferer from indigestion and nervous troubles. I suffer constantly with sick stomach, caused by indigestion, and I have been this way now for over six years. The only peace I get is when I sleep, and that is very little. Sometimes I will go for several nights in succession and don't sleep at all. I have been confined to my bed, entirely helpless, for twenty-one years, and during all those long, weary years not able to sit up, walk or turn myself in bed, and no one to care for me but my poor old mother, who is now seventy-two years of age.

Uncle Charlie, you know my mother has had a hard road to travel as well as myself. She has watched over me, and worked over me day and night with unceasing care. I tell you, as I lie here in a semi-living condition, when a mother is gone, your all is gone, for there is no one that will care for you, and has the true, heartfelt love that a mother has for her children. Sometimes I think, what am I kept here suffering for, as my life is no enjoyment to me in this condition. Without health there is no real enjoyment. We don't know how to appreciate health until it is lost. I had rather have my health and be compelled to labor hard every day of my life as a hireling, from dawn of day until nightfall, and nothing for daily fare but dry bread and water, and nothing but bare earth for my bed and the canopy of heaven above me for my roof, than to be in the condition I am in, helpless and always sick and suffering.

The thought of having to give up all my cherished hopes and aims and having to live helpless the rest of my days, at times seems more than human mind can stand. What I have suffered in the past twenty-one years in body and mind God only knows.

All those kind friends who wrote me, forgive me for not answering. I have been too ill to do much corresponding. Won't you all write to me and make my Christmas bright enough to deaden the pain for a few days? I'll do my best to reply. And now God bless you all and God have pity on all who are in my condition.

LAWRENCE M. BIRD.

Lawrence wrote me a personal letter of thirty pages that told a tale of suffering he mercifully spared you. Lawrence is allowed five dollars per month by the county authorities for his own and his mother's support, an amount insufficient to keep them in any sort of comfort for three days, let alone thirty days. Lawrence and his mother went to the poorhouse, but conditions were so terrible that it made my blood boil when I read of them. Lawrence's mother (God bless her dear, brave, devoted, noble soul) is a terrible sufferer from rupture, and she has to do the hardest physical labor, lifting her son, chopping wood, etc.—enough to kill her in her condition. Often she has to lie for hours until she can regain strength enough to attend to her helpless son. For over twenty years this patient, heroic soul has nursed her sick boy, and in a sense he is better off than she, for when she succumbs, no one is there to wait upon her. Lawrence's great trouble is, that he has to do without milk and butter, and eat coarse food that his weak stomach rejects. Five dollars a month won't buy delicacies, and how they exist on it at all is a mystery to me. If the county gave them, or loaned them a cow, this poor fellow would be able to get proper nourishment, and this cruel nausea that racks and weakens him would cease. If I had the spending of the Russell Sage millions, I would organize a traveling hospital equipped with a staff of expert surgeons, physicians and nurses—an operating room on wheels. Chronic cases, tens of thousands of them that are scattered over the country, could be examined, and if necessary, operated on, and a trained nurse left to take charge of the case until the patient could be left in the care of his friends. Sick folks in the back woods and rural districts never get proper medical attention, and do not have a fair chance to get well. A skilled surgeon could put at least forty per cent of these sufferers on their feet, and skilled physicians could outline a general course of treatment that would greatly relieve those who could not be cured. I like to talk in a practical way, not in the air. God would rather we did things ourselves, when we can do them, than pray about it. There are billions ready for bloody warfare, billions for drink, show and pleasure, but our sick are sent to the poorhouse, which is generally several times worse than Sheol itself, or given five dollars a month to starve on. Some day perhaps we so-called Christians will know how to properly care for our sick and suffering poor, for we don't know how to do it yet, more's the pity.

Editors Herald: With awe and sadness we read in the "emergency" HERALD of the 9th inst. the great loss sustained in the burning of the dear old historic building and so many precious books and papers that money can not buy. There is one bright spot in the cloud of darkness, the manuscript of the Book of Mormon is safe, and the government (of the church) still lives. The heart of every Saint is touched, and there will be a general and hearty response by all to rebuild better than ever. One of our members here said, "I will give five dollars for each of my family in the church." Such a generous giving, generally, would place us in better condition than we have ever been—a modern building with all the safeguards for its perpetuity.

There are many old books among the Saints yet, and if the Historian would give a list of the books wanted, no doubt many will be furnished, and the ministry could keep it in mind and forward them whenever found.

We can and will survive. It could have been worse. And with the united efforts that seem to be in sight, we are cheerful amid our sadness.

T. W. CHATBURN.

SPRINGFIELD, Missouri, January 30, 1907.

Dear Herald: Just from the battlefield, near Long Lane, Dallas County, Missouri, where I met the great Goliath of Campbellite fame, Reverend R. C. Harrell, in a six-days' debate on church propositions, commencing January 22. We had two sessions per day and good crowds from beginning to end. Mr. Harrell had the people prejudiced against us to begin with, as they had never heard a sermon by our people; but at the close of the debate we had the sympathy of the people, and not being able to agree upon a chairman, my opponent was afraid to leave a point of order to the house, right in his own neighborhood. He rejected one of the best men in the whole country, Mr. John Ball, as chairman, and said we were trying to run a "blind calf" over him. This went against him. Our proposition came first. My opponent claims to have had eighteen debates; but on my affirmative he failed to grapple with my arguments and showed himself far below the standard of the average Campbellite preacher in discussion. His main forte was "burlesquing," and telling funny stories, but we made him sick of this and he finally quit it.

On his proposition he never touched it. Mr. Harrell has a loud voice and the Methodists and Baptists agreed with us that he would make a good "exhorter," if we could only work him over and get him converted.

Bro. Sparling acted as moderator for me, and Mr. Harrell had several moderators from the non-progressive wing. Mr. Gant acted most of the time. Mr. Harrell is a progressive Campbellite. But I put them all together in the same sack, and the debate brought them to the unity of the faith for this special time.

Mr. Harrell objected to my reading from J. M. Martin's book (non-progressive), although I proved they were the same. But when I went to read from this book, several Campbellites jumped to their feet, shook their fists at me (one man in particular), and my opponent jumped and snatched at the pamphlet, but failed to secure it, nearly tearing the leaf out, however. At this juncture the moderators arose and peace was secured by our consenting not to read it. But Mr. Harrell was afraid to let the house settle it.

On our proposition, Mr. Harrell read every book he wanted; most were published by the R. B. Neal stripe, but he could not stand his own books. He objected to our reading Ray. But the Baptists would have liked to hear Ray testify.

On the last day Mr. Harrell declared we could not prove that they had a discipline. Just to see what they would do I picked up the tract on Campbellism, by R. C. Evans, and stated I could prove it by J. M. Martin. So I held this pamphlet towards Mr. Harrell at the same time, and he thinking I was going to read from it, jumped and snatched it with fire in his eyes. They told us just before this session began that if we read Martin's book we would have him and seven or eight others to whip. We got the joke on him, and he felt cheap when he saw the people laughing at his heartfelt religion in the end of his fist. The discussion closed with good feelings, and Mr. Harrell, after saying I had villified him, said I had acted the gentleman. We left several investigating, and invitations to return. Mr. George Garrett kindly cared for us and helped us on the way.

KEELER, Michigan, January 28, 1907.

Editors Herald: We resumed work here January 19, and the crowds are larger than before, so much so, many were turned away after seeing the building crowded. The interest is unabated. We enjoy great liberty in presenting the word to the people. The heaven is working slowly. With about twenty-four sermons the people begin to "see men as trees walking," so great is the "darkness which mantles their minds." We have a question-box, and the queries come good and strong. Some of them doubtless think they are posers, but light has come sufficiently to satisfy the questioners. We will inclose a question or two, so all may see the nature of them, and determine the answers. The winter is beautiful and mild. Snow robes the world hereabouts in pure white. Bells tinkle, and people feel gay generally. The moon throws her silver rays across hill and dale, and our temple-service seems attractive to large crowds, while we are gladly trusting the results in the hands of Him who doeth all things well.

Ever hopeful,
S. W. L. SCOTT.

QUESTIONS OF LOGIC.

1. If goodness in this life be productive of everlasting happiness in the next, why should not the evil in this life be productive of everlasting sorrow in the next?

2. If we accept the Bible description of heaven as literal fact, why not accept the Bible description of hell as literal fact—that is—if heaven is to be a certain material country possessing certain tangible qualities, and peopled by tangible beings (as discussed in Thursday's lecture), why should not hell be considered just as tangible and as possessing just as material qualities?

3. On the other hand, if heaven be the abode of purely spiritual beings, is it not beyond, or outside of time and space, since spirit can in no way be restricted by time and space? How then can certain space be set apart and designated as heaven or hell, or how can any time be assumed as the beginning or end of joy or sorrow?

4. If the heathen without knowledge of God are restrained in hell to be taught the faith, why should not our little children, dying without knowledge of God, be kept in hell to be taught likewise?

What spirit did Jesus manifest when he called Herod a fox? Was it the spirit that prompts to do unto others as we would have them do unto us?

Jesus being a Son of the Holy Ghost, or the Son of God, why did he persist in calling himself the Son of man?

It is said that Jesus looked over the multitude with anger. Was it the same kind of anger that comes over a man when he wants to fight? Our Holy Sanctified friends tell us they never get angry; if that is true, they are a little better than Jesus.

Please give your views on the following verse: Matthew 16: 28: "Verily I say unto you: There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom."

Does not Paul teach, or at least imply in his writings, that we may be baptized for the dead?

Why did not the child wake from death when Elisha bade his servant lay his staff on his face?

The celestial law knows no outlaw.—John Smith.

correspondent we give them place in this department. Bro. Johnson reported them exactly as given.]

"Verily thus saith the Lord unto you, my children: I have heard your prayers; I have blessed you in your homes, you have many times received of my Holy Spirit, that has brought to you joy and gladness and understanding of my work, but you are like one of whom I have spoken by mine apostle of old, you have looked into the mirror, you have beheld what manner of person you are; like the children of Israel you have sat down to meat, you have risen to play!

To-day you have partaken of bread and wine in commemoration of my dear Son. This I instituted for the purpose of bringing brighter understanding and comprehension of the sacrifice of my dear Son to the world, and verily, thus saith the Spirit, inasmuch as you eat unworthily it will condemn you in that day when you shall stand before me in judgment.

Verily, thus saith the Lord, your God, you shall observe these instructions that I have given you or you shall not receive of my Spirit and there shall be many sick and afflicted among you and many shall sleep, as I have spoken by my servant, as it is recorded in my scripture; but, thus saith the Lord, inasmuch as you shall live pure, inasmuch as you shall live true and humble in mind and in spirit, I, the Lord, will bless you in your homes, and righteousness shall dwell there.

If righteousness and peace do not dwell with you in your lives and in your homes, it is because you have been careless in observing the law that I have given you regarding these matters, and inasmuch as unrighteousness shall dwell there, you shall be condemned because you do not come up to the standard of righteousness, but inasmuch as you shall live humble and set in order your homes and your lives, and teach your children my gospel, and teach them to pray, you shall begin to lay the foundation by which Zion shall be redeemed, and when my people are gathered there they will observe this law or verily they shall be cast out.

Be ye humble! Be ye contrite in spirit! Be ye in harmony with my law and dwell within my Spirit, and I will give you peace to your souls and joy to your hearts, and your sick shall be healed and you shall receive of my blessing; your children shall grow up, as it were, under the influence of my Spirit, and when they shall become older many of them shall be instruments in my hands of accomplishing good. Verily, thus saith the Spirit unto you.

—Given Sunday afternoon, December 2, 1906, through Elder W. A. McDowell, Chicago, Illinois.

Verily, verily, thus saith the Lord, to my servants and handmaidens: The day when you put your shoulders to the wheel to move my work along in the very nucleus of it I gave you my Spirit to encourage and to cheer you on your way, and you have proved faithful, many of you, while many of you have turned away my commandments.

If you will turn to me again and give unto me your service and your best service, the day is near at hand when I will rebuke the distresses and diseases that are amongst you and when I will put an end to all disputes and troubles and trials between you, and when I will move amongst you and will touch your hearts with the finger of my love, and praise shall come from the depths of your hearts to my great and holy name, and I will rebuke those things that cause divisions amongst you and cause peace and joy and oneness and unity to prevail in your midst.

My sons and my daughters, be faithful to me! Be faithful to me! The day is coming when I shall soon fill out those things that I have given you in days gone by. Many times I have promised you blessings and many times you have set your hearts to receive them, and you did not receive them, simply because of disputes. Cast away those things from you and turn to me and give me your best heart's service and you shall have my honor and my glory resting upon you. Even so. Amen.

—Given through Elder William Strange, Chicago, January 16, 1907.

Second Quorum of Elders.

Dear Brethren: By request of the secretary, I hereby give notice that circular letters and report blanks will be mailed to your last given address, about February 1, 1907. If any fail to receive blanks notify secretary, F. C. Warnky, 2424 Wabash Avenue, Kansas City, Missouri, and you will be supplied. We earnestly hope for a report from each member, and a large representation of the quorum at the General Conference. Brethren, let us hear from you.

Your collaborer,

W. P. PICKERING, President.

Box 96, STEWARVILLE, MISSOURI.

Eighth Quorum of Elders.

Report blanks have been sent to all members of the quorum. If not received promptly, please advise us. Let us hear from you with suggestions for the program, as soon as possible. In sending dues, kindly make pocket of heavy paper, as the coin envelopes were unintentionally omitted. Then get ready to meet with us at Lamoni.

S. A. BURGESS, Secretary.

5920 Etzel Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri, January 30, 1907.

Fourth Quorum of Priests.

Dear Brethren of the Fourth Quorum of Priests; Greeting: The time is drawing near when our reports must be forwarded to our corresponding secretary, and I hope that our reports will be approved by our heavenly Father, and also the church assembled at the coming General Conference, from the fact that we have not been drones in our Father's kingdom; for our faith will shine out by the work we have accomplished. Seek, brethren, to accomplish that for which God has designed we should, that in our assemblies at the coming General Conference, we may be able to instruct one another in all things pertaining to the kingdom of our God and his Christ.

Let those who are contemplating attending the General Conference notify our corresponding secretary so we may know about the number that will be present. In bonds.

GEORGE EDWARDS, President.

Information Wanted.

Elder Thomas Whiting, of Fall River, Massachusetts, deserted his family and disappeared suddenly, nearly a year ago, since which time nothing has been heard from him. His family and friends know no cause for his disappearance. Any information concerning him will be thankfully received. Address,

H. HOWLETT.

76 Goss Avenue, FALL RIVER, Massachusetts.

Died.

HIRST.—Died January 7, 1907, Sr. Margaret Hirst of Keokuk, Iowa. She was born June 1, 1816, at Manchester, England, and was baptized in that country. She and her husband came to Keokuk in 1844, and refusing to take up with the errors of apostasy, awaited the reorganizing of the church and united with it. She has been a faithful, helpful, and an honored member. Out of a family of twelve children, but two survive. Funeral-services were held at the Latter Day Saint church, Keokuk. Bro. A. C. Anderson in charge, James McKiernan, speaker.

OLIVER.—Hiram Oliver came into the work through the labors of Brn. J. W. Metcalf, W. H. Kelley, and W. H. Forbes, being baptized with his wife, son, and daughter-in-law by W. H. Kelley in July of 1904, three sons and a daughter-in-law being baptized the fall before, and a son and daughter-in-law since, making in all ten in one family, leaving only the youngest son outside the fold. Bro. Oliver passed peacefully away the 17th of December; funeral-services conducted by W. H. Forbes the 19th.

THOMAS.—Mrs. Margaret Thomas died at her home, Bevier, Missouri, Sunday, January 20, 1907. Deceased was born in Merthyr Tydvil, South Wales, December 11, 1838. Was married in 1865 to John F. Thomas, who died October 26, 1886. Of their union were born twelve children, four of whom are dead. She united with the Latter Day Saint church in her eighth year and for a period of sixty years remained a zealous and loyal member of that church. She was a very kind-hearted woman, a worthy neighbor, and a devoted wife and mother. Funeral-services were conducted by F. T. Musseil, assisted by William B. Richards.

YOUNG.—At Lamoni, Iowa, December 28, 1906, Bro. Francis D. Young, aged 65 years, 11 months, and 3 days. His wife, three sons, and two daughters survive him. He was baptized in Alameda County, California, by Bro. R. R. Dana. His life was a worthy and honorable one. The family came to Iowa in 1876 and continued here. He served for years as member of the town council and also was mayor for a time. Funeral-sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Bro. John Smith and A. S. Cochran.

Good Timber Sold Cheap.

In the effort to check the pine bark beetle, which has been severely attacking the forest in parts of the Black Hills Forest Reserve, South Dakota, the Government is resorting to drastic measures. For the first time under the Forest Service, actual cutting, skidding, and burning of debris have been carried on by Government employees. Insect-infested timber, both standing and already felled under Service direction, is offered for sale. Large quantities of it can be secured at a fraction of the price charged for green wood.

Yet this wood is just as good for lumber and railroad ties as green wood and would ordinarily bring an equal price. Small sales have not been numerous enough to remove the infested timber; hence it is necessary to offer special inducements if the timber is to be saved. Timber not now accessible can be reached under extensive operations which would warrant the building of the necessary railroads.

This action followed upon a study of the insect situation on the reserve by Dr. A. D. Hopkins, in charge of forest insect investigations in the Bureau of Entomology, who recommended that the Service push the cutting and disposal of infested timber as the only means of preventing the spread of the beetles through wider and wider areas. To broaden the market for the timber a clause in the agricultural appropriation bill, last winter, permitted the exportation of timber for two years beyond the borders of South Dakota. But even this has not brought enough or large enough applications to take the timber which should be disposed of. Hitherto the Government has waited for a bidder before advertising for competitors. This procedure, through delay, threatens too serious a loss in the waste of trees now infested and in the spread of the beetles to fresh stands. The Forest Service will now take the initiative and advertise for bidders, in order to draw attention to this timber, which is a menace to the future supply on the reserve.

By securing prompt purchasers for the infested logs and standing trees, and destroying the insect broods by firing the bark and slash, it is hoped that the surrounding forests will soon be saved from further insect attack.

The timber attacked by the bark beetle has not lost its commercial value. There is no reason why the desired sales should not more than reimburse the Government, besides utilizing a large amount of pine which would otherwise be wasted.

TWO SYSTEMS OF PHILOSOPHY.

"The great thing in this world is not to be found out. We must be very clever about it."

"There is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known."

During the past week the press generally has given more space to accounts of the Thaw trial than has been given to any other one topic. The press is almost unerring in its judgment as to what will interest the public. People read of the Thaw case who have no time to read the Bible. Those who find time to read both find the former quite suggestive of conditions which were predicted in the latter.

It is true that the prophets in forecasting conditions that would characterize the latter days did not ignore the marked improvements which do now obtain along certain lines. For instance Daniel declared, "Shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end; many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Our age is certainly the age of travelers and students. Nahum and others pictured the wonderful inventions of the last days. These things of which they wrote are our special pride and boast—our inventions, our means of transportation, our libraries and schools.

But we search in vain through the holy book for any statement that the people of the latter times would be notable for their morality and honesty. On the contrary it is stated that wicked men and seducers would abound and would wax worse and worse. Christ said that it would be in those days "as it was in the days of Noe." At least three things were characteristic of those days—violence, immorality, and lack of faith.

These things are written, and lest we should forget, certain events are arranged from time to time in such a striking and spectacular way that it is driven home to us that while boasting of our learning, our travel, and our wealth, we must not boast of our virtue, our faith, or our honesty.

Every large city has its "tenderloin" district, supposed to be for the use of the "lower classes"; and it is openly argued by the city fathers (see department of General Interest, this issue) that these districts exist of necessity and can not be suppressed, that the best that can be hoped is to control them—and draw a revenue therefrom.

In the next number of the HERALD we will introduce our new department, entitled, "The Straight Road." This department is for the honest investigator who desires the straight road to facts. Gospel themes will be taken up in a systematic and attractive way. Saints will do well to supply their friends with copies of the HERALD, and thus help them to find the "straight road."

The events to which we refer, however, do not pertain to the "lower classes" whose troubles are aired in the police courts; but rather to the liaisons of what we term the "higher classes" those in fact who have had the advantage of our vaunted travel and education and whose environments and advantages should have made them great and good. Often these events affect and expose those whom the world in sad travesty speaks of as "the nobility."

A little over three months ago the whole world was reading of the divorce case between Anna Gould Castellane and the thing that was called a count. There was a pretty thorough exposure of conditions prevalent in the most "select circles" of the most polite and polished nation on earth. The Count threatened to tell all the secrets of his social world, and the select circles were invaded by insomnia until the trial ended.

And now comes this Thaw trial on this side of the water. One could hardly imagine anything more spectacular. Harry Thaw murdered Stanford White. The murder takes place at a theatrical performance in the Madison Square Roof Garden in New York City, in the presence of a multitude of fashionable people. The tragedy of the stage is skimmed milk and moonshine compared to the tragedy of life enacted before the footlights.

The trial is held in the largest city of this enlightened United States of America. The man whose life is at stake is a millionaire, with titled connections and of irreproachable social standing. The prosecuting attorney is the best known district attorney in the country and he is faced by the best lawyers that money can hire.

All this stage-setting serves to attract the attention of the people while Mrs. Thaw on the witness stand lays bare her life and pictures moral conditions as they are in the United States to-day.

Her story if true is most pitiable; and whether true or false it can be matched by the actual experience of thousands of girls in any one of the large cities.

While yet a little girl, not sixteen years old, still content with childish affairs, she was so unfortunate as to attract the notice of White. He effected a working alliance with her mother, who was a fool or worse; the girl was enticed into what the beast properly called his "den," she was drugged, and she awoke a ruined woman,—alas, too late made wise in the ways of the world. Harry Thaw, who married her, murdered the man who had thus misused her.

Laying aside the question of any one man's right to avenge this girl, it is evident that such men as White are not fit to live; and it is a pity that there is not some sure legal way to exterminate them.

The only lessons which we wish to draw from this trial are suggested by the philosophy which White proceeded to unfold to his victim. When she wept and screamed he told her, "Don't worry, everybody does these things."

He was a man of the world and he spoke of the ways of the world. That he did not lie about his immediate section of the world is evident from the number of prominent people connected with this scandal whose names the witness was forbidden to speak aloud. History repeats itself and no doubt there will be a considerable sale of sedatives in New York City until the Thaw trial is ended.

Another chapter of White's philosophy, which is eminently the philosophy of the world, reads as follows, quoting the witness; "He said the great thing in this world was, not to be found out; that we must be very clever about it."

It is very striking that after taking such pains to escape being found out, his character should be laid bare so publicly and his story be told in unnumbered newspapers the world over. While he was priding himself on his cleverness, fate was sharpening her pencils, loading her cameras, inking her presses to tell the story of his meanness. Oh, the futility of human cunning!

To every individual is given the choice between the philosophy of the world and the philosophy of God. One permits us to violate every law of right, with the single injunction that we must be clever and not get caught. The other instructs us to live above the law; and then we will never fear any exposure or the judgments of any court on earth or in heaven.

The philosophy of the world will break down every time when put to the test; and it will be put to the test in the case of each individual, if not in this life, then at the great final judgment.

DEDICATION AT PHILADELPHIA.

Two thousand years ago the Philadelphia of the caption had no existence unless in the divine economy it had been designed and foreseen as one of the geographical and political landmarks to be evolved in the planting and upbuilding of a nation on a portion of the earth known in prophecy as "Joseph's Land." It may be, too, that in the development of that nation, the spot had been chosen as one the situation and environments of which would be useful in emphasizing the superior value of peace over war as a permanent conqueror of savage natures, and destined to play some part in the later day spread of gospel truth.

From Independence to Philadelphia now is no farther than in 1839; and yet, the journey made by Joseph Smith from the far West occupied many days by slow ways of progression; now it is but a passage lasting a few hours and is made in comparatively great ease and comfort.

The brethren of the "church of Philadelphia," in 1901, began an effort to "gather in the shekels" preparatory to the building a house in which to worship. This effort was sufficiently successful to provide for a suitable site located at the southeast corner of Howard and Ontario Streets, on which now stands a small but comfortably commodious, substantial building, which was the scene of a portentous gathering of the clans on Sunday, January 27, 1907.

This gathering was for the purpose of dedicating the building to be used in the honor of God, and in the service of humanity, in gospel ministrations, the preaching of the word, and those devotional exercises which right-minded, right-thinking devotees and disciples of the Master may do without let, hindrance, or fear.

It is stated that in 1839 Joseph Smith, the first elder of the church, preached in some ten different places in the then city; the localities where, and the memory of some of the sermons then preached have been preserved and "record kept" the extent of which the readers of the HERALD may learn more by and by when the forthcoming "History of the Church in Philadelphia," now in process of evolution, is completed.

The "powers that be" in charge of the work in the New York and Philadelphia District, and the Philadelphia Branch, took the situation into consideration and determined to make the dedication of their chapel the occasion of a demonstration of the latter-day work "in force."

To this end measures were taken to secure a large, popular, and centrally located hall, known as "The Odd Fellows' Temple," in which, on the Sunday evening, after the dedicatory services of the day at the chapel were over, a series of meetings was begun to continue until the evening of February 3, omitting the evening of Saturday, the 2d. This series of meetings was extensively advertised, the brethren sparing no pains to let the public know what the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints is and is trying to do. One of the methods employed was the securing of an excellently executed "souvenir program," thousands of which were printed, laid on the seats, and distributed at the doors, advertising the speakers, the location of the chapel; with a good picture of the president of the church and the chapel, together with the copy of the hymn to be used each evening at the service.

The list of speakers given on the "souvenir" contained the names of Joseph Smith and Edmund L. Kelley, of Independence, Missouri, Francis M. Sheehy, of Boston, Massachusetts, John W. Rush-ton, Leeds, England, and Walter W. Smith, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. In addition to this list of speakers, there appeared the names of Mrs. Wallace N. Robinson, of Independence, Missouri, and Miss Josephine Isleib, of Boston, Massachusetts, as soloists; Miss Henriette Groenveld, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, organist, and Orrin K. Fry, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, choir master.

From this display of the reputed talent of the church, for all were members of the church except the organist, the readers of the HERALD will see that the local managers of the affair, Brn. Sheehy, Walter Wayne Smith, John Zimermann, Orrin Fry, and others of the officers of the branch, had taken pains to make the dedication a notable one, and the demonstration in the meetings to be held at the Odd Fellows' Temple, a strong one. And a strong one it was, we safely assure the Saints.

The exercises at the chapel began on the Saturday, when the district Religio and the Sunday-school held their recurring conventions in the afternoon. At night the district conference held its session and did the usual routine business, including the appointment of the district officers, and their delegates to the annual General Conference, to be held at Lamoni, in April next. On the morning of the 27th, the Religio and Sunday-school held a prayer-service at eight o'clock; which was followed by the usual branch Sunday-school at half past nine, and closing in time for the dedicatory service at eleven o'clock in the forenoon.

As the hour drew near the house gradually filled up until the space was fully occupied, and many stood unable to be seated. The services were in charge of Brn. Francis M. Sheehy; the song-service in charge of Bro. Orrin Fry, the local chorister and his choir, strengthened by the addition of a few of the visiting brothers and sisters from other branches; Sr. Clara Zimermann, organist.

The services were opened by the use of that stirring Israelitish song, "Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning," so familiar to the congregations of the Saints. Bro. Walter Smith led the devotions in a feeling offering of praise and worship; the choir sang the appropriate anthem; Bishop Zimermann, in a brief statement regarding the effort to build and the cost to the Saints, delivered the deeds and the custody of the building over to the Presiding Bishop, Edmund L. Kelley, who at the close of the dedicatory prayer placed the premises in the hands of the Philadelphia Branch, to be held by them in use and occupation to the service and honor of the Master under the principle of "A Free Pulpit and an Open Bible." The sermon was preached by President Joseph Smith, who expressed great satisfaction in having been permitted to be present and assisting in so important a work by which the efforts put forth by the first elders of the church so many years ago will be emphasized, indicative of the fact that God will carry on his work, and see that no labor performed in honesty of purpose by those whom he calls will be lost to them or be permitted to fail of accomplishing his design. After the sermon the Bishop offered the prayer of dedication, fervently and reverently, placing the responsibility of upholding the virtue and integrity of the church in Philadelphia upon the Saints, and pleading that through the ministration of the Holy Spirit the Saints might be continued in the love of Christ to maintain the honor and glory of God among themselves and before the world. The songs by Srs. Robinson and Isleib, the hymns and anthem by the choir, were appropriate and added to the efficiency and beauty of the exercises and the benediction by Bro. Sheehy closed this remarkable and memorable service.

The services at the temple were begun by a sermon by Bro. Sheehy on Sunday night, January 28, followed during the week by sermons from Brn. Kelley, Rush-ton, and Smith, the closing effort of Sunday night, February 3, being a strong and logical presentation of the salvation offered in Christ as contained in the Scriptures, as the same is held by the church. It was a fitting and forceful appeal for the integrity of the word of God.

Taking the exercises from the first to the last, including all the parts of the appointed divisions of labor, the occasion was one of a marked success. There was not a ripple of discontent, not a hitch or jar in the arrangements, not a note of discord, nor an unpleasant interruption from the opening hymn to the last benediction.

We do not care to close this account without stating that in order to care for all, and to avoid any unnecessary interruption in the exercises at the chapel, during the meetings on the two Sundays, arrangements were made and the whole family of the Saints were provided with refreshing food served in the lower auditorium for the noon and evening; thus enabling the Saints to remain together, become acquainted, and see and learn of each other's welfare and the love of the work. It was a marked success and may well be taken account of for other occasions of a similar character.

There is a fine body of Saints at Philadelphia, among whom are a number of rising young men, who are fast becoming fitted and qualified to present the faith to the public and maintain the warfare in the defense of the truth against all the opposing forces to be met in the world, "the field," as stated by the Master. There were representatives from the several branches of the district, except Scranton, Pennsylvania. From New York, Brooklyn, Providence, Camden, and from the region round about the great city of "brotherly love," they came by ones and twos to be among the "household of faith." And they were all blessed, for the Spirit of the Lord was "in the midst thereof."

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

The total amount of the Christmas Offering is $4,891.30. The copy for the Blue Hope is now in the hands of the printers and it will be issued at the earliest possible date.

The New York World for Sunday, February 3, contains the remarkable news (headed special from Lamoni) that when the church vaults were opened after the fire it was discovered that all the church records were in ashes; and by way of climax adds that now the Reorganization has no way to prove its right in succession and can no longer meet the Utah church in controversy. We trust that our friends in Utah will not presume too far on this information.

Frequent letters come to the office reading like this: "You have my hearty sympathy in your hour of trial. Enclosed find money to renew my subscription to the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Ensign." That is right; give the bookkeeper and the auditors a chance at your sympathy.

Reverend Lawson resorted to the usual tactics in his debate with Elder Knisley, and the latter retorted by declaring that his opponent might be characterized by the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier as "an extinct volcano vomiting smoke and mud." The Daily Phoenix, of Saskatoon, for January 21, has this to say of the two disputants: "With all his admitted sincerity of conviction, Reverend S. G. Lawson was no match in debate for Elder Knisley and notwithstanding his promise of giving the Latter Day Saint the Waterloo of his life on Saturday night, the self-constituted Wellington of Presbyterianism was driven from his entrenchments and his adversary held high carnival last night in his enemy's camp in the form of a well-attended service in Dulmage Hall."

Elder F. G. Pitt writes that the Saints' hall in Buffalo, New York, is located at 356 Grant Street. Grant Street cars pass the door. Elders are requested to stop and give a lift to the work in Buffalo.

Elder C. J. Hunt, Deloit, Iowa, sends in six new subscriptions for HERALD, besides several renewals.

Owing to the loss of our press records there were not enough Autumn Leaves for February printed. We would be grateful if those who can spare that number would mail to Herald Publishing House.

One sister dreamed that she saw a black cloud hanging over the spot where the HERALD Office formerly stood. While she was watching it the face of the Savior appeared in the midst of it. If the recent severe loss will help the church in any way to see Christ there will be no cause for sorrow.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

Charles Curtis, recently elected senator from Kansas, is the son of a quarter-blood Kaw Indian.

One of the wealthiest of the so-called four hundred of New York is said to be slowly dying of leprosy. His drawing-room is divided with a glass wall and behind this he may sit and watch his family; but he must not touch them.

Mark Twain in his book on Christian Science says of Mrs. Eddy, "I think it likely that there may be five or six of the cult in the world who do not worship her, but she herself is certainly not of that company."

The World Magazine for February 3 prints the following list of the great cataclysms of the past twelve months:

February 20—Tidal wave on Colombia coast; three villages swept away; 250 drowned.

March 17—Earthquake in Formosa; thousands killed.

April 5—Eruption of Vesuvius.

April 18—Earthquake in California, San Francisco nearly wiped out; 1,000 killed; $400,000,000 loss.

August 16—Earthquake in Valparaiso; 2,000 killed; $50,000,000 loss.

October 10—Elliot Key, Florida, engulfed by tidal wave; entire population of 250 drowned.

October 28—Hurricane off Boto Island; 800 Japanese drowned.

November 10—Earthquake and tidal wave in South Sea Islands; thousands killed.

January 11—Tidal wave in Dutch East Indies; island of Simalu destroyed; 1,500 drowned.

January 14—Earthquake in Kingston, Jamaica; 1,000 killed; $5,000,000 loss.

Any one's immediate sphere of influence is very small, to be sure, but the sum total of influence is very great. The time will come when in liberty, equality, and fraternity, the people will govern the earth, and then it may happen, nay, will happen, that with a simple ballot, one may send a current of salvation, or damnation, through the world.

Nay, every mute, inglorious solitary, in the long, dark drifts of duty, with hope's safety lamp in his cap, swinging an honest pick and shovel, stands radiant in the Eternal Searchlight, a man sent from God.

"Invocation."

Thy Saints have met this sacred day
To hear thy word, to sing and pray,—
Oh, may thy blessed presence cheer
Each humble, contrite heart that's here.

'Twere vain to meet, our songs to sing,
Our words of prayer and praise to bring,
Unless thy Spirit, Lord, attend
And with our earnest worship blend.

Forgive, we pray, our every sin
And let thy wondrous peace come in,
Let no discord our service blight;
But perfect love our hearts unite.

And when we from this place depart
Let mutual love be in each heart,
So may our lives an incense be
Of savor sweet, dear Lord, to thee.

Life's Struggle.

The life of the World is not the real;
The masses strive for a vague ideal;
Yet 'tis pathetic to see the smile
That shines thro' tears, and all the while
The heart is heavy with unknown dread
Of the day when breaks Life's slender thread.

Cursing, singing, laughing, weeping,
No goal in sight, but onward sweeping,
Like the changing tides of the mighty ocean,
Rolling on with their restless motion,
They break upon Life's boundary's shore,
And their smiles and tears are seen no more.

Laugh! sad old World, but 'tis not real;
Smile in your pain—you will better feel.
Were it not for thy brave old heart
That struggles thro' Time for the better part,
And seeks to learn a lesson from Pain,
Despair and destruction would soon obtain.

Roll on, ye tides, with soul so deep,
Pacific or storm-tossed, you may not sleep;
Then on, on and on, thro' many a year,
Strengthened by Hope and weakened by Fear,
Until somehow, sometime, shall dawn the day
When new conditions will come to stay.

'Til the soul that struggles its work hath done,
And the heart that hopes, its kingdom won;
I would march on with the passing crowd,
Thro' the sunshine or under the cloud;
For the World hath need of soldiers true,
For the Soul's Armageddon or its Waterloo.

CHARLES A. CRUMLEY.

This we do know; this we must remember—that every one of us, however lowly, that hears so much as one clear word of truth and sends it on without a lisp is of the world's best aristocracy.

There is no coinage in any kingdom that comes out so finely marked, or rings so clear as that human currency which bears the mint-mark of a Christian home.

Elder's Note-Book

A SHORT SERMON ON BLOTS.

I believe that there is nothing done or thought by any one but what leaves a permanent impress upon them. You may think that what you are doing can be done away and the effect of it be erased by and by; but it is not true. Every thought of your mind and every act you do, based upon that thought, leaves a prominent impress upon you.

But, some one says, "Does not that do away with the doctrine of forgiveness, based upon repentance?"

I say, No. Repentance is a good thing, and the forgiveness based upon it is a good thing; but you are mistaken if you think that when you repent of your sins and are forgiven, you have not suffered loss, and that God will ever make up to you all that you through slothful neglect lose. It can not be.

Often we have prayed, Lord, blot out from the book of thy remembrance all things that you have against us.

Suppose it be done, and in the judgment time we stand before the bar of God, and the book is opened, which is the book of life, containing a record of our deed. By way of illustration suppose that we do an evil act and it is recorded there, and we ask God to blot it, and he blots it, what will we have there when the book is opened?

Blots!

That is what we asked for; we got it, and we cannot complain.

And if all along through life that page has been covered, and succeeding pages have been covered with things that were wrong, and we ask God to blot them out and he blots them out, what do we find there?

Blots!

That is what we asked for.

Now, I am not saying that there will be any blots in that book; but I am saying, according to this theology, if we get what we want, there will be blots. And there is our judgment. Whether it is a blot, or what it is that we shall see there, one thing is sure, at the moment, at the hour, at the day, or week, or year that we are accomplishing evil, there is no credit to us on the book, and we have lost that time. We might have been doing something that would have been to our credit; and if we failed to do it, we have lost time.

Why, some people seem to think that when they repent that means they are innocent.

We would not need to repent if we were not guilty. Repentance is a confession of guilt.

You lost the opportunity of doing good when you were doing evil, if you lost no more.

These characters of ours when they are blotted will never again be exactly what they were before; and how important it is that we do not deface them.

If this book were a block of marble, polished as the art of man could polish it, and I should take the point of the finest knife blade and scratch it, it never can be what it was before. You may rub it out and polish it again until it looks smooth; but you will waste material in doing it.

So we waste material, we waste time, we waste opportunity in doing wrong, though afterwards we may be polished and made smooth again.

—Heman C. Smith.

Lay to our hands with all our strength;
Begin the record on this yet white page,
That in its freshness our great Master spreads
Before his children, with a high resolve
That the good things recorded shall outweigh
The evil of the other blotted leaf.

—David H. Smith in "Hesperis."

CELIBACY, INDULGENCES, PURGATORY.

(An Article Written by One of Our Roman Catholic Readers.)

One of your subscribers handed me a HERALD, dated September 5, 1906, containing an article by C. J. Hunt, entitled "Celibacy of Roman Catholicism," etc.

Your correspondent asserts that celibacy is a great evil and contrary to the God-ordained law of marriage. Christ and his Apostles evidently did not think so.

Jesus Christ showed his predilection for virginity by remaining a virgin himself, by selecting a Virgin Mother, and a virgin precursor in the person of John the Baptist. In the Book of Revelations St. John testifies that the hundred and forty-four thousand who were chosen to sing the New Canticle, and who follow the Lamb, are all virgins.

St. Paul, himself unmarried, commends the single state to others: "I say to the unmarried, and to the widows, it is good for them if they so continue, even as I. But if they do not contain themselves, let them marry"—I Corinthians 7:8, 9. Again he says, "For he that is without wife is solicitous for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may please God. But he that is with a wife, is solicitous for the things of the world, how he may please his wife; and he is divided."—I Corinthians 7:32, 33.

A priest should certainly be "solicitous for the things that belong to the Lord", should he not?

The charge, that Catholics believe indulgences are a forgiveness for sins, is untrue. "An indulgence is not a pardon for sin, nor is it a license or permission to commit sin; it appertains solely to the remission of the temporal punishment due to sin after the guilt and eternal punishment have been forgiven. It is necessary, therefore, that a person be in a state of grace to gain an indulgence. That Christ gave power to the church to grant indulgence, can not be doubted in view of his words to his apostles, "Amen, I say to you, whatsoever you shall bind on earth shall be bound also in heaven; and whatsoever you shall loose on earth, shall also be loosed in heaven"—Matthew 18. [What the Church Teaches, p. 288.]

That there often remains a temporal punishment to be undergone, either in this life or in the next, even after our guilt is removed. Scripture furnishes ample proof. (See Numbers 11; Matthew 16; 2 Kings 12.)

"Prayer, fasting, almsgiving, works of mercy and piety are prescribed as conditions for indulgences. When almsgiving is prescribed, the giving of the alms is not, in any sense, buying the indulgence. "Alms delivereth from death, and maketh to find mercy and life everlasting."—Tob. 12:9 [What the Church Teaches, p. 289.]

Your correspondent quotes from the Question Box: "The word Purgatory is not found in the Bible." He should have quoted the entire passage, which reads: "The word Purgatory is not found in the Bible; but what does that prove? Many other terms, v. g. the Trinity, the Incarnation—sacred to every orthodox Protestant as well as Catholics—are likewise not in Holy Writ. The Doctrine of Purgatory is in the Bible."—Question Box, p. 562.

"Thou shall not go out from thence till thou repay the last farthing."—Matthew 5; Luke 12. "And the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is . . . If any man's work burn, he shall suffer loss, but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire."—I Corinthians 3:13, 15. In the Books or Machabees we read that Judas Machabaeus made a collection of 12,000 drachms of silver, and sent it to Jerusalem that sacrifice might be offered for the soldiers who had fallen in battle, and gives as a reason: "It is a holy and wholesome thought to pray for the dead that they may be loosed from their sins."—2 Machabees 12:46.

Your church denies the inspiration of the Book of Machabees, which are still contained in the Bible of the Reformed Jews, but you surely admit that they are faithful Jewish history. The Jews, in their synagogues, still repeat their "Kaddish," a prayer for the dead:

"If your brother dies with some slight stain upon his soul, a sin of impatience, for instance, or an idle word, is he fit to enter heaven with those blemishes upon his soul? No; the sanctity of God forbids it, for "nothing defiled shall enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Apocraphy 21:27.

"Will you consign him, for these minor transgressions, to eternal torments with adulterers and murderers? No; the justice and mercy of God forbid it. Therefore, your common sense demands a middle place of expiation for the purgation of the soul before it is worthy of enjoying the companionship of God and his saints."—Faith of Our Fathers, p. 261.

Yours truly,

A. J. KESSLER.

THE CHRIST IDEA.

And thus all things were confirmed unto Adam by an holy ordinance; and the gospel preached; and a decree sent forth that it should be in the world until the end thereof.—Inspired Translation.

And the Lord said unto Enoch, Look, and he looked and beheld the Son of Man lifted upon the cross.—Doctrine and Covenants 36:11.

The above are so far out of line with former teachings about Christianity that they no doubt have provoked a smile, especially when we note that the young man who is held responsible for them was unlearned and had no idea what later discoveries would reveal.

The prevailing belief is that God kept the Christ idea a secret for thousands of years, with only a hint once in a while, and that these hints were confined to the Hebrew race, that being the line through which the chosen seed should appear in the flesh, while millions of other good people were kept in ignorance that a Savior was to come in to the world.

Adam was cautioned against disobedience in the garden, and warned of death, which he later saw when Cain slew his brother Abel. God had given him "dominion" and later helped him in his domestic affairs, and can it be possible that the man whom he had created (now fallen) should be left in darkness as to the future of the race, believing that death ended all?

Does it not look but reasonable that, as our text indicates, God would not forsake his creature; but that he would give instructions as to man's new relationship, seeing that he was now more helpless in his second estate than in the first; that he would open the doors of the human soul and let in the light of a coming Savior who would unlock the grave and restore man from the enemy to divine favor?

Enoch walked with God and saw the Son of Glory on the cross, and he was not; for God took him.

Since 1830—the date of those curious statements—men who had consecrated their lives for the good of humanity have gone into nearly every nook and corner of the known world in quest of knowledge, and have returned again, laying at our feet a store of information in which each primitive people contributes its own story to the world's present knowledge of the past.

In our Bible Christ is referred to as the "Lamb slain," and as the "seed of the woman," "a child born," "a son given," "the everlasting Father," or "God in flesh." But the idea that the gospel had been preached to, and by Adam, Enoch, Noah, Abraham et al., and had been preached from the beginning, being declared by holy angels sent forth from God, and by his own voice, and by the Holy Ghost, or Holy Spirit, as is declared in modern revelation, is a bold statement and one which invites criticism because such statements enter into the realm of modern science and may be proven false. But since the above-mentioned date much has been done to resurrect the past, and bring primitive man closer to us; and if we may believe the stories told about him, the religious side of the man was much the same as with Christians now.

The idea of a God among primitive races seems to have been universal. Professor Max Muller says, "Wherever we find man we also find worship and religion." Again he says, "When we ascend to the most distant height of Greek history, the idea of God, as the Supreme Being, stands before us as a simple fact."—Religions of the Ancient World, p. 135.

Again the Professor says, "There was a period during which the ancestors of the semitic family had not yet been divided, neither in language nor in religion. That period transcends the recollection of every one of the semitic races in the same way as neither Hindoos, Greeks nor Romans, have a recollection of the time when they spoke a common language, and worshiped their Father in heaven by a name that was as yet neither Sanscrit, nor Greek, nor Latin."—Atlantis, p. 424.

Donnelly says, "We find the worship of this one God in Peru and early Egypt."—Ibid., page 476.

"In the early days the Egyptians worshiped one only God, the maker of all things, without beginning and without end. To the last the priests preserved this doctrine and taught it privately to a select few."—American Encyclopedia, volume 6, p. 463.

"We have found in the most ancient records of the Aryan language proof that the indications of religious thought are higher, simpler and purer as we go back in time, until at last, in the very oldest compositions of human speech which have come down to us, we find the Divine Being spoken of in the sublime language which forms the Lord's prayer."—The Duke of Argyll (in Atlantis 477).

Kersey Graves says in an anti-Christian book in discussing the old world religions, that there is in each of them three cardinal principles. The first was "the primeval innocence of man." The second "His temptation and downfall." And third, "His restoration to divine favor by the death of a God." (Bible of Bibles, p. 335.)

We see from this that primitive man had the Christ idea and the Bible idea of man's temptation and fall; this was a part of his religious faith and hope.

And the red race of the new world had saviors, too. "It is but a few years," says Professor Brinton, writing on this subject, "since the Indians on our reservations, in wild despair at the misery and death of those dearest to them, broke out in mad appeals, in furious ceremonies, to induce that longed-for Savior and friend to appear. The heartless whites called it a 'ghost dance,' and a 'Messiah craze,' and shot the participants in their tracks." (Myths of the New World, pp. 223, 225.)

The Christ idea of a God manifest in the flesh, who will restore man to divine favor, is interwoven into both the Old and New World's religions. He is everywhere in those religions looked upon as man's hope and long anticipated friend.

"The great god Tulus," of the ancient Egyptians, is said to have been "crucified for the sins of mankind." (Bible of Bibles p. 309.)

And it is said that "primitive Masonry taught a promised Redeemer." (Masonry in All Ages, p. 70.)

The Chinese have a story of an incarnate God called "Natigai," who, like Christ, was both "Creator and Mediator." (Bible of Bibles, p. 53.) And so the ancient Persian had a person called "Mithra," who was mediator, and also said to have been born like Christ, of a holy virgin. (Ibid., p. 49.) So also the Hindoos had the "Crishna," who died for the people. And the ancient Phoenicians had a tradition that God's Son had been sacrificed upon an altar. (See Rawlinson's Phoenician Religion, pp. 109, 116.) And the Africans had their "Golden Child," the "friend of man." (Protten's Accra Language.) And the old Druids had a story of "a virgin giving birth to a wonderful child." And the learned Kersey Graves, in another anti-Christian book points out "sixteen crucified Saviors," God's manifest in the flesh, Messiahs, Redeemers, Intercessors, Sin-atoners, crucified Saviors, having a superhuman father, and a human mother.

So the Aztec god of war of Mexico was said to have a superhuman father and a virgin mother. So also the Maya Bacab, and the Toltec Quetzalcoath are said to have been born of a virgin, but both crucified.

Colonel Ingersoll, in his Kansas City speech, in 1893, used this line of evidence to prove that Christianity was not a new religion, but paganism in a new dress. And Kersey Graves undertakes to prove in his two anti-Christian books that both Judahism and Christianity were but paganism gone to seed.

"The earliest Vedas demands no sacrifice but that of a thank offering, it probably was compiled in their present form fourteen hundred years before Christ, from documents then existing." (Elphanton's History of India.) Nothing then in the Vedas could have been stolen from the New Testament, because the Vedas were very old books before the New Testament was thought of.

Kersey Graves quotes the following: The May number of the New York Tribune for 1838, says, "the whole of the Veda is now being published for the first time by the East India Company, by which the reader will learn that most of the odious things which have been charged to it are false. They are not found therein. The burning of widows on the funeral piles of their husbands, the marriage of children, the doctrine of caste, etc., none of these things are taught or countenanced by the Vedas. The man who believes in the Vedas approximates to a Christian * * * there is no doctrine of Christianity which has not been anticipated by the Vedas, they have all the modern doctrines of Christianity." (Bible of Bibles.)

No doctrine of Christianity but what is taught in the Veda! "They have ALL the doctrines of Christianity," and the books composing the Vedas were compiled into their present book form some fourteen hundred years before Christ!!

And there is nothing in the Vedas that would justify the burning of widows. That charge made against it is false. And there is nothing in it that would justify the burning of Bruno or Lattimer, and Ridgley; and no heathen culprit with the approval of the Vedas is sent into heaven from the gallows with a mask over his face, and a rope around his neck. But any book containing pro-Christian doctrine, like the Vedas, we usually dispose of with one word—Stolen! But what shall we do in this case?

In the religion of the Iranians "were priests, prophets, angels, twelve patriarchs, and ordinances of water baptism, and the sacrament, or ceremony of bread and wine." (Bible of Bibles, p. 49.)

And the primeval religion of the Chinese had in it the story of the creation, and the fall, but to remedy that fall, Nagitai, the incarnate God, is born into the world, who, like Christ, is both creator and mediator. His system of religion was like the Hindos' and Persians' in some things in which it taught. Now please notice what those old religions taught: "Future rewards and punishment," and a general judgment day, the duty of humility or self-abasement, and the moral and religious obligations to observe strict temperate habits, and to devote our whole life to God, and to do to others as we wish others to do to us. It taught baptism, the cross, and the miter, as emblematical rites of their religion; they also taught the doctrine of the eucharist and the trinity."—Bible of Bibles, p. 53.

The Toltecs of Mexico had a trinity, viz: Bacab, Estruch, and Icona. And Judge Forando says the Hawaiians' trinity was Kana—Ku—and Lona. (See Polynesian Legends.)

Mr. Osborn says the Egyptians "had dim glimpses of God's unity and trinity, also of the incarnation of Deity." (Antiquities of Egypt, chapter 7.)

Malbet says, "The Gomerites held the eternity and unchangeableness of the supreme God. Yet the supreme Gods were three, viz.: Odin, Freya, and Thor. This triad of Gods runs through all Mythologies."—Northern Antiquities, Article, Trinity.

H. T. Colebrook says, in quoting an old Chinese book, "It is thrice affirmed that there are only three Gods; and that these three Gods designate one sole Deity."—Sacred Mysteries, p. 55.

Leplongeon says that the Peruvians and the Mayas of Central America each had a trinity. (See Sacred Mysteries, p. 58.)

Frederick says, "This (Greek) triad of Zeus, Athene, and Apollo, bears an unmistakable analogy to the Christian trinity of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost: Zeus answering to God the Father, Athene to the Holy Ghost, and Apollo to the Son of God, the declarer of the will of his heavenly Father."—Rawlinson's Ancient Religions, p. 140.

Gladstone says, "In Apollo are represented the Legendary anticipations of a person to come, in whom should be combined all the great office in which God the Son is now made known to man, as the light of our paths, the physician of our diseases, the judge of our misdeeds, and the conqueror and disarmers, but not yet abolisher of death."—Religions of the Ancient World, p. 140.

Leplongeon says, "The fact that the same doctrine of a supreme Deity composed of three parts distinct from each other, yet forming one, was universally prevalent among the civilized nations of America, Asia, and the Egyptians"—Sacred Mysteries, p. 57.

Professor Brinton says concerning the prehistoric teachings among the Toltecs of Mexico, "They are credited with an ethical elevation in their teachings which needs not blush before the loftiest precepts of the old world moralists. According to the earliest and most trustworthy accounts, the doctrine of Tonapa were filled with the loving kindness and deep sense of duty which characterized the purest Christianity. Nothing was wanting in them, says an historian, save the name of God, and that of his son Jesus Christ."—Myths of the New World, p. 337.

Whence this growth of the Christ idea, and the Christ doctrine? Would these doctrines grow of themselves, without a Christian seed? Yet from Egypt to Mexico we find doctrine which is believed to be purely Christian in origin.

In discussing the doctrine of the trinity, Leplongeon says, "We need not seek for information among the fathers of the Christian church, for they admitted into their tenants the notion of a triune God as taught by the pagan philosophers and appropriated it, as they have many others of their teachings, without knowing, without enquiring concerning their origin."—Sacred Mysteries.

Colonel Ingersoll says, "None of the rites or ordinances of the church are original * * * the ucharist, the most solemn rite of the church, is a rite much older than the church. The antiquity of Christian rites and doctrines can be traced back to a time before the Etruscans occupied Italy, or Babylonians made cylinders, or before the Toltecs were driven from the woods of South America." Kansas City speech, 1893.

These Etruscans occupied Italy before the Roman era. They were a civilized people there before 753 B. C., the received date for the founding of Rome, because even by Roman accounts they were indebted to these people for the greatest part of their civilization in the early ages of the city's existence. But where these Etruscans came from, and when, seems to be unknown. (See Hutsons Beginnings of Civilization pp. 159, 160, and chapter on Etruscans.)

"Before the Babylonians made cylinders." This takes us back a long way. The modern Mugheir is identified as the Bible Uz—of Genesis 11:31. (See Historical Evidences, p. 291, note 89) This was Abraham's home town, and this place seems to have been the primeval capital of Chaldea, "the inscriptions which are on brick, or clay cylinders [discovered at this place] and which are somewhat rudely executed, have been assigned to about the twenty-second century before Christ, which is at least three centuries before Abraham." (Historical Evidences, p. 252, note 21; Ibid. 53.)

Ingersoll's point is that Christian doctrines are found in the Babylonian documents which date back to a time prior to the use of cylinders, which we see takes us back to the earliest era after the flood, according to Bible chronology.

In those early ages the Babylonians wrote on stone, brick and clay cylinders. (See Cooper's Resurrection of Assyria, p. 30.)

"Before the Toltecs were driven from the woods of South America," these people were a civilized race, and the prehistoric city builders of Central America. They were defeated in war and nearly exterminated by a people called the Chichimecs, a less civilized people, since the Christian era. (See Prehistoric America, p. 283.)

Now Christian rites and ordinances were taught by these peoples, as is proven from documents in existence, and it will not do to turn these agnostics down with a "Oh, they are nothing but infidels." The oldest monuments and oldest manuscripts made by man indicate a prechristian era.

Of course when Ingersoll said, "The ucharist, the most solemn rite of the church, is a rite much older than the church," he meant the New Testament church. The theory is that there was no church of Christ and no gospel people until the New Testament times, and that notwithstanding God's will and intention to have a church, and to save men, that will was not operative, neither could be, until Christ rose from the dead, and appeared in the courts of heaven himself to have his will probated up there, so that the Deity is made helpless, so far as putting the plans of human redemption into operation until that sermon was preached, recorded in Acts 2. And leading church men are on record that Christianity was a new religion, and that its first ministers were the fishermen of Galilee; but in answer to this, agnostics turn, taunting the Christian with the evidence that ALL the rites and doctrines of Christianity, including the Golden Rule, were taught in what we call a pre-Christian age.

So we are taken back "to the most distant heights" into primitive man's religious thought and worship; and we see him there, before the Vedas were made in their present arrangement, before the Etruscans occupied Italy, before the Babylonians made cylinders, before the Sanscrit, Greek, or Roman tongue was spoken, and before the Hindoo or Chinese made an idol—there we see man uttering that humble Christian prayer "Our Father in Heaven," with his communion table as Christians have now, passing the ucharist around, and with the Golden Rule to measure his daily life by—the most sublime doctrine of Christianity; so sublime indeed that Christians declare now it is too sublime for this business age of ours; yet this Golden Rule is shown to have belonged to the first religions taught among men. So that we see these great agnostics are unconsciously found in harmony with Doctrine and Covenants 36 and the young Palmyra Seer.

Heathen writers sometimes are charged with stealing doctrines from the Bible (See Open Court, volume 4, p. 2352.) But the old Bible says nothing about Christ being crucified on a cross, so that they could not have got that idea from our Bible. Yet they knew that the incarnate God died or would die the agonies of a calvary. But these heathen, crucified Saviors were likely prophetic anticipations of a Savior to come, like Isaiah's, when he said, "A child is born," "A son is given." This the prophet said concerning Christ, just as though he was then born; yet it was prophetic, and it was about seven hundred years later that his prediction was fulfilled.

Plato says, "We can not discover the creator, and if we could we could not reveal him to others, we know him only by his works."

But if Christians deny a primitive revelation of the trinity and the gospel plan of human redemption, such as the text indicates, then we are forced to the conclusion that man not only found out God but that he also discovered Christianity, including the Golden rule. Thus it is made to appear as though man found out God's secret intention and advertised the same ages ahead of time, and put into operation the gospel plan, each item in its place without God's help, each primitive people working out the details separately. Now think of those people, separated by vast oceans, with different civilizations, culture, tastes, and different religious structures—people who had not exchanged a word with each other, and some of them thought that they were having all the world to themselves.

Yes they had advertised for ages just what the New Testament revelation teaches, viz.: That Deity would be born of a woman, die on a cross, conquer and abolish death, and restore man to divine favor; and those people had composed songs of praise to God and the Son, had written of God's unity and trinity, and explained it by symbols which have reached our own day! They wrote of immortality, the resurrection, the new life, and the world to come; and each represented the new life or immortality by the cross,—and this was all accidental too(?) So that they not only knew that there is a God, but would become incarnate, and dwell in flesh. Thus they knew that God had a Son, and that the Son the good news of man's redemption, as our text says, was never lost sight of; and that good news has come down to our day, separate and independent from the New Testament revelations. Thus we see that Christ was known and anticipated in early ages, hence his coming was looked for, not only by the Jews but other nations also, so that he had become "the desire of all nations." (Zec-hariah 2:7.) And in this way we may account for the "wise men" coming from the east, of Matt. 2.

Nebuchadnezzar said, "I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt, and the form of the fourth is like the Son of God."—Dan. 3:25.

Now did those heathen find out for themselves what Christians have learned by revelation—all by accident? If so I do not see why man may not have done all the rest, viz.: Have worked his way up from lower organisms, from the tadpoles humble estate, then on and on until he reached the monkey "type," and then up and up from that cunning animal of the tree, through long ages ever higher and higher in creation's scale, until he became Homer or Milton.

No, no. Altogether the theory to which the facts on the whole seem to point is the theory advocated by the young man in 1830, viz.: That a primitive revelation was given in which the trinity was revealed and man's redemption was clearly made known and the gospel preached, and, on the whole, section 36, of Book of Covenants is confirmed by subsequent discoveries. Instead of "Christianity putting on heathen swaddling clothes," as is sometimes said by anti-Christian writers, it was paganism that was subsequently grafted on to a Christian revelation, as appears from the fact that those old religion's differed in many things, yet they all agree as to certain Cardinal principles, as the Christ idea, from which they drew their strength and life; and that Christ idea appears to have been its inspiration through the ages, which sweetened its life with the hope of immortality. But later when Gods were multiplied into a vast army, that primitive revelation became gradually clouded over and corrupted, but yet, when Athens had its thirty thousand gods one of its poets—Aratus—270 B. C., still praised the Deity as follows:

"For he it was who scattered o'er the sky
The shining stars and fixed them where they are,
Provided constellations through the year,
To mark the seasons in their changeless course.
Wherefore men worship Him—the First—the Last.
Their Father—wonderful—their keep and shield."

JEWIS IN JERUSALAM.

THE JEWISH POPULATION DOUBLES IN TWENTY-FIVE YEARS.

In a quiet and orderly way the fulfillment of prophecy goes on. Thus our confidence is firmly established that those Bible prophecies which pertain to yet future times will all in due time be literally fulfilled.

BY WILLIAM E. CURTIS.

(Special Correspondence of the Chicago Record-Herald.)

Washington, Jan. 28.—Although the laws of the Ottoman Empire forbid persons of Jewish birth to own property or do business or even live in Palestine, there are between 50,000 and 60,000 of that race resident in Jerusalem alone, and their number is gradually increasing. The colony has doubled during the last twenty-five years, and now constitutes about three-fourths of the population of the holy city, notwithstanding the regulation prohibiting immigration, and most of the new comers are entirely or in part dependent upon the charity of their American and European brethern. They come chiefly for sentimental and religious reasons, but a considerable number are engaged in business and have been eminently successful. They, more than the other races, are oppressed by taxation and blackmail. The local officials usually require them to pay one-tenth of all they produce as taxes and often seize one-half or two-thirds of their crops, or any property of value that can be attached.

It is very difficult for a Jew to do business in Palestine for this reason. The local authorities feel at liberty to help themselves to anything he has. He has no protection in the courts or from any other source, because, technically, he has no right in the country, and hence the police officials can rob and blackmail him without mercy. This is said to be one of the reasons why the Jews live in such wretched houses and such squalor all over Palestine. Some rich men have been able to protect themselves by paying blackmail. One Jew in Jerusalem is credited with several millions of dollars, which he has made contracting with the government, making loans and speculating in various ways. He has the confidence of the authorities, and it is said that they prefer to trade with him rather than with any other person. For reasons that may possibly occur to the mind of the reader other competitors have no chance with him in obtaining contracts. And in private enterprises also, notwithstanding their oppression and the outrages inflicted upon them, the Jews are gradually pushing the Moslems and Christians out of the way. In Christian street, where they were not allowed to set foot a few years ago, they control three-fourths of the business places. Even now they are prohibited from approaching the farther end of the street, which leads to the Holy Sepulcher. There is no law against it, but the fanatics would beat or kill them.

During the last fifteen years Jewish families have not been allowed to buy land. They are not allowed to hold property. Much Jewish property is held by trustees to evade the government; much business is done by Jews in the names of Turks, and they obtain the privilege by bribing the officials, as it is supposed that they bribe the custom-house inspectors to admit them to the ports.—The Chicago Record-Herald, January 30, 1907.

THE GREATER ZIONISM.

Independently of the movement known as Zionism, we are told, there has been for some years a crusade which is leading back the children of the house of Abraham to the land of their fathers. This movement is described in considerable detail by the Zionsfreund, a German periodical devoted to the Christianization of the Jews, and exceptionally well-informed on all matters pertaining to the Jewish world. From this source the following account is gleaned and translated:

Down to about twenty years ago Palestine had no special significance for the average Jew. Up to that time it was only "the pious ones of Israel" who struggled to return to the holy shrines of their ancestral land, and, living there on the charity of their brethern in other lands, devoted the last years of their lives to praying for that "Return," which seemed far enough distant. But now matters have changed altogether in this respect. In the Jewish contingent that is now swarming all over Palestine we no longer see only the sickly-looking, pale Pharisee, but by his side also the stalwart sons of hard toil. During the past few years colony after colony of Jews have been established in various parts of the Holy Land; there are fully thirty and more of these at present, well-organized and equipped, with the prospect of a large increase in number and power. It is a noteworthy fact that fully one-third of the soil of Palestine has again come into Jewish hands. In the Joppa districts more than forty per cent of the land has been purchased by Israelites, and in the neighborhood of Tiberias no less than seventy-five per cent is occupied by Jews, who have also succeeded in turning large districts east of the Jordan into agricultural lands. The Jews are now so anxious again to obtain possession of the land that they eagerly buy up everything that is on the market. One of the strange phenomena is that the German Protestant peitists, the "Temple," who have maintained excellent agricultural colonies since 1870 near Haifa, Joppa, and Jerusalem, have not been able to hold their own against the competition of the Jewish colonists. Some months ago the "Temple" Society had decided to buy land elsewhere for their young people and establish further colonies; but in view of the Jewish competition they were compelled to drop this project. The Jewish population in Palestine has increased enormously within the past few years; and, coming from all lands, now constitute about twenty per cent of the inhabitants; Jerusalem is again a Jewish city, with a Jewish contingent surpassing that of any other nationality in the historic city, and far greater than the entire population in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah.

Christian students of this new movement are looking with sanguine hopes to this return of the Israelites to the land of their fathers. Not only do they see in it a fulfillment of such prophecies as are found in Amos 9:11-15 ("And I will bring again the captivity of my people, Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them," etc.), but they see in connection with the return the possibility of the fulfillment of Paul's prediction of the acceptance of Christianity by the Jews.—Translations made for the Literary Digest.—Literary Digest, February 2, 1907.

THE PORTENT OF THE FAR EAST.

Your genuine Anglo-Saxon has a contempt for dark-skinned races. Where this contempt originated does not signify. It may date from the time that the Germans defeated the Roman legions. It may spring from the century-long wars which England waged with France and Spain. At all events it survives, a menace to national sanity and a guarantee of national loss.

Nowadays this contempt singles out the yellow-skinned Asiatic. It is true Japan somewhat jarred it by defeating Russia, but your average American believes that Russia was defeated as much by its own stupidity as by Japanese prowess.

And as for China, there is not one American in a hundred thousand who can think of the Chinese as other than curiosities or laundrymen.

This contempt for the Asiatic will turn to respect if not to fear.

A new Asia is being born.

Even the Indian subjects of the British Empire are demanding some sort of self rule. Japan, if once it can get its finances on a war footing, will be a nation any power wishing to share on oriental commerce must either beat or obey.

But ten years hence, whatever danger we may to-day find in New Japan will seem infinitesimal when compared with danger we shall see in New China.

There are more people in China than there are in Japan, the United States, the German Empire, France, Spain, Great Britain, and the entire Russian Empire combined. And they are people of ability.

What will happen when these hundreds of millions come under the control of western civilization? Will the China of 1917 submit to the treatment which it has meekly endured from Great Britain, France, and Russia?

We have been accustomed to think of the Far East as a sort of sponge which can absorb our surplus products. But what if the Far East itself becomes industrial?

We have been accustomed to think of China as wedded to a past that was old when civilization was born. But henceforth the Chinese, like the Japanese, will take the cream off western civilization. With none of those age-long enmities which have resulted from the development of our elaborate industrial world, they can use as well as we every sort of machine and process and agency we have invented.

Call them imitators if you will. When a half-million people pass into the industrial stage the center of gravity in history is going to shift.

There is a hundred times more kinship between America and Europe than between America and Asia. We can trust the course of events in European diplomacy. We all play the game according to the same rules. What rules will the East observe?

As long as the East was afraid of the West diplomacy was easy. That day has passed. Japan is teaching China to despise Europeans and Americans. It is only a matter of time before China shall have become a vaster Japan, and America shall find itself between the Scylla of Europe and the Charybdis of Asia.

When the inevitable day comes we shall be thanking our lucky stars that some men and women were far-sighted enough to send school teachers and foreign missionaries to China along with drill sergeants and civil engineers.

In one word: America must abandon its diletante policy in dealing with the Far East and set its affairs in order for an irrepressible conflict in commerce if not for war.

THE WAY OF THE LAW.

Recently Mayor Dunne, of Chicago, announced that he was going to require owners of resorts in certain parts of the city to abandon their locations and require them to congregate in another and particular locality—and the community rose up in indignation to point out that he could not “require” them to do anything of the kind, for in so doing he confessed a knowledge of their existence, condoned their crimes and became, with them, a law violator of the grossest kind. And the same contretempos has arisen, almost, in Burlington when our executives have officially admitted the existence of evils which, officially, they dare not countenance.

The law in Iowa forbids the existence of resorts of evil repute, and in some, possibly most, communities there are none of notoriety. They exist, however, in the cities of the state despite the law's mandates and the oaths of the executives, and the executives are able, in the face of their existence, to assert their obedience to their oath. The ruse employed is a clever one.

In Burlington, for instance, the mayor enforces the law through the medium of a chief of police. Each month this functionary calls at the resorts whose existence it has been determined to permit, and entering, exclaims (one may imagine): “Aha! What's this? Do you violate the law here? Have you been guilty of transgressions here? I regret it, this evidence which I see. The fair name of our community is despoiled. Burlington is shamed by your course. It makes me indignant. I'm mad. Out with you. I arrest you! I shall file an information against you. You shall be punished. Come to the police court at ten o'clock tomorrow morning, where your crimes shall be inquired into and condemned and a fit punishment prescribed!”

And so all are hauled into court, the same court where the petty thieves, the common drunks and street brawlers are congregated, and there they plead guilty to having been proprietors and inmates and all that, and the court fines them a good round sum and dismisses them with the admonition that they go and sin no more. And they go—but the sinning goes right on, and a month hence they are again apprehended, again fined and admonished and dismissed, until the matter has become a regular routine. The fines are anticipated by the victims and funds are saved to pay them and the city counts upon their receipt as surely as the taxes which fall due in March and in September.

Do the officials condone crime thus? They will tell you no. If they see you drunk upon the street they hale you into court, where a fine is levied as a punishment for what you have done.

If you offer to pay double and secure permission for another celebration to take place at a future date, you will be laughed out of court. You can not buy insurance against future punishment.

In Burlington a thousand or more dollars is brought into the treasury each month by the gamblers and dissolute women, in the manner described. To be specific, the receipts from these sources during the past nine months have been $9,166.30. An even hundred each month for her who answers to the name of proprietress, and a pitiful two dollars from each of the inmates of her home. And the gambling rooms are fined in a like manner, for it is deemed wise to “regulate” where to “suppress” is impossible; and it happens that even this may be done within the bounds of law, so the standard set by the community is not disturbed by those who are sworn to maintain the standard set by the code.—Burlington Hawk Eye, Jan. 27, 1907.

WILL VOTE ON SMOOT CASE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The senate has agreed to vote on the resolution declaring Senator Smoot not entitled to his seat at 4 o'clock Wednesday, February 20.

Senator Burrows presented the proposition to vote in the form of a resolution which provided that the resolution declaring Senator Smoot not entitled to a seat in the senate shall be taken up for consideration immediately after morning business on February 20. “And that at 4 o'clock on said day the senate shall proceed to vote on any amendments and then upon the resolution itself without further debate.”

Senator Allison objected on the ground that, considering the present condition of senate business a whole day ought not to be given to this matter.

Mr. Smoot, the subject of the resolution, expressed the hope that the objection would be withdrawn. “Personally,” he continued, “I should like to have a vote on this matter and will be only too pleased to have it at an early day. I would further state that rather than take any further time of the senate, if an early day will suit the senate, I will be perfectly willing to have it come to a vote without further discussion. But I do hope the senator will withdraw his objection.”

Senator Dubois urged the same action and after it was explained that the resolution doubtless would be discussed prior to the date mentioned Mr. Allison withdrew his objection, and the order was agreed to as suggested by Senator Burrows.

Therefore, let every man stand or fall, by himself, . . . or not trusting another.—Jesus.

Baby Homer and the Sunshine.

Under the door came the sunshine red,
Cheery and bright as a beam of gold.
Dear little Homer, with flaxen head
And eyes so brown—not two years old.
Homer, so full of frolic and fun,
Stopped in his play at the wonderful sight,
And bending low, in his chubby hand
Tried to imprison its glorious light.
Then opening his hand, still wider grew
His wondering eyes, to find it bare
Of all the brightness, all of the light
He surely thought he was holding there.
Ah, baby, I said, as the years go by,
How oft will you turn with an empty hand!
For the things of earth you fain would grasp
Will filter through like grains of sand.
But, dear one, may God so order your life,
So lead you on from your tender youth,
That your soul may imprison forever the light—
The glorious light of his gospel truth,
Whose rays make pale the sun and the stars,
And never fade when the day grows old,
But shed forever undying beams,
To lighten the city whose streets are gold.

More Blessed to Give Than Receive.

Not long since I had the pleasure of spending a day alone with an aged lady who has been an invalid for fourteen years. Her son and daughter-in-law wishing to attend an old settlers' reunion, I offered to stay with their mother during their absence. The offer was gladly accepted.

Her's was a kindly, intelligent face, yet the eyes she turned toward me when conversing were almost sightless; her limbs and hands were badly drawn with pain, and she had not walked a step in many years.

She told me of her girlhood home in the East, of the death of her parents which occurred while she was yet a young woman, and later, when the call for soldiers was made, how her betrothed, also her two young brothers, had gone forth to help save the union, and not one of them had ever returned, one brother dying in the hospital, the others on the battlefield, and filling unknown graves. At this time she decided to go west to some relatives who had invited her to share their home. After some years she met a fine old gentleman who had some daughters needing a mother's care, and as they were sweet, intelligent girls, she consented to become his wife. Then for some years she lived very happily. A son was born to them, who, with his wife and little ones, is now her only earthly stay and comfort, they having cared for her through all her long years of affliction, her companion having been taken away at the beginning of her own illness. Yet her stepdaughters, who are far away, send her money, and one who is near enough visits her as often as is convenient. It is a great pleasure to her to know that they appreciated what she did for them. The poet tells us to "Give to the world the best you have,

And the best will come back to you."

And so it will be, we think.

I read to her from the scriptures. She chose several chapters from St. John, the book of James, also a few of the Psalms. Then I sang some of the sweet old hymns, and also some of the songs from Zion's Praises, and as there were yet some hours until her folks would return, I told her of the reunion I had attended at Lamoni in August, and of the visit to the old folks' home, which I had so greatly enjoyed.

Several from the reunion grounds went up to visit at the home and await the coming of the elders who were to baptize some children. The dear old people came out in the shade on the lawn, and we all visited so pleasantly together. We also listened to the sweet strains of music while an aged brother, who is almost blind, played the violin for us. We saw some afflicted in body, some in mind, the blind, the halt, the palsied, the deaf, the bed-ridden, and yet there seemed to be such a spirit of love and kindness and helpfulness toward one another. We talked to only one who seemed dissatisfied, yet all love Sr. Dancer. Surely the Lord has blessed her with great wisdom in the management of such a home and in dealing with so many different dispositions!

But to return. After I had related to my neighbor what I had seen and heard at the home, she clasped her hands fervently and said, "I do wish I was a Latter Day Saint"; and I heartily wished she was, too. Not for any temporal benefit which she might receive, but that she might know for herself that the doctrine was true, for this knowledge brings such sweet peace and joy to those who suffer and are tried and afflicted in this life, and eternal life in the home behind the tomb.

When I left at eventide, she clasped my hand in her poor crippled ones and begged me to come again, saying, "This has been such a happy day!" As I wended my way homeward I realized the fact that I was much happier than when in former years I had gone to the reunion myself and returned at night, weary, tired, and inclined to be cross, and I knew it was more blessed to give than to receive.

Vales Mills, Ohio, January 29, 1907.

Editors Herald: I am so sorry that our publishing house is gone up in smoke. Of course my sorrowing over it does not help to get another house built. If I had one dollar I would gladly send it at once. I have no income from any source; but will do what I can to get subscribers for the good old HERALD, and Autumn Leaves.

I am holding meetings here every night, with good interest and crowds. I got three to take the Leaves and one the Ensign. I hope to get more soon.

I closed meetings at the Mound Schoolhouse, some two and a half miles from here. Notwithstanding the continued wet weather, the house was about full each night. I never felt better in the work than now. God is with me by his spirit. Bro. S. J. Jeffers is with me, and is a good yoke-fellow in the work. We have been looking for Bro. C. Scott to join, but as yet he has not arrived. He is at Creola, so I hear. The work in and near St. Paris has been hindered, so far as public service is concerned. I had, through the influence of my brother, J. D. Roberts, secured the school house near his place. After getting a good interest awakened, the little Methodist schoolma'am and a Methodist exhorter, by false statements, had the house closed against me. I held a few meetings at private houses and visited from house to house, and have done much good for the cause. I expect to return there soon and do what I can until time for General Conference. I wish you success in arranging for business of the office.

I. N. ROBERTS.

Nevada, Missouri January 29, 1907.

Dear Herald: I have been in Nevada six months and have only had the privilege of attending services four times, my time not being my own; but God's protecting hand has been over me in trials, temptations, and danger, and I thank him for his tender care.

I feel stronger and better in health than I have for many years. I am thankful that I have had employment all the six months. I had three weeks' vacation during holidays. Availed myself of the opportunity to visit Springfield at the home of my daughter, Mrs. A. M. Baker. I truly enjoyed meeting with the dear Saints and friends. It was truly a spiritual feast to me.

I do not feel the least doubt as to the divinity of this good cause. It makes no difference how many fall or step down and out of this work, it will stand just the same, and others will come forward to help build up Zion.

Yours in gospel bonds,

MRS. M. LUCY BRA-SHEAR.

MCTAGGART, Saskatoon, January 5, 1907.

Editors Herald: We are doing our best to advance the gospel. Have now a membership of forty-seven in our Weyburn Branch. Elder J. L. Mortimore was with us a few days in in December. He has a homestead in our country and is doing well. He will be in the field overseeing his mission until the twelfth of April.

In the one faith,

FLORENCE TOOVEY.

Wallawa, Oregon, January 29, 1907.

Dear Herald: I was truly sorry when I read the sad news of the loss of our dear HERALD Office, and I hope every Saint may subscribe for the paper at this great time of need. How sad we would be if we could not have the HERALD any more. I have been reading it for about thirty years. Not long ago when I was reading that sad news of the earthquake in Jamaica, I was filled with a feeling of joy, and also a feeling of sorrow—joy when the evidence of the testimony that was given me some years ago flashed across my mind, and also of the fulfilment of the twenty-fourth chapter of St. Matthews; yet what sorrow for those who suffered there; and, oh, what sorrow for those who must yet suffer, seeing that all things must be fulfilled. Should we not feel sorrow for them? And how rejoiced we should feel, knowing the true gospel has been restored, which is the power of God unto salvation, and the signs do follow the believers in Christ. But, oh, the saddest part is when I think how weak and unfaithful I have been, and how foolish to be led by my carnal and lustful nature, and be engulfed in darkness, bringing reproach upon the cause of Christ. I ask all that I have wronged to forgive me. I ask God and Christ to forgive me, and all humanity to pardon me.

And now, my dear brethren, as you know that the powers of darkness have desired to destroy me, both soul and body, I humbly ask an interest in your prayers that I may be delivered. I hope that God may send some loving brother to my rescue; and this also I believe that God has done, and probably on more than one occasion; I shall speak of one in particular, and that was when Bro. Crabb was here. It was manifest to me that he was a servant of God; but I was too weak and engulfed in worldly things. Bro. Crabb, I ask your forgiveness that I did not give you a few dollars to help you on your way. Please write to me personally.

Yours,

WM. C. FLAGINS.

Hopkinsville, Kentucky, February 2, 1907.

Editors Herald: Elder G. H. Graves has gone to his field of labor. He was ready to leave home January 15, after his allotted time at home for a rest; but was obliged to wait for his clergy certificate. He left here this morning. He was invited by pastors of other churches to stop on his way and preach a few nights for them. Quite a number have called lately for preaching down here, as the preachers get acquainted with him. He did a great deal of good while at home in the way of missionary work.

Respectfully yours,

SR. J. GRAVES.

Downs, Kansas, February 3, 1907.

Dear Saints: Our district president, Bro. L. F. Johnson, came about twenty miles yesterday to be with the Saints and preach to them here today; but the Saints live so far apart and it was so cold and stormy no one came. The last of December and first of January I was at Harlan and Gaylord visiting the Rural Dale Branch. The Saints have a nice little Sunday-school and meeting at Gaylord, and seem to be trying to do their Master's will. May the Lord bless them and all others in the gospel work.

One trouble with us all is that we do not try to do enough, and we find fault with others because they make a little mistake. Let us try to do what we can and try to help others.

Your sister in the one faith,

MYRTLE COOP.

Saline, Missouri, February 4, 1907.

Dear Readers: I have seen the call for money to help build the children's home and sanitarium. I suggest to those who keep house to buy all of their necessities of life in quantities at a saving, if possible, and lay by all saved in that way for the building of these buildings. All could save a great deal if we only try. As the year is yet new, let each one see from now on how much he can save; and not only in buying, but in what we raise on our farms. Look around and see if there are any leaks to stop. If all will help, these buildings will soon be built.

LYDIA A. HINKLE.

Bevier, Missouri, February 1, 1907.

Editors Herald: We are often encouraged by that which comes from the pens of others, and it is a source of strength and comfort, but when we essay the same task, we feel hardly capable of saying anything that would be of benefit, and for this reason we have withheld our "mite."

Owing to our recent loss, we were all made to realize more fully the truthfulness of the old adage that "We will never miss the water till the well goes dry." I believe that all who are subscribers for the church publications should arise to assist in this hour of need; and I can say that I was made to more fully understand what a loss had been sustained last Sabbath when I saw with what eagerness the children reached for their Hopes, and how quickly they began to scan its pages. While it did not have its accustomed heading, yet the thoughts that were contained in it were uplifting and showed that same determination that has been manifested by the HERALD editors. For one I feel truly grateful that we are so well favored as we are, and am willing to wait till we can see in reality that "all things work together for good." Even though this is not apparent at the present.

As a branch the Bevier Saints are striving to keep the banner of King Imanuel aloft, notwithstanding we have at times our hours of darkness; but we are also encouraged by the divine influence to press on in the great race, in order that we may achieve the victory.

We have been called upon during the past six weeks to part with six of our oldest members, viz.: Sr. Ephriam Rowland, Sr. Martha Griffiths and Sr. Margaret Thomas, who were well and favorably known, and who had been recognized in our community for their loyalty to their Master.

I would like to say a word to the scattered Saints of the Northeast Missouri District. The time of our conference is drawing near (February 23 and 24), and we would like for as many as can to make an effort to attend, so that we may become better acquainted and be able to find out the needs of the district and also the opportunities for work.

Hopefully,

F. F. MUSSELL.

Gulliver, Michigan, January 29, 1907.

Editors Herald: I was sorry to hear and to get word, in the first paper after subscribing, of the loss of the publishing house. It may mean a great loss to us now, but God knows what we need, and what is best for us, and how to guide us. His will be done. Perhaps in a few short years the HERALD Publishing House will be more modern and better equipped to carry on the business, and will be far ahead of the one just lost.

We have a nice little band of Saints here. We number fifteen in all. We have a nice little Sunday-school here, also have started a Religio. We have had some fine preaching here this last fall by Elders Hanson, Lambkin, Cornish, and Goodman. There were nine added to our little band, and we feel that much good was done. What we mostly need now is a building of our own to hold services in, and to organize into a branch. My prayer is for all of God's people that they will grow in grace, knowledge, and wisdom.

Your brother in the faith,

THEODORE COFFEY.

Cameron, Missouri, January 22, 1907.

Editors Herald: I came to this central city of the Far West District December 13; met with Saints in their neat and pleasant chapel; preached four times; sent appointment to the Branch which is four miles north. Owing to the sheet of ice that covered the ground, making it difficult to get around, the meeting was postponed.

In company with Bro. W. P. Pickering we arranged to hold meetings in Far West, which is eight miles southeast of Cameron. They have, though few in number, built a house of worship twenty-eight by forty-two, which was dedicated November 18, 1906, mention of which has appeared in the editorial department of the HERALD. I understand that Bro. Simmons, the president of the branch, is going to write up a history of the branch and location, which will be of interest to the readers of the Autumn Leaves, as this is one of the old camping grounds of the Saints known as Old Far West. It is indeed very comforting to see the progress the work has made in this Far West District. There are now twelve church-buildings, three of which were dedicated last November. In my judgment those of the Saints who are in a condition and are contemplating moving into the regions round about will find in this district good farms for sale at prices from fifty to eighty dollars per acre in this neighborhood. Good choice farms can be had for sixty dollars which cannot be had two years from now. While present prices are high and we hear it said that the Saints cannot buy homes, it is a truth nevertheless that we can better afford to pay sixty dollars per acre now than thirty dollars fifteen years ago. Then the products of the farm did not bring one half what they do now. The cry then was, "Land is too high; must come down." But the price is steadily advancing, and judging the future by the past, I believe the price will go up until one hundred dollars per acre will be the common price paid for land that can now be bought for sixty dollars. Why not be wise and move out in harmony with the advice to gather into the regions round about? "But," says one, "you wait. There is going to come a great change in conditions of the world. Yes, money is going to get very close; prices low on all grain, stock, and labor." That may be true, but how will such conditions help you to buy unless you have the ready cash? If you have to sell your property, the chances are that when the reverses come to business that some are looking for you can not sell at any price; then how can you buy? The time has been, twenty-five years ago, that you could buy choice land in this district for fifteen to twenty-five dollars. Today you will have to pay fifty to eighty dollars.

Cameron is in Clinton County. It is situated in one of the best parts of the State. Land is rich; fifty miles north-east of Kansas City, thirty-four miles east of St. Joseph. It has a population of four thousand; electric lights and water-works; two good graded schools; four-year high school, and Wesleyan College. The Burlington and Rock Island together run twenty-four passenger trains daily. I consider this a good point for some of the families of missionaries that have no homes. Good four- to five-room houses rent for six to eight dollars per month, with good patch of ground for garden. Lots fifty by one hundred and fifty from fifty to two hundred dollars each.

Those who have sons and daughters who want employment, I would not advise to locate there. Better go to St. Joseph, where there is always demand for such, and while rent is higher, it would not be necessary to pay twenty-two dollars per month for a five-room house or ten dollars and fifty cents per month for fuel.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM LEWIS.

P. S.—Sr. Mary Ann Koheir, before retiring, got what she supposed was pulverized licorice and dissolved two teaspoonfuls in a cup of water to take as a cathartic. After swallowing the contents she detected that there was a difference in the taste to what she had taken before, and while thus meditating there appeared before her in bright red letters, "Insect powders." Dark as it was, having no light, the vision impressed her that a serious mistake had been made. She went to the adjoining room, where her parents were, and inquired of them if insect powders were in the house. Her mother said, Yes, but she had forgotten to inform her daughters, and as both packages were very much alike, the mistake was made. The father asked his daughter what he had better do, go for a doctor or for the elders. She replied, Get the elders. He came over to our house and related the mistake his daughter had made, and requested me to come over at once. On my way to the house, which was only two blocks from my home, I pondered in my mind just what to do, believing that no time should be lost. I thought it might be advisable to have them send for a physician, and by applying the pump the poisonous powder could be extracted from the stomach. By this means I knew the lives of many had been saved. On entering the house I inquired of the sister how she was feeling. She replied that her throat was closing up. She told me the mistake she had made, and of the vision appearing before her eyes in the dark room. On learning of the vision, there came to me in my weakness needful faith, and I thought, Surely the promise of the Savior will be fulfilled, when he said, "If they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them."—Mark 16:18. Earnest prayers were offered and the oil administered internally quite liberally, as well as anointing the head. Immediately after the administration she said, My throat is better. She retired, slept well all night, and when I called next morning she was up getting ready to do a big washing, apparently as well as ever, and has not felt any ill effects from the poison since the administration.

It is evident that the contents of that cup or glass was poisonous, or the vision would not have appeared. We are truly grateful that in the hour of need the good Master has again manifested his love and power to us. We can sing with the poet, "It is good to be a Saint in latter days." May we be worthy of this name!

WILLIAM LEWIS.

Dear Herald: I cannot express the great sorrow with which I learned the news of our great common loss. We all feel it. Perhaps we are nearer together; for in a common cause I think we are united, whatever disagreements there may be on abstract ideas. And a sorrow in which all share may make us nearer and dearer to each other. If this calamity accomplishes this, it will be good; but I believe that more good than this will come of it; more united work for the aims sought to be obtained by the church in gospel work, and a more individual effort in personal righteousness, as well as working for the temporal success of the church.

M. E. KEARNEY.

Angus, Iowa, January 24, 1907.

Editors Herald: Please find one dollar to help build a home for our beloved HERALD. I cannot tell you how sad I felt when I read of the Herald Office being burned; and when I received my first paper after the fire, tears filled my eyes. And I am made to wonder why we have met with such a loss. Is our heavenly Father displeased with us? Is there getting to be too much pride in the church? Too much trying to ape the world? Too many covers set before our guests? Do we remember the angel who came to the sister and said, "Could you not have spared one of these covers for the Master—just one?" Oh, what a gentle rebuke, yet how full of meaning. Now, dear Saints, let us take that lesson to our hearts, and be willing to make any sacrifice we can. Is it any wonder the dear sister felt as she did when the angel told her to "look and see how the Master dined"? I think I felt a good deal as she did after reading it. He had no covers set for him, neither had he any place to lay his head. I felt as though I would be willing to make any sacrifice I could for the blessed gospel. I can not send much, but if all would send as much, our dear HERALD would soon have a home. I made a sacrifice to send the little I have, but need not tell in what respect. God knows, and that is enough.

Let each one do all he can, and he will receive the blessing promised. The song says, "Sacrifice brings forth the blessings of heaven."

Your sister,

MRS. PAULINE RUBY.

W. H. Forbes, Levelgreen, Kentucky: "It was with sorrow that we read of the loss of the church in the burning of our publishing house; but the Saints must not get discouraged, but push forward with renewed vigor, trusting our Master that all will 'work together for good to them that love God.' I hope that by the time conference meets I may be in a condition to help."

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, February 8, 1907.

Editor's Herald: We were shocked and saddened when the tidings first came to us of the loss of the HERALD building and contents by fire; but, somehow, hope, which personally seems to us akin to prophecy, that what now seems to us loss, may in a few years be looked upon as gain, seems in feeling to possess us.

Anyway, we must be gratified at the hopefulness and energy displayed by the publishing department which so soon seems to have placed the HERALD and Autumn Leaves before their patrons and readers after a fashion that surely tends to minimize their loss.

The discussion of a future location seems to occupy but little of the time of the people, so far as personal observation goes, and a general disposition manifest to abate personal or local interests in the final disposition of the matter, and wait for development that may furnish grounds for wise and just decision in the interests of the whole body of the church to be had.

And at any rate, we may, and all should hope and pray that so much of the "Divine Nature" as has been acquired in gospel experience by us may have full play and exercise and to the subversion of, and relation to the background of the exercise of heat or contention evoked or inspired by carnal, local, selfish, or temporary advantage upon the part of any or all.

If, where potential questions that may, in their settlement effect so seriously the whole church of Christ, are presented for solution, the whole body were inspired by a fervent and anxious desire to know what the mind of the Infinite wisdom could, and through proper attitude of faith would suggest, along with a firm decision to acquiesce and submit to the counsel which might be forthcoming, how much safer and faster would be our progress toward a final right rule among us.

If there shall be found among us, at any time, "envying, and strife, and divisions," are we not obliged to confess with Paul, and others of olden time, that we "are yet carnal" and "walk as men" who can not or do not claim the privilege and opportunity of being instructed by reason of high altitude of spiritual life, by the "Spirit of truth," or of revelation from Almighty God, in whose counsel there is always safety?

Of course, this is a high altitude for mortals to attain, and maintain, but it would yet seem that where success has been accomplished through sacrifice, humility, and the grace of God betimes, yet are we apt to be forgetful, and danger of the delusion of self-sufficiency impel us toward the notion of the opinion that we are now able to alone master great problems; and to often interpret the letter of the word in a sense and way that "killeth," instead of the "spirit which maketh alive." And if this be so, then by just so much, according to St. Paul, are we not as yet "babes," and not grow so very large in stature measurement with Jesus Christ as a pattern?

Personally speaking, in regard to the matter already referred to, I am not at all certain in conclusion, and with many others no doubt, waiting to be better informed.

The location of our "sanitarium," not being a matter of discussion, we know that events are multiplying, and crowding in upon us arguments and pleas for a hastening of the accomplishment of this work.

It is hard enough for the sick and maimed to suffer under the best conditions known to us; and human sympathy, gospel obligation and affection should stimulate thoughtfulness, attention, and practical aid toward relief of not only our own unfortunate brethren and sisters, but of any or all who might come within the range of our ability to aid them, or relieve their distress.

And we believe it has been shown to us with a vision aided by agencies not altogether human, that as an advertisement and practical means of drawing attention of the world to more successful methods of treating the sick, and of also proving an effectual avenue or opening for inquiry as to the spiritual features of our faith, and in the end, will relieve the Bishop and the church through its success of financial burden that it at present may impose.

To our mind, it is one of the most potent and practical suggestions or commands ever given to the church.

The current number of the Autumn Leaves looks well for a fledgling after the trial of fire; the Bishop's article on "Equality" bristles with practical points which all will do well to read and digest.

The church in Independence, and the stake, gives many signs and tokens of progress and spiritual awakening and growth; but the task of elimination of the forces of evil is still before us, and the millennium is not as yet.

M. H. BOND.

ANDERSON, Missouri, January 27, 1907.

Dear Herald: Greetings to our dear old HERALD; may its steady course as a powerful factor in the establishment of righteousness and truth in the earth flow on through the year that now is new, lending strength to the weak, light to the darkened, and courage to the strong.

I have been striving day by day to live nearer to God and to teach my children to love and obey God's word, to teach them the plan of salvation.

Dear sisters, I would love so well to live at Lamoni, or somewhere among the Saints. There are some Saints here, but there is no branch of the church. I wish that Bro. Warnky would come and preach to us again. I have two sons who do not belong to church, and they would like to hear him preach. Dear brothers and sisters, Mr. Patrick and I deeply sympathize with you in regard to your precious books that were lost in the fire. When my husband read the news in the HERALD we both shed tears of sorrow for the many dear Saints who had spent hours of toil in securing and preparing those good books, and now they are all gone to ashes and blown to the four winds.

Well, dear Saints, I have no way of making money, only by raising chickens and selling eggs. I can save you five dollars to help build the Herald Publishing House if you want me to; but it will take me about four or five weeks, and perhaps longer; but by the help of God I will try in every way to make some money to help the Saints, and to pay my tithing also. May the Lord bless you abundantly.

M. E. PATRICK.

NIANGUA, Missouri, February 3, 1907.

Dear Herald: We were very glad to see you come this morning, full size. I could not help but shed tears when we got the small number; to think of the many years we had taken it and it had grown larger than at first. But we hope and pray that it may be the means of bringing the church nearer together, and I think each one who is able should donate something towards helping to bear the loss. We have anxiously waited for an elder to come and preach in this place, but there has been none for almost a year, and it seems very lonely to be away from those of like faith so long; yet we live in hopes of some day having Saints here. There are only ourselves and two of our children here, three families of us. We like this country very well; but would like it better if we could hear the gospel sound once a month at least. Husband's health is better since coming here so we feel thankful. We have tried to explain the gospel at every opportunity.

Your sister in the gospel,

R. M. BRADLEY.

PLYMOUTH, Massachusetts, February 3, 1907.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure that I express a few thoughts in your department, and inform you that I appreciate the information that you give through your columns, and the true riches that we receive from time to time. When I reflect upon the disappointment that you have met with, I can say that the great Captain is at the helm and will guide us on to victory.

I received a letter from the clerk of the Eighth Quorum of Elders, and I see that my name is enrolled as one of the members, and how I felt drawn towards that body. I hope and pray that I may give satisfaction to that quorum. It is true I am inexperienced in regards to all my duties, but I am open to instruction were I am not informed. May God's blessings attend this, and all of its administrators. I want to labor for this cause as long as life lasts, and be a laborer together with God, and I know it requires faith, hope, and charity, to qualify us for the work.

In the one gospel,

N. R. NICKERSON.

News From Branches

ATCHISON, KANSAS.

Religious interest is steadily increasing in the branch, although the extremely disagreeable weather has hindered some from coming out, yet the attendance at all services has been good.

With Bro. Hedrick as superintendent and Sr. Flo McNichols in charge of the music, our Sunday-school is increasing in interest, and we are steadily gaining in members, and at our Religio the interest and the study of the lesson is such that there is very little time for a program.

Bro. Guinand, of Independence, Missouri, was our speaker for church services the second Sunday of last month. The Saints were edified, and he expressed himself as being well pleased with the improved condition of the branch.

Bro. Garrett, also of Independence, was with us on the 27th and gave us two grand sermons.

Death has been in our midst, claiming for his victim our aged Sr. Johnston. She was a patient sufferer for many years, so we have no doubt but that death was a blessed relief to her.

Bro. Hedrick's little son Gilbert met with an accident while coasting, but is doing nicely and will soon be out again.

There seems to be an epidemic of colds, or la grippe as it is commonly called, in Atchison just now, and the Saints are not exempt.

ELMIRA MILLER.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Our rally-day and sacramental-service the first Sunday of the month was a decided success. A large crowd was present. The old-time choir, many of whom were charter members of the branch, occupied the front seats and by request sang one of their old hymns from the Saints' Harp. Their earnest testimonies lent encouragement to all present. The Spirits' blessed influence was felt, and all had a time of rejoicing. One of our noble young men was given words of encouragement by the Spirit through Bro. Tanner. Thus the past and present was presented to our minds and the future very fittingly portrayed in the blessing of the little babe of Bro. D. W. DeJong and wife, blessed by Brn. R. Archibald and S. A. Burgess, and named Grace Alice.

Special prayer was offered at this service for Sr. J. J. Billinsky, who is improving very slowly.

Friday evening, January 4, the Religio elected officers for the ensuing term. Arthur W. Smith was elected president, and J. M. Lloyd vice president.

The new Sunday-school officers have been installed and promise good work for the coming term.

Tuesday evening, January 8, the regular branch priesthood-meeting was held.

On the evening of January 7 our offering-barrel opening entertainment was held, and we found our offering amounted to $86 81, with probably more to come in.

Two weddings were solemnized the past month: On January 6, Bro. G. F. Barraclough and Sr. Elsie Nelson; Bro. A. V. Arnold of Galesburg, Illinois, and Miss Wilkerson.

Among the social events since last report was a surprise on Bro. H. C. Burgess when home from college for the holidays. He has now resumed his studies in Washington, D. C.

The young friends of Bro. Ivor Cooke surprised him in honor of his twenty-first birthday. He was presented with a pretty pin. The presentation speech was made by Bro. S. A. Burgess. Bro. Ivor responded, expressing his appreciation of the friendship shown him.

After Religio, Friday, January 18, Saints, old and young, tendered a surprise on Bro. and Sr. Tanner, in honor of their twentieth wedding anniversary. They were presented with a dinner-set of chinaware. Ice-cream and cake were served, and all spent a pleasant evening.

The evening of January 22, a very large crowd, old and young enjoyed a trip around the world. They were privileged to see Germany, Scotland, Ireland, Japan, Turkey, and ended in America. All were gaily dressed at these various countries in the costumes usually worn; customary entertainment and refreshments were enjoyed by all. Tickets were fifty cents each, and judging from the crowd a goodly amount will be realized. The money is to be used to defray local branch expenses.

Quite a number have been sick the past month with the 'grippe.

E. M. PATTERSON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

The superstition of February 2 has been followed out to the letter and Independence has lately felt the rigor of winter. The movement Zionward is still in the minds of our people, as is evidenced by Saints moving here from time to time and also a fact not to be overlooked is that the new-comers are workers, and there is always room for Saints thus inclined.

The nine young men who were recently ordained are showing their loyalty by their earnest, faithful performance of the duties pertaining to their several offices.

Independence we must confess is not exempt from the proverbial sayings concerning church choirs; but from this date forward its members will feel a greater satisfaction in performing their part of the service.

Our branch reception committee, whose chairman is our energetic brother, Reese Wells, is rapidly perfecting its plans toward promoting the social feature among our local Saints. This is a large committee numbering some fourteen or fifteen members from which we expect a long sought result.

President Joseph Smith delivered the morning sermon on Sunday last, advancing new thoughts along the line of spiritual gifts, which our Saints may well afford to consider.

J. A. GARDNER.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.—District conference was held at Wilber, Nebraska, January 27, 28, and 29, 1907. W. M. Self presiding, E. F. Robertson secretary pro tem, Robert White assistant. January 28, convened for business. Ministerial reports: Elders J. W. Waldsmith, O. H. Porter, J. R. Sutton, W. M. Self, J. J. Teeter, Welber Savage, and J. B. Gouldsmith, Priests J. R. Croft and S. Brolliar; Deacon Robert Burgess. Communication from secretary read stating he had received records and other articles of value from Cottonwood Branch. Reports of Fairfield, Nebraska City, Blue River, Franklin, and Eustis Branches read. On motion report of Franklin Branch referred back for correction. Report of auditing committee read showing Bishop's agent's report to be: Balance on hand August 31, 1906, $73.34; receipts, 516.34; balance due church December 31, 1906, 78.41; receipts for college, $25.26; remitted to E. L. Kelley for sanitarium and children's home, $100.25; balance on hand due church for sanitarium, 75 cents. The following resolution was presented by Brn. C. H. Porter and Oscar Savage and its adoption moved: "Whereas, the law of the Lord provides that if a branch or district be large, he who is chosen to preside should be a high priest if there be one possessed of the spirit of wisdom to administer in the office of president and, whereas, we desire to uphold, honor, and sustain the law, therefore be it resolved, that we present this matter to the minister in charge, Heman O. Smith, and ask that he take action in the matter, and apply the proper remedy for our relief. Motion or resolution carried. Communication from H. A. Higgins was read presenting elder's license of James Perrin, apparently issued by Utah church, as Bro. Perrin desired it recognized by Reorganized Church. On motion matter was referred to committee consisting of Elders J. R. Sutton and E. F. Robertson. Committee on license of Bro. Perrin reported that upon investigation they found license submitted by Bro. Perrin to have been issued by Utah church, hence, according to law, could not possibly be recognized by the Reorganization. On motion report of committee accepted, and ordered spread on minutes, also that a copy of report be sent to president of the Nebraska City Branch to be delivered to Bro. Perrin. W. M.

Self, sustained as district president; H. A. Higgins, sustained as secretary, C. H. Porter, sustained as Bishop's agent and district historian. The following were presented and elected as delegates to General Conference: C. H. Porter, J. W. Waldsmith, E. F. Robertson, W. M. Self, Frank Echternacht, J. J. Teeters, Hattie Echternacht, and James Croft. On motion the next conference meets with the Nebraska City Branch, May 27 and 28, 1907. The secretary was instructed to notify all branches that, no action being had on the delegate question, at the next conference a resolution will be presented to repeal the delegate system, our present mode of representation, and that all branches carefully consider said question, giving their delegates instruction how to vote on the proposed resolution. H. A. Higgins, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—Conference convened at Central Chicago Branch January 19, 1907; J. W. Wight chosen to preside; C. H. Burr and Joseph Luff chosen to assist; W. E. Williamson, secretary; W. Strange assistant. Branches reporting: Central Chicago 127, Unity 26, First Chicago 146, Mission 123, Plano 170, Sandwich 74, West Pullman 35, DeKalb 63, Wilmington 68. Bishop's agent, J. Midgorden, reported: Balance due agent last report, $7.41; received, $1,373.10, paid out, $1,094.30. Treasurer reported: On hand last report $17.50, received, $31.00; paid out, $20.34. Treasurer of reunion committee reported: Total received, $236.26; paid out, $219.47; balance on hand, $16.79. Delegates to General Conference: E. J. Lang, W. A. McDowell, Fred Johnson, J. Arthur Davis, J. T. Hackett, Sr. Fred Johnson, Lilly Merrick, C. H. Burr, A. F. Sherman, J. F. Kier, J. W. Wight, F. M. Cooper, Frances Lang, J. H. Camp, Grace E. Johnson, Philemon Pement, James Lang, Sr. James Lang, F. M. Pitt, Sr. E. J. Lang, Guy Fairbanks. Lee Hartshorn, Sr. Lee Hartshorn, Mabel Sanderson, Harry Passman, Elmer Kahler, Z. M. Santee, Sr. Z. M. Santee, Alice Santee, Clarence Mead, Mabel Fairbanks, Sr. Harry Passman, Fred Peslin, W. E. Williamson, Sr. W. E. Williamson. Next conference to be held at Plano, Illinois, time left to district officers.

Convention Minutes

LITTLE SIOUX.—Sunday-school convention of the Little Sioux District convened at Logan, Iowa, January 31, 1907, at 7:30 p. m., with district officers in charge. Special order of the convention was election of officers and choosing delegates to General Convention. Three sessions were held, and, by reports received, we feel that work in the district is slowly progressing. The Lord met with us, and all felt encouraged and strengthened for future work. Adjourned to meet at Sioux City, Iowa, May 31, 1907, at 7 p. m. Annie Stuart, secretary.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Southern Nebraska; Greeting: Whereas Bishop E. L. Kelley has chosen me as his agent for this district, I send to you this letter of greeting, asking your hearty co-operation in the work of the Lord.

The minimum need of this district financially is one hundred and five dollars per month. This much is required as allowance to the missionaries' families. Last year forty-four names appeared on the books as having contributed to the tithing fund. Several of these are not now living in the district. A few offerings were given in addition to the tithing. This is not a good showing. We ought to do much better than this. We have the names of something like six hundred and fifty members on our records. The question is, How can we properly support the work when only about one member in twelve contributes of his means for this purpose? I invite all the Saints of this district to think of this. We can not plead that we have not been blessed of God in temporal things, for everywhere through the district we find an abundance of material wealth. The Saints in common with others share the riches of God's providence and ought with grateful hearts to contribute each one as he hath been prospered, first giving his tithe, and then of his increase.

Those who have no tithe to pay ought not to neglect their offerings. So much has been written upon this subject citing to the law governing the matter that I do not feel it to be necessary to appeal to it, feeling sure that it is understood, but I ask each to answer to himself why this matter is neglected by so many, and consequently the missionaries' families at times sadly embarrassed and the agent found with an empty treasury. Do not wait for the collection of large amounts, but let each one, as God hath prospered him, contribute according to his ability.

Send your tithes and offerings to me at Peru, Nebraska. I shall be pleased to send receipts to all who contribute, and hope to have at least two hundred names on the book this year.

Your brother in Christ,
C. H. PORTER.

RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Western Passenger Association.—The Western Passenger Association, territory Cheyenne, Wyoming, and east to Chicago, including all points in Colorado, has granted a rate of one and one third fare, round trip, certificate plan, to "Annual Conference and Auxiliary Conventions, Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, Lamoni, Iowa," to be held in April, 1907.

Passenger pays first class full fare on going trip, and must obtain a certificate with and corresponding to every separate ticket purchased, showing payment of fare to Lamoni, Iowa. Holders of such certificates will be entitled to return tickets at one third regular fare, over same route as going trip—provided one hundred are present with such certificates, also that such are availed by the Church Secretary and the Joint Agent, at Lamoni.

Do not accept certificates covering more than one ticket. See that your name is written thereon before handing in, and get them into the hands of the Secretary promptly on arrival.

Going tickets may be purchased from April 2 to 8 inclusive—not earlier than April 2, not later than April 8, and are limited or unlimited according to rules of roads selling them; return tickets are limited to continuous passage. Any going ticket bearing railroad agent's stamp earlier than the 2d or later than the 8th, will not be honored for return trip at reduced rate. Return tickets may be purchased as late as April 24.

The rate applies to purchasers of full fare tickets. Ministers traveling on clergy tickets and children at reduced rates are not entitled to reduced return fare.

List of roads: A. T. & S. F.; Ahnapée & Western; B. & O. S. W.; C. & A.; C. & E. I.; C. & N. W.; C. B. & Q., lines east and west of Missouri River, including all points in Wyoming and Montana; C. G. W.; C. M. & St. P.; C. P. & St. L.; C. St. P. M. & O.; Colorado Southern; Colorado Midland; Copper Range; D. & R. G.; D. M. I. F. & N.; Duluth, Missabe & Northern; Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic; Farmers Grain and Shipping Co.; Florence & Cripple Creek; Frisco System; Great Northern—from points east of but not including Montana; Green Bay & Western; Hancock & Calumet; I. C.; Iowa Central; K. C. M. & O.; K. C. N. W.; K. G. B. & W.; L. K. & W.; Midland Terminal; Mineral Range; Minn. & St. L.; M. K. & T.; Mo. Pac.; Northern Pacific—from points east of but not including Montana, Q. O. & K. C.; R. I.; St. J. & G. I.; T. P. & W.; U. P.; Wabash; Willmar & Sioux Falls; Wisconsin Central.

Inquiry should be made beforehand concerning tickets, routes, etc. Persons should learn whether in prescribed territory. Those not in territory covered by rates granted, should buy local ticket to some point in territory and from such point purchase ticket to destination, securing certificate therewith.

Southwestern Association.—The Southwestern Association has concurred in rate granted by the Western Association. The terms are the same as stated above.

Territory: Southern Missouri, Southeastern Kansas, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Arkansas, and Texas.

Persons in Louisiana should buy to some point in this territory on local ticket, thence secure ticket on certificate plan.

Trans-Continental Association.—"Delegates may avail themselves of the regular nine months' rates which are in effect from Pacific Coast points daily to Missouri River points—Sioux City, Council Bluffs, Omaha, St. Joseph, Kansas City, etc., and which approximate two cents per mile in each direction, or about one fare and one third for the round trip.

"The nine months' rates do not apply to intermediate or interior points, but only to what are known as the eastern gateways of the Association, such as those named. Should it happen that your delegates apply at a station on Pacific Coast from which the nine months' rate is not in effect, which may be the case at very small unimportant stations, the agent will cheerfully ascertain and advise them the nearest point to his station from which such rate does apply. He will also advise as to the eastern gateway points to which it will be most advantageous for them to purchase nine months' tickets in rebuying to place of meeting. [Upon reaching such Missouri River point, parties can buy tickets to Lamoni, on certificate plan, thus securing reduction along entire route.]

"Please note that our lines sell only from the states of California, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, and west of and including what are known as Kootenay common points—Nelson, Rossland, Sandon, Kaslo, and Grand Forks, B. C." Those coming from Idaho, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, Wyoming, except Cheyenne and points on Burlington route; and from Montana, except by lines excepted in Western Association notice, will note that they are not in territory in which two cents per mile rate or rate on certificate plan applies, hence should make inquiry of agents concerning best points to which to buy tickets.

Central Association has also concurred with the Western Association in rate on certificate plan. Territory: Chicago to Buffalo and Pittsburg. "Cairo, Illinois, thence Ohio River to Evansville, thence Louisville, Henderson, & St. Louis Railway to Louisville, thence C. & O. Ry. Louisville to Kenova, thence Ohio River Division of B. & O. R. R. Kenova to Wheeling, thence B. & O. Ry. to Washington, Pa., thence P. C. C. & St. L. Ry. to Pittsburg, thence Penna. Ry. to Mosgrove, P., thence B. R. & P. Ry. to Dubois, thence Penna. R. R. to Johnsonburg, thence B. R. & P. to Buffalo, thence the Niagara River; that portion of Ontario reached by the lines of the Michigan Central, Pere Marquette, and Wabash Railways; the lower Peninsula of Michigan; the line of the C. R. I. & P. Ry., Chicago to Peoria; thence T. P. & W. Ry. Peoria to Burlington, thence Mississippi River to Cairo, Ill."

Rules governing sale of tickets, etc., are same as stated; in Western notice, except that going tickets may be purchased April 2 to 7—not later than the 7th. Secure certificate with every ticket.

Lines: Ann Arbor; B. & O.; B. & O. S. W.; B. & L. E.; Big Four; C. & O.; C. & A.; C. & E. I.; C. & E. and Erie; C. I. & E.; C. I. & L.; C. I. & S.; C. R. I. & P. between Chicago and Peoria via Bureau; C. & M. V.; C. H. & D.; C. N. O. & T. P.; Cin. Northern; C. A. & C.; C. & B. Transit Co.; C. C. & L.; Dayton & Union; D. & B. S. Co.; D. & C. N. Co.; D. T. & I. Ry.; D. T. & M.; D. A. V. & P.; E. & I.; E. & T. H.; G. R. & I. Ry.; G. T. Ry. System; Hocking Valley; Ill. Cent.; L. E. A. & W.; L. E. & W.; L. S. & M. S.; L. & N. R. R.; L. H. & St. L.; M. C. & C.; Mich. Central; Mobile & Ohio; N. Y. C. & St. L.; N. & W.; Ohio Central Lines; Penna. Lines; Pere Marquette; P. & L. E.; E. L. & W.; So. Ry. (St. Louis Div.); T. P. & W.; T. St. L. & W.; Vandalia R. R.; Wabash R. R.; Wabash, Pitts. Ter. Ry.; W. & L. E.; Z. & W.

Those residing in Trunk Line, New England, Eastern Canadian, and Southeastern territory should make inquiry concerning Central points, etc., should they desire to purchase on certificate plan after reaching Central territory.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 7, 1907.

ENROLLMENTS IN QUORUMS.

The law provides for enrollment of all elders, priests, teachers, and deacons in quorums. Applications should be sent to the undersigned. Applications left over from last General Conference were destroyed in the late fire, hence any not enrolled should make application. Blanks will be forwarded, as soon as printed, on request accompanied by stamp. Quorums and quorum officers only are authorized to enroll. For further instructions, see blanks.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 5, 1907.

Church Historian.

In a late issue of the HERALD I see a suggestion from one of the missionaries in the field that the Historian publish a list of books and papers needed in his department that persons having any old books might contribute to supply the demand, and that the ministry might be on the lookout for material needed.

Least some may be delaying their contributions till this list appears, I wish to state that since the fire the Historian has made no effort to accumulate material especially for his department for the reason that he considered that the church library was of first importance, because all departments may have access to that. Everything in the line of books and periodicals is needed, especially those treating on the subject of the latter-day work, either favorably or adversely. It would take a whole issue of the HERALD to list what is needed, and then much would be forgotten. So let any one having anything they can and will spare send it along. Do not fear that the library will get duplicates for duplicates of some kinds of books are needed. Some may be loaned when needed by another, some be in use in one department when needed in another.

Whether sent directly to the library or through me, the library will be first supplied unless otherwise directed.

I sustained a personal loss of over one hundred dollars' worth of books which I was using in the Historian's office, besides valuable documents which never can be estimated, but I still have many books valuable to work in this department and I am using them as needed and will continue to do so until the church can supply the office.

Let us all do what we can to build up the church library and look after other departments afterwards.

Respectfully, HEMAN C. SMITH, Historian.

Quorum of Twelve.

The members of the Quorum of Twelve are hereby reminded that at our last session we adjourned to meet in Lamoni, Iowa, March 20, 1907. Meet at 10 a. m. at the Mite Society rooms. Those having business to be considered by the quorum may send it to the president of the quorum, or the secretary, F. A. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa.

WM. H. KELLEY,
President Quorum of Twelve.

High Priests' Quorum.

To the High Priests; Greeting: On or before the first of next month I will mail the annual report blanks, and will send to the last postoffice address you submitted to me. If therefore you have changed your address, please send it to me immediately upon reading this notice, and should you fail to receive blank write me at once.

Your humble servant,
ROBR. M. ELVIN, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 7, 1906.

First Quorum of Seventy.

Dear Brethren: I am this day sending to each of you a report blank which you will fill out as soon after March 1 as is convenient and send to me at 1211 East Twelfth Street, Des Moines, Iowa. It will be remembered that each will have to report to me on account of the change made last spring in regard to publishing the reports of those on missions.

With the report please to remit the quorum dues unless you are sure of being at the coming General Conference, and this to comply with the order of the quorum.

The time for the first session of the quorum is not decided upon yet, but when decided upon will give notice.

If any do not receive the report blank by the time of seeing this notice please let me know, and I will send another immediately.

Your brother,
J. F. MINTUN, Secretary of First Seventy.

Notice to Quorum of the Aaronic Priesthood.

To Whom It May Concern: On account of the scattered condition of the members of the various quorums of the Aaronic priesthood, it is impossible for many to meet in quorum capacity for counsel and mutual benefit. This could largely be obviated if quorums were reorganized, and organizations effected as to locality—that is, in stakes and principal branches or districts where there are sufficient members to justify or complete quorums. Petitions will be presented to the next General Conference asking that such reorganization be provided for by order of mass-meeting of the Aaronic priesthood held at Independence, Missouri, January 27, 1907.

J. W. GUNSOLLEY, Chairman.
J. C. NUNN, Secretary.

General Conference Reception Committee.

The General Conference Reception Committee has been appointed and organized by choosing W. A. France as chairman, and C. I. Carpenter as secretary. They are now ready to receive applications for locations from the delegates and visitors who expect to attend the coming General Conventions and Conference. Address your applications to the secretary, and give us the following information:

When do you expect to arrive?

How long do you expect to remain?

Will you be alone, or accompanied by wife, or wife and children, and how many children?

Except in the case of members in the same family, each visitor should make separate application to insure an assignment.

We are likely to be somewhat crowded and some sacrifices will have to be made by the visitors as well as by the citizens, but if any special requirements are really necessary, state your case briefly and we will do the best we can for you.

Assignments will be made in the order in which the applications are received, so it will be to your advantage to apply early. The rate for board and lodging has been fixed at $3.50 per week. Watch our future notices for further information.

C. I. CARPENTER, Secretary,
Box 331, LAMONI, IOWA, February 8, 1907.

The Elders and the Religio.

The general secretary of the Religio, M. A. Etzenhouser, Independence, Missouri, requests that all the elders who have either organized new societies or reorganized old ones should report the fact to her at once, giving the names and addresses of the presidents and secretaries of the societies, so that she may ask for a report in case she shall not have already received it.

Sr. Etzenhouser has been working vigorously to get the records in as good shape as possible before convention-time so that a full report may be made, and it is desirable that none be left out, hence the co-operation of the ministry is asked for in this way. Of course if any others have done work of this kind not included among the eldership, the request is to them as well.

In behalf of the work,
J. A. GUNSOLLEY, President.

Conference Notices.

Pottawattamie District conference will meet at 10 a. m., Saturday, February 23, 1907, at Council Bluffs. Will the branch officers see that their reports and credentials for delegates are mailed in time to reach the district secretary not later than Monday, February 23, so that he may have time to prepare the business in hand for the consideration of the conference, and thus avoid waste of time? Ministry and all other reports and papers should reach him by same date. J. Charles Jensen, secretary.

Because of the Saints' church being so small in Colorado Springs, we have arranged for the conference to be held in the Woodman Hall at the corner of Pike's Peak and Wahsatch Avenues. It is a nice place and we can seat between 300 and 400. It is three blocks west of the Santa Fe depot and five blocks east of the D. & R. G. depot, two blocks from main part of town. We expect T. W. Chatburn and other good speakers to be present. J. D. Curtis, secretary.

Convention Notices.

Fremont District Sunday-school convention convenes with the Tabor school, February 21 and 22. Each school should appoint delegates, and send credentials to Mabel Redfield, Tabor, Iowa, by February 19. Programs sent soon. Those having subjects assigned, who can not be present, send papers to Joseph Roberts, Tabor, Iowa.

Pittsburg District Sunday-school association will convene at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in Saints' chapel. Institute work, March 8, 7.45 p. m. Business-session March 9, 10 a. m. Louis A. Serig, secretary.

Clinton District Sunday-school convention will convene at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, March 1, 1907. Business-session at 9 a. m. Officers will be elected for the ensuing year. Martha Cool, secretary.

Spring River District Sunday-school convention will be held at Webb City, Missouri, February 22, 1907, at 10 a. m. Election of district officers, and delegates will be appointed to General Convention. Schools please send credentials to district secretary not later than February 16. Mabel C. Holsworth, secretary. Pittsburg, Kansas, February 3, 1907.

Sunday-school convention of the Northwestern Kansas District will convene with the Hill City Branch, at the Spring Lake schoolhouse, the evening of February 22, 1907. Please send all reports to Mrs. Carrie Boyd, Hill City, Kansas. All go to the convention that can, and try to have a good convention and a good program. Myrtle Coop, secretary, Downs, Kansas.

Sunday-school convention of the Eastern Colorado District will convene at Colorado Springs, Colorado, Friday, March 1, 1907, at 2 p. m. Annual election of district officers; and it is earnestly requested that there shall be a good attendance. Mrs. Louisa Fishburn, secretary.

Kirtland District Sunday-school convention will meet at Sharon, Pennsylvania, Friday morning, 10 o'clock, March 1, 1907. V. D. Schaar, secretary, 1421 Fifty-seventh Place N. E. Cleveland, Ohio.

Spring River District Religio convention will convene at Webb City, Missouri, Thursday, February 21, at 8 p. m. Election of officers February 22, at 8.30 a. m.

Pottawattamie District convention will meet at Council Bluffs, February 22, at 10.30 a. m. Officers will be elected for ensuing term, also delegates to General Convention. Schools please send credentials by February 20. Cora Scott, secretary.

Religio society of Eastern Colorado District will convene in Colorado Springs on Friday, March 1, at 10 a. m. Local secretaries please take notice and send reports to Josephine C. Powers, secretary, Room 226, Hotel Carlton, Denver, Colorado.

Notice.

In my announcement of the Northwestern Kansas District Sunday-school convention for February 22, I overlooked stating that district officers are to be elected at this convention. Convention program will be: Business session, 2 p. m., followed by short session institute work. Entertainment, 7:30 p. m. F. E. Taylor, superintendent.

Died.

OSLER.—Sr. Ada Norine Osler, daughter of Calvin and Minnie Osler, was born February 15, 1890, in Pottawattamie County, Iowa. Died January 29, 1907, after great suffering. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, being baptized by Daniel Hougas, June 25, 1899. She called for the healing ordinance, as commanded in James 5: 14, 15; but declared herself ready to depart and be with Christ, if it was the will of the Lord. Just before the departure of her spirit she said, Mamma, gather up my books and put them away; I shall not want them any more, I am going to sleep; then turning on her side, she closed her eyes, and slept the peaceful sleep of death. Fellow pupils of hers: Ada Norine Osler has answered the roll-call and graduated in a higher class. May you all be prepared to share with her the honors she is called to enjoy.

EMMONS.—Bro. Jonathan Gennings Emmons was born in Floyd County, Indiana, August 29, 1831. He was baptized in 1871 by President Joseph Smith, Plano, Illinois. Died at his home, Saline, Missouri, January 7, 1907. Funeral-sermon by M. M. Turpen. Interment in Hamilton Cemetery. He left to mourn their loss, his aged companion, three daughters, five sons, a host of relatives and friends. He died with a full hope of the first resurrection.

WEBBER.—Sr. Cynthia M. Webber was born in Chester, Ohio, December 7, 1827, and died at Lamoni, Iowa, January 9, 1907. Sr. Webber was first married in 1852 to Mr. Sanford Dickson, by whom she had three children, one of whom survives her, Mrs. Millie Ohls of Marcellus, Michigan. Her second marriage was to Mr. Daniel Webber in 1866, by whom she had one son, Bro. Albert J. Webber, of Davenport, Iowa. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, September 1, 1878, being baptized by George A. Blakeslee. She has ever lived a consistent, humble, devoted life to the cause of the Master. Funeral-services in charge of R. M. Elvin and H. A. Stebbins; sermon by Elder Heman C. Smith.

WILLIAMSON.—Leannah, daughter of Elder William and Polly Vanosdall, was born May 29, 1826, and died at the home of her daughter, Sr. George Williamson, near Bonesteel, South Dakota, February 7, 1907. She was married to Mr. Milton M. Beebe in 1850. Of this union were born five children: Luella G., Georgiana V., Cornelius A., Kate I., and Mary M. Mr. Beebe died near the close of the Rebellion, and she was married to Bro. Chancy Williamson, February 22, 1872. Funeral-services were conducted in Saints' chapel, Gallands Grove, Iowa, February 10, 1907, by C. E. Butterworth, assisted by Alfred Jackson.

SELKIRK.—Robert G. Selkirk was killed while working as foreman of a switching crew near Peoria, Illinois, being in some unknown manner thrown under the wheels of the cars. Bro. Selkirk was born in Edinborough, Scotland, November 11, 1860, coming to America with his parents in 1866. He became united in marriage to a daughter of Bro. Lewis of Taylorville, Illinois, who, with five children, is left to mourn her loss; also a mother, father, three sisters, and three brothers. He was a member of the Burlington Branch. Funeral-services January 29, at his home, Peoria, Illinois. Sermon by William Norris.

WILDERMUTH.—Ann Newkirk, born March 3, 1814, Fairfield County, Ohio. Married to David Wildermuth May 13, 1830. Of this union were born ten children; five survive to mourn. She with husband and family in 1846 settled at what is known in church history as Zarahemla (Wisconsin); and with husband, two sons, and a daughter constituted five of the seven (Church History, page 745) baptized by Zenos H. Gurley in 1850, becoming charter-members of the Reorganization. Sr. Wildermuth never lost confidence in the restored gospel. She passed away at the home of her daughter, near Lloyd, Wisconsin, January 2, 1907.

TROUT.—Sr. Mary Trout was born at Westfield, Hamilton County, Indiana, September 10, 1840. Was the youngest of a family of twelve children, who have all preceded her to the spirit land except one sister. She was the mother of six children, all except one dying while young. She was baptized in 1859 or 1860 by Samuel Powers, and rebaptized April 9, 1882 into the Reorganization by L. R. Devore. She was recognized as an upright and pure-minded woman by all who knew her. Husband and son remain to mourn with a large circle of friends.

HATHAWAY.—At Lamoni, Iowa, January 22, 1907, Mrs. Mary A. Hathaway, mother of Sr. Cora Plum, (also deceased,) aged 89 years, 10 months, and 18 days. She was not a member of any church, but was a good woman, and faithful in the ordinary duties of life to the end of her days. She lived at Three Rivers, Michigan, many years and the Michigan Saints in Lamoni especially gathered at her funeral. Sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, by her request. Bro. John Smith offered prayer.

Lack of Business System on the Farm.

The farmer feels secure in his bed and board; he can, if necessary, wear old clothes; he can usually get credit at the local bank or store, and, therefore, does not have the incentive to vigilant care in eliminating waste that spurs other producers; and the question of profit or loss is frequently neglected. There is no debiting of an interest-charge on his investment; no charge for his own labor nor that of his wife and children and team; no credit for the home-grown products used on the farm. The cash balance at the end of the season tells all that is told—it is a result without an explained cause. In other lines of business a cost-tag accompanies each job, as in a printing-office, or each pair of shoes or other articles through the factory, and when the article is completed the cost is known in the office. How many farmers know the cost of producing any of their crops, or the actual manufacturing cost of eggs, or milk, or stock?—From the Farm and Garden Department, in the February "Circle."

Warm Sea Baths.

Salt water, so strengthening ordinarily, is most weakening when too warm, says The Travel Magazine. On most ocean boats there is an abundance of warm water in the bath rooms, and the daily salt bath is a great tonic, but beware of getting it too hot. It will turn you faint if you do, even if you are accustomed to an equally high temperature in fresh water at home.

To Rid Chickens of Vermin.

I believe it is not generally known that one tablespoonful of Nux Vomica to a quart of soft feed, fed to chickens once a week, will, after a few feedings, free them of mites, lice, and all insects. Chickens should not be eaten for four or five days after feeding the Nux Vomica, but it does not affect the eggs.—Home Department in National Magazine for February.

Railroad Accidents Due to Slovenly Management.

The demoralized condition of the railroad service of the country is chiefly responsible for the great number of railroad accidents, the worst of which are so appalling that they can not be kept out of the newspapers, while the lesser ones of daily occurrence escape public notice. It has been asserted by high railroad authority that it has become habitual to disregard the cardinal principle of the block system which many roads have installed for purposes of safety, and to this fact must be attributed some of the recent disasters. But the root of the trouble goes much deeper than the recklessness of engineers or the mistakes of signalmen. It lies in the bad management that overworks the train crews, dispatchers, and men on duty in signal towers; that makes regularity in train running the extreme exception; and that has brought American railroading into the position of being the most slovenly of all our great business organizations, whereas it ought to be the most precise, methodical, and alert. All sorts of business undertakings nowadays have a tendency to become elaborate, specialized, and highly organized. There was a time when railroad men could carry an air of mystery and treat the public with a certain condescension, as meaning well but not capable of understanding so difficult and so technical a business as operating railroads. But that period is past and gone for ever. The veil of mystery has been ruthlessly torn away, and the gentlemen of the railroad world are now in a position where they must put in a decade of hard work in trying to "make good." Meanwhile, there can not be too many public investigations, and there is no danger of any harm to the traveling public or the shipping public from the doctrine that railroads exist principally for the convenience and the service of the people, and that the people are entitled to have a good railroad system safely and well operated.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for February.

WHAT EXERCISES MAY BE HELD IN OUR CHURCHES.

A matter with which nearly every branch in the church has wrestled in one form or another is, What shall be allowed in the church-building in the way of entertainments, etc.? and shall charges be made at the door? shall seats be reserved? and other concomitant questions. These questions arise because the church-building, erected by the people for a place of worship and dedicated to the service of God, is believed to have around it an atmosphere of sanctity; and because of a fear, perhaps, that something foreign may be brought into it which may contaminate it, thereby lessening the degree of sanctity and in some way detracting from the worshipful exercises afterwards held in the church, there seems to be a more or less natural disinclination upon the part of the devout worshipers to break in upon the routine of purely devotional exercises for which the building was primarily erected. After all, to a large extent the effectiveness of a worshipful service depends upon the condition of those entering into the services; and those who enter the building without due feelings of reverence for God and for the place dedicated to his services perhaps will fail to get the full measure of good in the services.

Be that as it may, the question has been a disturbing one in nearly every branch, and the branches have dealt with it in various ways, so that the rules vary from hard and fast ones to rules which are very lightly if at all prohibitive. In some branches no money is allowed to be charged at the door for any services held within the building; in others, no seats are permitted to be reserved even when entrance charge is made. In other places, no exercises are allowed which are not religious or educational. And to determine what are educational and what are not is where confusion begins.

What shall we do with the church bazaars, socials, lunches, dinners, etc., is a perplexing question, and in some places so far have the prohibitive measures been carried that even the church lawns are forbidden to those who desire to hold them.

The general officers of the church have been addressed many times on this question, in a variety of ways. What shall be permitted and what forbidden in the church-buildings which have been dedicated to the service of God? And these officers have been censured by some for having failed to clearly and specifically define what shall be permitted and what shall not.

WANTED.

The HERALD editors desire to secure photographs of all members of the missionary force and all church-buildings owned by the Reorganization. They desire also to secure pictures of church-workers who were prominent in the early days of the Reorganization. These photos are to be filed for use in the HERALD or Autumn Leaves when occasion requires. Who will help us to make this collection? Send us your photo! Write the name of the individual or the church, as the case may be, upon the back of the photo. Address HERALD Editors, Lamoni, Iowa.

How far have the general officers of the church the right to say what the various congregations of the church shall and what they shall not allow in the way of exercises in the church-buildings? After all, is it not a matter of development, and will not the matter reach different adjustments as the spiritual condition of the branches improves? Doubtless in the past entertainments have been permitted in some of our church-buildings which were out of harmony with the services generally supposed to be held in houses or temples dedicated to the service of God. And it may be that in time to come we will say that we are now permitting unseemly things to enter the churches.

As a general rule we think it would be safe to permit only such exercises as in the consensus of opinion are above question. What come under the head of doubtful, hold somewhere else until more suitable buildings under church control are obtained. We might of course say that anything which is not worthy to be held in the house of the Lord is not worthy to be participated in by Saints; but that attitude would be too radical.

It is clear that the Lord wants not a lugubrious but a happy people. On the other hand, he does not want to see his people given to levity. To properly draw the line between happy exuberance and levity becomes one of our spiritual duties, and where we draw it to-day may not be where we will draw it when the added experiences of passing time have enhanced our spiritual development.

Exercises, entertainments, socials, dinners, which promote or where there is allowed to be promoted a spirit of lightmindedness, levity, undue familiarity, looseness of conduct towards one another, a disposition to lower saintly dignity of deportment, certainly should not be permitted within the church walls. In fact they should be discouraged anywhere. The tendency should always be towards dignity, circumspection of conduct towards one another, a careful regard for all proprieties; and exercises which thus tend to elevate are not inappropriate in our churches. It is perhaps a safe rule to permit within the church-building only such exercises as are devotional, reverential, dignified, and religiously educational. Those which pander only to social instincts or are purely for the purpose of raising funds, however worthy the object of the fund being raised, with propriety might be excluded from the churches and be held in other buildings where the atmosphere was less inharmonious. Sociables, dinners, bazaars, all have their places, but surely there are places much more appropriate for holding them than the buildings which have been set apart for holy purposes, for worshipful and devotional exercises.

On the other hand it might be asked, What are our church-buildings if they are not places where the instincts toward social intercourse shall in a manner be satisfied? What would the devotional exercises at our church-buildings be without the association of friends and relatives with us in those exercises?

It is a perplexing question as to where we shall draw the line, for in places where other public buildings necessary for all public occasions are absent or scarce, we are sometimes compelled to use our churches for what we might not otherwise. Local conditions, material and spiritual, to a great extent must always determine, and for the general officers of the church to lay down hard and fast rules would be impracticable, unwise, and useless. It remains for each branch to say where the line shall be drawn, and to renew their efforts toward the solution of the question as often as it comes up, until they have reached a decision which best promotes the interest of the branch and gives the best satisfaction to those comprising the branch membership.

INSTRUCTING DELEGATES.

Districts sometimes instruct their delegates to vote in a certain way upon certain subjects that are expected to come before the General Conference. This custom seems to us to be open to adverse criticism. There may be questions of more or less local interest upon which the members of the district are well posted and concerning which they have all the light obtainable, and touching these questions it may be proper for a district to instruct its delegates; but as a rule we believe that it is better for the delegates to be left free to weigh every argument that may be presented at the General Conference and then to cast their delegate vote in the interests of right. Among the many reasons for pursuing such a course we suggest the following:

We believe in divine guidance. At any General Conference a revelation may be given to the church touching important questions; and there is no assurance that its provisions will be in line with the instruction which we may have given our delegation.

At the General Conference a broader discussion obtains than can be hoped for in the district or stake conferences; yet if we instruct our delegation we cut ourselves off from any benefit that might result therefrom. We thus narrow ourselves down to the information and light obtainable in our own district or stake.

It is often the case that only a few of the elders are present at the district conference. Possibly there is one of the number who is possessed of unusual eloquence and power in debate. He is sincere but he presents only one side of the question and the other side has no proper presentation. We may instruct our delegates and at the General Conference they may discover that there is another side to the question with able representatives who have the facts back of them. In such an event our delegates are bound to vote against their convictions. We have delegated them to represent us, but they can not properly represent us because they can not make the change which we would make if we were there to vote in person.

It is poor encouragement to a man who goes before the conference prepared to plead any cause to realize that the delegates before him are pledged to vote in a certain way no matter what arguments he may present; he finds his matter judged before it is heard and will form his own opinion of the wisdom of such judgment.

It may be urged that the delegates are sent to represent us, and should vote in harmony with our opinion; but what is our opinion? We can not tell definitely what our opinion would be in case we did attend and hear both sides of the question properly represented in debate upon the floors of the General Conference. Possibly up to the hour of voting our opinion would be subject to modification by the arguments presented. It would seem then that if we select a man to represent us, we should give him all the rights which we would reserve for ourselves.

Having selected wise and competent men or women as our delegates, we must of necessity trust them to be voice for us; why not also trust them to see, hear, and decide, unless as before stated the question be of local importance and so well understood in the district that no additional light may be received from the combined intelligences of such a concourse of representative men as is found at the General Conference?

ELBERT A. SMITH.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Elder Mark H. Siegfried, pastor at Nauvoo, reports that a successful series of meetings has been held there, occupying about two weeks; Elder L. E. Hills being the principal speaker. One is ready for baptism and others are liable to follow. The mayor was among those most interested in the meetings. Attendance was excellent.

The February number of the Improvement Era, the organ of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association (Utah church), has an account of the burning of the HERALD Office that is almost a model of conciseness and brevity. It is as follows:

"Early on Saturday morning, January 5, the principal building of the Reorganized Church, commonly known as the 'Josephites,' situated at Lamoni, Iowa, burned. The total loss is estimated by the SAINTS'

HERALD at $40,000, $10,000 of which is covered by insurance. Their church library, papers of the Church Historian, and his labor for many years, many old historical documents and papers in the Secretary's office, and the entire plant of the SAINTS' HERALD, and Autumn Leaves, a publication of the young people, was destroyed. Elbert A. Smith, Associate Editor of the HERALD, announces in a diminutive issue of the HERALD, January 9, that the building will be rebuilt, $13,045.50 having already at that time been secured by subscriptions ranging from 50 cents to $1,000."

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

A serious marine disaster occurred on the night of February 11, when the steamer Larchmont was run down by the schooner Harry Knowlton and sunk in Block Island Sound. The number of dead is estimated at one hundred and thirty-nine; eighteen survivors. There was no time to dress and the half-clad passengers who embarked on rafts and in lifeboats perished miserably from the frightful cold then prevailing.

A grand jury at Lebanon, Kentucky, has returned indictments against three Kentucky papers for printing "offensive and indecent" details of the Thaw case.

The general adoption of a two-cent railroad passenger rate in the United States seems but a question of time. The legislatures in sixteen States are considering bills ordering such a rate, or have already passed them.

The American Journal-Examiner reports a new religious sect in Denver, presided over by James Sharp and wife who pose as Adam and Eve. They propose to establish Eden in some fertile Colorado valley, and intend to revert to the fig-leaf type of dress—indeed they hope to dispense with that simple costume in time. This hope may seem a trifle radical even to wearers of the modern opera gown.

Important changes in the publishing business of the Methodist Episcopal Church were recommended in a report made to the book committee to-day. After referring to the fact the aggregate losses on the church publications for the years 1904 and 1905 were $44,000, the committee says the general direction and control of the publishing business shall be placed under one general manager, to be elected quadrennially by the general conference.

The general offices are to be in New York, and if the general conference of 1908 shall approve, the corporation now known as the "Methodist Book Concern" will be known as "The Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church."

The publication of all periodicals, with the exception of the several Christian Advocate, will be concentrated in Cincinnati and the publication of all books concentrated in New York City. The Western, the Northwestern, and the Central Christian Advocates will be consolidated under the name of the Central Christian Advocate, and published in Chicago.

The bookstores in New York and Cincinnati will be continued, but only on condition that they are continued without loss. All existing depositories are to be continued on the same conditions. The printing plants at Chicago and Kansas City will be removed to Cincinnati or New York. The publishing agents are to put the general provisions of the plan into effect as soon as possible.—Chicago Tribune, February 14, 1907.

Colonel Henry Olcott, president of the Theosophical Society, who co-operated with Madam Blavatsky in founding the society, died at Adyar, Madras, India, February 17. He was seventy-six years old.

The Scientific American for February 16 has as a frontispiece a picture of the German Crown Prince. The peculiarity of this photograph is that it was electrically transmitted one thousand one hundred miles through a telegraph wire by means of the new "Korn" system.

The various churches of Newcastle, Pennsylvania, have announced that on the twenty-eight day of February they will unite in prayer for the unseating of Reed Smoot. These petitions will be about eight days too late to affect the action of the Senate, provided that body comes to a vote on the day and hour appointed for a vote on this question.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

By request of others I submit the following question. When bread is blessed for the purpose of partaking of the sacrament and a part is left uneaten, is it right to destroy it or throw it away; or should it be retained?

There is no rule governing the disposal of the bread used as an emblem, that we are aware of. It would be well for those preparing the emblems to exercise care to prepare so nearly enough that there will be little or none left. However, there is no propriety in keeping any remnants of the bread over till the next sacrament day, for it would become stale and unfit to use. We have known a branch to have a rule governing in its service requiring that the bread be passed until all that was broken was eaten. There is no general rule of the church in regard to it. If the formula of the blessing is considered, it is to the effect that the bread shall be blessed to "the souls of all those who partake thereof." This may be construed as not including any other portion of the amount prepared only that which is eaten, as it is presented. There is no irreverence intended in the disposing of the bread left over in any ordinary way observed by careful housewives; and none should be felt or charged. The wine can be kept without spoiling, the bread can not; why should there be any question raised about it?

Selected Poetry

The Refiner's Fire.

He sat by a furnace of seven-fold heat,
As he watched by the precious ore,
And closer he bent with a searching gaze
As he heated it more and more.

He knew he had ore that could stand the test,
And he wanted the finest gold
To mold as a crown for the king to wear,
Set with gems of a price untold.

So he laid our gold on the burning fire,
(Though we fain would have said him nay),
And he watched the dross that we had not seen
As it melted and passed away.

And the gold grew brighter and yet more bright
But our eyes were so dim with tears,
We saw but the fire, not the Master's hand,
And questioned with anxious fears.

Yet our gold shone out with a richer glow,
As it mirrored a form above,
That bent o'er the fire tho' unseen by us
With looks of ineffable love.

Can we think it pleases his loving heart,
To cause us a moment's pain?
Ah, no; but he saw through the present cross
The bliss of eternal gain.

—Selected.

There was never a time when the appeal of duty was so strong, or the appeal of ology so weak. Pious sham and pious shiftlessness are pilloried in every market place; and a thousand far-famed reforms are converging toward the heart of the body politic. In that vast thing which we call politics, our betterment naturally will be less plainly visible than in the lesser lives and lesser spheres; but the very desperateness of our present efforts proves our heightened vision and our heightened sense of wrong. The dieties of dirt and demagogy are toppling from their thrones and Jesus Christ, the master of our social order, is coming to his own.—Home Herald.

When one sits alone and muses while the fire burns, and, counting the cost the best he can in a matter so beyond the power of computation, makes an all-inclusive and all-conclusive decision that he will take the right at every fork of life's highway, so far as he can see the right, and, at any rate, that he will look for it as the gist of every problem of behavior, he has consecrated himself to God. The rest is education, growth, practice.—Home Herald.

News From Branches

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Cleveland wants to be heard from among others. There is a steady progress to report, and if only all the local Saints would work, generously overlooking little grievances that come in every-day life, we could report more.

Sunshine and shadows cross our threshold leaving sometimes cheer and sometimes gloom; we are sympathizing with our Bro. and Sr. Topping to-day because the little cot is empty—their baby-girl was carried away by the beautiful sleep-angel.

Thus we are reminded of what awaits us all; and while waiting to be sure we are doing our duty, not simply "marking time," in the delusion we are safe; to truly live is to progress, to move forward, to L-I-V-E! To drop back, to retrograde, is E-V-I-L!

There has been much activity in religious circles here. Doctor Torrey, evangelist, preaching every day to from ten to fifteen thousand people, closed Sunday claiming some thousand conversions. One of his audiences received a glad surprise on leaving the immense armory where services were held, for our gospel literature committee presented nearly all the visitors with the "Mustard Seed" leaflet containing Bro. Hanson's article, "Come and see." It took five Religians nearly twenty minutes passing them out and it would have done your heart good to see how eagerly folks reached for the (latter-day) gospel, and got much more than they expected, don't you think?

We have a live Sunday-school, some scholars exceptionally bright, whose parents are not in the church. Branch work in comparatively good condition and all things considered we are enjoying favor from on high. EARNEST WEBBE.

FIRST KANSAS CITY BRANCH.

We have had most excellent weather all winter, until we began our revival meetings, then it stormed for a week; but our pluck was of greater duration than the storm. We continued for two weeks. Brn. Parsons, Bond, and Dowker were the speakers. The preaching was excellent, and the interest manifested by those who came was good. The attendance might have been better.

All our prayer-meetings are very spiritual, and with little exception everything is lovely. At our business-meeting we released Bro. L. Fowler as presiding priest, because he has been appointed as priest of the Fourth Kansas City Branch, and we selected as his successor Bro. Henry Ashbaugh.

Our Religio is doing fine under the direction of Bro. H. Sandy.

Last Sunday we had Patriarch H. Kemp with us. He preached for us at eleven o'clock in the forenoon. After meeting he gave a number of blessings. The six o'clock prayer-meeting was very spiritual. Bro. Kemp by the Spirit spoke comforting words to some in the congregation who felt almost discouraged. Bro. John Jackson was ordained a teacher. F. C. WARNKY.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, February 11.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS (FIRST).

Looking out over the work here, we see nothing but to encourage us and add to our spiritual vitality, even though there be divers temptations and sorrows and human tribulations to contend with. Have we not all the privilege of worshipping God? Has he not been good to us as a people, not only in pouring out many blessings that were sweet and pleasant, but he has also shown his love in the many chastisements which he has ministered unto us, which at times may have seemed severe, but to-day we are nearer the kingdom because of them.

So far as we know, there are no extraordinary haps or mishaps to report among the Saints, but all is moving smoothly and our numbers are increasing slowly. There are not so many baptisms in a large city as there would be from the same effort in the smaller towns and country places. Why is this? It can not be said that people in the city are less devoted to truth than are those clustering about the lesser earthly lights, for such is not the case. It may be because of the many "interests" crowded upon the mind of the city folk that they have not time to investigate.

Ministers of other churches ignore us; we go on catalogue with the rank and file of "cheap missions" in their learned estimation, and they notice us no further than to bid us God-speed in reaching a class too poor to go to the churches of the "400." Would that Braden and his ilk would follow suit. The big dailies will pull wool over "Hinky Dink," and "Bathhouse John," and throw in the waste-basket a manuscript that pulsates with the gospel of Jesus Christ. Won't they, Bro. Bond?

The Holy Spirit has made us many kind visitations in open word of late, but not always to confirm our present condition. A few have grown cold, or dropped out from the meetings which may be charged to unkind sentiments, brooding words of course, which the Spirit has promised to obviate on condition of future faithfulness.

Dear brother, did you ever stop to think how earnest we are in persuading one into the fold; how we plead with him the saving grace of the gospel, even to late hours in the night and the moment he has believed our story, and come with penitent heart to subscribe unto that which has done so much for us, we take advantage of his first mistake in the hours of his early temptation, and turn upon him like a wolf upon a fallen comrade? Did you ever think of that? It is very hard to be congenial with all, and they with us; but let us at least refrain from speaking of them the evil we may know. Suppose that God should turn tattler! Could he not reveal to your neighbor, your wife, your child, many things you would dislike for them to know?

The three branches here are holding their own, and continually pressing forward. Bro. Luff has been with us the past month, or more, and has delivered a number of good sermons, which have had their effect.

Chicago has also been a mourner in our loss of the HERALD plant. How much she has mourned should be expressed also in dollars and cents. J. H. CAMP.

2270 West Twenty-fifth Street, CHICAGO, February 11.

LONDON, ONTARIO.

Quite a number of the members of our branch attended the opening of the new church at Toronto on the 10th inst. Several St. Thomas Saints came up and accompanied the London contingent. All had a good time, and felt amply repaid for any sacrifice which they had made.

Elder Evans was home from Toronto Thursday of last week.

The Sunday-school children are anxiously waiting for the evening of the 26th, when it is the purpose of the school to have an old time tea-meeting.

Elder A. E. Mortimer has been home the past few weeks. He occupies the stand nearly every Sabbath, and has been quite a help to us.

Bro. Kennedy, of Arthur, is now working in the city. We are pleased to have him with us. W. A. HARDY.

And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold; but he that shall endure . . . shall be saved.—St. Mark.

THE BILL OF FARE.

A MODERN PARABLE AND ITS APPLICATION.

One who seeks the truth may be likened unto a solitary traveler wandering over the scorching sands of a vast desert. He carried with him a small parcel of hard-tack, and a skin of water, of which he ate and drank sparingly, hoping that it might last him until he reached a land, "flowing with milk and honey," where he might satisfy his hunger and quench his thirst. Day after day he plodded on, oftentimes fainting by the way. Footsore and weary he was in the depth of despair when he met another man, of whom he inquired, "Oh, my friend, have you something with which I may appease my hunger and quench my thirst?"

"Yes," was the answer, "I have indeed that which is designed for just such as you. Reach forth thy hand and take this," handing him some parchment. "This is all-sufficient." Eagerly the man took the parchment, and when he had looked thereon, he saw the words:

BILL OF FARE.

(Only those who wash may eat.)

And when he had read these words he looked at his grimy hands which were soiled by many days' journey. "Bring me water," he said, "that I may wash."

The other replied, "Oh, it is not necessary to wash, for there is really nothing——"

But the hungry man continued reading:

Porridge and milk,
Smoked herring,

Mutton chops and mashed potatoes,
Jugged hare,
Cabbage, cauliflower, green peas and turnips.

"Oh," he cried, "give me some of this, it is what I have been looking for."

"Hush, my friend, has your reason left you? It is not needful for us thus to eat. This was needful only for those of former ages, those who lived hundreds of years ago, who were not so enlightened, and had not such great wisdom as we have."

At this the fainting man wept much and lamented that there was no more need to eat that which was deemed necessary for those of former days.

"Continue your reading," said the other. "The perfect word is all that is necessary for you, and that which you have is a perfect and true copy."

So he read, and as he read his mouth did water exceedingly.

Hot rolls and honey,
Rhubarb and rice,
Tapioca custard,
Princess pudding and cream sauce,
Fruit, nuts,
Ice cold lemonade.

"I thirst," said the wanderer, "give me a cooling drink."

"Oh no, my friend, that is not for us in this day and age. It is entirely unnecessary, for we are beyond that, so much more highly educated than they were, we do not need it."

"Do you expect me to derive any benefit from merely reading of what others have eaten to satisfy their appetites?"

"Oh, you see, my dear sir, that wise men have declared that it is sufficient, and they should know; for they are highly educated. Do not be unreasonable. Just eat a little hard-tack and drink the water, and read this bill of fare; that is all sufficient for you."

So the poor wanderer was left to himself. With failing strength he continued to seek, sometimes reading the "bill of fare." Ofttimes in the morning he seemed to see a fertile country before him in the east, but it would soon disappear. In the afternoon he seemed to see it in the west, and turned that way only to find that it was the mirage of the desert. So he perished without finding that for which he was seeking.

The wanderer in the desert is the man whose spiritual nature is starving for the want of proper nourishment. He seems to be surrounded by spiritual famine. Day after day he seeks to satisfy his spiritual hunger and thirst.

He has a little hard-tack, which is something like this: "The wicked shall be cast into outer darkness, where there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, they shall go into punishment that is everlasting, into a lake of fire, and never-ending hell." A taste of that, with a swallow of water, which might be, "Jesus paid it all," serves to give him energy to seek for more satisfying food.

After long searching he might well be ready to despair, when a "Modern Christian" approaches him.

The hungering man asks for something that will satisfy his spiritual desire for nourishment.

"Oh, certainly," he is answered, "I have indeed that which is designed for just such as you. It is the written word. Take and read it. It is all-sufficient. It tells you about spiritual food. Read and be satisfied."

He opens the book and reads the words:

Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.—Acts 22:16.

Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the Kingdom of God.—John 3:5.

Conscious of his sinful state, he immediately asks, "Where is the water that I may be washed clean?"

"Oh," says the Modern Christian, "it is not at all necessary to be washed; there is really nothing to do but to say, 'Lord, take me, just as I am.'"

"But I read:

Repent ye, and believe the gospel.—Mark 1:15.

Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28:19, 20.

Repent and be baptized, every one of you, for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2:38.

John preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.—Mark 1:4; Luke 3:3.

And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John, but the Pharisee and lawyers rejected the counsel of God, not being baptized of him.—Luke 7:29, 30.

"Am I not," asks the seeker after truth, "one of the 'all nations', which the apostles were commanded to baptize? And John's baptism was immersion in water for the remission of sins. And if it was rejecting the counsel of God to refuse that baptism then, will it not be rejecting the counsel of God to refuse to be baptized in water for the remission of my sins today?"

"My son," says the modern Christian, "have you lost your reason? It is not at all necessary today. Just 'give yourself to Jesus.' That way of doing is out of date, we have changed all that. Just give yourself to Jesus."

"Tell me," cried the wanderer, "did God change his plan and go back on his counsel?" But the Modern Christian disdained to answer.

Then the seeker after truth continued to read from the divine record of the gospel bill of fare:

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe. In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.—Mark 16:15-18.

And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following.—Mark 16:15-18, 20.

And they cast out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them.—Mark 6:13.

Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him.—James 5:14:15.

"What blessed promises," said the wanderer.

"Bosh and nonsense," said the Modern Christian.

Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John; who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost; (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus). Then laid their hands upon them, and they received the Holy Ghost.—Acts 8:15-17.

When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues and prophesied.—Acts 19:5, 6.

But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues; but all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.—1 Corinthians 12:7-11.

"Oh," cried the wanderer, "where may I receive the laying on of hands for the baptism of the Spirit, that I may receive these spiritual blessings? This is just what I want."

"Thou foolish man," answered Modern Christian, "we can have none of this today. This was for those who lived hundreds of years ago. We are too enlightened in this age of the world. We do not need them."

"And are none of these things for the blessing of men today?"

"Most assuredly not. Why such things are mere foolishness in the eyes of the wise men of today, who are very great in learning and exceedingly wise."

When the man who was thirsting after righteousness heard this he wept very much that the wise men had discovered that the things of God were foolishness and not needed at all. When he looked once more at the record he read:

Verily, Verily, I say unto you, he that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. . . . I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved and shall go in and out and find pasture.—John 10:1-9.

“What means this?”

“Oh,” says Modern Christian, “that means ‘Come to Jesus,’ just ‘give yourself to him.’ That is all.”

“Is that the way to enter by him; to enter into Christ and put him on?”

“Yes.”

“But the record says ‘For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ’—Galatians 3:27. Baptism is the way they entered by him into the sheepfold according to the record. How is it then that we climb up some other way now and do not go in by the door as Jesus commanded?”

“My son, thou art exceedingly slow of understanding. Have I not told thee that the wise men of the present age say that it is not necessary to enter into Christ in that manner now, only ‘give yourself to him!’”

Continuing to read from the record:

Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life.—John 4:14.

Howbeit, when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come.—John 16:13.

Jesus answered then, and said, My doctrine is not mine but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.—John 7:16, 17.

“What a glorious promise, that the Holy Spirit will show us things to come, and guide us into all truth, and give us a knowledge of the doctrine, if we do the Father’s will. Give me the living water?”

“No, my son,” is the answer, “there is no such thing as direct revelation from God in our day. We are too far advanced. It is not needful that God should speak to us; for we are very learned men.”

“But are there no more of these gifts and blessings to man?”

“No, my son, they are done away.”

“But this bill of fare says we shall have the same kind of food in the last days:

And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams; and on my servants and my handmaidens, I will pour out in those days of my Spirit: and they shall prophesy.—Acts 2:17,18.

“I will not talk with thee,” and Modern Christian turned on his heel and left him.

So the seeker struggled up, hopeless and despairing, turning first to the right to investigate a church which appeared to possess a resemblance to the Church of Christ, but which proved to be mere mist; then to the left where another religion called his attention, but with like result. They were simply as the mirage; “forms of godliness, but denying the power thereof.”

This homely lesson is designed to show the absurdity of trying to satisfy the spiritual hunger and thirst by simply reading the bill of fare, or the divine record of what the people in former days have enjoyed and feasted upon. We read in the record an account of the spiritual blessings that were received through the operation of the Holy Spirit in that day, and the promise is made that they may be enjoyed by all, all who will accept and obey the law given by Jesus and taught by the apostles. This wide-sweeping promise was made by Peter on the day of Pentecost:

And ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2:39.

We are afar off from Peter’s day. God calls everyone to come to him. He “commandeth all men everywhere to repent.” (Acts 17:30.) And if to repent, then to be “baptized for the remission of sins.” And after having been baptized, properly, they are entitled to the gift of the Holy Ghost promised by Peter, for, “I am the Lord, I change not.”—Malachi 3:6. “With whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.”—James 1:17. And so is “Jesus Christ the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever.”—Hebrews 13:8.

Then why not accept the invitation to come to the feast, partake of the spiritual food, not simply be contented with reading the bill of fare which was had at the feast hundreds of years ago? Have faith in Christ, implicit, active faith; repent of your sins; be baptized for the remission of them, which was, and is, and will be (the same yesterday, to-day, and forever) the counsel of God; receive the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit, and be one of the partakers of the benefits that accrue from the signs that follow the believers, where many of the sick are anointed with oil and healed, and the gifts of the spirit are given to men.

Where will you find this?

In the church which has the officers and blessings which God set in the church: “First apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."—I Corinthians 12:28.

"And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors; and some teachers."—Ephesians 4:11.

"We extend the invitation of the prophet:

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness."—Isaiah 55:1-2.

Also the words of Jesus:

"If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink."—John 7:35.

The invitation is to every one who is hungry and thirsty: "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."—Revelation 22:17.—L. A. Gould.

STUDY AND WORK.

Are we prepared to meet the questions which are now asked on every side, "Why are we members of the Reorganized church? Why are you Josephites instead of Brighamites?" The country is full of missionaries of that creed or school, who are deceived, and are going forth with the cry, "We are the church; we are the ones who have the authority." And then they will present for proof of the claim, Succession to Presidency of the Church, by B. H. Roberts, and many others including A Sufficient Answer to Josephites, also by B. H. Roberts; which they will use against us and if we are not well-read in our own books they will at least confuse us, and leave us a target for the world to fire at.

We know that we are in Christ's church and kingdom; we know that we have received his Spirit; our faith is so strong that we can not be moved or shaken; but can we prove to others why we say we are right, and know we have the right church? Here is where we may fail if we have not read and learned what we might, providing we have the means to procure our own books. But I find many who are poor and can not get them. In such cases I think the shepherd is to blame, for let him be teacher, priest, or elder, he should find out the true state of those whom he is sent to feed. To my sorrow, I find some of the officers are ignorant of what is left on record concerning the authority and right of presidency, now held by our beloved Joseph. They can not defend his claim, or disprove one word of the charge made against his claim.

I beg you to awake and fit yourself for the place in which you stand.

And, dear Saints, if we too, will try to find out these things, we can know just as well as the elders.

And, let us awaken to the spiritual need of those around us. Let us first see if our lives agree with the name we bear. Think of it! We call ourselves Saints; we are members of the church of Christ, heirs of the kingdom of Jesus Christ; and as heirs we may be equal with him. Are we striving to be like him? Are we each day trying to follow closer the example of that elder brother, who gave his life to make us better? And when we live as he would have us live, then we are not only fit for the church, and to be in his kingdom, but we are fit to lead others. Our life will cause them to ask what there is about us that they have not. If we live right the Spirit will be with us, and they will feel drawn to listen to what we say, and to watch what we do, then we can show them the beauty of this glorious, matchless gospel.

How grand is the plan of salvation! How far reaching it is! Only to think that when we are baptized our sins are all blotted out, and God will remember them no more. Some of us have fathers brothers, sons, yes even daughters, who have the stain of crime on them; and, oh, if we can see them or know of them obeying the gospel, how great cause those who love them have to rejoice that they are new creatures; that they are as pure as the child that knows no sin.

Are we doing all we can for the spread of the gospel? Are we improving every chance we have to get the truth before the people, many of whom the ministry can not reach? We can plant the seed or first plow the ground, and fit it for the seed, and leave it in shape that it will thrive when planted by others. Let us not stand idly by and leave all for the elders to do.

In many cases men and women may be preached to and they will not understand one word they hear from the stand; while some one may explain to them a little of what they have heard without letting them know they are trying to teach them. While there are some who will receive a knowledge of the truth by the testimony of others, and thus are ready to receive the gospel when they hear it. The best way to reach the many on any point, is to let them read a sermon or testimony without knowing that anyone cares whether they read or not. I will give you my experience in getting three sermons sent me by Elder Roth of Grinnell, Iowa. I was at Skeel, then in camp, and one young man got them in his hands, and as his dear mother was a saint he thought he would give her pleasure by reading a sermon to her, it being Sunday, and they were many miles from any church in the cook-camp for the lumber firm. While he was reading some of the men came in and all that came had to know something of what they heard, and so most of the men read those sermons, and told of them in their homes, and in other camps (some of the men taking them home); and so they went from camp to camp and from town to town and the last I knew of them they were in Saginaw among the men on the wharf, and then off up the lake. When I tell you the nature of these sermons, you can judge how many furrows they plowed and how deep they were. The books were numbered 1, 2 and 3. First, "The Name of the Church," next "The Kingdom of God," and last but not least, "Church Unity."

Wishing to hear from many who know the truth and can prove that they know it I remain,

WATER BAPTISM ESSENTIAL AND THE DOCTRINE MANDATORY.

Jesus, the Christ and our Savior, recognized and was obedient to water baptism. He said, "Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness" and John baptized him in water and God recognized the act and sent the Spirit.—(Read Matthew 3:13-17, Mark 1:9-11, Luke 3:21-22.)

Jesus included water baptism in his doctrine. Hebrews 6: "Therefore [not] leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptism, of the laying on of hands, of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment."

Jesus commanded water baptism:—"Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things?" Asked of Nicodemus, who came to inquire of Jesus certain things pertaining to his doctrine or teaching, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the Kingdom of God."—John 3:5.

"If you love me keep my commandments." "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed." He also said, "My word will judge you in the last day."

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not [the gospel, which includes water baptism] shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them." etc.—Mark 16:15, 16.

Finally, Jesus our leader and commander, with his disciples, practised water baptism. John 3:22. "After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judæa and there he tarried with them and baptized."

WHAT IS TRUTH?

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED IN DEVOTIONAL EXERCISES BY ELDER CHARLES SMURTHWAITE.

"How be it, when he the Spirit of Truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth."—St. John, 16:13.

Fellow Students:

It being granted that the Spirit of Truth has come, we will try to determine this morning what truth is, for if we do not know what it is it would be difficult for us to be led into it.

The Duke of Wellington, the hero of Waterloo, which event forever silenced the guns of Napoleon, and sent him into exile on the Island of St. Helena, for the rest of his days, was once observed, at a time when he occupied the most exalted position in the British Empire, that of Prime Minister, intently watching the boys as they were at play in the school yard at Eton, the great school. A cabinet minister asked him why he thus stood gazing. He replied: "It is not that I am looking at boys only. I see England's future heroes and great men; her soldiers and sailors, her generals and admirals, her statesmen, her orators and preachers, her authors and poets, her historians and sculptors, her bishops and philanthropists."

So this morning, we are not speaking only to boys and girls, but to future great noble men and women of Utah, and the great church of Christ, whose high destiny it is to educate and to save the world.

Lord Francis Bacon the greatest of modern philosophers, tells us that Lucretius, the great Roman poet, who died in the year 55, B. C., well said:

"It is a pleasure to stand upon the shore, and see the ships tossed upon the sea; a pleasure to stand in the window of a castle, and see the battle and adventures thereof below; but no pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage ground of truth (a hill not to be commanded and where the air is always clear and serene) and to see the errors and wanderings, and mists, and tempests, in the vale below."

Jesus, in the 18th chapter of John, and the 37th verse, states that he came into the world to bear witness unto the truth, to which Pilate asked, "What is truth?" and went to the Jews and told them he could find no fault in him at all, which was the truth. So this morning we have our theme, "What is Truth?" It is imperative at the outset of our career that we should find out what truth is, that peradventure we can then seek it and find it.

Perhaps you already know it. Those who do, please indicate it by the uplifted hand.

You who do not answer will ask the question to yourself, and see if you can answer it.

I will give you a definition: Truth is what is so. That is axiomatic, that is—self-evident and not possible of contradiction.

It is equally important that we should know what error is. I will venture another definition equally as simple. Error is what is NOT so.

I say this is a book—what is simply so.

If some one says it is not a book, they say what is simply not so.

Aesop makes a fly on the axle of a farmer's wagon being driven along a country road in summer boast, "What a great dust I am making." Evidently not so.

Where can truth be found? Everywhere. In fact truth is all there is. What, "truth is all there is:" Yes. Let us prove it. It is simply an elementary problem in arithmetic.

What is truth? What is so. Mark that 1.

What is error? What is not so. That is nothing. Mark that zero.

Deduct zero from one, and you have one left, that is all there is, i. e., truth.

Truth is simple, always easy to prove because it is what is so, therefore it exists, and what exists can be found.

Error or falsity is always difficult, nay impossible of proof, because it is trying to prove what is not, therefore what does not exist, hence impossible to find.

You have all read Aesop's fable of the ass, having put on a lion's skin, roamed around in the forest, and amused himself by frightening all the foolish animals he met within his wanderings. At last, meeting a fox, he tried to frighten him also, but the fox no sooner heard the sound of his voice, than he exclaimed: "I might possibly have been frightened if I had not heard you bray."

Truth's simplicity is humorously illustrated in a story told on himself by Mr. Russell Herman Conwell. He went to New Hampshire to lecture, and to one of his relatives, a professor at Harvard, he said he would never go to New Hampshire again because he was so cold all the time he was there and shivered so that his teeth shook. The professor asked him why he shivered. He answered because it was so cold. The professor retorted that that was not the reason. Then Conwell explained that he shook and shivered because he had not clothes enough on his bed. The professor again told him that was not the reason. "Well, professor," said Conwell, "you are a scientific man, I would like to have an expert, scientific opinion as to why I shivered." The professor, in a facetious way, said: "Young man, you shivered because you did not know better. Did you not have in your pocket a two-cent paper?" "Oh, yes, I had a New York Herald and a New York Journal." "That is it," said the professor, "you had them in your pocket, and if you had spread one newspaper over your sheet when you went to bed, you would have been as warm as you lay there as the richest man in America under all his silk coverlets. But you shivered because you did not know enough to put a two-cent newspaper on your bed and you had it in your pocket."

CONWELL, you see, DID NOT KNOW THE TRUTH.

It is the function of the Spirit, according to the words of our Master, than whom there is no greater authority, to lead us into ALL truth. Yes, but what's that got to do with the story? Simply this: that truth is all there is, and the Spirit will lead us into all there is worthy to be found, if we give it a chance and go about it in the right way. Why the very text says so. "All" means the "whole absolutely." Nothing less. What, will the Spirit lead me into learning my lesson? Has it got to do with literature, arithmetic, history? Yes. And more, too. It has to do with everything. You say you thought it had to do only with religious truth. It has to do with religious truth, but it has to do with everything else besides. It will lead you to find the truth, the actuality of the most subtle subjects as well as the most simple. That's all very well, you say, but I am not capable of these things.

Do you think that Jesus would say the Spirit would lead you into all truth if you had not the capacity for it? Christ's teachings plainly prove that there is nothing but what we can learn, every one of us. For your encouragement, then, and as a vital truth, know ye that every one of us has the capacity to accomplish all things. There is nothing capable of accomplishment but what we can accomplish it. Don't any more say to the teacher. "I can't do it." Christ says you can. The gospel, then, also teaches thoroughness, for there are no so-called half-truths. A thing is either entirely and absolutely true or it is not true at all. It is either so or it is not so. A line is not a straight line if it deviates so much as a hair from the perpendicular. There is no such thing as a white lie. They are all black. A lie is never necessary to be brave; it is the resort of cowards. The gospel teaches thoroughness because it tells you that you are capable of learning all truth. If you fail to accomplish your lessons it is not because you have not got the capacity, but because you have not got thoroughness. You are either too lazy or too careless. No excuses go. God has said it. Our late lamented President John Taylor urged this principle in his maxim: "If a thing is well done, no one will ask how long it took to do it, but who did it."

The late Lord Broughman was an Englishman of the last century, a man of letters, of science, advocate, orator, statesman, and Lord High Chancellor. He was once asked what he would do if he were a bootblack. He replied, "I would be the best bootblack in London."

It will be seen that the gospel, the power of truth, the actuality, the what is so, is the very essence of practicality. It teaches us not only to watch, fast, pray, sing, attend church, and the like, but it teaches us to act, to be doing things, to come down from the clouds to the facts. Theories are good, as they are based on reason, but we must have men to apply them; and when we thus show our faith by our ACTS, instead of our WORDS, it will not be necessary to be continually quoting from the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and other records, of the great feats of those who have lived in the past ages but we should use our own examples of the principles we teach. If you should say to the athlete, "show me your muscle," and he should show you his Indian clubs, you would stare and say, "I don't want to see your Indian clubs; what I want to see is the effect of them."

Get the reality of things—not their appearance.

Get the inside of things—not the outside.

Get the sound materials to wear—rather than the fashions.

Get the conscience of things—not opinions.

The gospel plan is the only plan by which all things may be known. I do not say you should strive to know all things. It is not how much we know but the quality of it. We know too much of what is bad. What we want to know is what is good.

Find out God's will pertaining to anything in hand. Then do it. Be assured whether we do things or not, Time passes. "It flies as fast in idleness as in employment. Whether play, or labor, or sleep, or dance, or study, the Sunne Posteth and the Sand Runnes."

As sure as we do God's will, so sure will the fruits of the gospel be found in us. God bids the plants to blossom and they blossom; to bud and they bud; to bear fruit and they bear it; to ripen and they ripen; and when he again bids them to drop their leaves and withdraw into themselves to rest and wait, they rest and wait. And so sure as we do God's will, that is to say, find the truth of things, so sure will our life be a success in its every department; and so will our tree be known by the gospel fruits of love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance, and finally eternal life.—The Acorn, [Weber Stake Academy, Utah] June, 1904.

TRADEGY OF TWO MOTHERS.

Day by day the miserable story of the Thaw family scandals is being unfolded. The degradation of young Thaw which has its appropriate climax in the killing of another of his kind has required the tearing of the cover from the Thaw family skeleton and the laying bare of all that the members of that unhappy family have endured through the escapades of a scapegrace son. As if this horror were not enough the family had to confess to a taint of insanity in the hope that this would save Harry Thaw from the electric chair.

The most pitiful feature of the tragedy is the appearance of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw on the witness stand to tell a morbid crowd the narrative of her unhappy career. Although young in years this poor woman has run the gaunt of worldliness that would cause hardened wretches to blush. Her story, wrung from an agonized heart, is that of a girl who was practically sold by her own mother. Some blame attaches to Evelyn for the life she led, but back of it all is a mother guilty of a monstrous wrong. According to the daughter's testimony she was deliberately transferred to Stanford White at the tender age of 16 years by her mother, and her subsequent career of dissipation began with that episode.

This tragedy is really the tragedy of two mothers. It was Mrs. Thaw who indulged her frivolous and indolent son in everything money could buy. It was she who watched him grow up in ignorance and profigacy, and it was she who furnished him with more spending money than any young man ought to have. There is nothing to indicate that Harry Thaw was naturally depraved. He appears to have been a pretty decent sort of fellow, considering the unlimited resources at hand for being a cad and a blackguard. Under different surroundings and with a mother who was devoted to his education and training he might have become a good man. As it is he is the victim of family indulgence, and all the avenues of sin were opened to him by the woman who bore him.

In this tragedy of two mothers we see a girl and a boy sent to sure destruction. On the one hand a mother deliberately bartered her child to a noted rouse for money. On the other hand a mother by neglect and ignorance sent her boy to perdition. And the boy and girl of the Thaw case must reap the whirlwind of parental sowing. Perhaps it is just, but somehow there is a haunting feeling that the penalty should be divided.—Kansas City Journal, February 8, 1907.

WALL STREET VIEW OF OUR DECLINING FAITH.

Some striking editorials on the question of the decline of the belief in a future life have been appearing in recent issues of The Wall Street Journal (New York). From such a source the inquiry carries peculiar weight, especially to the type of mind which forms the majority in our commercial civilization. The articles in question, written by Mr. Serno S. Pratt, the editor of that paper, express the "intense interest" of that journal "in the economic and political effects of any change in the thought, the habits, and the lives of men." If there has been a decline in religious faith, Mr. Pratt asserts, that fact "alters the basic conditions of civilization," "becomes a factor in the markets," "changes the standards and affects the values of things that are bought and sold," and "concern the immediate interests of those who never had such a faith almost as much as it does the lives of those who have had the faith and lost it." Along this line Mr. Pratt continues:

"The question, therefore, of practical, immediate, and tremendous importance to Wall Street quite as much as any other part of the world, is, has there been a decline in the faith in the future life? And if so, to what extent is this responsible for the special phenomena of our time—the eager pursuit of sudden wealth, the shameless luxury and display, the gross and corrupting extravagance, 'the misuse of swollen fortunes,' the indifference to law, the growth of graft, the abuses of great corporate power, the social unrest, the spread of demagoguery, the advance of socialism, the appeals to bitter class hatred? To find out what connection exists between a decadence in religious faith and the social unrest of our time, due, on one side, to oppressive use of financial power, and, on the other, to class agitation, might well be worth an investigation by a commission of Government experts, if it were possible for the Government to enter into such an undertaking."

Whatever may be a man's own personal belief, continues Mr. Pratt, "there is no one who would not prefer to do business with a person who really believes in a future life." If the world holds fewer men of such faith, it makes a big difference, and if faith is to continue to decline, this will require new adjustments. So the writer views the situation, adding these reflections:

"There are certainly, on the surface, many signs of such a decline. Perhaps, if it were possible to probe deeply into the subject, it might be found that faith still abounded, but is no longer expressed in the old way. But we are obliged to accept the surface indications. These included a falling off in church attendance, the abandonment of family worship, the giving over of Sunday, more and more, to pleasure and labor, the separation of religious from secular education, under the stern demands of non-sectarianism, the growing up of a generation uninstructed as our fathers were in the study of the Bible, the secularization of a portion of the church itself, and its inability in a large way to gain the confidence of the laboring people. If these are really signs of a decay of religious faith, then indeed there is no more important problem before us than that of either discovering some adequate substitute for faith, or to take immediate steps to check a development that has within it the seed of a national disaster."

"The supreme need of the hour is not elastic currency, or sounder banking, or better protection against panics, or bigger navies, or more equitable tariffs, but a revival of faith, a return to a morality which recognizes a basis in religion and the establishment of a workable and working theory of life that views man as something more than a mere lump of matter."—Literary Digest, February 2, 1907.

THE INDIAN TO-DAY.

The election of Charles Curtis to the United States Senate has occasioned an interesting discussion of the present condition of the Indian. Senator Curtis has represented a Kansas district in the lower house of congress for fourteen years, and it is not to be inferred that he goes about with an eagle feather in his hair, wrapped in a blanket and grunting monosyllable replies to interrogatories. But Senator Curtis is of Indian descent, his mother having belonged to the Kaw tribe, while he and his five children have received allotments of rich Shawnee land in settlement of the government's debt to the tribe. Senator Curtis is the first man of Indian blood to occupy a seat in the Senate. In the house, however, he had an associate in Adam Monroe Byrd of Mississippi, who traces his ancestry through a long line of distinguished Cherokee chieftans.

Frederick J. Haskins makes the success of Senator Curtis an occasion for cataloguing the red men prominent in public affairs. He first cites Quannah Parker, undoubtedly the foremost Indian of the day, chief of the Comanches, a political power in the new State of Oklahoma and possible United States Senator. Chief Parker's mother was a white woman, Cindy Parker, who was captured by the Indians when a girl and later became the wife of Quannah, a Comanche warrior. Mr. Haskin's second citation is Dr. Charles A. Eastman, a Santee Sioux, author of several books, notably "Indian Boyhood" and "Red Hunters and the Animal People." Doctor Eastman lectured in Des Moines last summer, proving himself a good Chatauqua attraction. Other prominent Indians are Doctor Carlos Montezuma, an Apache, who was rescued from a battlefield when only six years old and is now a prominent physician in Chicago; Francis La Flesche, an Omaha Indian, now a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and a government employe distinguished for good work in scientific research; Homore Jackson, a successful lawyer in Chicago; Miss Angel de Cora, a Winnebago artist who has met with much success in illustrating Indian life; and Miss Zitkala Sa, a Yankton Sioux who is a contributor to the Atlantic Monthly.

Mr. Haskins makes the interesting statement that those orators who paint the departed glory of "Poor Lo" and refer to the dying race are not within the facts. Instead of declining further numerically, the Indians are now actually increasing in numbers. At the present time there are about 284,000 members of the red race in America. There are Indians in eighteen States and three Territories, exclusive of Indian Territory. Nearly all of the tribes are west of the Mississippi; most of them beyond the Missouri.

To-day there are 159,000 Indians who wear citizen's dress, in whole or in part, and 70,000 who can read and speak English. There are 28,000 Indian families now living in comfortable dwellings. The Cherokees are the most advanced in civilization and the most eager for education, spending $200,000 a year on their schools and colleges. The Chickasaws have five colleges, with 400 students, maintained at a yearly cost of $47,-

000. They also have thirteen district schools, costing $16,000. The Choctaws have 150 schools, in some of which the higher branches are taught. The Seminoles one of the smallest tribes have two schools. The Creeks have ten colleges and sixty-five common schools, with a total attendance of 2,500. The Indians have 390 church buildings and a total membership of about 40,000.—Register and Leader, February, 8, 1907.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

March Reading for Daughters of Zion Meeting.

OUR BOYS.—NO. 8.

"Dutiful parents, parents who are really interested in their boys' progress, will, so far as possible, keep themselves familiar with the boy's work at school. They will read the boy's text-books, talk over the lessons with him at home, and supply the attention which the teacher has not time to give. If the parents are educated, well and good. If the parents are not educated, here is their opportunity to study with the boy for the mutual benefit of all concerned."

—Nathaniel C. Fowler, Jr.

In our last issue we dwelt at some length upon this imperative need that every boy, no matter how much farther it was his intention to prosecute his studies or whether he had no ambition whatever to go beyond the fundamental principles of education, as taught in our public schools, should be required and, if need be, compelled to finish this course. And this, too, entirely irrespective of his plans for the future, whether he had chosen to enter one of the professions, learn a trade, become a farmer, an engineer, or whatever he may have decided upon as his life work.

In no building, with any sense of stability, or safety, can the foundation be neglected, and this is equally true of education.

But, however thoroughly fitted for the duties of his profession the teacher of our boy may be, however faithfully he may discharge these duties, parents must remember that twenty-five, or perhaps thirty, other boys, besides this one in whom they are or should be specially interested are looking to this same teacher for help and instruction, and that each one of these twenty-five or thirty boys has just as valid a claim upon his time, his personal attention as has their boy. And yet each one of these boys is an individual and as such needs the help and encouragement, and mental stimulus best suited to his individual capacity and wants. Will not the thoughtful parent see at a glance the utter inability of any teacher—no matter how competent, how faithful he may be to supply this want, to fully meet this need?

How then is this need to be met, if not through the co-operation of the parents—the home with the school? It is co-operation—not dictation—which the teacher needs, and to which he is entitled (if he be a teacher worthy of holding his position). It is encouragement, not criticism, which is his due. Teachers and parents, as well as the boy, have each individual rights as well as individual needs, and the sooner this is thoroughly understood the sooner will the best results be realized. The parent who earnestly studies the best good of his boy can not afford to be a stranger in that boy's schoolroom, neither should the teacher be a stranger in the boy's home.

The standing which a boy maintains for scholastic ability in the school-room and among his classmates is not always a safe criterion to follow in judging of his mental capacity or his ability to make his life either successful to himself or useful to others. He may be merely a memorizer—may in this way accumulate and lay by a large store of material which he is utterly incapable of using. It is the boy who gets from his books not the mere answers to questions—abstract facts which he does not know how to utilize—but the knowledge which makes clear to his understanding each step in the problem which he has set himself to solve, it is this boy who will win success, for he will never be satisfied short of knowing the why and the how. He studies to obtain information, not merely for the sake of possessing information but rather that he may use it as a stepping-stone to success. Parents can and ought to inform themselves in regard to such matters, and not to hastily conclude that because the boy is at the head of his class, stands well on examination day, and has high grades in his studies, he is going to make a scholarly man. It is possible that he may, but it is possible also that what he is doing is done entirely by the aid of memory. It is a good thing to have a retentive memory, but the boy who makes a success of life will find use for all the faculties God has endowed him with, and these should never be dwarfed by allowing them to lie idle while the memory is depended upon to the boy's detriment.

It is during the first years of the boy's life at school that he begins to feel more largely the influence of associates and perhaps of chums. Heretofore home and its associations have been all in all to him. But now he enters as it were not only a new field of activities but is surrounded by a new atmosphere. The horizon of his life is broadened—he becomes more intimately a member of the great human family into which he has been born. Can he for this reason dispense with a portion of the parental care which heretofore he has been receiving? If such a thought should enter the mind—such a question spring to the lips of any parent, let them at once and forever answer, No, he can not! If your boy, up to this period of his life, has received in his home the care—the training which it was God's intention the home should give, you will be wise enough to know that you now need to add to rather than diminish this care. Temptation is in the world, and our boy, in common with all boys, must meet it sooner or later. But for him to come face to face with it, to meet it in the open, knowing that it is evil, does not mean to him and to all who are interested in his welfare what it does to be enticed by his companions into places where he meets it in secret—meets it with a glamor thrown around it, which in a measure softens the hideousness of its face. This is why it behooves you as parents to know the character of those with whom your boy associates—especially of those whom he seems to prefer—with whom he is most intimate, and the best, perhaps the only reliable way in which you can obtain this information is in becoming not only the companion of your boy, but also of his friends and associates. Of this one thing we need to be well assured; our boy can not associate with evil and remain uncontaminated, and such association too long indulged in will weaken every mental and moral fiber of his being. No healthy, active boy can live without associates, hence the boy's associates—especially his intimate ones—form a largely determining factor of the boy's success or failure in life.

Boys are naturally hero-worshippers, and through this instinct many a boy has commenced a downward career ending in his final disgrace and ruin, for older boys of corrupt morals became objects of his admiration and led him on from step to step.

Questions on March Reading.

Are the quoted questions concerning parents' interest in the studies of their boys practical ones? What was said in our last paper concerning the boys receiving a common-school education? What should parents remember concerning the demands upon the attention of the teacher? How will the co-operation of parents and teacher serve their rights as well as those of the boy? What is the danger to the boy in merely memorizing the text of his lesson? How can his parents assist in causing him to gain the clear understanding that shall make his knowledge a stepping-stone to success? What influence in a boy's life begins to increase during his first years at school? Does he need less of parental care because of this? State briefly what we have learned from the previous papers of this series should have been the training of the boy up to this period? Will such training have prepared him to resist temptation when he recognizes it? What danger is there that it may come to him in such a form that he will not recognize it? How can this danger be guarded against? What effect may a boy's associations have upon his success or failure in life? How may the hero-worship, natural to a boy, work harm to him?

Program.

Hymn, No. —, Saints' Hymnal; prayer; reading from "Home Column" with discussion; paper, "Co-operation of parents and teachers"; paper, "The companionship of parents with their boys and their boys' associates"; roll call; business; dismissal hymn and prayer.

Letter Department

Five Lake, February 4, 1907.

Editors Herald: I hope to be able to canvass for the HERALD when winter, with its snow and storms, is over. I have been shut in most of the time this winter. I am not well, and am living all alone. Makes it somewhat dreary, but I rejoice in the gospel. I am so thankful to my Father in heaven for his mercies and blessings to me. Surely we are living in the sifting time; only those who fast and pray and live near to God will be able to stand. "Nearer my God to thee, nearer to thee," should be the burden of our song.

I was so sorry to hear of the loss of the publishing house. That is one of the many things I can not account for, and fail to understand—why it should happen thus when we were hoping to build the sanitarium and children's home this spring. I feel so interested in the home for poor homeless ones. God will make all things work together for our good, if we only trust and serve him. I am sending you some beautiful verses. I trust they may cheer some lonely heart as they have mine, and bring hope and consolation to all who may be called to pass through the "Refiner's fire."

I am piecing a quilt for the children's home. I trust it will help to keep some little tot warm. Who will do likewise?
MRS. FRANK GREEN.

Little Deer Isle, Maine, February 7, 1907.

Editors Herald: I came to this place last Sunday morning—walked across the ice, as the water between the islands is now frozen over. We are having very severe winter weather, and can only hold meetings as the weather will permit. However, I have only been hindered from holding one Sunday evening service this winter. I am preaching every night at this place at present, and have good-sized audiences, and they seem to be real interested. I expect to continue here for about one week yet, and then go to North Deer Isle and Reach, and to Mountainville, and return to Stonington about March 1. My labors during the past year have been so scattered that I often wonder what, if any, real good has been done. There is some satisfaction in trying to do the best one can under all conditions. Away in this far corner of the United States many profound expressions of regret are heard from the Saints and friends because of the burning of our Herald Publishing House. May the Lord give us grace and patience to endure, and an earnest desire to do what is right.

W. E. LA RUE.

Keokuk, Iowa, February 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: We are having meetings now and are having good results. I think there were forty out last night—and the very best of attention. Bro. Peterson is with me now. I think we will continue for several weeks. Not having had meetings here for so long, there are some who have almost forgotten they were members of the church, and have gone so far as to join some other church to get into society. But they are taking up the broken threads one by one. We now have a good Sunday-school and other services. There is an Advent preacher here who has been trying to get one of our members and has been defying the world to furnish the man to meet him on the Sabbath question. We went to one of his meetings, and he treated us as a heathen. Bro. Peterson offered to discuss the question with him, and furnish house, light, and fuel. He accepted the challenge and said he would debate till we got our fill. But we cannot get him to stand to his promise. I send you a couple of articles from the daily paper. We get to put in an article every day in both papers. I heard they print eight thousand copies daily. So next Sunday Bro. Peterson will take up the Sabbath question.

Editors Herald: The Bible teaches that man must die, and after this (death) the judgment. This ought to prompt every Saint to love the Lord with all his mind, soul and strength. By this they will show whom they honor in their manner of life. The present only is ours. Jesus says, "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."

P. A. FLINN.

Monroe, Utah, February 3, 1907.

Editors Herald: I received your kind letter, also True Succession in Church Presidency, for which I thank you very much. I had already read the one I sent to you for some time ago. I am convinced that Joseph Smith has the best right to succeed his father in the Presidency. On the last day of last year I declared myself out of harmony with the Mormon church as dominated by Brigham Young and his successors in office.

I always believed Joseph Smith, the martyr, to have been called and acknowledged of God. I believe him to have been a true prophet, and I will join the church that teaches and practices his teachings. I have a great love for what I consider the gospel of Christ. I believe the articles of faith as taught by the Prophet and Seer, Joseph Smith; and I also have a great love for my adopted country, and will not sustain as church president a man who breaks the laws of God and man, if I know of it.

I accused the Utah Mormon church of making many infidels. Now, what in my opinion has been the cause is that they teach the gospel of Christ in preaching to the outside world, as taught by Joseph Smith and the ancient prophets; but when once men are converted and baptized, they are slowly taught the most revolting doctrines ever taught to an innocent people, and they are initiated slowly into the relics of the religions of the barbarous ages and nations, until they are ready to go into the temple. After a person has been through there, there are none so lost to honor but will keep silent, even if no horrible oath was administered. The poor duped convert goes home and is silent, but virtually apostatizes, or for graft or policy hangs on a while longer—but takes no active part. I am ready to be baptized; my wife is also ready; and we have five children, two old enough to be baptized, and they say that where I go there they will be also. I believe the gospel of Christ to be the power of God unto salvation.

Yours truly,

EDWARD NAZER.

Richmond, Virginia, February, 1907.

Editors Herald: Yesterday a lady invited me to go up town to a little mission, and hear a man speak who is a missionary to China, but who is at present presenting the needs of China to the Christians of America.

I wish to give the outline of a certain portion of his story, especially to tell of an old Chinaman, who had received the gift of faith, of this faith as a grain of mustard seed. There is such a lesson in it for us, who grieve because of our isolated condition.

This missionary, Mr. Holding, it seems had been a home missionary, but had an unutterable longing to go to foreign lands. He owned a considerable property, but he said the care of his property took up time that he wanted to use in saving souls. So he turned it all over, with his wife's consent, to some missionary society, that he might be free to go out, but still everything worked against him, until suddenly the way opened for him to go to China.

He was there nearly a year, learning the language, habits, etc., of the people, before he seemed to find the place the Lord meant for him to occupy.

Finally he was led to a certain city, the name I can not recall, where he was told no missionary had ever been—one of the most benighted of all the cities of China, the center of a region holding about six million people, none of whom, so far as he knew, had ever heard one word of the gospel of Christ. He started out the first night after his arrival, found a place where he could hold a meeting; a few came, among them the "hungriest looking Chinamen" he ever saw, "not hungry for bread, but for truth." He talked to them a little, as best he could. This old Chinaman got up and said he was a believer in Jesus. Mr. Holding said he did not catch all the old man said, and it did not impress him much at the time. After he went to his lodging place, it came to him with much force, what it meant for that one old man to be a believer in Jesus in that place. So the next day he started out to find him, but was not successful for several days. When he did, the old man seemed rather suspicious of him, and was very hard to get acquainted with. Finally the reserve wore off, and he helped Mr. Holding in learning more of the language. After a few weeks, Mr. Holding fell ill of a fever. How long he was ill he has no idea; his wife was a five days' journey from him, and knew nothing of his illness. He had moments of semi-consciousness, when he always saw this old Chinaman, sitting by his little charcoal fire, fanning it that it might burn brightly, that the fumes might not poison the air, and he always had a little pot of tea ready for him, and best of all, an earthen jar of cold water. "I never can forget," said Mr. Holding, "the look of earnest solicitude as he would bring me a cup of tea, nor the tenderness and gentleness of his touch as he took the clean white cloths and dipped them in the cold water, and bathed my burning face, and pressed it to my throbbing temples. Finally the fever broke and I became fully conscious, and I never shall forget the look of joy in his face as he saw that I was better, and falling on his knees, prostrating himself across a portion of my bed, he thanked God for saving the life of his missionary, while sobs shook his body, and his pent-up feelings found vent in a torrent of tears. His missionary! I did not know why he said that until I was better, when the old man told me his story." I will condense this as much as possible. Twenty years before, in Tien Tsin, this old man had heard of Jesus and accepted him as his Savior. He was given a little Testament, which he always carried about, wrapped in a piece of clean, white cloth. Eighteen years before Mr. Holding came, he had come to this city and he began to pray that God would send a missionary. "Sometimes," he said, "I would think I might as well stop praying, then I would see in here," touching his testament, "that God said, 'Ask and it shall be given,' and I would not give up. When I heard you had come, I went to hear you. I was so disappointed, because I thought God would send me one that could speak Chinese." It seems that was why he was a little suspicious of him at first. "But now I know you are my missionary that God sent me to tell my people of Jesus." On comparing notes as to time, Mr. Holding said that the time in his life when he first felt the call to go on a foreign mission was the same time the old man began to pray for a missionary, and just the time the old man had the assurance given him that a missionary would come, was the same time the way opened for him to go to China, but this city was not where he aimed, but he was led there in answer to the prayer of this old man.

Just think of his faithfulness, and we who have so many advantages grow cold and indifferent and lay it to being isolated. In these eighteen years, he had never met a believer in Christ, except twice when he went to some far off city for merchandise, as he was a merchant. He had only his little Testament, no books, no papers, no help outside, only the faith that was "as the grain of mustard seed," and did its work in spite of its uncongenial surroundings.

This Mr. Holding and fifteen other missionaries from seven different denominations have renounced denominationalism, and are teaching just the scripture. Denominationalism, he says, is the stumbling-stone with the Chinese. It handicaps any missionary who goes out under any of its banners. The Chinese cannot see how they are all teaching the way of Christ, and yet teach so differently. A. R. CORSON.

Editors Herald: Having just returned from the performance of one of the saddest duties pertaining to missionary life, the funeral-service, I desire a little space to tell the many friends of Bro. A. C. Duncan of his sudden passing away.

On Saturday, January 26, he left his home at Masardis in the morning to take charge of some potato cars going to Bangor. That night his body was found beside the track not far from Bangor. It is supposed he slipped in stepping from the train. He was talking with trainmen about five minutes before his death. The train was moving, it was thought, about six miles an hour at the time. The only mark upon his body was a cut on the head. Bro. Duncan held the office of deacon and was a firm, true follower of the Master. He leaves a wife and five children, four of whom are small. They are left in comfortable circumstances, however, as he was a successful farmer. He was a very genial man, beloved by all; always had a pleasant word and smile for every one.

Our little one passed away January 5. It seems that we must all drink of the bitterness of separation from those we love. God grant that we may live such pure lives that the separation may be only for a few short years.

The weather has been very bad this winter, varied only by cold and storms. The mercury has registered fifty-six degrees below zero, and thirty and forty degrees has been quite common.

I have tried to do all I could. Expect to begin a new series of meetings next week at Mapleton. Quite a few have expressed their intention to be baptized in the spring. I have made five new openings since coming here where, I think, we will in time get quite a few members.

I trust that we may all make a greater effort to do all the duties enjoined upon us.

Hopefully yours,

CALVIN. H. RICH.

Cleveland, Ohio, February 5, 1907.

Editors Herald: I would like a little help to find a work that will give information regarding what date the first Pope came in the church of Rome, the date of the first mass, and the date the first indulgences sold; and any works that will help me in learning of the gradual departure from the gospel in the first century.

I have been talking to two Catholic men in the works where I am, and find it necessary to have facts and dates, etc., to make our talks effective.

I find this work encourages investigation in lines of helpfulness to self and others with whom we meet from time to time, and we can not afford to allow the impression to come to others that we are following cunningly devised fables, but rather that we are following sure words of prophecy, which are a light that shineth in these dark days of doubt and division in the religious world.

I am trying to reach as many in my personal work daily in the shop as I can; but we need the right kind of tools in this work, as we do in the mechanical lines, and usually a mechanic is sized up by the kind of tools he uses.

I very seldom see a letter in the HERALD referring to the Cleveland Branch or its members or work that is being performed here. This may be for one of two reasons: either we are too busy to write, or we have nothing to write about. It is a good thing to be busy in a good cause; and I know of no better cause to spend one's time in than the work we are pleased to call "a marvelous work and a wonder." It is made to be more so to us, when we stop to think how few there are who can see it, and that we are among that few. The words found recorded in Luke 6:48, "digged deep," have so much meaning to us when we see how people are tossed to and fro and carried about in the religious world, and so easily take up with most any other work than the one the Lord said, through Isaiah, that He would "proceed to do."

We have here in Cleveland the noted evangelist, Torry, who seems to know how to move the multitudes with the operation of the forces he can bring into play, holding forth here from January 13 to February 10. The last account I read, the number of conversions ranged between thirteen and fourteen hundred. Thousands of dollars have been raised for the effort, and the people have not yet learned with all that has been said in those meetings that there is a famine of hearing the words of the Lord. This great man sometimes reads out of the Bible, and you would think he would read some of the words of the Lord, that he would use in proceeding to do his work; but these great men who can move the masses do not read the parts that only the little flock of Christ love to hear, and do, because they come forth from the true shepherd when he was on this earth and said it was his sheep who would hear his voice and follow him.

Well, we are glad to know the voice of the true shepherd is heard by a small number of his sheep here that have learned not to follow after the voices of strangers. They believe this shepherd can reveal to babes, when the wise will not listen; so while we are few in numbers, the work is represented here, and a number of us are interested in doing what we can to let the people know that God has not changed, and that he can be found if we are desirous of finding him in his own way.

Yours in the faith and conflict, F. T. HAYNES.

CLEVELAND, Iowa, February 9, 1907.

Editors Herald: We have been in the past like a great many more of God's children, in an unsettled condition, owing to our temporal affairs in life; the works here almost closing down and the Saints being scattered, almost like Israel of old, to every kindred, tongue, and nation. But after much fasting and prayer, the Lord came to our rescue and we feel thankful to God that he has heard and answered the prayer of his people here by opening up the work.

I am thankful that I am living in a dispensation in which the gospel has been restored to earth again and that we have been blessed many times in hearing it, and especially during this last week, with Bro. Charles Harp and George Day, Bro. Harp being at Cleveland most of the time. He worked up a good interest and gave us some good preaching. He visited the Saints during the day, and preached in the evening. He went to a brother's house and had some music on the phonograph, and there he undertook to give a little lecture on the burning of the Herald Publishing House. If the brother was not mistaken, we have plenty of money to rebuild a good plant at Lamoni, for when the record was tried it said, "The day of the burning of the building they had a meeting and collected thirteen hundred thousand dollars." Come again, Bro. Harp. JOHN M. HOOPER.

Brown City, Michigan, February 5, 1907.

Editors Herald: While looking on the dark side of everything I became despondent over spiritual things, believing God to have forsaken me; but now I have regained consciousness of my standing before God. I am isolated from branch privileges and deprived of continual feasting with the Saints as they meet together to feed on the bread of heaven as it is imparted to the church from different sources of the missionary force; but I thank God under all of those trying difficulties that I have that same desire to serve God as he has commanded, although falling short in many ways. I feel to do my duty today to myself and HERALD by renewing my subscription. The church papers are food to the soul. I have also subscribed for the Ensign, and would like to have my name on the Autumn Leaves list. God is the one to whom we must look for strength and knowledge. This I have been made to realize more fully at the present time, as I see mankind speculating on the revelation of God's power to them. We have this demonstrated in Rev. Lupton's case, and in the case of a revival which is being conducted in our school-house at the present time, where the candidate is made to believe that he is accepted with God through his effort and his administration, while the candidate arises from the bench, in some cases gloriously saved, in other instances is heart-rending to me when the soul has not complied with one principle of the gospel of Christ except repentance, and that without faith, not having knowledge of the principles of the gospel as taught by Christ and enumerated by Paul, therefore not having faith in Christ any more than they believed that he existed, without knowledge of his law. This reverend divine is grudgingly going to visit me today at my request. He asserted that he has had revelation from heaven of which he would not thank angels from heaven to inform him any further. Under those conditions I believe that I will learn something. But the source from which it will come will have to be convincing, and in accordance with scripture, in order to convert me to his theology.

The HERALD, in its hour of trial, has my sympathy. I will enclose one dollar and fifty cents for renewal of HERALD and one dollar for Autumn Leaves.

For right, light and truth,

WM. McLARTY.

Dear Herald Readers: Again our district conference has met and transacted the business that annually comes up in the district. Quite a goodly number were present and we were fortunate in having Bro. J. W. Wight with us. The business of the conference passed off quite pleasantly and a spirit of unity seemed to prevail; except in the discussion of two or three questions, when there seemed quite a difference in the sentiments of those present. One was as to the manner of choosing high priests and the other was about instructing the delegates to the coming General Conference how to vote as to the place of rebuilding the HERALD Office. After quite a long discussion, they were sent uninstructed, but if we understood rightly the sentiment was in favor of Lamoni unless God otherwise reveals.

The preaching-services were all well attended and the preaching good. Those who were present at the early prayer-meetings rejoiced in the comforting Spirit that was present and were not surprised when Bro. Wight arose and spoke in tongues, followed directly by the interpretation. The Saints were told that in the past many blessings had been withheld from them because they were not in a fit condition to receive them and that now the Lord was ready to bless them when they were humble. They were warned that even greater calamities were coming upon the earth and that they would hardly be spared unless they lived very humble and faithful. They were also told that when God gave a law they must keep it to the very letter, that God was not pleased with half-hearted service. "Yea, turn from the pride and vanities of this world or you will not escape." The ministry were also rebuked for lack of humility, and were told that the darkness of mind concerning certain important questions Saturday resulted because of a lack of humility and prayer: Bro. Charles L. Holmes and Bro. William Norris were each called to the office of elder.

"Once more I say unto you my people, turn from the evils of the world and seek to stand in holy places, and I will bless you with my Spirit. Thus saith the Lord your God."

The Saints manifested a desire and willingness to profit by the word given. Many with tear-stained faces acknowledged their faults and expressed a humble determination to be more prayerful and humble in their walk.

The Kewanee Saints did nobly in caring for the visitors, serving both dinner and supper in the basement of the church, thus allowing the Saints to remain together for a visit and also saved going out in the bitter cold weather which prevailed. But there is just one suggestion that I would like to offer and that is, that at all future district conferences, but two meals be served upon Sunday. When three are served those serving are compelled to miss some of the best meetings of the day and for my part I really believe that we would obtain more spiritual food if we were not quite so full of the "earthly." It ought not to be considered any hardship at all for a Saint to go from breakfast until four or five o'clock without food, especially when not doing physical labor. And think of how much work would be saved those who entertain. If that had been done at Kewanee, then those sisters who were getting dinner might have shared that blessed outpouring of the Spirit in the "tongue and interpretation." Think of it and see if we do not all agree upon this matter. Let us prepare ourselves for our next conference by faithful daily living from now until then, and then let us go up together with humble, prayerful hearts, seeking wisdom, instruction, and counsel from our God, and thus coming together; not for an "outing," not for a visit, but as a portion of latter-day Israel come to worship Jehovah. He will bless us for he has said it. And rich and abundant will be the gifts and blessings given us.

May we live worthy of the light received is my earnest prayer.

MARY E. GILLIN.

BROOKLYN, New York, February 11, 1907.

Editors Herald: Kindly permit me to use your columns to give the Saints in Britain knowledge of our itinerary and whereabouts. After leaving Leeds on the evening of January 16, cold and dismal externally, lonely and sad within, we stopped at Manchester, where we met with Bro. Leggott, who was to be my fellow voyager.

There was quite a large gathering of Saints who had gathered to bid us "good-bye" and "God-speed." These ordeals are always painful and as the train sped onward we were for some time silent and thoughtful.

Reaching Liverpool in due course we arranged for the removal of our luggage and proceeded to the office and concluded all negotiations for the passage across the ocean. There we had our last lunch in England for some time, after which we went down to the landing stage and were soon aboard the tender. Our brother, Joseph Bennett, whose eighty-two years rest very lightly on his hale and vigorous form, was there to give us a hearty good-bye. Bro. A. Mayse, Srs. Stella and Lily (daughters of Bro. Leggott) also Sr. Fred Clark went aboard with us and about one o'clock the tender was closed and stood out for the steamship Haverford which slowly and peacefully steamed up the estuary of the Mersey to take on her human cargo.

The transfer from tender to liner was soon accomplished, final good-byes sorrowfully said, and in the silence of sorrow we saw the familiar forms and faces of our friends grow dimmer and smaller until identification became impossible, and with prow now pointing to the rapidly westering sun we steamed out into the approaching gloom and night.

The experiences on board the ship were similar to those so often described in your pages. We were not to call at Queenstown it seemed owing to the fact that the White Star steamship Arabia, a speedy greyhound of the waves, was scheduled to leave about the same time that we left Liverpool, and indeed she was at the landing stage as we sailed away, and would reach the Irish port before us. The next morning found us "hugging" the Irish coast, and all day we passed one panorama after the other until the evening when we reached Fastnet Light. Here we saw the huge billows lashing themselves against the rugged, somber-looking rock, relieved only by the white stone tower carrying the light, whose beams streaming out across the stormy bourn of the deep have been gazed upon in sorrow and hope so many times,

As we gazed upon the scene it needed little experience to see that we were entering upon the track of a storm, for the heaving waves bellowed along almost interminably and we could see them surging up in sullen anger and bursting into clouds of spray and foam as the black-faced rock resisted each watery onslaught. Our gigantic vessel began to heave and roll in a way that was disconcerting to land-lubbers, and we passed into the dining-saloon with foreboding.

During the night the wind rose and with shrieks and roars agitated the waters into mountainous volumes, which crashed against the vessel, making her shudder and reel from stem to stern. When morning came Bro. Leggott and I made mutual inquiries after each other's health and made answers that were rather paradoxical, to say the least. However, we passed through a series of physical convulsions and contortions in which we somehow found ourselves clothed and washed and hurriedly scrambled out on deck.

The sight was glorious and grand, awe-inspiring, yet strangely exhilarating, and spontaneously there was flashed upon the retina of memory a stanza of the old Hebrew song.

"They that go down to the sea in ships; they see the wonders of the Lord."

Around us, before, behind, on right and left, cohorts and battalions of Neptune's warriors were maneuvering in their martial array and time and again the serried ranks would charge down upon the iron hulk which, with unflinching persistency was forging her way across the wild domain of waters, and with a hissing and swishing noise would heave themselves upon the ship as though intent upon engulfing her; then the clouds of foam and spray would come sweeping across the deck and volumes of water like a cataract would rush and tumble down the scuppers.

For two days and two nights that was continued, and sad the havoc made among the passengers, whose gastronomic powers were impaired very seriously, and the tables looked very wan and forlorn as the few passengers who had escaped sea-sickness gathered around.

However, after we had passed over the Devil's Hole (a splendid specimen of apposite nomenclature) of which is said its depths have never been sounded, and yet there has been measured a depth of five miles in many parts of the Atlantic, we began to have better weather. After being out twelve days we were informed that to-morrow we would be in Delaware, and sure enough, early on the following morning we were in the estuary and the reduced temperature after the almost spring-like weather we had enjoyed for more than a week was not very welcome.

The river was filled with floating ice, the banks of the river were covered with snow, and the brilliant sunshine illuminated everything with a golden radiance which made the scene quite picturesque. We had the usual amount of red tape to unwind and finally, at one o'clock in the afternoon of January 28, we stepped from the gangway onto terra firma, and passing through the customs were on our way to the home of Bro. and Sr. Angus, where I knew there would there be a welcome.

It seems that Brn. Joseph, E. L. Kelley, and F. M. Sheehy came down to the docks to meet us, but we missed the pleasure of their greeting, owing to our landing a little earlier than was expected.

Of the services in Philadelphia we need not say much, as doubtless others have written. But the effort made by the Saints in the Quaker City was a magnificent articulation of the intense love that they have for the cause of Christ. In every way all was done that could be done to insure success, and the speakers and singers met with sympathetic audiences which were inspirations in themselves. It was a very great pleasure to the travelers to meet with such a warm reception from the many friends and Saints with whom we were privileged to meet, some for the first time and many once again. After the week's special services in the temple and the conference services, the special singers and preachers left and owing to the interest it was thought advisable to continue meetings during another week in the chapel. So at the request of Bro. Sheehy, Bro. Leggott and myself remained and did what we could to tell the story of God's love.

On Sunday, February 10, Bro. Leggott went to Elk's Mills and preached, the writer occupying at Germantown and also at Philadelphia. On the 11th we were reunited and bidding good-bye to friends in the City of Brotherly Love, whose hospitality and kindness we appreciate beyond expression, we were speeding away at three in the afternoon for Brooklyn. We reached our destination all right. To tell of the sights we saw and the experiences we had would consume too much of your valuable space. We reached the home of our Bro. and Sr. Baty, whose departure from England is still so recent as to be a sorrow and regret to many Saints in the Manchester District, especially in Stockport Branch, and were made welcome in Anglo-American style. The feelings of pleasure to meet our brother and sister were great because somehow it did not seem to be so far away from home after all. Well, we talked and talked of this brother and that sister, and gave what news we could of the welfare and progress of all we knew who were inquired after, and soon the hour of midnight admonished a cessation, and like the serial story we continued in our next.

Well, we were announced to preach in the church at Brooklyn Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, and once again we have had the pleasure of renewing the acquaintance with the Saints in the city. The uniform kindness of all in the past is ever a happy memory, and this visit is but proof that the Brooklyn Saints still have the "art of hospitality."

We expect to leave here Saturday, the 16th, for Providence, to attend the Massachusetts District Conference. I am thankful to say that Bro. Leggott and myself enjoy very good health, considering the disparity in the weather and temperature in our native land and the land of America.

All correspondence to both of us may be addressed in care of the HERALD Office, Lamoni, Iowa, U. S. A.

I will esteem it a great favor if the district presidents and missionaries will kindly report as quickly as possible.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

WOODBINE, Iowa, February 17, 1907.

Dear Herald: You have come through the fire of purification undimmed, stunted perhaps for a brief moment; but with the vigor of a giant, you have quickly risen to your normal dimensions, strength, and brilliancy; yea, even surpassing your former power for usefulness, thus proving that the cause you advocate is divine.

It is a long time since your pages have had the impress of my pen; not because I am weaker in the "faith once delivered to the saints," and restored in these last days, not because I have lost my interest in your success as a messenger of truth, but I fear lest I "darken counsel with words without knowledge," and I have had so little to communicate that would gladden the hearts of your readers. I have been mostly shut up at home during the last year, trying to care for my sick and helpless wife; feeling that such was my duty under present conditions. Yet I have not been entirely idle. I have tried each Sabbath to hold up the standard of truth in Woodbine, and also to feed the flock of God, to the extent of my power, and as aided by the divine Spirit. I have also sought to give comfort to the sick of other homes when I could; and of this work we have had much to do, for there has been a great deal of sickness among us, and some deaths. I have been called several times to preach at the funeral of some outside the church, and have gone where I could. But in some instances where I have been called to minister to some of our departed loved ones in the church I have been compelled to deny them on account of distance from my home, it being necessary for me to keep near my companion; and I trust that none will think I am unmindful of their comfort in hours of great bereavement which they were passing through.

Two of the sweetest and loveliest flowers in this part of the Master's garden have been taken to bloom in a fairer clime: Srs. Mabel Athey and Ada Norine Osler. Loved by all who knew them, and bright examples of the power of the gospel to give peace and joy in life, and the blessed assurance of eternal life in the hour of their departure. These sisters were just in the bloom of womanhood, industrious and exemplary students of the Woodbine Normal; and as an evidence of the high esteem in which they were held from one hundred and fifty to two hundred of their fellow pupils attended their funerals, which made it necessary on both occasions to seek a house larger than our own, and the Methodist friends kindly offered us their large and commodious building for the occasions, which gave the writer a broader field on which to sow the seed of eternal truth, for on both of these occasions the large church was well filled and God gave the liberty needed, with what result eternity will tell.

Still as a branch we are afflicted by the sickness prevailing in the family of our beloved president and others. Sr. Kibler has been very sick for several weeks, and no sooner was she convalescent than Bro. Kibler met with an accident. We had been out of town several miles to administer to a sick brother one evening, and when we arrived home and had put up his horses and fed them, it being dark, he made a mistep and fell down the ladder from the loft, which bruised him considerably. This seemed to have started a general sickness over his body, and at present he is unable to attend to his duties in the church or in his business. But we all hope and pray for his speedy recovery; for we feel that he is too useful a man to be taken away.

Our branch might be in a more prosperous condition. Some are negligent, and in consequence cold, having a name to live but are dead. Some are miles out in the country, and it is inconvenient for them to attend the means of grace in the winter-time, and we lack officers who will do their duty in visiting, and some can not afford to spend the time, because it means loss of work, and loss of support for their families. But I am glad to say that in spite of these drawbacks there is a good degree of zeal for the cause of God; and many, I believe, are doing what they can to help it onward. We have our share of widows and orphans who, I believe, are what Paul calls "widows indeed"; and when they can they are present at the means of grace, and ready with their mites to help in the great work.

All of us felt the blow when the news came of the destruction of the HERALD Office, and I believe when the proper time comes the Woodbine Saints will gladly respond to the call for aid to rebuild it. I believe we should lay aside selfishness and seek to be guided alone by the Spirit of God in casting our votes, when the question of rebuilding is presented in conference, that the voice of the people may in fact be the voice of God. Whichever way the question goes I would be glad to see an undivided vote. Perhaps in our present state of progress we may not be warranted in expecting it. May the time come speedily when not only the watchmen on Mount Zion shall see eye to eye, but also the whole house of Israel. This glorious union I have long prayed for, and shall continue to pray and work for.

Though superannuated on account of age, I am still in the harness and never expect to lay it aside. I am frequently told I have done my share; but I know my work is not done here till He who commissioned me calls me home. Sr. Derry still suffers, and would be glad to have the prayers of the Saints for ease and rest from pain, whether in life or in death. Ever praying and working for the success of God's cause, I remain,

CHARLES DERRY.

1618 Park Street, KEOKUK, Iowa, Feb. 5, 1907.

Dear Saints: I wish to tell the brothers and sisters of an experience of mine some time before I became a Latter Day Saint. I was lying critically ill, and was given up to die by four doctors, who said I could not live till morning. The members of the family were gathered around my bed, expecting my exit from this life to the beyond, when I at last fell into a deep sleep, and they all supposed I was unconscious to all around me. As I lay there I seemed to be in another world, and everything seemed to be transparent. The ground was as level as a floor, and such a beautiful green; and right before me flowed the most beautiful river, clear as crystal, and smooth as glass; the sky above was the most beautiful blue I ever saw, and across the river I saw God with such a glorious light surrounding him. Then I looked away beyond and saw some one coming toward me, dressed in a robe and carrying something on his outstretched arms. I watched him; he was coming right to me, and I stood still and waited. When he came close enough, I saw he was carrying a small casket; and when he got near me he commenced lowering it to the ground at my feet, and I saw that it was my father bearing my little boy's casket in his hands, bringing my little Orriel to me.

Then I was brought out of my trance, and from that time I began to mend, and was soon able to sit up. Then I tried not to mourn so for my loved ones. I felt that they were safe, and at rest; and I hope sometime to meet them in that beautiful world where there is no more parting, nor pain, nor death, but peace, sweet peace.

ALICE PETERS.

SPERRY, Iowa, February 13, 1907.

Editors Herald: I am busy trying to present the gospel to the people two and a half miles west of Sperry, at the Baptists' stone church, with fair crowds out to hear. I expect to hold forth here till over Sunday, the 17th. Some of my old schoolmates talk of coming to hear me, so I expect a larger crowd to-night. Those here who remember my father say they never heard anything bad of him. I feel glad in my soul that I can hear such good reports in a vicinity where we once lived, although thirty-five years have rolled away since my father left this locality. I have not heard of any Latter Day Saints around here. Some of the inhabitants never heard such a name as the church of Latter Day Saints.

NEPHI LOVELL.

Extracts from Letters.

C. L. Snow, Murray, Kentucky: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Ah, I wonder where can be found the pure in heart. Can they be found among the Latter Day Saints? Can it be said of us that we are pure in heart? Are we willing to be taught our duty in all things? Sometimes we see Saints who will listen to an elder preach a sermon on the hoofs and horns, or the necessity of people receiving the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick and for the gift of the Holy Ghost and will exclaim, 'Oh my, what a grand sermon! Didn't he tell us a few things to think about?' then run to the elder, pat him on the shoulder, and say, 'Brother, that was the grandest thing I ever heard in my life. But if the elder is led by the Spirit of God to teach them along the line of duty, they will wink at some one and say, 'Oh my, didn't he give us a lashing to-day? I do wish he would let the Saints alone, and not always be raking them over the coals.'"

Mrs. Ida Hurd, Grayton, Dunn County, Wisconsin: "I am suffering from rupture, and would like to have the brothers and sisters pray for me. We have a family of eight, and we are poor, too. My husband is away at work seventy-five miles from home. He is a hard-working man; but still our family is needy, and if some of the Saints who are able could get together and send some second-hand clothing which they have put aside, which could be made over, it would be very thankfully received; also back HERALDS, and Sunday-school papers, as I have two little girls who love to read. Poor people here suffer with the cold, and the winters are so long. We would like to move to Iowa. Wish some of the Saints could give information about a place to rent or work. I hope this winter will be short; it is so cold. Our nearest freight office is Clear Lake, Wisconsin."

A. M. Merrill, Independence, Missouri: "I was sorry to hear of the disaster, but pleased to note the quick relief offered. I have been confined to my bed as a result of my sad experience in the Castle Rock flood. Bro. Kaler and others furnished means to bring my family here. Have tried to get in touch with Bishop Kelley, but he must be away. I feel keenly my position—not a chair, bed, or anything to begin housekeeping again. My two little ones, three and five years old, saved nine dollars for the children's home. I would like to help the HERALD Office with others."

J. W. Williams, Fulton, Kentucky: "My attention was attracted by the letter written by our aged Bro. Turnbow on the subject of what he terms "Edenic food." It was to my mind a grand lesson for our temporal good. In the early history of creation we read of no privilege granted to eat the flesh of the animal, and to my mind it does not belong to godliness, except in case of real necessity, and that is a thing which is practically unknown to us as a nation. God through Moses gave Israel permission to eat the flesh of clean animals, fish, etc., not because it was best for them; but they had gotten so low under the rule of the Egyptians, and lusted so strongly for the flesh-pots of Egypt, that God through pity permitted them to eat. Of course it is the custom now to eat the hog; but is it clean and good for holy people to eat? If not, where is the profit in continuing such a course? We read that when Christ shall appear none shall neither hurt nor destroy in all his holy mountain. Then how are we great swine- and flesh-eaters going to adapt ourselves to such a change? 'What were the animals put here for?' Well that is not our business. We might as well ask what the snake, elephant, scorpion, rat, ant, screw-worm, or buzzard was put here for. Could you tell?"

Conference Minutes.

LITTLE SIOUX.—The conference of the Little Sioux District met with the Logan Saints at 9 a. m., Saturday, February 2, for prayer-service, and 10:30 a. m. for business-session. Joseph Seddon was chosen to preside, J. M. Baker and H. O. Smith to assist. Statistical reports were read from all the branches excepting Biglers Grove, showing a present membership of 1,740, a loss of 3 for the quarter. Forty-one of the ministry reported 504 sermons preached, 564 times assisting, 34 priesthood meetings held, 66 official visits made, and 1,382 other services attended. Nineteen baptisms reported, 17 confirmations, 8 marriages, 10 children blessed, and 212 sick administered to, besides much other labors not specifically mentioned. The spiritual condition of the branches was reported as progressive with one exception. The Bishop's agent reported $1,790.64 received, and $1,240.10 expended and remitted to the Bishop during the past four months. Receipts for sanitarium fund to date, $100.25, and for the children's home, $138.85. The committee on Samuel Wood's membership was continued. A favorable report in regard to the organization of a branch at Union Grove was received, and the missionary in charge and district president were authorized and instructed to proceed with the organization. The committee on the legality of the ordination of Isaac Hogaboon was granted further time. Seventy delegates were chosen to represent the district at the General Conference. They were instructed to vote to retain the HERALD Office at Lamoni, unless a revelation from the Lord directed to the contrary. It was resolved that it is the sense of this district that the church headquarters should remain at Lamoni, until such time as the Lord expresses his will in the matter. Sioux City was chosen for next conference, and June 1 and 2 set for the time. The prayer-service and preaching-services were well attended and enjoyed. Jas. D. Stuart, clerk.

GALLANDS GROVE.—District conference convened at Deloit, Iowa, February 9, 1907, at 9 a. m. for prayer-service, business-session at 10.15 a. m. C. J. Hunt was chosen secretary pro tem., O. Salisbury assistant. Branches reporting: Harlan, Deloit, Coalville, Gallands Grove, Lanesboro, Pilot Rock (by request of the latter branch its name was changed, by act of conference, to the Cherokee Branch). Thirty-one holding priesthood, including branch officers, reported their labors. A request from the Lanesboro Branch for the ordination of Bro. Orman Salisbury to the office of elder was granted, and the brother was ordained at the afternoon session by Elders C. E. Butterworth and J. C. Crabb. The following resolution carried by a majority of one vote: "Resolved, that it is the sense of this district, that the HERALD Office be rebuilt at Lamoni, unless the Spirit directs otherwise." The following-named delegates were elected to represent the district at the next General Conference. J. C. Crabb, C. E. Butterworth, James Pearcoll and wife, John Jordison, Fred Hanson, M. W. Hartshorn, C. J. Hunt and wife, Garret Jurgens, Jesse Johnson, Arthur Spence, Eli Haver, Nellie Hall, C. L. Carmichael, N. V. Sheldon, David Brewster. Delegates present were authorized to cast majority and minority vote in case of division. Bishop Hunt reported church funds on hand and received since October, $1,207.82; expended, $1,136.13; cash on hand, $71.69. HERALD Office fund on hand, $2; sanitarium fund on hand and received, $179; paid Bishop Kelley, $176.50. Children's home fund on hand and received, $92.75; paid Bishop Kelley, $88.51. College fund, on hand and received, $70.57; paid Bishop Kelley, $58.57. A spiritual and profitable conference was enjoyed. Adjourned to meet at Dow City, Iowa, May 25 and 26, 1907. Edith Dobson, secretary, Deloit, Iowa.

CENTRAL ILLINOIS.—Conference of the Central Illinois District convened at Taylorville, February 2 and 3, 1907. It was called to order by Elder L. Simpson. I. N. White and R. T. Walters were chosen to preside, the district president to associate with the chair. Elders reporting: R. T. Walters, F. M. Slover, Luther Simpson, Thomas Broad, M. R. Shoemaker, and F. M. Sharrock; Priests Fred Nowack, and Jacob Waltenbaugh; Teacher J. L. Johnson; Deacon E. E. Stonger. Treasurer's report was read, showing a balance on hand of $7.70. Bishop's agent's report: On hand last report $39.43; received since, $190.47; expended $97.01. A resolution was passed by the conference that inasmuch as some difficulties existed in the district and the district president felt he could not settle it, I. N. White should settle same. Delegates to General Conference: R. T. Walters, F. M. Slover, M. R. Shoemaker, J. L. Johnson, Frank Izatt, Charles Simpson, and S. J. Bartlett. Conference adjourned to meet in Beardstown, June 8 and 9, 1907. J. G. Ettinger, clerk, Taylorville, Illinois.

MONTANA.—Conference of the Montana District met in Deer Lodge, February 2, at 11 a. m., for prayer-service, Bro. Frank Christofferson in charge. Met for business at two 2 p. m. L. G. Holloway chosen as secretary pro tem. Moved and seconded that F. Christofferson, John Eliason, and Gomer Reese preside over this conference. Carried. Reports from officers: F. Christofferson, Gomer Reese, John Eliason, J. H. Wells, A. Christofferson, reported verbally; Missionaries I. M. Smith and L. G. Holloway, reported in writing. Branch report was received from the Deer Lodge Branch which showed a gain of 6; also the Gallatin Branch reported, which shows a gain of 3. Report from the Bishop's agent was read. It was moved that the Willow Creek Branch be declared disorganized, and that the president and secretary of the district be authorized to grant letters of removal. Carried. In regard to the Victor Branch it was thought best to leave the matter of disorganization to the president of the district. Election of officers was taken up, which resulted in the unanimous selection of the following officers: Gomer Reese, president; F. Christofferson, vice-president; Jerome Wycoff, sustained as secretary; Thomas Reese, Bishop's agent. A recommendation from the Deer Lodge Branch asking that John E. Eliason be ordained to the office of teachers was granted and ordination provided for. A motion prevailed that when this conference adjourns it does so to meet at the call of the district presidency, at such time and place as they think best. I. M. Smith, L. G. Holloway, Bro. and Sr. Robert Esgar, Sr. Lucy Christofferson, Sr. Laura Beck, and Zetta Reese were chosen delegates to General Conference. At the evening session the Sunday-school association held a brief session, sustaining all the present officers, and electing I. M. Smith, L. G. Holloway, Bro. and Sr. Robert Esgar, Sr. Zella Reese, Sr. Laura Beck and Lucy Christofferson, delegates to the General Sunday-school Convention. At Sunday sacrament-service John E. Eliason was ordained teacher, under the hands of I. M. Smith, Gomer Reese, and J. H. Wells. At the close of the Sunday evening session, Bro. J. H. Well introduced a resolution asking General Conference to return I. M. Smith and L. G. Holloway to this field. Carried.

Pastoral.

To the Missionaries and Presidents of Districts and Branches of the Pacific Slope Mission; Greeting: I hereby call your attention to the new method of reporting, especially the missionaries.

You are not to report number of meetings attended, marriages, nor administrations to sick. All items needed in your annual report are as follows: Number of sermons; baptisms; patriarchal blessings; new openings; debates; branches organized, Sunday-schools, Religios. I desire that all report to me direct and not to the sub-missionaries. Be sure your reports reach me by the 15th of March, at the latest. Address me at Lamoni, Iowa. Report on blanks I have furnished you. If your supply is exhausted, send for more. The presidents of branches will report number of baptisms, and spiritual condition of branches to district president, and he will report to me on the blank forms I have provided for him. Your brother in gospel bonds,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

First Quorum of Priests.

All members of the quorum who have changed their address during the past year are requested to notify the secretary at once as the new report blanks will be mailed about March 1, to the last address given unless otherwise advised. Reports not in the hands of the secretary by March 20 will be too late for the annual report to conference, so please be prompt.

J. W. GUNSOLLEY, President.

J. C. NUNN, Secretary.

1603 West Short Street, INDEPENDENCE, Missouri.

Fourth Quorum of Priests.

I have mailed blanks to every member of the Fourth Quorum of Priests. If you have changed your address, or fail to receive one, please notify the undersigned. State in your report if you will be at General Conference. Your brother,

JAMES D. SCHOFIELD, Corresponding Secretary.

STANBERRY, Missouri, February 11, 1907.

Notice.

Notice to All Concerned: As I have been getting frequent inquiries in regard to Southern Indiana, I will state that I am no longer secretary of Southern Indiana District. Ed O. Byrn, of Byrnville, Indiana, is now secretary of said district. John Zahnd, 1113 North Sixth Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Died.

GREY.—On February 3, 1907, Sr. Mary Jane Grey, at Plainsville, Massachusetts. She was born June 6, 1854. Was baptized forty years ago, and lived a life of faithfulness to her Lord and to the church. Her loyalty to the church was manifested in her life of sacrifice. She was anxious to depart, for her life-work was done, and she was conscious of it. Funeral at the home of her sister, where she passed away. Funeral attended by many friends and Saints. Sermon by Elder Cushman, R. Bullard in charge. Body was placed in the receiving tomb, New Bedford Cemetery.

STRONG.—Rachel M. Brown was born in Haron County, Ontario, June 26, 1881. United with the church June 21, 1891. Was married to D. W. Strong September 19, 1899. Departed this life February 4, at Manzanola, Colorado, where they had gone for her health. About half past eleven, she called her husband and household, bade them good-bye, admonished all to prepare for the final end, and passed peacefully away about one o'clock. She leaves three little boys, husband, mother, five sisters, and three brothers. Services at Evergreen church near Lamoni, Iowa, in charge of C. W. Dillon. Sermon by D. W. Young.

BRYANT.—Died at Jonesport, Maine, January 26, 1907, Sr. Adriana N. Bryant, who was born in Janesboro, May 7, 1851, and baptized by U. W. Greene May 6, 1888. She loved the church and did many things to assist the cause. Her six months' suffering was borne with Christian patience and fortitude. The family is bereft of a dutiful wife, and a loving and faithful mother. Words of hope and comfort were spoken at the funeral by U. M. Kelley.

ANDREWS.—Bro. Henry Andrews was born July 23, 1857, Perth Township, Ontario, Canada. Was married to Castella Dana, August 15, 1888. Of this union were born one daughter and one son. He was baptized November 23, 1893, at Alpena, Michigan, by George Jenkinson. He was not well for many months, but bore up under it all with patience, although suffering much. Died January 26, 1907, at Alpena, where he has lived many years. He leaves a wife and two children to mourn. The funeral-sermon was preached by Bro. S. A. Wrinkle, assisted by Bro. James Orton, at the residence.

The management expects to have the enlarged Hymnal ready for mailing in about sixty days, but it will be sent out only in the cheapest bindings.

Ninety-four of the page plates of Zion's Praises were destroyed by the fire. They are being recast, and will be reprinted as soon as they are received from the electrotyper.

"A DANIEL COME TO JUDGMENT."

Twenty years ago in a "temperance" lecture delivered by us in the town of Harlan, Shelby County, Iowa, the home of that stalwart Saint, Judge Jonas W. Chatburn, we took the ground that it was unjust, improper, and unlawful to license the sale of intoxicating liquors as beverages; that if it was lawful to restrict, or forbid the open sale of deadly poisons to those who proposed to use them either personally, or to give to others to use, it was lawful to forbid the selling of an intoxicant to those who proposed to use it as a beverage or to give it to another to be used for a similar purpose. We were at the time quite sharply criticised because of the radical position we assumed. We then believed the position to be a correct one, and we believe it yet. We are pleased, even at this late date, to see that one man on the judicial bench sees the subject in the same light; and take additional pleasure in giving his name and his opinion to the readers of the HERALD.

LEBANON, Indiana, February 13. — [Special.] — Circuit Court Judge S. R. Artman to-day handed down a decision calculated to give saloon-keepers nightmare. Judge Artman held that the legislature has no more legal right to license the sale of intoxicating liquors than it has to license gambling.

If the decision is upheld by the higher courts it will close every saloon in the State.

Judge Artman held that the retail liquor business has no legal standing, on the ground that it is not one of the inherent common law rights of citizenship, since the business is dangerous to public health, public morals, and public safety.

The legislature, Judge Artman declared, can not make lawful for a price that which is unlawful, because that contravenes the fundamental principle of government. In other words, the legislature can not legalize a menace to public health, nor can the state, under the guise of a police regulation looking to the public morals, license the saloon business.

A wealth of opinions from the higher courts of many States and of the United States Supreme Court bearing on these contentions was quoted in the decision. Some of the decisions quoted showed that both Federal and State courts had ruled that no form of gambling, such as lotteries, etc., could be legalized, since they are a peril to the welfare of society. In this connection Judge Artman pointed out many of the same courts had held that the sale of intoxicants was a menace to the welfare of the community, and held therefore that if it was right to declare gambling unlawful it also was right to declare liquor-selling unlawful.

"Can the legislature," his decision says, "legalize the destruction of the public health, the public morals, and the "All things are governed by law. The sun, moon, and stars, as well as the earth, all are governed by an indispensable law, each dependent upon the other. And as the earth is governed by a celestial law, and as man is a part of the earth, he too must be governed by the same law in order to be a participant in the celestial environment where God and Christ shall dwell."

public safety? Can the legislature make lawful for a price that which is unlawful because it contravenes the fundamental principle of government? Surely not. In the absence of a license the police power of the state regards any business, the inherent character, tendency, and effect of which is to destroy the public health, the public morals, or the public safety, as immoral and unlawful. This is what the cases heretofore cited mean by holding that the right to engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors is not a common law privilege, inherent in the rights of citizenship.

"It is not a right of citizenship because, as the cases hold, its existence is detrimental to society and dangerous to public and private morals and to the peace and good order of society."

In summing up, Judge Artman said: "In view of these holdings, based as they certainly are upon good reason and sound common sense, it must be held that the state can not under the guise of a license delegate to the saloon business a legal existence, because to hold that it can is to hold that the state may sell and delegate the right to make widows and orphans, the right to break up homes, the right to create misery and crime, the right to make murders, the right to produce idiots and lunatics, the right to fill orphanages, poor-houses, insane asylums, jails, and penitentiaries, and the right to furnish subjects for the gallows."

We believe that Judge Artman is unmistakably and justifiably correct in his opinion, that if the state can not legally license men to do those things which destroy the peace, the quiet, the integrity and the honor of the homes of the people no matter whether or not those same people make petition to the municipal or county authorities to sanction the right of some one in their midst to do those very things.

At the meeting held by us, referred to above, one man stated that he could tell us a way to stop the illegal selling of intoxicants. When asked to give the remedy, he replied: "Legalize it. Make it lawful to make, keep, and sell it." Our answer to that as an argument was, that if the county court of Shelby County, Iowa, would give us the authority by certified license to steal for the term of two years we would be sure to become wealthy.

It may be stated that the right to steal is not a natural right. This shows how little the man who makes the statement thinks. Stealing was a fine art, and flourished while "might made right," and until mankind learned the necessity for a defense of the weaker against the wrongful encroachments of the stronger, who enjoyed and exercised the "right to steal." The enactment of restrictive laws made stealing a crime; and it ceased to be a natural right. The same thing happened to a good many things which men did because they were held to be natural rights. The state became the accredited guardian of the personal and property rights of the people by the ascertained will of those who became the wards of the state; and in due time the state became the supreme conscience of the people, and took cognizance of those assumed rights of men who assailed the well-being of society by wrongful acts which were productive of injury to individuals, or evil to the whole body corporate. This sale of intoxicating liquors is one of that very kind of things; and the social compact has suffered from its contamination, until it is high time that more than Judge Artman should be found with the good sense and courage to say to the law-making powers, that they have no right either natural or delegated, to turn loose upon the commonwealth a set of money-grubbers who fatten upon the evil consequences which their trade fastens upon wives, children, and other dependents and levies burdens upon the sober tax-payers which they ought not to be called on to bear.

We commend the opinion of Judge Artman to the Saints for consideration. We sincerely trust that, as has been the case heretofore, the Saints will maintain the high standard set by them in regard to the abstaining from the "intoxicating cup" to the continued benefit to themselves, and the sure benefit to their children to come after them.

A late writer, in an article written for the Post Dispatch, of St. Louis, Missouri, after enumerating quite a number of the various kinds of business carried on in Independence, states that there is one sort of business which none of the Latter Day Saints is engaged in, and that is "the saloon business." As a people we ought to feel a degree of commendable pride that wherever the Saints live, no saloons by their votes are licensed to make drunkards, or entail upon society evil consequences which always follow the traffic. Keep out of the saloon business, brethren, and enjoy the satisfaction of knowing that sober men and sober women, as fathers and mothers, will have sober and strong mental and physical children to take their places in the battle of life, when the things of this world pass away from their sight in the valley of death to time.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Is there any law anywhere known to the church justifying a General Conference appointee engaging in a business of his own and still draw from the church funds for his family's support, when part of his time and attention is taken up with said business?

There is no rule of conference in direct regard to the matter. Nor do we know of any law specifically dealing with the question. There is, however, abundant reason why such procedure should not obtain, as it is a manifest injustice; first, to the general church, which has the right to ask that all the men appointed to labor in the field should deal fairly with the bishop and the treasury, and give the time and the labor to the work of the ministry, for the purpose of which the allowance for the support of the family is made: second, to the other members of the ministry in the field whose families may possibly be caused to lack for support by reason of this drawing from the treasury when the supposed laborer was not "attending upon his ministry," according to his appointment.

It is quite inconsistent for an officer to offer for a mission and accept an appointment from the conference and after the appointment is given he to give a few days', a few weeks', or a few months' labor in the field to which he was appointed; then return home and give his attention to his own affairs, or engage in business, and permit the bishop to continue to pay the allowance to his family, just the same as if he were in the field. This course of procedure is of the same sort as a man hiring to a firm of his fellows in a contract to do certain work for which he has an aptitude; and then spending a part of his time which he should give to the work which he contracted to perform to his own private affairs and business. If it is wrong in the latter case, it is in the former. In what is it different in moral right?

We presume that the brother who sends this question to us for answer may have some case of the sort in mind. If our surmise is correct, we advise that he take the inquiry to that brother whom he thinks is doing this wrong, and discuss the question with him in quiet and "by their two lone selves," and see if a proper understanding and feeling may not be secured, in the spirit which should prevail among brethren. And if the situation can not be thus relieved, then inform the missionary in charge, that the irregularity may be officially inquired into.

It ought to be a rather comforting thought to those who are laboring in the ministry that their fellow laborers are an honest set of upright and godly men, who pride themselves on acting honestly and without guile; scorning to take any undue advantage of either the conference, the church, their fellow men both in and out of the church, the world, the flesh, or the Devil, and as a matter of course, the Lord, whose servants they claim to be. It would seem that if a man engage in the ministry, ostensibly in the service of the Lord who calls him, accepting the help from the church which is provided for by commandment that his family may be cared for while he is so laboring, and then turns his attention, time, and talents into a channel of employment and business for himself, is dealing unfairly with his brethren, deceitfully with himself, and what is worse, dishonestly with the Lord.

So far as our knowledge of the force in the field goes, we are impressed with the conviction that the ministry who have accepted appointments to the work have been trying to fill their appointments faithfully and honestly, and are not engaged in other business to the neglecting of the trust reposed in them by the appointing officers of the church. As a rule, we believe that whenever a man who has been appointed leaves his field and takes up any other work for himself, he notifies his presiding officer and the bishop of the district, or the church, as the case whence the supply for his family was received may be, thus acting fairly with his colaborers, the church and the Lord. We believe this is as it should be. No rigid rule has been adopted; and it is to be hoped that the good consciences of the ministerial force do not need such rule to teach them what true honesty is.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Elder J. H. N. Jones reports success in reaching large crowds by street-preaching in Adelaide, South Australia. Twenty persons have been added to the branch there during the past year.

The Sunday afternoon prayer-meeting of the Lamoni Stake conference was a remarkable meeting. A considerable degree of the Spirit was present from the beginning and ere the meeting closed the gift of tongues and the interpretation of tongues was given through Elder J. W. Wight and Nephi Snively, each speaking and following with the interpretation. The gift of prophecy was given through Elders R. M. Elvin and Lewis Gaulter. Among other admonitions the Saints were earnestly warned to beware of pride.

It may be of interest to those reading Elder Mortimer's account of the work in Toronto, in this issue, to learn that at the Sunday evening services of February 17 (held since Bro. Mortimer wrote) over two thousand people were turned away from the Majestic Opera-house for lack of room. During the next day twenty-seven people called on Bro. Evans for the purpose of purchasing Books of Mormon.

The Lamoni Stake Conference passed a resolution to the effect that in the opinion of the conference the HERALD Office should be rebuilt at Lamoni, in the absence, of course, of divine instruction otherwise. The delegation, however, goes to the General Conference uninstructed and free to weigh the question on its merits as they may be presented before the Conference. There seems a quite general desire everywhere that the will of God may prevail in the matter above all selfish interests.

Elder Daniel MacGregor, of Stratford, Ontario, associate editor of the Canadian Messenger, has written a pamphlet setting forth the claims of Presbyterianism to believers, which he is distributing free to those who need or desire them for circulation. It is a presentation of the reasons why he left the Presbyterian fold; and it is also a splendid argument in behalf of the truth as it is in the gospel set forth in the New Testament. He has made an excellent argument; which must needs have a good effect when used in the right places; especially where that ancient opposer to the latter-day work is in the field against the elders. Send to Bro. MacGregor's address, Box 464, Stratford, and see what the work is like. You will like it.

An unsigned communication to the HERALD states that Elder I. N. White recently organized the Second St. Joseph Branch. The organization took place in Riche's Hall, Hyde Valley, South St. Joseph, with twenty-nine charter members. Bro. John L. Bear, Jr., was chosen president. The Saints have started a fund for the purpose of building in that locality.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

A recent wedding is reported from Baltimore in which the participating clergyman, who was vice-president of the ministers' association of that city, entered with the couple into a lion's cage and there performed the ceremony in the presence of five lions and several keepers. A vast throng witnessed the scene. The electric lights, apparently ashamed of the spectacle, went out at the critical moment and candles were provided. The bride and groom received two hundred and fifty dollars from the managers of the zoo. No blame attaches to the lions; and if some of the other participants ever become entangled in the meshes of the law they may use the incident to support a plea of insanity.

The officials of the Lake Shore road recently made a secret test. They secreted themselves in a watch-tower at night and caused the lights on the "switch targets" to be turned out; the absence of the lights was a danger signal and it was the duty of train men to stop and ascertain the trouble. During the night twenty-five trains, including four first-class passenger trains, passed through, and only one of the twenty-five, a freight, was stopped; the others rushed on to any fate that might await them.

Another severe marine disaster occurred on the 21st of February, when the German mail steamer Berlin sank off the Hook of Holland with nearly one hundred and fifty people on board. Few escaped.

The United States Senate came to a vote on the Smoot case February 20 and Mr. Smoot retains his seat by a vote of forty-two to twenty-eight.

The wreck of the "eighteen hour" special between Chicago and New York is now attributed to steel ties, which were being experimented with on a section of the road. It is said that they permitted the rails to spread. The company is replacing them with wooden ties.

Cornelius Shea and ten associates who took a leading part in the teamsters' strike in Chicago, and who were arraigned for conspiracy, were declared not guilty, February 22. The case has been in court since September 13 and is said to have cost seventy-five thousand dollars.

Ohio Spiritualists claim to have established communication with Stanford White. They say that he has been refused admission to either heaven or hell and is a homeless wanderer—too mean for any community.

News From Branches

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Independence Saints read with interest the HERALD items regarding the success of our eastern brethren in Pennsylvania in the dedication of their church. It sounds good. It is encouraging.

Bro. and Sr. Will Blair have recently built here in Independence, having been previously numbered among the First Kansas City Saints. On February 14 the Religio entertained its members and friends at a valentine social. Six hundred attended and enjoyed the occasion.

The attendance at Religio last Friday was two hundred and sixty-six which is a decided increase over the week previous.

Among the sermons of late we make note of Bro. Garrett's well-directed effort, instructing the Saints along the line of social customs and courtesies.

Saints and friends sympathize with Bro. J. A. Gunsolley and his brothers in the news of the loss of their aged mother, which occurred here at Independence at the home of her son J. F. Gunsolley. The funeral was from the church, Saturday morning.

Our laurel club, of whose work we have before made mention, have again made an effort to help the sanitarium fund, the occasion being Washington's birthday, and the place the congenial home of Sr. William Pitt, the vice-president of the club.

The members of this organization are all married people, and a feature of the evening's entertainment was the description by each man present of his wife's wedding-dress.

Sr. Royal Brocaw is back from St. Louis, and expects to again make this her home.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.

So much of our time and attention was consumed in preparing for and enjoying the special revival services at this place that we quite forgot it was our time to report, and now looking back we can say that the sermons by President Joseph Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and Apostles Rushton and Sheehy were far above the average, the soloists, Srs. Robinson and Isleib, were inspirational, the audiences representative and fair as to numbers; and the good done, we trust, more than we can measure. The Saints turned out well the entire season, and received as recompense bread from heaven.

CLIFF- AND CAVE-DWELLINGS OF ARIZONA.

Courtesy Passenger Department Santa Fe R. R.

This region abounds in ruins of the dwellings of a prehistoric people. The most important lie within a radius of eight miles from Flagstaff. On the southeast, Walnut Canyon breaks the plateau for a distance of several miles, its walls deeply eroded in horizontal lines. In these recesses, floored and roofed by the more enduring strata, the cliff-dwellings are found in great number, walled up on the front and sides with rock fragments and cement, and partitioned into compartments. Some have fallen into decay, only portions of their walls remaining, and but a narrow shelf of the once broad floor of solid rock left to evidence their extreme antiquity. Others are almost wholly intact, having stubbornly resisted the weathering of time. Nothing but fragments of pottery now remain of the many quaint implements and trinkets that characterized these dwellings at the time of their discovery.

Fixed like swallows' nests upon the face of a precipice, approachable from above or below only by deliberate and cautious climbing, these dwellings have the appearance of fortified retreats rather than habitual abodes. That there was a time, in the remote past, when warlike peoples of mysterious origin passed southward over this plateau, is generally credited. And the existence of the cliff-dwellings is ascribed to the exigencies of that dark period, when the inhabitants of the plateau, unable to cope with the superior energy, intelligence, and numbers of the descending hordes, devised these unassailable retreats. All their quaintness and antiquity can not conceal the deep pathos of their being, for tragedy is written all over these poor hovels hung between earth and sky. Their builders hold no smallest niche in recorded history. Their aspirations, their struggles, and their fate are all unwritten, save on those crumbling stones, which are their sole monument and meager epitaph [?]. Here once they dwelt. They left no other print on time.

At an equal distance to the north of Flagstaff, among the cinder-buried cones, is one whose summit commands a wide-sweeping view of the plain.

Upon its apex, in the innumerable spout-holes that were the outlet of ancient eruptions, are the cave-dwellings, around many of which rude stone walls still stand. The story of these habitations is likewise wholly conjectural. They may have been contemporary with the cliff-dwellings. That they were long inhabited is clearly apparent. Fragments of shattered pottery lie on every hand.—To California Over the Sante Fe Trail, pp. 81, 82.

ONE OF MARK TWAIN'S "SEANCES."

When Mark Twain was about fifteen years old his town (Hannibal) was visited by a mesmerist. Mark became one of the "subjects." To his personal sorrow the hypnotist did not seem to possess any special power to control him; but Mark was not willing to be turned down so he put on a dazed expression and proceeded to act on every suggestion made to him. He was a great success, and his experience shows how easy it is to fool part of the people all the time. A part of his performances are related as follows:

"In 1874 we were living in a large white house on the corner of Hill and Main Streets—a house that still stands, but is not large now, although it has not lost a plank; I saw it a year ago and noticed that shrinkage. My father died in it in March of the year mentioned, but our family did not move out of it until some months afterward. Ours was not the only family in the house; there was another—Doctor Grant's. One day Doctor Grant and Doctor Reyburn argued a matter on the street with sword-canes, and Grant was brought home multi-fariously punctured. Old Doctor Peake called the leaks, and came every day for a while, to look after him. The Grants were Virginians, like Peake, and one day when Grant was getting well enough to be on his feet and sit around in the parlor and talk, the conversation fell upon Virginia and old times. I was present but the group were probably quite unconscious of me, I being only a lad and a negligible quantity. Two of the group, Doctor Peake and Mrs. Crawford, Mrs Grant's mother—had been of the audience when the Richmond theater burned down, thirty-six years before; and they talked over the frightful details of that memorable tragedy. These were eye-witnesses and with their eyes I saw it all with an intolerable vividness: I saw the black smoke rolling and tumbling toward the sky, I saw the flames burst through it and turn red, I heard the shrieks of the despairing, I glimpsed their faces at the windows, caught fitfully through the veiling smoke, I saw them jump to their death, or to mutilation worse than death. The picture is before me yet, and can never fade. . . .

"Very well, three or four years later . . . I was king-bee and the sole 'subject' in the mesmeric show; it was the beginning of the second week; the performance was half over; just then the majestic Doctor Peake, with his ruffled bosom and wristbands and the gold-headed cane, entered, and a deferential citizen vacated his seat beside the Grants and made the great chief take it. This happened while I was trying to invent something fresh in the way of a vision in response to the professor's remark—

"'Concentrate your powers. Look—look attentively. There—don't you see something? Concentrate—concentrate. Now then—describe it.'

"Without suspecting it, Doctor Peake, by entering the place, had reminded me of the talk of three years before. He had also furnished me capital and was become my confederate, an accomplice in my frauds. I began on a vision, a vague and dim one (that was part of the game at the beginning of a vision; it isn't best to see it too clearly at first, it might look as if you had come loaded with it.) The vision developed, by degrees, and gathered swing, momentum, energy. It was the Richmond fire. Doctor Peake was cold, at first, and his fine face had a trace of polite scorn in it; but when he began to recognize that fire, that expression changed and his eyes began to light up. As soon as I saw that, I threw the valves wide open and turned on all the steam, and gave those people a supper of fire and horrors that was calculated to last them one while! They couldn't gasp, when I got through—they were petrified. Doctor Peake had risen, and was standing,—and breathing hard. He said, in a great voice—

"'My doubts are ended. No collusion could produce that miracle. It was totally impossible for him to know those details, yet he has described them with the clarity of an eye-witness—and with what unassailable truthfulness God knows I know.'" —North American Review.

THE WORK IN TORONTO, ONTARIO.

PRESIDENT R. C. EVANS AT THE MAJESTIC OPERA-HOUSE; THE OPENING OF THE NEW CHURCH-BUILDING, ETC.

I have been in Toronto and witnessed a part of the success achieved by President R. C. Evans in the magnificent work done there. If I appear to use any terms or expressions bordering on the grandiloquent I may be pardoned, as I am so full of admiration of the great work accomplished. I feel as if the ordinary, common, every-day language will fail to meet the demands. I had heard so much of the work he was doing there and of its unprece-dent success in the history of the "Reorganization" that I could hardly credit it, and I thought it could safely be reduced by at least twenty per cent. Now that I have witnessed one meeting in the commodious Majestic Opera-house that can accommodate some thousands, I can say with Sheba's queen, "The half was not told me."

ELDER R. C. EVANS.

One of the splendid fruits of this work is the erection of a beautiful church on Soho Street, a few doors north of Queen Street, at the cost of a little over thirteen thousand dollars. The old church on Camden Street, that was built in 1900, was found inadequate to the demands and more commodious quarters must be provided. After four months of arduous labor, the edifice was opened for public worship on Sunday, February 10, a number of visitors being in attendance from London, St. Thomas, Garafraxa, Humber Bay, and other places.

The morning prayer- and testimony - meeting opened at eight o'clock. It was well attended and was a season of blessed refreshing. The sacrament was administered, President Evans presiding, assisted by District President R. C. Longhurst, District Vice-president G. H. Buschlen, and Elder A. F. McLean, president of the Toronto Branch. The emblems were passed by Elders George C. Tomlinson, of the seventy, and A. E. Mortimer of the high priests. The gift of tongues and interpretation was given through President R. C. Evans, and the work and sacrifice of God's children acknowledged and commended. The nearness of Christ's coming was announced with a solemn exhortation to prepare for the great day and to put away all contention, strife, and discord, as such was retarding the growth of the work to a great extent, and we were told that what had been witnessed was but a taste of what might be.

The presence of the Holy Spirit bore testimony to the truth of the revelation, and all felt its inspiring force. At eleven in the forenoon President R. C. Evans preached a profound discourse from the words, "Lord, is it I?" (Matthew 26:22.) The place was well filled and all were edified by the powerful words as they fell from the speaker's lips. He was assisted by Elder William Fligg, president of London Branch, and Priest Charles Hattey, of Toronto.

At half-past two another preaching-service was held in the church, the speaker again being R. C. Evans, and the text from Ecclesiastes 3:14, 15.

But what shall I say of the night meeting? How describe it? My poor pen, as I contemplate the scene with my mind's eye, appears to be inadequate. Long before the time of opening, the people were fairly pouring in until the place was filled, as announced by the ushers, when the stern guardians of the law refused admittance to any more. From my place of observation, I could see the entire throng of nearly three thousand earnest and expectant souls. As I gazed upon them (not the scum from the slums, though some may have been the froth, foam, and bubble, thrown upon the surface of the seething mass of restless humanity, and some, the flotsam of life, tossed hither and thither by the restless sea of lost hope, not knowing where the tide will cast them), all appeared to be very earnest, as well as intelligent, and able to grasp the most subtle points in argument as presented, and I felt to praise God.

Now, for a moment, let me take the reader to another opera-house a few doors to the east of the Majestic, called the Grand Opera-house. On each Sunday it is occupied by the Methodists of the city. When President Evans began his meetings he was denounced by that body for making unclean the sacred name of Christ by claiming to honor it in a common theater; placing the badge of respectability upon a place they had been proclaiming against as unfit for Christian men and women to enter.

The great work President Evans has been doing has been going on for three winters, the success of the first stirring the sectarians to a united effort to prevent a repetition the next or second winter, and the services of the famous evangelists, Messrs. Torrey and Alexander, were secured to this end, never doubting but that their influence would be sufficient to drive him from the place. It is true President Evans and the city brethren, having heard of the popularity of these men, began to fear a possible decrease of their attendance to a final closing of the meetings, but keeping up their faith and courage, and being well sustained by the sisters in prayer and devotion, they hung on with the spirit of patience and fortitude, faith in God, hope in his promises and in the truth and justice of their cause, when, to their delight, they found the attendance on the increase, and it continued in spite of this united effort, coupled with the prestige of Massey Hall, where the Torrey meetings were held with a seating capacity of over four thousand.

When during the winters of 1905 and 1906 the hoped-for diminution of the interest was not apparent, and hearing of the great additions to the church, the sectarians grew desperate and determined upon a more earnest effort to oppose this man and drive him from the metropolitan city of Ontario, thinking that, if they were successful, the hated work would receive its quietus. When it was passed from one to another that the accommodations of the old church were not equal to the numerical increase and the erection of a new one was contemplated, they decided something must be done, and without loss of time regardless of past denunciation of theater-service, the Grand was secured and turned over to the Fred Victor Mission. Here can be seen and heard the combined influence of the wealth of sectarianism in a city of three hundred thousand inhabitants, with the united force of the best music and oratory.

One reverend gentleman delivers himself thus: "I have been three times to the Majestic Theater, and, for the life of me, I can't understand what draws and holds that vast audience each Sunday night. No fire music; not one attraction but the eloquence of the speaker." Just so, but this gentleman and all of his confreres, apparently, having never been touched by the Spirit of divine grace, will continue to fail to understand why it is that "the eloquence of the speaker" holds that power not one of them, as they now are, will ever possess. Why do they not seek to fathom the profound depths of that divine force that enables the speaker to wield the great power he does? They can not understand it, nor will they seek to.

One force these sectarian priests possess, and they use it to the shame of the metropolis of the metropolitan province of this fair dominion. As Madam Roland was going to the guillotine in Paris, France, during the bloody period of the "Reign of Terror," she gazed upon the statue of liberty and exclaimed, "O liberty! liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name." In this fair land of ours where we boast of the freedom of the press, claiming we are not in Russia where the censor can, by law, run his blue pencil-mark through all that does not savor of the most slavish support of the autocracy, the blush of shame should mantle the brow of every son and daughter of freedom at the thought that the press of this city of Toronto is being shackled by a band of hireling priests, not one of whom dares meet President Evans upon the public platform, and there, before all interested persons, discuss these things that are agitating the public mind. Will they do so? Can any one of them be induced to do so? Not one, but they know the force possessed by the speaker, and they desire above all things to keep the public in the dark as to the work being done, so they use the tremendous power at their disposal and muzzle the press of the place. Not one newspaper makes any reference to the greatest religious movement this city has ever seen. Not one. Freedom! Save the mark. They are very discreet, however, and nothing can induce any one of them to face the issue. It is really pitiable, it is said, to see young men holding out tracts to passersby as they go on to the Majestic, calling out, "This is the place. Come in. Here is where the meetings are," and so on. Some few respond, but not until the seats at the Majestic are filled can the Grand secure an audience, and then they get some of the overflow. On the first Sunday night they had about twelve hundred while the Majestic was full. The next Sunday night their attendance was about nine hundred and fifty, and the third and fourth nights about six hundred and five hundred respectively, and the Majestic was filled up.

Yes, as a reverend gentleman said, there is no "magnificent singing," as the world would call it, but a band of loving Saints, whose hearts are tuned to the sweet songs of Zion, through whose lips pour forth the inspiring hymn of praise, "All hail the power of Jesus' name," thrilling the souls of all present, and, methinks, the voices of exultant angels took up the refrain,

Bring forth the royal diadem
And crown him Lord of all.

Every one was in his or her proper place when the curtain rose. The opening exercise was in charge of the branch president, A. F. McLean, the opening prayer being offered by young Elder Ernest Oliver. The sermon: I have often heard Bro. R. C. Evans when president of the London Branch; I have traveled with him in missionary work; have associated with him in tent-labors; have listened to some very powerful discourses, and seen many baptized by him as a result; but how shall I express myself as to that great effort of Sunday night, February 10, 1907, in the Majestic Opera-house?

The subject was, "Does death end all?" The texts were 1 John 3:8, the latter part, and Revelation 1:18. For considerably over an hour he enlarged upon the texts, holding the unflagging attention of that vast audience to the very close. As he exposed the erroneous teaching of the day, wherein sectarian priests present Christ as inferior to Satan, that the hatred of the latter outweighs the love of our most blessed Lord and Master in securing the great majority of those our God has, in love, created, for whom Christ has died and risen again, a derisive applause burst forth; and as he claimed the Christ of the Bible as being worthy of their love, faith, and obedience because he was able to save to the uttermost, bringing forth scriptural evidence in support, enthusiastic hand-clapping followed.

At the close of the discourse the ushers took up the collection and nearly sixty dollars was the result. Then came another interesting feature, viz.: the question-plate. My! such a heap of folded papers as were poured upon the stand! Now, be it understood, President Evans knows nothing of the nature of any of these questions until read by Branch President A. F. McLean. All manner and kind of questions are asked, some being from honest and earnest souls who are seeking for light. Such are answered kindly and effectively; but others, Mormons, spiritualists, and infidels, will continue to ask silly questions and back goes the answer according to its requirements. May our God speed his work in this place.

In spite of the unrelenting opposition of Satanic forces this work is moving the city from center to circumference; and if his people will only retain their integrity, be full of courage, patience, and fortitude, meeting the demands of the new life they have risen unto, remembering our Lord's counsel given last Sabbath morn, there will be a glorious awakening in the city of Toronto that will have its bad." Did he know many of them? Yes, several and all good people. "But," he said, "they were good people before they became Latter Day Saints." I admitted this was so in some cases and then asked, "Why are so many people opposed to us when we begin work in a place, or even after we have been established for years? Why, in the pulpit, on the platform, in private conversation, and in newspapers, do so many warn the public against us?" He replied, "Because they are afraid of your teaching. Afraid your doctrines will have an evil influence upon the minds of some who will be sure to follow you." I answered, "What about Bro. Robert Hodson, who has just introduced us? He sits there before you. You say he was a good man before we got him. That all whom you know were, as Methodists, good men and women, and, as Latter Day Saints, they still retain their integrity. In the name of high heaven, what cause have we given for all this bitter opposition?" He said, "Well, Mr. Mortimer, I must confess you have given me a new train of thought, and I do not see why I may not bid you God-speed in your work as well as any." And so we parted. Here was one man who could see our honest efforts to do good and he was willing to say, God speed you in your labor of love; but how many in Toronto will say as much to President R. C. Evans? His success has made them bitter.

And this great work is going on, not only in this city but in other places, and the Spirit of our God is working mightily among the people till the calls for help are more than we can fill. But so very much depends upon us as a people. United in righteousness, we can call God's angels to our aid. Do you not know, my dear brothers and sisters, it is criminal for us to be weak, when we can be strong in the Lord of hosts? The strength of a chain or its lifting power is in its weakest link. God has placed us here to prove the world. As a chain, one end, as it were, is fast to the throne of the eternal One, and the other end to lift up poor weak humanity to higher and better things, each one of his children a link in this great chain. Now the weakest link is where the break will take place. What right have I to be the weak one and cause the breakage at the very time when such a mighty work is in progress? Think of the disappointment, not only on earth but probably in heaven. If joy comes to the angels when sinners are converted, why not disappointment over failure?

Think of these things, my beloved saints of God! Be a strong link. Be true and faithful to your covenant. Pray the Lord of the harvest for more laborers in the vineyard. Pray for us.

A. E. MORTIMER.

EQUALITY.

This article by Bishop Kelley will be reprinted in tract form.

Equality is the condition or quality of being equal. Persons under this condition are neither superior nor inferior; greater nor less; better nor worse.

This does not mean that one is just as tall as another, or that all must weigh in the same notch, eat the same amount of food, or sing well in the same key; but it does mean that there are no servants and no masters, no exalted and no debased, none specially privileged and none whose rights are specially abridged.

In temporal matters each is supplied according to "his needs and wants inasmuch as his wants are just." But it is not necessary that all shall engage in the same business, or work at the same trade, nor that they shall have the same sized family, nor have a stewardship of the same amount of property. The equality of the holding is based upon the needs and just wants of all and is determined according to the reasonable demands, circumstances, business capabilities, talents, and calling of each.

PURITY OF LIFE FIRST.

There absolutely can be no idlers, loafers, busybodies, backbiters, deceivers, rogues, liars, drunkards, libertines, or covetous persons where there is equality; and conversely, where any of these things exist the rules and laws belonging to this order can not be safely entered upon; hence the divine instruction to the church in December, 1833, upon its failure to carry out the law of equality among the Saints: "Behold, I say unto you, there were jarrings and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore by these things they polluted their inheritances."—Doctrine and Covenants 98:3.

Also the following, June 22, 1834: "Therefore, in consequence of the transgressions of my people, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion, that they themselves may be prepared, and that my people may be taught more perfectly, and have experience, and know more perfectly, concerning their duty, and the things which I require at their hands."—Ibid., 102:3.

The rule of conduct enjoined by Jesus at the first of his ministry in Palestine is the true governing principle to be met at the threshold of the Zion state of equality, and men must ever stand dazed and disappointed who undertake to bring about the hoped for conditions among a people who fail to keep this law: "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."—Matthew 7:12.

Those who attempt to force the condition without following the laws governing are in a like pitiable state as the religious enthusiast who promises that heaven may be gained any way you please, so you say, "Lord, help, I am a sinner." But Jesus taught, "Not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven."

Why not follow Christ, instead of the teaching of some man? "Enter ye in at the strait gate."

The question of conditions precedent to entering upon the system of equality has been presented to the reader at this early time in considering the question, because in the judgment of the writer it is the one phase to which the attention of all should now be earnestly directed. It is an easy matter to awaken a desire on the part of the people to enter upon the enjoyment of the holy association of complete oneness and equality, but another thing to lead them so to live and sacrifice as to make the introduction of the order of equality possible. The error of the present age is much the same as with the Jews when Jesus taught and wrought among them; there is a great desire to be partakers of the "loaves and fishes," but too little disposition shown to commend the religion of the Master by keeping his sayings. There can be no nearer approach to the doctrine of equality without an earnest effort of self-denial and unselfish sacrifice.

EQUALITY OF RIGHTS.

One prominent feature of the condition of being equal is already fully reached by the people, but has been unappreciated by many and abused by many others. It is that of equality of rights. To proceed further in the way of divine oneness this must be zealously cherished and honored. It applies to every person and to every condition, and so necessarily its bounds stop at the borders of the rights belonging to every other individual. It at once opens the door of opportunity and advancement to all, but just as effectually closes the avenue of interference with the work, business, rights, and privileges of every one.

Equality of rights does not permit one to take advantage of his neighbor, interfere with the work of others, or in any way authorize him to assume a position of influence and trust to which he is not properly called and elevated. A community of rights run in parallel lines, not at angles, and properly honored, permit no clashes between the privileged membership. It follows without exception, then, that we should be at absolute peace with each other.

Again, the fact of equality of rights in the church, or state, interferes in no way with the work of officers or teachers. The work and calling of these is parallel with the rights of all others; there is a collision only when parties fail of duty, and abuse the doctrine of equality of rights. To effectually honor and guard his own rights a member must faithfully respect and recognize the rights of all others, and every one in his place and station. One under this great bill of rights can no more disrespect and disregard the rights of the official or the laymember, and stand excusable, than he can disregard the rights belonging to the sacred precincts of the home of one of these, and stand guiltless. How pertinent, indeed, is the instruction of the Lord to his people: "Let every man learn his duty." He must not only stay within his own line of work and usefulness, but he must also keep out of the way and work of others.

A full compliance with and adherence to the principles and law of equality of rights will prove our capability of entering upon a further advanced position in the work of equality. There is nothing known to the writer which so much defers the full institution of the order as that of awaiting the general notice that the entire membership, brothers and sisters, fully recognize, keep, and honor the law of equality of rights. Who is prepared to issue the order stating that all are ready?

The Bishopric has sought under the provisions of the law to ascertain how nearly the Saints were prepared for advanced conditions and has asked for financial reports and expressions of readiness to sacrifice and help as the law directs. "For according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop in Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 72:3. "And also my servants who are abroad in the earth should send forth the accounts of their stewardships to the land of Zion, for the land of Zion shall be a seat and a place to receive and do all these things."—Doctrine and Covenants 69:2.

The fact that the command was given to "lay all things before the bishop," is all that is necessary to prove that this is an essential part of the work. The Lord does not direct a nonessential thing to be done. It is written, "My word shall not return unto me void."

Many have thought they could climb up some other way, failing to recognize the fact that to insist upon our own way and wishes in this matter is but to put farther from us the cherished promises.

EQUALITY IN SPIRITUAL THINGS.

It is a full and perfect obedience to the law of Christ that brings us into harmony with the divine will where all may be owned as children, sons and daughters of God, and receive of the divine Spirit and the distribution of spiritual gifts, not as we often wish and ask, but according to our needs, and "as he will."

God is not partial, and yet out of his great abundance he bestows upon his children "diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit"; not the same gift to each one, but to each according to his wants and needs, and all this that each may "profit withal." To each is given full and fair opportunity with every one else; all receiving according to their several abilities, and it is then left with the individual under this proper condition to prove what he will be.

It is represented of the church and its work that in that day before the Son of man comes, the kingdom of heaven, the church, "is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants and delivered unto them his goods." "And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway went on his journey."—Matthew 25:14, Inspired Translation. From this illustration it is apparent that we are made stewards of our heavenly Father and receive according to his wise provisions, gifts and stewardships, for the great and good purpose of activity and usefulness; and not simply for our own comfort and ease or satisfaction. This is also clearly expressed in the parable of the rich man and the unjust steward, Luke sixteenth chapter. The useful life and work of Jesus of Nazareth is the pattern for all, and it is written that "He went about doing good"; also, that "he is our pattern in all things."

To bestow spiritual gifts, divine favor, or material riches upon a people without regard to their respective abilities and capacities to properly appreciate and use, would destroy rather than build them up, and burden instead of giving comfort and help. Among the requisites to the desirable conditions of equality is that principle that provides that each shall receive that which to him is useful and to a great degree enjoyable. If this is not correct, then there may be less general happiness and comfort under the order of equality than there is in the reverse state, notwithstanding the many day-dreams upon the question.

The advance position necessary to gain true and full equality is that we reach the condition where all have a true conception of the duties we owe to God and to each other. Without this it is impossible to move together without jealousies, jarrings, and complainings. There must be a possibility of moving with oneness of purpose and desire in order to succeed. We should be equal in industry and interest, well balanced in frugality and economy, and all of a disposition of self-helpfulness and charity toward others. How else can we maintain the equal state and relation should it once be entered upon?

TRUE CHARACTER NECESSARY.

It is revealed that: "The Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them; and Enoch continued his preaching in righteousness unto the people of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 36:2.

Jesus said: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13:35.

Well, have we proved it to the world? We may do so by developing characters that are in full harmony with the law. These are not builded, however, by reading idle tales, or meting out such instruction as develops a feeling of enmity and hatred between brethren, or mankind in general, whether rich or poor, bond or free, or of whatever class or station.

Every move made in a spirit of selfishness and envy, or with the object of bitterly arraying men against each other, is prompted by the spirit from beneath, not the Spirit of truth that is from above. The work of the Spirit of the Lord is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance.

A people moved by this may arrive at equality and true holiness, and there is a bright future for such; but the reverse spirit leads to hatred, variance, discord, and finally anarchy and death. All then should "try the spirits" which move them to action. We can not afford to be falsely led; and the test is not the desire or will of the individual, but the word of God. Each should be careful to examine himself and ascertain the underlying motive of his efforts, and talk, about equality. Is it to serve self, or to humbly serve the Lord? If it is for the latter purpose, then be forward to put away every evil work.

INHERITANCES AND STEWARDSHIPS.

The disposition of inheritances and stewardships under the law to more fully equalize the benefits, burdens and opportunities among the Saints, presents no exception to the examples already set out, showing that the Lord deals out to every man according to wisdom and in justice and equity. The proposition is clearly set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 77:1, of the application of unvarying principles touching equality, both in heavenly and earthly things: "For if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things; for if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and require of you."—Doctrine and Covenants 77:1.

Also section 101, paragraph 2: "I the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine; and it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine, but it must needs be done in mine own way."

If there was no specific declaration upon the manner of distribution of properties then in the books, it would be determinable from the divine plan touching spiritual things as hereinbefore set out. Every one will receive "according to his wants and needs, inasmuch as his wants are just."

But the plan is made specific in word: "And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent, that every man may gain other talents; yea, even an hundredfold, to be cast into the storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:4.

Do not overlook the fact that under the Lord's plan every one has his stewardship. This is the special business, means of livelihood, particular work, or profession, whatever one is called to do, or is capable of doing and properly allotted; and these several stewardships are as distinctly separate and apart from all others and the common fund, as each person has his own separate, individual identity and is responsible to God for his acts, and must separately answer to God for his faithfulness in, and development of, the stewardship.

Each member, however, has equal claims upon the common fund, the storehouse, for the management of his stewardship. But the claim upon the common fund is not determined by the individual himself, any more than a member may determine what gifts of the Spirit he will have. Spiritual things which are for the good of all are not at each one's direction or wish, but as God wills. And temporalities which are for the good of all are not given out upon the demand of a member as he wills, or may judge himself entitled to the same, but they are administered according to his "wants, inasmuch as his wants are just."

It is clear then, that some one must pass upon the question of the "just wants," when this common fund is to be drawn upon, and that under such condition persons may often be for a time disappointed even under the "all things common" idea, when this is administered according to the law of Christ. Let no one misconstrue the law of uniformity as set out. All are to have "equal claims on the properties for the benefit of managing the concerns of their stewardships." This is right, and every just claim would be allowed; but what about an improper claim?

INDIVIDUAL AND JOINT OWNERSHIP.

Under the Lord's system of equality every person who is counted worthy to have part and lot therein has what is properly termed his own interests, as well as this right of claim upon the church "storehouse." This preserves the liberty and independence of the member, and this conservation of individual liberties is as essential to the state and condition of equality and the well-being of Zion, as any other vital principle. Special provision is made for this under the law so that no undue advantage may be taken one of another, notwithstanding differences of opinion, controversies, and even discipline may arise. The statement is:

"Women have claim upon their husbands for their maintenance until the husbands are taken; and if they are not found transgressors they shall have fellowship in the church; and if they are not faithful, they shall not have fellowship in the church; yet they may remain upon their inheritances according to the law of the land."—Doctrine and Covenants 82:1.

The principle applies equally to the husband or any one else, and to the stewardship as well as the inheritance. Either may be disposed of by the steward, owner, as did Esau his birthright, but can not be taken away against the steward's will, except he barter it away according to the law of the land.

Again, paragraph 2: "All children have claim upon their parents for their maintenance until they are of age; and after that, they have claim upon the church; or, in other words, upon the Lord's storehouse, if their parents have not wherewith to give them inheritances. And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church, that widows and orphans shall be provided for, as also the poor."

Without individual ownership there would be no such thing as parents being able to give their children their inheritances. Ownership in a proper way is the order; this seems to be one of the main objects to be attained. Without this, instead of there being no poor, every man would be poor; and in case he did not walk according to any edict that might be issued by the church, although he did not believe it, he would be set adrift without a penny as effectually as it was ever possible under the darkest reign of the popes. God's ways are the reverse of this; in directing the bishop in his work he says the bishop shall:

"When he shall appoint a man his portion, give unto him a writing that shall secure unto him his portion, and that shall hold it, even this right and this inheritance in the church, until he transgresses and is not accounted worthy to belong to the church; and if he shall transgress, he shall not have power to claim that portion which he has consecrated unto the bishop for the poor and the needy of my church; therefore he shall not retain [drawback] the gift, but shall only have claim on that portion that is deeded to him. And thus all things shall be made sure according to the law of the land."—Doctrine and Covenants 51:1.

It is safe to affirm that men's rights are not jeopardized in carrying out the law of Christ, but preserved; and this is in perfect harmony with the instruction to the church April 18, 1902:

"In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to."—Ibid., 126:10.

The stewardship is to God, and not simply to the church. No rule of action can ever be made which invalidates the law requiring each to answer to God for his work, or that sets aside the doctrine of personal liberty of the citizen. God's children must be free; Zion is not made up of the following of slaves. This freedom, however, permits no one to live above the law, or to violate a single one of its provisions. True liberty is ever within the law, not outside.

THE GENERAL GOOD CONSERVED.

It will be observed that the doctrine of Equality is not for the benefit of the few, but for all; all are to be equal under the system. And while there may be differences in the amounts and values of stewardships in order that each "may improve upon his talent," yet the general results are for the common good. The gains to the extent of "an hundredfold," or less, are cast into "the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church." This does not mean that one's stewardship can not be extended and developed under the energy and enterprise of a faithful citizen of Zion. In keeping with the extended knowledge, demands, and opportunities, it is safe to say that it will, both before and during the millennium, for that matter; but can not be done at the expense of the stewardship of any other person. All have equal claim upon the storehouse for the management of their stewardships; but some may be more industrious, self-sacrificing, and zealous in their work than others, and every one will be rewarded according to his works.

Under the system, whoever prospers most does the most for the general good and not simply for himself; and this eliminates the disposition to selfishness and jealousy from the account; for the gains, as already shown, "become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God."

Christ is willing to bless and enrich his people, but not until they shall have proved by their devotion and sacrifices that they can bear this, and are worthy to receive. Particular inquiry was made of Jesus upon this upon a certain occasion: "Peter said, Lo, we have left all and followed thee." "And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, there is no man who has left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive manifold more in this present time; and in the world to come, life everlasting."—Luke 18:29, 30.

To those who labor and patiently wait, abiding trustfully the Lord's time, sacrificing for Zion's weal, walking unselfishly and in the truth, seeking not to please themselves but him who hath made the promises sure, there is hope—to such the redemption, gathering, and equality need not be deferred.

Of General Interest

WHISKY OR POISON.

There are a great many people who believe that all kinds of whisky are nothing more nor less than poison, but Doctor H. W. Wiley, chief chemist for the department of agriculture, declares there is a difference and a vast one. Testifying before the house committee on agriculture the other day with respect to the pure food law, Doctor Wiley, who is an acknowledged authority on liquors, branched off into an interesting discussion of the relative merits of "straight" and blended whisky. "Beware of blended whiskies," said Doctor Wiley, "for they coagulate the protoplasm in the human cells and bring on old age at a gallop. Stick to straight whisky, for there is nothing harmful in the real article; but be certain that you get what you pay for, and not some mixture of raw alcoholic spirits fresh from the still which will poison your system and madden your brain."

This is no doubt good advice, but Doctor Wiley throws a dampener on the spirits of imbibers on the hunt for the pure article by asserting his belief that none of the whisky sold over the bars of saloons is pure. He included in this even the "bottled in bond" variety, for the saloonkeeper, Doctor Wiley asserts, buys one case of it and then continues to fill up the bottles from his demijohn in the cellar. According to the chemist, most of the whisky got over the bars is simply neutral alcohol.

It takes from four to eight years to properly age whisky, and this process is too slow and expensive for modern methods of turning over money. On the other hand, spirits deteriorate from the day they are made. Doctor Wiley declares that the law puts a premium upon adulteration of liquors, and that all the adulteration is done under the law. While it costs ninety cents a barrel to bottle "straight" whisky in bond, it costs the rectifier, the adulterer, nothing to do the same thing under the same provision. It appears that there is all the difference in the world in the manufacture of whisky from the very outset. For instance, the makers of spirits use the very poorest and cheapest grade of corn that can be found, while the whisky manufacturer uses only the highest grade of corn and rye on the market. Doctor Wiley gave as the testimony of experts that a man drunk on spirits is crazy drunk, while a whisky drunk is merely a jolly good fellow. He closed his testimony by telling the congressional investigators that the only way to avoid the risk of poisonous drinks sold over the bars is to keep out of the saloons or "live in a prohibition State." Even this latter remedy has been known to prove ineffectual.

Whisky is only good for one thing, and that is to let alone. It does not make any difference whether it is straight, crooked, blended, or what not, it will beat the game of the best man on earth if he goes up against it. This is what Farmer Burns would call an "immortal cinch."—Des Moines Capital.

GROWTH OF DIVORCE EVIL

On account of the general alarm over the growth of the divorce evil in this country, the National Government is collecting statistics from the various States with a view to throwing light on the subject and encouraging remedial legislation. It is estimated that there have been 500,000 divorces in the United States in the last twenty years, and that 1,500,000 children have seen their homes broken up. The full extent of the evil can hardly be realized until the forthcoming report is completed, because only nine States now publish divorce statistics. These are Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan.

So many absurd excuses for divorce have been found that it is no wonder the comic papers find the subject one that yields much rich material for their fruition in rousing up the province of Ontario; and a splendid people, freed from the shackles of priestly despotism, will be brought to know God, whom to know is "life eternal."

The opening of the church was signaled by the baptism of four, President Evans administering. Many more are near the kingdom. The seating capacity of the church is, the main auditorium, six hundred, and four hundred in the basement. The front or west window of stained glass has three representations thereon. That on the north has Christ blessing little children and is the gift of the London District Sunday-school association. On the south side is the angel appearing to Joseph Smith the Seer, the gift of the London District Religio. In the center is a representation of President R. C. Evans in his pulpit costume (Prince Albert coat, etc.) in the act of presenting the word of God with one hand upon the open Bible and the other raised in expressive gesture. It is the gift of a private person. At the east end, behind the stand, is the representation of the miraculous healing of Sr. Minnie M. Faulds of the Toronto Branch. The scene represents the act of healing by the hands of the angel being laid upon her, whereby she was healed of curvature of the spine, and both of her lower limbs restored to their normal condition, as one limb was shorter than the other and for years she wore a thick-soled and high-heeled boot. No longer does she use crutches or the boot; but well does the writer remember the condition she was in, as we were acquainted before she came into the church. It is certainly one of the greatest miracles of modern days, and is worthy of being so commemorated in the place she has so faithfully labored to erect. This window is the gift of Deacon W. S. and his wife, Sr. Minnie Faulds.

Now the question might be asked, and not out of place, Why is it that the combined influence of sectarian priesthood is used against the work President R. C. Evans is doing in Toronto? Why are they so determined in their opposition? Are our people immoral? Do they live vicious lives? Some may, but not as a result of lax teaching or wrong instruction. Our people will compare favorably with those of any other church in Toronto or any other place.

The writer was in conversation with the editor of a country village newspaper, who also was a local preacher as well as superintendent of a Sunday-school, when the question was asked what he knew about Latter Day Saints, and he replied, "Nothing purposes. A South Dakota woman was recently given a divorce from her husband because he refused to pay for a pair of corsets she had bought. One wife secured a separation from her husband because he persisted in stoning their neighbors' cats, thus making her unpopular in the community where they lived. Another woman, who married a carpenter, afterwards relented and begged to be released from the union on account of the fear that, if she ever had children, they would inherit a tendency to pound and make a noise. Mrs. James Alexander, of New York, carried off the honors as a most unique divorcee by issuing cards that read:

"Mrs. James Alexander requests the honor of your presence at the celebration of her divorce from Mr. James Alexander."

However, it remained for a Baltimore man to do the handsome thing by his dissatisfied wife. When he found she was in love with another man, he helped her secure her release from himself, settled the house and a fine income on her, then crowned his generosity by giving her away at the wedding.—Portland Oregonian.

LABOR "REVIVALIST PICKETS" AT METHODIST MEETINGS.

The following which we take from the Chicago Tribune of January 29, appeared in substance in all the daily papers of Chicago:

"A new turn in the long-standing fight of the union printers against the Western Methodist Book Concern developed yesterday when the printers decided to send pickets to the series of revival meetings to be inaugurated by the Methodist Church next week.

"Methodist revival meetings will be held nightly in all parts of the city and at each meeting two or three union pickets will be present for the purpose of 'prayer and exhortation' in an effort to melt the hearts of Jennings & Graham, publishing agents of the Methodist Church.

"The pickets will become exhorters, and prayers will be offered for the 'conversion' of the publishing agents. Edward Bessette, assistant organizer of Typographical Union No. 16, who has been captain of the pickets since the printers' strike began more than a year ago, will head the 'revivalist pickets.'

"J. J. Stirling, a local preacher of Corydon, Iowa, has been engaged to coach the pickets to become expert exhorters. Training quarters have been secured in the barracks of the Salvation Army at 395 State Street, where a class of fifteen pickets is being coached.

"In addition to a special prayer for the conversion of the publishing agents, the pickets will pray for the Union and for the reinstatement of all locked out printers from the plant of the Methodist Book Concern."—Northwestern Christian Advocate, February 13, 1907.

A CHRISTIAN (?) MINISTER ON THE GIFT OF TONGUES.

Now there is not a church of any name in Denver—Hebrew, Catholic, Protestant—there is not a church in Denver on as low a plane of intelligence, morality, and spirituality as was the church in Corinth when St. Paul wrote this epistle. I would be heartily ashamed of the South Broadway Christian Church if its life were on as low a level as was that of the church of God in Corinth.

The gifts of tongues and of healing in the apostolic church were evidences of condescension on the part of the good Father to the ignorance, low morals, material tastes, and feeble faith of its members. If the gift of tongues has again been bestowed, as is claimed, if the gifts of healing exist in our part of the world and in our time, they are evidences, not of superior intelligence, strong faith, and a vigorous spiritual vitality, but the reverse. They are rather evidences of a low degree of intelligence, weak faith, and a sluggish spirituality.

I do not deny the stories of the gift of tongues, gifts of healing, and other similar endowments. I accept them as true. If they are to be classed with those of the first century of the Christian era they testify to a low spirituality, to a weak faith, and to a most extraordinary limitation of knowledge.—Reverend B. B. Tyler, South Broadway Christian, in Denver Express, February 11, 1907.

THE JEW IN POLITICS.

The appointment of Oscar Straus to a cabinet position has called forth a considerable quantum of words about the handful of Jews who have held high political positions in this country, but no hint has been given of the real importance of the fact, which is that the Jews generally are taking more interest than formerly in public affairs, surely a healthy sign of the times, for it is not desirable that any large body of our people should feel no interest in politics. It is true that Oscar Straus is the first Jew to fill a cabinet position in the Federal Government, but a greater Jew than he held two cabinet portfolios under Jefferson Davis, president of the Southern Confederacy. That was Judah Peter Benjamin, one of the most brilliant men of his time—indeed, if it would be an extravagance to say the most brilliant. He was famous as a United States Senator and a lawyer before entering the Confederate cabinet and was famous as a lawyer and an author in London after quitting America. "Benjamin on Sales" is still a standard text-book. Many critics assert that Benjamin's farewell address to the United States Senate when he announced the secession of his State, Louisiana, and his own resignation was the most eloquent of that series of memorable farewell addresses. He was born in one of the West Indies islands belonging to England. At the close of the Civil War he began life anew in London and rose to high distinction at the bar.

David Yulee of Florida served ten years in the House as David Levi and three terms in the Senate as David Levi Yulee, the only public man in America to change his name after achieving any considerable eminence. Of course everybody knows that the real name of Senator Mitchell of Oregon was John Hipple, to which he added Mitchell when he left Pennsylvania and went West. Yulee was the second Jew to sit in the Senate.

Other Jews who have reached the Senate are B. F. Jonas of Louisiana, Joseph Simon of Oregon, and Isidor Rayner of Maryland. By common consent Rayner is counted as one of the crack orators of the Senate. He served several terms in the House, but his most famous spectacular performance was his defense of Admiral Schley, which most likely gave him his senatorial toga.

In the House there are always in these latter days some Jews. General Meyer of Louisiana is serving his fourteenth year and has been re-elected. He is now what Colonel Charles Fremont Cochran of St. Joseph, Missouri, was in the habit of calling "an old and experienced member." There are others—Littauer of New York, Kahn of California, Goldfogle of New York, and Knopf of Chicago; certainly those, perhaps others that I wot not of.—Champ Clark in Lawton Constitution.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

[While the committee were preparing the series of articles, "Our boys," it occurred to them that it would be well to hear from some of the boys, that like Paul before Agrippa they be asked to speak for themselves. Thinking thus we made request of one of our young friends that he would tell us of his thoughts, let us know how he felt in reference to various matters which more or less affect the future welfare and success of the boy. In the following paper we give our readers the answer to this request, and we commend it to the careful reading of parents who really desire to help their boys. "Put yourselves in his place" is a motto worthy the attention of all who have to deal with the mind or lives of others. Especially is this true when striving to influence the young. Parents who are the companions of their children, who have their confidence, are in a position to guard and save them from almost every evil in life, and to help them in climbing the highest steeps of honor and usefulness life offers to them. Fathers, mothers, let us entreat you, then: "With all thy getting, get" the confidence of your children.

We suggest to our young friend that the subject is by no means exhausted, and we will be very glad to hear from him again. And if any other boys or youths will write us along these lines, we will be pleased to hear from them, and will give due consideration to all such communications.—EDITOR.]

FROM ONE BOY'S VIEW-POINT.

"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

Longfellow has found the secret to the boy's nature—as willful as the wind but with thoughts that go a long way off, away over the distant line of hills and fight fierce battles with Indians or build vast railways, thoughts that climb up, away up beyond the clouds and build air-castles of hopes, thoughts—

"Charlie, come and get me an armload of wood; hurry now. It does seem to me as if you could have a little life and ambition about you. You go around here as if you were about ready to drop dead in your tracks. Hurry up now with that wood."

As a boy I want to tell you older people that right here is your mistake. You can not hope to make the boy your friend when you lack appreciation of his way of looking at life.

He is not always lazy because he "goes away off in the clouds." There is an infinite something that takes hold of him and makes him dream of that golden future when he is going to do all those wonderful things. You think he is wasting time when he might be "doing" (?) something and you want to "impress the fact on his mind." A "good scolding" will never do it. There never was a boy who would not become more hardened, deafer to your will every time you tried that way o. "impressing." You can not do it that way. He will be led, not driven.

There is something sacred in those dreams to him, and he imagines that he is just a little bit peculiar in that. What an awakening it was when he became old enough to read Ike Marvel's "Dream Life" or Hamlin Garland's Boy-life on the Prairie. "Why, ain't that funny? I've thought those same things, myself." That is what he says. What he thinks is, "They've thought those same things."

Do not discourage those dreams, those ambitions,—go with him on his long journeys into the clouds, sympathize with him. That is what a boy wants. He wants a friend that will forget all his "experience," who will forget that it is necessary to "impress on the kid" the dazzling wonder of what he "knows," a friend who will not always be remembering those twenty years between them. That is the kind of a man who is "all right. He knows just how a fellow feels."

You know men of that kind, men with whom it is a feast to talk, men who breathe out a personality that stays with you for days after you have talked with them. That is the kind of a man that Longfellow was, a man with a soul that knew and understood that mysterious will of the boy's and knew that sometimes you must leave that will of the wind's alone. When he had left the home of one little girl she turned to her mother puzzled, "Mamma, was that God?"

The soul-life that generates from these boyhood dreams is the life that makes such men as Longfellow and Emerson. Such a life, you parents all unknowingly, perhaps, sometimes try to stifle. I forget who has told us that dreams are the stuff that life is made of.

If you will be careful with that boy, if you will learn to understand him and guide him aright by placing before him the books that are best, by living before him the life that is best, some day he will awaken to the sternness of life, and he and you will feel the truth of that stanza of Emerson's:

"Grandeur is so near our dust,
God is so nigh to man,
When duty whispers low, 'Thou must,'
The youth replies, 'I can.'"

Then in the strength of his young manhood, he will go to fight the evils of the world, the stronger, the truer, the more sympathetic for his dreams. But do not, do not hurry him faster than he can see his way. There lies the secret passage-way to the boy's heart. He who treads it must go with him, must make himself again a boy and see the world through a boy's eyes.

A boy particularly despises affectation. Do not put him off, do not treat him as an inferior, incapable of understanding what you might tell him. And above all, go to him with some of your plans; allow him to share your life, if you would wish to share his. His ideas may be crude, but they will be sincere; and the more of honesty, the more of sincerity we come in contact with, the purer our lives will be, even though we find it in "one of the least of these."

Do not forget in your plans to help the boys that the truest help is reciprocal, that from the life still untainted by worldly experience you may gain fresh strength for the struggle; that the faith of the boy will bear you up sometimes when discouraged.

Now I may not view this question as impartially as an older person, a person who can speak from experience, who has rubbed shoulders with the world and stood its bruises, and I have all esteem for that man. But I have been asked to tell how it looks to a boy, and do you know, pessimism is a strange thing to find in a boy? He is living in the spring-time of life. Everything is speaking to him the promise of a glorious life. Perhaps when the winter comes he will see the dried-up flowers and the naked trees and the mystery of life will puzzle him; but now he sees only the budding of the flowers and the mating of the birds. He sees the grass springing from beneath his feet and every creature of the wood, yes, every tree starts with a quickness that sends the red blood rushing through his heart. There are no failures in life to a boy. He must succeed. That is what life means to him, the fulfillment of his hopes. He has confidence in himself. A little too much? Perhaps, and yet I doubt if the world could afford to lose that confidence, that assurance that a real boy carries with him.

Letter Department

I have seen men who would be continually bewailing the sins of this world, and who would tell me it was getting worse all the time, that the only hope, the only consolation we have is the next world. "Here 'tis always the just who suffer for the unjust." There are men who will try to teach us to despise our mother-world, who will talk about the wickedness in the world, and picture it in such a way as to create the impression that the best thing to do is to get away from it all. I may be too sanguine, and perhaps some of my hopes will fail, but fail or not I would rather keep through life the faith of my boyhood. God help me that I may love the world for its good, and only pity the evil, that I may remember that "Love lights more fires than hate extinguishes,

And men grow better as the world grows old."

Oh! if you would make humanity better, do not teach your boy the cynicism that looks on the world as an accursed thing, to be tolerated only because he must live in it. Try to put into his heart that greater love that sees God in everything that has the breath of life. We have enough of coldness in the world. Only look at the thousands that go the way that leads to death because the cold shoulder has been turned. Let us have a little more of that Spirit of the Christ who said to the fallen woman, wretched, and spurned by the scribes and Pharisees: "Neither do I condemn thee. Go and sin no more."

One of the things that tries a boy's patience is, "Don't do this," and "Don't do that." Perhaps it is good for him to have his patience tried; but I believe that his patience will have all the trying it needs in this world without making such a sacrifice for it. Such continual nagging finally comes to lose its force and it falls on ears that are so accustomed to it that the "don't" is the only part of it they hear. Is it not far better to tell a boy what to do than to be always restricting him? Do you not think that your boy is worthy to be taught as Christ was accustomed to teach, rather than to keep him so long under the old "shalt nots" of Moses? As the effect of the teaching of Christ is so grand that the precepts of Moses seem sometimes but a mockery, so will your boy, nurtured by that Christ-like spirit, be a man that will love the world as Christ loved it, and pity the Pharisees of to-day who know no higher law than the one that says, "thou must not."

Notice to the Daughters of Zion.

It is earnestly requested that all local societies having money on hand for the general society use, or the children's home fund; also others contemplating sending funds to this organization, that you forward same by March 20, to LOOKINGGLASS, Oregon.

Editors Herald: I wish to express my sorrow at the news of the fire. It seemed like something of our own. I could not keep back the tears. It was good to not miss a number of the dear HERALD, though. But this week I thought it was not coming; we usually get it Sunday, but it did not come until Thursday. I could not do without the HERALD and Hope. I will send my subscription for Autumn Leaves, HERALD and Hope now.

I would ask the Prayer Union to pray for my little girl, three years old, that God may see fit to heal her, and not let her become deaf, as she is getting hard of hearing.

Your sister,

L. WILLIAMS.

GALES FERRY, Connecticut, February 10, 1907.

Editors Herald: When I heard of the burning of the HERALD Office it cast no gloom over me, nor did doubts arise; for I am satisfied that the Lord of all the earth has done right; and no power could destroy if he cast a wall around to prevent it. Our God can bring good out of evil and light out of darkness. I do not think the fire was caused by any particular neglect or sinfulness, but perhaps to try us and see what we are made of, and how many of us will come to the rescue to meet whatever expense is necessary. We were much pleased to see how quick our noble publishing staff rallied from the shock, and feel grateful to those who so kindly assisted them. Surely there is much good in the world. May we as Saints remember that we are to be lights to the world. We are among the scattered ones, and very seldom hear a sermon; but the church papers have been a source of great spiritual strength to us.

It will be fifteen years this 6th of April since I obeyed this perfect law of liberty, my wife obeying about one month later. Our heavenly Father met us more than half way, and we feel that God is good. We have had some very hard trials, but intend to endure to the end.

As I read the different pieces written for the HERALD by the ministry, and see the great difference of opinion among the ministry, I feel that surely they need to attend the school of the prophets; for in asking their advice concerning what is right and wrong when I have been at a loss to know, I found one would speak opposite to the other. My brethren, these things ought not to be. One apostle who mentions this matter says, "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same things, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment."

Let us all have fervent charity among ourselves, and try to keep out of our church papers that which might be a stumbling-block to the seeker after light; and may our leaders see the necessity of following the great Lawgiver's plan to settle all these differences of opinion by again establishing the school of the prophets. When this is done the church will be using God's own plan to help us all to come to a unity of the faith.

May God help us all to do our best, is the prayer of

Your brother in Christ,

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

ARTHUR, Ontario, February 12, 1907.

Dear Herald: It is with pleasure we write of our visit to the city of Toronto on last Sunday where we met with the Saints of that place as they assembled to open their new church. A number from various parts were there, and it was a busy, profitable, and well-spent day.

From eight to eleven o'clock in the forenoon a spiritual and peaceful prayer-service was enjoyed, the Lord speaking to us in no uncertain sound, commending the sacrifices made, and gently reproving those who had not given service cheerfully. He spoke of the coming of the Lord soon at hand, calling attention to the signs of the times, in earthquakes, fire, and tempest, pleading with us to be pure if we wish to become powerful, stating he had men whom he wanted to use but they were not in shape. This is in substance the revelation.

At eleven o'clock in the forenoon and half past two in the afternoon Elder Evans preached, the church being nicely filled. If I am not mistaken, the cost of this edifice is thirteen thousand and five hundred dollars, and they have two thirds of the money paid. As I see it, they have done wonderfully well in that they only owe one third of the value of this great structure; and I will further say, too, that this branch desires the support of other branches to help them square up the debt. Toronto is virtually the capital city of Canada, and the leading center. The few Saints there have done a fine work. They are making great efforts to reach the people; and further than their efforts as to church-building, right here I am going to insert a statement, and will risk being censured for it: we Saints who live in the country (and I presume it is the same in other countries) should not forget that Saints living in large towns and cities should not be expected to give free board to members of the church every time they have occasion to visit the city; and more especially will I emphasize this when our visit to such town, village, or city is purely from a business standpoint, in our own interest. Since I have begun on this thought, I will go a little further. I have known where generous Saints have been so imposed on by visitors that they have been made to feel the sting of poverty, and were driven to close down on their liberality; and when the houses were not left open as a kind of jumping-off place for all kinds of passers-by, they have concluded, "Why, what's the matter? What have I done that we are not invited to come and have a meal and stay over night now as formerly? Why?" Echo answers, Why? You should consider that when hundreds come from all quarters the best-hearted and most generous cook will some day tire of running bills to keep this up. Then the outward evidence of brotherly love disappears; and the fact is, in most cases, those visiting these city Saints do not stop to reason and think what the real cause of apparent coldness is.

Now I have digressed somewhat from the thought I started to speak on; but I want to finish about Toronto, and what I saw there on the above date.

At half past seven in the evening instead of meeting in the new church, we all met at the great Majestic Theater, where Bro. R. C. Evans has been "turning the world upside down"; and now let me say without exaggeration, coloring up, or overdrawing the picture of these great meetings, I have read of them, heard of them, but never did I fully realize the interest and excitement there is over the preaching of the gospel in any time since the gospel has been restored.

The main auditorium was filled, the first gallery was filled, and the "gods" or highest gallery was three parts filled; and while the place is high and the seats and floor filthy with tobacco and dirt, I noticed quite a number of respectable ladies were content to remain there for over three hours, and patiently listen to the preaching; and then over a half hour to hear Bro. Richard answer the many questions sent up for him to explain. Besides this great concourse of orderly listeners were noticeable a great number who could not get in without going to the "gods" passed by and took their next choice place of preaching, that is the Methodists, who apparently fearful of our great success, have hired a theater a few doors up and are laboring hard to take away the people; but to my mind R. C. has got that great throng solid. They certainly love to hear him, and the strange part of it to me is, it is so singular to see or even hear of the masses clamoring to hear Latter Day Saints. It seems such a reverse of things to us. Four more were baptized that day, and the Lord said that morning that people would be gathered into the church from the north, south, east, and west of that city. I look for many to join us there. —GEORGE BUSCHLEN.

[We are permitted to make the following extracts from a private letter to Sr. Walker. The writer is a sister of Elder W. E. LaRue, and is well known to many of the Saints.]

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, February 3, 1907.

Dear Sister Walker: I expect you will be surprised to get a letter from me from this far-away place. Sometimes I am surprised at myself when I think how long I have stayed here. My interest in our church-work here is so great and the fact that there are so few who will help in the work makes me feel it is a duty for me to stay and do what little I can.

When I concluded to stay out here a year ago last November, I commenced to try to get work, which I did without any trouble, and I have been busy almost every day since. I go to the homes and work. I have worked for some of the nicest people, and I always tell them about our church. I am surprised to find how little most all of the Mormons know about us, and I can not tell you how glad and proud I am to be able to tell them of our people, especially of Bro. Joseph. I am so glad to tell them about him. I never fully appreciated him until I came out here, and can see the difference between him and these leaders. And how my love has increased for our own beautiful, pure, and clean faith, when it is compared with the evils of this church.

There are hundreds that have become disgusted with this church, and I know many will accept the truth if it is ever presented to them. I was just astonished to see how our work has been neglected. There never was a place where good live workers were more needed to get the branch in working order.

There are very few who will do anything to help in the work. When I tell you that I am Sunday-school superintendent, Religio president, and chorister for all church services and the last business-meeting I had to take the secretary's work for the branch you will begin to see our need of help. Of course I can not attend to all these things as they ought to be, and I am hoping and praying for the Lord to send some one to help in his work, so the good, honest-hearted people who are here can be led to the truth. We ought to have twenty-five of our best missionaries in this State, and as I see it, now is the time.

The Smoot investigating business has awakened the people as nothing ever has done, and they are becoming disgusted with things as they exist here.

Yours faithfully,

RACHEL LARUE.

TITUSVILLE, Pennsylvania, February 16, 1907.

Editors Herald: Yes, I regret it too. Thought there would be so many regrets and some of them so long that I would better not write mine. It is safe to say that the whole church and many more regret it; but regrets will not answer to rebuild with.

In the army, with the salute fired over the buried soldier, the funeral is over and the patriot off for the next battle. The HERALD Office people and the town evidently acted on such impulses.

And how much would a so-called fire-proof building have helped matters? Somewhat, of course, owing to how much fire-proof there really were. Paper burns about as well in one building as another. In the best of so-called fire-proof buildings a fire might be limited to one or a few rooms, but those must nearly approximate a vault. Hundreds of so-called fireproof buildings are built, but so few are found after a fire. The best for the purpose is no doubt what all will desire. So-called fire-proof buildings, with central elevator shaft, the stores on all the floors as near the elevator as possible for convenience, is the usual plan, and it is very convenient for the fire fiend. Outside symmetry is conserved with windows vertically over each other, resulting in an escape from an upper room being through the shaft of flame from a lower clime.

Since bids are yet to be let I would better not build the HERALD Office.

Have spent some time on the scenes where Brn. Robley and I. M. Smith opened the work years ago, and where various brethren have followed up the work, all of whom are remembered and their work appreciated. A few have been baptized here and there, now and then. No organization of branch yet effected. In their isolation the members have maintained the faith well as a rule. Vigorous efforts were made with tent several seasons, results being small compared with the effort. I tried a three weeks' campaign on the streets last August and later tried to find results, but as yet they are not realized. Bro. J. A. Becker who was here during the two years before he was sent to Germany is very much inquired for. Marked advancement as a preacher is conceded him, as also being an all-round hustler. Sr. Becker as a helper is appreciated very much. Little Pauline was also an all-round favorite. I have crossed the paths of none whose influence for good is better than theirs. We can well afford to have them as representatives in Germany.

At holiday time I was a runaway: off to Buffalo and Niagara Falls; stayed longer than I intended (as is usually the case). Got back however. The royally good time those excellent Saints of the two places afforded me makes me entirely willing to be forgiven, twice if need be. But, jokes aside, if I have been led anywhere, that was a case of leading, as events before, during, and afterward attest.

Peter got over the line to find Cornelius. Moses sanctioned the work of two who did not get to the designated spot. We can afford to bear with line cranks as well as any other.

It is lamentable that the Bishop has received no more on the sanitarium account. If the late stir at Lamoni should be duplicated in general, the sanitarium and other interests would not lie long.

These two years there came noticeably to my view in a Pennsylvania town a brother, partly a cripple, not strong otherwise, of moderate wages, quite a family to support (numbering seven in all), who, every time an elder passes, inquires as to his finance, whether he stops there or simply stays over night—enroute elsewhere. He believes it is his privilege as well as duty, and feels he is prospered in it. His books are not a few. He needs and uses the church papers in his business. He has no branch privileges. The Bishop, his agents, the traveling elders all fail to arouse, in cases all too many, such an interest in church affairs.

Taking advantage of what Senators Burrows and Dubois said in our favor, I secured insertions in Niagara Falls, and also Titusville papers while the incident was fresh.

A Sunday-school was organized here yesterday; I. Z. Thomas, superintendent, whose address is 224 West Spruce Street, Titusville, Pennsylvania. The secretary is Miss Bertha Reed, 284 West Spruce Street, same city.

R. ETZENHOUSER.

DES MOINES, Iowa, February 18, 1907.

Dear Herald: Our district conference convened at Runnels last Saturday and Sunday, being well-attended, and was pleasant and profitable to all. The Religio convention met on Friday morning, and the Sunday-school association met on Friday afternoon.

Elder James McKeirnan, missionary in charge in the district, and Elder H. A. McCoy, ex-president of the district and former missionary in the district, were present. Only part of the branches had representatives present, but the interest in the conference work was above the average of the past sessions.

Elder Wardell Christy had been at Runnels the week previous to the convening of the conference, and the meetings held by him had been well-attended, and the attendance at the conference meetings, and the interest of the people of Runnels was greater than at any conference yet held there.

The missionaries of the district have been active during the year, though not many new openings have been made over the district. The local members of the priesthood have not been as active as they should have been, many of them not reporting to the conference, supposedly because they had no labor to report.

A life-size bust portrait of President Joseph Smith was hung on the walls of the church. A number of charts to convey to the eye what the speaker was presenting to the ear were used during the sessions. The young men and maidens of the district who have cultivated the gift of music and song have made progress, the music and song-service during the conference being especially fine.

The hospitality of the Saints at Runnels was as much and as freely given as at any previous conference, and the citizens of the place were more friendly than ever before. Services were to be continued at the church during the week, and some names had been given for baptism.

The conference served as a means of bringing the Saints nearer together, and the outlook for the progress of the work in the district is favorable. It is pleasing to note the interest that is manifested on the part of the young people, and that they are bringing into active service the talents which they possess.

CARVALLIS, Oregon, February 14, 1907.

Dear Herald: I see by the wrapper that my time expires tomorrow, and as I would be so lonely without you, I will renew my subscription. It would be hard to express how I felt when I received the small HERALD. I felt as though we had received a great loss; but God knows best. I am now living in Carvallis, Oregon, a college town of about twenty-five hundred or three thousand inhabitants and eleven churches, and as far as I know I am the only Latter Day Saint in town or vicinity. I feel so lonely and wish for some of the Saints to talk to. If there are any of the Saints living near, I would be very glad to have them call and see me. Inquire for Mrs. W. J. Edwards, in Jobs Addition. I think this would be a good place to do tent-work. There were some Utah elders in here a few years ago. I think they did house-to-house work. As none of my relatives belong to the church, I ask for the prayers of the Saints that I may live to see some or all of them unite in this blessed work with me, and that I may have the privilege of living where there is a branch.

With best wishes for the HERALD, as ever,

MRS. JANE EDWARDS.

ADELAIDE, Australia.

Herald Readers: I have labored chiefly in Adelaide during the past year. The work is in a fair condition, twenty persons having been added during the past year and so far none lost.

This is a fine field for open-air work during about four months in the year, and I am pleased to say that we are reaching large crowds by the street-preaching. After Sunday-school (especially) our people congregate on street-corners and sometimes our audience runs into several hundreds. I love open-air work in fine weather, and the South Australian climate is so mild at night that people saunter around until midnight, which gives one a splendid opportunity to reach them.

The one great drawback is the paucity of suitable literature. It is disappointing for a missionary to speak for half an hour and succeed in drawing a couple of hundred people and then have tracts for only fifty. Who could tell how many of the balance might ultimately believe our message if suitable tracts could be placed in their hands? HERALD supplies are so dear, as anything worth giving costs from one penny to a penny and a half, which would "break a bank." Under all difficulties we have done well to double our membership this year, and the prospects for future increase are fairly bright.

I am laboring here four hundred and eighty miles from any branch or district of the church. Bro. Butterworth (in charge) is now with us for a few weeks, returning from West Australia, whither he went a month ago to settle some slight difficulty, which he succeeded in doing; also organizing the first branch in the western State of the commonwealth. We have now branches in all the principal cities of this sunny land, but some are suffering from the prevailing tendency of the times toward worldliness. Still we labor on in hope, realizing that if we can not turn the world into millennial conditions we can at least make it better or save it from becoming, too rapidly, worse.

Trusting the General Conference will result in good to all concerned, I am Faithfully yours, in bonds,

J. H. N. JONES.

Editors Herald: I am now a member of your church. My family and I were baptized and confirmed on Sunday, the 17th, Elder A. M. Chase officiating and Elder Hans Lorenson of Elsinore assisting. We feel glad of the change and only hope we may prove faithful Latter Day Saints. We have three younger children who were blessed by Elders Chase and Lorenson. Bro. Chase has left here, but the seed is sown and is taking root and very soon we shall not be alone in the fellowship. Many are investigating, which is a good sign. We have only one in town outside of our family, who belongs to our church; will be glad when there are more.

EDWARD NAZER.

TROWBRIDGE, Ontario, February 16, 1907.

Dear Herald: Just a few lines from this part of the vineyard of the Lord to let you know we are still on the Lord's side, still striving to do his will. When I look back over the past ten years, since my husband and I obeyed the gospel in its fullness, and realize the many blessings God in his all-wise goodness has bestowed upon us, I feel that tongue can not express the gratitude I owe to him. When our little ones have been at death's door, the Lord in his goodness has restored them to health. Praise his name. I feel that I can say as those of old, "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name."

Oh, it is good to be on the Lord's side, so that when trouble comes you have a friend to help you, and when you have cause to rejoice, the dear Lord will rejoice with you also. My desire is to live humble before him in so much that those we come in contact with from time to time and who think we do not teach according to the Bible, may be made to stop and think, Are these people really teaching in accordance with the word of God?

We are few in numbers in this part now, as many who obeyed the gospel here have moved away to different parts; but we try to keep the camp-fire blazing and to have on the whole armor of God.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. AMOS SMITH.

WEYBURN, Saskatchewan, February 15, 1907.

Editors Herald: I am superintendent of a Latter Day Saint Sunday-school, and will have a very good opportunity to give out a tract or two probably every Sunday when our Sunday-school opens again as soon as the winter is over. Last summer our school numbered from twenty to thirty. There were a few outsiders, and we had a very interesting school. Most of the Saints who are here moved here last year. The Lord was well pleased with our efforts. The honest in heart were all around us, and were like sheep without a shepherd. They did not know where to go. Other denominations were crying, Lo, here, and Lo, there, but we have the assurance that they will be gathered into the true fold in the own due time of the Lord. This is a good place for a zealous elder to labor during the summer and fall. The winters are so severe that but very little can be done. This is my first winter in this northwest territory, and I can truly say it is the worst winter I ever saw; fifty-four degrees below zero and from three to four feet of snow on the level. Many people have frozen to death, some of them in their beds, but for all this I like this country. As soon as spring opens immigration will commence and we look for more families of Saints. There is plenty of land to be taken as homesteads and pre-emption. People can do well in this country. If they have the will there is the way to secure good homes. Two railroads are coming through this summer. As soon as they come we are all right for a market.

CAROLINE SANDIDGE.

ELK, CITY, Kansas, February 20, 1907.

Editors Herald: -My husband and I are the only church-members that I know of here. I do not know what I would do without the HERALD. It does me so much good to read the letters of the Saints from different parts. I am longing to again hear the gospel preached. I wish some elder would come here and preach for a while. I would be glad to make room for one to stay with us. It has been nearly three years since I have been permitted to meet with the Saints. On the 9th of November my little girl died, and that makes it more lonely for me here, but I know that she is in that blessed place with all the pure ones. Pray for me that I may be able to bear all my sorrow, and that I may continue faithful.

MRS. ANNA BELSCAMPER.

HUNDSLAND, Denmark, February 7, 1907.

Dear Saints: This is the first time I have attempted to write to the HERALD. We can truly say we are of the isolated ones, as we have not heard a sermon for two years nor had the privilege of the Sunday-school which we are used to. But we can say that we must be satisfied with the Master's bidding. My companion is trying in his weak way to put the word before the people here, but it is a hard place to labor in, as the people here think they are as good Christians as they need to be. They think they do not need anything better. But if we do our part faithfully we can do no more. I can say we read the HERALD and Ensign with interest, more now than we ever have before, since they are the only sermons we hear. I am thankful that I was well instructed in the Danish language before I came here, so that I can talk to the people as well as in the American language. There are many who are sent to foreign countries who have to learn the language first. We were sorry to read of the loss the church has had by fire, but hope that what seems a loss now may be a gain in the end.

MARY ANDERSON.

News From Branches

The dedication coming at the beginning of the services and the district conference at the end brought a number of visitors from other branches, among whom we note, Sr. E. H. Fisher and Sr. J. Studley, from Boston; Bro. and Sr. C. Horton Whipple, from Providence, Rhode Island; Bro. Davison, isolated from branch; several from Hornerstown, New Jersey; Elk Mills, Maryland; and a good-sized delegation from Brooklyn, New York, among whom were Bro. Frank Lester, and his bride, who was Sr. Alice Potts, on their wedding trip.

The week following the meetings Brn. Rushton and G. W. Leggott, from Manchester, England, conducted four preaching-services, after which Bro. Leggott went to Elk Mills over Sunday. Walter W. Smith preached for the Brooklyn Saints twice on Sunday, and Bro. Rushton occupied the pulpit at both services here.

At the business-session of the district conference, February 2, delegates were elected to General Conference, officers were elected for the next six months, Bro. A. D. Angus of Philadelphia being elected president.

At the last regular business-meeting the following branch officers were elected: Walter W. Smith, pastor; Daniel T. Shaw, priest; Ellsworth B. Hull, teacher; E. A. Lewis, deacon; Clara Zimmermann, organist; Orrin K. Fry, chorister; Alma J. Harrison, librarian; William Bortell, secretary; and Eunice Smith, stenographer.

Our sick—of whom there are not a few—are all getting better, and the way looks bright before us.

BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Since last writing, we have lost one member by removal, and three have been added to our number by baptism.

Bishop George P. Lambert and his counselor, Bro. M. H. Siegfried, were with us for one Sunday. Bro. Lambert spoke on the temporal law in the morning and Bro. Siegfried addressed us in the evening.

Owing to the district conference and conventions, our pastor and his wife were absent for the first Sunday of this month. Bro. Bauer, as deacon, took charge of the meetings for the day. In the morning prayer-service was held. It was one of the best we have had for some time.

Burlington's representation at the conference was small this time; only four finding it possible to attend. Good attendance and interest was reported. Our pastor, Bro. Reiste, remained until the following Thursday in order to assist in a continuation of the meetings.

Bro. Reiste is at present conducting a series of meetings here. The average attendance of outsiders is small; but, at least, the members have proved faithful. Bro. L. E. Hills, of Marion, Iowa, was with us for a part of the time. His two sermons Sunday were convincing and forceful.

The waters were troubled in our font again last Sunday.

Bro. Hills brought a candidate from Nauvoo (Bro. Hass) who unfortunately had to return on the noon train.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

The calm and peaceful influence of the blessed Spirit was enjoyed at the sacrament-service the first Sabbath of the month.

Two precious souls were inducted into the kingdom during the month, one a young man named Edward Lundohl, of Alton, Illinois. He became acquainted with the work through Bro. de Koste, who was recently baptized from the Roman Catholic faith.

Bro. C. J. Peat of Lamoni had the pleasure of baptizing his aged father at the Wednesday evening prayer-service February 6,—aged eighty-one years. This was in fulfillment of a prophecy given to Bro. Peat some twenty-five years ago, and which he felt to almost despair of.

Bro. Tanner labored in the district some, the past month, and he with the rest of the ministry here rendered excellent service in the performance of their various duties, which the Saints appreciate very much.

The regular priesthood meeting of the branch was held February 5; the subject under discussion was, "Through whom should revelation come."

Among our visitors during the month were Bro. I. N. White, enroute to the Taylorville conference, Bro. and Sr. D. E. Tucker of the Southeastern Mission, Bro. Goodrich, who with Bro. Sparling has been laboring in the district and Bro. David Wilke of St. Joseph, Missouri.

Bro. and Sr. Rhoads of Lansdowne have again taken up their abode in St. Louis.

A much-enjoyed social event was a valentine social given by the Religio social committee at the home of Bro. and Sr. J. Dawson.

Our Sunday-school interest and attendance has been decidedly good the past month. Religio lessons and programs very much enjoyed.

We regret very much indeed that owing to business affairs our worthy president of the Religio, Bro. Arthur W. Smith, had to leave the city, he having taken a position some distance south of here. He has done an excellent work in the Religio.

A pleasing feature of the Sunday evening services the past month, besides well-rendered anthems by the choir, in charge of Bro. E. C. Bell, were solos sung by Srs. Anna de Jong and Maude Parrish, and Brn. Silas Ridley and Ward Chatburn.

Bro. S. A. Burgess was taken severely ill while down town and was removed home in a carriage. The trouble is nervous break-down. He has received a blessing through administration but is still confined to his home.

Bro. Roger Parrish, who has been very ill for some time, was removed to a hospital for treatment.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.

Our semi-annual district conference was the best ever held in this far northwest country, in point of spirituality, peace, unity, and a determination to press forward in the conflict. The gifts, as usual, were manifest—wisdom, knowledge, understanding, healing, and one prophecy was given and one tongue and its interpretation. One hymn in tongues was also given and the interpretation.

About forty-two patriarchal blessings were bestowed by Bro. E. Keeler, and many of our young men, if faithful, are in time to be sent on missions to the Jews and heathen nations. Bro. John Kaler attended our conference and preached two powerful sermons, and otherwise helped us in our Sunday-school and other meetings.

This is a live branch, with busy officers, and a large and flourishing Sunday-school and Religio. On page eighty of the February, 1907, Autumn Leaves is a sample of our readings in Religio.

Bro. William Johnson, our genial district president, preached a very spiritual sermon February 10. It seemed to hit everybody.

Elder N. C. Enge left for Colby, Washington. He is a busy seventy and has opened up the work by preaching the first gospel sermon in several different camps. Our prayer-meetings held from house to house, Wednesday evenings, are noted for their humility, peace, and fervor, and are well attended.

The Lord has healed our sick and there has been no deaths for four years to our knowledge.

We miss Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths. May God comfort him in his bereavement.

Conference Minutes.

FAR WEST.—Conference convened with the St. Joseph Branch on Saturday, February 2 and 3, 1907, T. T. Hinderks, B. J. Dice, and A. H. Smith in the chair; Charles P. Faul and T. J. Sheldon, secretaries. Branch reports: Kingston 104, DeKalb 65, Edgerton Junction 57, Cameron 57, German Stewartville 78, Far West 38, Pleasant Grove 88, St. Joseph 608, Delano 92, Stewartville 242. Bishop's agent, Charles P. Faul, reported. Report was audited and found correct. Elders reporting: T. T. Hinderks, James Moler, T. J. Sheldon, M. Shaw, John Davis, William Lewis, William Summerfield, Ben Dice, J. Constance, D. H. Simmons, C. P. Faul, D. E. Powell, A. W. Head, J. L. Bear, W. P. Pickering; Priests C. W. Ehridge, C. Householder, A. R. Daniels, D. H. Schmidt, F. Uphoff; Teacher E. J. Atkinson. District treasurer, B. J. Dice, reported balance due district, $7.25. Resolution: Resolved that the Far West District adopt the two days' meeting simplified in the "rotary" plan, and that the district president confer with the eldership and priests of the district, also the presiding elders of each branch, and make such appointments as shall be deemed wise by him. Be it resolved further that the second Saturday and Sunday following be set apart for such appointment. Moved the above resolution be referred to the several branches for their consideration, with the understanding that they are to send their delegates instructed to the next conference to pass on the merits of the resolution. Request for the ordination of Harry Friend to the office of priest granted. Officers elected: T. T. Hinderks, president; B. J. Dice, vice-president; Charles P. Faul, secretary; Charles P. Faul, sustained Bishop's agent; B. J. Dice, district treasurer. Delegates to General Conference: T. T. Hinderks, James Moler, John Davis, T. J. Sheldon, William Lewis, Charles P. Faul, Ben Dice, G. Friend, Charity Cook, Ella Gortside, Bro. and Sr. Charles Bacus, H. Daniels. Delegates present to cast the full vote to which the district is entitled, and in case of division majority and minority vote. A petition from the Cameron Branch came up for consideration, and the following was passed: That the conference could not at this time consider said petition, on account of the delegates being chosen, and to be sent uninstructed. The following is the petition in full: "Whereas, the Herald Publishing House was recently burned, and notice has been given in the HERALD that the erection of a new building will be taken up, and considered at the General Conference to convene at Lamoni, Iowa, April 6, 1907, and the location will also be considered; and whereas Cameron, Missouri, is a very beautiful little city of about four thousand people, and is centrally located, being near the center of the Far West, Missouri, District, and about midway between Lamoni, Iowa, and Independence, Missouri, and has a splendid system of waterworks, fire department, electric plant, and the best mail and railroad facilities of any city near its size in Zion or the regions round about, it being on both the Burlington and Rock Island Railroads, each road making this point a junction, and the two roads together running twenty-four passenger trains a day in and out of the city; and while it was the accommodations of a large city, rent, taxes, and living are all much cheaper than in the large cities, making it a desirable location for missionaries' families to locate, as well as a desirable location for the new publishing house, Therefore, be it resolved, that the Far West District petition the General Conference to consider Cameron, Missouri, as a location for the erecting of a new publishing house, and that the delegates of this district to General Conference be instructed to use their influence to get the new plant erected at Cameron, Missouri. J. C. Elvert, president; Susie Wolf, clerk." Conference adjourned to meet with Cameron Branch, May 25 and 26, 1907.

DES MOINES.—District conference convened at Runnells, Iowa, February 16 and 17, 1907. The district presidency, M. H. Cook, W. Christy, and C. J. Peters, chosen to preside, with A. A. Reams secretary and E. O. Clark assistant. Statistical reports from all the branches of the district were received as follows: Boonesboro 102, Concord 57, Clear Creek 36, Des Moines 283, Oskaloosa 72, Packard 21, Rhodes 55, Richland 72, St. Charles 23, Des Moines Valley 103. GALLANDS GROVE.—Religio association convened at Deloit, Iowa, February 8, 1907, at 10.30 a. m. D. A. Holcomb, in charge, assisted by A. H. Rudd. Local, home class, and good literature reports read, showing for past year four locals in organization, two home classes, and 2,984 pieces of literature distributed.

Bills to the amount of $4.85 were allowed and ordered paid. Following officers were elected for the ensuing year: D. A. Holcomb, president; A. H. Rudd, vice-president; Floy Holcomb, secretary; Fred Jackson, treasurer; Etta Hunt, librarian; Nellie Baber, home class superintendent. Delegates appointed to General Convention were: D. A. Holcomb, Nellie Hall, A. H. Rudd, Jesse Johnson, J. L. Butterworth, and Arthur Spence, with instructions to cast minority and majority vote in case of division. Treasurer was authorized to make an assessment on the Religios, pro rata of membership to the amount of $5.00. Half past seven, joint-session of Religio and Sunday-school work. In a round table the "Future Religio study," was taken up and the study of Doctrine and Covenants favored. Adjourned to meet at call of presidency.

The Gallands Grove Sunday-school association met at Deloit, Iowa, February 8, 1907, at 2:30 p. m., J. L. Butterworth in chair, assisted by William McKim. Reports were read from all schools in the district, and all district officers reported. Bills amounting to $4.00 were ordered paid. Following officers were elected: J. L. Butterworth, superintendent; Orman Salisbury, assistant superintendent; Floy Holcomb, secretary; Ellen Horr, treasurer; Etta Hunt, librarian; Nellie Hall, home class superintendent. Delegates appointed to General Convention: J. L. Butterworth, William McKim, C. J. Hunt, A. H. Rudd, May Rudd, C. E. Butterworth, John Jordison, Nellie Hall, John Reynolds, D. A. Holcomb, Floy Holcomb, Gerrit Juergens, Arthur Spence, and Jesse Johnson, with authority to cast minority and majority vote in case of division. By motion the delegate system was dispensed with in the district work. Half past seven union session of Sunday-school and Religio work. Paper on "Home class work" was read, also one on "Needs of the auxiliary societies." Adjourned to meet at call of executive committee. Floy Holcomb, secretary, Dunlap, Iowa.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS.—Zion's Religio-Literary Society met in district convention, February 8, 1907, with Springerton Branch. Elder F. L. Sawley in charge. Reports were read and approved. Bro. I. N. White gave quite an interesting talk on duty of Religio members, and why a Religio is beneficial. Officers were elected as follows: President, Samuel Hoover, of Xenia, Illinois; vice-president, Lloyd Moore; secretary, C. D. Schell; treasurer, M. E. Bing, of Xenia, Illinois. Delegates were elected to General Convention. Next convention will be held on Friday before the fourth Sunday in June, at Tunnel Hill.

Church Secretary.

GENERAL CONFERENCE MATTERS.

One or two items, including one list of district delegates, were sent to the undersigned a day or two before the late HERALD Office fire, and were lost therein. Any matter sent in previous to January 5, 1907, should be duplicated at once.

Credentials of districts to General Conference are coming very slowly, only about twelve so far received. District officers will please forward as soon as possible, in harmony with previous request. Do not wait for blank forms; none will be sent this time, as list of addresses was destroyed.

It is found necessary to repeat the following: All General Conference appointees are, by arrangement, to report their missionary work to the general ministers in charge. The latter will make up reports of work done in their fields, said summarized reports to be read to the General Conference.

Addresses of all the missionaries would be helpful, inasmuch as HERALD lists are unobtainable. A postal card giving address would enable us to reach you promptly.

Respectfully,

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 21, 1907.

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

This question was asked by the first man who had a brother. It was flung back at God in reply to an inquiry which clearly indicated that God would hold man responsible for any harm done to his fellow man. That question has been asked many times since by many classes of people—kings, warriors, merchants, manufacturers, gamblers, preachers. Every individual who feels that some other man has come to grief because of him takes immediate refuge under the plea, "Well, I couldn't help it! Why didn't he look out for himself?"

Every association with others brings with it responsibilities. These responsibilities are too intricate and numerous to trace and catalog; and here we wish to refer to only one phase of the question, which is this: the duty of an employer to safeguard his employees.

One man wishes to sell his labor and another wishes to buy it. They enter into a contract, and one becomes an employer while the other becomes an employee. Possibly the resulting relationship is seen at its best on the farm, and at its worst in the factory.

On the farm there may be but the two and they eat at the same table and work in the same field. The employer sets the pace himself. He takes his turn at the heavy end of the log. He is no better dressed than his "hired man." If holidays and Sundays off are granted, the employee gets them.

In the factory these conditions do not obtain. There perhaps thousands of men are employed, and they do not know the man for whom they work, nor does he know them. If any feeling at all exists it is too often a feeling of hate on the one side and a feeling of contempt on the other.

It is easy under these conditions to forget the responsibilities existing between employer and employee; but the fact that they are forgotten does not destroy their existence. There will never be a mutual responsibility. To draw his pay on pay-day should not be the sole idea of the employee; he should aspire to give in return a faithful and energetic day's labor and to forward the interests of his employer. To pay the wage is not the sole duty of the employer; he should not only see that the wage

The Supreme Court has passed upon the case of Doctor Crofford and has affirmed the decision of the lower court. His case attracted considerable notice, especially at Lamoni, where he had his sanitarium, and it will be remembered that he was found guilty of murder in the second degree, as a result of malpractice in the case of Maude Stone. He received a thirteen-year sentence to the penitentiary.

"Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land."

is just, but also that the life and general welfare of his employee is safeguarded.

Both parties take a certain risk. The employer faces bankruptcy, the fate of many of his class. Often the employee does not face bankruptcy because he is already bankrupt; or at best that contingency is always imminent, waiting merely upon an accident, a period of sickness, or a foreman's spite; but more than all that, as he goes to his daily task he faces death. That this is no idle figure of speech will be seen by the following extract from the Outlook for February 16, 1907:

"You will not believe me, perhaps," said the Spectator's informant, "but there is one great manufacturing concern in the United States that either kills or maims one workman every day in the year. And do you realize that on every single day of the year the railways of this country kill twenty-six persons and wound two hundred and thirty? You do not realize this, because ours is a big country, and only the big accidents are reported in the newspapers, and the industrial ones are not always recorded even locally. But all over this land men, women, and children are killed or injured in large numbers every day by accident, and the total for a year makes a casualty list greater than that of any battle that was ever fought. Waterloo, Gravelotte, Gettysburg, Mukden—these scenes of bloodshed are not so fearful as the annual carnage that reddens our American towns and cities in the struggle that is led by our captains of industry. The regiments of labor are the ones that suffer the most appalling losses; and their losses are worse than those of battle, because men go into battle expecting to be killed, and because a vast number of these industrial accidents are preventable. Men do not go to their daily work expecting to be killed or hurt, but to go home again to their happy families; and the accidents that send them home dead or mutilated must be prevented."

The great god machinery, which we have created, demands its daily living sacrifice, and probably will get it for some time to come. But modern ingenuity ought to reduce this sacrifice to a minimum. The genius that creates a machine and gives it all but human intelligence should be able to subdue it and rob it of its terrors. This has been done in many instances, but the device intended to protect the operator is not installed because a new operator costs less than the device. We quote again:

That was the word the Spectator was waiting for. He is more interested in prevention for the future than in the horrors of the past or the present, and he thinks his readers are too. The afternoon referred to was spent by the Spectator at the First International Exposition of Safety Devices and Industrial Hygiene, conducted under the auspices of the American Institute of Social Service in New York. Several large rooms were devoted to exhibiting moving machinery with accident preventers, models of safety appliances of all kinds, and photographs and other illustrations of what foreign countries are doing in this direction. The Spectator stopped before a large machine, looked and listened. "One of the most dangerous machines that is used in factories," said the demonstrator who was showing the mechanism to a group of visitors, "is this punching machine. It doesn't kill people, but very frequently it takes their fingers off and leaves them maimed for life. And here, by this simple device," pointing to a circular piece of steel that surrounded the descending punch, "the finger is saved. This, by the way, was invented by a boy. You remember it was a boy who invented an important part of the steam-engine. He did that to save work. This boy invented the punch guard to save his fingers. At any rate, it will save many fingers that he never saw." The Spectator turned from the punching machine to see a young man showing how the machinery of a factory could be stopped almost immediately when a worker got caught in cogs or belting. The simple pressing of a button stopped the adjacent machinery within five seconds, while allowing the machinery on other floors to continue in operation. The Spectator remembered once seeing a poor girl at a college settlement reception who wore a red skull-cap all through the evening. She was a factory girl who had been scalped by getting her hair caught in a whirling belt. If this safety device had been used in that factory, she might have been saved from this terrible experience. . . .

And very simple things often most effectively prevent accidents. For instance, many accidents occur through the workers slipping on smooth floors in front of machines on which they are working, and falling into the machinery. The simple device of a rubber mat on which they may stand is an almost certain preventive of this. . . .

Few of us have seen the effect of bursting of fly-wheels, or know why they explode. Photographs of wrecked mills, the result of these accidents, were shown the Spectator. The governor gets out of order, or a belt is broken, and the machinery begins to run at a frightful speed. It may be only a matter of a few seconds when the centrifugal force sends the enormous wheel flying in pieces, scattering death and destruction about. Here was a device which automatically prevented this "racing." Then, again, a great many accidents occur through the flying apart of small emery wheels. This can easily be obviated through devices here shown.

Four hundred and thirty men were accidentally killed in one recent year in the anthracite mining regions of Pennsylvania. Many of these accidents occur through the falling of shaft buckets. Here was a safety device to prevent this, exhibited by its inventor, a poor miner who could not pay his exhibition fees. Here also were electric miners' lamps, which would prevent fire-damp explosions. And, in another field, that of domestic work, an ingenious lamp was shown which automatically extinguished itself when upset or partly turned over. "Four people yesterday met their death from escaping illuminating gas," the Spectator was told as he paused before another exhibit. This was a device which immediately turned off the flow of gas when the Spectator, taking the part of a rural "Rube," blew out the flame. Here also were inclosed cog wheels, and protectors for hand-saws, and shock-preventers, and devices to close automatically the open railway switch that slays its hundreds every year, and improved clamps to keep rails from spreading, and efficient trolley fenders, and scores of other safety appliances, most of them simple and practicable.

And why are they not used? Why does the sacrifice of human beings go on? The pity of it! Because, for one reason, the cheapest thing in the world—or in America at least—seems to be human life. These appliances all cost money, and it is cheaper not to use them. In some way, the Spectator believes, we must make it more expensive to kill and maim men and women than to safeguard machinery.

In connection with these mechanical safety devices one might mention the need of proper lighting and ventilation where men work; because it is probably true that where one dies of accident several die because of disease which might be prevented.

The desire to crush out competition and to declare dividends incites men to reduce the cost of production to the lowest possible point until employers come to regard their men not as men but as things to be used a day or a year and replaced. Could one actually be present in the little cottage when the fatally injured bread-winner is brought home to his wife and children, the matter might assume an aspect new to him.

The individual, or corporation, or co-operative society that takes advantage of a man's necessity to work and places him where his life is shortened by preventable accident or filthy and unsanitary surroundings has committed a crime—the man sold his labor and they took his life. "What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground."
ELBERT A. SMITH.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

The daily Picayune (New Orleans) for February 23 has this to say of the Reorganization: "According to the facts brought out in the investigation by the Senate Committee, the so-called Church of Jesus Christ of Latter day Saints has about 300,000 adherents in the United States, including about 50,000 members of the Reorganized Church who deny that Joseph Smith, the prophet, ever preached or practiced polygamy."

The Church Secretary requests missionaries to remember that they are to report to the missionary in charge and not to the Church Secretary. Under the present rule such reports go to the missionaries in charge who prepare a summarized report for the General Conference.

The recent conference of the Southern California District seems to have been an active and aspiring gathering. By resolution they ask that the missionary force in the district be "materially increased" and pledge their "moral and financial support." They also state their conviction that the needs of the district demand the services of a bishop and one or more additional evangelical ministers. They also petition the General Conference to take more definite action on the divorce question.

The editors will not be accused of being startlingly original when they state that not all newspaper writers tell the truth at all times. The publishers do not want them to, and some of them could not if they tried. A little care must be taken in using newspaper clippings in support of our church claims. As an example: An article appeared recently in one of the prominent eastern dailies describing a visit to Yucatan and some wonderful paintings discovered there. Had the story been true it would have borne out the claims of the Book of Mormon in a remarkable manner. The HERALD editors received several clippings from this article and one original article based on its representations. The editors wrote to one of the missionary force laboring in the city where the paper is published and on his investigation the whole thing was discovered to be what printers term "a pipe dream." The writer had also visited the south pole and "seen things" in former publications.

Elder Joseph R. Lambert begins his "Experiences and observations of one of our Patriarchs" in Autumn Leaves for March. This series will be of unusual interest to all who are interested in the work of the Patriarchs, as well as to the personal friends of Bro. Lambert.

Owing to an unfortunate mistake made while making up the forms of the HERALD last week, the printers omitted about a column of type from the article by Elder Mortimer and inserted it in the middle of a selected article, neither article being benefited by the change. The mix-up was so confusing that we reprint Elder Mortimer's article in this issue.

The next number of the HERALD will contain a facsimile of a Japanese tract recently issued by our brethren in the Hawaiian Mission. The translation will be given.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

Relatives of Mrs. Eddy, including one son, have brought suit against the Christian Science Church with a view to securing an accounting of Mrs. Eddy's financial affairs. They charge that she is now mentally incompetent to do business and is held a prisoner by the church trustees.

It is stated in the columns of Puck (London) that the United States Government is about to build several battleships so large that it will be necessary to enlarge the Atlantic.

It is reported that a new miracle-working prophet has appeared in Zion City—"Daniel reincarnated"—known among men as William D. Gentry.

News From Branches

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

On the last day of January we moved our headquarters from the little hall on the temple block, up Mulholland Street about six blocks. We are now in the third ward, and our congregation is much larger, as we expected: besides being much closer for us all.

On the following Sunday we began a series of meetings, Bro. L. E. Hills of Marion, Iowa, being our speaker. He continued for two weeks at our urgent request, and addressed splendid crowds every night with the exception of the first two. At different times our hall was filled and with people standing in the aisles; and nearly always all seats occupied. He was indeed blessed in his efforts, and as a result, one baptism; and others are very seriously minded concerning our faith. We are all full of hope, and rejoicing over the success of these meetings; and are longing to bring others to acknowledge and accept the gospel.

However, in the midst of our rejoicing, we are caused to mourn, for Sr. Kemler and her husband have spent their last Sunday with us for some time to come. They are moving to Ft. Madison, Iowa.

As far as health is concerned, we feel favored; the only serious illness among us being the "grip" and colds. Sr. Lawson and her little ones have also been struggling with colds. For over a year she has not been able to attend meetings, but is always present now.

We have been enjoying the finest of spring weather during the past month and more: although the varied weather causes much ill health.

We are as anxious as ever for Saints to make their homes here. Bro. Hills has decided it is just the place for his wife, while he is away on his mission, and, with the rest of us, think it an ideal home for families of traveling elders.

Engineers are at work this week, we understand, surveying for the much-desired trolley line between here and Niota, where we will meet a car line from Ft. Madison. This, with other business projects and improvements, is causing property to rise constantly in value. MADGE SIEGFRIED.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON.

Floods and more than floods is the order here. The earth is again fair and green half way up the mountain-sides.

We have just concluded a series of meetings; attendance and interest good. Baptized five yesterday as a result. The branch is growing nicely, spiritually and numerically.

The conference year is again nearly ended, and soon we will be off for home and the Zion land. We are well satisfied with the year's work, and we leave the work convinced that we have succeeded fairly well; and whoever may be the next he will find an energetic, faithful, sacrificing band of noble Saints.

One item is worthy of mention. I have made my home, and boarded with, Bro. O. L. Ferguson and family for three years, without a cent of expense to me or the church. Not a word of discontent has ever been uttered to my knowledge. I am under lasting obligations, as also is the church for such manifest kindness and sacrifice willingly given. In the language of Paul we feel to say, "Finally, brethren, farewell. [Continue to] be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you."—2 Corinthians 13:11. And your kindness and faithfulness, and the Spokane Branch and District will ever be green places in the mind and memory of your humble servant, T. W. CHATBURN.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Bro. Ray Chandler is to be ordained to the office of elder, Sunday, March 3.

Those holding the priesthood have a special meeting every other Sunday, and it has been reported that much good is being accomplished.

Bro. and Sr. D. A. Emslie will leave Saturday, March 2, for their home in Seattle, Washington.

A goodly number of the Des Moines Saints visited the quarterly conference which convened at Runnels, Iowa, February 16 and 17, and an enjoyable time was had by all.

During the month a number of the missionaries have visited the branch, among whom were Brn. M. H. Cook, W. Christie, and James McKiernan.

Living Epistles.

Peace is so much sweeter
For having known the pain;
So, Soul, endure and gain
Thy song to gentler meter.

Repine not that the fire
Is hotter than thou dreamed,
And life not what it seemed;
But place thy vision higher.

Sweet peace and strength and grace
Shall be thine as thy day;
Nor from thy trial stay
But meet it face to face.

Shall we who sing life's songs,
And bid men pray and wait,
Ne'er seek to change their fate?—
Teach only through our songs?

Then let our lives accord
With the teachings of our word—
Be seen as well as heard—
Live sermons from our Lord.

THE GREAT APOSTASY.

That Christ and his apostles organized a church all Christians are agreed. Has that church existed without an interruption from that time to the present? If so then the Catholic Church is the only right one, for it is the oldest professed Christian church to-day. If it has not, then there has been an apostasy, a falling away.

The latter is exactly what we hold—that soon after the organization of Christ's church was perfected, a gradual falling away began and that because of corruptions within and persecutions without it eventually ceased to exist on the earth as a church, and that for a space of some centuries (from about 570 A. D. to about 1830) there was not a man on the earth who had the right and authority to preach, baptize, and administer the sacraments of the gospel. The proof of this is found in both the Old and New Testaments, and is both prophetic and historical.

Isaiah (chapter 24) looking forward to that lamentable period of time said: "They have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant." He must have had in view the New Covenant, because the Mosaic covenant was not everlasting.

Jesus in his day said: "From the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."—Matthew 11:12. The "kingdom of heaven" was the church and the "violent" was the power that was waging war against it, having already killed John. It was eventually to "take it by force."

Again the Master said: "Yet a little while is the light with you."—John 12:35. He did not merely mean that he was to be taken away, but also the gospel, the truth in its purity, the Spirit which was to succeed him as "another Comforter." (John 14.)

Amos alluded to this condition of things when he said that (chapter 8) the days would come when there would be a "famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but for hearing the words of the Lord." That famine prevailed from the sixth century to the nineteenth.

Paul prophesied (Acts 20) to the Ephesian church that "grievous wolves" would enter in among them, "speaking perverse things" and "not sparing the flock." By turning to the second chapter of the Revelation we find its literal fulfillment.

Again Paul says: "All they which are in Asia be turned away from me."—2 Timothy 1:15. To the Thessalonians Paul said Christ would not come "except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition." (2 Thessalonians 2:3.) Christ had said that when the gospel was preached in all the world, "then shall the end come." (Matthew 24.) Some years later Paul affirms that it had even in his day been "preached to every creature" (Colossians 1), and that its "sound went into all the earth." (Romans 10.) Knowing, therefore, that Christ had said when it was preached in all the world the end would come, and that it already had been preached in all the world, the Thessalonian brethren were in a condition of suspense and uneasiness, were "troubled," for they did not know what day might bring about the revelation of Jesus in flaming fire to take vengeance on them who know not God. Therefore Paul exhorts them to "be not troubled," for there must be a falling away, a great apostasy first.

See Revelation 12. A woman clothed with the sun, the moon under her feet, upon her head a crown of twelve stars. The woman represents the church, the twelve stars the twelve apostles, the moon the law of Moses, and the sun the gospel of Christ. She brings forth a man child (the priesthood or authority) who is to rule all nations with a rod of iron (the word of God). The man child being attacked by the red dragon (pagan Rome) is taken to heaven, and the woman (church) flees into the wilderness to remain twelve hundred and sixty days (years; Numbers 14 and Ezekiel 4). The dragon persecutes the "remnant of her seed." (Verse 17.) He disappears and is succeeded by a "beast" (the papacy), which completes the work and "overcomes" the saints. (Chapter 13.)

In Revelation 14:6, 7, John saw the time come when an angel would restore to earth the everlasting gospel. In Revelation 17 he saw a woman (church) sitting upon a scarlet-colored beast (the state) showing the union of church and state. The woman (Catholic Church) is drunken with the blood of the saints. Daniel (chapter 7) saw the same power "make war with" and "prevail against" the saints and "wear out the saints." He saw him "destroy the mighty and the holy people" (chapter 8) and "cast down the truth to the ground."

SOME CUTTINGS FOR EARLY PLANTING.

How wonderful and how beautiful is this world of ours! How wonderful to think with what punctuality and regularity she has rolled on for so many thousands of years! How beautifully the thought presents itself to us to-night as we look into the same heaven and count the same stars our father Abraham gazed on when the angel told him his seed should be as numerous as the stars! And the inspiration we find in the change of the seasons vibrates to the meter of Solomon's song:

For, lo, the winter is past,
The rain is over and gone;
The flowers appear on the earth;
The time of the singing of birds is come,
And the voice of the turtle [dove] is heard in our land;
The fig-tree putteth forth her green figs,
And the vines with the tender grape give a good smell.

What wonderful love the Father did show when he gave us all this; this beautiful home with its soft green carpet, its cooling forests, its streams, its mighty deeps and hidden treasures, all for the use and pleasure of man!

"O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! . . . When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, . . . what is man that thou art mindful of him? . . . For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet: All sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field; the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas. O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth."—Psalms.

And man has taken these, as God first made them, and played with them, as a child does his toys.

Out of the forest that once swayed to the will of God, he has builded his cities, he has builded great ships and sent them across the seas loaded with the products of his hands and the genius of his brain. He has brought the treasures from their hiding-places and transformed them into works of art and usefulness.

From the beasts of the field, the products of the earth, and the spinning of the worms he has learned to adorn himself, and now he catches the elements of the air to multiply his power; never satisfied with what he has accomplished, he seeks to accomplish more.

Though perhaps knowledge is more general now than it ever has been, there are evidences always appearing that all our achievements are shared with men of past ages; and if the world could only realize what we have yet to learn, how ignorant would we feel!

"O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!"—St. Paul. But have you never felt to get away from the smartness of men, away from their babblings, their vanities and vexations, to the everlasting hills, to sit there at the feet of Jesus and learn of his ways? for as some one has said: to get close to Nature is to get close to God.

"Come with me, O you world-weary, to the haunts of thrush and veery

To the cedar's dim cathedral and the palace of the pine:
Let the soul within you capture something of the wild wood rapture,
Something of the epic passion of that harmony divine!

Leave the hard heart of the city with its poverty of pity,
Leave the folly and the fashion wearing out the faith of men,

Breathe the breath of life blown over upland meadows white with clover,
And with childhood's clearer vision see the faith of God again!"

There we can listen, undisturbed, to the harmony he has taught the bird: to the murmuring of the brook, and study the workmanship of his flowers, while the breezes soothe to rest. How one's heart fills with love to the Father who cares so well for these little birds and flowers! We wonder will he not also care for us? And the answer comes back: "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink, nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?"

"Behold the fowls of the air; for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?"

"And why take ye thought for raiment?"

"Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin; and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

"Wherefore, if God so clothed the grass of the field which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you?"

Have not these flowers and songsters taught us better faith and confidence than we could learn out there in the city, where men strive for the bread that perisheth? It is said that after Darwin spent the greater part of his life gathering data on the origin of life, he mourned the fact that Nature had lost all her sweet charms for him. He felt he had missed one of the greatest blessings to mankind. Ah, sad life indeed! to have been spent in a vain endeavor to disprove the science of God!

How much happier at least would his life have been had he accepted God's statement as a scientific fact when he said that in the beginning he made all things for the use of man and when he had finished his work he looked upon his creations and saw that they were very good. Who will not be impressed with the thought that within every weed and insect we tread beneath our feet each day lies the proof that his statement as made in the beginning of the world is still true?

Who has thought in looking at the wild roses as they grow along the country lanes that they hold within their hearts the possibilities of the garden rose? Did man create anew the garden rose or did the little wild rose hold the secret till the mind of man drew it out? And is it not possible that she has other secrets just as important to man as those he has already learned?

"In all God's works there is a similitude."

Thus he has given his kingdom to us in embryo to unfold little by little under the guidance of the Holy Ghost until it comes to full bloom according to the foreknowledge of God.

"There is a lesson in each flower,
A story in each stem and bower;
On every herb on which we tread,
Are written words which, rightly read,
Will lead us from earth's fragrant sod
To hope and holiness and God."

MAN'S DOMINION.

A SERMON BY HEMAN C SMITH.

(Reported by Annie Allen.)

I will read a portion of the first chapter of Genesis, commencing at the twenty-sixth verse:

And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.

I may not have occasion to-night to invite your attention to any particular passage for a text, but I desire to present before you for your consideration and thought, man as he was, man as he is, and man as he may be; that is, to present before you the possibilities there are in man, the wonderful capabilities he possesses, the wonderful destiny he has the privilege of working out. And for the purpose of inviting you to what he was when created, I have read this passage of scripture. There are two others, however, that I wish to read in connection with it, that present the same thought, but some of it in a little different language; and I read them that you may get the idea as clearly as you can from the word.

After man had been upon the earth for some time, you will remember, according to the Bible narrative, he became wicked and corrupt, and God determined to destroy him from off the face of the earth. This was accomplished by means of a flood that came upon the earth, and again the Lord made the same promise to those who remained upon the earth that he made in the beginning, and you will find this promise recorded in the ninth chapter of Genesis:

And God blessed Noah and his sons, and said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth. And the fear of you and the dread of you shall be upon every beast of the earth, and upon every fowl of the air, upon all that moveth upon the earth, and upon all the fishes of the sea; into your hand are they delivered. Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things.

Another passage I desire to read in your hearing is found in the eighth Psalm; virtually the same as those we have read, but goes a little more into detail:

O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens. Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger. When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained; what is man, that thou art mindful of him? And the son of man that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet: All sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field; the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas. O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth.

From these three passages of scripture you can easily discern where the place of man was among the creatures of God; he was given power over them, into his hands they were delivered, and he was to have dominion over all the earth, and every creature in the water was to be subject to him, all sheep and oxen, and all the beasts of the field, and fowls of the air, and fishes of the sea, and all that passed through the paths of the sea. All were under the control and dominion of man. His place, doubtless, in the creations of God was to be first, and he was to stand between the rest of God's creatures and God himself, and for the purpose of his being able to hold this dominion and to exercise it in righteousness, it was his privilege to commune with God, and by virtue of this influence, to be able to govern and direct all the rest of God's creatures, the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, were to be subject to him; and if he was to command they were to obey; if his will was expressed they were governed thereby and he had absolute power over them. Ah! more than that. We learn from the scriptures that man, in his best estate, controlled the elements by which he was surrounded, that all these things were subject to him; that he could pray, and the heavens would remain dry, would not send any rain, as in the case of Elijah; pray again and it would rain, so he had all things under his control. That was the high position accorded to man when God placed him here upon the earth.

But God laid down the inexorable rule, the unchangeable law, that if he would be a ruler, he must be an obedient subject; if he would have things placed under his dominion to obey him, he must understand that he should obey the power above him. He was given to understand that upon the condition of his violating the law, proving untrue to the trust reposed in him, he would lose his place, and would no longer be able to control as was his privilege to control. This is a law or rule fully realized in the world to-day, that a lawbreaker is unfit to be in control or in authority. When, in a republican form of government, as we have here, we select men for office, we do not select, if we know it, men who do not observe the law themselves. They only are considered worthy to execute the law who obey the law; and immediately, when this man transgressed the commandments of God, when, notwithstanding his high estate, he did not recognize the power above him, did do what he was told not to do, and put forth his hand and partook of the forbidden fruit, immediately there was rebellion in his own kingdom. The spirit of rebellion extended to those below him, and he was told there would be enmity between him and the serpent. There would be an effort made upon the part of one of his subjects to destroy their ruler. That rebellion extended among the creatures that man was permitted to control, or would have been permitted to control if he had kept his place, until there was danger for the ruler to go out among his subjects; he was afraid to visit the beasts in the forest, afraid of the reptile as he passed along, lest they should destroy him, until to-day I fear there are none of us but that would be afraid to go into the den with the beasts of prey, lest we be devoured. Occasionally man tames some of the wild beasts, but he is always in fear. Why, if but as little a thing as a mouse should pass through this great assembly to-night, there would be some consternation, and individuals would be afraid until they were certain it was out of the way.

Man has lost his control; and is subject largely to his subjects, for their will is supreme in some cases, and he conforms to the conditions now prescribed by them. We desire in following out this line of thought to invite your attention to the condition that man found himself in according to the scripture. How he not only lost control over the beasts of the field and fowls of the air, and had to guard against destruction thereby, but he no longer controlled himself only in a very small degree, and he became subject to sin and corruption, and evil habits grew more and more upon him until he was actually afraid they would overcome him. We have to be on our guard all the time now lest we should be overtaken in temptation, and that we should yield to something that is destructive in its influence, instead of something that would do us good. We hear individuals occasionally who are this way; they are powerless, they have formed an evil habit, perhaps, that they know is injuring them, gradually sapping their life away, and when we remonstrate with them, they say, "I can not help it; I have tried to but can not. I made an effort, but am not strong enough to overcome the habit." Is not that a humiliating confession to be made by one whom God put in control, and put all things under his feet, and caused that he should hold dominion over all that God had made? But is it not a true one? That confession was made years and years ago by some of the sacred writers, as we find here in this book. They were in trouble and in great anxiety lest they might be overcome, that evil habits and sin should overcome them. They shrank from them in fear, because they had so far fallen from their high estate.

I turn here to the statement made by the psalmist David that I want to call your attention to. In the nineteenth Psalm we have this statement made: "Who can understand his errors?"

So far in the dark that they did not recognize error when it met them, when it confronted them!

"Cleanse thou me from secret faults. Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me; then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from the great transgression."

Is not that a pitiable condition for this man to find himself in? A man made to have dominion over all the creatures of God! Now as he is entangled with sin and corruption, he meditates in a manner that shows he was in fear; he appeals to God to interpose in his behalf: "Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins." Interfere in my behalf and hold me back; I am inclined to go wrong: "Keep back thy servant from presumptuous sins, let them not have dominion over me." There was danger then of sin having control, that sin would have dominion over one of God's creatures, that he would be in the power of sin so that he could not be a free man.

Men are slaves to that which is wrong, sin has claimed the dominion, and their natures are under its control.

We read another passage from the one hundred and nineteenth Psalm, where the Psalmist says:

"Look thou upon me, and be merciful unto me, as thou usest to do unto those that love thy name. Order my steps in thy word: and let not any iniquity have dominion over me."

There was danger then of iniquity getting the dominion, a crying unto God lest something was going to control him,—he that was by virtue of his creation to control the beast of the field, the fowl of the air, the fishes of the sea, that controlled the elements which surrounded him. Now he pleads that some power should interpose in his behalf and not to let iniquity get dominion over him. But iniquity did get dominion over him. His history tells us that he proved to be a weak man. In some regards there was weakness demonstrated even in Israel; and if Israel, who were chosen as God's people and the executor of his will and his revelations, were so weak, what could we expect of others? This weakness creeping in along here is no evidence that they were not felt after by God, or that God did not recognize them to a certain extent, but it shows how they were gradually degrading themselves, getting lower and lower, manifesting more and more that weakness, and losing to a larger extent as he proceeded the power, the right, the dominion to rule. We have a statement here made by the prophet Jeremiah, that I will read, which shows the condition of old Israel at that time. It is a lamentable picture. Part of it might apply to us now—I fear a great deal of it will apply; but I will let you make the application when I read it.

“Oh, that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people! Oh, that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of way-faring men; that I might leave my people, and go from them; for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men.”

Fearful indictment! The prophet wants to get away from them, wants to find a lodging-place in the wilderness, where he could get out from their presence.

“And they bend their tongues like their bow for lies; but they are not valiant for the truth upon the earth; for they proceed from evil to evil and they know not me, saith the Lord. Take ye heed every one of his neighbor and trust ye not in any brother; for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbor will walk with slanders. And they will deceive every one his neighbor, and will not speak the truth; they have taught their tongue to speak lies, and weary themselves to commit iniquity.”

Just one thought here. Can you make the application? do you think of any ways in the world today that men weary themselves to commit iniquity, and actually weary themselves to follow wrong, and sometimes think they have had a good time?

“Thine habitation is in the midst of deceit; through deceit they refuse to know me, saith the Lord. Therefore thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Behold, I will melt them, and try them, for how shall I do for the daughter of my people?”

You see the fearful condition that old Israel were in. They of all people had the right to be in communion with God; they were the literal descendants of the rulers of God's creatures, who could, if they would, exercise dominion over all beasts of the field, fowls of the air, fishes of the sea, and whatsoever passed through the paths of the sea. Yet they became so degraded that it was impossible for them to overcome. They were lost.

You have heard a great deal of talk, no doubt, from the pulpit, about man's being lost. Here you see what it means. He fell from his highest estate and was bound in sin and corruption, and could not possibly regain the ground that was his right to occupy. We are encouraged sometimes, however, by reading how God interposed in behalf of these wicked creatures. On occasions when they found themselves in trouble, and were desirous of doing right, and could not overcome the conditions by which they were surrounded, he came to their rescue. You remember the story of Daniel in the lion's den, how he was cast among the ferocious beasts. Now if Daniel had retained the power that was given to man in the beginning, they would not have done him any harm, for he had dominion over the beasts of the field; but now he had lost it, and was subject to them, and when he was cast into the den of lions he was subject to their ferocious natures, and they would certainly have devoured him. But here comes the testimony of one, who says, “My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions' mouths.”

Here is an individual that had not lost dominion. Man once had dominion over these beasts of the field; but he lost it and when he was subject to danger, and desired to overcome, the Lord sent an angel to his rescue, as that one came and ordered those lions to let him alone, and they did. Man could have done that in the beginning; but he could not then.

Again, when the three Hebrew children were cast in the fiery furnace, the heat would have destroyed them the same as any one else, but when the king arose in the morning and went and looked in the furnace, he said, I see four men walking there. Did not we cast in three? he asked of his attendant. These three men had been trying to serve God in their weakness, and when they found themselves in a condition that they were not able to cope with, God came to their rescue; there walked a fourth person with them, and the result was that, there being one who had not lost control of the elements, they came out of the fiery furnace without a hair of their head being singed, and without the smell of fire on their clothing.

A great deal of sport is made sometimes by the skeptic, and they call this a miracle contrary to nature. No, it is miraculous from our standpoint; but it is coming back to nature. In the first place man was to be at the head of God's creatures, and to control them. Now, in his unnatural condition, he finds himself subject to fire, subject to the ferocious beasts, and God interposes and protects him by sending some one who has not lost this power. Man lost his power and the natural things that he had obtained, through sin, and made unnatural those things which from the beginning were natural. We have misunderstood them, and have called the natural unnatural. We talk sometimes of men dying a natural death. There is no natural death; that is the unnatural, the abnormal condition. The normal condition is life; and when the normal condition of things has obtained, and the abnormal is taken away, there will be no death, no sorrow, and man will be restored to his primeval condition as the ruler among the creatures of God. He will not only get back to where he was, but he will occupy higher ground, and progress far above what he was first created to do.

This condition of things, in our opinion, and I believe that all Christians favor that opinion with us, is brought about through the atonement of Jesus Christ. When man found himself in this lost and lowly condition, unable to help himself, God sent his Son into the world, and instructed us through him, that if we would be obedient we would gain through obedience what we lost by disobedience. That seems to be a practical proposition to man. If man lost it by disobedience, he could gain it by obedience; and the most encouraging thing in connection with it is that when Christ came upon the earth and commenced this work of human redemption, restoring man to the condition from whence he had fallen, he restored it in part. You will see, if you will follow me closely, that in the experiences of life men were taken from their low condition and upheld and led higher. Partial dominion was restored to them; not full dominion, mark you. Let me read to you from the tenth chapter of Matthew. When the Lord had entered on his mission work, he selected men to represent him. As representatives of Christ who came to redeem men, it was necessary that they should have some power given to them, with the promise of a full restoration upon condition of their continuing in the line of obedience. We read:

“And when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power over unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease.”

He gave them power against unclean spirits to cast them out, and heal all manner of sickness and all manner of diseases. Mark you, these men chosen to be apostles of Jesus Christ had partial dominion restored to them—the necessary thing, it seems to me, to accomplish the work which Christ had undertaken to do. He gave them power against unclean spirits to cast them out, and heal all manner of sickness and all manner of diseases, so that the unclean spirits that would have destroyed man's spiritual good would be under the control of these men of authority. Men whose bodies were sick, and thus were not permitted by reason of affliction to do the work required of them were relieved. These two things were necessary for the full restoration of dominion and power unto men, so it was given to these men as a partial restoration, that they might protect those who desired to do God's will in spirit and in body, while they worked out their salvation. You will notice how nicely the evangelists all agree upon this point. I read in Mark 3:13: “And he goeth up into a mountain, and calleth unto him whom he would: and they came unto him. And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach, and to have power to heal sicknesses and to cast out devils.”

Mark and Matthew agree as to what portion of dominion was restored: that which would protect the spirits and bodies of men. Then Luke's testimony is in harmony with that, for he informs us, as you will find recorded in the ninth chapter of his writings: “Then he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases.”

He adds another word not used by the other evangelists, that of authority. What the other evangelists said, he said, but he goes farther into the history of it, and not only speaks of the twelve having this power and authority bestowed upon them, but, as you will find recorded in the tenth chapter of what is called his gospel: “After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come.” I will not read in full the directions that are given to these seventy, for want of time, but I invite your attention to the seventeenth verse of this same chapter: “And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name.”

They had partial dominion restored unto them as well as to the twelve, then went out upon their mission and came back rejoicing, saying, “Even the devils are subject to us through thy name.” What a difference between these men authorized of God, and men who take it upon themselves to undertake to cast out devils. You will find an instance of that kind in the nineteenth chapter of Acts, where it is said one was possessed of a devil, and there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the priests, which undertook to cast out these devils, saying, We adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth. The devils did not recognize their authority. They said, Paul we know, Jesus we know, but who are ye? They did not recognize their authority and they leaped on them, and they fled out of the house naked and wounded. They could not control these devils, the dominion had not been restored to them thus far, but through these twelve and seventy the Lord gave power over unclean spirits and over all manner of sickness and all manner of disease, for the protection of these people. Being given this much, they could be able to overcome the adversary, notwithstanding their temptations and trials, and thus reclaim what they had lost. He helped them this far, and when they said, "Even the devils are subject unto us through thy name," Christ said unto them:

"Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy; and nothing shall by any means hurt you." When do you think that was? When men were trying to overcome the enemy and reclaim the ground that had been lost by transgression: "I give unto you power to tread on the serpents and scorpions." Right here is where the enmity began between the woman and the serpent, and between her seed and his seed, but now God gives man power to tread on these. But that was not all. He gave him power over the enemy.

I want to submit for your consideration before we pass this point this thought, that if Christ in the restoration, or in the beginning of his work among men, found it necessary in order to cope with the enemy to give these men certain power expressed in the word, viz.: to cast out devils, heal all manner of diseases, tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy, and if, after eighteen hundred years and more in conflict with Satan, man has not the same power he had then, if the servants of God are not clothed with the same authority, this power, this partial restoration of dominion that man has lost, are we advancing or are we retrograding? Christ's mission is a failure, or our judgment is wrong, if these signs were only to be enjoyed for a season and then they were taken away. If so man is farther from God now than he was then, and instead of rising higher he is in danger of falling below what he was eighteen hundred years ago; if man does not occupy higher ground by virtue of his obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ, it is his own fault. The people who do not occupy higher ground have slept upon their rights and privileges, or they are traveling the wrong road. It is just as necessary to-day to exercise dominion in part, and to gain more and more if we expect to go back to our former condition to which man was appointed in the beginning, just as necessary for us to be advancing along that line as it was for the people eighteen hundred years ago. Not only to that place where he can have dominion over the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, reptiles, etc., but he will exercise dominion, if he is faithful, over many who are not faithful. If I understand the scriptures aright, because of his faithfulness he will be selected, and because of his devotion to the right he will rule under God among the nations of the earth. I refer you to a statement or question asked by the apostle Peter, found recorded in the nineteenth chapter of Matthew. Peter no doubt became discouraged like some of us do sometimes when we are meeting the foe, feeling we are in his power and he is about to overcome us after having made sacrifice of many things, and said, "Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?" What is going to be the result of this sacrifice, of this forsaking of things we love? What shall we have therefor? "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." You shall have the power under God that you shall partake of the authority of Jesus Christ in ruling over the nations of the earth.

"And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life."

How are we to exercise it, or how are those who may be selected because of their preparation, and their having overcome themselves, how shall they exercise this dominion or this right to rule among the nations of the earth? I want to present to you two different renderings of the scripture found in the second chapter of Revelation. You can take your choice; I have taken mine.

The twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh verses in the common version read: "And he that evercometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father."

There is a promise made to him that overcometh and keepeth "my works unto the end." He that is obedient shall be a ruler. You will note the thought in that translation, the rendering of it grates upon my feelings, that is that when man has been an obedient, humble Christian by following the meek and lowly One, and manifests a spirit of kindness and love, which is the spirit taught by the Master himself, that when power is given into his hands, he will break these nations into shivers. It makes me shiver to think of these things. So I was glad when I read in the other rendering of the scriptures something I thought more in harmony with the spirit of the gospel of Jesus Christ:

"And to him that overcometh, and keepeth my commandments unto the end, will I give power over many kingdoms; and he shall rule them with the word of God; and they shall be in his hands as the vessels of clay in the hands of the potter; and he shall govern them by faith, with equity and justice, even as I received of my Father."

I like that better than I do this breaking-to-shivers business; and if there are any here to-night who believe that the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ in its power, its love, depends upon war and bloodshed for its increase, I pity them. I do not believe that the interest of Christ's truth is ever made better by force. We have had enough of force in this world. Men have used force, and what has been the result? We have had our Hannibals and Cæsars, Napoleons and Alexanders, and the world has been brought into subjection to them by force of arms. Everywhere men trembled before them. Empires fell and cities crumbled to ruin. The result was not lasting; and when they died all the influence they had in the world died with them. It was fear by which they controlled, not love. Jesus Christ alone founded his kingdom upon love. Though he has passed from the earth and centuries have elapsed, thousands of men would die for him to-day; but not a soul would die for Alexander, not a soul for Napoleon, not a soul for Hannibal or Cæsar; no affection for them. The kingdom founded upon love, that is the kingdom we lost; and the army of the Lord never was known, never will be known by the roar of cannon, by the crack of musketry, the clashing of the sabre, or the tramp of the war-steed. We will never by force regain what was lost, or govern it through fear. He that overcometh and is given power will, according to this last translation we read, which I believe to be the proper one, govern by faith, with equity and justice.

Of course I could explain this other translation, but I do not need to. This is the proper translation in my opinion, and in harmony with this we can understand some of the prophets of olden times, some of the things that were given to those that God raised up in the ages that are past. I refer to one statement made here by the prophet Isaiah, as recorded in the eleventh chapter of Isaiah, speaking of the Christ:

"And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots: and the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord."

All the comment I want to make is to invite your attention to the manifestation that is to come through this rod of Jesse: "And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious."

Did you notice the result that shall obtain by and by? What will it be, and by what power will it be brought about? No enmity among the beasts of the field, or fowls of the air. Will it not be because man shall be living himself worthy and true, and shall have the right to hold dominion and he will control them? We read here, "The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them."

Not only shall the strong man have physical strength for the control and dominion of these beasts hitherto preying upon each other, they shall lie down together in peace because a little child shall lead them. Dominion shall be restored; man will occupy where he belongs. He fell from his high estate through transgression; through obedience he will come back. A little child shall govern and control, the calf and the young lion and the fatling shall eat together. That will be a glorious time, will it not?

I want in conclusion, to invite your attention to some statements made by the prophet Daniel along this line, where he speaks of the good influence that should be exercised in the world through the Son of God, and how it should be exercised. From the seventh chapter of Daniel, thirteenth and fourteenth verses:

"I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting kingdom, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

Why, as I told you before, every kingdom founded upon force and fear has in it the elements of decay; nothing in it that will live. But Christ's kingdom founded upon love; meek and lowly as he was, rejected because of his meekness, he will not come as a mighty general, marshaling the hosts of Israel as he was expected to do by the Jews, but he will come preaching the peaceable things of the kingdom of God. He will rule by love, not fear, and you will never behold him compelling men to do right. They did not understand him, and they rejected him as being powerless, and yet by his crucified hands he has caused nations to rise and fall, and his dominion will grow and expand, and it shall never be destroyed, and when the result shall have finally been worked out we are told: "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

That is the possibility that has been preserved for us; that is the prospect we have of inheritance. We shall regain what we have lost, and climb still higher upon the line of eternal glory, until we shall possess the kingdom as seen in vision given to the saints of the Most High God. I do not mean given to these Latter Day Saints alone, the word saint meaning those in the past, present, and future who are obedient to the will of God. The kingdom is for those who become like him and subject to him, and they shall have dominion, and exercise all the rights and prerogatives that belong to them by virtue of their creation.

It is a great thing to be a man. We possibly have not measured it as we ought, nor been able to recognize the possibilities that are before him, if he crucify the lusts of the flesh. Like the psalmist David, I stand in awe when I think of the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars which thou hast made; and when I stand upon some high eminence, and look out over the fields of nature, and see the grandeur and the beauty that is around me, the production of color and sound, when I see the flowers growing upon the plain, and the beautiful river flowing toward the ocean, I admire all this, but I say within myself, I am greater than all these, because I am a man. God created me a man, and shall I fall into such a condition, form such habits, as to degrade myself with that which is low and groveling, to satisfy the propensities of selfish desires?

Let us rise in our majesty, and strike against the foe, until we shall wrest from him, by the power of God, the power he has in the world. We can with Christ's favor, and through the redeeming blood of Jesus Christ. It is possible. Look to him and live. And may God's peace and blessing abide with you. I may never see you again; and ere we shall meet again we may try the realities of another world; but we shall meet by and by before the throne of a great God, when it shall be known whether we have proved faithful or not. We have delivered the truth in harmony with our belief. We leave the result in the hands of God; and we pray that we may all gain what we have lost.

May God bless us and help us to overcome, and to endure to the end. May the benediction of God's peace and love rest upon this assembly here, is my prayer. Amen.

THE WORK IN TORONTO, ONTARIO.

PRESIDENT R. C. EVANS AT THE MAJESTIC OPERA-HOUSE; THE OPENING OF THE NEW CHURCH-BUILDING, ETC.

EDITORIAL NOTE.—Owing to a mistake in making up the forms for the last number of the HERALD about a column of matter was omitted from this article and inserted in the middle of a selected article on divorce. We reprint this article in full so that our readers may get the connection.

I have been in Toronto and witnessed a part of the success achieved by President R. C. Evans in the magnificent work done there. If I appear to use any terms or expressions bordering on the grandiloquent I may be pardoned, as I am so full of admiration of the great work accomplished. I feel as if the ordinary, common, every-day language will fail to meet the demands. I had heard so much of the work he was doing there and of its unprecedented success in the history of the "Reorganization" that I could hardly credit it, and I thought it could safely be reduced by at least twenty per cent. Now that I have witnessed one meeting in the commodious Majestic Opera-house that can accommodate some thousands, I can say with Sheba's queen, "The half was not told me."

One of the splendid fruits of this work is the erection of a beautiful church on Soho Street, a few doors north of Queen Street, at the cost of a little over thirteen thousand dollars. The old church on Camden Street, that was built in 1900, was found inadequate to the demands and more commodious quarters must be provided. After four months of arduous labor, the edifice was opened for public worship on Sunday, February 10, a number of visitors being in attendance from London, St. James, Garafraxa, Humber Bay, and other places.

The morning prayer- and testimony-meeting opened at eight o'clock. It was well attended and was a season of blessed refreshing. The sacrament was administered, President Evans presiding assisted by District President R. C. Longhurst, District Vice-president G. H. Buschlen, and Elder A. F. McLean, president of the Toronto Branch. The emblems were passed by Elders George C. Tomlinson, of the seventy, and A. E. Mortimer of the high priests. The gift of tongues and interpretation was given through President R. C. Evans, and the work and sacrifice of God's children acknowledged and commended. The nearness of Christ's coming was announced with a solemn exhortation to prepare for the great day and to put away all contention, strife, and discord, as such were retarding the growth of the work to a great extent, and we were told that what had been witnessed, was but a taste of what might be.

The presence of the Holy Spirit bore testimony to the truth of the revelation, and all felt its inspiring force. At eleven in the forenoon President R. C. Evans preached a profound discourse from the words, "Lord, is it I?" (Matthew 26:22.) The place was well filled and all were edified by the powerful words as they fell from the speaker's lips. He was assisted by Elder William Fligg, president of London Branch, and Priest Charles Hattey, of Toronto.

At half-past two another preaching-service was held in the church, the speaker again being R. C. Evans, and the text from Ecclesiastes 3:14, 15.

But what shall I say of the night meeting? How describe it? My poor pen, as I contemplate the scene with my mind's eye, appears to be inadequate. Long before the time of opening, the people were fairly pouring in until the place was filled, as announced by the ushers, when the stern guardians of the law refused admittance to any more. From my place of observation, I could see the entire throng of nearly three thousand earnest and expectant souls. As I gazed upon them (not the scum from the slums, though some may have been the froth, foam, and bubble, thrown upon the surface of the seething mass of restless humanity, and some, the flotsam of life, tossed hither and thither by the restless sea of lost hope, not knowing where the tide will cast them), all appeared to be very earnest, as well as intelligent, and able to grasp the most subtle points in argument as presented, and I felt to praise God.

Now, for a moment, let me take the reader to another opera-house a few doors to the east of the Majestic, called the Grand Opera-house. On each Sunday it is occupied by the Methodists of the city. When President Evans began his meetings he was denounced by that body for making unclean the sacred name of Christ by claiming to honor it in a common theater; placing the badge of respectability upon a place they had been proclaiming against as unfit for Christian men and women to enter.

The great work President Evans has been doing has been going on for three winters, the success of the first stirring the sectarians to a united effort to prevent a repetition the next or second winter, and the services of the famous evangelists, Messrs. Torrey and Alexander, were secured to this end, never doubting but that their influence would be sufficient to drive him from the place. It is true that President Evans and the city brethren, having heard of the popularity of these men, began to fear a possible decrease of their attendance to a final closing of the meetings, but keeping up their faith and courage, and being well sustained by the sisters in prayer and devotion, they hung on with the spirit of patience and fortitude, faith in God, hope in his promises and in the truth and justice of their cause, when, to their delight, they found the attendance on the increase, and it continued in spite of this united effort, coupled with the prestige of Massey Hall, where the Torrey meetings were held with a seating capacity of over four thousand.

When during the winters of 1905 and 1906 the hoped-for diminution of the interest was not apparent, and hearing of the great additions to the church, the sectarians grew desperate and determined upon a more earnest effort to oppose this man and drive him from the metropolitan city of Ontario, thinking that, if they were successful, the hated work would receive its quietus. When it was passed from one to another that the accommodations of the old church were not equal to the numerical increase and the erection of a new one was contemplated, they decided something must be done, and without loss of time, regardless of past denunciation of theater-service, the Grand was secured and turned over to the Fred Victor Mission. Here can be seen and heard the combined influence of the wealth of sectarianism in a city of three hundred thousand inhabitants, with the united force of the best music and oratory.

One reverend gentleman delivers himself thus: "I have been three times to the Majestic Theater, and, for the life of me, I can't understand what draws and holds that vast audience each Sunday night. No fine music; not one attraction but the eloquence of the speaker." Just so, but this gentleman and all of his confreres, apparently, having never been touched by the Spirit of divine grace, will continue to fail to understand why it is that "the eloquence of the speaker" holds that power not one of them, as they now are, will ever possess. Why do they not seek to fathom the profound depths of that divine force that enables the speaker to wield the great power he does? They can not understand it, nor will they seek to.

One force these sectarian priests possess, and they use it to the shame of the metropolis of the metropolitan province of this fair dominion. As Madam Roland was going to the guillotine in Paris, France, during the bloody period of the "Reign of Terror," she gazed upon the statue of liberty and exclaimed, "O liberty! liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name." In this fair land of ours where we boast of the freedom of the press, claiming we are not in Russia where the censor can, by law, run his blue pencil-mark through all that does not savor of the most slavish support of the autocracy, the blush of shame should mantle the brow of every son and daughter of freedom at the thought that the press of this city of Toronto is being shackled by a band of hireling priests, not one of whom dares meet President Evans upon the public platform, and there, before all interested persons, discuss these things that are agitating the public mind. Will they do so? Can any one of them be induced to do so? Not one, but they know the force possessed by the speaker, and they desire above all things to keep the public in the dark as to the work being done, so they use the tremendous power at their disposal and muzzle the press of the place. Not one newspaper makes any reference to the greatest religious movement this city has ever seen. Not one. Freedom! Save the mark. They are very discreet however, and nothing can induce any one of them to face the issue. It is really pitiable, it is said, to see young men holding out tracts to passersby as they go on to the Majestic, calling out, "This is the place. Come in. Here is where the meetings are," and so on. Some few respond, but not until the seats at the Majestic are filled can the Grand secure an audience, and then they get some of the overflow. On the first Sunday night they had about twelve hundred while the Majestic was full. The next Sunday night their attendance was about nine hundred and fifty, and the third and fourth nights about six hundred and five hundred respectively, and the Majestic was filled up.

Yes, as a reverend gentleman said, there is no "magnificent singing," as the world would call it, but a band of loving Saints, whose hearts are tuned to the sweet songs of Zion, through whose lips pour forth the inspiring hymn of praise, "All hail the power of Jesus' name," thrilling the souls of all present, and, methinks, the voices of exultant angels took up the refrain,

Bring forth the royal diadem
and crown him Lord of all.

Every one was in his or her place when the curtain rose. The opening exercise was in charge of the branch president, A. F. McLean, the opening prayer being offered by young Elder Ernest Oliver. The sermon: I have often heard Bro. R. C. Evans when president of the London Branch; I have traveled with him in missionary work; have associated with him in tent-labors; have listened to some very powerful discourses, and seen many baptized by him as a result; but how shall I express myself as to that great effort of Sunday night, February 10, 1907, in the Majestic Opera-house?

The subject was, "Does death end all?" The texts were 1 John 3:8, latter part, and Revelation 1:18. For considerably over an hour he enlarged upon the texts, holding the unflinching attention of that vast audience to the very close. As he exposed the erroneous teaching of the day, wherein sectarian priests present Christ as inferior to Satan, that the hatred of the latter outweighs the love of our most blessed Lord and Master in securing the great majority of those our God has, in love, created, for whom Christ has died and risen again, a derisive applause burst forth; and as he claimed the Christ of the Bible as being worthy of their love, faith, and obedience because he was able to save to the uttermost, bringing forth scriptural evidence in support, enthusiastic hand-clapping followed.

At the close of the discourse the ushers took up the collection and nearly sixty dollars was the result. Then came another interesting feature, viz.: the question-plate. My! such a heap of folded papers as were poured upon the stand! Now, be it understood, President Evans knows nothing of the nature of any of these questions until read by Branch President A. F. McLean. All manner and kind of questions are asked, some being from honest and earnest souls who are seeking for light. Such are answered kindly and effectively; but others, Mormons, spiritualists, infidels, will continue to ask silly questions and back goes the answer according to its requirements. May our God speed his work in this place.

In spite of the unrelenting opposition of Satanic forces, this work is moving the city from center to circumference; and if his people will only retain their integrity, be full of courage, patience, and fortitude, meeting the demands of the new life they have risen unto, remembering our Lord's counsel given last Sabbath morn, there will be a glorious awakening in the city of Toronto that will have its fruition in rousing up the province of Ontario; and a splendid people, freed from the shackles of priestly despotism, will be brought to know God, whom to know is "life eternal."

The opening of the church was signaled by the baptism of four, President Evans administering. Many more are near the kingdom. The seating capacity of the church is, the main auditorium six hundred, and four hundred in the basement. The front or west window of stained glass has three representations thereon. That on the north has Christ blessing little children and is the gift of the London District Sunday-school association. On the south side is the angel appearing to Joseph Smith the seer, the gift of the London District Religio. In the center is a representation of President R. C. Evans in his pulpit costume (Prince Albert coat, etc.,) in the act of presenting the word of God with one hand upon the open Bible and the other raised in expressive gesture. It is the gift of a private person. At the east end, behind the stand, is the representation of the miraculous healing of Minnie M. Faulds of the Toronto Branch. The scene represents the act of healing by the hands of the angel being laid upon her, whereby she was healed of curvature of the spine, and both of her lower limbs restored to their normal condition, as one limb was shorter than the other and for years she wore a thick-soled and high-heeled boot. No longer does she use crutches or the boot; but well does the writer remember the condition she was in, as we were acquainted before she came into the church. It is certainly one of the greatest miracles of modern days, and is worthy of being so commemorated in the place she has so faithfully labored to erect. This window is the gift of Deacon W. S. and his wife, Sr. Minnie Faulds.

Now the question might be asked, and not out of place, Why is it that the combined influence of sectarian priesthood is used against the work President R. C. Evans is doing in Toronto? Why are they so determined in their opposition? Are our people immoral? Do they live vicious lives? Some may, but not as a result of lax teaching or wrong instruction. Our people will compare favorably with those of any other church in Toronto or any other place.

The writer was in conversation with the editor of a country village newspaper, who also was a local preacher as well as superintendent of a Sunday-school, when the question was asked as to what he knew about Latter Day Saints, and he replied, "Nothing bad." Did he know many of them? Yes, several and all good people. "But," he said, "they were good people before they became Latter Day Saints." I admitted this was so in some cases and then asked, "Why are so many people opposed to us when we begin work in a place, or even after we have been established for years? Why, in the pulpit, on the platform, in private conversation, and in newspapers, do so many warn the public against us?" He replied, "Because they are afraid of your teaching. Afraid your doctrines will have an evil influence upon the minds of some who will be sure to follow you." I answered, "What about Bro. Robert Hodson, who has just introduced us? He sits there before you. You say he was a good man before we got him. That all whom you know now were, as Methodists, good men and women, and, as Latter Day Saints, they still retain their integrity. In the name of high heaven, what cause have we given or do we give for all this bitter opposition?" He said, "Well, Mr. Mortimer, I must confess you have given me a new train of thought, and I do not see why I may not bid you God-speed in your work as well as any." And so we parted. Here was one man who could see our honest efforts to do good and he was willing to say, God-speed you in your labor of love; but how many in Toronto will say as much to President R. C. Evans? His success has made them bitter.

And this great work is going on, not only in this city but in other places, and the Spirit of our God is working mightily among the people till the calls for help are more than we can fill. But so much depends upon us as a people. United in righteousness, we can call God's angels to our aid. Do you not know, my dear brothers and sisters, it is criminal for us to be weak, when we can be strong in the Lord of hosts?

The strength of a chain or its lifting power is in its weakest link. God has placed us here to prove the world. As a chain, one end, as it were, is fast to the throne of the eternal One, and the other end to lift up poor weak humanity to higher and better things, each one of his children a link in this great chain. Now the weakest link is where the break will take place. What right have I to be the weak one and cause the breakage at the very time when such a mighty work is in progress? Think of the disappointment, not only on earth but probably in heaven. If joy comes to the angels when sinners are converted, why not disappointment over failure?

Think on these things, my beloved saints of God! Be a strong link. Be true and faithful to your covenant. Pray the Lord of the harvest for more laborers in the vineyard. Pray for us.

LONDON, Ontario.

SOME MODERN PROPHETS.

Just now the famous Parisian fortune-teller, Mme. Thebes, is quoted in the press as having warned the people on this side of the Atlantic that in the next year or two great calamities are due here. Among them are upheavals and sinking of the Atlantic coast line.

Mme. Thebes says:

There will be a convulsion in the bottom of the Atlantic sending an awful tidal wave to New York. I see her sky-scrapers tumble and burn. The ground seems to be sinking around them. I am surprised to see how many indications point to cataclysms in the United States. You will have a war and lose some of your island possessions.

"With so much trouble on the American side of the Atlantic I am asking myself if the coast of Europe may not also be affected. I fear our continent may suffer from sudden quantities of water! I have seen disquieting signs in the hands of so many inhabitants of the coast.

"It may be a tidal wave that will sweep both ways, to Europe and America."

Mme. Thebes was made famous through the younger Dumas, who pretended to believe in her prognostications, but it does not appear that her forecasts of calamities for this year has caused any stir among the inhabitants of the Atlantic coasts.

It happens that Lee J. Spangler of York, Pennsylvania, who is represented as another famous prognosticator of future events, has also made a similar prediction. He starts with the assertion that on a Sunday toward the close of the next year the destruction of the world will commence. There will then be a new heaven and a new earth, and the sea will be no more. New York will be annihilated, he says.

Chicago is also doomed. Boston will be suddenly submerged. The Pacific will be swallowed up in a chasm in the ocean bed, and be no more. The valleys of the Rocky Mountains will be swept by floods, but those who are wise will escape in arks. The bed of the Atlantic will also split open and the ocean vanish. After this reconstruction of the globe, the nations that survive will come together and live in peace. Mankind will be purified through the calamities that are imminent. Thus prophecies Lee J. Spangler.—Deseret Evening News, February 25, 1907.

SENSATIONAL PREACHERS.

Something has been remarked from time to time about the yellow clergyman, but perhaps his full significance has not been grasped. He has been treated as an isolated phenomenon, as an exception to the cloth, to be explained entirely by the contents of his own cranium. It is to be feared that this is not the case. It is to be feared that the yellow clergyman is a species, not an individual.

The spread of sensationalism in the pulpit is as unmistakable as it is lamentable. Whenever the people anywhere are interested in anything, be it an accident, a political campaign, a criminal trial, or a sociological movement, some minister will be found courting publicity with a half-baked opinion. While the other people are trying to get at the truth, he forecloses the inquiry with a remark whose sensationalism is sure to get it a hearing and himself a little ephemeral notoriety. He makes himself something more of a nuisance than the yellowest newspaper, because the newspaper is apt to have better sources of information, a more accurate understanding of the law of libel and of contempt of court, and because a sensational utterance from the pulpit has a piquancy of its own that a newspaper deliverance can not hope to emulate.

We may yet have to conclude that P. T. Barnum was the greatest of all Americans. His influence has asserted itself in many fields that have no obvious relation to the three-ringed circus. His imitators fill a disquieting number of pulpits. There is always a clergyman to report, or deliver himself upon, a piece of scandal, and in their piquancy his utterances may have the same exaggerated value that would attach to a vestal virgin's report upon a Roman gladiatorial combat.

The religious weeklies are talking about the difficulty there is in getting the best type of young men to follow the ministry. The clergy are deprecating what they consider the clergyman's decline in influence. It would seem that some inferior and hectic intelligences have hurdled the barriers of the theological seminaries. Is there something, also, in the world at large, and something in the unsatisfactory conditions which for the moment show themselves in the churches, that tempts men to imitate the unhygienic arts of advertising and attract attention to themselves by methods that should make the judicious grieve? A few of our ministers appear to be living in a state of chronic brainstorm.—Kansas City Journal, February 26, 1907.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"How Readest Thou."

"It is not the will of your Father in heaven that one of these little ones should perish."—Matthew 18: 14.

Our Father, thou hast told us
Thy will to build a home,
And gather there the orphans
No more from thee to roam.

'Tis not thy will, our Father,
One homeless little one Should lisp in vain the Savior's prayer
"Thy will on earth be done."

'Tis not thy will they perish;
Oh, fill our hearts with love,
Till here we do thy pleasure,
As it is done above.

And when thou sayest, "Do it,"
Let all hearts move as one,
In willing joy obeying;
Then shall thy kingdom come.

ELEANOR WALDORF KEARNEY.

Dear Editor: The mothers of the different public schools of San Bernardino, California, last year organized a mother's club which meets the first Friday in every month. The mothers of children who attend the school meet in the school building. We have an appropriate program, also have a good social time; by doing this we become better acquainted with the teachers and each other. It brings mother, teacher, and pupil closer together.

I read the principal paper at our last meeting. My paper was on the topic of "Literature for small children," and began thus: "Just as there is a way of feeding and clothing a child and faithfully attending to the needs of its little body, in order that its physical nature may be vigorous and healthy while it grows, just so there is a way of caring for and training a little child's mind. It is through stories more than through any other direct medium, perhaps, that a child's mind and heart grows and gains strength. It is largely through the stories he is told and the books you choose to read aloud to him or her that your child gets his first definite idea of the big, wide world. Nourish their normal love for stories, guide their first steps very carefully and thoughtfully among the delightful paths that lead in every direction from the highways and byways of story-book land. As each of our children grew old enough to enjoy it, we began reading aloud to them simple stories and poems, with just enough explanation to arouse imagination and humor. We read Eugene Field's poems, the Bible stories. If the child is taught to love Jesus he will have a desire to be like him. Teach him when he is very small the sweet stories of Joseph, of Moses, of David; above all, tell the story of Jesus, the babe of Bethlehem; the tiny tots will love this.

"I would feel like my children had been cheated if they had never heard of 'Mother Goose.' I would likewise feel that I was cheating them if I had never told them the wonderful stories of 'Jack and the Bean Stalk,' 'Little Red Riding Hood,' 'Tom Thumb,' 'Goldilocks,' 'The Three Little Pigs,' and a host of other stories that appeal to children.

"There is scarcely any one who does not recognize the value of the fairy-story. Children show that they need it as much as they need sweets, though too much fairy-story is likely to have as bad an effect upon them as too much candy, especially upon imaginative little ones.

"Mothers, be careful how you allow any one to tell your children creepin', crawlin' stories—especially bear stories.

"Mothers, do you supervise your child's reading? Is what he is reading worth while? Or better, is it of most worth? Is it varied enough to make him an all-round man? Has your child a library card? 'Yes,' you say, 'he has one, and gets what he pleases on it.' May your guardian angel preserve you from your just dues if such be the case!

"Mothers, are you letting teachers take your place in guiding your children's reading? If so, you are simply letting slip out of your hands one of the most potent means of governing your flock. Go to the teacher and ask her to make out a list of books that she thinks best suited to your child. Make out a list of your own, compare them, weigh them, ask your husband to help you decide which is of most worth.

"'Much ado about nothing,' some will say. But do not mind that.

"Through experience I have learned that it is best that the moral sink quietly and unconsciously into the child's mind, hoping that it may become diffused into his character.

"Mothers, pray do not misunderstand me. Let the child revel in good fiction, dream in fairy-land, wander among the fables and myths and dance and sing with the poets. But let him not stop at this; see that he lives over again the lives of our great and good men and women.

"In this paper I have only touched upon this subject, but I hope these few thoughts will stimulate your minds, mothers, to deeper study along this line."

My paper was followed by an open discussion which brought out the opinion of the members.

The mothers mingled in pleasant sociability for a time after the program, and enjoyed tea and cake.

Topics for consideration at the next meeting are "Modes of punishment" and "Proper foods."

I also had a list of books on the blackboard which every mother copied.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. NELLIE ALDRIDGE.

[We wish you had given us your list of books, Sister Nellie. Let us hear from you again and include the list.—EDITOR.]

Letter Department

LAMONI, Iowa.

Editors Herald: I can not write in glowing terms of work accomplished; but have done about the best I could under conditions as I found them. I have had fair congregations in the main, and exceptionally good ones at some places where I have labored. I began a series of meetings at Crescent, Iowa, the 16th of November, and held two weeks with a full house; the best attendance, some say, they had seen for several years. None were baptized, but seed was sown that will bear fruit in time.

There is a large membership there, about one hundred and fifty or sixty; but they are in a somewhat scattered condition. The branch at the present time is presided over by a priest, Bro. C. G. McIntosh, a high priest having refused to preside longer because of his age, being in his eightieth year. It needs an active high priest or elder to care for the branch, and the work in those parts; and not only there, but in so many other places is there need of local laborers to care for the membership.

To my mind the great need of the work at the present time is for pastors to care for the flock. I believe it to be wrong to baptize people into the church, organize branches, and then fail to provide for their spiritual welfare. In fact, it is not in harmony with the letter and spirit of our work. The Lord has made proper provision for all the needs of the work; but the trouble is we fail to carry out the details, or in other words, we fail to execute it as he has revealed it. There is much in that statement of the Savior to Peter: "Feed my sheep. Feed my lambs"; and to the end that both the sheep and lambs may be fed proper food, the Lord has revealed in the law who shall feed them. Repeatedly has he revealed in the law the duties of the different grades of officers, and commanded that each one should labor in his own office and calling. See section 104, paragraph 44: "Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand. Even so. Amen."

That each one may be able to learn and know his duties, the Lord has revealed them so plainly in the law that to my mind there is no need of any misunderstanding in the matter. The Presidency is to preside over the whole church. Section 122, paragraph 3, reads: "It is the duty of the twelve to preach the gospel, and administer in the ordinances thereof, as is directed in the scriptures which ye have received. They are called and set apart to this duty; and are to travel and preach, under the direction and counsel of the presidency."

That is plain, is it not?

I find this statement in section 104, paragraph 16: "It is the duty of the traveling high council to call upon the seventy, when they need assistance, to fill the several calls for preaching and administering the gospel, instead of any others."

This is plain also. The Twelve and Seventy are to travel and preach the gospel; and their field is the world. Section 104, paragraph 12 and 13: "The twelve are a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the church, agreeably to the institution of heaven, to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations; first unto the Gentiles, and secondly unto the Jews. The seventy are to act in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the twelve, or the traveling high council, in building up the church, and regulating all the affairs of the same, in all nations; first unto the Gentiles, and then to the Jews; the twelve being sent out, holding the keys to open the door by the proclamation of the gospel of Jesus Christ; and first unto the Gentiles, and then unto the Jews."

We see by this that the Twelve are to be the leaders in the gospel work, they to labor under the direction of the Presidency of the church. Then to aid them they are to call upon the Seventy first, and they are to labor under the direction of the Twelve, and are to travel two and two, that they may be a help and stay to each other.

For one I believe that the time has fully come in the history of the church when every one should labor in his own office and calling, the one unto which he was ordained. At the present time the order is somewhat reversed in that some are presiding over branches and districts who, the law says, should travel continually, and some are traveling as missionaries, who have been ordained as the standing ministers unto the church.

Now if the Seventy are to travel continually, how are they to preside and keep the law? The law gives them the right to preside where no organization has been effected, if no member of the Presidency or Twelve be present. But where organization has been effected, those organizations are to be left to the standing ministry, high priests, elders, and the lesser priesthood; and the law is so plain in regard to this that there is no need for a mistake.

As I read the law, no one in the church has any rights or prestige only those guaranteed in the law, and every one in the church, from president down to the most lowly member is entitled to all that the law guarantees to him. To my mind, if this were more fully realized and carried out, there would not be so much friction and misunderstanding as there is at the present time.

In section 120, paragraph 3, I find the following: "There should be no conflict or jealousy of authority between the quorums of the church; all are necessary and equally honorable, each in its place. The twelve and seventy are traveling ministers and preachers of the gospel, to persuade men to obey the truth; the high priests and elders holding the same priesthood are the standing ministers of the church, having the watchcare of the membership and nurturing and sustaining them, under the direction and instruction of the presidency and the twelve."

We see by this that all are necessary and equally honorable, each in his place. To my mind some of the present practices of the church create inequality and cause discrimination which was never intended in the law.

To my mind there is not a more responsible or needful quorum in the church than the High Priests' Quorum. They are needful from the fact that the Lord has placed them there. The Lord has given the pattern, and outlined their work. Are we building according to the pattern? As I see it, there has been but one pattern given; and he that comes the nearest to the pattern shows the highest degree of inspiration. The office of high priest is the highest one in the church. The members of the Presidency are high priests. The Twelve are also high priests. Then comes the High Priests' Quorum, and as standing ministers they stand next to the Presidency, and can act in any of the lesser offices in the church. They can also ordain any of the other officers belonging to the church. High priests were first called and ordained at a General Conference held at Kirtland on the 6th of June, 1831. (See Church History, pp. 193, 194.) The names of those ordained are not given; but at a conference held at Orange, Ohio, on the twenty-fifth day of October, there were twelve high priests present. And this was some three or four years before the first Twelve were chosen and ordained.

In a revelation given in September, 1832, these high priests are called apostles: "Therefore, go ye into all the world, and whatsoever place ye can not go into, ye shall send, that the testimony may go from you into all the world, unto every creature. And as I said unto mine apostles, even so I say unto you; for you are mine apostles, even God's high priests: ye are they whom my Father hath given me; ye are my friends; therefore, as I said unto mine apostles, I say unto you again, that every soul who believeth on your words, and is baptized by water for the remission of sins, shall receive the Holy Ghost; and these signs shall follow them that believe."

It was these high priests who ordained the first Twelve. And they were called apostles before any of the Twelve were ordained. As high priests, then, they are entitled to just as much respect, and fill just as important a position as any quorum in the church.

The membership is suffering at the present time for the want of the labors of this quorum as pastors. I believe that branches and districts should first be provided with proper presiding officers before high priests are appointed to travel as general missionaries, doing the work of the Seventy. I believe also, that when traveling as Seventy they are entitled to all the rights and privileges of the Seventy, and that no discrimination should be made, and age and experience should be considered in gospel work. I have thought in the past that I would like to live long enough to see every one laboring in his own calling, and standing on his own merit, and not on the prestige of the name of some one else. I still feel that way.

For truth and right,

E. A. STEDMAN.

JOHNSON CITY, Tennessee, February 17, 1907.

Editors Herald: I drop you these few lines to let you know I am still in the faith, and am still alive and in health. If there are any Saints in this vicinity, I would like to hear from them. I am at present getting up railway time-cards, and other advertising mediums, and I would like to have those Saints wishing employment to write me, as I can give some capable Saints profitable employment, as I need some reliable help. There is plenty of work in this part of the State, and mechanics get fair wages; carpenters two to three dollars per day; brick masons four to five dollars; others in proportion. I hope to be able before long to help the work of the Lord more, but on account of sickness in my family I can not do more now.

In gospel bonds,

WM. C. CUMMINGS.

CHEROKEE, Iowa, February 22, 1907.

Editors Herald: The Gallands Grove District conference held at Deloit, Iowa, two weeks ago was a profitable one. Bro. J. C. Crabb, president of the district, presided. Elders John Hawley and John Pett, veterans of the district for forty years, were present. Brn. H. O. Smith, Orman Salisbury, and W. A. Smith presented the blessed gospel message with liberty and power. Patriarch Butterworth was called from the conference to Gallands Grove to preach the funeral sermon of Grandma Williamson, one of the pioneer members of this district.

The financial report showed a substantial gain over the former one; but there is much room for improvement along that line as well as all other lines of church-work. Orman Salisbury, president of the Lanesboro Branch, was ordained an elder at the conference.

I came to this place (Cherokee) last Saturday. Sunday afternoon, in company with Brn. A. R. Crippin and W. W. Leonard, I attended a lecture in the Baptist church by the pastor, Reverend Francis M. Archer, D. D. The Doctor (?) made false and violent attacks on the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith the Martyr, and also misrepresented the plain teachings of the Book of Mormon. This was not his first offense, for Bro. Nathan Hayes heard him expose his own ignorance on the same line a few Sundays before.

I was pleased to learn that our noble little band of Saints here had not in any way provoked Reverend Archer to make such attacks. After talking the matter over with some of the brethren, they gave me permission to prepare and publish an open letter challenge and statement to him. Over a thousand were printed and placed in nearly every house in their little city of over four thousand people by Bro. Byron Gross and his sons, Eli and Porter. This advertisement doubled the attendance at our service last night.

I believe that our opponents in debates should be compelled to sign propositions affirming that the man or men who organized their church were divinely called and ordained to do that work. Such a proposition, when presented to them, often opens their eyes and has a very quieting effect on their self-conceit as debaters.

The fourth proposition to Mr. Archer reads: "Was the man or men who organized the Baptist Church in the sixteenth or seventeenth century divinely called and ordained to do that work?"

The closing paragraphs in the printed letter and challenge read:

"We are prepared to prove that Brigham Young was the author of that so-called revelation on polygamy that was presented eight years after the death of Joseph Smith.

"We can prove that three years after Brigham Young declared in favor of plural marriage, the Baptist Church, represented by eighteen preachers, sanctioned polygamy in a general missionary conference in 1855, at Calcutta, India. Four other Protestant churches (we omit their names fearing your neighbors would blush) with twenty-eight representative ministers, making a total of forty-six, voted unanimously in favor of the following:

"If a convert before becoming a Christian has married more wives than one, in accordance with the practice of the Jewish and primitive Christian churches, he shall be permitted to keep them all; but such a person is not eligible to any office in the church. In no other case is polygamy to be tolerated among Christians."—Allen's India, Ancient and Modern, pp. 601, 602, published 1856. The account of that conference was published on the Baptist press of Calcutta in 1855.

"Take the courage of your conviction, Reverend Archer, and accept the four propositions for debate, so we can help you to make proper use of your well-earned title—D. D., in doctoring those unhealthy resolutions passed at Calcutta."

(I have the names of those forty-six preachers.)

Word has come to us, indirectly, that Mr. Archer positively declines to debate.

The little branch has been encouraged and cheered by the many kind words and congratulations given them by the people—some warm words of praise from his congregation.

The many friends of Bro. N. V. Sheldon will be glad to know that he is re-locating in Dow City, Iowa, and is preparing to spend the balance of his life in missionary work.

I read with interest the article in a recent HERALD from the Roman Catholic on "Celibacy," etc. I will offer an article on the same subject by and by. To my mind, the doctrines and teachings of Catholicism are self-contradictory, and can be refuted.

Yours fraternally,

C. J. HUNT.

BULLAHDELAH, Australia.

Dear Editor: I have been but a short time in this latter-day work, but I know it is the work of God. We have a nice little church-building here in Bullahdelah and a few faithful Saints striving to do the will of God. We do not number many, but our Savior has said, "Straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leads to life and few there be that find it."

My wife and eldest son and I were baptized by Elder P. M. Hanson just before he left Australia for his native land. I was brought up in the faith or doctrine of the Church of England, but I had for some time been led by some power then unknown to me to investigate the gospel as taught by our Savior and his apostles, and I found as I searched the scriptures many things that I had been taught were not in harmony with the true gospel of Christ. I was becoming perplexed when it seemed I was accidentally led to hear the Latter Day Saint elders preach, and when I heard them the words fell upon my ears like great drops of rain onto a parched and thirsty ground. It seemed as if I were drawn very close to my Savior and I could hear his words in my ears: "Come, thirsty soul, and drink; come drink from the fountain of life." Oh, my soul rejoiced.

After we were baptized we went to the Saints' church and received the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost by Elder P. M. Hanson. When we left the church it was a starlight night but there was no moon so it was somewhat dark. We had nearly reached the gate of our home, which is about a quarter of a mile from the church, and we three were all standing close beside each other when lo! there was a beautiful bright light descended from the heavens and rested upon us. I cast my eyes upwards to see from whence this glorious light had come and I beheld a stream of most beautiful, dazzling light stretching away to the heavens somewhat resembling a tongue of fire. The light covered us and for a few feet around us, and outside of that was darkness. We were filled with a burning feeling, one of love, peace, and joy that tongue or pen fails to describe. The feeling often brings to mind the words of the two disciples whom Jesus, after his resurrection, met by the way and talked with. They said, "Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked with us by the way and while he opened to us the scriptures?"

And let me also state that at that time my wife was a great sufferer from chronic rheumatism. For fifteen years she had been afflicted with it; she could not walk alone in safety, and very seldom could sleep at night because of the pain. Now she can walk to Sunday-school or church without distress and without aid; she never loses a night's sleep on account of pain and can attend fairly well to her housework. We had tried doctors and medicine of all sorts but to no avail; but when we bow in submission to that great Physician of both body and soul we find him ever ready to come to our aid in all power and might. He can open the eyes of the blind, make the dumb to speak, the deaf to hear, the lame to walk, and all praise we give to him.

And may I also state that he has called me to the office of elder in his church? I feel my weakness and inability, but I am striving to study to show myself approved, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed; for I believe the Lord requires us to study, and if we do our part then we may be sure that he will do his or assist us when we need aid.

I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may be strengthened and enlightened by his Spirit's power and go forward in the work wherein he has called me, that I may not fall by the way, but that I may put on the whole armor and overcome unto the end.

Your brother in Christ,

ERNEST WHITBY.

COLLINS, Iowa, February 24, 1907.

Dear Herald: Never did I know how I would miss the HERALD until I heard of the fire. I love to read its dear pages; it has been our family paper for a long time—at least twenty-five years, as my oldest brother and my dear mother used to take it. Mother has been dead ten years. Now I take it; could not do without it, as I love to read the church papers. I have been a member of the church only three months but would not turn back for all the world. I want to lead such a life that others may see the way. I admit that I have lots to learn, and am ever praying that God will guide, which he will do if I will only put my trust in him. We are often encouraged from the pens of others, but when we essay the same task we feel hardly capable of saying anything that would be of any benefit.

Your sister in the faith,

MISS LIZZIE M. HENITZ.

Resolution prevailed as follows: Moved that it be the sense of this conference that the HERALD Office should be rebuilt at Lamoni, Iowa, unless otherwise designated by revelation. Bro. C. I. Carpenter's request for elders' license to replace one lost in the fire was granted. A vote of thanks was extended to the retiring counselors of the president of the stake, for their services in the stake; also to D. C. White for his faithful service as counselor to the bishop. The following resolution was adopted: Moved that it be the sense of this conference that the tithes and offerings of the stake should be paid to the stake bishopric, and that neither this motion nor any part of it shall be construed to reflect in any way upon the general Bishop or upon the Saints who have in the past paid their tithes to him instead of the stake bishop. After the Sunday morning preaching-service, John W. Wadley was baptized by Charles E. Harpe, and confirmed at the afternoon service. At this service Brn. John Lovell and Russell Archibald were ordained as provided for. Spiritual instruction and admonition was given in tongues and prophecy.

NORTHERN WISCONSIN.—District conference met with Evergreen Branch at Valley Junction, Wisconsin, February 16, 1907, at 10.30 a. m., W. P. Robinson presiding, and J. O. Dutton associate; Archie Hook, secretary pro tem. Branches reported as follows: Reed (Chetek), Fox River (Appleton), Frankfort (Porcupine), Searles Prairie (Necedah), Evergreen (Valley Junction). Ministry reporting: W. P. Robinson, A. L. Whiteaker, Frank Hackett, L. O. Wildermuth, P. L. Richardson, S. E. Livingston; Priests E. L. Mason, M. O. Shedd, Archie Hook; Teachers Austin Johnson, J. Riner, J. S. Smart; Deacon George Rose. District treasurer, J. A. McGinnis, reported: On hand last report, $2.16; receipts, $11.90; paid out, $5.95. Bishop's agent, Lester Wildermuth, reported: On hand last report, $1; receipts, $133.76; expenses, $61.75. Delegates as follows were chosen to the General Conference: A. L. Whiteaker, W. P. Robinson, L. O. Wildermuth, J. O. Dutton, J. W. Wight, S. E. Livingston, F. Hackett, J. W. Hooker, M. O. Shedd, E. L. Mason, Austin Johnson, J. H. Thompson. Delegates to cast full vote for district, and in case of division majority and minority vote. Conference adjourned to meet with Reed Branch, Chetek, at call of district president. Rillie Moore, secretary, Necedah, Wisconsin.

LEEDS.—The annual conference of Leeds District convened in the Leeds Branch room, Wortley, January 12, 13, and 15, 1907. Business-session opened at 7.25 p. m. John W. Rush-ton was chosen to preside. Ministerial reports were read and approved. The minutes of previous conference were read, and it was moved that the minutes re bishop's agent's collectors be corrected to read thus: "Resolved that this conference recommend the election of the treasurer of each branch (as collector) on behalf of the bishop to collect tithing and free-will offerings in their respective branches." District spiritual report was read, including a recommendation for the restoration of Elder Seekin's license, and also Bro. Hyrum Sykes to be ordained to the Aaronic priesthood. The resignation of Priest J. W. Meadowcroft was read and discussed, and it was resolved that the report be referred to the district officers. The district and mission funds were presented, showing a balance for the former to be £9 13s. 6d.; for the latter, £1 19s. 3½d. The statistical reports of the Leeds and Burley Branches were presented. Moved that each be referred back to their respective branches for completion and indorsement, and that they be afterwards submitted to the district president, vice-president, and secretary for their scrutiny and disposal. Moved that the secretary of this conference be instructed to write the president of the Burley Branch, the secretaries of the Leeds and Burley Branches, also district treasurer as to their duties as committee of the missionary fund. Moved that the motion re disorganizing of the Leeds District be considered. After the introduction, a motion to adjourn was entertained to meet again on Monday evening at 7.30 p. m. The adjourned sitting commenced at 7.35 p. m. The minutes of previous sitting were read, and it was resolved that the motion to adjourn be altered to Tuesday (by permission of the body) as the president found he had a previous appointment for Monday and could not attend. Election of officers for the year took place: President, Elder Aveyard; vice-president, W. R. Roberts; secretary, George Hammond; treasurer, Herbert Mason; Bro. Henry Sykes auditor for three years; the retiring officer, J. T. Girdham, being thanked for his past services. The following motions were presented, and after some discussion were defeated, viz.: 1. To abolish the present delegate system and confine it to the four grades of the priesthood. 2. That all ministers of the district send in their licenses for indorsement at each conference. 3. That Leeds District be disorganized and we petition Manchester District to be affiliated with the same. The motion to amend Rule No. 4 re reporting to the semi-annual conference, to read, "report to the January and July conference," was indorsed. Moved that this conference elect the president of the mission, J. W. Rush-ton, as delegate to General Conference, and further that a sum of money be granted for his expenses. Resolved that the sum of £2 be granted to the delegate to General Conference. Resolved that this conference indorse the recommendation of the district president for the restoration of Elder Seekin's license. Resolved that the recommendation of Bro.

Henry Sykes to the appointment of priest in the Aaronic priesthood be indorsed. Bro. J. L. Girdham resigned his post as book agent for the district. Sustaining of mission local authorities now followed. At this juncture High Priest T. Taylor asked that he might be voted for separately. It was thereupon moved that the brother be sustained in the district as missionary, which was carried by a majority. Motion to adjourn was then received, to meet again the first Saturday after Easter. George Hammond, secretary.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT FOR SOUTH DAKOTA.

To the Saints and Friends of South Dakota: Please take notice that upon the removal from South Dakota of Bro. W. W. Whiting, Bishop's agent, and his resignation of this position, Bro. Edward Rannie, missionary in said State, has been duly appointed as agent of the Bishopric in and for the said territory, to act in behalf of the Reorganized Church in financial matters.

The Bishopric also take pleasure in commending the faithfulness of Bro. W. W. Whiting in his work as agent, and trust the Lord may bless him in his new field of labor.

We particularly recommend Bro. Edward Rannie to the Saints of South Dakota. We speak for him their consideration and assistance as he labors in this part of the Master's work. We should be careful to observe the injunction of the apostle, and "be ready in every good work." I know the thought sometimes comes to the people that by helping they impoverish themselves so that they could not get along. This is simply an erroneous idea, and one born of distrust and doubt instead of faith. Men and women who help in the Lord's work are strengthened, not made less able to do. "Every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." He does not take away from it that it will not have ability to bear so much fruit. To be rich both in this world and the world to come is to be helpers, not drags in the way, and if we can only do the amount of the widow's mite, let us do that; and let us be strong enough in our resolution to perform this, that we will not be content to have anybody else perform this part for us. If each shall perform his own work with an eye single to the glory of God, he will stand approved by and by, indeed will have fulfilled the injunction of the Revelator, "let no man take thy crown."

Trusting there may not be an idle hand or a listless heart in all the territory of South Dakota toward the Lord's work, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric, Very respectfully yours,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Eastern Canadian Passenger Association.—This association has concurred with other associations in granting a rate of one and one third fare, round trip to the "Annual Conference and Auxiliary Conventions, Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints," to be held at Lamoni, Iowa, in April, 1907.

The territory of this association includes all of the Province of Ontario except that portion west of the point where it touches the state of Minnesota; also the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia.

Passenger pays full fare on going trip and must secure a separate certificate corresponding to every ticket purchased, showing payment of full fare to destination, which certificates, on condition that one hundred holders thereof are present from all territory, and said certificates indorsed by the undersigned and by the joint agent at Lamoni, Iowa, will entitle holders thereof to return fare at one third regular rate.

Going tickets may be purchased from April 2 to 7 in this territory—though it would be well to purchase from April 2 to 5, in order to reach Chicago not later than the 7th, and said tickets are limited or unlimited according to rules of roads selling them; but return tickets are limited to continuous passage, over same route as going ticket. The return tickets may be purchased as late as April 24. For further particulars consult local railroad agents.

Quorum of First Seventy.

The first session of the First Seventy will be held April 1, at 10 a. m. in the basement of the church, unless further notice is given as to place of meeting.

Some matters of importance are already in my hands for disposition, and we are desirous of getting our work well in hand so that we will not be burdened to such an extent as we were last spring during the sittings of Conventions and Conference.

Several reports have already come into my hands, and there is shown on the part of some who have been inactive as missionaries an increased interest to do their whole duty.

It is requested that there be a good representation of the quorum from the first till the close. Come with the spirit of peace and prayer that wisdom may characterize all our deliberations.

Respectfully, in Christ,

J. F. MINTUN,
Secretary of First Seventy.

First Quorum of Elders.

Dear Brethren: As the conference year is drawing to a close, we are reminded that it is time for our annual report to be made. I am sending each member, to his last known address, a report blank; and should any fail to receive same by the 15th of March, please drop me a card and I will mail you another one. Close your report on March 1, and mail same to me as soon as possible.

Yours in bonds,

R. N. BURWELL.

General Conference Reception Committee.

NOTICE.

The Reception Committee desire to know at once who they will have to provide for at the coming General Conference, so if you intend to come, let us know as early as possible that necessary arrangements may be made before you arrive.

Let us know when you expect to arrive and how long you will remain. We can not promise you any particular place but if you have any preference you may so state and we will do the best we can for you.

A separate application should be made for each person in order to avoid disappointments. We can not promise special accommodation to any, but where it is really necessary state what you need and we will try to help you as far as possible.

By action of the Lamoni Branch, the price of board and lodging was fixed at $3.50 per week.

Let us hear from you quick if you intend to come as we wish to begin to make assignments this week and we need to know how many to provide for.

Send your applications to, C. I. CARPENTER, Secretary, March 4, 1907. Lamoni, Iowa.

Died.

PHILLIPS.—Charles Healey Phillips, after a protracted illness and much suffering, passed away February 17, 1907, at his home in Oakland, California, at the age of 77 years, 4 months, and 3 days. August 12, 1851, he married Sr. Louisa M. Moroni in the state of Massachusetts. They lived in Brockton, Massachusetts, in one house for fifty years. He never professed religion. He was buried from the church in Oakland, on the 20th. The son being a member of the Utah church, Elder Nelson of that church assisted in the stand. Sermon by J. M. Terry. The bereaved wife is one of our faithful members.

HOUGH.—Bro. George R. Hough was born September 10, 1846, in Lee County, Iowa. Moved to Pottawattamie, Iowa, in 1848. Was married to Althea Wilson, August 24, 1870, who died twenty-eight years ago, leaving five children. He married Luella Sultz, November 17, 1881, who survives with seven children. He was baptized June 24, 1900. Died February 15, 1907. Funeral in charge of S. Harding. Sermon by Joshua Carlile.

PALMER.—On January 24, 1907, Sr. Amy A. Palmer, at Fall River, Massachusetts. She was born in Valley Falls, Rhode Island, April 10, 1832. Was baptized July 21, 1868, at Fall River, by John Smith. Her mind was clear, and her faith remained firm to the end. Thus one by one the Saints are passing on. Funeral-service, held at the Saints' church, was attended by a large assembly of relatives and friends. The sermon was preached by John Gilbert, assisted by H. W. Howlett.

GRIFFIN.—Earnest C. Griffin, the eldest son of Bro. and Sr. W. C. Griffin, was born at Detroit, Minnesota, August 25, 1888. After more than three months' illness, he died at 5 o'clock Thursday morning, February 14, 1907. He leaves a father, mother, two sisters, one brother, and many other relatives to mourn his loss. He was baptized October 14, 1900, by I. N. Roberts at Audubon, Minnesota. Funeral services at the Methodist church in Frazee, Minnesota, in charge of T. J. Martin. Sermon by Jerome E. Wildermuth.

EDEN LOCATED.

Some things are superstitious, some are not.

It has been regarded by the incredulous populace that Joseph Smith was a presumptuously superstitious, if not an absolutely blasphemous fanatic, when he attempted to locate the garden of Eden and the grave of the first man Adam in America and in the United States, as Dame Rumor has repeatedly charged him with doing; the correctness of which rumor we neither affirm nor deny for the purpose of this writing. We may be pardoned, however, for suggesting that as the same irresponsible "busybody" used to affirm that Joseph Smith was a money-digger, and a seeker after hidden treasure when he was a young man, he was no worse for having done such work than hundreds have been since his day; for the history of the development of the Great West, and its occupation, is full of successful and unsuccessful searching after the golden treasures hidden in the "everlasting hills," and amid the debris which the rivers have washed into the rich deltas lying at the feet of those same hills and along the banks of the still swiftly flowing streams. And it is actually susceptible of proof that the various methods which the same Dame Rumor asserted that Joseph Smith employed to discover the natural deposits of metal riches, or those treasures said to have been laid away by Captain Kidd and other freebooters, have all been employed by miners and prospectors along the western coast from Mexico to Alaska, including "hazel twig," the "divining-rod," "waterwitching," and every possible superstitious device the credulity of the ignorant or the wise ever invented or thought of. If in Joseph Smith it was "foolish superstition," what was it in Bill Jones or Dan Johnson, who pursued the same methods in more modern days?

Joseph states that he did dig for treasure, for which digging he was paid by the day by the man who was hunting for the buried riches, the same as thousands have since done in the scramble for gold, from Sutter's Mill to the deposits at Nome and the Skagway. But what has that to do with the garden of Eden? It has this to do with it. A certain professor has discovered through his scientific researches, as he alleges, that the garden of Eden, the first home of the human race while yet in the loins of their father Adam, was located in Mississippi; the notice of which discovery is going the rounds of the press as may be seen in the clipping which we give below. "Great" is the "Diana" of the scientific world. We opine that if Professor McMickie, Scotch or Irish as he may be, shall find the mythical city he is proposing to seek, and will establish a watering-place, a health-resort, or an archæological curiosity-shop to accompany his find, his fortune is made.

JACKSON, Mississippi, February 24.—[Special.]—Professor Clinton McMickie, a Kansas scientist and archæologist, is so confident that the garden of Eden was located in the Yazoo Valley, this State, that he wants to organize a stock company for the purpose of making extensive excavations on the farm of W. A. Henry, a planter, about seven miles south of Yazoo City. He thinks he can unearth the ruins of a once splendid city erected shortly after the expulsion of Adam and Eve from the garden. Professor McMickie says he has conclusive evidence, based on the book of Genesis, and Greek and Egyptian records, that Yazoo County was the birthplace of man, and it will only be necessary to dig the required depth in order to find proof of his belief.—Kansas City Journal, February 26, 1907.

If it should turn out that this learned professor has really discovered what will be accredited as the home of Adam "in America," it must be taken in evidence, corroborative at least, that the revelation which Rumor asserted was the source through which Joseph Smith discovered the grave of Adam, was so far inspired as to locate the country in which the father of the race lived and where he died.

THE WORKING MAN.

The following definition of what constitutes the working man, and the glowing tribute to his usefulness and worth to the commonwealth, we take from the Kansas City Journal for March 5. While some may differ from Mr. Walter William as to what constitutes a working man, it is fair to presume that all will concede the full claim made by that writer for the classes of citizens enumerated, as to their being the republic's stay and strength. No one class can possibly be the only one entitled to that distinctive encomium.

In his East Window column Walter Williams draws this nice distinction as to working men:

The working man is not alone the man who works with his hands. The man who works with his head is equally a working man. The callous on the palm, obtained by honest toil, is a badge of nobility, but so is the furrow on the forehead and the ache in the brain. The working men include all who work. They are the true noblemen. They may plow or preach, may keep store, or teach school or break rock, may labor with brain or heart or hand, but are, of whatever type or honest occupation, entitled to respect and congratulation. He who does not, by his own efforts, add to the world's knowledge or happiness or usefulness, who does nothing to pay his own way through life, is a parasite. He feeds upon the body politic and will not pay his board. If he be poor we call him a tramp or loafer, if he be rich we call him prosperous and a man of leisure. In either case he is to blame. The menace that comes to society, the clogs upon the wheels of progress, are not from the man who works, whether in labor unions or without, but from the men who loaf, either in broadcloth or in rags. It is the working man who is the republic's stay and strength.

CHURCH DISESTABLISHMENT IN ENGLAND.

There have been made efforts in the past to bring about separation of church and state in England; but those efforts were more or less sporadic and fruitless. But a late agitation in the English House of Commons resulting in a vote largely in favor of the disestablishment of the state church seems to indicate an increase of sentiment among the people to get rid of church domination in state affairs. The revolution in France which has terminated in the separation between the church and the state, and the compelling of church officials to be subject to the laws of the French Republic, may have helped the agitation in England; but whether it has or has not had any influence upon the vote lately taken in the House of Commons, the fact of a vote having been taken with the remarkable result stated shows the decided rate at which political sentiment has advanced in the British Empire towards the emancipation of the people from the ecclesiastical burden of rule and taxation.

It may be too early to forecast the immediate result; but it is safe to say that as revolutions never go backwards, there is a time coming and not far away when the domination of the church and the rule of the House of Lords will each be a thing of the past. While the nation may continue to abide in a belief in "the divine right of kings to rule," there will be a strong and persistent protest against the prominence of the house of hereditary lords in the affairs of state. We, who do not acquiesce in the belief that kings are born to rule as of divine right, do not see the necessity for a ruling House of Lords, members of which hold their seats and engage in the political affairs of state by reason of a similar hereditary right. We can but say that it is with no ordinary interest that we await the arbitrament of time, in this as in other things still to come in the future history of the world. The following is clipped from an exchange.

LONDON, February 27.—In the house of commons to-night a resolution in favor of the disestablishment and disendowment of the church in both England and Wales was adopted by 198 votes to 90.

This resolution does not commit the government, but the debate upon it was interesting on account of a statement made by Augustine Birrell, the chief secretary for Ireland. Mr. Birrell said he failed to see how the continuance of the established church could be justified. The church had done the state no good, and the state had done the church nothing but harm.

Personally Mr. Birrell said he believed that disestablishment, far from harming the church as a spiritual body, would restore it to a position of spiritual authority throughout the land. The government's hands, however, were already too full to assume any responsibility in the matter.

"The philosophy of the world will break down every time when put to the test; and it will be put to the test in the case of each individual, if not in this life, then at the great final judgment."

THAT CHAIN LETTER.

Some of the Saints are still troubled by the receipt of a chain letter that for many months has dragged its weary length over the land. They have written for our opinion and we will give it. This chain letter comes to an individual modestly asking him to make nine copies and mail to nine different friends. He is told that if he will do so he will soon experience some great joy, while if he refuses he will be visited with a calamity. Bishop Lawrence (if we mistake not) is cited as the instigator of the affair. The letter in main is a prayer that God will have mercy on mankind and take them with him "to eternity."

In our opinion any Saints receiving this letter will do well to consign it to everlasting oblivion, and thus save time and postage stamps. First, it is a fraud, the bishop named as its instigator having publicly denied any connection with it. Second, we have no right to direct any one to use a certain set form of words a certain number of times in prayer, either written or spoken. Third, to call down a curse on one who does not follow our direction in so small a matter savors of the days of witchcraft and superstition. Fourth, unless God directs us to do so we have no right to promise some great blessing or threaten some great curse as sure to overtake those who do not do our bidding. We would suppose that the average individual would be exasperated at such presumption.

A prayer written under fear of some mysterious impending calamity does not amount to much. It would cost eighteen cents to mail nine of them and we submit that they are not worth it. E. A. S.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

John Alexander Dowie passed away at Shiloh House, Zion City, early in the morning of March 9. He was practically deserted during the closing days of his remarkable life, his following having gone over to the standard of Voliva.

Doctor Wiley says that the only safe kind of whisky is "old whisky in sealed bottles." An exchange suggests that "the moment the seal is broken the safety disappears."

General William Booth, head of the Salvation Army, declared in a recent lecture that "tainted money" had no terrors for him; he proposes to take it and "wash it clean in the tears of widows and orphans."

Reverend Hugh Moore, "pastor of the First Church of Progressive Spiritualists," New York City, has been exposed by the World and has fled the city. It seems that he employed several men and women to act as spirits, and one of these women was identified by a man whose sister she impersonated. She made the whole scheme public.

The Salt Lake Tribune reports an immense mass-meeting held by the "American Party" in the Salt Lake Theater the evening of March 7. Several speakers, including Frank J. Cannon, addressed the audience. Resolutions were adopted denouncing the action of the United States Senate in the Smoot case, and announcing a determination to continue the fight against church rule.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

The elders in charge of the Central States Mission of the Mormon church have moved their mission headquarters from Kansas City to Independence, Missouri. The Deseret Evening News, March 5, gives the following reasons for the move: "Questions of economy suggested the removal from Kansas City. It will be less expensive to conduct the work from Independence, and it can be done just as well." It is also stated that a weekly magazine is to be issued from the new quarters.

The Evening and Morning Star, the organ of the Hedrickites, sees in this move the beginning of a mighty struggle between the Reorganization and the Mormon church, and says that both churches "possess brainy and resourceful men, and the contest will be no child's play. The little Hedrickite people can withdraw to the safety of the Temple Lot and watch the giants struggle." The Reorganization is ready to meet the issue. 'Tis the city of our fathers, and if we do not teach as they taught let us have no part there.

The Anti-Mormon League has been circulating a tract entitled, "Oliver Cowdery's Defense." Elder Heman C. Smith has prepared a very able review of this tract which will appear in the HERALD for next week, and will be found of service to those who have to meet the issue in debate.

The Toronto Saints are holding preaching-services in their new church Tuesday and Thursday evenings and are beginning to reap their harvest, seven applicants for baptism appearing Tuesday evening (March 5) and three the following Thursday evening.

"Whoever makes a profession of love for the law, and regards himself as within the law, claiming the care, privileges, immunities, and blessings available to him as to others, must submit to the restrictions, the limitations, disabilities, and penalties for transgressions of the law which are found in the law."

"Christ could afford to be the Friend of the children and so can we."

Elders' Note-Book

FROM THE MOUNT.

The Savior has said unto you,
Take heed how your alms you do,
If you would receive of the Lord.
They that do alms before men,
To be seen and known of them,
"Verily, they have their reward."

Offer thy prayers in the closet at home,
With thee and thy Father alone,
If you would be heard of the Lord.
They who love to pray in the street,
For praises of men, to them sweet,
"Verily, they have their reward."

When thou fastest, do not appear sad,
Wash thy face, anoint thy head, and be glad—
If you would appeal to the Lord.
They who disfigure their faces,
To display their Christian graces,
"Verily, they have their reward."

Thus meek and lowly through life you may go,
Unhonored, unnoticed, yet still you may know,
There awaits you a home with the Lord.
If others, wealth, honor, and praise have attained,
That's all they've sought, that's all they've gained,
Verily, let them have their reward.

GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The time for our annual gathering in General Conference will soon be here and with it the attendant expense of the missionaries who thus go up from year to year to do business for the church.

Now in the face of the very heavy loss sustained by the church through the destruction by fire of our publishing house and its valuable contents, could we not, as a band of missionaries, consider this from a business standpoint, also from a standpoint of economy, and draw less heavily upon the Bishop's fund for this purpose for this year? If the expense of building and equipment of our publishing house should come from the general church funds, had we not better leave as much as possible in the hands of our Bishop for this purpose? Could not half the number who usually attend General Conference do the business of conference and do it just as well?

There are those who must attend, who have duties and obligations that make their attendance imperative. The Presidency, the Twelve, High Council, Presidents and Secretaries of quorums, Bishopric, Church Secretary, committees appointed for specific work by General Conference, etc. Could not one half of the rank and file of our missionary force be excused? Why crowd almost to suffocation the Lamoni church-building this year with men who could be doing a splendid work for the church in their fields of labor? Why not confer with our missionary in charge and manifest a magnanimity of mind consistent with brethren of our great Captain and say,

"I will stay in my field and let my brother go who can do better as a delegate than I"? Let us look about and see if the work under our care is to suffer through our absence from it, and if so our duty is not at Lamoni but just where we are.

Why not leave this matter in the hands of the missionary in charge and let him say who shall go to conference and who shall stay and do service in his field? Has not a general the prerogative to grant leave of absence or refuse as his superior oversight shall determine without being charged with exercising the "one man power"? Brethren, let us do our part toward building the new publishing house, and where we can exercise economy, do so especially as teachers of the people and servants of him whom we call our elder brother.

A SUCCESSFUL REVIVAL.

For some time it had been believed that if a general effort of a special nature were made, the public in the great City of Brotherly Love might be aroused to consider the warning committed to the ministry of the restored gospel, at least the honest in heart might be warned, and some good be done by way of correcting the general impression of the latter-day work.

In accordance with this belief the Philadelphia, (Pa.) Branch, on October 28, 1906, appointed the minister in charge of the Eastern Mission, Apostle Francis M. Sheehy, the bishop of the New York and Philadelphia District, Bishop John Zimmermann, and president of the Philadelphia Branch, Elder Walter W. Smith, to carry the above idea into effect by holding a series of special preaching services in some popular auditorium in the heart of the city. Competent speakers and accomplished singers were to be invited and the meeting properly advertised, so as to make them of general interest.

The committee accordingly secured the auditorium of the Odd Fellows' Temple, a magnificent place, seating some eleven hundred persons, with fine pipe organ, and situated in the very heart of the city, easy of access from all directions. Next we secured the assistance of a skillful advertiser, to make sure of reaching the people, and being desirous of presenting as good an appearance as we could we agreed to advertise only through the newspapers, it being considered the cleanest medium of advertising in a city of this size. We then invited as speakers, President Joseph Smith, Bishop Edmund L. Kelley, and Apostle John W. Rushton. These, with Apostle Francis M. Sheehy and the pastor of the Philadelphia Branch, were announced as the speakers for the occasion. Srs. Wallace N. Robinson and Josephine Isleib were invited to sing, and a proficient organist was secured, which with Bro. Orrin K. Fry to lead the congregational singing rendered the musical prospect quite attractive.

The Philadelphia Saints had by dint of personal sacrifice liquidated the debt on their chapel and desired to dedicate the same. This was an excellent opportunity to attract general notice to the church and the revival services, hence arrangements were made to have the dedication take place in connection with the meetings. The New York and Philadelphia District conference had adjourned to meet with the Philadelphia Saints in February, so the conference was called by the district presidency to convene at the close of the meetings, thus bringing all the winter meetings in one series, and by concentration of interest and effort it was desired to make as large a showing as possible.

In pursuance of the plan the meetings were announced to begin on January 27, under the personal direction of President Joseph Smith. Souvenir programs were printed, with a good picture of President Smith on the front page, and announcements; a picture of the local church on the last page, also announcement of speakers and local church directory, and motto. On the inside pages of the program was order of service and text of hymns.

The meetings were opened at eleven o'clock, in the forenoon, Sunday, January 27, by a spirited dedicatory sermon by President Smith. The revival proper was launched at fifteen minutes of eight in the evening, in the chapel, Bishop Kelley being the speaker. The house was taxed to its utmost seating capacity both morning and evening. On Monday evening at eight o'clock the meeting was opened at the auditorium down town.

The audiences increased from the first, and the last service was the largest, interest continually on the increase. All the speakers had excellent liberty, and made able defenses of the work; both the soloists rendered well-selected music, all of which was well received. The public press the whole week through gave us favorable notice, making clearly the distinction between us as the "orthodox Saints" and the Utah people as "Mormons." Altogether the revival service was a decided success, many friends were made to the work, some who were interested were fully persuaded, and the general public informed as to who are "The Latter Day Saints."

SHE HATH DONE WHAT SHE COULD.

FUNERAL SERMON OF SR. MARY E. GUNSOLLEY, AT THE SAINTS' CHURCH, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, FEBRUARY 23, 1907,

BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH.

(Reported by Belle Robinson James.)

If there is anything that reconciles the eldership to the duty of speaking before the open grave or by the side of those who have passed away, it is the occasional performance of a duty like that imposed upon me to-day by the relatives of our sister.

I respond to this call for two reasons; one is a long and favorable acquaintance with Sr. Gunsolley and her family, and the other is the service of the Master who has required of us all the cheerful performance of all that we may be asked to do that may either benefit, strengthen, comfort, or cheer each other.

Two passages of scripture present themselves to my mind. I do not now recall where either of them is, but one is in the New Testament Scripture and is brief in its character. So is the other. "She hath done what she could." That occurring in the Old Testament scripture is: "He drew up his feet and was gathered to his fathers." These could not have been uttered or written in the days in which they were, of any subject that was not fitted to live, not prepared by either natural or acquired qualifications to grace life. Neither could it have been written of one that had passed away from earth's trials in youth, but must have been written of him at the close of a long and useful life. And perhaps no better tribute has ever been paid to womankind than that simple expression, "She hath done what she could." And perhaps no grander encomium could be passed upon a man than that which is found in the expression, "He drew up his feet and was gathered to his fathers."

Life is a peculiar state of existence with which we are acquainted so far as life of the flesh is concerned, and yet it is full of paradoxes that none of us can reconcile, that none of us can explain. Scarcely a day passes over our heads but what those of us who are thinkers meet things that we can not (do the best that we can) fully reconcile to our conceptions of that which is right, and it may be possible that this is because we do not comprehend all the conditions. I try to comfort myself with that thought. I try to put myself in the place of others and see things as they see them in order that I may explain to myself what I see them do or hear them say. And realizing as I did, early in my life, that "the noblest study of mankind is man," I have made it my pleasure, my business, to become acquainted with my fellow men, especially those with whom my life has been brought into close contact; and I am not ashamed to acknowledge before you as I have done hitherto before congregations, that I do not like everybody alike. I have never tried to. Notwithstanding the Savior says the fulfillment of the law is this, "that you love one another," I never tried to love that that was unlovable. If others can do it they are more Christian than I. There is sufficient element of the natural man left in me that I can not always control it and say that I love that which is unlovable in either man or woman. But I have learned to respect men and women notwithstanding that I may not have been seriously interested in them in a superior liking or love such as it seems is covered by the word "charity." I have learned to respect men and women though I might know that they were enemies in some sense to me and my work. This has arisen from the consideration of their honesty. And if a man or woman is honestly opposed to me or at enmity with me and I feel an assurance that they are honest, I respect them, no matter how hard they combat against me.

I do not know whether I am right or wrong, but I have thought that this was one of the secrets that enables us to understand the character of Jesus Christ: I speak of him as Jesus, the Christ, the man. For he was not only able to draw his friends to him, but he was able to endure the contradiction of sinners against himself, and even in the hour of his utmost trial, his heart felt the weakness of mankind, and he lifted his hand, or he would, if they had not been fastened to the cross, and said, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

It has been said in the book that three score years and ten are allotted unto man, and if by reason of great strength, four score, the days are full of trouble. And we feel an assurance that this has been written in the lifetime of nearly every one that we know who has reached the years of three score and ten, the allotted age of man. And yet we are surrounded by those who have surpassed this and they have brought with them or are carrying with them, apparently, a great deal of youthful strength. They have served the best interests of life in the flesh that they knew how to do, and by virtue of this care, they have succeeded in escaping the ills to which flesh is subject, and the spirit of life has been strong in them, and they have carried life's burden faithfully to its close.

And to-day we are brought face to face before the open grave of one who has borne in life an unusual share of labor, of mental anxiety and care, and who has so discharged the duties of her life that we see a race of stalwart men and women who have been blessed by her loving kindness, and who to-day all grown to manhood and womanhood's prime, lay the remains of their mother away from their sight, she having been satisfied to lay down the burdens that she hath so long borne, to look once more upon the faces of her children and lift her heart to God and say, in truth, "I am ready." No more fitting terminus to human life can come than that, and each of us may say to-day and say it carefully, thoughtfully, and truthfully, "May the last end of my life be like hers."

I have thought and still think that one of the grandest ends that can come in the conflict of life is that at an advanced age to die in the discharge of duty; to die as our Bro. Willaim W. Blair did—pass as almost in a instant from this world-weary care of life into the presence of God; to be stricken down in the harness, so to speak, in the front of the battle, with the consciousness that never, at any time, by thought or word or deed has the individual shirked the hard, supreme duties of life, or failed in the discharge of his obligations which have been imposed upon him or them by virtue of their association or their relation to each other. I have thought and now think of one of the brightest contemplations that occupy our minds to-day, while standing close by the final resting-place of one whom we have known in this life, who has reached the term barely of three score years and ten—but a few days over, and think of them as having been found by us worthy, and that the opening of the door between themselves and the world which is beyond is but the door swinging upon its hinges that admits us to gaze into the future and recognize those that we have known, those who have reached the years of manhood and womanhood and have been found faithful under the discharge of all the duties that were devolving upon them, and have taken up the changed conditions without a change of heart or mind.

To me it is one of the grandest thoughts that could stir the heart or mind of a waiting Saint. I sometimes think I can see Abraham, the father of the faithful, who having passed on into the other world his faults have been left upon this earth, and will find his rank over there. And if that which has been held out to us is true and we are permitted to reach the condition in which he must be by virtue of his having been the father of the faithful and kept his estate unto the end, we shall know him; and as we may see this, that, or the other ancient worthy, and those who in modern times have stood in the front of the battle and have fought so valiantly for the truth, we shall know them, whether we have ever met them in the flesh or not. We shall know them. There will be that subtle comprehension of the individualities that will signify to us who they are, and we will strike glad hands with them. And it is a strong incentive for us who are approaching the confines of this life, standing upon the verge of the hereafter—it is a strong incentive for us to be careful, that the years of age do not bring with it the age of folly, the foolish giving way to those things that mar and disturb; that it shall not be written after our names in the great book that has been kept of the record of things which were on earth as it has been written of Solomon in his old age, "His heart was turned unto folly."

If we can but keep this integrity to the end, what is there to hinder our last hope? What is there to forbid us to say upon the bed that may be the last that we shall occupy this side of the rest in the grave we are laid, "Come Lord Jesus, come quickly"? And not for us but for those whom we have left behind us. Not for us as individuals, but for those, the circle of whose association is broken. Not for us only, but for those for whom we have expended our hearts' best affections; those who have been nearest and truest to us in life; those for whom we have been able to do all that we could. These are the ones whom we consider in this hour.

We do not often meet such a case as this before us to-day, where the mother has had gathered around her her family, all grown to manhood and womanhood, all prepared to say what the care of mother has been. I hardly remember anybody that used to meet in the meetings in Western Iowa with a more vivid recollection than I remember Bro. and Sr. Gunsolley. Over a quarter of a century has passed since I first met them. I always expected to see them upon the conference ground or upon the reunion ground. They seemed to be just as faithful as the sun to this duty, to gather themselves with the Saints, unobtrusive as they both were, and enjoy that which they came to enjoy; peace and comfort and the association of their brethren in the Lord, without a thought of the sacrifice which it required for them to do this; without a thought, evidently, of the work which was necessary to be done to prepare them to leave home and occupy during the time of the conference.

But there is comfort in this thought that three score years and ten have passed. Sr. Gunsolley was prepared to lay down the weapons of her earthly warfare. Her last duty had been done and whether it had been ill or well, she knew that she was prepared to go. And let me tell you, there is a whole sermon in that thought. It signifies looking back over the years that are past, and a faithful remembrance of those with whom her life lines have lain, a careful recollection of all those whom she had met, all those with whom it seemed to be her duty to mingle in life, and to watch over herself and to see that she did what she could for them; and it is a joyous and comforting thought, that when one reaches this age under such conditions as these, there is a relief, there is a release; and much as those who loved would have preferred to keep her with them, I believe that they are satisfied. And sad as may be the parting, not one would ask that mother might stay, in weakness, in sickness, in sorrow, in helplessness—not one.

I remember when my grandfather died I was but a boy, and when visiting at the house, my Aunt Lucy and one of the others wondered why it was that I did not feel sorrowful. They asked me if I did not feel bad. I said, No. Death had no terrors for me then. It has never had any since. And I turned to Aunt Lucy and I said: "You all tell me that grandfather is better off, so why should I feel bad?" If he is better off there on the other side, why should I want him back here?" No, I would not feel bad. And when I closed my grandmother's eyes, years after that, I was pleased to know that her weary pilgrimage had come to an end. The three score years had been passed. A few more added by reason of this great strength and continued care, but each was one of successive agony and pain. How could I say that her life should be prolonged on the earth when the opening door would permit her to go into the realm beyond, and there dwell in conscious existence; for if the statement made in the Book of Mormon is absolutely true that we shall have a lively consciousness of all our guilt, so must also we have a lively consciousness of all the good that we have had in life; for if the one portion is true, so must the other be. If we shall be conscious of guilt, we shall be conscious of that which is right, of rectitude and honesty. Surely we must. Then those passing through, after having overcome, they must be welcomed on the other side. And when by the passing of the three score years and fourteen, I was present when my mother closed her eyes, and saw her look up and speak as if she stood in the presence of some one whom she recognized, and say, "Yes, yes, I am coming," I would not keep back my mother; and when on one of the brightest days of the early month of May we laid her to sleep, her body to rest in the quiet resting-place where it now lies, I did it with cheerfulness. I did it without sorrow and without regret, though grief was mine, but sorrow I could not exercise. And why? Mother's life had been passed like that of Sr. Gunsolley, in labor, in care, in toil. The probabilities are that she saw more danger in her life than Sr. Gunsolley has in hers, but no more toil, pain, or distress was with the one than has been with the other; and so we are to-day in this sense, watching by the side of one, the spirit of whom has gone to the better land; and who, we must be conscious, will be met on the other side by those who have been found worthy, who have brought themselves into subjection to the rule of life by which it may be said of them: "Blessed is he that hath part in the first resurrection, for on such the second death hath no power."

They ask, "What is the second death?" I may say I do not know. It is one of the duties of my calling to preach life unto men, to preach the way of life, to tell them how they may make themselves friends of God and of Jesus Christ, to teach them to live; and if they but learn this duty they need not fear the second death no matter what it may be. And I am often pleased that God saw fit in the early days of the church to reveal unto the church, unto those who would take cognizance of it, that it is not known only to those upon whom it comes, except it be by revelation now and then, and it is closed up again. So if any one asks me what is the second death, I do not want to know. It is beyond every desire or hope that I have to know what the second death is. I want to know what life is, if it is within my power, or what it will be over there; or if I am not permitted to know that, to be prepared by the word of God which we have received, so that when the time of my departure from the flesh comes, as it has come for Sr. Gunsolley, I may look at that without fear, with the consciousness that I have done what I could. And those who witnessed the departure of Sr. Gunsolley can realize how faithfully that expression in the Scriptures describes the event: "He drew up his feet and was gathered unto his fathers."

Life's labor is over. The feet that have grown weary in the pathways of life are at rest. The hands, toil-worn, broken by care and by sturdy energy are still; the heart pulsations have ceased. No hope, no care of the things of this life, no anxiety with respect to them, because their value is passed to the eyes that have looked the last upon the scenes that were either lovable or hateful, and can receive at the close the peace that passeth all understanding. How then can I say that these sons and these daughters should be overcome with grief? Each loses self in the anxiety concerning the mother that has gone. How can I say that? I had better say to them, Look up. Feel the incentive to live; to live without blame, to live with all due carefulness to the discharge of the duties of this life, not only with the hope, but with the conscious continued desire when life's busy scenes shall be over, to be welcomed by mother; the same as the door of the household year after year has been open to the incoming of these sons and daughters, with a mother's welcome, such as the world can not surpass, surrounded by the mother's love, too large to ever find the house too crowded for the incoming of sons and of daughters; with the mind prepared always to do the best that lay in her power, to give comfort and cheer to the weary, to sooth their sorrows and strengthen them in the battle of life by careful advice, and to warn them against that which is evil and wrong. Evil and wrong will have passed away; but the love and charity that make love grand will remain; and so when we meet mother we can realize it. I hope we can. And that is my comfort to-day. That is one of the reasons why I say that if there is anything that can reconcile the eldership to the preaching of funeral-sermons, it is an occasion like this, when one passes out of this world or out of this sphere of action or existence at the appointed age of man, and the elder that stands in the sacred desk to speak, as the friend to them that are living, to point out the way of life, if it be necessary—but it is not on such an occasion as this—to feel the assurance that God hath prepared a mansion for them who have rendered a right life, to feel the pressing need of that conviction that it is but a broken day, but a departure for a time, and that sooner or later we, passing through ordeals similar to this, our remains being carried to the grave by tender and loving hands, and shedding tears over us, because the heart is melted within, there will be a joyous reception over on the other side. And so let us be prepared.

I want to meet my mother. These boys, these girls, want to meet their mother. They want to so live that when, like Sr. Gunsolley, they lie down to their last rest, they can call their children around and say to them, "I am ready," and feel the assurance that they have left a good name for boys and girls coming after them. And if we can but do that, we have done all that is essential to be done. A good name is better than riches. And so, not to weary you, I close, hoping and feeling an assurance that we will have been better for having known Sr. Gunsolley. I have felt since I knew that she was passing away, I have felt the influence of my recollections of her life, of my knowledge of her and her family. I have felt it as an exhilarating sensation? No, but the strengthening, comforting assurance of the truthfulness of that philosophy which we have been trying to teach in life, a life in Christ Jesus; for if it can do that for her, it can for me. If it has done that for her and her companion, it will do it for us, for each one of us, and prepare us not only for the ordeal of living here in this age, but for the happy living when freed from the trammels of the flesh.

Now see how brief a story tells the passing of a life:

Mary E. Tyrrell was born March 16, 1835, in Vermont. When a child was taken by her parents to Ward's Grove in Northern Illinois, where, in 1850, she was united in marriage to Noah M. Gunsolley. Of this union were born twelve children, seven sons and five daughters, all growing to womanhood and manhood except two daughters who died in infancy. All surviving children except one and five grandchildren were present during the last illness.

She united with the church in 1881 and has always lived a consistent Christian life. There are twenty-nine grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren, three grandchildren and one great-grandchild dying in infancy. The surviving ten children, twenty-six grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren, except two grandchildren, have united with the church. Five sons are members of the

"We believe that a man must be called of God, and ordained by the laying on of hands of those who are in authority, to entitle him to preach the gospel, and administer in the ordinances thereof.

"We believe in the same kind of organization that existed in the primitive church, viz.: apostles, pastors, teachers, evangelists, etc.

"We believe that in the Bible is contained the word of God, so far as it is translated correctly. We believe that the canon of scripture is not full, but that God, by his Spirit, will continue to reveal his word to man until the end of time.

"We believe in the powers and gifts of the everlasting gospel, viz.: The gifts of faith, discerning of spirits, prophecy, revelation, healing, visions, tongues, and the interpretations of tongues, wisdom, charity, brotherly love, etc.

"We believe that marriage is ordained of God; and that the law of God provides for but one companion in wedlock, for either man or woman, except in cases where the contract of marriage is broken by death or transgression.

"We believe that the doctrines of a plurality and a community of wives are heresies, and are opposed to the law of God.

"We believe that the religion of Jesus Christ, as taught in the New Testament Scriptures, will, if its precepts are accepted and obeyed, make men and women better in the domestic circle, and better citizens of town, county, and state, and consequently better fitted for the change which cometh at death.

"We believe that men should worship God in 'spirit and in truth'; and that such worship does not require a violation of the constitutional law of the land."

OUR PRESENT AND FUTURE NEEDS.—PART I.

There is a tendency among many people to look back into the past and find there the most that deserves commendation and deplore present conditions and opportunities, and wish they had been living in "ye olden times." In dwelling too much on the past we miss the golden opportunities of the present and so are unprepared for the glorious future that is near at hand. The present and the future are and will be the brightest and best of all ages; the scripture warrants us in believing that the "good time" is coming, not already gone by. In the past year, in the studying of our Sunday-school lessons, we have been amazed at the wisdom and patience of Moses, and at the wonderful power and love of God; but great as that work was in the past, the future is to see it eclipsed, as we can readily glean from the following:

Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, that brought the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them.—Jeremiah 16: 14, 15.

And they who are in the north countries shall come in remembrance before the Lord, and their prophets shall hear his voice, and shall no longer stay themselves, and they shall smite the rocks, and the ice shall flow down at their presence.—Doctrine and Covenant 108: 6.

Sometimes we deplore the indifference and coldness of the world to the message that we bear them and wish we had been living in the early part of the past century. But what better could we ask for the future than what is portrayed as a glorious time in our missionary work? And perhaps it is nearer than we think. It may be even at the door. Great events come in rapid succession. On the 15th of February, 1898, the battleship Maine was blown up in the harbor of Havana and war ensued between our country and Spain. By the 13th of August of the same year the power of Spain was broken in the West Indies and in the Pacific Ocean. For two years Japan held in check one of the most powerful nations of Europe and prevented the destruction of the Chinese Empire.

Listen to what the Lord has in store for our missionary work:

As also through your administration the keys of the school of the prophets, which I have commanded to be organized, that thereby they may be perfected in their ministry for the salvation of Zion, and of the nations of Israel, and of the Gentiles, as many as will believe, that through your administration, they may receive the word, and through their administration, the word may go forth unto the ends of the earth, unto the Gentiles first, and then, behold, and lo, they shall turn unto the Jews; and then cometh the day when the arm of the Lord shall be revealed in power in convincing the nations, the heathen nations, the house of Joseph, of the gospel of their salvation. For it shall come to pass in that day, that every man shall hear the fullness of the gospel in his own tongue, and in his own language, through those who are ordained unto this power, by the administration of the Comforter, shed forth upon them, for the revelation of Jesus Christ.—Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3, 4.

From this we learn that the nations are not only to hear it but shall be convinced "of the gospel of their salvation." Three very important things are noticeable in the above quotations: We are to be prepared in the school of the prophets for our work. The comforter is to assist us. And every man is to hear the gospel in his own language, not to listen to sermons a great part of which he can not understand because of being in a language with which he is not familiar.

But before the great day of the Lord shall come, Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness; and the Lamanites shall blossom as the rose.—Doctrine and Covenants 49:5.

And the gospel of Jesus-Christ shall be declared among them [the Indians]; wherefore, they shall be restored unto the knowledge of their fathers, and also to the knowledge of Jesus Christ, which was had among their fathers. And then shall they rejoice; for they shall know that it is a blessing unto them from the hand of God; and their scales of darkness shall begin to fall from their eyes; and many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a pure and a delightful people.—2 Nephi 12:12.

The Indian has a bright future before him, and great as the miracle was in changing his color, far greater will be the manifestation of God's power and love in restoring him to a knowledge of his fathers and of the gospel of his salvation.

The redemption is to be one of the great, if not one of the greatest events in the history of the world, and it is to be brought about by the wonderful display of God's power and the cooperation of his people to be "laborers together with God." He has told us that his "army is not yet very great," that some of the weapons in use are carnal, and that if we want to enjoy his "intelligence" we must remember his counsel: "be ye mine only for such is your agreement." God has told us in very forceful language how the work is to be accomplished:

Behold, I say unto you, The redemption of Zion must needs come by power; therefore I will raise up unto my people a man, who shall lead them like as Moses led the children of Israel, for ye are the children of Israel, and of the seed of Abraham; and ye must needs be led out of bondage by power, and a stretched out arm; and as your fathers were led at first, even so shall the redemption of Zion be. Therefore, let not your hearts faint, for I say not unto you as I said unto your fathers, Mine angel shall go up before you, but not my presence; but I say unto you, Mine angels shall go before you, and also my presence, and in time ye shall possess the goodly land.—Doctrine and Covenants 100:3.

It is needless to make any comment on the above; no language of mine can make it more forceful, and, with what has preceded it, it is made very plain that there will be stirring times in the future.

TESTING SEED CORN.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The following article, quoted from Farm Life, February 15, 1907, is by Professor P. G. Holden, known as "the seed man." His "soil and seed" lectures throughout the country have attracted universal attention and have been of great service to farmers.

There is, perhaps, no one thing which will do so much to increase the yield of corn on every farm as the testing of each ear to be used for seed. This should be done before the rush of spring work begins or it is likely to be neglected.

The importance of discarding ears that refuse to grow or show a weak germination is apparent when we realize that one ear will plant one fourteenth to one sixteenth of an acre.

The most practical way for testing the germination of each ear is by using a germination box. This is a simple affair and can be made by any one in an Courtesy Farm Life.

The kernels are placed on the floor opposite the ear from which they were taken. Before removing the kernels from the ears, it is a good plan to drive two nails at each end of the rows of corn to hold the ears in place.

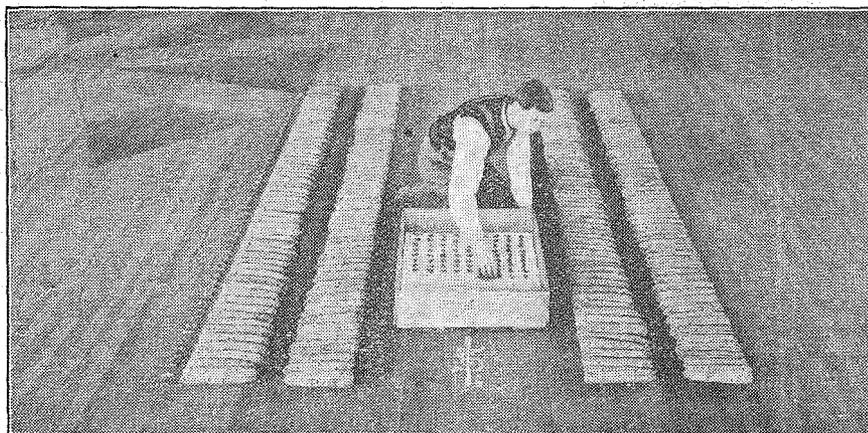

hour's time. Any box about six inches deep and 2x2 feet in size may be used. Fill the box about half full of moist sand, dirt, or sawdust, well pressed down, so that it will leave a smooth, even surface. In case sawdust is used it should be put in a gunny-sack and set in a tub of warm water for half an hour so that it will be thoroughly moistened before using. Take a white cloth about the size of a box, rule it off, checkerboard fashion, one and a half inches each way. Number the checks 1, 2, 3, and so on and place it over the sawdust and tack to the box at the corners and edges. Lay out the ears to be tested, side by side on the floor; remove one kernel from near the butt, middle, and tip of the ear; turn the ear over and remove three kernels from the opposite side, in like manner, making six kernels in all, thus securing a sample from the entire ear. Place the six kernels at the end of the ear from which they were taken. Use care that the kernels do not get mixed with the kernels from the ear next to it. After the kernels are removed, boards may be laid over the rows of corn to keep them in place until the germination is known. Place the kernels from the ear of corn No. 1 in square No. 1, and so on with all of the ears. Then place over this a cloth considerably larger than the box; cover with about two inches of moist sand, dirt, or sawdust and keep in a warm place where it will not freeze. The sitting room

84	Yielded 87.20 bushels per acre.
92	Yielded 84.11 bushels per acre.
77	Yielded 83.03 bushels per acre.
25	Yielded 82.48 bushels per acre.
70	Yielded 81.14 bushels per acre.
64	Yielded 80.66 bushels per acre.
21	Yielded 80.36 bushels per acre.
96	Yielded 80.23 bushels per acre.

This record illustrates very clearly the great difference in the producing powers of different ears. Some ears produced more than six times as many broken stalks as others. Other ears seemed to be predisposed to barrenness. For example, ear No. 19 gave 79 barren stalks while ear 83 gave only 6. The variation in the number of suckers was still more striking, ear 37 giving 106 suckers while ear 75 was entirely free.

Ears 47 and 83 (47 is not given in this table) are also very interesting by way of comparison. The rows planted from these two ears had practically the same number of stalks. Ear 47 produced 55 bushels per acre. It had 67 barren stalks, 244 broken stalks, and 62 suckers. Ear 83 yielded 76 bushels, had only 6 barren stalks, 130 broken stalks, and 5 suckers. The figures illustrate clearly the wide will perhaps be the most suitable place. The kernels will germinate in four to six days. Then remove the cover carefully to avoid misplacing the kernels in the squares (a piece of thin cloth placed over the kernels before the covering is put on, will prevent the kernels from sticking to the upper cover). Examine the kernels in the germinating box; for example, the kernels in squares Nos. 1, 11, and 20, have failed to grow and some of the kernels in squares 2, 3, 4, 9, 12, and 15 have refused to grow or show weak germination. The corresponding ears should be rejected. The ears showing weak germination should be treated the same as worthless ears.

Maximum yields can be obtained only by using the best seeds of the best varieties. These seeds can be secured only by careful selection and breeding. Last spring the most perfect kernels from 102 of our best ears of corn were planted in rows side by side, each row being planted with kernels from a single ear. At husking-time each row was harvested by itself and the record of yield, barren stalks, broken stalks, suckers, etc., of each individual ear was thus secured.

The following table shows the wide variations in the results obtained from the different ears:

72	Yielded 87.49 bushels per acre.

range in two ears, not only in producing power but also in their tendencies to reproduce inherited qualities.

The following diagram shows the yield in bushels per acre of the ten highest yielding rows in our breeding plats:

Ear No.	Bu. Per A.
75	Yielded 90.56 bus. per acre . . . . .90.56
93	Yielded 36.06 bus. per acre . . . . .36.06
77	Gave 96.5 p. c. of a stand . . . . .83.03
73	Gave 43 p. c. of a stand . . . . .36.27
54	Gave 258 broken stalks, or 64 per cent. .67.52
85	Gave 41 broken stalks, or 8 per cent . . .76.57
19	Gave 79 barren stalks, or 21.5 per cent. .50.50
83	Gave 6 barren stalks, or 1.5 per cent. . .75.85
37	Gave 106 suckers, or 21 p. c. . . . .77.93
75	Gave 0 suckers . . . . .90.56

The five lowest yielding rows and the average of the entire one hundred and two breeding rows are also shown:

93	Yielded 36.06 bushels per acre.
73	Yielded 36.27 bushels per acre.
86	Yielded 42.31 bushels per acre.
74	Yielded 42.38 bushels per acre.
80	Yielded 43.24 bushels per acre.

The average of the ten highest yielding rows was 83.71 bushels per acre; the average of the five poorest yielding rows was 40.05 bushels per acre. The 102 rows grown yielded on an average 67.09 bushels.

PUNISHMENT BY BOYCOTT.

Of all the strange developments which have followed Russian attempts to put down and hold down the uneasy peoples of the Caucasus, says Mr. Villari, the author of Fire and Sword in the Caucasus, none has been more striking than the return of some of the people to the simplest forms of popular government, totally ignoring the despotism which they can not shake off.

"At Ozurgety, a pleasant little town of eight thousand Gurians, on the bank of the Notaneby River, this has taken the form of a 'town meeting,' in some ways not unlike that of New England. Before this general assembly, called the Narodny Sud, all matters of public interest are brought. The Russian officials are absolutely ignored. Every dispute between peasants, every offense against law or custom, is brought before this town meeting, and there discussed and decided. There is no appeal or obedience to the Russian court. All the Russian penalties have been discarded, and but a single punishment is inflicted against those guilty of misdemeanor or crime. They are boycotted by their fellows for longer or shorter periods; and as the town is absolutely unanimous, the person so 'sent to Coventry,' quickly feels the severity of the punishment.

"It happened during Mr. Villari's visit that a man thus punished appealed for relief. He had been found guilty of a peculiarly serious offense, of which nevertheless, it was doubtful if a Russian court would have taken cognizance. In fact, although he was a rich merchant of middle age, he was well known to be an old offender.

"The Narodny Sud sentenced him to perpetual boycott, the severest punishment it could impose.

A few weeks of isolation had broken him down. He appeared before the assembly at Ekhadia, a little distance out of town. There, under broad trees on a green lawn, some two hundred peasants were gathered to administer justice. There were no judges, no jury, no prosecutor. Every person, man, woman and child, had an equal vote. The merchant, tall, gray-haired, melancholy, addressed the meeting of his townsmen.

"'I admit my sin,' he said, sadly. 'I admit the justice of the punishment. But I am deeply penitent, and swear in the future to lead a reformed life. The sufferings I have undergone since you boycotted me have been so great, so unbearable, that it would have been better if you had killed me outright. I am lost, ruined beyond hope, unless you relent; and I have come to ask you to forgive me and withdraw the boycott.'

"The discussion which followed was long and full of deep feeling. Some feared he would quickly relapse if forgiven, while others maintained that a rescued man would be lost if further punished.

"At last a ballot was decided on. A peasant was placed at a table in a nearby church, at the foot of the altar, and one by one the members of the meeting entered and declared their voice. By a large majority the boycott was lifted and the merchant restored to their fellowship.

"So powerful has been this means of maintaining order that the Russian governor has not disturbed it. The court-house windows are boarded up, the peasants pay no taxes, and all public work is done by volunteer bands of peasants under their own leaders. But under the quiet there is determination, and it is probable the Tsar will legalize the Narodny Sud.

"'If they wish to restore the old form of government,' said an aged farmer, 'they must kill the last man of us. Till then we will resist.'"—Youth's Companion, February 28, 1907.

GIFT OF TONGUES.

DENVER, February 16.—This city has been the home of some strange religions and some bizarre manifestations of religious belief. The Schlatter incident of 1895 still causes people to talk and wonder, and the Sun Worshipers of two years ago are not forgotten. But the strangest claim yet made by any body of believers is that of the Christian Assembly Church members, who say they have been granted the apostolic gift of many tongues, and that they can speak all kinds of languages which they have never before heard.

They assert that a great majority of the six hundred languages in existence to-day have been used by their members in their little church on Welton Street under the leadership of divine inspiration.

They claim that the distinctive mark of this power is the fact that no one receiving the gift can use it for any other than purposes of exhortation. Frequently the inspired person speaks in a language totally unknown to himself, they say, and makes an exhortation understood only by some one of a foreign nationality who happens to be in the audience.

Occasionally one of the members will speak in a language unknown to any one present. As a result of this wonderful power they expect to send abroad missionaries to China and India. . . .

Mr. Farr furnishes this description of how the gift came:

"Last August a body of Christian people was holding a camp-meeting in this city, and during the meetings two Christian women came to us from Los Angeles. They said they were going to Jerusalem to preach the gospel in Arabic, as God had given them that gift and also the gift of other languages. Many of our members began to seek it for themselves. After the public meetings closed we all went into a separate room and waited for the Lord to do to us as he did to the apostle at Pentecost, when he gave them the gift of languages.

"The first manifestation of the presence of the Holy Ghost was when people began to tremble and fall down and then there came a rushing of great winds. This is just the same thing that happened according to the Bible on the day of Pentecost. Very soon several of our members began to speak in different languages and others interpreted what they said. No less than forty people, men, women, and children, have received this wonderful gift.

"As for myself, I can not tell anything more about my receiving the gift than this: My throat began to swell and I was compelled to remove my cravat. While I opened my mouth under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, I began to speak in a foreign language which I had never studied or heard spoken, and I have spoken under this wonderful power many times since."—Exchange.

SHOWS POWER OF GOSPEL.

"Forty years ago one could buy a nice juicy fat man in the Fiji Islands for the nominal sum of two dollars. Think of it, ladies," said the explorer, William Edgar Geil, in an address before the afternoon meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association yesterday. He showed the contrast the gospel had wrought in the lives of the cannibals and other native races whose homes he has visited in his five-year investigation of the results of the missionary efforts among the lower peoples.

"And now you couldn't even buy a skinny man, hardly fit for soup, for five million dollars in those islands. Such a remarkable rise in the value of personal property was never before noted in all the annals of business life. You can figure out the yearly percentage of increase for yourself."

The address upon the subject, "Cannibalism before and after taking," was a revelation of sound sense and compelling wit. The cause of foreign missions was boosted in the minds of the audience of men. The speaker told of the kind of men that had tried to convince him of the uselessness of foreign missions, characterizing them with an invective at times fiercely destructive. He spoke for an hour and ten minutes, but scarcely a person in the audience felt the passage of time, so keen was the interest throughout.

"I'll tell you how I came to believe in missions," said Mr. Geil. "It was while I was on a visit to my friend Bennett, in the Fiji Islands. Bennett got up a war-dance for my benefit. Out of the hut of the chieftain came two score of the finest specimens of brown manhood that I had ever seen. They were dressed in beautiful suits of cocoanut-oil. Faster and faster grew the wild dance. Finally the whole troupe of men leaped into the air and came straight for me. Their wild yells sent to my bones a chill I had never felt before. 'Bennett, oh, Bennett,' I shouted, 'are those fellows converted?' 'Yes, they have been converted,' he answered. Right there I decided I was in favor of foreign missions, and I imagine that if all our little, green, destructive infidels were put in a similar situation they would stop their blatant yelping and believe in the humanizing influence of the gospel as I believed it there.

"If I were an orator I could tell you things about the doings of the islanders before the time of the entrance of Christianity that would make you shudder and possibly would be too strong for the weaker of you. I could tell you of the execution of prisoners by the giant savage who served the last king of the cannibal islands in the double capacity of jailer and chief. I have often seen the huge block of stone on which the victims, over whom the savage priest had said a pagan blessing, had their brains crushed by a single blow of the giant. Then the priest would scoop up the warm human brains in the half of a cocoanut and gulp them down as a sacrifice. That's what things were like there before the coming of the great and good men who changed the lives of all the islanders. And yet we hear people who, in their ignorance of actual conditions and the seclusion and safety of their parlors, disparage the work of the best class of people on the face of the earth.

"I tell you the war dance was a sight. The fine warriors clad in the clothes that Nature gave them, made us pale people look like animated clothes-racks.

"Speaking of color, do you know that ours is the worst color on the face of the earth and we are proudest of it? You're not white; you just think you are. If you think you are white just look in the mirror when you go home and compare your face with your shirt collar. I'm for the people, yellow, brown, black, red, and all other colors. I think the nice, rich color of a Chinaman is the finest color on earth."—Register and Leader, February 25, 1907.

Selected Poetry

The Spirit Royal.

When the sun shines down
In our town,

It comes in broad, bold beams,
The brown hills tremble in its light.
The road winds up to left or right
And o'er the hill top goes from sight
Like twisted blackened seams
And people saunter through the town
So happy when the sun shines down.

When the rain comes down
In our town,

It comes as come it may
From any point of compass far
In any time of moon or star.

We call no bus, we take no car
If it be night or if it be day.

We bless the rain that cometh down
And trudge along across the town.

A quarter century winds have blown
On our town,

Blown soft or warm or fierce and cold.
The springs have starred the meadows blue,
The nights have gemmed them with their dew
And golden rod and gentians too

Proclaimed the summer old;
But the Spirit Royal ne'er has flown,
For one brief season from our town.

Wide gardens here the poor have sown
In our town,

The happy, honest, kindly poor,
For them the fruit-trees bud and bear;
And blue grass springs in quiet air,
Here cool, clear waters all may share.

When wild birds sing beside the door,
Sweet comfort for the sad and lone.
We seek to give in our town.

We seldom see a real frown
In our town.

Though none may do exactly right.
We know each other's joys and tears,
We've trembled at each other's fears,
And each with each still count the years.

We've worked by day, and watched by night
Beside a brother's suffering one,
Not yet enough for our town.

There's moneyed king nor drunken clown
In our town;

The schools are here—the social heart;
We greet each other on the way,
To duties crowding every day,
And truthfully and freely say

We are glad to do our little part,
To win a justified renown
For peace and virtue in our town.

When fire turns hope to ashes brown
In our town,

The ruined pile holds not our all,
We sound no bugle of retreat,
But with quick tread of willing feet
All hearts athrob to one strong beat,
In marching ranks we quickly fall.

New hope goes up where old went down,
A busy place is our town.

To-night we call rich blessings down
On our town.

Whate'er her future page may hold,
The Spirit Royal, that sustains
Another in his loss and gain;
And bears with him life's griefs and pains,
Makes rich and poor one flock, one fold.

We ask this be the fairest crown
That fits and fashions our town.

—Vida E. Smith, in Independent Patriot.

The Woods.

I love the jolly woods, the dear old woods,
The woods of vernal green;
They crown the queen of May with flowers gay,
And cool June's brow serene.

Upon their topmost boughs the birdies sing
Of love and joy and peace,
Of many happy chimes, left far behind
Since Winter's reign did cease.

I love the autumn woods, the lovely woods,
With leaves of every hue,
'Tho' they of summer say, "'Tis gone away," They're beautiful to view,

Within their hollow trunks, the squirrels chirp
And hide their nuts away,
Against the time at last, when winter's blast
Permits no work or play.

I love the winter woods, the somber woods,
With creaking boughs and bare,
For tenderly they keep their buds asleep,
Till opens springtime, fair.

Beneath the fallen leaves, the violets
Await the spring's warm breeze,
When forth they'll trooping come—yes, every one,
Beneath the budding trees. * * *

The Reinstatement of Aunt Electa.

Aunt Electa went slowly into the kitchen. The sitting-room was in precise order for the day, the floor swept, the chairs dusted, the soft cushions nicely adjusted, and every paper neatly folded and piled away. The clock ticked soberly away on the shelf. Up-stairs, Aunt Electa's bed had been aired and made, and there was absolutely nothing to be done. In the kitchen, Ann Eliza, Aunt Electa's married niece, stepped briskly around. There was a big pan of cherry preserves simmering on the stove, and in the mixing-bowl Ann Eliza had already creamed some butter and sugar.

"Going to make a cake, Ann Eliza?" asked Aunt Electa eagerly.

Aunt Electa was small and withered, but her eyes were still bright and there was nothing about her step as yet to indicate the decrepitude of age. Without a home, she lived with her niece, Ann Eliza Sales. But Ann Eliza was a capable housekeeper; help of her kind was scorned, and instead of keeping Aunt Electa happy and contented by permitting her to do the small tasks she so delighted in, Ann Eliza ruthlessly banished her to the sitting-room, where she kept solitary vigil with a sad heart, feeling pitifully her uselessness and dependence.

Aunt Electa did not care to sew or knit much after the fashion of most people. It made her nervous, she said, and hurt her eyes, but she did like to get into the kitchen. In her old home, Aunt Electa had been a fine cook and the desire still clung to her. She loved the work of the kitchen and every culinary triumph she achieved was to her a real victory and undisputed joy. But in her kitchen, Ann Eliza held absolute sway, allowing no helper. Ann Eliza was a tall, keen-eyed, determined woman of forty, and she had no children. Besides her other niece, Mattie, who had gone out West, Aunt Electa had no other relatives. Aunt Electa's heart had so clung to Mattie—Mattie, so good, so true and loving, but Mattie's husband had fallen ill and the doctor had banished him without delay into the bracing breezes and rarified air of a higher altitude. After the bustling of her own home, Aunt Electa had planned to live with Mattie, but Mattie was poor and Ann Eliza well-to-do, and now Mattie had gone so far away she could not hope to be with her again. Mattie had babies, too—twins, now two years old—and the worst pang of Aunt Electa's heart had come in parting with them.

"How far the mind can travel in a moment of time! What a combination of circumstances will surge through the mind as momentous questions confront us."

The kitchen was hot and Ann Eliza was a trifle cross. "Yes, I'm going to make a cake," she returned.

"White cake?" timidly ventured Aunt Electa.

"White cake?" no," snapped Ann Eliza. "Can't a person make something besides white cake? Cup cake is good enough for me. You think, Aunt Electa, because you make good cake anybody else ought to. Cake-making was never my forte."

"I'd be glad to bake all your cake, Ann Eliza, if you'd only let me," replied Aunt Electa eagerly.

For all over the community in which she lived, Aunt Electa's fame as a cake-baker had spread and flourished. Her white cake especially had a celebrity all its own. No one could make it with her success—so moist, so firm, so white.

"Well, I won't," answered Ann Eliza decisively. "You'd better run along out of this heat, Aunt Electa."

Just then a round-faced boy in overalls stopped at the screen door.

"I've got a letter for your aunt, Mrs. Sales," he said. "You know you told me to stop for the mail. This was all there was."

"For me?" Aunt Electa's hand trembled as Ann Eliza threw it over. She looked through her glasses at the postmark. "It's from Mattie," she said breathlessly.

She hurried away into the sitting-room before she opened it. Ann Eliza grumbled a little as she broke the eggs into the bowl. "She thinks more of Mattie's little finger than she does of my whole body," she declared. "It beats all how ungrateful some folks are, 'specially poor kin. Here I am a-givin' her a home, won't let her do a lick of work, and yet she ain't satisfied. I will not have her messin' in my kitchen; that's all there is to it."

In the quiet stillness of the sitting-room, Aunt Electa opened her precious letter.

"My very dear Aunt Electa," it ran: "Ben is so much better that we have started a small bakery. Everybody here is anxious to get home cooking, and thanks to you, I know pretty much how to go about it. The babies are good as gold and let me accomplish a great deal. I can manage pies and bread, but I can't make cake like you. You know how much I love you, and always will, and if you want to come out and live with me, I'll be only too grateful. You could do just what you liked in my home and stop when you liked; but cake like yours would sell and you could get good prices too. I inclose you money for a ticket in case you want to come. If you don't care to come, keep it anyway. It is yours to do with as you please, and I earned it myself. You would be surprised to find how well we are prospering and how strong Ben is. Of course we have to work, but work isn't the worst thing in the world. Do you want to help? Love to Ann Eliza and much to yourself."

"Always your affectionate niece,

"MATTIE."

Aunt Electa looked at the magic slip of pale blue paper. "Could it be that some one in the world really wanted and needed her? Could it be that she might escape the terrible fate of doing nothing in Ann Eliza's silent, speckless, childless home? Could it be that God had opened to her a place of usefulness in her old age? Was she really to be reinstated in the work she loved—the beating of eggs, the measuring of flour, the careful blending of sugar and butter, the whole terminating in snowy loaves of cake? That was the work she was best fitted for, and to think that Mattie needed her."

"Well," said Ann Eliza, brusquely coming in, "what and Mattie want—money?"

Aunt Electa looked up. "No," she replied happily. "She sent me some this time. She wants me to come out, Ann Eliza, and help her. She's started a bakery and needs me. She thinks too, my white cake would sell."

"And you're going?" cried Ann Eliza incredulously. "At your age—your time of life?"

"Going?" repeated Aunt Electa smilingly. "Indeed I am, and I'm not so very old either, Ann Eliza. Yes, I shall start to-morrow."—Selected.

Prayer Union.

I am sorely afflicted with acute stomach trouble of long standing, and earnestly request the prayers of the Sisters' prayer union, Friday, March 22, 1907, that I may be healed, and get out and preach the gospel. Would like they fast for me if they will.

Respectfully,

C. J. SPURLOCK.

Dear Herald: We are a little band of Saints, but own our place of worship. We have Sunday-school at ten o'clock every Sunday, preaching at eleven, except once a month we have sacrament-meeting, and at half past seven on Sunday evening we have Bible-reading. We also have prayer-meeting on Thursday night. We do not have very many in attendance, yet the Lord has always kept his promise to be with two or three who have met in his name.

For the past three weeks as many of us as could have met from house to house, and studied a chapter in the Book of Mormon, nearly every night not occupied by other services; and we all feel that we have been blessed in so doing. We began with the first chapter of the book, and each reads a verse, and then we talk about all the points it contains, and it is very interesting. We open the exercises with singing and prayer, and close with a song and benediction. Our next lesson is 2 Nephi 9. It is creating a desire among us to know more about the book. According to section 83, paragraph 8, of Doctrine and Covenants, we are commanded not only to say those things which are written, but to do them. I believe we will have to know what is contained therein, if we say or do accordingly. Therefore it becomes us to diligently study these books. Here as elsewhere there are some foolish virgins, who are not trying to fill their lamps with the oil of righteousness; but the majority are striving to prepare themselves to meet the Bridegroom. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

BELLE WILLIAMS.

DES MOINES, Iowa, March 4, 1907.

Editor Herald: Please note change of my permanent address from 1211 East Twelfth Street, to 1205 Filmore Street. We expect to move in our lately purchased home this week, the Lord willing.

There was a spiritual feast enjoyed by the Saints in the city yesterday, at which time the gifts of faith, healing, prophesy, wisdom, and testimony were manifest. The ordination of Bro. Ray Chandler to the office of elder was accompanied by the power and authority of the priesthood of the Son of God, and at night he began his work in that calling.

There has never (to my knowledge) been such sickness experienced among the Saints at any other time or place as in this city during the last three months. Many of the sick have recovered, although weakened by the long-continued illness. Several are yet sick, but on the road to recovery, among whom are the members of my family. This has prevented me from doing but little for the last ten days or two weeks.

With few exceptions the Saints in the branch are making spiritual progress, and the prospect grows brighter for a good work to be done in the city the coming summer. Many calls to come and give information concerning the work we represent are received; more than we can fill at times on account of so much sickness. Several strangers drop into the services on the Lord's day, and all express themselves as edified and instructed and some quite surprised at the support the scriptures give for our faith.

While at times we feel that the work is moving slowly, more so than we would wish, yet we conclude that it is making as rapid progress as consistent with the efforts made, considering the general indifference of both Saint and sinner. I long to see a still greater endowment given to the ministry; but I do not expect this until the church is purged, the dead members severed, and the withering ones revived. There must and will be a general awakening of the church to the purifying of the body that the Holy Spirit may dwell there in its fullness, and not by measure, as was meted out to him whose body the church is. The Saints need spiritual instruction. I find that the large portion of the mistakes made by the Saints is because of erroneous traditions and the divided ideas of the ministry upon social and personal righteousness. Jesus said that except our righteousness exceed the righteousness of the rest of the religious teachers of the age we shall not inherit the kingdom of God. Too many give sanction to certain conditions relating to personal and social righteousness by saying that "It is not very harmful." Well, if it is acknowledged to be harmful at all, it is sufficient to require repentance. God can not look upon sin, a transgression of law, with the least degree of allowance. It is only those who are "led by the Spirit of God who are the sons of God." One should keep the principle of pure religion ever in mind, and "keep himself unspotted from the world"; for he that loveth the world the love of the Father is not in him.

With brightening hope I am laboring for the redemption of Zion by devotedly pleading for personal purity, and trying to set such an example as one who represents the Lord Jesus should.

J. F. MINTUN.

NORTH DEER ISLE, Maine, February 27, 1907.

Editors Herald: I have just concluded an interesting series of meetings at Little Deer Isle. From February 3 to 17, I preached eighteen times. The attendance and interest was even better than we had anticipated. Two young people decided to take up their cross and follow in the way of life everlasting, and they were baptized. It requires courage to go into the water this time of the year. We stepped in off the great thick ice cakes along the shore—the water was very cold but the candidates went in without fear and came out without harm. Quite a large crowd had gathered; some apparently to see something unusual, but in that I think they returned home disappointed. This makes eight young people that I have baptized this conference year, and we hope they may continue faithful unto death, that they may receive a crown of life.

During our meetings, at times we would change the usual order and previous to the preaching we would engage in prayer and testimony. We called for brief, earnest prayers, and for just a few words of testimony. This method was rather unusual to all; but was met with a generous response, and it did much good to both members and nonmembers. This gives every one the privilege to speak a word for the Master, and help to make the meeting enjoyable and successful. We would usually spend from twenty to thirty minutes in this way, and thus all would be prepared in spirit for the sermon which followed.

The Saints have worshiped there for several years in an old abandoned schoolhouse. This has done very well in times past, but now it is inadequate to accommodate the people, especially the Sunday-school. I felt moved to suggest a plan for the building of a new church. The brethren there had long realized the need of a better place. We called a meeting and organized a church building society. We secured pledges amounting to seven hundred and three dollars; and at a later meeting the treasurer of the society received one hundred and seventy-one dollars as part payment of the pledges.

We hope the good work will continue with unabated interest until a house of the Lord shall be erected as a monument to their faith and sacrifice.

W. E. LARUE.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, February 26, 1907.

Dear Herald: My year's labors in Southern Texas is nearly completed, and I am quite satisfied with the mission.

The green grass and winter gardens testify to the delight-someness of the season, although this place is colder than the region of Houston, where I have been mostly employed.

I meet with various nationalities in this cosmopolitan country—Jews, Armenians, Germans, French, and some settlements are mostly of people from the Northern States.

I visited Galveston recently, but did not preach any nearer to it than Lamarque, a village thirteen miles this side. From appearance, the new sea wall will never allow the disastrous rush of waters to be repeated.

Having been alone so much, the valuable aid of Elder S. S. Smith in December seemed like a pleasant dream. The parting I sensed with keenness.

Our pleasant district conference at San Antonio ended last night. I was happy to report four baptisms during the last month at Golden Rod, one of whom was immersed by moonlight, to let me off in time for the conference.

WM. H. MANNERING.

BURLINGTON, Colorado, March 4, 1907.

Editors Herald: We are having a very mild winter here, the thermometer registering two degrees below zero on the coldest morning. Farmers began sowing wheat about the middle of February.

We are waiting for Bro. Shupe to come and hold street-preaching services, which he expected to do when he left. Have heard nothing from Bro. W. H. Kelley with regard to getting us a preacher, as we requested him to respond in our last letter to the HERALD, not knowing his address.

Am much pleased with the HERALD. Its description of Bro. Evan's work in Toronto seems far out of the ordinary.

Am trying to make the link I make in the chain stronger, as suggested in the HERALD by a recent writer.

FRED B. SHUMATE.

PLEASANT GROVE, Utah, February 24, 1907.

Editors Herald: This pleasant Sabbath afternoon I will for the first time write to the columns of your precious paper, to express my feelings in this glorious work. I was received into this church of Jesus Christ by baptism the 7th inst. I was baptized by Bro. J. E. Vanderwood, and confirmed by Apostle Peter Anderson. I feel happy indeed that I was counted worthy to be numbered among the children of Christ; and hope to continue faithful unto the end. I have believed in this church for many years, but was unable to get the chance to join it before this time. I am sorely afflicted in my speech, but I believe it has been for my good, in turning me to God to ask him to relieve me, and show me the right path to take. And surely he has heard my callings to him, inasmuch that he has warned me and comforted me in dreams. Wherefore, my testimony is strong in this work. In answer to prayer, one night, he made manifest to me in a dream as follows: I thought that a servant of God received a revelation from God to me saying, "If you are faithful, and keep my commandments, you shall be cured." Well, this gave great courage to me, as I could not but believe in those words.

I have often thought of going to an institute for the cure of stammering, but have delayed it until now. And as I am now to go to-morrow and start treatment, I hope and trust in the Lord Jesus Christ that he will strengthen me in faith, and will-power, that I may be able to speak better, if it so be God's will, after I return. And for this cause I now write to our precious paper, earnestly asking the faith and prayers of the Saints to this effect; that if it be God's will that I should be granted my desire, it may so be.

Your brother in Christ,

OSCAR PETERSON.

Dear Herald: It is with sadness that I read of the destruction of the home of the much-loved HERALD. I stopped in the midst of reading it to think of that nice large library and wonder if it were all gone. Though I never had the privilege of seeing it but once, it seemed of much value to me, and does this morning as a view of it comes before my vision, and I wonder how you will replace it. I desire to help what I can. I have been trying to earn and save a little to pay for the HERALD and Autumn Leaves. I do not feel as though I could get along without the HERALD, and I like to read the Autumn Leaves. I began again last year to take it for my youngest son and I do not wish to ever discontinue it again.

Yours in the faith,

ALTA JOICE.

XENIA, Illinois, February 24, 1907.

Dear Reader: I am glad to have the time and opportunity of writing a few words by the way of encouraging the Sunday-school workers to help raise funds for the erecting of the orphan's home. The Lord has commanded it to be built; therefore we should put forth an effort to gather together our means. Our Sunday-school children all want to help in the building of this home. And if we older ones will get up an entertainment and use all the children in the exercises of the program, they will feel that they are helping, and each little child will be asking his or her papa and mamma for a nickel or dime to help build this home for the children.

We have a home for the aged members of the church where they are cared for and have the privilege of being at church; what a grand thought! I often sing the song, "Don't forget the old folks." I am glad we do not forget them.

Now the Lord has commanded that a home be built for the children. Will we be willing to make the children happy? Just think of the poor little orphan children who are left motherless—left perhaps to fall in the hands of some one who takes no interest in their own future welfare and happiness. Therefore the little ones are taught nothing in regard to Christ their Savior, and how he was born in Bethlehem, a little babe; and how he grew to manhood, took the little children in his arms and blessed them; and how he suffered and died on the cross that we all might be saved. Thus they grow up in ignorance in regard to the duty they owe their Savior.

Our Sunday-school gave an entertainment last Wednesday night, the program consisting of recitations, dialogues, choir-singing, quartet, duet, etc., each member responding at the first call, and each performing his part well. The program was encouraging as well as uplifting. The house was well filled, seats all occupied and some standing in the aisle. Seeing the congregation was well pleased with the rendering of the program, the one in charge appointed four persons who passed down through the congregation to take a contribution. They marched up the aisle, their countenances wearing pleasant smiles, which showed that the collection was good. While the choir sang the money was counted; and nine dollars and fifty-two cents was reported, for which we feel amply repaid for all our trouble in training and drilling the children.

Yours for the truth,

MARTHA E. BING.

Conference Minutes.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.—District conference was held at San Bernardino, February 23 and 24, 1907, T. W. Williams presiding, assisted by C. W. Earle; Maggie Pankey, secretary. The district president read summary reports from the branches. Ministerial reports: C. W. Earle and William Gibson. Branches reporting: San Bernardino 267, Los Angeles 268, Newport 241. Bishop's agent's books show: Receipts, $4,891.59; expenditures, $3,721.01; Balance on hand January 1, 1907, $1,170.58; amount collected for the sanitarium, $223.36; for the orphans' home, $254.97; for the college $51.80. Delegates to General Conference: G. T. Griffiths, A. Carmichael, T. W. Williams, Maggie Pankey, F. M. Weld, George Wixom, Edgar Pankey, and A. E. Jones. In case of division they were instructed to cast a majority and minority vote. The following resolutions were presented and, after due consideration, adopted: Whereas, Southern California is one of the most inviting and promising fields for missionary work, and, whereas, the present missionary force have been materially handicapped from opening up new territory because of the demands made upon them as branch presidents, therefore be it resolved, that we petition the First Presidency and Twelve Apostles to materially increase our missionary force to admit of opening up the work where it has never gone before, pledging financial and moral support. 2. Resolved, that in view of the fact that the tent will be in operation during the coming summer, that each branch create a tent-fund, and that the third Sunday in each month be set apart as a day when collections can be made for this purpose and that the Bishop's agent be made custodian of this fund, subject to the order of the district president and secretary. 3. Resolved, that all elders and priests, not necessarily engaged in their respective branches on Sunday, report for action to the district president for filling regular appointments in various localities. 4. Whereas, Southern California District covers a wide area and possesses a large and ever increasing membership, and whereas, the district has the collection, handling, and disbursement of large sums of money, handling of real estate, appeal cases, etc., therefore be it resolved, that we respectfully call the attention of the Presidency of the church to the needs of our district, and request them to provide for a bishop in this district. 5. Whereas, the law provides that all large branches and districts may have patriarchs or evangelical ministers, and whereas, we have several large branches together with a very large scattered membership, and whereas Bro. Nelson Van Fleet, Sr., has been so situated and his health has been and is now so precarious as to preclude much traveling upon his part, therefore be it resolved, that we call the attention of the Quorum of Twelve to our needs and ask them to present the matter to the Almighty, looking to the appointment of one or more such ministers in our midst. 6. Whereas, we believe the removal of the HERALD Office from Lamoni, Iowa, would at this time work a material hardship and financial loss to many Saints who have located there, therefore be it resolved, that we look with disfavor upon any effort looking to the transfer to any point, unless so directed by inspiration, and we direct our delegates to vote accordingly. 7. Resolved, that it is the sense of this conference that the wine used in the sacrament should be unfermented and prepared by some member of the church, and retained in clean and tight receptacles until necessary for use. 8. Whereas, the present conference resolution on marriage and divorce is vague and not specific enough, and whereas, we feel there is a need of some decisive, clear-cut decision by the church on this much-mooted question, involving as it does the spiritual interests and action of many within our own district, therefore be it resolved, that we petition the General Conference to give such expression on this question as will enable us to honor the law of Christ, and at the same time do justice to all concerned." Adjourned to meet subject to the call of the district presidency, as to time and place. Maggie Pankey, secretary.

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.—Semi-annual conference convened with the Seattle Branch at 10.30 a. m., February 2, 1907, with William Johnson and D. W. Davis in the chair, and Frederick W. Holman, secretary. Beginning of business was the consideration of a resolution received from the Spokane District wherein they had, by such, added the counties of Kittitas, Yakima, and Klickitat to their district, now belonging to this, the Seattle and British Columbia District, which met with disfavor, unanimously. Branches reporting: Seattle, Roslyn, Castle Rock, Tacoma, New Westminster, British Columbia, Chilliwack, British Columbia, Nanaimo, British Columbia, and Vancouver, Washington, the two latter having been recently organized; on January 14, 1907, with twelve members and December 4, 1906, with eight members, respectively; all showing a total membership of 344, an increase of 25. Ministers reporting and present were William Johnson, N. C. Enge, D. W. Davis, John Kaler, P. W. Premo, E. Keeler, J. S. Rainey, A. W. Gorbitt, J. E. Rhoades, F. W. Holman, and a Bro. Hartnell. All district officers were re-elected for the coming year. Delegates chosen for General Conference were William Johnson, John Kaler, N. C. Enge, Blanch Henderson, Winter Hastings, G. T. Griffiths, George Thorburn, J. F. Lippincott, George M. Appleman, and D. W. Davis. It being deemed advisable, district officers were authorized to disorganize Castle Rock Branch, at their discretion, said officers being appointed as a committee to take in hand with advice and in accordance therewith, to be obtained from the presiding Bishop and missionary in charge, the disposition of said church property. Bishop's agent's report for past six months submitted, showing a balance on hand last report of $159.06; receipts, $811.74; expenditures, $553.58. Conference adjourned to meet at Seattle at the call of district officers, (the second Saturday and Sunday in August, 1907, having been decided upon).

POTTAWATTAMIE.—District conference met at Council Bluffs, at 10 a. m., Saturday, February 23, 1907. Presided over by R. McKenzie and Charles Fry. The secretary was assisted by J. A. Hansen. Branch reports: Boomer 61, Council Bluffs 283, Crescent 158, Fontanelle 30, Hazel Dell 62, North Star 136, Wheeler 50. Ministerial reports: J. Carlile baptized 2, M. M. Turpen, E. A. Stedman, Charles Fry baptized 1, J. Archer baptized 5, S. K. Sorensen, Senterlow Butler, R. McKenzie, Samuel Harding baptized 2, G. F. Walling, J. A. Hansen, D. Parish, C. B. Bardsley, D. K. Dodson; Priests S. W. Underwood, J. P. Christensen baptized 1, A. C. Riley, J. C. Lapworth, F. G. Hough baptized 7, C. C. Carson, W. C. McIntosh; Teachers P. W. Frederickson, Peter Olson, Jr., J. C. Adams, Levi O. Lentz; Deacon Alma A. Gaylord. S. K. Sorensen reported that he had left the district tent with S. Butler at Fontanelle. The district secretary reported the branch enrollment as 812; scattered, 83; total 895, including 1 patriarch, 2 high priests, 2 seventies, 18 elders, 24 priests, 14 teachers, 4 deacons. The twenty-six reports from the ministry gave a total of 354 sermons, 17 baptisms, 4 marriages, 8 children blessed, 196 sick administered to, 86 official visits. The Bishop's agent reported: Balance on hand last report, $516.76; received since, $544.65; total, $1,061.41; total disbursed, $863.54. Tent fund on hand last report, $4.08; returned by S. K. Sorensen, $14.54; total on hand, $18.62. Sanitarium fund on hand last report, $75.50; received since, $117.50; sent Bishop E. L. Kelley, $122.50; balance on hand, $70.50. Children's home fund on hand last report, $31.00; received since, $24.00; sent Bishop E. L. Kelley, $46.50; balance on hand, $8.50. Delegates to General Conference: R. McKenzie, Joshua and Josephine Carlile, J. A. and Annie Hansen, J. R. and Lizzie Lapworth, Charles Fry, D. Parish, J. C. Lapworth, Cora Scott, Thomas Scott, G. J. and Nellie Hansen, Samuel and Jane Harding, H. N. Hansen, S. K. Sorensen, and C. B. Bardsley. Delegates present authorized to cast a majority and minority vote in case of disagreement. Samuel Harding was elected (by ballot) district president for one year, choosing as aids by approval of conference, C. B. Bardsley and John A. Hansen; J. Charles Jensen was re-elected secretary. Conference adjourned to meet at 10 a. m., on Saturday, May 25, 1907, at Boomer, Iowa. J. Charles Jensen, secretary.

SOUTHERN WISCONSIN.—Conference convened February 23 and 24, 1907, at Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin, with the Wheatville Branch, W. A. McDowell and J. O. Dutton chosen to preside, with W. P. Robinson secretary pro tem. Statistical reports: East Delevan 74, Oregon 46, Janesville 48, Flora Fountain 80. Reports from Excelsior and Buckwheat Ridge were referred back for correction. Branch presidents reporting: W. P. Robinson, G. J. Brookover, A. A. Delap, and Arthur Davenport. Other officers reporting: Priests, J. C. Edgington and August Gratz; teachers, F. M. Ball, Frank Montgomery, Morris Montgomery, Phillip Davenport, and E. W. Dutton. Bishop's agent, C. C. Hoague, reported: Balance on hand, August 23, 1906, $41.80; receipts to February 20, 1907, $1,364.79; disbursements, $501.13. District treasurer, E. W. Dutton, reported: Balance on hand August 20, 1906, $4.62; receipts to February 19, 1907, $6.62; no disbursements. Reunion fund: Balance on hand, August 20, 1906, $7.69; receipts, $9.29; no disbursements. The request of the Religio for the use of one evening in the next reunion for a literary and musical program was granted. Delegates to General Conference: J. O. Dutton and wife, G. J. Brookover, W. P. Robinson, James Edgington, August Gratz, wife, and daughter Jessie, W. A. McDowell, C. E. Gaylord, C. B. Woodstock and wife, John Blackburn and wife, H. D. Stevens and daughter Nellie, and Arthur Davenport. The delegates present were instructed to cast the full vote of the district, and in case of division a majority and minority vote. The district secretary was authorized to call upon the several branch presidents to raise money as they may deem wisdom to help defray the expense of the missionary delegates to General Conference. Adjourned to meet the last Saturday and Sunday in connection with the reunion held at Madison, next fall.

CLINTON.—District conference convened at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, March 2 and 3, 1907. I. N. White and J. W. Paxton chosen to preside. Branches reporting: Coalhill 67, Richhill 152, Veve 101, Taberville 49, Nevada 92, Walker 18, Eldorado Springs 144, Ft. Scott 47, Lowry City 95, Wheatland 84. Ministry reporting: Elders George Jenkins, J. W. Paxton, G. W. Beebe, A. C. Silvers, A. C. Lloyd, S. C. Andes, Wm. Waterman, W. H. Lowe, T. R. White, A. I. Roberts, C. H. Athey, D. W. Palmer; Priests, I. W. Roberts, A. S. Leeper, A. T. Higdon, S. C. Williams, Samuel Rusaw; Deacon W. M. Dukes. Delegates elected to General Conference: R. T. Walters, S. C. Andes, A. C. Silvers, J. P. Seibert, Sadie Dempsey, George Jenkins, Samuel Rusaw, L. A. Lyon, Sr. L. A. Lyon, Ellen Ross, J. C. Budd, Fern Lyon, Sarah Billyville. Those present empowered to cast full vote, and in case of division to cast majority and minority vote. Bishop's agent reported: Balance on hand due agent last report, 4c; received, $375.62; expended, $373.53. Treasurer of tent committee reported: On hand last report, $10.06; received, $15.00; total $25.06; unpaid subscriptions, $46.50. Next conference will be held at Veve, June 22 and 23, 1907. A. C. Silvers, secretary, Walker, Missouri.

SOUTHWESTERN OREGON.—Conference met February 23, 1907, at 10 a. m., in the Saints' chapel at Myrtlepoint, Oregon, D. Giles presiding. Officers reporting: Elder DeW. Carpenter; Priests F. W. Dygert, H. Hunt, A. J. Mays; Teacher A. Corson. Branches reporting: Bandon 63, Myrtlepoint 40, Pleasant Hill 27. The former district president, D. E. Stitt, having removed from the district and having sent his formal resignation, Elder DeWayne Carpenter was elected president of the district and D. Giles sustained as vice-president; Sr. Daisy Short, secretary, and Amos Corson, treasurer. Delegates to General Conference: G. T. Griffiths, E. H. Smith, Charles Hunt, F. W. Dygert, and Frances L. Keeler. The delegate or delegates being present to cast the entire vote of the district. On Sunday, the 24th, at 11 in the forenoon, the chapel was dedicated to the Lord; the sermon and dedicatory prayer by Elder E. Keeler. A gift of a beautiful pulpit and bookcase combined had been made to the Myrtlepoint Branch and Sunday-school by William Mast, a son of Sr. Charlotte Mast, made of the beautiful and expensive myrtle-wood, which, with our new organ, was also given to the service of the Lord. The chapel was nicely decorated with trailing wreaths and festoons of ivy, and organ and pulpit literally covered with flowers gathered from the yards of the Saints where flowers bloom all the winter in this part of Oregon.

Conference adjourned until the call of the president at our next reunion, to be held at Myrtlepoint during the summer. Frances L. Keeler, Myrtlepoint, Oregon.

OKLAHOMA.—Semi-annual conference convened at the brick church, near Seiling, February 16, 1907. Elder F. A. Smith, chosen to preside, assisted by R. M. Maloney; Hubert Case, secretary pro tem. Elders reporting, R. M. Maloney, J. E. Yates, Hubert Case, J. Scott, O. A. Bender, and C. H. Blakesley; Priests F. M. Hancock, A. J. Bly, H. K. Rowland; Teachers B. F. Wright and G. M. Moore; Deacon J. M. Volgamore. Branches reporting: Piedmont, Oak Grove, and Canadian Center. Delegates to General Conference: F. A. Smith, R. M. Maloney, J. E. Yates, Hubert Case, Alice M. Case, W. M. Aylor, H. E. Moler, J. F. Grimes, J. H. Baker, H. N. Hansen, O. A. Bender, Christopher Plain. Moved that the delegates be instructed to vote for the HERALD Office to be located at Lamoni, Iowa. Moved as a substitute that in case of a division the delegates be instructed to cast a majority and minority vote. Substitute carried. At his own request, Elder J. E. Montague was released from the office of assistant district president, and J. E. Yates was elected in his stead. On motion, and after discussion the Seiling Branch was disorganized; the property now held by the branch was turned over to the district officers to be held for the church. Letters of removal were ordered to be granted to members of the Seiling Branch, who desire them. A committee consisting of the district president, Bishop's agent, and secretary of the district, was appointed to audit books of treasurer of said branch. Conference adjourned to meet on Wednesday during the reunion at Ripley, Oklahoma, in July, 1907. Alice M. Case, clerk.

IDAHO.—Conference convened at Eightmile, Idaho, February 23, 1907, H. Grimmett and S. D. Condit chosen to preside; A. J. Layland, secretary. Branches reporting: Dingle-dell, Hagerman, Teton, Cedrine, Malad, Eightmile, and Grove City. Elders reporting: S. D. Condit baptized 1, A. A. Baker, A. J. Layland baptized 5, J. D. Stead, E. C. Briggs, H. Grimmett, A. Hendrickson, and W. F. Glavner, W. H. Kelley reporting by letter; Priests: L. G. Holloway and George Sorter. Bishop's agent, E. E. Richards for the southern part of the district, reported: On hand last report, $4.50; received, $48; expenditures, $52.50. The following resolution was presented and carried: Resolved, that it is the sense of this conference that the missionary force of this district is entirely inadequate to the necessities of the mission, and be it further resolved, that there be a committee of three appointed by the presiding officer, to petition the president of the apostles, William H. Kelley, to use his best efforts to have the missionary force increased as much as possible. Delegates to General Conference: S. D. Condit, J. W. Condit, Millie Condit, Julia A. Condit, A. J. Layland, J. D. Stead, L. G. Holloway, A. A. Baker, Lena Christensen, Mrs M. M. Jones, Martha Jones, and Agnes B. Farnsworth. Delegates authorized to cast majority and minority vote, in case of division. Adjourned to meet at call of district president.

EASTERN IOWA.—Conference convened with Baldwin Branch, Saturday and Sunday, February 23 and 24. F. B. Farr and James McKiernan presiding; district secretary chosen as secretary of conference assisted by Mrs. L. E. Hills. Branch reports: Baldwin 26, Fulton 68, Clinton 60, Oran Center 50, Marion 16, Muscatine 25, Green Valley 42. John Heide, Bishop's agent and district treasurer, reported. Reports audited and found correct. District tent report approved. Ministry reporting: Elder James McKiernan, J. B. Wildermuth, L. E. Hills, Albert Welch, Fred B. Farr, W. B. Weston, Jesse F. Rulon, John Heide, C. G. Dykes, Warren Turner; Priests L. N. Joy, L. B. Moore, D. L. Palsgrove, Edwin Lowe, Jr., E. W. Voelpel, J. W. Wilson; Teacher W. N. Potter. Petition from the Clinton Branch was read, asking the ordination of E. W. Voelpel to the office of elder. It was accepted unanimously and he was ordained at the afternoon prayer-meeting Sunday, by James McKiernan and Warren Turner. District officers elected: President, L. E. Hills; assistant president, F. B. Farr; secretary, Mrs H. S. Harris; treasurer, John Heide, who was also sustained as Bishop's agent; L. E. Hills was also sustained as district historian. Delegates to General Conference: J. B. Wildermuth, Ed Lowe, Jr., Mrs. Mary Hale, Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Farr, Mr. and Mrs. John Heide, Mrs. Ida Johnson, L. E. Hills, Mr. and Mrs. Orrill Green, Miss Ada Wright, Warren Turner, James McKiernan. Delegates present to cast full delegate vote of district and in case of division majority and minority vote. The remark was heard that the work in the Eastern Iowa district was looking up, as the last three conferences have been above the average and the prayer-meetings were marked by the Spirit's presence. At the afternoon prayer-meeting hall was crowded, and a splendid feeling prevailed; and it was remarked that the testimonies, of which thirty were given, seemed to be directed to those not of our faith, and some were noticed apparently deeply moved. Bro. and Sr. Walter Lowe were baptized, and were confirmed at this meeting. Conference adjourned to meet with Green Valley Branch near Onslow, Iowa, August 24 and 25, 1907. Mrs. H. S. Harris, secretary.

ALABAMA.—Conference of the Alabama district met with Lone Star Branch, February 16, 1907, at 10.30 a. m. T. C. Kelley was chosen to preside, J. R. Harper, secretary pro tem. Branches reporting: Lone Star 135, Pleasant Hill 227. Elders reporting: T. C. Kelley and J. R. Harper; Priests A. G. Booker and A. A. Weaver. Tent committee reported not having done anything, but hoped to do something in the future. F. A. Smith, J. M. Stubbart, and T. C. Kelley were appointed delegates to General Conference. Time and place of next conference left with the district president. M. S. Wiggins, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

NORTHERN WISCONSIN.—District Sunday-school association convened at Valley Junction, Wisconsin, Friday, February 15, 1907, W. P. Robinson presiding, Bro. Archie Hook, secretary, pro tem. District treasurer's report read as follows: Total receipts, 93c; in treasury $3.78. Verbal report by Bro. L. O. Wildermuth as to condition of Searles Prairie Sunday-school: condition good. Verbal report by Bro. Edwards as to condition of Valley Junction Sunday-school: condition improving. The following officers were elected. Superintendent, W. P. Robinson; assistant superintendent, L. O. Wildermuth; secretary, Archie Hook; treasurer, J. A. McGinnis; librarian, Sr. Ivy Fisher. Delegates elected to General Convention as follows: A. L. Whiteaker, W. P. Robinson, L. O. Wildermuth, J. O. Dutton, J. W. Wight, S. E. Livingston, F. Hackett, J. W. Hooker, M. O. Shedd, E. L. Mason, A. Johnston, J. F. Thompson. Adjourned to meet at call of district superintendent Archie Hook, secretary, Miner, Wisconsin.

IDAHO.—Sunday-school convention convened at Eightmile, February 22, 1907, with Julia A. Condit in the chair, assisted by S. D. Condit. A. J. Layland, secretary. Reports of district officers were had. Reports of Malad, Eightmile, Cedrine, and Oxford. Officers elected: Julia A. Condit, superintendent; Stephen Larsen, assistant superintendent; A. J. Layland, secretary. Delegates to General Convention: S. D. Condit, W. J. Condit, Millie Condit, Julia A. Condit, A. J. Layland, J. D. Stead, L. G. Holloway, and A. A. Baker. Delegates attending General Convention were authorized to cast majority and minority vote in case of division. Adjourned to meet day previous, and at the place of next Idaho District Conference.

LAMONI.—Stake Sunday-school and Religio association on Thursday and Friday, February 21 and 22, 1907, held their annual convention for election of officers for ensuing year, and election of delegates to the General Conventions. Three sessions were devoted to discussions, reading of papers, recitation, music, etc.; one prayer-service and two business-sessions. Election of officers for Sunday-school as follows: Superintendent, J. F. Garver, assistant superintendent, R. T. Willey; secretary, Nellie Anderson; treasurer, John Lovell; librarian, Eliza Chase. One hundred and fifteen delegates chosen. The Religio officers: President, Roy Young; vice-president, D. L. Morgan; secretary, Eliza Chase; treasurer, W. E. Shakespeare; librarian, Flora Scott. Forty-eight delegates chosen. A committee was appointed on resolutions of condolence in behalf of our former officer, Sr. Alice Thorburn. The committee reported as follows: "Resolutions of Condolence: The Sunday-school and Religio associations of the Lamoni Stake in convention assembled hereby express their realization of the loss they have sustained in the removal from this life of our beloved sister, Alice Thorburn. In token of the high esteem in which our sister was held by us, and in which she still lives in our memories, this expression of affection is tendered to those who were most nearly related to her, and to all who loved her. Respectfully submitted for the societies, Anna Salyards, Flora L. Scott, Eliza Chase, committee." By motion this report was approved and a copy ordered to be sent to the HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, and near relatives of deceased. The Religio association passed a motion favoring the proposed amendment to the constitution. The time and place of holding next convention was left to be determined by the executive officers. Nellie M. Anderson, secretary of conventions.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.—Sunday-school convened at San Bernardino, California, February 22, 1907, at 2 p. m., with district officers in charge. Special order of the convention was election of officers and choosing delegates to General Convention. The officers elected are: T. W. Williams, superintendent; G. H. Wixom, assistant superintendent; Pearl Pankey, secretary; Maggie Pankey, treasurer; G. H. Wixom, librarian. A. Carmichael, G. H. Wixom, F. M. Weld, and T. W. Williams were elected delegates. The following resolution was presented and adopted: "Resolved that we instruct our delegates to use their influence to having the lessons in the Quarterlies changed to the New Testament, and to have the senior lessons shortened." Pearl Pankey, secretary.

DES MOINES.—The Religio convention of the Des Moines District convened at Runnells, Iowa, February 15, the day previous to the convening of the district conference. A fairly good delegation was present and all manifested an interest in the Religio work. Delegates to the General Convention were selected. The following district officers were chosen: A. A. Reams, president; Hattie Clark, vice-president; Sarah M. Rogers, secretary; Irene Reed, treasurer; Flora Hidy, librarian. A meeting of the executive committee was had after the convention, and plans of work for the year were considered, and we hope to see more accomplished in the year to come than in any previous year. The library work for the year showed over ten thousand pieces of literature handled. Considerable interest has been manifested in the district in the collection of books for the church library. The next convention will be held at Boone, May 31.

SOUTHWESTERN OREGON.—Semi-annual convention of the Sunday-school association met on February 23, 1907, at 2 p. m., at Myrtlepoint, Oregon, Frances L. Keeler, superintendent, presiding. The three schools of the district showed a gain of 31 in membership, making a total of 115 members. Superintendent was re-elected; Bro. E. Baggs, assistant superintendent; Sr. Georgina Hayes, secretary; and Sr. Anna Giles, treasurer. Delegates to General Convention; Frances L. Keeler, Frank W. Dygers, Leah M. Conover, Anna Giles, Daisy B. Short, Maud R. Buell, Frances Corson, Sr. Tucker A. J. Mayse, E. Baggs, E. H. Smith, Georgina Hayes; those present to cast the entire vote of the district. The superintendents of the various schools in the district were appointed as a committee to work in conjunction with the district superintendent as a program committee for the next convention to be held in connection with the conference and reunion at Myrtlepoint, during the summer of 1907. Adjourned to meet at call of the district superintendent, at time and place stated above. A vote of thanks was given to Mr. William Mast for the gift of a fine bookcase and table combined, made of the beautiful and expensive myrtle-wood, native in this county.

POTTAWATTAMIE.—Convention met at Council Bluffs, February 22 at 10.30. In charge of S. Harding. Delegates to General Convention: Charles Fry, Bro. and Sr. J. G. Hansen, Bro. and Sr. J. R. Lapworth, J. C. Lapworth, Cora Scott, Blanche Andrews, Edna Elswick, J. A. Hansen, Anna Anderson, Sam Harding, E. H. Carlile, C. B. Bardsley, H. N. Hansen, Frank Hough, Sr. H. N. Hansen. Officers for ensuing year: superintendent, Mrs. Blanche Andrews; assistant superintendent, to be chosen by superintendent; secretary, Miss Cora Scott; treasurer, Paul Wight; librarian, Mrs. Lizzie Lapworth. A motion to adopt the circulating library system was lost. Moved and carried that hereafter all programs for district convention shall be provided for by the school at place in which convention is to be held. Adjourned to meet at call of superintendent. C. E. Scott, secretary.

Church Secretary.

TO GENERAL CONFERENCE APPOINTEES EAST OF CHICAGO.

Those of the General Conference appointees who hold Central Passenger Association clergy credentials will be granted trip permits at clergy rates from Chicago to Lamoni and return, by the Burlington Route, on presentation of such Central credentials together with their certificates of ministerial appointments. However, inasmuch as no clergy credentials are granted in New England and Canada, ministers from that territory (in case they do not make use of the certificate plan rate) will also be granted trip permits at clergy rates from Chicago to Lamoni and return by the Burlington Route, on presentation of their certificates of appointment.

Ministers coming from said territory will be able to figure which rate of the two mentioned above will be the most advantageous to them.

Should any of the eastern ministry desire to obtain the clergy credential from either the Central or Western Passenger Associations, they may learn what rules govern issuance of the same on inquiry by mail or application in person.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 11, 1907.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of South Dakota; Greeting: By notice in recent HERALD you will learn that I have been appointed by the Presiding Bishop as his agent for this State. It is not advisable at this time to write a long and special appeal. The Bishop has clearly stated the matter; we ought to be seeking for opportunities to aid in this branch of the service, and not be looking for a stopping-place until God says, It is enough.

I can not visit all the Saints, the field is too large; but I will answer all letters that come to me, whether sending money or asking information in regard to the financial part of the work.

Beng engaged in the misionary work I have no permanent abiding-place in the State, so you will address all letters to my home address, and they will finally reach me: Omaha, Nebraska, 3318 Taylor Street, Station "A."

Your brother in gospel bonds,

EDWARD RANNIE.

The Patriarchate.

Members of the Patriarchal Order; Greeting:

Being desirous of making a report of the labors of the order at the coming General Conference, it would please me if each member could report to me his labors in full, so that I can report statistically as required by the Conference. Called as we are to attend the reunions, to revive the drooping spirits of the Saints, to comfort and to bless them, as ministers of the gospel, our labors become general, and we are not necessarily confined to the giving of patriarchal blessings, neither indeed ought we to be. The giving of blessings is only one part of our duties, incidental to our calling. We are made by our calling special evangelical ministers, and should hold ourselves ready to attend any and all protracted or so-called revival meetings.

I do not use the term revival, in the sense that it is usually used, to denote a sensational hurrah of a meeting, but by the earnest, careful preaching of the gospel to revive the faith of the Saints and thus strengthen and enlarge their spirituality, and a knowledge of the Lord. I believe that the church has not fully understood the call that has been placed upon us as evangelists, hence has not recognized us in our calling as it might have done. We are not complaining, we can afford to wait, and become more acquainted with our own duties, and thus become more efficient ministers when called upon. While we are not missionaries in the sense of being appointed as such, yet our field of labor covers as much territory, and our labor is as diversified as a missionary's, and sometimes more so. Therefore, brethren, let us be active, diligent, prayerful, and earnest in our labor, that God may honor us in our calling, and finally receive us into celestial glory. May the Spirit of the divine Master attend you, my dear brethren, until he comes to reign.

ALEXANDER HALE SMITH,

Presiding Patriarch of the Church.

LAMONI, Iowa, Box 234.

The Seventy.

PRESIDENTS OF SEVENTY

The Seven Presidents of Seventy adjourned at Independence, Missouri, April, 1906, to meet at Lamoni, Iowa, for business, March 29, 1907. They will so meet (D. V.)

SECOND QUORUM OF SEVENTY

Members of above named quorum will meet in the north-west basement room of the church, at Lamoni, Iowa, April 6, 1907, at 8 a. m.

All business for quorum may be addressed to H. E. Moler, Holden, Missouri, or to F. A. Russell, Lamoni, Iowa, secretaries.

C. SCOTT.

Senior President of Seventies, and President, Second Quorum Seventies.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 11, 1907.

Addresses.

J. F. Mintun, permanent address, 1205 Filmore Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

Married.

SCHMIDT—NELSON.—At the home of the groom's parents, near Stewartville, Missouri, February 20, 1907 at high noon, Bro. Paul Schmidt and Sr. Mary E. Nelson, were united in the holy bonds of wedlock, Elder T. T. Hinderks officiating. The couple enter upon life's journey with bright prospects, and with the good wishes of all. May God's blessing attend them.

Died.

GRIFFITH.—At Shenandoah, Iowa, February 24, 1907, Bro. William Henry Harrison Griffith. He was born February 7, 1839, at St. Charles, Missouri, was baptized by D. A. Anderson, at Lamoni, April 13, 1905. He came to Shenandoah with his parents, November 12, 1881, since which time he resided at that place until the end came. He left to mourn, Sr. Roxana Griffith, Bro. and Sr. E. B. Gaylord, Sr. D. A. Anderson, Sr. W. J. Mather, and Bro. W. B. Gaylord. Funeral services in charge of Eli Hayer, sermon by Joseph Arber.

EATON.—Samuel S., died at his home, Oak Point, town of Deer Isle, Hancock County, Maine. Deceased was born March 19, 1830; died February 21, 1907. He united with the church in 1868 and remained a faithful adherent to its teachings until death. He was ordained an elder June 11, 1868, and did some labor in a local way. He was patient in his sickness, and died firm in the hope of the gospel. As he expressed it, "We will amount to something when we get our place on Abraham's farm." Funeral services conducted by W. E. LaRue.

WALTERS.—Mary Jane, wife of Bro. John Walters, deceased, died at her home near Chelsea, Iowa, February 11, at 8 a. m., of tuberculosis. She was born at Nevada, Iowa, August 2, 1856; married September 22, 1872. She was the mother of eleven children, nine of whom survive her. She was baptized February 27, 1884, by J. S. Roth, and retained her faith in the gospel till her decease. Funeral at the home, conducted by J. F. Mintun.

BEAL.—Willard W. Beal, at Waterloo, Iowa, February 18, 1907. He was born at Pittsford, Vermont, November 29, 1829; married to Miss Hill by whom eight children were born, two of whom survive: Sr. J. A. Goodrich and Bro. W. W. Beal, both of Waterloo. These, with his wife and grandchildren, greatly miss the departed. He was baptized November 1, 1891, by J. S. Roth, at Grove Hill, Iowa, remaining faithful in the gospel covenant till death. Funeral-services at the home, February 20, by Elder J. F. Mintun, assisted by Reverend Beaman.

THAYER.—At Haverhill, Massachusetts, February 12, 1907, Sr. S. Eliza Thayer. She was born February 22, 1836, at Bath, New Hampshire; baptized at Haverhill, March 4, 1902, by R. Bullard. She lived a Christian all her life, kind, gentle, and faithful to her duties as a wife and mother. Funeral at the home of her stepson, Bro. C. E. Thayer, 10 Grand Street. Many friends and Saints gathered at her funeral, bringing flowers as a last outward token of love and esteem. The remains were taken to her old home in New Hampshire for interment, R. Bullard in charge.

READER.—Caroline E. Reader was born March 31, 1825, at Barnwell, South Carolina, and was baptized December 29, 1870, at Baldwin County, Alabama, by J. H. Givens. She fell asleep in Christ December 26, 1906. She leaves an aged husband, about eighty-seven years of age, and quite a lot of relatives, and many friends. She was laid to rest at the Century Mills Cemetery. She suffered no more than one minute before she was at rest to await the results of a just reward.

The Circle magazine for March is a big number, beautifully illustrated, and has a fine showing of original articles and fiction on many subjects, besides the twenty-five regular departments that make this magazine such a strong favorite in the home circle. The original articles include "The adventurous army of Bible-sowers," by William George Fitz-Gerald; "The beauty and youth of old age," by Theodore L. Cuyler, Edward Everett Hale, Senator William P. Frye, John Burroughs, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Edwin Markham, and others; "A singer's art and philosophy," by Madame Emma Eames; "Old-time maple-sugar-making," by Clifton Johnson; "Old violins and their makers," by Elizabeth Mitchell Stephenson; "The making of a singer," by Madame Anna Arnaud. The fiction includes several stories by Lillian Townsend Taylor, Egwin Hugenet, Marion J. Brunowe, and others. The regular departments are devoted to sports and games, business, the church, traveling, the home, automobiles and motors, art, photography, music, motherhood, childhood, farm and garden, amateur craftsmanship, school and college, libraries and reading circles, women's gowns and accessories, men's wearing apparel, popular science and invention, industrialism, poultry, natural history, pets, health and hygiene, and fun. There are numerous original illustrations scattered through the many pages.

The Arena is pre-eminently the leading liberal and progressive review of opinion. Its pages each month contain a number of extremely strong original papers on social and economic problems presented from the view-point of progressive or fundamental democracy; while in the editorial department, in addition to Mr. Flower's strong, incisive, and searching discussions of significant present-day happenings, three new departments have recently been added under the management of Professor Frank Parsons and Mr. Ralph Albertson, the secretary of the National Federation for People's Rule and also secretary of the Co-operative Association of America. In these departments each month the news of the three popular movements—Public-Ownership of Public Utilities, Direct Legislation, and Voluntary Co-operation, is given in a compact and comprehensive manner, so that readers may quickly learn all the most important events of the day as they relate to these vital movements. Among the leading original essays dealing with political, social, and economic problems that are found in the March Arena, the following deserve special notice: "The growth of the slum in our cities," a deeply thoughtful paper by Elinor H. Stoy; "The state-owned railways of Germany," by Professor Frank Parsons, a paper of special value as completing the discussion of the German railways by Doctor Parsons which was commenced in the February Arena; "Mr. Bryan's mistake," a paper by Linton Satterthwait that will doubtless awaken much discussion. The author believes that by holding to the party of Tammany and of Bailey, Mr. Bryan is preventing a vast accession of liberal Republicans from joining a really democratic movement that would not countenance any alliance with the plutocracy or corrupt political machines. "Justice to the victims of missionaries" is a striking brief discussion by R. L. Bridgman, one of the leading magazine writers of the day in the cause of international peace. Mr. Bridgman's paper is a strong protest against the claims of militant Christianity that would spread the gospel of the Nazarene by aid of shot and shell. "Ernest H. Crosby: Prophet of peace and apostle of social righteousness" is the title of an extended biographical sketch by B. O. Flower, editor of The Arena. The untimely death of Mr. Crosby, who was the most distinguished of the disciples of Count Tolstoi in the New World and a whole-hearted radical Democrat, removed from the ranks of progressive democracy, as Mr. Flower clearly shows, one of the strongest and finest scholars and workers of recent years. Among the strong and interesting literary features of this number we mention the following: "Oscar Wilde," by Professor Archibald Henderson, Ph. D.; "The poet of the Sierras on his new problem poem dealing with love after marriage," a conversation with Joaquin Miller; "The redemption," by Bolton Hall; "Jamaica, the fair and unfortunate," a beautifully illustrated paper by Williamson Buckman; "Some aspects of Poe's poetry," by H. Holland Carter; and "The sea-child," a charmingly written and beautiful short story by Almena B. Williams. The publishers of The Arena announce that though their January edition was fifty per cent larger than previous editions of the magazine, all copies were exhausted within two weeks of the time of the appearance of The Arena. A large new edition was called for and before it was published orders for nearly ten thousand copies had been received.

Private and Municipal Operation of Street-Cars in Germany.

The necessity of better service became apparent when street-car companies asked permission to change from horse to electric traction. While originally most of the German cities were content to grant franchises to private companies without a question of municipal management, later on they decided to operate the lines themselves. The greatest difficulty, however, which confronted the cities was how to meet the heavy indemnities demanded by private companies for their property under unexpired franchises. But, in spite of this fact, and while it must be admitted that in some of the German cities public utilities either do not yield an income or are operated at a loss, on the whole it can be maintained that they are successfully conducted under municipal operation. A careful investigation also does not show that the service given both by the city and private street-car companies is so much worse than that given in American cities. If rapid transit in the sense in which it is used in America is unknown in Germany, it is due more to the fact that things are done more deliberately in Europe than they are in the United States. In Germany, as in other countries, the question has also received consideration whether municipalization will increase the number of employees of a city, whether the cities will be compelled to pay higher wages, or to contribute more to the support of the institution for workmen's welfare, an important phase of German industrial life. It has, however, been found that the betterment of the social condition of the personnel need not invariably reduce the income of a municipal enterprise, or limit the usefulness of an undertaking, economically considered. On the contrary, it has been found that by increasing the wages of the employees the money spent for this purpose is not lost, but is again expended in local business transactions, thereby benefiting the business men of the city. The private undertaking, on the other hand, receives no equivalent for the reduction of its surplus, which it may even send to foreign countries, and thus withdraw from communal life the money which should be consumed at home.—From "The Municipal Ownership of Street Railways in Germany," by Edward T. Heyn, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for March.

Doing the Thing You Can't.

There is, in these alert days of competition, of quick opening and closing of places where bread may be earned and a path in which to go forward secured, no time for doing anything that one can't, or that is of no moment when accomplished. Know for a certainty that never half the harm has come from a firm and dignified refusal to enter upon, or to continue in, a pursuit not fitted to one as from engaging in such pursuits. What loss the world would have sustained had Handel consented to become a lawyer, Turner to remain a barber, Claude Lorraine a pastry cook, Schiller a surgeon, Pascal a teacher of dead languages, as was intended by relatives! But great as would have been the loss to the world, the loss to these men themselves would have been far greater.

Doubtless thousands of crimes which have ruined an incalculable number of lives could be traced to mistaken occupations. Joy and delight in one's work means progress, and progress and its result and satisfaction mean a nobler life than stagnation and partial or entire failure could fashion. Doing the thing one can is working for morality and toward perfection on all the planes of life—physical, mental, spiritual.—Lida A. Churchill in the March Delineator.

Hot Tamales.

Boil chicken until very tender, remove bones and chop fine. To each pound of meat, add one medium-sized tomato and onion, chopped fine. Use salt and red pepper to taste; moisten to the consistency of mush with broth. Heat the remainder of the broth to boiling and stir in cornmeal until it is a little stiffer than ordinary mush, and cook thoroughly. Take nice, fresh cornhusks, soak in warm water until soft, then spread a half-inch layer of mush on each husk, put a good spoonful of meat mixture on that, roll so the meat is entirely covered by the mush and all of the husks, turn in the ends, tie with twine and steam for half an hour. Serve in the husks. Nice tamales may be made in the same way with fresh beef or pork.—Housekeeper, March, 1907.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Thou shalt not have in thine house diverse measures, a great and a small. But thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have. — Deuteronomy 25:14, 15.

Standards of weight and measure and value are absolutely essential in our trade with our fellow men. Even savage races adopt or devise some sorts of standards; and as they progress in civilization they learn the need of making these standards as nearly national or tribal as possible, while in an age like this, international standards are becoming necessary.

Early in the history of the Israelites, God gave a law governing weights and measures, affirming that they should be accurate and also just. No man should have a "short" pound for one and a "big" pound for another. (That was before the days of the modern berry-box.)

So to-day we have the foot rule, the pound weight, and the dollar—or similar measures, according to our nationality.

Not all of our measures are designed with an eye single to the glory of honesty. A certain computing scale in quite general use is sold with the assurance that it will enable the shop keeper to retail his goods at the same price he gave for them and clear a three per cent profit. As we write we have before us clippings from thirteen leading dailies (ranging in location from Massachusetts to Oregon) complaining of the general use of these fraudulent scales. They affect the welfare of a class of people who at best can ill afford to be spoiled.

The average individual can see at a glance that such use of lying and varying standards is not only unjust but it also tends toward commercial anarchy.

Individuals, however, do not always so readily grasp the need of a just standard in matters higher than the commercial. When some accepted rule such as God provides to govern in the realm of religion and morals is urged upon their attention, they prefer some substitute that promises more pleasure or profit. Yet if it be necessary to have true, unvarying standards of weight or measure when we sell wheat or land or buy butter or meat, how much more necessary is it to have some standard by which to weigh and measure our beliefs and our conduct.

A standard of weight or value becomes important as the value of the thing measured increases. If I am buying land in the West at ten dollars per acre and the bargain is for a section of land, a rod more or less on one side of the farm does not matter greatly; but if I am buying land in some city at fifty thousand dollars per front foot I want the foot rule with which it is measured to be accurate. If I am buying potatoes at thirty cents per bushel, an ounce more or less does not count; but if I am buying gold, I want the scales to be accurate.

Doubt no longer that the highest is the wisest and the best.—Tennyson.

In matters which affect the eternal welfare of men it becomes all-important that we have an exact, unvarying standard by which to determine what is right and what is wrong, both in belief and in conduct.

Men have taught in the past that the creeds might determine man's belief; but the creeds differ. None of them might be called great; but some are smaller than some others. If we are to accept the broad general view that it does not matter which one a man subscribes to, then Christendom as a whole is a house in which there are diverse measures, and in which is found no "perfect and just" standard of belief.

We have been told that conscience should be the rule to determine man's conduct. But conscience is a matter of education. Teach a child to observe Saturday as the Sabbath, and when he grows up it will hurt his conscience to labor on Saturday while he will go singing to his work on Sunday. Train his cousin to observe Sunday, and his conscience co-operates with him while he labors all day Saturday, but it absolutely balks at the thought of Sunday labor. Teach a child to enjoy instrumental music in the church, and it is a part of the divine service to him. Teach him to think that the organ and violin are inventions of the Devil, and you can not induce him to worship in a church where the organ leads the choir. It is a matter of "conscience" with both. We are left with "diverse" measures for diverse men. Every man under such rule becomes a law to himself and moral anarchy obtains.

As a church we believe that there is a higher standard than conscience or creed. So when other churches split on the matter of the Sabbath day, we went to God and his voice to us settled the matter. When other churches split on the question of church music, and not believing in modern revelation, went their way as conscience directed, the progressives with their organ and the non-progressives without it, we went to God and his voice directed us.

We are commended in that course by the words found in Isaiah, the eighth chapter: "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." James refers to the gospel law as the perfect law of liberty. There we find an unvarying standard by which to determine matters of belief, doctrine, philosophy, or conduct. As a church our appeal has ever been to the word of God, and we have regretted that the religious world, while claiming to reverence that word, has so often sought to evade its plain statements. So persistently have we sought to make it the criterion of faith and conduct that our most able opponents at last frankly admit that it is useless to attempt to meet us on Bible grounds.

It is important that our children attend school and con their tables of weights and measures, that they may deal with men in business—how much more important that they be set to con the golden rules of life that they may know how to deal with men, and with God as well. If this is done, the word of God will take its true place as the end of dispute and there will be fewer appeals from its plain decisions. There will be fewer false and deceptive standards.

Not only is God's word given, but Christ himself came and lived everything taught therein so that the word became flesh, crystalized in the human-divine form of the Son of God. If we have a written rule, we also have a living rule, and both conform in all things. There is perfect equality in them.

If man wishes to measure his progress with certainty, let him compare himself with Christ. True he may with profit compare himself with other men; but Christ is the unchanging standard of measurement till we attain "unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

It is not proper to say that "Sr. Jones did so and so and Bro. Smith did so and so, and if they can do that, I can." Look at Christ and say, "I am not to be measured by Sr. Jones or Bro. Smith. There is my standard. If Christ did so and so, then I must."

It is unnecessary and dangerous to select some other one to be our model in all things. It is unnecessary because Christ was given for that very purpose. It is dangerous because the friend whom we select to follow is human. He may become discouraged and commit suicide. We do not wish to follow him. He may be tempted and commit crime. Look over the shoulders of the greatest and best and you will discern the Son of Man. Compare yourself with him.

Human rules and weights vary. There is no world-wide system. But the gospel is international; no bond, no free, no Jew, no Gentile. It is universal. "The whole family of God, both in heaven and on earth," must measure up to its standard.

Human values change. A dollar is a dollar all the time, but it is worth more at some times than at others. Twenty years ago a dollar would buy ten times as much land as it will now; five times as much butter, five times as many eggs or potatoes.

Human standards vary, but the gospel standard is the same in all ages and the Son of God is worth as much now as he ever was. The character always patterned after his is always at par and will always be worth eternal happiness. ELBERT A. SMITH.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

The Utah Gospel Mission (Anti-Mormon), headquarters at Cleveland, Ohio, has recently published a pamphlet entitled, "The Wonderful Story of the Wonderful Book," the secretary of the society, Reverend John D. Nutting, being the author. Now appears our friend, R. B. Neal, in the Christian Standard, for March 9, and complains that he is a member of the advisory committee of the society and that he was not consulted about the publication. He says, "Unless the secretary will agree to consult me, I propose to send in my resignation." He brands the "Wonderful Story of the Wonderful Book" as "the most wonderful failure" he ever saw, and says, "I rise up with a vigorous protest against the book."

According to the Salt Lake Tribune for March 15, Joseph F. Smith, of the Mormon Church, is now advocating the right of the Smith family to lead the church, and is paving the way for succession among his posterity. This the Tribune argues brands Brigham Young as a usurper, together with all his successors, and leaves the line of succession with the Reorganization. The Tribune says, "The Reorganization has now a better opportunity than ever before to attack succession in the Utah Mormon Church."

Elder I. N. Roberts sends in the names of eight new subscribers to the HERALD, from Ironton, Ohio. This is a sample of the possibilities in almost any branch where the proper amount of interest is manifested.

Elder F. C. Keck reports that he is having good success in a new opening at Curranville, Kansas.

One brother writes to the HERALD Editors, "As I was praying in secret to-day, the thought came to me to send in two dollars for the sanitarium." That is a good way to co-operate with God toward securing a fulfillment of prayer.

Elder F. J. Pierce of the British Isles Mission was to sail for America March 16.

Do not forget to co-operate with the HERALD in the securing of new subscribers. The HERALD does not propose to rest its claim for patronage alone on the ground that it is the "official organ." It is a business proposition; the HERALD is worth your money.

Some one with a fertile imagination writes in the London (Canada) Free Press, March 11, that about one thousand non-polygamous "Mormons" are about to move from Lamoni to Alberta, Canada, and engage in the beet-sugar industry, "at which they are adepts." This exodus is ascribed to the burning of the HERALD Office. Jokes about our ability to raise beets will now be in order.

Joseph F. Smith (of the Mormon Church) is reported to have taken the ground in a recent sermon that the people would not leave Nauvoo when the Prophet wanted them to, and so the Lord caused them to commit sin until the people forced them to go. The query arises, Why should Joseph F. keep it up at this late day after the original object has been accomplished?

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

The French battleship Iena was destroyed by an explosion in her powder magazines, while in dry dock, at Toulon, March 12. Eighty persons are reported killed.

An exchange has the following to say of the pure food law: "Of what avail are food laws without food experts to enforce them? The failure of the civil service examination to develop a sufficient number of competent inspectors and analysts of adulterated food preparations, beverages, and drugs leaves this legislation in the state of a law with the enacting clause omitted. Even if eighty per cent of the candidates pass, the supply of qualified experts will not equal one tenth of the demand. It is not often that the creation of a new industry which opens the way to congenial employment catches the youth of the land napping. In this case, considering the amount of available undergraduate talent which has taken preliminary courses in food and drink analysis at hotel restaurants and bars, it is likely that the defect will be soon remedied."

Mrs. Russell Sage has set aside ten million dollars to be used for the improvement of social and living conditions in America. Several well-known social reformers, including Helen Gould, are named as trustees.

During the past week a flood of unprecedented magnitude visited Pittsburg. Several lives were lost, millions of dollars' worth of property destroyed, and nearly one hundred thousand persons were deprived of homes or employment.

During the past week representative Protestant ministers held conference with President Roosevelt, soliciting his aid to reawaken religious life in New York City. During the past six years Protestant churches have steadily lost ground in that great city, while Catholics and Jews have gained.

The Straight Road

THE ANGEL'S MESSAGE.

Has not every church the right to tell its own history and how it started? "Yes," you answer. Very well; I ask for that liberty for a moment.

Joseph Smith was born in Vermont in 1805. Some time afterward his parents and family moved to the state of New York. When Joseph was in his fifteenth year a joint religious revival was held in his neighborhood by three denominations. Fire and brimstone was preached, the country was aroused unusually in that section and Smith was agitated with the rest. After the series considerable contention occurred among the churches in the matter of dividing of the converts. Young Smith wanted to know what was right, but did not know which church to join.

One day while reading the New Testament he came to the statement in James 1:5: "If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God," etc. Accordingly he retired to a secluded spot, and kneeling began to call upon God for the much-needed light. He afterwards said: "My object in going to inquire of the Lord, was to know which of all the sects was right, that I might know which to join." And speaking of the result of the prayer, he said: "I saw a pillar of light exactly over my head, above the brightness of the sun, which descended gradually until it fell upon me. . . . When the light rested upon me I saw two personages (whose brightness and glory defy all description) standing above me in the air. One of them spoke unto me, calling me by name, and said, (pointing to the other,) 'This is my beloved Son, hear him.' . . . I asked the personages who stood above me in the light, which of all the sects was right, (for at this time it had never entered into my heart that all were wrong,) and which I should join. I was answered that I must join none of them, for they were all wrong, and the personage who addressed me said that all their creeds were an abomination in his sight."

After this manifestation the young man received repeated visitations from angel messengers preparatory to the re-establishing of the church and kingdom of God upon the earth, and the recommitment of authority to preach and administer the ordinances which had been absent from the earth for no less than twelve hundred and sixty years, according to Revelation 12 and elsewhere. In process of time angel hands were laid upon his head, and upon Oliver Cowdery's, and the authority was reinvested. Afterward other men were called by the Holy Ghost, as they were in the early church (see Acts 13: 1-4), and were ordained by those who received their ordinations from the angel; and in turn the former ordained others. Thus it has reached our day, so that the writer can trace his ordination back from man to man until we reach the angel.

This angel came in fulfillment of Revelation 14: 6, 7, where John saw that an angel was to bring back the everlasting gospel in the hour of God's judgment, near the end of the world. John had already seen and described the great apostasy, the killing of the saints, and the destruction of the church. (See Revelation 12 and 13.) He said the gospel was to be restored by an angel, and as Joseph Smith is the only man who laid claim to any such a ministration, no one but him could have fulfilled it. No indeed, for nearly all Protestantism sprang from Rome, directly or indirectly. Some man sprang out of the Methodist Episcopal Church and started another. The first Methodist Episcopal bishop in America was Bishop Asbury, who received his authority from Mr. Coke, who received his authority from Mr. Wesley, who received his authority from the archbishop of Canterbury, who received his authority from the pope. A corrupt tree can not bring forth good fruit; neither can an impure fountain send forth pure water.

How are we to know Joseph Smith saw an angel, you ask. In this way: He said, no matter whether you think I am a good man or not, all who will have faith in Christ, repent of their sins, and receive the gospel ordinances at my hands or the hands of the ministry of this church, will receive an evidence of their own from God that this is His work.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

News From Branches

LAMONI, IOWA.

The excitement incident to the burning of the HERALD plant and offices has subsided, and Lamoni is resuming its usual even tenor of life again. So, hereafter, the Lamoni Branch will occupy a space in this column, as interest and occasion warrants.

The people of this community, especially the Saints, have manifested a buoyant spirit in the loss of our building and plant. And though "homeless" our brethren of the publishing department and the church officials are by no means despondent. The spirit of sacrifice and willingness has been manifested generally. And there seems to be a disposition on the part of the Saints to leave the matter of rebuilding in the hands of our heavenly Father.

The work in the Lamoni Branch is on the upward move-

OLIVER COWDERY'S DEFENSE.

(A Review by Heman C. Smith.)

There has recently come into our hands what purports to be a reprint of a tract said to have been written and published by Oliver Cowdery in 1839. The following is the title-page and the tract in full. We have taken the liberty to number the paragraphs for more convenient reference:

DEFENCE

IN A

Rehearsal of My Grounds

FOR

Separating Myself

FROM THE

LATTER DAY SAINTS

BY OLIVER COWDERY

Second Elder of the Church of Christ.

This Defence is not protected by a copyright, as I wish no man to be confined alone to my permission in printing what is meant for the eyes and knowledge of the nations of the earth.

"God doth not walk in crooked paths;
Neither doth he turn to the right hand,
Nor the the left; neither doth he vary
From that which he hath said."

Pressley's Job Office,
Norton, Ohio,
1839.

Cowdery's Defence.

1. DEAR PEOPLE OF GOD:—I offer you a "Defence" which I am grieved to make, but my opposers have put me to the necessity, and so far as my memory serves, I pledge my veracity for the correctness of the account.

2. I deny that I have ever conspired with any, or ever exerted any influence to destroy the reputation of the First Elder, although evidence which is to be credited assures me that he has done everything he could to injure my standing, and his influence has been considerably exerted to destroy my reputation and, I fear, my life.

3. You will remember in the meantime, that those who seek to villify my character have been constantly encouraged by him. There was a time when I thought myself able to prove to the satisfaction of every man that the translator of the Book of Mormon, was worthy of the appellation of a Seer and a Prophet of the Lord, and in which he held over me a mysterious power which even now I fail to fathom; but I fear I may have been deceived, and especially so fear since knowing that Satan has led his mind astray.

4. (1) When the Church of Christ was set up by revelation, he was called to be First Elder, and I was called to be the Second Elder, and whatever he had of Priesthood (about which I am beginning to doubt) also had I.

5. (2) But I certainly followed him too far when accepting, and reiterating, that none had authority from God to administer the ordinances of the Gospel, as I had then forgotten that John, the beloved disciple, was tarrying on earth and exempt from death.

6. I am well aware that a rehearsal of these things at this day will be unpleasant reading to the First Elder; yet so it is, and it is wisdom that it should be so. Without rehearsing too many things that have caused me to lose my faith in Bro. Joseph's seership, I regard his frequent predictions that he himself shall tarry on the earth till Christ shall come in glory, and that neither the rage of devils nor the malice of men shall ever cause him to fall by the hand of his enemies until he has seen Christ in the flesh at his final coming, as little short of a piece of blasphemy; and it may be classed with that revelation that some among you will remember which sent Bro. Page and me so unwisely to (3) Toronto with a prediction from the Lord by Urim and Thummim that we would there find a man anxious to buy the First Elder's copyright. I well remember we did not find him, and had to return surprised and disappointed. But so great was my faith, that, in going to Toronto, nothing but calmness pervaded my soul, every doubt was banished, and I as much expected that Bro. Page and I would fulfill the revelation as that we should live. And you may believe, without asking me to relate the particulars, that it would be no easy task to describe our desolation and grief.

7. Bro. Page and I did not think that God would have deceived us through "Urim and Thummim," exactly as came the Book of Mormon; and I well remember how hard I strove to drive away the foreboding which seized me, that the First Elder had made tools of us, where we thought, in the simplicity of our hearts, that we were divinely commanded.

8. And what served to render the reflection past expression in its bitterness to me, was, that from his hand I received baptism, by the direction of the Angel of God whose voice, as it has since struck me, did most mysteriously resemble the voice of Elder Sidney Rigdon, who, I am sure had no part in the transactions of that day, as the Angel was John the Baptist, which I doubt not and deny not. When I afterward first heard Elder Rigdon, whose voice is so strikingly similar, I felt that this "dear" brother was to be in some sense, to me unknown, the herald of this church as the Great Baptist was of Christ.

9. (4) I never dreamed however, that he would influence the Prophet, Seer and Revelator to the Church of the Latter Day Saints, into the formation of a secret band at Far West, committed to depredations upon Gentiles and the actual assassination of apostates from the church, which was done in June last and was only one of many wrong steps.

10. These are facts which I am rehearsing, and if they shall be called in question, I am able to establish them by evidence which I can bring forward in abundance.

11. Still, although favored of God as a chosen witness to bear testimony to the divine authority of the Book of Mormon, and honored of the Lord in being permitted, without money and without price, to serve as scribe during the translation of the Book of Mormon, I have sometimes had seasons of skepticism, in which I did seriously wonder whether the Prophet and I were men in our sober senses when he would be translating from plates through "the Urim and Thummim" and the plates not be in sight at all.

12. But I believed both in the Seer and in the "Seer Stone," and what the First Elder announced as revelation from God, I accepted as such, and committed to paper with a glad mind and happy heart and swift pen; for I believed him to be the soul of honor and truth, a young man who would die before he would lie.

13. Man may deceive his fellow man, deception may follow deception, and the children of the wicked one may seduce the unstable, untaught in the ways of righteousness and peace, for I felt a solemn awe about me, being deep in the faith, that the First Elder was a Seer and Prophet of God, giving the truth unsullied through "Urim and Thummim," dictated by the will of the Lord, and that he was persecuted for the sake of the truth which he loved. Could I have been deceived in him?

14. I could rehearse a number of things to show either that I was then deceived, or that he has since fallen from the lofty place in which fond affection had deemed him secure.

15. I remembered his experience as he had related it to me, and lacking wisdom, I went to God in prayer. I said: "O! Lord, how dark everything is! Let thy glory lighten it, and make bright the path for me. Show me my duty. Let me be led of thy Spirit."

16. Shall I relate what transpired? I had a message from the Most High, as from the midst of eternity; for the veil was parted and the Redeemer Himself, clothed in glory, stood before me. And He said:

17. "After reproofing the Latter Day Saints for their corruption and blindness in permitting their President, Joseph Smith, Jr., to lead them forth into errors, where I led him not, nor commanded him, and saying unto them, 'Thus saith the Lord,' when I said it not unto him, thou shalt withdraw thyself from among them."

18. And I testify that Jesus whose words I have been rehearsing, hath even so commanded me in an open vision.

19. The Lord revealed to me that the First Elder is leading the Saints astray, and ordered me to quit them after delivering the message which this "Defence" delivers. I shall ever remember this expression of the Saviour's grace with thanksgiving, and look upon his amazing goodness to me with wonder.

20. When I had sufficiently recovered my selfpossession to ask in regard to the errors into which Joseph Smith, Jr., was taking the Saints, the Redeemer instructed me plainly: "He hath given revelations from his own heart and from a defiled conscience as coming from my mouth and hath corrupted the covenant and altered words which I had spoken. He hath brought in high priests, apostles and other officers, which in these days, when the written Word sufficeth, are not in my church, and some of his needs have brought shame to my heritage by the shedding of blood. He walketh in the vain imaginations of his heart, and my Spirit is holy and does not dwell in an unholy temple, nor are angels sent to reveal the great work of God to hypocrites."

21. I bowed my face in shame and said: "Lord! I intreat thee, give me grace to bear thy message in print where I fear to take it by word of mouth."

And he said, "The grace is given thee," and he vanished out of my sight.

22. Prepare your hearts, O ye Saints of the Most High, and come to understanding. The prophet hath erred and the people are gone astray through his error. God's word is open. We may read it. There is no "First Presidency" there, no "High Priesthood" save that of Christ himself, no Patriarch to the church, and wonderful to tell, the "First Elder" hath departed from God in giving us these things, and in changing the name of the church.

23. Oh, the misery, the distress and evil attendant upon giving heed unto the "doctrines of men!" The gospel has been perverted and the Saints are wandering in darkness, while a full cup of suffering is poured upon them. A society has been organized among them to inflict death upon those who are deemed apostates, with the knowledge and sanction of the First Elder.

24. This, I confess, is a dark picture to spread before those whom I am to warn, but they will pardon my plainness when I assure them of the truth of what I have written.

25. Bearing this message to them is the hardest work of my life, although many have been the privations and fatigues which have fallen to my lot to endure for the Gospel's sake since April 5th, 1829.

26. It is disgraceful to be led by a man who does not scruple to follow his own vain imagination, announcing his own schemes as revelations from the Lord.

27. And I fear he is led by a groundless hope, no better than the idle wind or the spider's web. Having cleared my soul by delivering the message, I do not deem it necessary to write further on the subject now.

28. Jesus has saved men in all ages and saves them now, and not by our Priesthood either. The "First Elder" errs as to that. The Lord has said, long since, and his word remains steadfast as the eternal hills, that to him who knocks it shall be opened, and whosoever will, may come and partake of the waters of life freely; but a curse will surely fall upon those who draw near to God with their mouths, and honor him with their lips, while their hearts are far from him.

29. I no longer believe that all the other churches are wrong.

30. Get right, O! ye people, get right with God, and may the Lord remove his judgments from you, preserve you in his kingdom from all evil, and crown you in Christ. Amen.
March 3, 1839. O. COWDERY.

In the second paragraph he denies having used some doubts. A close examination of it by one acquainted with the style of Oliver Cowdery will reveal that a part of it is his language with but little doubt. For instance paragraph 13 is very much like him; but compare that with paragraph 28 and it will not take much of an expert to detect the difference in style and diction. Other comparisons might be made with the same effect, but we forbear.

For the sake of this investigation we will admit that this document as reprinted is a faithful reproduction of the language of Oliver Cowdery and as such proceed to examine it. We think it will be discovered by close examination that there is nothing in the document so damaging to the claims of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as has been supposed by the enemies of the church.

In the second paragraph he denies having used his veracity for the correctness of the account so far as his memory serves him, which indicates that he does not pledge for the correctness of the account in matters which do not come under his immediate and personal knowledge. Let us keep this point in view as we proceed with the examination.

In the second paragraph he denies having used any influence to destroy the reputation of the First Elder, Joseph Smith; but concludes that Joseph Smith has exerted his influence to destroy Elder Cowdery's reputation; but he bases this conclusion upon evidence which is to be credited, and not upon any personal knowledge of his own. No one will be so unfair as not to admit that Elder Cowdery may have been deceived in the testimony which he credited. This is always possible. So upon this point Elder Cowdery can not be used as a witness against Joseph Smith.

In the third paragraph he speaks in the first place about something of the same import as in the second paragraph, but closes by the statement that Joseph Smith at one time held over him a mysterious power which he even at the time of writing could not fathom. If it shall appear, then, in this investigation, that Oliver Cowdery bears testimony to the same facts that he previously bore testimony to, it makes that testimony stronger when we consider that he was at the time of this writing out from under that mysterious influence; hence that mysterious influence was not the source of the testimony borne by Oliver Cowdery at an early date.

In the fourth paragraph he intimates that he is beginning to doubt something in regard to the priesthood held by Joseph Smith and himself at the time of the organization of the church. This is not strange; all thinking men doubt, especially so until their thoughts are thoroughly matured, and then sometimes incidents arise that suggest doubt; and we are never surprised that men begin to doubt under trying circumstances.

After John the Baptist had borne testimony of the Christ as he appeared at the waters of Jordan, and after subsequent trials when in prison, doubt seems to have occurred to him. We find as recorded in the eleventh of Matthew that he sent messengers to Christ, asking the question, "Art thou he of whom it is written in the prophets," etc. Previous to this time he answered the question himself without hesitancy. Here are the beginnings of doubt, and the reassurance came to him as it does to all who are faithful in their service to the truth, and as we shall show this reassurance came also to Oliver Cowdery.

In paragraph five Mr. Cowdery declares that he followed Joseph Smith too far in accepting and reiterating that none had authority from God to administer the ordinances of the gospel outside of the church represented by him and Joseph Smith. In this Mr. Cowdery thinks he was mistaken; but only cites one instance, and that is, that he had forgotten that John the Beloved Disciple was tarrying on earth and exempt from death. Cowdery's position when he wrote this seems to be that there was one exception, that of John the Beloved Disciple; and in this he indirectly expresses confidence in the theory that John the Beloved Disciple was on earth according to the revelations which had been accepted by Joseph Smith and himself previously. He does not intimate that he thought that the authority existed anywhere else than in the church of which he was a member, except in the bare exception of John the Beloved Disciple.

In paragraph 6 he expresses doubt in regard to a frequent prediction that Joseph Smith should tarry on earth till Christ should come in glory, etc. We need not tell students of the writings and sayings of Joseph Smith that this prediction is not to be found upon record; and Mr. Cowdery here gives us no reference to where it can be found; nor is he very clear as to whether he had heard this prediction, or whether it had come to him through other parties. It is too indefinite to base any conclusion upon as to whether Joseph Smith ever made such a prediction or not. He compares it with a prediction said to have been received in an early time sending himself and Bro. Page to Toronto, Canada, to sell the First Elder's copyright of the Book of Mormon. True it is to be compared with it in more ways than one. Neither prediction is quoted but cited, and we are dependent solely upon rumor as to there having been such predictions. Mr. Cowdery may have had direct access to either or both of these, but we have not; and so it is impossible for us to form conclusions. The prediction to send men to Toronto to sell a copyright, may or may not have been made. If it be conceded that such a prediction was made, and yet they did not find a man to purchase, it is not conclusive evidence that the inspiration of it was wrong; for Mr. Cowdery and Mr. Page may have failed to carry out the instruction given them. They may have been too easily discouraged, and arriving at Toronto and not readily finding the man may have given the matter up and come home without accomplishing their mission. This account, or mere reference rather, is too vague and unsatisfactory for logical men to use as a basis for any conclusion.

Paragraph 7 is upon the same subject, but throws no additional light upon the situation. The only thing of any importance in paragraph 8, is the statement that the voice of the angel who appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery resembled the voice of Elder Sidney Rigdon; but he does not intimate that it was Sidney Rigdon. On the contrary he positively asserts, "Who I am sure had no part in the transactions of that day, as the angel was John the Baptist, which I doubt not and deny not." No more positive language could be used to indicate the firm conviction of Oliver Cowdery that he was not deceived, and that the angel which was John the Baptist did in fact appear to himself and Joseph Smith. As at the time he penned this he was out from under that mysterious influence mentioned before, he could not have been influenced by Joseph Smith to make this latter statement.

In paragraph 9, Elder Cowdery expresses surprise that Sidney Rigdon subsequently led the Prophet, Seer, and Revelator into the formation of a secret band at Far West, committed to depredations upon Gentiles and the actual assassination of apostates from the church, affirming that it was done June last. As this document bears date March 3, 1839, that would be in June, 1838. He does not give us any evidence, or even a statement that he personally knew this to be true; but simply continues in paragraph 10 by stating, "These are facts; and if they should be called in question I am able to establish them by evidence." What evidence he does not disclose. It may be conceded that an organization was effected at Far West, Missouri, about that time, which was committed to some unlawful purposes, but the evidence does not establish Joseph Smith's connection with that organization; but he is on record as denouncing it as the following will show:

And here I would state, that while the evil spirits were raging up and down in the State to raise mobs against the "Mormons," Satan himself was no less busy in striving to stir up mischief in the camp of the Saints; and among the most conspicuous of his willing devotees was one Doctor Sampson Avard, who had been in the church but a short time, and who, although he had generally behaved with a tolerable degree of external decorum, was secretly aspiring to be the greatest of the great, and become the leader of the people. This was his pride and his folly, but as he had no hopes of accomplishing it by gaining the hearts of the people in open strife, he watched his opportunity with the brethren, at a time when mobs oppressed, robbed, whipped, burned, plundered and slew, till forbearance seemed no longer a virtue, and nothing but the grace of God without measure could support men under such trials, to form a secret combination by which he might rise a mighty conqueror, at the expense of the overthrow of the church; and this he tried to accomplish by his smooth, flattering, and winning speeches, which he frequently made to his associates, while his room was well guarded by some of his pupils, ready to give him the wink on the approach of any one who would not approve of his measures.

In this situation, he stated that he had the sanction of the heads of the church for what he was about to do; and by his smiles and flattery, persuaded them to believe it, and proceeded to administer to the few under his control, an oath, binding them to everlasting secrecy to everything which should be communicated to them by himself. Thus Avard initiated members into his band, firmly binding them, by all that was sacred, in the protecting of each other in all things that were lawful; and was careful to picture out a great glory that was then hovering over the church, and would soon burst upon the Saints as a cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night, and would soon unveil the slumbering mysteries of heaven, which would gladden the hearts and arouse the stupid spirits of the Saints of the latter day, and fill their hearts with that love which is unspeakable and full of glory, and arm them with power that the gates of hell could not prevail against them; and would often affirm to his company that the principal men of the church had put him forward as a spokesman, and a leader of this band, which he named Danites.

Thus he duped many, which gave him the opportunity of figuring largely. He held his meetings daily, and carried on his work of craft in great haste, to prevent a mature reflection upon the matter, and had them bound under the penalties of death to keep the secrets and certain signs—which they had to know each other by, by day and night.—Millennial Star, volume 16, pp. 458, 459.

We can readily see how the impression obtained that the church authorities were implicated in this, as those initiated into it were so taught, and no doubt many of them entered into the covenant supposing that the heads of the church sanctioned it. But the foregoing shows that it was condemned by Joseph Smith and that he denied the association of any of the heads of the church with it.

It appears that Joseph Smith did not know of this until after he was incarcerated in Liberty jail, for on the sixteenth day of December, 1838, he wrote from "Liberty Jail" to the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" from which letter we quote the following:

We have learned also since we have been in prison that many false and pernicious things, which were calculated to lead the saints astray and do great injury, have been taught by Doctor Avard, who has represented them as coming from the Presidency; and we have reason to fear, that many other designing and corrupt characters, like unto himself, have taught many things, which the Presidency never knew of, until after they were made prisoners which if they had known, they would have spurned them and their authors as they would a serpent.—Times and Seasons, vol. 1, p. 85.

In this same letter Joseph Smith says some very severe things about Oliver Cowdery and others. To the fair, reasonable mind it is easily seen that both Smith and Cowdery gave too much credence to these evil reports and as a consequence condemned each other unjustly. This is not to be wondered at when we consider the trying scenes through which they were passing and that circumstances prevented them meeting and having an understanding. Each feeling that the other had betrayed him in the hour of adversity felt bitter, and expressed his bitterness. This misunderstanding is chargeable to the wickedness of the enemies of truth within and without the church, and therefore the statements of neither where personal knowledge is not claimed, should be used against the other. Each was true to his former testimony and both died in the faith of the message for which they had formerly suffered together.

We trust that ere this the friends of early days on earth have clasped hands in glad reunion where the rage of foes nor the betrayal of friends can ever part them more.

In addition to this, while in Liberty jail, March —, 1839, Joseph Smith wrote an epistle to the church in connection with his associates, in which he announces the following conviction concerning secret oaths and covenants:

We further, caution our brethren, against the impropriety of the organization of bands or companies, by covenants, oaths, penalties, or secrecies; but let the time past of our experience and sufferings by the wickedness of Doctor Avard suffice, and let our covenants, be that of the everlasting covenant, as it is contained in the holy writ, and the things which God has revealed unto us; pure friendship, always becomes weakened, the very moment you undertake to make it stronger by penal oaths and secrecy.—Times and Seasons, vol. 1, p. 133; History of the Church, vol. 2, pp. 324, 325.

This surely ought to have some weight; and as there is no direct testimony of his connection with this secret combination, it should be considered conclusive as to his attitude.

In paragraph 11 Elder Cowdery makes a direct statement that he was chosen of God as a witness to bear testimony to the Book of Mormon; and honored of the Lord in being permitted without money and without price to serve as a scribe during its translation, though the events were so strange and wonderful that it caused him to seriously wonder whether he and the Prophet were in their sober senses at the time, or not. This is the usual condition of minds under such strange circumstances, and we do not wonder at it at all. The testimony, however, is clear and conclusive, that he was at the time all that he professed to be, a witness and a chosen instrument in the hands of God in transcribing the characters.

Paragraph 12 is a continuation of the same subject, an additional declaration of his integrity and sincerity in that which he had previously testified to. We submit that he could not be as sincere and honest as he represents himself to be and his testimony not be true; for the testimony that he bore as published in the Book of Mormon in connection with Martin Harris and David Whitmer admits of no deception. They either did or they did not hear the voice of God. They did or they did not see the engravings which were upon the plates. The angel of God did or did not come down from heaven and lay before their eyes the plates. The testimony is either true or it is a deliberate falsehood. And this declaration of the sincerity of Oliver Cowdery, if accepted, carries with it the conclusion that the testimony was true.

Paragraph 13 is a continuation of his protestations of sincerity, simply closing with the query, "Could I have been deceived in him?"

In paragraph 14 he concludes that he was either deceived, or that Joseph Smith had fallen from the lofty place in which fond affection had deemed him secure. Which conclusion, if either, he finally came to is not recorded in this defense.

But in paragraph 15 he commits himself to confidence in Joseph Smith's relation of past incidents; for he acted upon Joseph Smith's experience, and went to God in prayer, declaring that as he went everything was dark, and praying that the glory of God might lighten and make bright the path, and show him his duty, and so forth.

About this time there had been difficulty between Oliver Cowdery and the church which resulted in Oliver Cowdery's expulsion or withdrawal. And Elder Cowdery confesses that his mind was in a darkened condition. What the cause of this darkness was we will not attempt to conjecture; but the fact that he was in a darkened condition of mind must not be lost sight of. He then proceeds, in paragraphs 16 to 21, to relate that while in this condition he received a manifestation which he accepted as a communication from a divine source; and in that communication he was commanded to withdraw himself from the church, and told that the First Elder was leading the Saints astray; and that the First Elder had in some sense brought shame to the heritage of God by the shedding of blood. None of these things, if true, in any sense, reflected upon the former testimony of Oliver Cowdery. If true they simply declare that Joseph Smith had transgressed, and had been guilty of things that were wrong. Should we concede this, it would affect in no way the truth upon which the church, through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, was founded.

There is always a possibility, however, that communications thought to be divine, are spurious. Men in all ages have been deceived in that way. And Oliver was in a dangerous condition; everything was dark around him. Whether this darkness had come to him through any act of his own, it is not our prerogative to say. But darkness was there; and during this hour of darkness he might have been deceived by a false communication. If so, it betrays the ground upon which his conviction that Joseph Smith was guilty of entering into that secret combination was founded. It was this supposed communication that told him so. And if that communication was false then his evidence of Joseph Smith's complicity is destroyed.

In paragraph 22, Elder Cowdery gives some deductions from that manifestation which are significant. They are,—first, that there is no presidency; second, no high priesthood save that of Christ himself; third, no patriarch to the church. These conclusions are based upon this communication thought to be divine. Keep this in mind as we examine the future convictions and acts of Oliver Cowdery.

Paragraph 23 is but a repetition of two points before spoken of in this defense, perversion of the gospel, and the society organized to inflict death upon those deemed apostates, which has been sufficiently examined.

Paragraphs 24 to 26 are but a prelude to his message to the church, founded upon this same communication received in the hour of a darkened mind.

In paragraph 27 he simply expresses a fear that Joseph Smith is led by a groundless hope.

Paragraph 28, which we have before referred to as being language not in harmony with the style of Oliver Cowdery, contains a statement that still further increases the doubt of Oliver Cowdery being its author. He says: "Jesus saved men in all ages, and saves them now, and not by our Priesthood either." No one knew better than Oliver Cowdery that it had never been claimed that men were saved "by our Priesthood." The claim had always been that the priesthood was simply authority delegated from on high to act for God in the performing of the ordinances; that the priesthood was not the saving power. We very seriously doubt that Oliver ever made such a statement. If he did he was still under the influence of that darkness which he had previously confessed to.

Paragraphs 29 and 30 are simply a declaration of what he believes, and an exhortation to get right, to which we have no objection.

It is asserted that Oliver Cowdery subsequent to this denounced Mormonism and united with the Methodist Church. To what extent he renounced Mormonism is not disclosed by the testimony. His own words of renunciation would be the best testimony. Simply the broad assertion that he renounced is not sufficient; and we refuse to believe upon this showing that he ever renounced any testimony that he had hitherto borne in regard to the work of the latter days.

Subsequently to the writing of this defense and to his uniting with the Methodist Church, if he ever did, he makes a statement which clearly indicates that that manifestation which he supposed to be from God in 1838 was wrong; for in that statement he denounced all priesthood authority in the church; but at a special conference at Council Bluffs, Iowa, held on the 21st of October, 1848, or about ten years after this said manifestation, and nearly ten years after writing his defense, he made the following statement:

Friends and Brethren, my name is Cowdery—Oliver Cowdery. In the early history of this church I stood identified with her, and one in her councils. True it is that the gifts and callings of God are without repentance. Not because I was better than the rest of mankind was I called; but, to fulfill the purposes of God, he called me to a high and holy calling. I wrote, with my own pen, the entire book of Mormon (save a few pages), as it fell from the lips of the Prophet Joseph Smith, as he translated it by the gift and power of God, by the means of the Urim and Thummim, or, as it is called by that book, 'holy interpreters.' I beheld with my eyes and handled with my hands the gold plates from which it was translated. I also saw with my eyes and handled with my hands the 'holy interpreters.' That book is true. Sidney Rigdon did not write it. Mr. Spaulding did not write it. I wrote it myself as it fell from the lips of the prophet. . . .

The holy Priesthood is here. I was present with Joseph when an holy angel from God came down from heaven and conferred on us or restored the lesser or Aronic Priesthood, and said to us, at the same time, that it should remain upon the earth while the earth stands. I was also present with Joseph when the higher or Melchisedek Priesthood was conferred by the holy angel from on high. This priesthood was then conferred on each other, by the will and commandment of God. This priesthood, as was then declared, is also to remain upon the earth until the last remnant of time.—The Myth of the Manuscript Found, pp. 79, 80.

By the above quotation it will be seen that Oliver Cowdery in 1848 had confidence in his former testimony, and in positive language declared that it was true; also, notwithstanding the statements that he is supposed to have made in his defense, he bears testimony to the holy priesthood being in the church, and to the fact that an angel from God came down from heaven and conferred it on him and Joseph Smith.

From Council Bluffs it appears that Cowdery went to Missouri, arriving at Richmond the 22d of January, 1849, where he died March 3, 1850. On March 20, 1850, his brother-in-law, Hiram Page, wrote from Richmond, Ray County, Missouri, to Doctor Warren Cowdery, Oliver Cowdery's brother, in answer to inquiry, from which we make the following extract:

During his sickness his mind was strong; although his bodily strength failed, his mind was clear and active.

QUESTIONS.—Did he die holding to his former testimony as he taught it, or did he die as some of the sectarians without any special faith in any church? Did he express any opinion about Strang and his followers, or Brewster and his followers, or the Twelveites, or any others that pretend to embrace the Mormon faith? He did frequently express his opinion of those different factions pretending to hold the authority of the primitive church of Christ, who do not cleave to the standard of truth. Of those he said they are either deceivers, or deceived; but he said there are many among them who are honest and will receive the truth when they hear it; and any organization that does not agree with the order laid down in the Bible and Book of Mormon in the gospel dispensation, is to be rejected; knowing that for us to support such errors would be opposing the order of God, and would be worshipping the man of sin. Among his last words, was to reaffirm his testimony to the Book of Mormon. History of the Church, vol. 4, p. 515.

To this agrees the testimony of David Whitmer as follows:

I was present at the deathbed of Oliver Cowdery, and his last words were, "Brother David, be true to your testimony to the Book of Mormon." He died here in Richmond, Missouri, on March 3, 1850. Many witnesses yet live in Richmond, who will testify to the truth of these facts, as well as to the good character of Oliver Cowdery.—David Whitmer's Address, p. 8.

In regard to the statement that he joined the Methodist Church in Tiffin, Ohio, we present the following:

At our request Bishop E. L. Kelley called at Tiffin, Ohio, on February 7 and 8, 1907, to look up the records on this point; and after examining all the records that he could find in the hands of the custodian of the records, Mr. C. J. Yingling, writes in a letter dated Independence, Missouri, February 11, 1907, as follows:

Mr. C. J. Yingling who had in charge the records of the Methodist Church thought, before examination, that it showed that Cowdery was a member of the church, but upon examination I discovered that it simply contained his work as an attorney, and pointed out the fact to Mr. Yingling, which he readily assented was the fact. He thought, however, that it was possible that they might have an older record than the one referred to, but could not go at the time to their church library and look for it. He had looked, however, before, but said he would do so again at the earliest time practicable and notify me of the results of his search. Since returning home I have a letter from him stating that he had not been enabled as yet, to secure any further information of this record, but discovered in history of Seneca County, Ohio, reference to Oliver Cowdery, and he forwarded to me typewritten copy of what the history contains, with a further statement that he would place in my hands anything else that he found touching the matter, either for or against Cowdery's connection with the Methodist Church in that place.

He seems to be a very fine gentleman, and the leading member of the Methodist society at that place, as I called on the pastor, and he directed me to Mr. Yingling for my information, and said he had full access to all books and papers. He seemed to be ready to furnish me any and all evidence in their possession upon the matter. Mr. Yingling cited me to Mrs. Judge Lang as a party who would likely have an understanding with reference to this, when he found the records did not disclose. She was the only one of the old settlers that would be likely to know, he said. Afterward, I visited her, and inclose her statement in connection with the evidence. She cited me to the widow of Joel W. Wilson, the former law partner of Oliver Cowdery. I visited her, with the results as indicated in the facts set forth. She was living with her daughter, Mrs. C. Guitteau, 2039 Adam Street, Toledo, Ohio, and I called Mrs. Guitteau as a witness to her statement with reference to Cowdery's connection with the Methodists in Tiffin. Mrs. Wilson was very positive that neither Oliver Cowdery nor his wife were members of the Methodist Church at Tiffin at any time.

His report of the examination of the evidence, accompanying this letter, contains the following:

The first reference to the work of the First Methodist Protestant Church of Tiffin, contained in the record book, bears date of January 19, 1843. This was of a meeting called at that date of the male members of said church to form society and obtain charter of such society. At the conclusion of the record of this meeting there is entered upon the record in the handwriting of Oliver Cowdery which is marked in brackets, the following:

"[See vol. 41, Ohio Local Laws, pages 31 and 32, where the above act may be found. O. Cowdery.]"

On January 6, 1844, the Society was called together again with John Souders, Chairman; William Campbell, Secretary, but from the proceedings it seems they did not have sufficient to form a quorum, and their proceedings were not legal. At the conclusion of this record for January 6, 1844, there is inserted by O. Cowdery the following:

"[The account of March 5th, 1836, referred to in the charter of this Society recorded on page 1 may be found in the collated acts of 1841, chapter 97, pages 782-783-784. O. Cowdery.]"

January 18, 1844, the members of the Society convened again, Reverend Thomas B. Cushman elected Chairman, and Oliver Cowdery secretary of the meeting. In this meeting the following named parties were elected trustees: John Souder, Joseph Walker, William Campbell, John Nye. The following resolutions were passed:

"Resolved, that the first meeting of the trustees of this Society, elected by this meeting, be held at the office of O. Cowdery on Tuesday the 23 inst. at half past six o'clock p. m.

"Resolved, that the proceedings of this meeting be signed by the Chairman and Secretary."

On motion adjourned the meeting without day. Thomas B. Cushman, Chairman; Oliver Cowdery, Secretary, January 18, 1844.

This furnishes all the reference in the record to Oliver Cowdery. It will be seen from the examination of the facts that Oliver Cowdery acted as the attorney for these parties, hence the association of his name. It had been claimed that he was a trustee of the church, but the record does not so disclose, and had he been a trustee, that would not necessarily make him a member of the Society, for neither the law of the church at the time, nor the law of the land, made it necessary for a party in order to be a trustee of property, to be a member of the Society.

Mrs. W. Lang, the widow of Judge Lang, of Tiffin, was referred to as a witness who would know with reference to Cowdery's connection with the church. She was an aged lady, but of good memory, found at her residence and that of her niece, Miss Lang, at Tiffin, and upon inquiry with reference to Oliver Cowdery's connection with the Methodist Church or any church Society at Tiffin during his residence there, she stated that he was not a member of any church society there. She thought his wife might have attended the Methodist Church, and that the girl which lived with them, Adeline Fuller, did attend the Methodist Church, but she was certain that Oliver Cowdery was never a member of the Methodist Church at Tiffin. She said on the contrary he was "a Mormon."

Mrs. Lang referred to Mrs. Mary E. Wilson, widow of Honorable Joel W. Wilson, former law partner of Oliver Cowdery, as the person most likely to know touching this. Calling upon Mrs. Mary E. Wilson, 2039 Adam Street, Toledo, Ohio, she stated as follows:

"I am quite confident that neither Cowdery nor Mrs. Cowdery were members of the Methodist Church in Tiffin. Neither of them were members. I am quite confident that neither of them were members. Oliver Cowdery was a Mormon, and when he left there he went to Cleveland, or near there where the Mormons formerly had builded." Mrs. C. Guitteau, daughter of Mrs. Mary E. Wilson, was present and witnessed the statements of Mrs. Wilson, and stated she would subscribe as a witness to the statements of her mother.

Mr. Yingling also sent to Bishop Kelley a copy of what is contained in the history of Seneca County, Ohio, on Oliver Cowdery, which is as follows, a transcript of which has been sent to us:

OLIVER COWDERY.

Near the end of the Mormon Bible is added the testimony of Oliver Cowdery as to the "golden plates."

He was one of the brightest minds amongst the leaders of the Mormons, and the history of the order would have been a better one had his council and advice prevailed.

Mr. Cowdery was born in the State of Vermont, on the 3d day of October, 1804. After he acquired a good common school education, he applied himself with great industry to the study of the dead languages and became very proficient in the Greek and Chaldee. He came to Ohio when a young man and entered the law office of Judge Bissel, a very distinguished lawyer in Painesville, Lake County, as a student, and was admitted to practice after having read the requisite length of time and passed an examination. His unfortunate association with the Mormons blasted the high hopes and bright prospects of an otherwise promising career, and planted a thousand thorns along the wayside of a life that was as pure and undefiled as that of the best of men. Cowdery had more to do with the production of the Mormon Bible than its history had ever given him credit for. He was the best scholar among the leaders. While others advocated the doctrine of polygamy, Cowdery opposed it, not only on moral grounds, but also, and principally because it was contrary to the great principles of Christianity, and above all, because it was opposed not only to the great demands of civilization, but to the spirit of the free institutions of our country. This opposition to polygamy brought Cowdery into conflict with the other leaders, and especially with Joe Smith; and while Cowdery gathered around himself the better and most intellectual element among the Mormons, Joe Smith became the leader of the coarse forces, with whom his great force of character soon made him very popular. The conflict came and Cowdery had to flee for his life, leaving his wife and two children behind him. Mrs. Cowdery's name was Whitmer, and a sister of one of the Whitmers who figured as a leader. She was a beautiful woman, whose quiet nature, sweet temper, and kind disposition won her friends wherever she was known.

Mr. Cowdery came back . . . in the spring of 1840, on the 12th day of May, he addressed a large democratic gathering in the street, between the German Reformed Church of Tiffin and the present residence of Hez Graff. He was then on a tour of exploration for a location to pursue his profession as a lawyer, having entirely abandoned and broken away from all his connections with the Mormons. In the fall of the same year he moved with his family to Tiffin and opened a law office on Market Street.

Mr. Cowdery was an able lawyer and a great advocate. His manners were easy and gentlemanly; he was polite, dignified, yet courteous. He had an open countenance, high forehead, dark brown eye, Roman nose, clenched lips and prominent lower jaw. He shaved smooth and was neat and cleanly in his person. He was of light stature, about five feet, five inches high, and had a loose, easy walk. With all his kind and friendly disposition, there was a certain degree of sadness that seemed to pervade his whole being. His association with others was marked by the great amount of information his conversation conveyed and the beauty of his musical voice. His addresses to the court and jury were characterized by a high order of oratory, with brilliant and forensic force. He was modest and reserved, never spoke ill of any one, never complained.

He left Tiffin with his family for Elkhorn, in Wisconsin, in 1847, where he remained but a short time, and then moved to Missouri, where he died in 1848. The writer read law with Mr. Cowdery in Tiffin, and was intimately acquainted with him, from the time he came here until he left, which afforded me every opportunity to study and love his noble and true manhood. [We quote from the manuscript furnished by Mr. Yingling.]

We reproduce this extract from the history of Seneca County because it is written by one who was intimately acquainted with Oliver Cowdery and for the sake of the excellent tribute to him as a man, it contains. That the writer has made some mistakes is evident. For instance, he makes the date of Cowdery's death 1848, which is not true, as he died March 3, 1850, as we have previously shown by testimony of David Whitmer. He makes it to appear that the break between Oliver Cowdery and Joseph Smith and other leaders was occasioned by the doctrine of polygamy. This is evidently not true. Oliver Cowdery knew nothing of polygamy in the church at the time he was connected with it, as is evident from a letter written from Tiffin, Ohio, July 24, 1846, to his brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Jackson, in answer to a letter from his sister, speaking of the existence of polygamy at Nauvoo. From this letter we make the following extract:

Now, brother Daniel and sister Phoebe, what will you do? Has sister Phoebe written us the truth? and if so, will you venture with your little ones into the toils and fatigues of a long journey and that for the sake of finding a resting place, when you know of miseries of such magnitude as have, as will, and as must rend asunder the tenderest and holiest ties of domestic life? I can hardly think it possible that you have written us the truth, that though there may be individuals who are guilty of the iniquities spoken of, yet no such practice can be reached or adhered to as a public doctrine. Such may do for the followers of Mahomet; it may have been done some thousands of years ago; but no people professing to be governed by the pure and holy principles of the Lord Jesus, can hold up their heads before the world at this distance of time and be guilty of such folly, such wrong, such abomination. It will blast, like a mildew, their fairest prospects, and lay the ax at the root of their future happiness.—History of the Church, vol. 4, p. 272.

From this it appears that he was not at that time, 1846, willing to credit the report that polygamy was taught. Had it been as this historian affirms, that polygamy existed when Oliver Cowdery was connected with the church in 1838, it would not have surprised him to hear of it in 1846, as he evidently was surprised from the contents of this letter.

In conclusion we repeat, there is nothing in Oliver Cowdery's defense, that in any way invalidates his testimony regarding the Book of Mormon, the visitation of the angel, the ordination to the priesthood; nor is there anything in the record that necessarily reflects upon the honor and integrity of Oliver Cowdery. That he may have given too much credence to reports of false brethren and enemies to the church, as set forth in the foregoing, and that he may have been deceived by a supposed communication when under this cloud of darkness and distrust, we freely concede. As a witness he is vindicated; and no competent testimony has been produced to impeach, or to in any way reflect upon his character as a man. All witnesses who are competent to know testify to his integrity.

We submit the foregoing to the careful consideration of those who wish to know the truth; to those who are seeking for the opposite we have nothing to offer.

OUR PRESENT AND FUTURE NEEDS.—PART II.

In Part I of this series we have learned that the work of God in the future will be wonderful and it will attract the attention of many people in our own country and also in the heathen nations. If we are to be participants in this great work we must prepare ourselves to bear the responsibilities that will be imposed upon us by divine authority; and as the preparatory work in all things is the most important to be done, we should dig deep into the counsels of God and find out what is necessary for us to do that we might be efficient workmen in his vineyard.

And no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being faithful in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.—Doctrine and Covenants 11 : 4.

Whatever our mental attainments may be, they will not avail us anything if our lives are not controlled by the above principles. Our lives must partake of the divine nature of Christ so that our thoughts and acts may be so pure and holy that his Spirit shall be our constant companion, giving us the intelligence of God. God has said that we are all called to the work, whether it be those in the ministry or he that "toileth in the affairs of men of business." Those who are behind the desk or the bench to-day may be in the mission-field to-morrow, and possibly be on their way to some foreign land; and that we might be prepared to do the work he expects of us, he has pointed out the necessary education that he requires of us in addition to the qualifications quoted from Doctrine and Covenants 11 : 4. If we heed the admonitions of our heavenly Father we will be the best educated people in the world. In 1832 the Lord gave the following instructions to the ministry, and the lapse of time has not diminished its importance:

And I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms, that ye may be prepared in all things when I shall send you again, to magnify the calling whereunto I have called you, and the mission with which I have commissioned you.—Doctrine and Covenants 85 : 21.

The purpose for which this thorough education is to be had is that "ye may be prepared in all things," and if the above instruction does not open up a field sufficiently broad for the search after knowledge we have the following to encourage us: "Seek ye diligently and teach ye one another words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith."—Doctrine and Covenants 85 : 36.

God certainly places a high valuation on education, and one instance in which we perceive this idea prominently brought forward is in the preservation of the Book of Mormon. From the time Lehi left Jerusalem until it was published in 1830 it was guarded with jealous care; and during the many centuries that have passed since the ten tribes left their native land they have patiently been making a record of the important events that form the warp and woof of a great nation; and in the providence of God they will come forth and be a blessing to his people if they will read it.

Webster's idea of an education is in such beautiful harmony with the words of inspiration that I will give it as found in his unabridged dictionary: "Education: Instructing; enlightening the understanding, and forming the manners. Education comprehends all that series of instruction and discipline which is intended to enlighten the understanding, correct the temper, and form the manners and habits of youth, and fit them for usefulness in their future stations."

The problem of carrying out the will of God in the matter of our education to fit us for the duties of life to which we are severally called is a very important one, and to which the writer has given much serious thought and can not yet perceive the way clearly by which it can be done. The missionary is at home but a very short time each year. The many duties to be performed prevent him from pursuing a systematic course of study; and the difficulties increase when he enters his mission field, without books (except the three) and none where he goes, and with many other difficulties too numerous to mention staring him in the face. The very things that God wants him to do that he might prepare himself for his very important duties he is unable to do. When we go into the homes of the Saints these difficulties increase, because of poverty, a poor environment, bad example, wrong education or none at all; they are beset with all the sins that flesh is heir to.

It is a grievous error that the preliminary education of too many of our children is overlooked, and with free schools within reach of all, many do not reach the eighth grade. With the instructions God has given us, and the promise of his Spirit, we ought to be the best educated and most progressive people in the world. Do we comprehend the full meaning of the priest's duty wherein is said he is to exhort them "to attend to all family duties"? Does it not mean more than the mere perfunctory call at the home and inquiring of the welfare of its members and having prayers? Should not the parents be directed to see to the proper education of their children, also as to cleanliness, order, marriage, and all the duties that will fit them for the station in life where they shall be useful to both God and man? If the parents fail in their duty and the priest in his, either from inability or from lack of understanding, what must be the inevitable result? A lowering of the moral and spiritual standing of the entire church. The Lord has said we must "come up higher," and with the proper use of good books, in conjunction with the enlightenment of his spirit, we shall attain to the higher education which shall fit us for the most important work in which God has ever asked man to take part.

Just as all our ministers should seek to excel and do the very best possible in their different offices and in preaching the word, so should our young people prepare themselves to be more than "hewers of wood and drawers of water"; not because it is dishonorable to do common labor, but that in a social and financial way they can better aid the Lord's work. They ought to aspire and fit themselves for civil engineers, lawyers, doctors, dentists, literary men and women, chemists, artists, all the mechanical trades, a scientific knowledge of the products of the soil, and every department of human endeavor where they can become useful. The work that was done by Doctor Webster, Longfellow, Mrs. Stowe, Doctor Morgan, Lincoln, Edison, DeLesseps, Joseph Smith, and many others will live as long as the human heart takes pleasure in that which is uplifting and conduces to the comfort and happiness of mankind. With the aid God has promised us, if we are diligent and faithful, the names of many of our people shall be found among those who have wrought nobly for mankind.

Of General Interest

ABELS AND SMITH.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The following from the Salt Lake Tribune will be read with interest by our readers who are advocates of "true succession." The Mr. Ables referred to has since been baptized by Bro. Peter Anderson.

Gerald J. S. Abels, a Mormon elder and missionary, has opened a great question in his letter of resignation of his church membership in the church, addressed to his immediate ecclesiastical superiors.

The protest of Mr. Abels and his wife, in resentment of the teaching of a false doctrine, is only in line with the confessions of the authorities and the common knowledge of the priests and membership generally. Take either horn of the dilemma which confronts Joseph F. Smith, and he is both teaching and practicing a false doctrine. This would be of little moment to Smith, and perhaps of little moment to his immediate adulating cult, if the protest were not associated with an attack upon the right of Joseph F. Smith to lead the church. In this matter, former Elder Abels has touched the Mormon question on the quick. His entire people united solidly, Joseph F. Smith might be able to resist the aggressions from the outside for an indefinite period; but questioned from within, the disintegration of his power seems certain. Elder Abels has but voiced what Joseph F. Smith himself has stated, but Abels has made the application direct to Smith himself. In the momentous conference, convened in extraordinary session immediately following the death of President Lorenzo Snow, at which Joseph F. Smith presented himself as successor to Snow, and his son Hyrum as a member of the apostolic quorum, Joseph F. Smith laid the groundwork for the establishment of the Smith dynasty, whose succession to the presidency of the church should never be broken. To reach this end, Joseph F. Smith was compelled to revert to an old revelation, or pretended revelation, which had fallen from the remembrance of the Mormon people. He quoted the pretended word of God showing that the patriarch Hyrum Smith stood at the head of the system and that he, as a descendant of Hyrum, was the legitimate successor to the presidency. If his argument was correct, then Brigham Young, and all of Brigham's successors up to Joseph F. Smith, were usurpers. Also, if Smith was correct in his intimated interpretation, he himself is a usurper for another reason; that reason being that his brother John is older than he and has a right which takes precedence over his own.

Elder Abels disposes of the whole matter by declaring that the succession has never been with the Utah or Brighamite branch of the church; but is and has been, under the so-called revelations from God, with the Reorganized Church of which Young Joseph, as he is called, the son of the original founder of the church, is at present the head as the prophet, seer, and revelator. This is a question of which Joseph F. has fought shy. It has been his one fear all through his mature life: that the seed of his Uncle Joseph, the prophet, would rise up and demand their rights of inheritance in this commercial affair known as the Mormon church—one of the most valuable properties ever constructed by man, which pays a net dividend of two millions of dollars per annum, innumerable wives and children, and no questions asked.—Salt Lake Tribune, March 6, 1907.

IS THE PULPIT A "COWARD'S CASTLE."

Early last fall, so it is stated, two clergymen sat in New York discussing the future of a young man. One of these is described as "one of the two leading preachers of Greater New York," the other as "the first pulpit orator of Greater Boston." The question discussed was what to do with the eldest son of the former.

"I shall put him into business or into law," said the father. "I shall have no son of mine undergo what I have suffered. I want one member of my family independent and his own master, even if he hasn't a cent in the world."

The younger man needed no explanation. "I have just resigned from my own church," he said, "to starve and be free. There is only one remedy."

This anecdote is told in the New York Independent by Herbert D. Ward (son of Doctor William Hayes Ward and husband of Elizabeth Stuart Phelps-Ward). Taken in conjunction with Doctor Crapsey's radical utterances since his exchange of the pulpit for a lecture platform, and with the Reverend Madison C. Peters' abandonment of his church ministry on the ground that "the pulpit in America, with here and there a notable exception, is a 'coward's castle,'" the story may serve as an appropriate point of departure in considering the present status of the minister. Mr. Ward regards the situation as grave—so grave that he discourages young men from entering the ministry at all, unless they have money. He speaks as a graduate of a theological seminary, and as one who has had the confidence of ministers. "Under the present conditions," he says, "a poor man can not develop his independent manliness and live in the pulpit. If he does live, he borders close to the time-server and the hypocrite." Two instances are cited to reinforce this position. One is that of a minister, "happy, alert, cheerful, hopeful, with a devoted congregation behind him, and, more marvelous than that, a cabinet of deacons that are his advisers, not his masters." This minister has an income independent of his church salary, and his deacons know it. The other case is that of "a brilliant man in Hartford, who preached a sermon on sane Socialism." This minister had no independent resources, and, in consequence, "he, his wife, and children starved for two years until he captured a small pulpit in Vermont, where he is temporarily respected." All of which simply goes to show, in Mr. Ward's judgment, that money dominates the American pulpit to-day. He continues:

"The madness for money—the ease of speculation—the enormous fungi fortunes—the high wages and higher prices—the worship and fear of wealth—unbounded luxury and unbridled extravagance—all these and many other forms of Mammon hysteria have brought about a revolution in living conditions. Men are no longer measured by spirituality, by intellectual achievements. Many may be respectable, but only the bank account has respect. Nine tenths of our leading churches are dominated by the insolence of wealth. Nine tenths of our homes are mentally atrophied by its specter. This is not only the fact in cities, but the miserable conditions have been aped in country towns by the local coterie of the nouveaux riches, and are even filtering into the primitive fastnesses of our mountain hamlets.

"It is a miserable fact which we must honestly face that the average man, as well as the average church, is hypnotized out of his independence and manhood by the rich man of his environment. And the poor minister—who entered the clergy with white wings flying, with soul inflated by noble enthusiasms, with heart choked with the beauty of holiness, and with his mind made up to be a modern martyr, if necessary, finds himself, after a few parish changes and with heart choked by the diabolism of ugliness, wondering whether he has any tenets at all he dare call his own, and harassed by cowardly parishoners on the one side and threatened by lordly moneybags on the other."

Mr. Ward's complaint is that the very conditions under which ministers are compelled to live and preach at the present time preclude honesty and liberty. A second critic, himself a minister—the Reverend Doctor Mark Allison Matthews—thinks that clergymen are lacking in courage, and largely to blame for their own situation. Writing in the Chicago Presbyterian paper, The Interior, he says:

"As a whole, the ministry is more or less muzzled. There are thousands of ministers who apparently are afraid to speak and act as the authority of the pulpit warrants. They are certainly in need of holy boldness. Were they bold in proportion to their righteousness, and were they to speak as such boldness would demand, the moral conditions of this country would be instantly changed... They seem to dread the hardships and dangers of an aggressive, courageous line of action. They are afraid of wounding feelings, which in itself is an illogical position, because the minister ought to prick the conscience, wound the sinful heart, and bring conviction to every one of his hearers.

"Some are afraid of the things that may be said about them or to them. They dread the attack which the Devil and his agents may make upon them. They fear the bucket of filth which corrupt and degenerate men may try to hurl at them.

"Why should they fear the rage, froth, or darts of the agents of hell? God is their director and protector. If they are conscious of the righteousness of their cause, they should speak, even though their words emptied all hell of its sleuth-hounds and started them in hot pursuit after the preacher. There are some who are afraid of their positions. Why should they be? If the minister is called of God, his commission is from above, and his position and right to speak are eternal."—Current Literature, March, 1907.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

April Reading for Daughters of Zion.

OUR BOYS.—NO. 9.

It is not in childhood only that obedience is a necessary part of discipline, neither can our boy leave it behind him when he leaves the schoolroom to enter upon a business career. And this is true even if he expects to conduct a business of his own. No one who does not know how to obey is fitted to command. In the home, in business, in every enterprise, be it of what nature it may, there must be a head—must be one, or more than one acting together, whose judgment outweighs that of all others and whose ultimate decision is final. And as men, occupying positions of this kind, come into them, as a rule, from the ranks of those whose business it has been to obey, so must our boy, if he expects to be successful, as long as he is in the employ of any individual or firm, conform to the wishes of his employer. This, of course, does not apply to cases where the moral sense of right and wrong is involved. If of boy or man that is exacted which violates the conscience, then duty is plainly upon the side of disobedience, even if it be at the sacrifice of place or position.

The best service is given with a willing mind and a cheerful spirit. "At home, at school, and in the great institutions of business," says Mr. Fowler, "the first and necessary lessons to be taught the boy are that discipline and obedience are essential to the management of everything."

Perhaps it is well that just here we give a little time to the questions of success—what is it? We are living in an age when the spirit of money-getting is the ruling element. With this, in the minds of many, is closely associated the thought, No matter how; but with all thy getting, get money and get it quickly, and when success is mentioned this principle, or rather want of principle, stands in the minds of such individuals as the synonym of success. But this is not success, and it may be and often is the most dismal failure which can blight the life of any one.

"The rich man who possesses nothing but money, whether or not he has obtained it by questionable methods," says Mr. Fowler, in The Boy—How to Help Him Succeed, "is not considered a success by any one of consequence. With all his over-wealth he has no real friends, and few friends of any kind. He may be aped or flattered, but he is never loved or respected. His alleged friends are merely hangers-on, flatterers, borrowers, tricksters, and beats, or financial co-operators who would as willingly rob him as they would help him to rob others. When this man of money dies, the papers give him stingy mention, and the world forgets him even before the grass sprouts over his tearless grave. His henchmen are sorry he is dead, because they can use him no longer. His financial associates are relieved because his departure has given them more room for operation. The grief of relatives is but cloth-deep. This man represents one grade of success,—the lower grade, the grade that receives no respect on earth and has no standing in the world to come.

"The successful man of the higher grade is he who accomplishes something, whether it be in money-earning or in anything else for the mutual benefit of himself and others. This man is rich whether he be worth dollars or millions of dollars. This man is rich whether he be a shoemaker or a railroad president. This man is rich whether he be a clerk or a preacher. This man is rich because he is working up to the limit of his highest capacity and is doing his best.

"The man of only money is the slave of money. He has no individuality save as the taker, keeper, and spender of cash. He is but a financial rake, a human storehouse of perishable product, a success of the lowest grade. He has made of himself the kind of success he would be ashamed of if he had one half the brains necessary for semi-enlightenment.

"The accumulation of money, unless this accumulation be for a proper purpose and to be rightly distributed, is as foolish and wrong as the accumulation of land to be held in wasteful idleness. The good of anything is in its distribution and in the profitable use of it. A locked-up Bible is as worthless as unmined iron.

"The man who gains money and holds it or distributes it within his own circle, that it may all come back to him, is of the criminal grade of success, a menace to society and a felon before any bar of decency or any bench of justice. This man has for his pains the gratification of his own isolated selfishness. He is neither beloved nor respected; he is disliked and hated; he has no friends on earth; he must strain the mercy of the hereafter to get it. He is not a success.

"The successful man, with money or without it, is the man who has accomplished the most good for others, himself included; who has done the most to make others and himself better; who has looked upon money as a necessary means to an end; who has honestly acquired as much of it as seems essential to mutual advancement. This man is a success whether he have much money or little, whether he be a lawyer or a blacksmith, a banker or a carpenter, master of a thousand men or only one of a thousand workers. This man has friends who love him, not for his money; who respect him, not for his bank account;—friends who firmly grasp his hand in life and shed over his grave the tears of genuine sorrow. Within the fences of his field he has done his best. The world will never forget him, and when he leaves it, the place he once occupied may never be filled as he filled it. He is one of the threads in the billion-wired cable of success, which does its full share in standing the strain of life; and as it has helped others, so is it assisted. This man is not, and could not be a failure. He is and has to be, a success. The collateral which he has deposited in the Bank of Earth is payable with discount in the Treasury of Heaven. The seed of his earthly sowing for ever yields its harvests in the perpetual fertility of eternity."

It is wisdom upon the part of parents to ever hold up to their children, examples of the highest type, for

"Lives of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime."

And to the boy especially, who will come in more intimate and constant contact with the selfish greed of commercialism, which in our day seems sweeping over the land, having not only in all our large cities but in village and hamlet its wrecked and stranded victims, is this need imperative. It is possible to so instill into the developing intellect of our boy ideals so pure—so high and yet true to life that when the false—the base are met with, he will both loathe and shun them.

Let us give to our boy then the very highest ideal of success in life, that in the years to come he may venerate the home in which he was prepared for the battle of life and given a chart upon which its pitfalls and concealed batteries were plainly indicated.

Questions on April Reading.

Is the necessity for obedience confined to childhood or to the years spent in school? Who alone is fitted to command? What is necessary in the conducting of any business or any institution? By whom, as a rule, are these responsible positions occupied? Is there any exception to the rule that if a boy is to be successful he must obey his employer? What is regarded by many as a synonym of success? Instead of success, what is it? What other possessions may a man have besides money? How is the rich man who has nothing but money regarded in the world? What constitutes a higher grade of success than this? In what sense is the man of money only the slave of money? Has he reason to be ashamed? What effect would it have upon the boy to hear such sentiments as these expressed in his home? How only is the accumulation of money justified? What forms a criminal grade of success? Is this really success? Who is the truly successful man? How is he regarded? Is his success for this life only? How may the lives of the truly great assist in fortifying our boys against the selfish greed of commercialism? What will cause a boy in after-years to venerate his home? What must parents do in order to give their boys the highest ideal of success?

Program.

Hymn No. 172, Saints' Hymnal; prayer; reading from "Home Column" with discussion; paper, "The accumulation of money—in what conditions and to what extent is it justifiable"; roll-call; business; dismissal hymn and prayer.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Phoebe E. Reynolds, of South Boardman, Michigan, requests the prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of her son, that he may be influenced by the Spirit to remain at home, and not go away from the influence of home and the church; and that he might obey the gospel.

Letter Department

LEXINGTON, Tennessee, March 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: Perhaps some would be glad to hear how the work is progressing in Kentucky and Tennessee. Since July last I have labored in the States referred to above most of the time, associated with Bro. A. V. Closson in tent-work until cold weather. Since then it has been my lot to travel alone most of the time. My associations with Bro. Closson were pleasant, though we were strangers to begin with. I found him to be a very congenial yoke-fellow, and one who is always ready to do his part of the work, either of a physical or spiritual nature. And no doubt many of ye elders are aware of the fact that there is a great deal of "physical" work connected with running a tent.

I am favorably impressed with tent-work. Not that I especially enjoy the work myself; but I am satisfied more people, especially in towns and new places, can be reached that way than any other. At every place where the tent went last year, at Paris, Pilot Oak, Hickman, and Elm Tree, we could not accommodate all the people with seats, and many times not standing-room under the tent. And as a result of these meetings largely, some thirty or forty were brought into the church. We have no house of worship at any of these places referred to, and in the past efforts have been put forth in private houses, with little or no good accomplished, as the people would not turn out. So, for the above reasons I favor the tent-work.

The Saints and friends at Elm Tree are putting forth an effort to build a house of worship there. Bro. Closson has been assisting them some, and preaching for them at night. Brn. McClain, Wyringer, Hendrix, and Shell have opened their hospitable homes for preaching, when the elders are there. They have also held regular mid-week prayer-meetings, and many times they are not able to accommodate the crowds. So they are badly in need of a more commodious place of worship. This has been a bad winter for missionary work in this country; so much rain and bad roads; sometimes almost impassable.

The debate held at Austin Springs between Reverend A. A. Jones, Missionary Baptist, and Elder C. L. Snow, February 12 to 16, was another victory for the cause of truth. The weather was fine, and large crowds were in attendance. The usual church propositions were discussed, the King James Translation to be the only evidence, no history allowed, as Reverend Jones preferred to fight it out on the Bible alone. As Jones was in the affirmative the first two days, Bro. Snow waited patiently for Jones to set up his church and try to establish his proposition, but he would not. So Bro. Snow had to show the people what Jones was expected to do. Jones never attempted to set up his church, or show a succession, but just rode his hobby, "Salvation by faith alone."

Bro. Snow in his affirmative showed from the Scriptures the apostolic church, and the outline was put on the blackboard so all could see. He then showed that he was in harmony by setting the church organizations up side by side. To use his expression, "They are as much alike as two white beans." Jones never attempted to answer the argument, but instead offered Bro. Snow one hundred dollars to perform a miracle; wanted him to heal a blind man (by the way a Baptist preacher) who was in the audience, or to drink poison, then he would believe. Well, if he did not feel little when Bro. Snow replied to him, I am sure some of his brethren did, for they told me they were ashamed of it.

Bro. Snow showed an apostasy so complete that Jones felt his defeat, and virtually admitted it publicly by saying, "If I were permitted to use history, I could prove it." Thereupon Bro. Snow told him he should have a chance after this debate, if he wanted it. So at the close his moderator and brother preachers were anxious for another debate, so the same propositions were signed with the privilege of bringing in history. They have selected Bro. Penich of Martin, Tennessee, as their champion. Propositions have been submitted to missionary in charge. I have not heard from him yet, so do not know whom he will select. I suppose he himself will meet it if he has time.

The moderators were privileged to speak right about during the debate, so the writer had the privilege of speaking to the people. I feel that good will result from these debates.

Much rain, with bad roads, forces me to abandon the country for a while. I came to Jackson, Tennessee, the first of the month; held two meetings there in a private house. Some interest was manifested, and a number of questions asked at the close, which show a spirit of inquiry. I thought of trying street-preaching, but learned that an anti-saloon movement was on, and every public place was occupied morning and evening by speakers, so I bade them God-speed, and came on to this place, and have been holding forth every night since. Some interest is manifested. Two have expressed themselves as desirous of being baptized before I leave. From here I expect to go south seven or eight miles by request to hold some meetings. Have several calls for preaching, but shall try to labor as the Spirit directs.

Hopefully in the work,

J. R. MCCLAIN.

FULTON, Kentucky, March 9, 1907.

Editors Herald: I have been thinking for a long time that I would write to the HERALD, but did not want to write until I felt in a proper mood. I would enjoy the good Spirit of God, I believe, if I could only have an opportunity to read the good things in the HERALD, and other good literature; but I have so often tried to read and the little ones would bother me so I could not, it seemed, get the good meaning of the article, until I almost quit trying to read. But I sometimes think God makes allowances for poor mothers who have such limited opportunities to cultivate their minds in any way.

I do not mean to complain; for there is nothing sweeter to me, or that makes a home more cheerful, than "little folk," and they give me much pleasure, and it is a delight to watch after and care for them. Yet, I can not help but wish at times that I could get a chance to read more in silence, so that my mind could act more intelligently, and that I might comprehend better. But last night I felt more wakeful than usual, and read in the HERALD a sermon by Bro. Heman C. Smith, subject, "Man's dominion," and I am glad to say that it did me much good. I feel this morning more encouraged, and better able to fight the battle (as it were) than I have for a long time.

We are in almost an isolated condition. I have not heard any preaching since our reunion last July, and have been with the Saints but once or twice. I feel lost sometimes, and as if I were doing no good in the world at all. I have, I am sorry to confess, fallen back instead of growing, and coming up higher. But I feel this morning that God has not yet forsaken me.

Your sister in the faith,

BOBBIE WILLIAMS.

POLLARD, Alabama.

Editors Herald: I desire to inform you that the work is still onward in the "Sunny South," or at least in this part. The Love-Kelley debate is a matter of history now. Last week the contest raged, when the "prince and power of the air" did not prevent with rain-storms. Two nights were missed on account of the weather, but one session was made up by having three sessions on Saturday. Doctor Love is quite a forceful debater and presented some arguments that I presume might be counted strong viewed from his standpoint, but viewed from our standpoint they were such as we often meet, and such as the infidel might offer against the Bible and Bible characters. David Whitmer's Appeal and Oliver Cowdery's Defense were the hardest things to meet, and I think had more effect on the minds of the people as a real objection to Joseph Smith and the work established through him than anything else offered. But when it was proved that they both died reaffirming their testimony to the Book of Mormon, the force of their objections against Joseph Smith was weakened materially. It was also shown that their doubts of Joseph being inspired in the giving of certain revelations was not worse than Judah's betrayal of the Christ or of John the Baptist first testifying of him, "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world!"—John 1:29. And then after he had been cast into prison and Christ did not release him he sent messengers to ask, "Art thou he that should come, or look we for another?"—Luke 7:19. Neither was it worse than when Peter, Christ's chief apostle, cursed and swore and said, "I know not the man."—Matthew 26:74. These examples only show human weakness as when Christ's apostles could not accept his teaching and, "From that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him."—John 6:66.

Doctor Love tried to make considerable capital out of Whitmer's and Cowdery's statement of a revelation they claimed Joseph gave concerning an effort to sell the copyright of the Book of Mormon in Canada which they said failed. As we nowhere have a statement of the full wording of that revelation, were any such revelation ever given, Bro. Kelley argued that it possibly contained conditions that were not fully met; hence may have failed for that reason. And even though Joseph had a false revelation, which is doubtful, it was no worse than what the Bible records in 1 Kings, 22, and 2 Corinthians 13 where Micaiah said, "As the Lord liveth, even what my God saith, that will I speak" (verse 13), and then proceeded immediately to give a false revelation; then, when questioned about it, proceeded to give a true revelation directly opposite to the former one. This seems to reflect against the Bible, but when we read carefully the two chapters referred to we learn why God sent this lying spirit to so prophesy through four hundred prophets, and one of them, at least, was a prophet of God.

Bro. Kelley proved to be equal to the emergency and an able defender of the faith. Doctor Love requested that the debate be repeated at Bay Minette, Alabama, next September. Bro. Kelley accepted the challenge, so if the Doctor does not fail to be on hand at the time, as it appears that he has twice done before, the Saints and friends may look for another debate there. The rules were so well kept by both disputants that neither party was called to order, and we had no need for a third moderator. I believe it is safe to say, from what I learned from their expressions after the debate, that the Saints were all strengthened in the faith. One was baptized at Berrydale, the place of the debate, yesterday, and Bro. Kelley remained to baptize some others to-day.

Yours in the faith,

J. M. STUBBART.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, February 20, 1907.

Editors: At the first public meeting after the mail from America arrives the Saints expect to hear the news from all over the world, so when the last mail arrived they were all expectation, for we had told of the loss of the HERALD Office by fire. We entered more fully into details in the meeting, or rather after the services were dismissed, and they all seemed to feel the loss except one brother who said, well as other places"; but the general sentiment was of course sorrow for the loss of the building and fixtures.

We are busy now building the new missionary house, because rent (which is eighteen dollars Chili money a month or eight dollars French) is quite a burden. By the kindness of the Bishop in America we are able to get a new one, and thus the first step is taken to rebuild Taronā. It is doubtless the best for situation of any place in Papeete, but is too low; yet if we can fill up a few feet we will be as safe as the principal business places of Papeete are. This we hope to do after our April conference; but there is no place safe now on the face of the earth, except Zion, and who is worthy an inheritance therein?

Bro. and Sr. Lake are now living at Faaa, but soon expect to move to Tiona. The zinc roofing and lumber for ceiling the missionary house in Tiona are all ready and they will soon be located in their new home in Zion. Bro. John Hawkins is now in Faaa among his grandchildren and great-grandchildren, and great-great-grandchildren. He is with his daughter now. Tereva Moe is her name.

Spiritualism and adultery, which are so prevalent in this country, are causing us some trouble in the church here; for these people are naturally very superstitious; but hope by patience and gentleness, with unceasing work and prayer, to measurably get above all these sins.

Peace be with all the Israel of God in these troublous times.

Your brother in Christ,
JOSEPH F. BURTON.

PONCA, Oklahoma, February 24, 1907.

Dear Herald: My heart was made sad to learn of the loss of the HERALD plant. Can not understand why it should have been so at a time when we were preparing to build the dear children's home and the sanitarium; but trust we may all be so trustful and humble before God that he will make it work for good to his people.

I had just renewed for my HERALD before the fire; and have since for the Ensign, although my time had not expired.
M. A. CHRISTY.

MANCHESTER, Texas, March 3, 1907.

Editors Saints Herald: Another conference year has about passed away and our work for the year has gone on to make up our record by which we are to be tried when our Savior comes to give each one of us our reward. I look back over my year's work and wonder if I could have done any more. I tried to do the best I could.

Last summer Bro. John Harp came to this field and began to help me in these parts to tell the beautiful gospel story. Bro. Harp is a fine man to labor with. We had some fine meetings and some were brought into the kingdom of God. Hundreds heard the gospel which they will never forget. Bro. Harp took well with the people of Northeastern Texas.

On the 24th of January we met in district conference with the Wilburton Branch, in the Indian Territory. We had the pleasure of meeting with a goodly number of the brethren. Among them were G. H. Hilliard and Ellis Short of Independence, Missouri, and our worthy missionary in charge, Fred A. Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa. While at conference we met in a priesthood meeting and Bro. Fred A. gave us some of the finest lessons it was ever my pleasure to listen to. He has gained the love and confidence of the boys in the South that time will never fade. May the Lord add many years of usefulness to his life.

We were indeed sorry to hear of the HERALD Office being destroyed by fire. We hope the loss will prove a blessing somewhere on life's road. Let us all do what we can for the publishing house this year. I was in a town a few days ago and several merchants wanted to know the name of our publishing house. Said they wanted to send for a dozen copies of the Book of Mormon. I hope they have ordered them by this time. I find in my field of labor a great inquiry for the Book of Mormon.

Well, many wonderful things happened in the year just passed. Destructions on land and sea have been wonderful, but the wonderful prophet, Isaiah, by the Spirit, looked down unborn time and saw when the gospel would be restored back to the earth by the hand of an angel, that we would be visited by thunder and earthquakes and great noises, with storms and tempests and the flames of devouring fire; and indeed those things are here and the end is near. I do not rejoice to see the nations of the earth suffering, but my heart is made glad to know that there is a God who can, by his Holy Spirit, reveal to the children of men things that shall come to pass three thousand years after they were revealed. Indeed I am glad that I am living in this age of the world and have the pleasure and honor of presenting the gospel of our Savior. The time is near at hand when the nations of the earth will have to take notice of this great latter-day work. So as the years come and go I hope to be able to live that pure and good life that our Savior commands us to live, that I may have on the white robe of righteousness and hear the wonderful words: Enter into thy rest.

E. A. ERWIN.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, March 2, 1907.

Dear Herald: I am trying to show my sympathy for the loss of the HERALD Office by getting new subscriptions and renewals. Please find inclosed order. I believe we all love the dear old HERALD, that we can not afford to be without it, and by the good management of the HERALD force we were not permitted to miss one number. To our great surprise it came, and although it was smaller than usual, how pleased we were to peruse its pages!

I came to Riverton in the latter part of January, held several meetings in the Mill Creek Schoolhouse, was ably cared for at the hospitable home of our dear Bro. and Sr. Comstock; left there for Thurman to go and fill an appointment previously made for me by Bro. J. R. Wight at Walnut Grove Schoolhouse on the Sidney and Tabor road. We enjoyed the liberty of presenting the blessed gospel to an interesting and increasing audience for nearly two weeks. Though none were baptized we felt sure some were brought nearer the kingdom. Our stay was made very pleasant by the care and consideration of our genial Bro. and Sr. Moore. While there we had the pleasure of solemnizing the marriage of Mr. William O. Estes and Miss Fanny Holsclaw. I also occupied the pulpit at the Thurman church two Sundays, morning and evening, while in that vicinity; also visited Bishop Leeka and family. Our brother has been failing in health, for some time, but withal he has great faith in the providence of God.

While in Thurman, our friend, Mr. Witherow, editor and proprietor, asked me if I would give him an article for publication. I told him I would be glad to do so. I wrote quite a lengthy article explaining the difference between our claims and those of the Utah Mormons. He published it, giving it the first column on the front page.

Reaching Tabor on the 21st of February we came in time for the Religio convention, also the convention of the Sunday-school, in which we were asked to participate. Much credit is due the officers of the district for the success they have attained. On Saturday, the 25th, the district met to do business, which was a success from beginning to end. A more peaceful conference I never remember attending.

We left Tabor with kind remembrances of the loyalty of the Saints in that they did not forget the needs of the missionaries. In company with Bro. Eli Hayer we came to Shenandoah. As we got onto the train at Tabor we learned of the death of Bro. W. H. H. Griffith of this place. He was laid to rest in the Rose Hill Cemetery, Bro. Hayer having charge of the funeral-service, and the writer preaching the sermon.

As the time draws near to close this conference year's work one can not help but look back and ask, What has been the record? I have been more than satisfied with this mission. I hope I have done some good. I have tried to. Having gotten more acquainted with its needs, I believe I could labor to still greater advantage another year should I be sent back; but that is with the Lord and the church, as I always want to be willing to say, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord." I am at present pleasantly located at the home of Bro. and Sr. Cline.

JOSEPH ARBER.

ALDEN BRIDGE, Louisiana, March 4, 1907.

Editors Herald: Kindly permit an isolated one the use of your columns. I have just finished reading the dear old HERALD and also the Ensign. They come to our relief weekly, filled with food for the weary and thirsty souls: Oh, how grand it is to read the sermons therein! Sr. A. B. Hawley's article, "Study and work," in HERALD, February 20, was good. Come again, sister.

Let us awake to the spiritual need of those around us. Oh, how grand is the beautiful plan of salvation, and how far reaching it is! Are we doing all we can for the spread of the gospel? Are we improving every chance we have to get the truth before the people? Many of them the ministry can not reach. We can plant the seed, by all of us taking the church literature, then read and hand it to our neighbors, and in that way we will warn our neighbors, and in that we will sow the gospel seed.

We say that we are saints; can we prove it? and how? By faith and works only.

I was appointed local historian for this grand old state of Louisiana, and as I wanted the address of all members, I learn that the State has a membership of about thirty-nine and only seven take HERALD and twelve take Ensign. My brothers and sisters, I would not do without the HERALD and Ensign for ten times the price. Let us all take the literature, then we will help the church.

This great work is of God, and no man can do the work of himself. I give God the praise for the two great messengers sent out once a week, bringing glad tidings to isolated ones.

Yours for the advancement of the great cause,

J. E. TALLEY.

HILL CITY, Kansas.

Editors Herald: I moved with my family from Crescent, Iowa, Pottawattamie County, last December, and located in Graham County, Kansas, near Hill City. The district conference met with Hill City Branch, February 23 and 24. We had a good spiritual feast. The business done was directed by the peaceful influence of the Holy Spirit.

There is a total of about twenty-three enrolled in the Hill City Branch, now. We are going to organize a Sunday-school soon. I think we can do lots of good; there are some outside of the church who will join with us.

Dear Saints, pray for us that God may bless us in all our undertakings for good. And I would ask the Saints to pray for my dear brother, N. A. Boyd, who has been so sorely afflicted for so many years, that if it be God's will he may be restored to health.

J. N. BOYD.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes.

FREMONT.—Fremont district conference convened with Tabor Branch, near Tabor, Iowa, Saturday, February 23, 1907, Amazon Badham in charge. Branches reporting: Riverton 56, Glenwood 77, Henderson 84, Keystone 34, Tabor 71, Thurman 199, Hamburg 66, Bartlett 44. Ministry reporting: M. M. Turpen, Joseph Arber, J. B. Cline, C. M. Roberts, E. S. Wilcox, A. Badham, James Comstock, Frank Goode, George Kemp, S. Orton, E. A. Stedman, A. J. Davidson, Eli Hayer, J. R. Wight, T. A. Hougas, Joseph Roberts, L. C. Donaldson, F. B. Knight, J. C. Moore, R. S. Hillyer, N. L. Mortimore, M. H. Ettleman, C. W. Forney, G. F. Skank, E. F. Wilcox, Joseph Goode, J. E. Claiborn, R. V. Greenway, S. S. Clark. Number sermons preached since last conference 307, baptisms 1, membership of district 756.

Secretary's report showed district tent fund on hand $14.74. Following resolution was adopted: "Resolved that we, the Fremont District, in conference assembled, request the appointing powers of the church, that in their appointing missionaries to this, the Fremont District, they do so without associating our district with any other, in order that the missionary's work may not be divided, but his whole time be given to the one district." Signed by Joseph Roberts and Frank Goode. Henderson having sent a petition for next conference, a vote resulted in favor of meeting with Henderson Branch, May 25 and 26, 1907. Delegates to General Conference (empowered, in case of division, to cast majority and minority vote): M. W. Gaylord and wife, George Kemp and wife, H. O. Redfield and wife, S. S. Clark and wife, Sine Shaw, Ella Vanderpool, Joseph Arber, Eli Hayer, Joseph Roberts, T. A. Hougas and wife, E. A. Stedman, Charles Fry, M. M. Turpen, Frank Greene and wife, S. K. Sorensen, Frank Becksted and wife, Lorena and Sadie Leeka, Ethel I. Skank, Bethana Redfield, E. E. Barbour and wife, Gertrude Lentz. Amazon Badham was then chosen president of the district, and C. W. Forney secretary; William Leeka, bishop, and S. Orton, second counselor to bishop, were sustained. Moved that the Fremont District take measures to raise means to send our missionaries to General Conference. Report of Bishop William Leeka was received. Receipts up to date, $197.08; expenditures for allowances, $264.00; balance due Bishop, $66.92. Adjourned to meet with Henderson Branch, May 25 and 26, 1907. C. W. Forney, secretary.

EASTERN COLORADO.—The semi-annual conference of the Eastern Colorado District was held in Colorado Springs, Colorado, March 2 and 3, 1907. Delegates were elected to the General Conference, and much other business of importance transacted. Officers elected were, J. D. Curtis, president; J. W. Morgan, vice-president; D. Robert Winn, secretary-treasurer. Our next conference and reunion meets in Denver, Colorado, early in September, 1907. The outlook is very bright in this district. D. Rob't Winn, secretary.

KIRTLAND.—Conference convened at Sharon, Pennsylvania, Saturday, March 2, at 10 a. m. Permanent organization effected by selecting G. T. Griffiths to preside, assisted by J. W. Rushton and George A. Smith. Statistical reports: Cleveland 98, Toledo 43, Conneautville 56, Temple 90, Akron 93, Sharon 84, New Philadelphia 85, Maumee 20, Youngstown 32, Baldwin 23, the last named branch being newly organized. Bishop's agent, E. Miller, reported: Total receipts, since last report, $1,103.79; total expenses, $1,209.22; due agent, $105.43. An itemized account of the receipts and expenditures of the reunions of 1905 and 1906 read, showing a deficit of $43.73. Bro. V. D. Schaar and T. U. Thomas, were appointed a committee to collect money to pay this debt. A resolution was passed that each branch in the district take up a collection on the last Sunday in each quarter to defray district expenses. Officers elected for ensuing term: G. A. Smith, president; E. Miller, and T. U. Thomas, councilors; E. E. Cozadd, secretary-treasurer; E. Miller, Bishop's agent. Delegates to General Conference: Bro. and Sr. G. A. Smith, Bro. and Sr. R. Baldwin, Bro. and Sr. E. Miller, F. J. Ebeling, Paul Hanson, J. C. Farnfield, U. W. Greene, Lulu Beck, A. E. Stone, James McConaughy, A. Koehler, J. W. Rushton, A. J. McMillen, T. H. Darst, W. G. Kimball, G. W. Leggott, R. Etzenhouser, J. H. Lake, J. W. Topping, A. R. Manchester, D. A. Anderson, Bro. and Sr. G. T. Griffiths, W. H. Kelley, L. R. Devore. Delegates present to cast full vote of district. Conference adjourned to meet at call of district presidency, they with reunion committee to select time and place. E. E. Cozadd, secretary, Springboro, Pennsylvania.

NODAWAY.—Conference convened February 23 and 24, 1907, at 10 o'clock, in the Union church, with the Bedison Branch, E. S. Fannon presiding, W. B. Torrance, secretary. Statistical reports: Bedison 79, Sweet Home 58, Ross Grove 47, Guilford 96. Ministry reporting: Elder W. P. Bootman, A. E. McCord baptized 1, J. T. Ford, T. A. Ivie, E. S. Fannon, W. E. Haden baptized 2, C. Nelson, R. Lorensen, J. L. Gunsolley, William Woodhead, R. K. Ross; Priests James Schofield, R. F. Hill, W. B. Torrance, W. T. Ross; Deacons Robert Nelson, C. Kalstrup, Alma Nelson. District historian, E. S. Fannon, read a communication from Bro. Heman C. Smith, General Historian, relative to securing data for re-writing history lost in fire. Bishop's agent reported due church, $224.25. Bro. E. P. Hawley, of the Sweet Home Branch, was recommended for ordination to the office of teacher. Ordination was provided for. Bro. Jacob Hansen, to office of elder, and Alexander Jensen to office of teacher, were both recommended by the Bedison Branch for ordination. Matter was laid upon the table. By motion the president of each branch constitutes a committee to solicit means to purchase a new tent as soon as a sufficient sum is obtained. By motion $5.00 of the money, proceeds from sale of old tent, was ordered paid back to the purchasers, and the remaining $15 turned over to tent committee when called for. Bro. Arch E. McCord was selected to preside over the district the ensuing year; W. B. Torrance, secretary and recorder. Delegates to General Conference: E. S. Fannon, J. T. Ford, W. H. Clester, James Schofield, Harve Ivie, John Jorgensen, T. A. Ivie, Sr. Mary Ivie, W. T. Ross, W. P. Bootman, W. E. Haden: Those present authorized to cast full vote of district. Bro. E. P. Hawley was ordained teacher, and Bro. Frank Powell, by action of a former conference, was ordained priest. Auditing committee reported: Found Bishop's agent's book incomplete, and did not harmonize with the report to the conference. By motion the committee was retained, the Bishop's agent instructed to carry out totals, balance up his books, and present same to committee at next conference to be re-audited. Conference adjourned to meet with Guilford Branch, the third Saturday next district conference, time June 21, 1907.

SOUTHERN TEXAS.—Conference met at the Saints' church in San Antonio, Texas, February 22 to 24, 1907, O. D. Johnson in chair; T. J. Jett, assistant president, W. H. Davenport, secretary. W. H. Mannering was called to the chair. Ministry reporting: Elders W. H. Mannering baptized 4, C. F. Belkham baptized 1, O. D. Johnson, T. J. Jett, D. S. Palmer baptized 2, W. H. Davenport; Priests Ed N. McRae, D. S. Palmer, Bishop's agent reported: Balance on hand last report, $23.63; collected, $181.85; paid out, $185.00. Branch reports: San Antonio 97. Delegates to General Conference: W. H. Mannering, D. S. Palmer, J. P. Neal, Cora Curtis, Martha Merritt, Minnie McRae, Sr., Ed N. McRae, and S. S. Smith. Pipe Creek schoolhouse in Bandera, Texas, was selected as the place for holding the next district conference, time June 21, 1907.

UTAH.—Conference convened in Salt Lake City, March 2 at 10 a. m., J. E. Vanderwood in the chair. Branch reports from Ogden, Union Port, Pleasant Grove, Salt Lake, and Provo were read. W. H. Kelley reported very encouragingly of the work in the Rocky Mountain Mission. J. E. Vanderwood, Bishop's agent, reported. Report of elders: E. C. Briggs, J. D. Stead, J. F. Curtis, L. G. Holloway, J. E. Vanderwood, S. D. Condit, Oscar W. Oberlien, Peter Anderson, A. M. Chase, L. E. Pederson, W. H. Kelley, T. W. Chatburn. Our next conference will be at Provo, Utah, in connection with the reunion on the first Saturday and Sunday in September, 1907. Votes of thanks were tendered to the retiring secretary and Bishop's agent, for services rendered to the district; and to the missionary force of the district and hope they will be returned to this district. After the Sunday morning service Mr. Ables of Ogden arose and asked permission to address the Saints. This being granted he stated his feelings concerning the Utah Mormon church of which until recently, he was a member. I believe he was an elder in said church. He read a paper which he had presented to the bishop of the ward of which he was a member. In the paper he stated his reasons for leaving the Mormon church, and asked to be released from membership. The paper in itself was wonderful, and the man's speech was inspired. He concluded by asking for baptism in our faith. Monday at 8:30 a. m., Mr. and Mrs. Ables, John Scott, and Frances Pierce, were baptized. Altogether, our conference was a success. Adele Carlisle-Strausbach, secretary.

OKLAHOMA.—The twenty-fourth conference was held at Wilburton, Indian Territory, January 26, 1907. Reports received from the following branches: Manchester 100, Grannis 91, Haileyville 56, Jacksonville 73, Wilburton 197. By motion the next conference was voted to be held at Adamson, Indian Territory, just before the reunion to be held there. D. O. Harder, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN MISSOURI.—Conference convened at Bevier, Missouri, February 23, 1907, at 10 a. m., F. T. Mussell in the chair; W. B. Richards, secretary pro tem, assisted by P. J. Raw. At the request of President Mussell, Bro. I. N. White was chosen to preside over the conference. He chose Brn. A. Allen and F. T. Mussell to assist him. Branches reporting: Bevier and Higbee. Ministry reporting: W. S. Macrae, A. Allen, F. T. Mussell, W. C. Chapman, William Kelso, F. Palfrey, J. T. Williams, F. A. Evans, William Vaughn, W. B. Richards, P. J. Raw, Ed E. Thomas. Bishop's agent reported: On hand last report, $25.62; receipts, $550.31; disbursements, $544.66. Delegates to General Conference, those present authorized to cast full vote, and in case of a division to cast a majority and a minority vote: W. S. Macrae, A. Allen, F. T. Mussell, Ellen Davis, P. J. Raw, Louise Palfrey, Charles Edmunds, W. B. Richards, Lydia Williams, J. T. Williams, Ivor Surrridge, Miles Edmunds, Charles Perry, Sr. S. J. Edmunds, W. J. Richards, J. L. Williams. The holding of next conference was left in the hands of the district officers.

Convention Minutes.

CLINTON.—Religio convened at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, March 1, 1907, with the district president in charge. Three locals reported. Enrollment of district is 180; average attendance, 41. Annual report was read and delegates elected to General Convention. Dora Lowe, secretary.

CLINTON.—District Sunday-school convention met at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, March 1, 1907. The following officers were elected: Superintendent, Iva Keck; assistant superintendent, W. E. Reynolds; secretary, Zora Lowe; treasurer, Ira Roberts; librarian, C. W. Keck. A very enjoyable time was had, and unity seemed to prevail. Mrs. Martha Cool, secretary.

ST. LOUIS.—Sunday-school and Religio associations held a joint convention at Bellville, Illinois, March 2 and 3. Religio convened at 8.30 p. m., with F. E. Smith in the chair. Reports were read, and showed the district to be progressing. The following officers were elected: President, L. Joerndt; vice-president, F. E. Smith; secretary, Robert Scott; treasurer, G. A. Kendall; librarian, Anna de Jong. Bro. Will Weidman then took charge for the Sunday-school association. The following officers were elected: Superintendent, G. A. Kendall; assistant superintendent, S. L. Ridley; secretary, Elmer Cooke; treasurer, Stella Wild; librarian, Mrs. Weidman. An enjoyable program was had the following day, and much good feeling and fellowship was created. The visiting delegates appreciate the hospitality extended to them by the Bellville Saints. Elmer Cooke and Robert Scott, secretaries.

The Presidency.

MEETING-PLACES FOR QUORUMS.

The First Presidency, during Conference, will have its headquarters in the Atkinson Building. Those having business with the Presidency will find some one at the office at all times during Conference. The Quorum of Twelve have fitted quarters on the second floor of the W. A. Grenawalt Building. The High Priests' Quorum will meet in the Mite Society Building until further notice. The Seven Presidents of Seventy will meet in the northwest room of the basement of the church, while the First and Second Seventy will occupy the basement and northwest room. The secretary of the Third Quorum has arranged for it to meet at the residence of Mrs. Anna Dancer.

The meeting-places of the various quorums of elders and priests will be announced later, as soon as available places have been secured, which are at the disposal of the Presidency.

Presidents of quorums of elders, priests, teachers, etc., who desire meeting-places for the Conference, will please notify the Presidency at the earliest opportunity, and arrangements will be made. Through the courtesy of the various lodges, societies, etc., of Lamoni, we feel that there will be ample quarters for all the quorums to meet in spite of the loss of our HERALD publishing plant.

The Presidency urges all quorums which have business which will demand consideration of the Conference to call meetings of the quorum at the earliest date possible, so that business growing out of quorum reports which need careful consideration by the conference shall be before it at as early a date as is possible. There are a number of committees, standing and otherwise, from whom the conference expects reports, and the chairmen of these various committees are urged to have their committees together early.

F. M. SMITH, for the Presidency.

Church Secretary.

CREDENTIALS OF DISTRICTS.

Will district presidents and secretaries who have not yet responded, please see that their district credentials to General Conference are sent in at once. Make them up on your own forms; that is, write them out. As explained heretofore, no regular blanks were sent you, for the reason that lists of addresses were destroyed and it was too late to collect them again before giving notice. It is necessary that all credentials be in hand as soon as possible, to prepare for prompt organization of the General Conference. Please include total membership of district.

Respectfully,

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

High Priests' Quorum.

The High Priests' Quorum will meet in the Mite Society Building Lamoni, Iowa, April 6, 1907, at 8 a. m. Every member who can conveniently do so is requested to be present. Business of importance will likely be presented. It is therefore desired that the quorum be well represented. This has special reference to members living near Lamoni, and those attending General Conference.

F. G. PITT, President.

First Quorum of Seventy.

In the notice to First Seventy in HERALD for March 6, occurs an error in the date of meeting. It should be April 2 at 10 a. m., instead of April 1. This is one of the mistakes that occur without being able to explain how or why.

J. F. MINTUN, Secretary.

Eighth Quorum of Elders.

Per previous notice, report blanks were mailed to all members of this quorum, January 30. There have been returned, however, the following, for which we have no addresses: Ambero L. Coffe, Hurleyville, Indian Territory; J. W. Rogers, Independence, Missouri; William H. Hutchinson, Ono, Wisconsin; Evan Lewis, Lucas, Iowa, Box 226; William N. Williams, Castle Rock, Washington.

The above are the old addresses, but these have been returned unclaimed. Any information as to their present permanent addresses will be gladly received.

S. A. BURGESS, Secretary.

St. Louis, Missouri, March 11, 1907.

Reunion Notices.

The fifteenth annual reunion of Northern Missouri will be held near Stewartsville, August 16 to 25 inclusive. Get ready now, and come prepared to have a ten days' spiritual feast, and help make this one of the best reunions ever held in this locality. B. J. Dice, president; B. R. Constance, secretary; John Piepergerdes, treasurer; D. E. Powell, D. H. Schmidt, committee.

Addresses.

J. F. Mintun, 1205 Filmore Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

General Conference Reception Committee.

NOTICE.

Are you coming to General Conference? If so do not wait until you are ready to start before you notify the committee, or you may be disappointed about finding a boarding-place when you arrive.

Write the secretary of the committee at once so that arrangements can be made for you. Do not ask for free entertainment as we can not promise it to any one. The price of board has been fixed by the Lamoni Branch at $3.50 per week. Let us hear from you quick if you want a place.

C. I. CARPENTER, Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 18, 1907.

Request for Prayer.

Dear Saints: Bro. Freeman of the Toronto Branch has been suffering under the hand of affliction since November last.

He is now in the hospital and has undergone two serious operations, and the doctors all say he must undergo another before he can be well.

He has always taken a great interest in the HERALD, and as he is in a very critical condition, he asks that the Saints hold him up in prayer, that he may bear patiently the affliction and be able to do God's will, whether it be to take him from us, or spare him a little while, that he may be a help to the church and to his family.

Yours in gospel bonds,

LILY FREEMAN.

Died.

DARIES—Mary, wife of Bro. John Daries, died February 21, 1907. She was returning home from church about 9 p. m., in company with her husband, Bro. Casper Hinderks and wife, and other friends, when the summons came like a thunder-clap. Heart-failure was the cause. Her sudden departure cast a gloom over the entire community. She was born September 12, 1853, in Germany. Leaves husband, five daughters, one son, father, mother, three brothers, and three grandchildren. Was baptized in 1881. She was a true saint of God. Services in charge of T. T. Hinderks, sermon by William Lewis.

MARKS.—Earnest Emerson, the darling baby son of Bro. George and Sr. Bertha Marks, died February 27, 1907, aged three months, and twenty days. Earnest was the first-born, and was the picture of health from birth. Was taken severely sick just four days prior to his death, with pneumonia and pleurisy. Services in charge of C. P. Faul, sermon by William Lewis.

PALMER.—H. J., died at Council Bluffs, Iowa, February 15, 1907, at the age of 48 years. He was born in Salt Lake City, and removed to Council Bluffs with his parents. He was unmarried, but four sisters and one brother remain to mourn their loss, besides many friends. Funeral-services at the home, conducted by Charles Fry.

LILES.—Frances Ann Richards was born December 18, 1831, at Hillsboro, Ohio; died February 24, 1907. She came to Council Bluffs with the first emigration in 1846. In 1853 she was united in marriage to Alexander Liles, who preceded her to the life beyond six years ago this month. She united with the Reorganized Church in 1861, and remained a faithful member to the end. She was willing to depart. Four children remain to mourn her loss, also seventeen grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Funeral-services at Henderson, Iowa, in charge of Charles Fry and T. A. Hougas.

ment, if we may judge from the attendance, interest, and spirituality of the meetings of late. The Saints are seemingly becoming more conscious of the necessity of individual effort and purification. The manifestations of the Spirit in admonition, by prophecy and tongues, encourage from time to time. May we profit by these communications by being "doers and not hearers only."

The chapel has been undergoing a renovating which adds to its neatness and attractiveness. The furnishings of the upper auditorium have been cleaned and varnished; the arrangement of the platform and stairways in the rear of the room has been remodeled, there being now two stairways; and the room has been repapered. The students' rooms in the basement have been repapered and painted. Grading has also been done on the rear, south, and east of the building, and cement walks laid.

Bro. John Smith, president of the Lamoni Branch and Stake, is now without counselors. This is the outcome of a resolution passed by the stake high council, and adopted by the stake conference, requiring the counselors to the president to devote their entire time to the work of the stake. Brn. Gunsolley and Blair resigned as counselors, in preference to giving up their work in other departments of the church, where it seems to be demanded. Bro. D. C. White also resigned as counselor to Bishop William Anderson. Successors were not appointed at the time of the conference.

President Frederick M. Smith is in Lamoni preparing for the work of the General Conference. Several of the 'Quorum of Twelve are here also. We understand that this quorum was to meet in its first session Wednesday of this week.

The Saints here are anticipating and preparing for a large attendance at the coming Conference. May the preparations be made in other than a material way.

IF I WERE THE DEVIL.

On the eve of battle it was the custom of a certain great general to place himself in imagination in the position of the enemy thereby gaining a better idea of what the enemy would be almost certain to do under existing conditions.

Did you ever place yourself in the position of the Devil, and with your knowledge of your own weaknesses and foibles, formulate a plan of attack? Such a course might enable one to fortify himself intelligently. Did you ever place yourself in his position, and, after a careful scrutiny of the church and the world, endeavor to discover the best line of attack? After such an effort probably one would reach conclusions something like the following:

If I were the Devil, having the world pretty well stalled in the age-old ruts, first worn by the antediluvians and further deepened by Babylon and Rome, I would leave it to the care of second and third rate subordinates and with my best lieutenants I would devote my time to the church—not to the churches, or to a church, but to the church. It would be my business to intercept communication between God and man, and those churches who teach that such communication has ceased are doing what they can toward such an end—let them alone.

If I were the Devil, I would discriminate in my attack upon church members; and I would not worry about Latter Day Saints who did not differ from my own children except in the fact that they had been baptized; I would prefer to keep them on the church record and prominent in the community as "horrible examples" of "Mormonism."

If I were the Devil, I would certainly gather to Zion and her stakes and "have all things prepared before me." If I could encourage pride and worldliness among the sisters and the spirit of speculation and the greed for gain among the brethren, I and my children would soon be able to sing "songs of everlasting joy." Side by side on every block I would build a mansion occupied by two and a shack crammed with a family of ten.

If I were the Devil, having failed to destroy the church by murder and persecution, and having failed to destroy the force of the gospel by lying and misrepresentation through press and pulpit, I would leave R. B. Neal and others in charge of that work, while I went after the missionary force personally, one by one. I would breed discord and misunderstanding among them. If possible I would make them scandal-bearers. I would send a man home from his field with a lot of stories to unload at home and I would send him back to his field with a fresh supply to scatter among the faithful members. I would make him infringe on the prerogatives of the house-to-house gossip. I would waft here and there little breezes of "evil surmising" that would sour men's hearts and dry up the silver stream of tithes and offerings and the golden stream of spiritual blessings. Every man stabbed in the back by a brother would be my gain.

If I were the Devil, I would watch those men who are specially gifted in any way or who have some special work and I would point out the petty vanities and failings which are in such men; I would induce all their brethren to harp on those failings until the poor victims should find their influence destroyed or until they would quit the field in broken-hearted bitterness.

If I were the Devil, paradoxical as it may seem, I would teach my pupils to "aim high."

If I were the Devil I would slap the missionary's wife on one cheek with half rations and on the other cheek with the cry of extravagance.

If I were the Devil, I would catch the missionary alone, when his powers of resistance were at low tide, and make my assault on him then—a discouraged, homesick, penniless man. I would reason with him in the garden of Gethsemane while others slept in their comfortable homes.

If I were the Devil, I would catch an occasional elder with an attractive bait. I would teach him some form or other of the old doctrine of "affinity," and then I would provide him an affinity. I would allure him with the promise that no one should ever find out; and when the proper time had come then I would expose him—for his own good and the "good of the cause."

If I were the Devil, just at this juncture I would foster jealousies between the larger branches of the church. I would set each to watching the faults of the other, when according to their profession they should be cultivating good fellowship and mutual helpfulness.

These reflections are not pleasant; are they? But they show us our many vulnerable points. No fear that we shall give our adversary any valuable "pointers" by these cogitations, because he has used all these tactics and many others in times past.

Shall we take heed and repair the breach in the wall? Shall we strengthen our fortifications? Shall we guard the points of exposure? Shall we bury personal feelings and stand together? Shall we watch our acts? set a seal upon our lips? and purify our hearts?

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE GIFT OF SONG.

Whatever may be thought by others of the revelation in which the Saints were admonished to cherish the gift of song, we are pleased to chronicle the giving of the following educational and admonitory poem as sung by Bro. Joseph Luff, Sr., at the prayer- and testimony-meeting held at Independence, Missouri, March 17, 1907.

Before giving the poem, Bro. Luff prefaced it by stating that he had upon two previous occasions been constrained to present the matter to the Saints, once following a tongue and interpretation by Bro. J. W. Wight, in which the substance of the admonitions were given, in different form and language; diffidence kept Bro. Luff still at the times referred to; but on the 16th being again impressed to give the poem to the Saints he did so much to the edification of those who heard him. We asked for a copy for the HERALD, and it was given to us. It is pleasant to be able to record what must impress upon us as a fact, that the gifts of helps and governments are granted to the faithful in these latter days. Israel of old had a "sweet singer" David; and modern Israel has had one, David; and a number of others; and we see no reason why we should not welcome him or her who comes to us in the "gift of song." So we welcome this addition to poetic columns.

Oh, my people, saith the Spirit,
Hear the word of God to-day:
Be not slothful, but obedient;
'Tis the world's momentous day!
Unto honor I have called you—
Honor great as angels know;
Heed ye, then, a Father's counsel,
And by deeds your purpose show.

Be ye not deceived! Remember,
I have sworn to execute
All my purpose — naught can hinder—
Vain what man may institute.
Take ye, then, my hand extended—
Let me lead you where I will;
Peace and safety, light and glory,
Crown the crest of Zion's Hill.

I have spoken! few have heeded!
What remains for me to do?
Warnings old wait vindication!
Man must learn that God is true!
The restraining gates my mercy
Led me oft to interpose,
Shall the devastating currents,
Fraught with woe—no more oppose.

Time is ripe! my work must hasten!
Whoso will may bide the hour.
Naught can harm whom God protecteth—
Elements confess his power.
Up ye, then, to the high places
I have bid you occupy!
Peril waits upon the heedless!
Grace upon the souls who try.

Whoso lusteth after pleasure,
High estate, or mammon's store—
Envious or proud remaineth—

Though he gain the world is poor.
 If you would be rich, be holy!
 Would you dwell all heights above?
 Heed ye, then, this admonition:
 Climb to atmosphere of love.

Love ye me and love all people—
 Love as I have loved you;
 This your calling—this my purpose—
 Thus be my disciples true.
 Then in this exalted station
 Your companion I will be;
 Every promise of my scriptures
 Will be verified in thee.

Get ye up, then, to your mountain!
 Zion of this closing day!
 For the glory of my coming
 Waits to break upon your way!
 Forth from thence your testimony
 Shall to trembling nations go,
 And the world confess that with you
 God has residence below.

JOSEPH F. SMITH PAVES THE WAY FOR SUCCESSION.

The following quotation from the Salt Lake Tribune for March 15 throws some light on movements going on within the Utah church. To us it seems a very late afterthought to seek "the mind of the Spirit of God" upon the subject. The Reorganization years ago sought and learned the "mind of the Spirit."

The Smiths are evidently aroused to a sense of danger to their dynasty. Smith, Senior—prophet, seer and revelator of the polygamous cult—not being in good form to answer opponents of his right to the presidential succession in his church, has put up one of the Smithlets; and for the same reason that doubtful plays are tried in provincial towns before being trusted in Broadway houses, the initial argument was opened at Ogden in the local tabernacle there.

During forty years it was the practice of the Utah Mormon church to ignore the Reorganized Church, refusing debates to its elders and assuming an air of superiority and conclusiveness in the matter of the succession. Evidently the carrying of the war into Africa by the Reorganized elders has set the Joseph F. Smith family all atremble for their crown; and silence is no longer deemed to be sufficiently effective.

The argument of the Reorganized Church is that the Utah church has never had the right of succession to the presidential office; that it was bestowed by revelation to the original Joseph upon a son of that Joseph. A peculiar confirmation of this idea was put forth by Joseph F. Smith himself in the special conference which was convened in the big tabernacle in Salt Lake City on November 10, 1901. As reported in the Deseret News, the following is a part of Joseph F. Smith's address on that occasion:

"I desire to read a little from the revelation in relation to the order of the holy priesthood, that you may understand our views concerning adhering as nearly as we can to the holy order of government that has been established by revelation through the Prophet Joseph Smith in the dispensation of the fullness of times. We can not deny the fact that the Lord has effected one of the most perfect organizations in this church that ever existed upon the earth. I do not know of any more perfect organization than exists in the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Saints to-day. We have not always carried out strictly the order of the priesthood; we have varied from it to some extent; but we hope in due time that by the promptings of the Holy Spirit we will be led up into the exact channel and course that the Lord has marked out for us to pursue, and adhere strictly to the order that he has established. I will read from a revelation that was given to the Prophet Joseph Smith, at Nauvoo, Hancock County, Illinois, January 19, 1841; which stands as the law of the church in relation to the presentation of the authorities of the holy priesthood as they are established in the church, and from which I feel that we have no right to depart. The Lord says:

"First, I give unto you Hyrum Smith, to be a patriarch unto you, to hold the sealing blessings of my church, even the Holy Spirit of promise, whereby ye are sealed up unto the day of redemption, that ye may not fall, notwithstanding the hour of temptation that may come upon you."

"It may be considered strange that the Lord should give first of all the patriarch; yet I do not know of any law, any revelation or any commandment from God to the contrary, that has ever been given through any of the prophets or presidents of the church. At the same time we well know that this order has not been strictly followed from the day we came into these valleys until now—and we will not make any change at present. But we will first take it into consideration; we will pray over it; we will get the mind of the Spirit of God upon it, as upon other subjects, and be united before we take any action different to that which has been done."

Significant in itself, the utterance acquires additional emphasis from the well-known fact that the Smiths had been jealous of the Youngs and all other successors to the presidency, from the time of the death of the Prophet Joseph, the founder of the faith—until the day when Joseph F. came to the throne and when Hyrum, his own son, as prince imperial, was seated on the steps of the throne, ready to seize the scepter when it should fall from the hand of his venerable sire. That jealous feeling and the long and sullen rage with which Joseph F. waited for his day, are well known to old-timers in Utah. The remarks of Joseph F. at the special conference must be read with the understanding that he felt that the crown had been placed upon his own brow after years of usurpation by unauthorized kings and prophets. If the right order had not been followed, as he claimed, then the wrong order must have been followed; and as he intimated, the presidents intervening between Joseph and Joseph F. had been usurpers. So far then, Joseph F., the prophet, sustains the case of the Reorganized Church against what the Reorganized element called the Brighamite church. Joseph F. Smith was willing to discredit the reign of Brigham Young and his successors, but was not willing to impeach his own title; and therefore, he harked back to an old and almost forgotten pretended revelation in which his own father was set at the head of things in this dispensation by the pretended voice of the Almighty.

Joseph F. came to the presidency as a successor to Brigham's successors; and, with Brigham's title overthrown, Joseph F.'s title would go with the overthrow but for his discovery of another and antedating legitimacy of title. Having fixed the right within his family to rule, he clumsily left the question, with the intimation that he would proceed no further with the restoration of the proper order until such time as divine enlightenment should come. The manner indeed was clumsy, but the purpose was cunning. If the right to rule is in the Hyrum Smith branch of the Smith family, then Hyrum's eldest son, who is John Smith, the patriarch, is the chief figure of the Mormon church and kingdom; and Joseph F., claiming the title of legitimacy over the usurpation of Brigham Young, becomes himself a usurper over his brother John. It was well, therefore, that he paused immediately at the point of establishing himself firmly upon the throne or the kingdom and fixing his own legitimacy as ruler by his descent from Hyrum, the patriarch, without going into further particulars, the exposure of which would have clearly designated his brother John as the first in the kingdom.

The Reorganized Church has now a better opportunity than ever before to attack succession in the Utah Mormon church; for Joseph F. Smith, the present head, has practically admitted that the rule of Brigham and his successors was one of usurpation. They have still added opportunity from the fact that, by Joseph F.'s own theory, he himself is in an additional sense a usurper.

Also, it is now clear why the young Smithlets are put on guard at various points to defend the title. One Gerald J. S. Abels, of Ogden, a former missionary of the Utah church to Holland, a man who has been twice trusted by his church in that important field, has renounced the Utah Mormon church on the ground that, as admitted by Joseph F., the church is a usurper of succession to the presidency and prophethood. This was one of the momentous events which created the present crucial issue.

It would be a satire worthy of the whole scheme if Joseph F., after overthrowing the Brighamite usurpation in order to defend himself against the charges of the Reorganized Church and to vindicate his own family pride and vanity, should make such a strong case that his brother John would find, established for him, a clear title to the throne—and the treasury.—Salt Lake Tribune, March 15, 1907.

OLIVER COWDERY'S DEFENSE.—CORRECTION.

Several very exasperating typographical errors have occurred in the HERALD of late. These are partially, and only partially, accounted for as follows: first, adverse conditions resulting from the burning of the office; second, the HERALD is now set with a linotype and the entire office force has to adjust itself to a new system. The errors which we are about to correct could not have occurred under the old system of typesetting. In Heman C. Smith's article on the Oliver Cowdery's Defense, SAINTS' HERALD, March 20, paragraph ten, column two, of page 230, the opening line should read, "Of the genuineness of this document we have some doubts"; in the twelfth paragraph of the same column the opening line should read, "In the first paragraph Oliver Cowdery pledges his veracity."

Bro. Heman's article will be corrected and reprinted in tract form; those who have to meet the Cowdery Defense will take notice.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Elder Alvin Knisley may be addressed at 1819 Stewart Avenue, Kansas City, Kansas.

The church in general will heartily sympathize with Apostle W. H. Kelley in the severe affliction which has come to him by reason of the loss of his wife, whose death occurred March 19.

At the late conference of the New South Wales District the following resolution obtained: "That this conference offer the Gospel Standard, and the business relating thereto, to the General Conference, with request that they take it over as general church business, free of cost; also that they permit the New South Wales District to nominate a board of publication, subject to the ratification of General Conference, each year."

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

Union of the Methodist Protestant, United Brethren, and Congregational Churches was consummated at Chicago, March 21, by delegates from fourteen States. The resulting organization will be known as the United Churches; with over one million members, it will rank about fifth among Protestant churches in the United States. Methodist Protestant delegates from Louisiana and Mississippi "bolted" the convention because the adopted report did not indorse "sanctification subsequent upon regeneration." R. H. M. Watson, editor of the Christian Standard, of Uriel, Mississippi, led the revolt.

The press is taking notice of the fact that Robert J. Burdette's wonderful million dollar church in Los Angeles is used as a theater during the week and as a church on Sunday. This borders closely on "unlawful cohabitation" but is said to pay well financially.

Graceland College is starting a modest industrial department this spring which those in charge hope to see develop into an important part of the school's work. A team of horses is badly needed and any of the Saints within reach of Lamoni who have a team they would be willing to spare can write to F. B. Blair, Lamoni, Iowa, stating terms.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Saints who have relatives or friends in or near Cleveland should send address of same to our gospel literature committee who will try to reach them. Cleveland church address is 7112 Wade Park Avenue. We are instituting a "reaching-out" campaign and want to develop every line of possibility.

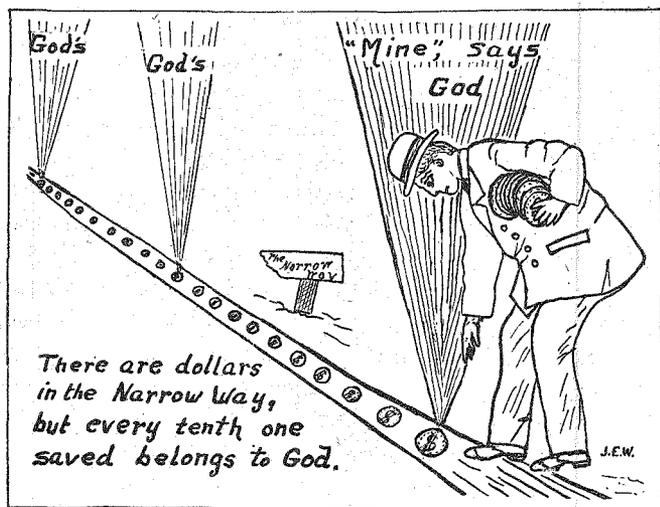

Evenings of the 18th and 19th of March were occupied by Elder Rudolph Etzenhouser in his comprehensive lecture, "God's distribution of the races." We were pleased to see our somewhat curtailed advertising bring a number of strangers within our doors; better pleased to note their return the second evening, showing their awakened interest, and glad to note appreciative words at parting; feel confident of meeting some at least again.

Members of our street-meeting detachment are beginning to burnish up their "arms" preparatory to another effort in the good old primitive way of reaching men. We are encouraged by reviewing past experiences and future promises, for in some respects we shall be better equipped to draw and hold attention this season.

The ladies' aid society is rendering our church home a goodly service, both in social and financial ways; buying dry goods in bulk from a newly-established firm near by whose proprietor, we discover, has long known our Elder

"Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's."—Matthew 22: 21. (See department "Of General Interest.")

HILO, Hawaii, February 7, 1907.

Editors Herald: Believing it to be of interest to the church generally, and that it will help to strengthen the faith of many, I beg to state that I have discovered the following almost pure Hebrew words in the Hawaiian language:

Aloha (love) a derivative of the Hebrew Elohim (God).

God is love, and it would seem, to say the least, that love is God.

Kahuna (priest) equal to the Hebrew Cohen (priest).

Berita (covenant) equal to the Hebrew Berith (covenant).

Ka and Ke (the definite article) equal to the Ha and He (the definite article).

ETERNAL DEATH, HELL, AND RETRIBUTION.

E. A. FERGERSON.

The clock of time in yonder tower strikes the dreadful knell, life is o'er, probation ended, hope gone, the white winged angel of mercy flown forever.

Death comes dashing down the road of life on his pale horse coming suddenly in view, as if rounding a curve.

LOST SINNER! He will level His arrow at your heart, all red and quivering at the point like an adder's tongue as if lapping fire from a distance, with his ghastly gaze and bony hands he will seize your poor lost soul and drag your immortal spirit into the lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death.

Once behind the sweltering walls of hell and locked up in its confines forever, you may scream and cry for mercy only to be hissed at by countless demons with hellish glee.

In your resurrected hell doomed body (John 5: 28, 29; Matt. 5: 29) you will stagger through hell's dark empire to the farthest outposts and domains gnawing your tongue and blaspheming the God of Heaven because of your pains and sores.

Shrieking and screaming you will plunge through the blackness of darkness forever like a wandering star, (Jude 13) and like as the imprisoned bird that beats its bloody wings against the iron bars seeking liberty, so you will be left to foam out your own shame.

Over the rough, sharp, and rocky ledge you will stumble and fall to rise no more.

And in the bottomless abyss the billows of damnation will dash under your feet forever, surrounded by dogs and sorcerers whoremongers, blasphemers and God haters, demonized spirits and fallen angels, you will wreak out an awful existence in hell forever.

Separated from loved ones, no God, no Savior, no comfort, no rest day nor night, no light, no law, no love, no music, hope gone forever, despair set in, doom sealed, the object of God's unmitigated wrath.

Bound and fettered in chains of darkness, with despair cut deep in every link, your own screams and shrieks will vibrate through that dark spirit world only to re-echo and play back on your lost soul and mock you in your misery.

Only a holy God knows what retribution awaits the lost soul. O, reader, if you are lost, and on the road that leads to death, hell, and despair, I beg you to turn while it is called to-day, (2 Cor. 6: 2) to-morrow may be too late.

It is holiness or hell. (Heb. 12: 14).

It is either turn or burn. (Rev. 20: 15).

Choose ye this day whom ye will serve. (Josh. 24: 15).

Don't let it be said, too late, too late,
For vain will your pleading be;
Be ready to enter the pearly gate
While open it stands for thee.

Don't let it be said, too late, my friend,
That thou must forever stand;
Shut out of the bright jasper walls for aye,
Shut out of the heavenly land.

How sad it would be to thwart God's plans,
And forever in hell scream, Too late!
Soul withered and blighted, blasted and damned;
The object of all hell's fate.

CHURCHES ON WHEELS.

Pastors know well the difficulty of getting sluggish people to come to church or chapel. For some years the problem has been solved in England by a strange "fleet" of "churches on wheels," or gospel wagons, seventy or eighty in number. They go out into the highways and byways of the country, reaching population which otherwise would be neglected spiritually, having neither church, chapel, nor Sunday-school.

The fleet is manned by one hundred and eighty hard working evangelists, some of them excellent instrumentalists; men of tact in dealing with all sorts and conditions of people. Each wagon carries a collecting box in the form of a tiny fascimile of itself. A generous supply of religious and healthy secular literature is taken on board, and the last year the rolling churches sold more than $25,000 worth of it.

At first these gypsy vans were looked upon with suspicion or amusement. Old ladies regarded the evangelists as artful peddlers hawking spectacles that were no good! Men would come up with curiosity and gratitude written on their faces and murmur a grateful: "Young man, I'm mighty glad some one has come to amuse us at last. Say, what time does the performance begin?"

Each van has a definite route assigned to it, and even where it is perfectly well known, its advent is looked for eagerly by grown-ups and children alike. An inspiring service is held on the village green and an informal Sunday-school under the gnarled branches of some giant oak. You might think it an entertaining and healthy life for the crew, and so it is during the summer months. But it is a vastly different thing when the icy gales begin to blow and country roads are a foot deep in gluey mud.

No "motive power" is provided, for it is understood that each amiable farmer will lend a horse after service to take the church on wheels along to its next stopping-place. And on these journeys many adventures are recorded. Perhaps the queerest was while a van was crossing the Avon. It stuck in the mud, and in spite of all efforts to haul it into security three tides swept over its glossy green top before it could be extricated.

Each of these remarkable gospel wagons costs $105, and the first of them appeared nearly ten years ago among the fruit- and hop-pickers of Southern England. In summer-time they are not backward in appearing on crowded seaside beaches, and even on race-courses, where they attract much attention among a class of people who certainly never enter an ordinary church or chapel.

The interior of each is charmingly bright and clean. The little windows are draped in muslin curtains looped back with ribbon, and the tiny interior is a marvel of lockers in polished wood, sleeping bunks, library, and miniature kitchen. Often enough, however, the busy evangelists have no time to prepare a meal. But the good women of the parish never fail them; and besides the humble stew or dainty cake, an opulent pheasant may make its appearance, with home-made butter, new-laid eggs, and honey fresh from the hive.

The interior of each van measures only ten feet in length by six feet wide, and six feet four inches high. Just outside the door is a platform which serves as a pulpit during the service. Last year, including the vans traveling in Ireland and Wales, more than forty thousand services were held, thousands of cottages visited, and their inmates brightened up by the hustling young evangelists, who are the life and soul of this movement.—March World To-day.

OUR PRESENT AND FUTURE NEEDS.—PART III.

In Parts I and II of this paper we have considered the magnitude of the work and also the preparation needful to qualify us to be participants in it; in this one we shall try to see some things that must be done to accomplish the task assigned us. The most important ways to reach the people with the gospel message is by preaching, and through our literature. We have the same message of truth that the ancients had, with the additions that come as a development of the work, of which the building up of Zion is one instance. That responsibility did not rest upon Peter and Paul and their associates, but has been intrusted to us. But conditions have changed greatly in the world since then. The market-place that is referred to by New Testament writers was the great gathering-place for all classes of people, the rich with their retinue of servants, the beggar in rags, the laborer seeking employment, the merchants and farmers with goods to exchange, the magician with his tricks of jugglery, and the philosopher with his new ideas of morals and theories of future life. To this same place the missionaries went, because they knew they would find the people there, and they could deliver their message to the greatest number of people with a minimum expenditure of time.

In the beginning of the nineteenth century conditions were very much changed as compared with the first. The social, religious, educational, political, and commercial conditions had undergone a great change; the people were on the threshold of a new civilization which would completely revolutionize, practically, all conditions in life. The small town was more important then than now, the farming communities were more densely populated then than at present, and this is especially true when compared with the Central West, where the minimum farm is usually one hundred and sixty acres. The modes of travel then were not so quick and convenient as now, and the country church was more common than now. The religious conditions were undergoing a great change, a breaking away from priestcraft, the people were tasting religious, intellectual, and political freedom; and in the groves, "God's first temple," at the corner grocery, and wherever men congregated, they were anxious to use their new-found liberty, and so when our missionaries went among the people with the angel's message they received it gladly. Things have changed in the last forty years, and especially in the last twenty, and this is remarkably so in the newer States. There is less interest taken in church-going than formerly; a feeling of disgust and indifference to all forms of religion has taken a firm hold on the masses. Some take pleasure in the well-supplied library of their home or in the public libraries, or in the daily papers and magazines; others find pleasure in the parks and theaters and other forms of amusement. True the world is not all dark. It is the wicked that are to grow "worse and worse." There are thousands of noble-hearted men and women who are using all their talent and means to bless mankind, though many of them have nothing to do with any church.

Modern development has greatly changed conditions in the farming communities; most of the cities and towns are from eight to ten miles apart, and as a result the country church or regular services in the schoolhouses practically belongs to the past. The country folk, with their easy-riding family carriages and the one-seated buggy for the young man and his "sweetheart," find it a pleasant ride to the town or city church, and the evening is usually spent at home. The missionary and revivalist have poor encouragement in such communities. There has been a time in the past when revivals were held in any month of the year; the groves, the schoolhouse, or the church would be well filled, because the people were interested in religion and conditions were different. It is the exception to find people who continuously attend a series of week-day meetings. Most people who care to go to church, will prefer to go only on Sunday. We should recognize these changed conditions and govern ourselves accordingly. A regular Sunday service will accomplish more in a year than several spasmodic week-day efforts, especially if it be accompanied by proper methods of advertising the meetings. The cities and the towns are the centers of social, religious, and commercial activity, and from there we can best reach all classes of people. The people in the cities and towns will not go to the country, and most of the country people go to the cities and towns to attend church, for pleasure, and to engage in commerce.

In an intellectual way the world has made great advances, and we must be able to edify them when they come to our service, and to defend ourselves when attacked. With less missionaries in the field so that some money could be used to meet legitimate expenses, and with the most experienced to do this work, assisted by the beginner, more people would be reached than by our present methods. The man of experience should take the lead in our missionary work. The rule is sometimes reversed. The inexperienced one is put on the danger line, and when he has started the fight by going into the enemy's country, and when things get lively, then the captain goes or sends him help. Two inexperienced soldiers will not do so well as if one was experienced, and if one inexperienced is with one of experience it will not be long before we will have two experienced. Not only must we reach the people, but it must be done in such a way that we will appeal to their intelligence by truly representing the Christ, and not through our ignorance of him; and because of this we note in our second part of this article that there was a great deal of preparatory work to be done to fit us for our duties.

This is a literary age when good books, magazines, and papers can be read very cheaply, and people that will not go to church employ many hours in reading. Our literature needs to be edited and revised. Much of it seems promiscuously thrown together. The thoughts are like gold dust in the grains of sand. It wearies most people before they can find the shining truth. We need a history of the church of about four hundred pages that will be suitable for busy people and those of small means. Our present one, though excellent, is suitable to people of means and leisure. Not only do we need the best literature we can produce, but it should reach the public. It is not only a financial loss to be on the shelves of the publishing house, but it does not accomplish the purpose for which it was intended. There is no greater need in the church to-day than that good literature should be placed in the hands of our people, and that the habit of reading be developed. It may be a slow and tedious work to bring about such condition but it will prove a good investment of time so used.

Another important matter is the cost of our literature. We can not economize on wages. On other religious or secular papers, for the same amount of work that is done by our editors they could receive from fifteen to twenty hundred dollars a year, and all classes of labor would receive at least twenty-five per cent more. The most important place to practice economy is in the consolidation of the two publishing-houses. It would take but one house, fewer presses and engines, fewer men in the management and composing departments, and in several other small items a saving could be made. It could be called the "Herald-Ensign," published in form and number of pages as the HERALD is at present, with the addition of a cover to be used for advertisements so as not to disfigure the paper as at present, and so it could be removed for binding, and in addition a weekly supplement of eight pages, about the size of Autumn Leaves, to contain a sermon and short articles of a literary nature on archæology and other important subjects. It would be suitable to give to our friends; it would also make a good collection of literary gems to be bound in book form. The subscription price would probably not exceed one dollar and a half, and we could have a better paper than either one is at present. There is no special gain to the Saints individually and none collectively to the church to publish two papers. It would be a great financial gain to the church. The loss of prestige, if any, is an indeterminate quantity. Of its location I have nothing to say. I would rather the Lord would say, so there would be no need of heart-burnings among the disappointed ones.

As the concluding paragraphs I want to notice the important points aimed at in the three articles:

1. That the greatest work ever committed to men is intrusted to us.
2. The important preparation needed that we might do our part.
3. The importance of adapting our work to conditions as they now exist so that we can reach the people with our message.

PAUL PARKER.

BEWARE OF PRIDE.

It was stake conference time, and as we entered the church for the Sunday prayer-meeting, just as the last bell had ceased its ringing, we were ushered to near the front, as the room was well filled with the Saints of God. As I think of it now, and as I have thought of it many times in the past, and as I had occasion to think of it ere I left the church that afternoon, the question is, Do we look like the "Saints of God." Would a stranger on entering our house of worship for the first time be particularly impressed with our appearance as being a people who had been taught of the Lord? With shamefacedness we must all answer, No; we look just as much like the people who make no pretense of serving the Christ as our individual means will permit.

How many times have we read from the books, Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, "Beware of pride"!—the books we preach to the world as the word of God, the teaching of which must be our guide to lead us to the kingdom. Is there any one thing taught in those books more than "Beware of pride"? Is there any one thing which has caused God's people more sorrow and disunion? Is there any one thing which has been brought to our minds in exhortation in the assemblies of the Saints oftener than "Beware of pride"? Have we heeded it in the past? Who can answer, "I have; and my example has influenced my neighbors so to do"? If you can so answer, surely you are on the right road to the celestial city, and the Lord is well pleased with your efforts and success; but it is very evident that we have not all reached that standard, as we at the prayer-service were made to feel, when an apostle of the Lord arose and in a very quiet, humble way gave us a tongue, and the interpretation thereof, admonishing the Saints several times over to "beware of pride." He had no sooner taken his seat, than another elder arose, and in a very strong, forceful tongue and interpretation corroborated what the first had said. Did each take that to himself or did he think that it applied to some one else?

Let me tell you that I have been trying, yes, trying for many years to overcome pride; for few had more of that hateful sin in their nature than had I when I went down into the waters of regeneration. Did I leave it there as I should have done?—for are we not taught that when we put on Christ in baptism we are to walk in newness of life? With this knowledge from the word of God, why did I not heed its teachings? I will tell you why. I was weak. The examples around me by my brothers and sisters, too, was not conducive to help in overcoming. Those who should have been an ensample were not, and I drifted on with the weak ones, not realizing that others might stumble because of my example.

Just here let me digress from my subject and say I did not come into this church by preaching. I came in by reading. First the Voice of Warning, then the other books, comparing them with the Bible, which was (as I thought) my guide. When I was a member of the Baptist Church, I also read the HERALD, Hope, and Messenger and Advocate, where I found such grand teachings. I had never spoken a word to any one on the subject, and held myself aloof from the "Mormons," as I called them. "Where did I get the books and papers," you ask? My dear mother was a member of this church at Batavia, Illinois, where there were a few other members, and I was so annoyed over it when she joined that I would never ask her a question about the church; but I read and was convinced without hearing a sermon. Do you see why I digressed to tell you this? To show you that we teach what we do not practice.

I felt convinced by what I read that banishment of pride was essential to salvation; but when I mingled, as I afterwards did, among the Saints, who had been long in the church at Plano, I saw no difference in their dress, homes, social gatherings, and all things which go to make up the pride of the heart, from what I had found among my Baptist associates, and so with my love for pretty things I drifted with the crowd, worked at my trade (millinery), and advertised it in my personal appearance. I bore my testimony to the gospel, gave to its support, also gave my stylish, outgrown garments to my less favored sisters, had an enjoyable time generally, with my conscience (as had many others) seared as with a hot iron. That was thirty-two years ago.

Have I been trying all those years to overcome? No. For years I did about as I felt like doing, so far as dress was concerned, never letting conscience have anything to do in the matter; though I confess my better nature was often appealed to, but pride and selfishness usually overcame.

And I am ashamed to tell it; but if it will help some one to overcome, I can afford to let them profit by my foolishness (to put it mildly); but fifteen or more years ago I had a hat made of such expensive material, and trimmed with such costly plumes, ornaments, flowers, and ribbons, as to be worth twenty dollars. It was very rich and dressy and much admired. Several ladies asked their milliner to copy it for them at a cost of three or four dollars. The result was, of course, dissatisfaction, when the same money, or less, would have gotten them a neat hat of a good material, in which they would have looked much more attractive.

I was again appealed to by my conscience,—this time not in vain. That hat was taken to pieces and furnished several other people with material for hats—not without a struggle, however. And it was not the last struggle either. One thing after another has gone until a great change has been made; but it has been slow, and I am sure that I have missed all along receiving the blessings which only the humble can attain to.

As the reproof came from the Lord, I again examined my heart and said, Lord, help me to banish all unnecessary adornments. Help me to show by my appearance, as well as by every act, that the Lord is pleased to own me as one of his children. Help us as a congregation of Saints in Lamoni, and as a people, to show by our neat, simple, attractive appearance, that we are trying to be Saints of God; not only by our personal appearance, but let the adorning of our houses be likewise simple.

We are an intelligent people, and when we are willing to do our part to become a humble people, we certainly have the right to be taught individually by the Lord concerning this serious question of what pride is; and when we can each banish from our hearts and homes all that would come under the head of pride, then will this great inequality be banished. Sr. B will be as often a guest at our simple, enjoyable social gatherings as Sr. A. One poor sister will not have to look at another's silks and feathers, ribbons and laces, and all manner of fixings, and long for some of the same, and thus spend her otherwise needed earnings for some cheap toggery for you with your cultivated tastes to look at in disgust. She, with her uncultivated taste, is only trying (and no doubt thinks she is succeeding) to look just as nice as you in your elegant finery. I often wonder which is committing the greater sin, the one who has money to spend to gratify her whims and thus set the example, or the other foolish one with little means trying to follow her style, thus missing the opportunity she might have of making her toilet neat and attractive with the simple things which are within her means. For is not any one attractive thus dressed? I am sure that with all my once dressy ways I have many times admired the simply-dressed woman more than I ever did the one much adorned. Why are they so rare?

Why will we disfigure ourselves, as we certainly do in our headwear? Sisters, did you ever consider the distance from your chin to the highest point of your hat, to say nothing about the quills and feathers that extend still higher? And what about the breadth of them? If you are a short person and have not been able to see past some of them at church, or if you are a tall person and can not see over the top of them, you certainly have had a fair chance to look sufficiently long and often at them to come to the conclusion that (to say the least of them that one can) they are very unbecoming adornments,—for adornments we intend them to be. I doubt if many of us take the least thought for what purpose a hat is worn. If those beautiful creations we call hats were grown in our gardens, we could admire them; but to put them on Saints' heads! For shame!

I remember with pleasure a little bonnet I made for a lady once. The foundation was a fine Milan braid of a light tan color, trimmed with the same and a darker shade of silk, with narrow velvet ribbon ties to match. She wanted it very plain and simple, and yet to have a dressy appearance, she said. At first I was puzzled to know what to do with it, as I was not used to making that kind of headwear; but I went to work; and when it was done I held it up for the inspection of my fellow workers, all saying, "Isn't it pretty!" And it was pretty, with the folds interwoven to make it just high enough, just broad enough, just simple and pretty enough to adorn the head of a princess or that of the working woman alike. And the lady for whom it was made wore it so becomingly, for every article of her wearing apparel was equally plain and attractive.

I once knew a sister who bought twenty-one yards of beautiful dark, bottle-green silk to make herself a dress. She could afford it; and besides she got it at a special sale. She showed it to her friends, who all admired it and asked her, "How will you have it made?" She said she did not know; for she wished it was back in the store. "Why," they said, "it will make an elegant dress." But she answered, "What about the example?" "Well, you got it at a bargain! It did not cost any more than a nice wool one would." But she very well knew that a wool one would outwear several silks, and not look so different from her less favored sisters. So she put it away, and after a long time one of her friends came and asked her if she would sell it to her. Of course she would, and did; and when she saw her friend wear it she greatly admired it and secretly wished it were not wrong to have those things. She has many times since admired silk dresses, and waists; but never felt free to wear one. She says, I was very intimate, some years ago, with a dear good sister, who possessed much of this world's goods. Her clothes were of a good material, well made, and becoming; and yet she never impressed me that she was of the wealthy class, either in her appearance, her home, or her actions. On the contrary she impressed one by her life as one rich in the things which money can not buy. The rich and the poor were often invited to her home to partake of her hospitality, where there was never any display of elegance. She sometimes would say to me, "What shall I have for refreshments? I want enough; but do not want it to be overdone." One Christmas she was going to have some poor Saints to dinner, and she asked me this question (she had a full set of white china dishes): "If I use my china dishes, will it make any one feel badly because of the difference between them and what they have to use; or if I do not use them, will they feel as if I thought they were too good for the occasion?" And then she added: "I wish I did not have the china."

If more of us to-day felt that way, less china would be displayed by Saints, not only on grand occasions, but to every one who enters our homes. Is it pride? Is it selfishness? Is it disregard for the feelings of the less favored? Do you think no one ever stumbled over your chinaware display, or any other of your elegant things?

Not long ago I heard some one telling the price of some one else's lace curtains, and I am afraid, from the remarks, there was room for stumbling there. And so we could go on from one thing to another; but it always lies at some one else's door, not ours. "No, we are not proud. No, we have always been used to nice things. Sr. B never had any, and would not appreciate them!" Wouldn't she? How do you know that? Suppose you trade places with her for a time. What is good enough for her ought to be good enough for you. We are all of one family among the Saints of God. If her environments before coming into the family have been such that she has not been able to appreciate what you have, why not now help her to enjoy the pleasures which should make up the life of every Saint?

"I am not proud. I always speak to every one; no matter what their circumstances are." Do you? How do you do it? Are you sure you have the tone which puts them at their ease? Is it any more than just "How do you do" which would freeze and not warm their hearts toward you? "Well, I am not particular about their friendship." Oh, but you might be if you only found out what was hidden away in that nature waiting to be brought out.

Can we not see the great blessings that we are missing because of pride? Can we not see the great good we might impart to others, could we but break the barrier (pride) which disunites and makes so great the breach between what otherwise might be the united family of God, Saints in very deed? Will we heed the admonition, "Beware of pride," and thus be in condition to enjoy the blessings which will follow, or will we go on enjoying the foolishness of the ungodly to our eternal loss? Let us think more seriously upon these things. Let us pray more earnestly, and act wisely, ere our opportunities are gone, and it is too late.

The trying times are upon us. Will we go over with the chaff, or will we be worthy of His divine approval, guidance, and care?

Do we remember often enough how we are to lay up treasures to be enjoyed by and by, with the Master, the Christ, the Son of God. Are we willing to make the necessary sacrifice? Do we remember that we are to teach by example as well as by precept, in order that our work may stand?

We are told, for our onward encouragement, that the "race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong," but "to him that overcometh."

Let us study the five chapters of the book of James; put them into practice, and secure the glory that is abiding, instead of continuing to seek those selfish pleasures which perish with the using, and, like Dives, be not permitted to enter in and enjoy the glory of God. It requires a constant labor, all his precepts to obey; but he is faithful who has promised. Will we be among the foolish virgins?

TESTIMONY.

Webster says that testimony is "an affirmation, establishing or proving some fact; a witness; a proof; an evidence."

Now what facts do we as Saints wish to establish or prove? That Jesus is the Christ; that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation; that this latter-day work was divinely established. How can we do it? By saying, "I know this work is of God"? No, for we have been saying that for some time, and there are others in the world proclaiming that something entirely different is of God. So you see that kind of testimony does not establish the fact.

Well, shall we relate a dream or vision we have had? Shall we tell of the miracles we have seen? No, again. Others are doing that to establish other creeds. These may be all right in the proper place, and at the proper time. They were given principally for you, to confirm your faith, and to enable you to bear a faithful testimony.

It seems to me that there is just one way and one only to truly bear our testimony concerning this work, and that is to let it do for us, what we tell the world it will do for them.

In the words of one of our elders, "Let your daily life be a living argument in favor of this work." Now if it is a "living" argument it will be a "growing" one, for living things grow; and it will become stronger each day as you add to your "faith, virtue," etc.

When the time comes that every Saint is truly doing this, then I foresee that the light of God will be in our midst, and the honest in heart, those who are seeking truth, will be convinced, not so much by our preaching as by our living, our "doing," and will become one with us. For that is an argument that no honest person can withstand.

So often have I heard the Saints wish that they could bear a good testimony, could speak or pray as some one else did, in fact were "good talkers." All that is good and has its place, but had it been really needful, I feel perfectly sure that God is both able and willing to loosen every man's tongue and give to each the eloquence of a Demosthenes.

But would that be as convincing, think you, as to see a bad man turn to be a good man? Would not our faith often be won by the "enticing words" rather than the facts? And if one were so blessed with the gift of using language, often would the temptation come in the form of praise and admiration given until it would be hard to remain humble.

More and more am I convinced that there is room in this work for every man upon God's footstool; room for him to work; room for him to help, and thus helping develop the talents given him, and by such development fit himself for the reward of the faithful, whether those talents be one or many. The great lesson all must learn, is to occupy faithfully where called to labor, and work with the means given us to use, and by constant, daily right-living bear our testimony that this is the work of God; that we are the children of God; and that Jesus is indeed the Son of God.

May God help us all by his Spirit to be valiant in testimony.

ESPECIALLY THE PARCHMENTS.

Do thy diligence to come before winter. . . . The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments.

Within the shadows of the prison walls at Rome, the grand old soldier of the cross already feels the chill of approaching winter. No longer is he the young and fiery Saul of Tarsus, but "having now become such an one as Paul the aged"; bearing in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus; ready to be offered, the time of his departure near at hand!

"Ah yes! be diligent to come before winter and bring the cloak, that the outer man, the worn tabernacle, may be protected from the chilling breath of winter; and bring the books, for "though the outer man perish the inner man is renewed day by day." The intellect still craves its accustomed nourishment; the habits of early youth and maturer manhood still assert themselves, and the student, the pupil of Gamaliel, in his lonely prison, turns to his early and lifelong companions, his beloved books, not books to please the fancy or delight the imagination, to entertain for the passing hour only, but pure, earnest, thoughtful books; books that cultivate the mind, strengthen the memory, and enrich the soul; deep, strong, and logical, like the mind and character which they have helped to fashion and mold. Of this we are well assured, even as a tree is known by its fruit.

Yes, Timothy, greatly beloved, be diligent to come shortly, bring the books, but especially the parchments, the Holy Scriptures, the written word of God! Let the dim eyes, once stricken blind by the heavenly light on the Damascus road, again read the sacred record of his beloved Israel; the law of Moses, so essential till swallowed up in the glory of the new covenant, the "perfect law of liberty." Let him study once more the ancient prophets, glean with loyal Ruth in the harvest-field, admire the stately courage and patriotism of the queenly Esther, rejoice with patient Job in hope of the glorious resurrection, refresh his mind with the wisdom of Solomon, and make melody in his heart to the Lord with the "Sweet Singer of Israel"; for though blessed with wonderful visions, an abundance of revelations, and angel ministrations, he still turns to the word of God for wisdom and consolation; to that which "was written aforetime for our learning that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope."

How well was he able to say with the poet:

"Thou truest friend man ever knew,
Thy constancy I've tried!
When all were false I found thee true,

My counselor and guide!
The mines of earth no treasures give
That could this volume buy.
In teaching me the way to live,
It teaches how to die."

Dear friends, boys and girls, young men and maidens, and you who have become like Paul the aged, herein is a message for you. The cloak, the outward apparel, you are not likely to forget; but the books,—if you would fit yourselves for active and efficient service either in the affairs of men or the work of the Lord; if you would be "thoroughly furnished unto every good work"; if you would make for yourselves friends and companions who will brighten the winter of your life, and cheer and comfort you in times of loneliness and solitude, do not forget the books—and ESPECIALLY the PARCHMENTS.

WHO ARE JUSTIFIED IN REFUSING TO TEACH?

There are certain qualifications necessary in order to teach; and all that are deficient in these, are justified in refusing.

In all branches of education a teacher is the all-important factor; and it is part of the work of superintendents and principals to see that the teachers are qualified. These qualifications are not limited to a knowledge of the principles to be taught, but they include the ability to properly and accurately impart that knowledge.

The work of the Sunday-school is of a very important character; therefore, it should be attended to with the utmost care, concern, and solicitude; with the utmost assiduity, circumspection, and devotion; for the Sunday-school is the mold wherein characters are to be modeled; or, wherein are found the young and susceptible minds ready to be molded for future usefulness as coworkers with God, to "bear the vessels of the Lord," or in other words, to bear the fullness of the gospel among the nations, as the ark of the covenant and other vessels of the house of God were borne among the Israelites. Shall we betray so important a trust to incompetent and inefficient persons? Let us bear in mind that the pliant and yielding clay of to-day is the finished vessel of to-morrow.

It will be remembered that the apostles of old were taught by the Lord himself, and people took learning of them "because they had been with Jesus"; but, though they had heard him preach and explain the doctrine in purity and simplicity, yet, when he sent them forth to "teach all nations" he commanded them to tarry at Jerusalem until they were "endued with power from on high." Were they qualified before they received this endowment? Could they teach the principles of truth and life without the Spirit of truth? If so, why should they tarry? During the interval between the command to tarry and the bestowal of the Spirit, would they be justified in accepting an invitation to teach? And should they refuse, would not their refusal be an act of righteousness? The Spirit was and is the qualifying power that qualifies God's people to teach; and all those that do not live worthy of the recognition of God in the bestowal of his Holy Spirit upon them to the degree that will qualify them to teach are justified in refusing.

It is as necessary and important to have the Spirit to teach the principles of the gospel and the laws of the celestial kingdom to the children as it is to present the truth to the world. For "no man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him." All who come to Christ therefore are drawn to him by the Spirit of God; and if they receive the word of truth by any other way, it is not of God and can not be conducive to good.

Moreover, we should "remember that that which cometh from above is sacred, and must be spoken with care, and by constraint of the Spirit, and in this there is no condemnation; and ye receive the Spirit through prayer; wherefore, without this there remaineth condemnation." (Doctrine and Covenants 63: 16.)

However, it is a duty devolving upon the sisters, and especially mothers, to teach the children; and they should always be ready and willing to teach, remembering this: "The Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in the last days."—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7.

In the narrative of the "two thousand stripling Ammonites," as given in the Book of Mormon, is contained a lesson for every sister. These young men were always true to their trust, having the moral courage to do the right in all things, whatever the conditions prevailing might be. They were men of truth and soberness; for they had been taught to keep the commandments of God, and to walk uprightly before him. (See Book of Mormon, p. 350, small edition.)

Notice! They had been taught to keep the commandments of God, and to walk uprightly before him: and as a result of their obedience their faith in him was so great, that in the hour of fiery trial they exclaimed, "Behold, our God is with us, and he will not suffer that we shall fall." Oh, what implicit faith! What unreserved confidence! But who had been their teachers? Listen! THEIR MOTHERS!

Mothers, please bear it in mind that you are teachers, and you can not avoid the responsibility without incurring the displeasure of your Creator. And yet you can not teach without the Spirit; and you can not receive the Spirit without much prayer; and prayers can not be answered without obedience. Obedience spiritualizes the mind and qualifies you for the task. Now, judge ye, Who are justified in refusing to teach? ANNIE E. PACE.

ADVERSITY.

(Communicated.)

Adversity is the common heritage of man, unevenly and sometimes thought to be unjustly distributed; nevertheless an essential element in the disinfecting of the race. The Master Physician has undertaken to heal, cleanse, and purify humanity.

To contend that adversity was unnecessary is to question the love, wisdom, and power of the Almighty.

Strenuous exercise and violent massage treatment will sometimes effect a cure when sugar-coated pills prove impotent.

The sweetest remedies are not always the best. The brave man meets the issue with faith and fortitude and becomes a hero.

Peevishness and tears will not help a bone to knit or a tissue to grow.

There are compensations even in adversity. A cork foot does not get cold nor grow bunions, and a one-eyed man is not drafted into the army.

The poor are not subject to the danger of riches, and the humble have no trouble with their servants.

Hot sunshine in summer, severe snow-storms in winter; both are indispensable, and both have their objectionable features.

But swearing at the weather is bad farming. And to harrow up your neighbor's feeling will not grow a crop of corn.

To murmur is unwise. If you owned a corner lot, you would have the dust from two streets and pay more taxes.

Don't be a baby, but put on a sweet front and bear your share of the inevitable like a little man. Ask the Lord in faith to help you do what you can not do yourself, and wait patiently until he gets ready to do it. * * *

Original Poetry

Russia.

There's a stir in the East, a mighty throb,
The oft-tried wrestle of Monarch and Mob.
The Mob would breathe, but a crushing throne
Bears on his breast—he is not his own,
The cry escaped from his trembling lips
Is flung in his face from bayonet tips!
He seeks in his terror the devils of War—
But to find the Monarch is there before.
Clawing the ashes, his race to the sod,
He sums the cost as he calls on God;
For deep and sure in his native mud
The answer is written in figures of blood,
There's a stir in the East for the Monarch must go,
And the Mob must become a Man, you know.

Of General Interest

A SYMPOSIUM ON TITHING.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Below will be found three selected articles bearing on the tithing question. The first taken from the Christian Standard, is of special interest as showing the sentiment in the "Christian" Church, an organization whose ministers formerly bitterly opposed the doctrine. The quotation from the Capital is from a secular publication and for that reason is of interest.

IS THE TITHE SYSTEM WISE AND CHRISTIAN?

Paper read January 17, 1907, before the Louisiana Christian Preacher's Institute, Leesville, Louisiana, by Roy Linton Porter. Published by request of the Institute.

Before entering into our consideration of this very important subject, it is just that we say we claim no originality in the development of the thoughts we shall present. The style is largely our own, but in the main the general outline belongs to our lamented brother, G. L. Wharton, now a member of the family of immortals. To him belong also the illustrations used herein.

The discussion of the tithe question, and the inquiry into its system as to its being wise and Christian, is the result of the dissatisfaction and failure of the human means that have been employed, which like human creeds, are insufficient and devisive.

The tithe system we believe to be wise because its principle is dignified. Nearly all human schemes now in use are unworthy, unspiritual, and often belittling. There is no human government so poor as to use the same or similar means. Imagine the United States Government using similar means as the church in raising money for the support of its different departments, and sending out over the country orators for the navy, army, etc., some with stereopticons, others with maps, charts, etc., all scrambling for the best days to get the money, "officers sending out jugs, mugs, boxes, barrels, eggs, and buttons with their pictures on them"; and the "States and counties all holding fairs, festivals, concerts, and ice-cream socials, with the women cooking, sewing, and acting." Such performances would disgrace any earthly government in its own eyes and the eyes of others. "The kingdom of God is more glorious and more dignified than all earthly kingdoms," and is destined to conquer all earthly kingdoms and to stand for ever. "Its faith, hope, love, spirit, and work are divine, its scope is world-wide"; the tithe system is the only one found in the Bible; is worthy of God, of Christ, and the nature of his kingdom. "It is found in the Law, the Prophets, and the Gospel"; is indorsed by God, Abraham, Jacob, Moses, prophets, and reformers of the Old Testament, and the greatest names in all Christian centuries have honored it.

It is wise because its principle is adequate. "It honors God" and his word. It blesses the servants of God, giving them an abundance in this life and assurance of the life to come; so say the Scriptures. "Give, and it shall be given you; good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over, shall they give into your bosom. For with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." (Luke 6: 38.) "But this I say, He that soweth sparingly shall also reap sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall also reap bountifully; . . . and God is able to make all grace abound unto you; that ye, having always all sufficiency in everything, may abound to every good work: . . . and he that supplieth the seed to the sower, and bread for food, shall supply and multiply your seed for sowing, and increase the fruits of your righteousness." (2 Corinthians 9: 6, 8, 10.) "Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on the life that is life indeed."—1 Timothy 6: 19. It can not be justly said that this makes it a selfish principle, for "it is no more selfish than 'repent, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.' One is the blessing of pardon, the other the blessing of service." The tithe system is adequate because it meets the world's needs.

It is wise because its principle is educational. "It teaches equity." A man may by this system know when he robs God. A wealthy Kentuckian several years ago became convinced that in not paying his tithe he had robbed God. He immediately paid his back tithe with interest. The injustice now being practiced in the church in withholding tithes would cause a revolution if committed in any earthly government. "Taxation without representation" is unjust, but there is one thing that is worse, more detrimental, and that is "representation without taxation." In God's kingdom he calls this robbery. He has levied a tax upon his people, calling for one seventh of their time and one tenth of their income; this tax is not one of compulsory command, but one of moral obligation. The wisdom of this is manifest, for where a man's treasure is there will his heart be also.

It teaches certainty. In this system there is no spasmodic or impulsive giving, for it has "the steadiness of a fixed principle." "It is not affected by muddy roads, stormy weather, or Sunday headaches." A missionary secretary once said, "If the day of our offering is stormy, we will lose ten thousand dollars."

It teaches one to be systematic in his own affairs, compelling him to at least keep an account of his income.

It is educational, therefore wise, because it "develops the greatest liberality." To the poor it is the greatest liberality, to the well-to-do and rich it is the base-line of blessing. It is the spring-board from which leaps are made into the field of philanthropy. An example of the liberality it develops is found in a Cleveland man who began tithing when he earned only fifty cents a day; from a tenth he gave a third, then, so richly was he blessed, he gave one half, then all, of his income of thousands of dollars annually.

The most important argument as to the wisdom of the tithe system is found in its practice. "Experience is the final test." The tithe system has been tried and is a success. It has not always had a wise presentation, but we can not mistake "the argument of practice." "In other departments of life this is the end of all controversy. If the principle proves true in practice, the case is closed. If it fails to work, however plausible the theory may be, it is set aside." About the tithe God said, "Prove me now herewith." It is the New Testament principle, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." That which proves by experience to be good ought to be accepted on merit.

In an article in the Christian Evangelist about the close of the year 1904, Bro. Wharton told of evidence in individual and church experience in tithing that he had gathered in the past twelve months. We give these facts as he related them.

One man showed his tithe-book that he had kept for seventeen years, said the system made him give thousands where otherwise he would have given hundreds. A widow lady who had tithed for many years said she had "a satisfaction and blessing, spiritually, she had never found in giving in the usual way." A well-known preacher said he never knew before what hilarious giving meant. A rich man who has tithed since boyhood testifies "that he now lives and makes money for the pleasure of giving." A well-to-do druggist began business with almost nothing, tithed from the beginning, and has enjoyed a great spiritual blessing. A young man who started in a peanut-stand, is now wealthy and gives more than a tenth. A preacher who was in debt says he never got started to paying his debt till he began to tithe. Occasionally an exception to this kind of testimony may be found, but this does not prove that the rule failed. Some people have tried faith and repentance and failed, but we think none the less of faith and repentance.

It is worthy to note from the above that with scarcely an exception the blessings received were both temporal and spiritual; that of those who begin to tithe, ninety-nine out of a hundred give more; that only those in earnest and that desire to see the kingdom of God advance, are tithing.

A Methodist church in Cincinnati, Ohio, began tithing eleven years ago, eight members out of three hundred began; at the end of nine years, one hundred and twenty-seven out of six hundred were tithing. There was an increase in the church "numerically, financially, and spiritually." It gave more for benevolences than all the other fourteen Methodist churches in the city. The preacher does not have to plan with the officers for suppers, lectures, concerts, donations, or selling tickets. Merchandise has been swept out and prayer and praise restored. "They have no subscriptions, pledges, collectors, fairs, festivals, concerts, socials, jugs, mugs, boxes, barrels, birthdays, eggs, buttons, or chromos to finance the church."

The Memorial Presbyterian Church, of Indianapolis, Indiana, had seven tithers to begin in 1901; at the end of the year there were twenty-seven; at the end of three years there were seventy-five out of six hundred members tithing. As a result, the regular Sunday-school offering the last year of the three was $6,700. The preacher says, "It is purely a religious movement, based on the Bible and common sense, and is accorded the respect of the community."

The East Dallas (Texas) Christian Church, when less than a year old, with one hundred and sixty-five members, had thirty-two to begin to tithe. All of its officers, the preacher, Sunday-school superintendent, presidents of the C. E. and C. W. B. M., tithed—thirty-two in all; twelve men, eleven women, nine boys and girls. As a result, the first year they supported their own church, paid their preacher a good salary, gave one hundred dollars in March for foreign missions, in April gave three hundred dollars for benevolences, and in June one hundred and forty for Children's Day.

The Oklahoma City Christian Church, as an experiment, had three hundred and ten out of six hundred members to tithe one month; result, eight hundred and fifty dollars was received that month at the regular services.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, at Shelbyville, Indiana, began in 1901 with six tithers; in three years they had forty-two out of a membership of seven hundred and eighty-one. The following table shows the result. The church gave:

Year	For Missions	For Benevolence	Total
1900	$ 700	$1,914	$2,614
1901	1,224	2,471	3,695
1902	1,840	4,857	6,697
1903	2,115	5,874	7,989

Certainly these facts alone, to say nothing of the thousands of others that could be given, show that when reduced to practice the tithe system proves itself to be wise.—Christian Standard, February 9, 1907.

TITHING.

Tithing is regarded by many as simply an act of charity or benevolence on the part of God's people. Many of them look upon it as a matter of giving, an act of volition, to do or not to do, as they feel disposed. But this way of giving is contrary to the whole tenor of the Scriptures. A tithe of one's income is God's share or rent for benefits received, sun and air and blessings innumerable and very life itself. It is our honest debt to our heavenly Father; and in the light of this fact many are withholding from him that which is his own. God has declared to those who do so, "Ye have robbed me . . . in tithes and offerings." "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Tithes are what we pay. Offerings are what we give. God's blessing can not fall on those who do not obey his word and pay God what they owe him. His laws are unchangeable.—The Bible Advocate, February 26, 1907.

THE GRAVEST LARCENY.

"Will a man rob God?"

This is a startling interrogative. At first thought it would seem to suggest an impossibility. As ordinarily understood, the act of robbery or stealth means the taking of that which belongs to another without the knowledge of the owner thereof. The God of the heavens and the earth has an all-seeing eye. He is not only cognizant of the acts of men but he is a discerner of the very thoughts and intents of the heart. Surely no one would think of robbing one who had the power to behold the would-be robber in every detail of his larcenous proceeding.

The simplest expressions of scripture, however, have a wide and varied meaning, and the query of holy writ, "Will a man rob God?" has an ample significance.

The gravest larceny of which human beings could be capable is the "robbing of God," and yet the act is being committed every day.

The divine ruler of the universe is being robbed of the tithes and offerings which he has demanded since the days of the enactment of the Mosaic code. True, he owns the sheep and the cattle upon a thousand hills, but he has placed property in the hands of men and women who never dreamed of paying a cent of interest, let alone the principal. If instead of robbing God men would return to him the pittance which he asks, the churches, hospitals, schools, and missions which he would establish would speedily perfect a moral revolution throughout the world.—Editorial Department, Des Moines Capital, March 16, 1907.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Follow Me."

"All the way by which the Lord, thy God, led thee."

Yes, all the way, Lord Jesus,
O may we follow thee;
Through the regeneration,
Till we thy glory see.

The way that thou hast trodden,
Through the deep waters lead;
Where washed from earth's corruption
Our souls from sin are freed.

The cross we then must carry
If after thee we go;
The mount of crucifixion
We every one must know.

The grave where once they laid thee
There low our heads must lie.
Like thee in faith awaiting God's summons from on high.

How shall our feet abide,
Without thy help, dear Jesus,
Through all the way that leadeth
To thy exalted side?

Onward, and upward, lead us,
Hold fast each trembling hand,
Until at last triumphant
Before thy throne we stand.

PAPEETE, Tahiti.

Sister Walker: In letters from our brothers and sisters in America, and elsewhere, they sometimes speak of the sacrifice we are making. I therefore feel that to say nothing to the contrary, would be to willingly occupy a false position, for really I do not claim that I, at least, am making any sacrifice. We are comfortably situated (not luxuriously). We have, thus far, enough to eat, and enough clothes to keep trim and tidy, for a year or more; therefore we are neither cold nor hungry. It is true we must forego the pleasure of the association of those of our own tongue (a loss that the rest feel more than I); and especially those of our own household (where there is one darling baby that may be the last baby grandchild we will ever have); and I sometimes feel a great hungering to see them all. But in compensation for those privations, I have so much better health here than what I have in America, that I can not complain. I have outgrown homesickness, and am content; in fact, enjoy the quiet more than the rush, hurry, and worry of civilization. Most of the time I am as happy as there is any need to be. Once in a while a cloud will rift over an obscure, for a brief interval, the mental sunshine, but those are only passing clouds that make the returning sunshine more enjoyable.

Then we have the church papers. How we devour them at first, then read them over with a calm enjoyment.

Sundays are very enjoyable too. We are not thronged with people as we used to be. The brethren have learned that a prolonged visit of three or four wearies us; and, when Joseph turns to his reading, they slip out and go away. We like to get up early at all times; the rising sun rarely finds us in bed. Sunday mornings require a little earlier start if anything, on account of the eight o'clock service; and I never like to hurry on Sunday mornings. Between the eight and ten o'clock services, we have a quiet hour, in which Joseph is intent upon the sermon that he is going to preach; while I occupy the hour in reading a sermon that some one has already preached. And right here let me say, I hope those sermons will never cease to be in our periodicals; for they are all the preaching we scattered ones have. Directly after the ten o'clock service comes the Sunday-school. We are usually home before twelve. I get a simple dinner. Seldom have meats. Then there is a nice, long reading-time until the three o'clock prayer-meeting. Or if my eyes get weary of reading, I sit opposite the door in my rocker and feast my eyes on the beautiful green trees just across the road. Some at a little distance are very lofty; but my two companions are right opposite the house on the other side of the road. They are beautiful in shape and in foliage. When in blossom they look like a Christmas-tree in the distance; only more umbrella-shaped. Their foliage seems to be a blending of the cassia and the locust; and yet not like either. There are clusters of dry pods of last year's growth. These hang at regular distances apart on all the branches, beneath the pretty green leaves; while above, the leaves are richly bedecked with the clustering blossoms that resemble little bunches of thistle-blossoms. And the odor is much the same; but the color is like the silky tassels on green corn. I feel sorry that I must so soon leave those silent companions of mine, and go where the view is less pleasing, to our missionary house in barren Tarona. But there we will have the ever-changing ocean to gaze upon. That portion of shore open to our view is already fringed with young trees that will soon grow. But they are not the pretty kind; nor is the location so retired as this (nor so muddy either when it rains). We expect to get into the new house in about ten days; and it will be finished after we get there. Since that house will only be of a convenient size for one half of our missionary force here, the Saints of Tiona are fixing up the missionary house there, the one that T. W. Smith built, for the other half, while we all are on this island.

My niece and her husband (Bro. and Sr. Lake) were with us last week from Thursday morning till Saturday afternoon. Were storm-stayed while waiting for the mail. But it was a nice change for us all: a change indeed for her, for they had to sleep on the floor, without even a mattress under them. Both are well. Alberta skips about as lively as a ten-year-old girl. She seems to be perfectly content, and our mail-days are like Christmas-times.

But this last mail brought a great shock to us: The news of the burning of the HERALD Office. It seemed at first like Sr. Walker said, as if a portion of the world had dropped off. But we out here will never fully realize it. Our papers will come just the same, and in a week or two it will be like a troubled dream. But I hope we shall not so far lose sight of it, or of any of the things that befall us as a people, as to fail to do our part, or to profit by the lesson.

Letter Department

In the Interest of Church-Work.

As another Conference year has mostly glided away, we look back over our past labors, and we are caused to meditate as to what we have done in helping to build up the kingdom of God, and in centering our hope in the Lord Jesus Christ, and in establishing his righteousness through precept and example among the children of men.

We are confronted to-day with the divine assurance that our heavenly Father is leading his children on and on to perfection, that they ultimately may enjoy that heavenly environment, and dwell with Christ, and God the Father.

And as I look over the field in which I was directed to labor, I am reminded that many spiritual blessings have been ours to enjoy. And in the various places where I have presented the gospel, I have enjoyed that freedom of thought and speech which has surpassed any time previous. And in association with my brethren of the same field, I have discovered in them that integrity which should characterize our lives as the children of the kingdom.

The field has been large and the laborers few. But many of our local brethren have put their hand to the plow, and indeed have been a great source of strength. May the Lord continue to bless them all. Their assistance is greatly needed.

But behind all of this, I have been brought to realize that we have been upheld by a power that is not our own, which has tided us over many dangerous places in this earth-life. This we believe is due to the prayers of the Saints of God. Thus, dear brother and sister, may we continue to have your support and thereby make us collaborators with Christ in the work intrusted to all. We believe that there has been a tendency upon the part of the Saints to guard against the expression of a thought that would give an offense to any, and thereby they have been trying to carry into effect the gospel of Christ. But we are sorry to say some few have manifested an indifferent spirit. Still we hope and pray that they may soon return to the "Father's house," where there is meat and enough to spare.

We are glad to note several have been added to the church during the last year by baptism. Thus our faith has been increased, and our hope enlarged.

There is another feature of church-work which we believe is in demand at the present time, and that is, that the church may be fed, not by that which man's wisdom teaches, but by that which the Holy Ghost teaches. The Lord has said by the spirit of revelation through his servant, that many of our "weapons are yet carnal." In Doctrine and Covenants 98:3: "Behold, I say unto you, there were jar-rings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore by these things they polluted their inheritances. They were slow to hearken unto the voice of the Lord their God; therefore, the Lord their God is slow to hearken unto their prayers, to answer them in the day of their trouble. In the day of their peace they esteemed lightly my counsel; but in the day of their trouble, of necessity they feel after me."

Here, then, is stated by the Lord the nature of many of our carnal weapons. And as long as these things exist we can not expect to accomplish the object of our labors, viz: our inheritances as the gospel law provides. And while there may be some things existing of a perplexing nature, which confront us at times, let us retain in our mind, There is only one way to adjust, to restore, and to heal, and that is in the Spirit of Christ. We mean to say by that, that this is the only successful way. By doing that it will bring us in touch with the requirements of the gospel; and the divine life will be manifested, and he who gave the law will be honored.

"Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently: being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever."—1 Peter 1:22, 23.

Therefore in the experiences of the past, may we have learned through prayer and humbleness that the Lord shall direct all the interests of his work. It is not so much in telling the world that we compose the true church of God, and gaining the victory by the teaching of the Bible in support of church organization and doctrine; but it is the underlying work, the increase which the Spirit, which is of God, has worked out in us, which is "love, meekness, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, brotherly love, and charity," of which Peter says: "If these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." So, dear brother and sister, this is the necessary material to be used in building up the church and kingdom of our God. "For we are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building."—1 Corinthians 3:9.

Nothing should be done through vain glory or strife, but let each one esteem others higher than himself. "And those members of the body, which we think to be less honorable, upon these we bestow more abundant honor; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness. For our comely parts have no need: but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honor to that part which lacked: that there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another."—1 Corinthians 12:23-25.

In this present life we move in that channel which divine faith produces. This faith enlarges itself as we place ourselves in harmony with the gospel law. The history of the past reveals unto us that which we are laboring for, that which reaches beyond this earth-life beyond the grave in that heavenly bliss. The beloved disciple of Christ, while in his condition of banishment, was so enwrapped by the power of the Spirit of God, that it carried him in its influence over the tide of this mortal life; thereby he beheld the magnitude and power of the invisible realm, and in this condition of existence he makes the statement: "I John saw the Holy City, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband."

The prize is yet before us, just hidden from that part which is called carnal. And as the Spirit of God dispersed the darkness in the past, so may it disperse all our carnal weapons. And may the time speedily come, when we may carry into effect more completely the sixteenth verse of the fourth chapter of the Ephesian letter, "from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, making increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."

And as we enter upon the duties of another Conference year, in which each one of us may be involved, may we lay our all at the feet of our heavenly Father, and say, Not my will, but thine, be done.

One of them.

Editors Herald: Elders Shippy and Dowker have spent about five weeks with us, putting forth every effort to help us and all who would be helped, and we have witnessed the fruits of their labor, for which we, with them, were made to rejoice.

Twelve loved ones were added to our number, and they now with us are enjoying the blessings of our heavenly Father. For some time past we have been tried, as it were, like gold is tried in the fire, and during the sad seasons past it seemed a trial to pray. But we are truly thankful that our heavenly Father saw fit to bid the cloud rise, and we feel that it is well said that every cloud has a silver lining. God is truly blessing his children abundantly here. When the Saints come together now, they are privileged to enjoy that sweet spirit in power, and true it is that the gifts of the gospel are ours, if we will only live in a way that our Father can bestow them.

The Lord spoke to his Saints here, through his servant Bro. Shippy, telling them that he was well pleased with them; and to live faithful for many blessings were in store for them, along with many other encouraging words which

I can not relate as given. And while I was seated with those not of the fold, but who were my young associates, I was made to raise my heart in thanksgiving to my Father for his love, seeing them so wrought upon by the Spirit, that as it were their hearts would melt.

Yea, it is true there is nothing to be compared with this work. While meditating on the power of this work, I am many times constrained to say that there is nothing that could separate me and this gospel; not boastingly, for I am weak; but I would say, like the apostle of old, Lord, where will I go, thou hast the words of eternal life.

My prayers are ever for God's children.

Editors Herald: My sister, Mrs. Carrie Stringer, lives at Dempster, South Dakota. I have been explaining our faith to her and her family and they are interested and would like to hear some of our elders preach; if there are any of them passing through here I would like to have them call on her. If we can not get any other place to hold meetings, my sister says they can hold them in her house.

Dear Saints: When I came into this church it was the best step I could have taken. It is my desire to be careful in my conduct; not merely to be a Saint in name alone, but in works also. And I want you all to pray for me, that I may hold out faithful to the end. My husband belongs to the church. I was baptized by Bro. Walter W. Smith, about three years ago.

Your sister,
MRS. ALICE FERGUSON.

MINDEN CITY, Michigan, March 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: Since last writing, over a year ago, we have enjoyed many blessings from the Father; no doubt more than we can comprehend. We can see more plainly each day the Father's guiding hand in leading us thus far in life, and we know that his kind watchcare is still over us, for which we are very thankful.

We also feel thankful for continued righteous desires, and that we are still struggling onward and upward to reach ideals which are raised a little higher from time to time even as our conception of the Christ life increases. And, we have learned to our satisfaction that the more of Christ's nature we take into our lives the greater will be our true comfort, peace, and happiness.

Scarcely a day goes by but that we are made to feel thankful to our heavenly Father for permitting us to pass through experiences which caused a spiritual awakening in us. These experiences began with our affliction of long duration, during which time we felt our entire dependence on God; and as we drew near to him he manifested himself to us in many ways, and we learned that God is very tender and loving, yet firm and exact in all things; and because of the many, many blessings so clearly manifested we never thought our affliction unjust or harsh, but we realized all along that it was a blessing to us from the hand of God. His Spirit was present with us to cheer, and to enlighten the mind. Under its holy influence we beheld many things as they are, and as they should be; we saw the nothingness of purely worldly ambitions. It entered with force into the heart that all but the truth of God must pass away, and only those qualities in us which are true will abide the day of test.

We realized how incomplete an education is without real spiritual culture.

We appreciated such truths as they dawned upon the mind; and as we put forth efforts to make them practical, we realized a small beginning of true development—an expansion of soul and mind.

Up to this time we had lived as best we could with the knowledge we had of the gospel, and we had a degree of joy in it, yet, we felt that there must be more for us to enjoy, something that would prove to us as an anchor to the soul, and bring more abiding peace under all conditions.

Later we understood that there can be no real satisfaction of the soul until we learn to draw from the fountain of living water; and after tasting of that blessed gift we truly realized we had reached the sure foundation—the source of true strength. Spiritual things seemed real, and life took on a new meaning to us.

We are grateful to God for lengthening our days thus far. We hope to show our appreciation by earnestly striving to prove ourself true to him.

We desire that our ambitions may always be greatest along just such lines as will enable us to accomplish the work God sees we can best do while upon the earth, and, that all our work may have running through it that depth of spirituality which makes it sound, storm- and fire-proof.

"All are called according to the gifts of God unto them." God makes no mistakes in bestowing gifts, but man may err in the use he makes of them; therefore, it is the privilege and duty of all to seek God's guidance in their line of work. And we not only believe but know that God will direct his children, if they earnestly seek for his help.

In failing to appreciate and neglecting to make use of that which has been given us, we miss privileges and blessings to come. We must work. "No man ever attained an eminence yet who did not overcome the spirit of inaction, the impulse to wait, to do nothing to-day but wait until to-morrow," etc. The Spirit of God is able to unfold to our understanding what our part of the work is, and will help us to accomplish it; but our own will power and perseverance will have to be exercised in order to succeed here, as in any other work.

We have learned that it is one thing to admire Christ-like qualities as we see their beauty under the influence of God's Spirit, and another thing to undergo experiences that bring out and develop these noble qualities in us; but we know that God requires none of us to pass through unpleasant experiences unless it be for our good, or for the good of others. And with this consciousness, we should be willing to drink of whatever cup the Father sees fit to give us to drink.

Purified we must be if we would dwell in the presence of God. We believe the test is a closer one than some may think, and in order to endure it we must live in close relationship with God and take the Spirit of Truth for our guide in all things.

"Wrung from the troubled spirit in hard hours

Of weakness, solitude, perchance of pain,
Truth springs, like harvest from a well ploughed field,
And the soul feels it has not wept in vain."

How true the thought expressed in the last line! What unspeakable joy is felt as we stand in the light of truth revealed! Trial is lost sight of.

We enjoyed reading Bro. Heman Smith's "Short sermon on blots." It is good to have such thoughts often renewed in mind even though our belief along those lines may have already been in harmony with the thought expressed; it impresses us anew with the importance of "being exact in all things," and guarding the mind always, remembering that all our thoughts are weighed in the just balance of God; and it is certainly true that the purer the thought the purer the words and deeds; for thoughts are like seeds—if planted and nourished they take root and grow, and finally blossom into words and deeds, bringing forth fruit of their own kind whether pure and good, or vile and frivolous.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, March 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: Desiring to express to your many readers my appreciation of this latter-day work, and some of my experiences in the past which had their culmination this year, I pen you these few lines.

Twelve years ago last July I left Higbee, Missouri, for Cumberland, British Columbia, to visit my father and mother. I will not attempt to describe my trip; will only relate an incident that occurred while in San Francisco. A young man I got acquainted with wanted me to go to a lecture with him, and I consented to go. The building where the lecture was held was a very large building. We had just gotten into the building and nicely seated when I heard beautiful singing from the adjoining room. I asked the young man if there were other religious bodies that met in here. He said, "Yes, those you hear are the 'Mormons.'" (While I did not belong to the church at this time, I was sufficiently acquainted with them to know it was one of their hymns.) Being a stranger in a strange place I felt I would feel more at home if I had been with the Saints. But I refrained from going. I relate this instance, for as I proceed with my narrative you will see how God made impressions on my mind by his Spirit in all that trip. I stayed only three days in San Francisco, then sailed for Victoria, British Columbia. After two days and nights of unpleasantness, I landed safely, took train same day for Nanaimo, and from there to Cumberland, where my folks lived. After thirteen years of separation, it is needless for me to say our meeting was a joyous one. My stay with them lasted four months. Then I concluded to return to my home in Missouri. So the time for saying good-bye to my dear old father and mother came, and as I gave them the parting hand my dear old mother, with tears streaming down her cheeks, said, "George, I am afraid we shall never meet in mortality again."

That sentence touched my heart, and this great latter-day work came before me as it had never done before, and these were the Spirit's impressions that came to me: You go back to Missouri and do your duty; come into the kingdom by the door (baptism), and if faithful you will be permitted to come back to this country, preach the gospel to your people, and baptize them. So you will be one united family in the world to come where you will not have to part.

This was in the summer of 1894. But like many others, after I got home I did not give heed to the promptings of the good Spirit, but continued in the things of this world; until in the winter of 1895 God spoke direct to me again. So December 1 of that same year I was baptized. In the following February I was ordained to the office of teacher, and in June, 1897, to the office of elder. I continued to do local labor until the General Conference of 1900, when I was sent as a general missionary to North and South Dakota.

From my first appointment, my folks were anxious I should come their way. I also was anxious to go, for I felt if I was faithful God would fulfill his promise. I also felt when the proper time came for me to go, God would open up the way. So this spring when the missions were read, my mission read Washington and British Columbia District. I was glad the opportune time had come for me to carry the latter-day message to those so near to me by the ties of nature.

Bidding loved ones at home good-bye, I took my departure for the West about May 20. I went by the way of Salt Lake and Portland. My first stop in Washington was Castle Rock. Preached for them five or six times good liberty. Found the Saints kind and hospitable. My next stop was Humptulips. To reach this place had to go by stage twenty-five miles. Bro. Enge and I held a series of meetings with fair interest. From Humptulips I went to Seattle to meet those whom I was specially interested in carrying the gospel to. I found them all well and anxious to hear me preach. Sunday night I was appointed to speak in the Seattle Branch. A good house greeted me. My father, mother, brother, and sister-in-law were in the congregation; spoke for about one hour with good liberty. The Spirit bore witness to the truthfulness of the message to the hearts of those who twelve years before the same Spirit bore evidence to me would accept the gospel. So I was permitted to baptize my mother and sister-in-law, and about two weeks after my sister and her husband. My father was not baptized, but he told me he intended to be before I went home in March; but being called home in August on account of my wife's sickness and death, I did not get another opportunity to baptize him.

These and other experiences continue to confirm me in this good work.

My labors this year have not been so much as in other years of my mission; but I can truly say, the work I have done has been very pleasant, for I felt God sanctioned it by the presence of his Spirit.

The losing of my dear wife has brought grief and sorrow to my heart; but, as one brother has said, I am determined to be comforted by the assurance of the resurrection, and turning my face eastward, from whence comes light and life in transcending love, await the reappearing of those glorified personalities that my love has become entwined in, against which death nor hell has no power.

Your brother in Christ,

GEO. THORBURN.

Dear Herald: I have never written to the HERALD before. I was a member of the Mormon church for twenty-four years, and having been brought up in that church I thought it was right; but when I heard Bro. Holloway preach a sermon in East Helena I believed what he taught. I had a friend in East Helena, Sr. Leibold, a member of this church, and I asked her about the gospel. She gave me lots of information which I know was true, and, desiring to do the Lord's will, I accepted the gospel and have never regretted the step.

I know the Lord has blessed me and my family in many ways since then, and by his help I mean to do his will as far as I know it. I have four children. My two oldest daughters, Margaret aged ten and Lila nine, were baptized the same time I was by Bro. Holloway; also four others.

My husband is not interested in the gospel but I hope if I prove true the Lord will hear and answer my prayers.

I hope the Lord will open the way that I may go to Zion with my family where we can hear the word of the Lord and I can bring up my children right. I am trying to hold a little Sunday-school every Sunday for our family, and we have a little prayer-meeting every Wednesday evening.

Your sister in Christ,

CASSIE COX.

NAYLOR, Missouri, March 9, 1907.

Editors Herald: I thought I would write you a few lines to let you know how we are getting along down in Southeast Missouri. We have a branch at Naylor with thirteen members. We have meetings once or twice a month. We have good crowds at our meetings and good order. The enmity against the work has abated a good deal here. In some places where I go to preach the preachers seem to take pride in trying to down the work; but before they get through with it they find it is a harder job than they expected, and they begin to regard the work as being the most one-sided piece of work that they ever saw. They claim the church was instituted by "Old Joe Smith." They seem to think that when they shout "Old Joe Smith" they have won the day. I asked the General Baptists when they began to shout that, why they did not shout "Old John Smith," the founder of their church, who baptized himself by sprinkling. And if it is the Missionary Baptists, I ask, "Why not shout, 'Old John Shilbury,' who was not baptized at all, or 'Old Roger Williams,' the founder of the first Baptist Church in America?" But the most of us get along very well with the people, and those who formerly seemed so bitter against the work are now among our best friends. Most of them come out to hear us and seem to like the preaching very well.

Yours in gospel bonds,

H. V. BRAUN.

BERRYDALE, Florida, March 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: As I have not seen a letter from this place (Santa Rosa Branch, Florida District) in some time, I will write a few items that may be of interest to some.

We are putting forth some effort in our weak way to promote the work here. The work was introduced here about forty years ago. At present we have about three hundred members in this district. While the work is not what it should be or could be, yet we have some reason to rejoice at the results that have been obtained.

The Santa Rosa Branch has made an effort to build a church-house and have so far succeeded that they can hold meetings in it. We expect to complete it before another year.

We have just had the privilege of attending a debate at this place between Elder T. C. Kelley of the Saints' Church and Doctor J. F. Love of the Church of Christ, or Christian. The debate was carried on in a nice, orderly manner; neither speaker had to be called to order.

The Saints are well pleased with the efforts of Bro. Kelley in defending the truth. We believe some good was accomplished. Some heard our claims who probably would not under other circumstances. Some prejudice has been removed, and the Saints strengthened.

The year's work here has been productive of good. The general condition is better than it was a year ago, and we feel that efforts of both traveling and local workers have not been spent in vain. We trust that much good shall result. We would be pleased if the General Conference chooses to send the same missionaries here again next year.

Yours in bonds,

WM. A. WEST.

Editors Herald: I am one of the isolated Saints at present, living over a hundred miles from branch association, but not altogether lonely as there are a half dozen kindred souls in this locality. However, I enjoyed an oasis in this life of isolation last Saturday and Sunday by taking a trip to Portland and attending the district conference at Montavilla, a suburb of Portland. The Saints of that place are alive to the Master's work, and have sacrificed to further Christ's kingdom; and the presence of the Spirit, manifested on this occasion, was a testimony of recognition and encouragement. They have built them a house to worship in, and, although not completed, it serves their needs at present. It will be a comfortable little edifice when finished. I was almost a total stranger there, but where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is joy and peace; and those enjoying the Christ spirit have a kindred tie which binds them together, so that it is more like meeting an absent brother or sister than some person you have never met before.

Elder J. A. Moore gave us a splendid discourse on Sunday morning, after which the seats were arranged to answer for tables, and then the sisters took charge and exhibited the products of their labor to the delight and satisfaction of all present.

But, the dinner was not the feast of good things which most delighted the Saints. Their greatest joy was in the presence of the Master's Spirit which attended the sacrament- and testimony-service in the afternoon; the Spirit being manifested in testimonies, in healing power, and in the calling of a brother to a higher office.

The writer was the speaker on Sunday night.

MURRAY, Kentucky, March 9, 1907.

Editors Herald: I come before your readers in order to give my views for the first time on the gathering of the Saints to the land of Zion.

First, I will say, we should be gathered there. But as to when and how, these are the important things to be considered. It is not my purpose to refer you to any part of the law concerning the gathering of the Saints. Almost all the Saints know what is written concerning the gathering, and I am sure the most of them are able to make their own deductions. So I shall give only a few thoughts that come to me at times on the subject.

It seems to me all can see the need of the Saints gathering to Zion. And if we can see the need, we should begin to make the proper effort to do so at once. When is the proper time to begin the preparations to go to Zion? The very day we are baptized into the church we should begin to fit ourselves to dwell in Zion, or, in other words, in the presence of the Lord. We should keep ourselves pure, by obeying the truth, that the Spirit of God may dwell in us.

We are told, if we have not the Spirit of Christ we are none of his. Here is a thought. We often hear Saints say, The Spirit was with me on a certain day, and then on certain days it was not with me. Sometimes elders will preach a sermon and say, The Spirit was with me in power; then at other times they will say, I did not have the Spirit. No liberty at all. Now, why did they not have the Spirit? If they were in a condition to have it, it would be there. Might we not make a bad mistake, sometimes, preaching without it? And are we not admonished not to teach unless we have the Spirit? Again, is it not a little dangerous to say we have not got the Spirit, or say we did not have it on certain days? Suppose the Spirit of God was in us at the time we say we did not have it, do you not think it would be wrong in us to say we did not have it? Now, if we live so the Spirit will remain with us all the time, then I can see how it is, as Christ says, an abiding Comforter. And if it is to be an abiding Comforter, we are entitled to it all the time, and we should never undertake to preach the gospel without it. In fact, none can preach the gospel without it. Preaching without the Spirit is preaching in word only, and such preaching does not fill the requirements, and should never be called gospel preaching.

Too often our zeal to report a large number of sermons to the conferences leads us to preach in word only, and such is detrimental to the progress of the true latter-day work.

Back now to the gathering. What is the use of our getting to Zion unless we keep ourselves in a condition that the Spirit of God will dwell in us? To me it makes no difference when I go to the land of Zion, if I am in a condition to dwell there when I get there, and be, indeed, a true saint of God.

I am sure none but the pure in heart can dwell in the presence of the Lord. We are told that as many of us as are led by the Spirit of God are the sons of God. So we should see, if we can, that it is the Spirit of God that is leading us to Zion, and not some selfish motive prompting us Zionward.

When it became necessary to deliver the Israelites from bondage, the Lord sent Moses to lead them to the promised land. Doubtless many of the elders in Israel had something to say about the proper way to lead the Israelites to the promised land, and on that account, doubtless, much confusion was brought in among the people. Here is the secret: Every one should learn his or her own duties, then perform the same.

As for myself, I believe in having a head to all things; and let the head lead in such work of gathering. God has called on the seed of Joseph to lead his people. This none of the Saints will deny. Then let us let them come forward and occupy where God has appointed them, to lead the church, and then the victory will soon be won, and the Saints will dwell safely in Zion, nothing to hurt or destroy in all the holy mountain of the Lord.

The Lord has made it clear to me by his Spirit that it is only those who are in a condition to receive the endowment that will receive it when the time comes, and it is to come through the seed of Joseph Smith, who was called to bring the church up out of the wilderness, fair as the sun, clear as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners. May the Lord help us to move forward in the great work intrusted to all.

Extracts from Letters.

Joseph Arber, Bartlett, Iowa: "I came here on Monday from Council Bluffs, where I did some preaching. I held two meetings here with fair interest. Would have been better, but some of the roads were almost impassable. This will about close my year's work. I am expecting to attend General Conference."

Eben Miller, and after inquiry into our church economy displays a pleasing friendship and helpfulness. The aid society has also undertaken to supply olive-oil; instead of buying any kind, anywhere, we can now get a uniform guaranteed kind at the same cost, and the aid society derives 30 per cent profit to help pay for our church home!

EARNEST A. WEBBE.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.

The Saints of Philadelphia feel that they have much to be thankful for, our church debt having become a thing of the past, after years of effort. Our church having been dedicated, it seems more dear to us as a place to meet in and worship our Father in heaven.

As we have again resumed our normal condition after the visit of Bro. Joseph, and our season of rejoicing, many of the Saints feel a renewed determination to be faithful in their efforts to serve the Master.

The attendance at Religio of late has not been what those interested would like to see; but we have noticed some of the committees making a strenuous effort to get the old members again interested, and their work has not been in vain, as the interest and attendance is on the increase.

The Sunday-school has a Doctrine and Covenants class under its auspices that meets on a week-night so that the teachers and Bible class scholars may take up this study and not interfere with the regular Sunday-school work.

In the midst of our renewed efforts and rejoicing, we are reminded that we are not yet in that condition when parting is no more, by our esteemed pastor, Walter W. Smith, informing us that he will start for the West about the 21st of this month. Many of the Saints feel a degree of sorrow as they fear that he, having been with us three years, may be sent somewhere else, and they have learned to love him so much, not only for the work's sake, but also because of his character; but we must not be selfish, as our loss will be others' gain.

We held our usual social gathering, which has become the custom of this place on the departure of our pastor, at the home of Bro. John Zimmermann, and a very enjoyable evening was spent. Bro. Smith gave us one of his best talks last Sunday morning along the line of duties of members and ministry. Hope we may all remember, practice, and profit by it. During his stay with us, both Bro. Smith and his companion have done much towards helping the Saints to come up to a higher plane of living, and we do not know any in this city of "Brotherly Love" who will not be pleased to have him return again.

LONDON, ONTARIO.

Sr. R. C. Evans and Lizzie are home again, after spending several weeks in Toronto. They state that church-work in Toronto is progressing very rapidly.

The officers and teachers of the Sunday-school gave a pleasant evening to members on the 26th of last month. Three long tables were set up in the parlors of the church, and a hot dinner was served, with all the other additions of sweet things which would make one think they were in the promised land. The children had a glorious time—one long to be remembered. All could not be seated at first serving, and those who remained for the second were entertained in the main auditorium by Mr. George with his phonograph. Each class was marched to the tables by their teacher, who saw that they were waited upon and order kept. The affair proved a decided success and the committee deserves credit for the work done.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.

During the two weeks' services in the new church thirty-three have been baptized and nine more have given their names for baptism. Elder Evans is baptizing at every service. Attendance at both church and Majestic good.

A. F. MCLEAN.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Sunday was a beautiful day and the attendance at all the services was large. President Frederick M. Smith was the morning speaker at the chapel, Bro. J. W. Rushton occupying in the evening. The attendance at Sunday-school was five hundred and fifty-two. The Sunday-school work is being vigorously pushed by those in charge and the results are apparent.

Sr. W. H. Kelley passed to her reward beyond, Tuesday, March 19, at half past two in the morning, after a brief illness, pneumonia being the cause of her decease. The funeral-services were from the church, Sunday afternoon, Bro. Columbus Scott preaching the sermon. Members of the Quorum of Twelve, of which quorum Bro. Kelley is the president, bore the remains in these last sad rites. A large concourse of sympathizing Saints and friends attended the services.

The voice of the Spirit was heard in prophecy through our president, Bro. John Smith, at the last Wednesday evening young people's prayer-meeting. The prophecy assured the young people that the Lord was well pleased with their assembling in prayer and testimony, and they were promised that if they continued in humility before the Father, the gifts would be manifested among them. The peaceful, comforting influence of the Spirit accompanied the prophecy to the edification of the young Saints. May they be worthy of the further goodness of our Lord. JOHN GARVER.

Conference Minutes.

INDEPENDENCE STAKE.—Twelfth semiannual conference of the Independence Stake was held at Armstrong, Kansas, church, convening at 10 o'clock, Saturday, March 9, 1907. First Quorum of Elders.

A meeting of the first Quorum of Elders will be held at eight o'clock the morning of the sixth at a place to be announced at the Sunday-school Convention. Members of the quorum please take notice and make an effort to be present at the first meeting as there are items of considerable importance to be presented. Report blanks have been sent out to all members of the quorum to the addresses upon the books of the secretary. But if you have changed addresses since notifying the secretary, you will probably not get the blank unless you write the secretary for one. Address Elder R. N. Burwell, 119 West State Street, Hammond, Indiana. Do not fail to get your report in. It may be written on any paper if you choose. The blank is only for your convenience. After March 30 address the secretary at Lamoni, Iowa. We hope to have a full attendance of the quorum.

T. A. HOU GAS, President of Quorum.

British Isles Mission.

Will all the secretaries in the British Isles again supply the historic details of their several branches and districts, inasmuch as the former information has been lost in the HERALD Office fire. Your early attention will greatly oblige the local historian. WM. R. ARMSTRONG.

Resolutions of Condolence.

Whereas, In the demise of Sr. W. H. Kelley there has come to the president of our quorum in this hour of sad bereavement an irreparable loss, and,

Whereas, Words, while but a poor means by which to convey the sympathy we feel, are yet a means by which our deepest condolence is offered,

We hereby express to our brother and the family our sympathy in this sad hour, and reverently pray that God will graciously console in his own loving way.

And we further express to him, as his brethren in quorum capacity as well as coworkers together with God, that to the extent of our ability so to do, we extend the fraternal hand and assure our brother that we feel for him a sympathy which words can not express.

On behalf of the Quorum of Twelve.

J. W. Wight, F. M. Sheehy, J. W. Rushton, Committee.

Signed, F. A. SMITH, Secretary Quorum of Twelve.

"A too prevalent idea among the Saints is that the first step is to gather to the land of Zion. This is incorrect. The first step is to make preparation to gather. Let all things be prepared beforehand. And if the Saints in all the world will abide in this there will not be so many disappointments and trials of faith as to-day."

JOHN ALEXANDER DOWIE, ELIJAH SECOND.

For a good many years the world has been troubled more or less with a recurrence of the old doctrine of transmigration of souls, or metempsychosis, and under the influence of this notion men have risen among their fellows presenting sometimes strange and peculiar philosophies, ascribing unto themselves the greatness of some predecessor among the notable ones of earth, and securing followers. When Alexander Dowie first started it appeared that he was an earnest, honest advocate for the healing properties of spiritual influences. We were personally in San Francisco and Oakland in 1888 while Dowie was in his first movements, and from there we encountered him at Los Angeles. In the latter place some of our brethren visited the place where the meetings were held, and gathered the inference that Mr. Dowie was a liberal-minded, broad-spirited man, and thought it would be an excellent thing to present the latter-day philosophy to him and secure him for a convert. We did not share in their optimism, but told them that while we believed Mr. Dowie had done and was doing considerable good to mankind by being the means or instrumentality for healing some of the ills to which flesh was heir, we thought that he would not care for anything which did not originate and terminate with himself. They requested us to attend the afternoon prayer and exhortation service which was held in a building not far from where we were boarding. We declined to do this, and told them that if they were to undertake to bear testimony in his meeting and approach anything like the ordinary presentations that were known to us in our services, that he would stop them, and if they did not stop would order them out. They thought otherwise, but they went to his meeting. One of them attempted to bear his testimony and was told to sit down. That he was a Mormon and they did not want any Mormonism there, and our estimate of the man in this instance was confirmed. We watched him with considerable interest, hoping that there would be what we might call a true religious outcome to the movement.

It is not necessary for us to denounce Mr. Dowie's methods, for he has now passed to his reward, whatever it may be. It was only another instance in which ambition defeats itself. While John Alexander Dowie posed as a religious reformer the methods which he employed were denunciatory, and everything which he objected to he denounced in unmeasured terms. He succeeded in turning a great deal of attention towards himself, both that which was favorable and that which was unfavorable.

The idea of building up a temporal Zion occurred to him as it has to other men. He proceeded to develop along that line, and while we may wonder at the credulity of those who so apparently blindly followed in his lead, he accomplished wonders in the few years he was before the public. The accumulation of wealth at Zion City, the ease with which he seemingly raised incredible amounts of money, must have had a tendency to turn his brain, and the spirit of commercialism which has helped to ruin the people assuming to be the people of the Lord in all times, got in its settled work with him and his deputies.

It is but a little while since he died, and a strange division from his tenets and his following arose, which indicated the loss of thousands from his standard, including his father, wife, and son. His death was a pitiable one. Who is there that can read the account of it and not be moved by the strange picture which he presents? He exhibits his strong personality even to the close of his life, and yet even when his feet were taking hold upon the dark waters, he denounces those who had opposed him, bitterly calling them the "dogs of hell." Sudden deaths occurring in Zion City subsequent to his death created a panic there. Voliva, who appears to have been appointed at some time during the lifetime of Dowie, failed in his efforts to keep the people together, and now it would appear that Dowie has by will appointed a man by the name of Lewis, evidently one whom he had with him in the South.

By what rule or reasoning John Alexander Dowie imposed upon himself the spirit and the name of Elijah Second it is difficult for us to understand, but it is not difficult for us to understand that the sober methods of the gospel do not create so wild enthusiasm as we see exhibited in his brief career.

No one conversant with the Scriptures fully and with the philosophy of moving and current events supposes for a moment that the mantle of the ancient Elijah fell upon this wonderful man. The assumption is an incredible one, and it is far safer for everybody who may have a hope of life and salvation in the philosophy and economy proclaimed by Jesus, the Lord, to understand once for all, that the identity of an individual born with him at his birth, whether he had a pre-existence in the spirit or not, will continue with him not only to the end of time, but into eternity and the judgment that follows after time.

"It is appointed to man once to die: after that the judgment," and the strong fact of the continuation of responsibility and identity until the sentient man lays down the weapons of his earthly warfare and appears in the spirit world to finish the great race which is before him, and finally answer at the bar of never-failing justice for what he has done in the flesh, will not commit a man for any appreciable period of time to befool himself with the thought that he is somebody else besides himself. The apostle Paul tells us clearly not to think of ourselves more highly than we ought, and he also admonishes us "let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."

The doctrine of transmigration of souls may be an alluring one to some, bringing into place the philosophy of re-incarnation, which so far as men are concerned has been exemplified in John Alexander Dowie, is the recurring of individualisms upon the earth who have been there before and who are said to move by the spirit and power of those whose successive re-incarnations these may be.

We have met several who presumed to say that they were the Christ. We have known of their setting times and making predictions as such Christ, which we have lived to see fail. We have invariably answered these aspirants to the dignities and prophetic mantles of the men of the past, including the Savior, that they were not what they claimed to be, but were simply men whose names were known in this life. They would never be any other than these, that we were but plain men, filling a plain mission, and we never expected to bear any other name, and that we would be held accountable for how we performed the duties devolving upon that individuality which was imposed upon us; and that if we were successful in carrying through life the burdens which were necessarily imposed upon us, it would be all that we could wish to do, if at the end of our labor we were acceptable in our individual character, and in the discharge of the responsibilities resting upon us.

We had hoped for an outcome to this Dowie movement much different to what we have seen, and we sympathize with both Voliva and Lewis, for we fear that the collapse and death of their leader who personally succeeded in raising so large a following and in founding so many and such stupendous enterprises, will by the loss of these peculiar qualities create a panic in real estate prices that will send the assets of Zion City down to such a degree that the so-called Apostolic Church will become bankrupt.

It is certain that thousands of individuals have staked their all upon this venture, and that many of these will not only lose faith in Dowie as a leader, but that they will also be unlikely to yield the same kind of credence and obedience to any other that they did to Mr. Dowie. There is perhaps no loss that is so productive of the spirit of dejection and loss of confidence in leaders as that loss which results from misapplication of individual funds, and while we are completely surprised at the magnificent sums which were raised by this miracle of finance, we must deplore the sadness and the unfortunate condition into which many of those who trusted him have been necessarily plunged.

Comparing our own work with that which was done by John Alexander Dowie, we are pleased to know that so far there has been no such great accumulation of wealth, there has been no such possible loss as that which we see involved in the collapse of Dowieism. We can but wish Messrs. Voliva and Lewis success. We can charitably hope that the spirit of unity may be amplified in the lives and conduct of these two now trusted spiritual leaders. No matter whether we think that either has or has not been legally appointed to the place he assumes to occupy, one having been appointed by Dowie before his death, and the other now seeking possession by virtue of appointment in the will of Mr. Dowie. It may be considered unfortunate also that the latter did not leave a son as well qualified to perform the apostolic office as the man who has now past, for if he, too, has been dazzled by the possession of wealth, the irresponsible use of means, and the love of the things which money buys, we might not hope that the son which is left will carry on the work which his father begun.

It is but proper and right for us as a people to maintain the standard of integrity and uprightness which we believe should characterize spiritual-minded men, without seeking to exalt ourselves as re-incarnated beings, whose predecessors have flourished upon the earth and whose specific characters may challenge our admiration and our sincerest regard.

Let us discharge the duties devolving upon us with a view to our responsibilities and the identities which we carry, and be specially on our guard, each and all, that we do not open the avenues of our souls to yield to the spirits to enter in which have no right in these tabernacles which, when they once enter, it is difficult to dislodge them, and should they be encouraged, though the tabernacle may be clean and garnished, when they finally find lodgment there, the state of the man is far worse than at the first. We will be held accountable for the responsibility resting upon us as identities, nor will we be by any means divested of these identities until we answer in them to the creator of the whole earth.

Let us bar then all earthly ambitions, the hold that wealth and position may have upon us, and live humble lives as we hope to answer to our final salvation, glory, honor, and power with the redeemed of the earth.

THE MAN WITHOUT A GROUCH.

I sing the man without a grouch!

Have you ever seen him?—say!

Who isn't ready to cry, "Ouch!"

Should you but look his way.

Who wears upon his face a smile a good two inches thick
And would not take offense if one should smite him with a brick;

Who lives at peace with all mankind beneath the shining sun,
And feels at night the day misspent if no good deed were done.

Here's to the man without a grouch:

Has he yet passed your way?

Who isn't waiting, all a-crouch,

To spring upon his prey.

Whose heart is red and warm and true and thumps the whole day long

Within its brave and honest chest a glad and joyous song;
Who has no time to make complaint—of what should he complain?

This green old earth was built for worth and not for petty gain!

All hail the man without a grouch,

Whoever he may be:

He has no need to crawl or slouch,

But walks erect and free.

Within his breast no envy burns, no malice rankles deep,

Forgiving all and loving all, untroubled is his sleep.

Thus let us all take notice of the life that's worth the while;

And burying our hammers deep, be ready with a smile!

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Bishop Thomas Taylor, of Birmingham, England, passed from this life, March 18, in his eighty-second year. He leaves an enviable record as a true representative of Christ, patient, humble, and spiritual.

Elder C. A. Butterworth writes that the Utah elders have done some work in Adelaide, South Australia; but adds that "they are like cigar-makers, who go to a lot of trouble, and it all ends in smoke."

The Deseret News for March 23 contains an address by Joseph F. Smith, Jr., upon the subject of the Reorganization, delivered at Ogden City, Utah.

The Shenango Valley News (Greenville, Pennsylvania), March 15, contains an unprovoked attack upon the Latter Day Saints. Reverend E. C. Musselman, pastor of St. Mark's Reformed Church, of New Hamburg, Pennsylvania, is the aggressive party; and, if we are to judge by the article, not only the church but the pastor as well should be "reformed." The same paper of March 22 contains an able and comprehensive reply by Elder Rudolph Etzenhouser.

When the elders of the Reorganization have met the elders of the Utah church and have presented unanswerable arguments the latter have taken refuge under a lamblike submission and have declined to enter into public debate because of the temptation to indulge in recrimination that would result in hard feelings. The Deseret News and other church publications have indorsed this attitude. The rule, though, seems to be one rather of convenience, and is local in application, being one of policy rather than of principle, if we are to judge from the very worldly way in which the News goes after the Salt Lake Tribune. Here is a sample from the News of March 25: "Readers of the Salt Lake Tribune were almost dazzled by a gleam of light in its editorial columns yesterday. . . . It was to all intents and purposes a genuine rift in the clouds of which the paper has been the storm center for the past several years while its ignorant and incompetent owner has paraded his political disappointments before the people."

President R. C. Evans writing from Toronto says that at the Wednesday night prayer-meeting six were baptized, and nine more were to be baptized Sunday.

Do not forget that the HERALD Editors desire to secure a complete list of photos of the ministry and also of church-buildings owned by the church. Send in your photos and help the collection grow.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

While an occasional man among church-members still lifts a voice in defense of the saloons, a sound comes from behind the screened doors and curtained windows that is more than half a confession. In an editorial in a recent number of "Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular" (New York) the saloons are confidentially warned that they must reform or be driven out, because the people are becoming disgusted with their evils. Bfore saloons can reform, saloonkeepers must be "denaturized," just as alcohol is to be "denaturized" for commercial uses.

The grand jury at San Francisco has returned sixty-five indictments against the notorious Abe Ruef, and his bail was fixed at ten thousand dollars on each count. He is charged with accepting enormous bribes from corporations and individuals who sought the benefits of his influence as political boss. The net is now being cast for those officials who tendered the bribes, and it is to be hoped that the last man of them will be entangled in the "meshes of the law."

The Cleveland (Ohio) Press, March 14, has this to say of the Indian in politics: "At the recent constitutional convention of the new state of Oklahoma, Lo the poor Indian turned a neat and unexpected trick on his white neighbors, and now bids fair to direct the destinies of the new State to his own liking for some time to come. Incidentally, he furnishes a fine lesson. The white delegates were of the usual stamp. The Indian delegates were spick-and-span young men, most of them lately home from college. They wore tailor-made clothes and fancy hosiery. Also, they had some genius for planning things. As a result, almost before he knew anything was going on, the rural delegate found himself side-tracked, while Lo gravely plotted county lines giving himself all the advantage in representation, made the whole State prohibition, and generally helped himself to offices and perquisites. Oklahoma looked on in open-mouthed wonder for a few moments, and then bellowed forth her indignation—but Lo had turned the trick."

News From Branches

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

On February 26 the business-meeting of the branch was held. March 2 and 3 the district Sunday-school and Religio conventions convened at Bellville, Illinois. Officers were elected by both organizations for the ensuing term and satisfaction expressed as to the advancement that had been made.

A splendid prayer-meeting was enjoyed by the young people and the hospitality of the Bellville Saints was much appreciated.

Brn. Goodrich and Sparling held forth at Lansdowne and Bellville and good meetings were reported. Bro. Goodrich had the pleasure of inducting three precious souls into the kingdom at Bellville.

District conference convened in St. Louis March 9 and 10. A goodly attendance was at all the services and the district was shown to be in a good spiritual condition. The district decided to hold a reunion next fall.

At our sacramental-service the first of the month special fasting and prayer was held for Sr. Billinsky, who has been ill for so long. She felt the influence of the Spirit so strongly, during the service, that she arose from her bed, and was surprised to find that she could walk without experiencing pain. When the elders arrived at her home to administer to her she herself opened the door for them, much to their surprise. She was administered to and has been improving nicely ever since. The doctor had said that she would have to be removed to a sanitarium but we find that God knows best.

While we receive our blessings we also have our trials. Our young brother Roger S. Parrish recently passed from this earth-life after a lingering illness from that dreaded disease consumption.

Bro. R. Etzenhouser was here and gave us good instruction in his remarks the morning of the 24th.

The Straight Road

THE GOSPEL; WHAT IS IT?

The gospel is what God's ministry should preach in all the world to every creature. (See Mark 16: 15.) The scripture says, "let them be accursed" who preach any other than the gospel of Christ:

"But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed."—Galatians 1: 8, 9.

The gospel is what "every creature" must believe in order to obey Christ's command, "Repent ye, and believe the gospel"; and in order to be saved free from condemnation. (See Mark 16: 15, 16.)

The gospel is "of Christ," that is, it comes from the Father through him (see John 7: 16), and is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," whether they be Jews or Gentiles (Romans 1: 16).

It is that wherein the "righteousness of God" is revealed (Romans 1: 16, 17), and those who preach any other plan as the means of salvation are preaching their own righteousness (see Romans 10: 3).

It is that which has been perverted by men; and through the preaching of it in this perverted form some have been led away from the grace of Christ; and although in this perverted sense it is called another gospel, yet it is not another. (See Galatians 1: 6, 7.) It is such preaching as this that Christ says will be done by many "in his name," and will "deceive many." (Matthew 24: 4, 5.)

It is the doctrine of Christ, because the "gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation" (Romans 1: 16) and the preaching of the doctrine will save those who preach it and those who hear it (see Timothy 4: 16). This like effect, salvation, being the result of either, proves that both are one and the same. Further, salvation comes by the "power of God"; but, "whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God." (2 John 9.)

It is that which must be obeyed, as well as believed, in order to secure salvation (see 2 Thessalonians 1: 7-9), through Jesus Christ its author, for he, "being made perfect," "became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him" (Hebrews 5: 9).

It is that which comes not "in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance" (1 Thessalonians 1: 5); hence that which comes in any less than this is not the gospel of Christ.

It is the constitutional law of the kingdom of God, without the preaching and belief of which the kingdom of God did not exist (Matthew 4: 23; 9: 35) and could not exist, for it will be preached as a witness to all nations before the end of the world (see Matthew 23: 14).

It is that which is composed of certain principles, which must be accepted as "the principles of the doctrine of Christ," and from which Christians are to go on to perfection. (See Hebrews 6: 1, 2.)

These principles are:

1. Faith. (See Hebrews 11: 6; Ephesians 2: 8.)
2. Repentance. (See Acts 2: 38; Luke 13: 3, 5.)
3. Baptism for the remission of sins. (See Acts 2: 38; Romans 3: 25.)
4. Laying on of hands. (See Acts 8: 12-17.)
5. Resurrection of the dead. (See 1 Corinthians 15: 13-17; John 5: 28, 29.) (See 2 Corinthians 5: 10; Matthew 16: 27.)
6. Eternal judgment, when men will be judged according to their works or deeds.

When we begin to build upon these principles, for which Jesus Christ was crucified, we should take heed how we build (see Corinthians 3: 10-14), and should, to make our calling and election sure, add to the faith we have in these principles, virtue, "and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity"; for the reason that "if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 1: 5-8). To have eternal life we must have this knowledge. (See John 17: 3.)

May divine help come to those who make a prayerful consideration of this question, that they may reach a righteous conclusion. ANONYMOUS.

"So when we hear of a man being arraigned before the courts of the land, charged with a statutory crime or misdemeanor, who is either convicted or confesses guilt and is fined or imprisoned for such crime or misdemeanor, we are assured that he has broken the law of God. And if he is or has been a Latter Day Saint, we can reach no other conclusion than that he is guilty of having broken both the law of God and the law of men, the laws of the land, the crystallized public opinions of the people. There is no question as to the guilt in such a case as this."

THE SMOOT CASE.

This case that has been before the committee on Privileges and Elections for so long, and excited so much interest throughout the country, is at last decided, and Senator Smoot, of Utah, is permitted to retain his seat by a vote of 42 to 28.

To discuss the causes which led up to this result would be unprofitable. As individuals, the members of the Reorganized Church had the same interest in the case that other citizens of the Government had, and probably differed in opinion as to whether Smoot should retain his seat or not. But the Reorganized Church as such had no particular interest in the final decision so far as the issues between it and the church in Utah are concerned.

The Reorganized Church, however, has great reason for rejoicing over the developments of the investigation; for after this long and care-taking search into the evidence by a competent committee, the position of the Reorganized Church has not only been made apparent to the committee, but through members of that committee has been presented to the public without being questioned, or controverted in any way.

In discussing the subject of polygamy, which was done quite fully and freely on the floor of the Senate, there can be found not one intimation that polygamy was introduced by Joseph Smith, the Seer, or even introduced in his time. Secretary John G. Carlisle, the attorney for the protestants, set forth in the case that it would be the claim of the protestants that Joseph Smith was not the author of polygamy. This was not controverted. The statement of Mr. Carlisle with the context, will be found in the following extract from the record, volume 4, page 156:

MR. CARLISLE. Before the gentlemen proceed with the cross-examination of Mr. Smurthwaite, I desire to offer to the committee an advertisement or a statement contained in the Deseret News, published at Great Salt Lake City, Utah Territory, Saturday, September 18, 1852; and also, in connection with that, the proceedings of a special conference held or assembled in the tabernacle, Great Salt Lake City, Utah Ter., August 28, 1852, at 10 o'clock a. m., etc., at which this revelation establishing or recognizing polygamy as a principle of the church was first published.

THE CHAIRMAN. That was in 1852?

MR. CARLISLE. In 1852.

THE CHAIRMAN. Mr. Secretary, will you read the notice to which you refer?

MR. CARLISLE. Yes, Sir: I will read it.

There is a finger pointing to it, and it is as follows:

"Deseret News, extra. Just issued from the press in pamphlet form, 48 pages of solid matter, sufficient for a book of 200 pages in popular style, including in full the minutes of the late special conference, business, speeches, sermons, and addresses on matrimony; the great revelation given to Joseph Smith, Nauvoo, July 12, 1843, concerning marriage for time and eternity; President Young's sermons of August 8 and 15, and other important items which will not soon be found again embodied in one work; for sale at the News office; price, 50 cents cash; and those who do not apply soon will apply in vain; they are going fast."

The extra referred to is embodied in this pamphlet I have here and is the document referred to in this notice which I have just read.

MR. WORTHINGTON. The object of this, as I understand it, is to show that Brigham Young really was the first propounder of the doctrine of polygamy, and that he undertook to put it back on Joseph Smith?

MR. CARLISLE. That is what we will probably claim.

MR. WORTHINGTON. Can you tell me what that has to do with the question before the committee?

MR. CARLISLE. We claim that this is the first publication of this doctrine.

MR. WORTHINGTON. I say, can you tell me what your position will be in reference to what that has to do with the question before the committee?

MR. CARLISLE. It may have a good deal to do with the question before the committee, because if this was not recognized as a revelation in 1852, of course the Mormon people were indulging in a practice which was not revealed to them at all, which has no binding force upon them; and we claim that Joseph Smith did not make any such revelation; in other words, that this is not a religious persecution, as the gentlemen on the other side claim, but this doctrine of polygamy was not a part of the religion of the Mormon Church.

Honorable J. C. Burrows, of Michigan, in his speech on the case, December 11, 1906, set forth the position of the Reorganized Church, as also the position of the Utah people, quite clearly; and though there are some minor errors in his statements the leading points are in harmony with what we have always contended for, and in harmony with the facts of recorded history. This statement is as follows:

HISTORY OF THE MORMON CHURCH.

In passing upon the issue involved it is important, indeed absolutely essential, to an intelligent application of the evidence elicited and the law applicable thereto to recall and hold in mind the accredited facts of history in connection with the organization and development of the Mormon Church, especially that community known as the "Utah Mormons" or "Brighamites," with headquarters at Salt Lake City, presided over by one Joseph F. Smith, recognized and acknowledged by his devotees as "president, prophet, seer, and revelator," and with which organization Senator Smoot is publicly identified as one of the so-called "apostles," and who, by virtue of his ecclesiastical office therein, occupies a conspicuous place in this Mormon hierarchy.

The regular and legitimate Mormon Church had its origin in and grew out of an alleged discovery of some metallic plates, said to have been found near Palmyra, N. Y., by one Joseph Smith, bearing certain inscriptions which were said to have been translated by him and embodied in what is known and accepted as the "Book of Mormon," belief in which formed, in 1830, the basis of an organization styling itself "The Church of Latter Day Saints," which for fifteen years increased in membership and extended its influence, until in 1844 it numbered about 50,000 adherents. On the 27th day of June, 1844, Joseph Smith, the founder of this cult, while confined in jail at Carthage, Ill., was set upon by a mob and killed.

With the details of the early history of this people, from 1830 to 1844, and their tenets we have nothing to do. It is sufficient for the purpose of this discussion to state that previous to the death of the prophet there were no dissensions in the organization so far as known, all subscribing to a common creed and holding a common faith. Judge Phillips, in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Missouri, in delivering the opinion of that court in 1894 in what is known as the "Temple Lot Cases," involving the title to certain real estate, said:

"Beyond all cavil, if human testimony is to place any matter at rest, this church was one in doctrine, government, and purpose from 1830 to June, 1844, when Joseph Smith, its founder, was killed. It had the same federal head, governing bodies, and faith. During this period there was no schism, no dissensions, no parting of the ways in any matter fundamental or affecting its oneness."

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH.

The death of Joseph Smith in 1844, however, carried dismay and demoralization throughout the entire membership of the Mormon Church, scattering its adherents in divers directions and for the time being seemed to presage the complete overthrow and dissolution of the organization. Recovering, however, from the shock, the scattered bands soon reappeared in various parts of the country and promulgated their doctrines with increased zeal, and set to work to reassemble and reorganize their scattered forces, resulting finally in the formation of what is now known and recognized as the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints," with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, and presided over by Joseph Smith, a son of the prophet. The courts have repeatedly declared this organization to be the legitimate successor of the original Mormon Church, and its adherents, numbering some 50,000 peaceable, patriotic, and law-abiding citizens scattered throughout the United States in small church societies, conforming to the laws of their country wherever they may be and adhering to the faith of the founder of their creed, repudiating and denouncing the doctrine of polygamy and its attendant crimes, without temple, endowment house, or secret order, worship in the open like other church organizations, unquestioned and unmolested.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S USURPATION.

During this period of disintegration one Brigham Young, who had identified himself with the Mormon organization as early as 1832, a man of indomitable will and undaunted courage, bold and unscrupulous, seized upon the occasion of the demoralization incident to the death of the prophet to place himself at the head of some 5,000 Mormons, and marching over desert and mountain, established himself with his adherents in the valley of Salt Lake, July 24, 1847, then Mexican territory, where he undoubtedly indulged the hope that the new doctrine of polygamy about to be publicly proclaimed by him might be promulgated with impunity and practiced and maintained without interference by the United States. These hopes, however, were destined to be blasted, for by the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo of February 2, 1848, this territory passed from the jurisdiction of Mexico to the sovereignty of the United States, and its inhabitants thereupon became amenable to its laws.

Upon this transfer of sovereignty, and in 1849, Brigham Young and his followers, without authority from any source whatever, proceeded to set up a government of their own, embracing a territory of imperial dimensions, christening it the "State of Deseret," electing Brigham Young, the head of the church, governor; Heber C. Kimball, an apostle, lieutenant-governor, and filling all other official positions in the proposed State with their trusted adherents. At the same time a general assembly was chosen, which in 1849 petitioned Congress to admit the "State of Deseret" into the Union, and commissioned a Delegate to the Lower House of Congress, who subsequently presented his credentials and the memorial praying for statehood.

EARLY ATTEMPT TO OBTAIN STATEHOOD.

Shortly previous to this time it began to be bruited that the leaders of this organization and founders of the new State were fugitives from justice and apostates from the true Mormon faith and were living in polygamy; and it is an historic fact that when Brigham Young arrived in Salt Lake, in 1847, he had seventeen wives, and all the so-called apostles, twelve in number, except possibly one, from two to twenty wives each. This rumor gained credence and confirmation by a protest against the admission of the State of Deseret sent to the Congress of the United States December 31, 1849, and now on file in its archives, from which I make the following extracts:

"Your petitioners respectfully represent that whereas efforts are now being made by the Salt Lake Mormons to obtain, by false representations and fallacious presentations, from the Government of the United States a State organization to be called the State of Deseret; and whereas we believe that it would be highly detrimental to the best interests of our country to comply with their request, we do therefore respectfully petition your honorable body to provide some other way for the government of the Salt Lake settlement. Your petitioners know most assuredly that Salt Lake Mormonism is diametrically in opposition to the pure principles of virtue, liberty, and equality, and that the rulers of the Salt Lake church are bitter and inveterate enemies of our Government. They entertain treasonable designs against the liberties of American freeborn sons and daughters. . . . They have elected Brigham Young, who is the president of their church, to be the governor of the proposed State of Deseret. Their intention is to unite church and state. . . . We have authentic information that more than 1,500 Salt Lake Mormons took the following oath in the Temple of God at Nauvoo:

"You do solemnly swear, in the presence of Almighty God, His holy angels, and these witnesses, that you will avenge the blood of Joseph Smith on this nation, and teach your children, and that you will from this time henceforth and forever begin and carry out hostilities against this nation, and to keep the same intent a profound secret now and forever. So help me God."

"The rulers of the Salt Lake church hypocritically pretend to venerate the name and character of the prophet Joseph Smith, that they may retain their popularity among that people who believe that he was a true prophet. These rulers are apostates from the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which church Joseph Smith was president of. They teach and practice polygamy. . . . Surely your honorable body will not lend your aid to legalize adultery and all manner of wickedness. These men have left their country for their country's good. They have left it that they might escape the punishment which their crimes have invoked. . . . They have been guilty of murders, treason, robbery, counterfeiting, swindling, blasphemy, and usurpation of power, both political and ecclesiastical. This is the character of the man who is the political and ecclesiastical governor of the Salt Lake colony. The Salt Lake settlement is like Sodom and Gomorrah. Save the rising generation of that land from being trained up in such a sink of corruption, blasphemy, and treason."

The practice of polygamy by this band of apostate Mormons received further confirmation in the official report of the Indian agent for the Territory of Utah, dated March 29, 1852, in which it was stated:

"Among these men (speaking of the Mormons) was Willard Richards, who kept a harem of some dozen or fifteen women, to all of whom he is wedded. He is acting secretary of state and postmaster of the city."

Upon the presentation of the remonstrance referred to, the National House of Representatives declined to consider the petition for the admission of the "State of Deseret" into the Union, or receive its representative, but in lieu thereof and on the 7th day of September, 1850, Congress passed an act providing for the organization and government of the Territory of Utah. In 1850 President Fillmore appointed Brigham Young governor of the Territory for the term of four years, who entered upon the duties of the office in February, 1851, and thus the chief polygamous saint and head of the church became the chief executive of the Territory. These public and official declarations confirmatory of the rumors of the practice of polygamy by Brigham Young and his apostles made further concealment of their crime impossible, and it became necessary in some way to excuse or justify so flagrant an assault upon public decency and the civilization of the age.

THE POLYGAMIC REVELATION.

To that end a special conference of the sect was called to convene at Salt Lake City on the 28th day of August, 1852, over which Brigham Young presided, attended by the so-called apostles and high officials of the church to the number of over 2,000, at which conference, for the first time, the doctrine of polygamy was publicly proclaimed and declared to be an accepted tenet of the Utah Mormon faith. Preliminary to its formal promulgation, and to promote its reception by the followers of Brigham Young, it was deemed expedient that some of the high dignitaries who were associated with him should bear testimony to the saintly character of their master and the divine origin of the nefarious doctrine. To this end Heber C. Kimball, one of the first presidency and a polygamist, in calling the meeting to order, took occasion to say:

"Brother Brigham Young is the successor of Joseph Smith and a better man never lived upon the earth, nor ever sought the interest of this people more fervently."

Elder Benson, another polygamist, joined in the laudation by saying:

"I know that the principles that have been taught by the Prophet Joseph and Brothers Brigham, Heber, and Willard—"

Composing the first presidency—

"and every other good man in this church are correct principles, and that these men have been borne on triumphantly over every trial and difficulty they have been called to pass through. The elders, therefore, can go to the nations with their consciences as clean as drifting snow, and with the satisfaction that all is right in Zion and we are led by the best men upon the face of the earth. I am glad in my heart, and I say, God bless Brigham, Heber, and Willard. They are the counsel of heaven to this people, and I mean to honor them in the earth wherever I go, and I would preach down in the bowels of hell the same as I do here and not be ashamed of it."

Pandemonium would be a fit place for its promulgation.

"My story all the time is, Hurrah for Mormonism. . . . I only throw out these few hints that you may be prepared to act when you receive the proper instructions from your president."

Then came Orson Pratt, one of the oldest and most famous of the apostles and the husband of three wives, who publicly declared:

"It is quite unexpected to me to be called upon to address you on the subject of the plurality of wives. It is rather new ground to the inhabitants of the United States, and not only to them, but a portion of the inhabitants of Europe. A portion of them have not been in the habit of preaching a doctrine of this description; consequently we will have to break up new ground. It is well known, however, to the congregation before me that the Latter Day Saints have embraced the doctrine of the plurality of wives as a part of their religious faith."

In order to induce his followers more readily to accept this infamous doctrine, Brigham Young himself invoked the name of Joseph Smith, the martyr, whom many sincerely believed to be a true prophet, and ascribed to him the reception of a revelation from the Almighty in 1843, commanding the saints to take unto themselves a multiplicity of wives, limited in number only by the measures of their desires. Why and how this revelation had been kept a secret for nine years Brigham Young explained as follows:

"You heard Brother Pratt state this morning that a revelation would be read this afternoon which was given previous to Joseph's death. It contains a doctrine which a small portion of the world is opposed to. Though that doctrine has not been preached by the elders, this people have believed in it for many years.

"The original copy of this revelation was burnt up; William Clayton was the man who wrote it from the mouth of the prophet. In the meantime it was in Bishop Whitney's possession. He wished the privilege to copy it, which Brother Joseph granted. Sister Emma burnt the original.

"The revelation will be read to you. The principle we believe in. And I tell you—for I know it—it will sail over and ride triumphantly above all the prejudice and priestcraft of the day; it will be fostered and believed in by the more intelligent portions of the world as one of the best doctrines ever proclaimed to any people. I am now ready to proclaim it.

"This revelation has been in my possession many years; and who has known it? None but those who should know it. I keep a patent lock on my desk, and there does not anything leak out that should not."

Such the mythical story palmed off on a deluded people. Let me now quote the material part of the pretended revelation of polygamy as given out by authority of Brigham Young in 1852:

"Verily, thus saith the Lord unto his servant Joseph: . . . behold and lo, I am the Lord thy God . . . therefore prepare thy heart to receive and obey the instructions which I am about to give unto you, for all those who have this law revealed unto them must obey the same, for behold, I reveal unto you a new and everlasting covenant, and if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant and be permitted to enter into my glory; . . . and as pertaining to the new and everlasting covenant, it was instituted for the fullness of my glory, and he that receiveth a fullness thereof must and shall abide the law or he shall be damned, saith the Lord God. And again, as pertaining to the law of the priesthood, if any man espouse a virgin and desire to espouse another, and the first give her consent, and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins and have vowed to no other man, then is he justified. He can not commit adultery, for they are given unto him, for he can not commit adultery with that that belongeth to him and to none else; and if he have ten virgins given unto him by this law he can not commit adultery, for they belong unto him and are given unto him; therefore is he justified."

Thus did Brigham Young and his associates attempt to explain and justify a practice revolting to every sense of public decency, subversive of the home, and destructive of the very foundation of society. Thus were laid with unholy hands what Brigham Young was pleased to call the foundations of "Zion," upon which it was proposed to erect "the kingdom of God on earth." But a doctrine so monstrous needed something more than the unsupported testimony of Brigham Young to insure its reception and give it credence, in view of the fact that it had no warrant in the Book of Mormon and was specially condemned in the book of "Doctrine and Covenants," wherein it is declared "One man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband." To give this creed the semblance of authority and insure its permanency as an article of this Utah Mormon faith the doctrine of monogamy was torn from the book of "Doctrine and Covenants," and the doctrine of polygamy inserted in its stead, where it is still retained as a cardinal principle of the Utah Mormon faith. In this way was the practice of polygamy inaugurated in the Territory of Utah and fostered and encouraged by the leaders of this sect.

Honorable Fred. T. Dubois, of Idaho, in his speech of December 13, 1906, speaks of the Reorganized Church, in contrast with the people of Utah, in the following language:

It is only fair, I think, for me to say—and I am glad the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. Burrows] treated upon it the other day—that there is a branch of the Mormons, called the "Josephites," who ought to be separated clearly in the minds of all the Senators from the Brighamite Mormons. The Josephites claim that they are the custodians of the church as it was founded. They claim that Brigham Young has interjected doctrines into the church which the Mormons did not accept in the beginning. At any rate, however that may be, the Josephite Mormons, with their headquarters at Lamoni, in the State of Iowa, and wherever they are, no matter in what part of the country, are among the best of our citizens in all respects. They do not believe in polygamy; they never practiced polygamy. They discountenanced it. They do not believe in church dictation in political affairs. They are the same as other church organizations, and to their religion no one has any objection. I am glad to call the attention of the Senators to it, so that in the future we may not confuse the Josephite with the Brighamite Mormons.

These two gentlemen were opposed to the seating of Mr. Smoot, but the Honorable J. P. Dolliver, of Iowa, who voted in the Senate for Mr. Smoot to retain his seat, confirms the statements of Senators Burrows and Dubois, to whom he was opposed on the main question, in the following language used in his speech before the Senate, February 20, 1907:

The Mormon church, stronger no doubt in Utah than any single ecclesiastical institution ought to be, is a feeble and struggling affair everywhere else. In the state of Iowa the immediate descendants of Joseph Smith, the prophet, are at the head of a church institution based upon the Mormon revelation, which has been for half a century an influence for good throughout the entire community in which it has built its houses of worship. Its creed differs from the theology of Utah Mormonism only in its attitude toward the crime of polygamy and in the absence of all secret rituals. Its people are industrious, law-abiding, God-fearing men and women.

So that there is nothing in the articles of the Mormon faith aside from the evil practices which grew up in Utah when it was an almost inaccessible desert, to alarm the people of the United States.

To these clear and explicit statements no reply was made. The only reference to them that we have seen, is in the speech of Honorable George Sutherland, of Utah, January 22, 1907; he said:

I do not understand it is the duty of this Senate in this investigation to ascertain whether Brigham Young was a model citizen or the reverse, or whether the keys of the gospel are in the possession of the Utah branch of the church or the Josephite branch of the church, nor to ascertain whether the creed or the doctrines of the Mormon church are in accordance with the twentieth-century standards of theology. While all of those questions may be interesting, they do not seem to me to be pertinent.

These statements of Secretary Carlisle, and these Senators representing both sides of the issue, going unchallenged and undisputed before the public, are as much as the Reorganized Church could hope to accomplish in the investigation.

Some of the statements of Senators in the discussion of this subject will give an idea of the light in which the people of Utah are held by them in contradistinction to their opinions of the Reorganized Church as above expressed. Those who were opposed to Senator Smoot retaining his seat were emphatic in their condemnation.

Honorable J. C. Burrows in his speech of December 11, 1906, closed with the following arraignment of that organization:

An organization that fosters and encourages crime, tramples upon all law, human and divine, practices polygamy and polygamous cohabitation, desecrates the home, debases man, degrades womanhood, debauches public morals, strikes at the Christian civilization of the age, undermines and shakes the foundations of society and government, destroys the sanctity of the marriage relation, defies the authority of the State and National Government, registers an oath of hostility to the American nation, and brings the name and fame of the good people of Utah into disrepute, and shame and humiliation to the American people—I submit that such an organization is not entitled to have its representative in the Senate of the United States.

In his second and closing speech, delivered February 20, 1907, he made the following statements:

It is established beyond all controversy that a majority of the ruling authorities of the Mormon church are living in open polygamy, and thereby encouraging its practice and polygamous cohabitation, many of them having taken plural wives since the manifesto, and that the Senator, as a member of such organization, is cognizant of their crimes and indifferent to their perpetration.

What more is needed? Is the Senate to say it will not exclude him because he has not himself taken a plural wife? Will it decide that he can countenance and encourage the commission of crimes and sustain criminals to his heart's content, and that he, an apostle, can uphold the infamy of his associates, when with one word he could uproot the whole iniquity? When the president of this organization testified, as he did, that he had five wives and that he would live with them until his death, I have always been amazed that the Senator did not rise in his place and denounce him as an impostor and a violator of the law, and then and there sever his connection with such an unholy alliance.

In face of this testimony it may be a little difficult for the public to understand why it is that we close the gates of Castle Garden with one hand against incoming polygamists and with the other open the doors of the Senate to the admission of an apostle who stands for an organization which upholds polygamous cohabitation.

Honorable Fred T. Dubois in his first speech delivered in the Senate December 13, 1906, gave expression to his conviction of conditions in Utah as follows:

So long as polygamy and polygamous relations are openly maintained by the leaders of this organization, and so long as the ruling authorities of the church claim and exercise the right to dominate the state politically, just so long will polygamous relations continue, and just so long will the political power of the church authorities be maintained and strengthened. The followers and the great masses of the people will take the example of their leaders, and will be guided by their counsel in all things.

In his second speech, delivered February 20, 1907, he spoke of their disregard for the teachings of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in the following language:

You will not find the manifesto promulgated by Willford Woodruff in 1890 in the Doctrines and covenants. It has not been incorporated nor made a part of any church document which is exhibited by Mormons as authority.

Under the same doctrines and covenants of the Mormon Church they committed the Mountain Meadow massacre. Under the same doctrines and covenants under which they are now living they defied this government and compelled the United States to send an army to Utah to bring them in accord with the laws of the land. They are the same doctrines and covenants now as they always were, and they are being lived up to according to the direction of the head of the Mormon Church the same now as they always were.

Honorable J. H. Berry of Arkansas, in his speech delivered February 11, 1907, closed with the following statements of his convictions of conditions existing among the Utah people:

In my judgment, the vote that is taken then will be far-reaching in its consequences. If, in view of all the facts that have been produced before the committee, in view of the report of the majority of the committee, headed by the distinguished senator from Michigan [MR. BURROWS?] you think it is your duty to say that Reed Smoot is fully qualified to be a senator, if you say that you think he should retain his seat, you give an encouragement and impetus to polygamy and polygamous practices in this country that will be far-reaching in its consequences. President Smith can still boast that he sacrificed nothing; that he told the Senate of the United States he was violating the law. He told them that he did not regard the manifesto of Woodruff. He told them, in effect, that he would take his chances on the law and obey what he considered the demand of God Almighty communicated to him. He then can boast that he is approved, that his action is endorsed, that the Saints of Utah can look to him, and that the Lord, through him, has come to their relief and has endorsed the doctrines which they have always taught.

If, on the other hand, a majority of the Senate shall vote that no man representing a church of that character ought to sit in this chamber, then in 10,000 homes in every state in this Union the mothers and wives and daughters will gather around the fireside and thank God that the Senate of the United States has put its everlasting seal of condemnation not only upon polygamy, but upon every organization that seeks to set itself up above the constitution of the United States and the laws which we have all sworn to obey.

The Honorable H. C. Hansbrough, of North Dakota, in his speech delivered February 20, 1907, expressed himself as follows:

I am in full accord with the constitutional provision that every one should worship God in his or her own way, but I have no sympathy with an organization whose oath-bound members array themselves in "the livery of heaven" in order that they may gain control of temporal affairs, social, political, and commercial. In this respect the Mormon Church is notoriously unique. Its scheme of salvation is based wholly upon its success in dominating the political fortunes of the community in which it conducts its operations. Without this advantage it would be a failure. Once in political control it moves rapidly forward until it acquires complete business and social supremacy. At all times the saving of souls is but an incidental part of its strange enterprise. And yet at no time and in no way, not even through its perfected system of colonization, has it been enabled to hide itself from the penetrating public gaze. The law-abiding people of the land have not been deceived. From Nauvoo to the endowment house at Salt Lake City, from the place of plural marriages there to the tithe-paying colony, from the colony to the ballot box, and the ballot box to the United States Senate an indulgent public has looked steadily on in prayerful hopefulness that the time would surely come when the strange and devious course of Mormonism, ever defiant of popular opinion, stimulated with the lust of possession and power, would receive a check. That time has come, and no more fitting place could be chosen than in this chamber of impartial judgment for the rendering of the long-delayed verdict.

The Honorable A. O. Bacon, of Georgia, in his speech delivered February 20, 1907, summed up his reasons for voting against Mr. Smoot as follows:

It is conceded that he is and has been for years, both before and since his election to the Senate, in intimate official relationship and official co-operation and necessary official approval with other members of the governing officials of the church who have been, during all the time and still are, while such officials, in the open, notorious, defiant, and even boastful violation of law in living in undisguised, undisputed polygamous cohabitation. More than this, by his own avowal, while such official, as an apostle, he has voted to place in the highest office of the church Joseph F. Smith, who was at the time of his election, as he was before and has ever since continued to be, in the open, notorious, and defiant violation of law in living in undisguised, undisputed polygamous cohabitation; and in thus endorsing and continuing to the present time to support him as their head and chief, Senator Smoot has, during all these years, in the most pronounced and indisputable manner, held forth this violator and profaner of the law as one worthy to be by the people commended and approved as their fit teacher and exemplar.

The Honorable E. W. Carmack, of Tennessee, though not discussing the question of Smoot's right to a seat in the Senate, took occasion while speaking on the question as to whether he should be excluded by a majority vote or expelled by a two thirds vote to say:

"Mr. President, I have a great deal of sympathy with the gallant and heroic fight which my friend from Idaho [Mr. Dubois] has been making against the corrupt and wicked power of the Mormon Church; but I can not agree with my friend when he speaks of these objections as technical.

The Honorable F. G. Newlands, of Nevada, in a short but very concise speech delivered in the Senate February 20, 1907, said:

Mr. President, one of the central ideas of our government is the separation of church and state. That is true of our national Government. That is true of our state governments. The union between church and state is accomplished when the state regulates and controls the church in spiritual matters. The union of church and state is as thoroughly accomplished when the church regulates and controls the state in temporal matters.

The charge which is made against the Mormon Church, leaving entirely out of consideration the question of its sanction of polygamy and polygamous practices, is that from its very organization under Brigham Young up to the present time it has sought to control and does control the state of Utah in temporal matters. That church is not merely a religious organization. It has in view not only the maintenance of spiritual belief, but the control of its members in temporal matters—in matters of business, of industry, of commerce, of social life, and of political action. It acts as a unit in these matters, and its priests control its policies. It fills out completely the definition of hierarchy—a form of government administered by the priesthood, a sacred body of rulers. Unlike any other church in the country, it has a oneness and completeness of organization in matters temporal as well as spiritual, created by the genius of Brigham Young. Mr. Smoot is one of the high priests of this hierarchy, and the question is whether it is consistent with our institutions that this body of sacred rulers so potent in Utah shall be represented in the Senate by one of its members.

I shall vote for the exclusion of Mr. Smoot, not because of any personal unfitness for the position which he holds, but because he is a high priest in a religious organization which believes in the union of church and state and which seeks to control the action of the state in temporal matters.

Such are the opinions of those who opposed Reed Smoot's retention of a seat in the Senate of the United States; and constitute in part their reasons for their opposition.

Nor do we see wherein the Utah people received any comfort as a church from the statements made by friends of Mr. Smoot in the Senate.

The Honorable A. J. Hopkins, of Illinois, in his speech in the Senate, delivered Friday, January 11, 1907, arraigns the church and its former president in the following language:

I listened, Mr. President, with a great deal of interest to the eloquent denunciation of the crime of polygamy by Mr. Burrows, the senior senator from Michigan, in his speech here the other day, and I sympathize with him fully in his arraignment of polygamy and polygamous cohabitation. I think it is a relic of a barbarous age, and as such I denounce it. It is the destroyer of the ideal American home life, and the corrupter of the morals of those who practice it.

I share also, Mr. President, in the condemnation which the Senator launched against Brigham Young and other leaders of the church who, in their day and generation, promulgated and practiced this crime upon their followers.

The Honorable P. C. Knox, of Pennsylvania, though like Mr. Hopkins he defended the right of Mr. Smoot to a seat in the Senate, and though he did not condemn the church so emphatically as did Mr. Hopkins, yet he declined to defend it, and declared his unwillingness to do so in the following language:

One thing must be borne in mind in connection with these claims, and that is that we are to take into account only what the Mormon church is teaching and practicing to-day and not what it taught and did twenty to fifty years ago.

Honorable George Sutherland condemns in most scathing language the practice of plural marriage after the issuing of the manifesto, though the proof was produced and generally conceded to be correct, that five of the twelve apostles of the Utah church had taken plural wives after that time:

Mr. President, every one of these men who has taken a plural wife since the manifesto, in addition to being a violator of the law, is an enemy of his own people, who has done them a more grievous wrong than any open and avowed opponent could possibly do, because he has set them in a false light before the country and compelled every one of them, in the eyes of a large portion of the American people, to share the shame of his lawlessness. Such a man has not only broken the law of the land and the law of the church, but he has broken his own pledges, if not expressly, at least impliedly, and none the less solemnly given to the nation. As I say, there can be no word of toleration uttered for that kind of an individual. If I had my way, every one of them would be in jail serving out the extreme penalty of the law; and, Mr. President, in my deliberate judgment, that is the feeling and the sentiment of the vast majority of the Mormon people themselves.

The Honorable J. P. Dolliver, of Iowa, in his speech delivered in the United States Senate February 20, 1907, though on the final vote he voted to sustain Senator Smoot, has this to say in regard to the Utah branch of the Mormon church and its doctrine:

I have, I think, about as deep prejudices against the Utah branch of the Mormon church as any one else. I do not like its history nor the record which it has made in the past, though I am aware that our judgments are fallible and imperfect. I need not add that I hate with a perfect malice the barbarism of polygamy. I regard the family as the unit not only of the state, but of society itself, and if I felt that in casting the vote which I am about to cast I was giving aid or comfort to that repulsive offense against our civilization I would under no circumstances cast such a vote.

Farther on in his speech in speaking of polygamy he uses the following language:

The whole frame of human nature is against it. The aspirations of the hearts of men, and, most of all, the intuitions of womanhood, the most gracious influence this world knows anything about, are at war with it. Economic forces, universal in their operation, tend to destroy it. If it has flourished in Utah in the past, not even the fanaticism of a misguided religious leadership has been able to make it acceptable to the people. A thousand forces tend to disintegrate it, and we may be certain that we are not living in a world in which a barbarism like that can make itself permanent even under the auspices of a church.

Honorable A. J. Beveridge, of Indiana, in his speech of February 20, 1907, while defending Reed Smoot personally, used the following scathing language against polygamy, which has been taught and accepted by the church in Utah as being divine:

And, Mr. President, the country has been misinformed. The average man and woman has been told for three long years that Reed Smoot is a criminal guilty of a disgusting and filthy crime—a crime abhorrent to our race and destructive of our civilization. The country has been told that this man is a polygamist. That is the charge on which he has been tried before the bar of American public opinion; that the charge upon which he has been convicted by the millions: and that the charge that has injured him as deeply as Dreyfus was injured. For that charge is utterly false. The evidence shows, and it is finally admitted, that this accused senator is not a polygamist—the word is too foul to utter except on compulsion—never was that base thing, and that his home life is ideal in purity.

Not only is this true, but the evidence shows that, from the first, Reed Smoot has been the leader of the younger, wiser, and more modern element of his church that opposes this insult to marriage.

Yet the American people believe this senator a practitioner of this horrible shame. How that impression has been circulated it is not necessary, as it would not be pleasant to describe. But the belief that he is such a monster is general among the masses and held by most of the reading public.

With all these statements made by these men in defense of Reed Smoot personally, and without whose defense Reed Smoot could not have retained his seat, the Deseret News has the effrontery to say that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is vindicated! Vindicated by such language as above of Mr. Beveridge, when he calls one of the things which they have accepted as divine, “disgusting and filthy—a crime abhorrent to our race and destructive of our civilization”—and “an insult to marriage.” The word itself “too foul to utter except on compulsion,” and brands him that practices it as a monster. It seems to us that we would not care for such vindication.

Only one speech made upon the floor of the Senate could be construed to reflect upon the church in the days of Joseph Smith, the Seer, and that is the speech of Honorable James H. Berry, of Arkansas, delivered February 11, 1907, where he says:

The whole history of the church from its very inception through its entire pathway through life has been strewn with the wrecks of violated laws, of outraged justice, harboring eternal hostility to the laws of the United States, and now to the laws of the state of Utah. Not only that, but its greatest effort has been to fasten upon this country a system of polygamy which would, in the language of Judge Waite, destroy the very foundations of the government.

This, however, taken in connection with the statement made prior to this in his speech, can not be made to reflect upon the church only as it is represented in Utah. The statement is as follows:

Another question is whether or not any church, under any name, I care not what it is, can assume power and authority to violate the law and defy the government of the United States or any state of this Union, and yet try to shelter themselves behind the constitutional privilege which guarantees religious liberty. That was the contest in Utah for years and years. From the time the Mormon church was organized, or at least from the time polygamy was proclaimed, they always justified themselves upon the ground that it was a religious belief; that the law could not interfere with it; that they were a church which was in direct communication with God Almighty himself; that he revealed his will by revelations to the head of that church or some of the governing officials, which were binding upon the conscience, and they dared not hesitate to obey, even though a revelation was in direct conflict with the constitution of the United States or the laws of the land. That was their position for years and years.

By this it will be seen that he has reference to Utah practices only.

In addition to this we present the following: On reading the speech in the Congressional Record, we wrote Senator Berry, criticising the statement made in the first quotation made above, and telling him that we thought that his statement was stronger than the evidence would justify. We received the following by way of reply, in a letter dated “February 18, 1907”:

I thank you very much for your letter and assure you that I appreciate your frankness and the criticism upon one expression in the speech. I am not as familiar with the early history of the church as I am with the Utah branch of it but I certainly did not intend to do an injustice to any one.

This further conveys the idea that whether he intended in the heat of his argument to reflect upon the Latter Day Saints from the beginning or not, that he is not familiar with the history of the church in an earlier time, and was not speaking from knowledge or investigation, except as it applies to Utah.

The press throughout the country represented that the Honorable Reed Smoot in his speech of February 19, 1907, had condemned polygamy. A careful perusal of his speech fails to disclose any condemnation of polygamy. He does condemn the practice of taking polygamous wives after the manifesto. His language upon this point is as follows:

I have no hesitation, Mr. President, in declaring to the Senate and to the American people that, in my opinion, any man who has married a polygamous wife since the manifesto, should be prosecuted, and if convicted, should suffer the penalties of the law; and I care not who the man might be or what position he might hold in the church, he should receive the punishment pronounced by the law against his crime.

The testimony taken before the committee tends to show that there have been some polygamous marriages since the manifesto. I believe sincerely, Mr. President, that such cases have been rare. They have not received the sanction or the encouragement of the church. They have been sporadic and not systematic in their occurrence.

But Mr. Smoot defends, as does Senators Hopkins, Knox, Beveridge, Dillingham, and Foraker, the practice which obtains in Utah of allowing men to commit the crime of polygamous cohabitation without punishment, provided they had taken their wives before the manifesto, as being wise and conservative. He also makes another statement which either betrays ignorance, or his desire to deceive. He says:

First, I desire to state, as I have repeatedly heretofore stated, to the Senate and to the country that I am not and never have been a polygamist. I never have had but one wife, and she is my present wife, and I deem it proper to further state that I have never taught polygamy.

There has been a more or less prevalent opinion that the doctrine of polygamy was obligatory upon the members of the Mormon church, whereas, in truth and fact, no such obligatory doctrine has ever existed. The revelation concerning polygamy, as originally made and as always interpreted, is permissible, and not mandatory.

To those who have read the so-called revelation on polygamy, we need not say that Mr. Smoot misrepresents the document when he says that "the revelation concerning polygamy as originally made and as always interpreted, is permissible and not mandatory."

The language of the revelation regarding this point is:

I reveal unto you a new and everlasting covenant; and if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant, and be permitted to enter into my glory.

If language can make a thing mandatory, this certainly makes it such; for if it is of divine origin, the only thing permissible about it is, that you are permitted to come short of the glory of God by neglecting to practice it. In addition to this, in section 131 of the Utah Doctrine and Covenants, we read the following:

In the celestial glory there are three heavens or degrees; and in order to obtain the highest, a man must enter into this Order of the Priesthood; (meaning the new and everlasting covenant of marriage;) And if he does not he can not obtain it. He may enter into the others, but that is the end of his kingdom: he can not have an increase.

According to these statements Senator Smoot can never obtain the highest degree of glory in the heavens, but may get into the second; but there he stops. The only sense in which the commandment is permissible is that he is permitted to deprive himself of the highest degree of glory because of the transgression of a positive command.

Referring to the statement quoted in this article from Senator Beveridge, which was also used by Senator Sutherland and others to the effect that Mr. Smoot had been opposed to polygamy and the leader of the younger, wiser, and more modern elements of the church, the only statement quoted by any of them in favor of this is from the testimony of Judge Judd, of Tennessee, who was a judge in the territory of Utah, by appointment of President Cleveland. It is claimed that he stated before a committee of the Senate in 1892, that some of the younger element of Utah, notably Reed Smoot, had said to him, "Judge, we can not stand this thing, and we will not stand this thing. It has got to be settled."

This does not betray Senator Smoot's opinion of polygamy, but simply that he wanted it settled.

While under cross-examination by Mr. Tayler, attorney for the prosecution, and speaking of polygamy, Mr. Smoot was asked (volume 3, page 210):

MR. TAYLER. You yourself have no doubt about the divinity of its origin?

SENATOR SMOOT. The doctrine of polygamy?

MR. TAYLER. Yes.

SENATOR SMOOT. I think the Doctrine and Covenants—the revelation that was given to Joseph Smith.

MR. TAYLER. That is, it came from God?

SENATOR SMOOT. That he received it from the Lord?

Mr. Smoot in this connection declared that he did not believe in the practice of it on account of the law of the land prohibiting it; but as seen in the above quotation, he does believe in its divinity as a doctrine. Believing that, when he declared to Judge Judd that it must be settled, he would of course prefer that it be settled on the side of what he esteemed to be right and divine. Regarding his declaration against it, we quote the following from his testimony, volume 3 of the proceedings, page 294:

THE CHAIRMAN. I understand you, Senator, to state that you do not teach polygamy?

SENATOR SMOOT. I do not.

THE CHAIRMAN. Or advise it? You teach and preach sometimes?

SENATOR SMOOT. I do.

THE CHAIRMAN. Do you preach against polygamy?

SENATOR SMOOT. I never have in a public gathering of people.

THE CHAIRMAN. Why do you not?

SENATOR SMOOT. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not know why I should.

THE CHAIRMAN. You do not know why you should?

SENATOR SMOOT. Or why I should not. It is not a tenet now of the faith and—that is, what I mean to say is, it has been suspended, and I think it would not be proper for me to bring it up, because it is not preached, for or against.

THE CHAIRMAN. So, while it is literally true that you do not teach or preach polygamy, you have not taught or preached against it?

SENATOR SMOOT. No; I have not in a general—

THE CHAIRMAN. Senator, in teaching and preaching have you at any time denounced polygamous cohabitation?

SENATOR SMOOT. I have not.

THE CHAIRMAN. And do I understand you to say you do not reprobate that practice and preach against it publicly?

SENATOR SMOOT. I have not.

These honorable gentlemen who claim that Reed Smoot was a leader of the younger class who was demanding that the question should be settled in 1892, strenuously advocate in other parts of their speeches that the thing had been settled before; especially Mr. Dillingham, who said in his speech before the United States Senate, February 19, 1907, that Judge Judd arrived in Utah in August, 1888. But in another part of his speech he makes the statement, that "when the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States had pronounced valid every piece of legislature by Congress upon this subject, then there was a surrender upon the part of the Mormon church, and from 1887 down to 1890, and since there has been hardly a plural marriage in Utah." If this last statement be true, that there has been hardly a plural marriage since 1887, what was Reed Smoot protesting against to Judge Judd, who did not arrive in Utah until August, 1888? Certainly not against polygamous marriages. If anything in connection with polygamy, it was polygamous cohabitation, which Senator Smoot now defends, or excuses at least, and is supported in his position upon it by such men as Senators Dillingham, Beveridge, Knox, Hopkins, and Foraker.

Thus did Senator Smoot retain his seat, by silently hearing his defenders berate and condemn his colleagues in the church, men whom they have always held up as men of God; the supposed divine doctrines of the church scathingly denounced; and by himself misrepresenting the requirements of what he and his colleagues declare is a revelation from God affecting the final destiny of man; and without protest having the doctrines he has subscribed to and the men whom he has associated with denounced. Can he afford this for the sake of a seat in the United States Senate?

HEMAN C. SMITH.

AN APPEAL.

We appeal to Latter Day Saints who, because of their own acts or the acts of others, or both, have become indifferent to the covenant made at the waters of baptism. Strange as it appears to Latter Day Saints who are faithful in Christ, and even to those out of Christ, there are those who once receive a testimony of the truthfulness of the latter-day work as instituted by Joseph Smith the Martyr and afterwards lose interest in the same.

Reader, is this your condition?

Were you once zealous in the cause of truth and now indifferent?

If so, why?

Perhaps you say there are various reasons. But do you really think that the Lord will take any one, or all of these combined, as a just cause for the indifference you manifest in church-work? If you are a husband, how about your wife? Are you setting the proper example before her? Likely she has shed many tears in secret prayer for you. If she is so interested in you; and others, including the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, are interested in your behalf, should you not be interested in yourself? Christ was sent that you might be reconciled to the Father above, so please be reconciled, and do not continue to be rebellious.

Should you stiffen your neck and continue to rebel, who in all the universe would be benefited by such rebellion? Surely none but Satan and his coworkers. You have opposition, you say. Why, certainly. We would not be entitled to a reward at the end of the race if it took no effort to obtain it. Our Savior, our pattern and leader, labored and suffered even death itself for us, and shall we go free with no suffering on our part and make no effort on our part in order to secure the prize? A righteous effort by us to obtain earthly blessings is commendable, and surely it is proper that we all make righteous effort to obtain heavenly things. If salvation were worth nothing, then we need make no effort to obtain it; but since it is worth more than all things else, surely we should devote our best efforts to secure it.

Is this reasoning good or bad? Judge ye. If good, then follow the advice given in it, and thus follow Christ. We can not afford to gain even the whole world and lose our own soul. Earthly things are transient—will soon pass away with the using,—but that which is heavenly abideth for ever.

"GROWN-UPS" IN THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

I wish to discuss the question, Why should "grown-ups" be workers in the Sunday-school?

This is of vital importance to us as a church since the Sunday-school is and should be the training department for every member, whether joined lately or long ago.

I should take the term Sunday-school to mean a school meeting on the Sabbath devoted especially to the study of the Scriptures. Many of us, quite too large a number, seem to think Sunday-school means juvenilism. Some, apparently, seem to think it a waste of time and effort to attend Sunday-school and to be actively interested therein.

The church is divinely instituted, and the Sunday-school as one department of church-work deserves our attention as much as any other.

The person who attends church in order to hear the sermons gets a deal of benefit; but the person who listens to the sermon and then attends Sunday-school too, gets a great deal more of benefit in many ways. I name a few: First, primarily it increases our knowledge of the Bible. (The Sunday-school is the fulfillment of the command, "Search the scriptures.")

Second, it broadens our own views by exchanging ideas with others:

Third, the effect of an active upon an inactive worker, or the effect of examples.

Fourth, the preparation we get as pupils enables us to acceptably fill the office of teacher.

Fifth, weightiest reason of all, it helps us to become more Christ-like.

Enlarging upon these somewhat I can say that not one of us is too familiar with scriptural facts; with the divine teachings of the old Jewish prophets. There is no better way to become acquainted with the grand lessons of the scriptures than through the Sunday-school. Many do not become members of this church until they are fully grown men and women. Some come from other churches, and we all know what other churches teach, or do not teach. To become a Latter Day Saint involves a radical change of mind. What better place to help along this change than the Sunday-school?

A long time ago, over in New England, a man recognized the value of exchanged ideas on questions of the day. So he instituted a society from which has grown the nationally famous lyceum. The need of exchanging ideas is as great to-day as it ever was; on scriptural thoughts the Sunday-school is the ideal place for their exchanging.

The questions of the Bible are, to me, the most important ever presented to men, since they deal often with eternity; the Sunday-school lessons bring to light these questions, one by one; we exchange views with class members and arrive at definite conclusions; this makes for unity.

A spoken or written word—just one small action of ours—may impress itself indelibly upon the mind of another. Half the effect of environment is the effect of example. We may profess to be independent, but the action of another has some effect upon us. So then is there one of us who wishes to deter by example others from enjoying the benefits of the Sunday-school? Do you think children do not notice our absences? What effect has our example upon them? This generally occurs: they cease to have an interest in Sunday-school work, since an interest is not had by their fathers, their mothers, or grown-up friends. So the Sunday-school loses a student, and often the church a member.

For a "grown-up" to attend Sunday-school and not prepare the lesson is one of the worst conditions with which teachers contend. This bad habit dates away back; it has its foundation in public school, for I think every one of you has heard the daily inquiry of the teacher in regard to preparation of lessons. The habit is good only to be broken. Those who pursue such a course develop backward.

We do not know when we may be called upon to be teachers; and the best recipe I know of for an emergency is "be prepared." In fact only those who are prepared will ever become teachers. Preparation involves hard, conscientious work—work that benefits, broadens, builds up.

We meet each other in the Sunday-school Sunday after Sunday. We get to know each other very well; and it is this acquaintance that fosters the feelings of friendliness and brotherly love so characteristic of the Savior. Charles Lamb said he hated every man with whom he was not acquainted. Of course we do not wish those we do not know any harm, but we reserve the warmest places in our hearts for our closest friends.

That it will cultivate in us the qualities of friendliness and brotherly love is alone reason enough for "grown-ups" to be active Sunday-school workers.

A Sunday-school is good or bad as its grown-up members are interested or disinterested. Enthusiasm defined as "the enkindling ardor of the soul," comes from deep interest; and enthusiasm is the vital spark which gives life to the Sunday-school work. Activity, the activity of every one, especially the "grown-ups" will generate an enthusiasm irresistible.

So then let us "grown-ups" work; and that means to attend Sunday-school every Sunday, to know our lessons, and to be energetic and kind.

"Be ye diligent in all things."

THE GROUCH.

If you don't want to succeed—be a grouch.

If you do want to succeed—don't be a grouch.

You've got to make your choice and be one or the other. You can't be both. The action of the grouch upon one's chances for success are similar to the action of thunder upon milk—it sours them. Success, like the proper housewife, looks at the soured specimen and says: "Ugh, can't use you," and goes on to seek a cheerful one.

"No grouches need apply."

This is the first sign that is or should be stuck over the portals of success.

"Abandon grouches all ye who enter here" is the next command.

That the two admonishments must be obeyed to the last letter is evident when one carefully inspects the world of successful business men and of failure. Grouches do not succeed. Of course, there are other people who do not succeed. But some of the others do. But none of the grouches.

To alter the old phrase, "Not every failure is a grouch, but every grouch is a failure."

If you, Mr. Reader, happen to be employed in an office, look around you and examine the heads of the various departments. How many of them are grouches? Any of them? Yes? Who is it? The old chap who has got charge of about two office boys and whose work can't hurt the firm no matter how it's done? Quite right. He's been with the house so long that they expect him to die or retire pretty soon and haven't got the heart to let him out. But among the progressive, aggressive, governing heads, if you are in a big up-to-date office, you will find that the grouch is the notable, unenviable exception, if he is there at all.

If you happen to work in a store, look over the floorwalkers, managers, buyers, the superintendents, and the other men who have got positions worth while. You will find that there is no grouch among them, except the inevitable exception. The same is true of the shop, of the factory, of any place where men rise upon their merits, which means their value to the firm that pays their salaries. It is true in every walk of life, in every line of work, profession, or vocation. The successful man never is a grouch.

The grouch being first of all an unsociable animal, is extremely inefficient in all matters requiring intelligent, flexible contact with other human beings. He is, as the Germans have it, "all in himself." Thus other men's notions have great difficulty in filtering into him—and this is bad, no matter what his place or condition. Being unsympathetic, he naturally or unnaturally does not understand others. Others do not want to understand him. He is a stick. He may be an efficient stick, but nobody ever saw a stick grow, and the demand of the day is for men who can grow. He can not rule others, because the fact that he has permitted himself to settle down into a grouchy condition is proof sufficient that he is unable to rule himself, which disqualifies him as a possible ruler of others.

If he is in a position where he must meet the public—patrons of his employers—he is a direct danger instead of a help. He may, by his manner, cost his firm thousands of dollars' worth of business in a minute. His grouch consumes a good part of the energy that he should be putting into business. It takes up much of his time, for nursing a grouch is one of the most delicate and time consuming processes that men give themselves over to. And it biases his point of view, throws him off his balance, and unfits him to deal with the matters with which he comes face to face in a fair and enlightened manner.

Every place of any size has its notable grouch. Often he is a man of unquestioned ability and occupies a low position at a small salary. He often is also the establishment's stock joke, for his sour wails at the partiality shown some men who are boosted over the heads of their superiors, of the disgraceful manner in which they do their work, and of the prevalence of "pulls" in the place, are funny, though tragic as well. He is certain that there is graft in every promotion that is made, and can not understand why he, the best man in the place, is overlooked. Nobody ever tells him why, everybody listens to him indulgently and laughs when his back is turned. If they were charitably inclined they would tell him the reason why, but there is little charity in the world of business.

The amazing thing is that a smart man will develop the grouch and permit it to govern him and rule his prospects in life. Clerks who have the ability to become something better remain clerks because they are "grouchy"; salesmen remain salesmen, or lose their positions, for the same reason.

An employer, seeing that an employee is grouchy, treats him much as the forester treats the tree that shows traces of the dry rot. The grouch is, in fact, business dry rot and nothing else.—Exchange.

A PECULIAR THEORY.

Professor Clinton McMickle, a Kansas scientist and archæologist, is so confident that the garden of Eden was located in Yazoo County, Mississippi, that he wants to organize a stock company for the purpose of unearthing the ruins of a once splendid city erected shortly after the expulsion of Adam and Eve from the garden, says a Jackson, Mississippi, dispatch to the Atlantic Constitution.

Professor McMickle passes lightly over the theory of many brother scientists that the garden of Eden was a myth, and is absolutely positive that on the Henry farm will be found the ruins of a magnificent temple, the doors of which are pure gold. He has visited the spot in person, but several months ago addressed a letter to Governor Vardaman, setting forth his theory, and asked to be furnished with a map of that portion of the delta country. The governor was unable to furnish the map, but referred the writer to Major Lamar Fontaine, of Lyons, Mississippi, the well known civil engineer, explorer, scientist, and raconteur, who immediately made an investigation and has publicly expressed his confidence in Professor McMickle's theory.

The letter asked Major Fontaine to advise him whether there existed on the farm a collection of Indian mounds, surrounding a truncated pyramid, the remains of a ship canal, and other external evidences of ancient civilization. These things Major Fontaine states that he found just as described by Professor McMickle, and the latter declares that this was the site of the ancient city of Pesedon, destroyed by a conjunction of Mercury, Venus, Mars, and Jupiter on November 8, 1656, of the world's history, or just 4,235 years ago on November 8 last. He further declares that Pesedon was reached by the tide water on that date, and the mouth of the Yazoo River at that time was five feet six inches below the sea level.—Kansas City Journal, March 26, 1907.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"What Would You Take for Me?"

She was ready to sleep as she lay on his arm
In her little white cap so fine,
With her golden hair falling out at the edge,
Like a circle of noon sunshine.
And I hummed the tune of "Bambury Cross,"
And "Three men who put out to sea,"
When she sleepily said, as she closed her blue eyes,
"Papa, what would you take for me?"

And I answered, "A dollar, dear little heart,"
And she slept, baby weary with play,
But I held her warm in my love-strong arms
And I rocked her and rocked away.
Oh! the dollar meant all the world to me—
The land and the sea and the sky,
The lowest depths of the lowest place,
The highest of all that's high!

All the cities, with streets and palaces,
With their people and stores of art,
I would not take for one low, soft throb
Of my little one's loving heart.
Nor all the gold that ever was found
In the busy wealth-finding past
Would I take for one smile of my darling's face,
Did I know it must be the last.

So I rocked my baby and rocked away,
And I felt such a sweet content,
For the words of the song expressed more to me
Than they ever before had meant.
The night crept on and I slept and dreamed
Of things far too gladsome to be,
And I wakened with lips saying close in my ear,
"Papa, what would you take for me?"

Through the Dark.

Have you ever felt the darkness of earth like a heavy mist enshroud you, a darkness that could be felt, and through that mist see only a tiny gleam, the glow of faith? Have you felt the veiled presence of heart-lives just beyond you, whose real self, the soul of longing and struggle you could not see, nor translate the meaning of their life, only breathe out through the darkness soul-whispers of the infinite, touch the trembling hand of doubt and lift it toward light, toward the vision? Then at that moment how dense the mist grows again, and your voiceless ministry seems to be lost in the clouds of earth, until in some other hour through the transfigured face of the life you have reached out toward through the darkness, you catch a deeper beholding of the radiance of the heavenlies.

Through the dark, unfolded the inner beauty of the Master's love in the mid-night communion with the struggling Pharisee, or the hour of interpretation at Jacob's well. Have you drawn all the bright imagery of the scene, to give reality to a child's thought, and then it turned away and the shadow of inattention or failure to understand was cast over you? Months, perhaps years afterward you hear the glad response, "It was through the picture that you gave of Jesus' love that I was led to the gates of light."

I shall never forget when one of those responses first came to my life. The charm of the May day hovered through the twilight over the soft stir of life. We were walking toward the little church, where the night before the girl had murmured, "I want to follow Jesus."

"Do you really understand the way?" I asked, fearful that the child might take a step too soon. "Yes," she answered, looking into my face with the consciousness of the higher vision, "I began to understand when you first told us in the class, the stories of the Savior at the well, or the midnight talk with the Pharisee."

Out in the dark, how our words of love, of the joy of the life with God, seem to tremble through the air and return to us void until we meet their fulfillment in the glad shout or ray of light of a redeemed life.

"Three miles to the evening appointment, and a heavy rain. The young home missionary was tired, and the night was near. The morning service at Belton had brought out a bare dozen through the rain; and the afternoon service, which had brought him five miles through the mud, had been little larger. 'Don't go over to Kenwood to-night,' the people said. 'What's the use? There won't be anybody out. The church won't even be lighted.'

"There was no light in the church. He saw that as he entered the straggling little settlement, and he drove to his stopping-place and put up his horse."

"'We didn't hardly look for you,' said his host. 'It's such a bad night. There won't be anybody out. You must be wet. Here, I'll take care of the horse; you go in and get dry.'

"'Thank you,' said the preacher. 'I'll just run over to the church a minute, and be sure there's no one there.'

"He pushed open the door; the little room was empty enough. The tick of the little nickel clock on the cabinet organ sounded very loud in the silence. He groped forward to the pulpit, and kneeling a moment, asked God's blessing on the work of the day. Then, his eyes a little more accustomed to the darkness within, he moved toward the door.

Just inside he met a man and a woman, who had come from a cabin some distance away.

"'We thought it was a pity, if you should come, not to have no one here,' exclaimed the man apologetically. 'It was kind to think of me in that way,' said the preacher, 'and it would be good if I could say something that would reward you for coming through the rain. You came because you thought of me, and did not want me to fail of some hearers, but have you no need of your own?'

"There was silence in the darkness, and the clock ticked on.

"After an interval, the woman said: 'It was a year ago to-day the baby died.'

"'It was that that brought you,' said the minister. 'Yes, and I know the word you want to hear. No, we will not light the lamps. Sit here while we talk a little.'

"There in the dark they sat, and he talked till the place seemed light with the beautiful truths to which they listened.

"When at last he said, 'Let us pray,' they knelt together, and the man and woman were in tears, but the tears were the welling forth of a new hope.

"'It was her little angel brought you through the rain,' said the woman. 'I somehow knowed you'd come, and we was so hungry for comfort.'

"Six months later the rough man lay dying. He clasped the hand of the preacher as the end drew near, and said: 'Parson, you 'member that night—and what brought you? It's sorter like that to me. Kinder dark, but seems like she's guidin' me—like she did you that night.'—Christian Home.

Letter Department

GEELONG, Victoria, Australia.

Dear Herald: After an absence from home of two and one-half months, I pen a few lines as a matter of ministerial duty to inform you how things are moving along in the mission field in general. I traveled by steamer to West Australia, a distance of eighteen hundred miles, and spent a month at Perth, the capital of West Australia, among the few Saints who had gathered there from other States, and the few who had been recently added by baptism; and by their wish, organized them into a branch, to be known as the Perth Branch. They number twenty-six in all, and have a wide field before them, and a good chance to advance and increase in numbers if they are diligent, and walk in love, and in harmony with the law of liberty. I enjoyed my stay among the Saints very much, and accepted with thanks their generous spirit and liberality in helping to pay my fare to see them.

After one month's stay in their midst, I took my leave, thankful to know our work was taking root in new fields, and that all those who had obeyed from the heart were rejoicing in the true light once delivered to the saints.

I had the pleasure of preaching on shipboard by invitation of the captain, both going and returning on my voyage, which I was pleased to accept, and did my best to enlighten the passengers concerning the better way. About one hundred were present at one service and listened with good attention, and I hope benefit. A minister passenger set all on board a very unbecoming example by smoking and drinking whisky openly, and I feel thankful for the good advice the Lord had given his people in these latter days to shun all these things, that our teaching to be temperate may be made effectual by our example. Example is one of the most powerful agencies this world has ever known.

While at Perth, I saw an example of what kindness to wild fowls will do: for the wild swan on the river, which are protected, would even come to the shore and eat out of your hand. I also thought this city would be a very dangerous place for tobacco-chewers, for I saw a notice posted up in a conspicuous place in each tram-car, "A fine of $50.00 for expectorating on the floor." Such notices give no alarm to those who are walking in the light and are heeding the counsel, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord."

On my return home I spent a month with the Saints at Adelaide, South Australia, and found them as zealous and persevering in the cause as any one could wish or desire. Ways and means to advance the Lord's work was the main thing under discussion all the time. The sisters, young and old, join in the singing on the street to draw a crowd, and then distribute tracts and literature, while the elders are speaking to the people. The Utah elders hold forth here; but are something like the cigar-makers, who go to a lot of trouble, and it all finally ends in smoke. About a half dozen sisters have left them and joined the true church at this place. The little difficulties along the line were almost all settled up, and a pleasant spirit prevailed, which was most encouraging. Four were added to the church while I was here. Bro. J. H. N. Jones, who is in charge here, is doing well, but has not been able to do all he could wish on account of his late illness, also that of Sr. Jones. He is about again, but she is still very weak.

I arrived home and found family well, for which I am always thankful.

I was under some suspense all the time, as it was reported that I was expected to be present at the General Conference in 1907; but a letter from Bro. F. A. Smith eased my mind on this point. I wish to state to all concerned, that the work in Australia is onward; slowly of course, but I think surely. and there is a good field here for young ministers who wish to make a start in the Lord's vineyard.

I am yours, still in the faith,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 12, 1907.

Editors Herald: It has been quite a while since we reported our labors or whereabouts to you; but we have not been idle. Since our last communication, we have been doing some breaking up of new, and also some planting in fallow ground.

Our labors have taken us from Salt Lake City, on the north, to Fredonia, Arizona, on the south, although we have not covered all the intermediate points. The fallow ground lies from the city to, and including, Sevier County. The new ground lies from Marysville to Fredonia, Arizona.

In Sevier County, we opened one new place, viz.: Sevier or Core; but there is some fallow ground here that deserves some attention. Bro. Vanderwood and I were associated together until near Christmas. While we were so associated we worked our way south as far as Marysville (another new point in Sevier County which Bro. Vanderwood opened) and then turned back to Monroe City, where the bishop had succeeded in closing Bro. Vanderwood out, and where we had slipped in on a fine Sunday afternoon, October 28, and (holding a street-meeting just at the close of their tabernacle services) had placed an entering wedge, and then followed it up the next Sunday by another open-air service at the same point, and an announcement for a series of meetings to commence the same night in the Methodist chapel, which had been opened to us by the courtesy of Reverend W. L. Dexter, of Richfield. Meanwhile we had written Bro. Vanderwood, who had joined us from Marysville. Our effort upon the street had resulted in talk of a public discussion, but had ended in the Mormons utterly refusing to affirm anything but an offer from them to deny our position, whatever that might be. Of course we insisted that, should there be a discussion, it must be one in which both sides should be equally represented.

Well, this resulted in assisting to awaken a keen interest in our work, and we held services here until and including the evening of the 12th of November, (we began this series the 4th,) closing with nearly a hundred present and an intense interest manifested; also a promise to give them another chance upon our return.

The 14th, we took a team and covered spring wagon, furnished us by the kindness of Bro. Hans Lorenson, of Elsinore, and started for the extreme southern portion of the State. Escalante was our first objective and our effort was to get into that point and out again before the winter snows should close the mountain roads leading to and from that point.

We reached Escalante the 17th, and, securing the use of the tabernacle there, commenced our services the same night, having first placed a tract with verbal announcement of our services in each house in the town. This town has about six or seven hundred inhabitants, and we had a good hearing here. People seemed eager to get our literature and we kept a supply at each service, to meet the demand. We closed our services here the 25th, and the morning of the 26th started for Henrieville, thirty-five miles away.

Meanwhile the snow had come and was still coming. We started at fifteen minutes of six, and for twenty miles our way was upward to the mountain-top. The snow lay eighteen inches deep in the town of Escalante, and gradually increased to fully three feet at the summit. We reached this point about four o'clock in the afternoon. The snow had fallen steadily all the way, but ceased when we reached the other side or descent of the dividing ridge. But when we attempted this descent our work was cut out for us.

For the first three quarters of a mile downward the road is what is called in local parlance a "steep dugway," and the most of the way was piled full of the snow which was falling at the summit and being brought over by the wind. Before starting on this trip we had provided ourselves with a shovel, and here we used it. Bro. Vanderwood acted as Jehu, and we played the role of the breakman who being rather stoutly built, and having to get out and shovel a road through the snow-banks for his train, when he returned laughingly remarked, "I had to get out and walk ahead to break the road for the engine and some of the drifts were so deep I had to walk twice through them before the engine could get through."

Well, we got down at last and thought our troubles were over for that day; but, alas! we never can tell what the day may bring forth, much less the night on a new, unbroken road, through the snow. Our way now lay down a canyon, where the creek monopolized so much of its bottom that it was necessary to cross and recross its stream again and again. This was not so bad until daylight began to fade, and we had only the struggling beams of the moon, filtering through the clouds, to light our way. In this uncertain light we could not always be certain of our road and finally ended by missing it entirely and landing wrong side up down this creek bank in a snow-drift.

In Carlton's story of "How we kept the day," in his description of the close of the oration and the collapse of the speaker's stand, he says,

"A singer, or two, beneath him did drop,
A big, fat, alderman fell a'top,
And there he lay 'till we fished him out."

In our case there was nothing, much, beneath us to drop, and Bro. Vanderwood fell atop, and there we lay till he crawled out. Well, we had just missed going into the water, and were thankful for what we had not received. Upon righting our rig we found we had broken a singletree. After a council of war, we decided that, as there were the possibilities of many more such mishaps—how many more we did not know, as we had never been over this route—ahead of us, we had best leave our wagon and finish our trip on horseback. We did so, arriving at Henrieville and finding shelter at the hotel there about ten o'clock. The next day we returned and captured our train.

At Henrieville we secured the use of the meeting-house, and, leaving Bro. Vanderwood to occupy, moved on to Cannonville, where we commenced services the same night, the 27th. We had the use of the hall here, which is used as an amusement hall, a school-house, and a church, all in one. Here also our hearing was excellent. We closed here the evening of the 2d of December, and moved on to Tropic, where with Bro. Vanderwood, we occupied until the 7th. From here to Pangwitch was a drive of thirty miles, over the rim and down into the Great Basin. Our hearing at Tropic was excellent, also, and the ward-house was open to us.

Our drive to Pangwitch was not quite as strenuous an undertaking as the one to Henrieville had been as the road was broken. We started from Tropic at 4 a. m., and arrived in Pangwitch about 11.30 the same forenoon.

Here the bishop granted us the use of the tabernacle, Sunday night, as a starter, and then we occupied the court-house during the rest of our stay, which was from the 9th to the 16th inclusive. We commenced with about forty-five in the court-house, and ended with a full house and many turned away for lack of room.

Bro. Vanderwood left us here, turning north to be at home during Christmas. Here we turned south once more, going through Long Valley to Kanab, where we received a new supply tracts. From there to Fredonia, Arizona, where we had nearly the whole town out to hear us, then back to Kanab, and through Long Valley, occupying at each town, and being well received and very courteously treated and entertained.

The towns touched on this trip, besides those already mentioned, were Hatch, Glendale, Orderville, and Mt. Carmel. This is a promising field, and I feel that the Lord has some sheep here.

On my return trip, I held another week's meetings at Pangwitch, occupying the court-house. From here to Monroe, where I made good my promise, and, at the close of a week's service, baptized four. This event occurred February 17, 1907.

The time of our district conference was now nearing so we made our way northward, first preaching at Joseph two nights, stopping one night in Manti, four nights in Nephi, and one in Provo.

We need not tell you of our conference in Salt Lake City, as others will have reported that event; suffice it to say that it was the best we have ever attended in this field.

On our way east we made a flying visit to Oklahoma, spending one Sunday at Highland Schoolhouse, where we found our genial Bro. H. E. Moler occupying, and where we preached once. We reached home to-day, after an absence of ten months and six days. We have enjoyed our work, but are glad to get home and see our loved ones once more.

May the Master send the sunshine and shower, and give the increase, is the prayer of,

Your brother in Christ,

A. M. CHASE.

BURKETT, Nebraska, March 7, 1907.

Editors Herald: I have just been reading in our soldier paper an article entitled, "The father in the home," and it contain some facts worth repeating. The writer says, "Who of us, when teaching the Lord's prayer to our babes, has not stopped on the very threshold with a baffled feeling at her heart that she could give her children no proper conception of what a father should be, after the example furnished at home?"

There is a very solemn fact in connection with the above statement. In the hurry and bustle of the present and strenuous life fathers seem to relegate the entire care of the children to the mother. Quoting further: "What is the typical father but a nonentity in his own home? He provides the wherewithal to provide clothing, food, schooling, etc., and believes his paternal duties ended. A hasty good-bye kiss in the morning, a less hasty one at night, then oblivion behind a newspaper, and that is all he sees of his children. Baby wants a romp, six-year-old trots up to show her dolly, big brother, sighing over his algebra, casts appealing glances in his direction, but the answer is the same to all, 'Poor papa is tired.'

"On Sunday perhaps he takes them for a walk, tries to get acquainted with them, but paternal affection in weekly spurts does not satisfy the hungering heart of childhood; they expect more.

"The mother may flatter herself that she is enough for them, but she is not. Boys especially need a man's hand, for the time comes when boys get an exalted idea of their own importance and mother's insignificance, and here father is needed to guide them over this critical period.

"Chief offender and chief victim is father; he may not see this for years or more, but when old age creeps on and he finds friends fewer, amusements less, and business more of a humdrum grind, he looks to his family as a haven of refuge as he never did before, but he has grown out of touch there; they look upon him as the bread-winner there, the family drudge, and things are out of joint."

What we sow we shall reap, is exemplified in this in a striking manner.

This state of things exists not only in society, but in the church, only in a less degree. It is one of the results of finance run wild. Everything is made subservient to this craze after wealth. The poor mother keeps up the battle until, worn out by the unequal struggle, she falls by the wayside. Perhaps there may be younger children after father sees his fault, and he may be able in a measure to undo some of the failures of his past life. But he never can recover the ground lost. How sad it will be when old age comes on to know that his own flesh and blood are as strangers to him, estranged by his own neglect.

We have known men who never went with their children to church or Sunday-school when they could avoid it, took no interest in childish amusements, and the children soon cease to expect it. It must be a dreadful thing to see one's children drift away from one, to have to reflect that if the poor, care-worn wife has failed to direct the feet of the children in the path of truth and duty the father must be guilty. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants says if any in Zion have children and neglect to teach them the principles of the gospel of Christ, the loss of their souls will be charged to them. I would to God that fathers and mothers would see the necessity of a united effort to guide the children in the way of righteousness.

Yours in bonds,

J. S. STRAIN.

HURON, South Dakota, March 18, 1907.

Editors Herald: The conference year is now a thing of the past. It has been a year of many disappointments; but they have been lessons for future good. I have enjoyed some of the most systematic and thorough "freeze outs" that have ever fallen to my lot in missionary work. You perhaps wonder how or where the enjoyment comes in; it was in the success of the job undertaken. It was so complete, no fragments left, done so quietly, no noise to disturb the neighbors, no blowing of trumpets; it was like the still alarm in a city fire department. We all admire men who can do a good piece of work, if not the work, at least the lesson to be learned that we all ought to do good work. The moral is that if some of Satan's servants can do a good job why can not servants of the Lord?

Horace Greeley said, "Young man, go west and grow up with the country." This has proved good advice to many; why so, each must form his own conclusions. Some elder (I do not care to know his name) said, "Young man, go to the country schoolhouses; the farmers will listen to the gospel message." He was not as good a prophet as Mr. Greeley, at least so far as the advice applies to this State. You are not to infer from this that I think the farmer is not as good as other people. That is not the trouble; the cause is that he is just like other people; he has no interest in religion of any kind. He has seen so much of the counterfeit he does not think there is any genuine, so he thinks it is a waste of time to examine our message. The same rule applies to all classes of people, as one of them remarked to one of our brethren, "You are a foolish man to waste your time going to church. I work all week and rest on Sunday."

"The cares of this world" apply with all the force that the language implies. People in this State are here to make money and to have a good time; and when you speak of pleasure-seeking our country cousins are not behind the city people, and Sunday is the favorite day. In the cities and towns there is no more interest than in the country; but you have a larger population to draw from, and the conditions and environments are more congenial for the assembling of people in public worship; the lack of money to pay hall-rent is the greatest drawback. The street is a good place in the summer-time. It is no trouble to get an audience, but we are not all adapted to be street-preachers, any more than we can all be singers; and a poor street-preacher will do more harm than good, and be a hindrance to good ones.

This field is a good one to observe the result of the scattering process. After nearly twenty years of missionary labor with some of our most faithful men, we have about fifty families with one or more of their number identified with the church, the largest percentage of them being emigrants, and not one branch organization. God provided for branch organizations so that the flock could be fed on spiritual manna, that knowledge and power for good could be increased and become valuable assets in his kingdom. I fail to discover any teachings in God's word that provide for scattering his people, only as the result of transgression. His command has always been to gather. To gather together does not mean only at Lamoni and Independence; but anywhere in the land of Zion and her borders, our people will find ample opportunities for a livelihood, and that, too, without being only one family to a county. The children are the greatest sufferers as a result of our scattering. The various Protestant sects can worship at any of their different shrines; but the true Latter Day Saint can worship only at one—his own.

If there is any scattering to be done, it ought to be the experienced missionary and his family to make their home in a convenient and prominent point in their mission, so that they could make a systematic and continuous effort to reach the people. I am optimistic in regard to the outcome of the work. I can see no useful place for a pessimist; sunshine or rain, on the storm-tossed sea of opposition, or in the quiet of our homes, we can find encouragement and signs of the realization of our hopes, if we will make proper use of the light we have received, and profit by the multiply-evidence around us.

I have sent several letters to the United States Senator of this State, and had him send the speeches of the Honorable J. C. Burrows and the Honorable Fred T. Dubois, made in the United States Senate, in the Reed Smoot case; and while at Kidder Bro. J. P. Bierlein gave me the names of nearly one hundred of his friends, and I also sent in their names. I will suggest that the Saints in the entire country write for them; send the names of one or more of your neighbors. It would be well to have some to go to our brethren in foreign lands; and when you get one do not part with it for love or money. It will prove a valuable weapon for the truth, when there are no more to be had. When you get one it is not a reprint, it is official, with the stamp of authority upon it, which our opponents can not dispute. Send to your Senator or to the Congressional Record, Washington, D. C.

Yours optimistically,

EDWARD RANNIE.

MALLARD, Iowa, March 14, 1907.

Editors Herald: The morning is clear and bright, and nature seems full of cheer and hope, which makes one think of the light and joy that fills the Christian's soul when conscious that his walk and conversation is acceptable to God and he feels the assurance of the Spirit testifying to his spirit that he is a son of God. A conscience void of offense toward God and all mankind makes the heart light; and the soul is as clear and bright as this beautiful morning.

The 14th ult. I called on old Bro. George H. Bush and wife.

Though he is sorely afflicted he and Sr. Bush seemed firm in the faith, and are looking forward with hope to that higher and better life which is to be enjoyed on the ever green and eternal shore. They made the writer welcome, and he enjoyed a visit with them, and appreciates their hospitality.

February 15 we called on Bro. and Sr. W. A. Carroll at Auburn, Iowa, where the traveling ministers have long found a pleasant and welcome home. Here I remained over two Sundays, preaching ten discourses. All things considered, the attendance was good. May the number of the disciples increase in this "Fairest village of the plain."

Bro. W. A. Carroll is an able and wide-awake presiding elder, and has the confidence of those who know him.

The 24th found the writer at the excellent home of Elder Samuel Jordison, Coalville, Iowa; remaining over the following Sunday, spending our time in visiting, and preaching the word to those who felt disposed to come and hear. But the weather being bad and roads muddy the attendance was not so large as it might have been. The Spirit was present, giving evidence of the truth, and the audiences were attentive. The Sunday-school is doing quite well, which I am glad to note.

March 4 found me at this place, where I have been busy with ministerial duties, and have had a fair hearing while holding services. The Spirit has assisted in the work done, and the writer has enjoyed the services held, including the Sunday-school. Everything seems to be moving fairly well.

In gospel bonds,

Dear Herald: I wish through your columns to ask the sisters of the Prayer Union to fast and pray for my son Albertus, whose mind has become deranged, and who was taken to the hospital for treatment.

I also ask the prayers of all the Saints in his behalf and that I may be given strength that I may bear the trials patiently, for there are many of them, some very severe at the present time. I know that the Lord does hear and answer prayer.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. NANCY WALLS.

There is no flock, however watched and tended,
But one dead lamb is there;
There is no fireside, howsoe'er defended,
But has one vacant chair.—Longfellow.

News From Branches

in bloom, something usually unknown so early. Everything is on the boom.

The Enterprise Branch and Sunday-school are flourishing. There are lots of young people here, both of the church and others, and we contemplate organizing a Religio at once.

LAMONI, IOWA.

A large audience greeted Elder Joseph Luff, of Independence, Missouri, at the Sunday morning preaching hour. Elder Peter Anderson, occupied in the evening. Elder James McKiernan spoke at the Saints' Home, and Elder Joseph Shippy at Liberty Home, Sunday evening. The attendance at Sunday-school was 551, one less than the Sunday previous.

The monthly branch business meeting on Tuesday evening of this week is the last branch meeting to be held until after the General Conference. As usual, the order of services will be in the hands of the presidents of the Conference.

Already this (Monday) afternoon Lamoni is in the first exciting rustle of the Conference. A few Sunday-school workers and a number of the missionary force have arrived early. May peace, and the approval of the Lord, attend both Conventions and Conference.

JOHN GARVER.

Conference Minutes.

SPRING RIVER.—Met in conference February 23, 1907, at Webb City, Missouri, with E. A. Davis and H. J. Thurman presiding. Statistical reports: Joplin, Webb City, Galena, Columbus, Scammon, Weir City, Pittsburg, Pleasant View, Rock Creek, and Fairland Branches, reporting a membership of 1,068; net gain 112 since October 28, 1906. Ministerial reports: Elders J. T. Riley, E. A. Davis, F. C. Keck, W. H. Smart, E. D. Bailey, F. L. English, H. J. Thurman, W. S. Taylor, M. T. Beck, J. D. Kelly, O. P. Sutherland, W. S. Hanks; Priests John Butler, L. F. Binkley, J. W. Waldron, F. M. Connor, N. R. Hickle; Teachers Jim Lamons, William Gray; Deacon Charles Petentler. Petition from Shaw Branch that James Cochran be ordained to office of elder was granted, he being ordained by E. A. Davis and J. T. Riley. Petition from Rock Creek Branch for ordination of M. E. Haskins to office of elder was presented. The matter of ordination referred to sub-missionary in charge and district president. The following resolution was adopted: "Be it Resolved, That we, the Spring River District, petition the First Presidency and Quorum of Twelve to ordain or appoint a high priest to preside over this district." It was decided to hold reunion in August at Joplin, Missouri, the date to be fixed by reunion committee composed of E. A. Davis, H. J. Thurman, E. D. Bailey, F. L. English, S. N. Cale. Fifty-eight delegates were chosen to General Conference. Election of officers: E. D. Bailey, president; H. J. Thurman, assistant; Mollie Davis, secretary and treasurer.

NEW SOUTH WALES.—Conference met with the Hamilton Branch, December 30, 1906, to January 1, 1907, and opened Sunday morning 8.30 a. m., with prayer-service. The spiritual meetings were seasons of rejoicing, and the preaching was also a treat, edifying and vivifying. Monday, 11 a. m., the district president, J. Jones, opened the business of conference. W. J. Haworth was appointed vice-president pro tem; W. H. Gammidge and A. Ferrett, secretaries. Ministerial reports: J. Jones, G. R. Wells, A. C. Barmore, W. J. Haworth, G. T. Ballard, E. Whitty, W. Maybury, T. Gregory, E. J. Haworth, J. W. Smith, C. A. Davis, J. N. Murphy, D. Lewis, W. C. Henries, F. Whaler, J. Cornelius, J. H. Williams, G. Stewart, E. A. Davis, and E. Wright. The editor and manager of the Gospel Standard tendered a financial report for 1906, which was audited and adopted. It was resolved, "That this conference offer the Gospel Standard, and the business relating thereto, to the General Conference, with the request that they take it over as general church business, free of cost; also that they permit the New South Wales District Conference to nominate a local board of publication, subject to the ratification of General Conference, each year." Further resolved: "That, whereas there is danger of private enterprise getting in advance of and subverting (in a measure) our general government, therefore be it resolved, (1) That in the opinion of this conference the missionary in charge and the bishop should be regarded as the general managers of tent mission work; (2) That all local purchases be considered as the property of the bishop, though they may be paid for or used locally the same as churches, and that all local collections be received as contributions toward the united church building and tent-fund." A recommendation from the Hamilton Branch was dealt with, and Bro. J. N. Murphy ordained elder, by G. R. Wells, A. C. Barmore, and W. J. Haworth. Resolved, "That where oblations are taken it is the sense of this conference that the deacon is the proper official to officiate." The bishop's report was read; and the auditor's report verifying, was adopted as follows: Balance carried forward, 1905, £84 10s. 8d.; income, tithes and offerings, £409 10s. 3d.; expenditures, £385 14s. 5d. Building fund: Balance carried forward, £44 10s. 5d.; collections, £84 8s. 2½d.; expenditures, £112 11s. 6½d. Resolved That a special reunion be held at Bullahdelah, June 2 and 3, 1907. Wallsend was chosen as place of conference, December 25, 26, and 27, 1907, the time.

Easter reunion and district convention of Sabbath schools and Religio to be held at Balmain, March 29 to April 1, 1907. Delegates to General Conference: Brn. A. H. Smith, L. A. Gould, J. W. Wight, J. Kaler, and P. M. Hanson. Election of officers: District president, J. Jones; vice-president, G. R. Wells; secretary, W. H. Gammidge, assistant secretary, G. Stewart.

Married.

LARUE-SHORT.—At the residence of Sr. Viola Short, widow of Elder M. T. Short, Independence, Missouri, Wednesday evening, March 27, 1907, Elder William E. LaRue and Cordie C. Short, eldest daughter of Sr. Short, were united in marriage, agreeably to the laws of the state of Missouri, and in accordance with the rules of the faith and government of the church, President Joseph Smith officiating in the celebration of the ceremony. The rites were witnessed by a representative company of the relatives and friends of the contracting parties, who joined in wishing the young people the peace, happiness, and contentment which the Lord of life designed should characterize the family association when the marriage relation was instituted by him for man "according to his creation before the world was made."

HABERLEIN-BURKETT.—At the home of the bride's mother, Sr. Ella D. Whitehead, 1306 West Short Street, Independence, Missouri, March 27, 1907, President Joseph Smith officiating, Mr. Ernest G. Haberlein, of Kansas City, Kansas, and Sr. Clara D. Burkett (nee Dudley), only daughter of Sr. Whitehead, were united in marriage, according to the laws of the State and the rules of the church. The young couple expect to make their home for a time at the residence occupied by the bride's mother; where they will be "at home" to their friends after the 20th of April.

Died.

WELLS.—Elsie Victoria, youngest daughter of Bro. G. H. and Sr. Ellen E. Wells, of Anderson, Missouri. Elsie was born December 15, 1898; passed quietly to rest March 13, 1907, after an illness of two and one-half years, seventeen months of the time requiring constant attention. Was laid to rest in the Anderson cemetery. Funeral services at the home, in care of Evan Davis and J. T. Riley.

PARRISH.—At St. Louis, Missouri, March 18, 1907, Roger Swift Parrish, son of the now deceased John and Lilia Parrish. He was born September 20, 1888, at St. Louis, Missouri; baptized in 1897 by Elder J. C. Hitchcock. He leaves to mourn their loss, three sisters, Maud, Hazel, and Mary, and two brothers, Glenn and Stanley. Funeral services from Saints' church, conducted by J. A. Tanner.

MOORE.—At Missouri Valley, Iowa, March 20, 1907, Verna Endora May. Was born February 10th, 1905; died Sunday March 17th, 1907. This is the second and the last child of Bro. and Sr. G. B. Moore. The first one died some ten days prior to little Verna's death, leaving Bro. and Sr. Moore without their darling babes. Many shed tears of sympathy for them at the funeral. Bro. C. F. Pratt in charge; sermon by J. S. McDonald.

KOLLESCHNIG.—In Kansas City, Missouri, Ora F., son of Bro. M. and Sr. Ellen Kolleschnig, March 5, 1907, of scarlet fever, after a severe illness of two weeks; aged 4 years, 4 months, and 5 days. All that loving hands and skill could do for him was done; but the angel of death came and took him to the paradise of God. Little Ora was a sweet child; always loved that which was good. May God comfort the bereaved parents and keep them safe till they shall meet again. Interment in Mount Grove Cemetery, Independence. Funeral in charge of F. C. Warnky.

QUANDT.—Benjamin F. Quandt, son of Bro. and Sr. John Quandt, was born December 9, 1886, near North Freedom, Wisconsin. When he was ten years of age his parents moved to Reedsburg, Wisconsin. As a boy he mastered the barber's trade and was employed in various shops in North Freedom and Reedsburg until he accompanied his sister, Mrs. Eliza LeBallister, to Snohomish, Washington, where he followed his trade. Five weeks after he reached Snohomish he was stricken with pneumonia, from which he never recovered. His sister cared for him devotedly at Snohomish, and after seven weeks had him removed to her home at 416, Twenty-eighth Avenue, South Seattle, where everything possible was done for him. Tuberculosis set in, and after long and patient suffering Benjamin departed this life December 29, 1906. Services were held in Butterworth Chapel, 1921 First Avenue, Seattle, at 2 p. m. January 1, 1907, Bro. F. W. Holman officiating. January 2, the remains were forwarded to Reedsburg, Wisconsin, accompanied by his sister. Snow in Dakota delayed the sad journey one day, and the sister, with the remains, arrived at Reedsburg Sunday afternoon, January 6, and was taken to the home of the father, John Quandt. Short services were held at the house Monday morning at 10 o'clock, and at the Baptist church at 10.30 o'clock, Reverend J. T. Sharman officiating. The remains were conveyed to North Freedom and interred beside those of his mother, who died last spring. The deceased leaves his father, four brothers,—John and Henry, of North Freedom, Wisconsin; Charles, of Lime Ridge, Wisconsin; and Joseph of Gold Bar, Washington; and two sisters, Mrs. Sophia Thistle, Arlington, Wisconsin; Mrs. Eliza LeBallister, of Seattle, Washington, besides other relatives and a host of friends.

GOHEEN.—Thomas Goheen, after a three weeks' illness and much suffering, passed away March 13, 1907, at his home in Butman, Michigan, at the age of 65 years, 10 months, and 13 days. He united with the church January 25, 1885. Ordained elder under the hands of J. J. Cornish, December 21, 1900. He leaves a widow, five sons, four daughters, two brothers, and many other relatives to mourn their loss. Sermon by J. A. Grant.

When Pride Comes Between.

So many of the little chafing problems of married life could be mastered, so many of the mists of misunderstanding could be dissipated by the sunshine of love, so many of the discords in the music of home could be translated into harmonies if false pride did not so often come between, writes William George Jordan in the April Delineator.

True pride is the guardian and protector of what is best in us; false pride is the sullen defender and apologist of our weakness.

Life has so much real pain and sorrow, so many dark clouds floating over the sky of home, care and trouble that seemingly no human foresight can prevent, that it seems almost extravagance to manufacture troubles merely to offer them as sacrifices on the altar of vanity, this false pride.

General Conference

APRIL 6.

The Conference, assembled in the upper auditorium of the church at Lamoni, Iowa, was called to order at ten o'clock. President Joseph Smith occupied the chair. By vote of the assembly the First Presidency were chosen to preside over the conference and were given authority to appoint the various officers needed to complete the organization. President Smith proceeded to make the necessary appointments.

R. S. Salyards was named as secretary, with F. A. Russell, Charles Fry, and Joseph Salyards as his associates. T. C. Kelley, W. P. Robinson, and R. M. Maloney were named as an auditing committee. Miss Henrietta Hofer was selected as chorister, with power to choose her assistants; at a later hour she selected F. G. Pitt and Orville James. Mrs. B. M. Anderson was appointed organist; to select her assistants. The local janitor and ushers were retained. Elbert A. Smith was appointed on the press committee and later named T. W. Williams and Walter W. Smith as his associates. Leon A. Gould was selected as conference stenographer and named Sr. Belle Robinson as his associate.

The organization being completed, the audience sang, "Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning." Prayer was offered by President Smith.

The credential committee reported, and after some necessary corrections their report was adopted.

The Presidency were authorized to determine the order of services and hours of adjournment, and select speakers and officers in charge.

President F. M. Smith announced the order of seating the assembly.

One evidence of the growth of the church is seen in the fact that it was necessary to reserve the entire floor space for delegates and ex-officio members while visitors were assigned to the gallery.

A smile passed over the audience when the chair announced that at meetings other than business-meetings there would be no reserved seats, except for the preacher, and he would be "expected to stand."

It was announced that printed cards bearing general instruction and information for delegates and visitors would be posted in the vestibule and that quorum and other announcements would be found upon a bulletin-board to be provided.

"There are two forces in the world that man comes in contact with: the forces of good and the forces of evil, which run along side by side, not in parallel lines, but in convergent lines, which means that these two forces shall come together for a final struggle. Through the principles of truth, we hope to win the victory, in a state of perfection before our heavenly Father."

"The parent that takes his or her child to the elders, before the church, to be blessed, has done one thing at least that the Lord has told us to do, and is therefore one step nearer to Christ."

J. W. Rushton rose to a question of privilege and coming to the stand presented President Joseph Smith and President R. C. Evans with tributes from the British Isles Mission. These were in the form of nicely bound books in which were beautifully engrossed the addresses of welcome delivered upon the occasion of their visit to the British Isles Mission, four years ago. The two brethren made brief but feeling response to the speeches of presentation.

The audience sang hymn number 145 and President Joseph Smith pronounced the benediction.

At two o'clock business was resumed, with President Joseph Smith in the chair, the opening prayer being offered by Bishop E. L. Kelley.

After the reading of the minutes Elder R. Etzenhouser rose to a question of privilege in behalf of the committee appointed one year ago to draft resolutions of appreciation for the long service of H. A. Stebbins, who at that time retired from the office of Recorder. Coming to the stand, Bro. Etzenhouser presented Bro. Stebbins with the resolutions nicely engrossed and framed. Bro. Stebbins responded, and in the course of his remarks read a revelation which had come to him through President Smith some seventeen years ago which had been a source of great comfort to him.

The report of the Recorder was read. During the year, 2,779 names have been added to the record; 1,719 by baptism and 1,060 by letter. Letters of removal have been granted to 1,183; 72 have been expelled, and 260 lost by death. The net gain for the year is 1,264. Missouri leads with a gain of 232 and Iowa follows with 202.

The Secretary reported. He stated that one evidence of church growth was found in the increased number of communications from members asking for information regarding church government and from outsiders asking for information regarding our faith in general. He had observed an increasing breadth and charity in the minds of outsiders who write for information for literary and other purposes.

Reports from the missionaries in charge were read. They will be published in due time. Some of the more interesting statistics gleaned from the reports are given below.

R. C. Evans, in charge of the Canada Mission, with 18 or more men in his charge, reported 2,400 sermons and 242 baptisms for the entire force. He reported the mission in good spiritual condition, with a bright outlook for the future.

F. M. Sheehy, in charge of the Eastern mission, 15 men, reported 1,583 sermons and 86 baptisms for the entire force. Reported an improved outlook. An increasing army of young men are taking hold of local work.

U. W. Greene, Mission No. 2, Ohio, Virginia, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania, 23 men, 2,307 sermons, 110 baptisms. A marked spiritual improvement in many of the branches. The greatest need of the mission is for efficient presiding officers in branches and districts.

J. W. Wight, Mission No. 3, Michigan, Indiana, Wisconsin, and Northern Illinois, 37 men, 4,741 sermons, 351 baptisms. A special need for pastoral work reported.

F. A. Smith, Southern Mission, 32 men, 3,853 sermons, 262 baptisms. Prospects for the future are bright. A great need exists for more workers, both local and general.

Joseph Luff and I. N. White, Mission No. 5, Missouri, Kansas, Southern Illinois, 47 men, 5,532 sermons, 256 baptisms. There is a need "bordering on dearth" for good active high priests and elders with ability to preside over districts. A need exists also for evangelists to hold revival services in branches.

Heman C. Smith, Mission No. 6, Iowa, Minnesota, the Dakotas, and Nebraska, 59 men, 5,516 sermons, 404 baptisms. The mission is in fair condition, with encouraging prospects.

Gomer T. Griffiths, Pacific Slope Mission, 20 men, 2,004 sermons, 112 baptisms. Condition good, with but few existing difficulties to settle.

Peter Anderson, Scandinavian Mission, 8 men, 586 sermons, 15 baptisms. Opportunities were never better. Conditions better for an opening in Germany.

J. W. Rushton, British Mission, 5 men, statistics not at hand. Advancement spiritually and numerically but not financially, expenditures being about twice the income in the mission.

W. H. Kelley, Rocky Mountain Mission, 18 men, 1,546 sermons, 102 baptisms. More tolerant element in Utah than formerly. Our men must go prepared to stand every gun that is trained upon them, without making a single vital concession.

C. A. Butterworth, Australasian Mission, 3 men, 238 sermons, 25 baptisms.

G. J. Waller, Hawaii, 2 men, 83 sermons, 13 baptisms.

Some of the reports of missionaries in charge not being in harmony with the report blank adopted by the conference of 1906, a committee of three was appointed to pass upon them and refer those in need of correction back to those reporting. Joseph Luff, J. A. Grant, and Paul M. Hanson were appointed upon this committee.

A report from the Seven Presidents of Seventies was read. In harmony with a recommendation in this report, the ordination of David S. Palmer to the office of seventy was approved. The ordination of S. M. Reiste to the office of seventy, recommended at the conference of 1906, was taken up and approved. The chair announced that these ordinations, together with that of J. L. Mortimer, approved one year ago, would be attended to at the Sunday afternoon prayer-meeting.

A communication from the citizens of Lamoni was read. They stated that $17,467 had been subscribed toward the rebuilding of the HERALD Office, on condition that it should be rebuilt at Lamoni; and the church was asked to accept the donation with the condition named.

A petition was presented signed by sixty of the Aaronic priesthood asking for the organization of quorums in stakes and districts.

Reports were read from the Seventh Quorum of Elders, the First Quorum of Priests, the Sixth Quorum of Priests, and the First Quorum of Teachers.

A petition from the Kewanee District was read and referred to the First Presidency.

By motion and vote, Sunday (April 7) was appointed as a fast day.

The Independence Branch tendered an invitation to the conference to meet at Independence, Missouri, in 1908.

At the evening service, Gomer T. Griffiths was the speaker assisted by Fred B Blair.

SUNDAY, APRIL 7.

Sunday was a busy, profitable, and happy day. Counting the sacrament and preaching services at the two Saints' homes a total of eleven religious services was held. Those under immediate conference control are as follows:

At 8 a. m., prayer-service in charge of J. M. Terry, H. R. Mills, and William Lewis; 9.30 a. m., Star of Bethlehem Sunday-school, in charge of D. J. Krahl, local superintendent; 11 a. m., preaching in the upper room by President Joseph Smith, assisted by Albert Carmichael and T. W. Williams; in the lower room, preaching by M. H. Bond, assisted by F. A. Russell; 2.30 p. m., in the upper auditorium, sacrament and prayer-service, in charge of John Smith, G. W. Blair, and R. S. Salyards. At the same hour, prayer and sacrament-service in the lower room in charge of George Harrington, W. H. Garrett, and M. H. Bond. The following elders were ordained to office of seventy: S. M. Reiste, by J. W. Rushton and R. C. Evans; J. L. Mortimer, by R. C. Evans and Peter Anderson; D. S. Palmer, by G. T. Griffiths and Peter Anderson. At 7 o'clock, in the Saints' Home, preaching by Alvin Knisley, assisted by J. L. Mortimer; at Liberty Home, same hour, preaching by O. J. Hawn, assisted by James W. Davis; at 7.45 p. m., preaching in the upper auditorium of the church by Bishop E. L. Kelley, assisted by President Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans; in the lower room, preaching by I. M. Smith, assisted by D. A. Anderson and S. A. Burgess.

MONDAY, APRIL 8.

At 9 o'clock, prayer-meeting in charge of G. A. Smith. At 11 a. m., preaching by J. A. Tanner, assisted by L. A. Fowler.

Business-meeting convened at two o'clock with President F. M. Smith in the chair. The opening prayer was by Elder J. M. Terry.

After the reading of the minutes, President F. M. Smith stated that he had received from the Philadelphia Branch the present of a gavel. The letter of presentation, signed Walter W. Smith, pastor of that branch, was read. In part it said, "The wood is San Domingo mahogany, more than one hundred years old; it was used as trimmings on the top of pews in the old Julianna Street church. The church was occupied by the Philadelphia Branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1842 and 1843."

The committee appointed to pass upon the reports of the missionaries in charge reported that four of the reports had been found out of harmony with the form adopted one year ago. Two had been referred back to the authors; two being from foreign missions were corrected by the committee.

The four corrected reports were read and adopted and the report of the committee was adopted.

The committee on the compilation of General Conference resolutions reported that their work was about ready for press when the HERALD Office burned, and the plates were destroyed. It is again about ready. The committee was continued and ordered to include the resolutions of this present conference.

The committee on the division of the Book of Mormon in chapters and verses reported that the division of chapters in the Palmyra edition would be adhered to; that when the work of versification is completed a system of references will be included; and that a final report will be made in 1908. The report was adopted and the committee continued.

The Fourth Quorum of Elders reported.

A communication from the Australasian Mission was read, in which they offered the Gospel Standard, with its business, to the General Conference, the New South Wales District to retain the right to nominate the board of publication, subject to General Conference ratification. The communication was referred to the Bishopric.

A communication from the Twelve was read. It is as follows:

Resolved, That in our opinion, the marriage of persons who were formerly divorced for any other cause than fornication or adultery is wrong and should not be approved or condoned by the church.

Resolved further, That our ministers be required to honor this declaration, and to refuse to perform the marriage ceremony in all instances among persons within or without the church where said wrong is involved.

Resolved further, That where it is in evidence that said crimes have led to the obtaining of the divorce; we do not deem it to be absolutely necessary that they shall have been urged in the civil court proceedings.

Resolved further, That the above is not to be construed as seeking to prevent or pass upon the question of reuniting the same persons who have been formerly divorced.

Action upon this communication was deferred until April 10. Copies were ordered printed and distributed.

President Joseph Smith reported in behalf of the tract committee. His report was adopted and the committee continued. His report precipitated some discussion, and the following resolution was offered: "Moved that it be the sense of this body that no one be authorized to publish tracts without first submitting them to proper authority."

Several amendments were offered but the matter was finally laid on the table.

President Joseph Smith reported in behalf of the committee on preparation of historical matter. He stated that all matter that they had prepared which was not published before the time of the HERALD Office fire was destroyed at that time; as he put it, it had been "purified so as by fire." The report was adopted and the committee continued.

The report of the Librarian was read. He reported the destruction of the library by fire, January 5. Five hundred and sixty-five volumes have been donated toward a new library. He recommended that a special appropriation of one hundred dollars be made for the purchase of new books. The report and recommendation were adopted.

The invitation from the Independence Branch was taken up and it was decided to hold the conference of 1908 at Independence, Missouri.

At this juncture President Joseph Smith made a short speech on the subject of tract revision.

Elder Ammon White pronounced the benediction.

At the evening hour, Walter W. Smith was the speaker, assisted by Arthur Allen.

APRIL 9.

The morning prayer-meeting was in charge of Elders F. G. Pitt and J. C. Crabb.

At 11 o'clock Elder J. S. Roth was the speaker, assisted by Elder B. St. John.

At 2 o'clock, business-meeting convened, with President R. C. Evans in the chair. Elder W. H. Kelley offered the opening prayer.

After the reading of the minutes, a report from the Presiding Patriarch, Alexander H. Smith, was read. He reported that there are twelve patriarchs or evangelical ministers laboring in the United States and two in the British Isles. Those reporting have given a total of 1,292 blessings during the year. They have baptized 42 persons, and preached 1,218 times.

The Board of Publication reported and their report was adopted.

Reports from the General Conventions of the Religio and Sunday-school Associations were heard, and in harmony with their request, by vote of the assembly, a committee of three was named by the chair to co-operate with similar committees from the two societies before named in perfecting a plan for concerted library work on the part of Sunday-schools, Religio locals, and branches. H. Hale Smith, E. A. Blakeslee, and A. Carmichael were named on this committee.

The Historian's report was read. He reported no change in the general condition of the work. Six new churches were dedicated during the year.

The trustees of Graceland College reported. They report an enrollment for the year of 107, a gain of thirty per cent over last year. An industrial department is to be started under the supervision of Professor Charles Woodstock, the Sunday-school Association having donated one thousand dollars for that work. A dormitory twenty-eight by thirty-two feet in size has been built at a cost of $2,100, former students having greatly helped in that work.

A communication from the Presidency and Twelve was read and adopted. It is as follows:

To the General Conference; Greeting: We are instructed by the joint council to present to you the following resolution adopted by the Quorum of Twelve and concurred in by the First Presidency:

"Whereas, The present method of organizing quorums of elders, and of the Aaronic priesthood, renders impracticable the getting of their members together frequently for the purposes of their organization, because of the scattered condition of the members enrolled,

"Resolved, That we advise the disorganization of quorums as at present existing, where it may be necessary, and organizations be effected in stakes, districts, and large branches, where enough members shall be found to justify it."

The joint council adopted a resolution recommending that the execution of this matter be referred by the conference to the First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric.

Respectfully submitted,

FRED'K. M. SMITH, Secretary of Presidency.

FRED'K. A. SMITH, Secretary of Twelve.

April 9.

This recommendation was adopted, after being amended to include the word missions, to precede the word stakes.

The High Priests' Quorum reported. Their present enrollment is 109.

On the request of President Smith, the Presidency were authorized to select from the High Priests present enough members to fill vacancies in the High Council, which is to meet April 18. J. M. Terry, V. M. Goodrich, M. H. Cook, and William Lewis were named.

F. B. Blair, F. M. Smith, and E. L. Kelley, Jr., were unanimously re-elected as trustees of Graceland College. This unanimous tribute called forth a short speech from President Smith.

The matter of rebuilding the HERALD Office, location, etc., was made the special order for three o'clock, Thursday, April 11.

The roll of ex-officio officers was called.

The sale of vacant lots in San Diego and a twenty-five acre tract in Orange County, California, was authorized.

Bro. Hale Smith pronounced the benediction.

The evening services were in charge of the college trustees. F. B. Blair and Professor Stewart were the principle speakers.

Total receipts for the year, $1,439.15; expenditures, $809.64; balance, $629.51.

APRIL 3.

The General Convention of the Religio met in the lower auditorium of the Brick Church at nine o'clock Wednesday forenoon. The opening service of prayer and testimony was in charge of Walter W. Smith and S. A. Burgess. The meeting well carried out the sentiment expressed in the opening song, "One sweet hour with Jesus." Many testimonies to the worth of Religio work were borne. Perhaps they are best epitomized in the words of one brother, uttered during the meeting, "The ever-increasing product of the Religio is its best recommendation; wherever the Religio is established, an army of active young people is developed."

After a short intermission, business-meeting convened at ten o'clock, with President J. A. Gunsolley in the chair, and with the secretary, Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser, at her post, assisted by Bro. H. H. Gold. In his opening speech the president cautioned the assembly to avoid the spirit of levity.

After the opening exercises the report of the credential committee was read. Being so authorized, the chair appointed D. A. Anderson chorister and Elbert A. Smith press committee, they to select assistants. By vote, interested visitors were granted the privileges of the floor—the right of speech but not of vote.

A committee was appointed to wait upon the First Presidency and the Twelve and notify them that the Religio was in session and ready to receive communications or suggestions.

A report was read from President Gunsolley, who said, in part,

It does not appear that we have gone backward, but to the contrary we have improved materially in some respects. We seem to be steadily gaining in the confidence of the church. We have made advancement in the matter of records and reports, due largely to the persistent efforts of our secretary. We have made advancement numerically, at least in the number of local societies and districts. Twenty-six new locals and two new districts is not a bad showing.

Several proposed amendments to the Constitution drew from the President a comment on what he termed the "amendment habit." He named the matter of selecting a new course of study as the most important topic to come before the convention.

The report of the vice-president, Walter W. Smith, was read. Among other things he said in part as follows:

Have no new things to recommend, no departure to advise, only the doing well of the things we have tried. We have, in my judgment, found our field, and we shall be accounted worthy if we occupy well.

Printed statistical reports of the secretary were distributed, showing a total enrollment in locals and home classes of six thousand seven hundred and eight, a gain of five hundred and thirty-one for the year.

The secretary, Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser, then made some comments upon the report which were of considerable interest as showing the condition of the work in different fields. We quote as follows:

We wish to call attention to a few of the districts. First, London, Canada. This district leads in point of number of locals in their districts, their enrollment in locals, and new locals organized during the year. They come second in point of gain.

England. This is the only district that we have not heard from the Religio officers. Bro. Rushton tells us that their enrollment is about one hundred and their average attendance about one half. We have used these figures. He states that the work there is not making much headway. They need good live Religians, with executive ability and push, to take the lead.

Kewanee, Illinois. While attending the Nauvoo convention we learned that this district had not held a convention for over two years. We took up the matter with the officers, and received word that a meeting of the Religio district would be held the last of February, at which time the district would either be disorganized, or continued, and an election of officers take place. They would also send us report and credentials. The latter part of March we received word that the president had not called a meeting, the locals had not reported to the secretary, and so there was nothing to report to us. We received this information too late to get the addresses of the local secretaries and ask them to report direct to us.

Des Moines, Iowa. Their report was incomplete, as they did not give their average attendance. They lead in number gained for the year.

Lamoni, Iowa, shows the greatest loss. This can be accounted for by the fact that last year they had ninety members in the home department, and this year they have none.

Independence, Missouri, comes second in point of number of locals in district, and in enrollment. They lead in the home department.

New York and Philadelphia is second in new locals organized.

We wish to call attention to Hawaii. We have received a letter from Bro. Waller from which we quote: "The work of the society has been productive of good in this mission, and it is pleasant to note the interest taken by the natives in the Book of Mormon lessons, and likewise the readiness with which they take hold and assist in the program feature. I can safely say that as far as this mission is concerned, the society has come to stay. The Honolulu local has two classes, one for the English-speaking members, and the other for those natives that can not speak English. In the other local, which has just been organized, only the president and vice-president are Latter Day Saints."

Just before leaving for Lamoni we received word that a district had been organized in Kansas, taking in Atchison, Blue Rapids, and Topeka.

You will notice by the totals at the bottom of the sheet, that we have 207 locals with a membership of 6,249, and an average attendance of 3,296. There have been 27 locals organized this year and three districts. We have a net gain of 531 over last year.

MRS. M. A. ETZENHOUSER, Secretary.

The secretary's general report followed. She noted a slackness upon the part of local and district secretaries in the keeping of records, due in part to the lack of a systematic method, the need of the hour being properly ruled record books.

The report of the treasurer, R. W. Trowbridge, was read and was referred to an auditing committee. The total receipts for the year were $1,439.15; expenditures, $809.64; balance, $629.51. In his report he argued that proper ways of raising money should be employed and that the idea should not obtain that "any old way" will do. Of the year he said, "The past year has been the most prosperous the society has ever known financially."

The report of the librarian, S. A. Burgess, was read. He stated that though the distribution of literature had declined, as compared with last year, the interest in library work had increased. He urged that concerted action in the matter of library work should obtain among Religio, Sunday-school, and branch officers.

The report of "The Religio's Arena" editor was read.

The report of the Home Department superintendent, Sr. Catherine Haines, was read, showing a gain in membership for the year of one hundred and seventy-seven, present membership, one thousand two hundred and four.

The report of the Quarterly editor, Sr. Louise Palfrey, was read. She stated that the present course of study in the Book of Mormon would end with the July, August, and September Quarterlies. The present course has extended over five years.

The report of the Quarterly revising committee was read. Of their work they reported in part as follows:

The instances where any changes in the papers submitted were found necessary were very rare, and never at any time involved the doctrinal character, or facts of the matter under consideration.

Souvenir badges were distributed among the delegates and visitors. Adjournment was had.

At two o'clock in the afternoon the convention again assembled in business session, with Walter W. Smith in the chair. After the opening exercises and reading of the minutes, an additional report of the credential committee was received. Proposed amendments to the Constitution were taken up. An amendment to section 2, article 3, was adopted by which district conventions are permitted a choice in the manner of electing officers, the former rule being to elect by ballot. The proposed amendment to section 7, article 3, as published in March Autumn Leaves, requiring locals desiring membership in the general society to obtain a charter from the general secretary, was adopted. Two other proposed amendments were referred to a committee of three, S. A. Burgess, J. W. Wight, and D. A. Anderson.

The Executive Committee, instructed one year ago to consider the matter of a field worker, reported, advising a continuation of the yearly three months' work of the president and an additional appropriation of two hundred dollars per annum, to be used in other ways in general work. Their recommendations were adopted.

The matter of providing properly ruled record books for districts and locals was left with the executive committee.

The purchase of a suitable record book for the use of the general secretary was ordered.

The question of a new course of study was taken up. The president suggested that whatever course should be taken up should include a study of the needs of now rather than a continued study of the past. After an earnest discussion, the matter was placed in the hands of a committee of five; consisting of J. W. Rushton, J. W. Wight, F. M. Sheehy, Louise Palfrey, and Fred M. Smith, with instructions to report at the evening meeting.

At half-past seven in the evening the convention assembled in the upper auditorium of the church. One brother declared, "The up-stairs is not a particle too good for the Religio."

President J. A. Gunsolley occupied the chair.

After the opening exercises a communication from the First Presidency of the church was read.

The president of the Religio was authorized in the future to appoint an auditing committee to audit all accounts before the assembling of the convention.

The report of the committee on amendments was heard, and section 4, article 3, was so amended as to permit locals a choice in the method of electing officers, and to include the rule that in case of balloting where no one receives a majority on the first vote the succeeding ballots shall be confined to the two receiving the highest number of votes. Section 5, article 3, was amended by adding the words, "But no personal charge made by one church-member against another shall be considered in the province of their duties."

The committee on selecting a new course of study reported, advising that the Book of Mormon be studied topically and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants be used in a supplementary way. Their report was adopted. The matter of reprinting the former Quarterlies was left with the executive committee. The auditing committee reported the secretary's accounts correct.

APRIL 4.

The convention came to order at nine o'clock in the forenoon. Walter W. Smith occupied the chair.

After the opening exercises, the auditing committee reported the treasurer's books correct.

The assembly then proceeded to elect officers. All the former officers were re-elected; in each case the assembly authorized the secretary or her assistant to cast the entire delegate vote for the individual nominated. This was a splendid expression of satisfaction with the work of all the officers during the past year.

The convention voted to pledge eight hundred dollars toward the printing of the Book of Mormon in German. A sum amounting very nearly to six hundred dollars is already at hand for such a work.

The question of normal work was taken up and the executive committee was appointed to co-operate with a similar committee from the Sunday-school in the preparation of a normal course. The president defined normal work as the training of teachers to teach. The vice-president suggested that this work is done by correspondence by other denominations and that we can do it as well or better than they. The parliamentary programs were ordered continued in the Quarterly.

The recommendation of the First Presidency of the church, touching library work, was taken up, and a committee of three, consisting of S. A. Burgess, Walter W. Smith, and Altha Deam, was appointed to confer with similar committees from the Sunday-school Convention and General Conference to perfect a plan for concerted library work.

The question of holding a midsummer reunion was left with the executive committee.

Following the reading of the minutes, adjournment was had. The President declared that the convention had been almost unique because of the "unanimity of spirit."

The assembly sang, in conclusion, "O give us a parting blessing."

Sunday-School Convention

SUMMARY OF BUSINESS.

Reports of officers; treasurer's report showing a balance in treasury of $3,441.29; secretary's report showing a total enrollment of 20,919.

Institute and normal work provided for during the coming year.

$1,000 donated to Graceland College for the equipment of a manual training school.

$1,000 donated to the sanitarium.

Executive committee authorized to provide compensation for editorial work on Exponent.

$400 appropriated for expenses of the association.

The General Sunday-school Association held its first session, according to previous announcement, at 2 p. m. April 3. Meeting was called to order by the General Superintendent, T. A. Hougas. No. 153, Zion's Praises, was sung; prayer by Bro. F. G. Pitt, followed by the singing of No. 66.

Report of credentials committee was read, and a motion to approve was lost. A motion to adopt the report, excluding a recommendation to allow a certain school to be represented, which had failed to properly elect its delegates, and a statement touching another school, prevailed. A motion to refer the recommendation and request back to the committee, was lost.

The secretary, Bro. D. J. Krahl, selected Estella Wight and J. M. Terry as assistants, and the nominations were confirmed.

A motion to adopt the recommendation of the credential committee, aforementioned, was lost. It was then moved and carried, "that it is the sense of this convention that it has not the right to select delegates to itself."

Bro. F. G. Pitt was chosen chorister, and permitted to select the organist and assistants. He named Sr. May Skinner as organist. The chair was authorized to appoint ushers, and to select some one to assist him in presiding, in the absence of the first and second assistant superintendents. He chose J. A. Gunsolley to assist him.

The general superintendent's report was read and made part of the minutes. The report of the treasurer, John Smith, showed a balance on hand April 1, 1906, of $3,139.35; received, $4,589.37; total receipts and balance on hand, $7,728.72; expenditures, $4,287.43; on hand March 31, 1907, $3,441.29. The report was referred to an auditing committee appointed by the chair, as also was the financial account contained in the librarian's report, which was read and spread upon the minutes.

Reports were received from the home department superintendent and the secretary. The tabulated statement of the secretary is given below.

The chair announced as auditing committee: E. H. Fisher, James Yates, and J. L. Butterworth.

Reports were received from Sr. Anna Salyards, editor of the Quarterly, and from J. A. Gunsolley, field-worker.

It was moved and carried that the suggestion contained in the report of the Superintendent with reference to an annual institute to be held in connection with the Religio Society, be taken up for consideration. A portion of the report was read as follows: "We would think it profitable to hold an annual institute in connection with the Religio Society at such central point as might offer the necessary conveniences, something on the plan of the inter-state institutes held a few years ago. They could be located at different places from year to year, so as to accommodate the greatest number."

New districts: Hawaiian Mission, Central and Western Michigan, North Dakota, Portland, Oregon.
 Total 1905: 56 districts, 486 schools, 20,459 members; net gain, 5 districts, 15 schools, 433 members.
 Total 1906: 61 districts, 501 schools, 20,919 members.

It was moved "that we look upon the holding of a Sunday-school institute with favor, and authorize the executive committee to provide therefor, if in their wisdom they think it advisable during the coming year."

It was moved and seconded "that we postpone further consideration of this question until after we have had a half-hour's discussion of normal work, and that we select Bro. Walter Smith and Bro. J. A. Gunsolley to use that half-hour, designating eight o'clock to-night as the time in which to give us an exposition of normal work."

A motion to adjourn to 7.30 was lost.

It was then moved to amend the motion to defer by inserting the name of Bro. Carmichael. The amendment and motion as amended prevailed, and the convention adjourned till 7:30 p. m.

At the evening session, the courtesies of the floor were, by motion, extended to all visitors during all sessions of the convention.

A report from Bro. G. J. Waller, in charge of Hawaii Territory, and one from Frederick A. Smith, in charge of the Southern Mission, were read and spread upon the minutes. At eight o'clock, as previously provided for, the discussion of normal work was taken up and briefly presented by Brn. W. W. Smith, J. A. Gunsolley, and A. Carmichael. The difference between normal work and institute work was explained, and a motion prevailed "that the executive board of our association be instructed to confer with the committee appointed by the Religio to examine into the practicability of this normal work, and to act."

The motion favoring the holding of a Sunday-school institute was amended by pluralizing the word institute, and then carried.

APRIL 5.

At nine o'clock the convention assembled for prayer-service. The meeting was in charge of M. H. Siegfried and W. H. Robinson.

At ten o'clock business was resumed. Additional report from credentials committee recommending that J. B. Wildermuth be added to the delegates, it having been shown that he was properly chosen, but his name omitted from the list, was adopted.

Report from Bro. J. W. Wight on work in his field was received.

The librarian's report was called up, and the whole report read. It was moved and carried that a committee of three be appointed to officially notify the Presidency and Twelve that the convention was in session, and ready to receive any suggestions or communications. Committee appointed was D. A. Anderson, O. L. James, and Hale Smith. The matter of merging the libraries of the auxiliaries and the church was by motion taken up, and a motion to defer further consideration of the matter until after the election of officers prevailed.

The following motion was carried: "Moved that it is the sense of this body that the rule of time limit will not apply to documents on the table contained in reports, etc., but that they will be considered the property of the body."

After considerable discussion, the following resolution was adopted by a vote of 86 for, 30 against:

Whereas, Graceland College is in need of, and it is now proposed to add an industrial department, including manual training; and,

Whereas, The financial condition of the General Sunday-School Association is such that it can easily aid in this laudable cause, be it

Resolved, That we make a donation of one thousand dollars to the college for the equipment of the manual training department.

Report of committee to audit treasurer's report, and financial report of librarian, was adopted.

It was moved that "hereafter we request all persons spending money for the association to produce vouchers therefor." Motion prevailed, a motion to lay on the table having been lost.

The superintendent was instructed by motion to hereafter appoint an auditing committee in sufficient time to have the auditing done previous to the convening of the convention.

2 p. m. After the opening exercises a report was read from the Quarterly revising committee. At the time set for that work, the matter of electing officers was taken up. The election resulted as follows: Superintendent, T. A. Hougas; first assistant superintendent, W. N. Robinson; second assistant superintendent, E. H. Fisher; secretary, D. J. Krahl; librarian, Sr. Lucina Etzenhouser; treasurer, John Smith; superintendent of home class department, Sr. T. A. Hougas.

A communication from the Twelve was read. A Quarterly revising committee was elected, as follows: R. S. Salyards, John Smith, Heman C. Smith.

A communication from the Religio Society was read, touching library work; and a committee of three was provided for to co-operate with similar committee from the Religio and church in formulating a plan for concerted library work. The executive committee was empowered to arrange class books and record books.

The assembly voted a donation of one thousand dollars to the sanitarium.

Evening session. Wallace Robinson in charge. The following communication was received from the First Presidency:

To the General Sunday-school Association Assembled: The committee authorized by you to confer with and receive suggestions from the Presidency has consulted with the Presidency, and we desire to say that we have no suggestions to offer at present.

Hoping that the work of the association may expand and grow rapidly during the coming year, and exercise a still broader and deeper influence in the world for good, we are,

Faternally yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 5, 1907.

The portion of the general superintendent's report relating to editorial work on the Exponent hitherto done gratuitously, suggesting the necessity of sooner or later providing compensation for editors, was read and considered. By motion the executive committee was authorized to provide for this contingency when it arises.

Moved that the sum of three hundred dollars be appropriated for the expenses of the association. The motion was amended by inserting "four hundred" instead of "three hundred." Motion as amended prevailed.

"Resolved, That hereafter, prior to the convening of the convention, the secretary shall have printed that part of the credential report which gives the names of the districts, delegates, and number of votes, and that the number to be printed be about two hundred and fifty." Motion to adopt above resolution was lost.

A matter presented from the Kewanee District in regard to whether or not in making up the average attendance, visitors should be counted, was considered. It was moved and seconded to leave this question to the executives of the association, they to have the answer printed in the Exponent, and other places where it might be deemed wise. Motion prevailed.

Heman C. Smith tendered his resignation as one of the revising committee, and the resignation was accepted. Duncan Campbell was chosen to fill the vacancy.

General superintendent announced as committee on library work, appointed to confer with the library committee from the the Religio, and also one which it is anticipated will be appointed by the conference: Sr. L. Etzenhouser, W. N. Robinson, D. J. Krahl.

Minutes read, and convention adjourned. Benediction by President R. C. Evans.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

We are told, and it is written, that marriage is "ordained of God," but in order to preserve its sanctity, and to justify God as its author, it should be subject to limitations and environments as will vindicate his character for wisdom and for love. Can "marriage" then be made, or become, at any time a failure under any circumstances, and what is to be understood by the term; and what discussion or safe conclusion from a comprehensive, truthful, and godly point of view is possible to be had of the question, affecting as it does in such an important way our interests, welfare, and happiness.

"Marriage," as defined by the law of the land and the law of the church, consists in the "union of the sexes" from a purely physical interpretation generally speaking, and subject only to such imperfect and unsafe limitations as the wisdom or unwisdom of the state or church has yet counseled or provided.

A man and woman who would bind themselves together in a business life partnership that could only be dissolved by disaster equal to or worse than death, without great care, study of all the possibilities involved, and an understanding of laws governing their future interests, would not only be deemed lacking in wisdom but foolish and stupid to the limit of possibility. And yet, and yet, marriages are contracted, indorsed, and consummated by the state and the church every day and every hour, denuded and divorced from nearly every condition which makes happiness and success a possibility.

The necessity for doing something to check the evil of divorce and avoid the necessity of the courts working overtime to separate the multitude of "married" folks, yearning for freedom and comparative immunity from past mistakes—real or fancied, seems to have awakened many virtuous people to the fact only that the horse is stolen because the stable was left unlocked, and safety unprovided for until the consequences become the method by which we are awakened to the consciousness of disaster.

That anything like a "cure" for the evils that exist in families and society to-day through legislation, penalties, or prohibition of divorce, alone; is, to the mind of the writer, a mistake.

Divorce court proceedings are generally an unprofitable, uncanny, and undesirable public spectacle, and looks to the eye of the respectable and well-trained orthodox mind as a thing to be avoided when reputation is valued. But we shall be bold and truthful enough to say that we have seen things "sub rosa" and under cover of roof and shadow of walls "called" or denominated "home" that are worse than that,—more demoralizing to principals, to children, and to society than is seen in the public effect of cause or causes hidden and covered hitherto from public and open outbreak.

When a man is stricken with fever or covered with boils or carbuncles we superficially say "The man is sick." True, but he is not as sick as he was before fever or boils appeared. These are only signs to the ignorant observer of danger or disaster. It was his first notice or consciousness of anything wrong. Without fever or boils the man was to him "all right." As a matter of fact known to those who seek for and find cause for happenings, the man is getting well or attempting to do so, and Nature has undertaken a remedial effort to get the trouble outside and away from the man.

The old "scientific," "orthodox," "respectable" idea and practice of repression, in "materia medica," of knocking the appearance of things on the head and driving them back into the system is, we are thankful to observe, under analysis and in many quarters disapproved.

The principal danger that threatened the individual or society does not have its beginnings in a divorce court. You may put a cap over the sewer, but the odor and disease is still below and will break through in spite of "society's" ban, and perhaps continue to explode and blow off the cap betimes and reveal what is going on under the surface.

The term incompatibility may and does serve too often in divorce proceedings to cover lust, unlawful desire, lack of forbearance, just and kindly disposition, etc. But it sometimes means more than that. It may mean in addition or as a preface to sexual crime not only entire dissimilarity of ethical, social, or religious interest or habit, but hatred, abuse, lying, refusal to work or provide, drunkenness, starvation, slow deaths, and an almost total eclipse of life's privileges or enjoyments under anything like normal conditions for one or the other party.

There is no man or woman living but that will give cause at times for just criticism of conduct. No husband or wife exists but that both or either are at times at fault,—but the one-sided thing is the thing in marriage and life to be guarded against and prevented by other means than suffering and divorce.

"Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." The unbeliever may be something other than irreligious. He may be an unbeliever in theory and practice with pretty nearly everything that savors of character or goodness, and under a disguise of superficial comeliness possess a character calculated to make life a hell for the party at the other side of the "yoke." How can two walk together? They do not. She, for example, has learned to grow and climb in the scale of character. He sits down at the top of the toboggan and slides down—in spite of tears and protests—to the street, the saloon, the gambler's den, and as fast and as far away from her as his devilish ingenuity will allow; and stopping at the one or two points at which society, or the church, has made emphasis and placed the bar of respectability or association.

So far as the authority based upon the Scriptures held to be sacred or of divine injunction relating to marriage and divorce is concerned, no exhaustive presentation of personal opinion is at present practicable or possible, but we will have to circumscribe by saying that it seems to us that advice, counsel, or command prescribing a rule of conduct in ALL cases is not clearly enough expressed to warrant acceptance of the diction of the church of Rome or those who dwell too nearly under the shadow of her traditions; and that if "justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne," and we are to have an expression of this in the dealings of the church or kingdom of God restored,—if the yoke of Christ "is easy" and his "burden light," then it is wrong to deny mercy and justice and impose nameless penalty and unspeakable punishment for mistakes of innocence or ignorance entirely void of evil intent.

Ought it not to be true in our judgment and demonstration that every man (and every woman for that matter) "bear his own burden," and not impose by false construction or interpretation of an authority the cruel and unreasonable load of a life torture and unequal yoke and "burden" of an association fraught with not only distress but of disaster to the body and mind of not only innocent principals—but of offspring of the unholy and undesired partnership?

The aggregate of Bible testimony and of things reported as authoritative and binding to-day that were written for the condemnation of pious adulterers and frauds in Moses' time need thought and adjustment before hasty and unjust conclusions are settled upon. We are barely saved from the injustice of Romish decretal by what Matthew happened to say on this matter and that which the manuscript collectors have gotten into the canon. But of all that Christ did say and that may not be reported upon this question but may be reserved until the other ninety-nine parts of those things which "Jesus truly said and did among his disciples" or—better still—may state to his church, is had, we may do well and please God as well if we make haste to go slowly in judgment.

The young people—and old—should be educated into ways of truth and justice; and the church of God be led toward a capacity to lead and teach the world the truth, which is defined to be "a knowledge of things as they were, and are, and are to come." (Doctrine and Covenants 90:4.)

The truth was once to us, for example, that God commenced to build this world on Monday and finished it the next Sunday; that a belief in plenary inspiration was essential to salvation; that God authorized all that is reported and what we once thought heresy and destructive to the disbeliever regarding heaven or hell, and the orthodox doctrines connected therewith.

"The words I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life." What did Christ mean as relating to our question as reported by Matthew? What is the difference between "putting away" as to meaning in his talk with the Pharisees and the term divorce as heterogeneously applied to modern times and conditions? What would Christ say if he were to speak to-day? That is the question for us to earnestly desire to know. What of affirmation or explanation of what men have reported of HIM?

The Spirit of truth, the genius and revelation of truth alone can settle this matter decisively with just minds in our opinion. For us then as a church as judges of those without the pale of our association, let us then as Maximillian said, "Be just, though the heavens fall," less fearful of "society" than of taking positions which future revelations will compel us to abandon.

As public instructors in defense of the highest ethical system known to the world, let the necessity of "cure" for the divorce evil be annulled by prevention through study of all law bearing upon marriage or sex association, for "sin is a transgression of the law," and the fearful extent to which we are still "sinners" is hardly thought of, much less known among the majority of the church membership as yet.

"The soul that sinneth shall die." "Sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." Is it not indeed true? First, ignorance; second, breaking of law. The provoking causes, the entering wedge, and the finished result—DEATH. Death is all around us. Does the Lord will it? Yes—and No. If obedient to law—No. If ignorant, disobedient, blind, reckless, led by passion because the state and the church does not counsel or restrain—Yes. Ye shall live (not die) by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. (See Doctrine and Covenants 93:3.) "And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, . . . and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and shall not slay them."—Doctrine and Covenants 83:3. Health, vigor, wisdom are here promised on conditions too often neglected or repudiated. Why then are we not healthy, vigorous, and wise? Of course, this reform can not receive its full fruitage in a day or a year, but I certainly believe if the church as a body commencing in 1832, could have continued a faithful observance of the counsel, the generations following up to the present, great contrast from present conditions would have resulted.

I refer to this "Word of Wisdom" only as a result of what we are said to believe and know of law by which to live more successfully and happily. Of what we do not know that would be to our advantage if known and practiced we can hardly imagine. "I have many things to say unto you, but ye can not bear them now," said the Master. Neither are we able to bear even what we have got. The truth can make us free indeed only as we continue—not stop—"in his word," and as we incorporate it in our lives.

Again. I do not believe in "race suicide" by breeding at the suggestion of a blind impulse and unholy and disastrous passion an indiscriminate, numberless offspring without thought, or care, or provision for the rights of the unborn, and thus bringing "race suicide" upon the nation by a balance of death rate of those who are mentally and physically disqualified for long and successful life. But let children be provided for with sound bodies and a glad and joyous welcome to earthly estate which parental thoughtfulness and self-denial has provided, children born and bred to live, to be useful to themselves and others. These statements are made in no palliation of the awful crimes of ignorant, fashionable, soulless, or misguided women or men who desire to shirk natural and legitimate responsibility. Children are the heritage of God to men and women, and next to that of wife and husband there can or should be no holier, safer, or purer life for a man who is a man, or a woman who is a woman. Then let the young be educated as they approach the solemn obligations of marriage vows. Let them as fully comprehend as possible that the door of entrance opens up to them a heaven or a hell; and if they would realize the best that mortals are privileged to enjoy, it can be obtained only by preparation. And the worst of disaster and the beginning of life-long sorrow and regret may stand close at, or not far away from the altar where God and the church and society seal the contract of partnership which only death, or worse, can dissolve.

As a closing word to those who have honestly made contract and have assumed the sacred obligations, we believe that divorce and separation in the church of God is of too frequent and unnecessary occurrence. There is nothing so terrible, so disastrous to a sensitive soul as divorce, especially when there are children, save one thing, and that is where conditions have obtained that force its necessity. It is true, also, that where divorce for statutory or scripture causes is permissible, remarriage has been considered to savor of unchristianlike conduct with critics whose happy and congenial home relations render them unfit as judges, and who know as little about the facts necessary to just judgment in the case as they know what the inside of hell looks like.

Often, however, the necessity is apparent and not real. For example, there has been a mistake, a mismating. The best that could have happened—perhaps—has not happened. The remedy for this, however, should not be divorce. We may illustrate also by noting for example, the case of the gospel missionary. It is possible in instances and probably true also that the gospel and church call to missionary work found the husband and wife nearly or quite on a par in intellectual development. The man enters the field of opportunity for culture, refinement, education, and social advantage and equipment from which the faithful wife and mother of children is barred by duties as sacred and important—though less brilliant or pleasant—of wife and mother. The eternal vigilance, self-sacrifice, the scanty life allowance, sickness, and a thousand and one bars to pleasure, growth, or development she has to face and endure, and her ambitions and early dreams, even, may become dulled and dwarfed by care, and before many years the matter of inequality unpleasantly thrusts itself upon the consciousness of one or both. Has there been any mistake? No, not in this case. Any other condition you could name would have in many, if not a majority of cases, made matters still worse. Suppose for instance the man has succeeded in marrying an intellectual "affinity," troubles of another character not unlikely might have occurred—to a man who has failed to appreciate the necessities that attached to a home, viz., a house, a homekeeper, a loving mother, a caretaker of his children—instead of the combination of an intellectual paragon, a musical prodigy, and a helpless and incorrigible sloven in the matter of housekeeping. No man, no Saint, no Christian, should ever forget that a good cook, a good mother, a loyal and virtuous, provident and economical wife—whether thoroughly acquainted with Tolstoi, Carlyle, Emerson, Gibson, Mozart, or not, is or may be his equal in the general survey of things. If this old world or the church were full, or had a majority of perfect men and perfect women, the case might be different; as it is, the different natures often complement each other, and that the woman is only the other side of the man because they are, or should be—and without a shadow of a regret or reservation—no longer two but one.

“Domestic happiness,” the prevention of the desire for divorce! Let us try to think of all the things necessary to this end. The restful home, a well-prepared meal, an orderly house, the results of prudent management, necessary economy, an integral or necessary outfit for domestic happiness.

What a pleasure it is to be invited into the parlor where the song and the skilled musician, and the “literary” culture and intellectual affinities congregate! How nice it is to be sure! But after a while a voice with importuning accent is raised from the regions latitudinally speaking below the chin, calling for something besides poetry, and is usually met by the patient, tired woman in the kitchen whose existence has been forgotten until our stomach called upon her for the quite necessary, but not always appreciated service.

Domestic happiness, the prevention of even desire or thought of divorce, how necessary to try to think and think soon enough—of everything or anything that will aid in permanent and right solution of the divorce question, by discovery of cause, and then the effect we deplore will vanish.

“Domestic happiness; thou only bliss of Paradise that hast survived the fall,—

Though few now taste thee, unimpaired and pure; or, tasting, long enjoy thee,— —Too infirm, or too incautious to preserve thy sweets which neglect or temper shed into thy crystal cup.”

—Burns.

Let the married people, the already obligated people, remember to be on guard against the enemy. It takes two to make a quarrel—and the natural method of treatment often leads to trial if not to disaster.

“SECRETS” also are deadly things. Avoid the apparent or real necessity for them, not only by caution in choice of life partners, but of doing things which seem almost to compel—in the interest of peace—secrecy—a private apartment of the soul where husband or wife are forbidden entrance. And lastly, a word concerning those who for some cause or causes have become pessimistic, cynical, fearful of contracting marriage alliance, preferring to “bear the ills” they have of single estate—undesirable as it may be—than “fly to those they know not of” save through acquaintance with the confidences and miseries of those of their friends in whose secrets of disappointment and dissatisfaction they have become partners. Of—or among, I would prefer to say—this class, there is to be found the young women or middle-aged who are compelled to wear the title of “old maid,” not from desire or willingly, but with the fine and exalted sense of the sacredness of such an alliance they are unwilling for the sake of a “home,” a life of absence from toil, or self-support, or other considerations,—to permit their body to be given to a contract in which the heart and the soul finds but little or altogether too meager a correspondence.

“It is not good for man to be alone”; but a lonely, single man or woman may be a far less heartbreaking spectacle than one whose ignorant or uneducated passion has prematurely forced him or her into the yoke which day and night galls the silent but proud sufferer, and from which there seems to be no alternative but to suffer on until the bitter end.

“What God hath joined” should be something like this to the man whose home is so near to heaven through love and fellowship with that wife that,—as Sam Jones has said “to think of her is to praise God.”

A STRANGE CASE.

Denver offers the latest theme for the psychologist and the alienist.

The incident which furnishes material for the scientists began six months ago. A clerk in the Southern Pacific Railroad offices in the western city called his wife over the telephone one day at noon and told her to have lunch ready for him in a few minutes, as he had his hat on and would catch the next street-car for home. He hung up the receiver, left the room apparently to go home and—disappeared. From that moment all trace of him was lost. Nathum Wing was a man of excellent habits, his business affairs were in sound condition, he was a valued employe, his future seemed bright, his home life was happy. No one could suggest a motive for his disappearance. They searched the city and the whole neighborhood. Special detectives were employed. The efforts to find the slightest clue were futile. After a while Mrs. Wing concluding that it would be useless to hunt further and thinking that perhaps her husband had met with death in some strange way, sold their home, and she and the child went to Boston. It was there her parents lived.

Now comes the sequel. A few days ago a young clerk in a railroad office in New Orleans asked a fellow clerk to tell him where Columbine Street was. It was on Columbine Street in Denver that his home had been. When he was told that he was in New Orleans he would not believe it. He was finally convinced. He had come to the New Orleans office a few weeks previously, had applied for a position, had obtained it, and had started to work. He remembered nothing of all this. He could remember only the fact that he had left his desk at lunch time and had started out to board a street-car to go to his home. As for the six months that intervened, his mind was blank. He lost his faculties suddenly in Denver and regained them a half year later just as suddenly in New Orleans. After much effort he got into communication with his wife in Boston, and by this time they are together once more.

What can be more fascinating to the student than the mysteries of the human brain? Here in the case of Nathum Wing is a psychic phenomenon of marvelous interest. His story is striking as a narrative; as an episode of scientific value it is of exceptional weight. An analysis of all the elements and facts that resulted in the six months of total forgetfulness would be profitable and diverting.—Louisville Courier Journal.

STORY OF PHOTOGRAPHY.

To-day one might make the most chimerical statement about photography without creating any particular sensation, so notable have been the known achievements in the science.

And yet it is only sixty-eight years—a period in the memory of men to-day active in photography—since Louis Daguerre was all but placed in a French insane asylum because he persisted that his shadow image could be caught and held on a piece of silver plate.

It brings like a cold flash across our sensibilities the weird tales of Salem witchcraft.

Does it not sound more like a fable of the early ages than a cold statement of facts that in one of the recent cup races, a snapshot photograph was made in the twelve hundredth part of a second showing distinctly the spokes of an automobile going at the rate of eighty miles an hour?

Sixty-six years ago, in the blazing heat of a noon-day summer sun, Miss Anna Catherine Draper, her face covered with white metallic powder to give it reflective quality, sat absolutely motionless for six minutes on the roof of Theodore Winthrop's Chrysalis College, New York City, while her brother, Doctor John W. Draper, a professor of chemistry, made the first successful photograph ever taken in the United States.

There is a picture in the kodak exhibition now being held in the New Casino, 1023 Broadway, of a humming-bird in flight. Who can say that he ever distinguished the detail of the wing of a humming-bird when poised before a flower? Yet every feather is shown in the picture taken in one one-thousandth of a second, which is one million seven hundred and twenty thousandths of the time that it took to take Miss Draper's photograph.

And the picture of the quaint New York lass is a daguerreotype, a quaint blur of femininity, crude and rough in finish. Beside it, the humming-bird on the wing is as natural as the sunbeam, seemingly too, just as naturally elusive to the grasp.—Exchange.

For Love's Sake.

O be kind! O be kind!
Love is dull and life is blind;
Only death is open-eyed.
O how bitter by the side
Of an open grave to say,
"Give me back my yesterday!"

O be kind! O be kind!
Touch the harp, and you may find
That your fingers, rude, unskilled,
Have the soul of music killed.
Hearts are harps—O gently sweep
All their strings, lest you weep.

O be kind! O be kind!
Soon the tangle will unwind;
We are all so near to go
Through the grassy door, and low;
Speak them soft and tenderly,
These who fare that road with thee.

—Anna Burnham Bryant.

The Brightness of Love.

Jacob Riis, whom President Roosevelt once pronounced the most useful citizen of New York City, tells in his autobiography his own love-story. He had been in this country a good while and was very lonely and homesick. He hoped for a letter from the Old World. Every day, when the letter-carrier came up the street, his hopes rose high until he had passed. Years went by and the letter he longed for never came. Finally, one autumn day, he went to his office and found it lying there. The instant he saw it he knew by the throbbing of his heart what it was. He sat as much as a quarter of an hour staring dumbly at the unopened envelope. Then he arose slowly, put it in his pocket and stumbled homeward, walking as if in a dream. He went up to his room and locked himself in. And there he read that blessed love-letter that became a part of his life, to abide for ever with light and joy and thanksgiving. "How much of sunshine," exclaims Riis, "one little letter can contain! Six years seemed all at once the merest breath of time to have waited for it. Toil, hardship, trouble—with that letter in my keep? I laughed out loud at the thought. The sound of my own voice sobered me. I knelt down and prayed long and fervently that I might strive with all my might to deserve the great happiness that had come to me." The stars were long out when his landlord, who had heard his restless walk overhead, knocked to ask if anything was the matter. He saw the light in his face when he opened the door and he took a side-long step, shading his eyes to get a better look and held out his hand.

"Wish you joy, old man," he said, heartily. "Tell us of it, will you?" And he did.

And Riis declares that the proverb, "All the world loves a lover," was realized in the days that followed, when every body seemed to understand and the whole world smiled back on him all day long. Only the other day he was lecturing in Chicago, when a woman came up and asked if he was the Riis she had traveled with on a Hamburg steamer twenty-five years before and who was going home to be married. She had never forgotten how happy he was. She and the rest of the passengers held it to be their duty toward him to warn him that "she" might not turn out as nice as he thought she was. The woman looked him all over and said, "I guess we might have spared ourselves the trouble."

This is a suggestion of what human love can do for a person in making all the sorrows and trials of life seem little and insignificant, compared to its great blessings. And yet, great and divine as it is, such a love, even at its best, is a small thing in its fullness and richness of blessing, when compared with the full revelation of the heart of the divine Savior to a human soul. When a man or a woman looks upon the Lord Jesus Christ and sees him coming from the glory of heaven to suffer and die upon the cross; beholds him rising from the grave and ascending up on high, interceding in his or her behalf and says, deep down in the consciousness of the heart, "He did it all for me; for me he bared his back to the smiters; for me he held out his hand to be nailed to the cross; it is to me he offers this undying love; for me he is fitting up heavenly mansions"—the soul that really enters into that love and knows that fellowship, has found an experience that no sickness or loss or death can ever interfere with. Oh, brother, sister, Jesus stands before you inquiring, "What wilt thou that I should do unto thee?"—Louis A. Banks.

Fulfillment.

There are hours when the message of our life seems to fail to reach an answering chord—hours when the clouds of the human rise between the delicate vision of supreme fulfillment. Then, in some moment, there is a rift, a lifted wave of cloud, and in the glorious thought of gold and blinding haze we read the meaning of our struggle out through the dark.

"Up and down the schoolroom the old master paced. His worn, thin hands clasped tightly the roll of exercises. How he had dreaded to correct them in other days; to see how little of his teaching had been of use! But now he could not bear to begin, because it was the last time. All his life, since young manhood, had been passed in this old school. He had seen many classes of boys grow up and leave to make room for others. Now, he, too, was to leave. He saw each desk peopled with a multitude of forms, some of them dear, some of them dreaded, yet all precious to memory. But next week a new master, a progressive, strong man, who would not be haunted with visions of the past, was coming. The old man sat down at the desk and buried his face in his hands. The bitterness of failure was upon him.

"Out in the yard the boys were lingering to play snowball. Their shouts were not so merry as usual, but were more boisterous. They were trying to forget how the old master's voice trembled when he told them, at the close of the session, that they were to have a new master on Monday. They had never realized before that they cared for him. They were not conscious of it now. But their boyish hearts still tingled in response to the unselfish nobility of his last words:

"He'll be a good master to you, lads; a better one than I've been—or—can be. I've tried my best with you, laddies. Now, another man is to have the chance to try his best. Help him to succeed, my boys. God bless you and him!"

"The boys were, apparently, playing ball. Each was ashamed to say to the other that he was waiting to see the master close the schoolhouse for the last time, and to receive his 'good-bye.' They knew he must finish his exercises before leaving. It seemed to take him longer than usual.

Presently a small boy climbed up on the bank and peeped in the window. When he dropped down, his ruddy face was puckered up. He looked ready to cry. Instead he made a mammoth snowball, dipped it in water, hurled it at the bad boy of the school, opposite—and burst into tears.

"'Cry-baby!' sneered some one.

"'Shut up,' roared the 'bad boy,' 'he isn't. We're all crying inside, 'cept you. Ain't ashamed, nuther.'

"The 'bad boy' picked up the ice-ball that had been thrown at him, eyed the sneerer critically, and added, in a casual tone:

"'We're all sorrier 'en the master, himself, an' I'm a-goin' to tell him so.'

"Then the 'bad boy,' having made a longer speech than the master's ferule could ever have elicited on declamation day, marched sturdily into the schoolhouse.

"At the door he paused. The old master looked up lovingly. The 'bad boy's' voice suddenly receded, leaving only an ache in his throat. He looked appealingly at the man he had come to comfort.

"'What is it, Thomas?' asked the master.

"Thomas did not answer. He stalked across the room and planted himself determinedly at his old desk. The look on his young face resembled curiously that on the master's. After him came trooping the other boys, silently. It was only the small boy who, having cried, and so being able to find his voice, explained:

"'We thought—we'd—like to—stay after school—a bit—with—you—'cause we're sorry—we can't—ever again.'

"The master rose from his chair; he looked down the roomful of boys, letting his gaze rest steadily upon each. As he looked he read love written large in each countenance. The room seemed filled with the glory of it. After a second he stretched out his arm in mute benediction; then he turned slowly and walked from the room, while the boys' heads were still bowed beneath his blessing.

"The bitterness of failure had passed."—Mary P. Denny, in Christian Home.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Frances J. Mock, Knox, Indiana, desires the prayers of the Prayer Union that she may be healed of almost total blindness, nervous prostration, and other afflictions, commencing Monday, April 15, 1907, between the hour of two and three o'clock in the afternoon.

Letter Department

COLDWATER, Michigan, March 16, 1907.

Editors Herald: We are trying to keep up action. We just returned from Knox, Indiana, where we conducted a series of meetings which for interest and attendance surpassed the services there for a number of years. Bro. Prettyman secured a printed program of subjects for the series, and sent them out broadcast. The method seemed quite satisfactory, and fine audiences listened to the presentation. A letter from that point yesterday says, "Your last effort here left an impression among the people that has not yet been equaled in years past. The people took up their Bibles, went to reading, and found what you told them to be true."

Well, the leaven is working there. We look for good results from the district reunion which will meet at Knox, August 30, and close September 9, 1907. Quite a deal of sickness of the "grip" type hereabouts. A number of deaths. We have been called to officiate in a number of funerals recently. One of the saddest was that of a young married lady, a Latter Day Saint in belief, thirty-four years of age, who burned herself so severely last Tuesday evening that she was released from suffering at five minutes of one o'clock, Wednesday morning. She was enveloped in flames from a gasoline stove, and burned, until the flesh fell from parts of the body.

Bro. George Corless, a child of the kingdom for forty-two years, nine months and five days, has also passed from our midst. The elders who have done pioneer work in the gospel through Southern Michigan will remember Bro. Corless' "latch-string hanging on the outside of his door"—gone to a joyful rest!

One by one the sands are flowing,
One by one the moments fall;
Some are coming, some are going;
Heavenly Father, grasp them all.

Spring-like weather prevails here now. The dreary season is passing. The Saints here at Coldwater are up in line; Sunday-school, Religio, and Doctrine and Covenants classes pushing along.

Ever hopeful,
S. W. L. SCOTT.

PROWERS, Colorado, March 17, 1907.

Dear Herald: I spent four weeks here, from January 28 to February 28; preached several times to interested and increasing congregations.

Attended the conference of the Eastern Colorado District the first three days of this month, and from there went home for a few days, returning here the 14th. Expect to remain for some time, as I believe I can do as much good here as any place in the district.

There is a fine Sunday-school, and regular meetings, and no trouble to get hearers to preach to.

I notice in Exponent for March the statement that there had been no Sunday-school organizations in the Eastern Colorado District the past year. I wish to say there were two new organizations; one at Burlington and one at Trinidad; but they did not get in their report in time for district convention. The weather is warm and very dry, and farmers are busy preparing the ground for the sugar-beet crop.

Hoping for a pleasant conference and a profitable year in the gospel field, I am,

In the faith,
E. F. SHUPE.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 19, 1907.

Editors Herald: I read the article in the HERALD on "Celibacy," from the pen of a Roman Catholic priest. I have been looking for some abler pen than mine to take this subject up; but have not seen anything of it in the HERALD as yet. But I see by a letter written by Bro. C. J. Hunt, that he intends to attend to this matter by and by. I shall be very glad to read it.

In gospel bonds,
N. STAMM.

BURNS, Wisconsin, March 19, 1907.

Dear Saints: I had heard a great deal about this work through my uncle, Silas Rogers, but was never thoroughly convinced until this fall. Through Sr. Quick's efforts a minister of the true gospel was sent to us; he being Bro. J. O. Dutton. I was brought up to be prejudiced against this church. I prayed for enlightenment, if Bro. Dutton was preaching the true gospel, so went and heard his course of sermons. I was baptized and so also was Sr. Lucy Tucker, October 20, 1906.

Our vicinity is very heathenish, and there are lots who still persist in calling us Mormons; but the good seed was sown and a great many went to thinking. Then again in February Bro. Dutton and Bro. W. P. Robinson came and again held a course of meetings. There was quite a discussion among the people, and there were some threats of not letting them have the schoolhouse, but through prayers and sermons they were permitted to stay. My oldest daughter and my mother were convinced, and were baptized.

My mother being an invalid, my daughter and mother received the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, at the home, then the four Saints with Brn. Dutton and Robinson partook of the Lord's supper, after which we offered our prayers, and gave in our testimony, and since have more light, and have been better able to defend our church.

Before being baptized I was in poor health, but have been blest with better health since I obeyed the gospel.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. ESTELLA POST.

MIAMI, Indian Territory, March 22, 1907.

Dear Herald: Though there is only a small band of Saints here, we are striving to live as our Master would have us, and so spread the gospel we are permitted to enjoy.

Dear Saints, allow me to ask your prayers in my behalf. I have, I am sure, as many trials as any other young Saint, and often feel that I must bend under my burden. Only recently I have been given very much to doubting; not the church, for I realize its teachings are true; not the gospel, because I can know its purity and fullness; but the Saints. Oh, how I have doubted! and how near have I come to taking the broad road, saying, "It is no use, I can't live the life of a Saint!"

It seemed that my every effort to be a true child of God was futile, and for a short time I came very near giving up as a failure.

To-day I am glad I am a Latter Day Saint, and have resolved to live the very best I can until I shall have finished my race and been called away to account for the life I have lived.

I once heard an elder in Lamoni say that it made us stronger to have doubted, but little did I ever dream that one day I should be a witness to that statement, having experienced it myself.

I am not staying at home now, and am not permitted to read the HERALD weekly, nevertheless I always think of it when I know it does go to my home and that the other members of the family enjoy it.

I read an article not very long ago on dancing, and it said among other things that it behooved us to set an example to the world worthy of imitation. I agree that we should, but it seems to me (and I am not a dancer) that there are just as bad things we might do: for instance when I see one of our elders using coffee, or tobacco. I think they might set a much better example to the world and to the church, especially the young, by letting such things strictly alone.

The use of coffee makes it easier to use tobacco, and from that it is only a step to whisky. I am neither very old or experienced, but I try to observe, and I have noted the above change in more than one boy surrounded by Christian friends and parents. It seems now that nothing can stop them; and oh, how my heart aches to see them going!

I think we need not be so adherent to one principle that we neglect all others, but should set a high standard and then try to attain it.

Your sister in Christ,
FLORENCE CATO.

EAST DIXFIELD, Maine, March 21, 1907.

Editors Herald: I came to this section of country about three weeks ago to lay away our departed sister, Abbie Newton, a loyal and faithful Saint who has "passed through the triumphal archway into the fair fields of God's paradise" to await the coming of her blessed Master who has brought to pass the redemption of the soul (and the spirit and body is the soul of man), hence the redemption of the body. She is greatly missed among the few Saints here, for she was a live Latter Day Saint, a worker, faithful in word and deed. She paid her tithing faithfully, gave her free-will offerings, and sent up to Bishop Kelley her consecrations—about all she possessed—just before she passed away. Her end was peace, and it can be truly said of her as of Sr. Gunsolley, as in Bro. Joseph Smith's sermon in HERALD, She hath done what she could and is now gathered to her fathers.

Bro. F. M. Sheehy was the first missionary to plant the work here and is kindly remembered by the Saints. U. W. Greene has also labored here and became notorious as a hunter for deer and bear around here. Bro. Greene will remember the fine deer he shot upon the hunting-grounds here and what became of it. Brn. W. H. Kelley, W. W. Blanchard, I. M. Smith, H. J. Davison, and C. H. Rich are remembered here.

I found the few Saints here scattered and needing some encouragement, and so we gave out appointments after conferring with Bro. E. E. Holman and Bro. John Towle, having obtained the Freewill Baptist church for a few services. The pastor, Reverend Pearson, was very cordial and free-hearted, opened my first meeting with prayer, and attended the second meeting—treating me in a most gentlemanly way. After our third meeting they needed the church for their own services, so we continued our meetings in the home of Bro. Towles. We had very good and attentive audiences and a spirit of inquiry was aroused in one or two. The la grippe fastened itself upon me after the appointments were out, but I was able by the help of the Master to meet my obligations, assisted also by the kindness and hospitality of Bro. and Sr. Towle, who made for me a comfortable home. May the Master reward them. I am at this writing at the home of Bro. and Sr. Lee and Susie Blanchard, who have kindly entertained me for a few days. I am waiting for an opening to be made in the snow, which has fallen about four feet on the level—in a real blizzard that has blocked the roads. I expect to get through to-morrow for home as I have an appointment at Plymouth for Sunday.

May success crown the HERALD'S mission.

R. BULLARD.

CLIMBING HILL, Iowa, March 25, 1907.

Editors Herald: This leaves me at the above place, where I have been since the evening of the 4th holding meetings every night in the village schoolhouse with the Baptist church on one side and the Methodist Episcopal people on the other. We have had fair attendance and good interest. I have had opposition, but the good Lord has blessed my efforts. I have sold here eight copies of the Book of Mormon, two of the Doctrine and Covenants, three Instructors, and three Hymnals, making sixteen books in all. Yesterday (Sunday) was a glorious day to me and to many others. I preached in the morning upon the birth of Christ, and at half past two in the afternoon I met at the river bank with a large crowd and led nine precious souls into the water and baptized them into the church and kingdom of God. We had good order, and it seemed to all to be a solemn occasion. The nine were all heads of families except two. Many more at this place are near the door of the kingdom.

I had written to Bro. Sidney Pitt to be with me yesterday, but after writing I considered the matter and concluded it would be asking too much of him, as he has been sick since the middle of January and is just getting out, and he would have to come about seventy-five miles. So I wrote him the next day not to come, for I was afraid it would be too much for him. Bro. J. M. Baker was at Sioux City, only twenty-five miles away, and I thought that he could come and help me, but he had made other arrangements for that day so could not come. So yesterday morning when I arose from my bed and looked over the day's work before me—two preaching services, nine to baptize (taking charge at the water), and the nine to confirm at the evening meeting without one of the priesthood with me—oh, it seemed more than I could do; and as I realized the responsibility that was resting upon me I felt weaker than ever before. Before starting to church in the morning I bowed before the good Father in prayer. I felt so weak as I prayed that I shed tears of sorrow and pleaded with God to be with me. I went to the schoolhouse where the people assembled, and, as I stood to tell them about the birth of our blessed Lord, the Spirit was with me, and when I went to the river I felt so free and everything moved along so nicely. I felt well in the baptizing as I stood in the cold water, and every time I raised my hand to repeat the baptismal ceremony the Spirit of the living God rested upon me. The work all seemed so sacred to me, and oh, such a peaceful waiting upon the Lord as we had!

At half-past seven we assembled at the schoolhouse. So many came that there was hardly standing room, and with nine to confirm and not one holding the priesthood there to assist, the task seemed like a large one for me. After we had our songs and prayer I seated in a row those who had been baptized and gave the audience a short talk. Then proceeded to confirm, and, dear readers, such a spirit of freedom and quietness prevailed that it seemed as though all the powers of darkness were bound. I have not language to express my feelings. After confirming them I expounded to them the gospel of Christ for one hour with great liberty. How thankful I feel that God was with me and gave me strength!

The Lord has many more souls in this place. Since the first of the month a year ago I have baptized seventy-five, sixty-six of them in my year's report. Dear brothers and sisters, I feel encouraged in the work of the Lord, and as you read these few lines I hope and pray that the same Spirit that rests on the writer will rest upon you as you read. I also pray that God will be with his Saints in conference as they meet at Lamoni. Your brother,

W. A. SMITH.

BAY CITY, Michigan, March 21, 1907.

Editors Herald: We have been led to rejoice of late through the goodness of God, and the instrumentality of his servant, Elder O. J. Hawn, who came among us some five weeks ago and revived the Saints and aroused an interest in many outsiders, causing some to obey the angel's message and unite with the church. Some of the Saints who were cold and indifferent to the work have made a new covenant and declared their intentions to do better than they have ever done before. A spirit of love and humility is brooding over the Valley Branch, a condition that was so much needed; and so we can say that we were led to rejoice.

On the 26th of February two precious souls were led into the waters of baptism, and on the 17th of March four more. These last four were fruits of the preaching of Bro. W. M. J. Bennett, of Saginaw; and so the good work is moving on. And at the confirmation of one of the young men on the 17th the Lord spoke through his servant and said that inasmuch as he would prove faithful he should be an instrument in the hand of the Lord of bringing many into the kingdom, and should declare the angel's message, and break the bread of eternal life to a dying world. And so we have been praying that God would raise up men that would assist in carrying on his work, as the fields are surely white to the harvest, but the laborers are few.

So, dear Saints, let us pray that God will send more laborers into his vineyard, and then let us all pay our tithing to support the laborers; and then the good work will roll on to victory, and Zion will be redeemed, and the Saints will be gathered in, and God be glorified.

E. S. WHITE.

PLEASANT GROVE, Utah, March 26, 1907.

Editors Herald: It is with exceeding great pleasure that I write again to the precious columns of our paper. My life has been greatly blessed with joy and happiness since my last letter, which I wrote to the HERALD one month ago. The mercy of our God is great to all who love him and seek to keep his commandments. My testimony in this glorious work is strong. God has given me a perfect speech; and, oh, the joy! I believe there are many of the Saints who have gone to God in prayer in my behalf; and God bless them everywhere. I stammered almost every word I said, and many times could not make a sound. But only through four weeks' treatment at the Bassett School, Provo, Utah, I am now permanently cured. If Bro. Peter Anderson should see this letter I would like to hear from him.

May peace rest with all the Saints at home and abroad.

Your brother in Christ,

OSCAR PETERSON.

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania, March 27, 1907.

Editors Herald: I have been laboring in and around this city since the holidays. Have been holding meeting about every night in the week, and doing all in my power for the advancement of this great latter-day work.

On Sunday I conducted the funeral-services of Bro. Adam Robertson, of Dunmore. He was a man of usefulness to this work, always on duty, attending every service possible; and now his spirit rests in the paradise of God, awaiting the morn of the first resurrection.

Last evening had the privilege of inducting seven adults into the kingdom of God, by baptism—two men and five women. The work is onward in this place. Last fall during the two months I was here I baptized twelve; three being baptized prior to that time, making twenty-two in all. So far as I can see more are likely to unite with the church ere long. So that is a comfort to the laborer, though there are many things to contend with which are not pleasant. But it is written that the battle is not to the strong nor the race to the swift, but to him that endureth unto the end; so we must renew courage and press forward unto the end, by the help of the Master.

In the above stated time have sold over sixty dollars' worth of books and papers. Could have sold more had the HERALD Office not been destroyed; but like others will look for our new publishing house to do greater work than ever, when erected. I hope the work of construction and completion will soon come to pass.

I remain your brother and colaborer for the upbuilding of Zion.

SAMUEL BROWN.

1431 Academy Street.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 30, 1907.

Editors Herald: My last letter was written from Brooklyn, New York, and now we are in Lamoni, Iowa; and by the time our friends in England are reading this we shall be in the whirl of conference business. After leaving Brooklyn on Saturday morning, February 16, we first stopped at Providence, Rhode Island. We had intended going by one of the palatial steamers which ply between the American metropolis and this port, but the awful calamity which occurred on the night of the 14th, in which about one hundred and ninety people were either drowned or frozen to death in the icy waters of the Sound, made us realize the dangers of that mode of travel in the winter-time, so we concluded to take the more rapid way of travel and go by train.

We were made welcome at the home of Bro. and Sr. Bradbury, whose genialty and hospitality have been experienced before. We also had the pleasure of taking part in the Massachusetts conference over which Bro. Sheehy and Bro. M. C. Fisher presided.

The services and meetings were heartily enjoyed and the Spirit of God was manifestly experienced by those who participated therein. While in the neighborhood we visited Fall River and New Bedford, also Attleboro. We were pleased to renew the acquaintances made on previous occasions. In this neighborhood there are a large number of Lancashire people who seem to preponderate among the huge number of British emigrants who have found a home in what are appropriately designated the New England States.

Sunday, the 24th, the writer occupied in Boston and Bro. Leggott was invited to preach in Providence.

While in Boston, the so-called "Hub" of American Society, we came perilously near getting a glimpse of American "Royalty." President Roosevelt was in the city, and was to give an address in Harvard University. Though the day was intensely cold and the occasion of the President's visit unofficial, and the place where we accidentally found ourselves in a position to see the gentleman was not advertised for the occasion, I was struck with the similarity of the eager and vulgar curiosity which was in evidence in the good-natured crowd, who while physically suffering from the biting wintry blast were sufficiently patriotic to wait and take advantage of this unexpected and promiscuous opportunity to display their loyalty to the ruler of the national destiny. And I wondered, What difference is there between this disposition in America and the disposition of the same gaping crowds of British citizens who time and again I have seen in heat and cold, in storm and sunshine, awaiting the advent of some regal pageant, upon whom they have lavished their extravagant huzzas? And I came to the conclusion that after all it was but a difference of geographical location and clothes;—the spirit is the same.

By a strange coincidence we arrived in this city on the anniversary of George Washington's birthday; the last day I spent in America two years ago it was the famous "Fourth," and we left the shores of America as the boom of cannons and cracklings of squibs and crackers bore testimony to the national appreciation of the phalanx of heroes headed by this greatest of all American soldier-statesmen. We enjoyed the ice-cream and the pleasant association of the Saints and made a sturdy effort to be pleasant amid the exuberance of feeling which hailed the day on which the star of America's national independence began its ascendancy and marked the decadence of Britain's glory in the West.

The next day we left Boston and were on our way to Buffalo; we had an experience here which we thought would teach us a lesson; we ought to have missed the train; we were late, but owing to some change which we did not understand we were in time. After an all-night ride on the train we arrived in Buffalo next morning and soon found ourselves in difficulties over the Eastern and Central times. When we thought we were soon then were we late, when we thought we were late then were we soon.

We met Bro. F. G. Pitt and were well cared for at Bro. and Sr. Schofield's. We here received the first of our English letters, and how we did eagerly read the letters from home! We then went over to Niagara and meeting with Bro. R. Etzenhouser we went for a tour around the Falls. I have seen the Falls in summer and seen the sunlight play upon the clouds of spray, and as I sat in awe and reverence looking upon this magnificent exhibition of Nature's glory, I saw visions and felt the consciousness of divine nearness surge over me; I worshiped with a profound devotion, and left that shrine feeling strangely subdued. But I have never seen anything which was so fascinating as this piternal incarnation of Nature's mystic forces. As we stood on the American side and with our backs turned to the foaming and tumbling cataract we saw all around us fantastic shapes; which were trees, shrubs, benches, huts, and other objects all covered with ice formed by the spray which had been blown by the wind. Down the ravine into which plunged the roaring, turbulent waters with their eternal dirge, shattering themselves into clouds of opalescent spray upon which the wintry sun painted its rainbow colors, they became enchained by the majestic power of the frost and were heaped into a towering mountain of solid ice. All along the frowning ledges were suspended columns of ice and countless icicles upon which the sun played in polychrome colors its gambols; and one could easily imagine that some giant fairy had made an organ of immense proportions and with the diapason roar of the seething waters mingled with the assortment of sounds whose identity was irretrievably lost, blended the whole into one magnificent Fugue.

The visit to Goat Island was like an entrance into the fairyland home of the Frost King. The jingling sleigh-bells, the prancing horses, the well-wrapped pedestrians stood out in conspicuous melody and beauty. Then we crossed the ice-bridge and scaled the ice mountain and then the ice mountain "scaled" us as we attempted the descent. We also visited the power-house on the Canadian side and saw the wonderful works of man, wherein this mighty force was harnessed to the chariot of commercial progress; and, as the water guided by carefully-built conduits plunged down steel tubes for a distance of one hundred and fifty feet, it whirled around at the tremendous velocity of two hundred and fifty revolutions per minute four or five gigantic dynamos and generated electricity which by means of aluminium cables was transferred miles away.

That evening we met the Saints at the neat little church where the Canadian were united with the American Saints, and together we worshiped in the spirit of love that bursts all national bonds and in its wide embrace unites all nations in the true brotherhood of peace. We spent a few days with the Saints in Buffalo who are making a very fine effort to establish the cause of truth in this large city under the wise and sympathetic guidance of Bro. Pitt. From this city we went down south to Sharon, Pennsylvania, where we took part in the conference of the Kirtland District. Here we met Bro. Griffiths and many others. The conference was stimulating and all seemed to be encouraged. On our way to Pittsburg by invitation we called at Youngstown and had a very pleasant visit with Bro. and Sr. Strachan. At Pittsburg we met many of the Saints and among them some from Steubenville whom we had met in the homeland—Bro. and Sr. Edwards, Rees Jenkins, and others. The outpouring of the Spirit in the conference at this place was indeed phenomenal, and came as a time of refreshing from the Lord.

From this place we traveled to Kansas City, calling on our way at Chicago; and spending but one night there, we left on Tuesday night for Kansas and on Wednesday morning, March 13, we arrived in Independence, and met with my parents, and also some of the Saints whom we had met before.

Our stay there was brief and on the following Tuesday in company with Brn. White and Sheehy we left for Lamoni, Iowa, to engage in the work of the quorum. I had to leave Bro. Leggott behind, but he was in good hands, and, Providence permitting, we shall greet each other this coming week.

To-day the sad news of the death of Bishop Taylor has just reached us, and we feel that the church in England has lost one of its most faithful and honorable representatives. Our brother has gone from us at last to his well-earned rest. We shall miss the quiet and noble figure who for many years has been in the vanguard of the church, and amid its vicissitudes and successes has ever been faithful to its interests. The history of the Reorganized Church in Great Britain will be largely a tribute to the labors of our brother and a few compeers who boldly and unswervingly stood in the breach and vindicated the name of the church when the folly and sin of its dark apostasy had dishonored it. It would be unjust to mourn our brother's triumphal entry into rest after thirty-two long years of useful toil and courageous integrity. May God grant us grace to follow the example of such noble men who knew the joy of sacrifice for right and truth.

With kind regards to all our friends at home, on behalf of Bro. Leggott and myself,
JOHN W. RUSHTON.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, March 18, 1907.

Editors Herald: As it has been some time since I have contributed anything to your valuable pages, and not being a believer in reaping all the good of others' labors and withholding the little I may be able to give, I write to-day. We have just passed through one of the severest winters in my memory. Lots of snow and drifts everywhere, and the thermometer sinking way down as if to get snug and warm. But through it all we have tried to keep warm at heart at least and attend to our duties, and have met for Sunday-school and services as usual, and accordingly have felt that reward which comes only to those earnestly striving to do the Master's work and will.

Brn. W. E. LaRue and J. J. Billings have been with us several times during the winter, doing the best they could under the circumstances, and we believe their labors have not been in vain. The work here while hindered in many ways, is perhaps in as good condition as we might hope for or expect under the present conditions. But there is yet room for much improvement with us, and not until we as Saints of God determine within ourselves to overcome self—the cravings and desires of our carnal natures—can we hope for lasting good or beneficial results. Just the thing that Satan has placed before us to hinder our way and at which we stumble and fall, are the very things to be overcome; and, overcoming, we will be strengthened and encouraged thereby to the accomplishment of greater things and the easier victory of a severe warfare.

Personally I am still striving, hoping, watching, and praying with an eye single to God's glory, marching the best I can under the existing adverse circumstances to go on unto perfection. The one object of my life is to so live that out of love and charity to my fellow men I may be of some lasting benefit to them, and secure a final reward for well-doing in a home in Zion with the redeemed of the Lord. I am praying and working to this end, dear Saints, and desire an earnest interest in your prayers as well. "Let us pray for one another."

When we stop to seriously reflect upon the conditions surrounding the Saints at the present time—the prejudice, accusations, temptations, trials, and worldly environments and delusions which so thickly beset and surround us, well may we use every endeavor to overcome self and the works of the flesh, and all evils, and well may we seek to pray for each other. Saints, the end is fast approaching, the final settlement is not so far, and with these facts at hand, Satan is marshaling his army for the overthrow of truth and the Lord's chosen people. Only through him, who is greater, can we hope to come off more than conqueror, through him who has loved us. Then let us watch and pray that ours may be the final joys of the Saints of the most high.

Still in the faith and conflict,

WALLACE A. SMALL.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, March 12, 1907.

Editors Herald: Yesterday (Sunday) was passed pleasantly here, Bro. L. G. Holloway preaching at eleven o'clock, and the writer occupying at seven in the evening. Sr. Rachel LaRue was in charge of the Sunday-school and Religio, as usual.

Our district conference and Sunday-school and Religio conventions, held a week previous, were successful and enjoyable. There were present of the general ministry Brn. J. F. Curtis, J. D. Stead, J. E. Vanderwood, A. M. Chase, Peter Anderson, E. C. Briggs, L. G. Holloway, S. D. Condit, and T. W. Chatburn. Desired unity prevailed in the business-sessions. The preaching, prayer-meeting, and sacrament-services were very enjoyable, Brn. Holloway, T. W. Chatburn, A. M. Chase, and Peter Anderson being the speakers. The program given on Friday evening by the Sunday-school and Religio associations showed the young folks to be up to date and marching on. Monday morning following four were baptized by Bro. Peter Anderson, viz.: Ingverd Peterson, John Scott, Gerald S. Ables, and Miss Frances Pierce. They were confirmed at the church by A. M. Chase, Peter Anderson, E. C. Briggs, and W. H. Kelley. Bro. Scott had been a member of the Brighamite church, but withdrew from it. He wrote several articles which were published, assigning his reasons for dissatisfaction, which were read with interest by many. Bro. Ables has been quite a prominent laborer in that church, having filled two missions to Holland in the interest of that cause. He is a man of excellent thought, a fluent talker, and gives every evidence of being sincere and devoted. His written communication read before the conference assigning reasons for the step taken is a forceful document and made a favorable impression upon those who listened to its reading. It is hardly necessary to say that Bro. Ables bids fair to be of excellent service to the cause, as well as finding a home in the true church of Christ, where he can enjoy that freedom of conscience and worship contemplated in the gospel message. Sr. Ables did not unite with the church but she has the appearance of being an excellent lady and no doubt in due time she will join with her husband in his chosen course.

The conference was a success—much the best in some respects that I have attended in Utah, which brought cheer and comfort to the Saints. Unfortunately Bro. Curtis was ailing all through the conference and since has had to undergo an operation for appendicitis. He was doing well at last account. There are signs of good being wrought among these organized lost sheep of the mountains. More are reading and thinking than hitherto. Of course those hardened in polygamy and kindred cult hang fast to their idols, absolute, as in the past, in all they propose. The belief in polygamy and kindred heresies remains the same. A prominent officer stated to-day, "We have not changed our minds in regard to polygamy." This without question is correct. Mother Grundy says they are practicing it just the same. But as she is not always reliable as a news-bearer it may be safe to take this with a few grains of salt.

Of course the Brighamites are elated over the seating of Senator Reed Smoot, some chuckling over what an easy matter it is to fool some of the people all the time.

Any one who is conversant with the spirit and genius of things here knows well that if Reed Smoot had been as hostile to polygamy as seems to have been set forth at Washington he never would have secured the seat he holds among his fellow apostles. It is explained, however, that Smoot was opposed to it in his feelings. This of course leaves the whole matter with Smoot. But when this same senator without protest, marches up twice a year and holds up his hands to sustain Joseph F. Smith, an avowed polygamist, as a prophet, however willing one may be disposed to extend a charitable side to things, there is an inconsistency here that is a regular knockout to the most gullible credulity. Let this be as it may, the political, social, and religious questions are far from being settled out here. Agitation must and will go on until things are settled right. Just how far we are from the culminating end, is hypothetical, so we wait events, and watch the grinding of the forces.

WILLIAM H. KELLEY.

ST. LOUIS, Missouri, March 31, 1907.

Saints' Herald: The more I think about it, the more strange it appears to me that intelligent Christian men and even ministers of the gospel will rise up in defense of licensing a business which they themselves acknowledge is a crime against God and humanity. Let us not forget this solemn fact, that when we license the saloon, we at the same time set a price on our sons and daughters, we say to those desiring to engage in the saloon business, Give us one hundred, five hundred, or one thousand dollars, as the case may be, and in return for same we will give you a legal right to annually debauch, ruin, and send to untimely graves one hundred thousand of our citizens, causing desolation and anguish to the widows and fatherless. The word of God is plain, "Woe to them that justify the wicked for a reward." I do not feel disposed to censure or condemn those viewing the matter differently from myself; but I do not feel disposed to say that license for an evil, either high or low, is a snare and a delusion. Let us not be deceived in this matter. God is not mocked, for whatsoever we sow that shall we also reap. It is not the speed with which you reach the goal that counts, but what you do after you get there. We are taught that after obeying the principles of the doctrine of Christ, then let us go on to perfection. If we could only learn to see that perfection meant for us to become perfect in all our actions of life, how much faster we could advance!

My hope is that my hands may be unspotted from the sins of this world. I know I am frail and weak; but by the power of God I am sure I can stand. But it behooves me to keep on the watchtower of thought at all times.

JOHN ZAHND.

SEATTLE, Washington, March 25, 1907.

Dear Herald: I can not do without you. I am isolated from the Saints most of the time. The HERALD is the comfort of our home. It comforts and strengthens me to read in the letters from the dear Saints their testimonies of healing. I know that our heavenly Father will heal those that live faithful, if it is best for them to live. Sometimes it is best for them to die. I have seen mothers pleading for God to spare the life of an infant child, and could not see why God could be so cruel as to take it from them. Dear mothers, it is hard, but our Father in heaven knows best. If that baby should grow to manhood or womanhood, it might commit the unpardonable sin. See what anguish of heart the Lord has spared you and baby by taking it while it is without sin. My prayer is that we may all have that faith and trust in our heavenly Father that we can say at all times, Thy will, O Lord, not mine, be done.

Yours in gospel bonds.

High Council. Attention!

Members of the High Council will please take notice that the quorum will be called together for business, Thursday, April 18, at ten o'clock at the Presidency's office, Atkinson Building, Lamoni, Iowa.

JOSEPH SMITH, President.

April 3, 1907.

Church Librarian.

The following donations have been made to library during this week: J. S. Roth, Grinnell, Iowa: History of Poweshiek County, Iowa.

J. D. Bennett, Lamoni, Iowa: Principles of Chemistry (Perler); Odd Fellow's Monitor and Guide (Beharrell); Magazine of Mysteries (broken volumes); HERALDS (odd numbers).

Mrs. Audientia M. Anderson, Lamoni, Iowa: Autumn Leaves, 1906, complete.

W. H. Harrison, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania: A History of the Priesthood (Manchester).

Mrs. J. H. Sheeler, Altoona, Iowa: Latter Day Saint Millennial Star, volumes 13, 6, 7; Report of Iowa State Horticultural Society, 1897; Saints' Advocate, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6; SAINTS' HERALD, volumes 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25, and 32; Spencer's Letters; Orson Pratt's Series of Pamphlets; The Messenger and Advocate, volume 1.

S. W. Condit, Logan, Utah: SAINTS' HERALD, 7 and 8 (broken volumes).

J. M. Franklin, Kidder, Missouri: Story of the World's Worship.

J. D. Jones, Sr., Kewanee, Illinois, by hand of Amos Berve: Paley's Evidences, two volumes; Welsh Hymnal; Nesbit's Mensuration; Cowper's Poems; Volney's Ruins; Welsh Compendium; Don Juan; Keith on the Globes; Algeria As It Is; Thompson's Works, volumes 2 and 4; Welsh Doctrine and Covenants; First Welsh Book of Mormon (unbound); Buchanan's Domestic Science.

S. S. Smith, Independence, Missouri: Oriental Churches, two volumes; Ad Fiden; Kitto's Dailey Bible Illustrations.

The "Saints' Harmony" credited in the HERALD of April 3 to Olive Bailey, should have been credited to Albert M. Bailey, Davis City, Iowa.

It has been asked of us to furnish a list of the books or kinds of books we need in the library. This would be almost impossible at present. It might be easier to make a list of those we do not want; but we hope before long to publish a request for some we need the most. Of course the library makes a specialty of books for or against the "Mormons," religion and science, especially archaeology.

INEZ SMITH, Assistant Librarian,

LAMONI, IOWA.

Convention Notices.

Beyond His love and care."
—Whittier.

A bright, courageous, generous spirit has gone from our ranks, and a home is shaken to its foundation.

With almost dumb lips we try to comfort the stricken family, and tell our own loss.

Our minds go back to the time when she walked with us a little way in life, and we are glad our paths met, for we found in her an example of cheerfulness, a spirit uncomplaining, a heart full of love for, and faith in her fellow creatures; hands throwing wide hospitable doors, and an unflinching trust in the God of heaven.

We hold these noble traits to be a simple epitome of what she was to her family and friends, and we desire to learn therefrom a living lesson.

Her husband has lost for a time a loving, faithful companion; her children a self-sacrificing, devoted mother; Graceland among other friends a friend indeed; honor, industry, frugality a gentle adherent, but the grave has won no victory.

We desire to record this tribute to her memory as to one deserving even more than she ever received here on earth.

May all the goodness of her life lead those left to as beautiful a record, and may they never lose sight of the hope of meeting her in the paradise of rest, is the sorrowing prayer of the Patronesses of Graceland.

Died.

CORLESS.—George Corless, oldest son of Hiram and Nancy Corless, born at Malahide, Canada West, December 4, 1826, died at Dorrance, Michigan, of apoplectic stroke, March 6, 1907. He was the oldest of nine children, three of whom survive him:—Jesse, Micager, Hiram, of Quincy,—also one step-sister, Mrs. Anna Fish, of Coldwater. Mr. Corless was married to Phebe A. Curtis, May 18, 1851. Five children were born to them,—two dying in infancy. The three remaining to mourn a father's death are Mrs. Nancy Dexter and Mrs. Vina Willard, both residents of this city, and Mr. Hiram J., living on the old homestead.

Mr. Corless was baptized into Christ, May 29, 1864, by Elder James Blakeslee, maintaining his faith and integrity in God and carefully building a character of representative manhood for the remarkable period of 42 years, 9 months, and 5 days in the cause of Christ. He officiated as a local officer in the congregation until old age rendered him incapable of fulfilling the functions of his office. The "grand old man," as he was truthfully called, has gone to a well-earned rest. Quiet and unassuming, his life was a withering rebuke to evil and a crowning benediction to all who were associated with him. He leaves to mourn his departure his faithful wife, three children, thirteen grandchildren, nine great-grandchildren, three brothers, and a host of friends and relatives. He was a resident of Branch County seventy years, having come and settled here when ten years of age. Six grandsons acted as pall bearers. The funeral occurred Sunday, March 10, from the Saints' Chapel, Elder S. W. L. Scott preaching the sermon to an audience which taxed the capacity of the church. He was laid to rest in the Quincy Cemetery to await the reward of the just.

BUTLER.—Jason Robbins Butler was born January 17, 1834, in Rockland, Maine. Died February 26, 1907. Was married to Miss Mary Catherine Fields in November 1863, of which union eleven children were born, of whom nine remain, with seventeen grandchildren to mourn the loss of their father. He united with the church August 3, 1869; was always strong in the faith; was a teacher for some years, and then was ordained a priest in the Rosetta Branch, which office he filled until death. Funeral-sermon by Elder C. E. Aldrich.

WOOD.—February 28, 1907, near Davis City, Iowa, Ralph, son of Bro. Douglas and Sr. Chloe Wood. Born May 13, 1893, and passed to the life beyond at the age of 13 years, 9 months, and 15 days. Funeral from Greenville chapel, March 1, 1907, under charge of Nephil Lovell; sermon by Robert M. Elvin, interment in the McLain graveyard. He was a student of Davis City high school. The professor and students were present at the laying away of this promising, noble, young man.

SWALEN.—At Oskaloosa, Iowa, March 13, 1907, Sr. Elizabeth Swalen of paralysis. She was born November 20, 1820, at Lebanon, Pennsylvania. She united with the church March 29, 1892, at Oskaloosa, Iowa, being baptized by William R. Brown; and has held to the faith to the time of death. Funeral services held at the Methodist church, Reverend J. W. Somerville in charge.

SQUIRES.—Wiley W. Squires departed this life August 9, 1906, at Terrell, Texas. He was born May 25, 1828 in Jones County, Georgia. Baptized into the church April 23, 1868, in Santa Rosa County, Florida. Was ordained an elder August 6, 1870. He leaves a widow and several children to mourn their loss.

LANNING.—At St. Joseph, Missouri, Ruby A., infant child of Isaac N. and Lillie M. Lanning. Born August 20, 1906; died March 18, 1907. Funeral-services by Marcus Shaw.

RHOADES.—John W. was born February 29, 1844. Enlisted in the service of his country on the first call for volunteers in 1861. Re-enlisted in 1864, from which he received an honorable discharge. Married to Mary Ann Rhoades January 10, 1867. Of this union four children were born, three of whom remain to mourn, with his widow, also five grandchildren. United with the church August 22, 1890, since which time he has lived a humble and consistent Christian life. Died February 19, 1907. Sermon by I. N. Roberts, at Saints' church, near Sinking Springs, Ohio.

SHERMAN.—Ada Sherman, daughter of Bro. and Sr. G. W. Sherman, died March 7, 1907, leaving four brothers, father, mother, and many relatives and friends to mourn. Sr. Ada was 20 years, 10 months, and 22 days old. She united with the church several years ago, and has been a faithful member in the church, and also in the Sunday-school and Religio. She was always ready and willing to do what she could for the welfare of the church, and was loved by all who knew her. No elders were present, so her father gave a short talk at the funeral.

DALTON.—This will inform the readers of the HERALD that Sr. Mary Dalton died of pneumonia, March 7, 1907. She was born in Kentucky, September 5, 1832. She is resting in the cemetery some two miles northwest of the town of Mitchell, Nebraska. Funeral-services conducted near by, Bro. D. W. Shirk being called upon to give the last consoling words. The neighbors showed no little kindness during the illness, which was brief. She was baptized by Bro. S. D. Payne. "Blessed are they that die in the Lord."

Japan as an Industrial Competitor.

With all of Japan's ambition she is sadly handicapped by the fact that her labor is inefficient and by her lack of raw materials. Though the price of labor in Japan is low, its limited efficiency compared with the efficiency of labor in countries where much higher wages are paid makes it very expensive labor; so that, in many avenues, it is not the cheapest, but among the most costly labor in the world. Men who have made a study of industrial conditions in the island empire say that Japanese labor is often both incompetent and wasteful. The average Japanese workman is not only a rather poor workman, but indifferent to his own incompetence, and destitute of ambition to remedy it, and he has little notion of the value of time. As compared with American skilled workmen, it has been estimated that the ratio of Japanese efficiency in labor is about four to one. If American industry has any serious future competitor in Asia it is more likely to be China than Japan. China has an immense amount of wealth, her people are "industrious, reliable, law-abiding, good humored, capable, and tolerant." Her merchants have the highest integrity, and are among the best and shrewdest in the world. The country itself has almost limitless potentialities for development; so that she has a combination of assets which if properly developed and directed has tremendous possibilities.

American and European labor has little to fear from the growth and development of Eastern industry. On the contrary, the more that modern industry can be encouraged in the East the more will the purchasing power and the wants increase, and the standards of the Asiatic rise. The more that these grow the more are the possibilities at hand for the consumption of the white man's increasing surplus of industrial products, and thus will the men of the East be of much advantage to the men of the West.

The present and future need of Asia is undoubtedly not the simple life but more wants. Her aim to follow Western methods carries with it consequent greater wants. These greater wants will protect the Western wage-earner, and will not only save him from the ill effects of cheap labor competition, but will open out a vast, if not endless and enduring, market for many of the white man's products that, with his superbly skilled labor, he can produce better and cheaper than the Asiatic will be able to produce for many generations.—From "Is industrial Japan likely to menace the American wage-earner?" by Harris Weinstock, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for April.

The Radiant Christ.

The new religion lies in being kind;
Faith works for men where once it knelt to pray.
Faith knows but hope where once it knew despair.
Faith counts its gain where once it reckoned loss.
Ascending paths its patient feet have trod
Man looks within and finds salvation there.
Release the suffering Savior from the cross
And give the waiting world its radiant God!
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in the Delineator for April.

Into each life some rain must fall,
Some days must be dark and dreary.—Longfellow.

"A rogue is a rogue, a scoundrel is a scoundrel, a thief is a thief, a criminal is a criminal, and a law-breaker is a lawbreaker, whether he wears the toga of the chief ruler of the nation or of the senator, the ermine of the judge, or badge of the sheriff, the dress-coat of the religious leader and preacher or the layman, the garb of the artist or the artisan, the toil-stained work-a-day clothes of the laborer or the lime-and soil-marked overalls and jumper of the hod-carrier and the railway shoveler, or the dress-coat and white vest of the business man and the man about town; it is the act of the man within the clothing, and in his standing in community which mark him as an honest, law-abiding man, or a dishonest, law-defying, lawbreaking being unworthy the name."

General Conference

APRIL 10.

The morning prayer-service was in charge of Elders John Moore and William Lewis.

At 11 o'clock Elder L. E. Hills was the speaker, assisted by Elder James Kelley.

Business convened at 2 o'clock with President Joseph Smith in the chair. After the opening song, Elder U. W. Greene offered prayer.

The Bishopric reported on the offer of the New South Wales conference to turn the Gospel Standard over to the church, which was referred to them. They advised the acceptance of the offer and their report was adopted. The appointment by the New South Wales District of four men for the Board of Publication of the Gospel Standard was confirmed, with the addition of the name of Bishop George Lewis.

A report from the First Quorum of Seventy was read. They reported a total of 6,843 sermons and 368 baptisms; 37 members present. Their report contained the following resolution on the subject of secret societies:

Resolved, That as so-called secret societies and secret orders are held in varying estimation, both within and without the church, lines of distinction between them difficult to make, and wherever made in all probability unsatisfactory, we therefore feel that they should be classified as human institutions, while the gospel is divine. Be it further

Resolved, That as the gospel will answer every purpose or end the virtues of any or all these combined could, that we commend the gospel alone as sufficient, and that we entreat all the membership of the church to apply all their time, means, and energy to the gospel and its work rather than to distribute effort between it and other movements that as organizations are not part of it, and whose virtues so far as they exist are found in it.

The Eighth Quorum of Elders reported. Total number of sermons, 996; baptisms, 72.

The Fourth Quorum of Priests reported.

The sale of four lots in the city of Stockton, California, was authorized by vote of the assembly,

A communication from a joint council of the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric was read and adopted. It was as follows:

To the General Conference assembled; Greeting:

We are authorized by the joint council of the Presidency, Twelve, and the Bishopric to present to you the following as adopted by the joint council this morning.

1. We think it unwise under present conditions to remove the principal place of business from Lamoni, Iowa.

2. We recommend that the authorities provided for in the Articles of Incorporation, under the statutes of Iowa, establish other places of business as provided for in Articles of Incorporation, and to further incorporate whenever and wherever the interests of the church may require.

Respectfully submitted,

FRED'K M. SMITH, Secretary of Presidency.

FRED'K A. SMITH, Secretary of Twelve.

April 10, 1907.

The resolution of the First Quorum of Seventy, touching the question of secret societies, was taken up and discussed at considerable length. It was proposed to amend the resolution so that it would state that those societies are not of divine origin instead of the original statement that they are of human origin. Both the amendment and the original resolution failed to obtain.

The audience was enlivened with a little merriment at the close of the services when an announcement was made that a joint council of the quorums of elders would meet in the Odd Fellows' Hall.

The evening service was under the auspices of the Daughters of Zion. The meeting was in charge of Elders T. W. Williams and George Harrington. An address was made by Elbert A. Smith, and papers were read by Sr. B. C. Smith, Sr. Eunice Winn Smith, and Sr. Louise Palfrey. Solos were sung by Sr. Grace Johnson and Sr. W. N. Robinson.

APRIL 11.

The morning prayer-meeting was in charge of Elders J. C. Foss and Duncan Campbell.

At eleven o'clock W. E. LaRue was the speaker, assisted by Elder W. N. Robinson.

At two o'clock the business-meeting convened, with President Joseph Smith in the chair. The congregation sang, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning," and prayer was offered by Heman C. Smith.

The Third Quorum of Elders reported. They have preached an aggregate of 1,003 sermons and have baptized 58.

The First Quorum of Elders reported: 134 baptisms, 2,257 sermons.

The High Priests' Quorum reported a resolution as follows:

Whereas, There is a wide range of opinion in relation to the subject of marriage and divorce, and the position that the church has taken, causing much uncertainty in the manner of the execution of the law, therefore be it

Resolved, That we defer final action thereon, and a day be set apart for fasting and prayer, and that we request the Presidency of the church to present the matter to the Lord for counsel and direction.

No action was had of this recommendation.

The Fifth Quorum of Elders reported: 116 baptisms, 2,383 sermons.

The following resolution was moved:

"Resolved that we believe it to be improper for members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to hold membership in any society or order which requires the taking of oaths, or the entering into covenants or obligation to guard the secrets, purposes, or doings of its organization."

This resolution was taken up and discussed at some length, until the hour for the special business of locating the HERALD Office arrived.

A communication from the Citizens' Committee of Lamoni was read. They tendered the church subscriptions amounting to $17,467, pledged on condition that the HERALD Office be rebuilt at Lamoni.

The following resolution obtained:

"Resolved that this conference accept with appreciation the kind offer, and view with profound gratitude the friendly sentiment of the citizens of Lamoni, expressed in the citizens' petition, and hereby express our hearty thanks for the same."

Following the vote on the foregoing, the following resolution was moved and adopted:

"Moved that the authorities having the matter in charge be instructed to rebuild the HERALD Office and book-bindery at Lamoni, Iowa."

Following the acceptance of these pledges the chairman of the citizens' committee, W. A. Hopkins, addressed the audience in a feeling speech. An excellent feeling prevailed at this meeting. The vote upon the question of locating the Office was by standing vote, and nearly every person in the vast audience arose. There was not a dissenting vote. The church was packed, some of the seats having been occupied for nearly two hours before the meeting opened.

President Joseph Smith pronounced the benediction.

Elder T. W. Williams was the speaker at the evening hour, assisted by E. F. Shupe.

APRIL 12.

The morning prayer-meeting was in charge of Elders J. A. Grant and George P. Lambert.

At eleven o'clock Elder Paul M. Hanson was the speaker, assisted by Elder F. T. Mussell.

Business-meeting again convened at two o'clock with President Joseph Smith in the chair. Elder Alexander H. Smith offered prayer.

After the reading of the minutes the reading of reports was taken up and the Bishop's report was read.

The Bishop in his report stated that three hundred and three dollars had been contributed to the memorial fund created some years ago for the purpose of erecting a monument at the graves of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. The attention of the Conference being thus drawn to the unmarked graves on the hillside in Nauvoo, Elder J. W. Wight brought the matter before the assembly, and the conference took action appointing a committee to proceed to carry out the design had in mind when the fund was established. The committee elected consists of President Joseph Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, Patriarch Alexander H. Smith, Bishop George P. Lambert, and the missionary in charge of that field.

An appropriation of one thousand dollars was made for the purpose of erecting a fence and monument.

The report of the auditing committee was read and adopted.

The question of the resolution touching secret societies, carried over from the day previous, was taken up and discussed until the hour of adjournment had arrived, when it was made the special order for the following day.

The speaker at the evening hour was Elder R. M. Maloney, assisted by Elder Charles Harp.

APRIL 13.

The morning prayer-meeting was in charge of Elders W. A. McDowell and Ammon White.

Elder H. E. Moler was the speaker at the morning preaching-meeting, assisted by Elder S. K. Sorensen.

Business-meeting convened at two o'clock with President F. M. Smith in the chair.

A report from the Daughters of Zion was read. They stated that a sum of $6,923.20, exclusive of Christmas Offering, is in the hands of the Bishop for the purpose of building the children's home.

The following resolution contained in their report was adopted by the conference:

Whereas, A sufficient fund has been raised for the establishing of the children's home, and

Whereas, The Bishop has suggested to us that a committee should be appointed by the Daughters of Zion to act in conjunction with the Bishopric in the establishment of this home, whenever in their wisdom this shall be deemed advisable,

Resolved, That we ask the Conference to authorize the Daughters of Zion to appoint such committee.

The resolution touching the question of secret societies was again taken up and discussed. The following substitute was moved:

Resolved, That we recognize in the work of Christ and in the establishment of his church, all the elements and essentials necessary to the perfection of character, and that which conserves the general and special good of his children.

Resolved further, That we look with disfavor upon the practice of taking and administering oaths and pledges with penalties, except such as are provided for in the statutes of the country, whether performed within a church or without.

Elder Evan A. Davis was the speaker at 7.45 in the evening, assisted by W. M. Aylor.

APRIL 14.

Sunday morning, prayer-meeting at 8 o'clock, in charge of J. M. Terry and Ellis Short. Young people's prayer-meeting in the basement in charge of F. B. Blair. At 9.30 regular session at local Sunday-school, in charge of D. J. Krahl." At 11 o'clock J. W. Rushton spoke in the upper room, assisted by R. C. Evans; and in the lower room, F. A. Smith, assisted by I. N. White. At 2.30 P. M. Sheehy was the speaker in the upper auditorium, assisted by G. T. Griffiths; in the lower room Heman C. Smith, assisted by W. H. Kelley. At the same hour T. W. Williams preached at the Saints' Home, assisted by A. H. Parsons. At 7 p. m. preaching in the Saints' Home by Alvin Knisley, assisted by R. M. Maloney, at the Liberty Home preaching by I. M. Smith, assisted by O. H. Bailey. At 7.45 preaching at the church in the upper room by Joseph Luff, assisted by J. W. Wight. At this meeting one who was baptized in the afternoon by J. W. Wight, was confirmed by H. O. Smith and J. W. Rushton. In the basement, preaching by Peter Anderson, assisted by F. M. Sheehy.

APRIL 15.

The morning prayer-meeting was in charge of Elders Harrington, Garrett, and Bond, of Independence.

Elder Richard Baldwin was the speaker at the morning preaching-service, assisted by Elder J. C. Farnfield.

At two o'clock business-meeting convened with President Joseph Smith in the chair.

A communication from joint council of the Presidency and Twelve and Bishopric was read, as follows:

To the Conference Assembled; Greeting: We are authorized by the joint council of the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, to present to your honorable body the following preambles and resolution adopted by them:

"Whereas, The duty of conference appointees is to build up the kingdom of God and safeguard the spiritual and moral interests of the church, and

"Whereas, The present state of the commercial world is so full of questionable speculation. Therefore, be it

"Resolved that that joint council hereby expresses its disapproval of conference appointees or other officers of the church using their influence in the selling of mining or other stocks and shares."

FRED'K M. SMITH, Secretary of Presidency.

FRED'K A. SMITH, Secretary of Twelve.

A communication from the Presidency making several recommendations for ordination to the office of high priest was read.

The Second Quorum of Seventy reported a total of 6,987 sermons and 442 baptisms.

The Third Quorum of Seventy reported 124 baptisms and 2,012 sermons.

The Seven Presidents of Seventy reported the names of two selections for ordination to the office of seventy.

The committee on library work reported in part as follows:

We have held three meetings, and transmit our conclusions relative thereto for your action. A committee to be known as the Latter Day Saints' Library Commission has been appointed to formulate rules and instructions to be sent to the presiding officers of the district and local organizations of the church, Sunday-school, and Religio, and to have general charge of the matter. Those selected to act as this commission are S. A. Burgess, E. H. Fisher, and E. A. Blakeslee.

The question of secret societies was again taken up and discussed until the time of adjournment.

Elder V. M. Goodrich was the speaker at the evening hour, assisted by Elder Fred B. Farr.

APRIL 16.

The morning prayer-service was in charge of Elders William Lewis and Duncan Campbell.

Elder W. A. McDowell occupied at the morning preaching-service assisted by Elder S. S. Smith.

At two o'clock business-meeting convened with President F. M. Smith in the chair. Prayer was offered by Elder Charles Fry.

After the reading of the minutes a report was received from the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. It was adopted. The report is as follows:

To the General Conference: The undersigned as secretaries of the Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy, to whom was referred by your honorable body the question of the jurisdiction of branches, have been authorized to report to you that the question after being under consideration by the committee was decided as follows:

"It is our opinion that members of the church are under the jurisdiction of, and amenable for their conduct to, the branch and district where they are residents, temporarily or permanently, and must answer to complaints duly filed with the officers of the branch or district where they are residing at the time when the acts complained of are performed though their home and branch membership may be in some other branch.

"And further, that all church members are amenable to the branch nearest to the place where they may be residing or sojourning, and if there is no organized branch, then to the district, or general church authorities, and should answer to such local authority for their conduct."

The foregoing action was had by a vote of 58 for and 21 against.

Respectfully submitted,

FRED'K M. SMITH, Secretary Presidency,

FRED'K A. SMITH, Secretary Twelve.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 16, 1907.

The closing paragraph was amended so as to make members amenable to the branch "most convenient" to the place where they are residing.

The Second Quorum of Elders reported a total of 3,049 sermons and 140 baptisms.

The Second Quorum of Priests reported a total of 647 sermons and 34 baptisms.

Reports from the Sunday-school Association and also from the Committee on Archæology were read.

The following amendment to the substitute on the question of secret societies was proposed and adopted without debate and the substitute as amended was adopted:

Moved to amend the substitute by striking out all after the first word, "Resolved," and inserting after it the words, "that we discourage members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from holding membership in any society or order which requires the taking of oaths, or the entering into covenant or obligation to guard the secrets, purposes, or doings of its organization."

The time limit for the introduction of new business was left with the Presidency and 2.15 o'clock of April 17 was set as the limit of time allowed for the introduction of new business.

The following names presented by the Presidency and High Priests' Quorum for ordination to the office of high priests were acted upon and the ordinations approved and provided for: D. A. Anderson, Thomas U. Thomas, T. W. Chatburn, William Johnson, George Buschlin, Evan A. Davis, Samuel Twombly, H. A. McCoy, Walter W. Smith, A. R. Manchester, T. A. Hougas, and Robert J. Parker.

On the recommendation of the Seven Presidents of Seventy the ordination of O. J. Haun and Alma Booker to the office of seventy was approved.

The report of the Second Quorum of Priests was read and at their request the ordination of I. A. Monroe to the office of second councillor to the president of the quorum was authorized.

A resolution was presented declaring that when a minister is placed on the superannuated list he does not lose his title was presented but action was deferred to some future date.

The benediction was offered by President Joseph Smith.

Elder J. A. Grant was the speaker at the evening hour, assisted by Elder J. A. Tanner.

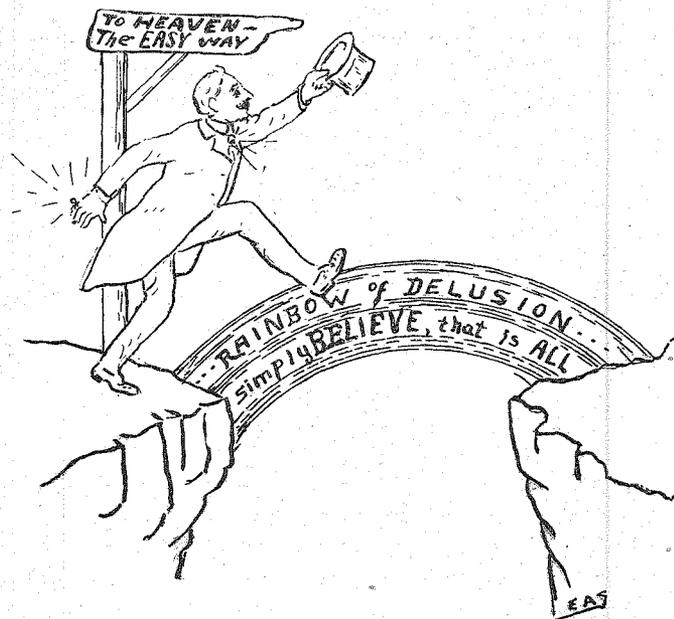

"How can a man prove his sympathy with this day? How can he try to show himself worthy of the progress that has been achieved—thanks to the teachings of Christ? The simplest, most direct way, is to show kindness to some one of the children that need kindness. There is a duty which should animate men throughout all the days and years of their lives, the duty to all of the race to which they belong."

"Now I like a logical gospel, a consistent gospel, a rational gospel. While it may be and is necessary to exercise faith on our part, God has designed to give us something to create faith in us, namely: preaching by one sent. We can not believe in anything of which we know nothing, hence our heavenly Father has commissioned men to proclaim his word—sent them to teach the way of salvation."

"The man who would break the bread of life for general distribution must be careful or in his case the Devil will reverse the miracle which was demanded of Christ and will turn his loaves into stones."

FAITH WITHOUT WORKS.

SUPERSTITION.

There is such a thing as genuine, intelligent religion. There is also a faithful counterfeit: Superstition. There is, moreover, an amalgamation of both; and it is quite evident that if all the religion of mankind, or even that which is found within the precincts of the true church, were relieved of superstition, there would be immensely less of it; yet what would be left would be immeasurably more valuable.

There is such a thing as knowing a thing to be true, and also such a thing as thinking we know a thing to be true. And if all that we actually know to be true, which would come under the head of religion, were put in one pile, and all that is thought to be known were put in another, it is a question which would be the bigger pile, although there is no question as to which would be the more valuable.

Experience as well as observation has taught me that it is a difficult thing to discern between the two. Some things that I thought I knew to be true at one time have proved to be false under the light of later developments, and I am compelled to occupy an opposite position.

Others have declared a positive knowledge of things which the arbitrament of time has stamped as only a belief; and a mistaken one at that.

Superstition is arbitrary, arrogant, and reckless, loud and positive in declaration; and often passes for the genuine among the unthinking on that account.

The genuine is modest, unobtrusive, and discreet, careful of its dignity, not as a matter of policy, but for the sake of its adherents.

Superstition manipulates our instincts. The genuine appeals to our intelligence. No matter how many outside pockets a man has for the things that he thinks he knows, let him not fail to have an inside vest-pocket for the things he knows.

H. J. DAVISON.

BY MUTUAL CONSENT.

The following short speech was delivered by President Joseph Smith at the General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa, April 9, 1907, on the occasion of the College Trustees, all of whom were nominated by members on the floor of the Conference, and elected by unanimous vote:

"Not a great while ago I was present at a conference when the matter presented of a similar character to that, was made from the stand, and it was made in this form: 'It is proposed that we sustain' such and such a man. There was not a single motion that came from the body of the people, nor an opportunity given for any man to say one word as to whether the persons were proper or not.

"And when I see a movement like that which I have witnessed this afternoon, it is a guarantee unto me that there has been no effort made to dominate the voice of the people, but that the spirit of the theocratic democracy is prevalent with us yet, and that this unity presages that should the effort be made, at any time, to dominate and influence the character of this Government of ours by any pre-laid schemes that would put the liberties of the people in jeopardy it would be met at its threshold and defeated.

"And it gives us a warrant to hope that the unity expected to finally result when Jesus comes, will find an aggregation of individualities so moved by the centralizing spirit that sedition will not be known in Israel.

"I think I voice the sentiment of the body in offering thanks to God for what we have seen."

A GOSPEL DIALOGUE.

Mrs. Reeve:

Good morning, Miss Dawson, I am glad we have met; I have long wished to see you, information to get in regard to a story told me by Miss Birch.

She says you've turned Mormon and deserted our church.

Miss Dawson:

You may call it deserting if you will, Mrs. Reeve, But I must tell you plainly I can not believe The gospel, as preached by the Reverend John Libel, For it fails to agree in most points with the Bible.

Mrs. Reeve:

Oh dear! I am horrified by this confession; I fear very much there's Satanic possession To talk so of a preacher who by God is anointed, 'Tis almost blasphemous, I am much disappointed.

Miss Dawson:

Dear friend, I am sorry you think as you do, I will prove by your Bible, I hope, ere I'm through,

That your Pastor's not called to such high vocation
By God, through a prophet, to preach full salvation.

Mrs. Reeve:

But were not the Savior's apostles all told
To teach every nation and the gospel unfold?
And has not our pastor graduated from college,
Studied theology and all sorts of knowledge?

Miss Dawson:

His zeal and his learning can not be disputed,
But all knowledge isn't gospel, this can't be refuted.
The word says, "This honor can't be taken by man,"
God calls through a prophet, for that is his plan.
If I should attempt to fill a position,
Left vacant by one who had held a commission:
My writings and acts would not be worth a straw,
I'd be clearly usurping and condemned by the law.
The apostles went forth without silver or gold,
No shoes on their feet, to seek lambs for the fold.
Christ said, "You'll be hated by all men for me."
Are your preachers hated? That they are not you'll agree.

Just look at some men in the pulpit to-day,
They would not be found preaching unless for the pay.
They are called by the people, and the fact I deplore,
They go from "Dan to Beersheba" for a few dollars more.
And those gospel laws that our Father has made,
Your people don't follow, but aside they are laid;
Baptizing in water, laying on of the hands,
Saving ordinances, both, which the Savior commands.

Mrs. Reeve:

But you know that Christ said to the thief on the tree,
"In Paradise to-day, thou shalt be with me."
So the point's not well taken and must be revised,
When you say, to reach heaven, we must be baptized.

Miss Dawson:

Let us go to the Bible, my good earnest friend,
God's word, of all argument should be the end.
To the law and the testimony let us speak, for it's right,
If we fail to do this, 'tis because we lack light.
Third chapter of John, and verse number five,
Christ tells Nicodemus, "No man can contrive
To enter the kingdom, whatever his merit,
Unless born of water, as well as the Spirit."
The thief said that Jesus had done nothing amiss,
Calls him his Lord, asks to share in his bliss.
The source of his knowledge, we clearly can trace,
He was a baptized believer who had fallen from grace.
In "Amos," 'tis said, and I know it is true,
Surely the Lord God nothing will do
Until he reveals it to the prophet he'll call,
To prepare his people for what may befall.
The kingdom of heaven was by violence taken
Earth then was by God's holy priesthood forsaken.
The connection was broken, God could not express
His mind, through a prophet, his people to bless.

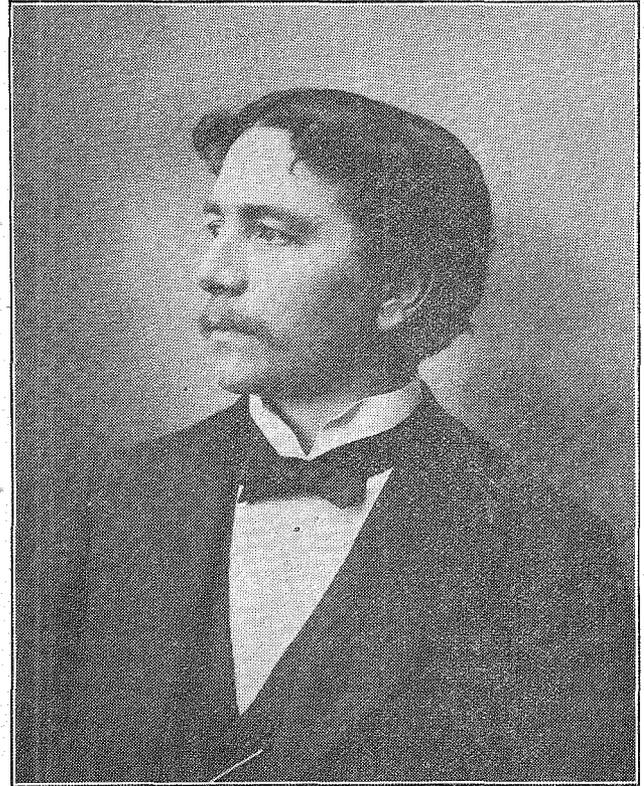

Jehovah told Daniel that in the last days
He would set up a kingdom that should stand always.
So the angel has flown and the kingdom is here,
With its gifts and its blessings, true believers to cheer.

Mrs. Reeve:

Your position, dear sister, is convincing and plain,
The Bible most surely each point does sustain.
The light's breaking in and to God be the glory,
That Miss Birch came to me with this wonderful story.

AND STILL THEY TRUST IN A REFUGE OF LIES.
(SEE ISAIAH 28:15.)

ELDER A. M. CHASE.

"A faithful witness will not lie; but a false witness will utter lies."—Proverbs 14:5. "Thou shalt not bear false witness," is the divine injunction; and those who do so must meet the consequences. This is as true of a church as of a body, as of isolated individuals. Truth can not be established by falsehood. The mission of the gospel is to be a witness, not only to the divine Sonship of the Christ, but unto all truth.

To-day, there are two witnesses claiming, under the restoration of this gospel, the right to testify before all the world. These witnesses agree that there was a restoration of the gospel in 1830. This gospel was to remain upon the earth a faithful witness. We refer to the two churches known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, and the Mormon church of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at Salt Lake City, Utah.

While these witnesses agree upon the restoration of the gospel, there is a broad disagreement upon what is truth. It is an accepted fact that the family is the basis of all good government. The family relationship was the first or fundamental form of government instituted by divine authority. Under that authority it was said that a man should leave his father and mother and cleave unto his wife, and they twain should be one flesh. Christ referred back to this as to the truth established in the beginning. In the restoration of the gospel in 1830, this was made peculiarly emphatic by the declaration of the Book of Mormon, in the second chapter of Jacob. In 1831, it was, if possible, made still more emphatic by the law of marriage as laid down in section 42 of the Doctrine and Covenants: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and cleave unto her and none else." In 1835, again this witness is placed upon the record as declaring the belief of the church, that a "man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband." Thus this witness bore a faithful testimony to the truth established in the beginning (and this testimony was given under the sanction of the prophet of the restoration.

In 1852, we behold the church with headquarters at Salt Lake City, Utah, beginning an effort to impeach the testimony of the church organized in 1830. This would not seem so peculiar, were it not that this church in Utah claims to be the one organized in 1830. But making, and under this claim that church has moved forward from that day until to-day, strenuously endeavoring to establish as a fact the thought that while these declarations concerning the marriage relationship were made by the body, and through the Prophet, yet the purpose of these declarations were mainly for stage effect. For to-day, in the Historical Record, volume 6, we find the declaration that Joseph Smith received a revelation upon the principle of plural marriage and began to teach it as early as 1831. And notwithstanding the fact that he himself is upon record as late as February 1, 1844, classing polygamy as a false and corrupt doctrine, and Eliza R. Snow and others unite in 1842 in declaring that they knew of no system of marriage save this one instituted in the beginning, of which the Doctrine and Covenants bore witness, to-day they are brought upon the stage as graciously as though this witness had never been borne, and their testimony is to the effect that they were deliberately bearing false witness to the world by these early utterances. Such being the case, what can be established by their testimony? For a faithful witness will not lie.

And, as is always the case, when work of this kind is begun, there seems to be no way out of the difficulty for them but to continue deeper and deeper in this labyrinth of deception. We need not remind the reader that this doctrine referred to above, polygamy, has brought the church into difficulty and conflict with the Government; nor that, in order to extricate themselves from this difficulty, there came through their file leader an utterance known as the Manifesto. This is a historical fact. We presume it was hoped by this Manifesto to end the conflict with the Government; and had it been given and accepted and carried out in good faith, that conflict might have so ended.

But the disclosures made before the public in the investigation of the Smoot affair at Washington have established the fact that such was not the case; for their leaders, those who pledged their word to the Government, were forced to declare that they had broken their pledges. And yet how lightly this seems to sit upon their consciences!

In the first volume of the report of the Proceedings before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate in the Matter of the Protests Against the Right of Honorable Reed Smoot, a Senator from the State of Utah to Hold His Seat, page 291, we find a new promise given to the Government by President Joseph F. Smith. The matter of present revelation has been under acceptance, and the necessity of its acceptance by the church, in order to become binding upon said body. Mr. Worthington asks the question: "Why is it that the manifesto is not printed and distributed with the other revelations contained in the Doctrine and Covenants?" Mr. Smith replies: "So far as I know, it is entirely an oversight. For myself, I never thought of it. It never occurred to me; but from the circumstance existing at this time and what I have heard in relation to the matter, it appears to me that it should be in the Doctrine and Covenants, and I shall certainly use my influence to have it put in the next edition that is published."

And on page 336 of the same volume, Senator Overman asks the question, "Is this revelation published in any of your standard works?" And Mr. Smith replies, "I informed the committee yesterday that it has been an oversight, that it had not been published in the latest edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, and that I would see to it that it should be incorporated in the next edition of the Doctrine and Covenants to meet this objection."

The chairman says, "You are speaking of the manifesto?"

Mr. Smith answers, "Yes, sir."

In the light of this promise here given, we have anxiously waited for the next edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. Whether that next edition was the one published last fall, or whether there was an earlier one between March, 1904, and the date of this last promise and the present date, we are not informed. But last fall the intelligence came to us that there had been a new edition of the Doctrine and Covenants gotten out by the church. We were at that time laboring in Southern Utah, and being in communication with President F. M. Smith who was then in Salt Lake City, we wrote him to secure and send us a copy of this latest edition.

In process of time this copy duly arrived; but when examined by us we found no date—nothing to tell us when it was published. In order that we might not misjudge them, we determined to endeavor to find the date of this publication. Accordingly we wrote from Escalante, Utah, November 17, 1906, as follows:

ESCALANTE, Utah, November 17, 1906.

THE DESERET NEWS PUB. CO.,

Salt Lake City, Utah.

Messrs: Not long since I sent a commission to a friend living in your city to purchase and send me a copy of the latest edition of your Doctrine and Covenants. I received by yesterday's mail a Doctrine and Covenants bearing your imprint but no date upon its title page. I also received a letter from my friend stating that he had called for the latest edition of the book and was assured that this was the latest. Will you kindly inform me of the date of this issue of the Doctrine and Covenants?

I inclose stamped envelope for reply. Trusting to hear from you soon I am,

Yours very respectfully,

A. M. CHASE.

November 23, we received this reply:

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, November 21, 1906.

MR. A. M. CHASE,

Henrieville, Utah.

Dear Sir: The copy of Doctrine and Covenants purchased for you by Brother F. M. Smith is the latest edition of that work. It is printed from electrotype plates made in England in 1879 the year that Apostle Orson Pratt divided the work into verses, with references. Every issue of this book since that date is identical with the edition printed in Liverpool, as they are printed from original electrotypes.

Yours truly,

DESERET NEWS BOOK STORE.

Per W. J. Lewis.

This reply not being satisfactory, in that the date that we sought was not given, we sent the following letter and in due time received reply as follows:

HENRIEVILLE, Utah, November 28, 1906.

DESERET NEWS BOOK STORE,

Salt Lake City, Utah.

Messrs: Yours of the 21st inst. came to hand the 27th inst. and contents noted. Thank you for your prompt reply, but beg to suggest that my question was, "Will you kindly inform me of the date of this issue of the Doctrine and Covenants," and your answer is simply an assurance that it is the latest edition of that work.

Will you kindly inform me of the date of your latest edition of the Doctrine and Covenants?

I have in my possession copies of various editions of this book and, with this exception, all are dated, but there is nothing in this book to show when it was printed; please answer this question or direct me where I may secure the information.

I inclose stamped envelope for reply.

Trusting that I shall hear from you soon I am,

Yours respectfully,

A. M. CHASE.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, December 5, 1906.

MR. A. M. CHASE,

Tropic, Utah.

Dear Sir: Yours of the 28th ult. is received. Will say, in reply to your question that the Doctrine and Covenants mailed to you was a reprint of the Liverpool edition of 1879. The date of the reprint is marked 1902. We will repeat that this edition is the same as that printed in 1879 as it is run off from a set of electrotype plates made at that time. There has not been one single letter changed in the book since that edition was printed in Liverpool and which was prepared by Apostle Orson Pratt.

Yours truly,

DESERET NEWS BOOK STORE.

Per W. J. Lewis.

When this reply reached us, we chanced to be stopping at the house of a certain individual, a member of the Mormon church, and upon the center-table noticed a copy of the Doctrine and Covenants. Our colaborer picked it up, and opening to the title page observed that it was one issued in 1903. Turning to our host we asked the question, "When did you purchase this Doctrine and Covenants?" The answer was, "Over a year ago." "Will you sell it to me? I want it." The answer was, "I can not spare it." But upon our suggesting that he could purchase another, and that we were willing to meet the price of the book and expense of sending for it, the ownership of the book was transferred to us, whereupon we sent the third epistle, once more trying to get at the truth of the matter, as follows:

PANGUITCH, Utah, December 8, 1906.

DESERET NEWS BOOK STORE,

Salt Lake City, Utah.

Messrs: Yours of the 5th inst. duly received and contents noted. Still I must beg to ask another question, or, perhaps, two questions. The first question is, How can this Doctrine and Covenants be the "latest edition," and the date of the reprint be 1902, when I have a copy of the same book (except that the date line has not been removed) which was purchased a year or more ago and bears date of 1903?

Of course, I understand that the editions of that book lying on the table while I write this, and bearing dates of 1890, 1901, and 1903, are all reprints from the Liverpool edition of 1879, but that has not altered the fact of their issue as separate editions. What I desire to know, is, the date of your latest issue, as you have assured me that the undated copy is of such issue; and as I already have a copy of the 1903 edition, I still desire the date of the copy in question; and as you have manifestly erred in saying it bears date of 1902, I try once more to get at the truth of the matter. Perhaps I need not quote the parable of the "unjust judge," as you will, undoubtedly, remember that bit of scripture. Trusting that this may bring an early reply, and inclosing stamped envelope for the same, I am,

In search of truth, yours,

A. M. CHASE.

Address me at Hatch, Utah.

In due time we received this reply:

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, December 12, 1906.

MR. A. M. CHASE,

Hatch, Utah.

Dear Sir: Yours of the 8th inst. was duly received. Will say, regarding the date of book you have, which was mailed from this office, that there is no use of further controversy. We have been reprinting that book for the last six or eight years, every year or two and from the same plates. We did not know until you called our attention to the fact that our printer had omitted the date in the title page. If you have the book bearing the date of 1903 the book without the date may have been printed since.

Yours truly,

DESERET NEWS BOOK STORE.

Per W. J. Lewis.

Of course this last letter is final, as we are informed that there is no use of further controversy over the date of this book, and the writer says, "If you have a book bearing the date of 1903, the book without the date may have been printed since." We reply to this that we not only have this book, but have turned it over to the HERALD Office, and, barring the possibility of another fire, expect it will be held there to satisfy those who desire to investigate this matter.

Such quibbling as this is pitiful. We can but feel sorry for our brethren, that they are in such a position that in order to hold their fort they must resort to such contemptible trickery and evasion. But it is a fact that the father of lies never was known to help his children out of difficulties which he so gladly leads them into.

We know of nothing in this world more prolific than falsehood, and when one has sought such a refuge, he may go on adding to this bulwark, until "the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place."

May God give clearness of vision to those who are following these leaders that they may open their eyes in time to see the awful abyss into which such a course must inevitably plunge them; for "all liars," "and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie," "shall have their part in that lake which burneth with fire and brimstone," is the edict and fiat of the Divine One.

A. M. CHASE.

SHALL WE CALL "BRIGHAMITES" MORMONS?

It seems a very delicate subject indeed which I have taken in hand, for reasons not a few: first, what I might call harmful, others might call advantageous; second, it is not a desirable position to take when you know many differ from your own viewpoint in any matter. I, at least, have no pleasure in such.

However, I can not withhold my voice and pen against a practice which has crept in among the Saints, more particularly among the elders. It is this: they have adopted a namesake for our good book, the Book of Mormon. But it makes me blush with shame every time I hear it applied, and that is as often as I hear one speak of the followers of Brigham Young as "Mormons." One tells his hard experiences in trying to get an opening, of his failure, and adds, "Mormonism is to blame for all this." Another says, "We repudiate the name. I would rather be called a horsethief than to be called a Mormon. The term Mormon is synonymous with polygamy."

Brethren, get your Book of Mormon, and write under the title on the cover, "Synonymous with polygamy," and take a good look at it.

I want to say here, the only doctrine that I will accept is "things as they are," and when I hear any one calling the followers of Brigham Young "Mormons," I at once ask them what they mean by it. They are not Mormons any more than I am a Mormon. I believe the Book of Mormon, but they deny it in practice. But because I believe the Book of Mormon, it does not follow that I am a Mormon, any more than that I should be a Matthew because I believe the Bible. Both Mormon and Matthew taught the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Some, even among us, have manifested great surprise when I have called them in question and told them that there was not any such thing as a Mormon. "Why," they say, "is not that Mormonism that they practice at Salt Lake?" NO! Polygamy is a plurality of wives; blood-atonement, cold-blooded murder, etc., all being the inventions of men, and devils, and an abomination in the sight of God. How any one can hold the idea that this is Mormonism, that the term Mormon is synonymous with these evils, is more than I can understand.

I will state briefly the reasons I have heard for calling the Brighamites "Mormons":

One says, "Let us call them Mormons, then the world will learn the difference between the two churches."

Others say: "They don't object to it; they call themselves the Mormon church." "It is a nickname given them by the world." "'Mormon' to the world means everything that is bad."

Please permit me to examine these strong (?) reasons with you in their order as nearly as we can.

First, how can the world get instruction out of error? And what advantage is there in calling a people so laden with sins after one of our own books? I am sure nothing would be so confusing and so apt to raise a suspicion in my mind, if I were a stranger.

Second, "they don't object to the name." Well, for the same reason we might call Satan the only begotten of the Father, even Jesus Christ. "And now, when Moses had said these words, Satan cried with a loud voice, and wept upon the earth, and commanded, saying, I am the Only Begotten, worship me." We can plainly see from the foregoing that the Devil does not object to being called Jesus Christ, but rather solicits the honor. Just so with the followers of Brigham Young. They do not object to being called by the name of a book teaching truths and virtues more precious than gold. Well might they be proud to be called "Mormons" if by any right they could claim that name. But I am proud to know that they have no lot nor part in the work of the choice seer, by right. However, they are crying with a loud voice and commanding saying, We are the true believers in the angel message, we are the original church, give us the honor of the prophet, call us by the name of the wonderful works which God commanded him for this generation and all scattered Israel; we won't object.

No, nor need we expect that they will object so long as they hold to their evil designs. They have an object in view.

Third, you say, "a nickname." Well, if a nickname, that implies that they have another, a true name. Will some one please tell me what it is? But did the world give them that name as a nickname? Well, if what they claim is true, that they are the original church as founded by Joseph Smith, by direction of God, then the name "Mormon" belongs to them as a nickname.

But the law courts of the land have decided that we are the original, or the rightful continuation of the faith and doctrine of the church founded by Joseph Smith. If this be true the "nickname" belongs to us; for it is a mistake to advocate that no one was called a Mormon until Brigham Young and party went to Utah and there went into polygamy. P. P. Pratt, one who was on the scene, says in his preface to the Voice of Warning, that the world began the cry "Mormonism" as soon as the Book of Mormon was published. So we see it is something that was given us by the world as a nickname; and nothing that we should be ashamed of either. The shame is that the Brighamites laid claim to so much that did not belong to them (nickname with the rest) that it has brought a great evil upon the way of truth.

Fourth, "everything bad." Yes, to the world, Mormon means everything that is bad, I admit.

"Well," says one, "then if it means all that is bad to the world, let's call them Mormons, by all means; we don't want the name."

I have never said that we did. I believe in having things right. Call us by our proper name, and for the same reason call others by their proper name. This is the only way we can walk blameless.

To the world, "Mormon" means just as bad written on the cover of the Book of Mormon as when applied to the people in Utah. There is no difference. When we tell of the evils of polygamy the "Mormons" are practicing, and the "Mormons" do this and that, and at the same time claim a belief in the Book of Mormon, it sounds strange to the world. Suspicion is caused always where there is confusion.

I will give one example of the evil done by reason of the misuse of the name "Mormon," as being applied to those to whom it does not belong. This instance which I will relate occurred in this State, in one of our best families.

The daughter was away from her home teaching school. One of our elders came to the neighborhood where she was teaching, and she, not knowing what denomination was holding forth, went to hear him. She heard truth that interested her; and after a thorough investigation was baptized, to the great sorrow of her relatives and friends who were in utter ignorance of the Reorganized Church, no work ever having been done in that part of the State.

Some said she had gone insane; others that the Mormons had deluded her. But she had obeyed the gospel and her eyes were opened as the promise is. She learned to have a great love for the Book of Mormon. She ventured to show it to a friend in her home when her brother, in a tone he had never before used to her, commanded her to take it away and keep it away. With a broken heart, as she saw the grief of those about her at the step she had taken, and the tears of her sister-in-law, she tried to say, "It is not what you think; this is a good book. It teaches—" But they insisted, "The name is enough; take it away."

This is a fair sample of how our good book is regarded because of the misuse and abuse of the word. It is only natural for the world to suppose that "Mormonism" is taught in the Book of Mormon. And if we teach that Mormonism is so terrible and at the same time claim the Book of Mormon as one of our standard books, it is a puzzle. The natural mind can give only one solution: "You are all tarred with the same brush." Is it any wonder that we can not get the people to hear!

"But," says one, "if they won't hear and judge us it is shame to them."

Have they kept their ears muffled all these years that they have not been able to hear? No, they have heard already. Look in our standard dictionaries and encyclopedias—"Mormon: The name of a sect in the United States, followers of one Joseph Smith."—Webster. Here is another from the Ideal Dictionary Encyclopedia, a work of forty volumes, "Mormons, or as they call themselves, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, a religious sect, founded by Joseph Smith 1830, April 6, in Fayette, Seneca County, New York, and having their headquarters for many years in Salt Lake, Utah. . . . Mormonism doctrines and practices of the Mormons—Mormons so named from the Book of Mormon.”

Show me a person with an honest heart, one who is ever on the search for truth, one who is seeking that blessing promised to those “who sit not in the seat of the scornful; nor stand in the way [walk with] sinners.” Such a one will not even dream of finding the Church of Jesus Christ among polygamists—nor will they find it there. No more could they be expected to search for it among us so long as there is the suspicion that we are the same.

Let us keep our own name, and nickname, too. Why should we let another go away with something that does not belong to them, to our own hurt?

Let us, so far as in our power, correct this wrong impression that the world holds of believing that the name belongs to others. Let us seek to exonerate, instead of degrade; let us cause to stand in its proper light the name “Mormon.” It is worth just as much as the name Paul or the name of any other of the servants of God.

The question may be raised as to what we shall call those people if not Mormons. We reply in the words of Bro. D. E. Tucker, HERALD for November 21, 1906:

“That church organization in Utah, which has taught and practiced polygamy for so many years under the name and title of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, has no right to that name. That church has departed from the Lord, his church, and the true gospel. It is properly known as Brigham Young’s church, or ‘Brighamites,’ because he was the founder, organizer, and establisher of that church and doctrine.”

PRAYER.

Read before the Fourth Quorum of Elders at the General Conference of 1907.

My own definition of the term prayer is, that form of speech which we earnestly address directly to God.

God has always demanded of his people that they pray: Pray to him, and “pray vocally and in secret” (Doctrine and Covenants 17:10); and since it was necessary for our Savior to teach his disciples (see Luke 11:1) (our former brethren,) how to pray, so I deem it necessary that we be taught how to pray; especially do I consider it incumbent upon us, the eldership who, among others, are charged with the great responsibility of “feeding the flock” and ministering to them “in spiritual things” (Doctrine and Covenants 104:7), to prepare ourselves and teach the “flock” how to pray. We should teach that God has not required that we pray, for his benefit, or to meet or satisfy any necessities of his, but it is for our good. It is not to inform him of, nor instruct him with regard to our needs, “for our Father knoweth what things we have need of, before we ask him” (Matthew 6:8), but to keep us in remembrance of our dependence upon him for everything we have and are, and everything we expect to have or be; to remind us of the great fact that we are his beneficiaries, not benefactors; and as such are under deep and abiding obligations to him; for his abundant love, mercy, and tender, parental, solicitude toward us, his oftentimes ungrateful, unappreciative children. It must be apparent to even the casual observer who attends our public services that there should be at least a few general rules by which prayer should be governed, and I think we have them. We are warned against an imitation of the “heathen’s” prayer (see Matthew 6:7, 8) for two reasons. First, he used “vain repetitions.” How often have we listened to prayers that were burdened with repetitions such as “O God” or “Our heavenly Father,” etc. While it may not be improper to use these or other expressions more than once, yet by a too frequent repetition the symmetry of the prayer is lost, and I think the Lord is displeased, for any term, phrase, or appellation that is used more than is really necessary, would, in my judgment, be a vain repetition, and Christ said “use them not.” Especially is this true of the divine appellations, since the reason assigned for calling the higher priesthood after Melchisedec was “to avoid the too frequent repetition of his [God’s] name.” (Doctrine and Covenants 104:1.) Second, the heathen’s prayer was too long. He thought he would be heard for his “much speaking.” So from this and also from observation, we conclude that long prayers are neither necessary nor beneficial; but that our prayers should be brief and express in as concise a manner as possible the feelings of the soul,—its gratitude, acknowledgments or confessions, and its most important needs. But each one may have a different idea as to the proper length of a prayer. I have held my watch before now and “timed” some of our brethren whose prayers I considered too long, and in one instance found that a good brother prayed full ten minutes. This was in a social service, and just after the time had been given over to the Saints, and it is almost needless to say that it “put a dampener” upon that meeting. Now it is hardly supposable that that brother would be willing to confess that his prayer was too long. So it is needful that we have a criterion by which to measure approximately, at least, the length of our prayers; and I think we have it.

Jesus says, “after this manner therefore pray ye.” (Matthew 6:9.) Then follows the model we call the Lord’s prayer, containing just sixty-nine (I. T.) words. What an example of brevity! and yet, if we analyze it, what a world of meaning is found to be couched in those few simple terms. To repeat it would require about one minute of time.

Next to the lengthy prayer should be placed the argumentative prayer, and it is generally too long. By "argumentative" I mean one that contains a request, then a number of reasons for making it, then another request, followed by more reasons, and so on all through the petition. In special prayers, for special purposes, it may be permissible to present reasons, but in a general sense it is superfluous. Our Father who "knoweth what things we have need of before we ask him," surely knows why we need them; and since we have been commanded "to ask" of, but nowhere commanded to argue with the Lord, it might become presumptuous in us to do so.

Then there is the historical prayer, which goes back to Adam and mentions the great events of each dispensation down to the present date inclusive. Of course this one is too long also, and does not edify unless it be like "he that speaketh in an unknown tongue edifieth himself." (1Chronicles 14:4.)

I think prayers in a prayer-meeting should, aside from expressions of praise and thankfulness, be for the common good of all, and not too selfish.

Family prayers may cover all the ground that public prayers do, and in addition present before the Lord the needs peculiar to the family.

Secret prayers should be the fervent outpourings of the soul to God in confession of, and supplication for the things peculiarly needful to the individual, which would not be wisdom to indulge in publicly, or even in the family worship.

Prayer at opening of service should be brief and confined to the needs of the hour or occasion.

Never pray a sermon.

Never pray an exhortation.

But pray.

"Pray without ceasing."—1 Thessalonians 5:17.

"Pray that ye enter not into temptation."—Matthew 26:41.

"Pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."—Luke 21:36.

Some of the offenders do and will plead "the spirit of prayer," but Paul says "the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets;" (1 Corinthians 14:32) and the principle which Paul applies to those having the "gift" of tongues, will apply to the "gift" or "spirit of prayer," and that principle is WISDOM. All the gifts must be held in subjection to it, for all are subordinate.

BOOK OF MORMON SUPPORTED BY INDIAN TRADITIONS.

The cumulative evidences in favor of the Book of Mormon, it seems to us, are becoming well-nigh sufficient to attract all classes. The heavens were opened. Angels visited the earth in its behalf. Divine power guided the translator; the buried cities and archæological researches of years have borne a silent yet forceful witness and we believe that when the traditions of the "Indian" of to-day is in accord with the Lamanites of centuries long past, it is but another link in the golden chain of facts that binds the continents, and the past and present, together, in truth revealed. So far as we know the most of the following is new, and so well authenticated that we trust it may prove of value to all defenders of the faith. The quotations following are taken from the compiled eleventh census report of 1890 by the Government, under Robert F. Parker, superintendent, and Carrol D. Wright, commissioner of labor in charge, Washington, District of Columbia.

Modoc tribe: "They believed in one God, before the white man came; that God made this country especially for them. In their old country from which they came there was a sacred mountain which all of them visited once a year, to worship and be relieved of their sins."

Jacarillas, of the Apache tribe: "Believe in a Messiah to come."

Crow tribe: "Believe in the coming of a Messiah who will re-create the earth, for the benefit of the Indians."—Ibid., p. 361.

Sioux tribe: "Look for the coming of an Indian Messiah who will cause the dead Indians to come to life, repeople the country, and restore the Indians' enjoyment."

Omaha tribe: "Have a tradition of the flood, and of an Indian finding a man in a wigwam building a big canoe, before the floods came."—Ibid., p. 377.

Piute tribe: "Their medicine-men cure by the laying on of hands, asking the good spirit to make the sick one well."—Ibid., p. 388.

Ute tribe: "Their medicine-practice 'faith cure.'"—Ibid., p. 288.

Delaware Indians: "Believed that every one has a guardian spirit, which visited them in dreams, tells them what to do, or of what may happen." They also relate that long ago, on the Atlantic coast, a young Indian had a dream before the discovery of America by white men. He related it in their temple thus. He saw large canoe with pinions (wings) coming across the great waters, containing strange people and predicted that in ten years people with white faces would come; he related this in the temple every year for ten years, and they came, in a boat as described, [Columbus and his men—writer].”—Ibid., p. 299.

So then they that are in the flesh can not please God.—St. Paul.

Western Shoshones: “Separate, or have their women to live apart from their families in a house, called the sick house (hoo-ne-gar-nee) during the monthly period, there to remain for eight to ten days. The male members of the tribe could not be induced to touch anything these women had used during the time of their retirement or enter one of these houses, believing evil would follow the breaking of an ancient custom.”—Ibid., p. 387.

Compare the last quotation with Leviticus fifteenth chapter, nineteenth to thirty-third verses inclusive, and you must conclude they obey the law there given. They also observe the flower (puberty) dance, when the girls arrive at that age. Note the Indian term “flower” here, is in accord with the term “flower” in Leviticus 15: 33.

Mescaleros, of the Apache tribe: “They believe their ideas of religion, of future punishment, of the formation of the world and creation of man, of baptism, are the ancient Indian ideas.”

“They reason from sun, moon, and stars that there is a God.”—Ibid., p. 402.

Dakota tribe: They worship the Great Spirit, as the creator of all things, and governor of the universe, the source of all good, but of no evil whatsoever. They believe in an evil spirit, constantly engaged in evil; both are eternal, but the evil spirit is subordinate to the Good Spirit (see Ibid., p. 580).

Pottawattamie tribe: Believe in one great supreme Creator, and of a future state of rewards and punishments. (See Ibid., p. 325.) Near Pueblo, the Government agent found a copper bracelet. Doctor Crane, in his Crania America, says the Iroquois Confederacy of six tribes were unsurpassed mentally by any people, the brain capacity of the skull being 88 inches, or less than 2 inches less than the Caucasian race. (See Ibid., p. 461).

We also append an article clipped from the Chicago Record Herald of February 5, there being strong points of similarity with Book of Mormon history:

INDIANS AND “TEN LOST TRIBES.”

“The Indians are the most superstitious people on earth,” said a man a few days ago who had taught for years in a Creek Indian school. “They have myths and legends by the score. Some of them are as beautiful and picturesque as the legends of the old Greeks and Romans,” writes the Chickasha correspondent of the Kansas City Star.

“I boarded for five years with a Creek Indian who had been educated at Carlisle. He knew the Indian legends and used to tell them to me and his children as we sat around the fireplace of an evening. You know the Creeks have a legend that they are one of the lost tribes of Israel. This Indian was the son of a medicine man who was once great and powerful in the tribe. All his knowledge of Indian lore came from his father, the medicine man.

“This medicine man said that the Creeks were one of the lost tribes of Israel. The legend ran that they were once associated with the other tribes and that they had wandered and became separated. They wandered for years far to the north until they came to a sea. There they built boats and embarked. They steered their course by the wand of a medicine man. Each morning he went to his teepee and set up his divining-rod and told them which direction to pursue. They followed this rod from a warm country to a cold sea on which they set sail. The sea was crossed and then they traveled toward the south again.

“The Creeks have a covenant of their tribe which is kept with the chiefs. No one but the elect is ever permitted to see this guarantee of the genuineness of the Creek faith and origin.”

PROSELYTING DENOUNCED.

CANTON, Ohio, March 6.—“Standard Oil methods applied to church proselyting” have caused a row among Canton ministers that has come to bitter personalities. Action was taken at a meeting of the Stark County Federation of Ministers Tuesday providing for the publication of a spirited attack upon “piratical ministers” by Reverend E. O. Buxton, of the First Methodist church, Canton, McKinley’s old church.

Buxton declared that certain ministers in Canton were using Standard Oil methods in their competition for membership and even had well-laid pipelines and agents out looking for business.

Reverend Buxton’s address was entitled “Ministerial and Denominational Courtesy.”

“The piracy in some of our churches in this proselyting is enough to make an angel weep,” said he. “Why, I know of one county-seat minister who has a freight agent working for him, whose business it is to notify him of new arrivals in town. Then this minister hastens to enroll the newcomers in his church fold. This same minister has a smoothly running pipe-line into the Y. M. C. A. building which does the same line of work as the freight agent.

“Proselyting is going on right under our noses. I believe a minister has a right to make social calls upon members of other churches, but he has no business to go among those of other denominations and persuade them to come over to his church.
