Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, and wine inflame them; and the harp, and the viol, the tabret and the pipe, and wine are in their feasts; but they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operations of his hands.—Page 81, small edition.

Is it devotional to keep sober and regard the work of the Lord, and consider the operations of his hands? Can one find in the Bible a verse that condemns wine-drinking plainer than this, or that renounces revelry and excessive regard of music to the exclusion of God?

The Lord hath commanded that men should not murder; that they should not lie; that they should not steal; that they should not take the name of the Lord their God in vain; that they should not envy; that they should not have malice; that they should not contend one with another; that they should not commit whoredoms; and that they should do none of these things; for whoso doeth them, shall perish; for none of these iniquities come of the Lord; for he doeth that which is good among the children of men.—Page 99.

Would one be devoted to carefully and willingly do as here commanded? "No devotional merits" indeed!

There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none: For I the Lord God delighteth in the chastity of woman.—Page 116.

Does this teach devotion to principles of chastity and righteousness?

For the sake of retaining a remission of your sins from day to day, that you may walk guiltless before God, I would that ye should impart of your substance to the poor, every man according to that which he hath, such as feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, and administering to their relief, both spiritually and temporally, according to their wants, and see that all these things are done in wisdom and order; for it is not requisite that a man should run faster than he has strength. And again: It is expedient that he should be diligent, that thereby he might win the prize: therefore, all things must be done in order. And I would that ye should remember, that whosoever among you that borroweth of his neighbor, should return the thing that he borroweth, according as he doth agree, or else thou shalt commit sin, and perhaps thou shalt cause thy neighbor to commit sin also. And finally, I can not tell you all the things whereby ye may commit sin: for there are divers ways and means, even so many, that I can not number them. But this much I can tell you, that if ye do not watch yourselves, and your thoughts and your words, and your deeds, and observe the commandments of God, and continue in the faith of what ye have heard concerning the coming of our Lord, even unto the end of your lives, ye must perish.—Page 152.

There is certainly devotion enough taught in this text to last during this present life, and that is all that is necessary for us at present. If the above be not considered devotional, then we quote the following:

For if ye would hearken unto the spirit which teacheth a man, to pray, ye would know that ye must pray: for the evil spirit teacheth not a man to pray, but teacheth him that he must not pray. But behold I say unto you, that ye must pray always, and not faint: that ye must not perform anything unto the Lord, save in the first place ye shall pray unto the Father in the name of Christ, that he will consecrate thy performance unto thee, that thy performance may be for the welfare of thy soul.—Page 110.

Surely, "by their fruits ye shall know them." The fruits of the Book of Mormon are good and lead to good. Mr. Haupt's quotations concerning false teachers, lies, and liars, and those who trust in them, is very wide of the mark if applied to Latter Day Saints or the Book of Mormon. How kind of him to look upon us as such. We are sometimes glad to know how we are classed by our neighbors. Will some one kindly ask Mr. Haupt to come down far enough so we can whisper in his ear: "Other people can be as honest as you, and not agree with you either"?

After having noticed his utter failure to substantiate his doctrine of succession, we, with greater show for the truth, reprint his

"CONCLUSIONS."

"How careful therefore we ought to be that we proclaim only the truth as God has revealed it, and in such a manner that it be not misconstrued into a lie, for we not only endanger the eternal happiness of those we may mislead, but most certainly bring the curse of God upon our own souls, for he declares, 'His blood will I require at thy hands.'"

While we do not accept as proper, the construction he puts on this last text, yet he ought to be willing to take the dose he prescribes for me, when his disease bears a clearer diagnosis.

LATTER DAY SAINTISM.

Mr. Haupt says it "offers" nothing upon which hangs the salvation of a soul that the "One Holy Catholic and Apostolic Church has not ALWAYS offered to seekers after God." Let us see. It offers them the authority of the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods. It offers them the fullness of the gospel unchanged. It offers them the gifts of the Holy Spirit, prophecy, tongues, and all the rest. It offers them the history of ancient America—the Book of Mormon—and a living, speaking God and Savior, which the Church of England does not.

To one acquainted with the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and latter-day revelations from God, each teaching the same things, to such a one we say, that the writings of ancient medieval and modern, (especially modern) Fathers and Doctors are as hay and stubble. Whatever good they contain is mixed with human tradition in such a way as to make void the word of God, "and change the truth into a lie." Therefore, he who would know the truth may take the guide, and approaching God direct, and in the way he has commanded, obtain a knowledge for himself, and "have no need that any man or any church should teach him." Mr. Haupt says, "The Bible is the only safe text-book." Then why not cut out the church Fathers and Doctors, and depend on the word of God alone, as it may be found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants? Begging, begging, and begging again. Mr. Haupt asserts the point at issue. "The Catholic Church which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth." No amount of dignity back of an assertion can make it anything but an assertion, and no begging of the question will ever win the point.

Taking a backward glance we must conclude that Mr. Haupt has utterly failed to sustain his position. His church does not teach all the truth. It teaches for doctrine the commandments of men. It is void of the gifts of the Holy Spirit in the true sense. Its official organization is unscriptural and unwarranted. His claim to succession must include the truth and points mentioned above. It has been again and again broken. It assumes to itself powers and authorities in calling their ministry which alone belong to Christ, and, like the Utah Mormons, has climbed in Moses' seat. Its interpretation of scripture is inflated and unwarranted. On the contrary the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ is in harmony with the New Testament church in faith, doctrine, and blessings from God. Its official organization is complete, and duly authorized of God. We offer the same promise as of old: He that believeth, and doeth the will of the Father, shall know for himself. Our best wish for Bro. Haupt and all others is that they may "taste and try." "The Spirit and the bride say, Come."

ONE HUNDRED INDIAN MAIDENS IN A BEAUTY CONTEST.

COLLINSVILLE, Indian Territory, July 4.—(Special.)—Miss Juanita Toskatomba, a seventeen-year-old Cherokee belle, worth $100,000 in her own right, with twenty-seven oil-wells a few miles west of town, was declared by the bachelor judges the winner of the first prize of $75 in the beauty show here to-day. Miss Laura Brown, second, and Miss Lulu Parker, third, received $50 and $25, respectively.

Miss Brown is twenty years old, of one quarter Cherokee blood. Her monthly income from oil royalties is estimated at $800. Miss Parker is the same age. She is a niece of Quanah Parker, the famous Comanche chief.

When the winners were announced a rush for the judges' stand was made by about fifty maidens and their sweethearts. Young men who thought their best girls ought to have won at least one of the three prizes made things lively for several minutes. John H. Middleton, chief of deputies on the ground, ordered the arrest of those who became too clamorous for recognition by the judges.

Mayor Pruitt has ordered special police for the races to-morrow. The beauty contest has aroused the ire of parents, brothers, and sweethearts of defeated contestants.

More than one hundred young women from the Cherokee, Creek, Comanche, and Osage tribes of Indians, as well as the Caucasian race, were contestants in the "beauty show" in which prizes amounting to one hundred and fifty dollars were given by the commercial club. The "show" attracted several thousand persons from the surrounding country, many of them being full-blood Indians, who took a lively interest in the affair.

Young men offered to wager large sums of money on the girl of their choice, but the committee would not permit gambling on the result. Several Indian girls were close seconds for the first prize, but the bachelor judges seemed to have favored white ones.

Young women in this country who are known as Indians are really as fair-skinned and even more beautiful than any of their "pale-face sisters," and as popular.

Among the great number of contestees to-day fully forty per cent were Indians, but would not be taken for them outside of the Indian Territory. They are graduates of Eastern colleges, and but few of them know a word of their own language. They are really beautiful young women who own magnificent farms or producing oil-wells in the Cherokee, Creek, and Osage nations.

The rules provided that three old bachelors should judge the beauty show, and the most pronounced "woman hater" was to be chosen as chairman. William J. Pattison, thirty-five years of age, who weighs two hundred and eighty-five pounds, was named as chairman, while Edward Peterson and John H. McNutt were selected as his assistants. Mr. Peterson is widely known as "Candy," because he is ever ready and willing to buy candy for the girls, but has never intimated that he would marry. In fact, he often declares publicly that no woman is quite good enough for him.—Kansas City Journal, July 5, 1907.

THE PRISONER AT ROME.

ROME, June 29.—A new chapter in the history of the popes will be opened if the ingenious proposal of Richard C. Kerens of St. Louis for buying a strip of land to construct a road from the Vatican to the sea is carried into effect.

The world knows, or, at any rate, generally believes that the pope pines for the freedom which is denied him by the politics of the Vatican. For the span of an average man's life Pius X lived the life of a free man. As a lad he ran barefooted seven miles to school every day. As a bishop he was free to wander about the Venice which he loved. But the moment he was elected pope Giuseppe Sarto became the "prisoner of the Vatican," and his heart must have sunk within him when he realized that in all probability he would never again set eyes on Venice, never even take one step beyond the Vatican walls. He entered the conclave a free man. He emerged—the pope king of the Catholic world, but a king who might not cross the threshold of his palace without repudiating the policy of the church of Rome.

For nearly forty years the Pope has remained the prisoner of the Vatican, still refusing to recognize the new kingdom of Italy, still waiting the moment which never arrives when he may emerge once more as "pope-king" in fact as well as name.

When Pius IX died Leo XIII inflexibly carried on the great battle of "passive resistance." At one time it was hoped by Rome that Germany would come to the assistance of the pontiff, but Bismark dashed those hopes to the ground with the reply that he was "unaware that any such question existed" as the question of the papal claims to dominion over Rome.

Leo XIII died, Pius X is pontiff, and still Rome waits, and still the thousands of worshipers in St. Peter's hail the pope as "Il-pape-re!" (the "pope king") and the Pope remains the "prisoner of the Vatican"—the third of his line.

Now and again it has been asserted that Pius X intends to break down the barrier between himself and the world, and that he will go to Venice or to a country villa for a change in the summer. But the probability is that he will never go, and that he will die and be interred in his tiny kingdom.

The Italian government has left the three prisoners of the Vatican, one after another, unmolested. At any hour the pope chose he might ride forth a free man, for no one believes that the freedom of the pope would in any way endanger the Italian monarchy. The gorgeous scarlet and gold coach in which Pius IX made his regal processions still stands at the Vatican, a ponderous witness to this unchanging policy.

If there is something comic in Mr. Kerens' scheme for extricating the pope from the vatican without entailing the confession of the defeat of the papal claims, there is a good deal that is pathetic in the fate of the pope. It may be doubted if Mr. Kerens' or any other scheme for releasing the pope will be accepted by the Vatican, for the simple reason that the forty years' object-lesson to the Roman Catholic world of the "imprisonment" of the pope would be lost. The papal claims might still be put forth, but Rome would no longer hold the most eminent prisoner in the world.—The Chicago Sunday Tribune, June 30, 1907.

THE CO-OPERATIVE PARISH.

The principle that the congregation of a parish must help in the administration, support, teaching, and ministration of the parish has some time been generally allowed. The idea that everything is to be in the hands of the clergy and that the preacher must galvanize into life, or rule as a despot, the people committed to his care, is medieval. The people, young and old, must unite in helping themselves and each other, not only in spiritual things, but in material things, in intellectual and physical development, and in the pursuit of innocent and wholesome amusement, all under the direction and sanction of the church. This idea has been scientifically developed into elaborate detail in "The Administration of an Institutional Church," by George Hodges, dean and professor of pastoral theology, Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Massachusetts, and John Reichert, clerk of the vestry, St. George's Church, New York City. The work is not merely theoretical, because it takes St. George's Church as a concrete example of the theory which it advocates; the principle of that theory is coöperation in the church and under the direction of the church, in all that goes to support a religious institution whose influence shall penetrate and elevate every single feature and relation of social life. Details with regard to the various institutions for children, youths, married people, and others which were fostered by St. George's are to be found in every year-book of that parish. But the principle of coöperation which Doctor Rainsford instilled into his people is thus described by President Roosevelt in an introduction to the above-named work: "He made men and women feel that whether they were rich or poor mattered nothing, so long as they were Christians who tried to live their Christianity in a spirit of brotherly love and of sane, cheerful helpfulness toward themselves and toward one another. He brought the church close to the busy, working life of a great city."

The authors of the book thus state Doctor Rainsford's method in the institutional church as differentiated from that of his predecessors. To quote their words:

"He found a church trying to minister in the old way to new conditions, and he changed the way so as to fit the conditions. He compared the old St. George's to 'a fisherman accustomed to earn his bread at catching herrings; presently the run of herrings goes away from that section of the sea; in their place comes a tremendous run of smelts. If the fisherman could change his net he would be a richer man than before, because smelts are better fish; but he starves because he can not change the size of the meshes.' Doctor Rainsford proceeded immediately to change the size of the meshes. The old methods have been adapted to the family, the new methods were adapted to the individual. The essential principle of the institutional church is in that change."

In the new coöperative method of the institutional church strictly business principles and a rigid attention to details are among the main features. Toward the working of the parish "each parishioner pays. He does the best he can. Thereby he is taken out of the ranks of passive beneficiaries and made a member of a coöperative fraternity. The state of mind of the man who is contributing to the support of an institution is wholly different from the state of mind of the man who is being supported by an institution. The act of giving has a moral, transforming, regenerating value. There are a number of men in St. George's parish who could easily pay all of the expenses. Nothing could be more unfortunate than such a misjudged kindness. There are parishes in which that thing has been done, where a rich rector pays his own salary, or a rich vestry make up the annual deficit on Easter Monday out of their own pockets. But these are weak parishes, to which the parishioners are attached but loosely. According to the St. George's plan, the people are an integral part of the parish. It is a coöperative institution, like a factory in which every employee has a share in the business. And this is effected by the fact of contribution. The rector of St. George's is like a general manager of a mill; all the workers have each his own work, with wide discretion in the doing of it, and plenty of room for originality, but they all report to him and carry out his will."

Every parishioner in the institutional church is on the footing of a customer or a mill-hand, and this necessitates the utmost attention to practical business minutiae. As these writers say:

"The greatest care is taken with details. This is a fourth principle of the St. George's plan. The minuteness with which we have been able to describe the work of the parish represents the attention to the least things which marks the ordering of it all. Nothing is left to chance. There are no loose ends. For example, the envelope system is carried on like a business; the accounts are kept with business punctuality and care; every contributor is looked after as if he were a customer, first interested and brought in, then kept informed, then held. Nobody who once makes himself known as connected with the parish is afterward let go until every effort has proved vain. The child who stays away from Sunday-school is visited, and his name, once on the list, is not taken off until his school-mates, his teacher, one of the officers of the school, one of the deaconesses, and one of the clergy, in succession, have called upon him. A like care is taken in all the other organizations. So it is with the contributors. Moreover, in regard to the collections, great pains are taken to inform the people as to the times and nature and amount of the offering needed. The parish makes continual use of the printer. The great amounts given by the congregation, out of all proportion to their apparent means, are the result of this sedulous care; they are the consequence of preparation. They do not fall down out of the trees. They are like the fruit of an orchard which has been planted, pruned, plowed, and then picked."—Literary Digest, July 13, 1907.

A NEW AND SCIENTIFIC THEORY OF HELL.

The people are so fond of science nowadays that it is a great wonder the parsons have made so little use of it. Look at the big Sunday newspapers; their editors know the value of science and if it were not for the wonderful stories and colored pictures about the inhabitants of Mars and the end of the world and the latest discoveries concerning apparitions and other scientific affairs there is no doubt at all but in three or four weeks their circulation would drop below half a million. But our theologians are very slow to take a hint, and so we see many of them trying hard to talk like your yellow newspapers but still railing at science and wondering, if you please, why their pews are only half full.

The Reverend J. Benjamin Lawrence is one of the wiser sort. He has of late been thinking about hell and has observed with some concern how lightly it is held in the minds of most people to-day. When, therefore, he resolved to examine the matter and to expound it for the benefit of the Baptists in New Orleans he knew that it would not do to assume a controversial tone against the scientific gentlemen, but rather fight them covertly and, as it were, with their own weapons. So he called his sermon "Hell viewed from the scientific standpoint," and, not being very full of the latest scientific wrinkles, he was content to found his argument on the somewhat neglected luminiferous ether together with the supposed existence of certain invisible bodies in space. Beginning with a general description of the ether and its properties he proceeded:

"Now, since it is not known that this luminiferous ether is an all-prevailing substance, it is logical to hold that there may be enormous spaces devoid of ether in which could exist great masses of ponderable matter which could emit no light nor heat. Such bodies could exist for ever and not be detected by man, aided by the best instruments known."

Then he went on to speak of the nature of these dark bodies, to ask what they were and to inquire into the reason of their existence:

"I ask what are these dark globes? Might not God, by his infinite power through the operation of the divine laws of Nature, have fenced these globes off so that no luminiferous ether could reach them? Under such conditions, dark suns would burn, combustion be carried on without emitting heat, fuel consumed unseen, and metals fused in invisible fires. A body once heated would remain for ever heated. A planet once molten would remain for ever melted. For the loss of heat is simply the abstraction of molecular action by the ether."

The conclusion is obvious. Those dark globes, never hitherto explained, are, in fact, the centre of outer darkness and eternal fire—in other words, hell. "Therefore," says the Reverend J. Benjamin Lawrence, "from the standpoint of science a material hell is not only probable but highly possible." Nor from his scientific point of view will he allow us any comfort in the assurance that "eternal fire" is only a figure of speech. He is something of a grammarian, too, and "all grammarians," says he, "agree that a figure of speech is not and can not be as bad as the thing itself. Therefore it follows that if hell is not literal fire, then it is something worse than fire."—Exchange.

WHAT THE MASTER FOUND.

The night was shading the landscape with winter twilight when the man entered this town. He was no common man, and was bent upon no ordinary mission. An empire was to be overthrown and upon its ruins, a new kingdom established. It was an enterprise environed with peril. Already it had cost precious lives and priceless fortunes. The man bore himself as one who journeys through a hostile country, knowing that his enemies swarmed about him, vigilant, fearless, powerful. He took from his breast a little book and glanced at the list of names written therein.

"I have in this community," he said, "a band of five hundred friends, who have vowed ever to be loyal to me, faithful to my cause. They know that it is in danger. This is the night of their own appointment for meeting me that I may instruct and encourage and strengthen them."

The deep tone of the bell broke upon the air. "It is the signal for their gathering," said the man, and hastened forward. Soon he paused before a large building, which, save for one dimly-lighted room in the rear of the basement, was empty and silent. A man, evidently on guard, stood near the door. He started as the stranger saluted him.

"I am expecting to meet some friends here to-night."

The janitor looked suspiciously at him.

"You'll have to wait, then," he said presently. "There won't be anybody around here for half an hour yet."

"You are a member of the band that assembles here?"

"Um," replied the janitor.

"Is there great zeal among the brethren of the fraternity? Are you united, loyal, eager, aggressive?"

"Well," replied the janitor cautiously, "things are a little quiet with us just at present. Times are hard, and there's a good deal of opposition. We have had a great many things to discourage us. Maybe in a couple of months we may get some outside help and shake things up a little; but we don't feel justified in making any effort right now. Will you walk in?"

The stranger entered the room indicated by a sweep of the janitor's hand. Presently an old woman came in, glanced timidly about her, and sat down as far away from the stranger as she could get. By and by came two women. Then a bevy of young girls fluttered in, sat down, bent their heads together for a convulsed giggle, and lapsed into silence. A lame man limped to a seat behind the stove. After a while, a group of women rustled in, one of them leading a reluctant boy. A tired-looking man, in laborer's garb, sank wearily into a seat apart from the rest. After a long interval there entered a man in black, who stealthily tiptoed his way to a seat behind the others. Others came dropping in, until twenty-three were assembled in or rather scattered through the room. They were evidently there in peril of their lives. Everything disclosed a sense of half-restrained fear. The repeated glance at the clock; the painful intenseness with which they listened to every approaching footfall until it passed; the quickness with which all eyes were turned toward the door as often as it was opened, deepened the impression that this was an unlawful assembly.

The stranger softly passed out no one barring his way. Glancing at his book by the wind-shaken light of the street lamps he went searching for his absent friends. Three of them he found on a street corner discussing the political problems of the government under which they lived. Seven men he found in a clubroom reading, chatting, smoking. A score he found at public entertainments; a few at their places of business lying in wait for belated customers; a half-dozen at a progressive euchre party. Some were in a neighbor's house whiling away the hour by social intercourse. Many were at home, some too tired to get out, because they had been out all day and were planning to go out again to-morrow, and some doing nothing and wearily tired of it. A few were sick; a few ministering to them. Some were curing convenient headaches by reading the latest novels. So in the course of the evening the band of five hundred was accounted for. Twenty-three at the rendezvous—four hundred and seventy-seven here, there, and elsewhere; dawdling, sleeping—a discouraging outlook for a struggling revolution.

"And what is all this ancient history?" you ask.

Oh, nothing much. And not so very ancient, either. Only, Jesus Christ dropped in at a recent prayer-meeting in your church. That was all and where did he find you?—Robert J. Burdette, in Zion's Advocate.

The Hurrying Hours.

How often the thought comes home to me
As the moments hurry away
Of the many things I intended to do
Somehow, sometime, some day.
There are promises that have not been kept
Though I always meant to be true,
But time is too short for all the things
That a body intends to do.

I will answer a letter or read a book,
I will write a bit of rhyme,
I will do the things that I ought to do,
Some day when I have time.
So I look beyond, as I hope and plan,
For the days that are just ahead.
While the day that is here goes into the grave
With its opportunities dead.

To-day is the only day we have;
Of to-morrow we can't be sure,
To seize the chance as it comes along,
Is the way to make it secure.
For every year is a shorter year,
And this is a truth sublime
A moment misspent is a jewel lost
From the treasury of time.—Selected.

Are We Thinking?

By the world we are esteemed "a peculiar people," and it arrives at this judgment of us chiefly because we "contend for the faith once delivered to the saints." This seems a strange verdict, coming as it does from the citizens of a Christian nation and students of the Bible. At least to us it seems strange, and we are at times inclined to resent it. But—"are we thinking" that possibly we ourselves are in a measure responsible for this judgment?

Among the special injunctions of one of the chief apostles of our faith we find this: "Do good unto all men, but especially to the household of faith." Are we remembering this?

Bacon has said, "It is not what men eat but what they digest that makes them strong; not what we gain but what we save that makes us rich; not what men read but what they remember that makes them learned; and not what we profess but what we practice that makes us Christians."

In unity there is strength. Nor is this all. There is in unity the sign-manual of our relation to Christ. "Except ye be one ye are not mine," are the Master's own words. Are we unitedly working to establish his truth? These are thoughts which need digesting in order that as a people we become strong. Let us recall the mass-meeting held in Lamoni shortly after the burning of the HERALD Office, at which over thirteen thousand dollars was subscribed towards its rebuilding, and we have before us a most vivid example of the strength there is in unity. Just a branch of the church reside at Lamoni and very few—if any—are what in our day would be called wealthy. Now our church has many branches—some larger than the Lamoni Branch. She has, however, but one school. Let us for a moment suppose that each branch of the church was united in the effort to sustain our one school and that, according to their numbers, they did as well as the Lamoni Branch in support of the HERALD Office, would it be difficult to estimate results?

"Tall oaks from little acorns grow Large streams from little fountains flow,"

says the old ballad. But the acorn is a unit and the little fountain stream is fed by many a rill as it meanders its way down the mountain side and through the wooded plain towards the valley through which it is to flow onward to the mighty ocean. Both are striking examples of unity.

"If ye were of the world the world would love its own," is a declaration as true to-day as it was when uttered by the Master's lips.

"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." Why is it that the world fails to recognize our discipleship? Is the fault ours, or is it found with those who judge us? What will not love do for the object of its affections? Can we think of any task too hard, any effort too mighty for love to attempt to master? And what of that other thought, the thought of whose the work is for which we are laboring? Do you really believe this is God's work? Then you must believe that you are laboring with and for him. If then God be for us, who can be against us? Is not "one with God always a majority"?

We do not believe this, but we know it. This is our testimony. But is our testimony sustained by our works? Are we thinking that "faith without works is dead"?

Graceland is in her infancy. How important, then, that she be nourished and sustained by the church, who is responsible for her existence, until such time as she be fitted and thoroughly equipped to enter the list and contend for her own honors. How easily this could be accomplished, by faith and a united effort! Faith in the people, led to the calling of the meeting in Lamoni, and this faith was justified by what the people did, and hearts that were sore then—troubled and sorrowful because of our loss—to-day are rejoicing as our new and beautiful building is rising in stately proportions, where the old one stood. Let us not forget that this is the work of the church—not of one branch or of two—but of the church. So too must our school—if it ever fill the place God intended it to fill—if it ever accomplish the grand mission God intended it should accomplish; be sustained and built up by the entire church.

"The glory of God is intelligence, or in other words light and truth." Think of this you fathers and mothers who have sons and daughters to educate. That which is not true can not add to their intelligence, but it can (and in the past it often has) led them astray from God and his truth—that gospel truth taught by Christ and his apostles and which has been confirmed to us as a people in so many wonderful and incontestable ways. How long can we afford this? How long can we as a people afford to see the brightest and most intellectual of the children God has given us led into error before they are established in the truth and fully equipped to become defenders of it? We know that all error must fall—that light and truth are the glory of God. How then can we consistently spend our means—send our children to educate them where the vital principles of the gospel of Christ are ignored, or held as fables, when at the cost of some means or sacrifice we might place them under church influence, where they would be taught to test all questions—above all to place a proper value upon the words of God as contrasted with the opinions of men. Are we thinking? Have we thought of these things?

We beg to be understood as not undervaluing any good thing to be found in the world. In no place, age, or dispensation has God left himself without his witnesses. But if indeed we are followers of Christ, believers in the gospel which he taught, and for that very reason are looked upon as being without the pale of Christianity (which by very many we are), does it not behoove us to guard our children as far as we possibly can from influences calculated to lead them into the same way of thinking?

NOTE.—In our last we spoke of the personal element which plays such an important part in the formation of character. We referred to it in connection with such as by ill-gotten wealth endow institutions of learning and thus extend their influence for evil. Since then the daily press furnishes us a striking example of such influence and the extent to which it dominates the minds of those brought under its influence.

One of the summer students at the University of Chicago, a Miss Goldberg, from Shreveport, Louisiana, is said to have made the statement before the class of which she was a member that as for herself she was not thankful to the oil king for endowing the university. She had heard that the price of oil had been raised following each gift with which he had endowed the institution and she could easily credit the story.

This statement was called forth by the following eulogy from one of the students:

"If Mr. Rockefeller is smooth enough to get around the law he should be given credit for it and the law should be blamed."

Then Miss Goldberg arose and said:

"I do not see why I should be thankful to Mr. Rockefeller for founding this university," she said. "This is only another case where a great financier wished to get rid of his money.

"It is similar to the case of the London financier who founded a refuge for homeless cats, excepting that Mr. Rockefeller should have credit for his discrimination, for the university has been a great advertisement for him. I do not think he is a man to be held up as a model. It might lead people to amass great fortunes without regard to moral standards.

"While I am not sure about the story that oil goes up every time Mr. Rockefeller gives the university a gift, I do think that the way in which he got his money precludes any feeling of gratitude for his donations on the part of the students. I, as a teacher, would not hold Mr. Rockefeller up before my pupils as an example of a straightforward business man."

And now the sequel of this passage at arms. The following day from every quarter of the institution, praises of Mr. Rockefeller and condemnations of the sentiments of Miss Goldberg came in scathing showers and John D. Rockefeller was pronounced as "perfectly grand." Are we thinking?

Editors Herald: I send to you the death notice of our loved and honored Elder Lambert, gone to the rest prepared for the people of God. I have, no doubt, exceeded the ordinary limit your rules place on notices of this kind; but I could hardly say less, and would gladly say more; for he and his have been a power for good in this district, and their lives have made the name of Latter Day Saint respected where they have lived ever since the church was driven out. He was active, and a talented, able defender of the cause when the writer entered the church. Then again he has given to the church service such able sons as Joseph R., D. F., George P., and W. T., along with grandsons who are developing as worthy sons of noble sires.

JAMES MCKIERNAN.

BAY PORT, Michigan, July 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: As it has been some time since I have seen any word from this part of God's vineyard, and thinking that probably there may be some who would like to hear from us I thought I would write. The Saints here (though few in number) are ever striving to keep God's commandments, and are being blessed by the Spirit of God. The Sunday-school is progressing slowly; but we as a little bank of Saints are ever putting our trust in God, and we feel sure that he will bring us out more than conquerer.

I attended the conference held at Glover, Michigan, the 22d and 23d of June, it being the first conference I have been able to attend for three years. The gathering of the Saints at Glover was not very large, but that sweet, peaceful influence of God's Spirit was with us to encourage us to ever prove faithful. And while there God spoke to the young of this church, and told them to be more faithful, and that there were many there who would live to see the coming of the Savior. He told them also that the responsibility of this work would soon be left upon them.

Dear young Saints, do we ever stop to think of the deep responsibilities that rest upon us as young Saints, and that God is about to place greater responsibilities upon us, and that it will be only those that are ready to receive them that he will call upon? Are we doing the best we can for the advancement of his work? Are we becoming more acquainted with his law, or are we drifting along, thinking that some time in the future we will serve God better?

Let us, as Saints, ever put our trust in God, and carry his work onward and upward.

ADAMSON, I. T., July 5, 1907.

Editors Herald: The Texas and Choctaw District reunion will be held at Adamson, Indian Territory, this year, commencing August 16 and lasting ten days. On Saturday, the 24th, conference will convene to transact such business as is necessary for the district. Adamson, is on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, fifteen miles east of McAlester, and fourteen miles west of Wilburton. Those coming from the west and north will change at McAlester, from the south and east change at Wilburton. This is a new coal-mining town started here a little over a year ago by Bro. Peter Adamson and son. There are about four hundred people here now, Prospects are great for coal and other business. The Saints that are unsettled would do well to come here and spend ten days during the reunion and see what is here. About one hundred men are employed at the Adamson mine, and about the same number at Reed's mine; they are close to each other. We have a branch of the church here now, with regular services every Sunday. They have decided not to have a coöperative boarding-house for the reunion, so all that can bring your tents and outfit for camping with you; a few tents probably can be gathered up here. Edmond Thomas is chairman of committee; any one wishing any arrangements made for them will write him. We hope the Saints of this district will make a special effort to attend this meeting. Will all the branches please see that their reports are here by the 24th anyway. If you do not bring them send them here to Peter Adamson by that time.

W. M. AYLOR.

BLISS, Idaho, July 2, 1907.

Editors Herald: On June 7 I received an urgent call to come to Blackfoot, Idaho. Found the Saints all well, stayed over Sunday, then moved on to the Teton Branch in the lower or north end of Teton Basin. Reached there at five in the afternoon. They called a meeting and I had to speak for them. On the Sabbath following, the branch president, Elder A. Hendrickson, baptized eight, one of them a Sr. Stanley, granddaughter of Sr. Clark of Independence, Missouri, and four of her children, and more are to follow. The next day Bro. A. Hendrickson and three of the sisters took me to the Cedrine Branch a distance of about thirty miles. The Saints there, like those at the Teton Branch, had to have meetings. They would leave their work at two in the afternoon and gather at the schoolhouse, and complain because I did not talk long enough. This is the branch where Bro. S. D. Condit and I held three preaching-services one night of over one hour each. I spoke, then Bro. S. D., and when we asked them to sing, they said they would not until we talked more. Then I gave them another sermon. Can I be blamed for wanting to visit them once a year? One winter I went in there (I have to stage it for fifty miles) in a blizzard, and caught a bad cold and stopped at Teton Branch and went to their meeting. I could not speak above a whisper. You can imagine my surprise when Bro. Hendrickson announced me as the speaker, telling them that he knew they had faith enough to sustain me while I talked to them. I thought if he had faith to make the announcement, that I had faith to make the trial. My voice came to me and I preached with ease. Now is not that faith? Now I rejoice in the gospel and God's mercy, but sometimes wish that I could labor where one man did not control so many. May God continue to bless his people. I was called home to attend the marriage of my daughter Mittie. She was married to Bro. H. B. Gillmore on the 26th.

J. H. CONDIT.

Editors Herald: These parts have been of note to the early pioneers of this church in days gone by. Here is where Bro. Heman C. Smith did some of his first preaching, and many others of the church are, with him, held in remembrance among the few Saints left here.

We spent our Fourth of July with Elder J. W. Metcalf and family of Louisville, Kentucky. He was busy in the gospel story that he loves so well. Our conference, held on June 22 and 23, was a peaceful, quiet one. All present will long remember our nine o'clock prayer-meeting, the sweet Spirit being present with us. From here we went in company with Bro. F. L. Sawley to the home of Bro. James Wynn, living four miles west of Corydon and held a week's meeting. Bro. Sawley is an able defender of the angel's message, and had with him one of Bilhorn's organs, which is a great help in our meetings. Here we enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. Wynn's home. Baptized his daughter and son-in-law before leaving. Left the Saints rejoicing and strengthened in the great work. Yesterday at our eleven o'clock services Bro. I. J. Boswell was ordained to the office of elder. Bro. Johnnie, as he is better known among the ministry, will, if faithful, make his mark in this great work. Would just say to all that he is stronger in the work as trials come and go.

We are busy in telling the beautiful gospel story, and trust we may be able to accomplish a good work for our Master.

Yours in gospel bonds,

C. E. HARP.

FAIRLAND, Indian Territory.

Dear Herald: I thought as I did not get to attend church to-day that I would pen a few lines to the dear old paper. As I scan its pages I am made to rejoice for the many good things written therein that are good to the soul. I have been a reader of the HERALD for some years, and I am not tired of it yet. I hope the time will never come that I will have to do without the church papers, for in them my soul gets food. I am always glad when I get my papers. They always come laden with good things for the soul. I have been a member of this church for eleven years, and I am not sorry that I entered in while young in years. I have had some trials, but have had lots of pleasure in serving the Lord, and hope to be able to stand firm to the end.

We are getting along very well in the Indian Territory. The Saints seem to be trying to live nearer the Lord. We have built a new church at Fairland, Indian Territory, but have not finished paying for it yet. We are all poor in this world's goods, but some of the Saints have done nobly in assisting with their means, while some have not assisted any as yet, but think they will this fall. Our committee consists of Bro. F. M. Conner, who is chairman, W. B. Miller, and J. T. Riley. Would be glad to receive money from any of the Saints, and especially of the Fairland Branch.

W. B. MILLER.

WHEELING, West Virginia.

Editors Herald: The work is progressing nicely in this place. Bro. Miller is here and is reviving the Religio as well as the other church-work. Last evening he gave us a short lecture on the Book of Mormon (illustrated with different views). We had a good-sized audience, many strangers being present.

I rejoice to see the work progress. I have belonged to the church just two years; am eighteen years of age, neither father nor mother belonging to the church. I heard this gospel for the first time in Wheeling, in the month of September, 1904, and was baptized in May following, and have never regretted the step.

Your brother,

C. W. EYLER.

NOTTINGHAM, England, July 1, 1907.

Dear Herald: It gives me much pleasure to write to you. This is the first time I have written to the HERALD. I was baptized May 8, 1901, by Bro. Rushton, and confirmed by Bro. Arber and Bro. Rushton at Clay Cross church.

There are not many Saints here in Nottingham. The services are held in one of the Saints' homes, and we have some very good meetings. I hope it will not be long before we have a church here.

I was pleased to see through the HERALD that President Joseph Smith and President R. C. Evans received the tributes from the British Isles Mission. I was very sorry to read about the HERALD Office being burned. I often wonder what was the cause; but God knows best. I am sorry England is not making headway as it ought to in the church. It is a pity more can not see the true gospel. It does me good to read the HERALD and Hope. We all ought to try to represent the gospel as much as we can. We may get laughed at, but we can stand laughing at, if we become joint-heirs with Jesus Christ.

Dear Saints, I pray for you, and ask you to pray for me that I may be a true Saint to the end.

Your sister in the faith,

ELIZABETH HOLMES.

PINE BEACH, Virginia, July 14, 1907.

Saints' Herald: When any of the Saints come to the exposition, take Pine Beach car from Norfolk, and get off at Midway Street, go one half block west to Albion Hotel, and inquire for William C. Cummings, and I will put you onto the best and lowest-priced hotels in Pine Beach, which is just outside the grounds. Saints can get beds from twenty-five cents to one dollar, and a first-class meal at twenty-five cents; and boats run to four or five cities from here for twenty to fifty cents for the trip. Exposition now very near completion, and is worth seeing.

WM. C. CUMMINGS.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, July 13, 1907.

Dear Herald: I love to tell of what the good Lord has done for me. I, with four more, was baptized one year ago the last of March, in East Helena, by Bro. Stead. I do not regret the step taken, nor the effort put forth in trying to serve my Lord and Master, for he has blessed me in many things and has heard and answered my prayers; and I know if I am faithful to him he will be faithful to me, for he is unchanging. I would not give up what I know about this blessed gospel for all the pleasure of this world.

Let us never get discouraged, for Jesus is our friend, and he will give us grace to conquer.

Your sister in Christ,

740 Locust Street.

MRS. ELIZA COX.

MANCHESTER, England.

Dear Herald: On the 16th of January, 1907, we left Liverpool for the United States on board the ship Haverford, the writer having never crossed the ocean before. When three days on the journey the wind began to blow, and the big eleven-thousand-ton ship began rolling, and you who have had the experience may guess the rest. We had a three day's gale, and as we neared the harbor it put one in mind of the resurrection morn, and we began to ask each other where we had been for twelve days. At night the report was that we were entering the mouth of the Delaware River, so at five o'clock in the morning we were upon deck and we found the river frozen, and heard the ship cutting her way through the ice; and some residents of the States who had been paying a visit to friends in the old country, whom we had asked why they wore the sealskin cap with a large lap turned up when we came on deck on the morning of the thirteenth day, when they saw us holding our hands to our ears, smiled, and advised us to buy fresh headgear. Well, by about noon we had steamed up one hundred miles of the Delaware, and we put in dock for the examination of the luggage, everybody bidding each other good-bye, some feeling that in thirteen days they had made dear friends. When we got through we began to look around for some one, and Bro. John leaving me in charge of the luggage went to the entrance, and when I saw him coming back alone I very anxiously asked if any one had come to meet us, and when he answered, No, I thought it very unkind, and felt a long way from home; but Bro. John was brave and said, "Come along." We then made our way into the town of Philadelphia. After waiting and making several inquiries we got the right car and made our way to our good and kind Bro. and Sr. Andrews, and after partaking of the good things our kind sister provided we felt better. Yet one thing we lacked, the old open fire; and while we were talking and viewing the large stove, the substitute for the open fire, we heard the door-bell ring, and then we had the pleasure of seeing our genial brothers, Apostle Frank Sheehy and Walter Smith, pastor of the branch here, and after a hearty shake of hands, also inquiry as to how we managed to find our way, and an explanation as to why no one met us on account of misunderstanding of time of arrival of ship in dock, we went along with Bro. Smith to his house, and here we met a little intelligent woman with her two little sons who gave us a hearty welcome to their home. Then Bros. Sheehy and Smith took us to the home of our Bro. and Sr. Copeland for supper. Here we met President Joseph Smith and Bishop E. L. Kelley. With a hearty shake of hands they greeted us, and we felt happy to meet them once more in the land of the living, and after partaking of the good things that our good and kind Bro. and Sr. Copeland had so abundantly provided, we made our way to the Oddfellows' hall where special revival services were to be held for one week under the auspices of the Philadelphia Branch.

On the 29th we were invited to our Bro. Zimmermann's home, and here we believe we met a man who, although blessed with this world's goods, possesses the power to use the same to the honor and glory of the God he has elected to serve, and we believe that we saw here an exemplary Latter Day Saint's home. After we had partaken of the good things provided, we were taken to the exchange by our bright, cheerful sister, Clara Zimmermann, and as we stood in the balcony looking at the excitement among the speculators, we wondered how long that sort of thing could last with the strongest-brained man that ever lived. On the 10th I went to Elk Mills, a distance of forty-two miles, and although the snow was thick on the ground we had good meetings, and I was very kindly treated. Unfortunately I do not remember all the names. I hope the young couple who had just entered the bonds of matrimony and so comfortably put me up for the night, and the young man who volunteered to be my bed-mate, are in that land of the living and enjoying the blessings of this latter-day gospel; and the young woman who came to me and told me she had been in a backsliding condition for sometime, but from that time intended to live a better life, I hope that she may be successful. Dear sister, we will pray for you. Returning on Monday morning to Philadelphia, we left for New York.

G. W. LEGGOTT.

GREENWOOD, New York, July 12, 1907.

Editors Herald: I did not reach my field of labor as soon as I intended, because of ill health; but by the blessing of a kind Father, and in compliance with his law, I was relieved of the affliction.

Before coming east I was permitted to attend the Chatham District conference, held at the Zone Branch, which was a pleasant one. The business passed off quietly, every part of it being done in a business-like manner. The preaching was quite good and very inspiring. The Saints of that place have done well. They have completed their church; started it over a year ago. It is built of cement blocks, and has a very neat appearance both inside and out. I would think the size of it to be about thirty by forty feet. There is a basement in it, and the meals were served in it at the rate of eight cents per meal. I think that it would be better if the district would raise the price to ten cents a meal, or three for twenty-five cents. It would be better in making change; and I don't think that any of the Saints would have any complaint to make. The work of preparation and serving of meals was done by the sisters, Brn. Russell and Leverton rendering some assistance. Of course it was necessary that they should assist; for the work would not be complete without them. There did not seem to be a jar or complaint from any one.

Many came with the expectation of having the house dedicated to the Lord; and for a time it was feared that it would not be done, as there was a debt of one hundred and seventy-five dollars; but before the close of the afternoon service, Bro. Evans, the speaker, considered that the amount could be raised, so he set to work in his usual way to talk money in quite a humorous way, and the second time that he went around, with the hat for a collection-plate, the necessary amount was raised, the debt was paid, the church dedicated, and the Saints relieved and caused to rejoice in the good work begun. All it required on our part is a little courage, mingled with faith in God, and we as a people would accomplish great things. The building is a credit to the work, and the Saints have done well to accomplish what they have done. One was baptized during the conference in the baptismal font which is in the basement. Several were administered to with good results. The reports from the officers, missionaries, and other members of the district show that they have been attending to duty, and the work is benefited by it.

There seems to be some dilatoriness on the part of some of the Saints about having the conferences held in their branches, for causes best known to themselves, which I think is a mistake. I think it the duty of each branch in a district to ask for the conference in its turn, and do the best they can for it, because the revelations call for the holding of conference just as much as the meeting of Saints in branch meetings. I am satisfied greater blessings would attend such gatherings, and more good be accomplished, if the Saints would accept, and do what they could for it in cheerfulness.

In this part of the mission (Eastern Mission) there are several branches, and the material for more in an isolated condition; if a district could be formed, it would be fraught with good.

There are a number of Saints here (Greenwood, New York). They have a neat church which is a credit to the name we bear, but have not got an officer to lead them. There should be something done, so they could have regular meetings. They keep up their Sunday-school, and are doing well; hope the day will soon dawn when an organization will be effected.

I am battling away as best I can for the Master in this part of the vineyard. Hope to be faithful in the discharge of every known duty. Hope to be remembered at the throne of grace in common with my brethren.

Your colaborer for Zion's welfare,

SAMUEL BROWN.

BIRMINGHAM, England, July 6, 1907.

Editors Herald: We have been much encouraged during the past year by improvements in the condition of things in general, and more especially for the greater number of reports received for last year's work; also for the very kind letters coming to hand from time to time, besides many questions asked for advice as to how to work, and what can be done to help build up the work; and, when meeting with members, words expressing joy, in saying, "We are very much pleased to see you," or "Glad to meet you once more."

Now we want the HERALD'S kind assistance in appealing to the presidents and secretaries of other quorums to be kind enough to send on to us any copies of rules, systems, or advice which will be beneficial in helping us to understand what is right to be done to build up the Master's work. We seek your kind assistance and advice, and thank you in anticipation. The splendid articles and advice given in the HERALD and Ensign of late are very encouraging to us on this side of the deep waters. An early reply to our appeal for rules, etc., will greatly oblige.

JOHN E. MEREDITH,

President Eleventh Quorum of Elders.

McKEESPORT, Pennsylvania, June 30, 1907.

Editors Herald: A sweet little girl came to our home yesterday at four o'clock in the afternoon, and seems quite contented, making no attempt to go away, so we feel to say, Praise God from whom all blessings flow.

Elder James McConnaughy, of Ohio, is here in McKeesport, preaching every night with small crowds to begin with, but much interest, and prospects of getting larger. Both city papers contain a lengthy write-up stating the difference between our people and the Utah people, and giving the subject for the next sermon, "The kingdom of God not in the heart." We are looking for quite a crowd out to hear this. Our meetings are held in the old Congregational church.

We are lone Saints here, and have been anxious to hear some preaching, and have others brought to a knowledge of the gospel. I have distributed considerable literature; but there is a peculiar indifference. We feel as if we have done our duty, and have placed all in God's hands, and are willing to be used in any way he wants us.

The parable by Bro. Farr is fine. I am letting several read it. Was down to Pittsburg last Sunday. Two were baptized.

At this evening's session there were four or five Brighamites out, feathers ruffled, seemingly in trim for an argument; but the Spirit of the good Master was on our side.

Bro. McConnaughy preaches twice to-morrow, and Tuesday night, and if crowds are not any larger will close; but I feel satisfied that there has been some seed sown, and there has been made a better chance for others. The papers have done fine by us. Bro. McConnaughy has been requested to preach on Mormonism Tuesday night, so his subject will be "Mormonism exposed." The reporter said he would be there to take notes and publish.

I would ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may prove faithful, especially the Saints of Michigan.

In the one true doctrine,

1100 Maple Street.

Editors Herald: No doubt some of your many readers would be glad to hear from me. On the 25th of June wife and I left our home to visit various places in the foothills in western South Dakota, the primary object of my visit being to preach the gospel, and incidentally to visit a brother in the flesh who lives at Hot Springs, a place which is every year becoming more prominent as a health- and pleasure-resort. Passing many things of interest to me, we found ourselves at Buffalo Gap about half past nine o'clock on the 26th. Here we leave the Black Hills division of the Northwestern Railroad, expecting to take the train to Hot Springs, about fifteen miles away; but "the best laid plans of mice and men"—you know the rest of the verse. The engine of the train that should have taken us was off the rails, between the two towns. However, the enterprising agent at "the Gap" had wired the "Palace" livery barn at Hot Springs, and they, with three rigs, brought the passengers from the delayed train and also took the passengers to the "Springs."

When the twenty-two passengers, with baggage and the mail, were all loaded into the three hacks we were almost as close as the proverbial "sardines in a box." Leaving the town, we pass some fine fields of alfalfa, and follow the irrigating ditch for a mile or two, then up the Beaver River, through a gap in the hills, which has long been known as Buffalo Gap, so named because of being the path chosen by those animals to enter the Black Hills region, from the plains of Nebraska and Dakota, for winter range.

As we enter the gap our attention is attracted by immense ledges of rock, which at some time in the misty past have been lifted up by the mighty forces of Nature, and left broken or cracked, and some standing on edge, or at an angle anywhere between the horizontal and perpendicular.

The ascent is continued for some miles; then, having reached the summit of the ridge, we begin the descent toward Hot Springs. The descent is about as gradual as the ascent, and at about six o'clock we enter the city, named from the warm water that issues from the rocks in an abundant flow. The place was called by the Indians, Minnekahta—Minne, water; kahta, hot. The town has an elevation of about thirty-two hundred feet above sea-level, and is well supplied with hotels for the accommodation of tourists. The soldiers' home, a state institution, is beautifully situated on the west side of the canyon in which flows Falls River. On the opposite side, and a little farther north, is a United States Sanitarium, built by the Government for the benefit of invalid soldiers, at a cost of about one million dollars. I believe no other government in the world has done a like thing for its discharged soldiery.

With love to all your readers,

In gospel bonds,

LEVI GAMET.

Editors Herald: I do not know what I would do without the HERALD. I am one of the isolated members, and would like to ask who the elders of this district are. I live in Marion, Grant County, Indiana. I have not seen nor heard of an elder of our faith in this city. There have been some of the Salt Lake Mormons, of Joseph F. Smith's creed, and I pray daily for some of the Latter Day Saints to come here. It would do me good just to meet a sister or brother of the Reorganized faith; and I want the prayers of the Saints that my husband may become a Saint, a true Saint. I am trying to live in that way that I may not be ashamed to own I am a Saint, should there ever be a church here. Pray for me. May God bless you all is my prayer.

CRABTREE, Ohio, July 14, 1907.

Editors Herald: I came yesterday; found the Saints in the spirit of the work, and hungry for the preaching of the gospel. I preached for them with good liberty last night, and will hold a prayer- and testimony-meeting to-day, the Lord willing. The Saints at this place need some one to assist them, and I think a good work could be done if some one could be sent here. I am at Bro. Isaac Pyle's this morning. He is not well. Pray for him. This is his eighty-fifth year in life. May his last days be his best days on earth. May God be with all the Saints.

J. T. MITCHELL.

ST. CLAIR, Michigan, July 13, 1907.

Dear Herald: We attended the annual gathering at McGregor, July 3 and 4, at which the dedication of their new church took place—a neat edifice built of cement. President R. C. Evans of the Canada mission was present, also Apostle J. W. Wight, of Lamoni, who uttered the dedicatory prayer. The young people's prayer-meeting, July 4, at half past seven, gave way at half past ten for the older Saints' prayer-meeting. The Spirit was present in power, and the gifts were manifest. The Lord said he was pleased with their sacrifice in assembling together on the birthday of liberty, called Independence Day. When we as a people realize the grand destiny of a land predestined to become a refuge for the oppressed of all nations, and the seat of the angel's message, and restoration of the gospel, is it not more fitting for us as the people of God to meet together to praise him, than to be found in the midst of the confusion and uproar of a noisy crowd, giving time and talent, and sometimes life and limb in enthusiastic patriotism?

According to the Chicago Tribune, the grim returns of the records of the dead and injured eclipsed those of the last nine years. Each year the list is growing longer, and each year the world is growing more pleasure mad. I must say it is pleasing to reflect on those young people assembled together at McGregor, giving up the frivolities of the world for a quiet hour of prayer. God is preparing a mighty army, and those who are faithful he will call to be his warriors.

News From Branches

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The work here is prospering, the branch active, and in fair spiritual condition. Elder O. B. Thomas has been here several weeks now, working with us in street-preaching and occupying at the open-air service at Wade Park, Sunday afternoons, where he draws almost as large a crowd as the union service following, of the twelve east end churches whose pastors are mostly "resting up" at this time of year, their churches closed during hot weather for some services, and a few taking turns at their park services.

For several years we have been advocating by press and pulpit "the restored gospel from the open Bible," and now Bro. O. B. Thomas is rapidly becoming known as "Open Bible Thomas" by reason of the scriptural evidences he arrays before appreciative audiences.

Cleveland and Kirtland Sunday-schools held a joint picnic at Willoughbeach Park on Lake Erie Saturday, July 13. Good time enjoyed by all. Bro. Robert Miller's boy Robbie was baptized by Elder O. B. Thomas during the afternoon.

FIRST KANSAS CITY.

Since last writing, the weather has been very warm and our church is uncomfortably warm, consequently the attendance has been small, but some of our meetings have been good; also the sisters' meetings at the house of Sr. Warnky have been very spiritual. Bro. Guy Rosevere was ordained to the office of deacon, and Bro. Seth Sandy is recommended to be ordained to the office of elder.

Elder M. F. Gowell was here on a visit to his parents from Topeka and preached once for us. We are glad to learn that his mother, who was nearly a life-time Baptist and much opposed to her husband and son, has been able to see the divinity of the restored gospel, and is now rejoicing in the reality of the true religion of Jesus Christ.

One of our Sunday-school pupils, Fanny Manly, was baptized, Superintendent Harvy Sandy officiating. Mrs. Read was baptized, Elder H. W. Goold officiating.

Our efforts to enlighten the public by preaching on the streets under the direction of the stake presidency are progressing nicely. Bro. Lott Sandy, from Philippine Islands, is here worshiping with us. Elder R. Parker and Patriarch A. White preached last Sunday. Both efforts were good.

MANITOULIN ISLAND, ONTARIO.

While the enemy is at work trying to destroy, the dear Lord by his Spirit is moving upon the hearts of the people, and the word preached is haying its effect. I am pleased to state that more are being baptized; there are now nineteen and more are inquiring after the old paths, and asking for the good way, and are walking therein.

The calls are many. Just got two letters: more to be baptized. The field is large, the laborers few. We hope and pray that more men will be willing to make the great sacrifice and go out at the command of the Lord and bring in the lost sheep of Israel in these latter days.

I find much to do to teach the people the truth as found in the law of Christ, contained in the books of the church.

Seventh Quorum of Elders.

Dear Brethren: We your collaborators for Christ desire to greet you with the spirit of love, and humbly ask your kind and careful consideration of the gospel laws, and our appeal to you for hearty cooperation. We have held several officers' and district meetings during the year now coming to a close, and hope good will result from what has been done during the year. We would like to have done more, but circumstances and conditions would not allow.

The important question is, What is an elder, and what is his duty?

We are now formed or organized into a quorum. For whom, and what purpose? How can we build up the Lord's work? Some of the questions that have been asked during the year are as follows:

What is the use of being a member of the quorum? What benefit is to be derived from being a member? In what way can we educate one another? How can we hold quorum meetings? Where and when can they be held? How and when should we report? And many similar questions have been asked during the year. These are beneficial to the cause, and good reasonable answers are required, therefore we ask your consideration and assistance in every conceivable way. It is necessary. We need funds to carry on this grand and important work. Therefore ask, When shall we make an appeal and what shall it be? How shall funds be expended, and by whose authority.

Can we hold district or local meetings? When and where and how often and by whose authority? We have received some very kind and respectful letters during the year; words like these: "Thanks for your kind letter." "Was pleased to hear from you." "Pleased to receive your kind letter." Is not this encouraging and better than finding fault and complaining? Why of course you will gladly say, Yes.

Now please come along with your answers and suggestions re above, and give as kindly advice as possible, and let us see what can be done by the quorum for the Lord and his people and the spread of the gospel. We must be united.

One man can accomplish much in a lifetime. Then how much more can many do if only agreed and united in the spirit of love and charity. If mistakes have been made in the past, or we have not done what you think we should have done, or if we have gone over the line and exceeded our duty or privileges, please come to us as the law directs and help put us right with the spirit of love. Let us profit by any past error or mistakes, and try to forward the Lord's work by being kind and considerate of one another.

We hope to see a goodly number present at annual conference to be held in Birmingham, and would be pleased to see every member of quorum present.

Yours in bonds,

J. E. MEREDITH, President.

Hunton Rd, Gravelly Hill, Birmingham.

W. R. ARMSTRONG, J. W. TAYLOR, Counselors.

S. F. MATHER, Secretary, 15 February Street, Manchester.

Reunion Notices.

Eastern Oklahoma reunion will begin August 16 at Riply, on Santa Fe Railroad, about forty miles east of Guthrie, to continue ten days. Remember the date, and let us all rally our forces to make this meeting another grand, successful reunion in Oklahoma. District conference will convene during this reunion. Trust all the standing ministry will report, that it may be known what is being done, and where. Those desiring tents should place their orders early with T. Berry, at Riply, Oklahoma. Arrangements will be made for cooperative boarding-table. Sufficient number of the ministry will be present to assist by the help of God and the Saints, in holding the banner of truth aloft. Come in the spirit of humility, praise, and prayer, that God may use us as "the salt of the earth." James E. Yates, assistant president.

The committee for the reunion to be held at Denver, September 4 to 15, wishes to further announce that arrangements have been made to give board at the rate of 50 cents per day, and to furnish tents on the ground as follows: 8x10, $1.25; 10x12, $1.50; 12x14, $1.75; 1 mattress, 1 cot, and 1 pillow, the whole for one dollar for the term. Railroad rates to reunion and camp-meeting, at Denver, September 4 to 18. Rate of one and one-fifth fares on the certificate plan from all stations in Colorado on the Colorado & Southern, Colorado Midland, Cripple Creek Lines, Denver & Rio Grande, and from competitive points on the Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fe. From points east of Pueblo on the A. T. & S. F., and from points on the Missouri Pacific, Union Pacific, Rock Island, and Burlington, rate of one and one third fares on the certificate plan. Tickets can be bought on September 3, 4, 5, 6, going, and returning not later than three days after the close of the meeting. These return tickets to be first-class limited, good only on date of sale, and for continuous passage. When you buy your ticket take a receipt from the selling agent showing that you have paid full fare going, which when signed by C. E. Everett, secretary of reunion committee, will entitle you to return at one and one-third fare. If you have to come over more than one road take receipt from each agent of whom you buy a ticket. These rates are made upon the assurance that fifty or more certificates are in evidence. Clergy certificates and tickets less than fifty cents will not be recognized. The committee are doing all in their power to make this reunion a grand success, and to do this they realize as must also the Saints of this district that cooperation is an essential feature; therefore, we again ask all the Saints to assist in this commendable work, that thereby we may come together and give to each other and to the world the strength, the life, the light, and the hope of eternal life, and so amicably amalgamate in this effort that an account to our credit may be recorded in Heaven's great credit book that will be, as the Savior said, treasures laid up in heaven where thieves do not break in and steal, neither moth corrupt. The committee realizes that in this western country the Saints have hitherto had but little advantage and privilege to associate together in this manner, scattered as they are, and of a hard-working class; and therefore they desire to do their best that when you do come to this reunion you may get and give the best possible results to each other. Remember to live only is not the incentive of the gospel mandates, but to give life. So like the sunshine and rain that gives vegetable life, let us give spiritual life, and thus be a laborer together with God in the development of a plentiful harvest. J. W. Morgan, chairman, Chas. E. Everett, J. D. Curtis, committee.

As previously announced, the reunion of the Kirtland District will convene at Lake Side Park, at Akron, Ohio, from August 2 to 12. The following will be the prices on meals, tents, cots, etc., for the season of 1907: Tents ready to be occupied, with one cot, $3, and 50 cents for extra cots; single meals, 20 cents, and six meals for $1; children from five to twelve years of age, half price and children under five years of age, free. These prices are a trifle in advance of our former prices, but as everything has advanced we have to charge accordingly. As we have announced before, all orders for cots and other arrangements will have to be in by the 25th of this month. We expect a good attendance. There will be a large missionary force there, and we expect at least one patriarch to be present. Those that intend to attend the reunion will please bring bedding, as there will be none furnished this season. We trust every one will make it his personal business to look out for his own comfort. C. J. Dalberg, Eben Miller, of the committee.

To the Saints of St. Louis District, and Others Who May Be Interested: Our reunion will convene at Vosholl, Osage County, Missouri, August 9 to 18. Everything is being done that we can to make it a success, and have all things in readiness for those who desire to attend, also to have every convenience possible for the Saints. There will be water, straw for bedding, pasture, etc., convenient to the camping-ground. We think we can rent tents, 10x12, for $2; 12x14, for $2.50. However, these prices are only approximate. Those desiring to rent tents should not put it off till the last minute, or you may not find a tent when you get there. All orders should be sent to F. E. Smith, 2713 Dickson Street, St. Louis, Missouri. We will have a tent for the missionaries to sleep in, also a tent for them to take their meals in, and we will try to run this on a large enough scale to give meals to transients, or those who may stay a day or two, at the approximate price of fifteen cents a meal; but bear in mind this is not a general boarding-tent. We expect those who can to come prepared to serve their own meals; so do not come unprepared, and be disappointed. We hope to have one of the general ministers in charge present with us, also the missionaries of the district. We wish also to have plenty of Sunday-school and Religio work at the reunion. Those who attend should get their ticket to Bonnetts Mill, Missouri, over the Missouri Pacific Railroad, the nearest point to Vosholl, and if coming two or more at a time you can be transported to Vosholl free by writing Bro. G. W. Beebe, Vosholl, Missouri, and letting him know when you will arrive; otherwise you will have to come out by mail hack, costing fifty cents each. We can rent cots at about fifty cents each. Please pay attention to these instructions, and you will suffer no inconvenience; and for any information you desire, write the undersigned. J. A. Tanner, 2941 Thomas Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

Died.

HEWITT.—Sr. Nellie (Kirkendoll) Hewitt was born January 29, 1881. Baptized May 30, 1893, by James Moler. She was married February 11, 1899, to Clarence Hewitt. She leaves husband and three small children. Died July 1, 1907, at her home in Chillicothe, Ohio, and her body was interred at Creola, Ohio. A home on earth is left vacant, but a place long ago prepared in heaven for a noble soul is now occupied. Funeral-sermon by J. L. Goodrich.

LAMBERT.—Elder Richard Lambert was born in Gargraves, Yorkshire, England, November 17, 1822. His parents were Richard and Patience Lambert. He united with the church in England, and came to Nauvoo in 1840. In 1843 he was married to Miss Jane Thornbur, and later located on the land where they made their home and raised their children to honored manhood and womanhood. They did not follow any of the factions at the exodus from Nauvoo, but remained on their farm and were not seriously molested. When the Reorganization was effected they united with it. He was ordained an elder, and was an active and spiritual member, and was many times favored with the gift of tongues. Of him and his wife fifteen children were born. Of these six are dead and nine living, five sons and four daughters, as follows: Joseph R. and D. F., of Lamoni, Iowa; W. T., of Colusa, Illinois; George P., of Ferris, Illinois; and A. F., of Obea, Arkansas; Mrs. Samuel Siegfried and Mrs. E. A. Pitt of Ferris, Illinois; Mrs. A. W. Head, Stewartville, Missouri; Mrs. H. O. Redfield, Tabor, Iowa. One son and two daughters died in infancy, and three years ago the daughters, Mrs. Agnes Stevenson and Mrs. Susie Mapes, died; and in April, present year, the eldest son, John H., an elder in the church, and for many years Bishop's agent, died at Montrose. Until July 1901, the wife of his youth comforted his days. Since that sad parting, he has failed very fast, until failing strength and impaired faculties ceased to animate, and death came peacefully and almost unannounced at the age of 84 years, 7 months, and 17 days, on the evening of July 4, 1907. Funeral service was held at the Rock Creek church, Illinois, at 11 a. m., July 7, Elder James McKiernan in charge. The burial was at the Thornbur Cemetery, Powelton, Illinois.

How the National Forests Serve the Public.

"The Use of the National Forests," a publication just printed by the Department of Agriculture, is a brief, clear manual for public information as to the forest policy of the National Government.

It is too true, as the short preface to the public says, that "many people do not know what National Forests are. Others may have heard much about them, but have no idea of their true purpose and use." It is the object of this publication to explain just what the National Forests mean, what they are for, and how to use them.

In the first place, it is explained how the Forests are created and how their boundaries are drawn. Next, their direct use and value are shown from the point of view of the homeseeker, the prospector and miner, the user of timber, the user of the range, the user of the water, and other users of Forest resources. Third, it is shown how the Forests are intended for use, for the production of usable products, and for the establishment and maintenance of homes; how on all of them the timber is protected from fire, the water flow is kept steady, the forage on the range is increased and guarded from abuse; and how, in addition, they serve as great public playgrounds and as breeding-places and refuges for game. Finally, the management of the National Forests is described.

Here it is that the great usefulness of the Forests is brought out most clearly and strikingly; for the Forests are managed by the people in their own interests, and every means is used to meet the desires and wants of all Forest users half way by dealing with them in the main directly on the ground and in all cases with the utmost practicable dispatch and freedom from red tape.

In a word, the special interest of this manual lies in its showing that the Forest policy of the Government, both in principle and in practice, is for the benefit of the ordinary man, for the benefit of every citizen equally. There is still a tendency to think of the National Forests as "preserves" closed to use, and to leave the public lands exposed to unregulated individual exploitation. Where these misapprehensions still prevail "The Use of the National Forests" will go far to correct them.

The book is written by Mr. Frederick E. Olmsted, whose intimate knowledge of conditions in the West and the policy under which the National Forests are managed especially fits him to deal with the subject.

"The Arena" for July.

AN ENGLISH STATESMAN ON THE CABLE TRUST.

The July Arena opens volume 38 of this leading progressive review with a very notable table of contents. The first paper is from the pen of the famous English Statesman, J. Henniker Heaton, and is entitled "How to smash the cable ring." Mr. Heaton is the ablest and most influential advocate of reduced domestic and foreign postage in the Parliament of Great Britain. For years he has worked incessantly for cheap postage, for an effective parcel post, and for the increased efficacy of the postal savings-bank system of Great Britain. His interest in the cables for the millions has led him to make an exhaustive study of the whole problem and the results of his research have been incorporated in two papers for The Arena. In the opening article, that in the July number, he discusses the question in a popular vein. In it the spirit of Franklin revisits the earth and discusses the question of telegraphy and the cables of the world from the view-point of a great patriot rather than that of a present-day commercial magnate bent on getting wealth through plundering the people. The article is full of facts that will set men thinking, and being written in a popular vein will be read by thousands of persons who might not peruse a more academic presentation of the subject.

Other important political and economic papers in this issue are discussions by George Wharton James on Galveston's successful experiment in civic government; Honorable Robert Treat Paine, Jr., on Massachusetts' historic attitude in regard to representative government; B. O. Flower, Editor of The Arena, on leading objections to Direct-Legislation; Thomas McGrady on the Catholic Church and Socialism; Professor Charles Sprague Smith on the People's Institute of New York and the work it is doing for the development of citizenship along democratic lines; and William Mailly on the social drama of the past season. The last two papers are beautifully illustrated. There are also several notable contributions on other subjects, together with a number of timely editorials and the regular news departments devoted to Public-Ownership, Direct-Legislation and Coöperation. The Arena was never stronger or better than at the present time.

San Francisco and the Japanese.

The Japanese are objected to on the broad American ground of non-assimilability, but the Japanese question has been unfairly introduced at this time. There is practically no racial prejudice, but the workingmen have been urged not to patronize the Japanese restaurants, for instance, because they are conducted by non-union help, and when union men were found in an establishment they were rudely disciplined. This is a phase of the boycott, and does not rise to the dignity of an international question. San Francisco may be exposed for these reasons to occasional turbulence,—a manifestation of "Western exuberance," or "frontier ruffianism," as it has been called,—but shall we condemn the air because it is the element of storms and hurricanes? These tempests which sweep over democratic communities sometimes clarify the atmosphere, and are soon over; and out of our local troubles will come a cleaner government, a better conception of the labor question by employer and employee, and a stronger loyalty to the law, which, like a rock, stands unshaken under the folds of the flag, guaranteeing a square deal, equal rights, and stable rule.—From "The case of San Francisco," by ex-Mayor James D. Phelan, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for July.

JACKSON COUNTY BANK

I take the liberty of soliciting your patronage as we are in a position to do BANKING BUSINESS BY MAIL very satisfactorily. Open accounts can be placed with us for safety at your convenience and command. We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood shorn of all political ambition with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. I point with considerable just pride (I assume) to our Board of Directors as named below. Feel at liberty to write us on matters that concern you in Jackson County, Missouri.

OFFICERS: Ellis Short, President; M. H. Bond, Second Vice-president; William Crick, First Vice-president; J. D. Briggs, Cashier.

DIRECTORS: Ellis Short, William Crick, M. H. Bond, J. D. Briggs, G. H. Hilliard, Doctor Joseph Mather, Doctor O. H. Riggs, Horace Sheley, A. L. Yingling.

THE COURSE OF HONOR.—PART II.

There are two classes of professed believers in Joseph Smith as a prophet, the authenticity of the Book of Mormon, the principles of primitive Mormonism (so called for the sake of the argument), and the institution of the church organized April 6, 1830, for the peculiar views and claims of whom, as we understand them, there is neither palliation nor excuse.

One of these classes of believers affect to hold that Joseph Smith was a prophet, chosen and inspired of God for the purpose of the discovery and translation of the plates on which former inhabitants of the Western Continent had inscribed the history of their occupancy of the land, and their characteristic religious faiths and beliefs; and by the command of God to begin the preaching of the New Testament gospel; to receive the priesthood authority to organize the church of Christ, and set in motion an authoritative propoganda for the evangelizing the world. They affect to hold further, that at some time after the publication of the Book of Mormon and the organization of the church, the Prophet fell into transgression of so gross a nature that he forfeited his prophetic standing with God and became "a fallen prophet," whatever that term may mean. However, that up to a certain period, the exact date of which has not yet been officially fixed by them, the revelations given to the church through the Prophet and the work in preaching the gospel, organization, calling men to the priesthood and church expansion carried on by him and those with him were legal and accepted by the Lord, and should be accepted and adhered to by those professing to follow in the beliefs and principles of faith revealed to the world through the instrumentality of the Prophet.

The positions thus taken by this class of believers, and the failure to accurately fix the acts of transgression by which the Prophet fell and the exact date when his right to act as a prophet in the work assigned to him ceased; that is, the giving revelations to the church as he received them from the Lord, upon which the calling of ministers and ordaining them and the work of preaching the gospel and the organization of the church as it grew in numbers were carried on; and under some of which acts of authority these men themselves now claim to be acting, are singularly faulty and inconsistent and untenable.

And when it is further considered that very nearly all the revelations and commandments establishing the faiths of the church and directing in its establishment during the formative period of its early existence, by virtue of which even these men who declare that the Prophet had fallen claim validity and foundation for their own church existence and work, were received and in full active recognition and force before the period at or near which any of them attempt to fix the time and possible incidents of the fall of the Prophet, the inconsistency and untenability of their position are more clearly seen.

To assume that the Prophet fell by transgression, thus forfeiting the right and power to accomplish the work which the Lord gave him to do, is equivalent to an impeachment of the wisdom of God, or the "Great Council" which sat as an advisory board, in making the selection of the instrument chosen to begin and complete that work. It is, in effect, a wholesale discrediting of all the revelations, and as a consequence of all the work done under the direction and force of them, the work of these men included. This is the logic of the situation in which the claim stated places those who make it.

Again, if the acts done by the Prophet, which it is claimed resulted in his becoming a fallen prophet, were crimes or misdemeanors against the laws of the land and punishable by arraignment before the courts of law under the institutions of the Nation or the State, and were known by his associates cotemporaneous with him in the church, among whom must have been those upon whose call and ordination to the ministry these who now claim he was fallen base their official religious right and authority to act in church capacity, then those men should have proceeded against the Prophet charging him with the specific acts of wrong-doing of which they had knowledge, and then and there have taken the position these others now take, and shown the disastrous effect to result, besides punishing the Prophet for the crimes or misdemeanors which were known to them if he was guilty. Not one of them did this. It would have been an honorable course to pursue; and one fully provided for in the revelations which these later men accept as being authentic. Why did they not do this? There can be but two possible answers; one is, that the Prophet was not guilty; the other, that these men his cotemporaries knew nothing of any such transgressions.

Again, "the law of the Lord" accepted and acknowledged as in force in the days of the Prophet before these men say that he became a fallen prophet, and in force now among believers in "Mormonism," including these who say that he fell, made it the duty of all of the called and ordained officers of the church to see to it that violators of that law should be arraigned before the church courts for such violations. The acts of transgression of which it is claimed the Prophet was so guilty as to vitiate his calling as a prophet, must have been flagrant or no such vitiation could have taken place. And if so flagrant those acts must have been of such a character that they were known to a sufficient number of his associates, including the predecessors of these who now claim the fall of the Prophet, and in such case charges and arraignment and conviction before the church courts would have been inevitable. Or, if failing in conviction on just causes for complaint, those associates could have made open charges of such transgression and failure to convict and have withdrawn from the fellowship. Did they do this? No. Nor was it until after the death of the Prophet that these men, who had remained in fellowship with him as coworkers in the propagation of the gospel and the work involved in the building up of the church and the care of the membership, up to that time discovered that some ten years, more or less, before his death Joseph Smith had been guilty of such flagrant wrongdoing that the Lord had withdrawn his Spirit and he had become a fallen prophet; and they had been in close and intimate connection with him during all those years; had knowledge of his acts, personal and official, and remained silent as to his wrongdoing and stood with him up to the time when he went "as a lamb to the slaughter" and died an innocent man." If Joseph Smith was guilty of such wrongdoing as to forfeit his standing, and such acts were known at the time when committed to those who subsequently asserted that he was fallen, they were guilty with him, in that they did not proceed against him either in the courts of the land or the courts of the church, both of which were open to them by command of church rule and obligation.

Moreover, the position which is assumed by those who claim that Joseph Smith became a fallen prophet and died such, who at the same time hold him as the instrument through whom the latter-day work was brought into being, the one through whom the doctrine of the New Testament was restored, the one who by revelation proclaimed the reestablishment of the ancient apostolic faith, the one through whom the priesthood authority to officiate in the ordinances of the gospel was reconferred, and under which they themselves assume to have the right to act, becomes a boomerang, in fact and in argument, against their efforts to preach the gospel and build up the church upon such claim and position. The almost inevitable inquiry of the careful thinker to whom the knowledge of this claim that Joseph Smith was a fallen prophet is stated, when the sequence is understood is to this effect: that a claim for church existence and the right of church expansion based upon the work of a prophet whom the church claimants confess had vitiated his prophetic calling years before his death and died in that condition of forfeiture, is not worthy of acceptance, as such prophet could not have been called and ordained a prophet of God; hence, it is useless to accept such a theory, and to join such a church is a mistake. Many look upon the claim and position as a fouling of the spiritual stream through which it is claimed church existence and privileges and spiritual blessings must flow. If, as it is claimed, the stream became fouled so early in its flow, what guarantee have men that such fouled stream was ever pure and clear and approved of the Lord? Besides this, if the Lord, who knows all things, knew that the man he chose through whom to reveal the Book of Mormon, and by revelation to organize the church, in the short period of four or five years would transgress so wickedly as to lose his spiritual standing, and would continue to live in that condition for ten or more years before he died, during which time he would be the means of imposing his false claims upon thousands and tens of thousands of innocent seekers after life and salvation, it argues badly for his possession of sufficient wisdom to make choice of a proper human instrument to accomplish his great purpose; and the effect of such reasoning is to discredit the claim made by these men that they are legal representatives of the faith for the introduction of which into the world Joseph Smith was the responsible human agent. Such claim and position are calculated to cause inquiring men and lookers-on to doubt the spiritual sanity of the men who make them as well as to deny the statements they make and the logic of the arguments with which they attempt to support their claims and to which they are driven by the force of adverse inquiry and criticism.

ABOUT THE ZIONISTIC MOVEMENT.

Whatever we may think about the future of the Jews, and the land of Palestine as a consequence, it is well for us to see the land and the people as some others cotemporaneous with us see them. The following is from the daily Journal of Kansas City, Missouri, for Friday, July 19.

Whether the Zionistic movement is a premature one destined to be followed at a later period of time by another more timely to be successful, in accord with our reading of prophecy, or this writer has failed to get the real facts of the movement, and is for that reason impressed with pessimistic views devoid of reasonable belief or sentiment, remains one of the riddles of time to be solved by the wisdom and power of God, "the God of the living" as well as the dead:

ZIONISM A FAILURE.

The cause of Zionism has been given another body blow by the Reverend Doctor Jacob Voorsanger, pastor of Temple Emanuel of San Francisco, who has just returned from a trip to Palestine to study the conditions with reference to the proposition to take the Jews of the United States to that country and revive the national existence of the race.

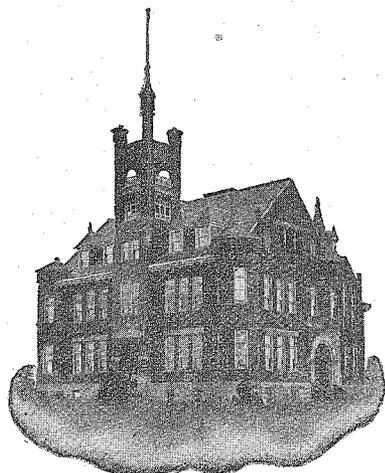

Doctor Voorsanger came to the conclusion after an exhaustive investigation that the idea is fallacious and unworthy of serious consideration. He says the country is beautiful, but fertile only in spots in the valleys, which are now occupied by Arabs who are groaning under the burdens of Turkish taxation. They have been there twelve hundred years and could hardly be removed even if the money were found to purchase their lands. Baron Rothschild has spent over $15,000,000 in establishing twenty-odd colonies, which are not yet self-supporting and there is no reasonable prospect of their becoming so in the near future. The whole country is poverty stricken, the chief source of livelihood of the natives consisting in the money they get out of tourists. The holy places are in the care of sordid wretches who are only interested in making money out of them.

Doctor Voorsanger was convinced that the Zionist idea is inadvisable, either as a political or an economic measure. As for himself, he says: "The political sovereignty of the Jew is a dead issue. My Americanism has no mental reservations. My flag is the flag of my country and I want no other. The duty of the Jews in this country is to live and work for the country of their birth or perhaps adoption, and to see that no shadow rests upon this, their country."

It is altogether probable that a vast majority of the Jews in this country are in full accord with the Doctor's sentiments. The Jews are better off in America than they ever were in all their history, not excepting the days of their national entity; and even if it were feasible and practical to gather the members of the race together as a nation in Palestine, any sentimental consideration of patriotic pride would hardly compensate for the loss of the ease and security which they enjoy here. The religious prejudice which formerly caused them to be looked down on and despised by Christians has virtually disappeared and they occupy almost precisely the same footing in this country as the Germans, French, Italians, and other foreign immigrants. What little differences may exist are due as much to the reserve and aloofness of the Jews themselves as to any feeling on the part of those of other creeds. This country offers to the Jews the same advantages and opportunities that are open to other races, which means the fairest conditions that human beings ever enjoyed for the pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness. There is no reason why an American Jew should not claim the Stars and Stripes as his own flag and be as proud of it as are the descendants of any other nationality that have populated these shores.

"If the soldiers in the rmy of the Lord will get right after the enemy they will be kept tolerably busy; and at the proper time, when they rally back to the council chambers, they may discuss the weak points in our defense, if there are such."

GRACELAND COLLEGE.

The HERALD Office has just completed Graceland College Catalogue, for 1906-1907, and they can be had free of charge by addressing F. B. Blair, Secretary, Lamoni, Iowa. The opening of the fall term is still two months away, but the many inquiries for information indicate a larger attendance than in any former year.

President R. M. Stewart will be found directing the work of the college as its president, and all of Graceland's former students believe that this at once insures success. He can justly be proud of the high esteem in which he is held by the student body.

President Stewart has not yet secured all the faculty for the coming year, as he not only insists upon ability as a scholar, but also demands that Graceland's instructors shall have that high moral tone that will have an influence for good upon the lives of those they teach. The next bulletin, which will be published in August, will doubtless have full particulars.

A manual training department will be added this fall, and it should interest a large number of our young men. This department will be in charge of Professor C. B. Woodstock, who will also have charge of the college farm. It is the aim of those in charge to afford the means of "self-help" to a number of young men, by placing some of the land in cultivation. Two of last year's students are putting in their vacation tending Graceland's farm.

We want every boy and girl who has a desire to improve his or her condition in life by securing a better education, to write to President R. M. Stewart, Lamoni, Iowa; tell him what you want, and he will advise you. A strong preparatory course is given, where young people of limited education are prepared for the more advanced classes. No matter how limited your education may be, there is a chance for you at Graceland.

Why not patronize our church school, educate our children under the influence of the church, surrounded by an environment that will develop them spiritually as well as mentally? Our motto is "An equal opportunity to all," and no boy or girl should be satisfied to let the opportunity slip to better qualify him or herself for a life of usefulness. Write now for complete catalogue.

Your brother in bonds,
F. B. BLAIR, Secretary.

 GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

The Denver Saints have issued a very attractive little leaflet entitled "The Gospel Echo." The front page is adorned by an excellent picture of the Denver church, with bulletin of services underneath, and the invitation "Come and see." The inside pages contain a church directory of the Eastern Colorado District, notices of the coming reunion, and short paragraphs elucidating the faith. Evidently the Denver Saints believe in advertising.

The splendid articles and advice given in the HERALD and Ensign of late are very encouraging to us on this side of the deep waters.—John E. Meredith, Birmingham, England.

Bro. Earl D. Bailey and his band of Saints have won good repute among their neighbors. Possibly the secret of it is to be found in the following account of a meeting in which they took the lead. We quote from the Tulsa (Oklahoma) Daily Democrat:

"A Democrat reporter had the pleasure of receiving an invitation to attend a Fourth of July celebration at Bailey's Ranch, fifteen miles north of Tulsa.

"In response to this invitation, Tulsa was left early on the morning of the Fourth, and upon arrival at the designated place some four or five hundred people were congregated to celebrate this occasion. It did not take many minutes to find out that these people had assembled to celebrate the national birthday. Every individual on the grounds seemed to be a special committee of one to make every person feel free and easy and perfectly at home.

"Promptly at seven o'clock a program was rendered which was opened by prayer led by the Reverend Earl D. Bailey, which was an inspiration to all persons present. Then came national airs, recitations, and flag drills. Then came the address of the Honorable L. M. Poe of Tulsa, who talked upon the subject of good citizenship, good government, and the requisites of a patriot, closing with a splendid tribute to the American women. . . .

"The most inspiring feature connected with this great banquet board was that these good people took their places at each side of the table and with bowed heads returned thanks to Almighty God for their good government, prosperity, and happiness. . . .

"It would be well for some of the other communities in this great country to take notice of these people and learn how to celebrate the nation's great holiday. No grafts, no fakes, no cost, no contentions, no strife, no booze, no drunkenness, everything showing that brotherly love and friendship prevailed, all persons doing unto others as they would have others do unto them."

Readers of Autumn Leaves will be interested in a picture in the August number: "The Hill Cumorah as it is to-day." The cut is reproduced from a photo by the Rochester News Company.

The brick work on the walls of the HERALD Office is done and the stone copings are in place. Inside work will be pushed rapidly.

A widowed sister in San Bernardino sends twenty dollars to help rebuild the HERALD Office. The money was earned at janitor-work and represents a month's work.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

The following from the daily news columns of current papers is a bit of timely information to those who are not impressed with the feasibility or permanency of the anarchistic theory of government:

"MILAN, July 13.—The well-known Italian anarchist leader, Saverio Merlino, who was once imprisoned and went to live abroad, was interviewed on the anarchist convention at Luxembourg. He said that he believes that anarchism is nearing its end.

"The anarchistic federations still existing, he declares, live merely because of tradition. The only groups with any vitality, he declares, are those in Paterson, New Jersey, because they are fed by unstable emigrants, chiefly Germans and Italians. Even these he predicts will disappear in the near future. Merlino said that the Luxembourg conference would leave things absolutely unchanged and that he withdrew from anarchism because he had been able to foresee its approaching end."

The famous Mesa Verde cliff-dwellings of Colorado are now under the care of the United States Government, and steps will be taken to preserve these mute evidences of the divinity of the Book of Mormon for all time. Professor Howett, director of the Institute of American Archæology, is about to make a thorough investigation of the ruins and will publish his findings.

Mark Twain has returned from his trip to Great Britain where he was everywhere feasted and honored. Being questioned as to the author of the best joke during his trip, the veteran humorist replied that modesty forbade him naming the individual. Modesty was not so apparent in his next remark: upon being asked if he had a good time while dining with King Edward, he replied that "the king did."

Lieutenant-colonel Burnley Campbell, of the British army, has completed a trip around the world in forty days, nineteen and one half hours. Thus actual performance has cut Jules Verne's imaginary trip "around the world in eighty days" in half. Fiction is only half as strange as truth.

Immediately following the Japanese-Russian War, Japan entered into a treaty with Korea by which she took actual control of the affairs of the Korean government. Recently the Korean emperor tired of posing as a figurehead and entered a protest at the Hague peace conference against the treatment accorded his government. The Korean cabinet under pressure of Japan immediately deposed the emperor and installed the crown prince in his stead. Rioting among the followers of the old emperor resulted in some confusion and bloodshed and the situation is still unsettled.

It used to be an old campaign joke about the Kansas man and the cow. The man related his experiences had during such a severe drouth that no food was to be found for man or beast and declared that but for the milk from his cow the entire family would have perished. Being questioned as to how the cow lived he replied that she sucked herself. Professor Erf of the Kansas State Agricultural College seems to have taken the experience of his fellow Kansan seriously. He has perfected a process by which he turns buttermilk into a powder and feeds it back to the cow. The food is said to be twice as rich in protein as cotton-seed meal. An endless chain arrangement is thus obtained highly gratifying to all parties.

"Will the dead live again?" That is the question that breaking hearts send up at each new graveside. It can never be answered, worlds without end, unless God shall answer it. And to-day we have his answer in the statement that he is a God of salvation and that the issues from death are in his hands."

The Straight Road

THE "UNBAPTIZED" INFANT.

With breaking heart, bowing o'er the coffin of her dear dead baby, "sorrowing as those who have no hope," many a grief-stricken mother has listened to the recital, from priest and parson, of the "awful doom of the 'unbaptized.'" Even in this favored century many hold tenaciously to this relic of ignorance and priestly tyranny. To such we come with the glad message that men will be judged and punished or rewarded for their own deeds, and not for the transgressions of others. (See Romans 2:6; Revelation 20:13.)

We grant that children are born with the latent propensities to sin within them; but it is not that which goeth into or is within a man, woman, or child which corrupts them, but that which cometh out. Many professing Christians, claiming to be saved and sanctified, not only have within them these same latent leanings toward evil, but have them intensified and developed a thousandfold. Does God hold them transgressors because of these latent proclivities? Certainly not! God loves them despite their imperfections; but he hates the sin which may be the outcome of these blemishes. He delights to see them endeavoring to subdue their imperfections of character, but does not impute sin to them because of those imperfections!

Are "saved" and "sanctified" people purer and holier whilst less perfect than a sweet babe laughing and cooing in its mother's arms? Never!

Said the right-thinking, pure-minded, truth-telling Savior: "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 19:14.

By what right, then, does mortal man dare to erect a barrier between the kind Savior and the little ones? What right has he to say that unless a pure baby is sprinkled before it dies it will go into everlasting and unutterable torment? Such teaching presents God as a fiendish monster, one of whose choice delights is listening to the pitiful, despairing, uncomprehending cry of helpless innocence in that hell which we are informed by a certain hymn is "crammed with infants dammed, without a day of grace!"

This can never be a proper presentation of the attributes of the just God who loved the world so well that he sent his only begotten son into it to "seek and to save that which was lost." (Luke 19:10.)

Whom did Jesus come to save? Them that were lost! Are babies among the lost! No! for by his death he cancelled the "sin of the world" resultant from the fall (see John 1:29) and man will be judged according to his own deeds and not for Adam's transgression.

His mission was to bring relief to the sin-sick soul. Though babies possess the latent faculties to sin, they are not quarantined by the Almighty until the disease manifests itself. Many men are potential thieves, but they are not prosecuted at common law unless they steal. The act proclaims that the person is a rebel against the law of God or of the state. Such acts never manifest themselves in the life of a helpless infant. Therefore it can not be said that they are affected with the disease of sin.

Jesus said: "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick."—Matthew 9:12. Therefore on the authority of Christ, babies do not need Him as their physician, in the spiritual sense, until they manifest the disease of sin.

Again: "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."—Matthew 9:13. Are babies righteous? or are they sinners? Whatever your opinion, the Savior's is: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

No scriptural warrant or precedent can be found for the baptism of babies—they do not need it until, when of proper age, they believe and are baptized by their own volition.

"He took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them."—Mark 10:16, is the example followed by the Saints.

DOCTRINES OF CATHOLICISM.

I. CELIBACY.

BISHOP C. J. HUNT.

When our Catholic friends read the title of this article and note that some of their most cherished doctrines are being assailed, we may hear them say, "It's another case of 'fools rushing in where angels fear to tread.'" Well, we feel perfectly calm "rushing in," and claim that the celibacy of Roman Catholicism is one of the greatest evils taught and practiced in the name of religion. Webster defines the word celibate: "One unmarried; a bachelor; one bound by vows not to marry." The latter definition, "bound by vows not to marry," applies to Catholic priests, and to "nuns" or "sisters." (Bible quotations will be from the Douay Version, a Catholic translation).

The real message from Heaven on the marriage question is, "The Lord God said, It is not good for man to be alone; let us make him a help like unto himself."—Genesis 2:18.

Jesus said:

But from the beginning of the creation, God made them male and female. For this cause a man shall leave his father and mother; and shall cleave to his wife. And they two shall be in one flesh. Therefore they are not two, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.—Mark 10:6-9.

St. Paul wrote, "Marriage honorable in all, and the bed undefiled."—Hebrews 13:4.

Catholics had better accept the counsel of God and Christ so plainly given and renounce their present law of celibacy.

St. Paul has something more to say on the marriage question, especially as to conditions in "the last times." But before quoting the apostle further we give a definition of "the last days," as found in the Annotations to Isaiah 2:2, in the Catholic Bible: "The whole time of the new law, from the coming of Christ till the end of the world, is called in the scripture the last days." Allowing them their own interpretation of "the last days," it may be safe to say their church law of celibacy to priests and "sisters" find fulfillment in these words:

The Spirit manifestly saith, that in the last times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to spirits of error, and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, and having their conscience seared, forbidding to marry.—1 Timothy 4:1-3.

Should the Catholics claim the apostle's prediction is not fulfilled by the teaching and practice of their church, kindly tell where it does apply.

In the Question Box, a standard work by Catholics, page 491, we read that celibacy "became the law for the Western Church [Roman Catholic] in the beginning of the fourth century."

"Until the fourth century . . . there was no strict law enforcing celibacy, and therefore many married men received orders."—Page 494.

"Celibacy is a question of discipline, not of dogma, so that the Eastern churches that are united to Rome—for instance, the Maronites—are still permitted a married clergy."—Page 497.

On page 492 the same book declares that St. Peter "did not live with his wife after the divine call" to the ministry.

In another standard work by Catholics—Questions Asked by Protestants, page 41, we read, "Why do priests not marry? 1. Because the church commands her priests not to marry. 2. Because the apostles left their wives, after following Christ."

What unscriptural and unwarranted assertions against the noble lives of Christ's apostles! We feel justified in recalling the inspired words of Paul that "in the last times some shall . . . speak lies in hypocrisy."

Catholic priests certainly know they can not prove that the apostles left their wives for all time when faithfully fulfilling their divine missions.

Listen to St. Paul again: "The Lord commandeth that the wife depart not from her husband."—1 Corinthians 7:10.

The Catholic law of celibacy is quite elastic after all, for, as quoted above, the Maronite priests are privileged to marry.

Catholics claim St. Paul upholds celibacy in chapter seven of his first Corinthian letter. This epistle was written only eleven years before Jerusalem was destroyed by the Romish army, at which time the Jews were scattered, many killed, mothers, fathers, and children sold as slaves, families never reunited, which was the beginning of the fulfillment of Jesus' words in St. Luke 21:20-24. St. Paul was, doubtless, greatly exercised over the condition of Israel and all the saints, and of the great need of preparing for that terrible calamity which befell the Jews, hence his stirring counsel:

This therefore I say, brethren; the time is short [proved to be only eleven years, A. D. 70]; it remains that they also who have wives, be as if they had none [sold as slaves]; . . . And they that buy, as though they possessed not [home destroyed]; and they that use this world, as if they used it not: . . . But I would have you to be without solicitude. He that is without a wife, is solicitous for the things that belong to the Lord, how he may please God. But he that is with a wife, is solicitous for the things of the world, how he may please his wife: and he is divided.—Verses 29-33.

In verse 28 the apostle says, "But if thou take a wife, thou hast not sinned. But if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned; nevertheless, such shall have tribulation of the flesh."

Our Catholic friends quote verse 8 as one of their strongest points in favor of celibacy. Paul says: "But I say to the unmarried, and to widows: It is good for them if they so continue, even as I."

Yes, the apostle is reported to have said, it was "good," (under the conditions prevailing just prior to the destruction of Jerusalem and the "scattering" time,) to remain as he was, but the law given by God and Christ which was to be universal declares that it "is not good" for man to be unmarried, hence we must conclude it is "better," "best" for the priests and "sisters" or "nuns" to marry. In no case did the Creator advocate celibacy. Marriage is "honorable in all," said Paul to the Hebrews.

Catholics refer to the thrilling experience of the "hundred forty four thousand . . . virgins," in St. John's Revelation (14:1-5) as being in favor of their doctrine of celibacy. However, the claim is made by Reverend Conway, of the Paulist Fathers, that "the Apocalypse [Book of Revelation] is one of the most obscure portions of Holy Writ, and no one pretends to be able to interpret it with any certainty."—Question Box, page 562.

Accepting his admission for their church, we ask them to note that the "hundred forty-four thousand" who sang "a new canticle, before the throne, . . . were purchased from the earth. These were they who were not defiled with women: for they were virgins. . . . These were purchased from among men, the first-fruits to God and to the Lamb: and in their mouth there was found no lie."

In St. Matthew 27:51-53 we learn that after Christ was resurrected (A. D. 33), "many bodies of the saints that had slept arose" from the dead. Of that glorified number there may have been the "hundred forty-four thousand" whom St. John calls, "the first fruits to God and the Lamb," and who sung "a new canticle [song] before the throne."

Was there a Catholic priest in that happy throng?

Will any well-informed Catholic try to prove that celibacy was the gospel law to God's ministers in Old or New Testament times? We think not, for their standard books would defeat the man who attempted to prove it, and the Bible evidence is strong against them.

We can safely say that the "hundred forty-four thousand" received their teaching and obeyed gospel ordinances administered at the hands of a married clergy.

Do Catholics mean to infer from their teaching that no others will be permitted to sing "before the throne" of God but those whom they style "virgins"?

As to the meaning of the word virgin, the following is one of the definitions by the Popular and Critical Encyclopedia, volume 3, edition, 1904: "A young married woman, a virgin (2 Corinthians)—used of a man free from all uncleanness (Revelation 14:4.)"

In this connection it may be well to present a few extracts from the Chicago Daily Tribune, May 21, 1907, which paper gives a cablegram from Paris, under the caption, "Holy Father, marry your priests." The Tribune says: "A petition signed by three thousand French priests and curates has been forwarded to Rome, praying for the abolition of the rule of clerical celibacy." A part of that purported message to Pope Pius X reads:

Among all the problems now confronting the prelates of France none is more important than the question of clerical celibacy. The solution of the question should be forthcoming without delay. This solution, we do not hesitate to predict, should by human nature, by right, by instruction of the evangel, be a decree abolishing ecclesiastical celibacy, thus rendering marriage optional with the clergy.

In the same article, Pope Pius II, who lived in the fifteenth century, is reported having written: "Marriage has been forbidden to priests for good reasons, but there are better ones for permitting it to them."

Yes, my dear Catholic friends, it will be better for your church and the world when the priests and the "sisters" or "nuns" are given privileges of marrying as God and Christ have ordained.

Many claim that St. Paul never married, but where is the proof? His writings strongly indicate that he was a widower when most actively engaged in missionary work; not a bachelor.

The true Church of Latter Day Saints are untiring in presenting to the world the divine teaching of the Book of Mormon on the marriage question. It says:

Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, . . . Wherefore my brethren, hear me, and harken to the word of the Lord; for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none: for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women.—Book of Jacob, chapter 2.

The Lord, in 1831, said to the church, through Joseph Smith:

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.

Whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man: wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

No instruction from heaven, though it may be greatly needed, is expected by Catholics, if the words of Cardinal Gibbons, in his book, can be relied on. On page 132, he says:

Peter, it is true, besides the prerogatives inherent in his office, possessed also the power of working miracles, and the gift of inspiration. These two latter gifts are not claimed by the Pope, as they were personal to Peter, and by no means essential to the government of the Church.

Continuing the subject, he says on page 148:

The Pope, therefore, be it known, is not the maker of the divine law; he is only its expounder. He is not the author of revelation, but only its interpreter. All revelation came from God alone through his inspired ministers, and was complete in the beginning of the Church.

Accepting their own confession, we must conclude that the words of Jesus will apply to all who observe many of their cherished rites and ceremonies, when he said: "In vain do they worship me, teaching doctrines and precepts of men."—Mark 7: 7.

A SCATTERING SHOT.

1. Some seeds fell by the wayside, and the fowls came and devoured them up.

2. Some fell upon stony places where they had not much earth, and forthwith they sprang up because they had no deepness of earth, and when the sun was up they were scorched, and because they had no root they withered away.

3. And some fell among thorns, and the thorns sprang up and choked them.

4. But others fell into good ground and brought forth fruit, some an hundredfold, some sixtyfold, some thirtyfold. (See Matthew 13: 3-23.)

In the above parable there are four clauses, and we shall consider them in their order.

First are the ones that heard the word by the wayside. The wicked one works upon their minds in such a way that the seed, which is the word of God, never takes root. Their hearts or minds are supplied with such food that will hinder the good seed, hence they do not come into the kingdom, but go through life without any regard or respect for the welfare of their fellow men. They lived for self alone, and their minds have become so darkened that they believe there is no harm in satisfying their evil appetites, and their lives are spent in feeding the outer man, the flesh, the works of which are adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, frivolity, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings. (See Galatians 5: 19-21.)

The seed may be sown by Christ or angels, it will not germinate under the above conditions. Might just as well look for a grain of corn to sprout in the frozen ground.

Second, seed fell in stony ground, those who with joy received it, and for a season it grew; but there was no depth of earth. When the sun was up it was scorched; and because it had no root it withered away. Tribulation or persecution came. Their names are evilly spoken of, their children are shunned by their playmates; relatives and friends turn the cold shoulder toward them. Society that once held them in high esteem, now ignores them. With this kind of treatment their faith weakens, and they are seldom seen at meetings; and when the church is spoken of unkindly, they have not the courage to speak in its defense. They move away from that neighborhood to a community where they are not known, and instruct their children if any one makes inquiry what church their parents attend to say they do not go to any. The depth of the soil is so shallow that when the wind beats, they have no root and perish. They are numbered with the class that prefers the good will of the world rather than the society of the Saints. They are so anxious not to offend men, that they have all the tracts and church books put away where they can not be seen, and they stop taking church publications, and if they speak of a brother or sister in the church they say Mr. or Mrs. The ground is very stony and can not give proper support to the plant, though it has sprouted and has every indication that it will bring forth fruit. Why not cast aside the stones so the roots can sprout and be able to stand when trials come, whatever may be their nature?

Third, the seeds among thorns. The cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches choke the world, and it becometh unfruitful. Like the second class referred to, they neglect to assemble at the house of worship, have no time to read the Bible or other good books, have no interest or time to call and invite their neighbors to hear the gospel preached. Their whole mind and strength is devoted in seeking after the things of this life. Have time to take the family to the circus and show, or spend part of the week in the lodge-room and opera-house till eleven o'clock at night. Can go off on a hunting or fishing-tour and spend all the spare moments, morning, noon, and night reading the newspapers, are well posted in the news of the day, are busy in supplying the needs of the outer man, but the needs of the inner man are very much neglected and it is perishing for food. The farm with its fine stock of horses, cattle, and hogs, or the beautiful house, or the gold-mines, and other industries, which are all needed, have become the goal of their hearts. No stone is left unturned to make life a success temporally, even at the sacrifice of spiritual life. Yes, their minds have become so burdened with the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, that, like with the thorns, the good seed is choked. What a sad mistake is made to crush out the life of the good seed by overtaxing the garden with that which is of so much less value. Much care should be taken in our duties in life that we move in paths of wisdom, that while it is our duty to be diligent in business, and discharge every duty faithfully, we should be consistent and not gather that which is perishable alone, but to fight manfully for the greatest of all gifts—eternal life.

Fourth. Those that received seed into the good ground are those who hear the word and understand it, which also beareth fruit and bringeth forth some an hundredfold, some sixtyfold, some thirtyfold. In Luke 8:15 we read: "That on the good ground are they, which in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience." This class not only hear the word but understand it, and keep it, and with patience press on and bring forth fruit. They enter into the work with all their might, mind, and strength. Unlike those in the stony ground, or among the thorns who were ashamed to speak of the work, they take much pleasure in seeking opportunities to bring the gospel before the people by calling at their homes, and inviting them to come and hear the truth, leaving tracts and books with a pressing request to read the same; who show by their daily walk and conversation that they are indeed striving to live the life of a saint.

As a rule when the missionary goes into the neighborhood where those of the good ground reside, he will have better success than when his lot is cast with those of the stony or thorny ground. The influence of those in good ground has impressed the people very favorably with the fact that the church they are members of is worthy of their consideration. Hence when notice of preaching-services in the neighborhood is given out, the minister has a fair audience to speak to, and some of the best people of the neighborhood. I have heard Bro. H. O. Smith tell of a family driving twenty miles to hear him preach. Upon inquiry on the part of Bro. Smith why they had come all the way to hear him whom they had never seen, he was informed that a family of Latter Day Saints had once lived in their neighborhood, who by their true Christian life had impressed them that they were surely trying to worship God in spirit and in truth, and they had talked on gospel lines with this family. Yes, they had set the light where it could be seen. The family of Saints moved away, and in bidding their neighbors good-bye, their parting words were not to forget to go and hear our elders preach. So this was the first privilege this family had of attending a preaching-service of our faith. They came twenty miles with a team, and it was the good works manifested in the lives of that Latter Day Saint family that had moved upon the man and his household to go all that long distance to hear the word preached, which they received with joy, and were afterwards baptized.

The above circumstance should encourage us all to do likewise. We may not all be able to get into the pulpit, but we can, by Christian life, move upon the minds of others to follow the example above referred to. I have read of some of the missionaries getting discouraged because the conditions were such that more were gathered into the fold than could be cared for. Some have said, "Why sow more, when we have now more than we can reap or shelter?" One says that he felt no disposition to open up new places till we can take care of what we have. This was the opinion of some when the Lord spoke, April, 1894, section 122, paragraph 7:

The work now lying before the missionary quorums of the church is of such increased magnitude and importance—the field so white unto the harvest, and the need for laborers so great—that the twelve and the seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care of the administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible.

The local ministry and the conditions are about the same to-day as they were in 1894; and we see from what the Lord says that the need for laborers was so great in the missionary field that we are instructed to free the bonds of the twelve and seventy, with such high priests and elders as available, so that they could wait upon their ministry in gospel work, not to give their time in caring for branches and districts. Now, what shall we do? Heed what the Lord says, or be persuaded by man that there is greater need for the missionary to look after those already in branches and districts, whom the Lord said should be cared for by the standing ministry? The Lord says that the work is of such increased magnitude, not in the branches and districts, but in the field, and laborers so few. I believe that we of the missionary force should give heed to the above, and move out in our line of work, and be careful that we baptize none into the church unless we see in them true fruits of repentance, and that they have proper understanding of the work. Show me a person that has heard and investigated the truth, and turns away from the evils of the world, and has faith in the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and with a willing mind and joyful heart enters the waters of baptism, and is confirmed and receives the Holy Spirit, and you will show me one who is built upon the Rock; and though he may be separated from Saints and branch privileges, he will still grow because he is of the good soil, does not depend altogether upon the church privileges he has or the number of sermons he hears; for his faith is in the Lord who promised to come and abide with us whether we are within reach of branch privileges or are like the little maid that was taken captive from the Lord of Israel, whose faith, moved Namaan, the leper, to send to the prophet Elisha; though she was a captive and among a nation that knew not God, she was not left alone.

When I was twenty-three years of age, in company with my wife I moved from a branch of the church of sixty-five members in Ohio, and went out to Western Nebraska, and took up a homestead in 1870. Here we were twenty miles from the nearest branch, and our only conveyance to the same was an ox team for the first three years. We were nearly six years on that homestead, and I can now look back with much pleasure upon the very many remarkable blessings we enjoyed in that humble home, part dugout and part log, a dirt floor and a sod roof. Away from the society of the Saints and church privileges in that lonely spot, God was with us, and never did it enter our minds that because no missionary called on us every month, or because we were deprived of church privileges, we could not live a Christian life, and that God was afar off. I am grateful that wherever one is who wishes to serve the Lord, he will bless him.

I am constrained to say that as a people, our faith should be in the Lord and his word, and not in poor wayfaring man. I fear that some have too little faith in God, and trust too much in man, partaking of the idea that unless the missionary calls on us every few weeks we can not make any progress. And I am sorry to say that some of the missionary force became discouraged and concluded that it is folly to try to reach out into new fields, notwithstanding the Lord advised us to do so, giving as their reasons that the flock is perishing. If they perish they are not of the good ground spoken of in the parable. If we prefer the stones, thorns, and the deceitfulness of riches to the good seed, the word of God, we shall be barren and unfruitful; though we shall live on a corner lot in the city of Zion, surrounded by Saints and ministry, the seed will not grow. Let us clean the ground of the stones, thorns, and briars to give the good seed room to develop, and bring forth some thirty, sixty, and a hundredfold. We should see to it that all that apply for baptism are proper subjects, having understanding of the work before we consent to baptize them. If we do so the wind and rain may beat and the sun scorch, and the enemy rage within and out; they shall stand for they are grounded on the Rock and there will be no cause for any of us that are out in the missionary field to get alarmed that we are reaping more than we can care for.

One serious mistake is made by the standing or local ministry, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. That is to ask the brethren of the traveling ministry, the twelve, seventy, high priests, and elders, to take upon them responsibilities that the Lord said they should be free from as much as possible, so they can push out to work in gospel work in the missionary field. After laboring for nearly one year in certain fields, some giving their names for baptism, one party says, "Well, Bro. Lewis, I understand you will soon leave us, and we will be alone," I said, "Yes, I have other fields to labor in, but you have Brn. So and So, and they will be here, and best of all the Lord will be with you if you do your duty." "Yes," was the answer, "that is true; but these local men have to work, and they do not have the time to read and study as do the missionaries, and we need you or one of the missionaries here, or the work will go down and those you baptized will perish."

Well, I am pleased to say that the ones that were baptized had faith in the word of God, and to-day are lively stones in the building. While they respect the missionary and would be pleased to have one with them all the time, they well understood just how the Lord said the field is white and the laborers are few, and the gospel has brought so much peace and joy to them they are willing to forego the company of the missionary so the others may hear the word. And let us that are in the field impress upon those members we bring into the church, that the covenant they enter into is not with man, and that although duty compels them to be separated from church privileges, the Lord will bless them; and not only is it expected that they will strive alone so far as human help is concerned, but that they will by their means help to send the gospel to others. Let us take courage that although we may not be able to gather into the regions round about because of the needs of the work where we may be located, the Savior has promised to send his angels to gather his elect. Let us stand at our post of duty, and all will be well.

THE END OF THE "HARMONY SOCIETY."

Recent proceedings brought by the state of Pennsylvania to obtain possession of all the property of the Harmony society now remaining serve to revive interest in that almost forgotten community, which was at its apogee in the middle of the last century. Among all the strange manifestations of social and religious exclusiveness that have from time to time taken root in this country the story of the Harmony communists, called Economists from the name of their settlement, is most pathetic.

For it is now at its final chapter. For more than three-quarters of a century it has been unfolding step by step, and now it has reached its end—the only end that has been possible under the circumstances. When the courts have fixed the ownership of the communal estate now remaining the book will be closed for ever, and the Harmony society will be a thing of the past.

Practically it is that now. At the present moment there are only two survivors of the curious sect. These remaining Harmonists are John S. Duss, the well known bandmaster, and his wife. Upon them are centered all the traditions of the extinct society, and its estate has descended to them.

There is no question of descent. The state of Pennsylvania admits it. It is a matter of history and record that John S. Duss and his wife are the last representatives of the old community. The state contends that Duss and his wife have forfeited their right to the estate by following a way of living which is not in accord with the principles of the community.

The state maintains that the terms "Harmony society" and "John S. Duss and wife" are incompatible and can not be made to agree. For the Harmonists were celibates, and there was no marriage or giving in marriage at Economy. Every member of the community was bound by a vow to remain celibate for the remainder of his or her life. Celibacy was one of the most vital features of the sect. The violation of this rule would have entailed speedy expulsion. Now that there is no one left to enforce the rule the state assumes the responsibility.

John S. Duss, the man who sees no reason why he should not be undisturbed in his possession of the rich estate of the Harmonists, is a man of parts. He is a born fighter also, and has had much experience in the business of holding what he regards as his own. He became head of the community about twenty years ago and at once began to exhibit a remarkable executive ability. Through neglect and poor business management the society had met with reverses. Many of its industries had fallen into decay, and its splendid agricultural plant had been suffered to deteriorate.

Duss—young, capable, and energetic—worked a remarkable change. Once more the society became prosperous, and its property was restored to its original value. The membership of the community was dying out rapidly, and there was no remedy for that, but there was no depreciation of the estate. There had been no additions to the communistic family from the outside, and there could be none in any other way. The time came when Duss was the brains and almost the absolute ruler of the entire concern.

Although evidently he was doing so much for the community the old Harmonists did not approve of his methods. It seemed to them that their leader was holding too much intercourse with that world from which they had withdrawn. He was musically inclined and organized a brass band and orchestra at Economy, which was a source of great discomfort for his brethren. They put their venerable heads together and resolved to oust him.

They appealed to the courts, but failed to secure relief. Their young leader was too well entrenched to be dislodged by their feeble efforts. The United States supreme court decided everything in his favor, and he secured an apparently firm hold on all the property. He bought and sold on his own initiative and became practically the "whole thing."

The career of John S. Duss abounds in incident. It is quite as interesting as is that of the curious society of which he became the head. He was the only child who ever became a part of this strange celibate family. His father and mother, German immigrants, came to Economy when he was two years of age and entered the community as servants. Although it was regarded as an innovation and some of the older brethren shook their heads, the parents were permitted to take the vows, and the child was adopted into the society.

The presence of a child in that austere and celibate family bred a sentiment of discontent that threatened to prove disastrous. The women became his veriest slaves, and the men were scarcely less abject in their servitude. The time came when Father Jacob Henrici, then head of the Harmonites, realized that the boy must not be permitted to remain in the community. Although he was overfond of the child, he sent him to a boarding school to be educated.

When he left the school young Duss did not return to Economy. He went to Nebraska, became a farmer, married and prospered moderately. Twenty years after he left Economy to go to school he returned in company with a wife and several children. Father Henrici, who was still at the head of the greatly reduced community, received him with open arms. The old man had never lost his affection for the boy, who was still the adopted child of the society.

Henrici was old and feeble and the affairs of the society were in bad shape. Duss saw his opportunity, and Henrici encouraged him in his desire to assume charge of the society's business. There was the obstacle of the marriage, but Duss and his wife agreed to become brother and sister and took the vows to that effect. When Henrici died the few surviving members elected Duss to succeed him.

The Harmonist cult had its origin in Germany, having been founded by George Rapp, a native of Wurttemberg, who in 1803 emigrated with a company of adherents to America and established the first colony, at Zelionople, Pennsylvania. Rapp was a firm believer in the idea that he had been delegated to restore Christianity to its original purity and succeeded in inspiring about a hundred followers with the same belief. For a few years the cult flourished and at one time there were about 800 disciples.—Hawk Eye, July 21, 1907.

ANTI-MORMON PROPHETS TOUR COUNTRY IN CARAVAN.

For several years anti-Mormon evangelists from Ohio have been touring Utah and Idaho in wagons which look much like the old-time prairie schooners.

During the last year these men traveled 4,500 miles to the homes of 65,000 Mormons. Their stops included places where gospel services were unknown. There were twelve missionaries in active service during the latter part of the year and three wagons were used in their travels. Four of the men were Presbyterians, two Congregationalists, two Friends, and one each from the Cumberland Presbyterian, United Brethren, Methodist Episcopal, and Christian Alliance churches.

In addition to the visits made in Idaho and Utah, a strip of Mormon territory in Wyoming was traversed. The summer field for this work is in Idaho, which is almost as strongly Mormon as Utah. The route on these journeys lies up and down the mountains and through canyons. Each wagon goes from a central point into a different territory, and from the wagons the workers in turn do a great deal of walking. It is estimated that, in addition to the 4,500 miles covered by the wagons last year, the missionaries themselves covered 2,500 miles on foot.

The urgency for the work which these men are doing is found in the fact that despite the war that has been persistently waged against Mormonism, it continues to gain converts. Not only is this due to the increase in population in Idaho, Utah, and Wyoming, but also to the efforts of the Mormons.

At the head of the anti-Mormon evangelists is the Reverend John D. Nutting, an Oberlin graduate, who for several years was pastor of a mission church in Salt Lake City. The work is under the auspices of the Utah Gospel Mission, which has its headquarters at Cleveland, Ohio.

In Utah there are thirty-three towns of more than 500 population and 185 of less than 500 people in which ordinary religious work is practically unknown. When a wagon of the anti-Mormon missionaries enters town, a personal visit is made to each home in the village to announce a meeting. Often the service is out-of-doors. Sometimes it is permitted to be held in the crude meeting-house of the Mormons, or again in the town "opera house." These "opera houses," by the way, are little more than barns. . . .

The courteous treatment which these missionaries receive is worthy of especial mention. The Mormons believe that their own representatives, who are at work in different parts of the United States, should have a hearing and be well treated and they in turn believe in treating missionaries who come to them in the same manner.

All of these missionaries work without salary, receiving their actual expenses only. It is well that this is so, for the Mormons are averse to a salaried ministry.—Exchange.

LOST LOVE.

There is a sad chapter in the life of John Greenleaf Whittier, one of the sweetest poets that the world has produced. It is as follows:

In the spring of 1828, when the poet was twenty years old, he did his first and last courting.

In the quaint old town of Marblehead, in the home of a well-to-do shipmaster, dwelt Evelina Bray, the shipmaster's daughter. Evelina was "sweet sixteen," as pretty as a peach, and as pure as the wood violets with which she loved to decorate her hair, and with the winsome, modest maiden Whittier fell desperately in love.

During the aforementioned springtime, as the flowers were creeping up from under the snow and the landscape was taking on its first delicate touches of the summer to come, young Whittier went down to Marblehead, found Evelina, and told her of the sentiment he could no longer conceal. To his joy he learned that the sentiment was reciprocated.

But the "course of true love did never yet run smooth," and it was already decreed that Whittier's was to be a "lost love."

The shipmaster of Marblehead was a "worldly" man, and one of his chief delights when on shore was to hear his daughter play on the piano and sing, while Whittier's parents, as well as Whittier himself, were of the strictest sect of the Quakers, in whose eyes a piano was an emblem of sin, and music the sure and certain mark of wickedness.

Between those opposite, antagonistic, and uncompromising views of things there was no concord possible. Whittier knew it; Evelina Bray knew it; and like the philosophers that they were, they concluded to say no more to each other upon the tender subject—and they never did.

Five years later—in 1833—the couple met again, but no word was spoken of the affection that each knew was in the other's heart. It was the meeting of friends, that was all.

It was not until 1835, at a class reunion at the Haverhill Academy, that the poet and his sweetheart again stood face to face. Since he had last beheld her fifty-two years had rolled away. The two were now old—the rose had faded from Evelina's cheek, and into her lover's face wrinkles had stoined, and upon his head Old Time had left his rime.

But the heart never grows old, love is immortal—immortally young and fresh—and parting from his old love for ever, the poet went home to write the touching lines:

Look forth once more through space and time
And let thy sweet shade fall
In tenderest grace of soul and form
On Memory's frescoed wall—
A shadow, and yet all.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Are We Thinking?

It has been our thought to have given in this article some instances of results almost stupendous, growing out of beginnings much smaller than Graceland, but in a copy of Autumn Leaves, August, 1902, we found an article written by Frederick M. Smith, setting forth the claims of Graceland in a light so strong and with an understanding of its needs so fully and realizingly felt, that we believe we can do Graceland and the church no better service than to use this article almost entire:

"The opening of the doors of Graceland College on September 17, 1895, marked the materialization of an idea which has been extant in the church almost from its very inception,—a church school of higher learning. Early in the history of the church the Lord called attention to the necessity of study and learning. In 1831 W. W. Phelps and Oliver Cowdery were directed by revelation (see Doctrine and Covenants 55:1, 2) to print, select, and write books for schools, in this church. In 1832 (see Doctrine and Covenants 85:21) the elders in the church were instructed to teach one another in 'all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God'; 'of things both in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass, things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and perplexities of nations, and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms.' As you see, provisions made here for the study of meteorology, astronomy, history, domestic and foreign economics, political science, wars, governmental problems, geography, and many others.

"And again they are told (see Doctrine and Covenants 85:36) to seek 'diligently and teach one another words of wisdom.' 'Yea,' says the Lord, 'seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith. Organize yourselves; prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning.' In 1833 (see Doctrine and Covenants 90:12) came the instruction to 'obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion.' And yet again Joseph Smith is told (see Doctrine and Covenants 87:5) to 'study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books, and with languages, tongues, and people.'

"Reader, can you broaden the scope of the ground to be covered according to the foregoing? If you need any more authority for covering the widest possible scope in your search for learning, and a field in which to do your studying, turn to the definition of truth as given in Doctrine and Covenants 90:4, and think for even one brief moment of the wonderful breadth and scope given to the meaning of that word, and then remember that we are to search for truth, grasp the truth, and hold the truth. Reader, have you truth? When do you think you can rest from your labor in searching for truth? Is there rest for any of us engaged in this latter-day work? Can we in this life slacken our study and our efforts to learn of the wonderful things with which God has surrounded us, and the wonderful blessings ever bestowed upon us? . . .

"For reasons more or less apparent to all who have studied the situation, Latter Day Saints have a tendency to be somewhat exclusive. I mean by that that there is a disposition to segregate from the world and congregate with people of like faith. This is perfectly natural when we consider that for peculiar reasons Latter Day Saints have always been subjected to persecution for their faith's sake. But beside the natural reason we have the added one that by command of Divinity we have been told that sooner or later he would bring his favored people to some spot on earth made blessed by his holy blessing. Because of these truths Latter Day Saints will never become popular, and will always be subject to strenuous opposition which will by reason of its very strength hasten the gathering to Zion.

"Forced, then, by the opposition of the world and led by divine promise and spiritual encouragement, as we shall be to segregate, we shall be compelled to maintain institutions which are as peculiar to us as is our faith. Chief among these institutions are those which shall be devoted to the education of the young men and women of the church in such a way that they shall be placed on equal footing with those of the world with whom they come in contact when supporting and advocating the attitudes of the church. Give our people equal education with the people of the world, and add to that the guiding and enlightening influence of the Spirit of God, and truly Zion shall be feared of all nations and the world.

"Our ministers go into the world to preach the principles of our glorious gospel, traveling without purse or scrip, leaving their homes and families to the care of the church authorities. These families struggle along with a bare living, sometimes a most precarious one, too, saving the church every cent possible, all for the sake of the work and the glory of our Master. Thanks to good Uncle Sam, our children have a chance to educate themselves to a certain point in the public schools of the land which we as citizens of this country help to support. But what becomes of the education of those children when they have passed the school age? Where are they to get the education the children of other families get by going to college? How is that poor minister's family going to send the older children to college, when it takes every cent they have or get to keep them in the public schools while they are still at home and helping with the work of the family? From where comes the money to send them away from home to a college where they can get the education which shall place them on an equal contending basis with the children of families who are receiving money enough to send their children to college?"

"Let me suggest a plan whereby every minister's child can get a college education. Let the missionaries, so far as possible, gather their families into the 'region round about,' where living expenses are as low as anywhere else in this land; and after their children, still living at home, have completed the course in our public schools, including the high school, let them not stop their schooling, but enter at once into our church college, and complete a strong college course. What if the expenses of the school are in excess of the income from tuition fees? It makes no difference, for we owe it to every minister in the field to see to it that his children are educated thoroughly.

"I shall be glad when the day comes when I can see hundreds of youths and maidens, children of the ministry, in Graceland being educated at the expense of the church at large. Then we shall be placing them where in future years they can be of greatest possible use to the church.

"I may be overly sanguine, but I believe the day is not far distant when the work of Graceland College will be considered as much the work of the church as is the work of the ministry to-day. We must awake to that fact; the sooner the better for us.

"Graceland is sadly in need of support to-day. While some of the Saints have done nobly in a financial way, and while they are rallying to its support in a way which will shortly free it from debt, there are other ways in which the school can be supported which are being neglected. There are many in the church who are qualified to do efficient work as instructors in college work but who do not seem willing to make equal sacrifice with those of the ministry. The matter stands about like this now: Either the Board must pay salaries equal to those paid by the stronger schools in order to secure as efficient instructors, or else they are compelled to place the standard of instruction below what a college should maintain. The only remedy seems to be to call upon the Saints for greater financial help, or else we must find those within the church who are willing to enter into Graceland upon the same basis as do our ministers when they enter the field. And is it more important to preach the gospel to the world than it is to place our young on the best possible footing? Is it right to send out the men who are making such great sacrifices to preach the gospel to the nations of the world, and permit their children at home to grow up handicapped by a lack of education?"

"Saints, where do you stand on the college question? Are you looking forward to the time when we shall be gathered to Zion? Then are you 'preparing the way before you' by lending your very best aid to an institution which, if supported as it should be, will be one of the greatest factors in the gathering? Can you think of the Saints in a gathered state without systems of schools? And can you think of schools without efficient instructors? Surely you will not want instructors from the world in your schools in Zion. Then you must have an institution where Saints can be equipped for teaching; and these instructors must be prepared beforehand. Those of the Saints who have been educated at the colleges of the land other than our church school, know that there are handicaps to be met which are not pleasant, to say the least. Let us, then, supply our young a school of higher learning wherein they can be in their natural element, and therefore do their best work.

"Readers, follow out this line of thought and see if you can not see a wonderful mission for Graceland. And you Saints who have had the advantage of college education in other institutions, ask yourselves seriously, Can I help the work of Graceland along?"

"Graceland has need for help in every way, and the members of the Board are looking for those who are willing to do a Latter Day Saint's part in raising Graceland into the very front ranks of colleges.

"Shall Graceland enter on its mission work?"

MANCHESTER, England, July 8, 1907.

Dear Herald: We arrived at the home of Bro. and Sr. Beatty of Brooklyn, and had a real old country reception. After the hurry-scurry of rushing from the train, with our luggage, we made our way to the ferry-boat to cross the large river, then found some more badly paved streets and sidewalks, and on inquiry were told this was New York with its teeming mass of people. Well, we made our way to the car, crossing the large Brooklyn bridge. When we had struggled up a few flights of steps, the cars rushing in and out on both sides of us, we saw on the finger-board our car announced. In it rushed, and the writer was giving preference to the weaker sex when one of them called out with what seemed to him a rather bold accent, "Go along! Go along! Get out of the way! Get out of the way!" Then when we were getting into the car the conductor said it was a hack we wanted. Thus, we were received into the London of the United States, and with three feet of snow on the ground, and with our ears nearly freezing, we leave you to imagine the internal feelings. And after such turmoil, you may be sure we should appreciate the old country methodical reception to the home of Bro. and Sr. Beatty.

We felt refreshed in the morning and ready for the changed conditions. On the 12th it was very cold, freezing icicles on our mustaches as we walked about the streets; also on this date one of the Joy line steamers was run down by a schooner and one hundred lives lost. We should likely have gone with her on the next trip, had not the accident happened, on our way to Providence. On the 13th we went over Brooklyn bridge and the Williamsburg bridge, two wonderful structures of one mile each in length and standing very high above the water. Then we accompanied Sr. Beatty to the splendid home of Bro. and Sr. Gilfoy, according to invitation, for supper, and met with a hearty welcome.

On the 14th we went with Sr. Beatty again into the great city, and had the pleasure of visiting some of the large stores, one of them being Wanamaker's wonderful building with its great variety of provisions trying fully to cater to the five senses of the human make-up. We then made our way to the home of Bro. and Sr. Ephraim Squires to supper. Here we had the pleasure of seeing our Bro. and Sr. Squires, Sr. After supper we had some very good singing, and, we believe, profitable talking, and eating of ice-cream. Thus we spent a very pleasant evening, finishing up, when we got home, with a hard-headed, flat-footed talk with Bro. George until about two in the morning.

We left the next morning for Providence, a distance of about two hundred miles. Here we met five hundred Saints assembled in conference, and we had a very pleasant time with them. We had the pleasure of meeting once more Bro. Bullard. We stayed while here at Bro. and Sr. Bradley's. Bro. Bradley was one of the early pioneers of the work here, and many times has dared to stand alone in defense of the same. We had good meetings on Sunday, and Bro. John preached on Monday night the 18th of February, and on the 19th we went to Fall River. At this place is a branch, we think, of about two hundred members; also a town of cotton mills numbering about eighty, and a number of Lankenshire people. Here we stayed at the hospitable home of Bro. Gilbert.

On the 20th we left here for New Bedford and had an electric car ride through the bush that we thought a very risky ride because of the seemingly temporary appearance of the construction of the route. The distance was fifteen miles. When we landed it was snowing fast, and when we went to the meeting-house the door was shut and it looked like the little room would be covered up with snow. There was a fair turnout, and we had a very good meeting. We stayed with Bro. Brayton, and had a pleasant time. The Saints seemed in good spirits.

On the 21st we left New Bedford in electric car for another long drive. We went by Taunton through the bush to Attleborough—a fine meeting-room here and a good-hearted lot of Saints. Attleborough is America's Birmingham, as we were informed, the main manufactures being cheap jewelry. The same night we returned to Providence in company with Bro. Bradbury, who kindly came out to meet us and take us to his home again for the night. On the morning of the 22d we left Providence for Boston, a distance of sixty miles. Here we met Bro. Bullard and at night went to a gathering in honor of Washington's birthday. We met a cheerful lot of Saints and enjoyed the evening with them, all but the speech-making.

On the 23d we went to Bro. Fisher's at Winter Hill College, Summerville, Massachusetts; and we had the pleasure of looking through their training college, the two brothers being principals of same; and who have wonderful ability, we think, for the work, and hope and pray that they may accomplish much. We think there is here a membership of about two hundred. We were kindly cared for while here by Bro. and Sr. Bussiel at their comfortable home.

On the 24th Bro. John preached in Boston, the writer going back to Providence, the weather very cold and snowy. A sister at the service in the morning unfortunately was a little deaf and asked me to speak loud, and the sister was not there at night. If I did not talk loud enough am sorry, and will try to do better next time. I enjoyed the talk with them very much morning and night.

On the 25th I met Bro. John at Boston and we left for Buffalo, a distance of about three hundred and ninety miles. Here we stayed with Sr. Schofield, and our esteemed Bro. Pitt. The same date we went with Bro. Pitt to Niagara Falls, a distance of twenty miles by electric car. Here we had the pleasure of meeting a man whose epistles we had often read, but whom we had never seen before, Bro. Etzenhouser. We then went to the home of Bro. and Sr. Wall and after refreshments we were escorted by our two brethren around the Falls. Such a sight the writer never saw before, and can not fully describe, but may tell a little. First we went to the Falls on the American side and saw the great ice mountain nearly one hundred yards high, and saw the boiling mass of water rushing over and under the iceberg; then went around to the bridge and over to the Canadian side and viewed the Falls. Then we visited one of the power stations where we saw the powerful dynamos that drive nearly all the cars and industries in Niagara Falls and part of Buffalo. We crossed on the ice bridge and climbed a good distance up the ice mountain while the water was boiling over the top and going underneath us. The weather was very cold. We then went back to the welcome home above mentioned and after supper had a little chat and then went to Niagara Falls meeting-house. Bro. John was the preacher. Many of the Saints from Canada, we were told, came to the meeting, so the house was nearly full, and we had a good meeting. The next morning Bro. Etzenhouser took us to see the rapids where Captain Webb lost his life.

Editors Herald: Please say through the HERALD, that, as we have been assigned with Bro. Reese Jenkins, to labor in the Hocking Valley of the Ohio District, if any of the Saints or friends know of openings or opportunities for preaching, and will write me at Floodwood, Ohio, we will try to respond with thankfulness.

Editors Herald: I once received a letter saying in part, "Don't you know, brother, that you must let people know when you are sick, for then we can worry about you and you soon will be well." But the maxim I have always followed is: "No news is good news," this accounting for the absence of scratching from my pen.

This beautiful morning, after a refreshing rain continuing during the whole night, after a refreshing sleep, it seems almost as if I have nothing against a brother or a sister in this wide, wide world. The sun seems to throw out new light, and the trees, sparkling with the rain on the leaves, tinkling down to the ground, appear to have a greater amount of life, and sing praises to God on high. The grass seems to say, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

The corn in the many fields, having had such a hard fight for life during the earlier months of the year, now seems to grow so rapidly as to astonish the farmer himself. I can almost hear the corn stalks say,

"We'll praise him for all that is past,
And trust him for all that's to come."

The birds are singing gaily this morning; and, taking all in all, I can not find words to express myself. Perhaps a saying from Henry Ward Beecher might not be amiss:

"The sun does not shine for a favored few, but for the universe of life, so the grass from a thousand fields sways in the breeze and whispers, 'Thou art my son.' The leaves in the trees rustle in the breeze and say, 'Thou art my son.'"

So we can look up to God, it makes no difference how rich or how poor, and say in humility, "Thou art my God."

We are progressing slowly along the line of missionary work, but hope to do more in the future than in the past.

The Utah elders are very bold lately. Some few days ago they preached polygamy and celestial marriage on the streets, and said they were not to blame for preaching those doctrines, but Joseph the Prophet was alone responsible for the teaching and practicing of those doctrines.

We asked them several questions that they were unsuccessful in answering, and they then started in to abuse Emma Smith, when a policeman interfered before I could answer and said, "If you men can't answer the young man's questions without abusing his grandmother, you had better move on down the street, or we will have you arrested for slander."

We are making friends wherever we go.

Yours in the gospel,

HALE W. SMITH.

Editors Herald: There is nothing very discouraging to report in the Southern Michigan District. Some rumors of theological conflict are heard at a distance. Debate arranged to commence July 15, at Clear Lake, Indiana, between Elder J. A. Brown of the "Current Reformation," and myself, has been deferred by the opposition to September 1. Other batteries of less note give some indication here in the capital city of attack, because of the capture of a few soldiery from the Congregational ranks. Reverend Thomas Williams, of Chicago, representing the Christadelphian faith, with whom we were negotiating discussion on "spirit consciousness," "non-resurrection of the wicked," the "present establishment of the kingdom of God," and kindred topics, sailed for England during the month of May, and hence the contest goes over until the autumn. So it seems that several pitched battles are due this field soon.

Our district conference, held at Clear Lake, Indiana, June 23 and 24, was quite good. Two were baptized during its sessions; one at South Scott two weeks later, and four here in Lansing recently. So the work moves. Others here are nearly persuaded. Bro. Charles Fish, the president of Capital City Branch, is absent at Indianapolis, Indiana, in the employ, of the state printing department. He is missed greatly, but the Saints rally under the local officers left, to the support of the cause.

Bro. J. Arthur Davis is operating in Berrien County,—Galien, Buchanan, and New Troy.

We organized a Sabbath-school in Branch County, a little while ago, at a point north of Coldwater, where we had previously done some ministerial work. Introduced our Quarterlies. The school chose a Disciple lady to teach the senior class. She found a memory verse from Doctrine and Covenants. Just one. That was sufficient. She "wasn't going to teach Mormonism"; that verse "was an entering wedge." She prevailed on the school to abandon our Quarterlies, and sent for Cook's, at the end of the quarter. We replied. She reviewed. We re-reviewed. At my suggestion she appointed the following Sunday evening, and, to a full house read R. B. Neal's tracts from three o'clock to half past five. We replied about twenty minutes, and appointed Thursday evening for reply at length, the people concurring by vote. We met the objections for over two hours, to a crowded house. The lady is a graduate, we learn, of the Angola, Indiana, Tri-State Normal. She read a statement from Neal, that he stood "ready to skin any Mormon, any time, any place." Whew! Let empires tremble. But for some reason unknown to us, the lady nor her stars were at the reply.

We are at this place over Sunday. Held a nice service last evening at North Lansing. We have appointment on Kalamazoo Street for this evening. Saints are usually well, and in line of duty.

The weather is scorching hot now, and 'tis a difficult task to "keep cool." Calls from Blissfield, Michigan; Woodburn, Indiana; Keeler, and other points.

Hopefully yours,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

Editors Herald: Yesterday a dear friend was led into the waters of baptism and I have tried in my poor way to portray our joy at her joining Christ's church. I am sending you the poem and if you think it worthy I should like to see it published.

We went to Olive Lake,

Before the sun went down,

Assembling there, God's lowly Saints

Who wished not for renown,

But just to do our Master's will.

We sang his hymns with gladdened hearts,
And watched the murmur'ing rill.

Our friend would join our ranks,

Christ's blessed gospel to obey,

To God be all our thanks!

A grave and earnest prayer,

And then God's servant true

Baptized her 'neath the sparkling wave,

And she was born anew.

Then confirmed into God's kingdom,

Christ's servants' hands laid on her head

That the Holy Spirit would come

To be her comfort and her stay,

In hours of darkest need,

Her help and guide each day.

We thank our Lord for blessings give'n;

Our prayers have answered been—

God has given our sister peace,

Leaving the world of sin.

We pray that she may faithful be

And serve him with a willing heart.

And all his blessed truths may see.

Oh! may she bring into the fold

Her friends and loved ones dear;

And make her, Lord, as burnished gold.

Saints' Herald: It is with a sad and aching heart that I take up the pen to write to you to-day. We lost two beautiful horses yesterday, poisoned by gopher poison. My husband set the pail of poison in the wagon-box when mixing the poison through the oats, and a little leaked through some hay which they ate later. We did all we could, all we knew how to do; but could not save them. It is a dreadful blow to us, but we would not mind their loss so much had they died easy.

Now I must go back about a month. I had a very vivid dream. We were poisoning gophers, and one got poisoned, and we had it trying to save it, as it begged for mercy, (it seemed it could talk). It went into dreadful spasms. I cried and felt very bad for him; but he died in dreadful agony.

I said, "Thank God! his sufferings are over."

Then I saw a picture of another, dreadfully wounded by a dog. It tried to get away somewhere to die; but there was a cat on one side and a dog on the other; and I stood there also, so sorry; but the gopher did not know that, and also feared me. Of course it was caught and killed. I awoke, and told my husband about it; also that I had a feeling that it was wrong to poison gophers, the suffering being so bad. It seemed inhuman. He said it was the only way. He did not just think it right; but did not know anything else to do. But the vividness stayed with me, and I often said I felt something would happen yet with the poison. And, well, I have told you what happened. Had we been merciful to the gophers, having pity on them, we would not have lost these horses. We were warned.

Now I would like your opinion on this dream, and the results. The horses died just like the gopher did in my dream, only it was I who did the crying for mercy, and finally thanked God their sufferings were at last ended. I hope our loss will be the cause of good. I feel that as Saints of God it is very wicked for us to cause such suffering to dumb brutes, even if they are pests. My husband says that if they destroyed a portion of his crop for forty years (like they do), they could not destroy as much as those horses were worth. May God help us to see clearer, and be more like Saints, is my prayer.

Your sister in the one faith,

MAGGIE DAVIS.

ALAMO, Tennessee, July 18, 1907.

Dear Herald: I desire to tell how and why I became a Latter Day Saint. I had for some years been trying to serve God, wanted to live right, but found it to be hard work. I wanted to join some church, but did not for a while know which one, but finally joined the Cumberland Presbyterian. Four years later I joined the Campbellite Church, thinking I had now found the only church that was right. But by reading the Bible I found they did not teach the gospel as Jesus taught it, and was about to conclude that none taught the true doctrine of Jesus. While thinking on this, Bro. Grant Gower and wife, living at Lexington, she being a sister of my wife, made us a visit, they being Latter Day Saints, and began to tell us something about their church, claiming it to be the true church of Jesus Christ. But I did not think that would do. I had heard so much about "Joe Smith" that I thought he was one of the worst men that had ever lived, or ever would live. I did not say much, and did not believe any more than I said. After they went home they had the Ensign sent to us. The more I read it the better I liked it. I read the sermons and other good matter, and began to search the Bible to see if this church taught the true doctrine of Jesus Christ, and found it to be so.

Bro. and Sr. Gower were the first to speak to us about the gospel, or in other words the true and only way of entering into the kingdom of heaven. We thank them for so doing, and desire the prayers of all the Saints that we may hold out faithful, and at last receive our reward.

Matthew 5:11, 12: "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." So, if we are persecuted, we should only rejoice and be glad, for here we have a great promise that should cause us thus to do. The Lord knew man's heart, therefore he uttered those words, that our faith might not be shaken when we are evilly spoken of.

I prayed to God to know of this latter-day work before I accepted it, whether it was the true work of the Lord. And it was made known unto me by a dream that it was of God; and I feel very happy to know that I have been led to believe the truth, and partake of the joy and happiness and comfort therein.

I was baptized by Bro. C. L. Snow, August 19, 1906. My wife was baptized August 16. We live about sixty-five miles from any branch. The HERALD and Ensign are the only preachers we have. Would be glad to have some of the elders come this way. We will make them welcome, and do all we can to get a place for them in which to preach. It is our desire to help this work, and to put the truth before the people.

In the faith,

G. E. JONES.

A Letter From Alaska.

Dear Herald: I am one of the isolated ones, my husband and I being the only Saints in this part of Alaska. I take this opportunity of letting my brothers and sisters know that our heavenly Father has watched over and protected us through the dreadful war between the two railroad companies here. The Northwestern and the Pacific Railroad companies both claimed the right of way, both worked right up to the place where each would have to cross the other. The first we knew, a man came running by my house and told me to run, as they were going to dynamite the dam beside my house; but before I could get away the shock came, and the debris flew all around me, and yet no harm came to me. I ran toward the company's office and heard the superintendent ordering his foreman to arm their men and go and protect his property.

The warning given to the Saints, telling them that the time would come when he who would not take up his sword against his neighbor would have to flee to Zion for safety, came to my mind. My husband was one of the foreman ordered out to fight. I walked up to him and asked if he was going to stand by the Lord or the railroad company. He looked me in the face, and I saw the divine light in his face as he said, I am not going to fight. He went to his men and asked them for all their guns. He took them and kept them till the day's work for them was over, then he gave them back, went to the office, told them he had quit, and asked for his time; but they did not want to give it to him. That night we came to East Calotta. We went back next morning. The superintendent told him he would not ask him to fight, to stay there till the fight was over, then go back to work; but he told him to go across the creek and look at some cable he had there. He lied to him; for one of the office men came to me and told me the superintendent was trying to keep my husband out there till the fight commenced, so he would encourage his men to fight (they all refused to go out after my husband quit). I went right out to the woods after him, and told him to come with me down to our house. Then we met my husband's brother who had been sworn in as deputy marshal. He told my husband that the marshal was going to arrest all the superintendents and foreman. We packed up our goods, and moved right over to East Calotta. They had the fight just an hour after we left. The marshal went there and arrested twenty. While they were trying to get bail, my husband was asleep in bed. The next morning two men were shot, one seriously, the other fatally. Many were hurt, the result of whose injuries we do not know. I see many bandaged heads on the street.

My husband had been warned in a dream, before he took the place, that if he did not serve the Lord he would be shot. It did not need a second warning when the time came for him to stand by his colors. We belong to the Seattle Branch.

I had a long, cheering letter from Sr. Bertha McCulloch of Everett, Washington. She was just bereaved of her father when she wrote to me. Notwithstanding her sorrow she wrote me a cheering letter. I also had one from Sr. Gorbitt, of Seattle Branch, secretary of our "Aid," wishing me to come back and labor with them. I am very unhappy away from the dear Saints in Seattle; but I believe the Lord has a work for us to do here. My husband's mother and brother live here. They have been very bitter against me on account of my faith. I have spent many hours with them, Bible in hand, since being here. The mother is ready for baptism, if there were any one here to officiate; the brother, if not friendly to the faith, is friendly to me. He told a friend of mine the other day that he never liked me before; but now he believed I was all right; so I think, with patience and loving kindness, we may win him to the truth.

I had a letter from my sickly daughter, saying, "Come home, mamma dear. I have not many years to live; I am not happy without you." It makes my heart sore to stay away; but I must finish my Master's work first. He has blessed and protected us. I feel that I can not be too busy for him. I want to do all he requires of me.

I still want your prayers, dear Saints, for my husband and myself in this far-off land. I would like to say more about the goodness of my heavenly Father; but my letter is already lengthy. May God help us all to live faithful, is my prayer.

In gospel bonds,

CALOTTA, Alaska.

VIOLA BERGSTROM.

Over the Mountains.

Editors Herald: Soon following my letter from Provo we had a visit there from Brn. Smith and Kelley whom I mentioned as being in Salt Lake City. They were with us from Saturday till Monday, each occupying on Sunday. Then attended our Saturday evening street-service, where the Bishop found it not beneath his dignity to follow the writer in entertaining the crowd in this rather unpopular way.

On the 3d inst. the writer left Provo and Bro. Curtis for Ogden in the north to join Bro. Stead. Coming via Salt Lake City we had a stop-over from Wednesday till Saturday, where we spent the first glorious Fourth in the United States. We visited the Mormon pavilion at Saltair; saw members of that church on the giddy whirl, keeping time with lively feet to the enchantment of music; bathed in the brine, said to be twenty-three per cent, where it is no credit to any one to swim; heard the expression of American patriotism in the prolonged din of firecrackers and dynamite cartridges. We beheld the basins in which the salt water is pumped, where it is allowed to evaporate, whence the residue, the real salt, the harvest of crystals, is gathered up and shipped away to salt the adjacent city and other cities as well. After delivering a Friday evening sermon on the street in the company of Brn. Davis and Morgan, missionaries, I continued here to Ogden from whence I now write.

Ogden is a city of twenty or thirty thousand, also near the mountains, a perfect picture now of fruit and the healthiest vegetation. It is a stronghold of Mormons, a large tabernacle, but no temple. Elder Stead has been occupying here for some time, baptizing four a few weeks ago, and others now are near the kingdom. We have meetings on the street through the week and in the church on Sunday. Interest seems to be increasing in our street-meetings. Combative Mormons ask questions and make interruptions, which adds conspicuousness to our feature of the activities of the city evenings. The "gospel wagon" outfit is also here to convert the Mormons; they hold forth on the next corner. Their attack is not directed confinedly to the Mormons of Utah, but also to the original church. They inveigh against the Book of Mormon. Certainly their propaganda will be attended with little success; for whatever there is that is objectionable in Mormonism, the Mormon is not fool enough to surrender to a system which requires of him to renounce that for which he is capable of offering as much proof—more—as that upon which the Bible is most commonly accepted. The Mormons challenged them to debate, but they refused. Then the Mormons in turn were challenged from our stand, and so far they have refused, or failed to accept.

I have been in association with Mormons and Mormon apostates long enough to see the endowment garments and the character of the marks they put on. Many Mormon minds may be oblivious as to the signification of the peculiar marks they are supposed to copy on their purchased garments, but that special garments are worn by them and that they contain certain curves and angles inwrought or cut and hemmed, is not open to question here in Utah.

The rising generation are seemingly incredulous of polygamy. To say, however, that they do not believe it is too sweeping. Of course their surroundings do not encourage its belief like they once did. It is still taught, but it must be more secretly. Naturally enough it would give way if not kept constantly before them, for where is there a maiden heart but what would revolt if, untrammelled, left to its own consultation? None. When I say, then, that there is a seeming incredulity toward polygamy in the rising generation, I mean only insofar as the relaxation of polygamous shackles and polygamous tuition permits nature to reassert itself. In a conversation with a very intelligent young lady of that church at Provo, she said: "I think God took polygamy away from our people because they had abused it and had not carried it out as directed." Then here a day or so ago in conversation with another, but less intelligent member of the same persuasion, lately coming into the city from the country or a country hamlet, she declared that if she were to be married she "would want to be IT," she would want no "No. 2."

To-day I received a call from a young man who announced himself "a prophet." He came with a written message he said he had received from Christ two nights ago. He came to me last night while my colaborer was speaking (on the street) and asked when and where he could have an interview with us during the day. I gave him our address and to-day he came, Bro. Stead having gone to the country temporarily. After a prolonged conversation he stated his mission and read his message. The nature of the message was purported words of the Lord to him directing that he go and approach us and tell us what had been told him; that we were his servants. He is from Idaho. His father was a Mormon, if not both his parents at one time. He claims to have received many revelations hitherto, some of which he put in documentary form. One was a message of warning to Joseph F. Smith which he carried to his residence in Salt Lake City. It was a call to repentance. He declares that the Mormon church will soon be overthrown. He says he has gone as far as he has been directed by the Lord in answer to prayer, receiving considerable persecution from members of the church to which his attention and mission is applied; and when the Lord furthermore makes it plain to him that it is his duty to receive baptism at our hands he holds himself in readiness to take the step. He preaches in the city here, has meetings from house to house, and testifies that in the exclusive devotion of himself to his prophetic and ministerial duties he is and has been supported in a providential way. When he is prepared to take the step of receiving the ordinances at our hands, if ever so, he promises that a number of those who are in line with his sentiments and service will most surely accompany him.

Quite a departure. Well, I believe that he is quite sincere. I treated him with all the courtesy I know, which proved to be to his greatest satisfaction, as he expressed himself ere his departure. I am not readily converted to such things, and I am slow to denounce them. I am inclined to believe after listening to his story that he has received some attention from the Lord—if only he has not mixed it with some other manifestations just as real but not from the same source. We will watch and wait.

A lovely Mormon apostate and prospective member of the Reorganized Church treated us missionaries to a delightful drive some miles up the canyon the other day. And next Sunday the Salt Lake City Saints are to come up and we are to "canyonade" them in the same way. The scenery is entrancing. As one looks thereupon one's mind reverts to the Book of Mormon where it says the land was "found in broken fragments, and in seams, and in cracks, upon all the face of the land." We saw the hot springs from which water issues at one hundred and thirty degrees, I was told. It is utilized by the sanitarium at the canyon mouth. We saw the marvelous water-pipe, only now and then visible, way up among the crags, sinuously proceeding from a distant dam in the interior to the canyon mouth, where with a mighty rush it empties its contents in such a manner as to enliven metallic wires and give a flood of light to the whole city of Ogden. But I must close and pray and slumber, for it is bedtime.

MOUNTAINVILLE, MAINE.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

On the thirteenth and fourteenth days of the present month occurred the dedication of the Saints' chapel at Mountainville, Maine. These two welcomed days marked the climax to a long, hard, tedious struggle of just a handful of people who determined several years ago, while holding services in a country schoolhouse, to erect a neat little house of their own in which to worship God. And, although few in number and poor in this world's goods, they have steadily and surely worked amid discouragements and trials, once having their chapel set on fire, until at last the building stands complete, entirely and completely finished and comfortably furnished, as a monument to the integrity and perseverance of the Saints of Mountainville, and those outside who have proved friends of the work, to whom we extend our heartfelt thanks.

The opening services were begun Saturday evening when Elder W. E. LaRue, our local missionary, preached an able and interesting sermon. Sunday at half past nine the Saints from various part of the Island joined in a prayer-and testimony-meeting, in which the Spirit was present. At eleven o'clock all enjoyed a treat in the shape of a fine, forceful sermon by Elder U. W. Greene, missionary in charge, who has not been in these parts for several years. At half past two occurred the dedicatory sermon, preached by Elder W. E. LaRue, who preached a fine sermon, to a crowded house, from the text, "Upon this rock I will build my church."

The house was beautifully decorated with evergreen and flowers, and a special program arranged by Bro. LaRue was carried out to the satisfaction and instruction of all. This program was printed for distribution to all present, and contained the hymns, responsive reading, and cuts of Elders U. W. Greene and G. T. Griffiths, missionaries in charge, and elder W. E. LaRue, in charge of the Western Maine District. By this arrangement all present were enabled to take part in the services. At half past seven Bro. Greene favored us with another sermon, which concluded the services, and all felt that a good and instructive season had been spent in the dedication and setting apart of the chapel for the Lord's use and work.

We might add that the chapel is entirely paid for and free from debt, and is in every respect a beautiful and comfortable house of worship; and well may the Saints of Mountainville be proud of the labor lovingly bestowed. And may the fruits of their labor continue long after the hands which have builded the house of God have returned to mother earth.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.

The very humid hot weather of the past few weeks has caused many of our number to seek the country for longer or shorter periods.

Some two weeks since we gave the parting hand to Bro. and Sr. Archibald D. Angus, who went on a visit to Scotland. Bro. Angus entertained his Sunday-school class of young men and their friends one evening before his departure, which event the pastor and his wife were privileged to attend, but we understand the young folks were given free rein after our departure.

The Sunday-school picnic, which was well attended, held in Fairmount Park, proved a pleasant outing, also the Religio's excursion to the seashore on last Saturday, when young and old enjoyed the invigorating salt water, and various attractions of Ocean City.

We have had the pleasure of entertaining Bro. U. W. Greene for a week—getting acquainted with our missionary in charge. The visit was all too short. The writer also entertained her sister and husband, Bro. and Sr. Russell D. Etzenhouser, of Independence. This visit was also too short.

June 26, the pastor and family took a little trip into Chester County, Pennsylvania, where, in the pretty farm home of Bro. Daniel T. Carter, his daughter Elizabeth was married to Bro. Alma Harrison of Philadelphia, Bro. Smith officiating in the presence of many friends and relatives. The young people are at home in this city, and we are proud of our addition.

In spite of the hot weather the church services are well attended, as are also Sunday-school and Religio.

We are leaving to-morrow morning for the eastern reunion to be held at Highland Lake, Massachusetts. About sixteen will go from here.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Elbert A. Smith was the speaker at the chapel Sunday morning; James E. Kelley in the evening. W. H. Hatty occupied at the Saints' Home, A. S. Cochran at Liberty Home. The following is reported from the adjacent branches and missions: G. W. Needham at Bloomington Center, W. A. France and Arthur Lane at Wion, V. W. Gunsolley at Davis City, Moroni Traxler and W. R. Dexter at Andover, J. F. Garver and Arthur Allen at Evergreen, J. S. Snively at Pawnee, H. A. Stebbins at Lone Rock, F. M. Weld and L. A. Gould at Thompson, John Smith at Ellston, R. S. Salyards at New Buda.

Bro. and Sr. C. B. Woodstock of Kenosha, Wisconsin, have come to Lamoni to make their home for a time at least. Bro. Woodstock is to have charge of the industrial department of Graceland. We trust that these worthy people will find their work and stay among us both pleasant and profitable.

On July 20 the resignation of D. J. Krahl, superintendent of the Star of Bethel Sunday-school, was presented and the brother released. J. A. Gunsolley was selected to fill the unexpired term. Bro. Krahl and family go soon to Independence where Bro. Krahl will continue his duties in the office of the presiding bishop. This family have endeared themselves to the Lamoni Saints, and will be missed when gone.

Walker and Dwight Davis were baptized in the Home pond Friday. The confirmation, in charge of Heman C. Smith, was at the Davis home, immediately following the baptism.

J. F. GARVER.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

The Sunday-school and Religio, equipped with new officers for the ensuing term, are fully alive to the work in their charge. Sunday, June 30, was parents' and cradle roll day at Sunday-school.

The marriage of Bro. Wm. R. Cowlshaw and Sr. Jeanette McFarland was solemnized, June 26.

Our visitors the past month have been Sr. Krahl, visiting her daughter Sr. R. Archibald; Sr. Weidman, of Knobnoster; Sr. Jacobs, of Keokuk, Iowa; Bro. David Wilke, also Sr. Jeanette Brooks, of St. Joe; and Sr. Burnham, of Higbee, Missouri.

Our sick who have been very seriously attacked are Bro. J. E. Dawson and Srs. Betty Hansacker and Anderson.

An enjoyable day was spent the Fourth of July at our annual picnic. About ten couple of our young people enjoyed a hayride one evening recently, through the country and along the banks of the Meramec.

Our district reunion will be held at Vosholl, Osage County, Missouri, August 9 to 19. All intending to go, order tents early from Bro. F. E. Smith, 2713 Dickson Street, St. Louis, Missouri. Good speakers and a splendid time are anticipated.

Benson on "The Gospel of Success."

My own belief is that what is commonly called success has an insidious power of poisoning the clear springs of life; because people who grow to depend upon the stimulus of success sink into dreariness and dullness when that stimulus is withdrawn. Here my critics have found fault with me for not being more strenuous, more virile, more energetic. It is strange to me that my object can have been so singularly misunderstood. I believe, with all my heart, that happiness depends upon strenuous energy; but I think that this energy ought to be expended upon work, and every-day life, and relations with others, and the accessible pleasures of literature and art. The gospel that I detest is the gospel of success, the teaching that every one ought to be discontented with his setting, that a man ought to get to the front, clear a space round him, eat, drink, make love, cry and strive and fight. It is all to be at the expense of feeblers people. That is a detestable ideal, because it is the gospel of tyranny rather than the gospel of equality.—Arthur C. Benson in August Putnam's.

Exploring the Upper Air.

Plainly, electricity has a great deal to do with the mechanism of storms. For this and other reasons the storage of it in the same atmosphere interests in high degree the expert meteorologist; and it is not surprising that the Weather Bureau should contemplate an exhaustive investigation of the subject. What—it would like to know, to begin with—is a lightning-flash? Whence does it come, and how is it generated? Do storm-clouds serve as gigantic storage-batteries? And does the electricity have anything to do with the making of rain?

Nobody can answer any of these questions. It is believed that a lightning-flash has an extremely high voltage, with a low amperage; in other words, that it contains only a small amount of electricity at very high pressure. But there is no certainty about it. The Weather Bureau man sends up a scientific box kite with the help of a windlass, from a hill-top, using piano-wire in place of a string. Storm-clouds come up, and electricity begins to descend the wire, throwing off formidable sparks. It is interesting—in fact, it might even be dangerous—but it conveys no information.—From "Fifteen miles up in the air," by Rene Bache, in the August Circle.

PROFESSOR CHARLES B. WOODSTOCK.

Bro. Woodstock will have complete charge of the industrial department and the college farm.

One of the HERALD correspondents who has given considerable study to economic and social problems some years ago expressed a wish that the instructions at Graceland were less academic and more practical. The idea, perhaps differently expressed, has been entertained by others and will shortly take shape in the industrial department to be opened at the beginning of the fall term. Professor Charles B. Woodstock is now in Lamoni and will take complete oversight of the manual training, both in-doors and out-of-doors.

Perhaps it is not proper to speak of the department as opening with the fall term, because in a small way a beginning has been made under the fostering care of Bro. F. B. Blair, secretary of the

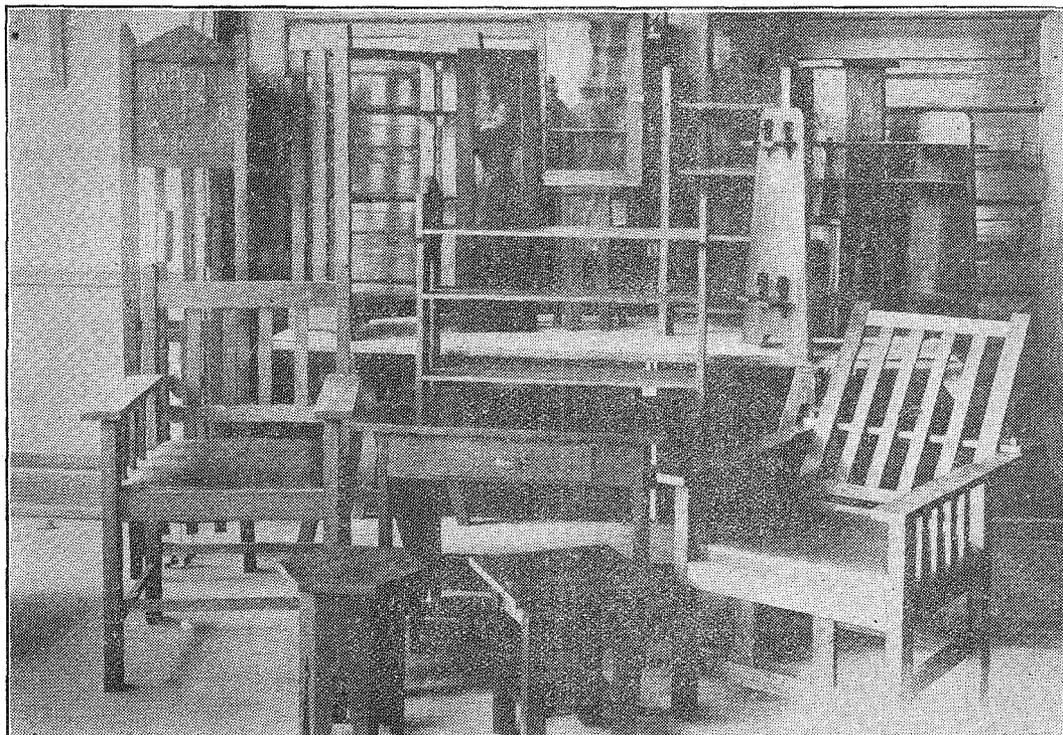

"God's call is to those who are weary and heavy laden and they are promised rest, often best found in congenial activity. The unprofitable burdens of sin and ignorance, of the world, the flesh, and the Devil, are to be cast aside, and in their stead is given a line of work that will bring a glorious reward."

Board of Trustees, who appeared before the General Convention of the Sunday-school Association last April and declared that he would start an industrial department (if necessary) with no more equipment than an old hen and a sitting of eggs. Those who will keep tab on the statistics of the shipments of poultry and eggs from Iowa may cease to smile at that statement. It will be remembered, however, that the Sunday-school Association very generously came to the aid of the new enterprise with an initial donation of one thousand dollars.

Bro. Woodstock is entirely competent to take the oversight of the work. He comes from similar Principal Woodstock has been connected with the Kenosha schools for the past four years and he has given great satisfaction. After serving two years as a principal in the grade schools he was selected by the Board of Education to have charge of the new manual training department made possible by the gifts of Thomas B. Jeffery to the board. Under the supervision of Mr. Woodstock the department has been decidedly successful.

The manual training in-doors will be carried on in the basement of the college. Cabinet-making will be taught, the first step being to instruct the pupils in regard to the making, the use, and the care of tools. Skill and knowledge will thus be obtained under a competent instructor, which of work in Kenosha, Wisconsin. The high esteem in which he was there held is evidenced by the following clipping from the Kenosha Evening News:

Charles B. Woodstock, who for the past two years has been in charge of the department of manual training in the Kenosha schools, and who is better known among the students than any other teacher with the exception of Superintendent Zimmers, has sent his resignation to the Board of Education to take effect with the close of the present year.

Professor Woodstock gives up his work in the Kenosha schools to accept a position as instructor of manual training and agriculture at Graceland College, Lamoni, Iowa.

Graceland College is the first school of any size to be opened by the Latter Day Saints. It has just been completed at a large expenditure of funds and it promises to be one of the leading schools among the religious denominations of the country.

course is the primary object of such an institution. A result of lesser importance will be the placing of finished articles on the market, and the manufacture of many articles needed in the dormitories and about the college.

The college also has sixty acres of land, a large part of which can be made productive, with financial gain, as well as with a vast improvement in the appearance of the property. Vegetables, fruit, poultry, and eggs may be produced, for the market or for use on the dormitory tables, hay and grain for the horses, cattle, chickens, and other live stock with which it is hoped the college farm will soon be stocked.

Profitable employment can thus be furnished students, who can be made at least to an extent self-supporting. The greatest gain, however, will be found (as in-doors) in the knowledge and skill acquired from actual work done under the direction of an instructor. Such a work is capable of almost unlimited development, as will readily be seen after a little careful thought.

The first great duty of the church is thus imposed: "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness." If the kingdom that we are to build up, a part or all of which we call Zion, were entirely intellectual and spiritual, no one would need manual training. Graceland might then be content to take her part in connection with the priesthood, the church publications, and the auxiliary societies, in developing the spiritual and intellectual. But no man is fully educated whose hands and eyes are untrained.

Zion is to embrace material things that will need an infelligent manipulation. There will be no army of bulging mentalities with lily-white fingers.

There will be houses, and they will not grow in a night. Architects, carpenters, masons, and electricians will plan, construct, and complete. Each particle of matter in the finished building is ordained to its particular place by the laying on of human hands.

Those buildings will be fitted with furniture. Some one must know how to carve and join, polish and veneer.

Those homes will be surrounded with gardens, orchards, and fields. Men must know how to test seed-corn, graft apple-trees, fertilize and drain the soil, perhaps fight the codling-moth and the chinch-bug.

Those homes will be supplied with tables and the tables will not be spread miraculously with daily manna. Some one must know how to cook the food that goes thereon in such a way that it will be attractive and will not cause cramps and dyspepsia.

Somewhere in the communities temples and churches will be erected, and upon them earnest and devout labor will be lavished. Skill, even inspired genius, may be called forth in their construction and adornment.

If the offerings of the people take shape in a temple it must be no botched and bungled affair. The service of divinity has developed, inspired, and educated singers and preachers, and it ought to develop, inspire, and educate builders.

The man who goes out in the world needs to know how to do things and the man who is to have part in building Zion has a still greater need.

Thus we begin to see the need of industrial education, and the new department in Graceland is practically our first effort toward meeting that need.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

LAMONI AS SEEN BY OTHERS.

The Des Moines Daily News, July 28, contained an excellent article from the pen of one of the ablest editorial writers of the West. We reproduce it below, and it will be seen that it deals with Lamoni in general and with Graceland College in particular. The writer is Mr. Edwin A. Nye, editor of the News. Mr. Nye seems to have enjoyed his visit in Lamoni, and it is certain that Lamoni appreciated his excellent address on that occasion:

I had the privilege and pleasure, during the June commencement season, of visiting and speaking at several Iowa colleges. One of the occasions that stands out in my memory is a day at Graceland College, located at Lamoni.

Graceland is conducted under "the auspices of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints"—a people known to the outside world as the Joseph Smith, or anti-polygamous Mormons. They believe in the Book of Mormon as supplemental to the Bible and that Joseph Smith was a modern prophet of God. They severely condemn the polygamous practices of the Utah Mormons and denounce them as apostates from the faith.

The son of the Prophet Joseph Smith, who was killed at Nauvoo, Illinois, Joseph Smith II, is the present venerable president of the church. He is assisted in the government by a college of twelve apostles. Joseph Smith is a pious and scholarly man of commanding presence and has great ability as a public speaker. I regret I could not meet him, but understand he is rather feeble and does not often leave his home at Independence, Missouri. Twenty-five years ago I heard this man preach a remarkable sermon at Plano, Illinois, at that time the headquarters of the church.

A large number of the Latter Day Saints live in and about Lamoni, Decatur County. The town, which is but a few miles from the Missouri line, is picturesquely located upon high rolling ground and is a thrifty commercial place. It has no saloons. I talked with merchants and others who are not members of the church and learned that the Latter Day Saints are almost uniformly pious, industrious and thrifty. They settle their differences among themselves and very seldom go to law. They are not distinguished in any way by their dress from their neighbors. If I may judge from a casual meeting with some of their representative men, they are, as a people, average American citizens as to culture and intelligence, kind, cordial, and given to courtesy and hospitality. I never faced a finer audience than that assembled in Saints' chapel—a mammoth church built on opera-house style—on commencement day. I had spoken to a college audience of cultured Methodists the day before at Simpson College, and this audience suffered no whit by comparison. The people were very appreciative and responsive to a degree. If I may guess, these people are as up-to-date as any.

Graceland College, a cut of whose main building is shown herewith, was founded in 1895, for the benefit of students of all beliefs—a fact that speaks well for the tolerance and liberality of a people whom some might consider narrow-minded. And this freedom from sectarianism extends to the faculty. During the year just closed only one teacher out of nine was a member of the Latter Day Saints' organization—a situation no doubt without a parallel in the conduct of denominational colleges. Nor is any doctrinal teaching permitted in the college course. The school stands on its merits as an educational institution. The curriculum is of wide range. The normal department is considered among the best in Iowa. Besides the regular college course, departments for oratory, music, and business are maintained.

Quick to note the trend of modern education, Graceland has instituted manual training. Sixty acres of land is connected with the campus, and this is also to be utilized for industrial purposes and to help students in the way of employment. Self-help—one of the important things in education—is to be emphasized in this Iowa institution, and worthy students are to be provided means for securing an education. Graceland is in the very van in this movement.

R. M. Stewart, B. A., B. Di., is the youngest college president in Iowa. After spending three years in Western (now Leander Clark) College, at Toledo, Iowa, he graduated as bachelor of arts and Phi Beta Kama honors at the State university at Iowa City. He received his post-graduate degree from the State university in 1906.

Having struggled for his education, President Stewart is admirably adapted for his present place. He has doubled the attendance in two years. Under his leadership the manual training department was organized. A finished scholar and fine public speaker, he is intensely alive to modern educational problems. His liberality of mind is attested by his reelection at Graceland though a member of a different faith. The world will hear from this young man.

I am under obligations to the president and to the many good people I met at Lamoni. My respect for the Latter Day Saints has gone up several notches.

A NEW DEPARTMENT IN THE HERALD.

Beginning with next week's issue the HERALD will publish a series of autobiographies of prominent church-workers. These autobiographies will appear from time to time and will be brief and interesting. They will be good reading to loan your neighbor after you have read them once or twice yourself. This feature of the HERALD alone will be worth the price of the HERALD; can't you get a few new subscribers on the strength of it?

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

One brother who has conceived and put into practice an excellent idea writes as follows: "It has occurred to me that a good way to do missionary work and also to help build the HERALD Office is to send the publications to those who may be interested in the gospel that we try to represent. I took advantage of the kind offer of the Ensign (fifty cents per year) and as a result one family is ready for baptism and another mother with a large family is making an earnest investigation which I believe will result in bringing her whole family into the fold. Please send the following publications to the persons named:"

Elder J. E. Vanderwood writes from Lehi, Utah, relating some of his experiences in that field. We quote: "We came on to Lehi and first made application for a meeting-house but we were denied, the bishop informing us that we would only tear them down and that they could not think of letting us occupy their houses, and furthermore it would be contrary to the counsel of their president, Joseph F. Smith, who had sent an edict throughout the country to the effect that their houses were to be closed against us, 'And,' says the bishop, 'I can't go contrary to that,' so we had no show of a house and therefore made arrangements for street-meetings. On the 16th we began in the open air, and have continued for eleven nights, the attendance and attention being good; sometimes as high as three hundred people at once listened to us. When the questions came on we had them thick and fast, and the people seemed to be surprised that we were not able to secure a house. It gave us their sympathy. And I am inclined to think they have fear that their craft is in danger, as they explained (?) to their congregation a week ago why it was necessary for them to close their houses against us. Abel John Evans, a counselor in the stake presidency, said, 'Some of our people want to know why we don't let them have a house, and some of our elders even want to debate, and why do you want to debate? Don't you know that you have the truth? Don't you know that Joseph Smith is a prophet? And if you do why do you want to debate? And the reasons given by our president are sufficient to shut our houses against them.' We expect to continue here as long as our interest remains as good as it is at present, and hope to appeal to some more of the honest people of this place."

Bro. F. B. Blair suggests that farmers who may be retiring from farm life and who may cherish a desire to help the industrial department of Graceland College can do so by donating farm implements. The college farm is in great need of implements. Others may help, if they wish, with cash donation. Thirty students were enabled to earn their own living while attending college last year, and the new department, if supported, will make it possible for many times that number to do so.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

According to press reports the pastors of Joplin, Missouri, by agreement held a day of prayer July 28. Prayers were offered that the drought which had prevailed for some time might be broken. The reports state that shortly after the forenoon meeting a deluge of rain began and continued throughout the afternoon. Evidently the day of miracles is not past.

The trial of William D. Haywood, secretary of the Western Federation of Miners, came to a close July 28 when the jury found him not guilty of complicity in the murder of Ex-governor Steunenberg of Idaho. The country at large watched the trial with intense interest and much speculation was indulged in as to the innocence or guilt of the accused. The speculation still continues; but it would seem that it should close when a fair trial before an intelligent jury has failed to convict.

The Des Moines Capital comments on the workings of the new divorce law in Iowa, as follows:

"As a means of deterring parties from seeking divorces, the new remarriage-after-divorce law is a consummate failure. The records in the office of Clerk Coffin prove that. For there have been as many divorces asked the past month as in any previous month in local court history.

"An inspection of the records shows that since July 1, there have been forty-three divorce petitions filed in district court. This is an average of one and a half a day. Since the new law went into effect, July 4, there have been thirty-seven divorces asked.

"And that, too, right in the face of the new law which says that none of these people shall remarry in Iowa until a year has elapsed after the filing of the decree."

A peculiar death occurred in Cleveland, Ohio, some days ago. The events surrounding it were typical of religious demonstrations that are of frequent occurrence throughout the country at the present time. Of the event itself the Cleveland Plain Dealer, July 29, has the following:

"Laboring under religious excitement while seeking the gift of tongues," Mrs. Annie Nagly, fifty-two, 1087 East Sixty-eighth Street, fell dead at the altar of a little frame church on East Forty-ninth Street, between Cedar and Central Avenues, Southeast, at six o'clock last night.

"For an hour, neighbors declare, her fellow revivalists attempted the miracle of raising the dead. Upon finding themselves unsuccessful they finally called a physician. He pronounced the woman beyond all human help. For nearly three hours the dead body lay on the floor of the church while a woman waved a palm-leaf fan to drive away the flies.

"A service which is said by persons living in the vicinity to have been somewhat noisy was suddenly stopped when it was found that Mrs. Nagly had not swooned but was really dead. For several hours the congregation sat with bowed heads and then drifted away by twos and threes until an ambulance came and took the body away.

"The meeting was presided over by Reverend W. A. Kramer, who until a few weeks ago conducted a similar mission on Euclid Avenue, near the Lakeview car-barns. Yesterday was the second Sunday in the church on East Forty-ninth Street, which was formerly occupied by the Church of the New Jerusalem. It is now leased by an organization known as the Christian and Missionary alliance. Kramer claims that there have been numerous manifestations of the 'gift of tongues' at his services.

"Yesterday the meeting started at three o'clock. Sixty or seventy, mostly women, sat in the pews. Reverend W. S. Worrell of Louisville, Kentucky, preached. At the conclusion of his sermon Reverend Mr. Kramer, who claims to be an ordained minister, announced that there would be a session of prayer, and invited all to gather about the steps of the altar. About forty responded.

Women worked themselves up to a frenzy of religious fervor and cried aloud in their prayers, their bodies swaying about in their supplications for relief. Men prayed with the same earnestness, falling anon on their folded arms and crying for relief from the torments raging within them. This manifestation is said by Reverend Mr. Kramer to be an evidence of the passing out of the carnal life and the receiving in of 'power' from on high.

"Suddenly Mrs. Nagly, who was bending in front of the altar, swayed to and fro and fell backwards upon the floor. As converts often enter into a cataleptic state, no particular attention was given her, although a chorus of rejoicings went up. She, too, the rest thought, had been visited with the 'power.'

"The woman lay moaning upon the floor for a time. Only once did she give evidence of life when she clutched the air convulsively and fell back dead. Those praying about her believed that she was in the usual trance, although they could not arouse her."

If a man had to make as many trips to the pantry to get a pound of food as a bee does to the field to procure a pound of honey he would be an octogenarian before he could get four good, square meals. A curious man has computed the number of trips required to get a pound of honey and has found it to be 2,500,000. This means a lot of pulling and hauling to get a living and it is easy to see why a bee displays so much industry.

"God recognizes man's social proclivities and arranges for their development in the church. While it is our duty to pray alone, that does not suffice—we are commanded to forsake not 'the assembling of ourselves together.' The prayer-meeting is referred to as the 'social' meeting because there is a commingling of kindred spirits; and man meets not only man but God as well."

"God will never turn his back on the man or woman who knows his or her faults and is trying to overcome them."

Elders' Note-Book

THE APPEARANCE OF EVIL.

Unto one's mind a scene is borne
Of cities small and great;
Where structures, blackened and forlorn,
Rise close to those of state.

The halls of trade stand wall to wall,
Their windows filled with wares;
But most sublime among them all,
The sacred Hall of Prayers.

Recall the day when unto God
The edifice was given,
Through prayer decrying aught of fraud
In anterooms of heaven:—

"This chapel now we dedicate,
Our Father, to thy cause;
And may thy Spirit from this date
Abide here without pause.

"Perfection be our corner-stone,
Authority the wall;
And all shall be to thee alone
Till human structures fall."

With sympathizing thought we note
How Jesus, scourge in hand,
In anger all the merchants smote
Who in his temple planned,

By selling Jews the sacrifice,
To profit through the rite;
But virtue thus so mixed with vice,
To God was no delight.

Although the practice he abhorred,
We follow it as far,
When in the house we gave the Lord,
We hold fair and bazaar.

Although our object worthy be,
The temple is profaned;
And none in conscience can be free
Who makes his God ashamed.

So keep the sanctuary clean,
Our house of worship pure;
Then we shall see as we are seen,
And make our calling sure.

REDFIELD, Pennsylvania.

JOHN T. CURRY.

IS THE AGE OF GREAT PREACHERS PAST?

Days of great preachers are past. In all the churches the men are few who could rivet the attention of a congregation for an hour. Is there a preacher among them who could hold an audience for two? And yet a sermon that lasted three full hours is one of the memories of my childhood. The preacher, I need not say, was a Scotchman—the great Doctor Duff, the Church of Scotland's first missionary to India. Child though I was, I remember how his hearers hung upon his words.

The man whose influence turned the current of Alexander Duff's life to the ministry and the mission field was himself one of the greatest preachers of the century. I allude to Doctor Chalmers. Of such preaching as his the present generation knows absolutely nothing. The age of such preachers is past. The fact is notorious that the pulpit is no longer a power. Certain men here and there, of course, are sure of an earnest hearing. But, speaking generally, the preacher is looked upon as a necessary evil. Said a soldier friend to me lately—a general in the army: "Give me any page you chance to open of one of our military handbooks, and I'll undertake to speak upon it in a way that will interest soldiers: how is it that with that wonderful Book in their hands the parsons and ministers succeed in being uninteresting?" It used not to be so. In other days preaching was a power in this country. I do not refer specially to the efforts of orators and scholars, but rather to the village chapels throughout the land. Humble men, often unlearned and unpolished, spoke to their fellow men of the great realities of the life to come, and they were listened to, and lives were influenced by their words.

But enter one of these chapels to-day, and you will possibly find the pulpit occupied by some half-educated man who thinks he is a scholar because he has been taught Hebrew and Greek, and who is reading an essay perhaps to prove that he knows more about the Hebrew Scriptures than his Lord and Savior knew.

What is it that has produced this extraordinary and lamentable change? If the matter be thrashed out, the conclusion we shall reach by a process of negative induction is that they are the result of the rise and growth of theological colleges. And what is the distinctive characteristic of a theological college? Not the teaching of the languages in which the Scriptures were written—that the universities can do at least as well. Not instruction in the writing of theologians and divines: such writings are open to us all. In these and similar respects the theological colleges have no monopoly. But there are two peculiarities which mark them off from other educational institutions. The one is that they neglect a book which is of importance to every man, but of the utmost value to a minister of religion; I mean the book of human nature. Their students are not taught to study men and women. And the other is that they train men to view everything in heaven and earth through colored glasses. Life in the world—and a university training is the beginning of life in the world—teaches men to see things as they are. The training of the theological college is designed to make them see what the communion which the college represents wishes them to see. And every church has glasses of a different color.

A story may come in aptly here. An "accommodation preacher" (as a "temporary supply" is called) preached three successive Sundays on infant baptism. The deacons decided to interfere. Some wished for strong measures; but one of their number, a peace-lover and diplomatist, suggested that they should ask for a sermon on some subject which would exclude his hobby. "Adam, where art thou?" was the text they selected. The preacher gladly accepted it. Nothing could be better. Sunday came around; the preacher gave out the chosen text, and proceeded to expound it. "Our text," he said, "naturally divides itself under four heads. First. Every one must be somewhere. Second. Every one ought to know exactly where he is. Third. Some people are where they ought not to be; and fourth and last, this naturally leads us to the subject of infant baptism." I will not offend the intelligence of the reader by delaying to interpret my parable. This was a bad case of the red disc.

My friend the late Sir Adolphus Liddell once told me, after a visit to one of the great ducal houses of Scotland which he had just left, how the primus of the Scotch Episcopal Church arrived for a confirmation. The Sunday sermon was to be especially for the young folk. But when the bishop got into the pulpit, he found he had brought the wrong sermon. "And will you believe it," said my friend, "the old fool read them a sermon written for the consecration of a burial ground. I should have thought he'd have put the sermon in his pocket and said a few sympathetic words to the young people."

In the whole range of human knowledge there is nothing that may not be of value to the preacher. But there are only two books a knowledge of which is essential to him. The one is, of course, the Book, and the other is the book of human nature. And these are precisely the books which theological colleges distort or ignore. The Bible, indeed, is read, but it is read through the colored glasses of either superstition or rationalism. No one to whom it is a living Book, divine and yet human—absolutely divine, and yet the most human Book in the world—could be uninteresting as he speaks about it. And no one who has a heart full of sympathy with his fellow men in their sorrows and their joys, their disappointments and their hopes, their longings and their needs, will ever have an inattentive audience. And such men will not read a burial-ground sermon to a confirmation class, or preach for a month on infant baptism!

I have listened to men like Liddon for an hour—listened with intense interest, as they read their well-matured thoughts in well-chosen words. And I have listened with tears in my eyes to some humble man who in broken sentences spoke of his life's struggles, and of divine goodness and mercy. But when I hear a sermon read by some preacher who has neither genius nor sympathy, I feel I have on my shelves at home a choice of plenty that is in every way worthier, and which would be more profitable to me, just because I could take it in without having my ears annoyed by a "holy whine" or by some grave faults of elocution.—Sir Robert Anderson, K. C. B., in Horner's Weekly.

OUR GOSPEL TENT.

Tune—Beulah Land.

Our gospel tent is now set up
With seats and pulpit and the torch;
All now is ready, come and hear
The gospel of our Savior dear.

Chorus.

Oh, come and hear, yes come and hear
The gospel of our Savior dear,
Which is restored in this our day,
And not to be proclaimed for pay.

His servants now commissioned are
To preach the gospel near and far,
As taught by those in days of old,
And all must gather in one fold.

Faith is our guiding polar star;
And all that Jesus taught us are
The things that we must do and love,
Or God can not of us approve.

But since that Satan is on hand,
Intolerance has filled the land,
And churches everywhere are barred
Against the gospel of our Lord.

Therefore in this our humble way,
We preach the gospel without pay,
And ask the sinners, rich and poor,
To knock upon the gospel door.

"Repent and be baptized," we say
And this in Christ's old-fashioned way,
Which was the door in days of old
Through which they entered to the fold.

S. K. SORENSEN.

"No man can truly say that we have ever urged him to surrender one principle of truth in order to enter this church; but on the contrary individuals have been urged to accept additional truths that had not previously been a part of their creeds. Does one believe in faith and repentance? He is urged to go on and accept baptism of water and of the Spirit. Does one believe that God used to bless men wonderfully? He is asked to go on and believe that God still blesses men wonderfully. In no case is he urged to relinquish his faith in any fact, Biblical or otherwise."

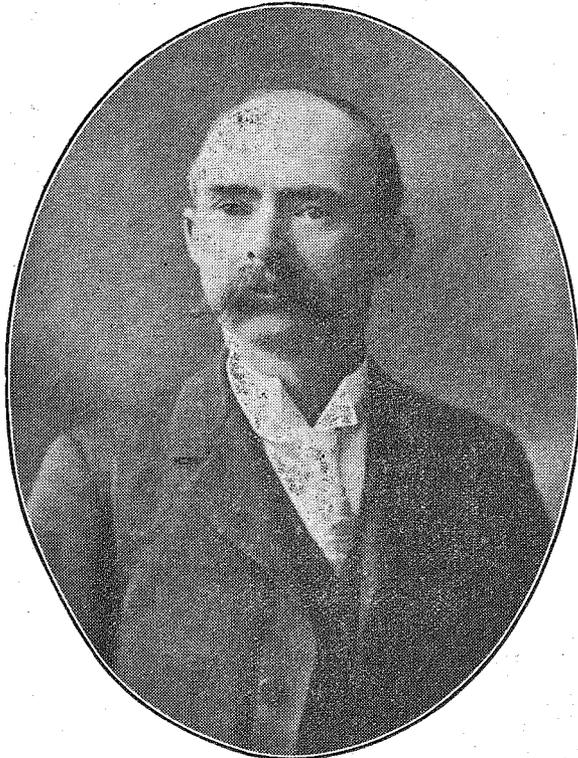

"I have made the acquaintance of several boys whom people called bad, wild, and reckless, and by ever speaking kindly to them, little by little I have gained their confidence, and have not found one single boy who was all bad or depraved. All have some good traits of character, and all respond to kind, considerate treatment."

DOCTRINES OF CATHOLICISM.

INDULGENCES, PRAYERS FOR THE DEAD, ETC.

(Concluded.)

BISHOP C. J. HUNT.

Cardinal Gibbons, in The Faith of Our Fathers, page 428, says:

An Indulgence is simply a remission in whole or in part, through the superabundant merits of Jesus Christ and his saints, of the temporal punishment due to God on account of sin, after the guilt and eternal punishment have been remitted.

On page 432 of Indulgences he says:

It is not a remission of sin, since no one can gain an indulgence until he is already free from sin.

Try again, Cardinal, for your statement on the question of remission of sins is somewhat clouded.

In making an effort to smooth over the work of John Tetzel, their champion indulgence seller, Mr. Gibbons said the Council of Trent "took effectual measures to put a stop to all irregularities regarding indulgences." (Page 436.) Have they stopped the "irregularities"? The facts are that visitors to Rome, Italy, find inscriptions in Latin on their church-buildings, which when translated into English read: "Full Perpetual Indulgences Daily for the Living and the Dead."

PURAGATORY AND MASS.

Cardinal Gibbons says on page 248:

The existence of Purgatory naturally implies the correlative dogma,—the utility of praying for the dead; for, the souls consigned to this middle state have not reached the term of their journey. They are still exiles from heaven, and are fit subjects for divine clemency.

Reverend Conway in The Question Box, pages 562 and 563, declares that "the strongest argument for the existence of Purgatory and the practice of praying for the dead is the universal and constant witness of divine tradition as voiced in the writings of the Fathers." Of mass and its merits Father Conway says: "We do not pretend to know how far God applies the infinite merits of the sacrifice of the mass to either the living or the dead."—Page 454.

After noting carefully, the above admissions on purgatory and mass by Catholic clergymen, is it not surprising that a notice like the following should appear in the Catholic News, New York City, March 2, 1907:

PRAY FOR OUR HOLY DEAD.

The prayers of our Promoters and their associates are asked for the eternal repose of the souls of the following recently deceased members of the Society: . . . [We omit the list of twenty-five names.—C. J. H.] The souls of those whose names are sent to the office are recommended to the prayers of our benefactors and remembered for thirty days in the Holy Sacrifices of the Mass.

A strange practice indeed when Father Conway says that Catholics "do not pretend to know how far God applies the infinite merits of the sacrifice of the mass to either the living or the dead."

Every careful reader of the standard books by Catholics will find them contradictory and at variance with the Bible.

Paying money to priests that sacrifices might be offered for sins of dead relatives and friends is a doctrine of the Catholic Church, and is advocated by Cardinal Gibbons in his book, page 248. He says: "We consider that it is clearly taught in the Old Testament; that it is at least insinuated in the New Testament; that it is unanimously proclaimed by the Fathers of the Church," citing as proof 2 Machabees 12: 43-46.

The reader is reminded of the great difference in the reading of Father Gibbon's so-called "clearly taught" proof-text of 2 Machabees 12: 40-46 in the Catholic Bible and that found in the Authorized version of the Apocrypha.

The Apocrypha says that Judas Machabees "made a gathering throughout the company to the sum of two thousand drachms of silver," and sent it to Jerusalem, "to offer a sin offering, doing therein very well and honestly, in that he was mindful of the resurrection." The Catholic version makes the two thousand drachms of silver read "twelve thousand drachms." This raise of ten thousand drachms (valued at about 19 cents each), may be interpreted to mean the encouraging of devout Catholics to pay more liberally to priests when making offerings for the dead.

While both translations seem to teach that Judas Machabees, (who directed the armies that killed so many thousand men,) may have taught "to pray for the dead," we do not find where God directed it, or ever sanctioned it. All should observe that the mere historical account in the Bible, or mention of a certain thing having been done, is not of itself sufficient warrant or proof that the act was right in God's sight. Even Catholics teach in their Annotations to Judith 10: 12, that, "All that is related in scripture of the servants of God is not approved by the scriptures."

When we call to mind that that unauthorized and unwarranted work of praying (?) for the dead was done in the cloudy days of Israelitish practices, we can see that Cardinal Gibbons struck a hard blow at the innovation of Judas Machabees, (and later of the Catholic Church,) in these words:

When our Savior, the founder of the New Law, appeared on earth, He came to lop off those excrescences which had grown on the body of the Jewish ecclesiastical code, and to purify the Jewish Church from those human traditions which, in the course of time, became like chaff mixed with the wheat of sound doctrine.—Faith of Our Fathers, pages 249-250, edition 1879.

The humble seeker after truth will see by a careful comparison of the teachings of Catholicism with the gospel plan outlined in the New Testament that they have great need of "purifying," and "lopping off" "those human traditions," for they are truly "like chaff" in God's sight.

We suggest to them that they hold a council soon, and invite one or more representative men of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to assist them in getting rid of those "human traditions," such as celibacy, paying priests money to pray for the dead, and many other questionable doctrines.

Tobias [Tobit] 12: 9 is quoted by Catholics in support of their practice of paying money and praying for the dead, but a careful reading of the chapter gives them no such license. In their translation, verses 9 and 10 read: "For alms delivereth from death, and the same is that which purgeth away sins, and maketh to find mercy and life everlasting. But they that commit sin and iniquity, are enemies to their own soul."

The Apocrypha renders the verses: "For alms doth deliver from death, and shall purge away all sin. Those that exercise alms and righteousness shall be filled with life: but they that sin are enemies to their own life." The sentence, "Those that exercise alms and righteousness shall be filled with life," certainly refers to our present life,—not the intermediate state. (See Matthew 6: 1; Luke 11: 41; 12: 33; Acts 10: 2.)

Two articles on Catholicism by the writer will be found in this paper for February 14, and September 5, 1906.

May the time soon come when the almost endless, and, to many Catholics, extremely doubtful rites and ceremonies will be discarded, and, in lieu thereof, the beautiful gospel of Christ, which has been restored to earth (see Revelation 14: 67) by an angel from heaven, through Joseph Smith be accepted and lived by them.

WHAT SHALL FREE US FROM SELFISHNESS?

Selfishness is a part of the inherent propensities of man. When given place in the heart without restraint, it has crushed the flower of love, blackened the soul with hate, stained the soil with human blood, and distributed gaunt poverty throughout the nations.

It is a tree whose root will sap every noble attribute of the soul by a slow and vicious process, and whose fruit is always bitter. The method by which this evil tree may be uprooted is given in the gospel. That method will be successful when used. All others must fail.

But we have said to ourselves that we will comply with that perfect method, or specific law which applies to this particular feature of evil, after we have more perfectly outgrown our selfishness, thus ignoring the very means by which the work is to be accomplished, if it ever is.

Baptism is for the remission of sins; not because sins have been remitted. Laying on of hands is for the gift of the Holy Ghost, not because the Holy Ghost has been given. The gospel is for the strengthening of the characters of men, not because they are already righteous or strong in character. The law of God requiring an equalizing of the temporal affairs of men is for the uprooting of the tree of selfishness, not because selfishness has already been eliminated.

The man who is floundering in a fierce stream to cross it, fighting against the swift current, is foolish to say: "I will get into the boat when I get over on the other side of the stream." The boat is there to carry him over, and will save him many a weary stroke in swimming if he will get in and row across.

Who among us as Saints would dare to claim to be entirely free from the clutch of the monster, Selfishness? Have we pitted our strength in the unequal struggle of trying to fight it out independent of the means at hand for our assistance? We have. Many of us have been, and are doing that very thing; and the sooner we stop floundering, spluttering, and splashing around, and get into the boat, the better it will be for us.

Practical application of the principle of equality in temporal things is the only stroke which can ever strike death to the hideous monster, Selfishness. It is the only boat which will ever breast the fierce current of modern growing graft, grasp, and greed. Get on board! The anchor is weighed, the boat soon must move out, and those who refuse must be left in the seething waters. The Spirit of God will not always strive with man.

Equality—what is it? A little word of eight letters, looking to some of us more formidable than a scowling fort crowned with as many gattling guns.

Equality: A place in the Narrow Way where the path is beaten broader than the standard gauge by the impress of many feet as they halted, hesitated, and stood to right or left in order to do an unusual amount of considering.

Equality: A monument whose every cast is beauty; whose every line is grace, whose every curve is grandeur when beheld in the broad, steady light of truth; but in a false light, or through a colored lense, it is a rock of offense and a stumbling-stone.

Equality: One of the most elastic words known to latter-day Israel—will stretch to fit a railroad magnate and a fifty-cent wage-earner if necessary.

"Equal in temporal things"—made to appear to fit in reckoning the financial holdings of one Saint worth three hundred thousand dollars and another worth thirty cents above a pittance, upon the hypothesis that to equalize by reducing the greater amount would cripple somebody's personal business. (See Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.)

Does God tell us, there, that his way to provide for his Saints is that the rich shall retain his wealth and the poor shall be given enough to equalize it, provided the Bishop can make something out of nothing to supply the discrepancy? How does that read, anyway? Do we find anywhere in the word of God that because certain ones owning large business interests have been willing to give to the Lord's work with a liberal hand, that the inequality of large ownership as compared with the pittance of some without "business ability" is to be winked at? Where do we find such teaching?

If God is pleased to have such a system of inequality continue, well and good, and we may soon expect the redemption of the land of Zion and of her scattered people. But if this manner of equality which fails to equalize is not pleasing to God, we need lose no sleep as to whether our tie will be on straight or our shoes neatly blacked so as to make the right kind of an appearance before Enoch and his people when the Lord suddenly translates us.

Write 30 cents in one column with the word

weakling, which is, "lack of ability." Write $300,000 in another column, with the word strength, which is "business tact and ability." Draw a line and shut your eyes and strike a balance by writing, "These two brethren are equal in temporal things." Of course when you open your eyes it will be noticed that the writing is done in a scrawl because of having your eyes shut, but that does not matter, for that writing is a fac simile, true to every line of the principle upon which the deduction was founded, i. e., that the rich man and the poor man can be considered "equal in temporal things" under the law, since they both pay a tithe to one common cause, notwithstanding the fact that one holds a lever upon the other's back called "ability." Our eyes must some day open to the solemn fact that such interpretation of the scripture is itself a miserable scrawl upon the pages of our history. "Unless ye are one ye are not mine." "Be ye equal in temporal things."

If the term equality is to be taken to mean "equal according to business ability," then just erase the word and write in its place eight ciphers, thus: 00,000,000, and it will mean just as much. The man with the ability to get the dollar and make that dollar earn another, is the man who has both dollars now, and always will have so long as this system which perpetuates inequality is in vogue.

Among the beasts the strong trample down and prey upon the weak. Among men the same is true, with the difference that the man smiles and appears very friendly toward his victim, while the beast is frank enough to growl and openly declare his intentions.

Selfishness is the disposition to get and use all of one's own share, and as many of the shares of others as can be hovered and held, making others pay tribute to the dog-in-the-manger grafter for the use of what is theirs by every rule of right. Land, the natural heritage of man, is thus monopolized by the grab-all-of-the-shares man, by the means of foresight and "business ability"; and thus thousands have been literally robbed before their mothers gave them a body or God gave them life.

A story is told of an Irishman who was walking across the domain of a wealthy "landlord": "Get off of here, you are trespassing upon my land," was the command. "Your land?" responded the Irishman. "And how is it your land?" "I inherited it from my father, sir." "And, thin, how did your fa-ayther get it?" "From his father, sir." "And, thin, how did he get it?" He fought for it, sir." "Faith, thin, an I'll fight you for it," said the Irishman, as he pulled off his coat. And so the holding of more shares than his own referred the landlord back to where brute force was used, which is true in more cases than one. Lands are monopolized by brute force boiled down, skimmed, refined, and called "business ability," while others pay tribute called "rent and interest," and meekly press the yoke that was shaped to their necks before they were born.

Monopoly of the products of the "lasting hills"—all manner of minerals—industries, factories, etc., is brought about by reason of the fact that some man or clique can, through "business tact and ability," control these sources of wealth; and the only reason that the air of heaven is not dealt out to us by measure through a hose or funnel, is because men have been unable to box it up. If they had been able to do so, we would no doubt be found subscribing as meekly to the "honest, legal, business deal" as we do to the heinous grafts of the day, which condemn our sons to servitude a hundred years before they are born, as surely as a lightning-flash forecasts a crash of thunder to follow.

Men are willing to perpetuate a system which permits such inequality, not because they love the grind of the oppressor, but because selfishness in the bosom of the underling whispers the hope, "Maybe I can, myself, get on top of the pile in some manner." And so it is selfishness among all classes which holds the gavel. Inequality stalks abroad in all its hideousness.

What! Shall God sanction such? No! We ought to know better than that if he had never given a sentence or a line upon that subject. But God has spoken. And what does his law demand? EQUALITY! And anything which provides more or less than this for the people of God is not of him.

There is a text or two in the New Testament scripture, which seems, sometimes, to be avoided as carefully as "dry-land religionists" avoid texts on baptism.

"And all that believed were together, and had all things common."—Acts 2: 44. "Neither was there any man among them that lacked . . . and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need."—Acts 4: 34, 35.

True it is a short account of so important a transaction. But we have specific details given us by revelation as to how it should be done. Note the power which attended the former saints as recorded in the New Testament. Prison doors were thrown open, the sick, the lame, the halt, and the blind were healed by the wonderful outpouring of the power of God. These are the legitimate and inevitable results which are as sure to follow in the wake of union and equality, as sunshine and rain result in throwing a mantle of green over the landscape.

May the verdure of "the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit" be soon thrown over Zion like a mantle, is our hope; but the electric current which carries communication over a long-distance wire is more reliable and effectual when not "grounded" anywhere on the line by defective construction. Come, ye "linemen" of the most noble company that ever held a charter, call in your helpers and let us see that all the wires are up and every appliance intact. And say, brother! You there! How is your part of the line?

THE TWO JOSEPH SMITHS.

JOSEPH. SMITH, MONOGAMIST.

JOSEPH F. SMITH, POLYGAMIST.

President of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints.

President, leader, and political boss of the Mormon Church in Utah.

On the 27th of June, 1844, in the little country town of Carthage, in the state of Illinois, there occurred a tragedy, when Joseph and Hyrum Smith were shot to death by a mob. They were the leaders of a religious movement against which many people were bitterly prejudiced. They had been arraigned before the courts numerous times to make answer to the various charges, and were always acquitted as not guilty of any immoral conduct. They were, when shot, awaiting time of trial, being confined in jail, and after so many unsuccessful attempts to incriminate them, the mob resolved to take the situation in their own hands. They easily overpowered the few soldiers assigned to guard the prisoners. They said, "The law will not touch those men, but powder and shot will," and it did.

The men are dead and gone from this earth; they died for the religion which they founded, which, to the astonishment of many, has survived and prospered to no insignificant extent. It has formed an interesting chapter in American history, and of late has become a force in politics. It is a very remarkable thing, that while Joseph and Hyrum Smith were united as to what should constitute the moral and spiritual faith of the Church of Latter Day Saints, that their sons should be so strenuously in opposition to each other.

There are two separate churches of Latter Day Saints. The church of Utah, popularly known as the Mormon church, has for its leader and chief spiritual director, Joseph Fielding Smith, the son of Hyrum Smith. The Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, has for its leader and president, Joseph Smith, son of Joseph Smith, who was the putative founder of the church. Because of the similarity of their names, these two men, so unlike in character, have often through misunderstanding been made to appear as one person. Joseph F. Smith of Utah is quite a different character from his cousin, Joseph Smith, who resides at Independence, Missouri. The moral sense of this whole nation was appalled and shocked by the bold and brazen attitude of Joseph F. Smith in his testimony pertaining to the Smoot case, before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Here he boldly acknowledged himself as the husband of five living wives and the father of forty-two children, one having since been born to him. The textbooks of the church over which he presides emphatically teach the doctrine of polygamy and they who reject that idea of life are threatened with damnation. Mr. Joseph F. Smith is not only a polygamist—he is a dictator in the affairs of his subjects. He is a sort of political boss. He is looked upon as a mouthpiece of Deity to originate and declare the policies of the church, which are expected to be implicitly obeyed. The loyalty of the Mormon people to this leader amounts to unquestioned obedience. He has thus far escaped any effective prosecution for his licentious practices, hiding behind the refuge of the peculiar laws of the state of Utah. He says the Congress of the United States has no business with his conduct, and that he is amenable to the laws of his State and they are so construed that he is permitted, as also many other leaders of his church, to practice openly this doctrine of plurality of wives.

President Joseph Smith of the Reorganized Church is a man who, by the fruits of his useful, active, and well-spent life, bears evidence of his unswerving loyalty to principles which represent Christian manhood in the highest degree, and his citizenship and regard for the laws of God and the state have unquestionably partaken of that righteousness which exalteth a nation. He has ever stood strenuously in opposition to the crime of polygamy. He contends that that feature of Mormonism originated with Brigham Young, and not with his father as is alleged by some. He has for the past forty-seven years stood ready to challenge any evidence which would prove that his father was a polygamist, either in theory or practice. He has even gone among the Mormons in Utah and successfully dared them to contest. He reveals his principles regarding this phase of the matter where he has said: "The chief contention of the sons of the Prophet Joseph Smith, however, is not that their father was not a polygamist, but is, that whether he was or was not, the dogma and practice are contrary to scripture, ancient or modern, and are wrong, being contrary to the laws of both God and the United States."

Unlike his contemporary in Utah, President Smith exercises no unworthy influence over the people of the church which recognizes him as president. He is not a political boss. His interest in politics is limited to that which is taken by any good citizen. As a leader in the church, he asks no person to follow him, only as he follows Christ.

They make him worthy of the respect which is everywhere accorded him by all who know him. They make him worthy to be recognized among his own people as the "Grand Old Man," for whom all have love and veneration.—W. E. LaRue, in Human Life, June, 1907.

THE GREAT SCHOOL AT TUSKEGEE.

In spite of the fact that the word Tuskegee has appeared in print frequently during the past fifteen years, many people who see it do not know its full import, and often ask, "Just what is Tuskegee, and where is it?"

Tuskegee is the shire town of Macon County, Alabama. It is about forty miles southeast of Montgomery, the capital of Alabama, and one hundred and forty miles from Atlanta. It is one of the oldest towns in the State.

When the word Tuskegee is seen in print now, it generally refers to the great negro school there, established and built up by Booker Washington. This school is remarkable for many things, but three of the most important are that it is the greatest school wholly for colored people in the country, that its teachers are, like the pupils, all negroes, and that over thirty practical trades are taught the students there by actual work. The students at Tuskegee now number over twelve hundred every year, and there are between eighty and ninety teachers.

Mr. Washington was born a slave in Virginia, and struggled along until he worked his way to Hampton, and got an education there. While he was at Hampton he resolved that as soon as he was fitted to do so he would go into some place in the North where the negroes seemed to be particularly ignorant, and devote his whole life to giving them the same kind of help that had been given him at Hampton. In 1881 the legislature of the state of Alabama appropriated money to establish a normal school for colored teachers, and Mr. Washington was selected principal. He began his school there on the Fourth of July, 1881, by gathering thirty untaught negro men and women into an old shanty.

The new school had not been in progress long before the teacher made up his mind that his pupils needed to learn to work and how to take care of their bodies quite as much as they needed to learn from books. He felt that he needed to have an influence over them for a longer time than just during the hours of the school-day. He found that he could buy a plantation of a hundred acres of land and a few old buildings a mile from Tuskegee. He borrowed the money from a friend at Hampton, bought the place, and moved his school out there. So many new scholars began to want to come to the school that more buildings were needed.

There was a good clay-pit on the place, so Mr. Washington set some of the young men to making bricks, and when the bricks were ready, to building a house with them. Other young men worked on the land, raising corn for food, and cotton to be sold to buy things that could not be raised. A man in Massachusetts gave money to buy a horse, and a man in Tuskegee gave an outfit of tools for the brick-yard. This was the beginning.

That has been one remarkable thing about this school. From the first the white people of the South have recognized the good work that it was doing in teaching the colored people how to do skilled, useful labor, and have helped it along. A small blacksmith shop was started, and then a wheelwright shop. The young women students did the housework, laundry work, and mending for all the school, and learned cooking and sewing. Friends in the North, who heard Mr. Washington tell of the plans of the school, gave more money, and this was made to go a long way. Nothing was bought which the students could make themselves. Even now they make all their own furniture, mattresses, and other furnishings.

From that beginning Tuskegee Institute has grown until now it owns twenty-five hundred acres of land, five hundred of which the students cultivate. It teaches such trades to the men, in addition to those mentioned, as carpentry, machine-shop work, printing, shoe-making, tailoring, tin-smithing, electrical engineering and sawmill work. Farming in all its branches is thoroughly taught. The young women learn, in addition to the trades spoken of, mattress-making, dress-making, and millinery, nursing, poultry-raising, dairy work, bee-keeping, the care of fruit trees and bushes, flower gardens, and lawns.

The courses of study in these trades are just as carefully planned out and followed as are those in the academic classes. We copy from the school catalogue the first term of the second year in blacksmithing: "Horse-shoeing. The condition of a shoeing floor. How to make a shoer's fire. The names and uses of shoeing tools. What and how to make a mold, also how to strike on a shoe. The names and sizes of shoes and nails, also the different kinds of shoes. How to file a shoe, also how to pull off a shoe, trim a foot, and clinch a shoe. The different parts of a foot, and how to drive a nail. The different kinds of shoes that are used for horses with different ways of traveling. Special lessons in fitting to different shaped feet."

Compositions are written on these subjects monthly. The blacksmith's shop now consists of a building thirty-six by sixty-one feet, which contains nine forges and all necessary tools. It is full of students all the time, and when a man graduates he is able to set up a shop for himself.

We copy the first year's course of study in dress-making. Before the girls can take this up they have to spend two years in the plain sewing-room, or show an ability to do the work done there—"choice of materials, drafting and cutting foundation and outline skirts from measurement—making, hanging, draping and trimming the skirt. Talks on form, line, and proportion in relation to draping and trimming. Drafting, cutting, and fitting plain basques, and the general finish of these garments." There are two more years' study in dressmaking.

These shops and classes turn out men and women who know their trades, and people all over the South are beginning to appreciate this. The school can not supply half the demand made upon it for skilled artisans. People from hundreds of miles away write to know if the institution can not furnish a good carpenter or blacksmith, or nurse or cook, and almost invariably the pay offered is good.

This industrial work is carried on in connection with the regular academic and moral and religious training of any large school. There is an undenominational Bible-school, in which each year about seventy-five negro men and women, often ministers themselves, are trained to become more efficient church and Sunday-school workers. The academic department gives a thoroughly good English education, and has turned out a great many teachers who are doing good work all over the country. A great many people, both men and women, have been inspired with Mr. Washington's spirit and a desire to work for their race. They, too, have devoted themselves to found other schools where the Tuskegee principles can also be taught. Such schools are the one at Snow Hill, Alabama, with over three hundred; at Mount Meigs, Alabama, with two hundred; at Denmark, South Carolina, with three hundred; at Eatonville, Florida, with over a hundred; and in those many places where just as good work is carried on upon a smaller scale.

The expense at Tuskegee is only about eight dollars a month for a furnished room, fuel, lights, laundry, and board. No charge is made for tuition, because very few could pay it. The money for the support of the schools which this would represent, Mr. Washington secures from friends of the school and education who are willing to help him in his work. For years he endeavored to secure a permanent endowment fund, from the income of which the school could be largely supported, so as to leave him free to devote his time and energy to the management. This desire of his heart is now met by the recent munificent gift of Mr. Carnegie.

Small as is the expense, more than half of the students can not afford to pay it, and so they are allowed to work out their expenses. They work on the land, in the shops, the brickyard, in the laundry, kitchen, offices, everywhere, and are allowed a regular rate of payment according to their ability. This is not paid them in money, but put to their credit. While they are at work in this way they go to school only in the evening. Usually two years' work will give a student enough credit so that he or she can go into the day school classes for the rest of their time at the school. Coming, as most of these young people do, out of homes or from farms where they have had no systematic training in the modern methods of work, the time they spend in this way under skilled instructors is really one of the most valuable parts of their education.

The school now has more than four hundred graduates, and over three thousand under-graduates, almost all of them doing good work throughout the South. There are now forty-four buildings, large and small, on the school ground, and all but three of these have been built by the students themselves as a part of their industrial education.

One of the great features at Tuskegee is the negro conference, which meets there in February of each year. This was begun by Mr. Washington to see if something could not be done to help elevate the older generation of negroes, the men and women who were most of them slaves, and who have had but little chance to get an education. Twelve years ago he invited about seventy-five farmers, mechanics, teachers, and ministers to come to Tuskegee to spend a day discussing their condition and needs. To his surprise four hundred men and women of all classes came in answer to this invitation, and the number has kept increasing ever since. Most of these people come from Alabama, but there are delegates now from every Southern State, and the effect of these meetings is felt widely. Two hundred and fifty similar local conferences have been formed, which meet during the year and report here. The people who come are mostly hard-working farmers and their wives. They discuss very practical matters: "How to get homes and keep them." "How to keep out of debt and clear off mortgages." "The need of something better than a one-room hut for a home." "Better schools and teachers and ministers." "Pay your taxes and stay off the streets."—Frank H. Sweet in the Housekeeper.

Are We Thinking?

"The ploughing of the Lord is deep
On sea and on the land.
His furrows cross the mountain steep,
They cross the sea-washed sand.
Wise men and prophets know not how
They do the Master's will,
The kings and nations drag the plow,
His purpose to fulfill."

Deep plowing indeed has the Lord done among the nations, whose kings and rulers without knowing, and with no intent of so doing, have yet wrought his will, to bring to pass his purposes. Prophets have delivered his message not understanding it themselves, and wise men have wrought in faith and patience, not knowing or acknowledging the source of their inspiration.

Many of the purposes of God regarding his people have not been understood by them. But this is not true of all; for some of his purposes have been plainly declared.

Among the last and most impressive words which God commanded his servant Moses to speak to the children of Israel, we find these which plainly reveal his purpose concerning his ancient people. A purpose which he bound himself by a solemn covenant to fulfil. Read them carefully, ye fathers and mothers, for remember and forget it not that while this was the purpose of God, man still had his agency and was given to choose the blessing or the curse. Life and death were set before him. The one would follow obedience—the other would surely come as the result of a broken law, a violated covenant.

Are we thinking of these things? In our last, Bro. Fred M. Smith cited you to the commandments of the Lord to his people in this latter day—this last dispensation of the fullness of times, and now we will quote the words spoken by Moses found in the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy:

"And it shall come to pass, if thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe and do all his commandments which I command thee this day, that the Lord thy God will set thee on high above all nations of the earth: And all these blessings shall come on thee, and overtake thee, if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God. Blessed shalt thou be in the city, and blessed shalt thou be in the field. Blessed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy ground, and the fruit of thy cattle, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep. Blessed shall be thy basket and thy store. Blessed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and blessed shalt thou be when thou goest out. The Lord shall cause thine enemies that rise up against thee to be smitten before thy face: they shall come out against thee one way, and flee before thee seven ways. The Lord shall command the blessing upon thee in thy storehouses, and in all that thou settest thine hand unto: and he shall bless thee in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. The Lord shall establish thee an holy people unto himself, as he hath sworn unto thee, if thou shalt keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, and walk in his ways. And all people of the earth shall see that thou art called by the name of the Lord; and they shall be afraid of thee. And the Lord shall make thee plenteous in goods, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy ground, in the land which the Lord sware unto thy fathers to give thee. The Lord shall open unto thee his good treasure, the heaven to give the rain unto thy land in his season, and to bless all the work of thine hand: and thou shalt lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow. And the Lord shall make thee the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath; if that thou hearken unto the commandments of the Lord thy God which I command thee this day, to observe and to do them."

Is it not well that we think upon these things? Have we a doubt as regards these promises? Then let us continue our reading to the end of the chapter, marking well the nature of the curses which would follow a disregard of these commandments, for if we are, as we should be, students of history, we know that every one of them came upon the Jewish nation—have rested upon the land and the people even to our own day. And why? Was it not because they chose to have it so?

But are we thinking that God has promised: "to cut his work short in righteousness?" Are we thinking that through his Prophet he has said: "The hastening time has come"? And if we really are thinking are we laboring with God to bring to pass his purposes?

Can it once enter into the mind of any of us that God's purposes concerning ancient Israel were better, grander, broader in scope, than his purposes concerning latter-day Israel? It was his purpose to make Israel "the head and not the tail"; and "thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath"; (let us mark the condition) "if that thou hearken unto the commandments of the Lord thy God . . . to observe and do them."

Graceland is the child of the church. Shall we repudiate our own? Is not that to deny the faith and become worse than an infidel? God has approved of our one institution and now is it not up to the church to unite in standing by her? Which will you do, fathers and mothers, send your sons and daughters elsewhere, because foresooth Graceland is still wanting many of the appliances to equip her for her mission which your patronage would help to supply—send them where these may be had, but where they will be purchased at a cost you can ill afford to pay, or, will you not send them where they will be brought under the influence of the church whose doctrines you know are true, because they are the same that Jesus taught—the commandments of the Father, of which the Son said: "I know it is life everlasting"?

Graceland needs the patronage, the fostering care of the church; and we need the influence of Graceland. Education is a power either for good or evil, but united with the glory of God—which is light and truth—it is the mighty power which is to elevate the people of God to that supremacy which from the first God purposed they should have—that they should be above only and never beneath the nations of the earth.

And, thank God, our people are at last awakening to the fact. Only recently we learned of one of our young ministers who had returned to our state university to complete the course he had been pursuing when he was called to his life work. And why? Because he had learned by his own experience that knowledge of many things which he did not possess was necessary to a complete defense of the truth. It has, to our mind, been well said that "every man is not a proper champion for truth, nor fit to take up the gauntlet in her cause. Many from ignorance of this and from an inconsiderate zeal for truth, have too rashly charged the troops of error, and remain as trophies unto the enemies of truth."

The Lord has nowhere made provision for either physical or mental idleness. Paul exhorted Timothy to study to show himself an approved workman, and what minister in our day (after the array of evidence presented by Bro. Fred Smith in our previous installment) can think himself excusable—much less approved of God—if he fails to comply with the commandments calling for mental diligence? Neither do we for one moment think these commandments obligatory or binding only upon the ministry, but that every member of the church should be prepared to defend the truth—the gospel of the Son of God. And it is well for us to remember that in our day the ways in which the truth is attacked are manifold. It is a day of thought freedom, but still as ever:—

"Great truths are dearly bought. The common truth,—
Such as men give and take from day to day,—
Comes in the common walks of easy life,
Blown by the careless wind across our way;
Bought in the market at the current price,
Bred of the smile, the jest, perchance the bowl,
It tells no tales of daring or of worth,
Nor pierces even the surface of the soul.

"Great truths are greatly won, not formed by chance,
Not wafted on the breath of summer dream;
But grasped in the great struggle of the soul,
Hard buffeting with adverse wind and stream.
Not in the general mart 'mid corn and wine;
Not in the merchandise of gold and gems;
Not in the world's gay halls of midnight mirth,
Nor mid the blaze of regal diadems;

"But in the day of conflict, fear, and grief,
When the strong hand of God put forth in might,
Ploughs up the subsoil of the stagnant heart
And brings the imprisoned truth to the light,
Wrung from the troubled spirit in hard hours
Of weakness, solitude, perchance of pain,
Truth springs like harvest, from the well-ploughed field,
And the soul feels it has not wept in vain."

Are we thinking? Are we ready to "buy the truth and sell it not"?

Are we remembering that from the beginning it has been and even unto the end it will be the plan and wisdom of God that all his most precious gifts come to us through the sacrifice of others? Are we ready then and willing to bring our own gift to the altar that our souls may enter into the labor of others and our hearts rejoice with them in the hour of victory? Yes, we want a part in the hour of victory which is surely coming. Let us then be up and doing. Let us remember these strong words of Lowell:—

"Then to side with Truth is noble,
When we share her wretched crust,
Ere her cause bring fame and profit
And 'tis prosperous to be just;
Then it is the brave man chooses,
While the coward stands aside,
Doubting in his abject spirit,
Till his Lord is crucified."

The Lord is plowing. Are we thinking?

Letter Department

SASKATOON, Saskatchewan, Canada, July 12, 1907.

Dear Herald: I landed in Saskatoon with my daughter Pearl and Sr. P. C. Kemmish, of Woodbine, who was visiting her son in this vicinity, on the fourteenth day of June. We were met at the depot by a Bro. Peterson, formerly of Pisgah, Iowa. He kindly took what baggage we had with us to the Western Hotel, where my daughter's husband, M. S. Van Eaton, found us and conveyed us to their comfortable home, seven miles west of Saskatoon. Pearl and I needed no rocking to persuade us to sleep that night, after a ride of nearly twelve hundred miles, being denied a sleeper, owing to the fact that they were fully occupied. In lieu of the sleeper we curled up on the car seats and snatched a few winks as we could, but the seats not being of softest down, did not yield to my old bones as responsively as my bed at home. But then, I had roughed it nearly sixty years on land and sea—mountains and desert plains—in the busy marts and humble villages. Sometimes on an excuse for a bed, or on chairs, sometimes in a haymow, and sometimes on the unyielding floor, and sometimes these were interspersed with comfortable accommodations which were appreciated. Hence I was better prepared to dispense with the comforts of home for a couple of nights than some of fewer years who had never known what it was to give their lives for the gospel's sake, and I came out all right, thanks to the divine power that sustained. I had a little cold which some attributed to change of climate.

Owing to neglect of railroad men, my trunk did not arrive until I had been here three weeks. This neglect hindered me from hunting up the few Saints in this vicinity that are scattered many miles apart, and when my things came, wet weather hindered in getting a team, which caused disappointment to myself and daughter as well as to the Saints who had been led to expect us. However, as the Van Eaton home is on the public road and used by travelers as a stopping-place on their long and tedious journeys from their far-off homesteads to Saskatoon, which may be called the "City of the Plains," I have met several of the Saints, all of whom had heard or read of me, and some who had heard me preach forty years ago; and some of these testified that my efforts had been the means of blessing them, and this fact blessed me, and showed me that all my efforts had not been in vain; and I thank him who called and qualified me for the work. One old brother, illustrating his love for the society of the Saints, told me he lost two cows, had hunted them far and near but could not find them; but he said, "I found two Latter Day Saints, and was satisfied!" Yes, the gospel creates a longing in the hearts of God's children for the society of each other, and no other society can satisfy them, and yet we do not appreciate each other as we should. On the glorious Fourth my son-in-law, Mr. Van Eaton, took us all to what is called the "Minnesota Branch" to celebrate. Most of the people in that vicinity were from the States, but they wisely celebrated under the Union Jack. The branch is about sixteen miles south of the Van Eaton home. Nearly, if not quite, one hundred people came together, every one bringing a plenteous supply of the good things of earth, and we had indeed a rich repast, and plenty to spare. Peace and good-will prevailed. People of different shades of faith were there, and an enjoyable time was spent on the premises of Bro. Ed. Anderson. The only drawback was a strong wind which blew the sand into the improvised tent so that nearly every one had more "sand in their craw" at the close than when they began the repast. Of course the younger, and some of the older element, were attracted by a ball game; but others desired me to address them which I did on the "higher liberty" and how to obtain it. I had the best of attention, and was blessed in my effort.

I remained there until the next Sunday, and by request of President Anderson I preached in the morning to a respectable audience of different faiths. Then we had a very enjoyable feast at the table of the Lord, as the Saints remembered the great sacrifice made for the redemption of the world. Earnest and intelligent prayers and testimonies were delivered, and not a few. It was good to meet on these boundless plains with a people that had learned the value of the gospel. May they be indeed as "a city set upon a hill," reflecting the glorious light of the gospel to all around.

I expect to visit other parts before I return if strength is given. I would like to have been at the Winnipeg reunion which is now being held, but that is five hundred miles away, and my means are too limited, and I am satisfied they have all the needed help. I should have stated that the exercises on Sunday the 7th, Sunday-school was not neglected, and a beneficial session was held, I seated as a pupil in the study of the word.

The poor among the Saints have gathered here for the purpose of acquiring means for another gathering, and God will use them as beacon-lights to thousands who otherwise might never have heard the gospel in this life, and while they seem to have wandered from home, he will make them useful, if they will permit him, in leading many into the kingdom celestial.

In gospel bonds,

CHARLES DERRY.

PLANO, Illinois, July 24, 1907.

Dear Herald: I am associated with Bro. David Smith, and we are holding a series of services in the Saints' neat little chapel.

We expect to occupy in another place, about twelve miles south next week. Go there by request of the citizens, where we are promised a good hearing; also have a schoolhouse waiting for us as soon as we can get to it.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

CHARLES H. BURR.

Dear Herald: Our branch is not making much progress. We have been without a president nearly one year, and no elder in the branch. I fully believe there is just as grand a mission here as can be found any place, if we had a good spiritual-minded elder who could devote most of his time to the work. There are many outsiders interested in the work, and many Saints who could be aroused if patiently labored with. A few of us sisters meet together on Thursday afternoon and hold our little Prayer Union meetings. We have been greatly blessed, and have enjoyed the Spirit of God, and have been made to realize the promises of God are extended to the two or three who meet together in his name.

Again, the Pale Reaper has entered our family circle and in one short month we have been called to lay away two of our loved ones. On May 1 our dear sister Maggie passed peacefully away after over four years of sickness, and on May 30 our dear mother was called away after nine days of intense suffering. And while our hearts are sad and lonely to think we shall never see their smiling faces again in this life, and the dear old home will never be what it was before, we mourn not as those who have no hope. May God help us to live faithful, that we may be worthy to meet our loved ones where there is no more parting, nor more sickness or death.

I realize my weakness, and desire the prayers of the Saints.

A mistake occurred in the notice of mother's death, [Sr. Sena Olson] in HERALD for July 10. The line which reads, "She leaves husband, three sisters," etc., should include also "three daughters."

Your sister in Christ,
CHRISTINA RASSMUSSEN.

NELSONVILLE, Ohio, July 24, 1907.

Editors' Herald: Bro. Reese Jenkins and I began meetings on the streets of Nelsonville last night, with a large hearing and splendid attention; we expect to continue for a week at least.

So far, in our work in this valley, we have found but little interest. But there are numerous points in this Hocking Valley at which an effort to present the gospel has never been made. Some of these we could reach if we had friends with whom we could stay, or means to pay board. Logan, the county-seat of Hocking County, is a point through which the elders have been passing for years, and yet I do not think that there was ever a sermon of this faith preached there.

If the Saints residing in this valley can give us any assistance in reaching new places, we will appreciate it very much.

I may be reached by addressing me at Radcliff, Ohio, care of S. J. Jeffers.

We both expect to attend the reunion at Wellston, August 24.

Finances are such with our families, that the possibility of our continuing long in the field seems a little doubtful. But we will continue as long as we can.

H. E. MOLER.

Dear Herald: This beautiful morning, a desire comes to tell you I am still in the faith. Six years ago in July I embraced this work, and eternal life is just as dear to me now as it was then.

My attention was called to an article in HERALD for July 17: "Is attitude significant in prayer?" While I believe as the writer does, that it is pleasing in the sight of God that we should go to our closets and humble ourselves on bended knee, and plead to the Father, and that we should kneel in our homes and in places of worship, yet I do believe that prayer has been heard and answered at other times, as we are commanded to pray without ceasing, and to keep these temples a fit place for the indwelling of his Holy Spirit. I can recall instances when the cares of home and my surroundings have been of that nature that it seemed impossible to go and kneel; even when working at the washtub, when my body was tired enough to sit down and rest, my heart was drawn out in prayer to my Master, and assurance has come to me that I was still his child, or some bright testimony has come to me of the truth of this work. Also, when I have seen men stand in the pulpit, holding the priesthood, with bowed heads and humble hearts, asking for a blessing upon the congregation, I have seen these same men proclaim the glad tidings of this everlasting gospel, and how often the Spirit has borne witness to my spirit that they were led of Him whom we love and trust!

I believe, as children of the Most High, we should be in such a condition that we are ever ready to call upon his name, whether standing, sitting, or lying down. When Jonah was in the midst of the mighty deep, we do not know his position, but we know his heart was right. And when administering to the sick, our elders stand. When asking a blessing upon our food, we are sitting. So I can not believe it is the outward appearance that we should judge by; for we might do all these things and yet be hypocrites at heart. But let us leave it alone with Him whose right it is to judge.

After reading the lines written by our brother, (for with pleasure I scan the pages of the HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, and Exponent, and try to profit by them,) that night I dreamed that there seemed to be a desire in my heart to pour out my soul in prayer all alone, with none but my blessed Master to hear. I seemed to be in a large building, and in an upper room, and had to go through several rooms to be alone. I finally found myself at the end of the building, and was standing in the door. I do not know what the burden of my prayer was, do not know whether I was asking for a blessing or thanking him for what I had received; but this much I do know: I was filled with the Spirit that can be understood only by those who have prayed in spirit and in truth, and I was permitted to see my body standing in the door while praying. While meditating on this dream the words of the Master came to me, as he entered into Jerusalem, and was instructing his disciples, Mark 11: 25: "And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses." Just as positive a demand for a right condition of the heart when standing in prayer, as when kneeling, which puts my mind at rest upon that subject.

Our little branch feel quite encouraged here since the reunion that was held in June. A number of honest souls were brought into the fold, and others are near. The testimonies that were borne, the instructions given by way of reproof and encouragement, all came to us to study and to profit by in the years to come. New names have been enrolled in the Sunday-school, and we hope in the near future there will be in the Religio. This helps us to press forward, and determine never to cease the conflict till the prize we gain.

Your sister in the gospel ties,

ELEANOR WHITING.

DES MOINES, Iowa, July 30, 1907.

Editors Herald: I remember that time is passing, and promises to several to be heard from through the church papers are neglected. I regret this neglect, but think that better material has occupied the precious space in the columns of our highly prized and ever increasingly valuable paper.

The work moves slowly, as it usually does in large cities, but it is moving, and that in the right direction. The branch is being purified, and cases of long standing are being corrected, and reconciliation had, for which we feel very grateful. There is a disposition on the part of the Saints, as a rule, to renew their diligence; but some have not gathered strength to magnify that disposition. The branch officials are hindered much in their work; but the work they are doing recommends their wisdom.

On the account of heavy expense in repairing the church, there has been but little that could be done in pushing the missionary arm of the work here, but we are now engaged in services with the gospel wagon lately purchased and fitted up. Three street-meetings will be held this week in the evenings. These are held in the residence parts of the city away from the noise and excitement, and are an appeal direct to the people at their home. We are seeking to present the faith of the saint of God, and while doing so correcting the false ideas left by the visitations and distribution of literature by the Brighamites in the name of "Latter Day Saint." The people seem to appreciate the explanations. It is surprising how many there are who do not yet understand that there are two bodies of people claiming to be successors to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and many more who do not understand the origin and faith of the Brighamites, as they differ from the true faith of the church they profess to represent.

We very much appreciate the articles that are permitted to appear from time to time explanatory of the faith as distinguished from the Brighamites.

There appeared a short article in the Daily News for the 28th inst. from the pen of that able editorial writer, Edwin A. Nye, a copy of which I send you under separate wrapper, that speaks for itself, which shows that when men of honor come in contact with the Latter Day Saints they are not afraid to express their conviction of their true worth. Expressions of this character from the pen of so able and prominent a thinker, speaker, and writer adds to our "favor" with the common people, and to our responsibility to live worthy of such an estimation of our worth. This brings to mind an incident that occurred at the time the Senatorial Committee began their investigation in the Reed Smoot case. I had by request of the managing editor, William G. Hale, who is now editor-in-chief of the News, and a very fair-minded man, written an article upon the faith of the Latter Day Saints, and the peculiar differences between us and the Brighamites represented by Reed Smoot, and it was understood that it was to be published on a certain Sunday, but for reasons that the editorial staff thought they could not avoid it did not appear, but in its stead a cartoon by Bushnell appeared, in which appeared a man followed by a train of women of differing ages and families of different sizes, and on the hatband of the man was the name, "Joseph Smith." I called in to see Mr. Hale as to the reasons why the article did not appear, which reasons he gave quite satisfactorily, and the article appeared later on. While there I called his attention to the cartoon, and also spoke to Mr. E. A. Nye, who was editor-in-chief at that time, about it, and asked him to request Mr. Bushnell to put in an "F." between "Joseph" and "Smith" when he wished to represent the conditions in Utah as relating to the President of the Brighamite church. He said, "No one who reads would for a moment think that was the Joseph Smith of Lamoni, Iowa, for everybody that reads ought to know that he is an entirely different kind of a man from that." I told him that a great many who read did not, because of prejudice, sense what they read as had he, and this cartoon would impress upon them more forcibly that there was no difference in the churches, and it would carry the impression that such conditions represented the ideas and character of the father of the Joseph Smith of Lamoni, which would be an equal error to the other. He said nothing further except to express himself satisfied that such should not occur again, and he said, "I will see Mr. Bushnell and see that such does not occur again." It has had its effect.

Within the last four weeks four have been baptized as a result of parental instruction, the work of the Sunday-school, and the private labors of the branch officials and the missionary. We are rejoicing to know that the young are susceptible to God-like impressions that cause them to step out from the world, and even put to shame by reason of their integrity and faith some of those who for years have known the way of righteousness.

Some interest is being taken in the normal class work. A class of about fourteen in the city have begun the study, but most of them have to study without meeting with the class.

The chapel will soon have a new roof on it, and be newly papered, and we hope to be able to newly carpet the floor in the near future, or put a new floor on the present one. This is quite an undertaking, but quite an amount has already been raised, and by not becoming weary in well doing the work will be done, and all will feel the better for the sacrifice made.

I was called to preach the funeral-sermon of Mr. John

Baxter, Sr., of Buxton, Iowa, the father of Sr. Martha Young, at whose home he died. He had never been a member of any church. His father was a member of the old church in Scotland, and held some official position, but like so many others he came to America to be in Zion, and made the journey to the "salt land," became disgusted, and settled in Missouri. This has had its effect upon his posterity. How much those who departed from the faith and introduced doctrines of devils and ascribed them to God will have to answer for! How sad to see so many young men giving their lives to perpetuate an institution that had its existence with a departure from the faith, and are deceived so as to think they are representing the true faith by defending such an institution as to be presided over by a man who is practicing that which makes him a confessed transgressor of both the laws of God and the land, and to-day representing a harem as the correct representation of home! While these young men claim that the church in Utah does not practice polygamy, they are forced to acknowledge, and they seldom do so without being forced to do it—that Joseph F. Smith and several of the leading men are practicing the corrupt results of polygamy, simply because they are in polygamy. Would it be thought justifiable for a man to drink intoxicating liquors, curse and swear, because without knowing it he was brought into such a place as a saloon? Would it be thought justifiable that one should practice sin because in a world of sinners, and in a family of those who were the worst of sinners? The church of Jesus Christ is to represent him whose name it bears, and a church which does not do that is not in fact the church it claims to be. Jesus Christ came into the world to "save his people from their sins," instead of practicing sin because of being previously brought into it by sinful teachings and influences. The church of Jesus Christ makes no compromise with him who is the author of sin by saying, "Because one is brought into family relationship through sinful teachings that makes one a transgressor, therefore they are permitted to remain a transgressor and still be justified in the eyes of God." Nothing would please the adversary of souls better than such a condition as this. There is only one passage of scripture that would apply in such a case, and that is, "He which is filthy, let him be filthy still." But this was applied to the sons of perdition instead of a servant of Christ. And such argument as is being used by the representatives of the Brighamite church to justify Joseph F. Smith and some of his associates in remaining in a filthy condition, such as transgressors only occupy, is only such as is above referred to, as applied to the sons of perdition. We hope and pray that the eyes of their understanding may be opened before it will be necessary for the Righteous Judge to apply the same argument, and say, to them, "He which is filthy, let him be filthy still."

May God bless his people, and give us the true sense of our responsibility, and aid us to work together with him for the redemption of Zion.

Your brother in Christ,

J. F. MINTUN.

SPY HILL, Saskatchewan, Canada, July 21, 1907.

Dear Herald: Perhaps a few lines from here would be all right. Elder A. Dorsett is at present in Winnipeg doing missionary work. R. C. Evans baptized four there, I understand. The people of Spy Hill do not take much pleasure in religion. They prefer dancing, card-playing, and other amusements. But another reason is because there is too much quarreling among the Saints. J. L. Mortimer is working on his farm this summer. It is to be hoped that Bro. Evans will do much good with his trip through the Northwest. Prejudice reigns very high in this country against the Saints. I believe that the most of the opposition comes from the Methodists. They claim the Saints skip all over the Bible, when really they are doing it themselves, when they try to prove infant baptism from it. They prefer to believe lies, though they have already been thrashed out by the law courts about Joseph Smith. The Methodists have raised the salary of their ordained ministers from seven hundred dollars to one thousand dollars, with several other things besides.

Prairie lands are going fast now, and the Canadian Pacific wild land is selling for twenty-five dollars per acre where eight or ten years ago land was selling for three. The Grand Trunk Pacific is laying rails in Manitoba, and it is expected it will be up here in a month. Several farms are up for sale, and some farmers are talking of moving out. The country is settling fast, and ere long it will be all settled. The government has taken the land from the Doukabhors, and has thrown it open for homestead, as they did not put improvements on it. Will close, wishing the HERALD God speed in its fight for truth.

Editors Herald: I hope the Saints will respond to the call for help, and send for as many of the church papers as they can. Am glad the work on HERALD Office is going on fast. I am also glad to know that the building for our sick and afflicted ones will soon begin. Hope the home for the children will not be long behind.

I read the sister's confession, and request for prayers in a late HERALD, and my heart goes out in pity for her. Surely she has repented with a godly sorrow. May we all remember her when we bow before our Father in prayer. She is not the only one who has wandered since embracing the gospel. I have. When I first joined the church I think I did not realize the responsibility that rested upon me as a Saint should. I danced, and engaged in wordly pleasures in many ways. But, like our sister, I have truly repented, and I feel that my Father in heaven has forgiven me. I ask all the Saints to pray for me that the Lord may remove the affliction that is mine. I have throat trouble, and fear I may lose my voice.

Your sister,

PAULINE RUBY.

ADELAIDE, South Australia, June 7, 1907.

Editors Herald: Mission work in this field is much the same as elsewhere, according to accounts appearing in HERALD from time to time. There is much to discourage the missionary in his attempts to get our message before the world. Men and women seem to be so satisfied with their present religious views that they have no desire or inclination to investigate our message.

The hireling ministry also see to it that they keep their flocks fed on sensation of various kinds. Every week there is some kind of amusement, silver coin admission, and for children the baser copper coin, to keep the faithful together, and fill the coffers of the church. All the latest inventions, bioscope, etc., etc., are called into play to satisfy "lovers of pleasure." The Bible truths are given a vacation, while these tawdry, tinsel, eye-pleasing, and ear-tickling things are run at full blast: in fact they are worked overtime. Sensation runs riot, and solid piety is seldom seen.

Recently the writer attended a revival meeting held in this city by a Miss Ada Ward, formerly a popular actress, but now a converted person and self-appointed evangelist. She belongs to no church, but has most of the evangelical (?) churches, such as the Methodist and Salvation (?) Army, at her back. Of course the sensation-loving public flock in crowds to hear, and the parsons who occupy the rostrum with her try to pump up the emotions, reminding one who knows of sailors pumping at a sinking ship. It may yet come that like the prophet of Baal they will cut themselves and shout more loudly to that god who is so far away—gone on a journey.

In the gospel as understood by us there is no sensation of that kind, but simply "spirit and truth," hence the difficulty in attracting this excitement-loving generation.

This is an age of adulteration in manufacture, shoddy material being gotten up almost like the genuine; and the unwary can be exploited with it. But when the real article is presented, they are unable or unwilling to pay the price. It is also an age of adulteration in religion. The good old gospel has been cut up and mixed with the spurious and worthless doctrines of men, and then presented as the real article. Seemingly men have argued in their minds like this: "The masses will not pay the price for the real article; let us give them something they will buy"; and then comes the impious, unlawful, and God-dishonoring practice of suiting their message to the popular demand, instead of being true, and trying to bring the people up to the requirements of the whole law.

God alone knows where this suicidal policy will lead to. The deductions of popular Christianity seem to have been made on this wise: "Upon such subjects as baptism, laying on of hands, and present-day revelation, we can not agree; but upon the fact that Jesus is the Christ, and that belief in him is necessary, we can agree; therefore, the latter is the only essential." Upon the same kind of reasoning Christianity and Mahometanism could unify; viz.: "We can not agree on the fact that Jesus is the Son of God; but we can agree that there is 'one God, none else'; therefore, let us unite upon that one all-important principle, and declare it to be the only necessary truth." And if any ambitious person cared to go one farther, we could accommodate the infidel upon the same parity of reasoning. Why not? For if man is privileged to discard any portion of truth and still receive the same blessing, why not discard all and still receive it?

Despite all these oppositions, there are a few faithful souls who hear and obey the truth, and our work in the city of churches (Adelaide) is in a fair condition. God has heard the cry of his people on behalf of the afflicted ones of the branch, and two cases of really miraculous healing have recently occurred. One a paralyzed arm, and the other, internal tumor, which the doctors wanted to cut out. The Lord said, "Fear not, obey my gospel, and you shall be healed." The young lady obey God, and received the promise to our delight and the doctor's perplexity. From an invalid's chair, she is now in service. From six she has gone to eight stone in weight.

Ever praying and laboring for the spread of the restored gospel, I am,

Faithfully yours,

Erskine Street, Goodwood Park.

J. H. N. JONES.

RAYMONDVILLE, Texas, July 23, 1907.

Dear Herald: It is not that I like to see my thoughts in your pages that I offer these lines, but to do my duty towards others who feed me sometimes. Jesus compared the kingdom of heaven in these days to ten virgins, five wise and five foolish, all slumbering while the bridegroom tarried. Yet five had oil sufficient for their own needs when the cry was heard of the coming of the bridegroom. I hope to be one having oil in my vessel.

At a certain place there was a test of strength between town and country men. One party pulled one way, while an equal number pulled the other way. This gave me an object-lesson in real life. I said, The principle is the same in other affairs, in the church and in the world, individually and collectively; it is a test of strength, physical and spiritual, truth and error armed for the world's conquest, a fight to the finish. In the church are the wise and the unwise, more or less slumbering and sleeping. And he who would get up and partake freely of the fruit of the tree of which Lehi did, must cling to the rod of iron, and need not notice what those in the "great and spacious building" are doing, if he himself is not strong. "In the world ye shall have tribulation; in me ye shall have peace," said the Master. Let us keep our lamps trimmed and burning, with plenty of oil in our vessel.

Some in the church have greatly cheered me, while others have seemed to be putting on the break with the team on an up-grade. The more I see of the church, or world, the more I am convinced that I will never "be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease," but must "fight to win the prize," if not "sail through bloody seas." Notwithstanding all these things, I like best to be among Saints.

When I came here last November seeking a congenial clime for the winter season away from the cold storms of the north, I trusted the Master it would benefit me physically, and also give me the opportunity to do some gospel work as well. The physical benefit is fully as much as I anticipated. As to the labor in the vineyard of the Lord, I aim to do what my hands find to do, and ask wisdom of Him who gives to "all men liberally." There is a union Sunday-school here which I attend. Was honored by being chosen assistant superintendent. I get a chance to inject some thoughts on the order of the kingdom, sometimes, but have noticed the superintendent guards against this. He is a Baptist, and, should judge, a "hardshell." Not knowing, or wanting to know the doctrines of the Latter Day Saints, he knows little about where I may move in the king-row. Sometimes some of the Bible-readers heartily indorse our sentiments, without knowing it as unorthodox. Then I say, "That is sound scripture, but not orthodox." "Can't help it," they say. As a sample: One Sunday, the Methodist Minister was present and the Superintendent (then was a Methodist) asked the minister, "What is God?" Said he, "God is a Spirit, without body, parts and passions." There was a smile on several faces mine among them, for I had told them of the orthodox god not being able to hear, feel, taste, see, or smell. However, the superintendent repudiated that orthodoxy that far at least, and came squarely out in favor of the God of Israel. Several little tilts along the skirmish line have occurred, and of late I notice, and others have noticed too, that the superintendent and the Methodist and Baptist members keep their peace when scripture versus orthodoxy is offered.

I had Three Bibles Compared in the bank-building lately as the cashier and I had a talk in Sunday-school over a question of popular opinion, so I thought an opportune time and the matter of the best I know at hand for my purposes. A Baptist doctor named Whatley happened to come in and as he listened to the reading and talk wanted to see the booklet. "Well, I believe just as he [Smith] does," said Whatley. "Bring me one of these Bibles Compared." Yes, sir, I said, gladly.

The story in Autumn Leaves, "An instrument in his hands," is a most excellent article for people to read. Those who have read it say it is very convincing.

Well, I have given a little of my experiences among the people since coming to Southern Texas. To be willing and able as a worker in the great harvest-field is the best we can aspire to; and to have our words and "conduct as becometh Saints," so we may be "instruments in his hands," vessels of honor, "sanctified and fit for the Master's use," should ever be uppermost in our thoughts. It is written that in due time we shall reap, if we faint not. I would rather gather just one good full-weight sheaf, than hundreds of mildewed, rusted, or shriveled. To be known as honest, kind, and peaceable as a citizen, is a duty, and ought to be our pleasure "as becometh saints."

I want to test this climate a year, and if the rest of the summer is such as has been, I believe by the Master's blessing Dixie will be at least my winter resort. One can perspire here freely and easily. One who can not sleep here at night is not sleepy. A salty breeze from the Gulf fans us most of the time, day and night.

Yours for Zion's weal,
CHARLES ALBERTSON.

Love to God and Man.

Editors Herald: Being enthused by reading the letter of Elder G. W. Leggott, of the English Mission, I, too, thought proper to write a few lines for the HERALD. Of late while at Liberty Home, in Lamoni, I have had ample opportunity to contemplate the love of God to many, and how that we, his children, should love him and each other. I believe I love God and his people better than ever before. Since I have been at Lamoni, his love to me has been manifested as never before. By day and by night I rejoice in the Lord. I want to do his bidding continually. Praise his holy name! I do not want to forget all his benefits to me; but I wish to do his will always.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Sena Ribbel, Stokes Bay, —: "We have Elder J. E. Thompson here. He is a good speaker, and is kept busy in several places. We all like him very much. We have a nice Sunday-school. I could not get along without the Ensign. I love to read the letters from all the brothers and sisters. I know this work is true. I sometimes get discouraged, but God often helps me in my weakness."

Sr. E. J. Davidson, Robinson, Utah: "I have a few specimens I would like to send to the HERALD, but am afraid they would cost too much to send. I see by the HERALD that Elder Knisley was at Provo. If he would come right on south to Mammoth, I would be very glad to see him. We live the fourth house from the lumber company's office. No Josephites here that I know of. Bro. Parsons struck the keynote on 'Attitude in prayer.' My sentiments exactly."

POLLARD, ALABAMA.

In response to a call for preaching, I came to a place near Pollard, held meetings, and as a result baptized thirteen. We also organized a Sunday-school, and temporarily organized a branch with a priest and teacher who had previously held office in another district; also a clerk. There will be about forty or fifty members in this branch to begin with.

A Record Year in Timber Output.

The production of lumber, lath, and shingles in the United States in 1906 was the largest ever recorded. A census bulletin recently issued gives thirty-seven and one half billion feet as the actual cut of the twenty-one thousand mills which made reports. This is seven billion feet more than the cut reported in 1905.

These figures at first seem to point to a very alarming conclusion—that the country had in the last year cut more than twenty three per cent more lumber than in 1905, in the face of the fast waning supply. The difference is, however, chiefly due to the fact that twenty-one thousand concerns have reported their cuts as against less than twelve thousand a year ago. The gain is the result of responses from the smaller mills, made because the rank and file of the lumbermen now appreciate that these returns are important to the trade, and that their value depends upon everybody helping to make them as complete as possible.

If the returns were complete they would probably show a cut of forty billion feet for lumber alone. The cut of lumber forms perhaps forty per cent of the total timber consumption for all purposes. The figures are alarming enough, taken in connection with our available supply of wood. The total amount of merchantable timber in the United States is believed to be less than two thousand billion feet. If the demand could be kept stationary, and no timber were burned up by forest fires, we should have twenty years from now only what our forests would have grown in the interval.

Three fourths of the population of the country is east of the Mississippi, but more than half of the timber supply is west of it. The West has in its forests material to last it for nearly fifty years if its per capita consumption is no greater than that of the country at large and if it can hold itself down to the same annual total. This, however, takes no account of the demands which a developing country makes. But the East has not enough saw timber of its own to last fifteen years. In point of fact the East is already drawing so heavily upon the Northwest for lumber that the railroads have trouble to handle the traffic. The position which Douglas fir holds illustrates the West's rapid progress toward becoming the principal source of supply of saw timber, and the falling off in the production of Eastern States which formerly held first place. Douglas fir now ranks second only to yellow pine in total cut, and yields about one half as much lumber. Never before has it outranked white pine, which for many years stood first, and later second. Just as white pine had to give way to southern yellow pine, this in its turn will be superseded by Douglas fir, which is also known as red fir and Oregon pine. It is found nowhere east of the Rocky Mountains, and by far the greatest quantity of it is in Oregon and Washington.

The passing of the white pine of the Lake States is emphasized by the statistics gathered by the census, which in 1870, 1880, and 1890 showed Michigan the leading State in total production of lumber. In the census of 1900 Wisconsin had passed to first place, with Michigan second and Minnesota third. This relative position was not changed until 1904, when Washington appeared at the top of the column and Louisiana was third, with Wisconsin second and Minnesota and Michigan fourth and fifth. Louisiana now takes second place, while Wisconsin goes down from second to third and Minnesota from fourth to seventh. Mississippi and Arkansas have moved up to fifth and sixth places, while Michigan goes to fourth.

New York, in 1850, led all the States in the production of lumber. Pennsylvania rose to first place ten years later, and New York dropped to second. In the period following the Civil War the rapid extension of railroads brought into the market the great white-pine forests of the Lake States, and the chief source of supply moved thither. Michigan first, then Wisconsin, went to the front. When Washington supplanted the latter the leadership had crossed the continent. In fifty years it passed from an Atlantic to a Pacific Coast State.

The holding of first rank in production by a State does not locate the country's chief source of supply. Washington now stands first among the States, yet the South is supplying more lumber than the West. But the magnificent yellow-pine forests of the South are being rapidly cut and marketed, just as was done with the white-pine forests of Michigan and Minnesota during the thirty years following 1870. But the Pacific coast will soon be the chief source of supply.

The policy of the Government in creating National Forests in the West, taken in connection with the favorable climatic and topographical conditions for the growth of trees, insures a future supply which will be greatly to the West's advantage. When the inevitable time of timber shortage arrives, the cost of transportation in the long haul across the continent will aid the West in supplying its own needs first. The National Forests must be first of all for the supply of western needs. The East had originally the bulk of the country's forests. It has largely wasted them. The West has now a considerable provision for the future. The presence of the National Forests will insure for all time a permanent supply of material for wood-using industries in the West, although the actual holdings of the Federal Government in themselves are by no means sufficient to furnish all the timber which will be needed. They will also have an influence in encouraging private holdings of timberlands to take care of them in a way that will keep them in a productive state. The question what to do for timber that can not be had in needed quantities is likely to become acute in the East.

For several weeks past the Chautauqua season has been at full tide. The summer Chautauqua meeting is a combination of camp-meeting, political rally, concert, and popular lecture course, with moving picture and chalk-talk attachments. It is the cheapest, cleanest, and most wholesome purveyor of instruction and amusement now before the public and within the reach of small villages or rural districts. It is so far above the ordinary street fair or county fair with their sideshows and fakirs that it really ought not to be mentioned in the same day with them.

On the Chautauqua platform appear political workers of every school and religious workers of every denomination—Latter Day Saints excepted. And even Latter Day Saints are surprised to hear some of their most distinctive doctrines taught therefrom. Some of the most popular Chautauqua lecturers have borrowed our thunder and with it win applause and a cash consideration.

The Chautauqua is a legitimate combine whose commodity is talent—oratorical, musical, or otherwise. There one may purchase gray matter vocalized at the lowest possible rates, much as the Standard Oil Company used to boast that they would put a barrel of oil in your home cheaper than you could hire a man to make a cask and take it to the creek and fill it with creek water. For fifty cents Governor Hoch is brought all the way from Kansas to tell you all about his struggle with the before mentioned Standard Oil Company. For another fifty cents the great Reverend Hillis leaves the sacred walls of Plymouth Church and crosses half a continent to talk to you on religious topics. Thus for a dollar you effect a conjunction of the wise men of the East with the valiant men of the West.

The writer spent a day recently at the Mt. Ayr (Iowa) Chautauqua, and was again impressed with some features of these summer gatherings. This gathering was during the busy season and in a town that scarcely could be called a city, yet dense crowds greeted the speakers. Evidently the people were there to learn because they listened intently, despite the intense heat of an August day, to lectures or sermons that overran the hour limit; in fact after the

"The impression seemed to gain ground soon after the organization of the Latter Day Saint Church that it had come to destroy the Bible, Christianity, and everything good. Yet the aim of the restoration was the very reverse of that, as is shown by a revelation given to Joseph Smith as early as July, 1828, wherein God says of the restored gospel, 'Behold, I do not bring it to destroy that which they have received, but to build it up.'"

Reverend Mr. Hillis had talked for an hour and ten minutes the crowd shouted for him to go on. This interest is typical of the Chautauqua gatherings. To speak to such a sympathetic and interested audience must be an inspiration; yet of course it is no test of the speaker's power, that would be better tested before a hostile audience, such for instance as faces the Latter Day Saint elder at times. Aside from the intellectual attraction and the pleasure of being out-of-doors there was nothing to hold the crowd, no noisy, fakirs, no questionable sideshows, no "nigger babies" to throw at, such as are almost typical of fairs and similar gatherings. The Chautauqua is one of the most favorable signs of the times.

On this particular occasion Reverend George L. McNutt was the speaker in the morning. Mr. McNutt is the man who some years ago resigned from a popular pulpit and went to work on the wages of an unskilled laborer in the gas regions of Indiana in order to study the problems of labor. He is now telling of his experiences from the lecture platform, and incidentally he is making more money than he lost by his venture. We fancy that we detect a vitiation of his work during the past few years as a result of that very thing. No messenger can make merchandise of his message and escape the results.

We listened attentively to Mr. McNutt, as we have done on other occasions when we have heard him, because he has studied social and economic evils at first hand, but we failed to discover that he had any remedy not suggested in the gospel. In conversation with him during the afternoon we endeavored to learn if he had any definite remedy to offer, but failed to discover that he had. We then presented the gospel idea of equality and the means by which it is to obtain as found in section 101 and elsewhere in the book of Doctrine and Covenants. This seemed to meet his approval, and he declared that it was the only way in which men could ever come to say, "Our Father," in repeating the Lord's prayer.

Evidently the Lord also has been among the various classes of men and knows their needs. We do not think at all that when he said, "It must needs be done in mine own way," that his way would prove visionary and impracticable.

Reverend Newell Dwight Hillis spoke in the afternoon. Mr. Hillis states that after he had carefully selected his father and mother he looked around to see where he should be born and he could find no place that was better than Iowa. He is a pastor of the Plymouth Church of Brooklyn and seems to fill satisfactorily the pulpit formerly occupied by Henry Ward Beecher and other noted men. He is perhaps the best known pastor in the United States at the present time.

One naturally falls to studying such men to discover if possible the secret of their power over men, and at times he is baffled. Mr. Hillis, for instance, has neither the voice, the features, nor the manner of an orator. He tacks one thought onto another before the first is fully formulated and telescopes one flight of words into another in a most confusing way. He speaks in a pompous manner at times and then as he approaches a climax trails off with a rising inflection into no effect at all. Yet he holds an audience, and his personal magnetism is of the character that draws three steady streams of revenue into his pocket—from his pulpit salary, from the lecture bureau, and from royalties on his numerous books. Such conditions must be some fortification to one in preparing a lecture on "The good new times."

A strong body and vigorous mind have enabled him to endure a great deal of study and to acquire and retain a broad and general store of information, which perhaps is one secret of his success. Like most popular American lecturers he mixes a good deal that is humorous, or nearly so, through all his discourse.

Fortune favored us with a half hour's conversation with Mr. Hillis, and we improved the opportunity to explain to him more fully our faith and history as a people. It is ever to our advantage to have our position understood by the men who mold public thought; yet alas, "great" men are not always liberal, and we are reminded that Mr. Hillis is the man who refused to permit a representative Christian Scientist to lecture in Plymouth Church, even after the trustees had granted permission.

On the same principle that we are instructed to read all good books, it is profitable to improve other opportunities to learn, to weigh and compare ideas, and to study individuals.

Probably the Chautauqua will run its course and enter upon a decline as other popular institutions have done. Its greatest danger now is a tendency toward sensationalism and toward commercialism; yet while it lasts it will prove a profitable mental stimulant to those who attend.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

WANTED; SERMONS!

The reunion season is now in full blast. Why can not some of the stenographers who attend these reunions report some of these sermons for the HERALD or Ensign? We often hear the expression, "I want to do all I can to help in this work." Here is a chance for the individual who understands stenography to help. He can multiply the elder's congregation many times and send that excellent discourse to thousands of people who can not be there to hear it at first hand. Who will respond?

OUR NEW DEPARTMENT.

With this number we begin the publication of a series of autobiographies. We can but feel that these "Leaves from life" will be of great interest and benefit to those who read them. The one in this present issue tells a plain, straightforward story of struggle and achievement. It is an incentive. The words ring true, "I have never asked the Lord for eloquence. The burden of my prayer has ever been for power to tell the gospel story in plainness."

CORRECTIONS.

There are errors in my article, "A scattering shot." On page 689, first column, last line but one, the word "clauses" should be "classes." Page 690, first column, one third down page, the word "goal" should be "idol." Same page, second column, the sixth line from the bottom, the word "bonds" should be "hands." Page 691, first column, half way down page, the word "Lord" should be "land."

NOTICE.

The Board of Publication is planning to install a linotype machine in the Ensign Office at Independence, Missouri, and would be pleased to hear from any of the Saints who are capable of operating a machine. The increased work of the church makes such a move desirable.

A man is desired to take charge of the power, lighting and heating plant of the new HERALD Office, and any of the Saints who are qualified to take charge of a first-class plant will confer a favor by addressing the management.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

The Brooklyn Daily Eagle, August 5, contains an account of the laying of the corner-stone of our new church in Brooklyn. Bishop Zimermann and Pastor George Potts officiated.

The elements seem determined to test the character of our work. During a severe electrical storm last Wednesday night, lightning struck the north-west corner of the HERALD Office building. A few bricks were displaced but no serious damage was done.

Reunions are too numerous to mention specifically or in detail. Yet the one up on the frontier at Weyburn, Saskatchewan, Canada, seems to be worthy of notice. The Weyburn Herald says of it: "The above-named religious body [Latter Day Saints] met in convention at the Weyburn Skating Rink on Friday of last week, with President R. C. Evans and Elder J. L. Mortimer in charge. A large number of Saints from all parts of Saskatchewan were present and the meetings were one and all well attended by the general public. President Evans, being the principal speaker, was well received. . . . In fact many were found to greet him with a hearty hand-shake, and not a few remarked, "That's the best gospel we ever heard from the sacred stand."

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

The Holiness people, or "holy jumpers," as they are styled, of Waukesha, Wisconsin, have clashed with the citizens of that place. The Burning Bush is published in Waukesha and the church has a strong following there. Some time ago seventeen of the brethren were arrested while holding street-services, shouting, jumping, etc., and were cast into jail. According to reports while confined in jail inhuman methods were resorted to to silence their peculiar religious demonstrations. The hose was turned on them and they were left all night cold and drenched and without bedding. Later they were held in solitary confinement on a diet of bread and water, resulting in considerable sickness. Ill feeling was further intensified during the past week by the alleged kidnaping of a Sac City (Iowa) girl who was taken to the church "house of refuge" in Waukesha contrary to her mother's wishes.irate citizens threaten to drive the church from the community, and mob violence is feared.

Archbishop Messmer, of the Milwaukee arch-dioese, under date of August 2 issued a handbook of instructions to his parishioners. Some of his rules we quote. It is interesting to note that solos are not classed as sacred music.

"Catholic weddings and Catholic churches are not the place for a display of female forms and freaks of fashion.

"It is better to elect a straight outspoken Protestant with good Christian principles than a Catholic with less religion and less principle.

"No Catholic may be married after five o'clock in the evening in winter or six o'clock in summer.

"Priests are commanded not to arrange balls and dances for pious purposes.

"Intoxicating liquors are barred from picnics and fairs.

"Lectures on profane subjects, organ recitals, sacred concerts, stereoptican exhibitions, and entertainments of similar character are strictly prohibited in churches.

"Solos and duets are forbidden at Catholic marriages; only sacred music may be used."

The Straight Road

THE RESURRECTION, ITS TIMES AND DEGREES.

ELDER JOSEPH ARBER.

Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.—John 5: 28, 29.

The doctrine of the resurrection is an all-important one, and one upon which there has been much controversy.

There are, I believe, three general resurrections spoken of in holy writ. One of these is past, and the other two are still in the future.

The first general resurrection took place in connection with the resurrection of Jesus Christ. This included many saints, for it is recorded: "And the graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city and appeared unto many."—Matthew 27: 52-53.

The second will take place in a comparatively few years from the present time, and will be immediately succeeded by the coming of Jesus Christ in power and great glory with all his saints and angels. (See 1 Thessalonians 4: 14-18.) This resurrection, I believe, will include the former and latter-day saints—all those who have received the gospel since the former resurrection.

The third and last resurrection will take place more than a thousand years afterwards, (see Revelation 20: 4-6,) and will embrace all the human family not included in the former resurrections.

After man is raised from the dead he will be judged according to his works, and will receive the reward, and be consigned to the sphere exactly corresponding to his former deeds and the preparations or qualifications which he possesses. But in the resurrection which now approaches, and in connection with the glorious coming of Jesus Christ, the earth will undergo a change in its physical features, climate, soil, productions, and in its political, moral, and spiritual government. Then as the poet expresses it:

"The grave, and death, and hell no more retain Their lawful captives. Earth yields its slain.
The raging ocean, from its lowly bed,
At Michael's call delivers up its dead.
Then comes the judgment, and the final doom.
Of man—his destiny beyond the tomb."

The mountains then will be leveled, the valleys exalted, its swamps and sickly places will be drained and become healthy, while its burning deserts and its frigid polar regions will be redeemed and become temperate and fruitful. Kingcraft and priestcraft, tyranny, oppression, and ignorance will pass away; war will cease, and the rule of sin and sorrow, and death itself will give place to the reign of peace and truth and righteousness. For this reason, and to fulfill certain promises made to the fathers, the former and latter-day saints included in the two resurrections, and all those translated, will receive an inheritance on the earth, and will build upon and improve the same for a thousand years.

The earth and man thus restored and exalted will not yet be perfect in the celestial sense of the word, but will be considered, in the light of eternity, as occupying an intermediate and still progressive position amid the varieties of nature. The flesh, bones, sinews, and all the organs, all the particles of the celestial body, must be quickened, filled, and surrounded with that divine and holy element which is purer, more intelligent, more refined and active, fuller of life and light than any other substance in the universe. Every organ must be restored and adapted to its natural and perfect use in the celestial body.

"The Greek philosopher's immortal mind,
Again with flesh and bone and nerve combined;
Immortal brain and heart immortal whole,
Will make, as at the first, a living soul."

The final state of man, though varying in almost infinite gradations and rewards, adapted to his qualifications and deserts, and meted out in the scale of exact justice and mercy, may be conceived or expressed under three grand heads, or principal spheres, viz:

First, the telestial, or least heaven, typified by the stars of the firmament.

Secondly, the terrestrial, or intermediate heaven, typified by the moon.

Thirdly, the celestial, or third heaven, of which the sun of the firmament is typical.

The qualifications which fit and prepare intelligences for these different spheres or rewards, are an all-important consideration, and well worthy of the sincere attention of all people. These several degrees, and their comparative happiness, and what characters are candidates for each degree, are explained in a most concise, clear, and beautiful manner in one of the visions that the martyred Prophet was permitted to see, and those who wish further light upon this subject are advised to give a careful study to that vision, an account of which is found in section seventy-six of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

I. AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER FREDERICK G. PITT.

ELDER F. G. PITT.

I have never asked the Lord for eloquence. The burden of my prayer has ever been for power to tell the gospel story in plainness.

I was born December 3, 1848, in the city of Montreal, Canada. My parents, William N. and Martha Gillings Pitt, were born in England. They had ten children, seven daughters and three sons. I was their third son; the other two died in childhood.

My parents moved to Canada from England, June, 1847, and from there to Brooklyn, New York, May, 1849. Father died in 1854, leaving mother with six children, I being the eldest of four under six years of age. In a short time we were reduced to extreme poverty. Only those who have lived in a large city in that condition can realize what this means.

My childhood days were by no means happy, the details of which are too sad to be recorded here. Suffice it to say that the enemy of souls seemed determined to destroy my life, and he nearly succeeded on several occasions; but on each occasion I was delivered, sometimes in a most marvelous manner.

I was relieved from this terrible condition in my tenth year, when I was sent to my grandfather's, near Stroudsburg, Pennsylvania. From here I was sent to live with a German family, to work for my board; but remained there only a few weeks. Soon after this I was sent to live with an English family, by the name of Feltham, near Canadensis, Pennsylvania. They were good to me and I lived with them two years, when they moved to New York City, and I was sent to live with a Quaker family. This was thought to be an ideal home. The woman appeared to be a very devout Christian, but in her own home her actions were anything but Christ-like. Here I suffered severe privations. I endured it for two years, then left, finding a home with my uncle, Phillip Rockerfellar, where I remained till I was fifteen years of age.

At this time the daily papers were filled with war news, and I got the war fever. I took advantage of the first opportunity to enlist. This opportunity presented itself soon after my fifteenth birthday, while on a visit to my sister's in Brooklyn. When I presented myself at the recruiting office I was informed that I would not be accepted unless I said I was nineteen years of age, so I told them to put my age down whatever they desired. Being large in stature, I passed.

It so happened that I was assigned to a regiment, the One Hundred Fifty-eighth New York, said to be one of the toughest that left New York City. The company in which I was placed was partly made up of men who were given the choice of enlisting or of going to prison for various crimes. Here I was subjected to another experience on the dark side of life. I saw vice and crime in all its hideousness. This had the effect to cause me to summon all my powers of self-control to resist the temptations to which I was almost constantly subjected. I avoided card-playing, gambling, strong drink, and other vices indulged in by many of my comrades, and though I suffered many privations, and engaged in several battles, and was hit twice by bullets from the enemy, I escaped being wounded, and came home after the close of the war strong and well; in much better physical condition than when I entered the army. I enlisted December 31, 1863, and received an honorable discharge August 23, 1865.

I had managed to save a part of the money I had received in the army. This I now spent in an effort to obtain a better education, for up to this time it had been sadly neglected. The following spring I accepted a situation for three years to learn the carpenter's trade. Soon after completing my trade I married my present wife and started West.

My eldest sister, Martha Curwen, had, with her husband, W. H. Curwen, united with the church and was living in Plano, Illinois, at that time the headquarters of the church. Sr. Curwen is the only relative I have in the church, outside of our two families, that I have any knowledge of, and she and I are the only ones living of my father's family, at the present date.

I arrived at my sister's in the spring of 1870, and attended the General Conference of the church which was then in session, and heard considerable of the latter-day work, but was not aware that it had made any serious impression upon me till after I had left Plano and settled in the town of Marion, Iowa. Here I began to meditate on what I had heard, and commenced a careful study of the Bible.

While in Brooklyn I had united with the First Baptist Church. I was baptized by the Reverend H. M. Galaher. I soon discovered that there was something wrong with that faith. I never could reconcile myself with the idea of eternal torment, as taught by that body; and though I supposed that the Bible taught it, I felt in my soul that it could not be true as we understood it. I may say here that from my earliest recollection I have always had a strong faith in God. When but a little child I have had my prayers immediately answered. I can now remember several occasions in my early childhood when the Holy Spirit came upon me in power, though at that time I did not understand what it was.

I had always been willing to investigate anything claiming to be true, even the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints, though I had little idea at the time that I would find much truth there. But to my great surprise the more I investigated the more convinced I became that I had found the truth. I continued my investigation for more than a year, when, much against my own desires, I was forced to acknowledge that the church that I had supposed to be false above all others (and the name it was generally known by I fairly hated) was indeed the true church of Christ. Then came a fearful struggle with myself. Should I obey? Could I obey? Could I refuse to obey? I could not rest day or night. It was the first thing in my mind in the morning and the last thing at night. Oh that horrible name, "Mormon"! How could I ever endure it? You that have never had this feeling, will likely smile and think me foolish. Quite likely I was, but that did not make the struggle any the less. But at last I had to yield. It seemed to me that I would lose my mind if I hesitated longer, so at last I said to my wife, "The first chance I get I am going to be baptized." She replied, "Well, if you are going, I am going with you." A few days later, quite unexpectedly I had occasion to go to Chicago. My wife accompanied me. We stopped off at Plano, where we were baptized by President Joseph Smith June 16, 1871. We were confirmed by President Smith and Elder I. Sheen.

At my baptism I received what to me was a wonderful manifestation of divine power and blessing. On my way down to the water on that beautiful Sabbath morning, I felt very downcast in spirit. I had always fairly despised the name "Mormon." Now I was going to unite myself with a church generally known by that name, a sect everywhere spoken against. I would be reproached by my relatives and friends for the step I was about to take. When my sister had been baptized, we felt that she had disgraced the family; now I was about to do the same thing. Something seemed to whisper that I was about to do a thing that I would be ashamed of the rest of my life. My friends would all turn against me and I would be called a "Mormon." I could hardly have felt worse had I been going to my death, so terrible did this step that I was now about to take appear to me. But having settled it in my mind that it was the truth, I said to myself, "I will obey even at the cost of my life."

When Bro. Joseph raised me up from the waters of baptism, I felt a spirit of sweet peace come over me, which increased as he led me from the water and my wife in, and as he raised his hand and repeated the words, "Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," my whole being was thrilled, and my soul filled with light and love by the Holy Spirit's presence, witnessing to the truth of the work,—also that to-day God had servants on earth with power to act in his name and by his authority. I was so filled with this holy influence that I could scarcely refrain from shouting. And oh! what a change came over me. The whole world seemed changed. Surely I had been "born again," and born into a new world. Instead of feeling ashamed of what I had done, or of the work, I felt only to rejoice and to thank God that he had permitted me to come into the work while it was evil spoken of, that I might bear a little of the reproach which Christ had to bear for the truth's sake. Immediately I wanted to tell every one what I had found. I need hardly say that never from that day have I felt ashamed of the latter-day work, but rather have rejoiced that God in his goodness condescended to bless me with his Spirit in leading me into it. Never were words more completely fulfilled: "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

Soon after uniting with the church I moved my family to Plano, Illinois, where I resided about ten years. The latter-day work was my all now. I had found "the pearl of great price" and was willing to give my all for it. I realized my limited ability, but was anxious to do all in my power to advance the work. I secured work at my trade in the harvester-works, and was soon an active worker in the Sunday-school. I served as superintendent a number of years. Being naturally diffident, especially in any public service, I found my courage often taxed to the utmost in performing the little duties, which to others, differently constituted, would be very easy. However, the Lord blessed me in my efforts, and the Saints observing my zeal and earnestness, were kind and considerate, overlooking my many blunders, and encouraged me forward.

December 13, 1874, I was ordained a priest under the hands of President Smith and M. B. Oliver. I served as priest of the Plano Branch till May 1, 1876. I was then ordained an elder by President Smith and Jason W. Briggs and placed in charge of the Plano Branch.

It was very hard for me to learn to preach. I was not blessed with the gift of language as are some. At times I would be blessed with the Spirit to a marked degree, and seemed to give satisfaction. At other times I would fail completely and have to take my seat after speaking five or ten minutes. Time after time did this occur. My prayers and fasting for help in this direction seemed to be in vain, till at times I was ready to give up in despair. It seemed to me that it was almost cruel of the Lord to require of me what I was unable to perform. Still I struggled on. I wonder now at the patience of the Saints in listening to me. Bro. I. L. Rogers sat and listened to one of my efforts. He told me years afterward that he said to himself, "Bro. Pitt is a good man but he will never make a preacher in this world." I reasoned like this, that having been called of God, it was my duty to do the best I could, whenever called upon, then, if I failed, some one else would have to bear the responsibility. I never asked the Lord for eloquence, but the burden of my prayers have been for power to tell the gospel story in plainness. Sometimes when people have told me that I had made the gospel plain to them, I have felt that God had answered my prayers.

When the harvester-works moved from Plano to Chicago, I moved to that city, but remained there only a few months, then moved to Sandwich, Illinois, and had charge of the branch there about two years. I then moved to Independence, Missouri. A few weeks after my arrival, I was placed in charge of the branch there, and continued in charge during the greater part of my residence there, in which position I experienced the severest—what shall I call it? discipline will perhaps answer—of my life. Those were trying times. Wife sick, much of the time apparently unto death. Business cares, financial troubles, our little property destroyed by fire; but worst of all were the disturbances in the branch. The enemy seemed determined to down the work and my usefulness as well; and he was not without his helpers in the church. But during all those trying times I had the witness of the Spirit that the right would eventually triumph. I had the pleasure of seeing that promise fulfilled. My last two years in Independence was partly under General Conference appointment. During this time Zion's Ensign was started and I was selected as one of its first editors, and was greatly blessed in that position.

April 15, 1890, I was ordained a high priest by C. H. Lake and Charles Derry, and the next day a member of the High Council by President Smith and W. W. Blair. April 20, 1901, I was ordained president of the High Priests' Quorum by President Smith and G. T. Griffiths. The only way that I can account for being called to these high positions is the explanation given by the apostle Paul in 1 Corinthians 1:26, 27.

In the spring of 1892 I was appointed to labor in Northern Illinois, and was placed in charge of the work in Chicago and the Northeastern Illinois District. In 1897 I was sent on a mission to England, Elder H. C. Smith in charge. In 1898, Bro. H. C. Smith returned to America and I was left in charge till the spring of 1900, when I returned and was appointed to the city of Philadelphia. On my arrival in Philadelphia I discovered that I could do little in that great city with only a hall in which to hold meetings on Sunday, so I began to agitate the matter of building a church. We found the Saints willing to cooperate in that direction. Not only willing, but even anxious. Bro. Zimmermann and I located the spot where the church now stands, and we soon had matters under way for a new church. The Lord opened up the way in a marvelous manner. Through Bro. Zimmermann the lot was secured without expense to the church. Plans were drawn, a builder engaged, then I was called to Pittsburg for a similar work. The Lord prospered our undertaking in Pittsburg, and I had the pleasure of seeing that church completed the following year. I also had the pleasure of assisting in the formal opening of the church in Philadelphia, December 1, 1901, it having been completed under Elder W. E. LaRue's supervision.

My next mission was to Northeastern Illinois, where I remained two years; then to Brooklyn, New York, one year; then two years in Fall River, Massachusetts, or nearly that length of time; then to Buffalo, New York, where I am at present time, in charge of a little mission, trying to raise up a branch in this city.

During my missionary life my wife has kept close by my side. Although suffering from poor health, she chooses being with her husband rather than share the comforts of a pleasant home with our children.

The Lord has been very good to us as a family. All our children are in the church, and workers; also those of our grandchildren who are old enough.

In looking over my life, I can not point to any great work that I have accomplished, but I have tried to be faithful in the little things required of me or that fell to my lot. If through my ministration a drooping spirit has been cheered, a burden made lighter, a sorrowing heart comforted, or a ray of light brought to those in darkness, to God be all the praise.

In gospel bonds,

August 1, 1907.

THE DEFENSE OF GERARD J. S. ABLES.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Gerard J. S. Ables, formerly a member of the Utah Church, was born in Amsterdam, Holland, March 20, 1870. He came in contact with the elders of the Reorganization in Utah and came to see the faith as they saw it. He wrote to the bishop of his ward stating his desire to withdraw from the Utah faction. He was cited to trial for apostasy. His defense is worthy of a perusal, and we give it place in the HERALD. He became a member of the Reorganization March 4, 1907, being baptized by Elder Peter Anderson and confirmed by Elders E. C. Briggs and W. H. Kelley. Quotations from Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants are from Utah editions, numbers of sections, chapters, and verses differing from Lamoni editions.

OGDEN, Utah, February 28, 1907.

To the Bishopric of the Fourth Ecclesiastical Ward, Weber Stake. Dear Brethren: Whereas, we, the undersigned, after a thorough examination in the matter of the true succession subsequent to the death of the prophet Joseph Smith, are constrained to believe the prophetic office to rest with the son of the martyred Prophet and that the Utah leaders have usurped the privileges and authority attached to said office and calling without warrant of authority as found in the law of the church contained in the Doctrine and Covenants or based upon revelation or ordination as therein provided:

And whereas, we do not reconcile the many departures in doctrine from the word of the Lord as given us in the said Doctrine and Covenants, and believe the same to be unwarranted and arbitrarily applied and wholly differing from the teachings of the church prior to the year 1844, and said teachings being fraught with heresy and out of harmony with the gospel as taught by our Lord and Savior, as recorded in the Bible and the Book of Mormon:

And whereas, we charge a gross departure in church government from the order laid down in the aforesaid Doctrine and Covenants, and as required and obligatory upon the priesthood and lay members thereof, in that said order is not followed, adhered to, or complied with, and the voice and choice of the people is not ascertained, and wholly ignored:

Now, therefore, not being able to furthermore conscientiously subscribe to or sustain said Utah leaders as having the sanction of recognition and their appointment or ordination from the Lord, and therefore unable to uphold them in their pretended office and calling, and not being able to subscribe to the changes in doctrinal points or the methods followed in church government, we deem it necessary for our peace of mind and in order to more fully place ourselves in a position to serve the Lord in harmony with his expressed mind and will, as we now see and understand it, to withdraw from the said Utah faction of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and we do hereby withdraw and declare this to be our official notice to whomsoever it may concern that we have withdrawn as members from the said Utah faction of the aforesaid church and hereby authorize and request that our names be so taken from the membership records of the aforesaid church in due form by the authorities in said church therefor designated, and that we be given official notice of its action herein.

Respectfully submitted,

Your brother and sister in Christ,

Signed: GERARD J. S. ABELS.
MARGARETH ABELS.

In the Bishop's Court of the Fourth Ecclesiastical Ward of the City of Ogden, Weber Stake of Zion.

In the matter of
WILLIAM REAST and HEBER HEINER, Complaining Teachers,

Versus

GERARD J. S. ABELS, Respondent.

Answer.

The case at issue is a most peculiar one. In withdrawing from the church, indicating in writing the cause for so doing, "In order to obtain peace of mind and to more fully place myself in a position to serve the Lord in harmony with his expressed mind and will," I am not to be allowed to do so without clouding a conscientious act with the stigma and odium of apostasy.

If this court's decision be, you stand convicted as charged, it is equivalent to saying "ye hear me [Him] not that have professed my name," and therefore liable to have the "heaviest of all cursings." (Doctrine and Covenants 41:1.) I ask you in all candidness, can you conscientiously subscribe as high priests, to such an unwarranted decision, simply because you have no other name, resulting from an unfortunate lack of classification of what constitutes apostasy?

While I recognize this court is committed to find me guilty of apostasy because of repudiating the claim of this church that it is the church in succession to the one organized April 6, 1830, it might not prove wholly futile to at least protest and deny the charge, basing my contention on the "written word," to show who of us "receiveth" the "law and doeth it." for "the same is my [His] disciple." (Doctrine and Covenants 41:5.)

It must be self-evident that if I, standing here repudiating the claim of succession to be with the Utah church, am by the standard works found to be departing therefrom, and therefore in apostasy, the said Utah church is true, the converse is equally true if I am found to not depart from the "standard works," and therefore "true," the Utah church is in apostasy.

Therefore: what constitutes apostasy?

"Any one departing from the constitutional or corporate and legal existence of a church, is in apostasy." To remain true or to shake off teachings not in harmony with its fundamental creed, is not apostasy. When changes are sought to be made in the creed and government of a church, that portion of the membership that remains in adherence to the faith as it was before the change was attempted or made is the church. Summary: "Wherever the true faith is there is the church."

WHAT MUST BE TAUGHT; WHAT CONSTITUTES THE LAW?

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel, which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit. Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doeth according to these things shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continue.—Doctrine and Covenants, 42:12, 13, 59, 60.

NOTHING CONTRARY TO THE CHURCH COVENANTS NEED BE EXPECTED.

For, behold, these things have not been appointed unto him, neither shall anything be appointed unto any of this church, contrary to the church covenants.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:12.

COMMANDED TO RELY ON THE THINGS WHICH ARE WRITTEN.

And if you know that they are true, behold, I give unto you a commandment that you rely upon the things which are written.—Doctrine and Covenants 18:3.

Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled.—Doctrine and Covenants 1:37.

Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God, which I command you.—Deuteronomy 4:2.

Every word of God is pure: he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him. Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar.—Proverbs 30:5, 6.

I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him.—Ecclesiastes 3:14.

SUCCESSORS MUST OBSERVE THE LAW GIVEN THROUGH HIS PREDECESSOR.

Only be thou strong and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law, which Moses my servant commanded thee: turn not from it to the right or to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest.—Joshua 1:7.

For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, TO TEACH THOSE REVELATIONS WHICH YOU HAVE RECEIVED, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed.—Doctrine and Covenants 43:7.

DEPARTURE FROM THE COVENANTS BROUGHT WITH IT THE ELEMENTS OF DISORGANIZATION (PROPHETIC WARNING).

That the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven, and that the powers of heaven can not be controlled nor handled only upon the principles of righteousness. That they may be conferred upon us, it is true; but when we undertake to cover our sin, or to gratify our pride, our vain ambition, or to exercise control, or dominion, or compulsion, upon the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold, the heavens withdraw themselves; the Spirit of the Lord is grieved; and when it is withdrawn, Amen to the priesthood or the authority of that man.—Doctrine and Covenants 121:36; Millennial Star, vol. 17, page 85.

And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief have brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation rested upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, BUT TO DO ACCORDING TO THAT WHICH I HAVE WRITTEN.—Doctrine and Covenants 84:54-57.

EVIDENCES OF DEPARTURE BY UTAH CHURCH LEADERS.

Brigham Young speaking:

I have known that Brother Marks had no evidence but the written word; but if this people had no evidence but the written word, it is quite time to go to the river and be baptized for the remission of their sins. As to a person not knowing more than the written word, let me tell you that there are keys that the written word never spoke of, nor never will.—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, pages 666, 667.

I am the controller and master of affairs here under heaven's direction.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, page 48.

I have not the least fear of any division in this church for I can turn them whithersoever I will.—Millennial Star, vol. 15, page 386.

Joseph in his life time did not receive everything connected with the doctrine of redemption, but he has left the key with those who understand how to obtain and teach to this great people all that is necessary for their salvation and exaltation in the celestial kingdom of our God. . . . I have shown to the brethren and sisters that brother Joseph did not tell them all things at once, consequently you may expect to hear and see many things you never thought of before.—Times and Seasons, vol. 6, pages 955, 956.

Remarks by Joseph E. Taylor of the Salt Lake Stake Presidency, reported in the Semi-Weekly Deseret News of August 7, 1894:

That he deprecated the conduct of certain persons, members of the church, who were always judging and criticising their leaders by what was written in the books, placing the dead letter above the living oracles.

Elder Abraham Cannon speaking:

There was a danger against which they should guard, and this lay in a disposition toward a criticism of the doctrines of the church as presented by the living authorities. When any counsel came from President Woodruff which seemed to be in conflict with the written word of God, we should follow the living oracles and the time would come when we would appreciate a reconciliation of these.—Remarks at October conference 1894, as reported in the Deseret News.

Joseph F. Smith ADMITS A DEPARTURE FROM THE LAW, WITHOUT A RIGHT TO DO SO:

We have not always carried out strictly the order of the priesthood. We have varied from it to some extent, but we hope in due time that by the promptings of the Holy Spirit we will be led up into the exact channel and course that the Lord has marked out for us to pursue, and adhere strictly to the order that he has established.—Remarks at a special conference held at Salt Lake City, November 10, 1901, as reported in the Deseret News.

TREATING LIGHTLY A SACRED ORDINANCE OF GOD'S LAW AND HOUSE.

Everybody rebaptized without having broken the covenants, August 6, 1847:

On this day the Twelve were rebaptized. . . .

We soon repaired to the water, and President Young went down into the water and baptized all his brethren of the Twelve present. He then confirmed us, and sealed upon us our apostleship, and all the keys, powers, and blessings belonging to that office. Brother Heber C. Kimball baptized and confirmed President Brigham Young.—August 8, 1847. The whole camp of Israel renewed their covenants before the Lord by baptism.—Historical Record, vol. 9, page 87.

I will refer again to the brethren and sisters who have lately come over the plains. My counsel to them to-day is, as it has been on former occasions to all who have come into these valleys, Go and be baptized for the remission of your sins, repenting of all your wanderings from the path of righteousness, believing firmly in the name of Jesus Christ that all your sins will be washed away. If any of you inquire what is the necessity of your being baptized, as you have not committed any sins, I answer, it is necessary to fulfill all righteousness.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, p. 8.

Again in 1856-1857, during the period of a "reformation," a general rebaptizing was ordered. This was for the purpose of obtaining the spirit and power of the "new and everlasting covenant"—the plural marriage tenet.

Although this had now become a general practice and for years made obligatory upon all new arrivals in these valleys, for up to about the year 1890, any number of rebaptisms was permissible to any applicant, while thereafter it was not any further required and no more rebaptism allowed to members.

UNWARRANTED CHANGES MADE IN THE BOOK OF COVENANTS.

"Now I will ask you, Mr. Woodruff, why the church of which you are President in the publication of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in the edition of 1876, eliminated from that edition the section on marriage as found in the 1835 edition, and in all the editions of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants published up to 1876, and inserted in lieu of that section on marriage the revelation on polygamy, dated July 12, 1843?"

Answer by Mr. Woodruff: "I do not know why it was done. It was done by the authority of whoever presided over the church, I suppose, Brigham Young was the president then."

"Now, can you tell why the section on marriage that had always been in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants up to that time was eliminated from it and the other inserted in lieu of it?"

Answer: "I can not tell. It was done I suppose under the direction of Brigham Young or under his administration. I can not state why it was done."

"Was it not done because one was in conflict with the other?"

Answer: "I do not know that I can state why it was done."—Abstract of Evidence, Temple Lot Suit, page 309.

Testimony of Lorenzo Snow: Similar question asked as of Mr. Woodruff.

Answer: "That is, I take it you want to know why this principle of plural marriage was inserted instead of the principle of single marriage?"

Q. "Yes, sir, why did you take out one and put the other in?"

A. "I can not tell you, for I did not do it, nor I can not tell why."

Q. "Was it not because this taught or had changed the order of marriage in the church?"

A. "Well, it is a fact that the order of marriage was changed, but whether that was the purpose of the substitution or not, I do not know."—Abstract of Evidence, Temple Lot Suit, page 320.

THE LAW IN REFERENCE TO SEVENTIES QUORUMS IGNORED.

And it is according to the vision, showing the order of the seventy that they should have seven presidents to preside over them, chosen out of the number of the seventy, and the seventh president of these presidents is to preside over the six; and these seven presidents are to choose other seventy besides the first seventy, to whom they belong, and are to preside over them; and also other seventy, until seven times seventy, if the labor in the vineyard of necessity requires it.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 93-96.

October conference 1844:

The remainder of the afternoon was spent in filling up the quorums of seventies, and at the close, 11 quorums were filled and properly organized, and about 40 elders organized as a part of the twelfth quorum.—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, page 696.

THE LAW IN REFERENCE TO THE BOUNDARIES OF ZION IGNORED:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, saith the Lord your God, who have assembled yourselves together, according to my commandments, in this land which is the land of Missouri, which is the land which I have appointed and consecrated for the gathering of the saints.—Doctrine and Covenants 57: 1.

But verily I say unto you, that I, the Lord, will contend with Zion and plead with her strong ones, and chasten her, until she overcomes and is clean before me; for she shall not be removed out of her place. I, the Lord, have spoken it. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 36-37.

Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy, to build up the waste places of Zion. And all these things that the prophets might be fulfilled. And, behold, there is none other place appointed, than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed for the work of the gathering of my saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them; and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 17-21.

From an epistle of the Twelve it is evident that no thought of moving west was contemplated as late as January 1845, for extensive manufacturing operations were then under contemplation. (See Times and Seasons, vol. 6, page 779.)

THE CAUSE OF REMOVAL MADE APPARENT.

Wilford Woodruff said in a speech:

There is no safety under the government of the United States. It is time to go where we can enjoy our rights, and no longer be hemmed in, but be placed where Jacob's nobles shall be of themselves, and their governors shall proceed from the midst of them.—Millennial Star, vol. 7, page 2.

In an editorial by the same man, I find this:

We can at any rate by and by escape round Cape Horn, and sail up the Pacific Ocean when informed of their precise locality. All possible information will be given as it is obtained, and we shall endeavor in our approaching General Conference to explain all things to the best of our ability. Let the saints lift up their heads and rejoice, for their redemption draweth nigh. Mark well the signs of the times. Be thankful unto God that for the present the saints must not gather within the jurisdiction of the States, save it to be in the wilderness, beyond the mountains."—Millennial Star, vol. 6, page 201.

No scattering of the Saints would have taken place, if the commandments had been kept.

Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days; and the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land; for, verily, I say that the rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim, wherefore they shall be plucked out.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 34-36.

And if my people will hearken unto my voice and unto the voice of my servants whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily, I say unto you, they shall not be moved out of their place.—Doctrine and Covenants 124: 45.

Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. . . . Wherefore, by their fruits ye shall know them.—Matthew 7: 16, 17, 20.

TEMPLES BUILT WITHOUT DIRECTION FROM ON HIGH.

Therefore, verily I say unto you, that your anointings, and your washings, and your baptisms for the dead, and your solemn assemblies, and your memorials for your sacrifices, by the sons of Levi, and for your oracles in your most holy places, wherein you receive conversations, and your statutes and judgments, for the beginning of the revelations and foundation of Zion, and for the glory, honor, and endowment of all her municipalities, are ordained by the ordinance of my holy house which my people are always commanded to build unto my holy name.—Doctrine and Covenants 124: 39.

This is interpreted by the Utah church to be "a standing commandment" but such a conclusion can be arrived at only by the grossest perversion of the language used. It reads: "which my people are always commanded to build" and not "commanded always."

Even if it were intended to be a standing commandment, it could not possibly apply to places beyond the boundaries of Zion, and while its children were scattered for having polluted the holy land. Even the building of a house for the Presidency and another for a printing house were not to be built without a commandment:

"These two houses are not to be built until I give you a commandment concerning them."—Doctrine and Covenants 94: 16.

THE SPECIFIC USE TO BE MADE OF TEMPLES, WHOLLY IGNORED.

Now here is wisdom, and the mind of the Lord; let the house be built, not after the manner of the world, for I give not unto you that ye shall live after the manner of the world; therefore, let it be built after the manner which I shall show unto three of you, whom ye shall appoint and ordain unto this power. And the size thereof shall be fifty and five feet in width, and let it be sixty-five feet in length, in the inner court thereof. And let the lower part of the inner court be dedicated unto me for your sacrament offering, and for your preaching, and your fasting, and your praying, and the offering up your most holy desires unto me, saith your Lord. And let the higher part of the inner court be dedicated unto me for the school of mine Apostles, saith Son Ahman, or in other words, Alphas; or, in other words, Omegus; even Jesus Christ your Lord, Amen."—Doctrines and Covenants 95: 13-17.

BRIGHAM YOUNG ADMITS THERE WAS NO COMMANDMENT.

Millennial Star, volume 15, page 391, says:

Some might query whether a revelation had been given to build a house to the Lord, but he is a wicked and slothful servant who doeth nothing but what his Lord commandeth, when he knoweth his Master's will.

I know a Temple is needed, and so do you; and when we know a thing, why do we need a revelation to compel us to do that thing? If the Lord and all the people want a revelation, I can give one concerning this Temple.

The holy scriptures are replete with incidents showing the Lord is pleased if we keep his commandments, but very wroth if we undertake to supersede him.

God does not necessarily accept all so-called temples.

And inasmuch as my people build an house unto me in the name of the Lord, and do not suffer any unclean thing to come into it that it be not defiled, my glory shall rest upon it. Yea, and my presence shall be there, for I will come into it; and all the pure in heart that shall come into it shall see God. But if it be defiled, I will not come into it, and my glory shall not be there, for I will not come into unholy temples.—Doctrines and Covenants, 97: 15-17.

TEMPLES POLLUTED.

Every one laboring in the temples is expected to make an offering, notwithstanding they are already tithe-payers. If the four temples in Utah are visited on an average of 150 persons a week for each temple: to wit, 600 for all or 2,400 persons a month, and if an average offering of $1.50 is made per person, it means a fund of $3,600.00 a month from that source alone. Certainly quite a showing of "making merchandise of the souls of the children of men"—be they dead or alive—while no accounting of this fund is ever made. GERARD J. S. ABELS.

"The work of the church is to urge men to aspire to the highest, to work for a transformed life and character. Individuals will not attain to such a condition in a moment, but will do so by obedience to a series of divine truths set forth in the gospel economy."

THE CLIFF-DWELLERS AND THE MORMON THEORY.—PART I.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The Pacific Monthly, for June, contained a remarkable article on the above subject. The author is Mr. W. C. McBride, a newspaper man of Portland, Oregon, not a member of the church. Twelve excellent pictures of cliff-dwellings illustrate the article and some of the best will appear in Autumn Leaves at a later date. By permission of the Pacific Monthly this article is reproduced in the HERALD. The second part, which will appear in the next number, gives the Book of Mormon theory of the peopling of America.

We may search in vain for a more interesting subject of thought than the story of ancient man. The relics of his handiwork, his successive advances and retrogressions in the scale of enlightenment, his migrations and unaccountable appearance in lands far removed from the accepted cradle of the race, all go to make the most captivating study with which the human mind can be concerned. By the lay mind, or by those who have given the subject no special thought, the present is regarded as being the apex or highest point yet attained in the march of human progress toward Utopia. But to the archæologist the aspect is far less flattering as he sees many signs in the relics of prehistoric man, that justify the thought, if not the assertion, that in at least some of our boasted sciences, arts, and inventions, we are but imitators of the past.

That man existed, and, by slow and intermittent advances, ascended from primeval savagery the ladder of civilization to a high estate centuries upon centuries before the dawn of history, is now an acknowledged fact. Pyramids, mounds, canals, fortifications, ruins of temples, cliff-dwellings, cities, and villages found in such profusion in various parts of the world, and particularly in America, proclaim his work. And it is only by long and diligent study of these ancient monuments, by careful reasoning and deduction, that we have in a measure been able to trace prehistoric man up through the tortuous defiles of the musty past; to gain our yet limited knowledge of the forefathers of the human race. We are beginning to understand what was meant by the inspired writer "that with God a thousand years are as but one day."

Since its discovery, America has offered a fertile field to the student of archæology and ethnology. Columbus found a land inhabited from the Artic Ocean to Cape Horn and from the Atlantic to the Pacific with millions of people, speaking, as estimated by some authorities, six hundred different dialects in North America and eight hundred south of Panama. Two of these nations—the Aztec and Maya—had, according to Doctor Draper, attained a civilization "that might have instructed Europe, a culture wantonly crushed by Spain, who therein destroyed races more civilized than herself." Here also were found ruins of former civilizations—temples, cities, and pyramids—rivaling those of Egypt, many of them stupendous, that to-day are architectural wonders, on which tradition casts but a dim light. Science has been able to read in these relics much of the pursuits, customs, habits, religious beliefs, and ceremonies of their builders, but as to the people themselves, who they were, or their connection with European or Asiatic races, when and by what means and route they reached these shores, or of their final destiny, they are silent; all is conjecture. At this point we are confronted with a long list of theories, from the "Ten Lost Tribes," "The Phœnician Merchants," "The Ophir of Solomon," "The Lost Atlantis," "The Orientals via Bering Sea," down to the most recent of them all, the "Book of Mormon."

It is the intention of this article to briefly describe some of the ruins of one of these prehistoric races—the Cliff-dwellers of the Southwest—and to touch upon one explanation as to their origin, which, for the want of a better name, is commonly known as the Mormon theory.

The writer desires it understood that he is not advocating the Mormon idea of the colonization of ancient America, but as it is believed in and taught by three hundred thousand people—for whose point of view there is a startling array of evidence in support—it is worthy a place in the list. It was lately said by Virchow, "When we know as little as we do yet, it behooves us to be modest in our theories."

What is now Southwestern Colorado, Central and Northern New Mexico, Northern Arizona, and Southeastern Utah, comprising a territory of two hundred thousand square miles, was at one time hundreds, yes, and perhaps thousands of years ago, the home of a race of people engaged in the peaceful pursuits of life, who, from the peculiar location of their dwellings, are known as the Cliff-dwellers. Much has been written concerning them; excellent works on American antiquity can be found in any modern book store or library, while the Government Bureau of Ethnology at Washington periodically issues exhaustive volumes and bulletins on the subject, which are easily obtained. Notwithstanding these opportunities, it is surprising how little such books are read by the ordinary individual. It is doubtful if the combined sales of all the books on Ancient America would equal that of one of the recent popular novels. It is true that these works are, as a rule, open to the charge of dryness and contain much scientific matter peculiar to the subject, yet they are never dry to those who have been fortunate in visiting the home of the Cliff-dwellers.

In beholding these ancient relics of a race long extinct, any one of intelligence is impressed with a strong impulse to reason and speculate on their origin, and imagination immediately attempts to trace back to the artist's hand, whether it be the massive Cliff Palace of the Mancos, the oddly designed and delicately colored pottery utensils, or their picture-writing on the canyon walls. He is at once interested, and as he explores further by scaling the perpendicular cliffs on the rude stone steps or ladders that may have been hewn out thousands of years ago by rude stone tools, or is lowered by a rope down the dizzy depths of some precipice in the hope of finding a ruin which the museum vandals and relic hunters have overlooked; he is enchanted, yes, captivated by the weird solemnity of it all. It was this irresistible desire in Champollion that was rewarded by the Rosetta Stone, and in Doctor Le Plongeon that gave to the world such a store of knowledge of the ancient cities of Central America. Gibbon says he was prompted to write his story of Rome by gazing on her ruins.

A better conception of the term "Cliff-dwellers" is obtained by bearing in mind the fact that the country wherein they dwelt is unlike any other on the globe. The territory drained by the San Juan and its tributaries, and particularly that portion known as "Four Corners," where Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, and Utah form a junction, is without a doubt one of the most rugged, broken, arid, and desolate appearing regions on the continent. The zigzag water courses, most of which for the greater part of the year are absolutely dry, flow at the bottom of deep gorges or canyons, shut in by perpendicular sandstone walls, towering at some places to the height of two thousand five hundred feet. From the main canyons others branch off in various directions, and from these still others until one becomes lost in a veritable labyrinth of cracks in Mother Earth; an intricate system of canyons. On the high deserts or mesas the other extreme is met, for here on every hand rise immense cliffs and crags of all colors and at all angles, single and in groups, one upon the other in bewildering confusion. Worn by the action of the elements into every conceivable shape and resemblance, a landscape view from a high point is magnificent, gorgeous, sublime. Here is a natural bridge beside which the famous arch of Virginia is a toy; there a cathedral or temple many times larger than St. Peter's; just beyond a baronial castle with its towers and turrets, while still beyond, down near the horizon, is a city with its domes and spires twice as high as the Washington Monument. I can not better describe the general topography than by quoting an expression of a native Mormon who said, "There is as much country standing up as there is lying down."

in search of a band of cattle which were in plain view not over a mile away, yet to reach them he was obliged to ride twenty miles owing to an intervening box canyon. The old proverb of the ill wind is here exemplified, as the stockmen of that section have learned the value of the cliffs and canyons as barriers against the straying of stock; and often a few rods of fence is all that is necessary to inclose thousands of acres. Here also is seen the mirage, that beautiful illusion in all its splendor, ever changing, ever shifting, now a lake or river dotted with islands, when, presto! the whole panorama is changed into a topsy-turvy wonderland, and inverted landscape with the mountain peaks pointing downward.

On the mesas, vegetation is scarce and stunted; scrub pines, sagebrush and squawbush struggle for a foothold among the rocks, while in the early spring, nourished by the melting snows, a native wild grass has a short existence. In the sheltered lowlands or valleys the soil is exceedingly fertile and when brought under irrigation yields bountiful crops of grain and fruit.

This rough, arid country of cliffs and canyons presents a most striking contrast with the ruins which meet the traveler on every hand, bearing testimony that centuries ago this region was inhabited by an intelligent and industrious population.

Charles D. Poston, of Phoenix, Arizona, writing in Kate Field's Washington, came very near the truth when he said, "I am not sure whether any one who has been through the Cliff-dweller country and looked on the wonders that nature hath wrought, its gorges, its mountains and its painted rocks, and upon its ancient stone cities, and the cliff-dwellings of its canyons is ever afterwards quite sane." Therefore, should the reader detect any evidences of this malady, I shall have to acknowledge that I have not fully recovered from a slight attack brought on by my last visit to that region.

The first historical accounts of the relics of this interesting people come from the Spaniards. As early as 1530 reports of powerful nations and large cities in a country far to the north—which was thought by the Spaniards to be traditional Cibola—reached Mexico. In 1535 Cabeza De Vaca, after being shipwrecked on the Gulf Coast, and wandering for eight years throughout the Southwest, brought glowing tales to the soldiers of fortune in the Mexican capital. Roused by these stories and flushed with the victory of their Aztec conquest, Francisco Vasques Coronado, with a small army and the usual retinue of monks, left Mexico early in 1540 ostensibly to search for, conquer, and convert, but in reality to plunder for gold the "Seven Cities of Cibola." And it is from the tales of De Vaca and the journals of Coronado, kept by his comrade, Pedro Castenada, that we learn that the ruins we visit to-day were the same three hundred and sixty-five years ago. De Vaca speaks of ruins of cities "larger than the town of Mexico." In describing one of the "Seven Cities," Castenada says: "It is built on a rock and the houses are four stories high, with terrace roofs all the same height on which one can go around the whole village without stepping into a street. Another," he says, "is on a perpendicular rock so high that a bullet could hardly reach the top, and approached only by a stairway of three hundred steps hewn in the rock."

Authorities agree that Cibola is represented by the present country and tribe of Zuni.

After practicing some of the usual Spanish cruelties on the inoffensive natives and lured by tales of wealthier cities farther east, Coronado described an almost complete circle on the great plains, passing through Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas to a point near the present town of Newton, thence southwest to the Rio Grande River, reaching Mexico in 1542.

Professor Holmes of the Smithsonian Institution, one of the first to study the ruins from a truly scientific method, makes the following classification, which has generally been adopted by students:

First—Lowland villages in which dwelt the purely agricultural classes, the sites chosen being always in the most fertile valleys and close to rivers.

Second—Cave-dwellings, caves artificially enlarged, often closed and strengthened with stone or adobes of kneaded clay dried in the sun, such as are still used by the modern Pueblo Indians for building their huts.

Third—Cliff-houses, true fortresses to which the people of the valleys probably retired when danger threatened.

It may be well to state here that it is the opinion of most recent investigators that the lowland cities and villages were inhabited by a different people from those of the cliff-dwellings proper. This for the reason that the style of architecture and material used is very similar to that of the modern Pueblo. It is also known that some of the cities and towns spoken of by Castenada as being inhabited at that time have since been abandoned and are now in ruins. By others it is held that the Pueblos are the conquerors of the older race, whose homes they are now occupying by right of conquest.

These valley towns were laid out with great regularity, usually in the form of parallelograms or circles, apparently with the intent of affording the best protection from the invader or the sand-storms peculiar to that region.

The houses were built of adobe or cut stone (and in some instances polished) carefully laid and the crevices filled with clay or mud and sometimes a mixture of clay and charcoal; usually two to four stories high, although a few are known to have been six and seven stories, with as many as two hundred and fifty rooms.

That the inhabitants of these ruins were the agricultural classes there seems no doubt, for we find indisputable evidences of their irrigation works as well as of a city water supply. The arid deserts were reclaimed through a system of storage reservoirs by damming the mountain streams and conducting the water to the lower plains in canals in the same manner as the Government is now doing in many arid sections of the West.

These canals—portions of which were often cut through solid rock—are ten, twenty, fifty, and even a hundred miles in length and capable of carrying from fifteen thousand to fifty thousand inches of water. When we consider that they were constructed without the aid of our modern excavating machinery and explosives, or even the common pick and shovel, we are compelled to admit that here is evidence of an intelligence far in advance of that ever shown by any of the Indian tribes. Robert Brewster Stanton, consulting engineer of the Utah & Pacific Improvement Company, saw and examined these works from an engineering standpoint; his opinion, therefore, is significant. He says:

“Not merely small farm ditches, but canals of enormous capacity and aggregating thousands of miles in length were built, covering hundreds of thousands of acres, planned and executed with a knowledge of engineering (and I believe laid out with instruments of precision), and with an appreciation of the value, power, distribution, and service of water that should put to the blush some of our modern irrigation engineers and our would-be makers of irrigation law.”

It is the cliff-dwelling proper, or the ruins of the cliffs and canyons, that are by far the most interesting and the source of the greatest speculation and wonder. “Imagine,” says a recent traveler, “the dry bed of a river shut in between steep inaccessible rocks of red sandstone, and a man standing in that bed looking up at the habitations of his fellow creatures perched on every ledge.” Major Powell, United States Geologist, expresses his surprise at “seeing nothing for whole days but perpendicular cliffs, everywhere riddled with human habitations which resemble the cells of a honeycomb more than anything else.”

Unlike the lowland or valley ruins, the walls of the cliff-dwellings were constructed almost entirely of stone cut to shape, well laid and joints properly broken. Being unacquainted with the use of lime, they replaced it with a mixture of clay and cinders and sometimes charcoal, often colored to match the stone, and to-day on this mortar the marks of the tools used and even of the fingers of the workmen are plainly discernible. It is truly wonderful to note how well this peculiar people turned the decaying canyon walls into account. By the natural crumbling and falling away of the softer strata, caves of all shapes and dimensions were thus formed, which, when partitioned off into rooms and the opening walled up, formed an abode safe from fire, storm or flood; warm in winter, cool in summer; but more than all, a fortress behind which the lord and master of this aerial mansion could protect his family against a horde. The word “cave,” as herein used, should not be understood as applying in the generally accepted meaning of the term. They are rather in the nature of hollows or nooks, “cubby holes” as some call them, formed by erosion, and sometimes artificially enlarged, and usually with projecting ledges above and below protruding well out from the main walls. It is this style of ruins that is most numerous, being scattered promiscuously throughout the region; in caves as above described, in the bed of canyons, sufficiently elevated above high water mark, and on the open mesas; in fact, where one would least expect to find human habitations, these mysterious relics confront us. A few contain but a single room, others ten, twenty, and as many as fifty, while the Great Palace of the Mancos originally embraced not less than one thousand rooms within its walls. One, on the Mesa Verde, covered an area of 480,000 square feet, and contained 1,500,000 cubic feet of masonry. Great skill was shown in joining the walls to the cliffs, and in imitating the coloring and aspect of the neighboring rocks; indeed, in certain narrow, deep gorges one must needs have a good pair of eyes to detect them amid their rugged surroundings. The windows and doors are small, the latter being very narrow and rarely exceeding four or five feet in height. This has given rise to the opinion held by some, that the Cliff-dwellers were a race of pygmies. Their mummified remains, however, still found in certain localities, refute this theory, and show them to have been of the ordinary stature. I have seen a number of these mummies of men, women, and children, and none of those of mature age were dwarfs; one in particular, of a man apparently about forty-five years of age, indicated that in life he must have been over six feet tall. The mummies are found in the remote, dark recesses of the caves or cliff-dwellings, and sometimes in basements or cellars beneath the floor, usually in a sitting posture, with knees drawn up under the chin and hands clasped around the lower limbs. Here, in these silent catacombs, with no visitors save an occasional owl or scorpion; in the high, dry atmosphere almost totally devoid of moisture, the dust of ages has settled on and preserved them.

The cave- or cliff-dwellings are found at elevations varying from two hundred to eight hundred feet above the bed of the stream. Holmes mentions some so high and well concealed that with the aid of a telescope they can hardly be distinguished from the surrounding rocks. Imagination is lost in attempting to account for the means employed in conveying their construction material and the everyday necessities of life to these lofty homes. Reflection brings to our minds the anxiety of the mother and the necessity of her constant watch o'er her little ones playing in their narrow dooryard where one false step meant instant death below.

The square and sometimes round or tower-like structures are, from their location, supposed to have been fortifications or rather watch-towers. They are generally situated on lofty isolated rocks or high projecting points and promontories, affording a view of the neighboring canyons and passes. No doubt in time of war—and wars they must have had, judging from the numerous arrow-heads found in certain localities—sentinels were constantly maintained at these strategic points to give immediate warning of the enemy's approach.

Several years ago I visited a ruin of this character in Southeastern Utah. This strange structure was discovered perched upon the extreme point of an isolated flatiron-shaped table-rock, which we estimated to be from eight hundred to one thousand feet high and found to be about thirty feet wide across the top. After several hours of tedious climbing, often being compelled to resort to the use of ropes, we reached a point about twenty-five feet from the summit and immediately under the object of this dangerous venture. Here the projecting ledge of the table-rock above barred all further progress. Sorely disappointed, we were about to descend, when lo! a hole was discovered leading straight up through the solid rock, which on examination was found large enough to admit an ordinary-sized man, and to be equipped with hewn notches at regular intervals, in which the hands and feet could be successively placed, making the ascent very simple and easy for any one of not too large a girth, which, unfortunately, one of our party possessed. On emerging from this upright tunnel another surprise awaited us as we landed in the very center of the ruin. What a place of refuge! No danger from the enemy here; ten men armed and provisioned could defy an army, as there is no other route to the summit except via the dark shaft through which but one can pass at a time.

Of all the relics found in the cliff-dwellings pottery is the most abundant. The ground in the vicinity of almost every ruin is strewn with fragments of various colors and designs, while occasionally a whole vase, jar, pitcher, or bowl is uncovered.

The coloring and decorating of their pottery is truly wonderful; and had we no other evidence, this alone is sufficient to award this interesting race of antiquity a station on civilization's ladder far above the savage. Professor Mahomet, the eminent archæologist, sees a great deal more in these pottery relics than mere coloring and fancy or attractive designs. For instance, the professor claims to find depicted on one vase every sign used by modern Free Masons, even to the sign of distress. There, too, is the cross, the circle, and certain symbols and zodiacal signs indicating the movement of certain stars. From the length of time required in which such star movements are made, he asserts that three hundred generations of men have lived and died since those ancient hands adorned that vase.

The cross above mentioned does not refer to the Christian emblem, but to one of its oldest forms known as the Cruz Ansata, often called "the key of the Nile" by reason of its being found on many Egyptian monuments. It was the symbol of symbols, the mystic Tau, "the hidden wisdom," emblem of "the life to come," not only of the Egyptians, but other ancient nations, including the Peruvians and Mayas. In form it is very similar to our letter T, sometimes with an oval or loop above or surrounded by a double circle. It would require a great many guesses to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion or theory as to where the Cliff-dwellers obtained this ancient emblem.

Perhaps Doctor Le Plongeon is right in his assertion that America is the cradle of the human race, that the Maya is the oldest civilization, and that the Eastern races of antiquity were but colonies from this country.

In addition to pottery (a long list of interesting remains of war and peace have been brought to light and carried away to museum and den, among which I may mention war-clubs, arrows, spears, stone hatchets and mauls, bone needles, needle and feather work, children's toys, ornaments, reed and basket work, ears of corn perfectly preserved, and various assortments of household odds and ends; all going to show them to have been an ingenious and industrious people.

The question is often asked, have the local Indian tribes any tradition concerning the Cliff-dwellers? Yes, both the Moqui and Navajos have legends, neither of which, however, has been seriously considered by authorities or students as having any authentic foundation. The Moquis tell us they inhabited the land from time immemorial, since the earth was a small island, which grew larger as the inhabitants multiplied. They were a peaceful and prosperous people, living by agricultural means rather than the chase. About a thousand years ago they were visited by savage strangers from the north, whom they treated hospitably. Soon these visits became more frequent and annoying. Then their troublesome neighbors—ancestors of the present Utes—began to forage upon them and at last to massacre them and devastate their farms; so, in order to save their lives at least, they built houses high up on the cliffs, where they could store food and hide until the raiders left. But one summer the invaders did not go back to their mountain homes as they had formerly done, but brought their families with them and settled down. Driven from their homes and lands, and starving in their little niches in the cliffs, the Moquis sent their women and children south, collected their warriors and gave battle to the enemy. For one long month they fought and were beaten back, but returned day after day to the attack, until at last they were successful, and the invaders were conquered and left. But it was a dear victory, as the legend says the hollows of the rocks were filled to the brim with the mingled blood of the conquerors and conquered, and red veins of it ran down the canyon.

The Navajos say that a long, long time ago they went to war with and conquered the Cliff-dwellers, and on throwing their bodies into the San Juan River they immediately turned into fish; and it is a singular fact that the Navajos will not eat fish from that stream.

With the exception of their picture-writing on the canyon walls, the ancient inhabitants of those valleys and cliffs have left us no written record. Just what they intend to convey by those odd pictographs of warriors, children, footprints, animals, birds, and the ever-present serpent, arranged in the form of a procession—all going the same direction—no one has yet been able to tell us. They no doubt mean something, probably illustrating their migrations or may be simply the result of the artist's fancy. They have passed away, carrying with them the mystery of their origin and destiny, yet I believe that some day some one will wrest the secret from those silent rocks and caves. It is certainly there. Who will find it?

“You stand outside and hear the call, Come in, we will do you good; you enter, and immediately, if you have really understood the invitation, you become one of those who are calling others to enter. In a moment you have ceased to be exclusively a beneficiary and have become a benefactor.”

Are We Thinking?

“Given the character of a man and the conditions of life around him, what will be his career? Or, given his career and surroundings, what was his character? Or, given his character and career, of what kind were his surroundings? The relation of these three factors is severely logical. From them is deduced all genuine history. Character is the chief element, for it is both a result and a cause—a result in influences and a cause of results.”—James A. Garfield.

Other pens, abler than ours, we are glad to say, will present to you not only the claims Graceland has upon you, but also what she is fitting herself to do for our young men and maidens. For the present, therefore, we will turn to other themes. First, however, we wish to emphasize, if possible, what we have before said in regard to the strong but subtle element of personality in the formation of character.

There are few of those at all familiar with the trend of passing events who have not heard more or less of that remarkable man, Booker T. Washington, and the wonderful work he is accomplishing for his people, the freedmen of the South. But we are inclined to believe that among the thousands to whom this man's name has become as a household word, there are few who realize the real character—the height, breadth, and depth of the work which he is accomplishing. It is stated by Mr. Page, of the firm of Doubleday, Page & Co., his publishers, that his autobiography, Up From Slavery, has he thinks, the distinction of “tradition into more languages than any other American books.” In his introduction to this volume, the same gentleman says:

“The details of Mr. Washington's early life, as frankly set down in Up From Slavery, do not give quite a whole view of his education. He had the training which a colored youth receives at Hampton, which indeed the autobiography does explain. But the reader does not get his intellectual pedigree, for Mr. Washington himself, perhaps, does not as clearly understand it as another man might.

“The truth is he had a training during the most impressionable period of his life that was very extraordinary, such a training as few men of his generation have had. To see its full meaning one must start in the Hawaiian Islands half a century or more ago. There Samuel Armstrong, a youth of missionary parents, earned enough money to pay his expenses at an American college. Equipped with this small sum and the earnestness that the undertaking implied, he came to Williams College when Doctor Mark Hopkins was president. Williams College had many good things for youth in that day, as it had in this, but the greatest was the strong personality of its famous president. Every student does not profit by a good teacher; but perhaps no young man ever came under the influence of Doctor Hopkins whose whole nature was so ripe for profit by such an experience as young Armstrong. He lived in the family of President Hopkins, and thus had a training that was wholly out of the common; and this training had much to do with the development of his own strong character, whose originality and force we are only beginning to appreciate.

"In turn Samuel Armstrong, the founder of Hampton Institute, took up his work as a trainer of youth. He had very raw material, and doubtless most of his pupils failed to get the greatest lessons from him; but, as he had been a peculiarly receptive pupil of Doctor Hopkins, so Booker Washington became a peculiarly receptive pupil of his. To the formation of Mr. Washington's character, then, went the missionary zeal of New England, influenced by one of the strongest personalities in modern education, and the wide-reaching moral earnestness of General Armstrong himself. These influences are easily recognizable in Mr. Washington to-day by men who knew Doctor Hopkins and General Armstrong." [Italics ours.]

Here again our attention is very plainly directed to the power of personality in the formation of character, especially during the impressionable period of youth. And just here with the thought in mind that it may occur to some to ask why we should look especially to our own church—to Grace-land—for the planting of the seeds of truth, sacrifice, and noble principles in the minds of our sons and daughters, when the world furnishes countless examples of nobility and broad philanthropy in its schools for the training of youth, we answer: There is to-day a vast difference between the influence exerted over the minds of the young in the educational institutions of our land and that which was exerted at the period of which Mr. Page is writing. Infidelity and skepticism permeate the very air surrounding many of them, and the Bible is not only banished from our public schools but is regarded as worthy only of criticism and those who believe its teachings as objects of pity and contempt in many of our higher institutions of learning. And in some even the morality of common decency is set aside, because they are corrupted with the powerful influence of ill-gotten wealth, and their admirers and pupils are as shameless in their defense as those who in Paul's day cried out "Great is Diana of the Ephesians."

Do not, we beg of you, consider this language strong, nor as the outgrowth of prejudice. Those who know us personally will exonerate us from this, for they will remember that ever and always we have been the champion of good, no matter where found; and have ever felt with the keenest regret our failure as a people to come up to the standard God has set for us. But when we see the scores of the brightest and best of our girls and boys, our sons and daughters, who drift away from the moorings of faith, and become engulfed in the whirlpool of unbelief and skepticism, our soul is stirred within us even as was Paul's when he saw the great city of Ephesus wholly given up to idolatry, and we feel that it is high time our people realized the obligation we are under to our own as well as to God and his world. We are writing to those who know the truth and love the beauty and grandeur of the gospel of Christ. And we ask you is it not worthy of all—of everything? Is there any sacrifice too great for us to make that we might help in its advancement? Light and truth are the glory of God. The whole world has much of his glory for Christ is the light which lighteneth every man that cometh into the world. But the Spirit which guides into all truth, Jesus said, "the world can not receive, because it seeth him not neither knoweth him: but ye know him for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you." In our search for intelligence, are we thinking of this? Are we thinking of it when deciding the influences under which we would place our sons and daughters during the formative periods of their lives?

But to return to the work of Mr. Washington: "The first time," says Mr. Page, "that I visited Tuskegee, I was asked to make an address to the school on Sunday evening. I sat upon the platform of the chapel and looked forth upon a thousand colored faces, and the choir of a hundred or more behind me sang a familiar religious melody, and the whole company joined in the chorus with unction. I was the only white man under the roof, and the scenes and the songs made an impression upon me I shall never forget. Mr. Washington arose and asked them to sing one after another of the old melodies that I had heard all my life; but I had never before heard them sung by a thousand voices, nor by the voices of educated negroes. I had associated them with the negro of the past, not with the negro who was struggling upward. They brought to my mind the plantation, the cabin, and the slave, not the freedman in quest of an education. But on the plantation and in the cabin they had never been sung as these thousand students sang them. I saw again all the old plantations that I had ever seen; the whole history of the negro ran through my mind, and the inexpressible pathos of his life found expression in these songs as I had never before felt it.

"And the future? These were the ambitious youths of the race, at work with an earnestness that put to shame the conventional student's life of most of our educational institutions. Another song rolled up along the rafters. And as soon as silence came, I found myself in front of this extraordinary mass of faces, thinking not of them, but of that long and unhappy chapter in our country's history which followed the one great structural mistake of the Fathers of the Republic; thinking of the one continuous great problem that generations of statesmen had wrangled over, and a million men fought about, and that had so dwarfed the mass of Englishmen in the Southern States as to hold them back a hundred years behind their fellows in every other part of the world—in England, in Australia, and in Northern and Western States; I was thinking of this dark shadow that had oppressed every large-minded statesman from Jefferson to Lincoln. These thousand young men and women about me were innocent victims of it. I too was an innocent victim of it. The whole Republic was a victim of that fundamental error of importing Africa into America. I held firmly to the first article of my faith that the Republic must stand by a fair ballot; but I recalled the wretched mess that reconstruction had made of it; I recalled the low level of public life in all the "black" States. Every effort of philanthropy seemed to have miscarried, every effort of correcting abuses seemed of doubtful value, and the race friction seemed to become severer. Here was the century-old problem in all its pathos seated singing before me. Who were the more to be pitied—these innocent victims of an ancient wrong, or I and men like me who had inherited the problem? I had long ago thrown aside illusions and theories, and was willing to do whatever in God's name a man might do towards redeeming the next generation from such a burden. But I felt the weight of twenty well-nigh hopeless years of thought and reading and observation; for the old difficulties had remained and new ones had sprung up. Then I saw clearly that a way out of a century of blunders had been made by this man who stood beside me and was introducing me to this audience. Before me was the material he had used. All about me was the indisputable evidence that he had found the natural line of development. He had shown the way. Time and patience and encouragement and work would do the rest."

Letter Department

CLAYTON, Manchester, England.

Dear Herald: On the 27th of February we went from the Rapids to one of the daughters of Sr. Walee, and after dinner we had the pleasure of visiting the wonderful shredded-wheat factory. It was very clean, and everybody seemed to be bright and cheerful, the firm having provided a beautiful large dining-room with piano for singing and dancing, and allowed them to have lectures. It was clean and commodious and well furnished.

We left Niagara Falls on this date to go back to Buffalo. On the 28th we visited Larkin's large soap-works at Buffalo, and we saw some wonderful things in the shape of machinery, and we were told that they had fifty acres of flooring and employed three thousand hands, men and women, with all the latest patent machines. Most of the buildings were fire-proof. Coming out of the soap-works we crossed the street and entered their large offices, the flooring of which covers ten acres, and we saw at work one thousand office hands, mostly young women, typewriting from the cylinder of the gramophone. Also they had a large dining-room with a splendid piano and dance-room, lecture-hall or theater, and on the top of this large building there was a most beautiful conservatory in development. The whole building was supplied with specially filtered air. The firm deals direct with the people, keeping out the middle man and, instead, giving the benefits to their customers in the way of presents. We could not get any knowledge of the wages paid. It was quite a change to us to see the traffic done on sleighs, to see the baker's wagons and the mineral water wagons going about the streets in this way. While at Buffalo we were kindly cared for by Sr. Scofield at their beautiful home. There is a mission here in charge of Bro. Pitt, and they seem to be the right kind of material to make a good branch in the near future. We were pleased to read the short article of Bro. Farnfield concerning the same. Bro. John preached for them twice.

On the first of March we should have left Buffalo on the two o'clock train, but we were late for the train and had to wait for another, and that caused us to be traveling all night, arriving at Sharon on the morning of the 2d weary and worn. But a pleasing feature was the sight of land once more, for it was the first we had seen since arriving in the States, the snow having kept it well covered.

We made our way to the welcome home of Bro. and Sr. Baldwin, and there we had the pleasure of meeting others of the Saints, among them being Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths and his wife. After breakfast we went to the meeting-house to meet in conference. Here we met many Saints, among them Bro. Paul M. Hanson, who lectured for the Saints in Manchester, on his return from Australia, on his travels in Palestine. We enjoyed the fellowship of the Saints through conference, and we believe all had a profitable time. On the 5th Bro. Baldwin took us through one of the Carnegie Trust Company's works, which was a great treat to the writer. We saw the great sixty-ton furnace charged and emptied into coolers taken to the rollers and drawn out to very thin wire and galvanized. It was a very large works employing about three thousand men, wages averaging from fifty to two hundred and fifty dollars per month. On the 6th we left Sharon for Youngstown. On the 7th we had a look around Youngstown and found it to be a very busy little place, and on the 8th we were taken to the station and furnished with a ticket to Pittsburg by our kind brother there, and we pray the peace of God to abide with him and his large family, both in numbers and stature. We have not forgotten the picture shown us of the same.

We arrived at Pittsburg about noon and was kindly met by Brother Anderson, missionary and pastor in charge of the branch at this place, and taken to the home of Bro. and Sr. Lockheart on the hill, well out of the way of occasional floods, and on a clear day we could have a good view of the smoky city. On the 8th Bro. Anderson showed us some little of the old wonderful city, something like the Sheffield in the old country. We went to the top of a building twenty-four stories high. There is also here one of the Carnegie company's steel-works, and we had the privilege of visiting Heinz's large works. They employ eight thousand hands, men and women. They are provided with a large dining-room, two beds and nurses for any sudden case of sickness or accident. We visited the bridge where the Monongahela and the Allegheny Rivers meet. We also saw the old Indian fort where the Indians used to defend the city. This we are told was an old Indian settlement. Here at Pittsburg we saw the Thaw residence and the Westinghouse mansion. The same date we met with the Saints in conference, and we had a most enjoyable time with the power of God manifest. The writer thinks he never saw such demonstration of the power of the latter-day gospel before. We were very much pleased to meet the Welch brothers and sisters, and I want to say for the benefit of those who were gathered in the gospel meeting, when prayer was being made for the sick, one testified that he saw angelic messengers going to each house where the sick were. It was nearly ten o'clock. One was our esteemed Bro. Greene, and we heard him telling the Saints in Liberty Home on the day that General Conference finished that on that very morning about that time he felt great power, and much better. We hope that Bro. Anderson is well and working hard for the Master, and we hope the exhortation given by the Spirit to the Saints will be a blessing and not a curse, and that all the Pittsburg Saints are feeling well in the work.

We left Pittsburg on Sunday, the 8th, for Chicago at eleven o'clock at night, rushing from the meeting to the train. On this route we saw, when daylight came, houses with large orchards, and large tracts of land. We saw miles of land along this route with large patches of trees and scarcely anything else living.

March 11 we crossed what looked like prairie-land, long valleys like streets all sand. After traveling a long time without seeing either house or any living being we came to Whiting. This is a great oil place. We next passed Indiana Harbor. Cement and pig-iron are made here. We were met in Chicago by Bro. McDowell who was in charge of the work at this place. After a little look around about us we got on an electric-car and went to the home of one of Bro. Pitt's sons. At meeting that evening we had the pleasure of meeting Sr. Pitt, senior, and was very glad to see her once more. We were kindly taken to the son's house again and after a refreshing sleep and breakfast and a little chat on the latter-day work and friends in the old country, we had to bid them good-bye and go to the station to take train for city.

G. W. LEGGOTT.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, July 18, 1907.

Editors Herald: Before the white people visited this island, in 1767, it was known as Niuhihi, which signifies the northeast wind; but when the white people asked the natives the name they understood them to say Tahiti, which means transplanted; however, the island is still here and as beautiful as ever, and as quiet generally as when Lehi's descendants first landed here from the Sandwich Islands. Papeete is two words, pape is water, ete is basket and therefore Papeete is a basket of water, both e's are sounded as a in day, but short.

Bro. and Sr. Lake are up to the Tuamotus, probably at Takapoto now as some of the brethren are there diving for shells. The last we heard from them they were at Kaukura, were well, but we expect to hear from them before the mail leaves.

While they were at Kaukura some of the Saints wanted them to start the Religio again; it was there they held their meetings till after midnight generally, and from Manihi, two hundred miles north of here, to Tubuai, three hundred and fifty miles south of this city, there was trouble in most all the branches, not by reason of the keeping of the rules of that society, but because they did not keep them; in some societies outsiders, enemies to the church, were presidents of the Religio, and other officers. Some societies cut members off the church by appointing courts of elders, one branch was silenced by the governor of the Tuamotus (a Frenchman) and we were several months working with the French governor here before we got that branch free again, for they were all silenced, the preaching-meetings, testimony-meetings and sisters' prayer-meetings, because the Religio was carried on disgracefully, according to the statement of the French governor, and in the convention which met in Tarona in April, 1905, the following resolution was carried: "That in consideration of the existing troubles, together with the intended departure of the present missionaries before others arrive, to suspend the society work until the new missionaries should come and better preparations be made for putting the work more in harmony with the Religios in America than it now is." It was also unanimously agreed that a Book of Mormon class should be instituted in all the Sunday-schools. And thus was the work of the Religio left, and in the coming gathering to the conference in April, a convention will probably be called, and arrangements be made for carrying on the work of the Religio to the benefit of the mission.

These evil results must not be attributed to those who organized these societies, nor to those who labored in the mission afterwards, for Bro. Peterson and his wife Lilly, (who first organized the Religios here,) Bro. and Sr. Gilbert, and Sr. Burton did all that lay in their power to make the society instructive as well as entertaining, but there was a certain liberty granted in the society that was not granted in branches, and this soon became a license (to enlarge their privileges) in the hands of the natives, and not knowing their bounds they went far beyond and brought discredit on the work here.

Both Bro. and Sr. Gilbert did a good work in the Tuamotus among the societies there, teaching, directing, and guiding them in their work, and while they were on an island there was no trouble in the societies; but he and myself, (as others also,) thought the organization may have been somewhat premature, as at that time they had no literature but the Bible, the Orometuas, T. W. Smith's Sunday-school books, the Sunday-school lessons composed by Sr. Devore and copied by Sr. Case, and a few other articles; but soon afterwards the Doctrine and Covenants was printed by the mission, and in 1904 the Utah church printed in the Tahitian language the Book of Mormon, so that we have those books now to aid us in that work. Emma also made and wrote Book of Mormon lessons for 1902, and also for 1903. These were printed on the mimeograph. She also wrote a set of Book of Mormon lessons which were lost in the storm, and were not printed. She was president of the society when she left the mission in 1905 on May 6.

There has grown up a society here which was started in Anaa, about the time of our leaving in May, 1905, through a misapplication of the gifts, until they have got beyond all bounds and deceive themselves and others most wonderfully; and a peculiar thing about them is, no matter how many prophecies of theirs fail they still have faith in the next one they give, and say it was a mistake only. Quite a number have left us rather than give up their society.

We all feel very sad because of the defection, but when we arrived here a year ago we found two very strong antagonistic parties in the church: those who desired to direct the work of the church, through the gifts as they called them, and those who sought to direct the church work according to the law and rules of the church, although probably these principles were not thus comprehended then by either party. But from then till now we have done all we could to bring to pass unity, and in doing so we, unfortunately, have appeared to the people of the parties who have left the church at their own request, to have taken sides against them; but, fortunately, the other side publicly rebuked me because I favored the people who wanted to lead the church by their manifestations instead of by the law, so being rebuked by both sides of the controversy, we stand rebuked indeed, or cleared as it may be viewed. However, those who were cut off were among our best friends, and we still have hopes that they will again unite with us, for we fully believe them to be spiritually blinded and deceived, many of them at least. The late revelation says: "It is necessary that some one or more be sent to the South Sea Islands. The heaving of the sea beyond its bounds has been trying to the faith of many of the saints in that far-off region. They should be visited and comforted and encouraged." And when we landed here a year ago we found that part of the statement absolutely true, and some of the Saints of "that far-off region" have not been able to stand the trial thus put upon them, but about twelve hundred of the Saints of this region feel comforted and encouraged; especially, I may say, by the coming here of Bro. Lake and wife; and Emma has done her share of comforting and encouraging the sisters.

I have just returned from town. I was met by one of the elders of Faaa who was expelled at conference. He told me that he and another elder had made up their minds to be baptized and, entering through the door again, receive the blessings of the kingdom.

Bro. and Sr. Lake were at Takapoto on the first of July and expected to go to Takaroa in a few days. They were very kindly received indeed by the brethren and sisters in the Tuamotus, and doubtless will do a good work there.

The usual series of boat-racing, dancing for prizes, music by the bands, etc., are in evidence these days, celebrating "The Fall of the Bastille" or the rising up of the Great French Republic.

May God bless all the Israel of God, whether here or elsewhere, and his will be done by me and by all his true followers, is my desire and daily prayer. Amen.

Your brother in Christ,

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Mary Ferguson, Bellais, Illinois: "The gospel of Christ grows dearer to my soul. We have been taught from the beginning to prove all things, to inquire into everything that comes along, to be swift to hear. The hope of my life is to see the latter-day work succeed. Now is an opportune time to do a great work in these parts. The Lord requires me to pay my tithes to spread the gospel, and I am willing to do it. Should any Saints be passing through, we would like to have them stop and visit with us."

News From Branches

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Two were baptized on Sunday, July 21. Fruits of the Sunday-school work.

Preaching on the street has been the order of work of our city missionary for two weeks, and very interesting and profitable meetings have been held.

Branch officers recently elected for six months were as follows: President, E. O. Clark; priest, J. R. Epperson; teacher, C. F. Merrill; deacon, Fred Chandler.

The Polk County Sunday-school Association on July 13 held a 'rally day.' All the Sunday-schools in the country were invited to join in the exercises. Five thousand of the loyal Sunday-school people of Des Moines and Polk County joined in the parade through the principal streets of the city during the forenoon, and went to the fair ground in the afternoon for a Sunday-school picnic. This first rally day was so successful, that it is expected to be an annual event hereafter.

The Iowa State Fair is to be held in the city the last week of this month, and many of the Saints residing in the State visit the capital city at that time. All should have written in their note-books the location of our church, East Fourteenth and Lyon Streets. Any of the east side street-cars take you within two blocks of the church. The regular services at the church are: Sunday-school at 9:45 a. m. on Sunday, followed by church service at 11 a. m. Religio at 6:30 p. m., and preaching-service at 8 p. m. Prayer-meeting, Wednesday evening. Visiting Saints in the city over Sunday are invited to attend the services at the church.

The Very Reverend M. Flavin, pastor of the St. Ambrose Catholic church, the Cathedral, in this city, has recently been notified of his elevation to the rank of papal prelate, with the title of Right Reverend Monsignore, a position second only to the bishopric, by Pope Pius X. His official title, protonotary apostolic, prelate of the papal household, is one of the very highest, and carries with it the privilege of wearing the purple as a mark of his new dignity. Father Flavin has been pastor of St. Ambrose church here since 1885. The following is a copy of the official document transmitted by Cardinal Gotti to Bishop Davis:

"To our beloved son, Michael Flavin, priest of the diocese of Davenport and rural dean:

"Beloved son. Health and apostolic benediction. Whereas we have learned that you have proven yourself very solicitous in the performance of the duties of the sacred ministry and that you have deserved the highest admiration for your achievements in Catholic affairs, we deem you worthy of a special token of our good will. Therefore we constitute you by this document a protonotary apostolic ad instar participantum with all the rights, privileges and prerogatives that accompany that title. It is provided that you fulfill the required obligations governing the conferring of this dignity.

"Given to St. Peter's, Rome, under the seal of the Fisherman, July 1, 1907. Pius X, Pope.

"R. Cardinal Merry del Val,

"Secretary of State."

A. A. REAMS.

SECOND ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

The Second St. Joseph Branch is prospering, organized January 27, 1907. Has a good Sunday-school, average about sixty-five in attendance, and is steadily growing.

Just bought the Christian church at 122 Ohio Street, with all the furniture, including eighty chairs, for one thousand three hundred dollars. Church will hold about two hundred people, has a baptismal font, and is in the best location in South St. Joseph.

We hope to increase the gospel business in our new location, and feel confident we will, with the help of the Lord, and with the untiring efforts of our president, J. L. Bear, assisted by Philo I. Rogers and wife, and many other faithful workers.

In bonds,

G. W. JOHNSTON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Although the heat has been excessive this last week the attendance at the services has been fair, all things considered.

A paper was read at the Religio last Friday evening which expressed a sentiment against the popular way of getting funds for various purposes, namely: "Socials." We look forward to the time when we will rise above the idea of giving socials to make money.

A sad accident happened to one of our members last Friday afternoon, when Sr. Neola Gard, aged 16, met death from being burned.

The first Wednesday evening of each month is made a union prayer-meeting,—that is, the young people meet with the old people instead of having their separate meeting. Occasionally these meetings have not been the complete success desired, but last Wednesday evening a very profitable meeting was enjoyed; made so by earnest expression, promptness and brevity.

Our Sr. Allee Barbee who is home, from Chicago, spending her vacation, sang for us at the Sunday morning service, her already excellent voice is improved through her recent to the evident enjoyment of all. We are pleased to note that her already excellent voice is improved through her recent studies. We could not have comprehended more, in one song, had it been given us.

We are pleased to welcome Bro. and Sr. D. J. Krahl and family from Lamoni, who will in the future make their home in Independence. This, as many may know, is particularly pleasing to the writer.

J. A. GARDNER.

MILLER.—Near Hannon, Vernon County, Maine, July 23, 1907, Sr. Amy Ellen (Gordon) Miller. Born October 11, 1863, in Crawford County, Iowa; was married to Doctor E. F. Miller, November 15, 1882; was baptized September 10, 1887, by J. W. Wight. She leaves husband, two sons, mother, and father, two brothers, and three sisters to mourn their loss. Sr. Miller and husband were the only Saints in that neighborhood; but she was never ashamed of her religion, neither did she hide her light under a bushel. The universal expression by neighbors and friends was: "She was a true, faithful, devoted Christian."

A Good Result.

Under the operation of the new Pure Food Laws, baking powders now generally bear on the labels a statement of the ingredients. This is of utmost importance because of the harmful ingredients used in many cases.

Royal Baking Powder is known to be the only baking powder made of Royal Grape Cream of Tartar, and this no doubt explains its greatly increased sale here.

Careful housekeepers are taking advantage of the protection which the Laws afford, and are examining all the reading-matter on the back of the label before adopting any brand for use in the home.

When in place of the words Cream of Tartar the words "alum" "aluminum" or "phosphate of lime" appear among the ingredients, they heed the warning and avoid baking powders containing these substitutes.

Making Better Farmers in Iowa.

To farm with the head; to realize that no farmer can succeed by mere brute strength, and that drudgery is labor without thought, — these are the ideas that have become firmly lodged in the farmers of Iowa. Many thousands of them gratefully acknowledge their debt to Professors Curtiss, Holden, Craig, and Kennedy and their associates for helping them to a better understanding of the difference between success and failure in the farm business.

Iowa, with half of her population of 2,250,000 directly engaged in agriculture, and the rest mostly dependent upon it, has led the world in originating effective methods for carrying the message of the new agriculture directly to the farms and for making good the prediction of the Secretary of Agriculture, himself an Iowan, that there will be no more serious crop failures. In four notable ways, started in this State have the most advanced and practical scientific methods of farming and stocking-raising secured immediate and general adoption by practical farmers of long and varied experience. These four great movements came in this order: 1. The "short course" in stock-judging, started at the State Agricultural College at Ames in 1899, and now developed into other lines and adopted by other States. 2. The local agricultural experiment stations on the county poor-farms, begun in 1903 and "destined to go around the world." 3. The seed corn special trains, started in 1904, which in three seasons covered 11,000 miles of railway and brought audiences of farmers aggregating 150,000 to learn the importance of a better selection of seed-corn, care in testing before planting, and other facts that have increased the average yield of the State by one third in three years. 4. The department of agricultural extension in the State Agricultural College, started in 1906, liberally supported by the State, giving practical aid to every seeker for information concerning animal husbandry, farm crops, soils, dairying, horticulture, and domestic science.—From "The farmer's debt to science," by Frank W. Bicknell, in the American Review of Reviews for August.

I take the liberty of soliciting your patronage as we are in a position to do BANKING BUSINESS BY MAIL very satisfactorily. Open accounts can be placed with us for safety at your convenience and command. We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood shorn of all political ambition with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. ### THE COURSE OF HONOR.—PART III.

The other class of believers in "Mormonism" to which we referred in our opening paragraph, affect to believe in regard to the prophet Joseph Smith, that he was not only chosen of God to "bring forth the latter-day work"; but that he continued to be a prophet and held his standing with God up to the hour of his death, receiving communications and directions for the church, even prophesying of the calamities which would come upon the people, and predicting his own death at the time he was on the way to surrender himself with others into the custody of officers of the law at the county-seat where he was killed, and where he would have answered to the charges made against him had he lived to the return day of the court before which he would have been arraigned. They even claim that he held a deathless priesthood which should "never be taken from him, neither in this world, nor the world to come"; but with this we have nothing to do at present; our business being with things of the material world and its activities this side of the dividing-line; though we are expecting to answer for the things done in the flesh, the same as those of whom we are writing and all others must do; and from which answering no one shall be exempted when the courts of eternity shall sit.

This class of believers while holding that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and professing to have the profoundest reverence for his name, his memory, and the revelations and commandments of the Lord to the church which came through him in his prophetic character, nevertheless state things in regard to his personal conduct which, if they were true, would seem to warrant the other class holding as they affect to do that Joseph Smith was a fallen prophet. They affirm that the prophet received a revelation authorizing and directing the practice of polygamy or plural marriage, and that he himself had more than one wife other than his wife Emma Hale, to whom he was married in South Bainbridge, New York, January 18, 1827.

This charge, for it amounts to a charge, is a direct insult to the name, memory, and character of the Prophet; is inconsistent and untenable, for a number of reasons. Among these reasons are the following:

"Nothing can prevail against those who have Christ with them. If God be for us, who can be against us? The Hebrew children in the fiery furnace, Daniel in the lion's den, the disciples in the storm-tossed boat on the Sea of Galilee, all were witnesses of his power to overcome all opposition."

"What is repentance? A fleeing from evil, ceasing to do wrong, turning face about and walking away from evil. Note the following: 'Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil.'—Isaiah 1:16."

1. At the founding of the earth and placing man upon it, as we have shown in a former part of this article, the relation of marriage was instituted between the sexes upon fact and principle; the fact being that there was but the one pair, Adam and Eve, joined in the compact, thereby becoming "one flesh," as stated in Genesis 2:24; the principle being the conservation of the chastity of women, of which the Lord has stated in the Book of Mormon, "even the New Covenant": "For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women."

2. The laws of the States where the church had origin and existence forbade marrying or living in any other than the monogamic form of the domestic relation and provided penalties to be inflicted upon those who violated the statutes.

3. The Lord by imperative commandment enjoined upon the church in all of its membership the keeping of and obedience to the laws of the land: enforcing the command by the statement that he who "kept the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land."

4. The initial commandments of the Lord to the church were strictly affirmative with regard to the rule which should prevail among them. (a) "Wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife." (b) "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none [no one] else." (c) "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."

5. The statute enactments of the States where Joseph Smith lived during life, and his association with his fellows in the church, made it unlawful for him to have more than one wife. The laws of God given through Joseph Smith to the church made it unlawful for him to have more than one woman for a wife. The commandments on the relation which should exist between the sexes in marriage were not repealed at any time before his death. No changes had occurred in the statutes of the States where he lived up to the time of his death by virtue of which he lawfully could have taken more than one wife.

From the foregoing reasons the logic of the argument that Joseph Smith, the prophet, could not have done what these claimants assert; that is, that he taught and practiced polygamy or plural marriage, is irresistible. To have done so would have been to disregard and directly deny the letter and the spirit of the fact and the principle stated in paragraph 1, as given above. To have taken any other woman than his lawful wife Emma Hale in any kind of marriage, secret or public, would have been a violation of the statutes of the State, and make him a law-breaker, subject to just punishment under the laws of the land which he and his fellow churchmen were commanded of God to keep, as we show in paragraph 2. By so doing he would also be a violator of the laws of God in keeping which he would have no need to break the laws of the land, as seen in paragraph 3. If Joseph Smith was a polygamist, as these men who profess to so reverently regard him as a prophet so unwisely claim, he became recreant to the first initial provision of the law of God, in which it was declared that it was "lawful" for a man to have one wife. By this provision the antithesis that it is unlawful for a man to have more than one wife equally and legally is enacted. If he did as these claimants hold, he also disregarded and broke the second provision in the initial law; "Thou shalt love thy wife and cleave unto her and none else," as set forth in paragraph 4, at (b). Further than this, such act on his part would have been an absolute disregard of the provision given through a prophet of the olden time by direct command of God, and reenacted by the command of God through Joseph Smith himself, in "the New Covenant," "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife." This we show by quoting the command in paragraph 4 at (c).

These same claimants who assume as an item of belief that Joseph Smith was a prophet, also assert that he lived a noble, blameless, and law-abiding life. They set aside all the laws and commandments given through the Prophet to the church at its inception and during its formative period covering the years 1829 to 1842, inclusive, and six months of 1843, the whole lifetime of the Prophet with the church, in which commandments the monogamic rule of marriage and living in accordance with the laws of the land were directly and specifically enjoined, and assume to set up in their place a reputed revelation in which obedience to the laws before given of God to the church are repudiated, and the injunction to obey the laws of the land is distinctly disregarded. Further than this, the terms of this reputed revelation, which these claimants assume came through the Prophet, are of such a nature that whether they are permissive as some affirm, or mandatory as the document itself declares, whoever attempted to obey them involved himself in the meshes of direct and continued violation of the accepted law of God and disregard for the laws of the land, and besides this, entered in upon a life of deception, lying, secrecy, and an abandonment of the rules and obligations of right living, as the church had held them out to the world teaching the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the revelations given to the church up to that date as the standards of faith and practice.

The first revelation given to the church upon the subject of marriage is the direct statement made by the prophet Jacob, as found in the Book of Mormon, book of Jacob, chapter 2, verse 6. "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none."

The prophet Jacob stated the reason why this command was given to them. And it is characteristic of the dealings of God with men: "Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord."

These claimants who assert that Joseph Smith was a polygamist, affect to believe and so teach that this statement of the prophet Jacob had no reference to the right system of plural marriage which was practiced by David and Solomon; but only to those companions in marriage and concubinage which were taken unlawfully. This is a subterfuge, inexcusable and indefensible. The commandment quoted above involves the condemnation of the whole system adopted and practiced by these two men. There is not a statement in the history of David and Solomon as given in the Bible, which justifies the assumption that David and Solomon were living in their marriage relations by two laws, the one righteous and the other unrighteous. No possible clue is found by which any system of plurality of wives for these rulers in Israel was justifiable then, or which now may be pleaded in justification for them. God was justifying himself; he was reiterating to the Nephites the rule of marriage given by him at the creation, and which he had reason to know David and Solomon had grievously disregarded and violated. He had sought a righteous seed, and men had covered the earth with corruption and violence through their passions, and he would not suffer that those whom he had brought out of wickedness prevalent in the lands they had left should do like them of old, and he so charges them; and in doing so he condemns in one sweeping command the systems of David and Solomon and calls them "abominable."

The purpose of giving the Book of Mormon to the people of this age was to eliminate their errors of faith and doctrine and to reform their evil and wicked practices. In so doing this God renews the covenant of marriage in its original terms, and calls the deviation therefrom an "abomination." There is no escaping this conclusion, for God commanded the church in regard to the Book of Mormon, that they should "do according to that which was written therein."

If God is an unchangeable being, as these claimants of whom we are writing used to affirm with the rest of the church advocates, then his statement made through the prophet Jacob, "For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women," is as true to-day as it was when uttered under the inspiration which commanded the prophet, saying: "Jacob, get thou up into the temple on the morrow, and declare the word which I shall give thee, unto this people." Hence, the conclusion is clear that God regarded the system of having "many wives and concubines" in the time of David and Solomon as destructive of and at enmity with the virtue of chastity in women: and for this reason he would not suffer the Nephites to drift into the same debasing practice. It is a perfectly safe conclusion that for the very same reason God gave the same command to the church in the Book of Mormon; and so strongly reënfored it by giving the one wife rule to the church in 1831, as we have shown, found in section 42: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and cleave unto her and none else"; and 49, "wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh:" "that the earth . . . might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made."

The logic of the argument is that monogamy as a system of marriage conserves and protects the chastity of women; the polygamy of David and Solomon attacked and perverted it. God proposed to reinstate the protecting, conserving principle among the Nephites; and by a parity of reasoning, to do the same thing at the restoration of the gospel economy in the last days by the revelation of the Book of Mormon with its denouncement of polygamy and revival of the one-wife system among the people to whom the New Covenant and the angel's message came by revelation through the Prophet whom these claimants assume to revere, but whose honor and virtue they recklessly assail, by charging him with doing that which God had commanded him in a threefold commandment not to do; and which he, as an honorable man, could not have done without violating every precept and principle of commandment and teaching in the three standard books accepted by the church and in force during his entire life in church-work. This was not the course of honor for him, nor for those who were connected with him during his connection with the church.

The positions assumed by these two classes of believers in regard to the character of the prophet Joseph Smith, the one that he by transgression became a fallen prophet; the other, that he remained a prophet to the end of his life, but became a polygamist contrary to all the laws received through him as a prophet, and proclaimed in the sacred books of the church, and contrary to the existing statute laws of the land, are contradictory, delusive, and vitiating. The position of the first-named class fouls the stream of communication very near its fountain source, and throws suspicion upon all the acts of the Prophet's career while engaged in church-building prior to his alleged fall; the other position strikes a blow at the stability of the whole superstructure by the assumption that all the laws upon the subject of marriage given of God to the church and accepted by it, were but illusory and temporary, intended but to serve for a time and then be set aside for one entirely contrary in its provisions.

CONCERNING BACK NUMBERS.

Even "back numbers" are appreciated at times. Numbers of Saints have become deeply interested in the story, "An instrument in his hands," now running in Autumn Leaves. They are writing for back numbers; but unfortunately they can not be supplied because the office does not deal in "back numbers." This happens every time an unusually interesting series of articles is run in Autumn Leaves. The way to get what you want is to take the church papers regularly.

Now notice this: In the September and October numbers of Autumn Leaves Elder Asa Cochran will tell the story of the First United Order of Enoch, and the founding of Lamoni. Elder Cochran was one of the secretaries of the Order. In the October and November numbers, Professor Woodstock will write of the new department in Graceland College, namely: The Industrial Work, under his care. You will learn just what has been done and what is to be done along that line in Graceland. In the November number Elder Joseph Clapp will begin his autobiography. He tells of his experiences in Nauvoo during the days of martyrdom, of his experiences in Utah during the days of apostasy, and of his experiences in the Reorganization. No more intensely interesting autobiography has ever appeared in the church papers.

Now remember this: If you do not subscribe for Autumn Leaves now you will be writing later on for "back numbers" in order to get some of these special features; and the chances are that you can not get them.

THE ECONOMY SOCIETY.

We are confronted with a condition; what shall we do with it? Sr. Kate Ward, of Independence, Missouri, is the sister of the wife of Mr. John Duss, the present leader of the Economy Society, of which we lately had a clipping which has been going the rounds of the press. This clipping as a matter of news treats the affairs of the community in rather a slighting manner especially derogatory to the fair dealing of Mr. Duss. Sr. Ward was a member of the society, and being a sister of the wife of Mr. Duss, is prepared to know more of the society and its history and workings, than the reporter who wrote up the matter of the clipping to which we refer, and she informs us that much of the apparent information which the clipping contains is false, to her knowledge.

We are all greatly interested in all communistic or socialistic societies, and can not afford to knowingly publish anything which would put any of them in a false light before our readers. We have promised Sr. Ward that if she will give us the facts in regard to this Economite Society, we will be very much pleased to present the truth to the HERALD readers. She has partly agreed to do so. We knew at the time we saw the article that Sr. Ward had been a member of the society, and we wondered if it were true that there were only two of the number left; and will be pleased to be set right by one who is in condition to know.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

The Gallands Grove Branch and District are to hold a joint anniversary celebration October 19 and 20. It is the forty-eighth anniversary of the branch and the forty-fourth of the district. The branch was organized by Elders W. W. Blair and E. C. Briggs, October 21, 1859, with thirteen members. The district was organized as a result of the action of General Conference in the autumn of 1863. Elder John A. McIntosh was chosen district president and presided at the first conference, which by the way was held in a log house. The semiannual general conference often met with the Gallands Grove Branch in those early days.

A public debate was held in Ogden, Utah, August 7 to 10, between Elder J. D. Stead of the Reorganization and Elder Moses C. Davis of the Utah church. Elder Davis is a lawyer, resident in Salt Lake City. The opening sessions were held in one of the city theater buildings; the closing sessions in the Fifth Ward Amusement Hall. The first proposition was, "Resolved that the Utah Mormon church has repudiated doctrines which the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has authoritatively received." The second was, "Resolved that Brigham Young was the rightful successor to Joseph Smith in the presidency of the church."

On July 17 last, Elder S. D. Payne of Tryon, Nebraska, was struck by lightning while attempting to set in motion the machinery of a wind mill, as a storm was approaching. Bro. Payne had been working during the day putting up the wind mill, and after he had about finished the work a severe storm arose, and as he was feeling quite thirsty at the house he went back to the wind mill in order to draw some water, and while trying to do this the sudden crash of lightning struck the mill, killing him almost instantly. Everything was done that possibly could be done by his wife and family and neighbors. No elder being present to take charge, the deacon, William Godfrey, conducted the services.

The next number of the HERALD will contain another installment of "Leaves from life," this time the autobiography of Elder L. E. Hills. As a boy Elder Hills fought Indians under Custer; now he is engaged in an entirely different warfare.

Are all one perfect harmony."

The accompanying lines pertain to a trip Bro. F. B. Blair and the writer made in the mountains of California about eight years ago. The conveyance was termed a "mud-wagon," as it had no springs, it being deemed the only safe vehicle to use at some seasons of the year, because of the rough character of the roads and the fierce winds prevailing in many places on the mountain-sides. Pen-pictures could, at best, but defectively impress one's vision with the panoramic splendor to be revealed from those cloud-capped mountain heights. Most sacred memories still linger, in that land of flowers, of the inchoate period of the writers life-long work. The lessons there learned, and the associations with noble Saints, contribute some of his invaluable experiences.

Far from metropolis of man
And things the modern brain can plan,
Out into Nature's vast domain
Of valley, lake, woods, hill, and plain.

We wend our way with humble team,
(Too lowly for the dude, I deem),
Toward hamlets which, still far away,
We toil to reach, ere wanes the day.

Our message is the gospel plan;
Salvation free for every man.
Celestial blessings once again
Restored, are for each denizen.

Upward the rugged path we press,
Through heat, and thirst, and weariness.
Yet haste we on our lonely way
As twilight takes the place of day.

The mountains far and wide extend,
As though they scorn to have an end;
But are the "lasting hills" indeed,
To be possessed by Joseph's seed.

The prescient ensign, lifted high,
Tells that the golden age is nigh
When heaven's peace on earth shall dawn,
And Christ shall reign—the curse be gone.

When, summoned all, the Saints shall meet
To worship Him, whose hands and feet
Were pierced for them, that they might be
With him through all eternity.

At last the summit we attain,
And gaze on forest, lake, and plain,
Or fertile valley, far away;
Entranced by Nature's grand display.

The tall pines hold aloft their heads.
Each green-leafed bough the other weds;
While on the trunks and limbs are seen
Exquisite moss of golden green.

And on the scene, this Eden wild,
The moon, with face so fair and mild,
Is looking down, as though with fear
Lest this grand vision disappear.

Thus, in life's path, are toil and pain,
Until the summit we attain;
But then God's purposes we see,
Are all one perfect harmony.

NEW TESTAMENT BOOKS.

Editors Herald: In search for date of compiling the books of the New Testament yesterday, I met with a few notes that I felt quite interested in, and thought others might be also, so forward same to you.

"The first copies of the New Testament books circulated at first separately and independently of each other."—The New International, Encyclopædia, 1902, p. 817.

"The New Testament in the apostolic age. During this period the New Testament books came into existence. They were in the majority of cases produced independently, with no special reference to each other, by various authors at different times, for the use of different communities of individuals. Each book began its career alone. The answer to the question, how they came to be collected, united, and constituted the canon or rule for universal Christian faith and practice, is to be sought first in certain characteristics of the apostolic age. [Note this good point to bring out.]

"Christianity was not, at first, a book religion. The teachings of Jesus were committed to his apostles, to be reproduced and proclaimed and taught by them, orally, as the gospel. The gospel was authoritative for it was the gospel of God. Therefore, the words of the apostles, as the accredited teachers and expounders of the gospel, were accorded the greatest weight. What was true of their spoken words, was also true of what they wrote. Hence, when a gospel work on a written form, whether in an epistle or in a narrative, of Jesus' words and deeds, written by an apostle or an intimate companion and fellow worker with the apostles, such writing was sure to be carefully preserved, often read, and widely circulated, and highly honored.

"It was a natural result untrammelled by any theories whatsoever. The evidence for this is abundant throughout the New Testament. Upon these two principles the supreme authority of the gospel itself, and the preëminent right of the apostles, and their intimate associates, to teach it, the subsequent career of the New Testament books depend."—The New International Encyclopædia, p. 806.

THE BONDWOMAN'S AWAKENING.

ELDER A. M. CHASE.

Am I to blame that I am a bondwoman? Why should I be banished to the desert solitude? Have I not ever served my mistress faithfully? E'en my person was claimed by her and at her behest was yielded up to the embrace of my master; and you, sleeping youth, are the heritage of that claim!

Did I choose my lot? Was I not born a slave? Even the free breezes of fair Egypt used to mock my thralldom!

Then came the time when my mistress placed me in the arms of her lord! For a while I thought I knew what it was to be loved—an honored wife; but man's affections can not be divided, and woman's heart can no more brook displacement from its throne than can yonder God whom I have been taught to worship. And though at my mistress' command I had yielded my person to his embrace as a wife, I soon found that I was still a slave! Even the angel that met me at the well called me "Sarai's maid," and bade me return and submit myself under her hand; and I, fearing to disobey the Lord, returned, feeling that henceforth I must ever be a bondwoman! Still, when the child was born, I thought, "Surely the mother of his son shall ever have a place in his household!"

But God who hath decreed that man shall cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh, hath given my mistress a new name, and I am cast out!

I have endured and served, finding my only consolation in the son whom the angel promised should one day dwell in the presence of his brethren. And now the decree is that we must be gone, and the declaration is made that God—that God whom I have been taught is a God of justice—sanctions this decree! Did I not know that he hath looked after me hitherto, I should surely cry out against such an object of worship!

Whither shall I go? Where shall I find water and food for the lad? Little does my proud mistress care for us now! There was a time when she called my son her own; but now there is not place for him in her tent, and he—with me—is an out-cast!

The loaf is not consumed; but the water-jug is empty! The sun shines down upon us like the eye of some pitiless god—one of the gods whom I was taught to worship in Egypt!

The lad is tired and thirsty. My heart aches for him. Is it not enough that I should be a slave, without my son feeling the sting of being an out-cast? See, he stirs in his slumbers, ever and anon crying for water!

O thou God above, let me not see the death of my son! I had thought that thy promise was sure, and that my son should have an honored place among the seed of him whom thou hast chosen to be thy prophet; but I had forgotten that I was a slave! But hush, my heart—there comes to me a voice,—that voice that once before spoke to me in mine hour of trial! I will bow my head and hear, for “thou, Lord, seest me!”

Mine eyes are open! There is water for the lad, and freedom! The freedom of the desert for us both! The Lord hath again spoken, and my son—for now he is my son; before the fiat of this day he was Abraham's son, and I,—I was Sarah's bond-woman; but now my liberty is purchased, and he is my son! No longer is the taint of bondage in his veins! We will dwell in the wilderness, and some day yon sturdy lad shall more than repay his brethren for all this day hath meant!

CONCERNING PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS.

Upon seeing Bro. A. H. Smith's article in late HERALD, vindicating the patriarchal office, and pointing out the folly of those who look for immediate fulfillment of predictions made therein, regardless of conditions upon which the predictions are based, I thought a word from this far off land bearing upon the matter would be in season.

Bro. Smith and Gould came to Victoria during April, 1902, and gave the first blessings given there in my home. I must confess I was somewhat curious to know what there was in it of benefit, and how such blessings were given. At the time I was engaged in the fishing industry, and was timed to leave home about nine o'clock on Monday morning, while Bro. Smith was to begin blessing people about half past ten of the same day.

There is a great rise and fall of the tide at Hastings, and only a narrow channel to the end of the pier, consequently upon a falling tide our boats must be put to the end of the pier or they will “ground,” and have to await a return of the tide. Upon this particular morning my mate did not put our boat sufficiently near the deep water, with the inevitable result that when we were prepared to go our “ship” was high and dry on the mud. Evidently I was destined to hear the first blessings, and, seeing that I was president of the Hastings Branch at that time, I was not much upset by the boat mishap.

We returned home from the wharf in time to hear Bro. Smith bless a Sr. Vernon who was visiting Hastings. The next one was my late eldest brother, Evan G. Jones, and I was rather astonished to hear Bro. Smith first of all pray concerning his physical health, for at that time he seemed quite strong and robust; but though only a young man (about forty) he is now in his grave, having died last July, aged forty-three. I heard since from a brother in Melbourne that Bro. Smith expressed himself surprised at his own utterance. Surely there was prophetic prescience in this.

My mother was among those blessed that day, and I thought, “Now I will be able to test the merit of this office and calling; for I know my mother's life and disposition perfectly.” Well, to my astonishment, the Spirit described her disposition and physical ailment so accurately that I saw plainly divinity in it, and have not doubted it since.

After the patriarch's return from Queensferry, whither he went to visit the Saints there, I received my own blessing under his hands. It is before me as I write, and from it I excerpt some prophetic statements, and give their fulfillment: “And if thou art faithful, thy calling shall be increased, and the responsibility of higher position shall be placed upon thee, and thou shalt be made an instrument in God's hands of winning many souls for the fold of Christ. Enter in and occupy every opportunity that presents.” Further on I find, “It is given on condition of thy faithfulness. Still I feel there is no fear. Thou wilt be faithful, and the Lord will lead thee.” This is tantamount to making the promises absolute; a plain and positive statement of future work.

Before the brethren left our shores, there was a call from Adelaide for some one to come over and baptize some who were supposed to be ready to come out from the Brighamites to us. Bro. Butterworth suggested that I take the mission, and gave me some time to consider it. When I spoke to my wife concerning the trip, she referred me to that sentence of my blessing which reads, "Enter in and occupy every opportunity that presents." That decided me. I felt I could not refuse, so consented and was accordingly sent, leaving Melbourne for Adelaide on the 12th of May, 1902.

While upon this missionary trip of one month's duration, the Lord made known to me my future work, and shortly afterwards I offered myself for missionary appointment. I was accepted and sent to Adelaide in February, 1903, and have labored here ever since, and have been instrumental in bringing many souls to Christ and the church.

Up to this time I was an elder, and am still so, but with the added calling of a seventy which was conferred upon me by the Lord at the time of the 1905 General Conference, being ordained by C. A. Butterworth on the twenty-fourth day of September of the same year and allotted to the First Quorum of Seventy.

These events fulfill much of my blessing. I did "enter in and occupy" as exhorted. My calling has been increased, and the responsibility of higher position placed upon me, and God has made me the instrument in his hands of bringing many souls to Christ. What remains to be fulfilled is the meeting of the Savior, and seeing the "lovelight in his eye," and I have no doubt that it will be in due time.

I can therefore truly testify to the divinity of the patriarchal office, seeing that through Bro. A. H. Smith the Spirit of Christ so accurately forecasted so many future events of a ministerial life not then entered upon. I exhort those faultfinding ones to "enter in and occupy," and the divinity of their blessings will be demonstrated.

I write these lines without desire to please or displease any person; but simply as a plain statement of fact which is due to the Patriarch as an offset against those who in their blindness speak evil of things they know not.

Trusting God's blessing may attend this testimony, and all presentations of truth, I am,

Faithfully yours in bonds,

ADELAIDE, South Australia.

THE DEFENSE OF GERARD J. S. ABELS.

(Concluded.)

CONTRASTING ENDOWMENTS.

Endowments as Christ understood it:

But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.—John 14: 26.

Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you unto all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come.—John 16: 13.

Endowments as Paul understood it:

But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law.—Galatians 5: 22-23.

Endowments as Peter understood it:

According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue.—2 Peter 1: 3.

Endowments as Joseph the Seer understood it:

On the 22nd day of January, I spoke to the Conference in another tongue and was followed in the same gift by Brother Zebidee Coltrin, and he by Brother William Smith, after which the Lord poured out His Spirit, in a miraculous manner, until all the Elders spoke in tongues and several members both male and female. Great and glorious were the divine manifestations of the Holy Spirit.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 5, page 723.

Endowments as Brigham understood it:

Let me give you the definition in brief. Your endowment is to receive all those ordinances, in the house of the Lord, which are necessary for you, after you have departed this life, to enable you to walk back to the presence of the Father, passing the angels who stand as sentinels, being enabled to give them the key-words, the signs and tokens, pertaining to the Holy Priesthood, and gain your eternal exaltation in spite of earth and hell.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, page 31.

CHRIST'S ENDOWMENTS AND TEACHINGS NOT IN SECRET.

The high priest then asked Jesus of his disciples, and of his doctrine. Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing. Why asketh thou me? ask them which heard me, what I have said unto them; behold, they know what I said.—John 18: 19-21.

From one of the letters written by Joseph Smith we take the following excerpt:

And again we further caution our brethren, against the impropriety of the organization of bands or companies by covenants, oaths, penalties, or secrecies. . . . And let our covenants be that of "the everlasting covenant," as it is contained in the Holy Writ, and the things which God hath revealed to us. Pure friendship always becomes weakened the very moment you undertake to make it stronger, by penal oaths and secrecy.

BRIGHAM FEARS REVELMENTS.

Brigham Young speaking of some who wanted their endowments said:

Well, he gets his endowment and what for? To go to California and reveal everything he can, and stir up wickedness, and prepare himself for hell.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 2, page 144.

TITHING LAW NOT PROPERLY OBSERVED.

And after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one-tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord. Verily I say unto you, it shall come to pass—that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. . . . And this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion. Even so. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 4, 5, 7.

We learn from the fourth paragraph, one tenth of interest is required annually, and if there be any doubt as to what is intended by "interest" or whether one tenth of all interest has the same significance as "one tenth of all income"—the Utah church defines it, a tenth of all income—thereby increasing the revenues far beyond the actual requirements, and laying a foundation for engaging in all kinds of temporal enterprises, not in harmony with the special mission of this latter-day work, viz: "to redeem the children of men" besides becoming so embroiled in temporal pursuits that it requires very little observation to note a great lack of reverence for the "Lord's Day" to keep it holy, among the people, their priests and teachers having set them an unworthy example.

In requiring one tenth of all income a burden is imposed upon a people, the like of which profane or secular history affords no comparison.

Christ taught: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."—Matthew 11: 28-30.

Apostles taught: "For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things."—Acts 15: 28.

We learn from the fifth and seventh paragraphs that the requirement is made of all those who gather unto the land of Zion, and that it is an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion, but the Utah church leaders require of all their missionaries in foreign countries to secure the acceptance of this law from all who apply for baptism, notwithstanding these converts are not living under as favorable conditions and in as blessed a land as the United States of America.

PATRIARCHS.

While dwelling upon the theme of "making a merchandise of the souls of the children of men" I am reminded of aged high priests being ordained patriarchs, thereby affording them an income derived from blessing the people; for it is well known that an offering is expected from every one obtaining a blessing.

TEACHINGS OF THE LIVING ORACLES AND THE WRITTEN WORD COMPARED.

Jesus Christ: Doctrine and Covenants 10: 70:

And now, remember the words of him, who is the life and light of the world, your redeemer, your Lord and your God.

Book of Mormon, Ether 2: 12:

Behold this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it, shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ.

Brigham Young:

Now hear, O inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, saint and sinner, when our father Adam came into the garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body and brought Eve, one of his wives, with him. He helped to make and organize this world; he is Michael, the archangel, the Ancient of Days, about whom holy men have written and spoken. He is our Father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do.—Journal of Discourses, vol 1, page 50.

DENY THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION.

Matthew records: Matthew 1: 18: "Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: when his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost."

Brigham Young taught: "Now remember from this time forth and for ever, that Jesus Christ was not begotten by the Holy Ghost."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, page 51.

REPUDIATION OF DEBTS HELD OUT TO THE FAITHFUL.

Jesus Christ: Doctrine and Covenants 104: 78 and 80: "And again, verily I say unto you, concerning your debts, behold it is my will that you should pay all your debts." "And inasmuch as you are diligent and humble, and exercise the prayer of faith, behold I will soften the hearts of those to whom you are in debt until I shall send means unto you for your deliverance."

Brigham Young: "If an elder has borrowed money from you, and you find he is going to apostatize, then you may tighten the screws upon him, but if he be willing to preach the gospel without purse or scrip, it is none of your business what he does with the money he has borrowed from you."—Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, page 340.

EFFICACY OF CHRIST'S ATONEMENT FOR ALL SINS DENIED.

Jesus Christ:

Doctrine and Covenants 42: 19: "And again I say, Thou shalt not kill; but he that killeth shall die." 1 John 1: 17: "And the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin."

Brigham Young:

All mankind love themselves, and let these principles be known by an individual and he would be glad to have his blood shed, that would be loving themselves even unto an eternal exaltation. Will you love your brothers and sisters likewise, when they have committed a sin that can not be atoned for without the shedding of blood? Will you love that man or woman well enough to shed their blood? That is what Jesus Christ meant; he never told a man or woman to love their enemies in their wickedness. He never intended any such thing. . . . I have known a great many men who have left this church for whom there is no chance whatever for exaltation, but if their blood had been spilled, it would have been better for them. The wickedness and ignorance of the nations forbid this principle being in full force, but the time will come when the Law of God will be in full force. This is loving our neighbor as ourselves. If he needs help, help him; and if he wants salvation, and it is necessary to spill his blood upon the ground in order that he may be saved, spill it. Any of you who understand the principle of eternity, if you have sinned a sin requiring the shedding of blood, except the sin unto death, would not be satisfied nor rest until, your blood should be spilled, that you might gain that salvation you desire.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, page 220.

Jedediah M. Grant.

I say there are men and women here that I would advise to go to the president immediately and ask him to appoint a committee to attend to their case and then let a place be selected and let that committee shed their blood.—Deseret News, vol. 6, page 235.

LAW OF DIVORCEMENT IGNORED.

Jesus Christ: Matthew 5: 31, 32:

It has been said, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement, but I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery, and whosoever shall marry her who is divorced, committeth adultery.

Brigham Young:

The teazers who come all the time after women and soon get tired of them, and want to divorce them, I make pay $10.00 for each divorce and that is my individual bank.—Journal of Discourses, vol. 8, page 202.

Joseph F. Smith and Brigham H. Roberts are today living with plural wives that have been divorced from elders of the church.

CRUSH OPPOSITION.

Jesus Christ: 2 Timothy 2: 24-26:

And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will.

Brigham Young:

I say rather than apostates should flourish here, I will unsheath my bowie knife and conquer or die. Now you nasty apostates clear out, or "Judgment will be put to the line, and righteousness to the plummet."

EVIL-DOERS HELD UP TO ADMIRATION.

Jesus Christ: Doctrine and Covenants 42: 21:

Thou shalt not lie; he that lieth and will not repent shall be cast out.

Brigham Young:

I have many times in this stand dared the world to produce as mean devils as we've got. We have the greatest and smoothest liars in the world; the cunningest and most adroit thieves; and any other shade of character that you can mention.—Deseret News, vol. 6, page 291.

ANY AMOUNT OF RESEARCHES PROVES THE UTAH CHURCH LEADERS MISLEADING THE UNINITIATED.

Times and Seasons, volume 6, page 694, says:

As to the charge of polygamy, I will quote from the book of Doctrine and Covenants, which is the subscribed faith of the church, and is strictly enforced. Article on Marriage, section 91, paragraph 4, says: "Inasmuch as this church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication, and polygamy: we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again."

When this was published, May 1, 1845, the church, according to the date of the plural marriage revelation, July 12, 1843, was in possession of a command to practice polygamy, and John Taylor, who published this denial, was at that very moment married to five living wives. (See Life of John Taylor, page 465, by B. H. Roberts.) The practice of polygamy was again denied by Apostle John Taylor, on behalf of the church, during a public discussion in France, on July 6, 1850, when he affirmed that the only system of marriage, practiced or taught, publicly or privately, was the one-wife system found in the Doctrine and Covenants, 1846 edition, printed two years after the death of the Prophet. (See the Official Report, page 8, published by John Taylor at Liverpool, 1850.) At this time he had six living wives. Notwithstanding the church claims to have received the purported revelation on plural marriage in July, 1843, and made its public announcement at a conference in 1852, it continued to say that this doctrine of the church on marriage was the one-wife system by continuing to publish this old article on marriage in the various editions of the Doctrine and Covenants until 1876. And John Taylor was not cast out.

THE EARTH ANSWERS THE END OF ITS CREATION, WHILE MONOGAMIC MARRIAGE IS IN VOGUE.

Apostle Paul: Ephesians 5: 31.

For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh.

Malachi 2: 14, 15:

Yet ye say, wherefore? Because the Lord had been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously; yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant. And did not he make one? Yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his bosom.

Book of Mormon: Jacob 2: 22-29:

And were it not that I must speak unto you concerning a grosser crime, my heart would rejoice exceedingly, because of you . . . they understand not the scriptures; for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredoms, because of things which were written concerning David, and Solomon his son. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me. . . .

Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. . . . For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none, for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chasity of women, and whoredoms are an abomination before me. . . . Wherefore, this people shall keep my commandments . . . or, cursed be the land for their sakes.

Jesus Christ: Doctrine and Covenants 42:22:

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else. Wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.—Doctrine and Covenants 49:16, 17.

WHY DO I IDENTIFY MYSELF WITH THE REORGANIZED CHURCH?

In entering upon this phase of my denial, of the charge of apostasy, I have shown by numerous contrasts from teachings as the same were in vogue prior to the Prophet's death, and by departures from the written word, the necessity for a reorganization or reformation. A very common error, in referring to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, known among men as the Reorganized Church, is prevalent among the Utah church adherents, when they aver it to be another church, losing sight of the fact that the word reorganization expresses a condition, and is made to apply to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and not to some other church.

Very soon after certain pernicious doctrines were being fastened upon the people, the Spirit of the Lord manifested itself among the faithful, that is, unto those who were not polluted, and who had been temporarily identified with the various leaderships—Brigham Young, Strang, Sidney Rigdon, William Smith, and others—that had sprung up after the death of Joseph Smith, to these the Lord spoke on January 29, 1854, at Zarahemla, Wisconsin, as follows:

Ye ask truly, but ye ask amiss; cleanse ye yourselves of all bitterness and come before me as one man, and prove me hereby, saith the Lord, by the voice of his Spirit; and, lo! I will scatter the darkness, and thy watchmen, oh! mine Israel, shall see eye to eye, and this remnant shall rise out of obscurity and out of darkness. Uphold the first elder, or senior, by your faith and prayers, and I will give you knowledge and strength, even hidden wisdom, concerning this remnant, of whom I have spoken in days of old, whom I have appointed to speak comfortably unto the captives, and give them bread and water in their journey. Therefore seek the preparation, for that which I have promised, even power over false spirits and disease, and if you seek it in unity, with all your hearts, I will bless the sacrifice, and you shall have peace and joy, beyond that which you have before tasted in Zarahemla.—Messenger, vol. 2, page 37.

To this the Utah adherents answered, as it were, "we will not hearken to the watchmen, neither will we walk in the good old way."

To the close observer it must be manifest that the Lord has condescended in many ways to bless these faithful ones; they were permitted to go and build up the waste places of Zion, and are now dwelling within the boundaries of Zion, having already been led by the seed of Joseph for nearly half a century, being all the while the recipients of many divine manifestations, together with an abundance of the outpourings of the various gifts of the Spirit, not the least among them being God's word to his people by revelations to him who holds the keys of this dispensation, in accordance with the blessings pronounced upon his father, and handed down to his seed. All this is a remarkable contrast to what has occurred among the Utah leaders, who have not received any revelation, at least so far as the written word bears evidence; while oral teachings through them which the people at one period are enjoined to receive as divine inspiration or the word of God, at another period are prohibited from ever referring to them as such.

Another evidence of divine sanction to these faithful ones may be found in their being privileged to fulfill prophecy when they published the Prophet's Inspired Translation of the Bible, as commanded by the Lord to do, while the Utah church do not possess it and do not permit their elders to use it or teach it, notwithstanding God's explicit command that it must be taught unto all men, "Thou shalt ask, and my scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety, and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until you have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them to all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:56-58. That these inspired scriptures were finished, I invite you to the following testimony of the Prophet Joseph Smith, as found in Times and Seasons, volume 6, page 802: "Having finished the translation of the Bible a few hours since, and needing some recreation," etc. These scriptures were preserved in safety by Emma Smith, the "elect lady of the Lord," and handed by her to her son Joseph,—“behold, thy sins are forgiven thee, and thou art an elect lady whom I have called.”—Doctrine and Covenants 25:3. The Lord accepted this translation, see Doctrine and Covenants 124:89: "If he will do my will, let him from henceforth hearken to the counsel of my servant Joseph, and with his interests support the cause of the people, and publish the new translation of my Holy Word unto the inhabitants of the earth."

As provided for in the Doctrine and Covenants,

I find the literal seed of Joseph's posterity leading the faithful ones :

Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God: therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain, through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8-10.

And now I say unto you, as pertaining to my boarding house, which I have commanded you to build, for the boarding of strangers. Let it be built unto my name, and let my name be named upon it, and let my servant Joseph and his house have place therein, from generation to generation; for this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him; and as I said unto Abraham, concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph, In thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed.—Doctrine and Covenants 124: 56-58.

We turn to the Book of Abraham, chapter 2, 9-11, as published in the Pearl of Great Price, 1902 edition, for a definition of what constitutes the blessing of Abraham: "And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee above measure and make thy name great among all nations, and thou shalt be a blessing unto thy seed after thee, that in their hands they shall bear this ministry and priesthood unto all nations; and I will bless them through thy name, for as many as receive this gospel shall be called after thy name and shall be accounted thy seed and shall rise up and bless thee as their father; and I will bless them that bless thee and curse them that curse thee; and in thee (that is, in the priesthood) and in thy seed (that is, thy priesthood) for I give unto thee a promise that this right shall continue in thee and in thy seed after thee (that is to say, the literal seed, or the seed of the body) shall all the families of the earth be blessed, even with the blessings of the gospel, which are the blessings of salvation, even of Life Eternal."

Thus, it will be seen, even Utah leaders looked forward to the event. George Q. Cannon, for many years a member in the First Presidency, in a sermon delivered on the birthday of the prophet Joseph Smith in 1894, said: That he did, and instructed the people of the Utah church to make the matter a subject of prayer, that Joseph's posterity may come into the inheritance of the promised blessing.

While a great deal more might with propriety be said on this subject, I think I have said enough to prove the Utah church to be in apostasy; and God's own recognition of his church to be with the seed of Joseph, all of whom are members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

In concluding, let me impress upon you one and all that, while in the ordinary walks of life many deem it necessary to shape their policy as circumstances may require, no such affectation can in any degree be tolerated by our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, when it concerns our worship of him, which worship must be genuine, emanating from the soul, and considering I am doing what he has given me light to do, I would not be true to my convictions, nor to Him, whom I have chosen to worship, if I did not act in harmony with these convictions and his light. If, in so doing, you must say to me "This is apostasy," then let God judge between you and me.

THE CLIFF-DWELLERS AND THE MORMON THEORY.—PART II.

(Concluded.)

The Book of Mormon, sometimes called the Mormon Bible, is believed by the adherents to that faith to be an inspired history—direct from God—of three colonies who immigrated from the Old World to this country, where they dwelt and developed a somewhat advanced civilization for a period of 2,500 years prior to the year of 400 of our era. The history of these people, their voyages and discoveries, and their temporal and spiritual advancement, were engraven on metal plates, which, being handed down from father to son—each recording the annals of his time—formed a complete record of events. The last writer was Maroni [Moroni], whose statue now crowns the Temple at Salt Lake City, and who, on account of the wars devastating the land, sealed and buried the plates.

Before further detailing the wonderful story of these early colonists who antedated the Spanish and English by nearly 4,000 years, it is perhaps well for a better understanding of our subject to give a brief outline as to how the Book of Mormon came about.

It is quite well known that this curious book is an alleged translation of a number of plates having the appearance of gold, claimed to have been found in 1823 by Joseph Smith, buried in a hill in Ontario County, New York. With the plates were found the Urim and Thummim, or "peep stone," which when placed by Smith over the characters engraven on the plates, caused their English translation to appear inside the stone. When asked "How and where did you obtain the Book of Mormon?" Joseph Smith gave this answer, "Maroni, who deposited the plates in a hill in Manchester, Ontario County, New York, being dead and raised again therefrom, appeared unto me and told me where they were and gave directions how to obtain them. I obtained them and the Urim and Thummim with them, by means of which I translate the plates, and thus came the Book of Mormon."

Martin Harris, one of the scribes, tells us that "By the aid of the seer stone sentences would appear and were read by the prophet and written by Martin, and when finished he would say, 'Written,' and if correctly written, that sentence would disappear and another would appear in its place, but if not written correctly it remained until corrected so that the translation was just as it was engraven on the plates precisely in the language then used."

David Whitmer, another of Smith's assistants, says: "The tablets or plates were translated by Smith, who used a small oval or kidney-shaped stone called the Urim and Thummim that seemed endowed with the marvelous power of converting the characters on the plates when used by Smith into English."

We must, therefore, assume that the translation is correct without the slightest possibility of an error. In this respect the Mormons claim the Book of Mormon is superior to the Bible, as it is admitted that there are errors in translation in the Bible. One of the articles of the Mormon faith reads, "We believe the Bible to be the Word of God so far as it is translated correctly. We also believe the Book of Mormon to be the Word of God." Note the distinction.

In addition to Smith, the authenticity of the book is supported by eleven witnesses, whose testimony or oath is a very remarkable if not to say startling document. They claim to have been present while the translation was in progress, to have examined and handled the plates, and to have actually seen the Angel Maroni. "And we declare," so runs the testimony, "with words of soberness that an angel of God came down from heaven and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates and the engravings thereon, and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ that we beheld and bear record that these things are true."

Again they say, "Joseph Smith has shown unto us the plates of which hath been spoken, which have the appearance of gold, and as many of the leaves as the said Smith has translated we did handle with our hands. . . . And we give our names unto the world to witness unto the world that which we have seen, and we lie not, God bearing witness to it."

Now it is difficult to believe that these eleven men, citizens of the community wherein Smith resided, or eleven men of any community, could be induced to subscribe their names to such an oath knowing it to be false; it is still more difficult to account for the fact that they all went to their graves reiterating their testimony. It would seem—had it been a fraud—that at least one of them would have weakened ere death for ever closed an opportunity. David Whitmer, one of the witnesses, left the Mormon Church proper many years ago, casting his lot with that branch known as the Josephites, yet to the day of his death he steadfastly maintained that he saw the angels and the plates, and knew for a certainty that the book was translated by the gift and power of God. For many years prior to his death, Whitmer lived in Richmond, Missouri, where he was connected with a bank. Safe within the vaults of that institution reposed the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon which the church at Salt Lake City so longed to possess. Every influence and argument at the command of that powerful organization was brought to bear in efforts to obtain it; and it is reported that representatives of the church offered $150,000 for the manuscript, but Mr. Whitmer would not part with what to him was a priceless treasure, a message direct from God.

In the introduction to his work, Divine Authenticity of the Book of Mormon, Apostle Orson Pratt, the brightest mind and by far the most able writer the church has yet produced, uses the following earnest words: "This book must be either true or false. If true, it is one of the most important messages ever sent from God to man, affecting both temporal and eternal interests of every people under heaven to the same extent and in the same degree that the message of Noah affected the inhabitants of the Old World. If false, it is one of the most cunning, wicked, bold, deep-laid impositions ever palmed upon the world; calculated to deceive and ruin millions who will sincerely receive it as the word of God and will suppose themselves securely built on the rock of truth until they are plunged with their families into hopeless despair. The nature of the message in the Book of Mormon is such that, if true, no one can possibly be saved and reject it; if false, no one can possibly be saved and receive it." Now, with all due respect for its many advocates, I frankly say that I consider the book a modern composition, patterned after and largely copied from the Bible; in short, the work of an ordinary man and one not overly educated at that. Yet I am unable to reconcile to my own satisfaction this apparent fraud, with the testimony and subsequent lives of the eleven witnesses. But my opinion proves nothing.

To proceed. We read in Genesis that just after the destruction of the Tower of Babel and the confusion of tongues, the Lord was angry with the people, and he "scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth." Concerning the same event, Josephus says: "After this they were dispersed abroad on account of their languages, and went out by colonies everywhere, and each colony took possession of that land which they light upon and unto which God led them, so that the whole continent was filled with them, both the inland, and maritime countries. There were some who passed over the sea in ships and inhabited the islands." It was at this time, according to the Book of Mormon, or about one hundred years after the flood, that the first colony of about thirty people, under the direction of the brother of Jared, left Asia for this country. They embarked in eight vessels, or barges as they are called, and the Lord caused a furious wind to blow in the direction of the promised land. After drifting before this wind for three hundred and forty-four days, they reached the west coast, supposedly between the Gulf of California and the Isthmus. And the Lord said, "Behold this is a land which is choice above all other lands, wherefore he that doth possess it shall serve God or shall be swept off. And whatsoever nation shall possess it shall be free from bondage and from captivity and from all other nations under heaven if they will but serve the God of the land." In time this colony grew to be a great and populous nation, covering nearly all of the continent, where they flourished for 1,500 years. But through the greed of wealth and power the nation became divided into two powerful parties, capable of mustering an army of 2,000,000 soldiers each, and somewhere in Northern New York, near Lake Ontario, there was fought the greatest battle the world has ever seen. Several pages of the book are required to describe the awful carnage. A war of extermination, men, women and children all slain, until but one sole survivor, by the name of Cariantumr, remained.

While this terrible war was in progress, or about six hundred years before Christ in the first year of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah, the second colony left Jerusalem. One, Lehi, a goodly man, being warned by God in a dream of the downfall of Jerusalem, took his family, consisting of wife and four sons—Laman, Lemuel, Nephi, and Sam—and departed into the desert of Arabia, where they wandered for eight years. Laman and Lemuel were of a rebellious spirit and constantly reproached their father for leaving his home and lands to suffer the hardships and privations of the wilderness on account of a simple dream. Nephi and Sam were good, obedient sons, trusting all to their father without complaint. Thus were sown the seeds of discord and rebellion which were to be harvested in the New World.

During their sojourn in the desert, Nephi and his brothers returned to Jerusalem and persuaded Ishmael, an old friend of the family, to join them. The Ishmael family of two sons and several daughters, and a slave whom they picked up on the way, increased the party to about fifteen. After a marriage or two, they constructed a ship—according to the command of God—of curious workmanship, put to sea, and after weathering severe storms for many days on the Indian and Pacific Oceans, landed on the now coast of Chili, South America. They journeyed northward, multiplying rapidly, while the seeds of rebellion were fast ripening, for within twenty-five or thirty years they divided into two rival factions, headed by the brothers Laman and Nephi, adopting the names of Lamanites and Nephites. But the Lord was against the Lamanites, for he cursed them with a skin of blackness. "The Lord God did cause a skin of blackness to come upon them. And thus saith the Lord God, I will cause that they shall be loathsome unto my people save they shall repent of their iniquities. And cursed shall be the seed of him that mixeth with their seed, for they shall be cursed even with the same cursing. And the Lord spake and it was done." And thus we have the origin of the American Indian, a problem that has been puzzling the minds of thinkers for several hundred years.

About eleven years after the Lehi immigration from Jerusalem, the third and last party under the leadership of one of King Zedekiah's sons also leave Jerusalem. They reach the west coast of the Isthmus, journey across, and settle in a land somewhere in the northwestern corner of Colombia, which they named Zarahelma. They also found a city of the same name which some zealous Mormon students claim was at one time as large as the city of London, and that its ruins are now beneath the waves of the sea, the coast line having since been submerged. A short time after their arrival, Cariantumr, the sole survivor of the first nation, the Jaredites, makes his appearance among them. After four hundred years of alternating peace and war, the people of Zarahelma are accidentally discovered by the Nephites, with whom they finally amalgamate under the Nephite title.

The Nephites spread northward and eventually cover Central and North America, while the Lamanites populated the Southern continent. As the centuries roll on the hatred between the Nephites and Lamanites increased and, while they had had numerous wars and temporary periods of truce, the old feud between the brothers was handed down from generation to generation, until it culminated in a general war between the two nations about the year 400. This war, like that of the Jaredites, was very bloody, neither age nor sex being spared. The book tells us that even the women and children donned breast-plates and went forth to battle with the men. The Nephites were totally annihilated, leaving the Lamanites the victors in sole possession of the two continents, where they were found by the Europeans in 1492.

The commander of the Nephite army was named Mormon, who, seeing the destruction that was about to befall his people, collected all the plates of former writers and turned them over to his son Maroni. After the great battle of Cumorah, from which Maroni evidently escaped unhurt, he says: "And my father was also killed by them and I even remain alone to write the sad tale of the destruction of my people. But behold they are gone and I fulfill the commandment of my father, and whether they will kill me I know not. Therefore I will write and hide up the records in the earth, and whither I go it mattereth not." So runs the thread of the narrative in this strange book.

Now what has all this to do with the Cliff-dwellers? Simply this: The Mormon people believe and teach that the prehistoric races of America—the Cliff-dwellers, the Mound-builders, the Mayas, the Peruvians, etc.—were none other than the heroes of the Book of Mormon; and that the ruins of the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys, Southwestern States, Central America, Peru, and Chili are but the remains of the Jaredite and Nephite civilizations. Nowhere does the book mention any names of the countries inhabited, by which they can now be recognized, other than the "Land Northward" called "Desolation" and the "Land Southward" called "Bountiful"—separated by a narrow neck of land. This the church authorities interpret to mean North America, South America, and the Isthmus of Panama. It must be understood that after being cursed with a skin of blackness, the Lamanites became a "wild and ferocious people living on raw meat." In other words, they relapsed into savagery. It is therefore assumed that they destroyed many of the deserted cities of the vanquished Nephites.

The most populous portion of the country appears to have been in the regions of Central America, where probably was located the capital or seat of government. It is a singular fact that in this particular portion of the continent is where we find the most remarkable remains of antiquity, ruins of immense cities containing vast buildings, palaces, and temples, built of granite, marble, and various kinds of stone.

As an illustration of the Mormon theory as to the origin of these ruins, I quote the following from Orson Pratt's work:

In the Book of Mormon are given the names and locations of numerous cities of great magnitude, which once flourished among the ancient nations of America. The northern portions of South America, and also Central America were the most densely populated. Splendid edifices, palaces, towers, forts, and cities were reared in all directions. A careful reader of that interesting book can trace the relative bearings and distances of many of these cities from each other; and if acquainted with the present geographical features of the country, he can, by the descriptions given in that book, determine, very nearly, the precise spot of ground they once occupied. Now since that invaluable book made its appearance, it is a remarkable fact that the mouldering ruins of many splendid edifices and towers, and magnificent cities of great extent, have been discovered by Catherwood and Stephens in the interior wilds of Central America, in the very region where the ancient cities described in the Book of Mormon were said to exist.

I once heard a learned Mormon declare that he was so thoroughly conversant with the Book of Mormon that he could readily locate the territory of the Cliff-dwellers from its pages; and if any one interested in this subject would impartially read and study the book they could not help being convinced that it plainly solves this puzzling question.

For the benefit of the tourist seeking for something new in the way of sights and scenes, for a summer outing, or the student in search of knowledge, I desire to add a few words of information as to how this marvelous country may be reached. Perhaps the most extensive, easiest of access, and well-preserved ruins are those of the Mesa Verde and Mancos Canyon, in Southwestern Colorado, near the Utah line, about twenty-five miles from the town of Mancos, on the Rio Grande Southern Railroad. Here guides and conveyances are obtained at a nominal cost, and, if desired, the round trip can be made in three days—one day to go, one at the ruins, and one day returning—without any hardships or discomforts other than those incidental to traveling by team and horseback in a rough and sparsely settled country. Another route is by stage from Dolores, a station on the same line to Cortez, where guides and outfits are furnished for the fourteen-mile journey to the Mesa.

That part of the Mesa Verde on which the ruins are located is now a Government reservation or national park, hence there will be no more destruction or tearing down and carrying off of the relics.—W. C. McBride, in the Pacific Monthly, June, 1907.

Mothers' Home Column

Daughters of Zion Reading for September.

COURTESY IN THE HOME.

Courtesy may be most simply and plainly defined as true, kindly care and feeling for others; and the result of courtesy is politeness.

The person who has this kind care and feeling for others, although his manner may lack that polish which we find so pleasant in our associates, and which is a paying investment, is never other than polite.

There is a man of my acquaintance who, as a boy, was deprived of home training to a large extent, and missed that part which would have made him a man of polished manner; but through his infancy and tenderest years a good mother taught him courtesy, and although as he grew to manhood some of his rough ways almost shocked refined people, yet he was so kind to every one; if he was eager to talk, he was also interested in hearing others talk, and his kindly interest made itself felt even though he had no nice way of expressing it. If he disagreed with one, he was too kind to hurt that one's feelings by being arbitrary. He found some kind way out of the argument.

If he enjoyed a pleasure, in the kindness of his heart he made it include as many of his friends as possible, although it was often considerable trouble to him, and he was known as one of the most courteous young men of the locality in which he lived; and notwithstanding he knew little of the proprieties of life, that kindly care for others has grown into charity, and made him a successful missionary, with the love of saving souls foremost in his desires.

We, as mothers, are anxious to inculcate that sort of courtesy in the character of our children, and I am sure it can be cultivated if there be only a tiny spark of kindly disposition with which to start.

The best way, the first way, and the surest way to plant and develop that courtesy is to have it in our own hearts, our parent hearts, while we live with and guide and direct our little children.

"Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," is as true of courtesy as of anything else. It is very easy to slip into the habit of treating our home folks—our very own—in a way that is often discourteous. It doesn't seem to matter much just what we say to them when we are tired and worried. But if we are really courteous, it will be hard for us to speak unkindly to any one, much less to our own. And all of our lecturing and verbal teaching of courtesy and politeness will fall short, if we do not let it show forth in our lives louder than words.

Some time since, one Sunday at the close of a church-service, I was speaking to a sister, when her five-year-old daughter came up and interrupted us, and without a word her mother slapped her, saying, "Be quiet." I wondered how that mother would have enjoyed such courtesy (?), extended to her. And I was not surprised to see the little girl, a few hours later, in my own house, slap her little brother in the face when he interrupted her story, but her mother reproved her and called her an impolite, naughty girl.

Our children begin to imitate us, to hear what we say, and to think about people and things as we express ourselves, at a very tender age; and we can hardly let this kindness of heart—courtesy—show forth too strongly.

I know one tiny girl who almost created a neighborhood feud by accusing one of her father's neighbors of killing an animal belonging to her father—she had heard her parents discussing the matter, and decide that the neighbor was guilty—and upon meeting him shortly afterwards, demanded an explanation. The embarrassment of both families is more easily imagined than it was received, I can assure you.

It is our attitude towards others in our homes, where we relax, as it were, and show forth the real feeling, that our children reflect in their words and deeds; and, knowing this, it behooves us to see to it that our feelings toward others are kindly at least.

It is not hard, when a child has the milk of human kindness in his nature, to teach politeness; for every law of politeness is founded on a kind thought, and we can find the thought if we think a moment. I had to explain to my child that if he slammed the door he might make some one's head ache, or break the glass in the door; that if he ate with his little knife as well as his fork, he might cut his mouth; he must sit quietly in church because he would disturb others who wished to hear, and many other similar things.

We mothers who have little children in our homes, see daily evidences of our manner reflected, and we know that we dare not relax our vigilance in keeping our courtesy in view. We dare not lose our sweetness, no matter how discouraged we become—the cost is too great. And when we remember our priceless possessions and our opportunity while they are ours, there is courage and inspiration in the thought. Just a little incident along this line:

We were having a Daughters of Zion meeting during the past year, and we were discussing among other things the blessing of little children, and the statement that Satan has no power to tempt little children until they have reached years of accountability; and then the wonderful opportunity that we have literally to make our children what we will, the Lord helping us. At the beginning a sister came in bringing her little children, and sat through the discussion, and when we had finished she said to me:

"I was so tired—trying to get through. The children were so cross, and I was no better, so I thought I would come out a few minutes to get away from the worry; and seeing the church open, I remembered it was meeting-day and came in, and I can not tell you how much good it has done me. It is just what I needed, and I am going home, looking at things in a different light. I never saw the opportunity side before, and hereafter I shall look at all that I do for my children as opportunities instead of burdens."

And not she alone, but another mother went away with a deep thankfulness for her blessed opportunities, and a prayer daily in her heart for light, that she might be a living example in one home, not only of courtesy, but of all the other graces that her child might need.

Questions on September Reading.

From what does true courtesy spring? What is its result? In what sense are polished manners a paying investment? Should the home-training include both courtesy and politeness? Is there any reason to regard a polished manner as being hypocritical? Is an extreme to be avoided? How will unselfishness manifest itself in conversation? Will it lead one to avoid an arbitrary manner? How may the exercise of courtesy assist in developing charity? Is there any child without a spark of kindly disposition? Who will be successful in teaching courtesy? What place is first and best for teaching courtesy? Are we justified in treating "our own" with discourtesy? If we do how will it be reflected in our children? Ought the relaxation which we feel in our homes to reveal any unkindness of word or manner? Should it be difficult to exercise politeness in the home circle? What do you think of this mother's method of impressing lessons of courtesy by explaining to her child the effect of her acts? Is it worth while trying to "keep sweet" in our homes? How shall we do it? Have you ever regarded as burdens what are really your opportunities?

Letter Department

MEMPHIS, Tennessee.

Editors Herald: A letter from Memphis may not be amiss. Parties near Pollard, Alabama, where Sr. Tucker and I labored from time to time for a year or more, have been writing us to come and hold meetings and some would be baptized. As soon as convenient I responded to this call, and the result was thirteen baptisms. We also organized a Sunday-school, and temporarily organized a branch with a priest and teacher who had previously held office in another district, also a clerk. There will be about forty five or fifty members in this branch to begin with. It is about fifteen miles from any other branch. For this reason we thought best to start them to work, and so wrote the associate minister in charge, leaving it with him to further complete the organization. Bro. W. J. Booker did the first preaching in this neighborhood. They threatened to close the school-house door; some threats of violence were also made. So Bro. W. J. thought best to let them sweat. One honorable man in the neighborhood who was then a member of the Christian Church said if the Saints could not preach there he would take his hammer and take his part of the house away as he had as much money in it as any one had. Sometime afterward I went there and held meetings and felt impressed all along that our labors there would not be in vain. Last spring there was a debate held in Florida between Bro. T. C. Kelley and a Doctor (?) Love of the nonprogressive wing of the Christian Church, but only one family from this neighborhood attended as it was so far away. This was the family who belonged to the Christian Church, Worlund by name, who are now all Latter Day Saints, though the Christian preachers tried their best to keep them from seeing the truth which their letters in my possession will show. The terms impostor and stupendous fraud, as applied to Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon, did not darken the minds of honest, honorable, thinking people. Shame on preachers claiming to preach Christ who go out with nothing to prove their work true, but cry, impostor and fraud, and thus try to prejudice the minds of people to keep them from obeying the truth!

When we baptized some among the best people in the neighborhood, the Free Will Baptists locked the school-house and posted a notice on the door which reads as follows: "Notice is hereby given that we the undersigned members of the Free Will Baptist Church do now forbid the Latter Day Saints using this house any more for church service. S. S. Lambeth, Reverend G. E. Peters, A. A. Brock, J. M. Lambeth, July 11, 1907." This did not prove as important to them as they thought. Bro. Rice, being one of the trustees, inquired into the matter, and the mayor told him to serve notice on them to open the door as they had no right to close it. He did so, and they had to open it again; but we do not expect to occupy in the schoolhouse any more as we began meetings in private houses, and organized a building committee, and hope to have a house of our own soon. This is a cheering promise: "All things work together for good to them that love God."

We are preaching the gospel, baptizing, building churches, organizing Sunday-schools, branches, and districts, running a college, building a publishing house, sanitarium, children's home, home for the aged. Are we making the progress in the purification of Zion we should be? There is a society in the church known as the Daughters of Zion, whose object is the purification of Zion. Why not strengthen and enlarge this society by adopting a code of rules and regulations which will do away with the drinking of intoxicating liquors and the use of tobacco among the Saints? These two evils are injurious and expensive, and impede the spiritual progress and purity of all who use them. Zion must be purified before she is redeemed. We are taught to deny ourselves and follow Jesus, for the pure in heart shall see God. Our bodies are temples for the Holy Spirit to dwell in, and we should not defile them. Something ought to be done to divert the minds of the Saints from these things, also from joining societies, secret or otherwise, outside of the church for the purpose of getting gain and being popular among people of the world. The great stream of money which is continually flowing out of the church should be changed so as to flow into the church.

Every man should endeavor to increase the prosperity of the place in which he dwells, and to improve the character of the population. There is no virtue more noble or more illustrious than public spirit—that spirit which induces a man to sacrifice his interest, his ease, and his inclination, to promote the public good. But mind, party spirit is not public spirit—party spirit seeks the ascendancy of the party; public spirit seeks the good of the whole. One is a gilded counterfeit, the other is sterling gold. Hoping to see the Saints young and old take a deeper interest in the purification and redemption of Zion, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

D. E. TUCKER.

CLAYTON, Manchester, England.

Dear Herald: We were met, according to appointment, by our young Bro. Pitt, and on account of the position he held with one of the Chicago Construction Companies, we had the privilege of seeing some things in construction. One of them was the wonderful underground contrivance for the bringing of goods to and from the large warehouses without any knowledge or interference with the street traffic whatever, and which we thought to be a wonderful contrivance with its large pillars of cement and steel girders or belts, and subway pillars going into the ground more than one hundred feet deep with steel belts around every four feet. Our brother then took us onto the top of a building four hundred feet high, where we had a look over Lake Michigan. Had the weather been clear, it would have been a beautiful sight, but it was a little foggy, so we could not see far. We were here only two days. It is a very busy place. It covers more ground than New York. One of the stores we visited employs ten thousand hands, and we are told that White, murdered by Thaw, was the architect of the building. Chicago is more like New York than any place we have visited in the States. Our brother took us to a restaurant where we had an excellent supper, then we went to the station and at twenty minutes past six bade our kind brother good-bye. We arrived at Kansas City about nine o'clock in the morning. Here we were met by Bro. Rushton, Sr., and Sr. Waldron, and were at once hurried away to the house where an anxious mother waited for her son.

After supper, with Bro. and Sr. Rushton, Sr., we made our way, it being Wednesday night, to the fellowship meeting, where we met quite a number gathered, and enjoyed the hour with them immensely, and went back to our little home-stead to sleep and dream of Zion and prepare for the morrow.

On the morning of the 13th of March we had the pleasure of walking about the streets of the beautiful little town of Independence, and saw some of the old landmarks that we had so often read about, and were privileged to meet many brothers and sisters that we knew before only through their epistles in the church papers. But we found them in person as their epistles reflected. Bro. John having been here before, knew many, and kept introducing one after another to the writer, who felt a little lost with the many names and different features, and altogether seemed to lack the power of adaptation to the changed conditions. While in town we called in the office of the stake presidency and there had the privilege of being introduced to Bro. Harrington, stake president, and Bro. Garrett, his colaborer. We were invited to Bro. Harrington's for supper, and together with Bro. John's father and mother we spent a very pleasant evening. On the 14th we went to Sr. Waldron's and had a very pleasant day with them talking of this wonderful latter-day work.

On Sunday, the 17th, we went to the young people's prayer-meeting, commencing at eight o'clock in the morning, and we had the pleasure of hearing the songs, prayers, and testimonies from a goodly number of young men and women thus gathered, altogether numbering one hundred and fifteen. You may be sure we felt good. At the close of this wonderful service, we attended the Sunday-school, and the writer had the privilege for the first time of joining in Sunday-school service with so many of our people. There were nearly one thousand present, and the singing and the music were heavenly, and it was a beautiful sight to see so many, young, middle-aged, and old engaged in this wonderful work. And as the writer looked at the little heads, apparently performing their part, and the deep interest and care of their teachers, every one zealous and well informed in the truths of the lesson for the morning, also the beautiful order that prevailed, and heard the music, and every one in harmony with the same moving to their respective classes, the scene was to us most beautiful. In fact all seemed to have something to do, and were minding their own business, and doing it with all their might, mind, and strength. Then we thought of them being the future men and women, and future fathers and mothers, and of the permeating effect this kind of work must have upon the future generation. Dear brethren and sisters, you can not possibly lose your reward. After Sunday-school we assembled for preaching-service, Bro. John being the speaker, and you who have heard him know somewhat of the treat that was in store for us.

At half past two in the afternoon we attended the prayer-service. The lower room was well filled, and the power of God was present in the gift of prophecy; and to you, dear readers, who have never felt the power of such a number filled with the spirit of this latter-day work, we can not describe our feelings.

We assembled again in the evening at a quarter of eight for preaching-service, your writer being the one announced to occupy, and thus ended our first Sunday in the land of Zion. We were told that they have a branch membership of more than seventeen hundred, and nearly one thousand in the Sunday-school.

On the 19th I went to Bro. Kelley's, the Bishop of the church; and on the same date went with Bro. John to the station where he took train for Lamoni in order to meet with the Quorum of Twelve on the 20th. Bro. John's father went with us to the station, and after Bro. John had gone we had a little look around in Kansas City. It is a center of industry, and its market is a center market for many of the farmers and gardeners of the States, and its buildings seem to be permanent structures and altogether modern. It is also a central place for the railways.

On Sunday the 24th we went to early prayer-meeting, and later to Bro. Booker's for dinner. Bro. and Sr. Booker came from Leeds, England, and they had a very strange experience before landing. They by some means got onto the emigrants' island, and for over one week had to live on bad food and among people that they could not converse with, because they could not understand each others' language; and they told us it was a disgrace for any civilized people to be placed under such conditions, and the authorities of the place were going to send them back had it not been for the kind interposition of some missionary lady of some of the religious societies there. Ultimately, according to her instructions they had to make an appeal to Washington. We think with the good missionary lady who so kindly intervened, that it is a standing disgrace upon the powers that be to allow such things. Anyhow, the brother and sister managed to survive, and, relating their hard experience with tears in their eyes, said that the God they had set out to Zion to serve was their only object in this life, and that if they had the same things to go through again they would do it. Such is their unshaken faith in the steps they have taken. In our last conversation with them I asked them how I should answer the different inquiries about them in the old country, and with bright faces both joined in the statement that they were perfectly contented and happy.

At night with Bro. and Sr. Rushton, Sr., we went to Englewood. After supper attended a cottage-meeting. On the 27th I went to Bro. Arber's, had dinner with them, then went with Bro. Arber to Kansas City, and we had the pleasure of going through Armour's Packing house, which was indeed a rare treat to me.

WILLOUGHBY, Ohio, July 30, 1907.

Editors Herald: I still find myself in the conflict for truth, striving to maintain my integrity, and defend the work of God. I am still in the old historic town of Kirtland caring for the house of the Lord, trying to educate the children of men in the principles of truth. Many are the visitors that come to see the "Temple," and other points of interest here. In attending to visitors as they come from all parts of the country, and many parts of the world, a person is brought face to face with almost every shade of character. The "Mormons" of Utah seem to invade this part at present. They come in threes and fours, sometimes more. On July 4, there was a delegation of them here, and one of them made the statement that a former issue of the SAINTS' HERALD published a statement acknowledging that Joseph Smith, the prophet, was a polygamist. Please give date of the publication if you know it. This morning three others made their appearance upon the scene and wished to see the Temple. After showing them through, the conversation drifted to the matter of our differences. There is nothing that we can offer them that they are willing to accept as evidence. Anything put forth is to them a concocted mess of stuff gotten up by the "Josephites," hence is of no value to them and proves nothing; but they are willing to stand forth and defend that base doctrine, polygamy, as being God-given through the prophet Joseph; and when confronted with the statement that Brigham Young said it was given to him personally, they flatly deny it, and charge the people of the Reorganization with fraud. To-day J. R. Hicks, O. H. Barrus, and George L. Spangenberg stood in open defense of the beautiful and elevating (?) doctrine of polygamy, and G. L. Spangenberg made the glaring statement that Joseph Smith, the President of the Reorganization, knew that his father, the Prophet, was a polygamist, and that he gave the revelation in 1843 sanctioning the same. Another of their strong points is the doctrine of baptism for the dead. They have such faith in it that they are willing to take fees for the offering of prayers for the dead, and the liberating them from the prison house, and with all the efforts and proofs brought for their consideration against their right to officiate in the matter in this day was as naught to them. The same spirit that ruled through the Dark Ages is the spirit that rules in Utah to-day. There are without doubt, many honest-hearted souls who are kept in darkness by those in authority, who, if they were permitted to see the light, and to partake of its quickening rays, would turn from the institution of Brigham Young and praise God for their deliverance. May God in his mercy hasten the day when those who desire to serve God in truth may be liberated. I am thankful for this gospel, and the knowledge I have of its great truthfulness, and the power in it to save; but with all the great knowledge I have received, still my deluded friends of Utah are praying for my deliverance, and state that by and by I shall awaken to a realization of the fact that I have been promulgating a false doctrine. I am truly thankful that we worship, we know what—the God who does not change, who does not contradict himself, the God who does not tell one class of people it is lawful for them to commit whoredoms, and condemn it in others. Not a God who establishes a rule of procedure for his church, and immediately repents and gives others a right to do as they please—to gratify their base natures. But our God is a God of truth, one in whom we can place our confidence and never have it betrayed. O Brighamism! thou doctrine of the evil one, how hast thou emeshed the innocent, and dragged them down to hell! Hell, I say, because it has robbed them of their rights, their liberty, their free expression of thought, their right to act and think for themselves; made them slaves to the few who have lorded it over God's heritage. Truly how "cursed is the man that trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm"! How many poor souls have been cursed by the blighting influences of that institution, "Brighamism."

I am here in Kirtland in the interest of the church, and make it my duty to draw the line very plainly between us and all others pretending to be of us. My desire is for the speedy triumph of the truth.

Your brother in Christ,
A. E. STONE.

Royal Rest.

Dear Herald: I feel compelled to give a brief account of the goodness of the Lord to us this year. At the same time it is almost necessary to precede it with a little explanation or account of the past. My good husband has been a member of the church for more than twenty-five years, rather a cool one, I should judge, from all I can learn since I came here four years ago. I never saw a Saints' paper, nor has my husband attended meetings of the branch previous to my obedience to the gospel nearly a year ago. When I united with the church I was determined to have the church papers, and pay tithing, even though we were burdened by a heavy debt. But my husband had never paid any, because he said it was required only when a surplus remained after all debts were paid. Well, I felt that if we waited until then we might never feel that we could spare anything for the Lord. Last year I had been successful with my turkeys, so I sent to the Bishop a tenth of my receipts from the sale of the turkeys, and a very small sum to the children's home fund. I wish to say that exactly a hundredfold has been our share for every dollar that I sent in. I feel that we can not sufficiently magnify and bless our heavenly Father for his boundless mercies to us; and I hope this simple statement of facts may show to others, and encourage them to do their duty to the church. I am convinced that our good Lord will never let his humble servants outdo him in generosity.

The good sister who sent twenty dollars to the HERALD Office, earned by doing janitor work, will be especially blessed. What a reproach to those who have an abundance of this world's goods, and are niggardly in their offerings!

Your sister in the true faith,

August 9, 1907.

Eastern Reunion.

Editors Herald: Through providential leading, I was permitted to attend the eastern reunion held at Highland Lake, Massachusetts. The location is what may appropriately be called an ideal one for camping. There were seventy-nine tents on the grounds; an up to date commissary in charge of Bro. William Frost. Everybody provided for. From three hundred and fifty to five hundred persons in attendance at the services. The reunion was in charge of Brn. U. W. Greene, M. C. Fisher, and W. W. Smith, and they had everything well in hand and running smoothly—Bro. F. C. Busiel looking after the police duties, and Bro. John Bradt doing much of the hard work along with members of the committee, Brn. Toombs, Barnes, and Zimmermann.

There were quite a number of Saints from Maine and Pennsylvania. Among the well-known from a distance were, Bro. John Zimmermann and family, Walter W. Smith and family, Daniel T. Shaw and family, and M. H. Bond and wife; the last named from Independence, Missouri. Elders S. F. Cushman, R. W. Farrell, and G. H. Burnham were also present. Bro. John Suttill had charge of the store. We noted the absence of general missionary appointees, William E. LaRue and Richard Bullard. Also missed Bro. Thomas Whiting, G. W. Robley, and Orrin Coombs, former active associates here. Bro. G. H. Gates and Charles Coombs were at their posts as of yore, also E. H. Fisher, Doctor John Gilbert, and Doctor W. A. Sinclair, with many others of the local helpers too numerous to mention.

Bro. A. N. Hoxie, Jr., had charge of the music with Sr. Clara Zimmermann at the organ. Members of the Fall River choir rendered a number of selections, and solos were sung by several of the young sisters, so that this part of the program was well provided for.

Each morning at fifteen minutes of eleven was held the Highland Lake school of methods for Religio and Sunday-school workers, in charge of Walter W. Smith. Each afternoon a normal class for the priesthood was conducted by U. W. Greene.

There were fifteen baptisms. The reunion was a most excellent one. Order, respect, and a social good feeling prevailed all through. Not a jar of discord to be heard anywhere. It was to all intents and purpose a Saints' meeting. The preaching-services were of the best, and the prayer- and social-meetings were characterized with zeal and devotion. Some of the sessions were rendered extraordinary by reason of the presence of the Holy Spirit in power and demonstration. All present seemed to catch the fire of the old Jerusalem gospel and were cheered on in the faith. The gift of prophecy was exercised by several of the brethren present in a pleasant and encouraging manner. To be recognized from on high in so signal a manner in these latter times in confirmation of the faith brings joy to the heart of every Saint, and skepticism and doubt flee to the four winds.

We esteem it fortunate to have been privileged to meet with so many Saints and tried friends again in the Eastern Mission; and this meeting will be remembered as among our pleasantest experiences. Whatever others may be thinking or doing, the Saints here are in earnest, and going forward in the work. Hope to be in regularly assigned field again, sometime this month.

WM. H. KELLEY.

News From Branches

SPOKANE, BRANCH.

The month of July has slipped into the great eternity. We have held our own despite the warm weather. Our congregations have not decreased, notwithstanding the outings at the lakes, the wonderful attractions at the numerous parks, the excursions to the snow-capped hills, and the many other devices that allure to pleasure rather than to God.

Our Fred A. came in on us unannounced, July 27; he no doubt thought to catch us in the "suds," but our washing was over and he found a clean house and an appreciative audience. He gave us a grand sermon on Sunday morning; but at twenty minutes to six in the evening in consequence of a telegram from Seattle, he vanished like a spectre into the wooded hills towards the setting sun. A card from him states that the depths of sadness and gloom had settled over the homes of Brn. Tullar and Clark in consequence of the death of those brethren. Our brother had been called to offer words to console, soothe, encourage, and comfort the bereaved.

The speakers of the month were F. A. Smith, A. J. Layland, G. W. Winegar, A. J. Smith, and the writer. The weather has been quite cool with the exception of three days—the 27th, 28th, and 29th—which were as hot as cotton.

Yes, I have heard it was hot in Michigan, but who ever heard it an exhibition of "valor" to sniff humidity, and then, "Great Scott," to talk about this "harmless critter of mine" infuriates my otherwise peaceful soul.

T. W. CHATBURN.

FIRST KANSAS CITY.

The weather for a few weeks past has reminded us of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego; but we are thankful for the change in the thermometer, it falling below eighty this morning.

Since last month, we have been blessed with most excellent preaching by Brn. G. H. Hilliard, B. J. Scott, R. J. Parker, R. May, and others; also our prayer-meetings have been very good. God by his Spirit blessed and comforted his people, with words of instruction in regard to the future and duty of Saints.

Our Sunday-school is making quite a showing in the Christmas Offering. Last year we contributed thirty-five dollars. At the beginning of this year we resolved we would make it fifty. Soon after we made a change to one hundred. We already have on hand seventy-six dollars, and have yet one third of the year to go on. Bro. D. H. Blair has it in hand, and he is a good one.

Sr. George Hidy arranged for an ice-cream social for last Tuesday in behalf of the Sunday-school. It proved a perfect success, and over twenty dollars was turned into the children's offering fund.

Last Sunday, a good collection was made to assist the Second Kansas City Branch in the erection of a nice stone church, on the site of the old one. The stone work is about finished. The building is a credit to the Saints of that branch. W. S. Brown, as presiding elder, is doing well. We trust all the Saints in the city, and in Independence, will do what they can to assist them in completing this much-needed building. A little from each member will raise the amount, and we will not miss it.

F. C. WARNKY.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.

On the first Sunday in July our Religio, which hitherto existed as an independent society, joined the General Association and elected Sr. Nellie Clark, president. Many of the members of the old organization had to send for their letters from long distances, but are now seeking the highest development and greatest good for all, as members of the new and flourishing local.

We are gathering in the sheaves, one by one. On Sunday, July 28, Bro. A. W. Gorbitt inducted into the kingdom, through baptism, Sr. Hattie Humphrey, four generations of her relatives witnessing the ceremony, many of whom, we hope, will follow her example in the near future as now is the opportunity, to-morrow is beyond our reach.

Brn. G. W. Thorburn and J. Davis began tent meetings in Renton, the early part of summer, a few of the Seattle Saints assisting in the singing. Tenting from place to place with varied success, they now go to Centralia, the seat of our next conference in February, and from there to Vancouver, British Columbia.

Sacrament Sunday, August 4, marked the advent of another remarkable and gloriously, heavenly meeting; we began in solemn mien and lowly devotion, with no evidence of special benediction, but as the fervent prayers and testimonies followed in rapid yet calm succession, not an eye was dry and every heart full and overflowing with a peace and love that the world can not receive,—the Comforter, the Spirit of truth. The gift of prophecy was manifested through Elder D. W. Davis, encouraging the Saints to "go forward," and the desires of their hearts would be granted.

The "Jots Man" from Spokane came walking into camp at Seattle conference, without his balky little "critter," and by the aid of his confederate, Bro. A. J. Layland, carried away three of our counties to augment his "inland empire." Come again, brethren!

Our worthy and venerable brother, Elder John Keeler, the patriarch, gave many blessings previous to and during the conference.

Bro. Tullar, long a resident of Ballard, departed this life on July 25. Apostle F. A. Smith preached at the obsequies. The branch extend their deep sympathy to the bereaved family of the deceased.

Among the elders attending the conference were R. C. Evans, of our beloved presidency, and Apostle F. A. Smith. The coming of one of the First Presidency and one of the Twelve was a sign for the Saints to gather, and they came from far and wide, to worship God and honor his servants. Never will Sunday, August 11, be forgotten as long as life and memory lingers on mortal ground. Angels must have inspired the speakers many fold, for truth shone very bright, and very plain, while the Spirit of God lifted both speakers and hearers alike far above the ordinary, common, and everyday path of life. It was hard to sing, "God be with you till we meet again," as we did not want to part and leave the kind, affectionate love, and happy countenances of Saints who communed with God, for an unsympathetic and frowning world, who neither accept our invitation and pleading, nor heed our warning testimony. We feel for the poor missionary, who has to face the world, and realize that the day of the "testimony of earthquakes, the voice of thunders, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds," is upon us.

At fifteen minutes of eleven Bro. R. C. Evans addressed the congregation, using as his text 1 Kings 17:13: "Make me thereof a little cake first." How we all wept and rejoiced, laughed, or felt the sting of sorrow or regret, as he swayed our emotions in his characteristic way. But we learned our lesson and learned it well. "To be willing to give a complete surrender of the last vestige of selfishness, not blind obedience; but strict and inspired fidelity. God believes in unrestricted reciprocity."

In the afternoon, Bro. F. A. Smith spoke on tithes, consecrations, etc., in an able manner, as "meat in due season," followed by R. C. Evans at a quarter of eight, on what they happily called the top layer of the "sandwich," which he promised to make "thin." But "that sandwich," the top layer was in keeping with the rest,—generous and wholesome, filling us with the "bread of life." Bro. Evans may arrange to come again in 1909, the time of the A. Y. P. Fair, provided we follow the methods of Toronto. We hope and pray that we may arise and work; for thousands and hundreds of thousands of souls are flocking to this "Queen City of the Pacific," as good and as prepared a people as ever graced the Majestic. We hold the key to success: shall we unlock it?

DES MOINES, IOWA.

The daughter (aged eight months) of Mr. F. A. and Sr. Iva L. Taylor, of Enterprise, died at the hospital in this city last week from spinal meningitis. The body was taken to Buckeye for interment.

The city of Des Moines with a population of about ninety thousand has one hundred and five saloons in operation at the present time, and liquor dealers say that the consumption of beer and whisky has increased twenty per cent during the past three years.

On Sunday, August 4, the first Jewish church divorce granted in Des Moines in many years was consummated in the Jewish synagogue here, Rabbi H. Zeitzig officiating. The woman had secured a legal divorce in the district court of Polk County, but it was necessary to appeal to the rabbi for a church separation. The ceremony carrying out this church separation lasted eight hours without intermission.

"Rabbi Zeitzig is the only rabbi west of Chicago vested with the power to grant church divorces. After the decree was translated the ceremony was performed.

"One of the interesting phases of the ceremony was the breaking of the marriage vows. The woman stood with her hands together and palms extended upward. Rabbi Zeitzig pronounced in Hebrew the church words of separation. Then the husband laid the decree in the hands of his spouse. With witnesses she retired to a separate room and placed the decree in her bosom. She reappeared with this still pressed against her heart and announced publicly that she was satisfied with the separation and the provisions made for her by her husband. The rabbi then took the decree from her and it was made a part of the church records."

A mock war took place in the vicinity of Des Moines during the second week of August, and it was as near war in reality as it is possible for the imitation to be. The annual encampment of the Iowa National Guards for this year was planned to carry out this mock war. The city of Des Moines was the object of an attack. The defending army was camped five miles from the city, and the invading army twenty miles north. On August 9 the invading army began their advance upon the city, and continued it during the 10th and 11th, every step of the way being, fiercely contested by the defending army. Field artillery was used, the cannonading being heard in the city, companies of soldiers were attacked and captured, fierce fighting took place at close range, with blank cartridges, hand to hand conflicts occurred, the hospital corps and the Red Cross were busy caring for the needy. The signal service corps laid miles of wire, instruments were attached at any point and telegraph communication established with any part of the maneuvers, showing the efficiency of this part of the signal service. Thousands of citizens visited the scene of the maneuvers during the three days, and viewed the operations with interest and profit.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Quite a number of Independence young people have, of late, been interesting themselves in the street-work in Kansas City. On Sunday afternoon a special effort was made to make the song-service attractive in order to hold the attention of the passer-by, and, as a result, about one hundred and fifty gathered around our young men at the market square, and heard the "word." Glad to see several Kansas City Saints at the Sunday service; in fact quite a number are visiting back and forth at the various branches of the two cities.

On next Sunday morning, a hundred copies of the autobiography of Joseph Luff will be placed in the local Sunday-school library in the west lower room, for distribution. This will give opportunity to all to read this book, the only conditions being that the book be well kept, and returned when read. If the separate library interests of Independence were combined as outlined in the proposed library merger, we would have a library of over a thousand books.

Sunday evening the church service was unusually well attended by a very attentive audience to hear Elder R. J. Parker preach on the subject, "Who was it that apostatized?" The effort was a most clear and well-defined presentation of the subject, and showed the speaker to have the matter well in hand. Bro. Paul Craig rather excelled himself in his organ work, which together with the congregational hymns, the usual choir anthem, and a solo from Sr. Allie Barbee, which it is needless to say was well rendered, made the song-service a pleasing preface to the sermon. J. A. GARDNER.

August 18.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Sunday was a nice day, and the services were well attended. President John Smith spoke in the chapel in the morning; Arthur Allen in the evening. C. I. Carpenter occupied at the Saints' Home; Winter Hastings at Liberty Home. The attendance at Sunday-school was four hundred and thirty-seven.

The following is reported from branches and appointments: S. D. and Joseph Shippy at Greenville, John Smith at Wion in the evening, Leon A. Gould and F. M. Weld at Evergreen, William Anderson and R. J. Lambert at Andover, George Needham at Bloomington, I. P. Baggerly at Oland, D. C. White at Davis City.

Bro. H. A. Stebbins started for Atchison and Blue Rapids, Kansas, Monday, where he goes after repeated invitation to visit with and preach to the Saints. He will be away for several days.

In the interest of the Sunday-school and Religio work of the Lamoni Stake, we announce that T. A. Hougas, General Sunday-school Superintendent, will be in attendance at the Lamoni Stake reunion, to conduct the institute work for the auxiliaries. The Daughters of Zion will conduct one meeting, on Monday morning.

All branch meetings are suspended after Wednesday evening of this week, until after the Lamoni Stake reunion, which convenes on Friday next.

The Saints everywhere no doubt are always pleased to learn of the advance on the new HERALD Office plant. The roof is now on both the main building and the power plant, and the plastering is being done. Bro. E. O. Clark of Des Moines has charge of the plastering force.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—The marriage of our correspondent, Bro. John Garver, to Sr. Mynn Hayer, occurred at the home of the bride's parents in Lamoni, August 11. Quite naturally this event overshadows all others in the mind of our correspondent, so any scarcity of news items this week and last may well be pardoned. Besides being our correspondent and one of the HERALD Office force, Bro. Garver is an active worker in branch and stake work, where he is generally and favorably known. He has chosen a companion who is in every way fitted to be a helpmeet to him in his church-work. We feel that these young people are entering upon a bright and useful career, and our best wishes go with them.]

The New Public-Utilities Law in Wisconsin.

In the regulation of rates, fares, and charges the Wisconsin legislation marks an important advance on that of New York and other States is the fact that the commission fixes the rates absolutely and not merely the maximum rates. It is as much an offense for a corporation to charge less as it is to charge more than the rate set by the commission. This is designed to prevent discrimination, but the commission is required to make a comprehensive classification of services for each utility, in which it may take account of the quantity purchased, the time when used, and any other condition that reasonably justifies a difference in the rate per unit of service. Thus discriminations are authorized, but they must be open and reasonable and must be established only after public investigation.

By the enactment of this law the railroad commission becomes to the fullest extent a public-service commission. Every public utility in the State, except streets, highways, and bridges, is brought within its jurisdiction. It becomes also a local government board, for it regulates towns, villages, and cities in their management of these undertakings. Its authority is great and far-reaching. It employs experts and agents and fixes their compensation, and can draw on all of the unappropriated money in the State treasury. It enters into the daily life of the people more than all other agencies of government combined. This will become more evident as time goes on, for under its control is placed the development of the enormous water power of Wisconsin, which eventually, through electricity, will light the streets and houses and furnish motive power to operate railways, factories, and possibly even farms.—From "The Wisconsin public-utilities law," by John R. Commons, in the "American Review of Reviews" for August.

I take the liberty of soliciting your patronage as we are in a position to do BANKING BUSINESS BY MAIL very satisfactorily. Open accounts can be placed with us for safety at your convenience and command. We have opened a savings department paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood shorn of all political ambition with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. ## CORRECTION.

On page 782, this issue, twenty-sixth line from top of second column, the sentence should read, "Except a man be baptized in water, and by the gift of the Holy Ghost, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

The suit brought against Mrs. Eddy, leader of the Christian Science Church, to prove her of unsound mind, was dismissed August 21. It is the opinion of alienists who have come in contact with Mrs. Eddy that she is still competent to manage her own affairs.

Editorial

DID GOD SAY THAT HE WOULD SPEAK "OTHERWISE"?

Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts.—Wherefore, this people shall keep my commandments, saith the Lord of hosts, or cursed be the land for their sakes. For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people: otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things.—Book of Jacob 2: 6.

Here is an explicit statement that polygamy and concubinage are (or were) abominable in the sight of God. Here is an equally explicit statement that God will not permit such things when he is engaged in the work of raising up a righteous people. Yet there are those who profess to believe that the closing sentence of this paragraph from the Book of Mormon changes the whole tenor of its teaching and opens the way for the future acceptance of the things therein condemned.

There are those in Utah and elsewhere who claim that God was the author of the language above quoted, and that when he said, "For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people: otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things," he intended to raise up a people by the polygamous route at some future time when he would command the people "otherwise." There are others who claim that Joseph Smith was the author of those words and that he had it in mind to introduce polygamy at some date then future.

We have been requested to give an explanation of this closing sentence and we will do so. The writer, however, does not claim to speak for the church or for any other individual. Others may indorse his explanation or they may do "otherwise," as their judgment may direct.

In the first place, it is our opinion that whatever the correct interpretation may be, the ones before referred to are not correct. A little common-sense examination of them, uninfluenced by prejudice, will convince one that they are not worthy of indorsement.

No sane, honest man who understands the nature of God will long argue that God would brand a certain thing as "abominable" and then immediately prepare the way for a future indorsement of it as sound and wholesome doctrine. Nor is it any more reasonable to suppose that Joseph Smith wrote those words, and, having his heart set on introducing polygamy, would thus declare it an abominable doctrine and practice.

These positions can not be maintained. We must seek some interpretation of this sentence that will harmonize with the major portion of the text.

Notice, first, God does not say that he will ever speak otherwise than he has spoken. He says, "Otherwise, they shall hearken." To our mind the following position is correct: The text in question is a statement of the divine principle of continued revelation. "If I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people." It is in strict harmony with one of the fundamental thoughts of the latter-day work to believe that when God is raising up a people he commands them. What is the alternative? Only this, when he does not command them they must perforce "hearken unto these things," already given, if they are to have any light at all.

Another thought equally fundamental is that when God does give additional commandment to the people the new revelation will harmonize with all that have gone before it. It is inconceivable that he would call black black to-day and to-morrow call it white.

Do the facts of history bear us out in our interpretation of this passage? Let us see. Time passed on (centuries, in fact), and God was again prepared to raise up seed unto himself. In a revelation given through Joseph Smith, during a conference at Fayette, New York, Sunday, January 2, 1831, the Lord said: "And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless: wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law."—Doctrine and Covenants 38:7

Here is a fair enough test case. So far, it sustains our contention. God is raising up a righteous seed, and in harmony with the promise he will "command them." "Otherwise" they would be compelled to depend upon that which is written. Now if the commandment when it comes is in accord with the commandment given to the Nephites, "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none," then our case is established. If he commands them "otherwise," the people in Utah may well claim that they are in the right.

They gathered to the Ohio, and on February 9, 1831, in the presence of twelve elders, the law was given that was to enable them to become a "righteous people." Listen! Among other teachings regarding honesty and morality, we find the following: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repent not, he shall be cast out."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:7.

To those who claim that Joseph Smith gave this revelation, and also that he was personally the author of the Book of Mormon, we say, that if so, he then and there gave the lie to their claim that he had it in mind to introduce polygamy.

To those who accept both the Book of Mormon and this revelation as coming from God, we say that this ought to discredit the thought that when God came to raise up a righteous seed he would find it necessary to teach "otherwise" and give a polygamous law. This is the second time, at least, that he has personally stated that he was engaged in raising up a righteous seed, and in each case he has been very careful to admonish the individual man to be faithful and true to his one wife. No, this is the third instance, because Malachi in speaking of the wife given to Adam says, "And did he not make one? yet had he the residue of the spirit. And wherefore one? that he might seek a godly seed. Therefore take heed to your spirit, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth."—Malachi 2:15.

The second instance is found in the paragraph before quoted from the Book of Mormon, wherein he says that he has led this people out of the land of Jerusalem that he might raise up a righteous branch. In order to accomplish this end he commands that no man shall have more than one wife. Yet in the face of this we are asked to believe that all along he intended sometime to reverse himself and seek a "good" seed by "abominable" methods.

The third instance is in connection with the word of the Lord as given at the Ohio, before quoted, where he again seeks a righteous people, and in order that he may be successful he commands that each man shall cleave unto his own wife and none other.

If these three instances do not make the will of God plain, it can not be made plain. In their light it is useless to ask us to believe that God intended sometime to speak "otherwise."

ELBERT A. SMITH,

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Elder G. J. Waller writes from Honolulu, under date of August 9, as follows: "Last Sunday morning we held our first services in our new church-building. We had a good congregation, made up principally of Hawaiians. The church looks very nice, both outside and inside, and we find it comfortable and convenient. On Sunday morning I baptized six parties. Of the number four were Hawaiians and one a young Chinaman. One Hawaiian brother was ordained to the office of priest. More are preparing to be baptized soon."

Those who have read Bro. Gerard J. S. Abels' defense before the Bishop's court in Utah, published in recent numbers of the HERALD, will be interested in a short biographical sketch of his life, together with his picture, soon to appear in the HERALD. He writes under date of August 17 as follows: "My case was finally disposed of August 13. I intend to appeal my case to the council of the church, which of course does not exist in Utah, but it will probably bring out in writing that such a court does not exist—one more evidence of summary changes."

One brother writes concerning a recent editorial, "Most striking to me was the editorial anent the industrial department in Graceland College. I have meditated with a certain pleasure over the same prospect that you portray so clearly—that Zion is to develop the very talent that shall adorn her. How beautiful! How much in harmony with that other counsel from above, that our garments shall be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of our hands. Oh, that Zion's coming beauty may be the blessed product of our own hands!"

From the Weekly Free Press, Winnipeg, August 14, we glean the astonishing information that the Reorganization has its headquarters at Providence, Missouri. (Thus Providence settles the question of headquarters.) Also we learn that our chief strength is now in California and Washington. Perhaps they have in mind Bro. Chatburn's "inland empire."

Elders C. J. Hunt and John Jordison are out with striking and attractive handbills advertising tent meetings at Lehi, Iowa, to continue until further notice. They report fair attendance and deep interest.

The enrollment at Graceland College bids fair to excell any previous record. Applications are coming in daily.

Original Poetry

A Heart Song.

There's a song in my heart from morning till night,
A song of God's wonderful love;
Who has called me to walk in the pathway of light
That leads to the kingdom above.
'Tis a straight, narrow way, and somehow but few
The entrance are willing to see;
The traditions of men have so hid it from view,
But, praise God, he has shown it to me.

The broad way is filled with many who dream
They are bound for the kingdom of God;
They go this way and that way, and few of them seem
To care for the path Jesus trod.
The few who would find it, the taunts and the sneers
Of the multitude turn them away;
Or Satan attacks with his doubts and his fears,
To keep them from finding the way.

Then false teachers come with their honey-sweet words
Of just "faith" and "the debt is all paid";
Till the Lord's invitation no longer is heard,
And they dream they have fully obeyed.
When alas! they have never learned what was the will
Of the Lord, to which they should give heed;
So blind, their blind leaders they follow until
Is sad their condition indeed.

Yet they think they are rich, and they think they are whole,
Though ragged, and wretched, and poor;
And they heed not the counsel, "Come to me for the gold,
And the treasures that ever endure."
For the robes of "white linen" appear not so fair,
As the tinsel and tawdry array,
That Fashion and Folly decree they must wear,
Bond-servants are all who obey.

Since the gold of the kingdom hath no power to buy
The poor paltry pleasures of earth;
Though freely 'tis offered, it is coldly passed by,
And counted as of little worth.
They heed not the promise of life-giving bread,
Nor yet of heaven's soul-cheering;
Nor prepare for His coming, who so kindly hath said,
His Saints in his kingdom should shine.

Making light of the law that the King hath laid down
For those who the kingdom would see;
Though to all who obey he has promised a crown,
And joint heirs with the King they shall be.
So plain is the law, it is but to believe
On the word of the Lord and repent,
Be baptized in the water, and the Spirit receive,
'Neath the hands of the one he hath sent.

Oh, friends! will you list to the King's gentle voice,
And turn from false teachers away?
E'en the angels in heaven will with us rejoice
When fully you trust and obey.
Oh, turn not aside, for the time draweth near
When the King in his beauty shall come;
And shall gather in one all his Saints, far and near,
To Zion, their glorified home. A. R. CORSON.

The Straight Road

THE SAINTS' HOPE; THEIR INHERITANCE.

The hope of the Saints is to be resurrected from the dead, and to possess, to inherit the renovated, the glorified earth. The common belief to-day is that when we die we go direct to heaven, to celestial glory, and there remain throughout eternity; and that when Christ comes he will take, will claim, those of his own who are still living on the earth and transport them beyond the bounds of time and space. That is not Bible. The Testaments, Old and New, are, in teaching, against such a notion. The Bible teaches that after our resurrection, the reunion of our spirits and bodies, we are to stay right here on earth where we will "build houses, and inhabit them; . . . plant vineyards, and eat of the fruit of them" (Isaiah 11 and 65); where we "shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble," for all pests, plagues, and hindrances will be removed, where "the knowledge of the glory of God will cover the land as the waters cover the sea."

Question.—Does not Peter say the earth shall be burned up?

Answer.—That depends on how you punctuate it. He says, "The elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also; and the works that are therein shall be burned up."—2 Peter 3. You see, according to this punctuation, it is only the "works" that are to be burned up. The works are the things, the creations, the makings of man on the earth's surface. You notice that the elements, including the earth, are merely to "melt."

Objection.—But that is not the way it is punctuated in the Bible.

Answer.—What of that? The punctuation of the Bible is arbitrary. Like its division into chapters and verses, the punctuation is only of human introduction. Men who translated it punctuated it according to what they thought was true, and ought to be understood. All scholars admit that the original manuscripts were without punctuation. Peter says in the same connection that "the world that then was [time of flood], being overflowed with water, perished: but the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire," etc. The first world perished (was purged, purified) by water. The second world will perish (be purified) by fire. This is in harmony with verse 13, same chapter, where he says, "We according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." John the Baptist, having referred to the same change the earth is yet to undergo, said: "He [Christ] will thoroughly purge [cleanse] his floor [the earth], and gather his wheat [the righteous] into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff [the wicked] with unquenchable fire."—Matthew 3:12.

Christ said the meek "shall inherit the earth." (Matthew 5:5.) He must have meant the future, for in the present estate the wicked inherit it as much as the meek. He said again: "Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven."—Matthew 6:10. No less than four verses in Psalm 37 affirm that the earth is to be the saints' inheritance, while the wicked are to be "cut off." Job looked forward to the time when he would "stand upon the earth" in the latter day, with his body of flesh. (Job 19.)

When the world was created the waters were "driven into one place"; consequently the land must have been in one place. (Genesis 1.) The "earth was divided" in the days of Peleg. (Genesis 10.) We read in the Bible that it is to be "married" (united, brought together) again.

We believe that God never made something out of nothing; and that he will never make nothing out of something. Although the earth has undergone changes and transfigurations, the elements, the matter, always did exist, and always will exist, though it may be transformed in time to come. According to Genesis 6:12, the earth was destroyed ("I will destroy them with the earth") with the wicked, yet no one believes it was annihilated. Then why should we say that destruction by fire will be annihilation?

John heard the angels sing: "We shall reign on the earth."—Revelation 5. He foresaw that the kingdoms of this world are to become Christ's kingdom. (See Revelation 11.) He was shown that the saints are to reign on the earth for a thousand years. (See Revelation 20.) He saw the new heaven and the new earth. (See Revelation 21.) The Lord said, "Behold, I make all things new"—not all new things. Numbers 14 says all the earth is to be filled with God's glory. Daniel says the stone kingdom is to "fill the whole earth," which has not yet been accomplished. Zechariah says that "the Lord shall be king over all the earth"—not over all the sky. Such will be the Saints' inheritance; such is what they hope for.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

II. AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER L. E. HILLS.

ELDER L. E. HILLS.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is not merely to save individual souls from the torments of hell; but to develop self-government, and to eradicate from our characters selfishness, hate, lust, and all evil.

I was born in Whitewater, Walworth County, Wisconsin, and trace my ancestors back to the landing of the Pilgrims. I will pass over my early life with but little notice. I left my home in Janesville, Wisconsin, when a boy about thirteen years of age, going down the Mississippi River to Memphis, Tennessee, where I worked in the Southern oil works until the Seventh United States Cavalry camped there for a short time on their way to Dakota Territory to guard the Northern Pacific surveying expedition. General George A. Custer enlisted me as a bugler, and took me along to fight Indians. I soon learned to eat hardtack, bean soup, to swear, and much that was bad, and little that was good; and after I had been a soldier a little over a year, I wrote to my mother, and she wrote to the War Department and had me discharged because I was under age. But I stayed home only a short time, then went to Texas where I became a cowboy, and was on a hunt for cattle thieves about a year, continuing the same kind of an education that I got in the army. In the summer of 1875, I started for home, but thought I would visit in Memphis on my way. While there I got a job as brakeman on the Louisville & Nashville Railway, and that was the commencement of my thirty-one years as a railroad man. I always believed in God, but thought if a man was honest and would be square with his friends, he was just as good as a church-member, and to tell the truth a little better, as I thought church-members were mostly old fogies, women, and sissie boys. I thought then that I knew about all that was worth knowing,—just in my fool age, you know; but as I got older I found I had many things to learn that I never dreamed of before. As time passed on, opportunities came to me to hear different revivalists. I remember Harrison, the boy preacher, was one; but their come-up-in-front-and-get-saved invitation never sounded reasonable to me, and I left such meetings believing there was something wrong with that kind of religion; but it started me to thinking, and I noticed that the ministers of the different denominations did not agree as to the doctrine the Bible taught. One man would claim God had sent him to teach Baptist doctrine. Another that God sent him to teach Methodist doctrine. Another that God sent him to teach some other kind of doctrine. But I am sure if God would send a minister to teach one kind of doctrine, he would never send another minister to teach some other kind of doctrine. And I discovered that one was teaching baptism by sprinkling as an outward sign of inward grace, while another was teaching baptism by immersion as the only true mode, and that it was for the remission of sins; others teaching God was love, and very merciful, and also that

Without a day of grace.”

What did I think? Well, that men show but little gratitude to their Creator for giving them a mind, created to think and act intelligently, yet believing in an unreasonable religion. Blind leaders of the blind, and if the blind lead the blind they will all fall into the ditch. (See Matthew 15:14.) A blind faith enslaves the intellect, and it is to the doctrine of, Just believe, only believe, without knowledge or reason, that so many different systems of religion are supported in the world. I began to think that the whole thing was a gigantic confidence game to get gain. And I used to think when any of my friends would join a church, Poor fellows! Got a little wrong in the upper story! Well, I married a girl in Janesville, the daughter of Samuel Powers, and she was a Latter Day Saint (bless her heart); but it did not make any difference to me what church she belonged to; she was a good girl, that was enough for me. She tried to tell me about her religion, but I told her if she was satisfied I was. Well, when she told me she believed Joseph Smith saw an angel, and that he was told where he would find some plates buried in the ground, with ancient writings upon them, and that he was given power to translate them, you can guess how that sounded to me. But the time came when I was to get my eyes opened. Two elders came to our home, W. A. McDowell and C. H. Burr, and commenced preaching in a hall close by, and I went to hear them. It all sounded reasonable, and they seemed to find lots of scripture to prove their conclusions; but when they told of the apostasy, and quoted so much scripture to prove it, also that there was to be a RESTORATION, to say I was surprised is putting it mildly. I went home one night with my mind made up to buy a Bible and see if it did teach such things. I wanted to find Hebrews 5:9, and after looking all through the Old Testament asked my wife where it was. I was not discouraged, however; I had resolved to find out for myself, and then I would know what the Bible said. Night after night, for many months, found me burning the midnight oil, searching, reading, seeking. Jesus said, "seek and ye shall find," and surely God blessed my efforts. I found much more than I expected. I was baptized for the remission of sins (and to please my wife) some time before this; and now I wanted to know what the truth was more than ever. I wanted to be able to tell others why I had joined this church, and I could not understand why it was there were so many different systems of theology among the Christians, all teaching and believing the same Bible, all believing in Christ. Why was it? Do they take the Bible for their guide? And I thought, That can not be. And I found they were changing and construing it, saying it did not mean what it said, and guessing what it did mean; and one would guess one thing, and another something different; one accepting one principle of truth as taught in the Bible, and rejecting another principle of truth that is just as clearly taught. For instance, Jesus, said, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God. And I discovered the D. D's. and many others had doctored this passage of scripture up sure enough, one teaching that the Savior had it wrong. It was born of the Spirit, then of the water. Others said this did not mean water; that it was, Be born of the blood and the Holy Ghost; and others said, No, it meant the word; and still others said it meant the truth, all agreeing it to be nonessential. Well, imagine my surprise at finding such a condition; and I thought, Of what value are men's religious beliefs if they are not in accord with the teachings and commandments of Jesus Christ; and by what authority do men teach that Jesus Christ or his apostles taught or practiced doctrine that is nonessential now?

Well, I wanted to know what was meant. If it was baptism in water, to be born of the water, I believed I could look up the references on baptism and find out. Jesus himself was baptized, and about the last that he taught his disciples was, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Peter wrote, As Noah and his family, eight souls, were saved by water, the like figure whereunto even baptism doth also save us. Luke 7:30 says it is the counsel of God to be baptized. And Paul wrote to the Galatians that as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, and thus become heirs according to the promise. And on the day of Pentecost, Peter and the rest of the apostles were asked, "What shall we do?" Peter answers, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Philip went down to the city of Samaria and baptized some, and after they were baptized in water they received the Spirit. (See Acts 8:12-18.) The same thing happened at Ephesus. (See Acts 19:1-8.) And I was compelled to believe that Jesus meant just what he said: Except a man be baptized in water, and by the gift of the Holy Ghost, he can enter into the kingdom of God. Surely my prayers were answered, that I might have understanding and know the truth. And let me say here, that any one who is honest between himself and God, and will pray and seek, will surely find. God is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. (See Hebrews 11:6.)

Then another question bothered me. Of what value is the baptism of men who are misrepresenting God, who are teaching that some of the principal teachings of Christ are nonessentials? Can they bind in heaven what they bind on earth? Surely they are no better than the scribes and Pharisees were in the Savior's time; and he said to them, "Ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves."—Matthew 23:15. Jesus asked them, "The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? answer me."—Mark 11:30. And they would not say it was from heaven, and they dare not say it was of men for the people believed John was sent of God. Is it possible then, that there is a baptism of men in our day, by men not sent of God? Jesus said, "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."—Matthew 15:9. We read of Paul going to Ephesus, and finding certain disciples (who had been baptized by Apollos unto John's baptism, as they thought). Paul, discovering he had not been sent of God, baptized them again, and when he laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came upon them. (See Acts 19:1-7.) Well, I could understand how men who had faith without knowledge, and a belief without evidence, could be deceived; but men who read the Bible daily, it seemed to me they could not be honest, or they would understand that Jesus Christ was the mediator of a covenant, and the gospel of Christ, the teachings of Christ, the doctrine of Christ was this covenant that he was sent into the world to teach, and is all essential.

It makes me think of a little incident that happened on the railroad. A dutchman going to town with a big load of hay about the last of the sleighing one spring, in crossing the railroad got stuck on the track. He whipped his horses but to no use. One would jump and the other plunge, until they broke a singletree; so he unhitched his horses and went for help; and along came a train, ran into his load of hay, and broke his new bobs all up. Well, he sued the railroad for damages. When it came to trial, the attorney for the railroad, wishing to make the Dutchman admit to the jury that he did not do all that he should to prevent the accident, asked, "Why didn't you flag the train, sir?" "Me flag? Vott you tink? I had no flag." "Well, sir," said the attorney, "why didn't you run down the track and wave your hat or wave your handkerchief, or something to stop the train?" "Wave my hat, und wave my handkerchief? Vell, vell, you tink de engineer could see my handkerchief und my hat und he couldn't see dot whole load of hay? Vell, vot's de matter mit you anyway?" And it seems to me that there are lots of Bible students who see only some little danger signal, and do not see the whole of the gospel, and will not until they run into it at the judgment. (See John 12:48.)

At a sacrament-meeting in Janesville, Wisconsin, I was spoken to by the Spirit through Elder O. N. Dutton, (as in Acts 13:1, 2,) that if faithful I "would be called to preach the gospel; yea, to preach the gospel of the Son of God before kings and queens in a foreign country." Those at that meeting will remember that, I am sure, as all had an evidence of the Spirit's presence. About three months later, I went to Evansville to a meeting, and was there called to the priesthood, the Spirit repeating word for word that which was told me in Janesville, that if faithful I should yet preach the gospel before kings and queens in a foreign country, coming through Elder W. A. McDowell, who was not present, and did not hear what was told me in Janesville. Well, I looked Lou Hills over, and thought, "Me, a preacher? I could easier believe I would be a balloon performer." And of one thing I was sure, and that was, I was never cut out for a preacher. And I told Elder C. H. Burr: "I can't preach; and I don't want to preach; and that is the end of that." But I was persuaded to try, and I was blessed, and discovered that with the Lord's help I could preach. And what a blessing it is to feel the Spirit's influence upon me. Truly it was marvelous to me.

I have talked a great deal with railroad men, many of my old friends that I have worked with for years, and I long to do them good; for I know them to be big-hearted fellows. And how many times I have been asked, "Now, Lou, how can I tell what church is right, and how can I tell the preacher sent of God from the preacher or minister of the world?" Oh, my brothers and sisters, how I have longed and prayed that I might be able to make them understand the restoration of a called ministry, ordained to the priests' office, whom God by his Spirit qualified to represent him as he did the unlearned fisherman in the days of Christ, or as Joshua the son of Nun, who was filled with the spirit of wisdom because Moses had laid his hands upon him and ordained him as God commanded Moses to do. "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him."—John 3:34. In the Mosaic covenant none could offer sacrifices but those ordained to the priest's office. So Christ also, though he were a Son, received the Melchisedec priesthood from heaven, as God had decreed from the foundation of the world that none but those called and ordained to the priests' office could act in his name authoritatively. So Christ called unto him whom he would and ordained twelve, that he might send them forth to preach. (See Mark 3:14.) When we offer our bodies a living sacrifice to God, in the waters of baptism, none but a priest of God can perform the ceremony. (See 1 Peter 2:5-9.) Thus we can understand what the Savior said when talking to the scribes and Pharisees, in Mark 11:30-32. There are only the two priesthoods; never were but the two, the Melchisedec and the Aaronic (see Hebrews 7:11-12), who have been given authority to act in the name of God, and no man can take that honor unto himself but he that is called of God as was Aaron. (See Hebrews 5:4.)

In conversation with a Catholic priest on the train, I asked him what priesthood he held, the Melchisedec or the Aaronic? He said, "Something like Melchisedec. Truth! I was ordained a member of the First Quorum of Seventy in the Stone Church at Independence, Missouri, April 18, 1901, realizing then for the time that my call to the ministry indicated the word of a seventy,—to preach the gospel in a foreign country. It took me a long time to make up my mind to give up the railroad; but I resigned last year, having worked for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway since 1879. Not a fisherman but a railroad man, called and sent out a servant of God, in this fifth dispensation, inviting the people to the great supper (see Luke 14: 16, 17), reasoning with, urging, persuading the people to put on the wedding garments, righteousness, and to be prepared for the marriage supper of the lamb (see Revelations 19: 7-9.) And I wish to say before closing, that the gospel of Christ is not merely to save individual souls from the torments of hell; but to develop self-government, to eradicate from our character selfishness, hate, lust, bigotry, and all that is evil, and teach us to be pure, humble, forgiving, kind, and charitable, thus growing in godliness, ever remembering all must repent, relinquish every appearance of evil, and do right. May our heavenly Father bless all, is my prayer.

Your brother,

HOPE BEYOND THE TOMB.

FUNERAL-SERMON OF BRO. J. M. TULLAR, BY ELDER F. A. SMITH, ASSISTED BY ELDER F. W. HOLMAN, SEATTLE, WASHINGTON,
JULY 29, 1907. (PRAYER BY ELDER E. KEELER.)

Prayer: Holy and righteous Father, we come before thee at this time with sad hearts, to implore thy divine mercies upon these mourners, they that mourn for the lost one that has gone on before. And we pray thee, our Father, to comfort their hearts that they may realize it is not all of death to die; but that they have a hope beyond the grave. Therefore, we pray thee to comfort their hearts as thou alone art able to comfort them. We commit them unto thy care, and ask thee to be with them through the trying seasons of life, that they shall meet him again in the resurrection. Therefore, our Father, we pray thee to impress upon our minds the importance of living righteous and godly lives before thee, that, when the time of separation shall come, there will be no lamentation or mourning, because we realize it is only a separation for a short time, until we shall be reunited again. We do direct these services unto thy care, and ask, in thy name, that thou wouldst proclaim peace and comfort to these mourning ones, clothing with thy divine grace their hearts with truth and soberness. We now commit ourselves into thy hands, and ask thy divine grace in these services, in Christ's name.

SERMON.

We will read sixteen verses of the one hundred and thirty-ninth Psalm:

O Lord, thou hast searched me, and known me. Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising, thou understandest my thought afar off. Thou compassed my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways. For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O Lord, thou knowest it altogether. Thou hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me. Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I can not attain unto it. Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee. For thou hast possessed my reins: thou hast covered me in my mother's womb. I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvelous are thy works; and that my soul knoweth right well. My substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them.

In connection with that and as a foundation for what we have to offer to-day, I shall read a portion of the fifteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians:

Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable.

This last verse we shall use to-day as one of the central thoughts for what we may have to offer. "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." Now we are conscious, seriously so, too, that the object of a funeral-sermon can not be in behalf of those that have gone, except we shall make a eulogy, and a eulogy would benefit them none. But a funeral-sermon to be a eulogy, must be for the comfort and consolation and the help of those who are left to mourn, so that in our talk to-day we shall make an effort, and if it be possible, to bring some word of consolation and hope and comfort and cheer, that shall brighten the darkness and gloom of sorrow that dwells at these separations upon those who are here to mourn those who are gone. We know that we can not help the sorrow and suffering that comes to us, do what we may. Be our hope ever so great, there comes more or less of that loneliness and that sense of loss that no word spoken by the human family, or the human tongue, can possibly relieve; but we do know that there is a solace and a hope, and that Christ can give that—can touch the heart, and in the touch can heal the wound and can bring the silver lining of the dark cloud to view, and its shining shall be brighter and more helpful than ever before,

So, when we take up the thought that is couched in the language here, we discover that the Psalmist had hoped in this Christ and in this future condition that he refers to. The Psalmist in his expression gives vent to the thought that it matters not where he might be, whether he should go to the uttermost parts of the sea, in the heavens above or the earth below, that God's hand and God's eye—in other words, his power—was there, and in contemplation of this thought we want to connect it with the idea that is presented in the further declaration that he makes concerning the formation of the parts or members of his body, that they were fashioned in continuance. Now, this thought we want to get before you to-day as clearly as we can. Death we all know is a separation, and we are conscious of the fact that this mortal body of a man that has moved among us, in the sense that we have looked upon it as the material body of the individual, must decay and pass away. This we call destruction, and yet as I thought and contemplated upon these things this idea of resurrection comes in and presents another line, another thought, that that which looked so destitute and so utterly hopeless when we first viewed it in the form of death and destruction, when it becomes possessed of the power of resurrection, loses its force, when we contemplate the thought that God has said that the body shall rise again. For if you will turn to John, the fifth chapter and twenty-fifth to twenty-eighth verses, he gives us clearly to understand that the dead shall hear his voice and shall live. If you go again to the eleventh chapter of John, the twenty-third to twenty-sixth verses, and so on, you will once more hear him giving expression to the same thought, "though he were dead, yet shall he live" and expressions "though he were dead, yet shall he live" he that "believeth in me shall never die." This has been a strange thought with some. It has presented the question with a good many as to how they could possibly find its fulfillment, and we have been made to realize to some extent that death continues, even they who believe in Jesus, but while this death comes, this separation takes place, and the loved one is removed from us, at least that part that we looked upon as the material body, did you ever stop to think and consider as you looked upon the face of the loved one as it lay cold, inanimate: there is no response there to any affectionate manifestation that you may make to it; you can speak to it, it hears not, it answers not, it moves not. You may look carefully at the eye that heretofore has always brightened and manifested that spirit of intelligence and recognition that showed itself to you when you spoke to it before, and there is no response, it is dead. We use that term to express the idea, it is dead. Now, I want to call to your thought this idea: there is a possibility that we have overlooked something; we have forgotten that this was but the house in which he dwelt. That which we loved; that which was intelligent, that which operated the body, that moved it, that which made the eye bright, that quickened the hearing, that moved the tongue, that touched the heart, is gone. It is not there. That is the part that does not perish; that is the part that is not destroyed. And I even have gone further than that and have said to them sometimes that we should not look upon the destruction of the house with such fear and such horror as some have felt to look upon it; for in the promises of God a statement is made that this body shall come forth and we shall reign upon the earth; and when it comes forth again reunited with the spirit, it shall be animated with the spirit of life that is eternal. And in contemplation of that, I sometimes have thought that people got the idea into their heads that it was a difficult thing, and hard to believe, that this poor frame that crumbles to Mother Earth could be brought forth again. But when I contemplate the laws of our creation, the laws of our being, and think seriously of what composes this body, and discover that when we undertake to make an examination (and scientists have studied it carefully) we discover it is resolved into certain peculiar elements, or as put in the general way, in gases—it returns to a gaseous form. In other words, the body simply returns to its elementary condition and that power that brought the elements of the earth together and created the body in the first place still exists, still lives; that power has made the statement that he would bring that body forth again, and if the body has changed its condition, resolved itself back into the peculiar elements from which it was made at first, it seems to me if you stop and think a little you will concede, too, that it would be an easy matter for the power that created the law to bring into existence once, to cause that law to operate again and bring those elements together again and form the body as it was before.

I look out around me, and when I begin to think of this and question it, I ask the question, where are evidences that will give us to understand that God's power with us? I go out to look on the fields and think for a little while, and I discover that there is a law in operation every day of the world; and every year we see it, we look for it, we expect it just as much as we expect anything, and yet we fail to recognize that there is manifest a power that is operating and using peculiar elements that to us are strange and queer. For instance, we go out in the fields and discover here a blade of grass growing; we see it come shooting up out of the earth and it grows; it is a bright green color, and we ask the question, Where did it obtain life? It is alive; it is living, it grows, and you would answer at once, Why, by the power of the heat of the sun and the nurture of the earth and the rain and peculiar elements in the earth that formulate them and cause them to spring into life. But there was a germ of life there first, but as it comes now it gathers from all the elements every day, the light of the sun, the air, the rain, and from the earth; and it takes from them those peculiar elements necessary, and builds for itself a little habitation that we call grass; it even colors it green. Right alongside of that little blade of grass we discover another one growing. Green? Yes, bright green, but it is different; its leaves are shaped differently; it grows higher and makes a bush and a stalk, and after a little bit it gives vent to its purpose and flowers come forth and they are bright red, beautiful to look at, and we admire them. Let me ask you, Did you ever stop to think that the same power that causes that little blade of grass to gather together the peculiar elements to construct it and make it as it appears to you, is the same thing in some other form, out of the same elements? It has drawn these peculiar bits that created this little plant with different leaves and a different stalk that appears to you the bright field flower that we admire so much. Look farther, and you would not have to go many steps until you find a blooming plant in altogether different leaves and form, and that flower will be blue, all from the same elements. And right beside that we discover another coming up and it begins to grow. After a little it takes a different form. It shoots its limbs higher and higher, and the trunk becomes larger and larger; and after a little we have a tree; and from these elements, the earth, the air, the rain, and the heat of the sun, it has drawn the substance that has given to us the hard wood,—all from the same thing. Now, we might carry that idea until we have taken it all along down through the different lines of formations God has given us in the vegetable kingdom, but it would not make it any stronger than it is now; so in presenting this we do it to illustrate the thought that here is the law, here is the power or creation that is able to take from those elements and create from the same elements so far as we are able to see; but there is a law that regulates and governs them so that each one draws only the peculiar requirements that are necessary for its work and its construction. And as we look along down the line, we discover these bodies of ours come forth and grow; they are nurtured, and this very accumulation that God has spoken of here he gives to us in the vegetable kingdom and in the animal kingdom so far as that is concerned. We discover that these are utilized by man to sustain the physical part of his nature, so that we have all of it when we come to examine carefully, drawn from the very elements that surround us, the earth, the air, the rain, the heat of the sun; but while we recognize that and we look at it with the thought that it manifests to us a law, we must recognize that it manifests more than that; it manifests an intelligence so vastly superior that we never have been able to fathom it, never have been able to grasp its might, nor its power; we have not been able to take in the depth of it, the extent, and peculiar workings, but we know that power is there; we are conscious of it; and though the winter frosts may come and the tree become bare and look dead, and the grass die down to the earth, and these flowers may be smitten and all turned brown and sear and drop to the ground and seemingly all decay, when the springtime comes and this law of nature must put its forces to work again, we discover springing from the earth from the same place, another plant just like the other, just the same kind, only it comes forth in the newness of life. We feel that, too, in regard to this body, and our hope in behalf of man is of such a character that our hope in God, our hope in his power, our hope in his redemptive grace goes beyond the tomb and the sorrow and the suffering that hides us in the gloom of death. It breaks through that. It tears away the pall of blackness that settles upon us, and it sends forth its rays of light that show us a shining path that leads through all mortal things. I have thought if we could but cast our eye upon that, if we could but see, if we could be permitted to feel the spirit that winds its way in the bright path that God has created until it stands in the brightness of his eternal glory, we could say in our hearts, it is good to believe in God; it is grand to die in the hope of Christ; and our hope would then be made sure and we would look forward, not with sorrow, not with fear, not with terror; not with a feeling of regret that sometimes becomes a feeling of rebellion, but with that feeling of hope, assurance, confidence, joy, and anticipation that we might realize that which the hope in Christ promises.

Now, to the Christian who has hope, has confidence and has trust in God, who has believed in his power and trusted in his grace, who has said that he was confident that God would save, and has lived with that confidence before him, death has lost its sting, the grave has lost its bitterness, and he looks calmly forward in anticipation of those who will come with him (Christ). In his mind it will be but the swinging back of the gates to allow him to enter into the beauties of the grace that is God's promise to the righteous.

There is but one feeling of sadness that comes to the individual who has this hope of Christ in his heart, and that is the parting from the loved ones;

but even that is brightened by the hope, if not with the strength, in the thought that they will come too, ere long; and it will not seem so long. I have thought sometimes that if the gospel of Jesus Christ has never done more than that for humanity, if it were not true that it is not to be realized in the sense that we hope it shall be realized, if it but cheers the dark vale or brings a ray of comfort, if it brings consolation and hope to those who remain behind, if it takes away the tightening of the fingers of sorrow around the heart of the loved ones when they separate, it has done a good purpose in this world. But I do not stop at that; I do not think that is all it should do. It does more than that; it not only helps to relieve the suffering and distress and the anguish that comes to us here, by opening up the bright hope of eternal life, but it presents to us more. It presents the thought that while it will cheer us along the pathway here, and while it will strengthen us, and in our weakness, we are made to feel there is a strengthening power before and behind that shall help to guide and fashion us in continuance, it presents the thought to us that we shall continue. Now, here is one of the cheerful thoughts that come to us in this life. We meet with sadness and with sorrow and with disappointment, and we are met upon every hand with the peculiar feeling, and trying conditions, of this world. It is a disappointment nearly all the way through. The hopes and ambitions that we believed in in youth and young man and womanhood, as we reach the realities of life and are shattered; and just like a beautiful bubble that has been blown by a child, the minute it is touched with reality it disappears, and we face those with a disappointment. That is one of the lots that seem to fall to us and, with the very best conditions that this world can afford, we are met with sickness, with suffering, with misery, with disappointment and anguish all along the pathway of life. But with the realization of that which is beyond, with the culmination of the hope that the apostle Paul speaks of here that shall go farther than life, it shall go beyond the misty vale of death, it shall open up and unfold to us the possibilities of the future, and the realization of God's promise that there shall be no more suffering, no more sorrow, no more crying, no more sickness, no more death. It corrects all of this; it wipes it away. It opens up for us then a realization that in the promises of God, they go beyond the conditions of this life; they open to us a life full of all that the word life can possibly mean, with conditions far superior to what we have had here. Why? Because the experiences of this life have fitted, have qualified us, and made us equal to the emergency, and able to enjoy and appreciate the better when we shall have reached it. So I think this life not all lost. I think it is not a failure; but if this life were all there was, if this were all we hoped for, and here only was there hope in Christ, I confess frankly, so far as I am concerned, we would indeed be miserable; for the life that we have here would be all to no purpose. I never have been able to fathom the thought of how an individual can profess to believe that this is all there is of man. When I look carefully around and think of it, if this be all there is, then I think there has been indeed a mistake in the creation of man.

Seventy years is probably the allotted time, but possibly our average along that line would not exceed thirty-six or thirty-seven now. It is a little more than it used to be; but suppose we grant it is forty years, and that the average life of man to be upon this earth is forty years, what is forty years? I have said sometimes that when a man gets to be forty years old, that man has only reached an age in life that he can appreciate that there is something to do in this world; that there is something that he can do that will be beneficial; he has just learned how to live (and some men do not learn it as soon as that), but just then we see him cut off. What has been the result? What has been the benefit? How much of an object has he realized? How much of the objects of life has he crystallized into reality? And as you look back, you will discover that very few have ever reached the height of their ambition; very few have ever reached the desired object they had in view when starting at forty years. So we discover, if there were not something more than this, if there were not in the intention of God something greater than this, the creation of man would have been sort of a mistake.

But when I contemplate the other feature of life, I grasp the thought that God has proposed that man shall live; and as he makes a statement over in the Prophets that he created this earth that it might be inhabited, and not in vain, it strikes me there must be an object and purpose, and that object and purpose must be further than this life. I read again in his word the thought expressed that he created man that he might enjoy life, that he might have the benefits and beauties, and care for the things God had given him; and I ask then if this life is all there is to it, the Lord surely has not given us very much to do. But when I contemplate his sacred word, the idea is presented clearly and distinctly that he proposed to give the earth to the human family for a place to live. I have not time to dwell upon that thought—it would take too long—but suffice it to say that he proposes to make it a desirable place; and I take the ground, so we can get that thought clearly before us, that in the redemption he said should come, that saving influence that should operate with the human family, that should redeem us from this peculiar curse that has rested upon the human race, this death, this sorrow, this trouble, this terror to the human family, shall be taken away in the future world, and this earth upon which we dwell should be free from the evils that exist in it now; it should be made beautiful and glorious and should be inhabited. With that thought there comes to us, clearly and distinctly, possibilities that go far beyond the mere mortal condition that we have here. This suffering mortality, this distress that we have to go through here, will have its effect; it will cleanse and purify us; it will create within us a recognition of the good and beautiful, and we will appreciate that which God does; and then when that peculiar condition has been fulfilled that God speaks of in the twenty-first chapter of Revelation, in which he makes the statement through the prophet that "he saw the New Jerusalem coming down out of heaven," and that the habitation of God was with men, there should be no more weeping there, no more crying, for God should wipe away all tears from their eyes; there would be no more death, no more suffering, no more sickness, no more disease, none of those disasters, the curse taken from the earth, the evils that surround us taken away. Take those away from us and I wonder if it would not be a glorious place to live in—a glorious place if that were done now under mortal conditions! How we would hate to die and leave it! Suppose, then, we take away the curse of death, too, and give to the human family life immortal that God said should come to the resurrected body, free from all the evils and distress under which it is operated here, made perfect through the influence of God himself and the law of his creation that he has put into operation, and planted within it that spirit that animated it, that made it glorious, and that we loved when it was here. Then give to us a sphere of this kind to operate in, with no end to come to mar our peace and disturb all the happiness and joy, and I ask you, candidly is there not something to live for? Such is the hope that the apostle Paul spoke of; such is the resurrection of the dead. It means a restoring of our loved ones, those who have been taken away. This is the redemption of Jesus Christ, and that redemption is not simply the saving of the soul without the body; for man is not complete without a body. The soul is composed of the spirit and the body; the two of them must be united in order to complete and make man perfect; and when we contemplate the working of God with the view that he proposes to redeem us, not only spiritually but physically bring us forth from the grave, and our brother that lies before us here to-day so quiet and so cold, and so inanimate, shall be quickened, shall come forth with the newness of life, and from the very elements to which the body may return there shall come together again that which composed it and once more stand before us, and this time glorified, glorified in the fact that he has partaken of the nature of the power of God to salvation, and he has been redeemed, his spirit and his body, he has been permitted to enter into the conditions of everlasting life; and when we see him thus, I ask you, candidly, friends, how our hearts would bound within us and how our joy would be increased when the full sense of that redemption dawned upon us; that it meant freedom from all that had happened here, from the evils surrounding it here, from the long lingering sickness that had borne him down and physically destroyed him so far as this life is concerned. We recognize now that he stands before us blessed with life, free from these sufferings and sorrows; I ask you again, friends, if the hope of the gospel does not go farther than this life; for if in this life only we have hope, we are miserable, because death stares us in the face all the time. It overtakes us at the end, and destruction surely comes. But if that hope goes beyond, and rests in the power of God and the promises he has made, and takes hold of life itself, and the promise of God becomes a reality, we are confronted with the fact that that hope gives to us joy and peace and happiness; it takes away the sorrows of death; it takes away the terror of the grave, and we look calmly forward with the thought that in passing through we have but passed through one condition to a better one, and that it is but the beginning of the accomplishment of God's work, and our hope lives, our heart is at rest, the dark pall of sorrow has fallen from us, and we see a bright light in the promise of God shining before us, our eyes look up, and even though tears dim them, there comes into the heart a warming and comforting influence in the power of God, and we say it is not all of death to die, when we notice carefully what he says in that twentieth chapter: "I am not the God of the dead, but the God of the living." Not dead? No. Sleeping? Yes. Resting? Yes. Not dead, then, according to the statement of God. In his way of looking upon the matter they are not dead. They die not to him, but in him and through him they live; they continue; they are remembered. He says, My members are written in thy book. I tell them sometimes that is a wonderful thought. The Lord has given expression to the idea that the sparrow should not fall, but it receive recognition at the hands of God. How much more, man, whom he has created in his own image, whom he has endowed with intelligence above everything else of his creation, how much more that he should remember him and bring him to the resurrection, and as God has promised, so sure as the sun shines in yonder heavens, so surely will he perform his work and his word as he has said. And while we look upon those who have passed away, our hearts are broken with sorrow, and our eyes overflow with the sympathy and sadness and loneliness that may come to us, and we pray that the peace and comfort that God has promised to the human family shall find a resting-place, an abiding-place in the hearts of those that weep; for so sure as those promises come to them and they can realize what they mean, and what God's purpose and object is, the power of the resurrection of the dead, then there comes to them happiness and hope; there comes to them a ray of light; there comes to them a comforting assurance that there is hope beyond this life.

Now, our brother held that hope. For many, many long years he has held and looked forward in that hope that he should realize this promise. He went to sleep with that assurance, though he suffered long and his suffering was great; in patience he continued with the realization that he would realize what God had said. Now, then, I ask you to think seriously, is it not better that we should die with a comforting assurance of that kind, is it not better that we should look upon them with the confidence in our hearts and the feeling in our minds that though we should lay this body away for a season, there is a promise in the resurrection that we should behold it again; it shall be restored to us, and we can meet our loved ones again. Such is the hope of the gospel of Christ; it is not a hope in this life only, but in that life that is eternal and has no end.

I have thought sometimes in contemplation of this other scene that was pictured; and it is no word picture; it occurred in New York. There was a man who lived in our age—some have heard him, some have seen him. He took the peculiar ground that there was nothing for us but this life; this life only; that death ended everything; that was all; that we then resolved back to the dust of the earth, and that was the end. He taught his loved ones that. He was a loving husband, and a very, very kind and affectionate father. He was a good man to the poor around him—he had that name—while he scoffed at religion practically. He made light of the teachings of the gospel contained in the Bible, ridiculed them, and held them up to ridicule. Let me ask you to draw a picture for a few moments. When finally the time came that he began to realize that death must come to him, he made the statement that if it were possible to do so he proposed to retain his powers and tell them at his parting what the conditions were. He was not able to do that, but death came; it took him away. Now I want you to look at the scene for a few moments: what was the hope of those loved ones? They had doted upon him; they loved him; their affection was centered in him; he lay before them with no response to their caress, no reply to their touch, no answer to the haunting cry for just one word of recognition. That body was dead. They had no place else to look. They held that body just as long as they dared hold it, until the laws necessitated that they must put it away for the health of others. They then had it burned, and they keep the ashes in an urn near them. It is all they have. They have no hope of the future; no glimmering ray of light to come and cheer them; not a thing to break the gloom of that awful separation that has come to them, striking down the loved one from their midst. And he had taught them that; he had raised that pall and that gloom. That is why I drew the picture, and made the statement that if Christianity had done nothing more, it had at least given us a silver lining to that awful hour of darkness that comes to every family and every soul that lives; it has planted in the heart of the human family a hope that goes beyond the misty river of death itself; it goes farther than this life; it reaches out and takes hold of higher and brighter and happier things. Our brother has believed in that; his family have this hope; they look forward and sorrow not as those who have no hope, and there is comfort and consolation in the thought.

This brother, J. M. Tullar, was born September 15, 1846, at Oramel, New York; moved to Iowa in 1858, joined the church of Jesus Christ, known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, by baptism, in 1862, baptized by Elder W. W. Blair; died July 25, 1907, at Seattle, Washington. He leaves a widow, three sons, and one daughter to mourn his departure.

He has lived, you discover, then, for a long period of years, about forty-five, in the hope of the gospel of Jesus Christ, in the comfort and assurance that it brings. He died with that hope, and with no regrets that he had held that hope and belief.

Now may the peace of God come and abide with this family; may the comforting influence of God's Holy Spirit rest upon them, that they may feel the balm of consolation; that they may realize that there is a hope that buoys them up, that strengthens them, and that lifts the dark curtain until they can see the shining light of hope underneath, that they shall meet their loved one again. Now may His peace, and the influence of his wisdom attend them, is my prayer, in Christ's name.

ONE MAN'S VIEW OF IMMORTALITY.

Professor J. Luis McTaggart of Cambridge University, England, says we all have lived on earth before and are all going to live on earth again.

Professor McTaggart thinks there is a much better chance of proving immortality with the addition of preëxistence than without it. There are two ways in which a proof of immortality may be attempted. The first he calls the directly metaphysical way. We may attempt to show that the nature of man is such that he can not cease to exist while the universe continues to exist; or that his nature is eternal and that an eternal nature can not have an end in time; or pursue some similar line of thought.

In this case it seems to him that immortality almost necessarily would stand or fall with the theory of preëxistence. He does not see how existence in future time can be shown to be necessary in the case of any being whose existence in past time is admitted not to be necessary. "If the universe got on without me a hundred years ago, what reason could be given for denying that it might get on without me a hundred years hence?"

Or, "if my nature is compatible with its temporal manifestations having begun at some point of time, could we find any reason for supposing it to be inconsistent with that nature that its temporal manifestations should cease at some point in time?" His conclusion then is that any demonstration of immortality is likely to show that each of us exists through all time past, as well as future, whether time be held to be finite or infinite.

There are some considerations which the Cambridge professor finds strongly to suggest that we existed before the formation of our present bodies. In the first place, even the best men are not when they die in such a condition of intellectual and moral perfection as would fit them to enter heaven immediately, if heaven is to be taken as a state of perfection which renders all further improvement unnecessary and impossible. This fact generally is recognized, and one of two alternatives commonly is adopted to meet it. The first is that some tremendous improvements out of proportion to that which can be observed in life is effected at the moment of death, at any rate in the case of those who die under certain conditions. For this view Professor McTaggart knows no arguments.

The other more probable view is that the process of gradual improvement can go on in each of us after the death of our present bodies. If we adopt this view, he finds it only reasonable to take one more step, and to hold that this life will be followed by other lives like it, each separated from its predecessor and its successor by death and rebirth. For otherwise we should be limited to the hypothesis that a process begun in a single short earthly life then should be continued in one indefinitely long life not divided by death and birth at all. And to suppose without any reason such a sudden change from the order of our present experience seems unjustifiable.

Our lives, too, the professor finds to be not only incomplete in their results but fragmentary in their nature. All continually find that a process is cut short by death, that one life holds a fault without retribution, a preparation without an achievement, while in other cases, where the life has lasted longer, the process is complete between birth and death. The more probable conclusion is that the process which is worked out in an earthly life in the one case will be worked out in an earthly life in the other case also, even though death has intervened.

Such problems as these never have been put with more force than by Browning. Both in "Rabbi Ben Ezra" and in "Evelyn Hope" he adopts, at any rate for dramatic purposes, the hypothesis of a number of earthly lives. If a number of earthly lives once is granted it would be gratuitous to suppose that this was the first of the long chain, and since even the lowest man is high above many living beings, there would be strong reason for believing that it was in previous lives that he had gained this relative superiority.

Again, as a man grows up certain tendencies and qualities make themselves manifest in him. They can not be due entirely to his environment, for they often are different in people whose environment has been similar. We call these the man's natural character and assume that he came into existence with it. Now, when we look at the natural characters of men, we find that they have a great resemblance to those differentiations which can be produced in the course of a single life. One man seems to start with an impotence to resist some particular temptation which exactly resembles the impotence which has been produced in another man by yielding to the same temptation.

One man again through life has a calm and serene virtue which another man gains only by years of strenuous effort. Others again have instinctive powers of judging nice and difficult questions of quality, in pictures for example, or precious stones, which place them soon after they have turned their attention to the subject in a position to which less fortunate men can attain, if at all, only by the experience of years.

A still more striking instance is to be found in personal relations. Two people who have seen but little of each other often are drawn together by a force equal to that which could be generated only by years of mutual trust and mutual assistance. The significance of this fact Professor McTaggart thinks has been much underrated. As a rule, the only case of it which is considered is the case when the attraction is between people of different sexes, and the inexplicability then hastily is adjudged to be due to the irrationality of sexual desire.

Here, then, are characteristic ties which are born with us, which are not acquired in our present lives and which are strikingly like characteristics which in other cases we know to be due to the condensed results of experience. Is it not probable that the innate characteristics also are due to the condensed results of experience, in this case, of experience in an earlier life? Thus queries Ellis McTaggart.

Without memory of our present life, however, it may be said our future life would not be ours. We might as well be mortal, it is maintained, as be immortal without a memory beyond the present life. To this the professor answers that memory chiefly is of value in our lives in three ways. In the first place it makes us wiser. The results which we have seen and conclusions at which we have arrived are preserved in memory, and add to our present knowledge.

In the second place it makes us morally better. The memory of a temptation, whether it has been resisted or not, under various circumstances, may help us in resisting present temptation. In the third place, it may tell us that people with whom we are thrown and now are related are the people whom we have loved in the past. And this may enter as an element in our present love for them.

Can we be wiser by reason of something which we have forgotten? Unquestionably we can. Wisdom depends primarily on a mind competent to deal with facts and to form judgments. The acquisition of knowledge and experience may strengthen the mind. And a man who dies after acquiring knowledge, and all men acquire some, might enter into his new life deprived indeed of the knowledge, but not deprived of the increased strength and delicacy of mind which he had gained by virtue of that knowledge. And if so he will be wiser in the second life because of what has happened in the first. Progress, therefore, has not perished with memory.

So, again with virtue. And there the point perhaps is clearer. For it is obvious that the memory of moral vicissitudes is of no moral value except in so far as it helps to form the moral character, and that if this is done, the memory could be discarded without loss. We can not doubt that a character may remain determined by an event which has been forgotten. "I have forgotten the greater number of the good and evil acts which I have done in this life. And yet each must have left its imprint upon my character."

And so if a man carries over into his next life the disposition and tendencies which he has gained by the moral contests of this life the value of those contests has not been destroyed by the death which has destroyed the memory of them.

So with love. What is uniquely valuable, the professor argues, is the relation to each particular person, and not the particular acts and feelings in which that relation is expressed. Much has been forgotten in any friendship, but the friendship is sweet and true and enduring by reason of the accumulated results of these forgotten episodes. So our relations with the people that we meet in this earth life are sweet and friendly in proportion to the character of our past relations with the same people.—Chicago Tribune, August 18, 1907.

Reveries at Close of Day.

"The day is done and the darkness
Falls from the wings of night,
As a feather is wafted downward
From an eagle in its flight."

In-doors it is hot and sultry, and I go forth into the night to lose myself a while in reverie. And as I think of the past, all the gladness, all the sadness, all the joys and cares of life through which we have passed, and that far away, where the future lies slumbering, the years will unfold as great, and perchance greater trials and troubles than those through which we have passed, and I realize that both past and future are linked together by the present, into my soul comes

"A feeling of sadness
That is not akin to pain;
And resembles sorrow only,
As the mist resembles rain."

Within the house the family are sleeping the sweet restful sleep of the laborer after the busy toil of day is over. The moon, now almost full, sheds aslant her pale glimmer of light, lending an enchantment to the scene about me. The tall locust- and walnut-trees within the yard look like great sentinels keeping guard over all, so quiet and erect they stand, not a branch astir. But as I sit beneath the giant cottonwood above me, I hear a continual flittering and fluttering as if the beautiful, dark, fanlike leaves were nodding and whispering one to another of the beautiful scene around them. The cricket chirps away, out in the grass somewhere, and a whip-poor-will's rollicking song breaks forth on the stillness of the night near by me, and I almost smile as I hear her loud song again and again: "Whip-poor-will! Whip-poor-will!" Always the same thing over again, yet she sings it with as much enthusiasm as the song-bird who sings the sweetest roundelay. And why smile? If it is her best, why not learn a lesson from her humble song, if song it may be called? For are not our lives very much like the whip-poor-will's song—the same thing day after day? And why object that it may be so? For is not the coming of the springtime each year very much like the one before? also the summer, autumn, and winter days? It is one eternal round, therefore we should not despise the duties of to-day because they are so much the same as they were yesterday.

And, although sometimes plain and irksome, let us do them with our might, knowing the small things of life are preparing us for a great eternity by and by.

And so the feeling of sadness gives place to one of joy, as I think of the Man of Galilee, who came to bring the gospel to the earth, that through him we might have life, and have it more abundantly. And yet it is the same old story, told over and over again, of our Father's love for his children. And the more it is told, the sweeter it grows.

It gladdens the hearts of the children,
And lightens the life of the youth;
It brightens the path of the aged,
This beautiful story of truth.

Oh, tell it to those about you,
And live that each one may know,
That you've heard the story of Jesus,
By the acts and kind deeds that you do.

Items from the Islands.

The passengers who came on the Mariposa this month are viewing Papeete in her gayest colors. The 14th of July, and for several successive days, are the annual holidays with all French subjects. The Mariposa stays in port seven days this time, instead of four, to accommodate the passengers who came to witness the holiday fetes among the natives. Their audience is augmented by the recent arrival of a large English ship. And to-morrow the New Zealand steamer will be in. The weather favors them; dry, cool, and beautiful. The distant sound of drums, and the occasional boom of cannon, lend a martial atmosphere to the usually quiet little town. But, like Gallileo of old, we care for none of these things. Have not been to even take a look at the town. The getting our out-going mail prepared is far more important to us.

The mail-matter of this month, both letters and church papers, is educational in a spiritual line. The ruling tenor, to my mind, bespeaks a sturdy development, a determination to dig deep and build sure, to be satisfied with nothing short of the bed-rock, so to speak, which rock is Christ. And since it is Christ who will build his church, how necessary it is that those who will be builded with the church, be planted firmly upon that rock, no matter what it may cause in this life. The influence imparted was uplifting, spiritually invigorating; and our hearts respond, "Amen." By the grace of God we will go hand in hand with you in the preparations for the kingdom.

We are much encouraged in regard to the restoration of the erring ones. Brn. Lake and Hotu write that all those in Takaroa and Takapoto who were of the pupu have given it up. Those, however, were not of the number who were severed from the church, since they were not at conference to answer for themselves. There are also some at Tikehau who have returned. A noble son of the governor of that island came to us a week ago, with a beaming face, and a cordial grip of the hand, confessing his error and told of having renounced it. So also his wife. He laughingly said his mother had given up thinking she was "Sarah." This was good news to us; for she was one of the strong ones. His father, the governor, gave it up while in Papeete, prior to conference. And yesterday Tumatau told Joseph that he and Haroatea were going to Tiona, where we would be the first Sunday in August, to be baptized. So we feel to thank God and take courage. Last Sunday Joseph and Roo paid those at Faaa a short visit. They were cordially received. The brethren of former days seemed very humble, and wept much while he talked with them, and seemed very near to returning.

We had letters recently from Bro. and Sr. Lake. They are now dividing their time between Takapoto and Takaroa. They were well received, and well provided for, in good health, and seemed to be enjoying their work. They had a little of real island experience getting to their destination: heavy weather, very seasick; were obliged to stop at an uninhabited island; their provisions being gone, fish and cocoanuts were their bill of fare. Joseph had quite a serious fall that deferred his work for three weeks. It seems now to have been a blessing in disguise, since he has recovered without any serious effects, in that it forced him to take the much-needed rest from brain work that he would not take of himself.

I wish to thank the sender—whoever it may be—of The Boys' World, two numbers of The Young People's Weekly, together with others in the same roll. They are interesting. I believe I never acknowledged the Woman's National Daily. Sr. Lake was much interested in them. Please accept our thanks for the same.

The following is the Mariposa's time-table: Leaves San Francisco, August 6, September 11, October 17, November 22, December 28, none in January, 1908, February 3, March 11, April 16, May 22. Those who wish to keep track of mailing time, can make copies and keep by them.

Prayer Union.

Sr. Gertie Ware, of Farmington, Iowa, requests the sisters' Prayer Union to make special prayer for her husband, who was injured by a timber striking him at the back of his head while working on a railroad bridge (now nearly a year ago), producing concussion of the brain, causing insanity. He also, though not a member, requests the Saints to pray for him.

Letter Department

RIVER SIOUX, Iowa, August 5, 1907.

Editors Herald: From this part of the vineyard we wish to say a little. I am engaged in tent-work here with Bro. J. C. Crabb. The tent was set up at this place July 6, and have continued every night up to the present, and shall continue over next Sunday. Four have been baptized. The first one was a lady sick in bed with some inward tumor or cancer, but she desired to comply with the requirements of the law, so we made use of Bro. Scott's bath-tub. The writer was called on to do the work, and with the assistance of Brn. Pitt and Crabb we buried her with Christ in baptism. With all I have ever seen baptized, I never witnessed any one so happy over it as this lady, and as she expressed herself to me, "Now I am satisfied. Whether I am to die or live, it matters not. I have done my duty." She says she has not suffered so much since her baptism. We feel she is in the Lord's hands, and he will do what seems best to him. There seems to be some others who will obey before long. We trust God's Spirit may move them to do the right. Last week we had the Book of Mormon under consideration for four nights with the best of attention. Trust good will result from the efforts. On Sunday mornings we all met (or as many as could) with the little Sioux Branch in Sunday-school, which is conducted successfully by Bro. George Meggert, assisted by Bro. Charles Crabb, preaching-service following the Sunday-school. Afternoons and evenings we held services at the tent. Brn. G. M. Scott and Dorus Hutchings have assisted also in our services with satisfaction to those in attendance. Bro. Sidney Pitt, district president, has been occupying last two weeks at Pisgah with good attendance, we learn. Reunions are coming on thick and fast, and we hope our meeting together may prove beneficial to us all. Let us go there with the desire to help make these meetings a success in a spiritual sense, rather than for a good time to see and be seen. We can all assist in these gatherings if we prayerfully and faithfully do our part. May the Lord assist us in our labors of love.

MELBOURNE, Victoria, Australia.

Editors Herald: The work in this far-off land is on the move. During the last year or two quite a number have been added, and the work is now firmly established in nearly all the large cities of Australia, the latest developments being in West Australia, where quite a number have been added, and a branch organized so far this year. Melbourne has had eight additions, with others near the kingdom.

For the last three years we have been struggling to get a church-building, and expect to see our hopes realized within the next month or two, having about two hundred pounds in hand. Once we have a building, the work will have a better chance of moving on, as there is a great objection to halls in this country.

We notice of late the Anti-Mormon Association is sending out tracts against the church, and about a week ago I had no less than sixteen given to me, all of which manifest a bitter spirit and lack of truth characteristic of the Anti-Mormon Association, and will do little harm to the cause, generally, as it has the effect of advertising us to people who are anxious for the truth. One thing is certain, and that is, if the Association could convince us that we were wrong, the spirit they manifest would never draw us to their peculiar dogmas, so lacking in Christianity are they.

Have just received conference news, and was sorry to see that no missionaries other than are here were appointed for Australia. This is one of the best fields in the world, and there is room for plenty of laborers. However, we must patiently wait for matters to develop. Trusting that the present year will reap an abundant harvest, I remain, in Zion's cause,

Dear Herald: It is with pleasure that I take my pencil in hand to add a few lines to your columns. I feel to rejoice in this latter-day work, and I am glad to know that God is blessing us along the line. I feel my weakness, but I am trying to keep his commandments as best I can by the help of God. Dear Saints, I desire an interest in your prayers that I might be healed of catarrh, if it be God's will. I had a dream not long ago, and would be pleased to have the interpretation given in the HERALD, if convenient. I was sleeping on the floor in the front room. I had just fallen asleep, for I had worked very hard all day canning fruit. I had not been asleep very long when I was awakened by a personage dressed in white—a long robe—Christ stood before me, and another sister stood at his left side. I was acquainted with her, and she is a good Saint. Her name is Depew. She lives in Missouri. I will tell you what Christ said. He said, "Take your Bible and go read to Mrs. Langly, for she is solid as the rock."

I told my husband and he said I must go and do as Christ has commanded me to do. This Mrs. Langly is a friend of mine, and she is a fine woman, and is good to the poor people. She does not belong to any church, but leans towards the Campbellites. "He that lacketh wisdom, let him ask of God."

Yours for the truth, and ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,

E. PATRICK.

Editors Herald: Papa was hurt last Tuesday, while working at No. 3 Adamson, wire cable rope jumping sheave wheel, knocking him senseless, and cutting some very severe wounds in his head. When they carried him out in the shade, they thought he was dead. After the doctor came, he worked with him about twenty minutes before he could see signs of life. Would like an interest in all prayers, that he may be made whole.

MISS ALTA RUDD.

LAMONI, Iowa, August 11, 1907.

Editors Herald: Apparently, I am nearing the time for which I have been trying to prepare, somewhat, realizing that it would be, without special preparation on my part, and the special blessing of God, one of the most trying periods of my life. I refer to the time when I am no longer able to "preach the word," and assist in perpetuating the noble cause which God and not man has revealed to the sons of men.

For nearly one year, my ability to labor has been departing more rapidly than usual, and at the present time, I can do but very little indeed. But could I be assured that I would be permitted to do a little till the time comes for me to be called home, how happy I would be in the thought!

When I was compelled to leave the active service of the traveling ministry, it was a greater trial than all the sacrifices and sufferings which were incident to my missionary life. Active labor is the normal condition for man, while trial, suffering, and disappointment are a goodly portion of his common heritage. It is, however, more easy to bear the trials when we are able to do, than when we are not. That is, it is always "more blessed to give than to receive."

We meet with some things which have a tendency to discourage, though not necessarily; with others, which have a strong tendency to encourage the belief that God's people, weak and frail as they surely are, will yet arise to the demands of the occasion and carry the good work in hand to victory. So long as we are governed strictly by principle, we are safe; but when we depart from it, we get into trouble and danger, and become changeable.

"I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever; nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it; and God doeth it, that men should fear before him."—Ecclesiastes 3:14.

So far as God's servants and people succeed in becoming "laborers together with God," they will manifest this undeviating adherence to principle. David names, as one of the characteristics which shall enter into the character of him who shall be permitted to abide in the Lord's tabernacle and dwell in his holy hill: "and changeth not." And why does he not change? Because he is living in obedience to the great principles of truth which prepare one to dwell with God.

At the last April conference, it was both refreshing and encouraging to witness among the ex-officios and delegates such a general desire to get at the truth and the right, without any regard for the strength or character of a seeming effort to oppose. Such a desire, accompanied with good will and intelligent effort, never fails to bring light into the conference, and, when sufficiently general, results in effective legislation.

In the history of the lost manuscript, we have a striking object-lesson, which, it would seem, should have been effectual and everlasting in guarding the ministers and members of the church against the folly of substituting human expediency for divine wisdom. But alas, for the weakness and instability of man! The lesson was necessarily severe, but strikingly instructive and important.

Joseph the Seer and Martin Harris evidently thought they would do a clever act to help the Lord along with his work. According to Lucy Smith's history, Joseph asked the Lord for permission to allow Martin Harris to show the manuscript to his wife, who was bitterly opposed to the work. The request was denied. He inquired again, and the second time was told not to do it. But how could they give up this golden opportunity for making the work more acceptable (?) to the people? So the third time the Lord is importuned, and this time he permits them to have their own way long enough to demonstrate their own folly and weakness.

It was not long before Joseph and Martin saw the awful mistake they had made. They had reached man's extremity; but it was God's opportunity. Right in line with his answer to the coveted privilege, comes a message of severe but loving reproof, full of good will and divine wisdom:

"The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, can not be frustrated, neither can they come to nought, for God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he turn to the right hand nor to the left; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round.

"Remember, remember, that it is not the work of God that is frustrated, but the work of men; for although a man may have many revelations, and have power to do many mighty works, yet, if he boasts in his own strength, and sets at nought the counsels of God, and follows after the dictates of his own will, and carnal desires, he must fall and incur the vengeance of a just God upon him.

"Behold, you have been entrusted with these things, but how strict were your commandments; and remember, also, the promises which were made unto you, if you did not transgress them; and, behold, how oft you have transgressed the commandments and laws of God, and have gone on in the persuasions of men: for, behold, you should not have feared man more than God, although men set at nought the counsels of God, and despise his words, yet you should have been faithful and he would have extended his arm, and supported you against all the fiery darts of the adversary; and he would have been with you in every time of trouble."—Doctrine and Covenants 2:1-3. Read the entire revelation.

If we have, to any extent, strayed from the "old paths, where is the good way," let us return, that we may find rest to our souls. If, on the other hand, we have not wandered, let us see to it that no person or thing shall be able to turn us out of the way of safety and peace, not even "an angel from heaven."

Your brother in the hope of the gospel,

J. R. LAMBERT.

AMORET, Missouri, August 14, 1907.

Dear Herald: I am thankful for the good tidings you bring us each week. You are the only preacher we have had the eighteen months we have been in this part of the land of Zion. I like it here very much. The only drawback is that there are no Saints, so we have no church privileges of our faith, and we all are lonely on that account. I believe if the Saints would come here soon they could get land reasonable, but it is rising in value. The paper recently stated that land would soon reach fifty dollars per acre, or more. Farms can be bought now for from twenty to thirty-five dollars per acre. Rent is two fifths, grain rent. I believe Saints would do well to come here. We would rent seventy-five acres of plow land. Thirty acres could be put in wheat this fall, and all hay land one would want to put up for half. We are so anxious to have some of like faith move here, so we can have meetings.

Work is plentiful. We can scarcely get help at all. We have offered one dollar a cord for chopping wood, and have only one man yet. We have two hundred acres rich second bottom land, sixty miles south of Kansas City, about eighteen miles from Richhill. The first year we came here we turned our cattle out the second week in March, this year the first week, and commence to feed the middle of December. Cattle do well, get fat on bottom grass. Any one wishing to change their location, come and see.

I will say a word in favor of Graceland. I have been a reader and subscriber of HERALD since 1871. I think of all the good work set forth, the agricultural and manual training department at Graceland meets with my approval above all. I hope all the young will take advantage of the privilege.
SAMUEL SANDERS.

CAMERON, Missouri, August 8, 1907.

Dear Herald: Since coming to this field I have been laboring in tents. Bro. W. Pickering and I have held tent-meetings at Norborne. Seven were baptized.

From there I went and assisted Bro. McCrae and R. O. Self at Huntsville. Seven were baptized while there, one after I left. Bro. McCrae reports two baptized where he is preaching in the Methodist church, and Bro. W. E. Haden and W. P. Bootman are doing good work in Nodaway District. Baptized several. They have met some opposition in having their tent rockéd. Bro. Pickering is doing good work. I am proud of my brethren in the three districts. All are active, energetic servants of God. We need more men, especially in the Northeastern Missouri District. We are doing what we can by putting in our mite to push the work of God.

The writer set up a tent here and began meetings with good congregations of interested listeners. Bro. Pickering came and helped us out. Bro. W. T. Bozarth gave us a few instructive sermons, as he was visiting here. Saints desiring good land in a good climate, good grass, and where good crops grow, come in this section of country. Write to Bro. J. W. Adams, and he will tell you all about it. His address is Cameron, Missouri.

Excessive heat has been very hard on some of us the last few days. Am in the best of health. Love to all.

WAMSLEY, Ohio, August 7, 1907.

Editors Herald: I am at home to-day, not having the privilege of meeting with the Saints and hearing the gospel preached as some have. I am glad we are as well situated as we are. There are but few of us here; but if we live faithful to the covenant made in the waters of baptism, we have the promise of not being left alone.

We have been blessed with the privilege of hearing the gospel in the past two weeks. Brn. S. J. Jeffers and L. R. Devore have been with us and sowed the good seed by doing some good preaching. No place to preach but in private houses, at my house and at the home of Bro. John P. Calvin. Some have been convinced that we have the truth, but still stay on the outside, starving for the spiritual food that is nowhere to be found, only in the kingdom of God, or church of Jesus Christ. Bro. Devore preached an able discourse along this line from the text, Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. The kingdom or church is something to be sought after, and it is in the world to-day.

The seed has been sown here, and God will give the increase in his own due time. I know this is the work of God. This is an individual work. We each have to do our part, for by our works we stand or fall. According to our works we will be judged and rewarded.

I am glad I am a Latter Day Saint. And though we suffer persecution, it should be encouraging to the children of God; for they who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.

In the one faith,

J. T. MITCHELL.

LLANSAMLET, Wales, July 26, 1907.

Dear Herald: A line from the old country will no doubt interest some of your readers. There are some in Wales still interested in the cause all Saints have learned to love, and are doing all in their power to get the sons and daughters of men to accept the truth as it is manifested in the fullness of the gospel. We have had some promising men unite with the church recently at Aberaman, where the branch is reorganized; and one of these, a Bro. Picton, in writing me some days ago states that he has received more knowledge with us in three months than in thirty years previously with the churches of men. This is a very encouraging testimony, another proof that God will yet vindicate his work in Wales, and bring light out of dark places.

Your writer has followed the article by Bro. Peterson versus Haupt. The latter, Goliath, has met little David at last and is bowled out. This article would do good if published in book form, at least such is my humble opinion. We have some able defenders of the work on this side, and are looking forward to better days. The outlook is certainly more encouraging than heretofore; but we need patience; and let us trust Him who has promised, "My people shall be willing in the day of my power." If wisdom and good judgment are exercised by our people, with right and honorable living before God and man, the towers of Zion soon will rise, and the cause of truth ride majestically onward in Wales yet. We have no cause for fear, only fear for ourselves, and if we do right, all will be well.

I regret to chronicle the death of Bro. Arthur Edwards at Llanelly July 17, 1907. Several near relatives are in America, who will mourn with those who mourn here. I am glad that it is written by a pen divine that they shall be comforted. May God help us all to so live and conduct our lives here that we may be found worthy to one day meet and greet our brother with all those who, like him, have kept the faith to the end.

We saw Bro. J. G. Jenkins' letter in your pages some weeks ago. Write again, Bro. Jenkins.

We are looking forward to soon having our beloved mission president, Bro. Rushton, visit this end of his field again.

With kindest wishes to all the household of faith in every land,

Your brother,

Pontygravel House.

HENRY ELLIS.

OTTUMWA, Iowa, August 12, 1907.

Dear Herald: It has been a long time since I claimed any of your valuable space, and perhaps a few jottings from this part of the field might be of interest to your readers. I have reasons for believing that the work in the Nauvoo District is advancing.

We came to this place March 11. Found a little branch of Saints presided over by Bro. D. F. Williams. And while some do not seem to be active, yet, taken as a whole, we think it would be hard to find a band more zealous or alive to the interest of the Master's work.

We preached eight times and baptized six, all children of the Saints. We returned to this place May 23 to find Elder S. M. Reiste occupying, and through the combined efforts of the Saints, Bro. Reiste, and the writer, by June 9 nine more were added to the kingdom.

District conference convened at Burlington June 15, after which Bro. Reiste and the writer, who had been appointed to take charge of the district tent, pitched it at Lowell, Iowa, where, after laboring for ten days, one was baptized.

We returned to Ottumwa July 3, where, according to previous arrangements, three more covenanted with God by baptism. Spending one week visiting loved ones at home, we returned to Ottumwa, July 14, and three more expressed a desire to enter the waters of baptism, and the ordinance was attended to.

After an extended search in South Ottumwa we found a suitable place to set the tent, which we secured through the influence of Sr. Grace Salisbury, where we have since been holding forth to fair-sized and attentive congregations. The season has so far been rather unfavorable for tent-work. Our tent has twice been blown down; and in an overflow of water in the place where we are now setting there was ten inches of water, and of course our tent looks like it had seen rough usage; however, not seriously damaged.

We feel sure there are others very near the kingdom, when we hope to be able to gather in before we leave here. We go from here to Keokuk, where we have an invitation from Bro. A. C. Anderson to set our tent next, and from there to Nauvoo, and, if time permits, to Burlington, in which places we hope to do good. In all these places we hope to have the assistance of the local ministry and Saints. We can not accomplish our work if we do not cooperate in our efforts. In unity there is strength, is a true maxim.

Your humble servant, according to the suggestion of proper authority, will make a visit to as many parts of the district as possible; so if any desire preaching in their neighborhood, if you will write me, we will try to supply the demand, either in person or otherwise. We desire very much to visit all the branches of the district, and learn the needs of all, that all may be supplied if possible. My address is Lamoni. A letter addressed me there will be forwarded to me. Ever laboring and praying for Zion's weal, I am,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. WILLEY.

NANTYGLÓ, Wales, July 25, 1907.

Saints' Herald: I think it is nearly time that I contributed my annual, or half-yearly letter to your pages. Bro. Morris and the writer have started our labors in the missionary field in Wales since June 1. We have put in a month's labor in and around Penrhiwceiber and Aberaman, where we were nobly supported by Brn. Evans, Mann, and Picton. The branch has been reorganized at Aberaman, and the officers are men of integrity. Bro. Silas Evans is president, and his supporters are Priest T. Picton, and Teacher T. Mann. We have a Bro. Pughsley there who will become useful in the Welch language, if he keeps on as he has started. He is a priest, too. May God bless them. We labored in tracting, street, and other preaching. Seed has been sown there. May God water it and cause it to grow.

I am willing to testify of the decided advantages of laboring two by two. It shakes off the loneliness one feels when alone, especially in new openings. We are now at the home of Bro. and Sr. Green of Tiedegar. Tiedegar is a place that has received our attention for two weeks. We preach by the town block evenings. Fine interest and plenty of the spirit of fairness in those who hear; but we have two of the "Plymouth Brethren," not the sisters, here, that preach at us nearly every evening we occupy. They object to baptism as being essential, but optional, as you feel. You can if you like, and you need not if you do not like to be baptized. God and Christ are usually the last ones to be consulted about it; sometimes not at all. But to be allowed communion with these brethren you must be baptized. They say God's children are everywhere in every sect. They are like children on a see-saw plank trying to avoid the bump, but we let them have it just the same. They raised the cry of Brigham Young, Jim Smith and Salt Lake. I had to ask was this Jim Smith the great pugilist, or who was he and what was he, so that we could reply. This Brigham Young business failed, the people shouting that there were two distinct churches. They tried another caper by saying that the Book of Mormon was responsible for the immoralities practiced in Salt Lake, and that it taught baptism for the dead. We quoted the second chapter of Jacob, sixth verse, and hushed them to the wall on both statements, that the Book of Mormon taught a single immoral precept, or baptism for the dead, just to be technical. They got hard up for material, and now they say the Latter Day Saints are not saints. We believe it will do us good. Some are apparently interested.

We hope the Saints will remember us in their faith. We, the church in general, have one common desire, namely: the salvation of souls, the most vital object of the church. I often feel grieved to see the progress so slow. God has employed all the forces of heaven, as it were, in the salvation of the human race: the Christ, his only begotten one, as the greatest token of his love and sacrifice to usward; the angels and ministering spirits; his Holy Spirit to dwell in us to lead us onward to the victory. Where is the lacking then? The individual should reflect and see if he is doing his part. Exchange for the spirit of faultfinding the desire to labor consistently. Let us try to get more of the Spirit, that to us may be restored the spirit of sacrifice that characterized our predecessors in the work. Nearer to God, not to the human idea, because the human idea has sadly failed to build up a Zion. Doctor Dowie's idea failed with others. I am reminded of the solemn warning of Moroni, chapter 10, verse 2: "And now I speak unto all the ends of the earth, that if the day cometh that the power and gifts of God shall be done away among you, it shall be because of unbelief. And woe be unto the children of men, if this be the case; for there shall be none that doeth good among you, no not one," etc.

This is as much a work of faith as ever it was, and I hope that the day is not far distant that we shall so live in obedience to the law of tithing and free-will offering, that we may obtain more of the Spirit of God. My experience is that it is a circumcision of the heart that benefits the giver in all cases; or in other words, in being obedient to these temporal laws, that it brings to us a blessed feeling of satisfaction that can not come by any other way; even if it is only as much as the widow's mite given under like circumstances, it works good for the giver. May the good work go on in all the world, and especially in these islands where we are so weak in numbers and finance.

I see the same way as Bro. Stony Preston of Stockport, England, as mentioned in your issue of July 10, that where we are not laboring as a people, that there the elders of the Utah church are usually laboring. We ought to be able to send our elders to be near them, and to reveal to the innocent people all they believe. This course can be honorably pursued, until they back out in an honorable way as a church from the idolatrous, polygamous, and murderous doctrines taught by that so-called Zion of the Lord, from Brigham Young and his wicked accomplices down to the lustful Joseph F. Smith and others of his bigamist associates. I put it this way because they say that instead of meeting the issues we are persecuting them. I never considered myself persecuted when called in question for what I believe. It is an honor to defend what I believe. They, therefore, do not see the honors of defending Brighamism, which is tantamount to apostasy, so Teasdale says. Well, until they legislate as a body, or repudiate Adam-god theory, celestial marriage, blood atonement, and plurality of wives as heresies, the issues are theirs, until they declare against them. Just fancy Heber Chase Smith some time ago telling the folks over here that polygamy was abandoned in Utah, and his father with five wives, himself one of forty-two or forty-three children. He was the poorest apology they could send. May God hasten the right and bless the truth, and make us able to lay their evil and demoralizing tenets at the doors of those to whom they belong. I trust that my brethren and sisters in Wales will stand by the work as our predecessors have in the power of God, doing our best to maintain the truth.

Your brother in the gospel,

55 King Street.

THOMAS JONES.

Extracts from Letters.

Under date of July 15, 1907, Bro. R. C. Evans wrote the Editor, from which letter we make the following extracts, as all are pleased to take note of our active brother's movements:

"Treherm reunion was a small affair, the tent-meetings attended by a small audience, but in the opera-house well attended, the last night well filled. Several Utah elders were present. I was on 'Was Joseph Smith a polygamist?' One interrupted me. I asked for his Covenants so I could answer revelation on polygamy. He replied, 'I have none with me, and if I had I would not let you see it.' I thanked him nicely, but as I had several paragraphs in memory, I gave section 132 a severe shock.

"I am here to-night, Rosendale rest of week, dedicate new church next Sunday, then Halbrite two nights, then Weyburne, Saskatchewan, 24th to 30th for the reunion."

From Millet, Alberta, July 31, he wrote:

"I think I wrote you at Winnipeg regarding my week in Flint, McGregor, and Winnipeg. From Winnipeg on to Treherm and preached there two nights. We had but few out, though every house was billed. We had the satisfaction of hearing that one present, a leading business man, said: 'It was a shame to have such wonderful lectures delivered to such a small crowd.' Here we found the proof of the saying, 'One unwise act will do more to hurt the work, than fifty good sermons can do good.' One of our men, not now in the mission field, heard the troubles of a silly sister whose 'man' was not baptized. He petted her and kissed her, then told her he hoped she would not tell; but she fell in love with her 'man' and told. He thought (strange to say) that he could give all the holy kisses that were coming his wife's way. Soon it reached the town, then it was published, 'The elder's holy kiss.' We have done all we could to fix it up; but time alone may heal the sore. Ah, how true, 'Blessed is the man that standeth not in the way of sinners.'

"From Treherm we went to Rosedale, Manitoba. The whole countryside seemed to turn out to our picnic. After dinner, supper, races, and a fine program, all the ice-cream, fruit, etc., we found we had made eighty-two dollars.

"When here some years ago I was locked out of the Methodist new church. This coming I was greeted kindly by the trustee that locked the door, and I had the privilege of dedicating that new Methodist church to God, the Saints having purchased it, and now it will be the house of the Lord with a free pulpit and open Bible. This branch is presided over by Elder Nelson Wilson. He has the love and confidence of his people.

"Our next step was Delight, Saskatchewan. Preached two sermons to large congregations. Here we found James McMicken and several families of the Jordans, Saints of Ontario, true as steel.

"From there to Weyburn reunion. The Saints for many miles came in, some driving 'cross country' from ten to seventy-five miles. We met in large skating-rink, and we had a splendid time. The interest increased the longer we remained, and the town people sent request that I remain longer and preach, but appointments prevented my complying with their request. This branch is ably presided over by Elder Fisher. He is assisted in holding meetings at Delight, The Pass, and other openings around Weyburn, by Elder Williams and Priest T. J. Jordan and other officers. The future is big with promises for this part of the mission. While there I had the pleasure of preaching to four parsons, two Methodists, one Baptist, and one Presbyterian. I pleaded with them to repent and believe the gospel. Three spoke kindly of my work. One knew so much that he could learn no more, and he refused to be introduced to me, but I still live. The Presbyterian minister, at the close of my sermon on tithing, came forward, and among other nice things said: 'Mr. Evans, that was the best effort I ever heard on that subject. I am glad, for I am to preach on tithing next Sunday.'

"We left Weyburn, and have been on the go till our arrival here last night. Elder J. L. Mortimer has the confidence and respect of his people here. He is not what some would call a great preacher, but the message he brings is freighted with truth and love. His language may be called poor, but his manly and kindly methods take with the majority. He is careful, and his methods are the result of care, thought, and good judgment.

"I left home June 28. One month from that day I had preached thirty-three sermons, presided over three prayer-meetings, four priesthood meetings, one conference, two reunions, baptized four, blessed three children, dedicated two churches, and have given such counsel and advice to all as I could. I remain here over Sunday, August 4, then on to Vancouver, British Columbia, then Seattle, Washington, for conference, then California for reunions."

E. F. Shupe, Burlington, Colorado: "Elder F. A. Russell and I have been here since July 24. At present we are holding services on the streets with fair attendance. There was an Advent preacher holding forth in a tent when we came. He did considerable talking about us, stating that we were afraid to meet him on the differences in faith. So, when we had satisfied ourselves of the truthfulness of his statements, we called on him with a written statement to meet us in public discussion; but he flatly refused to take up any proposition. The facts are, he has come in contact with our elders before, and knows what to expect. He seemed to think we had no right to come here at all, and that he could make it so unpleasant for us that we would be forced to leave town, but we are still here, and the Advent is on the move to-day. We will remain as long as interest will justify, and then on to Kirk and Cope, and from there to the Eastern Colorado reunion."

W. D. McKnight, Woodward, Oklahoma: "Bro. A. M. Chase and family just left Woodward this morning for the north part of this country. He preached seven sermons on the street, and baptized two people—man and wife—while here. He left a nice impression. Many friends were made to the cause. His family helped wonderfully in the street-singing."

N. V. Sheldon, Rhodes, Iowa: "I am busy in tent-work at this place in company with W. Christy. Had a fair turnout last night. We baptized seven while near Marshalltown, and left others almost persuaded."

Fred Perchie, De Lisle Post-office, Saskatchewan, Canada: "Would like to know if there are any Saints near us in this part of Canada. My address is De Lisle Post-office. Any one can locate us by the number of section, 24, township 32, range 9."

The fall conference of the Southern Nebraska District is to be held at Fairfield, the 21st, 22d, and 23d of September, and a good attendance is desired. Will branch presidents see to it that their branch reports are made out in proper time, and sent to Bro. H. A. Higgins, secretary, Nebraska City. I would also like to have a personal report from every branch president, stating the condition of their respective branches, and whether or not the branch officers are in line of duty, so that I can report to those in charge. Be punctual, brethren, for that is a part of our work. After the 10th of September, mail can be sent to me in care of James Teeters. Mail sent to Lamoni, will reach me in proper time. Yours in the gospel, E. A. Stedman.

Died.

FISHER.—Mrs. Hannah M. Fisher, who passed from this life to the life beyond, on the morning of August 2, 1907, was born near Nauvoo, Illinois, August 3, 1842. When a mere babe, her family moved from Illinois and journeyed westward across pioneer Iowa to Council Bluffs and settled there on a farm. Here she spent the greater part of her girlhood, and a sweet, pure girlhood it was, full of love and sympathy. At one time Missouri was looked to as a future home, the family moved there for a time, but returned again to Iowa for a permanent living place. On the 25th day of September, 1862, Miss Hannah M. Graybill was married to Mr. H. G. Fisher near Council Bluffs, and they started their wedded life on a farm at that place. This happy union was blessed with eleven children, five sons and six daughters, two sons and two daughters having died at an early age. They came to Underwood, Iowa, as its first family. Here she passed the greater part of her married life; here she saw her three sons and four daughters grow to manhood and womanhood, and here she lived to be blessed with the love and reverence of her thirteen grandchildren. When a young girl, she was baptized into the Latter Day Saints' church, and her whole life was one deep, true, religious devotion. Her Bible was her great friend and comforter, and especially in her later years she studied it closely. The death of Mrs. H. G. Fisher was very sudden and unexpected, and was caused by a stroke of paralysis. For years she had been failing gradually, but her passing away was most sudden. The funeral was held on Sunday, August 4, at the Latter Day Saints' church, Reverend Joshua Carlile conducting the services, and the interment was made at the Underwood Cemetery. Those who survive her are her husband, H. G. Fisher, her sons, George E. Fisher, E. D. Fisher and H. R. Fisher, and her daughters, Mrs. Isaac Carlile, Mrs. A. L. Klopping, Mrs. C. C. Hoss, and Miss Allie Fisher. Below is given a favorite poem of Mrs. Fisher's, and throughout her Bible are marked passages, showing the beauty and purity of her sweet, true life.

"Who can tell what lies before us?

What of joy and what of woe,

Who can tell what fate hangs o'er us?

Nay, 'tis well we do not know!

"Who could sing a song of gladness?

If he knew what was to be;

If he saw the sights of sadness

That his eyes are sure to see?

"Better far to be unknowing!

And without a question bow;

Else the future would be throwing

All its shadows on us now."

A daughter lived to womanhood, and died in 1905. Sr. Cowden was baptized in 1893, at St. Joseph, Missouri. Her life was worthy and noble; but she had great sorrow that caused mental derangement in her last years. Previous to that, when very ill, she gave instructions as to her funeral. Services were in charge of John Smith. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

HOLMES.—Pauline Holmes, born August 27, 1905. Died August 4, 1907. Funeral-sermon at the Saints' chapel by George Jenkins, from Matthew 19:13, 14; 18:3.

Japan Desires Universal Peace.

There are many reasons why there should be peace between the United States and Japan. My country shares with her sister nations in the desire for universal peace. I have made the statement before, and I repeat it here with even more emphasis, The glory of a successful war war is brilliant, but the glory of peace is greater. At the reception given to General Baron Kuroki in New York City I was very much pleased with the cordial welcome given to the sons of Japan by the citizens of that great metropolis. I felt, however, still greater satisfaction when I stopped to think that the resplendent martial uniforms of the two countries were intermingling with each other in a mission of peace without any thought of war, and that the brave men who have been so honored at home and respected abroad were singing in one chorus the glory of peace. The same thoughts came over me when I attended the brilliant and most hospitable reception tendered by the same great city to Admiral Yamamoto. I am also pleased that a society—the Japanese Society of New York—has been formed to promote and increase the friendly relations existing between my country and the United States of America.—From "A peace message to the American people," by Viscount S. Aoki, in the September Circle.

A Good Result.

Under the operation of the new Pure Food Laws, baking powders now generally bear on the labels a statement of the ingredients. This is of utmost importance because of the harmful ingredients used in many cases.

Royal Baking Powder is known to be the only baking powder made of Royal Grape Cream of Tartar, and this no doubt explains its greatly increased sale here.

Careful housekeepers are taking advantage of the protection which the Laws afford, and are examining all the reading matter on the back of the label before adopting any brand for use in the home.

When in place of the words Cream of Tartar the words "alum" "aluminum" or "phosphate of lime" appear among the ingredients, they heed the warning and avoid baking powders containing these substitutes.

JACKSON COUNTY BANK

I take the liberty of soliciting your patronage as we are in a position to do BANKING BUSINESS BY MAIL very satisfactorily. Open accounts can be placed with us for safety at your convenience and command. We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood shorn of all political ambition, with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. I point with considerable just pride (I assume) to our Board of Directors as named below. Feel at liberty to write us on matters that concern you in Jackson County, Missouri.

THE PROBLEMS OF LIFE.

Sometimes we hear people say, "I wish I could only understand why it was necessary for man to come here and suffer and die; and why it was necessary for Christ to do so. I see so much suffering and wickedness in the world that I can not understand the design of creation."

This is but a partial statement of some of the problems that often occur to the simplest and are not solved by the most profound minds. Of course we have the final results stated in revelation, in a general way, but to understand that statement and to understand why those results might not be obtained by other means is difficult. We do not hope to solve those problems in this article or at this time. To our mind all that we may hope to do at present is to establish a base from which we may move to their conquest at some future time.

THINGS TO REALIZE FIRST.

Personally, we can not remember the time when these questions were not recurrent subjects of contemplation. They came to us as a boy following the harrow in the rounds across the field, and our thoughts took much the course of the harrow—ever coming back to the starting-point. Without egotism we can say we believe that the greatest minds of the world have done no more.

The questions often came to us with vivid distinctness, Why is man here? Is he really the handiwork of a great God? Is there a God? Whatever doubts might intrude, there were certain physical facts that we could not doubt, not being capable of subscribing to Christian Science: We were there; the broad prairies were there; the sun was shining over our heads. Our mind staggered at the thought that all these were the results of chance, so we came back to the old stand, that back of it all there was a supreme intelligence. To our mind we can move forward to the successful attack of universal problems from no other standpoint. All who have essayed have failed and most of them have admitted failure. Those who move forward from this point are in the right way and sometime will secure the knowledge they seek; but for reasons that will appear we are not prepared to say when.

"A whole-hearted welcome will sweeten the blackest loaf and soften the hardest bed; while a grudging welcome will embitter the gift, the giver, and the unfortunate recipient."

"It is the warm heart that sanctifies the cup of cold water."

We could see the processes of nature going on, and, so far as we could discern, they all sprang from a definite cause and produced a definite result; but we could not understand them. We could not understand the disruption of the seed kernel nor the forces that threw up the blade of green corn and finally produced the ripe corn in the ear. We could not understand the processes but we felt there was intelligence back of them, and we could go on with our work and trust them to produce the result.

That, to our mind, is the correct attitude for the Christian. The processes through which the world is moving may puzzle him; but he should go on with his work, confident that intelligence is back of it all and that an intelligent result will obtain.

"Doubt no longer that the Highest is the wisest and the best,
Let not all that saddens Nature blight thy hope or break thy rest,
Quail not at the fiery mountain, or the shipwreck, or the rolling Thunder, or the rending earthquake, or the famine, or the pest."

WHAT MOSES LEARNED.

Latter-day revelation has given us some sublime teachings, teachings that fill us with awe at the grandeur and beauty and extent of God's work. In the twenty-second section of Doctrine and Covenants is given an account of the experience of Moses at the time when he was taken up into an exceeding high mountain. The reading of this section confirms us in the thought that a full understanding of God's plans and of the problems propounded has been given only on rare occasions; and that we must walk by faith and not by sight for some time to come.

Moses was shown the whole world from its beginning to its ending. He was shown all the children of men. The drama of the world for all time was acted out in his presence.

Now, we, who at times have felt depressed and almost confused in our efforts to understand the events of an hour or a year, and have felt our minds grow dizzy with futile attempts to answer the insistent "why," need not be surprised that Moses, after witnessing such a stupendous rehearsal and seeking to grasp it, fell to the earth and did not regain his natural strength for many hours.

He had seen the bad and the good, he had seen the sorrows and excesses of the world; and he could not understand it more than we. We are told that he saw the very "bitterness of hell," and that he began to fear "exceedingly." Nevertheless he seems to have reached the conclusion we have outlined, and he declared, "Depart from me, Satan, for this one God only will I worship."

Moses could not understand the problem yet, but he had seen enough to convince him that he could trust it in God's hand. That is the very anchor to which we must cling in times of perplexity when it is not given us to understand.

The vision was again repeated and after it was all over Moses had again failed to solve the problem, and he put to God the question the world still is asking: "Tell me, I pray thee, why these things are so, and by what thou madest them?"

Moses, having twice passed through the whole cycle of time, could not understand; it was too broad for human comprehension. It was capable of explanation; but Moses was not capable of understanding. Let us remember that, we who see but a few years of time in this world and that but once.

God replied, "For mine own purpose have I made these things. Here is wisdom, and it remaineth in me."

If words mean aught he meant that for a time at least a full understanding of the purposes of creation must remain with God alone.

WHY THINGS ARE NOT ALWAYS EXPLAINED TO US.

In section 85 of Doctrine and Covenants occurs one of the most beautiful passages ever indited by inspiration: "The earth rolls upon her wings; and the sun giveth his light by day, and the moon giveth her light by night; and the stars also giveth their light, as they roll upon their wings, in their glory, in the midst of the power of God."

What a picture of the moving of the heavenly bodies "in the midst of the power of God"! As we watch them and think of the millions of beings who have lived on this and other worlds, how are we filled with the desire to understand it all. In the midst of such immensity and eternity is the little part we may do worth while?

"Will my tiny spark of being wholly vanish in your deeps and heights?"

Must my days be dark by reason, O ye Heavens, of your boundless nights?"

Many men after trying vainly to understand it all, have cried out, "Why does not God explain it to us?" And they have lost faith because he did not.

Think what you are asking. Infinite wisdom evolved these plans, and yet you demand that they shall be explained to the understanding of the finite man. It is useless. It might all be explained in the plainest of English language and we would not understand. One might explain a problem in algebra very plainly to a little child; but the little child could not understand.

The child has other things to learn first; so have we, and until we learn them we can not learn the others.

So God, after describing the flight of worlds, says, "Unto what shall I liken these kingdoms, that ye may understand? . . . Any man who hath seen any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power. I say unto you, He hath seen him; nevertheless, he who came unto his own was not comprehended. The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not."

There is the difficulty: God may explain, but as yet we do not understand; the light shines but the darkness is unenlightened; we see God moving in majesty in the evening stars, but still say we have never seen him. "Nevertheless," he says, "the day shall come when you shall comprehend even God. . . . Then shall ye know that ye have seen me."

OUR BASE OF OPERATIONS.

We gather from all our reading, then, that the imperative need at present is not a perfect understanding; the imperative need is perfect trust. Human intelligence has not been equal to a perfect comprehension; but human intelligence has been equal to a perfect trust. Moses, Enoch, and the brother of Jared, all were given a survey of the complete history of the world; none of them, so far as we know, could fully understand God's plans from what he saw; but all of them evolved a perfect faith.

We must become fully satisfied concerning God and his trustworthiness and Christ and his saving power. This is the rock on which we must build—the sonship of Christ and the power of God—and the "gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Having established ourselves thus we may move out into all fields to the investigation of things "both in heaven and in earth." If we come face to face with a blank wall that bars our progress in any given direction, we may fall back upon our citadel, instead of fretting our life out as some have done, against the seemingly invincible. We may fall back and gain strength for another attack.

Now do not infer that we mean that people should "go it blind," or that God should not have intelligent followers; that is not our thought at all. We believe that faith and knowledge go hand in hand; but the lessons of life must be learned in their order. We can not pass by the first lessons and proceed to master the later ones. And the first great need is to become thoroughly assured of the verities of the Christian religion, then we can bear with the problems of life without losing faith, even if we do not understand them for a time, because we have our feet planted on something substantial.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Elder G. J. Waller writes from Honolulu, under date of August 17, stating that he had just baptized twelve souls into the kingdom. The wife and two daughters of Elder Ingham were included in the number.

The Los Angeles (California) Examiner of recent date commented upon the fact that Elder F. A. Smith was holding services at the Seal Gardens in that city, in connection with Elders R. C. Evans, T. W. Williams, and others. Considerable space is given to an explanation of the work and teachings of the church.

The Burning Bush, August 29, deplores the fact that many good religious songs are tied up by copyright; but suggest the following remedy: "The best way is to break away from the conventional posse, Epworth League, or Christian Endeavor song, and go to God and get some good, hot songs from heaven." Evidently the Burning Bush has not a well-developed "sense of location," "Hot songs" of necessity come from a hot place.

At the Stewartville (Missouri) reunion, during a prayer-meeting which prepared the way for the children's day exercises, a prophecy was given through Sr. Cochran. Sr. Annie Allen was present and recorded the words as they were given. They are as follows:

"O ye, my young people, I am rejoiced that there are so many of you that have come out from the world and accepted Christ as your Savior, your leader, your example, your guide, and now I say unto you, my dear children, that inasmuch as ye have accepted this beautiful gospel, and have called it your own, ye have become identified with my church. And I say unto you, remember always this covenant which ye have made; yea, remember the sacred things of the gospel; and I say unto you, my dear young people, never speak with lightness, never act in light manner about the sacred things of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. And I say unto you, your Father loveth a reverent spirit. There is much lightness in the world, and I say unto you that ye should look upon the blessed things of the gospel with respect and reverence; yea, in your hearts ye should love them. And my young people, I say unto you, that inasmuch as ye shall do this, ye shall be wonderfully blessed. It is my will that ye should be joyous, be cheerful, be light-hearted; yea, it is pleasing in my sight that ye are a joyous people. Ye should shun the things of the world that will cause you to go astray; shun those pleasures which upon their face appear not to be evil, but which in effect are evil. Inquire diligently of the Lord, your God, and he will make you wise concerning these things; he will put it in your hearts to know the good from the evil; yea, he will gather you in his arms of love and protect you from the snares of evil.

"How I love my young people. I say unto you, the Lord, your God, is so willing to bless you, so willing to accept you. And my young men, I say unto you, prepare yourselves to carry on the work of this blessed gospel. Yea, let your hearts be open to receive instruction, and prepare yourselves to take your part in this work, for verily, it is an important part. Prepare yourselves, for the Lord, your God, will require a work at your hands; yea, ye shall do a great and marvelous work in the last days, if ye will remember the words of the Lord, your God; if ye will but heed the instruction of your heavenly Father; and ye will be protected, ye will be assisted in all things. Remember these things, remember the instruction which ye have received, and go forth into the world with firm purpose of heart to do the will of the Lord, your God. Live in accordance with this blessed gospel, and the Lord will be upon your right hand and upon your left, to bless, to comfort, and cheer you, until at last eternal life in all its fullness shall be yours. Thus saith the Spirit. Amen."

At the Lamoni Stake reunion, the afternoon session of Friday, August 30, was devoted to Graceland College. Addresses were made by President Stewart, Professor Woodstock, and Elder F. B. Blair, besides several musical numbers. The addresses were of more than usual interest. President Stewart declared that a student should not only be keen but he should be right, and stated that it was the intention of Graceland to teach the heart as well as the head. Professor Woodstock explained the object and purposes of the industrial department. The ideas that he presented are of more than local interest and we are pleased to announce that he is preparing an exhaustive article on this subject to appear in the October and November numbers of Autumn Leaves. Altogether the session devoted to Graceland was one of the most interesting of the reunion.

CURRENT EVENTS, SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS.

A curious contest that began in the English Parliament in 1835, at the introduction of a bill authorizing a man to marry his deceased wife's sister, has just terminated by the adoption of the bill by both houses, the Lords and Commons. Of course, during the years intervening between 1835 and the final passage of the bill men have persistently continued to contract marriage with the sisters of their deceased wives, the only condition being whether the sister herself was willing; if she was, but little attention was paid to the restraining position taken by the extremists in or out of Parliament. In this view of the case, it is well that the question has been settled. The bill has a retroactive effect, in that it legitimatizes the children of those who have been thus married, so that the children born of such marriages shall not be made to suffer ostracism in society or disability under the law for the peculiar sins of their parents. But what a long time it took that parliament to get "wise" over so strange a question.

Elders' Note-Book

MEDITATIONS OF ELDER J. S. ROTH.

ELDER J. S. ROTH.

1. Would endless punishment be for the good of any human being?
2. If God loves his enemies, will he punish them any more than is for their good?
3. If God loves friends, if he loves his enemies also, are not all mankind objects of his love?
4. If God loves only those who love him, what better is he than a sinner?
5. As "love thinketh no evil," can God design the ultimate evil of a single soul?
6. If any man does wrong in returning evil for evil, would not God do wrong in doing the same?

7. Would not endless punishment be a return of evil for evil?

8. If God hates the sinner, would it not be natural for the sinner to hate God?

9. If God loves his enemies now, will he not always do the same?

10. Would it be unjust in God to be kind to all men in a future state?

11. If all men deserve endless punishment, will not those who are saved miss divine justice?

12. Does divine justice require the infliction of pain from which mercy recoils?

13. If God would save all men but can not, is he infinite in power?

14. If God can save all men and will not, is he infinite in his goodness?

15. Did God desire universal salvation when he created men?

16. Will God carry his original designs into execution?

17. Can God will anything contrary to his knowledge?

18. Did God when he created man intend that a large portion of his creatures should be endlessly wretched?

19. If he did not know all at the creation, is he infinite in knowledge?

20. If God made an endless hell, did he do so for the express purpose of burning men in it?

21. If an angel became a devil by sinning, was Adam's the "original" sin?

22. Would there be any more impropriety in me imputing my sin to Adam, than he to me?

23. If men are totally depraved, must not children be so also?

24. If children are totally depraved, how is it true that "of such is the kingdom of heaven"?

25. Is it the revealed will of God that all men should be saved?

26. Could God will that all men should be saved, when he knew that many would be lost?

27. If belief and good work are essential to salvation, how can infants be saved?

28. Can he truly love God who worships him through a fear of the Devil?

29. Can the love of God be changed to hatred?

30. If God loved his creatures when he first created them, will he not always do the same?

31. Can the Deity be universally good if endless punishment is meted out to a single soul.

32. Can a good man love and worship a being who has created millions for endless torture?

33. Are those not enemies of God who charge such conduct upon him?

34. Can it be virtue to charge a good being with the most abominable characteristics?

35. If God made all things and knew all things; if he made the Devil, knowing that he would lead all mankind astray, will it be just to punish mankind for it?

36. Would not a being who would do that be as bad or worse than the Devil?

37. If the Devil is the author of endless hell-fire, would it not be the noblest thing God could do to put it out?

38. If all who go to hell must stay there without end, what did the Revelator mean in Revelation 20:13, where he says, "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works"?

39. If that "hell" means the grave, is the "hell" of Luke 16:23, where the rich man lifted up his eyes, the grave also?

40. If that "hell" is the grave, was the rich man buried alive?

41. If he was dead when buried, was his spirit conscious after his body was in the grave?

42. If that is a figure, which is the figure? is it that the good shall be happy, or that the bad shall be tormented?

43. If hell is literal fire, did Jesus tell the truth as recorded by Matthew 3:12, where he says it is "unquenchable fire" also in Matthew 8:12, where he calls it "outer darkness"?

44. Is the "hell" where the rich man was, without water, the same pit without water spoken of by Zechariah in chapter 9, verses 11 and 12?

45. If it is, did the prophet tell the truth when he said, "As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water"?

46. Will the lost souls eternally blaspheme and curse God?

47. If they will, did Paul tell the truth in Philipians 2:10, 11, where he says, "That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father"?

48. If those in hell never have a chance to hear the gospel, did Jesus tell the truth in Matthew 12:40, where he says he would be in the heart of the earth three days and three nights?

49. If Jesus did not go into the heart of the earth, as he said he would, did Paul tell the truth in Ephesians 4:9, where he says that Jesus descended first into the lower (not into the grave) parts of the earth?

50. Did Peter tell the truth in 1 Peter 3:19, where he says that Jesus went to preach to the spirits in prison?

51. Did Isaiah tell the truth in chapter 42, verse 7, where he says Jesus was to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison house? also in chapter 49, verse 9, "That thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Shew yourselves"?

52. Did Paul tell the truth in Galatians 1: 8, where he says that if man or angel from heaven preached any other gospel than he had preached to them, that they would be cursed?

53. Did John tell the truth in his second epistle, tenth verse, where he says, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God-speed; for he that biddeth him God-speed is partaker of his evil deeds"?

54. If "for ever" always means "without end," is Jonah still in the whale, as stated in Jonah 2: 6?

55. If "eternal" always means without end, is Sodom still burning? (See Jude 1: 7.)

56. Did Paul tell the truth in 1 Timothy 4: 10, where he says, "For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men; specially of those that believe"?

57. Did John tell the truth in John 3: 17, where he says, "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved"?

58. Did Jesus tell the truth in John 12: 32, where he says, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me"?

59. Is it not true, that the general that always comes out victorious in a conflict, is counted the best man?

60. If the Devil should get seven eighths of the human family, would he not have outgeneraled Jesus Christ?

61. What did Jesus mean in Matthew 5: 25, 26, where he says, "Verily I say unto thee, Thou shalt by no means come out thence [out of prison], till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing"?

62. Does that mean that the prisoner must stay in prison for ever?

63. Now may all ye "everlasting hell-fire" folks study the foregoing carefully. J. S. ROTH.

HIGHLAND LAKE SCHOOL OF METHODS FOR RELIGIO AND SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS.

Editors Herald: I am little late in reporting to you the work done at the eastern reunion this year, and some of it was so good and well received that we felt that it might be a good thing to give it a little publicity. We do not care particularly where it goes so it will help, and if in your editorial capacity you do not see anything valuable in our plan, you may consign it to the waste-basket. You will not find any stamps for return of the manuscript, nor will you find any retarded kick coming your way.

Well, it was like this: we did not expect to go to the reunion until almost the last minute, so no preparation was made; but when we did find out that we could go we were delighted. We arrived on Friday, July 26, at nine o'clock in the evening, and were ready for the opening on Saturday the 27th. All went on smoothly, and we had a fine business-meeting at two o'clock. The reunion was organized by the choice of U. W. Greene, president, and M. C. Fisher and the writer associates. The order of meetings and the kind thereof was left to the presidency. We decided at once that one session a day should be devoted to institute work in the interest of the auxiliaries, so we planned a school on the order of the summer schools of methods conducted by the international Sunday-school workers and the Chautauqu. Well, we carried it out fine and to good purpose, as the accompanying report will show.

On Saturday, July 27, the eastern reunion convened at Highland Lake, Massachusetts (twenty-one miles from Boston, in Norfolk County). At the two o'clock business-session the order of the meetings, the nature of the meetings, and the ones to speak or have charge was referred to the presidency of the reunion.

The presidency, after considering the needs of the Saints gathered at the reunion, set aside one session, from a quarter of eleven to noon, for institute work in the interest of the Religio and Sunday-school. Accordingly, the general and district officers of the Sunday school and Religio met on Sunday morning to provide for the week's work. After mature deliberation, it was unanimously agreed to conduct an institute on the summer-school plan, and we adopted the name, "The Highland Lake School of Methods, for Religio and Sunday-school Workers." The general officers who were there, or were expected, were chosen presidents: W. N. Robinson, E. H. Fisher, and Walter W. Smith. Bro A. L. Sanford and Sr. Clara Zimmermann were chosen secretaries.

The method of work and the course of study was next considered, and the forenoon session was divided into three class-periods, one of fifteen minutes and two of thirty minutes. It was arranged to have the first period occupied daily by a short lecture or address on appropriate subjects. The second period was provided for daily with table work conducted by suitable persons on subjects of importance to all. The third period was devoted to the study of the Revised Normal Lessons by Hurlbut, the text adopted by the normal department, the class conducted by Walter W. Smith. The following is the daily schedule as carried out by the school:

Monday July 29, 10.45 to 11. Lecture by Walter W. Smith, "The necessity of teacher-training."

11 to 11.30. Lecture by Elder U. W. Greene, "The relation between the auxiliaries and the church."

11.30 to 12. Organization of the classes by E. H. Fisher and Walter W. Smith, and an introduction of the normal lessons.

WHEN AND HOW.

Therefore, be ye strong from henceforth; fear not for the kingdom is yours: and for your salvation I give unto you a commandment, for I have heard your prayers, and the poor have complained before me, and the rich have I made, and all flesh is mine, and I am no respecter of persons. And I have made the earth rich, and, behold, it is my footstool: wherefore, again I will stand upon it; and I hold forth and deign to give unto you greater riches, even a land of promise; a land flowing with milk and honey, upon which there shall be no curse when the Lord cometh; and I will give it unto you for the land of your inheritance, if you seek it with all your hearts; and this shall be my covenant with you, Ye shall have it for the land of your inheritance and for the inheritance of your children for ever, while the earth shall stand and ye shall possess it again in eternity, no more to pass away.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4.

The revelation from which the above is quoted was given to the church through Joseph Smith, Jr., January, 1831, less than one year from the time the church began to be organized. By it a land of promise is covenanted to the children of Zion of these last days, on the great condition that they "seek it with all their hearts." "All the heart," is usually considered by selfish mankind a big price to pay for anything. Is this so, provided the thing sought for and obtained proves to be an eternal blessing? a blessing eternal in duration? It is now a rule, always has been with many of earth's children, to exert their greatest energies to that which proves in the end to be an everlasting curse. Just why they will do this, from their standpoint, is a problem. But is it not true? What proportion of mankind accepts God's proposals and his conditions along right lines? To indicate man's reasons for the course they take, is to point out the breakers to them. It is shortsighted selfishness; an unconquerable inclination to yield to the satisfaction of the natural and perverted propensities, and the tendencies of these are always downward. They are sure to let us fall through far short of what we expected; are an eternal failure.

The history of the world in all the past, the world is now filled with blighted lives and blasted hopes by this course of procedure, and the world to come will not record or reveal the end of these unrequited hopes!

Now, go back to the language quoted and consider this covenant, and its sweep of the ages, and eternity; but do not pass by the conditions upon which it is to be realized to God's saints and their children. "If ye seek it with all your hearts." When we seek to obtain blessings from the Lord, do we expect to obtain unless we seek in harmony with him and his righteous law? We are told plainly that the land promised can not be obtained and then retained

1.50 to 2.30. Review of the Normal Lessons, and examinations (to all who wanted to take the examinations).

The report of the secretaries read at the Saturday session showed an enrollment of ninety members in each class-period and that sixty-seven had attended every period. Twenty had missed only three periods. We gave high honors to those who attended twelve periods, and special high honors to those who attended all fifteen periods. (We could not count the Saturday session.) Those who took the examination passed with very good grades.

The school was a success in every way, and was well supported by the campers, showing a general interest in this kind of work. We believe much general information was imparted, and the work of the societies was stimulated.

WALTER W. SMITH,
Associate Supt. of Normal Dept.

"True, the royal path, the way of holiness, the way of godliness, has its weary stretches and rugged, toilsome incline; no promise has ever been made that all this journey shall be fragrant with roses."

if "polluted." Further, the language used in this promise is, "For the land of your inheritance." It is designed only, according to this language, for those who maintain their standing with God as heirs, in time and eternity. "Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?"—James 2: 5. Who are the rich in faith? Are those rich in faith who love not the Lord with all their soul, might, mind, and strength, and their neighbor as themselves? Are they rich in faith who seek to evade the force, or modify the full meaning of the divine language defining who the rich in faith are? Can the heirs to the inheritance prepared of the Father "serve" him and "serve" mammon at the same time? Look this question in the face squarely, and give the meaning of that word serve, its full definitive weight in both instances. Then let us read our heart and answer to him who says, "Ye can not." Then determine who are the heirs to the promises, "the rich in faith." Are they those who can and will make a covenant with the Lord by sacrifice? (See Psalm 50: 1-5.)

A few months prior to the making of the promise of this inheritance, it had been indicated by revelation that the elders of the church were to bear a responsible part in bringing to pass the work of the gathering, as implied in the inheritance promised. In a revelation given in the presence of six elders, September, 1830, section 28, paragraph 2, we are informed:

Whatsoever ye shall ask in faith, being united in prayer according to my command, ye shall receive; and ye are called to bring to pass the gathering of mine elect, for mine elect hear my voice and harden not their hearts; wherefore the decree hath gone forth from the Father that they shall be gathered in unto one place, upon the face of this land, to prepare their hearts, and be prepared in all things, against the day when tribulation and desolation are sent upon the wicked; for the hour is nigh, and the day soon at hand, when the earth is ripe; and all the proud, and they that do wickedly, shall be as stubble, and I will burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts.

The day of destruction here referred to, culminates with the coming of our Lord in glory to reign upon the earth. At a later date still, it is said:

Therefore, in consequence of the transgression of my people, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion, that they themselves may be prepared, and that my people may be taught more perfectly, and have experience, and know more perfectly, concerning their duties, and the things which I require at their hands; and this can not be brought to pass until mine elders are endowed with power from on high, for, behold, I have prepared a great endowment and blessing to be poured out upon them, inasmuch as they are faithful, and continue in humility before me; therefore [for the foregoing reasons assigned] it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion; for, behold, I do not require at their hands to fight the battles of Zion; for, as I said in a former commandment, even so will I fulfill, I will fight your battles.—Doctrines and Covenants 102: 3.

In some important regards the elders are to take the initiative in the gathering and the redemption of Zion. A gathering of God's children unto one place upon the face of this land, was incorporated into this great latter-day work as a part of it from the beginning, with its inception. As to the place, and the center place for this gathering, we need not speak. That is settled and understood, and becoming understood by all conversant with the great latter-day work. And further it has been declared that Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, the faithful to him shall return, reassemble, and rejoice before the Lord; such as remain.

WAITING A LITTLE SEASON.

Why this waiting for a little season for the redemption of Zion? This is an important question under the circumstances existing. "The last days" of our world are upon us. No doubt of this. Preparation must be made for it on the part of the children of the kingdom. "Be prepared in all things" and in heart against the day of "tribulation and desolation." The gathering unto one place is deemed essential to the necessary preparation for the unprecedented events attending the end of the world. But qualifications for those to be gathered are essential before they are gathered. The waiting for the redemption of Zion is for this prior preparation and qualification to be made. In this the elders are to take precedence. The removal of selfishness is one of the leading steps to be taken in this prior preparatory work. This is the duty of both elders and members of the church.

Heed should be paid to the admonitions of those who, from time to time, preach and write upon the gathering to remove the principle of selfishness from the hearts of the saints, and especially from those upon whom rests the burden of the church and its ministrations abroad.—Doctrine and Covenants 127: 7, last of paragraph.

Is this not a strange statement? Wonder what the elders abroad think about this! Is this one of the reasons: "mine elders" must needs "wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion"? That they may be divested of selfishness, so reprehensible to God in his Saints. Brethren, there is the statement. Let us seriously consider it, and "get busy" cleansing ourselves.

"Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness," says Isaiah. Judgment and righteousness are parts of each other; each includes the other. Where the one is lacking, neither exists. They are parts of the same law, each essentials of the work of holiness. But the ministry, bearing responsibility abroad, were not alone in the hindrance to the redemption of Zion in 1834, in the evil of selfishness. Selfishness is prophetically declared to be one of the perils of the last days. "They shall be lovers of their own selves, proud, covetous"; that is, money-lovers, servants of mammon, "without natural affection," marriage-covenant or "truce breakers." (2 Timothy 3:13.)

Let us see; in 1834 this was said:

I speak not concerning those appointed to lead my people, who are the first elders of my church, for they are not all under this condemnation; but I speak concerning my churches abroad [anywhere outside of Zion is abroad, is it not?]; there are many who will say, Where is their God? Behold, he will deliver in time of trouble; otherwise we will not go up unto Zion, and will keep our moneys.—Doctrine and Covenants 102:3.

Zion was passing through trial at that time, (1834). Her trials continued. Her children were scattered. Her trials are not yet over. Her children are to be tried and proved, not necessarily by her own sons, although this may be the case. They may, in their speculative disposition, wander into questionable methods of commercialism. They may—we do not say they will. Selfishness is what the Lord sees at the bottom of the hindrances of Zion's redemption, and so reveals. Who says, "No," to this?

After pointing out the unwillingness on the part of some of the elders and Saints to "consecrate" of their substance to redeem Zion, he further says:

Therefore, in consequence of the transgressions of my people, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season for the redemption of Zion, that they themselves may be prepared, and that my people may be taught more perfectly, and have experience, and know more perfectly, concerning their duty, and the things which I require at their hands; and this can not be brought to pass until mine elders are endowed with power from on high; for, behold, I have prepared a great endowment and blessing to be poured out upon them, inasmuch as they are faithful, and continue in humility before me; therefore, it is expedient in me that mine elders should wait for a little season, for the redemption of Zion.

Here are the Lord's reasons for waiting for a little season for this great work to commence: "The transgressions of my people," lack of the knowledge of their duties, may "know more perfectly" "the things required at their hands." And that all these difficulties may be removed and overcome, the elders must prepare themselves to be endowed with power from on high. The hindrances to Zion's redemption can not be overcome until this endowment is received. It is now seventy-three years since that little season began. Is it near its termination? Is the time approaching for this great endowment to be bestowed? But in the meantime can not the Saints and elders be divesting themselves of the selfishness and inclination to speculation complained of in the revelations? Can not they be overcoming some of self, and cultivate the spirit of brotherly love? And to love our Father with all the soul? Can they not cultivate with much prayer and devotion to God the spirit of "consecration" as it applies to our daily life, and as it relates to the building up of the church of Zion? Why not study to apply the principle of coöperation, as it applies to "the support of the poor and the needy"? (Doctrine and Covenants 42:7, 8.) This is one of the essentials to salvation. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 44:3; 52:9; 72:3; 101:2; 102:2.) And as it applies to the building of church property, including the sanitarium and children's home? And, studying, why not practice in all diligence? We judge no one; but the revelations and commandments are before us.

In this connection let us consider the following:

Verily, I say unto you, Notwithstanding their sins, my bowels are filled with compassion toward them; I will not utterly cast them off; and in the day of wrath I will remember mercy. I have sworn, and the decree hath gone forth by a former commandment which I have given unto you, that I would let fall the sword of mine indignation in the behalf of my people; and even as I have said, it shall come to pass. Mine indignation is soon to be poured out without measure upon all nations, and this will I do when the cup of their iniquity is full. And in that day, all who are found upon the watchtower, or in other words, all mine Israel shall be saved. And they that have been scattered shall be gathered; and all they who have mourned shall be comforted; and all they who have given their lives for my name shall be crowned. Therefore, let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in mine hands: be still, and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion. And all these things, that the prophets might be fulfilled. And, behold, there is none other place appointed than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed than that which I have appointed for the work of the gathering of my saints, until the day cometh when there is found no more room for them; and then I have other places which I will appoint unto them, and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains or the strength of Zion. Behold, it is my will, that all they who call on my name, and worship me according to mine everlasting gospel, should gather together and stand in holy places, and prepare for the revelation which is to come when the veil of the covering of the temple, in my tabernacle, which hideth the earth, shall be taken off, and all flesh shall see me together.—Doctrine and Covenants 98:4, 5.

The redemption of Zion and the gathering of God's saints thereto, as soon as they are prepared for these things, are purposed, are ordained, are decreed of God for the "salvation" of the saints, and the poor are to be remembered, be divinely remembered of him. But who will risk his reputation in these days of speculation by espousing the cause of the poor? David said, when contemplating Zion's redemption, "He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer."—Psalm 102: 17. And Isaiah 29: 19, too, touches this plaintive chord as follows: "The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel." "Poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom." The poor hear the gospel, have it preached unto them, said Jesus. Those who regard not the poor are the poorest among men in things pertaining to God and righteousness.

Behold, I say unto you, were it not for the transgression of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now [said the Lord in 1834]; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

Are we in heart as ready to prepare all things before us, for the gathering of the poor, as for those not poor? How? When? God has heard the complaint of the poor (see Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5, James 5: 4, 5). Have we? How are we listening? Are we learning to be obedient to God, by this sin of 1834, and eliminating it from our saintly practice? Can Zion be redeemed so long as her children fail in this?

Again:

Teach one another according to the office wherewith I have appointed you, and let every man esteem his brother as himself, and practice virtue and holiness before me. And again I say unto you, let every man esteem his brother as himself: for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith unto one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here [you are well off in worldly goods.—C. S.]; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just? Behold, this I have given unto you a parable, and it is even as I am: I say unto you, Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5, 6.

Can Saints be one as here commanded, and not seek to be equal? When you remember the ability—your talent—given you to accomplish and acquire, is your heart touched by the Holy Spirit? Are you learning of Christ, the "meek and lowly in heart"? When you contemplate how he gave his all, his life, "himself a ransom" for you, does it inspire you with hope, joy, and comfort—the hope of eternal glory? And are you ready to try to inspire your fellow with joy and hope? And how—by making yourself one with him, or he with you?

When the practical on this topic of unity is contemplated; that is, being one in temporal as well as in spiritual things (see Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3), does the following ever occur to the mind?

See that ye love one another; cease to be covetous; learn to impart one to another as the gospel requires; cease to be idle; cease to be unclean; cease to find fault one with another; cease to sleep longer than is needful; retire to thy bed early, that ye may not be weary; arise early, that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated; and above all things, clothe yourselves with the bonds of charity, as with a mantle, which is the bond of perfectness and peace; pray always, that you may not faint until I come; behold, and lo, I will come quickly, and receive you unto myself. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38.

Again:

Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days; and the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land; for, verily, I say that the rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim, wherefore they shall be plucked out. Behold, I, the Lord, have made my church in these last days, like unto a judge sitting on a hill, or in a high place, to judge the nations; for it shall come to pass, that the inhabitants of Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion; and liars and hypocrites shall be proved by them, and they who are not apostles and prophets shall be known.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7.

The duties set forth in the foregoing statements of the divine law are so plain that comment seems almost unnecessary. Zion's inhabitants are to "see" that the series of injunctions required are fulfilled, and the "judgment" imposed on them demands individual obedience to the law, and to "learn" to love, and impart one to another as the gospel requires.

But a question here arises: Is the promise of the land given as an inheritance to Zion's children open to the poor, as well as others? How are they to become actual inheritors? Are they to wait for their inheritance till the resurrection takes place? Are they to wait till all who are individually able to purchase their inheritance have been placed in their possessions? Facts, the law, God's impartiality, and conditions demand an answer to these questions. Are all required to consecrate in full while as yet no inheritances are entered into or are ready at least to be offered for purchase or otherwise, as conditions determine? But where in the possession of the church are the lands for inheritances? Has the church such lands? What can the Bishopric do in this matter of extending inheritances when the church possesses no land for this purpose? Has the church consecrated of their means to purchase such lands? "For it is my will that these lands should be purchased, and after they are purchased that my saints should possess them according to the laws of consecration which I have given."—See Doctrine and Covenants 102: 8; see also 127: 7.

And a sufficient time is extended in which "the strength" or "consecration" of the Lord's house, to purchase the lands, and wise men authorized to do the purchasing of the lands referred to. Consecration is the strength of the Lord's house here referred to, to our mind. This was the Lord's will in 1834, and his will concerning this had not changed in 1906. This is "in accordance with the revelation given to the church on Fishing River." It is the redemption of Zion we are endeavoring to treat of, not the commandment to be fulfilled after her redemption. If Zion does not purchase the lands others will. Nay, have been, and are doing that now. They find a way to do that work, and are willing to purchase, and are reaping rewards. Is it possessing these lands according to the consecration given of God, to purchase as individuals of the world do, and enter upon possession as the people of the world do? If so, then is the world fulfilling the law of God in this respect; nor is the Bishopric, or any action by them, considered. Where are we? Is it too late in the history of the world and the church for the following statement to have a bearing in the case?

For it must needs be that they [the Saints] are organized according to my laws, if otherwise, they will be cut off; wherefore let my servant Edward Partridge [the bishop] and those whom he has chosen, in whom I am well pleased, appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs; and let my servant Edward Partridge, when he shall appoint a man his portion, give unto him a writing that shall secure unto him his portion, that he shall hold it, even this right and this inheritance in the church, until he transgresses and is not accounted worthy by the voice of the church, according to the laws and covenants of the church, to belong to the church; and if he shall transgress, and is not accounted worthy to belong to the church, he shall not have power to claim that portion which he has consecrated unto the bishops for the poor and the needy of my church; therefore he shall not retain the gift, but shall only have claim on that portion that is deeded unto him. And thus all things shall be made sure according to the laws of the land. . . . And let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be one, even as I have commanded you.—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1, 2.

Here are some of the directions given of God to the bishop of the church relating to apportioning inheritances to the Saints: "Every man according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs." "According to" size, or number of family is to be considered; also the calling, business, ability, talents. Just needs and wants, or "inasmuch as his wants are just." A proportional equality, "that ye may be one." The foregoing language is addressed to "this people," without distinction, and as further indicating "what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship," and "none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God," it is stated: "Nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

But where are the lands for this inheritance? The Bishop is unable to organize "this people," because there are no lands in possession of the church upon which to organize them. Are the Saints now prepared to authorize the purchase of lands for inheritances, by consecration? The revelation says: "It is my will that ye purchase these lands." Are we prepared to do this? When will we be? If it is God's will that the lands be purchased, he requires it, does he not? To purchase the lands, now, is one of the vital questions. How to cooperate in the work is another. To become equal, as required by the gospel law, is a harder one. And whether we can be saved in the celestial kingdom without conforming to the law in these lawful respects, who can tell? To be passive about these questions will avail nothing. To oppose them only indicates that we are rebellious. And to arise to the situation in full in our faith and obedience to the whole law as here referred to is no more than to love the Lord with all our soul, might, mind, and strength, and to love our brother as ourselves, is it? It is essential to the "salvation" of the Saints that they be gathered together in the Lord's due time. In times past instead of gathering to the places appointed of God, the people, many of them, went to Utah and vicinities, places not appointed of God; some to Vorhee; others to Beaver Island; others to Pennsylvania, places God had not appointed; and it is doubtful whether there was a reason for it, unless it was because of transgression; while but few, if any, went to the places he had appointed. But the beginning of the gathering is the purchase of the appointed land. (See Doctrine and Covenants 98: 9; 102: 8; 127: 7.) "Let all things be prepared before you."

In order to the gathering now, the ministry must become devoid of the spirit of selfishness and greed, and receive an endowment, and be prepared to give proper instruction to the Saints. The Saints must learn the duties required, and we must all have experience, learn not to pollute the inheritances, by avoiding all manner of evil, by being willing to consecrate to purchase the land for an inheritance; also to be one, equal without grudge, to cooperate in the work of building up, or redeeming Zion, and all her interests, each for the well-being of all, the publication of the gospel to all nations unto the eternal salvation of all who will obey and live it faithfully to the end.

In 1833 the Lord said Zion might have been redeemed even then. Ample means were at hand to have done the work had the churches been willing to hearken to God's voice; but were they willing? Faith in God has "quenched the violence of fire," escaped the edge of the sword, raised the dead to life again, turned to flight the armies of the alien, healed the sick, cleansed the leper, stopped the mouths of lions, wrought righteousness, and subdued kingdoms. Will faith in God redeem Zion? Just gospel faith in his revelations will. Saints, will you risk it?

DO LATTER DAY SAINTS BECOME INDIFFERENT TO THE TRUTH.

While reading a former number of the SAINT'S HERALD, I found "An appeal." Very good in one way, because it will set Latter Day Saints to thinking, and to heed the good advice in our dear book, and thereby to learn as to whether they be in the faith. But now, as in the time of Paul, Saints do not see or understand things alike. Some day we all shall come to the unity of the faith, but not until the great enemy has been chained up and put away from among the children of men. Those Latter Day Saints who once received a testimony of the truth in the latter-day doctrine, which was committed to our earth through Joseph Smith, the Martyr, and have washed their garments and made them white in the blood of the Lamb; yes, those Latter Day Saints who have heard the voice of Jesus, the good Shepherd, followed him in regeneration, feeling willing to follow him in life and in death, through time and eternity, they have still a good testimony. They know of the doctrine. They know they are safe in the mighty hands of their heavenly Father and their leader and Savior, Jesus Christ. They know they shall be led into all truth by the good Spirit. They know they have an advocate with the Father who will intercede when they sin. He shall enable them to walk in the light, and his blood shall cleanse them from all sin. They know they shall stand, even though hated and persecuted of all. They know they shall never perish, but shall die only to inherit immortality and eternal life, the glorious crown, their Savior being the author and also the finisher of their faith. Blessed be the knowledge! He shall not lose any of those that have been given him, but shall raise them up on the last day.

Please listen to the beautiful words and promises as they flowed from the mouth of Jesus. When the Lord thus spoke he knew he was able to lead, sustain, and gather the little flock home to the Father's house.

Yes, dear brother, those Latter Day Saints who have once received the testimony from God (he who never changes) have obeyed the gospel, and set their feet on the blessed, never-failing Rock. They shall never grow indifferent to the everlasting covenant. They have been sealed by the Holy Spirit unto the day of redemption. They shall stand. Their faith, works, and obedience, their wisdom, power, and knowledge, all of heaven, originated with God and can never change. This is my understanding of scriptures in which I believe; this is my strength and consolation, my satisfaction and enjoyment. To God be all thanks, praise, and honor eternally.

Dear brother, I know you are right. Nobody in or outside of the church will ever be benefited by Latter Day Saints growing indifferent to the truth; only Satan. How did the great enemy look at different times—when yet in heaven, in the garden of Eden, when presenting himself among the sons of God for the destruction of Job, and now as an angel of light? He is a changeable being, and so are his works, his children, coworkers, and worshipers. Great are their works, but all in vain! Think of the ten virgins; let us say: saints in a visible way, five of whom could not be permitted to enter with the heavenly groom. Why not? Did they not belong to the church? Hence, they are Latter Day Saints, their lamps the latter-day doctrine, perhaps also the former and the Holy Spirit—yes, preaching and teaching the words of God seemingly with power and ability. They grow indifferent. They lapse off here and there on the wayside. Their strength gives out; for it was not of heaven. The cross of scorn, hatred, and persecution was too heavy; and the spirit which they had received could not prevail against a wicked world, because it was changeable. Many, though, will stand till the Lord shall appear; but fearful be the hour, no light from their polished lamps—no, for it was originated in darkness, hence, no power so near the Lord. Let us think of it. Here is the groom of heaven now to marry his bride on earth. Listen, "I never knew you." No consolation, no admittance, no salvation. They had become indifferent, were left in darkness. They were not the children of God, only in the sight of men. They had never been clad with the beautiful garment—the righteousness of Christ. So are the keen and cunning works of the great enemy, he who alone will be benefited of Latter Day Saints growing indifferent to the truth and works of heaven.

May God be merciful to those who yet move onward in darkness, although carrying the beautiful, shining lamps. May his love and goodness lead them all to repentance, from darkness to light, so they shall never grow indifferent any more. They shall then be permitted to enter, and be welcomed to partake of the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Yours for truth, right, and righteousness,

DENVER, Colorado.

JUSTICE TO MRS. EDDY.

The recent failure of the attempt of relatives of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, the discoverer of Christian Science, to secure an accounting and partition of her property, on the ground that she is a victim of insane delusions and a mere charlatan, has for the moment centered attention upon that remarkable woman. We say "remarkable" advisedly, for the matter of acceptance or rejection of Mrs. Eddy's teachings does not affect the stupendous character of her achievements. Mrs. Eddy has been violently assailed by newspaper and magazine, from the pulpit and Chautauqua platform, and so numerous and unbridled have been these onslaughts that many have come to look upon her as a hypnotist, a practitioner of the black art, a monstrous imposter. The story that she has been dead for several years and that another has been hired to take her name, and assume her identity has traveled fast and far. Few persons of whom American history takes note have been so vindictively scandalized, and none, it appears, with greater injustice so far as the charges outlined above are concerned.

Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton, the eminent alienist, has been a close observer of Mrs. Eddy for several weeks past, and he has come to the conclusion that she has been greatly wronged. In a report made public last week Dr. Hamilton says:

"From my knowledge of the case, from careful study of the letters and documents submitted to me, and from my examination of Mrs. Eddy, I am firmly of the opinion that she is competent to take care of herself and manage her affairs, and that she is not coerced in any way. In fact, it would appear as if she takes the initiative upon occasions.

"The allegations concerning Mrs. Eddy's belief in 'malicious animal magnetism' are ridiculous. I am convinced that the words are only used synonymously with 'malign influence.' 'Malignant' or 'mendacious animal magnetism' is therefore a facon parler, as the French say. She certainly has been subject to sufficient annoyance to entertain the fear that she is to be subjected to further disturbance. False reports that she was dead are among these, and her home has been broken into and valuable documents have disappeared. That she has delusions regarding her son is an absurdity, for only a few days before he brought the suit to have her declared incompetent, she had, without suggestion, made the trust deed to have him and his family provided for. Mrs. Eddy has no insane delusions, and in print and elsewhere simply enunciates the conventional part of her creed, which she and eight hundred thousand believe in. No matter how improbable or unacceptable it may prove to be to the community generally, it is no more remarkable than others that have been before or that exist to-day, and her alleged delusions regarding mesmerism, the nonexistence of matter and the power of healing forms an integral part of very many religious beliefs.

It is but justice to Mrs. Eddy to make these conclusions regarding her condition public. No principle of righteousness can be established permanently which fails to be just and fair. The opponents of Christian Science will make better headway by confining criticism to her teachings, rather than to her personality. The one may not be so popular as the other, but it will have the merit, at least, of being susceptible to argument. In the case of Mrs. Eddy, this advantage appears to have been effectually removed.—Des Moines Capital.

THE QUEST OF THE NORTH POLE.

There must be something at or near the North Pole which the world should know about. We are not prepared to believe that men are simply and only moved by a love of glory. There is a divinity shaping the end, no matter how roughly men may be hewing. That divinity desires the world to know something about the north which it does not now know. What is it? Is our terrestrial philosophy wrong and needs correcting? Are there conditions near the pole which admit of a development we have not believed possible? Will a portion of our great race be found there enjoying the favor of God, and having progressed far beyond us? Something there is, what is it? Peary feels sure he will find the pole. Wellman thinks he will fly to the coveted spot. Will they both or either reach the goal of their ambition, and bring the world the knowledge it needs and longs for?—Independent Patriot (Lamoni), August 22, 1907.

THE LORD IS AT HAND.

Let us keep down before God, dear ones. He will yet show us great and marvellous things which we know not. (See Joel 2:21: Jeremiah 33:3.) God is not pouring out his Spirit over this earth for nothing; and the question that was asked on the day of Pentecost is being repeated: "What do these things mean?" God is revealing to his saints that the coming of the Lord is right at hand. And we know not what tests we may be called upon to face before he comes; tests which only the genuine baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire will enable us to meet triumphantly. Glory to God! It is for us all to-day. Let us reach on and reach out and reach up.

Sisters, let us not spend the precious moments in ornamenting and decorating our bodies and homes, teaching our children to love finery and display, but live simply and employ our time for the honor and glory of God, as we shall wish we had when the judgment-day dawns. Neither let us fritter away our time in idle gossip. Let us not talk even of good things too much with people, but talk a great deal with God. These are golden days. Great opportunities and responsibilities are ours.

Praise God that he is putting a hunger and thirst into the hearts of many of his people scattered over the land, and many send requests for prayers. Oh the blessed ministry of prayer! May God put it upon us more and more. Let us pray much one for another, dear ones, and for all saints, that we may all be ripened up for the coming of our blessed Redeemer.—Addie M. Otis, in Word and Work, August, 1907.

Are We Thinking?

"Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a disgrace to any people."—Proverbs 14: 34.

Change we now the theme and subject; for it is not our object to enter further into this work done by Mr. Washington. Suffice it to say that it was most difficult and arduous in the extreme. But our faith is unshaken in looking to his system of education as the final solution of the problem.

And that system—simple but to the last degree comprehensive in its aim of making of each student a self-respecting, self-supporting citizen of a free republic. Not one sent out with a smattering of book knowledge and no capacity for earning an honest living; but one capable of doing good work, whose services would be in demand because skillfully and faithfully rendered, and who at the same time would have laid the foundation of a more advanced education, should means and time permit, and inclination serve. Not one which fills the head with impossible and impracticable schemes, but which on the contrary, after having taken a broad and comprehensive survey of the entire field then measures the individual capacity, fitting it for the work to which it seems best adapted, and, best of all, training the individual to make the very most of the means which he can command. How much this latter means will be understood best by those who will pause long enough to give it serious thought. Let us, for instance, suppose that the church—as a unit, not as individuals—should resolve to make the very most of Graceland, and that in obedience to the direct command of the Lord, as set before us in the article of Bro. Fred M. Smith. Do you think it is possible for us to estimate what the result would be? The mind can not grasp it, but as our own takes in a survey of a very, very narrow portion of the field—as we regard our homes and count up the articles of beauty and utility with which they are filled to overflowing, while the halls of Graceland stare at us in blank nakedness or covered by such poor attempts at ornamentation as only serve to emphasize her poverty; as we think of luxuries indulged in by very many if not by all, we wonder and still wonder what the result would be if only a united effort were made, not only to equip Graceland for her work, but to complete the other enterprises which, because the Lord has commanded, the church has undertaken. Before leaving this subject, however, or attempting in any measure to answer this question, it may not be amiss to learn what has been accomplished by Mr. Washington and his collaborators at Tuskegee during the last twenty-five years. In the Outlook for August we find the following from the pen of the Reverend Lyman Abbott. In an article on "The South and education," he says:

"Out of Hampton has grown Tuskegee. Last spring this extraordinary product of American democracy celebrated its quarter centennial. Twenty-five years ago the state of Alabama appropriated two thousand dollars to start an industrial and normal institute for negroes, and sent to Hampton for a principal. Hampton responded to the request by sending Booker T. Washington, who began the school with a handful of pupils in what was little more than a shed. To-day the institution possesses twenty-three hundred acres of land, ninety buildings, over twelve hundred pupils, over one hundred and fifty teachers, an aggregate endowment including its real estate of over two millions in value; has sent out to serviceable life in the South six thousand men and women, two thousand of whom are engaged in teaching; and has produced, as the famous banyan-tree produces, a new tree by its roots—sixteen incorporated schools animated by its spirit and extending its work. President Eliot in his address at the quarter centenary of Tuskegee, said that it had acquired more in the first twenty-five years of its existence than Harvard acquired in its first two hundred years. In view of this statement I do not think it an exaggeration to affirm that no other country and no other epoch has ever seen so striking a growth of a single educational institution through almost wholly private benevolence, chiefly bestowed in moderate sums. In its genesis, its organization, its teaching force, the sources of its endowment, and the services which it has rendered, Tuskegee is a monument to democracy." And we can not help but add that she has done a work worthy of the land of the son of Jacob, whose "branches ran over the wall." Truly—"The ploughing of the Lord is deep."

Can we separate righteousness from obedience to God, or can we cleanse disobedience from sin? In section 38, paragraph 5, of Doctrine and Covenants, we as a people have this grand promise made us: "But verily I say unto you, that in time ye shall have no king nor ruler, for I will be your king and watch over you. Wherefore, hear my voice and follow me, and you shall be a free people, and ye shall have no laws but my laws, when I come, for I am your law-giver, and what can stay my hand? But verily I say unto you, Teach one another according to the office wherewith I have appointed you, and let every man esteem his brother as himself, and practice virtue and holiness before me. And again I say unto you, Let every man esteem his brother as himself: for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith unto the one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just. . . . I say unto you, Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine."

Here again we find that the purpose of God concerning his people is plainly revealed, and his beautiful law of equality is taught. Is it not the purpose of God that through obedience to this law shall be brought to pass the exaltation of his people, that they shall be the head and not the tail of the nations? We would to God that we had the power to persuade you to try the Lord and prove him! Listen to what he says in paragraph 9 of this same revelation:

"And if ye seek the riches which it is the will of the Father to give unto you, ye shall be the richest of all people; for ye shall have the riches of eternity; and it must needs be that the riches of the earth are mine to give; but beware of pride, lest ye become as the Nephites of old. And again I say unto you, I give unto you a commandment, that every man, both elder, priest, teacher, and also member, go to with his might with the labor of his hands, to prepare and accomplish the things which I have commanded."

Fathers and mothers, again let us ask, Are we thinking? And if we are, what is the character of our thoughts? Do we love Zion, and do we long and pray for her redemption? What think you? If the answer be, "We do," will we not work for it? Longings, faith, and prayer all have their place in the economy of God, but they can not eliminate; neither can they take the place of labor. The commandment of God is to every man that he labor with his might—labor with his hands to prepare and accomplish the things the Lord has commanded. It is the mission of Graceland to impart knowledge to the brain, and teach the hands skill, that the sons and daughters of Zion may no longer be "hewers of wood and drawers of water" for the Gentiles, but rather that they labor for the upbuilding of Zion—the placing her where she belongs, at the head of all righteous advancement, all true mental, spiritual, and physical uplifting. And when this in done, the Lord will take care of the rest.

"O Zion, when I think of thee!" think of the shame and humiliation which sin and disobedience have brought upon thee, how I long in my soul to awaken your young men and maidens to a knowledge of the fact that God is calling upon them to fit themselves to help defend the truth and roll from the church this burden of reproach which she has borne, lo, these many years!

And, thank God, they are coming in answer to his summons! They are coming, equipped for the battle, and Graceland is yet to see the day when she will cry out that her borders be enlarged for the place is too straight for her. She is yet to see the day when her teachers will gladly take up the sacrifices and burdens which their brethren of the ministry are now bearing, and higher salaries will never tempt them to forsake the post of duty, for they shall rise from the ranks of her pupils, and God will reward them with the knowledge they have sought diligently and by much sacrifice, and they shall share of his glory which is intelligence, or light and truth, for these are the words of the Lord: "Israel shall be saved, and I will lead them whithersoever I will, and no power shall stay my hand." Saved from sin—from rebellion and heart-wanderings, and by the intelligence and righteousness of her sons and daughters, "Zion shall arise and shine, the glory of God being risen upon her."

"Whether the wrath of the storm-tossed sea,
Or demons, or men, or whatever it be,
No waters can swallow the ship where lies
The Master of ocean and earth and skies."

"Must I be borne to Paradise,
On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas?"

CLAYTON, Manchester, England.

Dear Herald: After coming out of the packing-house we went into some of the large stores, one of them being Jones' store where they sell everything from beef to a shoe-lace. Everything seemed to be very reasonable in price and every one very accommodating. We then returned to Independence to the home of our brother and sister and had supper together. Bro. and Sr. Arber hail from Sheffield, England, he being one of the Seventy. After supper, it being a warm evening, we came out of the house and sat and talked togeth'er of the old country, and of the many friends over there, and then of what we had read at different times of the gathering, and how we seemed just now to be nearing the time when we should sit beneath our own vine and fig-tree, although the plot of land where we were then sitting and talking belonged to another brother. Thus we spent, we believe, a very profitable and enjoyable evening, and after many thanks and interchange of good-nights, the writer made his way to his place of abode wondering when the ideal condition of things that we read of, and sometimes seem to have a slight glimpse of, will have obtained even in Zion; when the divine shall so have evolved out of the human that he shall cease to try to put a monopoly upon one of the most divine gifts, namely, the land.

On the 27th went to Bro. and Sr. Matthews for dinner and supper. This brother and sister comes from Birmingham, England, and know something about the hardships of gathering to Zion, but seem now to have obtained a footing. After dinner the writer and our sister had the privilege of a good long talk on the wonderful manifestations of our heavenly Father to those who are trusting in him in giving them health and strength to work for the bread that perisheth, or preparing the back for the burden, and the many times when the way has seemed to be closed up how he has wonderfully opened it up for us; and while we were thus talking we felt to be in the real presence of the divine power.

In the afternoon a young sister, who came here from Birmingham, came in and we had lots of talk about the old country and the new, and after supper made our way to the fellowship meeting, and thus spent, we believe, another cheerful and profitable day in life's arena of time.

On Sunday, the 31st, we went to Argentine with Bro. and Sr. Arber. Argentine is a suburb of Kansas City, Kansas. Here in 1903 they had a very destructive flood when many people lost all their possessions and some their lives, and we were shown the water marks upon the buildings as we were riding along in the car, and in a neat little meeting-house where we met, we could see signs of the flood. We met here a little band of Saints who seemed to be really in touch with the Master; and although laboring under great difficulties, many of the brethren being compelled to work on Sunday, yet there was a good degree of the Spirit of the Lord in the little testimony-meeting in the afternoon, and the writer felt greatly blessed with them. I take this opportunity to thank the brother and sister who so kindly cared for us, and hope and pray that they may have power to train their little ones in the ways of righteousness and peace, and we hope the young sister, the organist, may be able to bring to pass much righteousness in her day and generation. We also remember our old country brother and sister that so kindly provided us with a real old country meal and a cheerful welcome, and hope that God will bless them with wisdom and power to perform always that which is good.

On the 2d of April there was quite a lot of men and women busy packing up foodstuff and hurrying along the streets of Independence with bags and parcels, and the writer was one among them making preparations for a journey, not quite such a great preparation as when Israel of old left Egypt. In the house of Bishop Kelley there was careful preparation made for the writer, and thus was brought to an end a very profitable and pleasant fortnight in their hospitable home. The writer learned many, that he believes will be, valuable lessons, while stopping with them. Life seemed real to every one in the home, and everybody seemed intent on learning, and beautiful harmony prevailed; and while the writer used to sit in the room facing the Temple Lot, many were the thoughts that pervaded his mind of the possibilities that might have obtained had persevering, practical faith moved the early pioneers of this wonderful latter-day work. We should likely have seen a beautiful temple instead of a wood erection. We should have seen land and houses owned by the church instead of the scramble among the Saints and others to become the individual owners; and instead of a residential town, we should have seen places of industry owned by the church, manufacturing useful things for the use of the Saints; and in this way we believe that which we read in Independence Hall at Philadelphia would have been fulfilled, namely, freedom and liberty.

Well, we made our way in the nine o'clock car to the Kansas City depot, and at about eleven got onto the train for Lamoni. We had to stay at St. Joseph for two hours, so we had a look around the little town, then returning to our train we started on the remainder of our journey, arriving at Lamoni about nine o'clock at night. It was pitch dark with only here and there a lighted lantern, and to one who had been used to walking along streets well lighted you may imagine the great change, following a lantern along unpaved, muddy lanes and boarded footpaths with many of the boards loose and some off altogether, making great holes or cavities. Just to give you a little idea, one night we were going home from meeting following the lantern when we saw something moving. We soon found out that it was one of the sisters that had been to meeting and had caught her foot in one of these holes, and thus had an experience that often happens but is not pleasant.

Well, when we arrived at the depot I heard Bro. John's welcome voice, and soon we felt each other's hand, but had to wait to see each other's face. About twelve of us followed a lantern for a little while, then we came to what they call a hack in which we had the privilege of putting some of our luggage, which was a great relief. We next inquired for the stopping-place of Bro. John's father and mother and a sister from Independence. After several inquiries we found the right place and then Bro. John and the writer made their way along to Liberty Home a distance perhaps of one mile and a half, Bro. John going first carrying the lantern, the writer to follow on, to be careful: "here is another hole," then "mind, keep in the middle of the track. There is a ditch on either side of the walk." Thus, a stranger in a strange land on a strange footpath, we at last saw a light in the window, and Bro. John said it was for us. We had often joined in the singing of the hymn, "There's a light in the window for thee, brother," but this was the first time for me.

When we got to Liberty Home we found liberty in deed and in truth. We saw the pleasant faces of Bro. and Sr. Rudd who came from Leeds, England, and after supper was served we found quite a little company gathered, amongst them being Bro. Newton, present missionary to South England, and Sr. Hawkins of Kansas City, and after the old country custom of eating before sleeping and a little chat we retired to sleep to dream of the past and prepare for the future.

In the morning, feeling refreshed in body and mind, we gathered at the usual hour for breakfast, and here the writer had the privilege of shaking the hand of Sr. Dalley, late of Leeds, Yorkshire, England. At the breakfast-table were gathered more than twenty men and women, and to see some of their feeble bodies, and see them reverently bow the head while the food was being blessed and thanks given for the same, it made one feel that there was a power other than human present in that little room.

On the 3d went to nine o'clock prayer-meeting and for one hour had a very good time. At ten o'clock Religio society held their convention and I can assure you, brethren and sisters of the old country, it was most wonderful to hear and see the intelligence displayed in this department by the hundreds of young men and women thus engaged, and their bright faces as they reported the progress of the different parts of the organization, of those who were alive and doing, or trying to do their duty, and on the other hand to hear the discussion upon the delinquents, not how they might cut them off and thus be rid of the trouble; no, but how they could best bring them to see the benefits derived from lively organization, and the individual possibilities for each member to attain to in the way of intelligence; and when I heard the report of the British Isles Mission, I thought of the struggle at the East and the Northeast branches, and felt sure if the Manchester District would, they could work very effectively in this direction as we have the talent if only organized and used, and the home classes there are a great blessing to the present mothers, and also the future mothers. I remember in the Northeast Branch there was a mothers' meeting organized, but it had a very short life. Now, I had the privilege of attending one of these home classes in Kansas City and felt sure that much good could be accomplished in this way. Any one reading this epistle the writer will give all advice and practical assistance he can, if applied to for the same. We hope to do something more effectual the coming winter than we have in the past.

RIPLEY, Oklahoma, August 15, 1907.

Editors Herald: My nervous condition has been such for the last year that I have not dared to tax myself writing up any reminiscence of the affairs of my travels in mission field. Feeling somewhat improved in health, left my home in Independence July 16; being accompanied by Ammon, my son, and joined later at Kansas City depot by Sr. Etzenhouser, we speeded our way to Richmond, Oklahoma, reunion. Traveled all day and all night, and pulled in at Woodward, Oklahoma, at daylight on the 17th. Here we were met by Bro. McKnight and taken to a boarding-house where we tried to enjoy a real western Oklahoma breakfast. We were all too dusty and tired to "take it in" with the relish of some former days. Bro. McKnight paid the bill. Ammon and Bro. McKnight hurried to catch the mail hack in order to secure room for us to be carried nearly forty miles to the reunion. Presently the generous-hearted Kent brothers got wind of our going on mail hack, and countermanded our arrangements, and ordered a covered double-seated livery rig, and by twenty minutes past eight we were on our way for the reunion, being furnished with a fine lunch; and when we talked "pay" we were quickly told, "This is our part in the trip." Thanks, brethren.

Dry and hot with sand rolling over the fellies of carriage much of the way, it was a question whether "it" would stand the trip; but there were so many things to see, which broke the monotony so fast, that I forgot my nervousness. Jack-rabbits, horned toads, prairie dogs, two or three species of ground squirrels, with a number of new kinds of birds. I had inherited a "gift" from my earthly father of trying to mimic nearly everything I came in touch with, hence the prairie dog met his chatter moving through the blowing sand from our carriage and scampered to his hole, supposedly wondering from whence the big voice came. "Our crowd" sang, spoke declamations, and argued religious questions till our driver was compelled to admit, "This is the jolliest and most congenial set I ever drove from the town of Woodward." The long road ended at the camp an hour before sundown. I stood the trip away beyond my expectation. I thanked the Lord and took courage.

The camp flocked around our little crowd, and in a minute we felt a welcome that none but Latter Day Saints know better how to appreciate. Here we met of the general ministry, Brn. Case, Yates, and Chase with their families, also Bro. R. M. Maloney's family. While the reunion was not a "big one," yet it was orderly and up-to-date. To say the least, we had an enjoyable time. There were two things worthy of note which gave a healthy tone to the reunion. Well-water and no ice, and vegetable dinners and no meats, It was said they had meat once or twice; but I did not see it. I believe I met with less sickness in the camp than at any reunion I ever attended. Everybody appeared to be happy. They adjourned to meet at Freedom, Oklahoma, Friday, August 17, 1908, to renew these associations. I should say Sr. Etzenhouser and Ammon were no small factors in carrying forward the Sunday-school and Religio interest. The musical talent displayed by Bro. Chase, wife, and family certainly was commendable. But then, the ability and energy displayed in the managers of the reunion, and with that of the whole camp would, I trow, make some of our large reunions a little jealous. Thus far we are pleased to note the push and energy found in our mission.

On Tuesday, the 23d, Ammon and I commenced meeting in Ceiling. Here is where Elder Clark Braden cut such a swell more than a year ago. My name had been so prominently associated with his upon circulars thrown broadcast, that there was some curiosity to see the man that had bearded Braden in his den six times in public debate, and had dared Braden to try his seventh with him upon the same propositions. But fear had seized the churches, and every church-house was closed against us. I asked Bro. Steele to secure a vacant lot and go to the lumber-yard for lumber to seat it. This he did, and we opened up facing the main street. The churches got up this and that, but in spite of it all the people came and heard why we were Latter Day Saints. Sunday, the 28th, was our last, and we closed at ten o'clock at night, holding an interesting crowd to that late hour waiting for the moon. Bro. Walter Plain had in readiness a rig to carry us fifteen miles away, where we arrived at three in the morning. Bro. and Sr. Hughes were up waiting for us. We lunched and laid down for two and a half hours.

Early on the 29th Bro. Plain started with us to Carlton, twenty miles away. Bro. and Sr. Hughes were loath to let us go, as they are far away from Saints, and enjoyed a visit from the missionaries. We certainly enjoyed their hospitalities, even though but a few hours.

The noon hour found us at Carlton where we met Bro. Yates. "The boys" canvassed the small burg for grub, while I watched over the grips. Here we met in abundance our Lamanite brethren. A grunt with the shake of the head told us, "No talk to white man." The report from the boys of the quality of the grub and its peculiar surroundings caused me to inaugurate a fast. At half past one we parted with Bro. Plain, and was on our way by train to Enid. Here we dropped down among strangers. But we soon had "the boys" out hunting for Latter Day Saints, and they returned in less than an hour, having located Bro. and Sr. T. L. McGeorge. Here we certainly met Saints indeed. We were soon apprised of a Bro. and Sr. Tesley Hopkins, and a Bro. Wheeler, all alive in the work, having organized a Sunday-school in Bro. Hopkins' house, and prayer-meetings at the same place every Wednesday night, Bro. Wheeler being a teacher and holding membership somewhere in South Oklahoma, if memory serves me right. We were not long in taking in the surroundings, and the boys were out hunting for the mayor of the town of twenty thousand. The mayor gave his consent for us to hold meetings on the street, just so we did not jam up the pass-ways. We got the finest place on the square, with large electric lights in front, and a curbstone just high enough in front of us to make good seats, with wide walk, etc. At about eight Brn. Ammon and Yates, with the handful of Saints already named, were on the street singing the beautiful songs of Zion, which, to their surprise, attracted a large crowd, and they mounted their box pulpit and the work commenced. I remained with them until August 18, when I went to Morrison to arrange for some meetings. The boys held up to Sunday night, August 4. Crowds increased, and they witnessed one of the best and most interesting street-meetings they ever held. Almost hundreds of questions of worth were asked and answered. People were loath to leave, and often they were compelled to hold the meetings till after ten o'clock. Sometimes they would have to alternate twice in their speaking to keep from wearing out their voices. These isolated Saints never felt more jubilant, and the boys felt surely, that meeting was directed by the Lord.

My appearance in Morrison scared the preachers, and heads were put together, and the consequences were we did not secure a church-house to hold meetings in, though there were four or five in the town of five hundred inhabitants. I went three miles out and held meetings Sunday at eleven, and night at Rock Creek schoolhouse. Saw Bro. Bly in the meantime, and sent him to town to secure an open lot that I had my eye on, facing on the main street, with a twelve-foot sidewalk in front some eighteen inches high, with a railing hitchrack the entire length of lot in front. This lot was in a prominent place. The lot was secured, and all the lumber we wanted promised, and on Monday, the 5th, seats, pulpit, organ, organist, etc., were all at hand, and I sent early mail for my boys to come on evening train. During the waiting hours I secured paper, box lids, and printed a number of notices of "Open-air meeting every night this week west of the Morrison Hotel. Good speakers and music. Everybody come." In my shirt sleeves, with hammer and tacks in hand, I walked up the prominent sidewalks, and asked a privilege to tack notice here and there. "Yes, certainly," was always the congenial answer. People read: "Open-air speaking!" "Who are they?" "Who is this man?" Presently I heard, "Mormons" come waving with the wind. I felt I was not alone, as I had some good backing right in town in the persons of Bro. and Sr. Dale, Bro. and Sr. Clifton, Sr. Leget, the wife of the cashier of First National Bank, Sr. Linden, wife of the wide-awake real estate agent, J. D. Linden, who later along stood by the work manfully. Bro. Bly, wife, and family, with: Bro. H. C. Hughes, wife, and family, and some others from the country proved great helpers too.

We were notified that prejudice was running high, and opposition was brewing from the preachers which "infested" the town. "Six preachers," says one! One, I was informed, is busy running from house to house. We had some fears of having the old trick played on us of "stay away." I had our pulpit platform joined up against the wide sidewalk, and the seats running along the sidewalk extending out into the lot about forty feet. This gave us every advantage to catch the ears of the passersby. The Saints were somewhat uneasy, fearing the "stay away" might compel us to preach to empty seats. The evening train brought the boys, and the enlarging of our force commenced to raise the curiosity of the people, and the Saints' hopes commenced to revive. Eight o'clock came, and we put a hand bell into the hands of a boy and the "open-air speaking" was the talk of the hour. People came by ones, twos, and half-dozens, and when our "good music" rang out from organ and our picked-up choir, the seats commenced to fill, and presently to our surprise we had more than twice the number we were expecting. Elder Yates was announced, and for an hour he held the crowd with rapt attention. It was an entering wedge that everybody felt. Mr. Chopman, one of the influential men of the town, expressed himself in the following language: "If they keep up such preaching as that for a week, you will see the dry bones commence to rattle in Morrison." Later along this man's words were repeated and quoted as a prophecy, with the addendum that the day of prophets had not passed. The next night the crowd increased, and at the close Bro. Pryor, the North Methodist Episcopal preacher, took serious objections to the sermon, and a heated controversy arose between him and the speaker (Ammon). Reverend Smith, the Holiness preacher, chipped in, and I gave him a parting shot, and the battle was declared off on account of the lateness of the hour; but not until a number of questions had been asked by our opponents, which we promised would be answered next night. The excitement grew from night to night, and in place of having one or two ministers interested in the fight, it appeared that all were being drawn into the controversy, either directly or indirectly. Through the day, street-discussions were a frequent thing. We could hear now and then, "Why don't they preach Christ, and quit continually pressing these things that are making such a division among the people?" The preachers put their heads together discussing ways and means to "save the people from this delusion." A protracted effort was talked of to be held on the street and from house to house just as soon as these meetings close. On Friday, the 9th, Reverend Smith called on me, and for about three hours we discussed pro and con the mooted differences that the ministers of the town were claiming we were keeping before the people and causing division instead of bringing unity. Something must be done. Presently I agreed to a union meeting in which we would agree to take the Holy Scriptures as the standard and come to a unity of faith, if possible; and if not able to do that, because of the peculiar beliefs of the six or seven churches of the town, I would agree to go into a compact and organize a church in harmony with the New Testament church, taking 1 Corinthians twelfth and fourteenth chapters as a standard to organize by. To this Reverend Smith agreed, and he was to notify all of the preachers in town of the union meeting to be held that night in open air, and write them to come with Bibles. The excitement now grew, and curiosity seized the minds of the people. And to say the least, we were not a little puzzled as to how to handle such a meeting as that. We soon received the intelligence that a number of the preachers were falling in line, and would be on hand with their Bibles to see something "new under the sun."

The hour came, and the largest crowd yet. I made myself a little late on purpose in order to see how things would shape themselves in the pulpit. I found Reverend Smith sitting in the stand dressed in clerical style with Bible in hand. I consented to invite others to the stand, and Reverend Smith found a number in the congregation and invited them forward. They hesitated somewhat, and I invited them. They excused themselves by saying they were close enough to take part where they were, and wished to be excused from coming forward and occupying the stand. All, so far as I could see, had their Bibles. The opening hymn was sung, and Reverend Smith led in rather an earnest and well-worded prayer. Another hymn, and I introduced the meeting in a twenty-minute speech, stating why it was called, and what was the agreement, how we should let the Holy Scriptures be the standard to determine our unity, or our coming organization, if found necessary. I gave way and Reverend Smith took the floor and spoke for one half-hour, in the time reading all of the twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians, and part of the fourteenth chapter. Sought by comment to spiritualize the twelfth chapter, and a hearty amen went up from two or three of the other ministers. The United Brethren minister, Reverend Thornberg, was the next to take the floor, but not till I had pressed the matter on them not to leave the people in the dark as to whether they were willing to let the Scriptures be the standard to settle all of our differences, either to our organization, doctrine, or practice, and thus try to get to a unity of faith. He stated he was willing to take the Bible, but he objected to having others interpret it for him. He then went off in an exhortation, telling of some old lady whom he knew was happy and had gone to heaven without being immersed in water. This speaker occupied about one half-hour, and was frequently applauded by an "amen" by a number of the ministers.

The Reverend McNew (Baptist) was the next speaker, but not until I pressed him for a clear yes or no of whether he would receive the Bible as the standard to organization, doctrine, and practice in order to coming to a unity of faith. He made special note that he believed in baptism, but did not believe it essential to salvation; and as to taking the Bible as the standard he wanted them to understand that there were parables and other allegorical things in the Bible, with the Revelation of St. John, that were susceptible of different interpretations, and he could not let others interpret the Bible for him. I arose to a point and stated that the parables and the other things Reverend McNew had alluded to I would not include in this agreement, since they would not affect a true Bible organization and the essential doctrines to the salvation of the race; nor would it affect the practice as had been agreed upon, and I pressed this thought and asked for an answer to whether they could say yes or no in letting the old family Bible be the standard, as there were no parables as to how the Bible church was organized and officered; and as to what these officers preached in answer to "what shall a man do to be saved?" And as to how he should practice baptizing, confirming, blessing, ordaining, etc. I put the questions to each minister separately, but really was unable to get a square no or yes. I then turned to the congregation stating that when Reverend Smith read the twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians they said, "Amen." This was a frank acknowledgement before the people that they were willing to be governed by that chapter as a standard, and since there seems no chance for us to come to a unity of faith when each one of us clings so tenaciously to his own church, hence, according to contract we will proceed to organize a church in harmony with the sayings of that twelfth chapter which they all so readily said "Amen" to.

We certainly had a lively case on hand. I quoted Matthew 16, "I will build my church." Noted by a brief outline of how the many churches were built, and not by command of God, touching upon the apostasy and hence the needs of a restoration, and of the five hundred churches now in the world in their divided condition not being the one and true bride of Christ; hence, if Luther, Calvin, Roger Williams, John Wesley, A. Campbell, etc., had any God-given right to organize a church, we certainly had the same right to-night, and this took about one half-hour to make plain the situation, and I proceeded to quote Jesus again in Matthew 16, "I will build my church." Then read from 1 Corinthians 12, "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles." Now, gentlemen, let us proceed to build in harmony with this standard that Reverend Smith read at the commencement of this union meeting which you all said "amen" to so strongly. Our first officers, you see, are "apostles." Let us commence. Mr. McNew, have you any apostles in your church? No answer. Mr. Thornberg, have you any in your church? No answer. Mr. Smith, have you any in yours? A wave of excitement goes over the people, and no answer from Reverend Smith. Turning to Brn. Yates and Ammon I ask the same question, and got a ready answer, clear and distinct: "Yes." The Reverend Pryor cries, "Who are they?" Paying no attention to his question I hurriedly picked up a hymnal and slapped it down on the stand saying, There, I have got the first set of officers from the Latter Day Saints, and we will proceed; and can I find a sufficient number our standard here calls for? Among the five or six churches represented here in this union meeting, there will be no difficulty in organizing and then presenting our organization to God for his acceptance. One set of officers. Now for the second. "Secondarily prophets." I went the round again, and received an answer, "Yes," when reaching Brn. Yates and Ammon. Before I could proceed further Reverend Pryor cried out, "The thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians says these things shall cease." "How and when?" I asked. "Take the stand," came from two or three in the crowd, and Reverend Pryor came to the stand. He occupied thirty minutes in telling the people about Joe Smith and the Mormons, and how two young ladies were killed by plunging them in the water for baptism, took sick over such foolishness and died. The Bible that I wanted for a standard did not teach any mode for baptism. He was convinced that sprinkling or pouring was the only true way, as God would not inaugurate a mode that could not be carried out in all places north or south, and under all kind of circumstances, sick in bed or well. He got the mode from a chiseled profile of John the Baptist in a rock pouring water upon a person, and this cup in the rock was found a thousand years ago. When he closed it was half-past eleven and I announced we would review him the next night. At this instant a number of questions came pouring in from the other ministers which I heard patiently and told the people I would answer the next night. We sang the Doxology and closed. The next night I took the stand and really was blessed with liberty and clearness for one hour and thirty-five minutes. One man said as he walked away: "That man is getting old, but he has not lost any of the vigor of his youth." We could not close till five minutes of eleven. Those that know my nervous condition may wonder how I stood the strain of such a prolonged meeting. Earnest and faithful prayers were being offered in my behalf, and God surely heard their prayers. We continued the meetings up to the night of the 13th with unabated interest, and announced to reopen them on Tuesday night the 27th inst. The "union meeting" nearly doubled our congregation. The interest could hardly be better. In every succeeding sermon the "standard" was a prominent feature, and organization, doctrine, and practice in harmony with the standard was being seen by every one interested. Surely the "dry bones were shaken up." It will be a long day before you will get that set of ministers to consent to another union meeting where the Bible is to be the standard. Brn. Yates and Ammon make a fine defense of the Book of Mormon; could have sold many had we had them. Borrowed of the brethren and sold them as they were. We are now at Ripley, Oklahoma, for the reunion. I. N. WHITE.

WIGAN, Lancashire, England, August 7, 1907.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few words from me will not be amiss, to tell your readers of the visit of our brethren, J. W. Rushton and H. Greenwood, the president of the Manchester District, and of the fatherly advice these brethren gave the Saints here in Wigan, of the necessity and importance of our duty, in bringing ourselves into close communion with God. The words spoken by them were the words of eternity. And they had such an effect upon me that I shall never forget. And surely this is the kind of work that is wanted in branches like ours. All through, they spoke with wisdom and power; they were as humble as little children.

After they had spent a few days with us, the time came when we had to part with our dear Bro. Greenwood; but Bro. Rushton is still on the battlefield, in the market place, preaching the gospel to those of the world, also on Monday and Tuesday night, with the same remarkable energy. Some say, "Who is this man," and "Where is he from," "What a pity he does not belong to some popular church." But it is not popularity that the Saint is looking for; but the truth, and the truth has made us free from sin and bondage; for surely the world is walking in darkness and sin. Atheism and spiritualism are spreading in this town very rapidly, and using all their power to change the truth of God into a lie, and worship and serve the creature more than the Creator, imagining vain things. God will be their judge.

I will close my letter by using the words of John: "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. . . . And it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see see him as he is."

Hoping to obtain that crown promised to the faithful, and praying for all God's children,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

16 Gilroy Street.

KENNARD, Nebraska, August 19, 1907.

Editors Herald: Bro. Hale Smith and the writer came into these parts about a week and a half ago, and first located our efforts at a place called Dale, and domiciled at Bro. John Taylor's.

We soon discovered that we had gotten into a hotbed of Methodism, and that they were inclined toward that detestable stay-away proposition that seems to be the only bulwark Methodism has. But a few came out to hear us. And those who came were interested, I believe. I promised to return to Dale some time this fall when the farmers were not so busy, and will hold meetings at a place called Elk City, about three miles south of Dale. Bro. Taylor's folks will do all they can do to assist an elder; for we found them to be good, live Latter Day Saints.

At present we are staying with Bro. Robert Whorlow, about four miles and a half northwest of Kennard. We will hold meetings here this week, and then to Meadow Grove to attend district conference.

I find some Seventh Day Adventists here. And no doubt we will have something about their "primary, immutable Sabbath law," ere we leave. And unless my tongue fails me, and the Spirit of Christ, they will hear considerable about the immutable gospel law. We are trying to keep busy, and will, as far as we are able, sow the gospel seed with a liberal hand and trust God to give the increase.

With brotherly love,

J. R. SUTTON.

VALE, Oregon, August 11, 1907.

Dear Saints: It has now been more than a year since we came to this place; and I miss the church privileges I enjoyed before coming here very much. I had no idea when I attended my last meeting in Condon that it would be so long before some of the elders could visit us.

We can get the court-house to preach in, although I do not know what kind of a crowd we would have, but am anxious to see and am ready to do all I can. It would be hard for me to care for an elder or two, because of poor health, but will gladly do the best I can, and they would be sincerely welcomed.

We are sixteen miles from the main line at Ontario, and have two trains daily, so it will not be hard for an elder to reach us, should one be passing by. Our little girl is ten months old, and has never been blessed. If there are any Saints here in the Malheur Valley, or surrounding country, would be glad to hear from them, or meet them should they come to Vale. We have heard of a few "Mormons," but upon investigation they prove to be infidels that once belonged to the Utah church. There is an old saying, "We never miss the water 'till the well runs dry." How often we do not appreciate our privileges and blessings until they are gone. To the Saints that live in branches or where there are a few together in the same community: Thank God for your blessings, and live together in love. While to the isolated ones: Let us strive to let our light shine, and teach our children the gospel, and take comfort in the saying: "He serves who only stands and waits."

I wish to express my appreciation for the Autumn Leaves and HERALD.

With love to all the Saints and ever striving to be faithful.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. O. W. PROPST.

The Story of a Conversion.

Dear Herald: I am a reader of your paper and have heard and read some of the letters written by the brothers and sisters of the Latter Day Saint Church. All letters I have read have done me good, have made me think of my past life, which I will try to tell you part of.

When I was about the age of twelve years, it seemed that life was all discouragement to me, and I thank the Lord that it did, for it has done me good.

I managed to go to church once in a while, and, hearing all the different things about churches, thought that there was nothing to the churches and that by living a true and righteous life a person would not lose eternal life.

I really got tired of life, did not feel satisfied, nor feel like living. With all my discouragements, I went in secret to pray, and humbly did I secretly pray. It was some distance from my home in a grove, and if I remember rightly I went to this place five times to pray, until my prayers were heard. Glory to God in heaven, that my prayers were heard and fulfilled. It seemed that I did live a righteous life. The very night after I knew my prayers were heard I had a beautiful dream, and this dream has not ended to this day. It is my guide all through life. I do not mean that this is the only time I have prayed in my life.

This great latter-day work was made known to me several years ago; but I did not accept it until last August. Shortly before being baptized, I was down here in Wisconsin in an old logging-camp. One night before going to my place of rest, I knelt in prayer and asked our Father in heaven if I was worthy to be baptized. I am conscious of the fact that I heard a voice saying, "Arise ye, and be baptized." While hearing those words I saw a personage robed in white disappear. Oh, the sight was beautiful.

This is God's work, and it is true. After I heard those words I could not rest; but went forth and was baptized.

I was baptized by Elder A. L. Whiteaker, at Minneapolis, and it was a beautiful baptism.

I am glad I have taken this step in life. It is my aim to live a true and faithful life; but I know, with all my weakness, I go astray and do things that are not pleasing to our heavenly Father.

There is a little town in Minnesota called Clitherall. This place I hold most dear, and it was there I found all my happiness, as there I got acquainted with the true work of the Lord, and also with my wife.

I have many things to be grateful for. I have been shown many times the true light. I know there is only one way to seek eternal life. Let us love our Father in heaven with all our hearts and strength, that we may be ever faithful unto the end.

Your brother in Christ,

J. F. ROTZIEN.

HAWKINS, Wisconsin, August 19, 1907.

A Testimony.

Editors Herald: Here I come again to renew my testimony to all whom it may concern. When I was a boy about fifty years ago, I commenced to pray to God for such things as I felt I needed from him; the greatest were a forgiveness of my sins, and salvation. I continued to pray like Alma of old, until my experience was the same as his (see Book of Alma 19:3). By the same means that he knew that his sins were forgiven, so did I. I can and do bear testimony, as Enos did, that my sins were forgiven (see Book of Enos, 1:1). I also testify that I was born again, as Alma was (see Book of Alma 17:3).

I was, soon after this experience, called to preach the gospel as I understood it. God blessed me along the line in doing so, until this good day, and he has blessed others through my ministry while a preacher in the Baptist Church, and also in the Reorganized Church; so I know by my own experience that God blesses the people everywhere, when they serve him to the best of their ability; and I also know that the nearer a person draws to God, the greater light he receives, and the plainer he sees himself as he is, and the more unworthy he sees he is of God's blessing. I do know that I have never merited a single favor or blessing at God's hands. All that I ever received have been graciously given through Jesus Christ, for his merits, and not mine. I know that the divinity of the church of which I am now a member is of God, and am sure that God's work will go on to victory, over all opposition, no matter who does wrong, or fails. No man is of so much importance in God's work that the work can not go on without him.

I feel well to-day; yea, I am happy in the Spirit. I thank God that I can say of a truth that he is with me by his Holy Spirit.

The above is a brief statement of my testimony.

Yours for truth,

E. W. NUNLEY.

Over the Mountains.

Editors Herald: From Brigham City, about three thousand population, still hard by the mountains, the former home of Lorenzo Snow, named after Brigham the pioneer, some twenty miles north of Ogden, with oceans of delicious fruit ripened and still ripening, the queen city for peaches, another stronghold of Mormons, kissed with the gentle zephyrs from Salt Lake on the west and the canyon breezes on the east, we this time send in our items.

Following our former correspondence, the Salt Lake Saints, as we had indicated, came up in answer to an invitation from the Saints at Ogden to take a trip up the Ogden canyon, and hold our Sunday-school and Religio services. Apostle Sheehy being there at the time accompanied them and also Elder Evan Davis, their pastor. So up the canyon we went, conveyed by the hire of two special wagons. Beneath the bowers of Nature's temples, the first edifices, close by the swift and dashing Ogden River, fenced in by stalwart hills, we thought of our Father in heaven and by songs and speeches endeavored to remember his name. An address of welcome was fittingly delivered by Bro. C. A. Smurthwait on behalf of the Saints of Ogden, responded to by Bro. Davis on behalf of the Saints of Salt Lake. Other speeches were then delivered by others of us as we were called on, and we had an all-around good time.

Since my last contribution we were called on at Ogden by both Brn. Smith and Sheehy, in charge, separately and at different times. The former was heading for Seattle, Washington, the last time he called, and the latter was, on the 12th inst., when we, Bro. Stead and I, left Ogden for here, nearly ready to move for California.

Since I left Provo several Mormons have been baptized there; and I understand that some have been baptized at Lehi where Brn. Sheldon and Vanderwood have been laboring.

One good Mormon was baptized at Ogden two weeks ago last Sunday and there are to be a number more next Sunday. We could not say that they are flocking into our movement, but an honest few are here and there catching a glimpse of the light and embracing it. The one baptized two weeks ago received much abuse from her relatives for her action in leaving them. Indeed it seems that they displayed as much bitterness and venom as sectarians ever do. Their mean and revengeful deportment only confirmed her impression that she had done the right thing.

From the 7th to the 10th inclusive there was a public debate in Ogden between Elder J. D. Stead, my colaborer, and Elder Moses C. Davis, a lawyer of Salt Lake. It had originated about two weeks earlier one evening when we were holding forth on the street. The said Davis was present, and as Bro. Stead was answering the questions at the conclusion of the discourse—an opportunity we customarily throw out—he offered to join issue in organized debate to discuss matters involved in certain answers from which he dissented. His offer was promptly accepted, and repairing to a restaurant kept by one of our members two propositions were formulated and signed. The first in effect was, "Resolved that the Utah Mormon Church has repudiated doctrines which the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has authoritatively received."

The second proposition was, "Resolved that Brigham Young was the rightful successor to Joseph Smith in the presidency of the church."

The first two nights the discussion was held in one of the city theaters which cost twenty-five dollars a night. The last two nights it was held in the Fifth Ward Amusement Hall, the bishop having given his consent for its use. The shift was made on account of expense.

The first proposition discussed was that relating to the repudiation by the Mormons of doctrines that had been formerly received to govern the church; wherein the brother showed that they had repudiated exclusive monogamy and the doctrine of one God, etc. With ample reference and citation from authoritative documents the case was put beyond the power of the aspiring and technical barrister to dislodge.

It will probably not be necessary to enter into a rehearsal of the evidences he would attempt to offer for Brigham Young, or how a brother with the facts well in hand would dispose of them. Contrary to Penrose and a number of their other leading authors and authorities, he claimed that Brigham Young was ordained; but signally failed to cite any reference in its support.

Bro. Sheehy, with us at the time, acted as moderator to Bro. Stead. The proceedings were commendably peaceful, not one interruption, not one point of order raised. The brethren were all satisfied with the effort of our representative, who had truth and God on his side. Good will undoubtedly result. The Mormons had refused the Weber Stake Academy and any of their buildings for which application had been made for the purpose. We were agreeably surprised when in the very setting sun of the affair they consented through the importunities of their own man to the use of the Amusement Hall.

My colaborer and I came here on the 12th. Last night the writer delivered the initiatory sermon from our torch-pulpit in front of the court-house after the paper had announced us during the day. We continue indefinitely. Three of our members in the town.

It is noteworthy that the discussion started on the anniversary of the landing of E. C. Briggs and Alexander McCord in Salt Lake Valley, when, to say nothing of a debate, they could not even get the courtesy of a Mormon hall or church edifice of any kind in which to occupy. Bro. Briggs was present.

Our Provo reunion begins the last of the month.

A Request.

Dear Saints: My husband, Elder William Taylor, has been afflicted with a double rupture for the last four years; has to stay in bed most of the time, and we are not able to pay for medical treatment. He requested me to ask the Saints to pray for him, and those that could to help him with the means the Lord had given them.

News From Branches*INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

The stake reunion will be held at Holden, Missouri, beginning September 13. Quite a number have signified their intention of going, so we have reason to believe the stake will be well represented.

Bro. Earl Bailey has bought the house which stands on the Santarium grounds. The excavation for the Sanitarium building is completed and material is being hauled to the site. This looks like business.

Another matter that looks like business is the contribution of our "Laurel Society" of one hundred dollars to the Sanitarium fund.

Last week the Reverend Mr. Moses of Chicago occupied our pulpit and gave a temperance lecture. The meeting was well attended and the interest good.

We have recently come in possession of three tracts written by Presbyterian ministers, for sale by the Westminster Press in St. Louis for two and four cents each. The titles are, "The Mormon God is not the God of the Bible," "The pre-existence of spirits (a Mormon doctrine) refuted by the Bible," and "Articles of Mormon faith explained." Probably the older missionaries have read them, but to the young men who are studying they may be of help. The writer has a limited supply and will gladly distribute them to those who desire them.

J. A. GARDNER.

LAMONI, IOWA.

The Lamoni Stake reunion, August 23 to September 1, proved a success, and is regarded by many as the best reunion yet held in the stake. The missionaries in charge and the stake presidency acted as the presidency of the reunion.

The Sunday-school and Religio interests were well conserved, the institute work being conducted by Superintendent T. A. Hougas and President J. A. Gunsolley. Friday afternoon was devoted to Graceland College, and appropriate exercises were held.

The Daughters of Zion conducted a profitable session on Monday.

The preaching, for the more part, was excellent, and the prayer-meetings spiritual and uplifting. The weather was fair, and the attendance good. Altogether, the reunion was a good one, and should be encouraging to the Saints of the Stake.

At the business-meeting on Saturday, the vote to hold the reunion next year was unanimous. The following were chosen as a committee: W. T. Shakespeare, R. S. Salyards, John Smith, Moroni Traxler, and J. F. Garver. The committee was authorized to accept the offer of the Dancer estate and to make proper arrangements for the rent or purchase of a tent, tabernacle, or pavillion in which to meet.

MINTON.—Sr. Lucinda Jane (Lenord) Minton was born February 10, 1830, at New Castle, Indiana. Of them four children were born. She was left a widow in 1856; was married again in 1858 to James Minton. Four children were born. She leaves five children, fourteen grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren to mourn their loss. She united with the church in the early sixties. Died July 18, at Holden, Missouri.

BOYD.—Neasbert A. Boyd was born January 7, 1852, at Silver Creek, Pottawattamie County, Iowa, and died at Grandview Sanitarium, Kansas City, Kansas, June 21, 1907, at the age of 55 years, 5 months, and 14 days. He was baptized at Hill City, Kansas, April 1, 1888, by Elder G. W. Shute of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has lived a faithful Christian life ever since. December 16, 1877, he was united in marriage to Mahalia Jane Haskins. Seven children were born of this union. The mother and three children preceded the husband and father to the paradise of God. Four children, one brother, and a host of friends are left to mourn his departure. Bro. Boyd came to Graham county, Kansas, in March, 1884, and has ever since made this his home. During all these years his large circle of acquaintances found him faultless, ever ready to share the burdens of his neighbors, and lend his kind offices to a betterment of the community in which he has reared a family of useful, upright citizens. What greater monument can be erected in honor of the dead than this, or an incentive to emulation for the living? The funeral-services were held in Baptist church, Tuesday, June 25, 1907. Sermon by Elder S. V. Pratt, of Harp City, Kansas, assisted by Reverend M. R. Holt, pastor of the church. Interment in Hill City cemetery.

What the Clay Turpentine Cup is Doing.

Twenty million turpentine cups are used in the pine forests of the South to catch the flow of resin from the trees, and seven or eight million are added each year. These simple-looking cups, which are not unlike flower-pots in size and shape, indicate a rapid and highly important change in the American method of gathering turpentine, due to the need of economy in using all forest products and to the application of science in an old-fashioned industry.

The old plan of cutting deep boxes in the trees, in which turpentine collected after running down the scarified trunks, was universal until a few years ago. It was wasteful and destructive. Trees so mutilated survived only about four years. They might continue to live, and they usually did not fall for years, but their value as turpentine producers was at an end and their value for lumber was seriously lessened.

The cup and gutter were devised to take the place of the old wasteful method. No box is needed, and the trunk is left strong and but little injured. Small galvanized iron gutters, attached in a simple yet secure manner to the tree, lead the turpentine from the scarified wood to the cup. The amount thus collected is greater than by the old method, it is of superior quality, and it commands a higher price. Further than this, the tree thus operated upon is productive about eight years, instead of four as under the old method, and produces more each year. In other words, one tree during its productive period gives more than the former yield of two.

The cup and gutter method did not go into general use at once. Nor is it generally used yet. The majority of operators cling to what they have always known. But the millions of cups scattered among the pine forests from South Carolina to Louisiana are proof that the four or five years since the new method was introduced have made a great change in an important industry.

The world depends largely on southern pine forests for naval stores. About half the product is exported. It is worth many millions annually. Turpentine supplies an enormous trade. America can hold this trade, but if it is to do so the valuable southern pine must be cared for. It was this which led to investigations on the part of the Forest Service in the effort to economize in reaping the turpentine crop. Several turpentine operators were foresighted enough to welcome the work, and coöperation between these private interests and the Government foresters led to the introduction of the cup and gutter system.

The turpentine cup encountered prejudice, and at first overcame it slowly. The inventor found it necessary, with his associates, to buy a pottery to make the cups. Potters would not undertake the work. The article was new, was not in demand, and no one cared to take the risk of manufacturing it.

A veteran of the wheel and kiln, more venturesome than the others, at one time half-way consented to make the cups. He said he could turn out one hundred thousand a year. When told that it was a matter of millions of cups annually, he cut negotiations short, said it was a dream of college men, and that he was there to talk business and not foolishness. That ended it with him.

A pottery was bought near Chattanooga, machines were installed which make eighteen cups a minute each, and the cost per cup has been reduced from four cents, the price when hand made, to one and six tenths.

Manufacturing the cups was only part of the battle. Operators in the turpentine forests, at the outset, would not touch the article. Then, when a tract of pine was at length secured, a great deal of trouble was had in persuading the laborers to work with the new device.

The cups won the day. Laborers learned to like them, and operators took them up. The source of supply for naval stores, and for all other uses of turpentine and its products, both for this country and for others, is more secure. Pine forests will last longer, produce more turpentine and rosin, and the timber is better.

When trees are boxed, that is, cut deeply, they are weakened. Wind levels them, and they often decay before the arrival of the lumberman, who follows the turpentine operator. Fire attacks the notched trunks of standing trees, and large numbers are lost. The slight mutilation for the cups and gutters does not subject the trees to so great danger, and the lumberman finds them little injured.

CONCERNING THE HARMONY SOCIETY.

We are pleased to give space to an article by Sr. Kate C. Ward, in correction of our error in stating that she was at one time a member of the Harmony Society. Our mistake was quite a natural one, she being so close a relative of the wife of Mr. Duss, and having been so long a dweller of the community. We really hope that Sr. Ward will correct the wrong impressions we may have formed in regard to the Economy Society, and any others of which she may be cognizant, now that she has begun; our desire for correct information is only made greater by what is already furnished us.

The Editor has offered me the privilege of correcting errors in the account published in the HERALD of July 31 regarding the Harmony Society of Economy, Pennsylvania. To do this, it is necessary to review the article, "The end of the Harmony Society," paragraph by paragraph, introducing a good deal of personal mention of my own folks, which is not my intention. Besides, on reflection, I conclude that those special items even corrected might not interest the church at large, and that the space would be better used at some future time in relating what I know of the society as a coöperative or communistic body; and will content myself with the correction of one mistake I find in the later article in the HERALD, of August 21, under the heading "The Economy Society," where the writer states: "We knew at the time we saw the article that Sr. Ward had been a member of the society," etc.

I was never a member of the society, although I resided at Economy about nine years at one time, and over two years at another and later period of my life. I also spent a summer at Economy, thirty years ago, when it was still a flourishing community of some hundreds of members and prospective members, (with a few hired people and a very few others; those few that summer, as at all times in those days, remaining in the village on sufferance, or by special permission). I am, therefore, as the Editor says, "prepared to know more of the society, and its history and workings, than the reporter who wrote up the matter of the clipping to which we refer."

At some suitable time, I hope to respond to the invitation given by the Editor to one of a party of five or six who went from Lamoni to the Amana Society, ten years ago, to "give an account of what he saw there that might interest the church," since the one asked to write the story did not do so for various reasons, the principal one being a condition imposed by our worthy President to the effect that we should have had a year's residence among the people of the Amana Society before writing an article about them for the HERALD.

As we remained but eight months among them, we sup-

I KNOW.

I know as my life grows older
 And my eyes have clearer sight
 That under each rank wrong, somewhere
 There lies the root of right.
 That each sorrow has its purpose
 By the sorrowing oft unguessed;
 That, as sure as the sun brings morning,
 Whatever is, is best.

I know that each sinful action,
 As sure as the night brings shade,
 Is somewhere, sometime punished,
 Though the hour be long delayed.
 I know that the soul is aided
 Sometimes by the heart's unrest,
 And to grow means oft to suffer;
 But whatever is, is best.

I know that there are no errors
 In the great, eternal plan,
 And that all things work together
 For the final good of man.
 And I know when my soul speeds onward
 In its grand, eternal quest,
 I shall say as I look back earthward,
 "Whatever is, is best."—Anonymous.

THE LIGHT AND LIFE OF THE WORLD.

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants is a book that has not been properly appreciated by all who profess to believe it. It covers a wide range and will furnish food for any mind. Now we find plain practical advice that will appeal to those of a business turn; next, perhaps, we read where God has warned the church of impending danger, and specified the lines along which apostasy would progress, and we are filled with wonder to note how the warning was unheeded and the prophecy literally fulfilled. We turn a page, and we find God revealing to his people concerning the wars and afflictions that are to come upon this land—revealing them at a time when none dreamed that such should come. Then we find the mysteries of the future world, the mysteries of light and intelligence, and mysteries of the universe dealt with. We are taken just as far as our individual mentality and spiritual power will permit us to follow; and still we see dim outlines of avenues yet to be explored.

A wide range of topics is covered, and this, with the method of treating each, shows inspiration. The average man has a hobby, and this is especially true of the religious reformer or leader. His pet theory takes precedent always, to the exclusion perhaps of much that is more important. It is brought out on all occasions. Some one has wisely said that a man of one idea always spells it with a big "I" and unless the man is exceptionally broad he will permit one idea to occupy his thought. But if any one can discover Joseph Smith's hobby from reading the Book of Covenants he is more discernible than he writer. A multitude of ideas are dwelt upon and each, so far as we can discover, is given its due importance. That is a mark of inspiration, because God alone is capable of an entirely broad and impartial view, giving always to each matter its relative weight.

A particular passage to which we wish to call attention is found in section 45, paragraph 2: "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the light and the life of the world; a light that shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not."

The light and life of the world! Do we believe that, or have we unconsciously entertained the thought that God enlightens only those of his immediate church? Do we imagine that our small missionary force is the only factor that God is using to save those who will be saved and condemn those who will not be saved?

First, however, let us approach this subject from a slightly different standpoint,—that of the absolute dependence of the whole world upon God. Sometimes we watch the processes of nature as something that is going on independent of God. We see the wicked making no acknowledgment of dependence, and fancy that men may live independent of God; but the fact that they do not acknowledge that dependence does not remove it.

Consider for a moment this question of light. There are various manifestations of light but it is all from one source. This sunlight that enlightens your eyes is a direct manifestation of God's glory, and comes from his immediate presence, because we read in section 85, "As also he is in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made. . . . And the light which now shineth which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings; which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space."

"The light which is in all things; which giveth life to all things." How constant is the dependence of all life upon God when we realize that all life is sustained by the light that proceeds from him. Shut the world off from light, and almost immediately it would be a frozen and lifeless waste. Paul spoke the truth when he told the Athenians that God was not far from any one of them.

When we understand that the light of day comes directly from God and brings with it life and intelligence, we understand some of the common processes of nature that otherwise we could not understand. When God wished to create life on this earth, in the beginning, his first move was to turn in the light, the other processes of creation followed in order and, we might say, as a natural consequence. We may see the work still going on, and especially in the springtime. In the winter the earth is removed from the sun and her supply of light is cut down. A dormant condition bordering on death obtains. Everything that continues to live does so with economic care upon stored-up life of the summer past. But in the spring a marvelous change occurs. The sunlight smites the earth and sets in motion a myriad of complicated activities all of which betray intelligence. Water is lifted from the ocean and falls in rain, and rivers are set in motion. Life everywhere begins the struggle to clothe itself with matter, and springs in a thousand forms of animal or plant. All of these manifest a degree of intelligence, even the least of them. The rose and the tomato grow side by side. The tomato selects the very things that will form its acid fruit; while the rose from the same soil selects the properties that will form its lovely flower and sweet perfume. Did not the process require discrimination and intelligence? Surely! That intelligence came to them with the light that stirred them to life; "which is the same light that quickeneth your understandings; which light proceedeth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space." The man who denies his dependence simply fulfills the statement that the light was not comprehended by the darkness in which it shone.

There is much in that statement, "I am the light and the life of the world." There are other and higher manifestations of light, under the operation of the Holy Spirit, not visible to the natural eye. It is more than a figure of speech when we talk about the Spirit being light and about intelligence and truth being light. We are told that the glory of God is intelligence, or in other words light and truth. We are also told that the Comforter is the light of truth, "which truth shineth." Intelligence and truth are actual light. As manifest in God they shine with such splendor that the natural man can not behold them and live. When God appeared upon Sinai he must needs surround himself with a thick cloud to protect the children of Israel from his splendor. Light will foster life, but life exposed to an unaccustomed degree of light will be destroyed. Sometime we will be in condition and then we are told we will not need the sun by day or the moon by night because the glory of the Lord will be our light. It is probable, too, that every man who has obeyed the celestial law will be clothed with light by reason of the intelligence that is in him, just as the holy angels appear to men clad in light. Then we will have the "more abundant" life which it was the mission of Christ to bring.

Now we see through a glass darkly. Matter has power to prevent the passage of light so that on the side of the earth removed from the sun there is darkness. Matter presents such a barrier that we ourselves would be largely ignorant of the light, but for the providential arrangement of the eye that introduces the light to our very soul. So our fleshly, material nature, if we allow it to rule us largely, prevents the free passage of the more subtle light, and we remain subject to the laws of sin and death when we might have life and light. Man is perverse in this particular, that while the plants struggle toward the light he often struggles from it, because he loves darkness rather than light.

However, there is that statement, in John 1:9, that Jesus "was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Every man that cometh into the world! We can but believe that this is true, and that the Spirit of God has been an ever-present force struggling with all men to lift them up; a light seeking comprehension. They who have welcomed that light have received more light, because night will cleave unto light and intelligence unto intelligence, and have been led to God. Still there has been room for the work of men, as in the case of Paul, who was led to God by spiritual forces yet must go to God's servant to be told "what he must do." Those who are so led are led perhaps unconsciously, then they come to God and their eyes are opened and they see that the law must be obeyed. They open their hearts and say, "Lord, fill me now with thy Spirit that will show me all truth and thus will I work out an intelligent salvation." God does that and they become his "friends," knowing his will and doing it. That is the best explanation that we can give of the difference between the "baptism of the Holy Spirit" and that manifestation that is given to all men.

On the other hand those who refuse to follow the light lose even that which they had. "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light." The individual who accepts the light and is filled with and baptized with it, and has "tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come," if he then falls away has grievously sinned against the light and it is taken away. Then his condition is like that portrayed by the Master when he said, "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness." Job, also, says, "The light of the wicked shall be put out." In section 90 of Doctrine and Covenants it is stated thus: "Light and truth forsaketh that evil one." Of course if light forsakes the evil one, it will forsake his followers, and they will be in the condition of the angels which kept not their first estate, mentioned in Jude, that are "reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness."

While this subtle force has been ever at work to lift up and enliven humanity we believe that it has worked with peculiar power among peoples to whom God was sending living messengers with the gospel. It has helped to better their condition in every way so that they might properly receive, if they so chose. There we believe lies the secret of the marvelous advancements of civilization among certain peoples. That was what made the Israelites such a wonderful nation. The truth was with them and they were a people walking in light. While others were worshipping animals or idols, they were expounding the idea of one great, living Deity. While the world was overshadowed with monstrous beliefs that often expressed themselves in obscene and horrid rites, they were teaching virtue and reverence. Through them came the law that is the basis of the laws of every civilized nation to-day. Their literature, a part of which we have in the Bible, is still the inspiration and marvel of the world. But when they finally rejected the gospel of the Son of God, their greatness left them. Their fall came speedily. When we read concerning the fall of Jerusalem, it is not difficult to believe that their intelligence had forsaken them.

When the gospel passed from the Jews, Paul in Rome and Greece, found a field harrowed for the sowing. For the time being the intelligence of the world had blazed up there; but the people were not worthy of the message. What might have been was not. The empires that had struggled up with might and light and wisdom, went down in folly and corruption and darkness, involving the organized church in their ruin.

When the Reformation began, and the way again opened up among the Gentiles for the gospel, they immediately took the upward course, and the world has never seen such marvelous progress as has been made since the restoration of the gospel in 1830. But prophecy indicates that the times of the Gentiles will draw to a close; and, if they continue to ignore the source of their light, we may expect them to fall as others have fallen. "Intelligence and light will forsake" them. ELBERT A. SMITH.

"We know of no 'good' society that is not composed of good men and women. Society is everywhere and every one is in society; and the 'best society' is composed of the best men and women, whether they be rich or poor, in large cities or in small communities."

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Elder Albert Carmichael writes that the Southern California Reunion was a success. R. C. Evans of the Presidency and F. A. Smith and F. M. Sheehy of the Twelve were present and bore the burden of the preaching. Their diverse individualities and methods of address furnished a pleasing variety and the hearers were both edified and pleased.

Elder T. W. Williams, pastor of the Los Angeles Branch, has again moved his family into the city, and is to be addressed at 1314 East Adams Street. He reports eight baptisms; more to follow.

In the items from Providence, Rhode Island, will be found an interesting prophecy as given to that branch through Bro. Richard Bullard. Among other things they are admonished to "cease from fault-finding and complaining. Cease from speaking evil of your neighbor, your brother, or your sister; for this is not seemly before me, but displeasing to thy Father which is in heaven."

The following regarding Bro. E. R. Dewsnup, former president of Graceland College, is from the Quincy Daily Herald, September 3:

"CHAMPAIGN, Illinois, September 3.—President Edmund J. James of the University of Illinois yesterday announced the appointment of Professor E. K. Dewsnup as professor of railroad administration and management at the University of Illinois. Professor Dewsnup was born in England and got his education at the University of Manchester and at the Royal Technical College, Manchester. After graduation he spent considerable time studying operation, construction, and management of railroads in the United Kingdom, in France, and in Germany, and was for a time an officer on an English railway. He then spent a year in the United States, making a comparative study of the railroad systems of this country with those on the Continent.

"Three years ago he was brought to this country permanently by President Harper of the University of Chicago to take charge of the railroad course."

According to the following from the Kansas City Times, Reverend W. H. Haupt, whose name has been before our readers in the recent article by Bro. J. W. Peterson, has resigned his position as rector:

"The Reverend W. H. Haupt, who has been rector of Trinity Episcopal church in Independence two years, has tendered his resignation and it has been accepted. He was recently appointed by the board of education in Independence as teacher of German in the high school."

OFFICE-WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Christ was the Comforter to his disciples while he was upon the earth. He personally ministered to their necessities and to his own. He stood between them and the Father, and received of the Father and gave unto them. Whenever he wanted a man for his servant, he would say, "Matthew," "James," or "John," as the case might be, and send him forth to represent him to the people. After his ascension, this function, this work which he did, was still necessary, was to be perpetuated; and we now ask, What succeeded him? what took his place to perpetuate it? The answer is: The Holy Spirit. Where is the proof? In John and Acts, as we shall presently see. See John 14, 15, and 16, in which the office-work of the Holy Ghost, Spirit, or Comforter, as it is variously designated therein, is quite clearly defined by Jesus himself. He says, "If I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." And he promised that, among other things which the Spirit of truth would do, it would "guide you into all truth," and "show you things to come." He said again, "He [the Spirit] shall testify of me." Also, "He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."

In accordance with all these prophecies and promises, we find in Acts 1:2 that after Christ's ascension "he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen." We can not dispute that the Holy Ghost was on earth even during the lifetime of Jesus, during his sojourn on earth; but it is evident that, if so, it was not manifested as it was after his departure, it did not assume the same functions in its activity in the church.

We can not deny that it existed and operated in Old Testament times, because Peter declares that in olden times "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." (2 Peter 1:21.) David (see Acts 1), Simeon (see Luke 2), Elizabeth (see Luke 1), Zechariah (see Luke 1), John the Baptist (see Luke 1), all were inspired, moved, enthused by the Holy Ghost, some before Christ was born, some after, but all before his ascension. Therefore when we read that "the Holy Ghost was not yet given because Jesus was not yet glorified" (John 7), we must understand that the Master had in view the permanency of its residence in the church, with the exercise and development of all that flowed from its sacred presence, as we find described in texts already cited, and in 1 Corinthians 12.

One important, if not the most important, work of the Spirit was to testify of Jesus (see John 15:26), and to witness to the recipients of the gospel of their acceptance with Jesus. It is a witness which God giveth to them that obey him, said Peter (see Acts 5). The world at large did not believe in Jesus in his day, neither do they to-day. Many people can not read or write. They can not gather nor grasp the many external evidences of the truth of the gospel. Take the heathen for example. They must all have some evidence, a means of certainty. Does the gospel of Christ promise them anything that Mohammedanism or any of the other systems does not? Yes. What is it? Here it is: Jesus said, "If any man will do the will of the Father, he shall know of the doctrine."—John 7. How will he know? Paul says, "No man can say [know] that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Corinthians 12. Is it important to know? Indeed, for Jesus says, "This is life eternal, that they might know," etc. It was the Holy Ghost which was to afford us this knowledge of Jesus, and witness to us of our sonship, our acceptance with him. We need it now, the same Holy Ghost, with all its accompaniments, with all that by which it was what it was eighteen hundred years ago. We need it with the "fruit" of Galatians 5, and the "gifts" of 1 Corinthians 12. It has not changed, neither has its office work changed. A man gets hurt, mutilated, rendered imperfect; his spirit takes its flight. Christ's body (church) got hurt, mutilated, rendered imperfect; its spirit, its life (the Holy Ghost) took its flight. But it has returned and yields its ancient bounties in the tabernacle of the church which is also revived for the last time.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

"Perhaps the chief element in prevailing prayer is consciousness of need. Many people say prayers who do not feel the need of prayer. They do not feel the need at all, or else they are not persuaded that the need can be met by prayer. For this reason many have given over the habit of regular prayer, and others are wont to repeat words which, though devotional enough in themselves, do not express the real thought of the suppliant. Doctor James Hamilton tells of a Scotchman, who had but one prayer, suddenly called upon by his wife to pray for their child that was seriously ill. The man went through his usual form and came at last to his petition for the Jews, "Lord, turn again the captivity of Zion." At this point his wife interposed, saying, "Eh, man, you're aye drawn out for the Jews, but it's our bairn that's deen'."

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

III. BRIEF SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF GERARD J. S. ABELS.

GERARD J. S. ABELS AND WIFE.

Those who have read the "Defense of Gerard J. A. Abels" in former numbers of the HERALD will be interested in the following brief sketch of his life. The article is prepared by Bro. Abels himself, though he therein refers to himself in the third person.—EDITORS.

Gerard J. S. Abels, for twenty years connected with the Utah church of Latter Day Saints, whose picture is here given, was born at Amsterdam, The Netherlands, on the twentieth day of March, 1870.

His paternal relatives, upon his being left an orphan at the age of three years, planned to have him reared a priest, they being devout Catholics, but were frustrated by his maternal relatives, who had him intrusted to the keeping of the Dutch Reformed Church.

He in childhood always having been of a religious turn of mind readily accepted at the age of seventeen the fundamental principles of the gospel as taught by the Mormon elders, of which fundamental principles he has ever been a consistent exponent, and to which he has been a devout adherent.

Fearless expressions of his belief caused him to meet with severe opposition on the part of the Dutch Reformed Church, who were his guardians and tutors, and who, meeting with no success in seeking to have him abandon his Mormon ideas, secured a commitment against him to a reformatory institution, the carrying out of which was, however, prevented by his secretly leaving his native country for America, arriving safely, after many weeks of hardships, during the latter part of August, 1888, in Utah, where he ever since has resided.

Mr. Abels went twice abroad for the Mormon church as a missionary, having charge of the Belgium portion of the mission for three years, from 1897 to 1900, and later as editor of the mission paper published at Rotterdam, Holland, and as missionary in charge of the Arnhem conference during twenty-seven months, from 1902 to 1904. On his last mission he was accompanied by his wife, who also acted under a letter of appointment as a missionary.

It was while on this last mission that Bro. Abels and his wife first commenced to ponder concerning the many apparent inaccuracies and misleading statements contained in the Deseret News, the official organ of the Utah church, concerning the much mooted question of polygamy and its practices subsequent to the so-called manifesto prohibiting its practice, all of which led to an impartial investigation of all historical facts, clearly indicating to his inquiring mind, on the part of the Utah church a duplicity in tactics, a usurpation of rights, and a departure from the fundamental gospel principles as formerly existing. From an examination of an initiatory work on signs and tokens, as used among Masons, given to Bro. Abels by one of his Holland converts, he learned that the procedure in the Utah temples is nearly a total facsimile of the Masons' rituals, thereby totally destroying the force of any divinity being attached to it.

Mr. Abels, after having given notice of his withdrawal from the church, was subsequently, on the twelfth day of March 1907, charged with apostasy, to which he demurred, and stood trial before a bishop's court, also answered the charges before the high council of the Weber Stake on the thirteenth day of August. Meanwhile on the fourth day of March, 1907, he united with the Reorganized Church, Elder Peter Anderson officiating at the baptism, and Elders E. C. Briggs and William H. Kelley confirming. Since then he was ordained a priest by Elder Frederick A. Smith and Bishop E. L. Kelley.

Bro. Abels is now assisting the Ogden Branch, having been given charge of the Sunday-school and Zion's Religio-Literary society of the branch.

ENSAMPLES TO THE BELIEVERS.

SYNOPSIS OF A SERMON BY ELDER JOHN SUTTELL AT PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, AUGUST 25.

Our pastor, Elder John Suttell, of the Providence Branch, preached such an excellent discourse last Sunday that I, for one, thought it ought to be placed where more of the Saints of our field could have it to read.

Elder Suttell started from the text, "Be ye ensamples to believers," and showed in what way, by faith, knowledge, belief, in conversation, word, deed, and purity, and showed us that Christ, being an example, we were to follow in his footsteps. "He who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth," who when he was reviled, reviled not again, neither did he live to please himself, but to please his heavenly Father and to do his will.

He also showed how the old and new prophets were examples of suffering, affliction, and obedience, and that we were to follow them in joy or affliction, and to be like the Macedonian saints who were known everywhere for their virtue, and so should the Latter Day Saints be, as the world was watching us whether we were reflecting the life of Christ or not, and we should be known as unlike those of the world's religion in dress, deeds, conversation, and recreation, as well as in doctrine; that we were to live frugally, economically, and keep all the commands of the Doctrine and Covenants given for our especial direction; for by this word were Latter Day Saints to be judged; that our example at reunions and in public was watched. And when we were seen desecrating the Sabbath by going to places of amusement down river, and on car-rides, and on pleasure trips, smoking, going to the theaters, and drinking soda, lining up before the soda-bar on Sunday, or at reunions, we caused serious criticism, and folks had been known to remark: "Oh, they have no better religion than we have," and "If these people, who claim to have so much more light than we, do these things, I don't want any part of their religion," and have turned away from the camp when they had seen such concessions toward the ways of the world.

Saints were to avoid every appearance of evil, and hold the Sabbath as a day of holy rest, of soul refreshing, not one for big feasts and visitings; but to obey the commandment, "To let thy food be prepared in singleness of heart," and to do none other thing on that day but what was necessary, absolutely necessary. Not to cut lawns, bake bread, cut wood, cook feasts, and make slaves of ourselves on these lines; but rather improve the day to nourish the soul, and to go to the house of God with a mind prepared by prayer and reading of the word of God; to thus assist in inviting the presence of the Spirit to the speaker and listener, to thus be able to be mutually blessed and edified, strengthened and built up in the divine life; and then would our prayer-meetings from the start be the same or better than they were when three fourths over. That we were not to love the world or the things of the world; that when Saints were seen at theaters, it would drive folks away from our church, and cause the observer to feel weakened by our worldly example, and tend to strengthen them in the love of pleasure; when our example should be like the Master who sought not to please himself,

He spoke of the evil example of indulging in the filthy habit of smoking, and how a young man, not a believer, refused to accept the social (?), mind-destroying cigar because his religion and principles were against indulging in soul- or body-destroying pastimes. How the example of one soul who was firm and steadfast to stand for his principles and religion that prohibited card-playing, betting, horse-racing, and all such worldliness, had had the effect of assisting two other young men to keep their promise to a dying mother not to play cards, and another young man had, from that occurrence, reformed his life and henceforth sought to assist in saving souls, instead of destroying them. That Saints should be just and square in their dealings, and in social lines not to be busy in other men's matters, eager to hear evil of a brother or sister or neighbor, to try to know all about the case for the purpose of telling it again to so-and-so, and to actually run to the house in the haste to tell it, many times having to surmise most of the story from just an appearance they had of evil. That such Saints were unconsciously loaning themselves tools of the Devil. That when a brother and sister came to us and told us they were in trouble, and asked for our help, it was our duty to help them, no matter whether we think they deserve it or not. That is no part of our business. That belongs to the Lord to judge as King Benjamin tells us. But if we knew of evil in our midst we were to tell it to no one but those whom the law provides, the president and teachers of the branch, when we had failed by loving counsel, advice, or admonition to reclaim the erring one. That when we were in doubt of a matter, whether it was right to do or not, to give the Lord the benefit of the doubt, and thus keep on the right side; for the promise to those who stay on the right side is, that the fullness of the earth is yours, if ye obey the whole law. So should the evil of tale-bearing and slandering be done away, and light, liberty, and spiritual life and strength be infused instead.

SISTER L. A. BROWN.

"REVIEW OF G. B. HANCOCK'S BOOK."

"MORMONISM EXPOSED" (INCLUDING MR. M. T. LAMB'S LAST BOOK, OR THAT OF 1901.)

"Joseph Smith an impostor, and the Book of Mormon a fraud, by Elder G. B. Hancock, 1902. A. Doggett, Printer, Martinville, Missouri." His inscription of dedication is "To all, everywhere, who love the truth of God, this book is lovingly dedicated by its author," and on page 33, he says: "I want these things to be seen in their true light."

Of the Book of Mormon on page 37:

"It gives evidence of being designed as a bait for the unwary, unthinking, reckless part of humanity."

Having classed it with the Koran he adds, "But impudence and falsehood are the chief characteristics of those religions."

Then on page 38 of Nephite colony the second of the Book of Mormon says,

"They cross the ocean and in a few days two men and a few boys build a temple like unto the one Solomon built, and some boys of the tribe of Joseph were duly consecrated to the priesthood according to the law of Moses. They that accept such as being from heaven need not talk about the credulity of any religious people under the sun."

In comparison with the above, Second Book of Nephi, chapter 4:

Wherefore, it came to pass that I, Nephi, did take my family, and also Zoram and his family, and Sam, mine elder brother, and his family, and Jacob and Joseph, my younger brethren, and also my sisters, and all those who would go with me. . . . And did journey in the wilderness for the space of many days. . . . We did prosper exceedingly. . . . And we began to raise flocks, and herds, and animals of every kind. . . . And it came to pass that we began to prosper exceedingly, and to multiply in the land. And I, Nephi, . . . did make many swords, lest by any means the people who were now called Lamanites, should come upon us and destroy us. . . . And I did teach my people to build buildings; and to work in all manner of wood, and of iron, and of copper, and of brass, and of steel, and of gold, and of silver, and of precious ores, which were in great abundance. And I, Nephi, did build a temple; and I did construct it after the manner of the temple of Solomon, save it were not built of so many precious things: for they were not to be found upon the land; wherefore, it could not be built like unto Solomon's temple.

How Hancock loves truth.

Hancock, page 51:

It is positively certain that the angel of Mormonism was characterized by woeful ignorance or fearful dishonesty. The Aaronic priesthood having answered its purpose it was abolished by Jesus Christ, and to ignore that fact by seeking to perpetuate that office is to ignore the positive authority of God.

Let the Prophet Malachi answer. Malachi 3: 1-5:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling. . . . saith the Lord of hosts.

Hancock, chapter 10; he blunders again:

Reverting to the quotation from the fore part of the seventh chapter of Hebrews, we need to remember that in the language of the apostle, in the third verse, he has reference solely to the priesthood of Melchisedec. In his priesthood, hence, Melchisedec was without pedigree, without table of descent. Therefore, in his priesthood he had neither predecessor nor successor—none in that priesthood before him, and none to succeed him—with him it began, and with him it ended.

He was to his people, king, judge, leader, and legislator. Being a righteous man he reigned in peace, and in behalf of his people he officiated as the priest of God.

Thus in him were combined the priestly and the kingly functions. None before him did this, and none after him did it, till the Son of God, the Son of man, having officiated as the prophet of Israel, became the victim in order to man's redemption, and ascending to heaven with the blood of atonement and consecrated priest by the oath of God, and being seated on the right hand of the majesty in the heavens he is a priest upon his throne. Zechariah 6: 13: None could be called a priest after the order of Melchisedec unless he was a king, and combined in himself the functions of a ruler and judge of his people, as did Melchisedec, and the Son of God now does. For such as Smith and Cowdery to claim to be made priests like unto the Son of God is enough to make the demons blush, if there could be blushes in hell. Let us remember the affirmation of Paul, that Melchisedec, in his priesthood, was without pedigree—neither predecessor nor successor, and then read the following extract from revelation on priesthood.

He refers to revelation in Doctrine and Covenants. Paul, in Hebrews 5: 1-10, clears it up nicely:

For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins: who can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity. . . . So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an High Priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee. As he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec. . . . Called of God an high priest after the order of Melchisedec.

But Christ being come an High Priest of good things to come.—Hebrews 9: 11.

The reader will please note the phrases: "Every high priest," "an high priest," "order," "order," "an high priest." Melchisedec was a prominent one of an "order" of many high priests.

"All, everywhere, who love the truth of God," will readily see in this work of Hancock's the work of the villainous falsifier.

It is not an ordinary case. In his own words, "it gives evidence of being designed as a bait for the unwary, unthinking, reckless part of humanity."

That Nephite colony, of three families distinctly mentioned, and the rest of but limited numbers was small enough indeed for the task. Why should he have falsified so glaringly, as to numbers, and then again as to the "few days," whereas the account plainly shows years elapsed?

Think of it; his book, "lovingly dedicated" "to all, everywhere, who love the truth of God."

And on the Aaronic priesthood, the angel of Mormonism was guilty of either "woeful ignorance or fearful dishonesty." Well, the citation from Malachi given above shows Mr. Hancock wrong, for when Christ comes again the sons of Levi who were of the Aaronic order are to offer again, so it was not "abolished." Was Mr. Hancock "ignorant," or guilty of "dishonesty," or both?

In chapter 10 he makes Melchisedec the only high priest of his kind. Since the office pertained to "salvation for man," how could it be that one man, and only one, rose to such distinction. It is clearly manifest if one man was needed for such place, men were needed both before and afterwards to occupy the same place. Hence, Paul's clear reasoning, "For every high priest taken from among men" "is ordained for men in things pertaining to God," and hence mentions Christ as, "an High Priest" "after the order of Melchisedec."

Melchisedec was but a prominent member of an "order."

Is the man Hancock "ignorant," guilty of "dishonesty," or is he utterly blind?

The debate he refers to in the book as the beginning, from which he produced it, which occurred in Fayette City, Pennsylvania, in February, 1900, he passes over about as lightly as he could and refer to it at all.

He was routed all through it by Elder J. F. McDowell as clearly as his work is laid bare in the above.

One case of it—to illustrate; Mr. Hancock opposite page 108 reproduces from John T. Short, American Antiquities, page 424, Landas Alphabet, in comparison and contrast with Book of Mormon characters. But in the debate he had produced from page 421, hieroglyphics from Copan, a very different thing, and never used for manuscript. He avoided "hieratic" and "demotic," used for manuscript, and used "hieroglyphic" that is used for ornamentation and never for manuscript. Then conjuring his book up, two years seemingly spent in it,—anyway it appears two years later, and presents something entirely different. His Landa Alphabet is in just as bad a dilemma as what he used, as all who bought the photograph at the Lamoni, Iowa, conference of McDowell's chart sold by me, can readily exhibit. No doubt many of those are yet in existence throughout the land.

I had barely seen Hancock's book, till it was handed to Mrs. A. H. Terryberry of Seventeenth Street and Ashland Avenue, Niagara Falls, New York, to dissuade her from uniting with our church, which it did not do, as examination laid its hideous falsity bare. It abounds throughout in similar glaring misrepresentation.

A gentleman of Fayette City, Pennsylvania, told me this: "Mr. Hancock asked: 'Can I sell you one of my books?' 'What is your book about?' I replied,

'Don't you know that I exposed Mormonism in debate in Fayette City?' 'No, I was at the debate and heard you expose your own ignorance.'" The reader can judge from this examination as to the correctness of the dialogue.

As to popularity of Mr. Hancock's book, in Fayette City, Pennsylvania, in which he demolished, as he seemed to think, "Mormonism," the following is very interesting reading. I wrote to Bro. James Raisbeck, president of the branch there, to borrow for me one of Hancock's books, supposing they were plentiful there. Imagine my surprise on receiving the following reply:

FAYETTE CITY, Pennsylvania, January 21, 1907.

Dear Brother: Your card at hand. I tried to get G. B. Hancock's book, but failed. The old grocer, Elder Thomas Fawcett, has one but it is loaned out. He says he is the only person that has one here. He says it cost $1.50, at least that is what he paid for his, and can be had of G. B. Hancock, Galena, Missouri.

JAMES RAISBECK.

One sold in Fayette City! Hurrah for Hancock!

Mr. Hancock, on pages 110 and 111, reproduces names identical in number and order as found in M. T. Lamb's The Mormons and Their Bible, issued just a year before his book, but does not give credit. Mr. Hancock would hardly have had just the same names and the same order had he arranged them. Either he or his printer bungled some of them in the spelling. Mr. Hancock on page 110 makes the list to apply to "ancient America," then on page 113 says, "We again challenge the entire Mormon fraternity to a comparison of these names. There is not a name in the entire Mormon list that bears the remotest resemblance to any of the ancient names of Central America."

Mr. Hancock says: "Not a name in the entire Mormon list that bears the remotest resemblance." "Cumeni"—see Rand McNally & Co's. Index Atlas of the World, revised edition, page 351, map of Colombia, M10, South America: "Cuemani." That very closely resembles Cumeni. Again, "Laman." This with the "s" added as plural, "Lamans." "Rudest of all aborigines."—Universal Geography on America, volume 3, page 282. Laman—Lamans. Again, "Moroni." "We went further for eight miles and came to a people called Marroni. They are a very numerous people."—The Conquest of the River Platte, 1535 to 1555. Moroni—Marroni. "David." See Columbian Atlas of the World, map of South America. In northern extremity of Columbia, in Central America, is located the city of "David." That surely remembers—David—David.

Mr. Lamb commits himself as fatally on this same matter in his book, pages 128 to 131, where Hancock prepared his from, varying in statement just a little.

Then again, on page 146, Mr. Lamb says: "The simple fact is, there is no man on earth, who with a modern geography in his hand, can locate a single one of all the magnificent cities mentioned in the Book of Mormon, whether in North or South America."

Will Mr. Lamb please consult the American Almanac and Year Book Cyclopaedia and Atlas, 1903, by W. R. Hearst, page 352, plate 13, and see "Moron" in two places in Cuba? Moron was a very prominent city of Jaredite times in the Book of Mormon account. I have given but a few of quite a list. One utterly defeats both Hancock and Lamb, with all their associates on the matter. Lamb throughout his work is correspondingly unreliable, and falsifies on other matters as on this one of names.

On whether or not Joseph Smith had plates, he says on page 34: "Never allowed any one to see them," then on page 112, "We do not choose to call in question the testimony of the eye-witnesses upon this point. They saw said plates, 'hefted them,' etc., but that is as far as they knew, and, therefore as far as we can accept their testimony."

The Book of Mormon writers quoted from the prophets as they had them upon the brass plates of Laban. Mr. Lamb to prove the Book of Mormon a modern production, says: "They are every one of them, with scarce an exception, made verbatim from our modern English version, the King James version of the Bible made less than three hundred years ago."

"Every one of them, with scarce an exception." Now the facts are that Elder H. E. Moler made a very careful examination of this, and the report was published in the SAINTS' HERALD. He reported one hundred and two instances where the quotations did not agree with King James, while twenty-four did agree. So much for Lamb's misrepresentation on that point.

His whole arraignment of the Book of Mormon is as unreliable. In his previous work, the Golden Bible, page 329, to prove that the Bible had not been in any wise changed as stated in Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 3:40, he says: "There are four of these old manuscripts . . . the Alexandrian, Vatican, Ephraim, and Sinaitic. . . . And these old copies of the Bible contain precisely the same books as are found in our Bible to-day, and no others; and precisely the same contents. If, therefore, a 'great and abominable church' took out of the Bible its most precious and valuable portions, the theft must have occurred after the close of the first century, or the death of the apostle John, and previous to the year 350 A. D." On this Lamb is not posted, and is wrong again, or, if posted, he falsifies the record.

Athanasius, the great champion of orthodoxy, 330 A. D., gives the list of Old Testament books thus: "The books of the Old Testament are twenty-two, which is the number of the letters among the Hebrews: Genesis; Exodus; Leviticus; Numbers; Deuteronomy; Joshua; Judges; Ruth; Kings, four, two books; Paralipomenon (Chronicles) two, one book; Esdras two, one book; psalms; proverbs; twelve prophets, one book; and Isaiah, Jeremiah, with Baruch, Lamentations, and Epistles, Ezekiel and Daniel; then there are books uncanonical but readable,—the wisdom of Solomon, Sirach, Esther, Judith, Tobit." (See Stowe's Original History of the Bible, page 572, and Testimony of the Fathers, by Carey.)

"Baruch" and "Jeremiah Epistles" are added, while "Esther" is left out. How is that for just the same, Mr. Lamb?

Bishop Hillary's Bible, 350 A. D., left Baruch out but put Esther in. (See Ibid., 574.) Still more information can be had on such variations from Stowe and others.

Mr. Lamb should post up. Mr. Lamb's pitiful attempt to overthrow the Book of Mormon, to any careful, honest critic, leaves him in the sad predicament of having his own trickery and unreliability laid bare. As a philosopher, Mr. Lamb rates as poor as in reliability. On page 103 he says: "The law of the circulation of the blood was first discovered by Harvey about the year A. D. 1619, and the fact that the skin has 'pores' could not have been known in the very nature of the case until after the invention of the microscope." By this philosophy he supposes he defeats a statement in the Book of Mormon referring to Christ's suffering, viz.: "blood cometh from every pore." The simple process of sweating nicely demonstrates the fact of pores in the skin. If, however, people, were not permitted to sweat before the invention of the microscope, Mr. Lamb could be comforted. Sweating, "in the very nature of the case," demonstrates pores in the skin and sweating was permissible before the invention of the microscope, Mr. Lamb.

Mr. Hancock, in the Fayette City debate, put the cut of thirty-six hieroglyphic characters from Short, 421, in comparison with Book of Mormon characters as does Mr. Lamb, on pages 120 to 122 of his The Mormons and Their Bible. These gentlemen should and must know the hieroglyphic was for building ornamentation, not for writing. They both quote from LePlongeon, so are evidently familiar with his work. He says: "The ancient Maya hieratic alphabet, discovered by me, is as near alike to the ancient hieratic alphabet of the Egyptians as two alphabets can possibly be, forcing upon us the conclusion that the Mayas and the Egyptians either learned the art of writing from the same masters, or that the Egyptians learned it from the Mayas."—Sacred Mysteries, page 113.

The Book of Mormon was written in reformed

Egyptian. The "hieratic" of the Mayas and the Egyptians agree very closely, says LePongeon.

Hancock and Lamb pass the "hieratic," used for writing, compare the "hieroglyphic," used for the ornamentation of the crevices of buildings, and not for manuscripts, and then "pooh" at the Book of Mormon.

Hancock's dedication inscription is: "To all, everywhere, who love the truth of God, this book is lovingly dedicated, by its author." How Hancock and Lamb love (?) truth (?).

A review of either or both of these books could have been extended to considerable length, because of the many absurdities and misrepresentations, but it is entirely unnecessary. To illustrate: A lawyer is said to have once stated in court that he had thirty-nine reasons why a witness was absent: "State some of them," said the judge. "Well," said the lawyer, "firstly, he is dead." "That will do," said the judge, "never mind the other thirty-eight." This brief examination shows up Hancock and Lamb, and is sufficient.

Let all "who love the truth," to whom Mr. Hancock dedicated his work, consider this examination from that standpoint.

Many before Hancock and Lamb have tried to demolish the Book of Mormon, and, like them, have exposed themselves in their dishonorable methods.

It is time all candid people read the Book of Mormon for themselves, to see what it contains.

Respectfully,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

TWO PATHS.

Wide is the gate and broad the way that leadeth to destruction,

And countless multitudes are they who seek admission,
But straight the gate, the path unkind, that leads to Life
Immortal,

And few the careful feet that find the hidden portal.

—Howland.

Two paths: one narrow and rocky; the other wide and so easy to walk therein. In which path to-day are we treading? Will we choose the pleasant ways, riches, and pleasures of the world, and forget the story of the cross? Will the sacrifice Christ made be in vain? All his earthly sufferings, his unselfishness, point to the straight and narrow path. The way may be ever so hard, but we have the glorious hope of eternal life ever before us.

Through obedience to God, these things are for us. God has made it possible. He has promised to be our companion, brothers and sisters, joint-heirs with Jesus Christ to all the Father hath to give. What a grand and glorious thought: we must do our part: God will do his. He has never failed us and never will; always ready and waiting to bless us. The willing and obedient shall eat of the fruit of the land of Zion; but the rebellious will be cut off. Let us be willing and obedient children, that these great treasures may be ours, and that we may receive our inheritance.

God is unchangeable, for ever the same. Let us put our trust in him, and let him mold us in his way; it may not be our way, but he knows best. Whatever comes, rest assured that it is for our good.

Christ said that it was eternal life to know him. He came that we might have life and have it more abundantly. How glorious is the hope of eternal life,—to live for ever with Christ where there is no sickness, sorrow, pain, or death. Christ will wipe tears from all faces. Is it worth fighting for? Yes, a thousand times, Yes. Even if we did not have the glorious hope of eternal life before us, we are happier if we live an unselfish life, "a conscience void of offense!" That alone will give us peace. What has the world to offer? Pleasures and riches for a season, a few short years. Can they be years of happiness if we put Christ out of our lives?

We might put him aside for a while, but what satisfaction or pleasure would that bring us? How short this life is compared to an eternity! With our mortal minds we can not conceive what an eternity with Christ means.

To live for ever in peace, purity, and love, nothing to make us afraid!

Let us all follow in Christ's footsteps, and sacrifice this life itself if necessary. What good will riches of this world avail us? Let us be like Lazarus, the poor beggar, and not like the rich man. Let our good times come by and by. We will never regret it. Do you think Lazarus, when he was resting in Abraham's bosom would have exchanged places with the rich man? Ah! no, but how glad the rich man would have been to share with Lazarus, but, alas, it was then too late!

"Too late"—how sad the words.

May it never be "too late" for us; but now, while it is called to-day, may we work for the Master and consecrate our lives and all that we have to Christ and his work.

Sometime, somewhere, our hopes will all be fulfilled, and we will receive our reward. Our troubles and trials over, and we can rest in peace, feeling we have earned our reward.

"If you would be rich, be holy!

Would you dwell all heights above?

Heed ye, then, this admonition:

Climb to atmosphere of love."—Joseph Luff.

"Jesus Christ is thus a supreme revelation of God. He had a consciousness of God. It was his supreme, abiding, dominating consciousness. 'I am in my Father, and my Father in me.'"

Of General Interest

A NEW METHODIST CREED.

The joint commission of the Methodist New Connection, United Methodist Free Churches, and the Bible Christian Churches of England, which in September next are to unite in one church under the name of the United Methodist Church, has drawn up the following creed for the new church, on the basis of the existing creed:

I. The Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, through divine inspiration, contain a revelation of the will of God to man, and furnish a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

II. There is one God, the Creator, the Preserver and Ruler of all things, who is above all and through all and in all. And in the mystery of his being, there are three persons in the one Godhead, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

III. The Lord Jesus Christ is the incarnate Son of God, in the unity of his being at once human and divine, truly God and truly man.

IV. Man as a moral being is free and responsible, and in the exercise of his freedom has fallen into sin and condemnation.

V. The Lord Jesus Christ in his life and death perfectly manifested the righteousness and love of God; and becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, he made atonement for the sins of the whole world. He was raised from the dead, and received into glory, and now reigns Lord over all.

VI. God wills not the death of one sinner, but requires repentance toward himself and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ as necessary to salvation.

VII. Believers are justified by faith through the grace of God, are born again from above, and by the life of obedient faith, perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord.

VIII. The Holy Spirit of God illuminates the minds of men, convicts of sin, leads into all truth, gives assurance of salvation and sonship, and dwells in every believer to strengthen and sanctify.

IX. The Holy Catholic Church is the innumerable company of Saints of every age and nation, who, being united to Christ their Head, are one body in him, and have communion with their Lord and with one another.

X. It is the will of Christ that his church on earth should exist as a visible brotherhood, for the manifestation of his Spirit and teaching in the service of man, and for the extension of his kingdom throughout the world.

XI. The sacraments of baptism and the Lord's supper are of divine appointment and of perpetual obligation.

XII. There will be a resurrection of the dead, both of the righteous and the wicked; the Lord Jesus Christ will be the Judge of all men; and they who have done good shall come forth unto the resurrection of life, and they who have done evil unto the resurrection of condemnation.

The new church will have a membership of nearly 200,000. The New Connection Church has about 46,700 members, 215 ministers, 1,125 lay preachers, and 90,000 Sunday-school scholars. The United Free Methodist Churches have about 103,000 members, 460 ministers, 3,400 lay preachers, and 200,000 Sunday-school scholars. The Bible Christian Church has about 34,500 members, 220 ministers, 1,550 lay preachers, and 47,500 Sunday-school scholars.

The Methodist New Connection Church was formed in 1797. It grew out of the expulsion from the Wesleyan Church (the parent body) of Alexander Kilham, who had opposed the articles of pacification, and had published a pamphlet advocating the distribution of the power of government between the ministers and the laity. About 5,000 members followed Kilham and formed the new church.

The United Methodist Free Churches were an amalgamation of three bodies which seceded from the parent conference at different times; the first—the Protestant Methodists—in 1828, because of a quarrel over the introduction of an organ into the Brunswick Chapel; the second—the Wesleyan Methodist Association—in 1834, as the result of a controversy over the proposition to found a theological institute; and the third—the Reformers, who were expelled or seceded during the agitation which occurred in 1849. Many of the last named refused to amalgamate with the United Methodist Free Churches, and formed the Wesleyan Reform Union which now has about 8,700 members, 17 ministers, and 530 lay preachers. These figures are smaller than they were in 1868.

The organic union of these three bodies taken in connection with the organic union of the several Methodist bodies in Japan is an indication of the trend of Methodists everywhere toward union. The time is not distant when now separated Methodist bodies in America will take steps to unite. This should be encouraged. Our own General Conference, being the mother body, should invite other Methodist bodies to unite with it. Nothing may come from such an invitation; but it may do good and certainly will do no harm.—Northwestern Christian Advocate, July 17, 1907.

A WISE LEGACY.

At the dinner of the Alumni Association of the Law Department of New York University, the Honorable Walter Lloyd Smith, of Elmira, New York, Presiding Justice of the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, Third Department, read the following, as "a remarkable will made by a man who died in the Cook County Insane Asylum, at Dunning, Illinois":

"I, Charles Lounsbury, being of sound mind and disposing memory, do hereby make and publish this, my last will and testament, in order as justly as may be, to distribute my interest in the world among succeeding men.

"That part of my interest which is known in law and recognized in the sheep-bound volumes as my property, being inconsiderable and of no account, I make no disposal of in this my will.

"My right to live, being but a life-estate, is not at my disposal, but these things excepted all else in the world I now proceed to devise and bequeath:

"Item: I give to good fathers and mothers, in trust for their children, all good little words of praise, and encouragement, and all quaint pet names and endearments, and I charge said parents to use them justly and generously, as the needs of the children may require.

"Item: I leave to children, inclusively, but only for the term of their childhood, all and every, the flowers of the field, and the blossoms of the woods, with the right to play among them freely, according to the customs of children, warning them at the same time against thistles and thorns. And I devise to children, the banks of the brooks, and the golden sands beneath the waters thereof and the odors of the willows that dip therein, and the white clouds that float high over the giant trees. And I leave the children the long, long, days to be merry in, in a thousand ways, and the night and the moon and the train of the milky way to wonder at, but subject, nevertheless, to the rights hereinafter given to lovers.

"Item: I devise to boys, jointly, all the useful idle fields and commons where ball may be played; all pleasant waters where one may swim; all snow-clad hills where one may coast, and all streams and ponds where one may fish, or where, when grim winter comes, one may skate; to have and to hold the same for the period of their boyhood. And all meadows with the clover blossoms and butterflies thereof; the woods and their appurtenances; the squirrels and birds, and echoes and strange noises, and all distant places which may be visited, together with the adventures there found. And I give to said boys each his own place at the fireside at night, with all pictures that may be seen in the burning wood, to enjoy without let or hindrance and without any incumbrance of care.

"Item: To lovers, I devise their imaginary world with whatever they may need: as the stars of the sky; the red roses by the wall; the bloom of the hawthorn; the sweet strains of music and aught else they may desire to figure to each other; the lastingness and beauty of their love.

"Item: To young men jointly, I devise and bequeath all boisterous, inspiring sports of rivalry, and I give to them the disdain of weakness and undaunted confidence in their own strength. Though they are rude, I give to them the power to make lasting friendship, and of possession companions, and to them exclusively I give all merry songs and brave choruses, to sing with lusty voices.

"Item: And to those who are no longer children or youths or lovers, I leave memory, and I bequeath to them the volumes of the poems of Burns and Shakespeare and of other poets, if there be others, to the end that they may live over the old days again, freely and fully, without tithe or diminution.

"Item: To our loved ones with snowy crowns I bequeath the happiness of old age, the love and gratitude of their children until they fall asleep."—

Religion and the College Graduate.

BY THE GUARDED GATE.

I stood in a dream in a crowded space
Before a closed and guarded gate,
Among a group in caps and gowns;
And there were smiles and there were frowns,
And they were there from many towns
All crowded close by the guarded gate.
I saw an angel mount the wall,
All clothed in the purple of regal state,
While a silence settled on those below
Who waited expectant there to know
What fate the angel would bestow
On the dreadful crowd by the guarded gate.
I heard him speak—and his voice was low:—
"Ere ye go further, students, tell
What have ye gained from your college course:
Is it honor and name or vain remorse?
What have ye brought from learning's source?
Come speak; let me rate you well."

Society Man:

Four, idle silly, useless years
I have brought away with me.
This pin I have on my fancy vest,
These programs adorned by many a crest,
And a fickle, light heart within my breast:
'Tis all I can offer thee.

The Grind:

I have a head crammed full of facts
From the whole of learning's store.
I gave to possess them the love of friends,
The memories of walks as the twilight ends,
And the peace and quiet that music lends,
To revel and reek in wisdom's lore.

The Athlete:

I have tortured the body God gave to me;
I can jump and run and fight.
Like a mere machine I play the game,—

The sport of loafers, the slave of fame:
And many a bar-room toasts my name
In the drunken dead of night.

Coed:

My mother's grace I deign to keep,
Though in naught else alike are we.
My arts are manly, my spirit strong,
As—empty-hearted—I rush along;
Yet sometimes alone I pine for her song
And a love that is not for me.

History Student:

My Bible's gone, with its straight-strung stays
And the fear that I must atone;
For I have delved deep into musty lore,
Deep into secrets ne'er known before,
And found that virtue and sin's no more;
'Tis proved by the Rosetta Stone.

Scientist:

For a single wee cell 'neath a microscope,
I betrayed the crown He wore.
To a book and a pedant old and bent
I sold my faith and strong intent.
Glimmering out in Science they went
To return to life no more.

Psychology Student:

And I too may add my voice to his;
For I've analyzed each finer sense,
Dissected each thought of love or grief,
And found the mechanics of each beneath.
So passion and truth in my belief,
Are but jokes at fools' expense.

The Angel Speaks:

I hold you the victims of modern thought.
I have watched you work and seen you fail;
For many a student has come here before,
Telling, as you have, the self-same tale
Of the self-same thwarting of noble aim
By the self-same ignorance:—'tis the college shame.
Each year, by thousands, where ye stand now
Have stood your fathers, wan and pale,
Bearing a dead hope as you do to-day.
So what do your knowledge and work avail
If they kill your faith with a printed page,
And leave you the dupe of an erring age?
How many ages have erred before?
How many theories have risen to fall!
How many scholars have proven fools!
How many, I ask: can you name them all?
Yet the sun has risen every day
To smile at their idle, harmless play.
The universe courses along through space,
While the violet blooms as it did before.
The rose is as warm, the robin as gay,
As he was when you worried on fairy lore,
When you builded castles in the air,
Reached by a golden winding stair.
So pass through the gate in the guarded wall
Out into the world that you knew before,
To mingle with men and study them well;
And gradually back as in days of yore
Will come your faith and your modest thought;
For a brush with the world sets your schools at naught.
Then quickly faded from my sight
The angel and crowd by the guarded gate.
Away went the students in caps and gowns.

Away with their worries and smiles and frowns,
Away to their homes in many towns:—
And I was alone to meditate
On what I had heard by the guarded gate.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Are We Thinking?

Search thine own heart; what paineth thee
In others, in thyself may be.
All men are frail, all flesh is weak,
Be thou the true man thou dost seek.—Whittier.

Among the many pure and true words uttered by this poet, perhaps none were truer than these, and surely no advice which ever came from man was more worthy of being followed. Never will the will of God be done upon earth, never will mankind advance to a higher plane of life until this advice is followed; for, in the wisdom of God, he has ordered it that each individual shall work out his own salvation before the Lord. And while it is true that each man, woman, and child possesses more or less influence—influence which may be exerted for good or for ill it is equally true that each man will have his own sins, and only his own, to answer for. And this being so, is it not wiser that we make it more a personal matter to "make straight paths for our feet lest that which is lame be turned out of the way," than that we give so much of painful thought and care to the way in which our brother is walking? Do not let us be misunderstood. We believe most firmly that to an extent not often fully recognized each individual is his brother's keeper, but is it not possible that the better way of keeping my brother is to walk before him as Christ would have me walk? Will not this thought bear digesting?

Perhaps we ought to explain how we have been led into this train of thought, and why we make mention of it here. As you know we have lately been putting to ourself and others the somewhat indefinite if not odd question: Are we thinking? And this query has elicited from one of our readers an affirmative answer together with a statement of some of the thoughts entertained. And as liberty is given us to use the same as we see fit, we state them very briefly with the hope that not only this brother—for whom we entertain the highest respect—but possibly others whose faith may be under trial in the same way—may be led to regard the matter from a different point of view.

That which perplexes our friend and brother seems to be the want of greater manifestation of divine power (especially the power of healing) in the church, and he concludes by asking: "If you have read and digested those writings [referring to the promises made by Christ of the blessings and power which should accompany the gospel] you may be prepared to inform us what place God intended Graceland to fill or what grand mission God intended it to accomplish."

Among the passages to which the brother refers us is the eighty-fifth section of Doctrine and Covenants, beginning at the seventh paragraph, which reads: "And now I give unto you a commandment to beware concerning yourselves; for you shall live by every word that proceedeth forth from the mouth of God. For the word of the Lord is truth, and whatsoever is truth is light, and whatsoever is light is Spirit, even the Spirit of Jesus Christ; and the Spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world, that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit; and every one that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit, cometh unto God, even the Father; and the Father teacheth him of the covenant which he has renewed and confirmed upon you, which is confirmed upon you for your sakes and not for your sakes only, but for the sake of the whole world: and the whole world lieth in sin, and groaneth under darkness and under the bondage of sin; and by this you may know they are under the bondage of sin because they come not unto me; for whoso cometh not unto me is under the bondage of sin; and whoso receiveth not my voice is not acquainted with my voice, and is not of me; and by this you may know the righteous from the wicked, and that the whole world groaneth under sin and darkness even now. And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for, shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, Nay."

Then follows the promises of blessing to be given in case of obedience.

Now let us first study the character of this obedience, and then when we shall have considered conditions as they now are see if we do not find reasons and valid ones, why God is withholding his promised blessings. Condemnation was to come upon and rest upon Zion, even all, until they should "repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom."

Has this ever been done, my brother? Is there one among us to-day who can conscientiously say he is observing not only to say, but to do according to every commandment which the Lord has given? If we can not, how then dare we demand this of others? Would the writer of this rejoice if there were power in the church to unstop the deaf ears? She has been told by one of old (see 1 Peter 1:7), that the trial of her faith is more precious than gold. More than this the Master himself has said:

"Ye will surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself: whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in thy country. And he said, Verily I say unto you, No prophet is accepted in his own country. But I tell you of a truth, many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land; but unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Serepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow. And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian."

Was the power of God limited that only one widow was relieved—one leper cleansed? Could not Jesus have done in Nazareth the works he had wrought in Capernaum? And yet he did not and in all Israel but one widow was relieved—one leper cleansed. Why? I have no answer to give since Jesus gave none. But remembering that the trial of your faith—of my faith—is more precious in the sight of God than gold, I am almost inclined to be sorry that my own is not tried. But how could it be when I remember Paul? Paul who of all men seems to have needed full power both of body and of mind, and yet when he thrice besought the Lord that his affliction might be removed was answered, "my grace is sufficient for you for in weakness is my strength made perfect."

Was the power of God limited? Could he not have relieved Paul? And yet he did not, and himself gives the reason. Oh, my brother, is it not comforting to remember that for you, and for me, his grace is sufficient? That all the works God promised should be done by the power of his gospel, we know has been done in this church; but if we expect the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit, must we not as a people, as a church, live for it? Can we say we are doing it? Can we charge the Lord with failure? Rather let us "put our hands upon our mouths and our mouths in the dust and cry, Unclean, unclean."

We come now to your question in regard to Graceland. Can it be answered more plainly than it was in the article by Bro. F. M. Smith, which in a previous number of this series, we copied from Autumn Leaves? Is it not there shown that time and again the Lord gave commandments to the church concerning education? If Graceland does no more than to purge away the open disregard of one of the oft-reiterated instructions of the Lord to his people, surely that in itself will be a work worthy of accomplishment. For the present, we have no other answer. But if the church is true to Graceland, and Graceland is true to her mission, then shall the future work of this first educational institution of the church answer you and others from every valley and mountain-top throughout our broad land, by the work her sons and daughters will be doing in spreading abroad the light of gospel truth.

Will the church be true to Graceland? We can not answer. To-day many, many hands are stretched out to her for help—help which she may not give. May not, and why? Because the selfishness of those who should come to her aid is altogether dearer to them than obedience to God; and they grasp their worldly possessions, preferring them to his favor. But it is not ours to judge; rather to strive as one to be true.

To the "Column."

Dear Readers: I have not addressed anything to this department for some time, the principal reason being that there is very little in our experience here that is "Column" matter. If I could hear the minds of the sisters, either in meeting or in their every-day life, I doubt not but there would be much that would be interesting. But though I do not hear a word at our sisters' meeting, I always feel renewed by going, and taking my part; feel as if I had gained a little upward ground on this journey of life.

Within the past month Joseph has baptized three; two of whom were adults. These occasions produced a general heart-warming towards one another. The assembly was quite large, yet every one came and shook hands with us in a very feeling way, before leaving the water's edge. It was the sacrament Sunday of one month ago, and the services were all unusually good. Last Sunday afternoon, also, we were greatly refreshed by the presence of the Spirit. The speaker had been talking along the practical lines of spiritual life, when the voice changed to a more gentle, earnest tone, and these were the words: "Let me tell you, brothers and sisters, by the Spirit, that the time has come, when saints must do good works, if they expect to be saved in the kingdom of God. Seek ye out the laws, and commandments of God, and do them; then shall you have light in your own souls, and light to give forth to the world."

Very commonplace words; nothing new at all. Yet when spoken by the voice of the Spirit, they edified much, and we all felt to rejoice because of the Spirit's visit with us being so clearly manifest.

We are alone now. It has been five weeks since Bro. and Sr. Lake left for Takapoto. During the first week I was very lonesome. Then as we dropped back in our old ways again, I began to wonder if they ever had been here, or if it was only a dream. But a letter from Charlie, before we began to look for one, proved that it was a reality. They were in Kaukura. Had made their escape from the wretchedness of that sea voyage, by stopping at Kaukura to recruit. The second letter informed us that they were comfortably situated, and in no hurry to leave the island. But since he was not in his appointed field, they would go to Takapoto the first opportunity. E. B. BURTON.

[We owe a very sincere apology to our readers which we here tender, for the late appearance of the above communication from Sr. Burton. We placed it in an envelope, and felt sure it went to the HERALD Office; but instead it fell into an open drawer of our table, and was just to-day discovered. We are very sorry, and ask the writer's pardon.—EDITOR.]

Prayer Union.

Sr. Viola Bergstrom, Calotta, Alaska, desires the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her daughter, Laura Cadwell, that if it be the Lord's will he may spare her to renew her covenant and live faithful. She has grown cold in the gospel service, and is sadly afflicted with consumption of the bowels. Unless God will extend his loving kindness and help her, she has not long to live. She was baptized when eight years old.

Letter Department

Over the Mountains.

Editors Herald: I write from Brigham, Utah. My co-laborer (Bro. Stead) and I are here preaching to audiences the size and attention of which is thus far very satisfactory, whatever the future will reveal. Thus far since penetrating the mountains I have preached in Salt Lake City, Provo, Ogden, and this place. Brigham is much smaller in population than those other places; has a population of only about three or four thousand. Possibly two thirds or three fourths are Mormons.

Our meetings are held in the open air in front of the court-house, and indeed we spare them not. The audiences are composed of course of Gentiles, Mormons, and Mormon apostates. The Gentiles and apostates like to hear the Mormons scored; but we have to use our judgment as to the severity of attack, else we anger and repel the Mormons and fail to convert the others too.

Two papers are published in the town, one pro-Mormon, the other anti-Mormon. The anti-Mormon paper is to publish an article to-day on "Succession" that we sent in. The issue is quite a change here to the inhabitants, and they exhibit considerable agitation. It is reported that the Mormon paper is to begin a series of articles next week in defense of polygamy. While polygamy is not a favorite subject of discussion, there is no man of our force who will labor here continually but what will take a crack at it once in a while. He will find occasion to disprove it along with the other false accretions of Mormonism from time to time, though the affirmative evidences that may be offered in favor of the Reorganization we depend on probably more than anything else.

The more I study Brighamism the more incongruities I find. If it is possible that Mormons are harder to meet than others I should apply it to the fact that being tenacious of their claims they fight harder, and then there is a larger percentage of them who are fighters or disposed to fight than among average denominations.

Here in this city we have three members, one sister and a brother and his wife. All were formerly Mormons. The brother is a Scandinavian, having been converted to Mormonism in Denmark, and came out here in the sixties. He said there was no peace for him after his landing in these valleys till he would go into polygamy. Hence he took a No. 2, a woman who came out from Denmark for the especial purpose of becoming his second wife. No. 2 was sealed to him for time and eternity in the seventies, prior to the issuance of the Manifesto. She is still his wife—the first is dead.

One very noteworthy feature in the chain of events which he most interestingly relates is this: You know according to Orson Pratt in The Seer, a man had to have a distinct revelation through the President before he could take a second wife; and Mr. Pratt was sent to Washington by the authorization of the Presidency to set forth their position on celestial marriage, etc. While the President could confer authority on some other to solemnize the marriage, before such solemnization could take place it was invariably necessary that he should first be sought; and that upon inquiry he receive a specific revelation from the Lord upon the matter. The facts are, this old brother affirms that in his case that procedure was never observed. On the other hand he went to Apostle Lorenzo Snow, who lived here, and interrogated him. He had in view to carry his inquiry to the President. But the apostle told him it was not necessary. So he proceeded without. Brigham Roberts admitted in the Smoot proceedings that his last wife was sealed to him by and in the presence of Mr. Wells and that Wells was the only one who knew anything about it. That is the way they have been living up to their religion they have cunningly advocated in the East. Other inquiries disclose that it was a common thing to take wives regardless of the consultation, the avoidance of which, according to their great expounder, the "champion of polygamy," would entail inevitable condemnation.

I have heard the strongest they have to offer, and I am yet unconvinced that Joseph Smith was a polygamist. Some time ago when they referred to a lady down in southern Utah, who still lives, or at least did very recently, and who claims to have been sealed to Joseph Smith during his lifetime with his knowledge and consent, one of the brethren wrote her a letter of inquiry in order to have her own statement in regard to the matter; and probably not altogether without some design as these testimonies have generally been suicidal and self-impeaching in their nature. They received from her the following answer, which I will publish without taking the liberty to publish her name (as it is only a private letter). It will be useful to the brethren in this mission, who will very readily get onto the name, if there be any who have it not already.

"MINERSVILLE, April 20, 1904.

"Dear Sir: Agreeable to your request I will endeavor to answer your letter written to me from Salt Lake City April 11. In answer to your first question I will state that I am eighty-six years of age the 19th of April (this month). I received the gospel in 1830, six months from its organization, and have been through all the persecutions that the church has passed through from the beginning. I was married to Mr. L— August 11, 1836. He has been dead nineteen years. Joseph the Seer taught me the principle of plural marriage in Nauvoo (he said God gave him a commandment in 1834 to take other wives besides Emma) and I was the one he was commanded to take, though I was a thousand miles from him. Brigham Young had not been in the church long enough to broach such a thing to Joseph; for I talked with him about it. After a long time of prayer and supplication to my heavenly Father for a witness of the truth I went forward and was sealed to him for time and all eternity, and believe Emma knew it, for she gave him Bishop Partridge's two daughters for his wives and they lived in the house with her. I was sealed to him the fore part of February, 1842. We left Nauvoo shortly after. It is the truth that he had a number of wives, namely, Eliza R. Snow, Zina H. Young, and Louisa Beeman and Sarah Ann Whitney. All these are dead now. I know these were his wives for I talked with them all.

"Emma knew all about it, for she wrote to know why I left the Smith family and came to Utah. I don't know about his having children, but I heard of three that he was the father of. I have told you the truth as I expect to answer it at the bar of God; and I marvel that Joseph's son Joseph should so persistently deny that his father taught polygamy, for he did and God is my witness. I would ask you one question: Jesus said to his disciples, The servant is not greater than his master: if they persecuted me they will persecute you also.

"Have the Josephite church ever been persecuted, their elders whipped, tarred, and feathered? Or shot down in cold blood? Has he been dragged from his bed at midnight and been imprisoned many times?

"Facts show what is right. If I could talk with you I would tell you many things to prove to you the truth of what I say. Joseph told me that he was afraid when the angel appeared to him and told him to take other wives. He hesitated, and the angel appeared to him the third time with a drawn sword in his hand and threatened his life if he did not fulfill the commandment. He further said that he must seal this testimony with his blood. Hiram also had other wives. This is my testimony and it will meet you at the judgment seat of Christ."

We notice in this testimony that this lady was married to her first husband in 1836; that he lived until nineteen years earlier than the date of her letter, which would be 1855. We notice that she came to Nauvoo, whence she claims the principle of plural marriage was taught her by Joseph Smith; after which she is sealed to him in 1842, six years after her first marriage. "Shortly after" this second marriage "we," she says, "left Nauvoo." Subsequently they came to Utah.

Now who left Nauvoo, and who came to Utah? Who is the "we"? Why, she and her first husband from whom she had not been divorced or separated. For the brethren, when in the place where she resides and where she writes from, not long ago discovered that her first husband died there and that she continued to live with him as his wife up to the time of his death. Then this woman is guilty of polyandry. In other words she is a self-confessed criminal. For she does not claim to have been sealed to Joseph Smith for eternity only, but both for time—this life—and eternity. She was then married to him for this life while she had another husband living who sustained to her the relationship of a husband. And in a short time after the consummation of the second marriage she pulls away from her second husband or her second husband's family and leaves Nauvoo. What confidence is to be put in the testimony of such a woman? Is it not self-impeaching? Does she not come in the same category of those whom Judge Philips said were a set of "sports at nest hiding"? Indeed, had her testimony been included the nature of it is such as to abundantly indicate that it would have shared the same fate as the rest.

In bearing this testimony this woman not only represents herself as guilty of the most disgraceful crime of having two husbands at once; but she represents the Prophet of the church as having been privy and party to the same heinous offense. It is possible that it is because of this feature of this testimony that it has not obtained the prominence that some others have—as even Mormons would be loath to admit that Joseph the Seer would be accessory to such deportment, or that he would become the husband of one who had another husband at the same time. I will say that in view of the facts that may be adduced in exhortation of the Prophet of those polygamous charges, the presence of some flaw as bad or worse than the example before us in the testimonies of all his professed surviving plural wives is, to say the least, very significant.

Several other self-impeaching features of the letter I have quoted might be referred to.

Our reunion begins at Provo on the 31st and continues over two Sundays. All the missionaries in the State will probably be there.

My address is still 1037 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

August 21.

ALVIN KNISLEY.

CLARK, South Dakota, August 26, 1907.

Editors Herald: In company with Bro. L. G. Wood I came to the home of Bro. J. J. Johnson, thirteen miles from Clark, on July 12. Our brother was attending a union Sunday-school, and thought it a good opportunity to open up the work, and invited us to come; but when we got there the school board had hung out the sign, "No Mormons need apply," so our brother found another one, and we commenced meetings, and then we received an invitation to go to another district.

One Sunday we attended a tent-meeting, conducted by the "Friends," and a lady was introduced as the preacher, and she explained that she was not, but only a "chunk" to fill in, in the absence of her husband. What she lacked as a preacher was made up as a beautiful singer. It was not grand style and takes an Egyptian astrologer to interpret, but a clear and distinct enunciation of every word, with a strong and beautiful voice.

By the time we had meetings at the second place of invitation, the telephone and other means of communication were disseminating the news that we were "Mormons," but we found some friends who were willing to hear and invite us to their homes, and invited those who seemed to be scared at our presence to come and see and hear. We announced a lecture on "The origin, history, and doctrine of the church," and we had a full house, and good attention was paid.

We closed last night, after holding seven Sunday-night and some week-day-night meetings. We made friends and received urgent invitations to come again when it was not such a busy time. Several young ladies rendered us a cheerful and valuable service in music and song, which we greatly appreciated.

On July 28 I attended the Methodist Episcopal service, eight miles from here, and formed the acquaintance of a Mr. Rose, formerly of Pisgah, Iowa, who rendered me a kindly service by telling the people that I was a Latter Day Saint, and also introduced me to the minister, who invited me into the stand to offer prayer. He was acquainted with many of our people in Western Iowa. After service there was baptism in a near-by creek, and as the minister was not yet ordained he did not have the right to perform the ceremony, so it was done by an ordained lady minister of the same church. Fearing, as I supposed, that her strength was not sufficient for the task, she had the minister assist her by standing on the opposite side and help her immerse the candidates. Whatever may be my opinion of the rightfulness of her acts, I have no hesitancy in saying that it was done with as much solemnity, reverence, neatness, and in as orderly a manner as I ever saw such service conducted.

If any of the Saints have tract No. 17, "The atonement of Christ and final destiny of man," and can spare them, it will be greatly appreciated, as I have an urgent need for them, and they can not be obtained at the publishing house at present. Send them to Brookings, South Dakota.

Yours in gospel bonds,

EDWARD RANNIE.

FAIRLAND, Indian Territory, August 27, 1907.

Editors Herald: Just landed here from the Joplin reunion, which closed Sunday evening. Truly it was a grand success; all the services well attended. The Sunday-school normal work, under the direction of Sr. M. E. Etzenhouser, to say it was grand is only putting it very mildly. Surely she was the right one in the right place. Bro. W. N. Robinson need not worry about the work that was done; for Sr. Etzenhouser did it justice. If any injustice was done, it was by those that failed to avail themselves of the opportunity that was offered to them by her to make themselves acquainted with the normal work.

During the reunion seventeen were added to the church. The sermons were just grand, especially those by Elder Heman C. Smith. We were sorry that he could not stay to the close of the reunion. We trust he will soon return to this part of his mission; for all in and out of the church were well pleased. Bishop Ellis Short of Independence, Missouri, preached an excellent sermon on temporalities, showing distinctly God's way to bring about socialism. It would have been well if some of our statesmen could have been there and heard Bro. Short. I think the Saints that were present will have no room now to say that God's servants do not understand the law of tithing, consecration, and free will offering. This important subject was handled in such a masterly way by the brother under the influence of the Spirit of the Lord, that all could understand their duties, regarding the financial law.

We can truthfully say that the Clinton reunion held at Eldorado Springs was a success. Four were baptized. Bro. Smith there, as at Joplin, tipped the barrel over and gave us some of his best sermons. Surely he must have had those stored away for special occasions. Here, as in Joplin, the sermons were just excellent. The Sunday-school normal work in charge of Sr. Iva Keck, was well directed. Fearlessly and boldly she carried this part of the work on to success. I can unhesitatingly say she can find work for all to do. This is my first trip in the Territory. I am now at Bro. J. T. Riley's. May God bless all his children; and may all obey and honor his law.

Your brother in the faith,

GEORGE JENKINS.

Dear Hopes: It is some years since I have written for your pages, and so I trust I will be allowed a little space. Saturday evening I received a telephone message that Elder Andrew Tabbutt was dead, and I was wanted to preach the sermon. Bro. Tabbutt was born at Addison, Maine, September 20, 1830. He was converted under the preaching of Adams, and was in that company that went to Palestine, where, finding that they were not Jews, but of Ephraim, they were obliged to return. About 1872 he found the true gospel, being baptized by Elder J. C. Foss. He followed the sea for a living, and in 1878 was wrecked, being fourteen days on the wreck. The Lord showed him by vision that they should be rescued, and it all came to pass as revealed to him. The exposure on the wreck broke down the nervous system of our brother, and for a good many years he has been confined to his home, not having strength to go about. But although thus confined, he was not idle, and always tried to preach the gospel as opportunity was given, and there are many who have come into the church through his influence. He lived his religion. He came to Detroit in 1878, and was ordained an elder, and presided over Oak Lake Branch for many years.

There are still a few names here that have not bowed the knee to Baal, and we try to feed the flock over which we have been placed in charge, holding service at Audubon the first Sunday in each month, and at Cormorant the second. Bro. Griffin looks after Frazee, and so we try to show a little light. Ever praying for the welfare of the church, I remain,

T. J. MARTIN.

FALL RIVER, Massachusetts.

Editors Herald: Are any of the brethren who are members of the Grand Army of the Republic going to attend the National Encampment of Saratoga? Richard Borden Post No 46, Department of Massachusetts, of which I am the commander, will have its headquarters in Schoolhouse No. 1. This can be easily found by inquiring at any of the bureaus of information. I shall be pleased to meet any of the comrades in the church. Hoping to meet some one of like faith, I am,

Yours, etc.,

DOCTOR JOHN GILBERT.

COALVILLE, Iowa, August 13, 1907.

Editors Herald: Our new district tent was ordered fifteen days ago, but for some cause it has not arrived. Bro. John Jordison and I intend erecting it at Lehigh, Iowa, a coal-mining town of about fifteen hundred people, where the restored gospel has never been preached. While waiting for the tent I am conducting a Bible school here at Coalville, at two o'clock, and hold open-air meeting in the evenings at Kalo, just across the Des Moines River. The audience is orderly and seems interested.

Two of our energetic Coalville brethren, Richard and John Jordison, are showing their love and appreciation of the gospel by holding Sunday preaching-services at places a few miles from town. Their reports are encouraging—good audiences and sale for several church books. We have in this district several holding the priesthood who ought to honor their office and calling by being more earnest and energetic in the Master's cause.

Last week I was called to Dunlap, Iowa, to preach the funeral-sermon of Raymond, the second son of Bro. and Sr. H. N. Baughman. He died one week after being operated on for appendicitis, at Webster City, Iowa. His wife and two small children survive him. The funeral was held under the shade-trees, at the beautiful home of his parents, and was attended by a large number of sympathizing relatives and friends.

The Gallands Grove Branch and District have decided to hold a joint celebration (the forty-eighth anniversary of the organization of the branch, and forty-fourth anniversary of the district) to be held in the Saints' chapel at Gallands Grove, Iowa, October 19 and 20, 1907. An eight-page leaflet has been issued giving historical items of interest, including the names of the thirteen charter-members of the branch (Malinda McIntosh and Alexander Black are the only charter-members now living), and the names of twenty-one presidents who have had charge of it.

The following brethren have presided over the district: John A. McIntosh, Thomas Dobson, Alexander McCord, Eli Clothier, Jonas W. Chatburn, W. W. Whiting, C. E. Butterworth, J. M. Baker, D. M. Rudd, J. C. Crabb, and Orman Salisbury.

The district tent will be erected in the church yard to be used as a dining-tent during the celebration. The eight-page souvenir—a condensed historical sketch—containing program, will be mailed to the hundreds who now hold or have held membership in the historic Gallands Grove Branch or District, by addressing Mrs. Floy Holcomb, Dunlap, Iowa, or the undersigned at Deloit, Iowa, inclosing stamp.

Now, dear reader, permit me just a few words about church finances: Are you one of the members of this district who have not made a special effort to pay your tithes and offerings? Please help this good cause in every way you can. Do something for the church, and do it now.

Very sincerely,

C. J. HUNT.

MARION, ILLINOIS, August 26, 1907.

Editors Herald: Having been requested to assist the brethren of Southeastern Illinois District in their reunion at Creal Springs, I left home the 15th, for that place, arriving the following day (Friday), and found many of the Saints of the district already in camp enjoying out-door life. At three o'clock the workers were called together by Elder F. M. Davis, the president of the district, and an organization was effected by electing Henry Sparling (whom they were expecting to come), F. M. Davis, and F. M. Slover to preside over the reunion, with a chorister and an organist. That evening they asked the Parsons to break the bread of life, and he did the best he could, and thus we started into one of the best reunions I have attended. While we had some heavy rainstorms, yet not a murmur or complaint was heard from any one, and only one preaching- and a prayer-service was lost. The ministry were blessed in their efforts, and the people of the town gave us a good hearing, and the best of order. Saints were made to rejoice and renew their spiritual strength, and were loath to separate when Monday morning came. A noble band of workers in that part, and while they have been deprived of some opportunities in their education in church government, yet they are ready, and want to know more about the higher life in Christ. While they did not have a boarding-house as some places I have been, each family or perhaps two or three went together and boarded themselves, and the preachers to the number of ten were well fed. Father Smith, who has been so fortunate in raising a large family and developing more preachers than any of the orthodox seminaries that I know of, was there, and while not able to talk as some of his boys, he seemed to enjoy the services as well as one could in this mortal flesh. He is the father of Elder I. M. and W. R. And Bro. I. Morris, who for forty long years has traveled over that part of the State and preached and baptized many, was there also, and seemed as much interested in Sunday-school and Religio work as any of the younger ones, and said if he lived to be ninety years of age he wanted to be active and help all he could. Much could be said of this one and that, but these were the oldest members that I got acquainted with, and both active in the work. May the Lord extend the time of their departure till they are satisfied.

Three were baptized on the last Sabbath day by Bro. Slover, and many others were very much interested. Such a theological shaking up as the people of Creal Springs got never had been dreamed of by ministers or people in their life, hence it was a surprise to all that came. When they heard Parsons make the first effort, they seemed to think he was about the smartest man that ever came into their midst; but alas! he was soon out of the ring, and they found out that the camp was full of preachers, and it seemed to be a feast to them as they sat on hard boards not planed, for one hour (and twice a great deal longer, but you must not tell who it was as Brn. Smith and Sparling might hear of it), and so attentive I felt that no one ought to object to having a reunion among outsiders, especially when they want to hear as this people did.

Bro. Sparling gave the closing discourse, and it was a good one. He called their attention to the different topics that had been discussed, and drew a word picture of the differences between us and the Salt Lake people. It left no room for doubt as to our attitude on the marriage question.

Arrangements being made by two of the brethren living in Marion for me to speak in the court-house, I came up to Bro. C. Webb's, a son-in-law of Father Smith, and am penning these lines while the sisters are preparing supper.

28th. Arrived home during the night, having filled the appointment as afore mentioned, and made some of the audience present think that there were some things in the Bible worth man's consideration. Brn. Webb and Hill would have liked very much to have had me stay and continue the effort, but work at home would not permit. My return trip was uneventful, till seventy-five miles west of St. Louis, when we went into a freight train that had had trouble with a car that was on fire and had sent a man ahead, as is the rule, who placed torpedoes on the track; but alas, the engineer did not hear them when they went off, and on we went till we were brought to a sudden standstill. The most of the people in the car that I was in (when I waked up) were going to the further end of the car haphazard, and were piled three and four deep. I had thrown my chair back, and with my feet against the chair in front of me, and lying on my back, my limbs were stiff, and the jar waked me up, and put me up against this chair good and strong. But not a soul killed. Three or four were quite badly bruised, but nothing serious. This was my first experience with a wreck; and do not care for any more.

In gospel bonds,

A. H. PARSONS.

CREAL SPRINGS, Illinois, August 28, 1907.

Editors Herald: Reunion is over at this place, and I can say we had a very spiritual time. The camp-ground was in a nice grove, in which were several mineral springs, with which this little town is well favored. It is a fine health resort, and no doubt a fine place for those seeking change of climate and water.

The people of the town turned out in large crowds, and were very much pleased with the teaching ably presented by the speakers, each of whom seemed to be especially blessed in his efforts. The prayer-meetings were fine.

I never heard a complaint. There was no sickness in the camp, and all the smiling faces were a true indication that everybody was happy. There is a nice band of young Saints that seem to be alive to the work. And I noticed among those of the young men holding the priesthood, and even among those not yet called, that their testimony had the right ring; and if they continue to be prayerful, humble, and studious, they will become very useful in helping along this latter-day work.

I noticed that there are quite a number of Saints who are school-teachers. I inquired as to how the people stood in regard to hiring the Saints as teachers, and was told that so far as they knew here was only one school in the county which refused to hire Latter Day Saints as teachers. The facts were, there are about eighteen Saints who have been and are now teaching in this county. If each one is a true Saint, how much good they can do in helping the ministry to procure new openings! Altogether I can say I am well pleased with the prospects in this part of my field.

Bro. Slover is piloting me around, so I may get the lay of this part, so we can arrange our fall and winter work to the best advantage.

While writing, I can not overlook the splendid spiritual time we had at our reunion in St. Louis District, held at Voshall, Missouri. While it was not attended by the Saints from the city as much as might have been, yet those who attended brought the Spirit of the Master with them, and we truly had a feast of good things. Bro. Heman was in fine trim, and his efforts were well received. In fact, the speakers all had splendid liberty.

Bro. Tanner and Bro. Frank Smith were the principal spokes in the committee wheel. They worked hard, and tried to please all. The young folks had a splendid time, and I am sure will be anxious for next reunion to come around. Those who missed this one missed a feast.

HENRY SPARLING.

Another Week's Battle for the Lord.

Editors Herald: Presuming it to be my duty, I will tell your readers the ins and outs of the recent Bogard-Henson debate which took place at Baldknob, where proud champions have before clashed their theological steel with the servants of the Lord, and where, in turn, they have met their Waterloo. But not since the shepherd boy downed the giant of Gath has anything much more remarkable occurred than the recent scene at Baldknob.

Ben M. Bogard the Great, glistening in his burnished armor of Greek and Latin, who is not supposed to have a peer in the Baptist ranks, on May 19, 1907, challenged Elder E. L. Henson to defend his cause in debate. So on the night of August 5 Elder Henson in a leisurely, quiet way, used ten minutes telling the people of his disadvantages, owing to prejudice, and twenty minutes reading proof-texts on first principles.

The bristling Bogard made a rapid, boastful reply. His manner and presence were impressive, his cutting sarcasm and witty sayings were richly sandwiched with cruel criticisms and slurring misrepresentations. He quickly snatched all of those insignificant proof-texts, and made them do duty for himself, and he filed so many knotty objections against the "rotten Mormon doctrine" that the Saints were deeply grieved, and some few felt reproached; but no one seemed to get indignant.

Elder Henson put in twenty-seven minutes meekly replying, and three minutes reading proofs for the laying on of hands.

Bogard, with a great flourish, snowed everything under, monopolized the entire Bible, and showed that the earth and the heavens belonged to the Baptists. The Baptists were noisy and jubilant. The Saints silently wended their way home with sad hearts and sober faces. On the 6th Elder Henson answered all of Bogard's questions, and cleared the entire field, so that the Saints could easily see that they were in the right. But Bogard's bombast, his boastful, blustering, boisterous, and blistering misrepresentations, his whirlwind of worldly, wordy wit, made it plainly visible that we were outclassed, and set off in the shade.

On the 7th and 8th it was the same thing over again, only doubled and twisted and multiplied. Elder Henson got sick, which called his willing yokefellow, Elder Irwin, into the collar, and made it needful that the writer moderate. Bogard's years of experience, his strong personality, reinforced by his circle of trained cohorts, formed an atmosphere that readily disturbed the young man's pose of mind. He was hooted at, insulted, called to order, ruled against, and bewildered.

I suppose at this stage of the game, the Lord answered silent prayer. I saw that it was absolutely necessary that I assert and maintain our rights as far as possible, and gradually the scales turned. A rift came in the dark cloud. The sun again smiled upon us, and as it melted the snow away, behold, all of those proof-texts were found to be still in the Bible. We now began to hear from the outside element statements like this: "So far as grammar, rhetoric, oratory, sharp sayings, dishonest pettifogging, satire, and coarse campaign jokes go, the Baptists are decidedly ahead; but for honest behavior, and a Christian spirit, and Bible doctrine, the Saints are out of their sight." We all knew this; but as Elder Henson was so unemotional, we all feared that the people would not see it as it was.

At ten o'clock at night, August 9, the Baptists declared the debate closed at nine sessions, although they had agreed on ten. Now the lords of the heathen (in whose temple we were) at once seized the reins of government, and bade us all sit still while they paid their devotions to their chief for the "scholarly, genteel, masterly, and Christian manner in which he had destroyed Mormonism and maintained the truth." A standing vote of thanks was called for, for his faithful and untiring service. Now came the first real revelation of the wide-spread good that had been done. Joy came to our hearts and tears of gratitude to our eyes, for the people were the jurors; and we were astonished when we saw that only a stingy minority, a mere sprinkle of the great crowd, arose. Then they made a desperate effort to get a big collection for Bogard; but about eight dollars was all that came into sight, so we were dismissed with a good old-fashioned handshake.

One young lady was baptized as the result, and many others brought into closer touch with the truth. So we see that Bogard, as all the rest of our enemies, must resort to something more honorable than Bays, before they crush this work.

The outlook for farmers throughout the State is discouraging indeed. The spring was so cold and wet that crops are very late. Bro. Clements prepared one piece of ground five times and planted it twice before getting a stand. Through the central part of the State, in many places, vegetation has now dried up, so that the right of way and pasture-lands catch on fire from the locomotives. Some are cutting their corn to save fodder, while there are no nubbins yet formed on the stalk.

Strawberries worked a miracle last spring by fruiting from the middle of March to the middle of July, and netting their owners from thirty to one hundred and fifty or two hundred dollars per acre.

I am on my way to Johnson County. Dale, Arkansas, will be my field address for a time. D. R. BALDWIN.

LITTLE ROCK, Arkansas, August 12, 1907.

Wisconsin Reunion.

We take it for granted that a few lines regarding the Southern Wisconsin reunion will be of interest to the scattered Saints, and likewise those in branches who were not able to attend the reunion.

The reunion began August 9 and closed the 18th; and as to weather, it was "good," as we had been promised by the Lord it should be. The showers of rain that came were welcomed to lay the dust and cool the air. The first part of the time the attendance was not so large as in some former years, but at the latter part a goodly number came and a good spiritual time was enjoyed.

The Lord spoke to his people in the first prayer-meeting by the gift of tongues, through O. N. Dutton, and the Saints were admonished to "lift up their heads and rejoice, that the Lord was well pleased with his people, and with their willingness to sacrifice to be present."

In the latter part of the reunion, also, the Lord used the same gift through his servant J. W. Wight to admonish the Saints as follows: "Verily, verily, saith the Spirit unto you my people . . . You must needs receive blessing and warning. . . . I have been with you . . . you should have been more humble and faithful, and you should learn to love others as yourselves. . . . You remember that I told you a year ago that it was pleasing unto me that my people meet together from year to year. But all have not been sufficiently faithful. So remember and begin to prepare for the next reunion, and I will bless you, and the sacrifice required of my people to thus attend will be as nothing, and greater blessings will be yours to enjoy," etc. This is only a very brief synopsis of the instruction. We have written them here that all the district may have them, and we hope that the Saints both young and old will remember them, and especially to begin to prepare for the next reunion; and "I will bless you, and the sacrifices required of my people to thus attend will be as nothing."

Truly the Lord is remembering his people to-day, as in other ages; and, oh, will our people remember the word of the Lord unto us, or will we, as many before our day, quickly forget all that the Lord has promised to do?

I trust we will not, but will give strict heed to the word of the Lord, and receive the promised blessings.

To-morrow I go to join Elder J. J. Bailey at Lancaster, and will spend some weeks with him in Western Wisconsin, holding meetings in several branches. Quite a number of Saints have never had the opportunity of having their blessings, so this will grant them their desire.

As one of the reunion committee, I wish to say to the Saints that we mean to "leave no stone unturned" that will help to make the reunion of 1908 a greater success if possible than that of any previous year. And I am sure I voice the feelings of all the members of the committee. As district president, I wish to say to the Saints in the eastern part of the district that we will remember them next after our return from the western part of the district. Bro. Bailey will join Bro. W. P. Robinson in district work in Northern Wisconsin, shortly after September 16.

Hopefully your servant.

JASPER O. DUTTON.

The Alabama Reunion.

August 16, 1907, at eleven o'clock, after singing and prayer, Bro. T. C. Kelley was called to the chair, with J. M. Stubbart and C. J. Clark to assist: M. S. Wiggins as secretary; D. T. Parker, chorister; Eugenia Parker and Sr. C. J. Clark, organists. All present experienced a time long to be remembered, and had a good time spiritually and socially. During the ten days thirty-eight services were held. The speakers were T. C. Kelley, J. M. Stubbart, C. J. Clark, and G. O. Sellers. The funeral-sermon of Bro. George E. McPherson was preached by T. C. Kelley on the last Sunday. He died August 6, leaving a wife and child. Some few children were blessed, and a few sick administered to. Had quite a few visitors, but no tents at all.

At our last business-session the vote was unanimous to hold another reunion in the light nights in August, 1908, at the same place. J. R. Harper, G. O. Sellers, J. J. Hawkins, D. T. Parker, and J. E. Miller were chosen as reunion committee, and were instructed to make some preparation for next reunion, in selecting speakers, and making preparation on the ground.

We had two or three good prayer-meetings, and one brother was exhorted to be patient, and he would be comforted, and promise of future blessing made. Hoping that we may all show ourselves as workmen approved of God, that others seeing our good works may be constrained to confess that Jesus is the Christ, and come and follow him, with us,

I am, In bonds,
MACKENZIE, Alabama. M. S. WIGGINS.

Southwestern Oregon Reunion.

The reunion of the Southwestern Oregon District was held at Myrtle Point, Oregon, on August 16 to 26. Speakers present were J. C. Clapp, E. Keeler, J. A. Anthony, of San Francisco, California; S. D. Condit, A. A. Baker, of the district. The attendance of Saints was small, but the evening services were largely attended by the townspeople. A prayer-service at nine o'clock, and three preaching-services each day, except on Sunday, when the prayer-meeting gave place to the Sunday-school in charge of the superintendent of the Myrtle Point Sunday-school. On Friday and Saturday, the 23d and 24th, the district Sunday-school association and the district conference was held, the Sunday-school association rendering a fine program on Friday afternoon. All the services held were attended by the marked influence of the Holy Spirit. The reunion of 1908 is to be held at Bandon, Oregon.

News From Branches

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.

The words of inspiration that Bishop Bullard received as given at one of our Wednesday evening prayer-meetings were taken down and given to the typewriter, and believing that if all the Saints could have a copy of the same to read, and to appreciate, they could thus have a record of the prophesying of the prophets of this age of the world as the Nephites had on the plates of brass that Nephi recovered from his uncle Laban. The people of that age appreciated the prophesying of the prophets of old to the extent that they preserved them on plates of gold and brass, and then obtained the promise from God that the brass plates never should become dim by corroding or rust; and should not modern Israel appreciate the word of God in this age, the age when doctors of divinity are declaring God does not now speak through prophets, or reveal anything from heaven?

Yea, we as children of the light who know that God does speak in this age by prophets and dreams and angel visitation, appreciate such divine revelations, and should, when it is possible, honor our gracious God by making a record of his words to us, for our counsel, help, and direction, and thus have the proof to read to those who hunger and thirst after righteousness; for it is this class that the promise, "Ye shall be filled with the Holy Ghost," is to reach. For when the spiritually hungry soul shall hear the word of God thus read, and know it is fresh from the heavens, their intelligence is enlivened with a new great belief and interest that no other way could enliven, and thus would belief in the believer and unbeliever be lessened and overcome.

PROPHECY GIVEN TO PROVIDENCE SAINTS APRIL 1, 1907.

Unto you, O my people! saith the Spirit, hearken unto the word which is given you at this time, and ponder in your hearts what is given you. How often have I spoken unto you by the voice of my Spirit to admonish as well as to comfort and cheer you; but ye have been slow to heed that which was given you for your good as counsel and warning. How often would I have thrown my arms of protection around you, and shielded you from affliction and disease, had you hearkened unto your Father's counsel; but verily because you have neglected counsel, disease has entered your homes, and you have been made to suffer those things you could have escaped. Remember, oh remember who is your friend and protector, and do those things this law provides, and you shall be shielded from those evils which shall be poured out upon the wicked without measure; for behold a crisis is at hand, a time of trial and commotion such as the world has never known. A time when the church must arise to its great mission in the world, when my people must stand in holy places and arouse themselves to a faithful performance of their duty, so that when they shall call upon me I shall be found of them.

Treasure up faith, for you will need in the evil day all the faith you can exercise and command, your faith will be weak, and you will fail when the testing time is upon you. There are those among you who have not responded to the needs of my work for the building of a sanitarium, and a home for the children who need the care of the church. There are those who are withholding their tithes from me—that which they owe their Lord and Master. Would you rob your best and dearest friend? him whose bounteous board is ever open before you, laden with all things for your happiness and blessing? Why withhold from him that which is his due? Is this a day of sacrifice for my people? Is not all you possess mine? Have not you consecrated your bodies, your lives, your all to your Master's service? Then why withhold that which is your Lord and Master's from him? Let not your minds dwell on the adorning of the body, nor let your affections rest upon these things, for the body must perish. This is the adorning unto me, even of the spirit with meekness, with chastity, and with holiness. Adorn that which will, when your earth work is done, return to God who gave it. This must be preserved blameless before the heavenly Father. Nevertheless, keep your bodies clean and free from those things which would defile them, that my Spirit may dwell therein.

Cease from faultfinding and complaining. Cease from speaking evil of your neighbor, your brother, or your sister; for this is not seemly before me; but displeasing to your Father who is in heaven.

Let your time, your moments, be spent in meditation and the study of the law of the Lord, and in this you shall be blessed, yea in such measure as ye have hitherto not known; for this is the time of my blessing as well as the time of my chastening.

Hearken, oh, hearken unto this word, if ye would escape the perils of these days, lest fear take possession of you and ye faint by the way. Respect and honor those who are called to be your servants for Christ's sake. Remember for what purpose they are called to labor among you for your blessing; and thus ye will invite the Master's blessing upon you, and ye shall grow in spiritual power and wisdom. He who heareth my servants, heareth me. Remember, He loveth his children, and His counsel is for their uplifting, and for their eternal good, saith the Spirit. Amen.

SISTER L. A. BROWN.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Branch business-meeting of August 15 showed the local Saints to be steadily moving forward. Financial condition satisfactory, and good reports from officers and missionary. District president, G. A. Smith, presided, with Elder Theodore Schmidt. F. T. Haynes, branch priest, was called and ordained an elder during the session.

A good hearing is being secured each Saturday evening at two different street points. The Sunday afternoon open-air service in Wade Park provides an audience of from two hundred other than our branch members. Weather has been in our favor this season; many faces have grown familiar to us. Elder O. B. Thomas has almost finished his descriptive series of sermons on "The kingdom of heaven"; he leaves us soon to attend West Virginia conference.

Early on Sunday morning, the 25th, our number was added to by the baptism of Bro. Frank C. Webbe and his partner in life, Sr. Julia; we rejoice in this as a very evident leading of the Spirit with them, and feel bold to predict a faithful course for them and their boy.

Bro. and Sr. Schaar leave us to make their home in Detroit, Michigan. Hope the Saints there will put Bro. Vincent to work right away, as he now leaves the responsibility of a Sunday-school superintendency to fall on the shoulders of the writer.

E. A. WEBBE.

FIRST CHICAGO BRANCH.

The reunions have figured slightly against the general church interest here for the past month or so, but everything seems to have moved along in regular order, though we have been compelled to meet with but few in attendance. But what is the difference, anyway? If we go to the place set apart for the worship of God, can we not perform our part of thanks and praise and supplication unto the Lord unattended and alone? Let us scout this idea that we must have an overflowing audience to invite the Holy Spirit! Just as an individual is strongest when shut out from the confusion of the mass, so is he stronger when alone with God, if so be that he has wrought sufficiently well to claim the Holy Spirit.

Branches in the rural districts that can afford a small chapel, and claim the reasonably good will of their neighbors, should be thankful. Contrast that with all you have seen and heard of a large city where the curse of the age—the awful, blighting spirit of individualism—speaks forth in all its manifestations, and then sympathize with us of the city.

Two precious souls were added to the kingdom last Sabbath. Though they were baptized at the Plano reunion, they were "meant" for the First Chicago Branch: Miss Nora Richardson (the writer's half-sister) and Miss Lillian Deam.

As several of the Chicago Saints were in attendance throughout the reunion, it is but part of our items to say a word about the reunion, which has increased in attendance with each year, and stands now as an established function of the district work. It represents the gathering. God is pleased with the meeting together of his people which, if in love and harmony, always inspires the desire to meet again; and how symbolical are these meetings, and how full of profound meaning!

In the commencement of the reunion the Lord spoke through Bro. Wight, promising to shield the Saints from danger, and watch over them in every way, seeing that nothing should disturb or otherwise mar the peace of the gathering: and all this was verified. The Lord also promised to pour out his Spirit upon the Saints and bless them, if they would be diligent and wait upon him in earnest devotion. But the weakness of man will out! His frivolities must be eradicated rather than concealed; the Lord will not endure them.

There was boisterousness on the grounds; disorder at late hours, which necessitated the work of the ground committee in preserving order; too much visiting, and "gadding" about town by various of the young and with it all the Lord was not pleased, and he told his people so. He said, "Did I not promise to watch over you? and have I not done it? But I promised to bless my people if they were faithful, but they were not, and my people are under condemnation." It is too late now. The reunion is over. It remains for the next reunion to test the feeling and memory of those who have once displeased God, and have heard his disapproval, and promise to yet bless them if they would turn to him, and be faithful, and serve him. Will we do it?

A sermon of the kind that sets people to thinking, held the audience at the Sunday morning service in close attention for an hour and a quarter. The speaker was Joseph Luff. Bro. Hale W. Smith occupied the evening hour. The effort was good.

We are glad to see Bro. Bond and wife back from their long Eastern trip. Bro. Scott from Oklahoma is visiting in Independence, and we were glad to hear his voice in the Religio prayer-meeting of September 6. Sr. Florence McNichols, of Atchison, is home again for a few days' visit, accompanied by Miss Knowles, also Sr. Worrell, from Chicago, is here for a short time.

The Sunday-school at their last monthly business-meeting selected Sr. M. T. Short to represent them, as their member of the committee of three in the proposed library movement. Also the seventy-five delegates to which the Sunday-school is entitled were duly chosen to represent them at the coming stake convention at Holden, the 13th.

Re the reunion program outlines early morning study classes on various doctrinal principles, which should be interesting, and will doubtless be conducive to greater unity of thought along these lines. The classes will be in charge of W. H. Garrett, of the Independence Stake presidency.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Sunday was a pleasant, cool day, and the attendance at the services was good. A. H. Smith occupied the morning hour at the chapel; S. A. Burgess, of St. Louis, in the evening. James Allen spoke at the Saints' Home, V. W. Gunsolley at Liberty Home. The sacramental-service, which was postponed on account of the stake reunion, was held in the afternoon. The Spirit of the Master attended the service, to the edification of the Saints.

A goodly number of the local ministry were occupied at adjacent branches and missions: C. I. Carpenter at Thompson in the forenoon, Leon Gould at Jack Wood's in the morning, W. R. Dexter at Greenville in the afternoon, F. B. Blair at Davis City morning and evening, Moroni Traxler at Downey in the afternoon, J. F. Garver at Andover at night.

R. M. Elvin baptized one in the Home pond Sunday morning, and two at Wion in the afternoon. He spoke at Wion in the afternoon and at night. W. H. Kephart was called to Akron on Friday to preach the funeral-sermon of a child of William Creveling. He remained until Sunday, occupying at Downey in the morning. Roy Young, president of the stake Religio Association, organized a local at Lone Rock recently; the first meeting of this local was held on Sunday evening. Elbert A. Smith is in Colorado, in response to invitation from those in charge, attending a reunion near Denver.

A PITIFUL AND INCONSISTENT PLEA.

Our Utah religionists of the Mormon church complain of the aggressiveness of the Reorganized Church, and assert that the insistent attacks which the elders make upon certain doctrines and practices of the church in the "valleys of the mountains" is persecution. Some have stated, in effect, that if the elders of the Reorganized Church were as busily engaged in preaching the gospel as they are in "persecuting them," they might accomplish more good in the world.

The Utah church claims that its leaders and members are carrying out the measures of church work instituted by the prophet Joseph Smith, besides preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ to the inhabitants of the earth, as the same was revealed by the angel to the Prophet; and as the same is found contained in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the revelations given to the church and published in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in the lifetime and under the rule of the Prophet as the President of the church for the first fourteen years of its existence. This claim the Reorganized Church denies; and because the elders proceed to show the truth of their contention, and to produce the facts of history garnered into the pages and records kept by the earlier elders, as to teaching, doctrine, and practices all out of the documents in the hands of custodians in the Utah church as well as those open to the researches of the Reorganized Church, these Utah religionists deny our right to investigation and cry out "persecution."

As an evidence: the Liahona, or Elder's Journal, published at Independence, Missouri, has an epitome of the faith and doctrines of the Utah church, which is also published in other works of that church, and which has the name of Joseph Smith attached to it. Whereas, the statement of faith and doctrines issued by Joseph Smith before his death, and which this published epitome of theirs assumes to represent, is not correctly stated. The fourth article as stated by Joseph Smith, in 1842 and 1844, is as follows:

"We believe that these ordinances are, 1st, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; 2nd, Repentance; 3rd, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins;

The Saints at Webb City, Missouri, will have their church dedicated Sunday, September 29. Presidents Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans will have charge.

The secretary of the Board of Trustees informs us that there is an opportunity for six young ladies to work their way through Graceland College. Do not delay; but write at once to F. B. Blair, secretary.

4th, Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost."

As the same Article 4 is given by the Liahona it is as follows:

"We believe that the first principles and ordinances of the gospel are: First, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by Immersion for the Remission of Sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the Gift of the Holy Ghost."

It may be asked, "Wherein do the two statements as given differ?" We answer, They differ materially in this: the one by Joseph Smith and published by him in his lifetime, contains the plain statement "that the ordinances of the gospel are" giving them as follows; whereas, the statement of these men who so charge us with persecuting them, make Joseph Smith to have stated that "the first principles and ordinances of the gospel are," etc. This is an artful addition to the statement of the Prophet, to admit of the wily argument that there are other, or secondary "principles and ordinances of the gospel" of which Joseph and the church did not know, or if knowing did not care, or dare, to put into the epitome of the church's faith, when he wrote the original, which was published in the Times and Seasons, the official organ of the church, and in the Chicago Democrat, published by Honorable John Wentworth, of Chicago, and who at that time, 1842, was Congressman from Illinois, and had sent an agent to Nauvoo, to get a statement of the faith and doctrine of the Saints, for the Democrat. And what makes the matter of this change more important at this juncture when the elders from Utah are charging us with persecuting them, is the fact that Joseph Smith on behalf of the church, did, in 1844, furnish to I. Daniel Rupp, of Pennsylvania, for publication in his History of the Religious Denominations of the United States, a chapter giving a brief account of the history of the church, in which he includes this identical epitome of faith.

Are we to conclude that Joseph Smith did not know what the faith of the Latter Day Saints Church at that time was; or that, like a charlatan and a deceiver, he chose to make a false statement subject to be juggled with at some after-period to let in doctrines and practices for which there was absolutely no foundation in the angel's message? And are the elders of the Reorganized Church justly chargeable with persecuting the Utah church, and speaking ill of its dignitaries, when they assert the truth of the things of the past?

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again; the eternal years of God are hers."

We make no objection to the church in Utah making up its creed and publishing it to the world; but we have an indisputable right to object to their placing the name of the martyred Prophet to an altered statement of faith; which, small though it may appear as to this alteration, is nevertheless a mischievous interpolation and gives place to the possible introduction of what the Prophet pronounced "a false and corrupt doctrine." We have objected to this in the past, we do so object now; and we shall continue to so object until these religionists cease making and circulating falsifying statements in regard to what the prophet Joseph Smith said, wrote, taught, and practiced; and we shall do this undeterred by this pitiful plea that we are persecuting them. Let them quit misrepresenting the things of the past; let them cease denying what their leading men taught as the doctrine of the church, those things which made the Reorganized Church necessary; let their leading "oracles" now retrace their doctrinal missteps and by an official act of repudiation, or direct disapproval, put aside those evil teachings and practices for the continuance of which they are justly chargeable; then the elders of the Reorganized Church will cease their onslaught upon these causes of spiritual complaint—and not until this is done will the hammering for the restoration of the "faith once delivered to the saints" along the lines which they call "persecution" cease.

WINE FOR THE SACRAMENT.

The Word of Wisdom requires that the liquid that is used in the sacramental services shall be wine:

"And, behold, this should be wine; yea, pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make."

While there might be some controversy as to when the juice of the grape becomes wine, whether before a sufficient fermentation has taken place to clarify the liquid from all impurities occurring from the presence of dust attaching to the berries, broken stems, and the specks sometimes found on the berries, or whether it is wine when first expressed from the grape, we will not consider now or discuss. It is certain, however, that the juice of the grape must be cleansed from these impurities, either by fermentation, or by some other and possibly quicker process, or it is not fit to use as sacramental wine.

It is safe to state that if the Saints will prepare the wine in the fall of the year, each branch making such quantity as will be sufficient to last for the year, or until the succeeding crop of grapes has ripened, there need to be no dispute about the kind of wine they should use; as each may adopt its own process.

The grapes used should be the cultivated, or tame variety; the sweeter the better. The common varieties, Catawba and Concord, or other sort that may flourish in the different localities of the several branches are good. The grapes should be ripe, fully ripe if possible. When being prepared for the press the berries should be picked from the stems and all defective and unripe berries should be thrown aside. The berries should be broken without breaking or mashing the seeds.

The juice when expressed from the pomace or must, should be put into a brass, copper, or iron kettle, heated to one hundred forty degrees Fahrenheit, boiled for a few minutes, being skimmed while boiling to remove the scum of pomace or must; when clear it should be put either in bottles, or fruit jars, while hot, and tightly corked, or sealed; then put away in a cool cellar or other place where it will keep cool, and be ready for use when wanted. This for the tame grape.

If the wild grape, blackberry, or raspberry berries are used, the juice should be pressed out without breaking the seed, adding, water one pint, and sugar one-half pound, for each pint of the juice: then boil a few minutes, skimming if sediment or scum rises, and bottling while hot, corking tightly. Cut off the corks, tying them down, dip the tops in wax, and keep in a cool, dry place.

We give this last for the reason that there may be branches where the cultivated grape may not be readily obtained; and for such a contingency the Lord made provision, as will be seen by reference to section 26, paragraph 1, of Doctrine and Covenants: "For, behold, I say unto you, that it mattereth not what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, when ye partake of the sacrament, if it so be that ye do it with an eye single to my glory."

It should be remembered, however, that the same section provides that wine nor strong drink, for the purpose of the sacrament, should be purchased from the enemies, but that the wine should be made new; that is, as we understand it, be made new each recurring grape harvest, from year to year; and this can be very easily done in the way pointed out in the foregoing formulas. No one can justly object to partaking of the juice of the grape prepared according to the manner given above in the administration of the sacrament.

"ALL THINGS."

The real strength and beauty of the admonition of the Savior, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets," are not so thoroughly understood and appreciated by many, (and so-called Christian followers unfortunately are of the number,) as they should be. It seems easy to yield a sort of ready assent to the virtue of the saying when applied to the several charities in which this world's goods are involved; but the saying is sadly dimmed with age and hoariness and its virtue forgotten or ignored, when men's opinions clash in dispute, or the question of personal, mental, and intellectual, as well as moral rights fall into the discussion. By far too few are willing to concede the meed of good motives to those who think differently from themselves, oppose them, and stoutly affirm their own opinions. To them the term "all things" can apply only to those of material substance; those of the realms of thought, intellectual and spiritual worth having been left out of consideration, accidentally.

GRACELAND COLLEGE NOTES.

The opening of the college year at Graceland will be at ten o'clock on Tuesday, September 24. The address of the day will be given by Bro. William Pitt of Independence, Missouri.

It is the desire of the management that all students, as far as possible, be present on Monday for enrollment and registration. Work in all departments will begin promptly; and on that account every one should be registered early.

All who are entering for the first time should bring certificates of work done in other schools so that proper entry may be made upon our books at once. The attention to these matters helps in getting students properly classified early in the term.

It is very desirable both for college people and the students if notice is given us as to time students expect to arrive. Also a suggestion as to the accommodations desired in the way of board and room would facilitate matters very much. With such information on hand our committee would not miss any one.

The president is authorized by the board to accept railroad certificates, or receipts, to the amount of ten dollars, in lieu of money for tuition from all who pay for a year's tuition in advance. Last year this saved the students considerable money. Students should not forget to take receipts when buying a ticket. Take a receipt at each junction point.

The work of preparation for the opening has begun in earnest. The prospects for a fine year are at present very flattering. All people interested in the education of the young are urged to talk Graceland during the next few days. We have not been able to get in touch with all who ought to be in Graceland during the coming year. We are better able than ever to accommodate young people.

The demand for young men and young women in places where opportunity is given to make the expenses of board and room is greater than our supply. Especially is this true of the ladies. We need several ladies at once in the dormitory where the most desirable work is offered. It is hoped that many of those who read these notes will arrange to come at once.

The work of the college has been extended considerably since last year. Improvements which add much to the work of the college have been made. The teachers have been selected upon their merits, and on that account we offer no apology for any member of the present faculty. The Lamoni Patronesses have purchased for the office a new sectional Globe-Wernicke filing-cabinet, bookcase, and card-index combination. The card-index system of keeping student record will be begun, the book system having been discarded. The people of the church are urged to investigate the merits of Graceland.

Elders' Note-Book

DEALING WITH OFFENDERS.

At the Eastern reunion held at Highland Lake, Norfolk, Massachusetts, the missionary in charge of the Eastern Mission organized a ministerial training-class for the benefit of the priesthood. The following subject was given the writer, and later the missionary in charge requested that it be sent in for publication.

"HOW TO WORK UP A CASE FOR AN ELDERS' COURT.

"The trouble took place in a regularly organized branch, Mrs. Dontcare became jealous of her sister, Mrs. Stuckup, and in order to injure her standing among the branch members circulated the story that Mrs. Stuckup was not as good as she pretended to be; that she had stolen things from her and several others; that they had better watch her when she came around to their homes, as she was very light-fingered.

"Mrs. Stuckup happened to hear of how Mrs. Dontcare had been slandering her and became very much offended, denying the accusation. She went to the president of the branch and demanded that Mrs. Dontcare be brought to time. The president talked kindly to her and instructed her that she should go to Mrs. Dontcare and try to make things right according to the plan given us by the Savior, 'Between thee and her alone.'

"After some persuasion on the part of the president, Mrs. Stuckup went to Mrs. Dontcare and asked her what she meant by circulating such an untruth. She had come as the law demanded to try to get things straightened out; that Mrs. Dontcare must know she had injured her in circulating such a story, and she ought to be willing to take it back and make things right.

"Mrs. Dontcare refused to make amends, and said Mrs. Stuckup was an upstart anyway, and she was sure that if she was not all that the story said, it was simply because circumstances prohibited her from being so. And she refused to have anything to do with her.

"Mrs. Stuckup returned to the president of the branch and told him what had passed between the two, and that Mrs. Dontcare had refused to be reconciled to her. The president instructed her to take some one else with her and try again, which she did, but Mrs. Dontcare refused them admittance to her house.

"Upon this being told to the president he called the first teacher to him, and told him there was trouble between Mrs. Stuckup and Mrs. Dontcare, and he wished him to take up the case, as Mrs. Stuckup had covered the law so far as she was concerned, and the church would have to try to bring about a settlement.

"The president informed the teacher sufficiently for him to act intelligently upon the case, and cautioned him to keep it to himself. After considerable admonition on the part of the president, and a season of prayer, the teacher set out to see Mrs. Dontcare. He found her at home, and, apparently waiting for something to turn up in the form of an official visit. The teacher greeted her in the spirit of sainthood; and, after some commonplace remarks, asked her if they might not have a short season of prayer. She had no objection, so prayer was offered, after which the teacher stated that he had been sent to her officially on account of the trouble existing between her and Mrs. Stuckup. That he was only there in the line of his duty, not through any ill feelings towards her. He stated it was for the peace of the branch that he was seeking to bring about harmony.

"Mrs. Dontcare immediately began to abuse Mrs. Stuckup, saying such people should not be allowed to remain in the church; that she was stuck up, and thought herself better than any one else in the church. She did not care to mingle with such people, and if the officers were going to champion her cause, she did not care to stay in such an organization. She thought they were all tarred somewhat with the same stick anyway.

"The teacher kept his temper as best he could, and tried to persuade her he was acting as much in her interests as he was for Mrs. Stuckup; but she would not see it, and, try as he did, he could not do any more with her. So he told her he would come to see her again after she had had time to consider what he had said. She was not in a frame of mind to pray or allow prayer to be offered at the close of the interview, so the teacher departed.

"He reported the facts of his visit to the president, and was instructed to take a second teacher or deacon with him. He said Bro. A B was an excellent teacher, and if the one acting cared to associate him with the case, he thought he would be a good man to take, but, he could take any one of the teachers or deacons he desired. However, he had better wait for a week so that the sister would have time to think over the statements made at the last visit.

"After waiting one week the teacher took Teacher A B according to the admonition of the president. He told Bro. A B he desired him to do a little work with him, and that if convenient he would desire him to go to see a certain sister on Monday night about eight o'clock. He had notified the sister they were coming.

"After arriving at the house they had prayer, as on the former occasion, Mrs. Dontcare receiving them very gingerly. After prayer, the teacher related the case to the accompanying teacher for the first time, and in the presence of the accused party. Then he asked Mrs. Dontcare if she was feeling any differently towards the sister. She said she was not; but if anything she thought less of her,—and of those who were trying to defend her,—after which she began to abuse all connected with the case. Both teachers tried to show her that her actions were contrary to the spirit of the gospel, and also contrary to the law of the church; but she did not care if they were. Nothing could be done further, so the teacher told her he would have to prefer charges against her and let the church decide her case. With that they left and sought the president, relating the results of visit number two. He instructed them to make out charges and present one copy to him, and one to the sister accused.

"Charge: 'I hereby charge Sr. O. I. Dontcare with unchristianlike conduct, specified as follows: Creating disturbance in backbiting and refusing to make restitution or reconciliation.

Signed,

'TEACHER.'

"One copy of this was sent to the accused sister that she might have time to repent and ward off action. The other was given to the president, that, after sufficient time, he might appoint the court."

"THY WILL BE DONE IN EARTH."

Sermon by President Joseph Smith, at Lamoni, Iowa, April 7, 1907.

(Reported by Leon A. Gould.)

It is to be seriously doubted whether the full compass of the mission of Jesus Christ will be fully understood by men until after they have passed the dark passage of death, cast off the environments of the flesh, see as they are seen, and comprehend as they also are comprehended.

I can not divest myself of the thought, this morning, that the mission of Jesus Christ in every particular was intended to teach men their duty while they were upon the earth, in order that they might be fitted and prepared to occupy the mansions on high. I propose, this morning, to present some thoughts. I do not say they are mine, or only mine; for they must necessarily belong to every man who thinks sufficiently of the welfare of his own soul. And while we are under the glamour of music, and the beautiful things that we see in this life, it seems to me that we ought never to lose sight of the thought that in all this wondrous spread of God's energy and his love, his wisdom must run through it all as a golden thread, and give us to understand that no ideal thought was expressed by the Master, and no foolish example set by him, and as a consequence that he always taught that men ought to learn and obey.

While the Master was here the question of prayer was undoubtedly raised among his disciples: and they were not the only ones who prayed; but men everywhere seemed to bow to that which they hoped were the divinities which they should worship, and the character of their prayers has come down to us from the ages that are past. But Jesus, standing out in marked comparison, in striking contrast with those around him, stands to-day singly and alone in teaching the majesty of prayer. I will read for my text this morning, if it should be practicable for me to follow it in the thoughts that have suggested themselves to me from time to time, what has been read, and is being read, in my judgment, carelessly, all over the land; that men who are using it go out from their places of devotion and apparently divest themselves of all the force that may have gathered about the prayer, and either forget it or disregard it,—some of them almost totally in their teaching and their practice unto their fellow men.

After this manner therefore pray ye: Our father, which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever.

There are many things taught in this prayer, a few only of which I shall attempt to present. The first is the acknowledgment of the universal fatherhood of God. As a people we recognize this. And it seems to me that there ought to be within us a sentiment that when we would take that sacred name upon our lips, our hearts are moved more by the filial thought of children toward a father than of devotees and advocates of a peculiar faith. It is comprehensive, and yet we arrogate to ourselves the thought that he is our Father, preëminently our Father; and whether it shall appear from future thought that we are justified in thus making that statement, arrogating to ourselves that thought, is a matter for each and every one of us to determine for himself. For whether we will or will not worship him, enter into agreement with him, follow those things which are characterized as his commandments, bow at his feet as loving children, be exercised by thought in reference to what our conduct should be as representing ourselves as his children, we must always remember that he has created us and all the world, and we must answer to him. Whatever may be our thought concerning him, whatever may be the character of our faith toward him, and concerning the things which he has done for men, whether we shall be helpful and hopeful, and righteous, or whether we shall be unbelieving and degenerate and wicked, we must answer to him for the opportunity he has granted us in this world, in this probationary life to accomplish what he designed was possible for man when he created him.

“Our Father”—My children come to me without fear. Your children come to you without fear, if you have performed the part of fathers and mothers as you should have done. And as a people our children come to us with the sentiment of devotion, and with the spirit of confidence, the spirit of trust. They banish fear, and, as a consequence, we as his children should approach him in that sense.

But there is an expression here that is very striking. And I have been led to wonder why Jesus did not weep more than he did over rebellious Israel. I wonder even now if he feels the infirmities of men, if he is still smarting with the stripes that have been put upon him because of his having taken upon himself man's nature, that he does not even now weep. Witness this aspiration of his heart: “Thy kingdom come.”

In these last days we are looking for the coming of the Master. We have been told by the voice of inspiration that we should have no king in time, and that we were to observe certain rules of conduct until he came whose right it is to reign. We can not trust human kings. We can not be saved in all the peculiar surroundings of a kingly court; but when he comes we can trust him.

But now, what is the character of this aspiration of his? It was that there might come upon earth such a condition of things as reigned in heaven. And I have often wondered from my heart how it was, when I have seen men kneeling before the altar or standing in the sacred desk and offering this prayer to God, that they dared afterwards to reject the things which he said were to be observed by his disciples. I have wondered how they dared to take upon themselves the name of God's Son, and offer in that name this aspiration, “Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.”

Would not such a condition of things as this dispose at once of all the variety of opinions that are ruling among men and dividing them concerning the worship which they should pay to God? Is not the expression made by the Master, “They who worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth,” but an echo of the spirit of this prayer? When talking with the woman at the well, and talking about this worship of God the Father, he says, “Ye worship ye know not what: we know what we worship . . . they that worship him [God] must worship him in spirit and in truth”; “for the Father seeketh such to worship him.”

When I have seen men get up from their knees and go out and with force and in a degree of dignity absolutely deny the positive force of some of these things which are uttered by Jesus Christ as the doctrine of his Father, he disavowing any responsibility for it within himself, I have wondered whether there will be in such a case as that a tolerance from God when the time of trial shall come, when the judgment shall sit, and men shall answer for what they have done in a final arbitrament of human affairs.

What is the meaning of this aspiration? We look back along the history, and we discover that such a man as Jesus Christ was prophesied of. And one of the peculiarities of that prophecy is this: He was to come and he was to take upon himself a body of the nature of Abraham's seed, a body subject to death; and by a parity of reasoning he was to conduct himself in the exercise of that body that when the final trial should come he should be able to raise that body from the tomb, and thenceforward to reign prince over death, hell, and the grave. He could not have done this if he had not been royally commissioned; and hence when he says, as he has said, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me," he stood in all the dignity that an agent could occupy, an agent of divinity, divinely empowered, and conscious of all that had been done before, and would come after, to prevent the accomplishment of his Father's design in spreading that wondrous doctrine over the whole earth.

And now he seems to have given us a bit of earth: "Give us this day our daily bread." He knew that men must live by that which perishes, and yet he says concerning it: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." And if you will watch the whole history carefully, you will discover that from first to last Jesus the man, Jesus the Christ, labored among men with the absolute consciousness—betrayed it in almost every step and in almost every utterance—that he was answering at once to the power that sent him; never forgetful, never disregarding, never arrogating to himself that which belonged to his Father, except as charged by the Jews when he said, "My Father and I are one." And then they thought he said, or accused him of saying that he was God. He never said that. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father," a representative, an agent, a royal power sent from the royal throne to accomplish a royal design that upon the earth men might be brought into relationship with him, that it could be said of them as the Savior said in his prayer as found in the seventeenth of John, if my memory serves me right, "That they may be one even as we are one"; in the same relationship by virtue of the same divine power. By reason of the same principle of obedience men were to be brought into relationship with this one who prayed that things might be done in earth as in heaven,—the same relationship that existed between him and the Father who sent him. That is the object of the preaching of the gospel of the Son of God to-day, my friends. And when you and I stand up in the sacred desk, or kneel within the precincts of the closet and say, "Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name," we could not sanctify our spirits more clearly than this in devotion to God. And when we say further, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven," we have virtually spiritually pledged ourselves to do all within our power to bring to pass that condition of things upon the earth that Jesus has reflected as obtaining in heaven.

I do not like one part of this prayer in its expression, because it is elsewhere contradicted: "And lead us not into temptation." I prefer, "Leave us not in temptation." And yet there is something singular about this; that without we shall be tempted, we shall not be tried, and it shall not be known whether we shall forbear or be overcome by temptation. And every man that is borne to the triumphant reception on high, of which our anthem depicted the scene, must pass through the valley of humiliation, must become subject to temptation, and must overcome, having the equivalent in his own life, at some period of it, of the forty days' trial of the Master. It may be to one of us in an hour; it may be to some of us in weary years of suffering and forbearance; it may be in one way with one and in another way with another. Not one of us can tell what shall be the peculiar trials to which we shall be subjected that will bring to us the result that was wrought out for the Master in the forty days of trial, nor will we ever be permitted to select from out the great assortment of ills to which the flesh may be subjected and those peculiar conditions that try the spirit within; but it will be ministered unto us by him who is seeking to perfect us, and to bring to pass in us that development that will enable us finally to obtain a triumph.

Leave us not, when we are tempted! We are told that God tempted no man. He may leave us to be tempted; for if he did not, of what value is our individuality? Of what advantage is our responsibility if he does not leave us to the exercise of those faculties with which he has endowed us, and for which he has told us repeatedly he will hold us responsible at the final outcome? If he will not divest us of our individualities, but suffers us always to exercise them, then he will not tempt us. He will not leave us in temptation, if we do not forget and leave ourselves. It largely depends upon ourselves. If we know that which tempts us, we must keep from its force and its influence; we must not go within its precincts; we must keep outside of the barriers beyond which we are tempted; and if we will do that he will never leave us when we are tried.

"And forgive us our debts"—Will he do that? I will enforce the sentiment that I now express by a confession. Just about the time that I began to preach I had an intense hatred toward one man. An intense hatred! I could not justly avenge myself upon him without putting myself within the province of punishment by the law. If at any time while I cherished this feeling I could have done that I should very cheerfully have undertaken that job. After a time I began to preach, and the force of this prayer was brought to my attention; and the peculiar phraseology of it, and that which immediately follows after, as stated by the Savior, was forced in upon me, and I knew that I did not dare to say that prayer in its fullness until I had divested my heart of that hatred that I held toward this man. It took considerable of an effort. And yet I am thankful that after a while I overcame that, and I would have laid no straw in his way; if I could have helped him under any circumstances I would have done so. And when he went out of life, he went out of life even with the feeling of regret in my heart that he was gone, because, in a sense, he was a good man; but he had done a grievous wrong. It was not mine to cherish it in hatred toward him. I could not punish him. It remained for the Master, who had said, Vengeance is mine; I will repay. It is not mine or yours to cherish that feeling of revenge and seek to avenge ourselves of those things which create hatred in our hearts; but we must banish that from us or we never can pray honestly this prayer that is given us here.

"Forgive us our debts"—Do we owe God anything? Is there anything which belongs to him coming from us? Will he forgive us of those debts which he has called upon us to pay? Will he not enforce upon us the saying, Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things which belong to God? Will he excuse us for forgetting? Will he alleviate our conditions, if we put off the day of paying whatsoever we may owe to him of spiritual or temporal good that we may have received from him that has created a debt against us in his favor?

Now, mark you, the closing portion of this expression is, "As we forgive our debtors." Let no man dare to pray, "Father, forgive my debts against thee," unless he is prepared to answer to the closing portion of that, and shall not be condemned when it is read. In like manner as I forgive these debts against him, so I ask thee to pardon or forgive the debts which I am owing unto thee.

Let him that is exacting, let him that is harsh in his spirit, let him that is of an unforgiving temperament, let him that cherishes malice, let him in whose heart rankles the rust of injury and wrong, let him be careful how he prays; for if he but utters the whole of this prayer, he puts it within the power of the just to condemn him. Do not let us forget the joining of this; for upon it hangs perhaps a proper understanding of what we have been told elsewhere; "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye also unto them." And we can never realize to the fullest extent the wonderful opportunities involved in that declaration until we have become sufficiently acquainted with our fellow men and ourselves as to rightly understand what we would have men do unto us. We are not required to do unto them other than that. We are not required to exact of them differently from that; but we must be in such a temper and have such a just conception of our obligation to them, and theirs to us, as to understand clearly what we would do for them under similar conditions. That is the force of that declaration. It lies at the basis of all human conduct. It is the underlying superstructure upon which all human laws rest. This principle announced by the Savior: "As ye would that men should do unto you do ye so unto them"; "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"; "thou shalt love the Lord thy God supremely"; if a man does this and puts himself within the light of proper education, he will, by and by, be completely able to love his neighbor as himself. He is not charged to love his neighbor better than he loves himself. If he has an overweening, exacting love of himself, he will demand the same of his neighbor, and he will extend to his neighbor just that kind of love; and such a man as that going through the world is sure to be found fault with, if he is not hated. But if there is a sufficient degree of the love of God in his heart, he loves his neighbor in the same kind of principle or spirit of uprightness, the spirit of kindness.

I am not sure that we are required by this expression to love that which is unloveable. If we are, my education is not altogether complete, I confess. I have not yet brought myself into such a condition that I love that which is unloveable; and one of the best expressions I ever heard of the love of God was this: It was a comprehending love, a love that took into examination all the conditions of the case which would be presented for consideration. The individual, his peculiarities, his environments, and those things which had been brought to bear upon him to create his character, would enter into a proper understanding of this declaration: Love even your enemies; love your neighbors. Now if you can love that which is unloveable with the degree of fervency that you can that which is loveable, then you are a better Christian than I, if I do not misunderstand what the Savior has been trying to teach. If you understand it and have reached that condition, then you are a better Christian than I.

Let us see. I believe it is somewhere said that sin is hateful. I believe that sentence would comprise perhaps all that might be brought within the confines of the expression: That which is unlovely; that which is hateful; that which is sinful; that which is wrongful; that which is degrading; that which tends to soil the soul; that which tends to degrade the body; that which tends in any sense to divert men's powers from the tasks which God designed through the teaching of Jesus Christ, and the fullness of his gospel to operate upon every man that is born into the world.

Hence when I say that I can not love that which is unlovely, I perhaps put myself somewhere near the provision of him who looked on sin with no degree of allowance. He said to the Jews, I think, that up to a certain time they had had a cloak for their sins; but after his appearance they henceforth had no cloak for their sins. The Apostle Paul seems to have caught the same sense when he said he had lived in all good conscience before God up to a certain appearance of time; and he said, when the commandment came sin revived and I died.

What did he die to? He died to that law under the influence of which he had said, "I have lived in all good conscience before God up to this day." After that the commandment had come, sin had revived, his consciousness of sin had revived, and he died unto that law. And by virtue of his obedience to the commandment that came to him from the Master through the lips of Ananias, he was born unto a life of righteousness which is without sin in the law. And henceforward, if you will read his epistles, you will become impressed with the thought that the Apostle Paul, Saul of Tarsus, born unto a devotee of Jesus Christ, lived a consistent life, loving man, loving God, and doing that which was characteristic of such service. He had passed from sin unto life. He had passed from under the influence of death under the law unto the life-giving influence of the gospel of the Son of God, that had created him a new man in Christ Jesus.

I plead, then, to-day, for the value of the gospel of the Son of God. I plead, now, for the value of that commandment which has come to us, and which is found, in its equivalent, applied to one individual, "And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." This is one of the things that Jesus said to do to bring to pass upon the earth, amongst the human family that dwell upon the earth, the means by which men might be relieved from sin and the consequences of sin; and hence he came preaching one of the simplest things it was possible for him to have done, and claimed for it virtue; and we claim for it virtue, because it has been commanded of God.

"Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." He had been born, but into conditions that were not calculated to bring to pass that condition of mind and spirit shadowed forth in this prayer; and it was his purpose to bring to pass these conditions by which man could be brought into such condition of spirit as that. And hence he said to Nicodemus, "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." "Verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter."

Here is the proposition that we started out with: that we can not fully comprehend Jesus and his wondrous mission until we had been divested of these turmoils of the flesh and shall stand over on the other side, released from these impediments here, prepared to see as we are seen, and know as we are known, and comprehend as we are comprehended. This will be brought to pass with us and for us when we bring ourselves, as the Savior did, into obedience to God. And he could look up unto his Father and say, I have said what thou gavest me to say; I have done what thou commandedst me to do; I have left with these my disciples what thou gavest me to give to them, and they have kept that which I have intrusted to them; and (virtually assuming to carry on the statement a little further than that, in the words of the apostle,) "I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith; henceforth there is a crown laid up for me;" and he says, evidently pausing, at the time he said or wrote it, to consider what effect it might have down yon stream of time, "And not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Now, my friends, can you pray to-day the words of this prayer, and say in your hearts, I love the appearing of Jesus; I long for the day when the opening clouds shall reveal him, surrounded by that marvelous host of angels which shall come with him—more than twelve legions of angels which he said at one time he could ask the Father for and receive their surrounding care? "Thinkest thou that I can not now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?" "Put up again thy sword." We are looking for that time, friends. It forms a portion of the philosophy, as we understand it; it is the crowning joy of our hearts that sooner or later, whether we shall be upon the earth, or shall be permitted to sleep, our bodies decaying in the earth, when that trump shall sound those who are alive and remain at his coming will be caught up, changing in the twinkling of an eye, and taking upon themselves that condition to which they shall be entitled, meeting him and his angelic host; "so shall we ever be with the Lord." But we will not prevent those who are asleep. They shall rise. They, too, shall meet him; and the life in Christ Jesus will continue to go on and on; for it shall have been done "in earth as in heaven."

POLYGAMY SANCTIONED BY A POPULAR CHRISTIAN OR DISCIPLE EDITOR.

Through the kindness of our own missionary, J. F. Mintun, a copy of an article published in the Christian Evangelist, St. Louis, Missouri, March 30, 1893, was furnished us, entitled, "The marriage problem," by B. W. Johnson, a prominent preacher, author and editor.

It is a fact, well known to Latter Day Saints everywhere, that the followers of Alexander Campbell, known as Christians or Disciples, have been and still are among the most active opposers of the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, the claims made for the Book of Mormon, and the work of the Reorganized Church. Please note carefully the following extract from the article by the Christian or Disciple editor, B. W. Johnson, under the caption, "The marriage problem." He says:

The gospel took men as it found them, and told them to go and sin no more. We not only find traces of these things in the epistles, but even of a man having more than one wife. It seems to have been the inspired policy to exercise the greatest possible toleration. When a man with two wives was converted he was not required to wrong one by putting her away, but at the same time the disapproval of the church was placed on his marriage relations by making him ineligible to office in the church.—The Christian Evangelist, St. Louis, Missouri, March 30, 1893.

The above quotation is a clear case of sanctioning the soul-destroying doctrine of polygamy. The high esteem in which the Christian or Disciple Church holds Mr. Johnson is plainly told by the Christian Publishing Company's catalogue of books, etc. After naming several books on Bible questions of which he is the author, the catalogue says:

Probably no one could be named in the Christian Church so well fitted for the task of preparation, in all respects as B. W. Johnson. . . . Scholarly, studious, full of reverence for the Bible, devout, with eminent power of clear, strong expression in the fewest possible words, conspicuous for his knowledge of the history, geography and customs of Bible times, and also for his insight into the deep, spiritual meaning of the sacred text, he presents a rare combination of qualities for this work.

Should any one question the affirmation made that Mr. Johnson is the writer of the article on "The marriage problem," referred to above, we will say that J. H. Garrison, editor-in-chief of the Christian Evangelist, in a letter dated April 30, 1907, said: "Beyond doubt Brother B. W. Johnson, then one of the editors of the paper, was the author of the comment."

Does that proud, aggressive "Christian" Church need the true gospel light on the marriage question? It certainly does. Please contrast the above with the sure words of divine instruction, which are:

Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord, . . . Wherefore my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord; For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women.—Book of Mormon, Book of Jacob, chapter 2.

The Lord, in 1831, said to the church, through Joseph Smith:

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.

Whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

Throw on the beautiful gospel light, Saints, for the darkened world, religiously, needs the truth as restored in these latter days. C. J. HUNT.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

IV. AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER ALVIN KNISLEY.

On the sylvan banks of the northern shore of Lake Erie, nigh half way between St. Thomas and Buffalo, near the village of Selkirk, in the county of Haldimand, over two thousand miles from where I now write, on the 22d of September, (the day that the youthful Seer of Palmyra visited Cumorah for four consecutive years) 1873, I first beheld the light of day. When I was about one year old we moved in still closer proximity to the shore of the lake; in fact within a stone-throw, where cosily situated between two creeks, in sight of the light by night of Long Point Lighthouse, abreast an expanse of fresh water of from sixty to eighty miles, regaled with the music of its motion, kissed with the eager winds from its bosom, brought up on food of average plainness, accustomed to shooting, fishing, and bathing, I watched the kingfisher catch his prey, the thick-feathered gull, when the waters were in agitation, float with balanced wings over its raging coast, the eagle with pinions untired soar to and fro, and the roving ducks come and go.

I am for the most part of German extraction, with a sprinkling of English blood. My ancestors on both sides came from Pennsylvania many years ago, when the timber was in profusion, when my native home was a wilderness in the hands of the red man, when people were on a common level, and when they acted in common with each other.

In the lovely quietude of this place I first beheld the light of life. Here, when in my eighteenth year, I first heard the beautiful story, the evangel of peace, the message of love, glad tidings of great joy. For months, yes, for years, I had sought the Lord for direction, for his guidance. Repeatedly I had asked him to lead me into the paths of truth and righteousness. And then, the peculiarity of the circumstances under which the work came to me, has often moved me to serious reflection, and to suspect that it came as a response to my prayers, as a balm from the Savior's hand.

Some time, but a few years earlier than my acceptance of the gospel, there was a family moved into our immediate vicinity, the wife and mother of which was a Latter Day Saint. She gave me some of her tracts. I recall distinctly the one entitled "The one body," by, I think, Apostle T. W. Smith, also the Voice of Warning. They came to me in the right time, for I had become wrought up not a little on the subject of religion and the welfare of my soul. My parents were of the Baptist faith, though for some years back they had ceased to be active, to some extent, on account of church rows and wrangles in the which that denomination was, in that place at least, especially unfortunate. Naturally enough I leaned in the Baptist direction, and I endeavored, under the patient tuition of my aged grandfather, to believe that in the ordinance of water baptism there was no saving efficacy; that it took a saved man, a Christian, to be baptized.

On one occasion while laboring under this honest misunderstanding, I became involved in an argument with a member of the Disciple fraternity. He gave me a spanking that I will never forget. He placed before me such passages as John 3:5 and Acts 2:38, where it says, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God"; and, "Repent and be baptized every one of you" "for the remission of sins," etc. With sophistry and subterfuge I had baffled him, but really I had not satisfied myself. I went home with a drooping head and meditative mind. Those passages stared me in the face. I was powerless to get away from them. If I opened the Bible there they were, and if I opened it again there they were just the same. What was I to do? Here came one of the turning points of my life. It had to come. The scurf of environment had to be washed off, preparatory to a greater light that was soon to radiate on my pathway. So I decided to make it a matter between myself and God. I loved grandfather, liked to hear his stories of the patriarchs in his patriarchal way, but I knew he could not save me. I tried to become as unprejudiced as a mariner's compass, and let consequences take care of themselves. I had not long undergone this blessed transition till I found myself yielding to the proposition of the essentiality of water baptism. It was about this time, while I was in this transitory condition and perhaps before I had fully succumbed to the above conviction, that the Latter Day Saint literature came into my hands.

Sometime after my investigations had begun, an elder of the Reorganized Church, by the name of John Shields, came into that neighborhood. How I enjoyed his company as I sat by his side, when in language quaint and olden, with accent Irish, he unfolded the story of all stories. He seemed like an angel from heaven, a messenger divine. For the first I felt myself in the presence of the holy priesthood, of an authorized servant of the Most High. And what was lamentable to me was the fact that so few others could look upon him with the same happy realizations. His answers were ready, his quotations were verbatim. He evinced much zeal; he put Christ to the front and left Shields on the background. Unlike most public speakers, he would be accorded by most people who heard him that whether right or wrong, he believed he was right.

He had preached there not much in excess of a week when I was baptized. He had said to me when aside on one occasion: "Do you not think you ought to be baptized, Brother Alvin?" I answered: "I think I ought to repent first." Therein was still manifest one trait of sectarianism that was still clinging to me. I had an idea that some churning sensation ought to take possession of me; that I ought to be stricken with some shaft of God's Holy Spirit. But he said, "When is a man going to repent?" I examined myself. I found that I was willing to do all I knew to be right and refrain from all I knew to be wrong. I, therefore, decided on the fitness of my candidacy and very soon thereafter submitted myself for the watery rite, and was the first in that locality to receive the same.

On the eve of my baptism father came to me and said, "Alvin, I hear you are to be baptized this evening." I answered that such was my intention. "Well," he rejoined, "you had better be careful, for I heard to-day that Joe Smith was a bad man." Very peremptorily I told him that I had no confidence in those yarns, and that whatever Joseph Smith was I was satisfied of the truth of the message I was about to embrace.

Accordingly I was baptized and was soon followed by my parents and my two sisters. My brother, older than myself, stood aloof from us religiously and is not yet identified with any religious denomination.

These were days never to be forgotten. Enthused with the inspiration of the divine Spirit I perused our publications one after another as I could borrow them or get money for their purchase. For some years our circumstances were such that I was not oppressed with work, and I did little but read. I believe it was a divine impulse. Others of our family were inclined to a great extent in the same way.

When night had fallen and had cast its dusky mantle softly and silently over all creation, when supper was over, we all with one accord leaped on our books, our papers, our quarterlies, etc., and sometimes there was a little rivalry as to who should have the newly imported book or the newly arrived paper. Alternately we sang the few hymns we had learned, and our hearts blended in thankfulness for the message that had so transformed and hallowed our home. As Fanny Stenhouse said, It brought peace into our family, which was one of the strongest evidences after all of the purity of its fountain-source.

With the few others who were subsequently baptized, we began to meet together in service of prayer and testimony. Our anxieties became awakened to witness the gifts, the ocular manifestations of that same influence that was enrapturing us by day and by night, and breathing such an appreciable sensation into our souls. We had experienced the fruits; we had not seen the gifts.

On one occasion when we had met for prayer-service in our own house, Elder Shields being with us, we were permitted for the first time to have our anxieties satisfied in relation to these outward demonstrations. A brother whom we all knew, as guileless as Nathaniel of old, pure as a child's prayer, arose and began to address us with altered visage in a language we understood not. His gestures were a step aside from what he was wont to make; his figure was tremulous. To our profound satisfaction he was exercised by a power not his own. When the gift was delivered, having seemingly addressed himself to five or six of us, we knelt and a fervent prayer was offered for the interpretation. You know Paul says, If any speak in an unknown tongue, let him pray that he may interpret. No sooner had we arisen than the same brother (though the interpretation does not always come through the same channel) arose and began to give in English what had formerly come in a language altogether unintelligible. I was the first one spoken to, and at considerable length. I was told that my prayers had been heard; that they had come up before Him for a memorial; that my instrumentality in introducing his work into that part of his vineyard was acceptable to him, and that I was now to be ordained to the priesthood after the order of Aaron, and so on. Another brother was called to the office of elder, another to that of teacher, an unbaptized woman was exhorted to go forth and obey; another woman was reproved for transgression. Following, the reproved sister arose and confessed; the unbaptized woman was baptized on the dismissal of the service; and after due process we brethren who had been called were ordained. We all rejoiced together and marveled at the wonderful reality of the presence of the Creator of the universe and of all that is grand, noble, and sublime, in our own room, and speaking to us and calling us by name.

This event was in the summer of 1893. Several who were present on that glorious occasion have been rocked to pathetic sleep by the hand of death. I hope they are happy. I want to see them again.

A few years ago while in the city of Buffalo, New York, when about to take the train for the Canadian northwest, I related the account of this manifestation, my designation for the ministry, to my cousin and aunt. Some time after my arrival in my field I received a letter from my cousin in which she said words something like this: "Alvin, when you were at our house, relating how you were called to preach, I guess I received what you people call the baptism of the Holy Spirit. A feeling came over me that I never experienced before, and I know nothing else to ascribe it to." When I visited home afterward I called upon her, baptized and confirmed her a member of the only true church.

Had I not been called to an office I would not have been satisfied. I wanted to preach. I thought if I could but have enough authority to stand up and formally present the gospel tidings and induct people into the kingdom of God I would be on my ideal plane. To be exalted to such a station and to go forth animated with the power of that same Spirit that had brought and suggested so many mysteries, so many precious truths to my mind, seemed to be the highest position that mortality could attain to. My sky was cloudless, my horizon was unflawed. Everything was bright and promising. For the past I cared but little; to the things that had been my mind seldom reverted. Like the mythological Hadam who with Heva on his back forgot the bounties of Ceylon in the beauties of the landscape across the span, I saw only the elysian fields of missionary toil of the future. To the scars of the past wounds I was sightless; to the shrieks and groans, cries and screams beneath unfortunate coaches behind I was deaf, in view of the depot ahead. Nothing seemed like sacrifice when such gratifying dividends were to accrue. The angel whispers, the gifts and blessings ahead entirely drowned the wailings arising from the debris and wreckage of the past. My motive was, however, pure, and that was probably the keynote to my promotion to that sacred station. There is nothing wrong in desiring to be called to an office if you want to be called for the right purpose.

Well, my missionary ambition burst forth in the spring of 1904, when, under John H. Lake, who taught by example as well as precept, I was placed under General Conference enrollment for the first time. I had not preached a half dozen public sermons, and Bro. Lake sent me out alone. He knew

I was a studious chatter-box, and I presume he thought I would get along some way. Well, I did. I went into a new place about forty miles from home, saw the trustees, and obtained the use of a school-house. Some relatives lived there, who were, by the way, more receptive to me than to my message, and who afforded me a place to stay. The first meeting I shall never forget. It is an epoch of my life. It proved to be another turning point. The crowd came to hear me, and I was left to my own strength to entertain them. Indeed I do not want to rob God of any credit at any time; but he is certainly welcome to all that he is entitled to on that occasion, for really I felt embarrassed, and that all that was done I did alone. It took me only about twenty minutes or half an hour to run out of soap, and then I had to read part of my time in, which was not altogether inappropriate, as it was the first sermon and introductory in its nature. But what will I say next time? How am I to put in the time when the same crowd and probably many others come again? It would not do to rehash the same matter. I had been able to converse freely and lengthily, but found it different when I came to assume the formality of an orderly address before an audience.

If ever any soul prayed with fervency, I did under those lone circumstances, where there was no one else to pray for me. It was a matter of pump or drown. Casting my mind toward azure sky at night and brazen heavens by day, I sought the Lord to come to my rescue. I said, "If my mission is with thy approval, give me an evidence of the same by giving me liberty in my next effort. If you do not, I will be compelled to either quit the field or wait till I can join some other of thy servants." I meant business and God knew it.

At the next service the attendance greatly increased. The hour arrived. I arose to speak. My most sanguine hopes, I must say, were realized. I have perhaps not had better liberty from that time to this. My mind was clear, my address was vigorous and convincing. I dismissed and retired to my lodging feeling serene and satisfied, and thought if only that same power would be given me on succeeding occasions. It had evidently been to try me and show me my weakness, that my dependence was in the Lord. It was a useful lesson, and one to which my mind has often returned. The power of address which came to me after I had determined all I could do of myself and alone was most conspicuously an evidence of divine intervention in answer to my prayer. From that time to this my ascent has been gradual, though not without a lull. Even yet I am now and then, it seems, left to my own resources on account of our aptitude to self-glorification, but with the accumulation of light and knowledge and experience that has come to me during these years I can do more and my capabilities are greater than when thus left to myself in my earliest ministry.

The next preaching following the one to which I lastly alluded was on Sunday forenoon. Among my audience were two of the trustees whose consent I had obtained to use the building, and also the wife of one, who was a bell-sheep in the neighborhood. She was a former school-teacher, had considerable tact along various lines, and gloried to display her cleverness. My liberty was not equal to what it was on the former occasion. There was less vim in my remarks. Upon dismissal this aspiring lady pounced onto me, evidently calculating that by my rather subdued tone and tardy delivery she would have an easy prey and a golden opportunity to turn me into ridicule and check my rising influence among that people. But no sooner had she begun her arraignment than I was all fire; my familiar texts were in ready command, my thoughts and ideas relevant to the subject poured upon my mind as an avalanche; my readiness of utterance was all that I could wish for. With arguments I excited her and with scriptural citations I bombarded her, till in the relaxation of confusion, dumb-founded and floored—when she had played her last card—she looked into my face with dismay and said, "You are not honest with me, my young man." So that what I was unable to accomplish by my sermon I recovered in a measure in the somewhat exciting dialogue which ensued. But the trustees combined and turned me out. I went into another locality and got another schoolhouse, and they turned me out. And since that time I have been preaching more or less in private houses, also on streets and railroad cars, and have succumbed to the most humiliating circumstances for the sake of getting the truth before the people.

Keep the Sunny Side Out.

Life is like a dark grey cloudlet
Sailing on in Time's bright sky;
It has e'er a sunny lining;
You can find it if you try.

When the trials of life hang heavy,
Put the cares and frets to rout
By applying this old adage:
"Keep the sunny side out."

In the home with little worries,
Or the mart's discordant shout,
You will find it always pays best
To "Keep the sunny side out."

Tangles in your silken life-thread
Soon will smoothly straighten out
If you meet them, smiling bravely,
With "the sunny side out."

MISSIONARIES AND DEVILS IN KOREA.

Curious facts observable in the psychology of missionaries point to the belief that "the formal garment of religion in the East and West must diverge as radically as the psychology of Orient and Occident differ from each other." Facts which seem to support this view are pointed out by David Kelley Lambuth, of Vanderbilt University, in regard to the Korean missionary, who, it is claimed, seems insensibly to adopt, to a certain extent, the native point of view regarding the belief in personal devils. The writer quotes a missionary as saying, "The woman was insane—or, as the Koreans with more accuracy say, 'possest of a devil.'" This speech, Mr. Lambuth thinks, tells "the entire story of the interaction of religious conceptions and modes of thought." Shamanism, the name for the worship of devils, is, according to this writer, the most powerful of the native Korean religions. The insidious effect of this widespread belief upon the mind of the missionary is indicated in the following, quoted from the Independent (August 1):

"From the hour of his birth until the spirit leaves his body," says one missionary, 'the Korean is surrounded and tormented by innumerable evil spirits'; while another declares that the 'only real religion of Korea is the worship of every sort of evil spirit.' 'So full are they of superstition,' comments a third, 'that it takes much time and effort for them to understand the simplest truths.' In such an atmosphere what more natural than that the missionaries, who live in closest intimacy with the people, and isolated from the daily contact with western forms of thought, should imperceptibly be wrought upon not only by the persistent fear and belief of the unchristian populace, but also by the exaggerated tendency toward demonology inbred through ages into those who are now converts to Christianity, who can not out of hand brush off a lifelong habit of mind? An examination of the facts shows that the missionaries in Korea display a sense of the presence of evil spirits markedly in excess of that manifested in other countries where demonology has no such popular hold. The spirit-saturated air has with insidious power waked in the missionaries all the dormant demonology with which the Christian religion was at one time furnished forth."

To exhibit in concrete form the facts about which the writer weaves his interesting speculation, he gives some citations from the letters and reports of American missionaries. "Since the conditions of life and work on the Christian frontier in the Far East," comments the editor of the Independent, "are similar to those of the early days of Christianity, this article throws some light upon New-Testament narratives. In China the same effect of the environment upon the missionary has been observed." The citations, with Mr. Lambuth's comments, are as follows:

"A peculiar sense of the presence of an evil spirit is evidenced thus:

"In a country where the evil spirit is so dominant and so tangible, one comes to a vital sensation of his presence'.

"Certainly I am more conscious of the real presence of the Devil in Korea than in America. Many of the missionaries have been acutely conscious of his palpable presence in the very room with them.'

"The consciousness of a real personal devil is as vivid as the sense of God's presence, though infinitely removed in kind. In Korea you feel him in the atmosphere.'

"More important testimony is offered in the evidences of belief in possession by devils, a belief that has fastened with a peculiar and tenacious grip upon the people of Korea, so that one writer calls the country 'the haunted house among the nations, afflicted with the delirium tremens of paganism.' 'The Christians, too,' says one missionary, 'hold to the possession by evil spirits.' 'Demonic possession in that country,' says another, 'becomes a thing too evident to doubt.' 'Thousands of people,' says a third 'are slaves to evil spirits, in bondage to his Satanic Majesty (sic),' while another describes a woman, 'possest of many devils,' and still another tells of 'miracles performed, the crazy made of sound mind, the devil-possessed set free.'

"At the service was a young man demoniacally possessed, made dumb by his indwelling spirit for three years. After a long prayer and a command to the spirit to depart, it left him and he began to read aloud.'

"Another was 'a man with every symptom of demoniac possession, in whom, upon catching sight of the preacher, the demons began to rave.' Again prayer brought 'a marked change over the demoniac.' He slept that night, the first for many days, and in a vision saw that God had 'driven the evil spirits out of his heart and home. . . .'

"No more complete avowal of belief in demoniac possession than the following could be required:

"In our work in Korea we are continually coming in contact with the most extraordinary cases of apparent demoniac possession and cure, containing all the phenomena that characterized demonized minds in the days of Christ.'

"Another writes pertinently:

"If you had lived in the midst of the native quarter with me and heard at midnight the cries of terror of those appealing to the evil spirits for help or being tortured by them, veritable possessions by devils would then seem no impossible thing to you.'

"There is little reason to doubt that this diagnosis of the case is correct, for under circumstances such as these it would indeed be the unusual man that went his way unmoved."—The Literary Digest, August 17, 1907.

Are We Thinking?

"And I heard, but I understood not: then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things? And he said, Go thy way, Daniel: for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end. Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand."—Daniel 12: 8-11.

In previously writing upon this declaration of Daniel, "The wise shall understand," we have mentioned the fact of having been told by an able Hebrew scholar (Mr. Lederer, a Hebrew Christian) that the word translated wise should have been translated observing. If this be true, and we have no just reason for doubting that it is—and indeed from the fact of having been warned that not many wise are to be chosen, we find ground for believing that Mr. Lederer was right. Reading it then, "but the observing ones shall understand," does it not become to us a matter of the most vital importance that we place ourselves in a position to observe the events transpiring in the world, and, not only this, but having observed, that we train ourselves by proper study and the discipline which study gives the mind to wisely collate and adjust that which we have observed, that we fail not to see and understand the stately stepplings of our God among the nations and peoples of the earth? The commandment to "obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all of this for the salvation of Zion," must include the history of that which is now transpiring as well as the history of that which has been. Again the Lord commands: "Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study and also by faith." But as this has been fully presented to you in the article of Bro. F. M. Smith we purpose to close this series by referring to a few observations we have taken in the vast field of that which is now being done in the world for the temporal salvation of mankind.

We can not separate the two (the temporal and the spiritual) and have a perfect salvation. No proof further than that which God has given in his law to the church is necessary to establish this fact. But to-day there are poor in the church as well as in the world. And poor there will be until such time as the talent possessed by one is used for the advancement of all. Until the children of our ministry are regarded as the wards of the church and furnished with every advantage the church can give to fit and equip them for the battle of life.

The redemption of Zion, like the salvation of the individual, is also to be temporal as well as spiritual, and to our mind when Graceland adopted her new role—when she stepped into the arena of manual training—she did it for the redemption of Zion, and in so doing she assumed her true position as a handmaiden of the church to aid, and that too, mightily, in bringing to pass that which the Lord has decreed.

In the recent meeting of the National Association of Teachers, at Los Angeles, California, one of the principal subjects discussed and most earnestly advocated was the absolute need of manual training in our public schools. Throughout the civilized world, to-day, the subject is demanding more and more of the attention both of governments and people. In a recent address at the State Agricultural College, at Lansing, Michigan, President Roosevelt had this to say: "We have been fond, as a nation, of speaking of the dignity of labor, meaning thereby manual labor. Personally, I do not think that we begin to understand what a high place manual labor should take; and it never can take this high place unless it offers scope for the best type of man.

"We have tended to regard education as a matter of the head only, and the result is that a great many of our people, themselves the sons of men who worked with their hands, seem to think that they rise in the world if they get into a position where they do no hard manual work whatever; where their hands will grow soft and their working-clothes will be kept clean.

"Such a conception is both false and mischievous. There are, of course, kinds of labor where the work must be purely mental, and there are other kinds of labor where under existing conditions very little demand indeed is made upon the mind, though I am glad to say that I think the proportion of men engaged in this kind of work is diminishing. But in any healthy community, in any community with the great solid qualities which alone make a really great nation, the bulk of the people should do work which makes demands upon both the body and the mind. Progress can not permanently consist in the abandonment of physical labor, but in the development of physical labor so that it shall represent more and more the work of the trained mind in the trained body. . . .

"What we have to fear, especially when we contend for our share of the world's markets, is the competition of the highly skilled working man of the countries of greatest industrial efficiency."

In commenting upon this, the editor of the Outlook has this to say: "It is quite true that a boy must be trained to think well before he can act well. But thinking which is not followed by some form of definite action becomes merely a form of amusement. Philosophical speculation, literary analysis, art criticism, are important, but they are a means to, not an end of, education. Those teachers who are endeavoring to carry on, in conjunction with that book-learning which Matthew Arnold calls knowing the best that has been said and thought in the world, development of skill in some sort of handicraft, are exerting an educational influence in the country that is greatly needed."

And may we not add that it is greatly needed for the establishment, the salvation of Zion? And more, may we not rejoice that Graceland is at last coming into her own; that she is bidding fair to fulfill the dreams cherished of her by those whose hearts went out in longing for this work before ever she had an existence—longing to see the cause of God move forward and his people become all that he would have them to be. Education and industry are the bodyguards of religion, even as the glory of God is intelligence, or light and truth. Christianity has made no provision whatever for the slothful man or the idler, and this applies to the mind as well as to the body; and when the Master himself has said of the acquirement of knowledge, "And all this for the salvation of Zion," why should not Graceland be expected to become an important factor in that salvation, provided always that the church is true to the child she has brought forth? As a people, we are not wealthy, neither are we strong in numbers; but we lack only unity to be mighty in word and deed; for if we obey the law God has given, there is nothing on earth neither in hell nor in heaven which can prevent our attaining to all which the Lord has promised. "The Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, but the way of the ungodly shall perish."

Letter Department

HAWKINS, Wisconsin, August 2, 1907.

Dear Herald: I have never written a letter for your dear columns before; but often felt a desire, and this morning I feel impressed to.

My husband and I came from Clitherall, Minnesota, here, three months ago, and are now isolated from church privileges, so we enjoy reading the good things we find in the church papers. Before now I have always lived where there was a branch of the church, and enjoyed going to Sabbath-school and church; but even though isolated we oftentimes feel that sweet spirit burning in our hearts that makes us feel that God is near, and watching over us.

We have joined the Religio and Sunday-school home class and even though we are alone in the work here, we are trying to live faithful, and we know we have received many blessings from our Father in heaven, who knows best what his weak children need.

The people around here, with whom we have talked, have never heard of Latter Day Saints, and we are happy to tell them the gospel story when we have the privilege.

I have been a member of the church since 1901, and feel there is a great need of Saints living more faithful every day; for I believe, and have been shown, that perilous times are coming, and that we must be humble and prayerful, and have much faith in God in order to escape.

If we are strong in the faith, we will have no fear when others who have never embraced the gospel, and even those who have and are careless, will be sore afraid.

There is work for all, and a great need of it too; not only to work out our own salvation, but to be a help to others.

Should there be any elders living near here, or passing through, we would be very glad to have them stop and see us.

Perhaps it would be well to relate a dream I have had. It seemed that the sky was blackened with clouds, and that there was an earthquake coming and several of the Saints whom I know, and also some outsiders, gathered together in a high building, and those who had been living faithful seemed to be at perfect ease, while others whom I have known had gotten careless in the work were crying to God for protection; and we were very anxious about some who were not of the faith, and we did not know where they were. As we watched the earthquake coming, we saw it was coming toward us, and it seemed no one could say one word until I was able to whisper and say, "We must exercise faith in God," and so I prayed, and while I was praying I awoke. So I feel the need of living faithful.

"Let us anchor our barks in the center,
And be safe from the rocks on the shore."

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,
Your sister in bonds of love,
IRENE ROTZIEN.

SOUTH MCALESTER, Indian Territory, August 31, 1907.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the church twelve years. My wife and I were baptized by Elder James Moler in 1895, at Beechford, Ohio. We moved to Pennsylvania, where we tried to let our light shine among the people of Fayette City. We started a prayer-meeting, and later sent for an elder. Bro. D. L. Shinn came and was given a good hearing, then Bro. G. T. Griffiths came and preached some powerful sermons, and many began to ask the difference between us and the Utah people. Bro. Griffiths sent Bro. Devore and D. L. Shinn back, and the result was thirteen baptisms; then Bro. Etzenhouser came up and organized a branch. I was ordained priest, and filled the office to the best of my ability. Bro. Devore came back and eleven more were added to our number. We were a faithful little band of Saints, and the Lord worked with us in power. Sr. Maloy took violently ill, and I called to see her, when I was asked where our elders were, by Sr. Fields, eldest daughter of Sr. Maloy.

I went after the elders, and Brn. Perrie and Bighton came. They say no life was in her, and she testifies she was in paradise, and saw things which she could not tell. Sr. Fields told me she was almost an infidel till she saw her mother restored to health. Bro. Perrie and I held meetings for a week, and, on the Sunday following, I baptized eight, including Sr. Maloy's three daughters.

After being ordained elder, I labored wherever I could get a place to preach in. I then moved back to Ohio, expecting to convert all of the neighborhood; but, alas, not a soul accepted the work. I spent time and money, hired halls, and preached on the street. None would hear. I was then working for Johnson Coal Company, and preached when not working, and paid tithes of all we had, according to the law.

We then moved to a place, of which I had said in time past that I would never move my family there. I had preached there many times. Alas, I found myself in the place in which I had said I never would live. I no sooner went to work than I put up notice there would be preaching, commenced meetings, and wrote for an elder. Brn. James Jeffries and V. M. Goodrich came and preached about five weeks, with the result that three noble souls were brought into the kingdom. Bro. Devore then came and baptized one.

After this sickness entered our family. My wife was taken sick and lingered four months. I was holding a series of meetings, had the appointment out, when I was stricken with appendicitis; had to go to the hospital, and was operated on. No sooner had I returned home than my wife took to her bed, and in two months passed away. You who saw the obituary notice in the HERALD know how the angel or the Lord himself appeared to her, telling her she could come home now. The family doctor said she could not live two hours. However, she lived ten days, bearing testimony to all who would come in that this was the work of God. Her last work was to convert Bro. J. C. Roger to the faith, and the writer baptized him.

I was so broken up I announced to the people that I was going to sell off all I had and go west. Two days before I left I baptized eight noble souls, who I hope will be faithful. I see Bro. Long has gone in there, baptized some, and organized a branch.

I came to Indian Territory and commenced work four miles from Wilburton, commenced preaching, had a good start, but two or three colored people came out, one of them a brother and a good man, and sixteen went out at once, and I could not get a hearing any more. I tried the second time to no avail, then left. I took charge of a new mine near Adamson. I started meetings with fair interest, when I was stricken with a twisted intestine, was taken to the hospital, eighteen inches of it, which had died, removed, gangreen having already set in. In twenty-two days I was up, and now I am at my brother's, and walk two miles a day, and feel stronger all the time. I will be able to go home Thursday, if the Lord will. I do not feel any bad effect from the nature of the operation, and the doctor says I never will. I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints, that I may yet do some good in the world for the Master.

Your brother,

G. W. HULL.

Roosevelt, North Dakota, August 24, 1907.

Dear Herald: It is not often we see any letter from North Dakota in your pages. I am one of the isolated ones, having lived here eleven years. Have had to stand a good deal of opposition; but by the help of God I am now stronger in the latter-day work, which I can testify is of God. It is the power of God unto salvation. Elders Sparling, Houghton, and Wildermuth have done a lot of preaching here. The fruit has begun to ripen. My neighbor was baptized at the reunion, July 14. His wife and another sister were baptized by Bro. J. E. Wildermuth last Sunday, making four Saints at this place. I hope to see the day when my wife will obey the gospel; and pray that all the honest in heart will be brought into the fold.

Satan is on the warpath. He sent one of his servants, who claims to be a minister, to write an untruthful statement on the blackboard of the schoolhouse, while Bro. Wildermuth was holding services here, which gave Bro. Wildermuth a chance to show our position in regard to the Book of Mormon, and of Joseph's calling. I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints that I may live more faithfully and that I may never shrink from duty, and that I may be able to bring my family up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Your brother in Christ,

M. RASMUSSEN.

Woodbine, Iowa, August 23, 1907.

Dear Herald: Having returned home I resume the pleasurable task of narrating an account of my visit to Northwest Canada. It is a busy time with the farmers. Many are breaking up new ground, or plowing up their summer fallow ground, so that it is difficult to get conveyance from place to place, or to get audiences during the week, so I content myself, (July 13) with visiting with Mr. Van Eaton, wife and son. The season has been backward here, and growing crops are two weeks behind the usual seasons; but the wonderful resources of nature are bringing them out so that there is great hope of a fair crop of wheat and other cereals adapted to this climate. Potatoes and other vegetables are doing well for the season, and, unless early frosts set in, there will be no scarcity.

On the 14th of July my grandson, C. S. Van Eaton, took his mother and myself about fourteen miles to Bro. Gendrens, where five members of the church assembled, and one or two strangers, making an audience of nine or ten besides the preacher. My daughter presided at the organ, a Bro. Hovey led in very earnest and intelligent prayer, and I broke the bread of life to them, which, judging from their pleasant faces, they highly appreciated. They seemed hungry for that spiritual food provided in the gospel. We returned home, making a journey of about twenty-eight miles.

On Saturday, July 20, my grandson took his mother and myself to the "Iowa Branch," which is over Saskatchewan River, and about twenty-four miles distant. The branch is composed of members from Harrison County, Iowa, and is presided over by Elder John Beckman, formerly president of the Union Grove Branch, Iowa. Here are about twenty-five members of the church, and to say that the Saints were pleased to have us visit them is putting it mildly; but the pleasure was mutual, for I had enjoyed many pleasant seasons with them in their old home branches in the years past, and it was good to meet them in that land. On this night we were the guests of Bro. and Sr. Peterson, formerly of Pisgah, Iowa. Bro. Peterson had been baptized by Bro. A. Knisley since going there. His wife was already a member. We were treated very kindly. Bro. Ransome Streeter, formerly of Raglan, was staying with them. On the next day we went about seven miles further to the place of meeting. Teacher James Diggle was leading the meeting, Bro. Beckman was expected to preach, but seeing the writer there he requested me to occupy which I did to the best of my ability. Some twenty-five or thirty people were present, and I believe they enjoyed the sermon better than the speaker did. At night I went to the same schoolhouse to hear an Episcopalian preacher explaining the ritual of the Church of England. He even gave the reason why they always built their churches facing the east. It may have been food to others of his audience, but to me it was chaff; but he collected his fee, and possibly went on his way rejoicing. On the next evening I preached again, endeavoring to answer the momentous question, "What must I do to be saved?" A Presbyterian minister was present, but offered no objections. On the following evening I also preached on salvation by grace, showing it was indeed by the favor of God that the terms of salvation were held out to man; but we must give evidence of our willingness to accept the gift by our obedience to his terms. I hope good was done. During my stay in that neighborhood I visited the Saints, whom I am pleased to report seemed to be strong in the faith, and trying to let their light shine in their lives. They were comfortably situated temporarily, which was also a pleasure to know. A prayer-meeting was appointed for the 24th at the home of Bro. John Beckman, but a heavy storm prevented the Saints attending. Bro. Beckman desired me to administer to him in my office as patriarch, which I did, and I have reason to think God was with us.

On the 25th, I closed my eighty-first year by riding by team twenty-four miles to my son-in-law and daughter's home, Bro. Beckman taking me as far as Saskatoon, and he and Bro. Pettit kindly stayed with me till evening, when Mr. Van Eaton and wife met me and took me to their pleasant home where I could rest from my journey. Copious rains made the hearts of the farmers glad, and all nature partook of the gladness.

On the 26th, Sr. Kelley, aged eighty-one, came for me to administer to her, which I did. She has been in the church some twenty years, and her faith in God is strong, it being an intelligent faith.

Word was sent to Bro. Portious, who with his wife are the only ones living in Saskatoon, to hire a hall for two nights (July 30 and 31) as Bro. R. C. Evans would be in Saskatoon to lecture those nights, also the same word was sent to the branches to that effect. The presidents of the branches promptly authorized Bro. Portious to secure the hall; but he could secure one only for one night; but arrangements were made for the first night in the home of Mr. Van Eaton, and they drove out to Saskatoon seven miles to meet Bro. Evans, and their neighbors gathered in only to be disappointed, and your humble servant had to stand in his stead. As no word to the contrary had been received, it was confidently expected that he would be at Saskatoon on the 31st. We went out that night, and the Saints from the two branches were on hand, though they had come from different directions from sixteen to twenty-five miles, but no President Evans. We waited till the hour of meeting. I had no books, had expected a "feast of fat things." Perhaps you may judge of the great disappointment of these wearied Saints who had come so far, and then had to listen to one who without preparation had again to stand in his place. The hall was nearly full. Bro. Beckman opened the meeting by prayer, and trusting in him who had stood by me through my ministerial life, I delivered the angel's message to the best of my ability. The reverend whom Bro. Knisley had debated with was present, listened very attentively, and at the close he quietly wended his way out without any sign of approval or disapproval. The Saints promptly paid for the hall, and returned to their homes after ten o'clock at night. I do not know who was to blame for the disappointment.

On the 28th, Mr. Van Eaton took me and his wife to Bro. Hovey's in the same neighborhood where I preached once before, and I preached to them. Bro. Portious being present, led the meeting. I believe he holds the Aaronic priesthood, and seems an earnest, faithful man. I think there are five Saints there, the fruits of Knisley's labors.

August 4 I preached in the Van Eaton home on the second advent of Christ. On the 11th I ministered in the patriarchal office to Bro. and Sr. Gendren. This was the last of my ministrations in Canada. I returned home on the 14th, after a three days' ride; and although I enjoyed my visit with my loved ones, I was glad to be home again; yet even this was marred by the fact that she who used to greet me with a smile and a kiss was for ever absent. But I bow to the divine will.

Hoping this letter is not too tedious to find a place in the HERALD, permit me to say in conclusion, I was treated kindly by all, and may God bless all his people there.

CHARLES DERRY.

CANON CITY, Colorado, August 2, 1907.

Dear Herald: I think it is each reader's duty to contribute an occasional letter. I have been neglectful, for this is my first. I became acquainted with the "Letter Department" in the lonely wilds of New Mexico, from which I received much help. Indeed, each writer seemed like a personal friend. None know but those in isolation, how much the weekly contributions are looked for.

We sold our home several years ago to go up to Zion. My husband's poor health made many delays. Though upon the eve of departure, we have not yet reached our destination. We journeyed over the Rocky Mountains by wagon thus far. Colorado in autumn is a picture by an unseen artist. I never knew the word beautiful until I saw those painted valleys, gulches, hills, and mountains.

The blue jay in his flight whistled his shrill good-bye. The golden-rod waved his yellow plume. The fairy lakes sparkled in the clear sunshine. As we journeyed along, I beheld a stream of pure water gushing from a gray rock. Quenching my thirst, I thought of Moses when he smote the rock, and of Christ in prayer upon the mountain. I felt his presence as these words came to me.

Happy is he whose heart's full of cheer,
 Happy is he who sees paradise here,
 Happy because the dear Savior is near.
 Near as he was when the water turned red
 And the blessings of Jesus showered down on each head.
 When he walked and talked with his chosen on earth,
 He told, as all wondered, about the new birth,
 When each heart is made pure and sins are forgiven,
 And we are assured of the glories of heaven.
 All fear of the future is gone, and for ever
 We love him, and serve him; and leave him, no, never.

Elder C. Scott made us a short visit, bringing much peace to our household. I have been benefited through his administration.

Dear brothers and sisters, it is my greatest desire to understand the scripture, and to be guided by God's own hand. Requesting the prayers of all true Saints for my husband's improvement in health, I am,

Yours in His name,

MRS. E. N. BEACH.

AKRON, Iowa, August 26, 1907.

Dear Herald: I have been a reader of your pages for nearly thirty-eight years, and I can not do without you. The Ensign and HERALD are all the preaching I have. I am still very poorly in health, but am trying to hold on to the truth, which promises salvation. I realize that I come far short of the glory of God; for I have to humble myself so often before him and ask him to forgive my very many imperfections, that it seems I would weary him. Yet there is no other place to go. He has the words of eternal life. So let us not try to stand alone, while we can do all things through Christ, who strengthens us. I want to suggest a thought to the sisters in the church, who are able to earn a dollar, to send it to the Bishop to apply on or for the sanitarium fund. I saw an effort of this kind, and it was a success in getting many dollars, and it was very interesting to learn the sacrifices many made to earn their dollars. It will take quite a sum of money to complete the sanitarium, and then it is to be furnished before it can be occupied. I hope each sister will begin to see how she can earn her dollar. Who will be first? It is the small things that count with the Master. I still ask your prayers in my behalf, that if it be the Lord's will I may be healed.

Your sister in the faith,

M. A. CHRISTY.

NEWARK, South Dakota, September 4, 1907.

Editors Herald: Sr. C. W. Lull, of Wanbay, is one of the isolated ones. She wrote me to come and visit her, and I did so, and she had secured a hall for me at a cost of three dollars. Two hours and forty-five minutes after the manuscript of the (inclosed) bill was in the hands of the printer it was printed, and distributed (200) in a town of possibly five hundred. I was greeted by an audience of nearly fifty, some of them personal friends of Sr. Lull, and a preacher also. I was blessed in talking for more than an hour on the origin, development, breakup, scattering, and reorganizing of the church. Two ladies afterward told me that they would never confound us any more with the people in Utah.

I have always been successful in getting an audience for that lecture, though I do not always advertise the same way. Sr. Lull had me meet one evening at her home with some of her friends, and we spent the evening talking about the Book of Mormon. Our sister was cheered and encouraged, and some friends made. It was necessary to leave on account of expense.

Your brother,

EDWARD RANNIE.

BOLIVAR, Missouri, September 4, 1907.

Dear Herald: We are isolated from church privileges, so indeed you are a welcome visitor. We have lived here nearly two years, and know of no Saints living near. If any of the ministry pass through this country, we would be glad to have them stop with us.

There have been several religious revivals in this vicinity lately. We (my husband and I) attend the revival services of the Christian Church, and because we were attentive listeners, I suppose, they thought we were almost persuaded. The pastor came out and had a long talk with me on the fallacies of our doctrine. In his argument he said, The word of those who had formerly been Saints, but who in later years left the church, could not be used as evidence of the truthfulness of our claims. I told him that Peter denied that he even knew Christ, so I suppose that anything that he said prior to that time was also false. His principal theme was, Joseph Smith as a prophet. He said our church would not debate that subject. I told him that I had never heard it debated, but thought he was mistaken. He closed by inviting us to join them. Said we need not change our belief, but come in and work with them, as we had no church home. I told him I was satisfied to let my membership remain where it was, for according to his own argument, if I joined his church the very act would tell the world that I had recanted and denounced my former faith as wrong.

Hope if there are any Saints living near, they may see this, that we may meet and rejoice together in this latter-day gospel.

Your sister,

MRS. EVA TUCKER.

MONTROSE, Iowa, August 25, 1907.

Editors Herald: Why should not Saints make their own baking powder? Not long since I noticed an article in the HERALD concerning baking powder. I have always said that the Royal or Price Baking Powder are the best on the market; but what is the use of Saints paying fifty cents per pound for baking powder, when they can make it for less? How many times we see fine-looking biscuits set before us, and fine-looking cakes, which can not be beat by anybody for quality and fineness. But there is a bitter, strong taste about them, which sometimes is placed to the credit of the butter, but is caused by some cheap baking powder. When trying to get something for nothing, we get the worst of it.

During my experience, as a baker, I find the best way is to make my own baking powder; but I can not make it for nothing. I buy the best cream of tartar at about thirty-five to thirty-eight cents per pound; and soda in bulk at five cents, or even at ten. To make baking powder, use four tablespoonfuls of cream tartar, two of soda, and one of flour, and sift them together seven or eight times, and you will have no strong taste. Make it as you use it, if you choose.

J. M. McDONALD.

CHEROKEE, Oklahoma, September 1, 1907.

Dear Herald: I have not lost faith in this latter-day work, though I get very careless and indifferent at times. We are entirely isolated from the church here, and we sorely miss association with the Saints. Our neighbors are mostly sociable and kind, and many of them very religious; but seem to understand very little about the gospel plan. Bro. Moler was here last fall and preached for us several times, but did not seem to arouse much interest. If any of the elders should be in this vicinity, we would like to have them call on us, and we will do what we can to get them a hearing.

We have had a very dry, hot summer here; but the crops are mostly looking good. The wheat was nearly a failure in some places on account of the green-bugs. Hoping to hear from some of the ministry in this part of the country, I am,

Your brother,

G. L. SWEET.

EUNICE, Louisiana, August 20, 1907.

Dear Herald: I am isolated from any church privileges. I have not heard a sermon in six years. Do not know of any Saints near us. Most of the people here are Catholics. They drink and gamble; but they are good Catholics so long as they go to church every Sunday, and confess, and pay the priest. I ask the Saints all to pray for me, that I may serve God aright. I hope I may be able soon to locate in some good place where I can go to church every Sunday. I will confess that I have not lived as I should; but I intend to do better in the future.

W. A. HELMS.

NEW ALBANY, Indiana, September 2, 1907.

Dear Herald: We organized a nice Sunday-school at New Albany last night. We have about fifteen to eighteen Saints here, and things will be on the move here from now on. We have church every Sunday night. Bro. Sawley, our district president, was with us over Sunday, and we enjoyed a pleasant time together. We hope to have a branch organized here soon. What we need in the church, is Saints who will work. There is no room for idlers anywhere. We ask the prayers of God's people in our new venture. JOHN ZAHND.

Ohio Reunion.

The Ohio District reunion association, convened at the Electric Park, August 24, 1907, at 5 p. m., and organized by choosing U. W. Greene to preside and S. J. Jeffers associate; J. L. Goodrich, secretary-treasurer, and H. E. Moler, assistant; H. E. Moler, chorister, and chief of press committee; Rothbe Kirkendall, census-taker and postmaster. The order of exercises was left in charge of the presiding officers. The speakers during the nine days of the reunion, were U. W. Greene, A. B. Kirkendall, Rees Jenkins, H. E. Moler, L. R. Devore, Thomas Mathews, and C. H. Rich. Meals were served at fifteen cents each. The Sunday-school association was in charge of Rothbe Kirkendall, and proved an interesting and instructive feature of the reunion.

An enjoyable time was had; one of the best reunions of the district. The same board of officers was continued for the year 1908, viz.: S. J. Jeffers, president, Radcliff, Ohio; J. L. Goodrich, secretary-treasurer, Wellston, Ohio, Box 440; A. B. Kirkendall, associate president, Creola, Ohio; G. Paul, Columbus, Ohio; and G. E. Williams, Ironton, Ohio, directors at large.

The usual resolutions of thanks were voted, and the ministry sustained by vote. The time and place of the next conference and reunion were left in the hands of the officers of the respective bodies.

J. L. GOODRICH, Secretary-Treasurer.

Southern California Reunion.

Editor Saints' Herald: Our reunion culminated in a separation, though all were loath to submit to the inevitable. The coming of Brn. Evans, Smith, and Sheehy was propitious. Preaching turned over to them by unanimous consent. They filled the demands. We could not have selected three men with a more marked difference in temperament and disposition anywhere in the church. Everybody satisfied over results. Each of the brethren came in for their meed of praise. We have but one R. C. Evans in the church. This may be equally said of every other man of striking personality and individuality. Bro. Fred A. lined up well, some thinking him the best preacher of the three. Frank's soothing voice and metropolitan style was equally appreciated. Largest attendance we have ever had at a reunion. Spirituality did not come up to meeting of last year. Prayer-service largely destroyed by noise from Huntington four-track electric. The district conference was uneventful; all former officers sustained. Next reunion will in all probability be held at the beach, the dust this year making camping very disagreeable. Nine baptisms in all. The brethren left for Irvington in good spirits. Sr. Evans in her quiet, unassuming way won the respect and love of all. T. W. WILLIAMS, 1314 East Adams Street, LOS ANGELES, California.

A Vision.

A few mornings ago I had been lying awake for some time meditating, as I usually do while waiting for the rest to get up, but as I was tired staying in bed I thought I would get up. So I arose, and it being a little chilly, I concluded I would lie down again and wait for a fire. As I lay my head back on the pillow I immediately went into the following vision: I saw a large building, and grouped in front of it, some sitting and some standing, I saw a large number of children of different sizes and ages. Instantly it flashed through my mind that I was gazing upon the orphan's home. I can not tell one thing about the structure of the building, because my eyes were riveted upon the faces of those children, dear, little, pitiful faces,—I shall never forget their looks as long as I live, so pale and haggard. As I stood gazing, this appeal rang in my ears, as though some one had spoken: "Help us!" And it rose even to a wail: "Help us!" Of course I was greatly moved at the picture before me, and the friendless woe-begone look of the children, so I said to a person standing by me: "Why do these children look so pale and haggard? Is it because they are sorrowing for their parents?" The reply was, "No, they are not old enough for that sorrow to sink so deeply into their lives, only as they are by the loss of their parents thrown upon a merciless world; and it is heavy work and privation that give the expression to their faces you now see."

The vision vanished, and I turned and gazed at my own sleeping treasures, with the stamp of peace on their faces; and I thanked God that my life had been spared to them. But my heart was stirred to its very depths at the thought of the dear, little outcasts, just as precious in God's sight as those who are fondled by loving parents. My duty is made plain. Those children are now all over our bright land, toiling and struggling. They have cried to me for help, and, God helping me, I will do all in my power to help them. And would to God that I could put that picture so plainly and so forcibly before the eyes of every father and mother in this land that they might see it as I do, and hearken to the appeal of orphan children.

If we can not help very much financially, let us appeal to our Father in heaven to open the hearts of those who are able to give that they may see the great need for a home to be provided for our suffering and helpless little ones. For they are ours! Are we not all members of the one body or family of God?

Your sister in the gospel,

LAMONI, Iowa.

ADDIE M. STOWELL.

MORRISON, Oklahoma, September 9, 1907.

Editors Herald: As good news always tends to encourage, I pen a brief detail of recent activities in this part of the field. Our Ripley reunion was successful as a means of encouragement to the Saints, and sounding the gospel trumpet to many others. Four precious souls were led down into the river and baptized by Elder Hubert Case, and are risen to walk in newness of life along the "old, old path." Three others followed soon, near Stillwater, Elder William Aylor officiating. He with the writer came to this place to renew the effort begun under the personal supervision of Apostle I. N. White three weeks before. The friction between us and the several denominational leaders at the beginning of these meetings, the HERALD readers have, as written recently by Bro. White. One item I wish to mention here, that of a vision of the night which was given to him, wherein a messenger stood by him and gave him to understand that while there were many here that were unfit for the Master's use in his kingdom, represented by gnarled, blighted fruit, yet there were a few who were fit for use to the Lord as represented by plump and wholesome fruit, and that those honest in heart would be gathered out if we made faithful effort. This presentation Bro. White boldly told to a large and unbelieving audience, and the good news part of this letter is that the promise of the Lord in that spiritual manifestation has been literally fulfilled, in that, as a harvest of the efforts continued here by Bro. Aylor and myself, eight souls were born again on Sunday last, and three more the next day, and the end is not yet we believe, making eighteen within the last three weeks in this vicinity.

The Saints at and near Morrison have supported the effort nobly. But the thrilling fire of God's Holy Spirit fills our hearts with joy when we see that our efforts have not been in vain; and the Saints will all understand what the newly converted brother (Bro. Orrel Carter) meant, when, in trying to explain the fullness of joy which had come to him, he said, while the Spirit's magic lighted his face, "Bro. Yates, I am glad of the step which I have taken, and to tell you the truth I just feel good all over." Saints will understand what that means; and that brother is not the only one who feels good all over in this grand gospel work, by any means. Love to all, and may peace and good will abound.

Ever yours,

JAMES E. YATES.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of South Dakota (not included in the Black Hills and Central Nebraska Districts); Greeting: the time has now come when you can count over the blessing of the present year; in the home, in the place of business, the mechanic at his bench, and the farmer in his field, all have partaken of the bounties of a loving Father bestowed with a lavish hand; and with kindness he has enriched you in temporal and spiritual blessing.

What will you do in return for what he has done for you? What would you think of your own children, if they were unappreciative of what you did for them? In Proverbs 3:9 it says: "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the FIRSTFRUITS of all thine increase." In this the Lord is spoken of as the one to be honored FIRST, not last, which we are very apt to do if we are not thoughtful of the things of God. Let us not forget the one that has so richly blessed us, and "our barns will be filled with plenty." "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—Malachi 3:10.

The sanitarium is a work of special command that is worthy of your earnest consideration, to which you can well afford to give freely. You may some day find rest and cure to a weary and wasted body within its hallowed walls.

One other matter of importance we wish to call your attention to. It is the wish of the missionaries to make a special effort of one month or more in Brookings in October, and we wish to ask your aid in this matter. A small amount from each one will supply the needs for a hall and special advertising. The Saints that are there always render us loyal support, but the present effort is beyond their ability.

It is necessary and important that we make an effort in other places than the country schoolhouse, and the missionaries believe this a good place for such a trial. Please give all these matters your earnest consideration, and address and remit in the most convenient way.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
EDWARD RANNIE, Bishop's Agent.

To the Saints of the Central Nebraska District: I take this method of reminding you that many of you have failed to remember the Bishop's agent with your tithes and offerings and that, therefore, the agent is unable to meet the demands made upon him.

Every individual member of the church should have his or her name on the church books as keepers of the law of tithes, so that the language of Malachi "ye have robbed me [God]" may not be fulfilled in us. Send by post-office money order, or bank draft, or registered mail and you will get your receipt in due time. My address is Inman, Nebraska. Trusting that there may be a generous and speedy response to this reminder, I remain,

Your brother in gospel bonds,
LEVI GAMET.

Pastoral.

To the Members of Kirtland District; Greeting: This is about the first time since our district conference I have had time to say a word to encourage us to diligence. I received ten dollars Saturday last, as tithing, from a non-member; but he evidently is near the kingdom. Well, if non-members will pay tithing, what does it suggest to our members? Draw your own conclusions; but remember we are under covenant obligations as members of the church. This ten dollars will go to Bishop Miller, of Cleveland, who will send receipt to the donor. Do not others want receipts? Bro. Miller will furnish you receipts with pleasure. Try him, once.

And now to the branch presidents: Please report to me promptly on or before October 1, as our missionary wants me to report on time. Please report as best you can until we get some blanks; then we will mail blanks to each branch president. Our new HERALD Office plant will soon be doing its work again. We are anxiously waiting. Please, brethren, report. I have never yet scolded you, but have been very patient. Will you respond, and oblige your humble servant? Address reports to home address: R. F. D. 1, Ray, Indiana. G. A. Smith.

Release of Missionaries.

To Whom It May Concern: Notice is hereby given that the following brethren have been released from General Conference appointment, because of circumstances over which they have no control, making it impractical for them to continue in the field: John H. Holmes, of the Northern California District; Gomer Reese, of Montana; J. D. Curtis, from Colorado.

Very respectfully,
F. M. SHEEHY,
F. A. SMITH,
Ministers in Charge of the Western Mission.
R. C. EVANS,
For the Presidency.

IRVINGTON, California, September 3, 1907.

Change of Missionary.

Elder W. T. Bozarth, in local charge of missionary work in Independence Stake, has been disabled, from ill health, and Elder John Kaler is hereby appointed to succeed him.

LAMONI, Iowa, September 17, 1907.
HEMAN C. SMITH,
WM. H. KELLEY.

A Swindler.—Beware.

This is to notify the Saints and the public generally that a person claiming to be John Mitchell, of the Los Angeles Branch, has been in this city and has proved himself a liar and a swindler. He claimed to be the postmaster here that he was a member of the Unitarian Church of Los Angeles, California, and obtained money from several under false pretense. His wife, or one whom he claimed was his wife, was with him here, a poor, sickly woman. He claimed that he lost all in the San Francisco earthquake. He is using the names of T. W. Williams of Los Angeles, and E. F. Shupe of Denver to gain favor with Saints.

Warningly,
J. F. MINTUN.

Conference Notices.

Saints of Chatham District will meet in conference capacity at Wabash, October 12 and 13, 1907. Branches should see that their reports are in, and that they are fully represented, as important business may come up for consideration. Anthony P. Hewitt, secretary, Box 573, Chatham, Ontario.

Central Illinois District conference convenes at Pana, Illinois, the 5th and 6th of October, 1907. Sunday-school and Religio convention the 4th. All brothers and sisters invited to attend. Charles C. Simpson, secretary.

Central California District conference convenes at San Jose, California, October 4 to 6, 1907. Branches are requested to send reports and delegates. Mrs. M. E. Lawn, secretary.

The Massachusetts District conference will convene at Somerville, Massachusetts, Saturday and Sunday, October 12 and 13, 1907, at 2.30 p. m. Local secretaries are earnestly requested to prepare and send statistical reports of their branches at least two weeks before conference. We would like all secretaries to respond, as neglect to do so deprives your branch of proper representation, and also hinders the district secretary from making a complete report to the General Church Secretary. U. W. Greene and probably G. T. Griffiths, missionaries in charge, are expected to be with us. Address all reports to W. A. Sinclair, 166 Pearl Street, Somerville, Massachusetts.

Kewanee District conference will convene on September 28 at Rock Island, Illinois. Conference will be held in a hall opposite the Harper House. Those coming by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy leave train at the Twentieth Street depot. All trains coming into Rock Island will be met by a committee, as well as all trains coming to Davenport. You will do the committee a favor to send a card to J. W. Davis, 4215 Eighth Avenue, Rock Island, Illinois. Branch secretaries please send statistical reports to Mrs. Mary Gillin, at 1410 North Elizabeth Street, Peoria, Illinois by the 26th of September. In bonds, O. H. Bailey, president.

Nodaway District conference will convene with Sweet Home Branch, near Ravenwood, Missouri, October 19 and 20. Send all communications to the undersigned at Bolckow, Missouri, or to Elder A. E. McCord, Clyde, Missouri. Let all make an effort to be there. W. B. Torrance, secretary.

Nauvoo district conference will convene at Fort Madison, Iowa, October 5 and 6. Let all branch officers see that the reports of their branches are sent to the district clerk in ample time for correction, if such need be, before conference convenes. M. H. Siegfried, clerk.

Convention Notices.

Far West District Sunday-school convention will convene at Kerr, Missouri, (or Far West) Friday, September 20, 1907. Mary Kinnaman, secretary.

London, Ontario, Religio Association will convene in London at 2 p. m., October 17, 1907. Send credentials to James Pycock, Humber Bay, before October 14. James Pycock, secretary.

Two-day Meetings.

There will be a two-day meeting in the Thurman Branch, in the Saints' church, near Thurman, Iowa, October 13 and 14. Able speakers will be present. We cordially invite all to meet with us. C. M. Roberts, president branch.

Notices.

The Saints of Lincoln, Nebraska, will meet hereafter at the home of Sr. Rena Diefendorf, 1021 South Twenty-ninth Street, every Sunday, at 11 a. m.

Although our coming reunion has been advertised in the HERALD, we wish to call attention to the musical portion of the program. On account of the scattered condition of the Saints in this district (Western Nebraska and Black Hills), we have not much opportunity to practice singing together. It has been suggested that several hymns be selected from the Hymnal and from Zion's Praises, and the numbers published, that the Saints may practice singing them in their homes before coming to the reunion. As the song-service is an important one, in a gathering of this kind, let us do our best to make it acceptable. Following is a short list, of which some at least will be in use: From Hymnal: Nos. 158, 143, 99, 96, 93, 86, 62, 57, 9, 1, 217, 202. From Zion's Praises: 192, 168, 161, 158, 149, 96, 18, 144, 143, 130, 109, 90, 58, 1. Our beloved Bro. Payne whose death occurred a short time ago, was one of the committee on music for our reunion. How little we thought when bidding him good-bye at the last reunion that we should see his face no more. The Saints here are all saddened by his death; but our hope is in the resurrection, where there will be no death. Mrs. Viola Barkdoll, Miss Adelia Roberts, committee on music.

Correction.

In HERALD for August 28, in died notice of Bro. Nichols, the given names, Charles Thomas, were inadvertently omitted.

Died.

SEBORIS.—At his home near Avery, Oklahoma, Bro. A. J. Sedoris, aged 68 years, 4 months, and 20 days. Bro. Sedoris was born in Pennsylvania, and in 1874 was united in marriage to Miss Annis Shorts, of which union were born three children, two of which survive him, the mother having passed away July 13, 1891. In September, 1892, he was united in marriage to Mrs. Harriet C. Fesler, of whom two sons were born, who are the sole comforters and supporters of their mother, while they are left to mourn, strangers in a strange land. Bro. Sedoris united with the church about sixteen years ago.

MILES.—Bro. Jacob Miles was born in South Wales in 1855 and died in Lucas, Iowa, Thursday, September 5, 1907. He was married to Maria Griffiths, August 24, 1873, at Scranton, Pennsylvania. He moved his family to Lucas in 1880, and most of the time since has made his home here. Of this union there were born twelve children, four have passed to the world beyond. Bro. Miles joined the church about thirty years ago. Was baptized by T. A. John, who also preached the funeral-sermon, Sunday, September 8.

Came to America in 1852, and June 20, 1865, was united in marriage to Mrs. Mary Woodruff-Wilks, who mourns the loss of a loving husband. They were together baptized by William H. Hazzeldine, February 22, 1867, and he was ordained a teacher January 25, 1882. Came to Lamoni in 1900. Funeral service September 6, in charge William Anderson. Sermon by Robert M. Another Saint has been called home to mingle with the just. She died August 30, 1907, at ten o'clock. She leaves a husband, four daughters, and three sons, besides her many friends to mourn their loss, two daughters having gone on before. The writer preached the sermon at Richland school-house, and the remains were laid to rest in the Richland Cemetery to await the resurrection of the just.

Seven children and her husband remain to mourn. Sr. Self was not only loved by those of her own faith, but a host of friends has been made who sympathize with the family in their bereavement. MARSHALL.—William Harold Marshall was born January 6, 1899; died September 7, 1907, at 7 a. m. He leaves his mother and two brothers. Sr. Marshall is one of those faithful Saints we meet when we visit at Farmington Branch. Her cup of sorrow is certainly full. The husband and father died four years ago, leaving our sister with four children. A. C. Anderson preached the funeral-sermon. Text was: Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of God. The sister asked the Saints to remember her in their prayers. Will you?

JACKSON COUNTY BANK

I take the liberty of soliciting your patronage as we are in a position to do BANKING BUSINESS BY MAIL very satisfactorily. Open accounts can be placed with us for safety at your convenience and command. We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood shorn of all political ambition, with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. I point with considerable just pride (I assume) to our Board of Directors as named below. Feel at liberty to write us on matters that concern you in Jackson County, Missouri.

OFFICERS: Ellis Short, President; M. H. Bond, Second Vice-president; William Crick, First Vice-president; J. D. Briggs, Cashier.

THE BIBLE, AND ITS REVELATION OF GOD AS A CREATOR, A REDEEMER, AND A CONQUEROR.

The Bible is not a book to be neglected by the believer or ridiculed by the unbeliever.

The opening words of the Bible are worthy to introduce a book which contains the word of God to man: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Five of these ten words are great; and in this short sentence four great ideas are suggested: God, the Beginning, Creation, and the Universe.

No book that follows such an introduction with such a wealth of historical information, sublime imagery, poetry, and true philosophy, is a proper subject for ridicule, even though we deny its divinity; and certainly not for neglect if we admit its divinity.

We can comprehend how honest men may disbelieve the Bible or doubt its inspiration; but how they can make it the subject of ridicule and scorn, as has been done by infidels both great and small, we can not conceive. We are persuaded that one who does so is lacking, not alone in the lofty sentiment of reverence, but he lacks as well good taste and common sense. He is on a plane with the man who, beholding a pure and lovely woman, sees nothing but a target for his vulgar wit. He is on a plane with the animals mentioned in the book itself, that trample pearls into the mire and turn to rend the giver.

Young men have heeded its teachings and have grown to be honorable citizens. Young women have studied its precepts and have attained to that true womanhood that safeguards the welfare of the race. Mature men have faced martyrdom because of their belief in it. Our fathers have gone to the grave cheered by its promises; and our mothers have strained dim eyes to read its pages. If there were no other reasons, the tender love it has commanded and the blessings it has given in response lift it to a place of respect and should cause men to hesitate long before making a wanton attack.

Mr. Bryan in his early life attempted to be an infidel, but after a correspondence with Ingersoll in which he sought and failed to secure light on fundamental questions, he reached this conclusion: "I do not see how a man can find it in his nature to make it his life's work to tear a living faith from human hearts and plant in its stead the cold dead formula, 'I do not know.' Though we lose faith, let us for ever leave undisturbed the faith that makes life pleasant for another human being.

Affectation in any part of our carriage is but the lighting up of a candle to show our defects, and never fails to make us be taken notice of, either as wanting in sense or sincerity.—Locke.

Affectation lights a candle to our defects, and though it may gratify ourselves, it disgusts all others.—Laveter.

Believing the Bible, we should search its pages for those teachings that will bring eternal life. It is said of one old lady that, moved with a spasm of piety, she took the Bible from its shelf and dusted it, and when she opened it she discovered a pair of spectacles hidden between the leaves. "Why," she exclaimed, "I lost those spectacles twenty years ago." Had she found them before it was too late, they would have quickened her vision. If others will search the Scriptures carefully, before they have reached the stage where it is too late, and "having eyes they see not," they will find there that which will quicken their spiritual vision.

It has been said that science controverts the Biblical account of creation. We have never made a specialty of scientific study (and indeed a specialist as a rule is not a competent judge of questions which involve matters outside of his observation, because if he chances to misread a line from nature he is deaf to the testimony of every other branch of science or history or experience that would set him right), but in our general reading we have discovered that scientists have this in common with politicians and theologians: They all observe the same facts but draw differing conclusions. On the other hand religionists read the same passages and draw differing conclusions.

The difficulty has been that what men thought science taught conflicted at some points with what other men thought the Bible taught. We are persuaded that when the infallible man is found who can tell us what science really says, and when the infallible man is found who can tell us what the Bible really teaches, the two may be stood side by side and they will speak as with one voice.

An intelligent and spiritual perusal of the Bible stirs every good and lofty emotion of the soul. We go back to the beginning, and out of the profound darkness, at God's command, comes stealing a gentle glow of light, from gray to orange, and from orange to gold. We see God reach up to enkindle the sun. We see him light the fixed stars. We see his hands moving in chaos, shaping Mars, Jupiter, Venus, the Earth, and speeding them on their way through space as lightly as a thistle down. As one marvel of creation follows another, we sing with the morning stars and shout with the sons of God. It is the revelation of God as a creator.

We go with Moses and the host of Israel to the Mount of Sinai, and when the mount is "is altogether on a smoke" and the "voice of the trumpet waxes louder and louder," we hear the voice of God and we shrink away with the hosts into our tents to escape the revelation of God as a lawgiver.

Wandering over the desert plains, we come to a little valley by the side of a stream, and we hear a shepherd lad playing upon a harp. It is the harp whose music exorcised the evil spirit from King Saul. This was the lad who became the sweet singer of Israel, and remembering this scene he wrote the twenty-third Psalm, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul."

"He restoreth my soul." There is the promise of redemption. We pass on to a later date, and by the river Jordan we see multitudes of people attending upon John's teachings. The crowd parts and through the aisle thus formed comes a young man clad in the loose robe and sandals of the times. John points to him and cries, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." We feel no fear as at Sinai, but only a desire to touch the hem of his garment and be made whole, only an intense love. Thus begins the revelation of God as a redeemer.

Again we see the Christ, this time nailed to the erected cross. We note the weeping women, the indifferent soldiers, the vindictive priests, the howling mob. The hands that ministered to others and the feet which hastened to their relief are pierced. The head is drooping with unutterable weariness. We see Satan, triumphant, peering into the pallid face, "You save others, now save yourself; if indeed you be the Son of God, come down from the cross."

But again the scene of conflict is changed, this time to the regions where men are bound and where Satan has esteemed himself as impregnable. But the Master has said that the gates of hell shall not prevail against him, and his promise is to be tested. There comes a cry, "Be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in."

A voice, not of triumph but of fear, replies, "Who is this King of Glory?"

"The Lord mighty in battle, the Lord of hosts, he is the King of glory. Be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors, that he may come in."

The battle is fought, in heaven, on earth, in hell, and it is pictured for us, and at the end we hear him declare, "I am he that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, amen, and have the keys of hell and of death." Thus do we get the revelation of God as a conqueror.

It is yet only a revelation in word, to us; but as we move out from our perusal of the Bible, and cooperate with God, we obtain in our own case a revelation in fact of God as a Creator, a Redeemer, and a Conqueror.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Where in the Bible will I find it stated that Jesus baptized more people than his disciples? I know it says in one place that "Jesus baptized not, but his disciples." I think that this is a wrong translation. The above I have heard preached from, so I think the first is correct. Let me know through the HERALD.

The statements occur together in the first three verses of chapter 4, of John's gospel, and are as follows: "When therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John, (though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples,) he left Judea, and departed again into Galilee."

We believe that it is nowhere stated that Jesus baptized more people than John. However it is stated in John 3:22, that "After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them, and baptized."

Whether Jesus baptized any others than his disciples, the twelve, it is generally believed that he did baptize them. We are inclined to the belief that Jesus did baptize, if there was occasion for it.

"Come Unto Me."

Hark to the voice of the dear loving Savior

Tenderly, pleadingly, calling to thee:

"Why wilt thou labor and be heavy laden?

Cease all thy wanderings and come unto me.

"Light is my yoke, and my burden is easy;

Thy guide and thy teacher, fain I would be,

Oh come, and thy soul shall find sweetest resting;

Doubt not the promise, but come unto me.

"Many have been the days of my yearning,

Thy love to secure, and thy soul to make free;

Let nothing hinder thy faltering footsteps;

Tarry no longer, but come unto me.

"Come, for my love is both strong and abiding;

For thee I have suffered death on the tree.

Come while the Spirit and bride are now pleading;

Leave the World's follies, and come unto me.

"Come ere the night shadows gather around thee;

Much sorrow awaits, which thou canst not foresee.

Gladly I'll shield thee from every disaster;

Oh hasten, thou loved one, and come unto me."

THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST.

We live in a time of so many churches, all claiming to be right, that the people everywhere are confused and disturbed to know which is the right and true church to join. "Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" is still the deepest question of the age. Some of our modern teachers, seeing this trouble existing in the minds of the people, try to satisfy them by saying: "Oh, it's not the church. The church has nothing to do with your salvation. Just join any of them."

Christ came into the world to save the people (sinners), and to correct our false and erroneous ideas. In order to accomplish this great work he declared: "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matthew 16:18.

Christ built his church upon the rock of revealed truth. Why would he use precious time to build something that can have nothing to do with the the salvation of the people? Several churches were already in existence when our Savior came; but he said unto them: "If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch."—Matthew 15:14.

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in. . . . Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte; and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves.—Matthew 23:13, 15.

Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness.—Matthew 6:33.

And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.—Acts 2:47.

Why add them to the church if it had nothing to do with their salvation? To be saved, we must be in the church of Jesus Christ, the kingdom of God, and obey its laws.

The twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians gives us a plain description of the church Christ came into the world and built:

Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.—1 Corinthians 12:27, 28.

The fourth chapter of Ephesians informs us why he set all these things in the church; for what purpose, and how long to continue:

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive.—Ephesians 4: 11-14.

Paul plainly informs us in this chapter that there is but one church or body (see fourth verse) and describes this one, beautiful church, the Lamb's bride.

Some tell us all apostles, prophets, etc., are done away. If so, where are the evangelists and pastors? If all these things are done away, where is Christ's church? Nowhere. But such is not the case. All these things are in his church to-day, because it is the same, has never been altered or changed.

The church in the wilderness (see Acts 7: 38) was a true pattern, shadow of heavenly things (see Hebrews 8: 5; 10: 1; 9: 9). Let us compare the two covenants.

The church in the wilderness had three to preside over it (see Exodus 17: 11, 12); twelve men (see Joshua 4: 4, 5); high priests (see Leviticus 21: 10); seventy (see Numbers 32: 7); priests (see Exodus 29: 8, 9); porters or deacons (see 2 Chronicles 35: 14, 15).

Christ's church, in New Testament: Three to preside over it (see Matthew 20: 20-27); twelve apostles (see Matthew 10: 1-4); seventy (see Luke 10: 1, 2); high priests (see Hebrews 8: 3; 3: 1-3); elders (see Acts 14: 23); priests (see Luke 1: 5; Hebrews 8: 4); teachers (see Acts 13: 1; 1 Corinthians 12: 28); deacons (see Philippians 1: 1; 1 Timothy 3: 1-4).

Doctrine of Christ's church: Faith (see Hebrews 6: 1-3); repentance (see Hebrews 6: 1-6); baptism (see Hebrews 6: 1-6); laying on of hands (see Hebrews 6: 1-6); resurrection (see Hebrews 6: 1-6); eternal judgment, Lord's supper (see 1 Corinthians 11: 23-28).

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is that same church that has come out of the wilderness in our day and time (see Revelation 12: 1-6).

If you will enter into it you will find all these things in it, and peace, joy, and the Holy Ghost, and salvation.

THE LAW MUST BE FULFILLED.

Whatever may be thought or conjectured as to the undertakings in church work known as helps, or aids, in its financial life, the fact must not be overlooked that the law as it emanated from God must be scrupulously fulfilled.

It is right and proper for all to stand ready and anxious to help in "every good work"; and those who do so, not having thereby postponed or neglected to fulfill the divine rule which is ever binding until faithfully complied with, must receive great strength and reward, but the performance of one's part in these helps in no way answers the place of a strict compliance with the demands couched in the written law.

Saints readily see that however zealous a person may be in the good works of repentance and invocation, he is not on safe ground if, while standing thus, he neglects or refuses to comply with the law of baptism or the laying on of hands. But it is not so easy for them to see that a fulfilling of the law in temporal things is equally essential. It is not for us to say what works we shall engage in or how we shall comply with the same; we are all under the divine decree and it is binding and obligatory until fulfilled under divine approval and sanction.

Salvation is brought about not by works of our own choosing, which we may do, but by obedience to the law of life which makes us participants in the divine promise,—“Not of works, lest any man should boast. For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained [or prepared] that we should walk in them.”

To walk after his commandments then, is to stand in the way of life, or salvation; and to walk out of this way is to wander in the ways of sin and death; for “straight is the gate . . . that leadeth unto life,” but “broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction.” It is asked, however, “Are there no exceptions?” The answer is that of the apostle to the Gentiles: “God will render to every man according to his deeds,” . . . “for there is no respect of persons with God.”

The Lord in his instruction to the Saints in 1861, referring to their work in temporal things, called special attention to the necessity of “fulfilling the law.” This is like the Christ. He ever urged that the law should be kept as a whole, without an exception. “He that breaketh the least of these my commandments and teacheth men so to do shall not be saved in the kingdom of God.”

To be in Christ then, is to be in harmony with his teaching, his laws; that is “fulfilling” them. The testimony of John is in strict harmony with this: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."

In December, 1831, the following instruction was given:

Verily thus saith the Lord, It is expedient in me for a bishop to be appointed unto you, or of you unto the church, in this part of the Lord's vineyard; and verily in this thing ye have done wisely, for it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity. For he who is faithful and wise in time is accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for them of my Father.—Doctrine and Covenants 72:1.

This settles the question, then, that the law touching temporalities is a part of the eternal plan, and extends both here and hereafter; and, as Jesus states: "He who is faithful and wise in time is accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for them of my Father."

This is as he taught in Judea: "But if ye would rather give alms of such things as ye have; and observe to do all things which I have commanded you, then would your inward parts be clean also."—Luke 11:42, I. T. The Lord's ways and his teaching are ever the same; man's ways are devious.

In the administration of a law of the kingdom of God there is necessity for an authorized administrator as well as proper subjects to comply. To Peter, and later to many others, Jesus gave authority to act, to administer the laws in the house of God, the church. "Whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven"; each to execute according to authority conferred. But in no divinely directed body would it be thought proper for the teacher or deacon to be set apart to baptize, or the priest to confirm by the laying on of hands; and should such undertake to perform these rites, there would be no binding,—no ratification,—on earth or in heaven. The act would be void and without recognition in the divine order.

So also in the administration of the law relative to temporalities. It must be performed by one authorized to act, to bind on earth, in administering this law, and to bind in heaven; and it would be as inconsistent for a person to assume to be his own bishop in fulfilling the law of tithes and offerings, as for him to undertake to act as his own administrator in baptism. To have a ratification of the act there must be an authorized administrator.

In the divine direction, providing for the execution of the law of tithes and offerings, it is commanded that we "lay all things before the bishop in Zion." (Doctrine and Covenants 72:3.) This is in keeping with the thought of an authoritative administration.

All things are not given to the bishop; but he is fully informed of the whole condition—assets, liabilities, and condition of family, so that the law may be administered wisely. The act done in righteousness is binding here and hereafter, and what is true of the bishop's authoritative act is also true of his assistants in this work, if performed in wisdom. Hence the provision, that those who go up to Zion: "Let them carry up unto the bishop a certificate from three elders of the church, or a certificate from the bishop, otherwise he who shall go up unto the land of Zion shall not be accounted as a wise steward."—Doctrine and Covenants 72:5.

It must not be overlooked that in carrying out this provision of the law a special commission is created and nothing less will suffice. The certificate must be signed by three elders, or the bishop, where the member resides. The signature of two elders is not sufficient; neither can a local bishop give certificates to parties outside of the territory wherein he is authorized to act. The administration of the law must be in wisdom and under authority, and officers should be careful that they sign no certificate unless fully conversant with the circumstances of the party for whom it is issued, as each must give a true answer for the improper exercise of the authority as in other official work.

ARE ALL FULFILLING THE LAW?

This is a time of great demand. No one should be dilatory, or work half-heartedly now. The general work provided for by the use of tithes and offerings of supplying the gospel laborers and the poor and needy, the purchase of lands and the institution of proper, useful kinds of employment, is greatly pressing upon the church. If the law is "fulfilled," the promise is, there shall be "plenty and to spare." Let us then, as a first work, wisely, seriously, and prayerfully fulfill this law if we have not already complied with the same. Those who so do will be justified, strengthened, confirmed, and blessed.

SPECIAL WORKS.

Direct provision is made in the law for the building of a place of comfort and attention and help for the sick and afflicted ones who can not otherwise get the needed help. Pursuant to this instruction arrangements have been made by the proper committee, as it has tried to be directed in wisdom, to build

THE SANITARIUM.

Land has been purchased, and about five acres laid out for this purpose; material is being collected upon the ground for the building; workmen are engaged upon the foundation and basement story, and the only hindrance to the fulfilling of the command to build the sanitarium is the want of sufficient means. The help in this should be heartily, cheerfully given, as we would fulfill the request of one in performing a very necessary work; one whom we take great pleasure in obeying, because he had endeared himself to us by his goodness and love, having done so much for us. Who will fail to have a proper offering to help in fulfilling this direction?

To obtain the sanitarium site it was found necessary to purchase a tract of about nineteen acres of land; and after making a selection of the sanitarium place the remainder has been laid out into lots and duly platted, and the whole dedicated as an addition to the town of Independence, Missouri, and named Kensington. It is not the purpose of the committee to place these lots in the hands of real estate men to sell for a commission, but the lots are valued sufficiently low so the Saints who may wish a lot in Independence can get one in good location. As we had to borrow some of the means with which to purchase this land the lots should sell for cash, so that we can have the money to use and stop interest at once. We offer these lots upon the following condition, which gives the Saints at a distance the same advantage as those present:

Any church member wishing to purchase a lot for him- or herself, and who can not now take time to come and look over the situation, may do so and get their deed, and if upon examination of the property afterwards, they are not satisfied, the property shall be deeded back and their money returned.

The lots are numbered and begin with 1 and run to 55. Number 1 is the sanitarium lot. The other lots vary in size running from the size of fifty by one hundred and twenty, to fifty by one hundred and fifty feet. The prices have been fixed by the committee and run from two hundred to five hundred dollars. Now if any of the Saints wish a lot let them address either George H. Hilliard, R. May, or the undersigned, stating the price of lot they wish, and we will make the selection as best we can, and if not found to suit upon their seeing it, then they get the money and the lot is ours. Will this be fair?

Prices run as follows: Lots 4, 5, 6 and 7, $500; 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21 and 22, $300; 23, 24 and 25, $200; 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35 and 36, $400; 37, 38 and 39, $300; 40, $250; 41, 42, 43, 44 and 45, $400; 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54 and 55, $200.

GRACELAND COLLEGE.

The other special work that just now must claim our attention is Graceland College. This is for the education, training, and proper development of our children. Our future good depends in great measure upon the good work of this institution.

No other institution stands in the place of it now; what there may be in the future must be left for the future to decide. But we must see that the youth of the church are properly educated, and it will cost us no more to patronize Graceland where we have fewer evils for the young to come in contact with than is found elsewhere, although this is not wholly free. The work done there is as good as the best. The liability for the boy or girl to imbibe evil there is not so great as in many places, and while it is not free from this it is really not greater than if the children are kept at home. Why not stop hesitating then and move in earnest to sustain this educational institution?

On the first Sabbath of October is Graceland College Day, as fixed by the church. Upon that day special collections are to be taken in every branch and district of the church for the benefit of Graceland College. Where there is no branch or district, persons should send their offerings direct to the Bishop, directing to Box 125, Independence, Missouri. To perform its work this year the college must have a good liberal collection. Can not every Latter Day Saint in the world help in some way on this day? Why not? If you have not an offering yourself, you can solicit some friend to aid, and by doing this you not only get a blessing for well-doing yourself, but are the means of your friend receiving a reward for good. The Lord grant that the body may be a unit in helping the college this time.

This is the time of diligent labor; if all earnestly and unitedly work, each doing all that he can to build up and establish the kingdom of God, it will only be enough. For part now to fail is but for them to lose—and wholly lose—for like “the foolish virgins” they will not be awarded an entrance when he comes. Jesus says: “Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching: Verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them.”

The watchful are those who are found in the performance of duty;—every duty, not simply a part,—and it is worthy the great and just character of our Lord that when he shall come he will prepare a feast for the brother and sister who are found laboring; and not for the idler or the busybody; those who are asleep, or dead, to the interests of the Lord's work.

The wise man will perform his work when it is needed. It must be accomplished in “due season.” This means without postponement or delay; when it will be effective for good. Those who thus perform their labor, zealously “fulfilling the law,” are the watchmen at the post of duty. Of these it is represented that he will “make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them.” In this time in which all shall wish to be partakers, it must not be forgotten that the credentials necessary to admission is faithfulness to duty. Neither riches nor poverty, position nor place of honor in this world will weigh in the scale of merit; but faithfulness to duty in whatever great or humble a place in which we are called to occupy will be sufficient, and the only passport. "Let us work while it is to-day," then. "Let every one do his duty." The world is watching us to-day.

Firmly believing in the readiness of the Lord to bless, if we perform our respective parts courageously! and trusting in the readiness of the Saints to wisely, generously, and faithfully comply with every just demand under the law, the writer is in full hope of the promises to Israel, and an early triumph of Zion's cause.

E. L. KELLEY, Bishop.

IS IT RIGHT TO STAND AND PRAY IN OUR SYNAGOGUES?

I believe this question may be answered by turning to that which has been written for our guide.

We read in Doctrine and Covenants:

Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doeth according to these things, shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues.

We also read in the scriptures that we shall live by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God.

Now, dear brothers and sisters, if we are commanded to live by every word that has been given for our guide, and if we can find that God has given us any instructions concerning prayer, and the attitude we should assume, should we not do according to that which has been written?

I believe that the attitude we should assume in prayer in our churches and meetings is as plainly taught in the three books as baptism by immersion is taught in the Bible, and we take the Bible and condemn other sects for sprinkling.

In Matthew, sixth chapter, the Master tells us what we should not do. Now is it right for us to command the audience to stand while we pray, when the Lord has said we should not stand? That is the way the hypocrites loved to do; and he says to be not like them.

We find in Doctrine and Covenants, wherever the Lord has told us what to do, whether to stand or kneel in our meetings, it has always been to kneel.

In section 85, the Lord tells the President that when he came into the house of God in the school of the prophets, he should offer himself in prayer upon his knees, that he might be an example. Here is an example that God wanted set for his people to follow. Will he be pleased with us if we do not follow it?

We all believe the example is a good one, and if good to follow in the school of the prophets, would it not be a good example to follow in all our assemblies, where we meet for worship?

We turn to the Book of Mormon and find that while the Master was here teaching the people, he commanded them to kneel down when they prayed; and he himself also knelt down; and in Nephi 8:7, we read:

And as I have prayed among you, even so shall ye pray in my church, among my people who do repent and are baptized in my name. Behold I am the light; I have set an example for you.

Here we find the same example set by the Master himself that he commanded the president of the school of the prophets to set; and he commanded the people to follow the example he had set. He did not command the people to "all stand while we pray"; but he commanded them to kneel.

Now we know that there is not a command anywhere in any of the books, or an example set, that we should stand and pray when we meet for worship. But I believe it is right to stand and pray as the Lord has told us, when we are in secret. While we are at our work, let our hearts be continually drawn out to the Lord in prayer; and when we stand praying for forgiveness, let us see that we forgive others. But when we meet to worship God, I believe we should keep the commands, and follow the examples that our Master has set for us.

Of course our elders have to stand while administering to the sick, and confirming those who have been baptized, and when they dismiss the meetings, which is all right; but they can do all this, and still walk in the good old paths.

But this commanding the audience to stand in our meetings and pray, is a worldly fashion, and is contrary to the example set by our Lord and Master, and is working an injury to the cause that we love, because it brings in division. I know the branch here is divided; and when the presiding elder commands the people to all stand while we pray, about half of the branch believe the elder has done wrong, and can not say "amen" to it; and I see by reading the HERALD that other branches are also divided. Then would it not be better for us to come back to good old paths, where we can all be united, and say "amen" to the opening prayers, and at the same time know that we are following the example that the Master has set, and are living by every word that the Lord has given?

A. W. WHITING.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

IV. AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER ALVIN KNISLEY.

(CONCLUDED.)

Having held General Conference appointments for 1894 and 1895, I retired from the field—one of my regrets—till 1901, when I reentered under the ministerial charge of R. C. Evans. This interim of five or six years I can scarcely yet look on as but a step backward. While I neither forgot God nor his work, I view it through the veil of six or seven succeeding years as a spot in the sun of my life. During these few years I can not deny that I sometimes acted on or from the standpoint of duty instead of pleasure. My spirituality sometimes dropped from its zenith, and that irrepressible inclination to communicate my gospel thoughts to others, that bubbling over of zeal, that delight of prayer and worship that had thrilled me in preceding years did at times assume a different aspect and became distinguishably dwarfed and faded. But I lived in hopes that new environment would make it easier to serve him who had done so much for me. Many of us have had our lull, our Dark Ages.

I have every reason to believe that during this lapse of time Satan was putting forth his herculean struggle to put me out of business, to discourage me, and to allay my anxieties for work along lines that were intended to frustrate his purposes. Whether you believe it or not, dear reader, I came in visible, tangible, and audible contact with him. When wakeful, while reclining in my kitchen chair in the day time, when mother was following the avocations of the household, I was more than once seized by some extraneous power and held for some moments, unable to lift an arm or even to open an eye. In a mysterious and unaccountable manner I found myself yielding to physical debility and bodily weakness. It became evident to me that my condition of mind and body was on the wane. Weak spells came to me, the source of which I did not know or understand. While for a time in the railway service in the city of Hamilton, Ontario, I was on occasions almost too languid to lift myself into the locomotive gangway.

It was to a great extent in this condition I found myself, when, in the beautiful spring of 1901, in company with A. C. Barmore, I once again launched forth into the Eden field of missionary service, to pluck the ripened and luscious fruits of honest souls. Again I was approaching the goal of my dreams, my hopes, my ambitions for weary years. Very keenly do I recollect the day I pulled away from my parental home with a resignation to lean on the arm of the great Jehovah and confide in his infinite strength. Very well do I remember my determination to attain to the highest height that prayerfulness and faithfulness would lift me.

The town of Waterford was our first halt. While reposing there at the side of my colaborer, at the house of Bro. Wyatt, I was blessed with the following dream: I saw myself ascending a high and very steep eminence. My ascent was with such rapidity that in an astonishingly short time I was successful in gaining its summit, from whence I was able to look around and overpeer all the rugged crags, and unevenness, all the difficulties attendant upon my effort to get where I now stood. It made a fadeless impression on my mind. It was significant to me that the course I was pursuing would hastily land me beyond the obstacles of which I was admittedly daily complaining to the Lord. At any rate it refreshed my courage, and while there in that place in those verdant months, and while sweet breezes were wafted from every heaven, I blended my prayers therewith to the Giver of all good, and promised him my service inasmuch as he would qualify me therefor.

We made our way into the Chatham District, Ontario, where we were associated during the summer of 1901. I was administered to for my recovery to health, but the benefits that I wished for did not manifest themselves to my satisfaction. I prayed to the Lord to restore me or give me a revelation telling me whether he ever would heal me, and whether I could depend on him. At our Glencoe campaign a sister had a presentiment in which she saw a parcel with writing on for me and my colaborer, as it was indicated to her mind. We had both been praying for light along certain lines, which gave some intelligibility to the sister's dream. We thereupon the more firmly looked forward to the time when in the near future God would answer our importunities.

My colaborer attended the London District conference that fall. I labored alone till his return. When he came back he said that he had there for the first time in his life been spoken to in tongues. I thought to myself, "You have now had your share of the parcel; at the next conference soon to convene at Wabash I will receive mine." Happily, my anticipations were confirmed in a most delightful and satisfactory manner. For in the conference prayer-service I was spoken to in tongues, words varying little if any from the following: "Verily, thus saith the Spirit unto you my servant Alvin: Cease to complain of pain and sickness and distress of body. Come before me in mighty prayer, and I will pour out my Spirit upon you, and I will qualify you for the work I have called you to perform, and I will heal you of your afflictions."

What a relief this message gave me! How I rejoiced in this news! My heart was now un-burdened; the evil forebodings of my mind had fled away. I knew that a proper application of myself to the counsel that had been given, all of which was within my reach, would lift me to the Chimberazo of success, of health, of usefulness. I now rested assured that though I should not be immediately healed, though for some purpose God might have, the condition I complained of might be allowed to continue, I eventually would be healed. Through the fogs and mists of disease I could hereafter see the star of triumph. And now, kind reader, to dispose of this phase of the subject, let me say to you that I have been gradually growing stronger from that time to this. God gives us alleviation in proportion to the rapidity with which it removes the dross. A smelter has no object in fire after it has severed all the alloy from the pure metal.

Pursuant to the Wabash conference, I again began to labor single-handed. Repairing to Cooperville, about twelve miles north of the city of Chatham, where we had a few brethren, I began to hold meetings and to do much visiting and conversing. My buoyancy at that time was in seeing the fruits of my labors. I had only baptized one prior to that, and after I had been there for two or three weeks I began to wonder if I would ever in my life baptize any more. One night while I continued to be thus exercised, wondering about my future success as a proselyter, and the likelihood of any converts in that rural vicinity, I had a dream in which I saw myself with a dip net in hand, wading up some stream, throwing out fish on the bank. When my task was completed I surveyed my fish-pile, and it appeared to me that there were about thirty or forty fish. Might I say that when I left that district in the fall of 1902, I had baptized between thirty and forty people, which my mind associated with the dream?

On the first Sunday of the year of 1902, at Appledore, I was called to the eldership through Elder George Green, a man whom I fully expect to meet in the first resurrection. Hitherto I had baptized, but was unable to confirm. The same aged and willing brother had been at his own expense calling on me to do my confirming. The words addressed to me were nearly as follows, according to my copy made thereafter, and which I think I can reproduce without the suspicion of egotism, recognizing that this is not a doctrinal exposition, but a sketch of my own life, and that by request: "Thus saith the Spirit unto you my servant: I have heard your prayers; your tears and your fastings I have seen. You have been sorely tried, even beyond what you have made known to your brethren; and it is now pleasing to me that you be ordained to the priesthood after the order of Melchisedec, that when you go forth to preach this gospel of my kingdom you may not only have power to baptize, but also to give the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands and to confirm."

With the additional bestowment of priesthood, I was enabled to confirm my baptized candidates, and to administer to the relief of the sick. Some very remarkable blessings have followed my administrations. Restorations from dire sickness have prevailed where the service of laying on of hands and anointing with oil was complied with, in such a manner that it could not be ascribed to natural causes or to anything short of an interposition of the matchless power of God. Signs have confirmed those whom I have baptized, so that they can stand up to-day and truthfully say, I know this work is true.

Whatever my spiritual advancement is, I believe I have arrived to this stage of experience, that I know when I have the Spirit; and I know when, if for any cause, I have lost it. Some have been blessed more in being the instruments of ocular manifestations than I have, or may ever be; and there are those who are more sensitive to its tranquil manipulations than I am to-day. One meaning I have in that is, that it would take more inspiration to move me from the groove I am wont to move in than it would to move some others. As an example, a number of years ago I was conducting a series of meetings at the peculiar whisky town of Wakerville, Ontario, where I baptized several who attended my preaching. A most scenic and interesting place, fronting the broad Detroit River, which empties its incalculable volumes of blue water into my native Lake Erie, in view of the majestic steamers plying up and down on its crest, in sight of this land of the eagles, across from the frolicking resorters on famous Belle Isle. Here, as I laid earnest hands on a baptized brother to confirm him, I was impressed to tell him that he would be healed. I must confess to my guilt of restraining the Spirit's suggestion. I instinctively said to myself: "It will not do to tell this brother that he will be healed, for I do not know that there is anything wrong with him, and that would give me away before these people who are acquainted with him and may know better." Howbeit, ere my confirmatory invocation had been concluded words escaped my lips to the very effect that I had thought to stifle, so that some member came to me and rejoicingly exclaimed: "Why, Bro. Jones was told that he would be healed!" I made up my mind that I would afterward endeavor to become impressionable to the Spirit's operation, which knew better than I did, and give what should come.

In the fall of 1902, at the Ridgetown conference, I received my patriarchal blessing under the hands of John H. Lake, who is now in hoary old age, and who, after a life of service in the promulgation of the everlasting gospel; after a life of indefatigable labors and sacrifices, is tottering near the portal of the tomb, and soon to enjoy that enviable treat—to be gathered unto the fathers. I was indicated as of Ephraimitish lineage, was promised life till the temple is built, that I should be “useful with my pen and excel therein,” and so on and so on. Father, the first to receive his blessing in Canada, wept for joy at some of the promises made; for he had entertained a fear that I would, by what he thought to be an aggressive and venturesome mode of warfare, bring upon myself violent persecution that would eventuate in the destruction of my life. The promises in my blessing, of which he was cognizant, and always held in keen remembrance were, therefore, ever afterward a consolation to him. For he knew and rested assured that if I was faithful that there was no railroad accident, no mob, no misfortune that was big enough to take away my life before the accomplishment of that whereunto I had assurance of its enjoyment. Yet I could by a deviation from the path of duty incur premature loss of life; but that should be no reflection that the promise is at fault.

While in the Canadian northwest I had some uneasiness that father might not be spared till I reached home. The distance was long and the prospects were dull for a trip; father was declining in health. I received a presentiment that he would be spared till I could visit home, and I wrote the same in my diary, which I sent home in advance, as I was accustomed to do, and still do on account of the satisfaction the family have in its perusal. Then when I went home father said to me: “You had an evidence that I would be spared till you got home.” I acknowledged I had. “But,” he continued, “you did not have any evidence that I would be spared till you came home again?” I said, “No.” I was not away more than two or three weeks till he took his bed and kept it till, growing weaker and weaker day after day, the last spark of life had fled away, and he who was once an iron man was no more.

Following the Ridgetown conference of 1902, in the fall, I was assigned to London District, and after the St. Marys (where I once worked for a time at printing) conference I went into the counties of Huron and Perth. At this latter conference there was something took place to dishearten me and to occasion me sadness. But the Lord, who is rich in mercy, and sees honesty, no matter how obscure, gave me rest in a dream wherein I descried myself in the cab of a locomotive which was for some little time immobile, due, if I recollect, to being off the track. But it was not long till I had it on the track, and then, unfettered and unbound, I forged ahead.

I enjoyed my year in said field, and as my mind leaps there, over the majesty of the Rockies at the feet of which I now sit, I recall many pleasant reminiscences and many faces that I would like to see again. So many places I have visited that I did not expect to see again, and probably will not. So many sympathetic, tearful, dear faces have I looked at as it seemed for the last time. Wifelessness indeed has a big tendency to make one a transient, or to add to his transiency in this work; but I have had a fear that the cure might be worse than the disease. Hence I plod on in my old bachelor way, and will continue to do so—keeping my quorum out of their customary treat of nuts and sweetmeats as long as I can—till Divinity approves, if he ever does so.

Prior to attending the fall conference of 1903, in London, from which I was sent to the far West, I was the recipient of a letter from the missionary in charge which contained the following words: “The Lord hath seen the inward throbbings of your heart; and in this work shall you find ample scope for the longings of your soul. Your strenuous preparation of self in the fields of knowledge and experience are but leading to a goal of destiny. What and if the future appointments partake of the weighty, the responsible, and the burdensome? In humility shall you accomplish all.”

These words of warning were a prelude to what very soon happened when by steamboat and coach I was transported to the cold prairie West. Some one had to break away from the associations and frequent conferences of the little mission, and why should it not be I? Without reluctance I pulled away and soon found myself among strangers in a remote land which I had hitherto known only by what others said and by printer's ink. I left Buffalo, New York, in early November, when there was no sign of frost. With an associate minister I boarded the steamer at Owen Sound for Fort William, which, owing to one of the greatest storms that has raged on the lakes, was unusually late in reaching our destination. I had to pay first-class cabin passage, and then in order to get as little of the motion of the boat as possible, I spent my time with the tramps in the wash-room below. We had the fat of the land to live on, but I could not eat anything, scarcely, till we reached our haven of debarkation. Snow was visible on Mount Mackay, the creek was frozen over, the atmosphere was penetrating. Taking train that night, we landed next day in the city of Winnipeg, where I found myself at variance with a temperature of fifteen below zero, and nothing more impervious to its withering breath than a raincoat, a pair of rubbers, a pair of thin gloves, etc. But this deficiency was soon remedied.

My first opening was at Treherne, where, against snows and blasts, preachers and prejudice, lies and slanders, I baptized thirty-three people, who were confirmed with signs following. Dastards and cowards who feared fair investigation published tirade after tirade of accusation in the local paper without signing their names. I was denied the right to reply. I could stand all this as long as I was able to recognize that the good seed was taking root and was bidding fair to produce a bountiful harvest; that in spite of all these cowards and demons, I would soon, to their jealousy and discomfiture, garner in the desirable grain.

My next opening was at Weyburn, where I found one isolated family of Saints, and where, as a result, to-day there is an organized branch, as far as I know in a flourishing condition. The gifts were enjoyed among them, even to children.

Later on I visited such places as Saskatoon, Mel-fort, and Gilbert Plains, where I entertained in forensic discussion, Father Sinnet, Reverend S. G. Lawson the Presbyterian, Mr. Jones the Disciple, and Mr. Parker the dissentient Presbyterian.

Most of the time in the Northwest mission I labored alone, and I think I have been in excess of a year at a time without hearing the voice or seeing the face of any other fellow servant of the priesthood. Out on the prairie, in the sparse settlements, on the rude and uncultivated savannahs, where the haunts of men were few and far between, I have enjoyed the Spirit of the Lord, and great power in my work. And going out on our system of warfare without purse and scrip I can say that I have been well provided for, that I have not lacked as to the suppliance of my appetite and funds for clothes, traveling, etc.

Before I left Buffalo for my western field, I was told by a clairvoyant that I was settled in my mind as to what I was going to follow up, as to what my occupation would be from that time on; that I was going on a long journey west; that I was going where the mode of life and surroundings would be different to anything I had ever experienced in the past. All was literally fulfilled, which, by the way, lent encouragement to the idea I had already acquired that Spiritualism is no more or less than a revival of the same power which existed in Bible times under such appellations as magicians, sooth-sayers, diviners, astrologers, witches, and wizards. It is quite natural to expect that the manifestation of the counterfeit power would follow the restoration of the genuine. Till I went to the Northwest I never saw a vast plain of land without fences or trees, and nothing but the broad disc of the heavens to behold on every hand. I never before was on such an extensive tract of land, where, in its virgin state, it was only grassed; nothing as big as a raspberry bush sometimes for miles around, save an occasional settler's shack, to nick the horizon.

At the last General Conference (April, 1907,) it was decided to send me to the Rocky Mountain Mission. It is in those scenic regions I am now. It is in the shadows of the stalwart Rockies I prepare this sketch, which, if it breathes encouragement into but one soul, I shall feel that my aim has not been altogether missed, and my task has been not in vain.

I feel resigned to my work, and I want to die with the gospel harness on, with my hands to the plow. My prayers are being answered, my desires are in process of realization. To see all of our family, save one, in and about our center post of Zion, and about thirty or forty other relatives there, the most of whom are in the church, is very cheering, to say the least, though their salvation is worth no more than that of others.

CHICAGO "TIMES" ON RIGDON AND MORMONISM.

Thinking the following might be interesting to the readers of your excellent paper, I forward it for your use. The article appeared in the Chicago Times in August, 1876, and was copied by me into my journal. I copied it as it appeared. As no name was signed to it, I suppose it was written by the editor of that journal.

CHARLES DERRY.

Mr. Rigdon was a man of good general ability, enlarged general culture, and well versed in natural science. He devoted the latter years of his life to the study of geology, on which science he was an able lecturer. No person had a more intimate acquaintance with Joseph Smith, or had better opportunity to judge the truth, or falsity of the thing he proclaimed to be true. As a Baptist, as a Campbellite, as a scientist, he was regarded as an honest, straightforward man. Only a bigot will accuse him of dishonesty in espousing the doctrines held by Joseph Smith. Mr. Rigdon was not the only person of good repute who gave testimony in favor of Joseph Smith till the end came. The original testifiers of his having the Golden Plates, whereon was inscribed the Book of Mormonism, never indulged in crooked talk in relation to the affair. As recently as last year, two of them were living—venerable men, whose word no person was likely to question in other matters. The widow of Joseph Smith still lives at Nauvoo, respected in the community as a woman of more than ordinary mind, culture and character. Two of his sons are citizens of this state, esteemed by all who know them as gentlemen of the highest integrity.

No one who knows them will deny that the antipolygamy Mormons, or Josephites who are scattered throughout the West, are the peers of other people in honesty, integrity, and truthfulness. It is all very well to sneer at Mormonism, to say that the father of Joseph Smith was an idle vagabond, who stole sheep, and that he himself was a knave or a fool, or both combined, but the question naturally arises, What is to be done with the testimony of this cloud of witnesses, the word of whom in all ordinary matters is taken as readily as the word of any man, and whose oath would send any man to the prison or gallows? Another age will probably ask,

Why was not this testimony refuted when those who gave it were living? The truth is, the testimony of these persons must be shown to be false within the next twenty years, or the fact that it was not disproved or even shaken will be a powerful argument in favor of its truthfulness in all coming ages. If there is good and sufficient evidence to substantiate any phenomena ordinarily classed as supernatural, it exists in relation to acts performed by Joseph Smith. Not one of the miracles imputed to the author of the Christian or Mohammedan religions was vouched for by so many witnesses.

EDUCATION.

Education is the unfolding of our inherent powers; or, we may say it is the processes which unfold them. The elements which contribute to the development and unfolding are the educating forces; e. g.: The mammoth oak, with its huge branches extending outward and heavenward, is nothing more or less than an educated acorn. All the possibilities revealed in the oak were originally "folded up" in the acorn. This inherent power of the acorn needs but an opportunity and it will give an expression of its capacity to produce an oak. This power is manifested as the acorn receives its education, which education begins when it is placed in suitable environment. Earth, moisture, warmth, air, sunshine, and exercise are the essential elements which contribute to the acorn's education. These elements cause germination and assimilation to take place, and stimulate growth. In the oak the acorn receives its highest education.

Man is distinctively a reasoning animal, an inventive genius, a creator. He receives his highest education in the development or unfolding of reason, his inventive, his creative powers. Made in the image of his Creator, and for his glory,—whose glory is intelligence,—man is endowed inherently with powers which, unfolding, make him become like unto his God.

As man's education progresses, his dominion is extended, his powers are enlarged, for "knowledge is power," and man's highest education, his most glorious accomplishment, is revealed in the development, the unfolding of his reasoning faculties.

The attributes of him in whose image he is made are all wisdom, all knowledge, all justice, all mercy, all love, all power, etc., and that man has received the best education who has become most nearly like his maker; or, conversely, the man who most resembles his maker has received the best education. For the purposes of this education God has revealed the forces and agencies that are useful and necessary. Three general factors are essential, without which the highest education is not possible:

1. Companionship with men and nature; acquaintanceship with the beauty of nature, and the purposes or uses of the natural creations. We mean the mineral, vegetable, and animal creation; the air, the sunshine, the rivers, the mountains, the valleys, etc. All of these lend inspiration and furnish incentives to action, and correspond with the function of the warmth and the moisture to the acorn when it is placed in the soil.

The earth rolls on her wings; and the sun gives his light by day, and the moon giveth her light by night; and the stars also give their light, as they roll upon their wings, in their glory in the midst of the power of God.

Any man who has seen any, or the least of these, has seen God moving in his majesty and power.

2. Initiative action and disciplinary training. By this we mean the exercise of the reasoning faculties in determining our physical acts and directing our moral and intellectual pursuits:

Behold you have not understood; you have supposed that I would give it unto you, when you took no thought, save it was to ask me; but, behold, I say unto you, that you must study it out in your own mind, then you must ask me if it be right.—Doctrine and Covenants 9: 3.

Exercise is necessary. The wind exercises the oak; but man, who is endowed with power of reason and initial action must exercise himself if he is to make strong and vigorous growth.

3. The introduction of the spirit of inspiration and revelation into the soul of man:

For what man knoweth the things of man save by the spirit of man which is in him; even so no man knoweth the things of God save by the spirit of God.

for

There is a spirit in man and the inspiration of God giveth them understanding, and

When he, the spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth;

for

I will tell you in your mind and in your heart by the Holy Ghost, which shall come upon you, and which shall dwell in your heart.—Doctrine and Covenants 8: 1.

Education is the unfolding. It is not an artificial and superficial adhesion to the corporeal man of extraneous substances. Whatever is not assimilated, but simply retained mechanically in remembrance, is no more a part of a man's education, no more enlarges the man, than a coat of paint applied to the oak enlarges the oak, or augments its powers.

Bodily adornment, conventional observances, so-called society etiquette, are no more factors in true education than the draping of the oak with the emblem of the nation is a factor in the education of the acorn.

There are human devils arrayed in magnificent apparel, whose wealth enables them to wield a mighty influence in the affairs of men, who are as uneducated, as totally devoid of the qualities of the "lowly Nazarene" as iron is devoid of elasticity.

Accumulated wealth, prestige in the "best" society, so-called, etc., are not signs of education. Yet how prone men are to place some of these despicable leeches on society on a par with the man whose extended manhood makes him a benefactor to his fellow man.

He is educated whose powers are unfolded harmoniously with the attributes divine;—of whom it can be truthfully said: "He is in the likeness of his God."

A PLACE FOR THE MODERATELY GIFTED.

The church needs a great number of men with moderate gifts, who have the courage to use them. The exceptionally endowed doubtless have their places, and were raised up for a special work. Born into a royalty of genius and a favoring environment, a tremendous task is laid upon them, and every faculty is strained like the muscles of Atlas, who staggers under his ponderous globe. These, however, are very few. God has given but one Moses to the world. We have but one Paul.

The colossals are lonely figures in history. The reason is that the great work of the world most needs more humble workers. For one geologist, we want ten thousand plowmen. One general will do for a brigade. The church could live without its fine theologians; but would utterly perish without its Dorcas and Aquila and Phœbe and Eunice of private life. The names of Tichycus, Trophimus, and Epaphroditus are rarely mentioned in the New Testament church, but how immensely did the unheralded work of these men add to the comfort of the apostle and the efficiency of the church. One Paul is enough for an era; but we must have the millions of one-talented men and women, each doing his inconspicuous work in his divinely appointed sphere.

The great temptation of the moderately gifted is to shrink from the use of what he has. Why should the candle burn while the sun blazed? The man of one talent hid his trust in the earth, and this temptation is strengthened by the fact that the wretched cowardice which is the real actuating principle of his idleness is veiled by what he calls modesty. Thus we hide our vices with heavenly names.

It is not humility but cowardice that shirks duty. There is no self-consciousness more appalling than the vanity of humility. The real humble man feels his unworthiness, but soon loses sight of himself in the call of duty. When the command comes, he never stops to inquire whether he is able or not, any more than the mother bird stops to measure her strength when the serpent attacks her nest.

In addition to the excuse of modesty is the common one that opportunity is not favorable. Sometimes, doubtless, men's success is the creation of the fortuitous play of circumstance. But the great law of achievement is work. Behind that elegant voice and perfect rendering of difficult music are years of drudgery, of toil. Back of that great sermon is a history of hardest mining. The best-worked soil grows the richest harvest.

When we read the story of the great benefactors of our race who have risen to fame out of the most distressing hindrances, we are almost ready to affirm that a man's disadvantages are his advantages. Responsibility bravely met develops gifts. Ease ruins faculty; hardness strengthens. Our gifts are like a telescope having more in them than we think, until we get them adjusted. Look through the glass before the slides are drawn out, and how blurred; but fix it joint by joint to its true focus, and what visions!

Our powers are adjusted only when in the place of duty. Let the common man forget himself in his work, and he is then at one with the greatest. In the Dresden gallery is a wonderful portrait which Titian painted of a brother artist, whose features stand out on the canvas full of life. In the background you see dimly the face of Titian; but he does not look at you; he is looking at his brother artist. It was in that way that the old masters wrought, lost in their work: and that made them great. Let every plowman, artificer, merchant, servant, pursue his task with similar conscience and forgetfulness; then the splendor of his work is wrought into his character and destiny. Thus the title "divine" is his. "This honor have all the saints."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

MIS-SOO-RI.

It is "Missouri," with the two "i's" short and no taint of a "z" sound in the doubled "s." The legislature of the State has settled the pronunciation by law, and a good job it is, since comedians have used "Mizzourah" on the stage and even the Standard Dictionary gives the word "Mizzouri."

Other States might adopt this course. Arkansas has done so; the correct pronunciation is "Ark-an-saw." It will probably take a statute to convince Eastern people that the "o" is long in both the first and third syllables of "Oklahoma" and that "Iowah," and not "Iowa" or "Ioway," is the home of the Cummins tariff theory; that "Maryland," is not pronounced as it is spelled, and that "Tennessee" is not accented on the first syllable.

All the State names that have a Latin or Spanish origin are commonly mispronounced in the East, and upon dictionary authority "Montahna," "Nevahda," and "Colorahdo" are the best local usage and should be recognized. In the East the "a" is given as in "fare." "Alabama," though an Indian word, suffers the same misuse. Called "Alabamma" by cultured residents, its musical syllables are elsewhere parodied into something like "Ally-bammy." "Indiana" might be pronounced with either the "far" or "fare" sound of the first "a," but surely it is not "Injianny."

Both "Illinoy" and "Illinoise" are allowed by the dictionaries. The original word was pronounced "Illiniwah," an Indian descriptive title with the French suffix, "ois," but Anglo-Saxon tongues have here decisively rejected the French pronunciation.

Perhaps half the States could to advantage fix the best present usage of name pronunciation. Even in "New York," for instance, is it or is it not correct to "iotize," the vowel in "New"? The dictionaries say yes, but more than half the people of the State, including practically all of Continental extraction, fail to obey.—Kansas City Journal February 27, 1907.

A FINE COLOR IS YELLOW.

In ancient mythology yellow was sacred to Jupiter, and to be worn on Sunday, the day ruled by the sun and consecrated to deity. Saffron or flame-colored robes were also dedicated to Hymen, says the Queen, and brides were covered with a veil called the flammation, without which no marriage vow was held binding.

The imperial color of China is orange and is sacred to the use of the Son of Heaven. Yellow, mixed with red, is often an emblem of turbulence, as the orange lily badge of the Orangemen in Ireland.

Yellow is considered a fundamental color, like red and blue; its principle is healing, stimulating, but may prove injurious and overexciting to very irritable and nervous conditions, as it is powerful in its effect upon the nerves, especially of the brain and lower parts of the body.

The yellow principle pervades poisons, tonics, emetics, and such medicines as senna, figs, castor oil, olive oil, sulphur, etc. Coffee, with its yellow brown principle, is inflammatory, and disposes to restlessness; saffron in small doses exhilarates the spirits; in large doses produces headache and delirium.

Nearly all alcoholic drinks contain the stimulation of yellow—sherry, Marsala, whisky, brandy, champagne, the golden wines of Italy and Spain etc., also cereals such as wheat, oats, and barley. There are strange chemical affinities between colors, and it is curious to note with regard to the growth of plants how certain colors group themselves together, such as violets and primroses, gorse and heather, etc., violet and yellow being affinitive colors. Wherever yellow enters another color there is a deepening and warming; thus yellow with blue, green; yellow with red, orange.

Yellow is assuredly the outward expression of power, vitality, vigor—physical, intellectual, and spiritual. It contains all the qualities for good and for evil of the planetary principle of Jupiter, the ruling qualities of the world; wherever it is present it strikes a dominant note.

The raging fire, the illimitable desert with its shuffling camels, the beautiful, fierce body of a lion, a tiger, a cobra are alike yellow. There is no power on earth greater than those little lumps of yellow metal, passed with the unconscious swiftness of thought from hand to hand, focusing like a magnet all the evil passions of men, consuming its seekers with the gold fever; it is the root of all evil, yet with a blossoming power for good; by it men must live, without it, die.

In the Jewish ritual the most precious metal is an ever recurring symbol. The golden cherubims above the golden ark and mercy-seat, the golden table and the golden candlestick, the golden lamps, the golden bells on the high priest's robe, the golden mitre with its engraving, "Holiness to the Lord."

And the same symbolism flows through the vision of Patmos—the golden altar, the golden crowns and girdles, the golden vials of odors, and those seven terrible vials of the wrath of God, and the golden cup of abominations held by the scarlet woman, running, as it were, from the height to the depth of the golden scale—or rather shall it be said, from the depth to the height, from the barbaric, tawny orange of physical force, through the infinite gamut of tone shades—copper, bronze, jacinth, topaz, flame, saffron, amber, citron, lemon, primrose, cream, ivory—up to the glorious fount of light before whom the spirits veil, and from whose radiant glory the touch of life is lit.—Selected.

The Signs.

The shadows gather at sunset, the day is fading fast;
The night begins to lower, work-time will soon be past;
But the night is the night of summer, and darkness will disappear;

Already I see the dawning, the sun will soon be here.
So, settling down in the nations, I hear the noise of war;
I see them in confusion, I hear the ocean roar;
The elements in commotion, the earth is rocking 'round;
But the same God rules the heavens, his grace doth still abound.

So tho' old parties clamor, and kingdoms cease to be,
I'll trust in the loving Jesus, the only king for me.
The waves may drown the body; my soul is safe with him;
And earthquake, fire, and bloodshed his love will never dim.
'Tis only the great commotion before his chariot track,
'Tis only the greater sunrise, driving darkness back;
'Tis the last great stand of Satan before his final fall,
The earthquake breaking rocks apart to build our Zion's wall.
So trust, and fear not, brother; 'tis only a little while,
Before you'll hear the trumpet, and see the Savior's smile; Hailstones, tempest, and earthquakes; war and famine and woe
Betoken the early coming of the Lord we've learned to know.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Daughters of Zion Reading for October.

WORKERS TOGETHER WITH GOD.

So much has been written on the subject of womanhood, and motherhood, by abler pens than mine, that I hesitate to offer anything in that line; yet, if I could set forth clearly the thoughts that were once presented to me (while sitting under the sound of the gospel, though not hearing the words) I believe it would be a help to many a weary mother, a stimulant to bear up under the cares, worry, and many trials, in accomplishing the work of bearing and rearing her family. I am aware that I can not present the whole, but just a few of the leading points. Nor do I claim that they are new thoughts. It was the light of the Spirit attesting to what one already knows, bringing it home to the understanding with greater force; so that I saw with unmistakable clearness, that woman's first and highest duty to herself, and to her Creator, is to seek to develop herself in all womanliness, with a view to the life and duties that fall to the common lot of woman, and thus honor her Creator in carrying out his purpose in creating her a woman; in a word, to fill the measure of her creation. And, that not to do so, was a neglect that would be fraught with serious loss to her in the hereafter.

This development, as I saw it, was not what is called "accomplishments," but the continuous attaining to those inward graces which make woman a queen in her realm (her household), the first step towards which lies in the cheerful acceptance of the situation that confronts womankind; viz.: domestic life with all its duties, and motherhood with all its responsibilities; looking the situation squarely in the face in early life, as ordained for her by an all-wise Creator, and believing that it is her reasonable service to perform her part in the great drama that is being enacted since the world began; not with a protest, nor a wish that she had not been made a woman, but turning her mind to her own sphere of action, and cultivating a love for, and contentment in her work, and an ambition for excellence therein, which will result in the greatest accomplishments to which woman can possibly attain; the summing up of which is beautifully expressed in the words of the poet:

"A partnership with God is motherhood;
What strength, what purity, what self-control,
What love, what wisdom, should belong to her,
Who helps God fashion an immortal soul."

God has said, "This is my work, and my glory; to bring to pass the immortality, and eternal life of man." But man must be, ere he can have immortality, and eternal life. And it devolves upon woman to bring mankind into the world. Upon her depends, not the "nation" only, but all the countless hosts of the human race, that shall augment the glory of God in the world to come. Truly God has ordained that she shall be a worker together with him.

Therefore mothers, you who must needs spend the best years of your life right at home with your little family, be not discouraged; nor think that because you can not now extend your help abroad, you are not doing anything for the work of the Lord. God has wisely ordained that the great work that is allotted you, must come in the best years of your life; and while those years have been passed in what has appeared to be one monotonous round of domestic duties, for which you may think there is nothing to show, at the end of the week, month, or year, you are,—if raising a family, and doing the best you can to care for all that have come to you,—doing the greatest work of your life, without realizing its greatness; in that you have heeded the injunction given in the morn of creation, viz.: "Be fruitful and multiply"; and if you have implanted in the youthful minds of your children the principles of obedience, truthfulness, kindness, and justice, you have done a good missionary work.

It is true that suffering and self-sacrifice mark the footsteps of every true mother in performing faithfully her part in the joint work of replenishing the earth. But there is no suffering, willingly undergone in the path of duty, that will not be rewarded by the righteous Judge. Christ, our great prototype, suffered for humanity. And through his willingness to endure and suffer what he did, he became heir to his Father's kingdom. We know not what is in store for the faithful mother of a family, who regards the care of her children as being too important to trust to an hireling. But we do know that there is no vocation in life where all the graces in the catalogues, one might say, especially patience, cheerfulness, firmness and gentleness, sympathy and self-control, are so constantly needed as in the domestic circle; nor is there any other vocation so well calculated to bring those virtues into action and development; and it is the possession of those graces that constitutes the real woman. Therefore, domestic life, and the care of children—tiresome as it oftentimes is—is in truth the crowning life for woman.

There is yet another branch of this partnership of the human and the divine in which woman is assigned an honorable position, so sacredly honorable that I feel to bow my head while attempting to portray it. Did you ever think of it sisters, of the domestic family being the type of the human family? At the head of the great human family are the Father and the Son. And as the man stands to the domestic family, as head of his house, father of his children, the provider, protector, and controller of the temporal destinies of his household, typifying the All-father of the human race, so the mother in her relation to the family, typifies in some respects the work of the Son of God in behalf of mankind. Does she not pay a price of suffering for all her children? And as the Son tasted death for every man, that he might have life more abundantly, so she enters the portals of death, as it were, and suffers pangs none others know—save those who give life—that all those given her may have life. And has it not oftentimes been said that the love of a mother for her children is akin to that of Christ for the world, in that no waywardness or sinfulness of her child will separate him from the mother-love? And will she not instinctively save her child at the expense of her own life? And how like a mother are the words of Jesus to his disciples just prior to his leaving them, calling them "little children," and persuading them to love one another. And how the great mother-heart cried out to his earth-worn children, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Just as the mother calls to her tired, fretful little ones, "Come to mother, and she will take you up and rest you."

Oh, sisters! throughout the church, why can not we who have received the gospel, whose light has illumined every path of life, and by which we have learned some of the conditions of the life to come—I say, why can not we view by faith this great partnership work, the work for which the world was created, and in which we all have a part, and perform each our allotted part as doing all things to the glory of God, knowing that now while we see as through a glass darkly we can not discern the whys and wherefores of this life, but by and by all the wonderful works of God, and the glory thereof, will be revealed. Then we will know that all our burdens and crosses were prepared by a loving father; that our joy in the life to come may be greater.

If the weary mothers could but hold those thoughts in mind, how it would enhance and almost glorify what otherwise seems to be menial toil.

I have not written of this "partnership" to extol my sex; but as an incentive to our young sisters to see the grandeur of domestic life. Though, as was said to me in a dream, "It does not seem like it when you are rubbing away at the board, does it?"

Questions on October Reading.

How should the development in womanliness be regarded? How should we regard the duties which fall to the common lot of woman? Is there present as well as eternal loss to woman in neglecting these duties? What are the inward graces which make woman a queen in her realm? How may these be attained? What advantage is there in looking the situation squarely in the face in early life? What is the great drama of life? What is woman's reasonable part in it? Can we cultivate a love for something which at first does not appeal to us? What incentive is there for excellence in woman's work? In what two senses is woman a worker with God? What is the greatest work of woman? Are the best years of her life lost if spent in this work? Is it of less importance to teach gospel principles in the home than to preach them to the world? What graces are best developed in the home? Why is the home life the crowning life for woman? In what other sense does woman enter into partnership with God? How is her work of comforting her children like that of Christ? What must be the relation between husband and wife to give the best results from their work for their family?

Program for October.

Hymn No. 111, Saints' Hymnal; prayer; reading from Home Column, with discussion; paper, "The partnership of husband and wife in the care of the family;" roll call; business; hymn No. 132; closing prayer.

Editors Herald: It has been some months since my last communication to your interesting periodical. The fact that I have not written is not an evidence that I have lost interest in the church paper, for I am very much interested in it, and feel to congratulate the editors for its present form, which is a great improvement, and for the wholesome and instructive matter that its pages contain from week to week. I am pleased to inform you of the favorable comments that are being made by the Saints throughout my travels upon the work of the editors and the contents of the HERALD. This should be very encouraging and stimulating to ye editors. Doubtless it is good to learn that our efforts are being appreciated by some at least. But in this case it seems that they are appreciated by very many, judging from the comments we hear.

Soon after last writing you, I received word that my mother was very ill. I hastened to her bedside and had the pleasure of helping to care for her during her last hours upon earth, and the end came to her earthly career on the 29th of December. On the first day of the new year we laid her mortal remains to rest by the side of my father, whose demise took place thirty-five years and three days previously. Had my mother lived six weeks longer she would have been eighty-eight years old. She bore strong testimonies during her sickness to the divinity of the latter-day work, and seemed anxious to take her departure, and to be at rest in the paradise of God. She had been a Latter Day Saint sixty-two years, having been baptized in 1844, the year in which Brn. Joseph and Hyrum were killed.

As soon as I arrived home, she informed me that she was sick unto death, notwithstanding that her children at home did not believe it. Then she told me the following incident, which I here relate, which evidences that God was mindful of her, and that she was accepted of him. She stated that just a few nights before she was taken sick, a messenger came in through the front door, walked up to the center-table, upon which she had a lighted lamp, took a book out of his pocket, and detached therefrom two leaves and placed them on the table. She was anxious to know what the meaning of all this was, and she was given to understand that there were two summons, calling herself and my eldest sister, Margaret Thomas, to the spirit world; that she would die first, and my sister would soon follow her in death. I tried to persuade her that it was only a dream, and that we could not always rely upon every dream, but she could not be made to believe that it was a dream, and that what she had seen would not come to pass. However, just three weeks and one day subsequent to my mother's death my sister died suddenly, while sitting in a chair, while the family were preparing for bed. Hence, what was given my mother was true after all, notwithstanding we had tried to persuade her to believe that there was nothing in what she claimed she had seen, intimating to her that the time of her departure and that for my sister had come. The death of my loving mother and dear sister so close together was a sad trial to us all; but we do not feel to sorrow as those who have no hope, because we know, so far as their future is concerned, all is well with them. My sister had been a member of the church for sixty years, being baptized when she was eight years old, in 1846.

The reunion held at Akron, Ohio, from the second to the eleventh of August, was a great success. A larger attendance was had this year than last. The various services were attended in a marked manner by the presence of the Spirit. The preaching was good and edifying, and apparently enjoyed by all present. Love and unity obtained from beginning to end. Those kind of meetings and gatherings have a tendency to unite the Saints in brotherly love, and to strengthen them and encourage them to continue in the warfare.

I have just returned from attending the Pittsburg District Conference held at Glen Easton, West Virginia. It was the largest gathering of Saints ever held in that place, and the outsiders were present in great numbers, insomuch that from fifty to one hundred had to remain outside during the preaching services. The resident Saints demonstrated their ability to amply provide for the wants of the visitors. All that were present will testify that we had a feast of good things, and they will not soon forget the glorious experiences they enjoyed upon the top of the hills of old West Virginia. The business was transacted in peace. In fact all was peace. The traveling and local ministry worked together harmoniously, and separated with confidence in each other, and with a desire and determination to uphold each other in the conflict for the right.

"How pleasing to behold and see The friends of Jesus all agree."

Two weeks ago, after nearly twenty-two years sojourn in Kirtland, I moved my family to the city of Columbus, Ohio, and I herewith give notice that my home address is 1463 Pennsylvania Avenue, Columbus, Ohio. I call attention of the ministry in the eastern wing of the mission, especially, to the above notice, as I have not heard from some of them for some time. We would like to know as to their whereabouts, and what they are doing along gospel lines.

We were pained to hear of the death of Bro. Clark of British Columbia, and Bro. Tullar of Seattle, also young Bro. Ed Pankey of Santa Ana, California. We often think of our good and dear Saints on the Pacific coast.

Trusting that all is prosperous in Zion, I remain,
Your colaborer in the one covenant,

Editors Herald: As some of your readers desire to hear from the writer occasionally, I will say I am still battling for the right, as I understand it. The work in this part of the "sunny South" is progressing fairly well.

The last ten days I spent with the Flat Rock Saints. I enjoyed my stay there very much. The Saints are kind and generous, as a rule, and appreciated my visit with them. A good many had sore eyes, which hindered meeting considerably, and gave the elders a chance to sample bachelor cooking, but there was no reason for complaint on that ground. The meetings were fairly well attended, considering the weather and conditions of health.

Saturday, the 8th, I had the pleasure of baptizing Sr. Ella Deason, and Sr. Beulah Baldwin, and blessing the latter's baby. I believe they will be good faithful Saints. I am now trying to get to the Lone Star Branch. I have not been there since last fall, and I think I was the last missionary there, or rather Bro. Hansen and I were. Still I hear good reports from there, and hope to do some good.

I am in hopes I can get to Jones' Mills and Steadham before the debate at Bay Minette, October 7; but if I can not I will try to get there later. Oh, that there were "more laborers" in the vineyard of the Lord!

The Saints here at McKenzie and at other places where I have been, are trying to push the good work along, and are doing well. There are some in the mission who could do better; but there will be some "foolish virgins." May God bless all, and help them to do more, is my prayer.

Your brother in the faith,
J. M. STUBBART.

DERBY, England, September 5, 1907.

Editors Herald: The work in this locality does not move along as fast as we wish, but still we are not dismayed. We have been favored recently with a visit from two of the missionary force, W. H. Greenwood and Thomas Taylor, who have labored diligently in the interests of the church, and have altogether spent about five weeks here, lifting up the warning voice and pointing out to the people that the creeds of the various religious institutions were out of harmony with the Scriptures. This, of course, was considered an attack upon their churches, and all combined to strongly oppose us and our work. But we could not help observing how ignorant some of the people were as to what was in the Bible, having been blinded by the traditions of men.

But, oh, how tenaciously they clung to their creeds! Some even doubted the authenticity of the Bible on several points, in order to bolster up their false doctrines. Truly these are the days when they teach for doctrine the commandments of men. The confusion at times became great, when you might have thought we were at Ephesus speaking against "Diana of the Ephesians." No wonder that many honest-hearted people have fallen from the ranks of the churches, when they see the characteristics of many who claim to be followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. So intense was the excitement and rush of the people that the only way the brethren could get a hearing, or rather breathing-room, was to purchase an empty tea-chest from a grocer hard by. Then the strong voice of Bro. Taylor could be heard all over the market square, calling to repentance.

All kinds of sin and wickedness are so strongly and openly condemned by Bro. Taylor, that I understand in one place where he labored, when he was seen by the bystanders to go and take up his usual place to preach, they said, "Here comes the terror to evil-doers."

It is surprising how few there are who are willing to investigate this good, old "latter-day work." How true the words of the Savior: "Narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." "Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" These and many other passages seem to point to these days; and seeing the confusion on every hand, in and out of the churches, all in the writer's opinion, go to prove our position to be a correct one, that there was and is need for God to speak from the heavens in these latter days. What a fortunate condition we are in then, having been delivered from the shackles and traditions of men; but upon the other hand, how great the responsibility we are under who are assured that this is the Lord's work, and have been chosen as his servants, to tell the gospel story. We feel our inability many times, when speaking for the Lord and his work, and sometimes mourn that we do not see greater results. But we are satisfied if we sow the good seed, God will give the increase. This is a most difficult country in which to make converts to our church. There is little or no disposition to listen to our message. However, we still continue the conflict, and leave the rest with God.

Your fellow-servant,
JOSEPH ECCLESTONE.

EAST PHARSALIA, New York, September 12, 1907.

Editors Herald: Came to this place last Friday. Found two families of Saints here. Have not had any preaching for nearly two years. They were beginning to think they were forsaken by the elders, but they were still strong in the faith of the restored gospel. Have a neat little church here, but no one to preach to them, so the church has been left closed. Last Sunday had preaching, with a congregation of six, the preacher making the seventh. Enjoyed fair liberty; did not want the Saints to think the preacher blue because of the smallness of the congregation, so had meeting on Wednesday evening, with seven beside the preacher. Held a meeting Thursday with eight beside the preacher. Gave out appointments for Sunday afternoon and evening. To the surprise of the Saints, we are creating some interest. Will hold on as long as we can get a hearing.

Yours in gospel bonds,
SAMUEL BROWN.

MENTIER, Texas, September 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: I was taken sick last April, the 9th, and was confined to my bed thirty-seven days, and during twenty of those days no one thought I could live; but the good Lord made known to me by a vision that my work was not yet done. And, by the power of God, I was raised up and permitted again to go forth with the gospel to the children of men.

Bro. P. B. Bussell and I started out on the 10th of June to tell the good news of glad tidings. From that date we have held six series of meetings, averaging about ten days each. Our crowds ran from fifty to four hundred, and we have baptized some noble people. As fine interest was manifested as I ever saw. Often at the close of meetings the people would come forward to shake hands with us, saying we had the truth, and leave money in our hands, kindly asking us to come back again. And let me say here, brethren, let us overcome the world with love, kindly asking the people to take shelter under the white flag of peace.

The prospect for gospel work in this country is very bright at this time. The people in this part of the field are undergoing some of the judgments of God. The boll-weevil is eating up their cotton crops, and corn is not very good.

Bro. Bussell and I started to Adamson, Indian Territory, on the 13th of August, to attend district conference and reunion to begin at that place the 16th of August. Met with some noble Saints and a few outsiders, also quite a number of our missionaries, among them Bro. I. N. White, minister in charge, from whom we learned many grand lessons.

Bro. Bussell was just put in the missionary field this year. He is moving along nicely. We think he will make a good worker. He and I will do what we can to get the gospel before the people in this country.

Praying for the spread of the gospel,

E. A. ERWIN.

EMERSON, Iowa, August 28, 1907.

Editors Herald: Dear brothers and sisters, as I write this morning my heart aches for the children of God, for it seems to me that we do not improve the opportunities as we should. When a Saint moves into our neighborhood we are the last to go and see them, and some times we go not at all; but frequently outsiders are very kind and assist them, and if they have children not in the church they gain an influence over them. I think Saints should help one another.

I love this grand work, and have been blessed many times. I stand alone in my family, without my husband's help, and it seems that my influence is not strong enough to hold my children. They are very sensitive and feel hurt when slighted in any way.

As Saints, we know that the signs follow the believers of this grand work. I was very sick and weak, and I had my family of little children to look after. And while in prayer before the Lord there was brought to my mind a commandment found in James 5: 14, 15: "Is any sick among you, let him call for the elders of the church," etc. I did not want to bother my husband to go for an elder, so, as he was going to town, and right past Bro. Levi Gamet's, I got in the wagon and went that far, and I was so sick it seemed I could not stand it till we got there. After prayer Bro. Gamet administered to me, and the weakness left, and how glad and free and joyous I felt! I never will forget it. It is a grand thing to know that our God is a kind and loving God; and I am so glad that we can represent him as a loving Father.

Let us strive to break away from our pride and selfishness, and learn to love one another, thus fulfilling the law,

Your sister,

JANE FLOWERS.

LLANSAMLET, Wales, September 4, 1907.

Editors Herald: A few words from this place may be interesting to some, especially those who have emigrated to America in the last few years. I dare say that the work of God in Wales is dear to their hearts yet. Owing to so many leaving this locality, the branch at Llansamlet was discouraged, and I was left almost by myself here, and consequently I felt rather discouraged for a time; but I did all I could for the work, under the circumstances. Now I have great pleasure in stating that the branch has been reorganized, and we are holding meetings regularly at Llansamlet and Skewen. I do not remember of any meetings being held before at Skewen by the Reorganized Church. We are having excellent meetings in both places at present, under the divine guidance of the Holy Spirit, and the hearts of the Saints are filled with heavenly joy. The conference of the Western District of Wales was held at Neath last Whitsunday under the care of our branch, and proved to be a success.

Five have been added to our branch by baptism since the last district conference, and they are getting on nicely. Recently we have organized a Sunday-school at Skewen under the supervision of Bro. Fred Jones, and no doubt with a hearty coöperation of the officers selected the Sunday-school will prove a success in the place.

I shall be very pleased, at any time, to have a word from the following brethren: David Lewis, Ernest R. Dewsnup, and John R. Gibbs, who have been my collaborators in Christ in this locality for many years. They know my address, but I do not know theirs.

My prayer is that the "church of the Firstborn" will make rapid progress among the nations of the earth.

Yours in the one faith,

DAVID LEWIS.

LEBANON, Missouri, September 6, 1907.

Dear Herald: Your bright pages come laden with precious news. Just closed a series of meetings near Long Lane, Missouri, where I met Rev. Harrell last winter in debate. Had a very interesting meeting. The Christian people were kind enough to open their house for us, and most all of them came out to hear us preach, except my opponent. The Free Will Baptists, many of them, were afraid of their shadows, and were like the mule—established. Last Sunday, we had the pleasure of leading three precious souls into the waters of baptism, viz.: Bro. George Garrett, Riley Hastings and his wife. We left several more near the kingdom, and those baptized, if faithful, will make their mark. We also were assisted in a substantial way by these brethren, and by some who were not members.

Well, not all is sunshine in missionary work. We just came in from the country on a twelve-mile walk, tired and weary; but Sr. Thomas knows how to make a missionary feel at home. We commence a debate here at Lebanon, the county seat, with the Christian people, next Wednesday, September 11. Bro. P. T. Plumb has been with me in these labors, and is doing his part nobly. Pray for us, Saints, and come to the rescue of God's work in a temporal way.

Yours in bonds,

A. M. BAKER.

WILSON, Michigan, September 13, 1907.

Dear Herald: Ofttimes I have read letters from brethren and sisters, and wished I might write also, but could never bring myself to do so. I have never been much of a reader of any of the church papers, much preferring to read novels and other trash. God forgive me for the same; but it is so, and I professing to be a true follower of Christ.

But the other day I thought I would read a piece in the Autumn Leaves, which a brother had called my attention to. It was, "An instrument in his hands." I presume many of the Saints have read it. While I read it the desire came to me to be able to live such a life as Eva may have lived. To be able to bring some one else into the light of this glorious gospel. But in order to do so I knew I must first live as becomes a Saint.

While I believe this gospel to be true, God has never showed me that it is so. I have prayed for the same, but I know unless I try to walk in the steps of my Savior, and do his will, God will not bless me with such.

I have been a member of this church four years. Was baptized by Bro. Wrinkle at a two-day meeting held in Alpena, August 23, 1903. Many times I have stopped and thought of my condition, and promised God to try and do better; but the Evil One, who is always lurking about, seems to be the stronger party and upsets my plans; for when I come to think of it again I find I have stopped far short of what I had intended doing.

Perhaps if I would keep thinking of my resolution after having made it, instead of forgetting it so soon, I would get along better. But it seems I am too weak to stick to it long.

Dear Saints, would you kindly pray for me, that I may be strengthened in this work, and that I may some day receive the knowledge that this is God's accepted gospel. The time is not far hence when we will have to meet our Savior, and I do not wish to be left behind. Pray for me that I may be able to keep my resolution this time, and quit reading what is injurious to me, and read God's word. Oh, if I could only live like some of the Saints can. They seem to be so happy, enjoying God's Holy Spirit from time to time, and feeling they are accepted of him.

Your sister,

MRS. GEORGE E. CARPENTER.

LOS ANGELES, California, September 11, 1907.

Editors Herald: A card from Bro. J. F. Mintun of Des Moines, Iowa, discovers an impostor now going by the name of John Mitchell, using my name as a leverage to filch from the Saints their hard-earned dollars. Please expose him, and give this repudiation as extensive a publication as the occasion demands. I know no such person. He may be using one of his aliases. My advice to every member of the church is to give no money to strangers, it matters not whom they may give as references. I would feed and give a night's lodging to any man who came my way until I learned he was an impostor. Just so soon as I found he was securing money under false pretenses I would carry out the instructions of the Doctrine and Covenants: "deliver him over to the law of the land." These hard luck stories have moved me so many, many times in the past, that I feel now that I am almost immune; at least until the next unfortunate comes around.

Yours for the application of mercy when mercy will do good, but unalterably for the application of justice when necessary.

T. W. WILLIAMS.

1314 East Adams Street.

SPY HILL, Saskatchewan, August 31, 1907.

Saints' Herald: Since writing to you last, the work at Winnipeg has gone on slowly but steadily. Our tent being opposite the fire hall, the meetings were sometimes interfered with by "fire practice," and other noises. Elder R. C. Evans and wife were with us from the 8th to 15th of July inclusive, and our able counselor was well received, the theatre on Main Street being well filled. He baptized four adults before leaving, and helped to straighten out some very tangled knots in branch matters, putting matters on a better working basis. We wish him God-speed. Since then the writer baptized two other adults.

The Winnipeg Branch has some noble Saints, and the president, A. F. Henderson, is trying to push the work, ably assisted by the priest of the branch, W. I. Arnold. A large quantity of literature has been purchased or procured, and from time to time is being distributed through the city, so that many are learning the gospel truths taught therein. The Utah people have ceased trying to proselyte our people, the final blow having been given by R. C. Evans, who ably showed the difference between the two churches, and which was "the apostate."

Bro. George Wilson, after several months' illness, is around once more. He has used his opportunity to talk gospel to those who visited his bedside.

The writer returned home two weeks ago and will spend a month "off the mission field" attending to necessary home affairs. Spy Hill Saints are still holding together amidst difficulties, under the able leadership of Bro. W. S. Carter. A few outsiders attend the Sunday-school and church services, but prejudice is very strong here. We expect the rails to be laid on the Grand Trunk Pacific this fall, when Spy Hill will have direct communication with Winnipeg. Bro. John Clarke is our able Sunday-school superintendent, and is still earnest and hopeful.

Yours fraternally,

ALFRED DORSETT.

TUNNEL HILL, Illinois.

Editors Herald: About the 4th of August, Bro. F. M. Slover came down to this place, saying that he had received a letter from the hand of W. G. Roberts of the Christian or Campbellite Church, telling him that he would begin his "exposé of Mormonism" August 6, 1907, at the Christian church, about five and one half miles southeast of Vienna, in this (Johnson) county.

Prior to this time some parties in both churches had been trying to work up a debate between the Christian Church and our church, so church propositions were agreed upon between Bro. Slover and Elder Roberts, but no time had been agreed upon. Elder Roberts notified Bro. Slover that the debate would begin August 6, whether he (Slover) was there or not, and that he would begin his "exposé of Mormonism."

In the afternoon of the 6th I took Bro. Slover down, it being a very sultry afternoon. We drove into Vienna, and resting until about six thirty o'clock, we started for Bethlehem church to hear what Bro. Roberts had to say about our people.

When we reached the church, services had begun, so we tarried awhile, until near the close of the meeting. After Bro. Roberts had finished his sermon, we went into the church unrecognized, and of course we had the privilege of listening to the closing remarks by Roberts and his brethren that came with him.

They could not see why Slover had not come to begin the debate; one supposed one thing, and another something else, until one of them thought of a capital idea: that "Elder Slover had received a revelation within the last few days," and of course we sat still until everything was over, and after they had declared everything off, no debate, etc., we were "dismissed for the present." After all these things had transpired under our own observation, Bro. Slover let himself be known. After some counselling over this disappointment, Slover and Roberts agreed upon time of the debate, as none had ever been agreed upon.

Some peculiar features arose the next day (August 7) concerning the debate. It seemed that a part of the Christian brethren wanted to hear the discussion, and the others did not want it at all, and used their influence to keep it down.

I left Bro. Slover and came back to my home August 7, and at the evening meeting of that day the congregation voted to have the debate. I was notified at once to come back as the debate was on hand. Bro. Slover went into the debate alone the first session, but one of the Christian brothers acted as his moderator until I could get there, and then I assisted him as moderator until the close. Each party affirmed his church. The debate lasted for ten sessions; five sessions to each proposition.

The debate was fairly well attended, and a fair interest manifested. We found many friends, received their hospitality, and, in fine, we feel that the Lord's work never suffered in the least. Bro. Slover was fully competent to meet his opponent, and met him honorably and successfully. Some interesting features were noticeable during the debate, yet this is true perhaps of all debates. We feel that the Lord blessed us in this effort, and we give him all the praise, for whatever good might have been accomplished.

The circumstances around us caused us to think that the Lord is hastening his work, and that the time is near at hand when this gospel shall be preached in all the world as a witness against the world.

How pleasant the thought that when the latter-day work is assailed by even the wise and cunning, the Lord gives his Spirit, which will enable his weak servants to uphold the banner of Christ and meet the false accusations which are brought against his church.

I am contented in this gospel, looking forward to the time when Zion shall be redeemed, praying that God will give me strength to press onward and that "we all may come to a unity of the faith," and be saved in the kingdom of God.

In the hope of the gospel,

E. W. SUTTON.

GALES FERRY, Connecticut, September 8, 1907.

Dear Herald: It is now over sixteen years since I heard and accepted the gospel of Jesus Christ restored, and although I was taught to lead a strictly honest life before I heard it, the gospel has been a blessed help to me, and I can gladly say, Praise God for showing me the light. I can see marked improvement in the church in all departments, and am so glad for the sanitarium and children's home. We should gladly care for our brethren and our little ones. The Saints should be gathered, and there should be no poor among us; but we should be equal in temporal things, that our heavenly Father may bless us with a fullness of spiritual blessings. It is not God's will that we should be ignorant, poor, or sick. He wants us to be happy, strong, noble, and good, loving one another with that love which will cause us to see that our brother's daughter or son needs as good a chance to get an education as our own; or that our brother, who happens not to be gifted to make money or get the good things for his family that we enjoy, may share with us.

Saints, how many of us will be equal next Thanksgiving time, or next Christmas? I am satisfied after fifteen years observation, that because of ignorance concerning the gathering, the Saints do not move out towards Zion; I do not see that we are any nearer the gathering than we were fifteen years ago. There must be something done besides talk. It is not practical for the tail to lead; the head must go ahead. If the leaders of God's people would take the lead, the faithful Saints would follow. I have a fine herd of grade Jersey cattle, valuable horses, and some ready cash, all of which I consider belong to the Lord and my brethren. The Bible says that after Christ's ascension the Saints had all things common, neither said any that aught that he possessed was his own.

I long for the time to come when we may be gathered in hamlets and towns in Zion, with our own schools, and be able to care for our sick and infirm, with that love and cheerfulness that will make their lives more happy and cheerful.

I admire the spirit of love the Catholic sisters show in visiting the sick and teaching the parochial schools. Many times have I watched them caring for their little brethren, and surely the spirit they show is commendable.

Sr. Walker's article in last HERALD is worthy of note, concerning the teachers for Graceland. Brethren, let us with willing minds place our substance at the apostles' or bishops' feet, and ask our heavenly Father to give them wisdom to direct the gathering of God's people.

Bro. Cushman was at our home, and although a Methodist preacher for many years, is now a staunch servant of Christ, and won our respect by his consistency and true worth.

I have many things to try me, the hardest of which is that my only sister is confined in an insane asylum. She is a member of the church, and I ask all Saints to pray that, if it be according to God's will, she may get well. With love to all, I am,

Your brother in the gospel,

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

CENTRALIA, Washington, September 17, 1907.

Dear Herald: I am pleased to send in another order for some of the church books. I found some isolated Saints in the wilds of Washington who are deprived of the association of the Saints; one Bro. Elsworth who had not heard a sermon for eighteen years, nor had he had the sacrament, consequently had become spiritually lean, but still had retained a desire to serve the Master, and rejoiced to be able to partake of the bread of life once more. His son-in-law and daughter, Bro. and Sr. Walden, with their family, have also lived here (at Willapa) for three years, and rejoiced to hear the word preached again. It is a lawless community. We were compelled to abandon one point, and move to another schoolhouse on account of rowdiness; but we purpose trying it again in the some time future, and we shall adopt measures to compel quietness.

I delight in the Master's work, when blessed with his Spirit; but it is uphill work without it. But I have weathered the storm for twenty years, and am not inclined to ask for a fur-lough.

Yours in the conflict,

WILLIAM JOHNSON.

HONOLULU, Hawaii, August 27, 1907.

Editors Herald: I am forwarding by this mail a tract entitled "Eternal Life," written by Elder Ingham, for publication in the Chinese and Japanese languages. The tract has been submitted to the First Presidency and has been approved by them. As soon as the Chinese and Japanese tracts are ready, we will forward some to the HERALD office.

In a few days I hope to be able to forward you a picture of our new church building. We are pleased to be able to occupy a building of our own for our church meetings, and we find it very convenient and comfortable. We hope to have the building dedicated within the next few weeks.

During the past month we have been doing very well in our church work. On Sunday, August 4, I baptized four individuals—one of the number being a Chinese. On Saturday, August 17, I baptized twelve more; and on Sunday last, five. Of the five baptized last Sunday, three were Japanese, all of whom have been attending the Sunday-school class at Waikiki for some years. In fact, one of them has been in the Sunday-school class since it was first formed in the year 1900. The object in view in starting this Sunday-school was to introduce our work amongst the Japanese. These are the first Japanese who have been baptized into our church here, and we rejoice to see that our labors among them are bearing fruit, and we hope that their coming into the church will open the way for many others of their race to follow. We are encouraged to look for good results in this direction in the near future from the assurance, given at the confirmation of these people by the Spirit, of their acceptance by the Master; and also on account of the promises made to them of future usefulness, if faithful, in the work amongst their own people. This makes a total of twenty-three baptisms in our branch during this month. Our services are also being better attended since we moved into our new church building, and more interest is being manifested by members as well as outsiders. During this month also eight children have been blessed and one young Hawaiian ordained to the office of priest. We are looking for more Hawaiians to be baptized, as some are talking of coming into the church very soon. There is also interest being manifested in our work by some young Chinese, who are beginning to attend our services pretty regularly now. This encourages our young Chinese brother, Too Shau Chin, and gives him an opportunity to work amongst them. I need hardly add, therefore, that Bro. Ingham and I, both, are encouraged with the outlook.

Elder J. D. White is located at Lihue, Kauai, where he is practicing law.

Yours fraternally,

G. J. WALLER.

BOSTON, Massachusetts, September 17, 1907.

Editors Herald: I embark to-day on the steamer Ivernia, of the Cunard Line, for Liverpool, being this far on my way to the Scandinavian mission.

Last Sunday I spent with the Saints here, whom I was pleased to meet, and to find an earnest and devoted band.

I shall be glad at any time to hear from the Saints in America, and if those who have time and inclination to write will address me at Hundslund St., Denmark, it will reach me.

In gospel bonds, H. N. HANSEN.

Southern California Reunion.

The Southern California reunion convened at Seal Gardens, California, August 16 to 26, 1907. The meeting was called to order August 16, at half past seven in the evening, by E. C. Thomas, chairman of the committee. On motion Brn. T. W. Williams, A. Carmichael, and A. E. Jones were to act as associate presidents during the reunion. Other officers were Maggie Pankey, secretary, assisted by G. H. Wixom; Nettie Paulson, organist, she to choose her assistant; R. T. Cooper, chorister; Hugo Adam, assistant; Ray and Albert Knowlton, ushers. The order of meetings was left with the presidency. The speakers of the reunion were R. C. Evans, F. A. Smith, and F. M. Sheehy. Many grand sermons were delivered during the ten days, and the body extended to them their appreciation for their wise counsel and efficient work while with us, and an invitation to come again.

We were given through tongues, that the Lord was ready and willing to bless his people, if they were humble, and would be united, and that Zion would have been redeemed ere this had the Saints complied with the law.

The committee appointed for the coming reunion, 1908, were Sylvester Garner, Nathaniel Carmichael, E. C. Thomas, G. H. Wixom, and L. Hemenway. The time and place of holding the next reunion was left with the committee.

MAGGIE PANKEY, Secretary.

Extracts from Letters.

Mrs. Jennie A. Holt, Painesville, Ohio, R. F. D.: "I would like to correspond with any of the Saints who would like to write to me. Am sure it would be of help to me, and do much good. I am glad to be numbered with the Saints of God. It means a great deal."

J. R. Hacker, Big Cabin, Oklahoma: "We would like to have Elder Walters and Elder Lee Quick come down here and preach for us, as a good many outsiders are interested in the work."

News From Branches

DES MOINES, IOWA.

The writer recently secured the two volumes of John L. Stephens' work, "Incidents of Travel in Central America, Chiapas, and Yucatan," the volumes bearing date of 1841. These are valuable books.

The census of Iowa, for 1905, under the head, "Church statistics, property and membership," lists the following organizations in Polk County: Baptist 3, Catholic, Christian, Christian Science, Congregational, Episcopal, Friends, Dunkard, Jewish, Latter Day Saint, Lutheran, Methodist 4, Presbyterian 2, Salvation Army, Unitarian, United Church of God, and United Brethren. A total of 111 organizations, and 108 churches. Under the head, Latter Day Saints, it gives two organizations, two church buildings, valued at $5,200, seating capacity of 650, membership 375, Sunday-school scholars 132, and one parsonage valued at $800.

Two were baptized on Sunday, August 25, and two on September 15.

Elder J. F. Mintun attended the district reunion at Rhodes the last week in August and the Western Iowa reunion the second week in September.

The Ladies' Aid Society held a sociable September 17, the proceeds to be used in carpeting the church. A. A. REAMS.

FIRST KANSAS CITY.

The weather is very pleasant, and the congregations at all our meetings are much better than during the hot season. The preaching has been spiritual and instructive. The speakers have been Brn. D. F. Winn, John Kaler, William Clow, R. Winning, and others.

At our business-meeting, our deacon, Seth Sandy, was recommended to the Stake conference to be ordained an elder, and our teacher, M. Leeton, a priest. Our Sunday-school and Religio are leading features in the progress of our branch. Russell and Lester Warnky came home from St. Louis last Sunday morning to visit their parents for the day and then return; but to their surprise Bro. and Sr. Warnky were both gone from home to the stake conference.

Elder John Kaler is preaching every night at the house of President D. F. Winn, east of the church, where many of the Saints live.

F. C. WARNKY.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

The work in this part of the Lord's vineyard seems to be progressing nicely. On last Sunday five were inducted into the kingdom by Bro. Goodrich. The sacrament was administered at the evening prayer-meeting, the five who were baptized were confirmed, three babes were blessed, and the Spirit of God was present to cheer, comfort, and instruct. It was a time of rejoicing. At the morning service Bro. David Powell, of Stewartsville, gave us a stirring address, replete with good things; and in the evening we were treated to an excellent sermon by Bro. Goodrich.

Quite a number of the Saints here attended the Stewartsville reunion, and it has been generally conceded by them that it was one of the best and most successful ever held there, in all respects.

We are deeply thankful to say that our beloved Bro. Carl Kinnaman, who has been so very seriously ill, is recovering rapidly. Bro. Kinnaman has been remarkably blessed, and God has shown his omnipotent power in his behalf, to the astonishment of the world and the gladdening of the Saints. His malady, ptomaine poisoning, was pronounced fatal by the three physicians who attended him, and they freely confessed that he was beyond all earthly help. But, ah, thank God, we are not dependent on the arm of flesh, as has been demonstrated in his case. Bro. Joseph Luff was summoned from Independence, and his care given in the fear of the Lord. The heartfelt prayers of the Saints, and the administration of the sacred ordinance of the church for the healing of the sick, have proved effectual in bringing the blessing which it was beyond the power of man to bestow. With what fervor can we say, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Bro. William Lewis, of Scranton, Pennsylvania, is with us, called by the sickness of Bro. Kinnaman.

Sr. Josephine Islieb, who has been studying music in a Boston conservatory of music for the last eighteen months, is visiting her parents and friends for a few weeks, after which she will again take up her studies in Boston.

Bro. and Sr. M. Shaw have bought a nice little grocery business, in which we sincerely hope they will be as successful as they deserve to be.

Sr. Goodrich leaves to-morrow for a visit with relatives in Holden.

Bro. Gilbert Whitehead has purchased a nice residence near the church, and will take possession soon.

EDITH M. COCHRAN.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

The branch presidency being in attendance at the Holden reunion, presiding priest, W. H. Deam, had charge of all the services Sunday. Bro. Joseph Arber occupied the morning hour, and President Joseph Smith at night. Sr. R. C. Evans is visiting Independence Saints, Bro. Evans being at reunion. We are glad to welcome Bro. Ray Davis and family in our midst, they having just arrived from Oakland, California. Some of our most faithful helpers in Sunday-school and Religio work leave next week to attend Graceland College. We shall miss them, and they may be assured of a hearty welcome back when the college year is ended, and feel sure that they will find a place in the church work among the Lamoni Saints.

Bro. Arthur Allen is superintending the building of the sanitarium, and the work is progressing. Maybe some people think that there is nothing being done about the sanitarium, here in Independence. The fact is, the building is being built. Of course we are all GOING to help, but a whole lot of that help is needed now.

Bro. Paul Craig, who is visiting his sister in Nauvoo, writes us encouragingly of the work there.

At the fair being held in Independence this week, several of our people contributed to the exhibits, and were quite successful in securing first and second prizes.

Bro. D. J. Krahl, now of Independence, was chosen by the stake Sunday-school association to succeed Bro. W. N. Robinson as assistant superintendent, upon the latter's resignation.

Bro. E. L. Kelley, and daughters Jeanette and Laura, are attending reunion at Moorhead, Iowa.

J. A. GARDNER.

LAMONI, IOWA.

John Smith was the speaker at the chapel Sunday morning; E. O. Clark, of Des Moines, in the evening. A. S. Cochran occupied at the Saints' Home, Roscoe Willey at Liberty Home.

The local ministry occupied as follows: Moroni Traxler at Wion in the evening; Charles Jones at Andover morning and evening; F. M. Weld at Thompson in the morning; L. A. Gould at Evergreen in the evening; R. S. Salyards at Jack Wood's in the morning and at Greenville in the afternoon; William Anderson at Pleasanton; W. R. Dexter at Cleveland;

H. A. Stebbins at Ellston; S. D. and George Shippy at New Buda.

Roy Young and William Shakespeare, of the stake Religio organization, visited the local at Lucas Friday evening, and the local at Norwood Saturday evening. They were joined at Cleveland, Sunday, by J. F. Garver and R. T. Willey of the stake Sunday-school association. At the latter place two special meetings were held in the interests of the auxiliary work. The local, which was partially disorganized, was revived.

Elbert A. Smith returned from Denver, Saturday, where he had been attending a reunion.

On Tuesday of this week occurs the opening of Graceland, William Pitt, of Kansas City, is the speaker. These items go to press too soon for further particulars.

The fall conference of the Lamoni stake will be held at Lamoni, October 26 and 27.

H. A. Stebbins returned from Kansas last week, where he had been laboring for about a month. He preached at the following places: Barnes, Blue Rapids, Netawaka, Fanning, and at St. Joseph, Missouri; twenty-four times in all.

J. F. GARVER.

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS.

On the 16th of August our district Sunday-schools held a grand reunion at the famous old Mormon Springs, on Bro. Gifford's estate. It was certainly a successful venture. Saints came in wagon, in skiffs, and by boat, from across the river; and by wagon and carriage from the Illinois side.

We had big swings, boat-rides, the usual picnic dinner, and a very interesting program and song-service. There were nearly seventy present. Some two dozen were prevented coming on account of rain during the night. We decided that day, that an annual event of similar character would be just the thing; and we expect to meet again next year. It did us good; we are better acquainted, and feel, more than ever, united to serve the Lord more diligently in future, and with more brotherly love and kindness one to another.

Recently Sr. David of the Oakland, California, Branch has moved into town. We are consequently rejoicing. She brings with her three fine boys, the youngest being nine years of age. So our Sunday-school, especially, feels like times are growing better. We hope indeed that she will find conditions such here that they can remain with us. We are anxiously and with open arms awaiting the arrival of any others seeking a home in this stake of Zion.

We have also one other new arrival in our midst—that of Master Adriel Craig Siegfried, born June 3, at Independence. He has never yet stayed away from Sunday-school, Religio, or preaching-service, since coming home to Nauvoo.

Bro. Reiste, of district missionary force, has his tent here and ready to begin meetings this week. They had to be postponed on account of busy times during grape harvest the past two weeks. The grape harvest is heavy, but almost no peaches and apples.

We are pleased to have Bro. Paul Craig visiting with us just now. He has promised to assist us in tent-services with vocal solos and otherwise. He has made some very interesting souvenirs of Nauvoo, paintings from nature.

The street-car line is still in progress, grading being done apparently in earnest; with promise of cars before next year.

Conference Minutes.

INDEPENDENCE.—The thirteenth semi-annual conference of the Independence Stake was held at reunion grounds, Holden, Missouri, Saturday, September 14, 1907, convening at 10 a. m., Heman C. Smith and stake presidency chosen to preside; W. S. Brown and Estella Wight, secretaries. Four hundred ninety-five delegates represented 13 branches with a membership of 3,483. Report from stake officers showed work in good condition. Bishop reported: Cash on hand last report and collected since, $8,719.48; paid out, $8,479.03. Secretary reported net gain in membership of 163, of which 76 were by baptism. Ninety-four of local ministry reported 801 sermons and 67 baptisms; Patriarch Henry Kemp 125 patriarchal blessings. Matter of creating a fund for expenses of local ministry was referred to stake presidency and bishopric. Committee reported concerning ordination of Albert T. Van Brunt, and A. Kenworthy, as having ordained the former, but no action in regard to latter. Stake presidency reported that branch organization at Grand View should be deferred, also in regard to publishing tracts in stake for local work, was not ordered. Committees on ordination, branch organization, and tracts, were continued. Matter of appointing member of library board was left in hands of stake presidency. Religio and Sunday-school reported substantial gains in membership, and good interest in the several departments of the work. Request from First Kansas City Branch asking that Seth Sandy be ordained to office of elder was referred to missionary in charge and stake presidency. Place and time of next conference will be, second Saturday in March, 10 a. m., at Second Kansas City Branch. Resolution granting stake officers authority over branch officers, where latter refused to grant letters of removal to offending members, but where no charge was made, was substituted by a resolution requiring all branches to grant letters of removal to those requesting the same, or proceed to deal with them as the law requires, and show cause why such letters should not be granted. Substitute carried. A resolution carried requiring those who inflict silence upon any of the priesthood, to proceed within thirty days to make charges in regular form before a proper tribunal of the church, thus giving the one charged opportunity to vindicate himself, or be proved guilty. Branches reporting: Independence, First, Second, Third, and Fourth Kansas City, Armstrong, Chelsea Park, Argentine, Lee Summit, Holden, Knobnoster, Pleasant View, and Post-Oak. W. S. Brown, secretary, 2143 Bellview, Kansas City, Missouri.

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.—Semi-annual conference convened August 10, 1907, with the Seattle Branch. President R. C. Evans and Frederick A. Smith being present were called to preside over the conference, with William Johnson to assist, and Frederick W. Holman, secretary. Ministry reporting: Elders William Johnson, John Davis, N. T. Chapman, David W. Davis, John Holmes, Frank Holmes, S. P. Cox, and J. S. Rainey; Priests Arthur W. Gorbatt, Josiah E. Rhoades, George S. Wightman, Isaac McMullen, and George M. Appleman; Deacon James O. Gregory. The reading of the Bishop's agent's (Frank Holmes, located at Roslyn, Washington,) report for the past six months, showed a balance on hand, including an amount of $16.88, unaccounted for, $434.10, February 5, 1907; Receipts, $470.12; expenses, $524.82. Statistical reports of all the branches in the district, eight in number, showed a net gain by baptism of eight, and three by letter of removal, amounting to a total membership of 355. The matter of the division of the district was taken up, which resulted in the giving over of the counties of Klickitat, Kittitas, and Yakima to the adjoining Spokane District, to take effect when ratified by General Conference. Matter of the disorganization of the Castle Rock Branch being next brought up, as provided for in the February conference, next previous, was concluded with the announcement by District President William Johnson, that "all members desiring letters from said branch could obtain them by making application to the district secretary."

A collection of $55.87 was taken up during the preaching services, $11 of which was turned over to Seattle Branch for conference expenses, leaving a balance of $44.87, which was divided equally among the eight missionaries in attendance. Conference adjourned to meet with the Saints at Centralia, Washington, on the second Saturday and Sunday in February, 1908. Frederick W. Holman, secretary, 1202½ Seventh Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

Corrections.

In HERALD for September 11, page 835, first column, fifth line, word crevices should have been cornices.

Same HERALD, second line, last paragraph, Home Column Department, first column of article, "Are we thinking?" should say "eighty-third" instead of "eighty-fifth section of Doctrine and Covenants."

Same HERALD, in branch news from Providence, an unfortunate omission occurred on page 846, second paragraph, second line, in prophecy by Bro. Bullard, obscuring the meaning. The first two lines should read, "Treasure up faith, for you will need in the evil day all the faith you can exercise and command, and if you do not live near me and do those things I command, your faith will be weak," etc. The fifteen words following the word command were omitted. The error was made in typesetting, and overlooked by the proofreader.

JACKSON COUNTY BANK

I take the liberty of soliciting your patronage as we are in a position to do BANKING BUSINESS BY MAIL very satisfactorily. Open accounts can be placed with us for safety at your convenience and command. We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood shorn of all political ambition, with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. I point with considerable just pride (I assume) to our Board of Directors as named below. Feel at liberty to write us on matters that concern you in Jackson County, Missouri.

A VISIT TO THE MUSEUM OF CLIFF-DWELLING RELICS AT DENVER, COLORADO.

During a recent visit to Denver, Colorado, the writer spent some time studying the collection of cliff-dwelling relics in the state capitol building at that place. This collection is one of the most valuable and complete of the kind in the world, being valued at one million dollars.

Of course the primary object of interest is the Cliff-Dweller himself. There are several mummified remains incased in coarse corded cloth and other wrappings on exhibition. The long, matted hair hangs down over the sunken cheeks, and the whole spectacle is calculated to cause an uneasy feeling in a weak stomach. The most perfect remains are those of a woman, a little baby, and another, evidently a man.

A peculiar fascination holds one to the spot and he ponders on what may have been the history of these individuals. What of their loves and hates, their joys and sorrows in their romantic cliff homes in the far past? A little more human interest enters into the study when we thus contemplate them as individuals, and not merely as a race. But of course we can not unravel their individual history when even as a race mystery shrouds their past.

Are these the remains of Gadianton robbers mentioned in the Book of Mormon? In Helaman the fourth chapter and the fifth paragraph the habits of the Gadianton robbers are described, and it is stated that they had their strongholds "in the mountains" and in "the wilderness" and in "secret places," "hiding themselves that they could not be discovered."

While reading this description one's mind naturally reverts to the homes of the Cliff-Dwellers, hidden as they were in the wilderness and the mountains, and in secret places so inaccessible that they can scarcely be entered even now, when their former defenders are no longer living to dispute the way.

Evidently the remains before mentioned are Indian or Lamanitish, at least the long black hair would indicate as much; but the hair of one individual examined was of a reddish brown color, and on the shelves of the museum are over fifty skulls taken from the Cliff-Dwellings of Mancos Canyon, Colorado, and it is clear that many of them are not Indian. Two or three of these skulls would attract attention in any collection of the kind. They are two-story skulls, with high, well-shaped foreheads, and well might rest upon the shoulders of modern scholars or statesmen. They bespeak leadership, and they are not of the Indian type.

An unjust acquisition is like a barbed arrow, which must be drawn backward with horrible anguish, or else will be your destruction.—Jeremy Taylor.

We engaged in conversation with one man who was viewing the collection. He made some claim to a knowledge of ethnology and stated that the conformation of these skulls indicated a peaceable, and not a warlike people. That did not accord with the Book of Mormon theory; but we noticed a well-filled case of axes, hatchets, and spears close at hand, indicating that during life this people knew how to crack a skull on occasion. So far as that is concerned, the craniums of the present occupants of America indicate a peaceable people, yet they are pretty able fighters, and we may add have been quite successful as robbers in more ways than one.

The theory sometimes advanced that the Cliff-Dwellers were a docile race that sought safety from their enemies by building in inaccessible places in the cliffs does not appeal to us as being reasonable. In such an event they would soon have been cut off from every source of supply, as their enemies would have foiled any attempt to descend and cultivate the plains. But as fierce, bold outlaws, hunting and being hunted, such as are described in the Book of Mormon, they could swoop down like the eagle from his eyrie and seize supplies from the peoples of the plains, then they could retreat again to their fastnesses.

Phrenologists have commented on the fact (and it is a fact) that in this collection of skulls there is the greatest imaginable variation. There is not the uniformity and the conformity to type usually noticeable in any group of individuals of one race. This, too, is what might be expected in a society like the Gadianton robbers. They were composed of outlaws, criminals, with great diversity of mentality, ranging from astute political outcasts to the lowest degenerates. Moreover, they came from two races, "dissenters from the people of Nephi . . . and also a certain number who were real descendants of Lamanites." (Helaman 4:5.) A mixing of these two races would have produced a still greater variety of types. We may add that most of these skulls bear marks of violence. They were shattered by the blow of some weapon. What from quarreling among themselves and fighting with the law-abiding Nephites, it is probable that few of the men were permitted to die quietly and respectably of old age. Everything surrounding them seems to spell violence.

Next in interest to the human remains are the implements and other mute evidences of past activities. In one place we noticed nearly a half bushel of bright, clean corn cobs. Near them stood an earthen bowl partly filled with shelled corn. There were also twelve small sheaves of grain or grass, tied about with coarse cord. Quantities of rope are exhibited, looking like hemp, and evidently made from the fibers of the yucca plant.

The remains of a loom are to be seen, showing how at least a part of the time of the women was spent, while the men were out upon less worthy undertakings. The cloth thus woven, at least that in which the mummies were wrapped, is peculiar, feathers and fur being woven into the fabric so that the finished product resembles a robe, or the pelt of some animal. The remains of a musical instrument show that evenings, holidays, and idle moments were enlivened with music. Mortars in which corn was ground suggest the household drudgery that could not be escaped even there; and there is one stone kneading slab on which finger marks can still be seen in the dough and dirt that adhered to its surface. Hundreds of pieces of earthenware are exhibited. These are well proportioned and are covered with neat designs, showing that the makers had an eye for symmetry of outline and harmony of color. We noticed some larger ewers or jars, with a capacity of five or six gallons, that showed the marks of the basket on the outside. The makers evidently mastered the art of weaving before they did the potter's art, and then they learned to line the baskets with clay and burn them. The basket was burned away and a beautifully ornamented piece of earthenware remained.

Rolls of matting are seen, and immediately attract our attention. They much resemble porch screens sometimes used to-day. They were made of willow strips about four feet long and less than half an inch wide. Holes were drilled through these strips and they were strung on cord that much resembles the binder twine of present-day commerce.

We are reminded of the real trade of this people when our attention is called to one exhibit marked armor—wooden slats fastened together and designed to be worn around the body to protect the more vital points. That armor was not unknown to the people of which the Book of Mormon gives a record (both Nephites and dissenters) is shown by several passages which might be quoted, among them being one in Alma 21:31: "And he fastened on his headplate, and his breast plate, and his shields, and girded on his armor about his loins."

Several ladders which are here exhibited show how these people reached their dwellings. They are heavy poles deeply notched on either side to afford foot and hand hold. Wherever an absolutely smooth surface of the cliff barred further upward progress one of these ladders could be planted, and the householder who would take the precaution to draw up one or more of the ladders after him would be safe against attack. Indeed some of the cliff dwellings were so situated that a single able-bodied man armed with a club could defy an army.

We visited this collection on several different occasions and are convinced that the exhibits will repay a more extended study by those who may be permitted to visit it. ELBERT A. SMITH.

DOCTOR O. H. RIGGS DEAD.

On September 14, 1907, the Saints at Independence assembled at their church building to participate in the obsequies over the remains of one of their prominent and much loved members, Doctor O. H. Riggs, whose death had occurred on Wednesday, September 11, 1907, at eight o'clock in the evening. The interment was in the beautiful Saints' cemetery, Mound Grove. Upon the senior Editor of the HERALD devolved the sad duty of preaching the funeral sermon, a duty which was made easier, however, by a knowledge of the universal respect in which the departed was held by the Saints among whom he has sojourned for some years past. The brother was well-known among the Saints as a kindly, dignified, circumspect Christian, and his family mourn not alone.

Bro. Riggs was born July 6, 1843, near Library, Pennsylvania. His boyhood was passed on a farm, being one of ten brothers. Of a family of eleven children, he was the only one to accept the gospel. He early affiliated himself with the Baptist Church, but felt satisfied religiously only when he had accepted the "restored gospel."

He was educated at Bethel Academy and at Currie Institute in Pittsburg, and for some years followed the occupation of a school teacher. In 1874, having gone to Utah, he was appointed by the governor of that State, superintendent of public instruction. Later in life he decided upon the study of medicine as his profession, and went east to qualify himself therefor. He graduated from the Long Island College Hospital, of Brooklyn, New York, and located in Cincinnati, Ohio, where for many years he practiced medicine as a specialist. There he met and married Miss Hattie Fruhauf, who with a daughter, Marie, survives him. Bro. and Sr. Riggs were baptized into the church in September, 1895, by Bro. Rudolph Etzenhouser, at a reunion near Limerick, Ohio. A long cherished hope of the departed brother was to live in Zion and be found among the faithful. He found much enjoyment in being among the people of the church of his choice. The church and its people were very dear to him.

On September 7 Bro. Riggs sustained injuries from a fall which developed a form of pneumonia which resulted in his death. Sr. Riggs and her daughter have the prayers and the sympathy of the Saints in this hour of bereavement. When the condition of Bro. Riggs became serious, his only son, Doctor L. R. Riggs, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was telegraphed for, and reached the bedside of his father just after he had become unconscious. Besides Doctor L. R. Riggs, other relatives of the family who were present at the hour of bereavement were: Mr. H. K. Fruhauf, of New York City; Mr. Samuel Fruhauf, of Cincinnati, Ohio; Mrs. G. Atshool, Cincinnati, Ohio; Miss R. Fruhauf, Cincinnati, Ohio, all brothers and sisters of Sr. Riggs.

We feel that all who have known the genial personality of Doctor Riggs, will be greatly grieved to learn of his demise. His splendid physique, together with the excellent care he took of himself, gave promise of a long life which would keep him among his friends and loved ones for many years yet. We may wonder why a man who by disposition and training is capable of doing so much good among his fellow men should have been called from our midst as was our departed brother; but he who ruleth over all knoweth and doeth all things well, and his will be done. We are grateful, in such hours of grief, that we have a hope which reaches beyond the vale. Peace to the soul of the departed brother, and the consolation of the Spirit to the bereaved.

A CASE OF HEALING.

Sr. Dora Carstenson was healed of a spinal disease, which had caused a curvature upon one side, making that side some two to three inches shorter than the other.

She gives the following account of the affair. A few evenings before the 22d of September, the date of the healing, she was reading her Bible and thinking about her condition, she having been sick for about twelve years, having been treated by several physicians for different ailments, her last affliction being called one thing by one physician, and something else by others, they apparently being unable to agree as to what her trouble was. One told her that her condition was such she would never get over it; that she would be an invalid all her life, and might die at any moment.

The Spirit of the Lord came over her, causing a heavenly feeling, at the same time producing the firm conviction that if she would be administered to by the elders she would be healed.

In obedience to this suggestion of the Spirit, she prepared herself to receive the blessing; and on Sunday evening, after the services of the afternoon had closed, she went to the administration tent, and was administered to under the hands of Elders George Jenkins, James Moler, and C. F. Scarcliff. After this administration was over, she rose to her feet a healed woman, as straight as any other person.

I visited her the following day and she told me the above with her eyes aglow with divine pleasure. She walked about the room with delight, showing me the lower part of her dress which had been cut to suit her condition, one side two or three inches lower than the other.

She is at the home of a Mr. Zehis, living there for about six months. These people are not members of the church, and are much surprised, and wonder if the healing will be permanent.

GRACELAND COLLEGE OPENING.

The outlook for the year's work at Graceland College is very encouraging. President Stewart reports a gain in the enrollment of fully one third over that of last year. Representatives are in attendance from Nova Scotia on the east to California on the west; from Minnesota on the north to Arizona on the south. The dormitory is crowded full, and every room in the self-help department is taken.

Opening day, Tuesday, September 24, was ideal; the weather was Iowa's finest and nothing is better than Iowa's finest or worse than Iowa's worst. The fact that the chapel was crowded evinces a growing interest in college matters. The program was enjoyable and profitable. In the way of music, there was a piano solo by Sr. Helen Silsbee, a song by the Cueur Quartette, and a vocal duet by Sr. Audentia Anderson and Bro. Russell Archibald.

The invocation was by Elder R. M. Elvin. The address of welcome was by President Stewart, who sought to impress his hearers with the importance of the step that the student is taking when he leaves home and enters college. He reminded the students of the parents at home who were sacrificing for them and who would be honored or dishonored by their conduct.

The annual opening address was by Bro. William Pitt, of Independence, Missouri. He defined genius as hard work, and urged his hearers not to substitute a wishbone for a backbone. The audience gave him the closest attention, and his address was worthy the tribute thus accorded it. This address was reported and will appear in the next issue of the HERALD.

Professor Roy Hannum, superintendent of the Lamoni public schools, followed Bro. Pitt with a short speech in which he urged the student to learn the lesson for what is in it, and not merely to pass the examination.

Graceland still works at a disadvantage, not being properly supported, but those who go there and put heart and soul into their work gain a great deal; and we are of the opinion that there are and have been and will be young people in attendance there who will be saved to the church, whose future work will be worth to the church all that Graceland has cost.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

The branch at Philadelphia is preparing to celebrate its sixty-eighth anniversary, October 6. The HERALD editors acknowledge the receipt of an invitation to be present.

Bro. R. C. Russell writes from Chatham, Ontario, as follows:

"A distinguished Abyssinian high priest (colored), Father Checlzli, of the Coptic Church, in his tour through the United States and Canada, recently came to Chatham, Ontario, where in the chief Methodist and Baptist (white) churches he preached to full houses, who highly appreciated his presence, and are untiring in their praises of his orations.

"Since coming to America he has met with varied experiences, one of which deprives him of the privilege of returning to his native country until special privilege is given him. He finds himself in love with an American woman, and if allowed by the home authorities to do so he will take the bride, who lives in one of the Western States. If refused the right, he will marry the woman. He refuses to say anything about her only that she is his affinity. As a high priest he is allowed three wives in Abyssinia. Whether he has taken the three helpmates he is not allowed to state.

"He also states that he is to be deposed by the Abyssinian Government because he has seen fit to carry on amours in this country. He states that his home church believes that Jesus was a black Jew but not the Son of God.

"I purpose delivering a few lectures in Chatham, beginning September 28, the first of which will be, 'Polygamy in Protestantism at home and abroad.'

"To me it is very strange how these churches can muster up the effrontery to denounce Brigham Young and his heresies, while they go hand in hand with his equal whose church says Jesus was a black Jew, not divinely commissioned, and polygamy is divine."

It should be remembered that Sunday, October 6, is "College Day," at which time a collection should be taken in each branch to help maintain the educational work of the church, according to the action of General Conference, "that the expenses of running the College be met by voluntary contributions for the purpose, and that one day in each year be set apart, to be known as College Day, upon which offerings, in the manner of collections, shall be taken up in all districts and branches of the church, to aid the College work."

The new Herald Office is nearing completion. The plastering is done and the interior of the second story is ready for the painters; the first story will be ready this week. The floor is laid in both first and second stories. The flooring is of mosaic tile, in all rooms except the basement, and adds a great deal to the appearance and worth of the building. It is expected that the building can be occupied sometime during October. Light, power, and heat are to be furnished by an up-to-date plant capable of developing one hundred twenty horse power. Electric light lines have been run to various parts of the town and the Office is to furnish the town with twenty-five fifty-candlepower lights, is to light the College and Saints' Homes, and is prepared to light private dwellings. The lighting plant can thus be made a source of revenue to the Office and a benefit to the town.

Perhaps the latest title to be conferred upon the church is found on a recent letter to the editors, addressed to "The Recognized Church of Latter Day Saints." Not a bad title after all.

"No man should be willing to rest his salvation in a system which is not supported by divinity."

"Grant that God can be manifested in the world of nature, is not man a part of Nature, and hence should not be excluded from the indwelling of God? Paul says, God in sundry times and divers manners spoke to our fathers; but in these last days spoke to us by his Son. Here we learn also that he sought by rites and ceremonies to reveal himself to man; and that finally God himself clothed with flesh came among men to teach them more perfectly the way of life."

• * •

"In the main we can not afford to lay our judgment down and place implicit confidence in all people. Jesus said take heed that no man deceive you. There is certainly some way in which this is to receive an application. I am willing that all men should be regarded as innocent until proven guilty. But in each class of humanity there is woven that which will not warrant absolute confidence. God warns us against putting our trust in man and making flesh our arm."

SERMONIC STRATEGY.

Ministers who are vague on the subject of sermon architectonics have commended to them an "awful example." It has been extracted by several religious journals from a late number of the Atlantic Monthly, and conveyed to their clientele. In that magazine a supposed "occupant of the chair of military science describes in the terminology of his own profession a sermon which he heard on the preceding Sunday." It runs this way:

"I went to church yesterday and witnessed a series of operations that filled me with dismay. The minister began by seizing a text as a base of operations. I observed that the base was not secure, but this made less difference, as he was evidently prepared to change his base if the exigencies of the engagement demanded it. His first mistake was one of overcaution. In order to defend himself from an attack from the higher critics, he had strengthened his front by barbed-wire entanglements in the way of exegesis. This was an error of judgment, as the higher critics were not on the field, at least in sufficient force to take the offensive. The entanglements, intended to keep a hypothetical foe from getting at him, prevented him from getting at once at the real enemy. He thus lost the psychological moment for attack.

"While he was endeavoring to extricate himself from his own defenses I trembled for the issue of the affair. Having finally emerged into the open, he was apparently prepared for vigorous operations. I watched intently for the development of his plan. I was bewildered by the rapidity of his evolutions. With a sudden access of courage he would make a wild charge against an ancient line of breastworks which had long been evacuated. Then he would sweep across the whole field of thought, under cover of his artillery, which was evidently not furnished with accurate range-finders. The next minute he would be engaged in a frontal attack on the entrenched position of modern science. Just as his forces approached the critical point, he halted and retreated to his textual base. Reforming his shattered forces, he would sally forth in a new direction.

"At first I attributed to him a masterly strategy in so long concealing his true objective. He was, I thought, only reconnoitering in force, before calling up his reserves and delivering a decisive blow at an unexpected point.

"At last the suspicion came that he had no objective, and that he didn't even know that he should have one. He had never pondered the text about the futility of fighting as 'one that beateth the air.' As we came away a parishioner remarked, 'That was a fine effort this morning.' 'An effort at what?' I inquired."

The Cumberland Presbyterian (Nashville) comes to the rescue of those who, bewildered by the satirical presentation of some of their own efforts, may wonder what the essentials of a sermon are, and gives this trenchant recipe:

"First, that it shall aim to convince the hearers of something which God would have them be or do; secondly, that it shall hit what it aims at."—The Literary Digest, August 24, 1907.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

Is Christian (?) Science (?) the second coming of Christ? Has it reinstated primitive Christianity? We answer, No; but have found that some of the most prominent representatives of that church do claim that Christian Science is the second coming of Christ to earth, and that they have restored primitive Christianity.

In a letter dated Boston, Massachusetts, June 13, 1898, Reverend S. J. Hanna, in answer to the question: "Is Christian Science the second coming of Christ," said: "Christian Scientists have no doubt this is the second coming."

Reverend Hanna was, for many years, editor of the Christian Science Journal and First Reader of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston. A similar question had been sent to Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, the founder of the Christian Science Church, and in reply she directed her secretary, Calvin A. Frye, to write from Concord, New Hampshire, April 21, 1895, as follows: "I am requested to say in the words of scripture, 'Go and tell John the things ye see and hear; the sick are healed, the deaf hear, the lame walk, etc., and blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me.'"

Please take your Bible and read Matthew 11: 1-6, and Luke 7: 19-23, and you will have no doubt but what Mrs. Eddy would have every reader of those texts and of her letter referred to above, to know that she is positive in her own mind that Christian Science is the second coming of Christ to earth.

Mr. Ezra W. Reid, a prominent writer and defender of Mrs. Eddy's claims as a restorer or discoverer, is the author of a leading article on the second coming of Christ in the October, 1897, Christian Science Journal of Boston. Mr. Reid refers to several religious societies as having taught the second coming of Christ; but, having all failed in their expectations, it was left to Mrs. Eddy to present to the world the glorious coming of the Lord in what she proudly advocates as Christian Science. Reverend Reid says:

We can not, within the limits of this article, enter into the discussion of the various beliefs of these people, their differences, and the mathematical, chronological, and historical arguments which prove the time of the second advent; suffice it to say, that from 1843 to 1873 there was quite a widespread expectation that it would occur within that period. In fact, many eminent English standard writers and commentators fixed upon the year 1866 as the year which would bring the Lord and his kingdom. This date is one which especially interests Christian Scientists. . . . Was it co-incidental that Christian Science should have been discovered in the year 1866? As indicated in the above quotation, there is no reason for expecting that the beginning of the new dispensation should be so very different from the years preceding it, that is from the standpoint of mortal man. Are not all of God's works performed through the still small voice? It was in this manner, and in this year of 1866, that Reverend Mary Baker Eddy discovered Christian Science, which, from the testimony of Jesus and the apostles, we feel sure is the second coming of Christ. . . . The kingdom has come, and as the light which is all diffused, is the presence of the Christ.

He also says:

It was the Christ of whom Jesus was the "highest human corporeal concept" . . . who was to come again after the gospel parenthesis; but when Jesus ascended from the Mount of Olives, he laid aside for ever the flesh—body—and "henceforth know we him no more after the flesh."

The above is one more of those "cunningly devised fables," so easily detected by believers in the angel's message to earth (see Revelation 14: 6, 7).

We now present an extract from a sermon by Reverend S. J. Hanna, published in the Christian Science Journal, June, 1907, which gives the following historical account of the coming into organic (?) form (?) of the Christian Science Church. He says:

The early records of this church contain the following interesting and significant item: "At a meeting of the Christian Science Association, April 19, 1879, on motion of Mrs. Eddy, it was voted,—To organize a church designed to commemorate the word and works of our Master, which should reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing." We point to the twenty-eight years of intervening history in witness of the correctness of that early declaration. . . . We do not hesitate to say, therefore, as a matter of current history, that to a most wonderful and gratifying extent primitive Christianity has been reinstated and its lost element of healing established.

From the foregoing account it appears that so-called Christian Science had its beginning through Mrs. Eddy in 1866, and was called an "association" till 1879, when at one of their meetings she made a motion, "to organize a church designed to commemorate the word and works of our Master, which should reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing."

What a great list of restorers and reformers have, since Luther's time, attempted to reinstate that much coveted gospel, primitive Christianity. Has Mrs. Eddy been successful in her proud claims? Verily, no. If, for argument's sake only, we should grant to them the "element of healing," they would have,

according to Paul's account in 1 Corinthians 12: 1-11, only "reinstated" one-ninth of the spiritual gifts named by him; and so far as teaching and practicing the blessed gospel principles of faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, as the Bible directs, they do not do it. Their church organization is so completely out of harmony with divine directions that comparisons would indeed be "odious" to them in their hopeless case.

THREE QUESTIONS.

Following are three questions which I have mailed to the Liahona (a publication of the Utah church in Independence, Missouri,) at two different times, with stamps inclosed for a reply. Having received no reply I inquired of one of the elders employed in the Liahona Office as to why my questions were ignored when questions sent them by other parties were answered. The elder told me that he did not know the reason, but advised me to send the questions to Joseph F. Smith, Jr., who he said had access to all the church records and publications, and would answer my questions. I did so, and you will find below my questions, his answers, and a copy of my reply. I send this to the HERALD, as has been suggested by several of our elders here, who thought that it might be of interest to our people.

1. Inasmuch as the Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 802, gives us to understand that the Inspired Translation of the Scriptures was completed July 2, 1833, and you admit in Liahona, May 4, 1907, that it was given in order that the Latter Day Saints might have the Hebrew Scriptures in the pure form as it was given through the Spirit, why does not the Utah church either publish or use it, as you have admitted they do not, in the above mentioned issue of the Liahona?

2. If polygamy is a principle of God and a celestial requirement (see Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, pp. 59-61), why do you consider it a dead issue? If there are two kinds of polygamy, why was there never a distinction made between the unrighteous and the justifiable kinds, when we find polygamy condemned in such positive terms in both the early church periodicals and books, without even an intimation of there being a righteous phase of it?

3. What made it necessary for the reordination of the Twelve to take place August 6, 1847, and where are your citations of church law permitting same? Inasmuch as the Millennial Star, vol. 6, p. 136, November 30, 1846, says, "Those who are rebaptized should again be confirmed but not again ordained unless they have been cut off from the church," does not the fact of their being reordained indicate their apostasy?

SALT LAKE CITY, July 31, 1907,

MR. J. C. MAY,

Independence, Missouri.

Dear Sir: Your letter of the 27th inst., and accompanying queries are received. I am not surprised that the editor of the Liahona ignored your questions, for were I the editor of that paper the result would have been the same. I can not feel that your questions were asked in the proper spirit with a pure desire for information, but that they were asked in the spirit of contention and criticism. I am not responsible for what may have appeared in the Liahona and will leave those who are to explain their own position. Now for your questions.

(1) There are several reasons that might be given why we do not publish "the inspired translation of the scriptures," all of which need not be considered. One reason is that the work of revising or "translating" was never completed by the Prophet Joseph Smith. In stating this I am thoroughly aware of the expression in the Times and Seasons, volume 6, page 802, to the effect that the translation was finished July 2, 1833. This may be true, for the Prophet had, without question, revised all that he had undertaken to do up to that time; but that does not prove that the entire work of revision was completed on that date. How did he Prophet revise the Bible? By taking up one question and correcting it then others in their turn as time would permit. We have in the historian's office, Salt Lake City, a complete record of this revision, and there are many subjects that have not been revised or corrected as may readily be seen by a careful examination of your printed copy. If the work of revision or "translation" had been completed in 1833, then there would have been no need for the work to have been resumed in 1840, or any other date; nevertheless the Prophet Joseph Smith in a memorial to the High Council, June 18, 1840, petitioned that body, according to the manuscript which is in this office:

"That the Church having erected an office where he can attend to the affairs of the Church without distraction, he thinks and verily believes that the time has now come, when he should devote himself exclusively to those things which relate to the spiritualities of the Church, and commence the work of TRANSLATING the Egyptian Records, THE BIBLE, and wait upon the Lord for such revelations as may be suited to the condition and circumstances of the Church." (See also the Times and Seasons 2: 521.)

Surely he would not need to translate the Bible, if that work had already been completed. We have the evidence to prove that the Prophet declared but a short time before his death that this work had not been fully completed, but the quotation that I have copied from the manuscript in this office and which was written by him, should suffice.

So far as publishing the "inspired translation" is concerned, we have that record and at any time when it might be deemed proper it could be published by the Church.

(2) If this were an honest and fair question in relation to the subject of plural marriage, it would give me pleasure to answer it. But as I consider it otherwise, will merely refer you to the revelation (section 132, Doctrine and Covenants) given by the Prophet Joseph Smith. There is indisputable evidence that this principle was introduced and taught by him as well as the above-mentioned revelation. So far as we are concerned it is a settled question and if you have any opposition to, or quarrel with, that doctrine it is between you and Joseph Smith.

(3) There is nothing that made it necessary for the Twelve to be "reordained August 26, 1847," and no such ordination took place on that or any other date. It is a fact that they were rebaptized and reconfirmed, August 6, 1847, but not again reordained. The history of this date simply states that they were rebaptized and confirmed, "to set an example to the Church." And since they held the priesthood and the keys and were so directed, they had a right to do this thing by virtue of their authority. Because Wilford

Woodruff declared that at that time their apostleship was "sealed" upon them, it can not be argued justly that they were reordained, Heman C. Smith to the contrary notwithstanding.

The reason for this rebaptism was twofold, (1) for a renewal of their covenants—a token that they would keep the commandments of the Lord, and (2) to set an example to the Church. At the time of the exodus many records were lost or destroyed, and people were coming to the valleys claiming membership in the Church without any visible proof. To avoid imposture as well as to comply with the law of God that a record be kept, it was deemed advisable, and was necessary at least in such instances, for a new record to be made. To be just in the matter rebaptisms were required of all, the Twelve setting the example that there could be no offense. I maintain that this was the part of wisdom and equity to all and does not prove an apostasy or rejection of the Church any more than the rebaptism of Nephi and his people did in the days of their visitation by the Redeemer (3 Nephi 19:10-12), or that the baptism of Christ proved that he had committed and had need of remission from sin.

Very respectfully,

JOSEPH F. SMITH, JR.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

JOSEPH F. SMITH, JR.,

Dear Sir: I received your answer to my inquiries of a few days ago. You state that they were written in a spirit of contention and criticism and offer your statements as an apology for the Liahona. You say you will leave them to explain their own positions. Apparently they will never be explained and they admit this by refusing to do so as do you by not accepting their positions. In leaving them to explain their own positions you should have extended to them the same courtesy as to the offering of apologies.

It will take a stronger effort on your part to substantiate your position in regard to question No. 1. You admit that the Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 802, states that the Inspired Translation was finished July 2, 1833. Then you interpret it to mean, partly finished. Webster defines finished: perfected, concluded, completed; so that leaves the matter standing, Webster vs. Joseph F., Jr.

The Inspired Translation is mentioned twice on page 802, volume 6, Times and Seasons, as follows: "We this day, July 2, 1833, finished the translating of the Bible" [not only a part of it], also, "Having finished the translation of the scriptures [not only a part of them] a few hours since," etc. These articles are signed by Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and F. G. Williams; those appointed to do this work. As early as July 2, 1833, the church was considering the printing of the new translation (Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 801), and July, 1840, Samuel Bent and George Harris were appointed and authorized to make contracts for the publishing of hymn books, Books of Mormon, and the New Translation of the Scriptures. (Times and Seasons, vol. 1, p. 179.)

They were not published at the above mentioned times on account of the financial condition of the church, as the reading of the mentioned citations will evidence, so it was not on account of the incomplete state of the translation that it was not published, but for the above mentioned reasons. If the translation was not completed July 2, 1833, how is it that we find it reiterated so many times prior to this date in the Times and Seasons, Millennial Star, and Doctrine and Covenants, that the translators were to continue and should hasten said work, while after that date you can not find or produce articles upon this subject other than pleas for finance in order that the completed work might be published? The Lord, referring to Joseph the Seer by revelation, Doctrine and Covenants, January 19, 1841, says: "If he will do my will let him publish the new translation of my holy word unto the inhabitants of the earth." Had it not been completed or finished, no doubt the Lord would have again admonished him to hasten the completion of translating. It was also promised that the scriptures would be preserved in safety (Utah Edition, Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, paragraph 56-58, referring to Inspired Translation). Joseph the Martyr, prior to his demise, gave them into the hands of one of God's elect, Emma (Doctrine and Covenants, section 24, paragraph 1), who was not to be deceived by false prophets (Matthew 24:24). This fact was made manifest by her having adhered to the original doctrines and faith of the Latter Day Saints, by her having united with the Reorganization in 1860, and by her having finally turned over the original manuscript into the hands of God's selected and foreordained place of safe-keeping, the Reorganization, in whose hands they remain up to the present time. Do not be too hasty in considering Emma, "the elect lady," an apostate, but for a moment consider yourself one of the Romans to whom Paul spoke in Romans 8:33, wherein he said, "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?" Your citation from Times and Seasons, vol. 2, p. 521, to my mind has no bearing whatever upon the subject in hand. The translation of the scriptures is not therein referred to, either directly or indirectly. In regard to the copy of the Inspired Translation you claim to have in your possession, I will say as far as I have been able to discover in my researches and to my knowledge, there is but one complete manuscript of the translation in existence, and that is the original, which is in the hands of the Reorganization, which can be produced at any time. I understand, however, that there are in the archives of the Mormon church of Utah a few scraps of a decayed copy of the original, which was taken from the cornerstone of the Nauvoo House, which copy had not been preserved in safety as the Lord had promised. (Doctrine and Covenants, 42:56-58, Utah Edition.)

We as a church are in a position to prove to the world that the promises of God can be relied upon in regard to the manuscript being preserved in safety, while from your standpoint and what you have to show to the world in way of a complete preserved manuscript, the promises of God have undoubtedly utterly failed. We challenge you to produce the original completed manuscript of the scriptures. It is now being preserved in safety in a vault at Lamoni, Iowa, and if you have a complete record of the Inspired Scriptures in your possession, it has undoubtedly been purchased in book form from the Herald Publishing Company, of Lamoni, Iowa.

You have quoted an article from a memorial to the high council under the date of June 20, 1840, supposed to have been written by Joseph the Martyr in regard to the commencing of the translating of the Egyptian Records, the Bible. It seems very peculiar that we find no mention of this in the history of Joseph Smith, or in any of the official organs of the church of that date. I challenge the authenticity of any such document you may have in your possession. Joseph Smith has never referred to the Bible as the Egyptian Records in any of his writings; neither has the church, it having always been referred to as the Hebrew Scriptures, as they are so referred to under the Question and Answer Column of the Liahona, under date of May 4, 1907. If the above mentioned document is from the pen of Joseph Smith, it must of necessity, in order to be in harmony with former writings concerning the translation, refer to other than the Hebrew Scriptures; possibly referring to the Book of Abraham which was commenced round about that time, (see Times and Seasons, vol. 4, p. 95.) Evidently the words the Bible must be an interpolation on your part, or on the part of some other person striving to substantiate your position.

In answer to question No. 2 you have simply striven to defend polygamy and the polygamous revelation without attempting to answer the question. Your statement that Joseph Smith the Martyr taught polygamy is not substantiated. He considers it a "false and corrupt doctrine," (Times and Seasons, February 1, 1844,) and an "abomination," (Millennial Star, volume 16, p. 627.) Do you choose to class Joseph the Martyr as being a moral coward and a hypocrite by charging him with the very crimes he condemned? I consider polygamy a crime, for it is so called in Jacob 2:6-9, as also in Millennial Star, vol. 4, p. 144. The scriptures give us to understand: "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Brigham's polygamous revelation, verse 1, approves of concubinage, or, in other words, adultery. (See Webster.) The above revelation charges Isaac with polygamy when the sacred word plainly shows that he was grieved at Esau, his son, for practicing it. (See Genesis 24:34, 35.) Isaac must have been another Joseph Smith hypocrite (?) according to your position. If I were to point out to you all the contradictions to the laws of God contained in the polygamous revelation, they would fill a volume.

In your cunning endeavor to evade question No. 3, you spend some time defining rebaptism, stating that one of the reasons for which it was practiced was in order that they might renew their covenants. I agree with you that they had reasons to renew their covenants, for they had wandered just as far from the commandments of God as was Salt Lake City from Nauvoo, for we read in P. P. Pratt's Autobiography, page 371, that the Lord commanded the Saints to remain in Nauvoo, rather than to fly to the wilderness and deserts. Baptism is the door of entrance into the kingdom of God. By being rebaptized your people backed out through the same door from their covenants with God, entering into a covenant with Brigham Young, for he said shortly after their rebaptism, "The people have entered into a covenant to do as I tell them."—Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 390. This was equal to idolatry, and thus Brigham's influence led them into it. In regard to reordination, I will say that Wilford Woodruff said that Joseph the Seer made the following statements to the Twelve in 1843 or 1844: "I have sealed upon your heads every key, every power, every principle which the Lord has placed upon my head."—Roberts' Succession. We again find Woodruff saying, "After baptism, he [Brigham] then confirmed us and sealed upon us apostleship and all the keys, powers, and blessings belonging to that office."—Life of Brigham Young, p. 180-182. As I consider your position in regard to reordination a mere evasion of my question, I will give you another opportunity to explain yourself and your position. The principle of resealing and reordaining is the same, according to my views, Brigham H. Roberts "to the contrary notwithstanding," so therefore the following question remains unanswered:

What made it necessary for the resealing of the Twelve to take place August 6, 1847, and where are your citations of church laws permitting the same? Inasmuch as the Millennial Star, vol. 8, p. 136, November 10, 1846, says: "Those who are rebaptized should again be confirmed but not again ordained [or resealed] unless they have been cut off from the church, does not the fact of their being reordained [or resealed] indicate their apostasy?"

Yours very respectfully,
J. CHAS. MAY.

FORMER GOVERNOR'S DAUGHTER ILL.

The only daughter of former Governor Thomas Ford is a patient in the Deaconess hospital at Lincoln. The Courier says:

"Few people in the city know that this city is harboring the daughter of a former governor of the State, one who was deservedly famous during the early annals of the State, and whose name is known most favorably to historians. The person referred to is Mrs. Ann E. Davies and her father was no other than Thomas Ford, seventh governor of this commonwealth of Illinois, a writer of one of the best known histories of Illinois, up to the period in which he wrote.

Mrs. Davies is broken in health, and is an inmate of the Deaconess Hospital, being brought here from Middletown, July 10. She has been here since. When seen by a reporter Tuesday, she talked fluently of the days that are gone, and remembered with accuracy the days when her father was governor of the State, during the years 1842-46 when the Mormon troubles were at their height at Nauvoo. Thomas Ford was governor at the time of these disturbances, when a firm hand at the helm of the State was a necessity. He met the difficulties and settled them as best he could. He was the writer of Ford's History of Illinois, a work much quoted in succeeding histories, and he is referred to as one of the strongest executives the State has ever had."—Edwardsville (Illinois) Intelligencer, September 7, 1907.

DRINKING AMONG WOMEN.

Physicians of Eastern cities, and particularly those of New York, profess alarm over the increasing tendency to drink found among women of all classes in the large centers of population. Not only is the use of intoxicants on the increase, but the number of women afflicted with the drug habit is steadily growing. So numerous have these become that in and about New York City there are scores of private hospitals and sanitariums which cater exclusively to women who enter them to be tided temporarily over the effects of a debauch or with the expectation of being cured of a vice which has culminated in disease of the stomach or nerves, and which only continual treatment for years can eradicate. Prominent among these afflicted ones are women high in social circles, tempted to the use of stimulants by the nervous strain and fatigue to which they are subjected. In company with them are often found working girls, professional women, and even girls not yet out of their teens, all in bondage to some favorite drink or drug. The spectacle, physicians declare, is the saddest they encounter, and the percentage of cases cured the smallest.

It is the testimony of a well-known New York physician that it is much harder to cure a woman of drinking than a man. This is said to be so for the reason that women are more nervously constituted and more affected by drugs and liquor than men, while they are not as strong to resist the temptation to begin drinking again after they are doctored up to a point where they could, if they chose, do without stimulants without suffering. This same authority affirms, also, that many women he has known contracted a love for intoxicants by the patent medicines and soda water routes.

In the estimation of the medical profession the greatest danger concealed in the use of liquor by women lies in its use by prospective mothers. The injury inflicted upon the child is declared to be incalculable. It is born into the world predisposed to drink or drug habits, and with its nervous system impaired, and this is said to be the case, even when the mother's indulgence in intoxicants has been very moderate.—Des Moines Capital.

THE MESA VERDE CLIFF DWELLINGS.

The transformation of the celebrated cliff-dwellings of the Mesa Verde in Southwestern Colorado from scattered groups of unprotected ruins into a great ethnological museum is now under way. Under a recent act of Congress, Major H. M. Randolph has been appointed superintendent of the Mesa Verde National Park, and has assumed charge. Doctor J. Walter Fewkes of the bureau of ethnology has been assigned to undertake the work of excavation and the preservation of these prehistoric remains.

The Mesa Verde is an irregularly shaped tableland on the border of the Montezuma Valley, just south of the ancient Montezuma road, embracing an area of from six hundred to seven hundred square miles. This tableland is cut by innumerable main and lateral canyons, more or less narrow, and ranging in depth from a few hundred to two thousand feet. High up in the walls of these canyons are found the homes of an ancient race.

The ruins on the Mesa Verde are perhaps the most noteworthy group of prehistoric buildings in all America. Major Randolph, the superintendent, will have charge of the building and keeping of roads and trails, the erection of administrative buildings, as well as the construction of comfortable quarters for travelers, students and scientists, scores of whom are expected to visit the park for purposes of scientific research. As custodian of the park and ruins he will prevent the looting and carrying off of relics, and from now on all vandalism will cease.

There are three cliff villages, remarkably well preserved, which surpass all others in interest. These are the Cliff Palace, Spruce Tree House, and Balcony House.

Cliff Palace is by far the largest ruin on the Mesa Verde. It consists of a series of rooms, towers, and estufas, or ceremonial rooms, perched high up in a canyon under a wide overhanging cliff. The distinct outlines of more than one hundred and fifty rooms are easily traced. Spruce Tree House is not quite so large, but is similarly located and almost as well preserved. Balcony House is smaller, but in much better state of preservation than either of the others.

In all of these buildings much has been found in the way of pottery, bone utensils of various kinds, corn, vegetable fiber, bits of cloth, and not a few mummified bodies. Undoubtedly much remains undiscovered, and to Doctor Fewkes is assigned the task of careful search for prehistoric relics.

It is probable that Cliff Palace will be the first to be explored, and it is proposed that the relics secured by excavation be placed in this ancient communal building and permanently exhibited there. If the plan is carried into execution (and it is confidently expected that it will be), Mesa Verde Park and Cliff Palace will become the seat of a national archaeological museum, the first to be established in America.—Selected.

HUMOR.

I have often felt, myself, that the time has come to raise another figure to the hierarchy of Christian graces. Faith, hope, and charity were sufficient in a more elementary and barbarous age; but, now that the world has broadened somewhat, I think an addition to the trio is demanded. A man may be faithful, hopeful and charitable, and yet leave much to be desired. He may be useful, no doubt, with that equipment, but he may also be both tiresome and even absurd. The fourth quality that I should like to see raised to the highest rank among Christian graces is the grace of humor.

I do not think that humor has ever enjoyed its due repute in the ethical scale. The possession of it saves a man from priggishness; and the possession of faith, hope and charity does not. Indeed, not only do these three virtues not save a man from priggishness—they sometimes even plunge him in irreclaimable depths of superiority. I suppose that when Christianity was first making itself felt in the world the one quality needful was a deep-seated and enthusiastic earnestness. There is nothing that makes life so enjoyable as being in earnest. It is not the light, laughter-loving, jocose people who have the best time in the world. They have a checked career. They skip at times upon the hills of merriment, but they also descend gloomily at other times into the valleys of dreariness.—A. C. Benson in Putnam's Monthly for October.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH ON DIVORCE.

Two important questions which are to be considered by the general convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which meets at Richmond on October 2, and which will cause considerable discussion, will be the advocacy of a canon to prohibit absolutely the remarriage of divorced persons by ministers of that church, and a plan for the creation of negro bishops.

At the last convention of the church, in Boston three years ago, a canon was adopted which permitted the clergy to remarry the innocent party in a case, but only after a year had elapsed from the time of the decree. As the rule of the church stands now persons divorced for any other cause than adultery may not be remarried by its clergy.

At the last convention advocates of the canon prohibiting any remarriage of divorced persons were numerically in the majority, but the convention votes by dioceses, and the rigorists were outvoted. It is predicted that at the Richmond gathering they will succeed in having the canon adopted and the remarriage of divorced persons entirely prohibited.—New York Evening Mail.

I'm Glad I Did My Work Well.

A poor Irishman left his own country to come to America to better his fortunes. He landed in New York and started out on his search for work. There was but one thing that he could do well, but one thing he ever learned as a trade. That was stone cutting. He went from one stone yard to another in New York City seeking for employment, only to be disappointed when night came. Day after day, he searched until all the stone yards he could hear about had been visited, but all in vain; no one seemed to want him. Only a few coins were left to jingle in a lonely sort of fashion in his pocket. He feared starvation unless he could find work. So one day he crossed the great Brooklyn bridge to begin his search for work among the stone yards in Brooklyn. After trying several, his search was at length rewarded. The superintendent of this one told him if he would do his work exactly as he was told, and be true to the pattern marked on the stone, he might begin, and if he did the first work satisfactorily he might have more work. So with great care he began his task of cutting out the stone according to the lines marked out. There was no beauty in the design, indeed it scarce seemed like a design, it was neither scroll nor leaf, only a few meaningless lines to the Irishman. Finally the first block was finished. The "boss," as he was called, inspected it, and gave him another block, with the remark "to do that as well." The second offered no more inspiration than the first, but the man kept pegging away at the stone, keeping in mind that he must be true to the pattern if he were to continue to have work.

After weeks of monotonous cutting, one block after another, on Saturday at noon the "boss" told him he might have a half holiday and not lose his pay. So he put on his best clothes and fixed himself up as respectable and presentable as he could and recrossed the Brooklyn bridge to see New York as a tourist instead of as a hungry, discouraged man seeking work. How beautiful the city seemed to him now, how stately and grand the great buildings, how wonderful the store windows!

As he was walking along the beautiful avenue, looking across on the other side, his attention was attracted to a large, beautiful stone arch over an arcade. Here was something interesting along his own line. How he admired the carved scrolls and graceful foliage that twined among them! How symmetrically and wonderfully the work was done! And as a craftsman, he looked carefully to see how each scroll was wrought. He recognized a block which his own hand had cut, as part of the beautiful, great arch. His eyes lighted with joy and he searched for more of his work, and yonder he saw another block and still another and another. Oh! the joy and gladness that surged through him as he thought, "Why, I helped make this grand arch, and it's the finest I've seen." As he stood looking at it, his eyes filled with tears; he said, "How thankful I am I did my work well and worked according to the pattern." A passer-by saw this Irishman standing gazing, the tears coursing down his cheeks, utterly oblivious to all about him. He spoke to him. "Why are you crying?" In an excited way, the Irishman said, "Do you see that grand stone arch over there?" "Yes," was the reply, "but I don't see anything to cry about in it." "Well, man," said the Irishman, "I cut that block and that one and that one and this one over yonder, and I'm so thankful I did my work right and was faithful, for I didn't know when I cut it that it was to be an arch or anything half so beautiful."

So may we be faithful to our task. Our Master makes the plan, the pattern is His. He permits us to do the work if we will, and some day over yonder we may see how beautiful the design, and know God's plan.

When we see the saved, and humanity made perfect, we, like that Irishman, will rejoice if we have been faithful to the pattern and have done our work well.—Selected.

Letter Department

LAMONI, Iowa.

Editor Herald: Soon after the adjournment of the General Conference, while in South Dakota, I was informed of having been placed in associate charge, with Bro. Heman C. Smith, of the mission work in the States of Iowa, Missouri, and contiguous territory. This was a new field of labor for me, having never been assigned to it in this relation before. Accepting the appointment and thinking that "in charge" meant in charge, and not being taken in charge, on returning home and consulting with Bro. Smith as to first duties lying before us, started out in supposed line of duty.

May 25 found me at ———, Iowa, in attendance at the district conference. At nine o'clock in the morning we participated in the prayer meeting being held. Later on the business of the conference began, in charge of the president and the vice-president of the district. They proceeded without motion or vote by the audience. This was a new feature to us. The missionary in charge was invited to sit on the platform, and a chair was provided for him on the west end. It was reported that the missionary in charge was asked to form a part of the presidency of the meeting, but if this be correct it would not affect the trend of this paper, for in theory and practice it would be but an evasion of the "common consent" rule established, and a tactical subordinating of the general church authority to that of the local, the very thing at issue, as will appear further on. It is the theory of procedure that is involved, not the men holding it.

While the writer, like others, would incline to favor the views and policies of others, right or wrong, for the sake of pleasing, neither he nor others possess the right to do so at the sacrifice of principle, and the establishing of an unwarranted precedent which would compromise or embarrass legitimate work? Neither should any be too cowardly to assert and stand for the proper order of things, even at the risk of displeasing. The church claims to have been established by divine grace, with conferred authority, and is growing, putting on her bridal attire, and waiting for the coming of the Bridegroom. Is this correct, or is it better to follow the Congregational theory, resolve into fragments with each congregation independent, self-advising and directing, with no governing authority?

The question would naturally arise, what business had the missionary in charge attending a meeting of this kind at all, and what does "in charge" mean? Does it mean that the one "in charge" is to be directed and instructed by those holding a less authority and appointment over whom he is placed in charge, or is he expected to be left free to guide and direct in the assemblies of the Saints in his sphere of appointment the same as others? On similar occasions to this, the writer, when present, has received some formal recognition of his presence, authority, and responsibility, and by common consent has been accepted in his place along with the other working force and responsible parties of the meeting, and left free to advise and counsel in the interest of the work, without being left to "butt in," at times abruptly, with a high hand and in a disorderly manner, to the disparagement of others and their work, and producing confusion, provided that it became necessary that he take any part at all.

On this occasion, by courtesy, it is supposed, he was permitted a seat on the platform in order to view the proceedings, speak as directed, and acquiesce in whatever was being done. He was informed that there was a resolution on the district records providing that the district president should preside over the district conference meetings. This of course excluded the missionary in charge, or other ranking officers who might be present, from exercising any freedom of suggestion and direction except by permission of the president of the meeting; and this placed the district independent of all governing authorities, as well as in an unenviable attitude towards the general church authority.

Again the question presents itself with increased emphasis, What business has one of the traveling high council and missionary in charge in a meeting of this kind, if his authority and appointment are not recognized and honored, he not being a member of the district as such? Any other officer present could be just as effective. The local president holding that he would be humiliated and wronged, should the missionary in charge be recognized in his place as the leading authority present. In this case the missionary in charge was on the eve of taking his valise and moving on, but concluded to turn on a little light first, after which, by motion and vote, he and the president and vice-president of the district were placed in charge of the meeting. This procedure appeared to be new to the members of the conference, and but few voted. They did not seem to have any decided views in the matter. Quite likely some viewed it as an unwarranted innovation, usurpation, etc. The writer does not know. This vote, however, held the missionary in charge, and left him, free as others, to help in the business of the meeting as wisdom might direct.

In this mood he asked the president of the district to go on with the business as he had it in hand, intending to sit by, observe procedure, and render any assistance in his power, if any was needed; but this the president declined to do, and sat back as though some great injury had been done him, all arising from a misconception of his relations to other workers in the church, as we think.

However, the business of the meeting continued, and everything went well to its conclusion. Personally the president is a very nice and orderly man, and our personal relations, also, are of the best, but local presidents should learn that they possess no right to stand in the way of others having a free hand to perform their work as well as they; and that they are "helps," not of right chief directors, in all matters of men and measures.

It is written, "And God hath set in the church, first apostles," 1 Corinthians 12:28. Better let it stand. It will be very unseemly to attempt to place them second.

June 1 the missionary in charge was in attendance at the district conference held at ———, Iowa; his first visit there. Here the proceedings were changed. A motion was made calling the district president to preside over the conference, with the privilege to select his assistants. Thus appointed, he selected the missionary in charge as one of his assistants. Now, who is in charge? We thought it too bad that the other missionary in charge was not present to constitute the other "assistant." This was thought by district officials to be the proper, and a sufficient recognition of the presence and authority of the missionary in charge, probably following their usual procedure, as in the other case. The missionary said nothing pro or con to this procedure, for reasons. In the first instance cited he was to sit on the platform to act, if he acted at all, as permitted or directed by others; in the latter case he was to "assist" the president of the district, provided it was thought that his services were needed. Again the question naturally comes, Who is in charge, and what does missionary in charge mean? At first, it was thought this was an inadvertant step, but in a night vision he was shown that it was deliberate. Hence it becomes necessary to examine into the relation of districts to the general church; and the authority of local presidents to that of the traveling, presiding high council, and others; and we open the question here and discuss the matter in the light of our late experience, and facts as seen and heard, without reflecting upon any. The local presidents, some of them, are cultivating the heresy that should one of the traveling high council and missionary in charge chance to be present at a district conference and be chosen to preside, that it would be a reflection upon the dignity of the district president; and that he would be discredited and humiliated. That they are de jure the presidents to the exclusion of all other authorities, and on all occasions of assembling should be in charge, no matter who else may be present; overlooking the fact that the traveling high council are made by law presidents over them as well as the membership, whether conceded or not.

What occurs when an officer of higher rank appears upon the active field in the army or navy? Is he there to merely sit on the platform to be directed or "assist" the officer of lesser rank in command? No, he assumes command without even a vote. Sometimes the church is called the army of the Lord. But it is said the organization of the church in comparison is more like that of the General Government and the States; and that the States are independent. That is what Jefferson Davis thought of the States, but he did not win. This claim of local presidents might be conceded were they independent organizations and held no allegiance to the government of the general church; but, both branches and districts are dependent. Dependent for their very existence upon the action of the conferences or traveling high council. They exist at the pleasure and consent of these authorities, and for cause may be dissolved by either. They are not all powerful and sufficient within themselves and independent, but are subject to the supervision, and advice, direction, and discipline of other authorities. Read this:

"When branches and districts are organized, they should be so organized by direction of the conferences, or by the personal presence and direction of the Twelve, or some member of that quorum who may be in charge, if practicable."—Doctrine and Covenants 120:1.

Again:

"High priests and elders . . . are the standing ministers of the church, having the watchcare of the membership and nurturing and sustaining them, under the direction and instruction of the Presidency and the Twelve."—Doctrine and Covenants 120:3.

Local presidents are included in the number of those who are "under the instruction and direction of the Presidency and the Twelve." Yet when one of these officers visits a district and is present at one of its business assemblies, and their authority and appointment are recognized, so he may proceed by the common consent rule, to advise, instruct and direct according to the requirements of the law and their appointment, these men, some of them, feign at once to be humiliated, because there is a superior authority recognized, and at work among them. Higher authorities are supposed to be useful, wise, advisory and directing aids to the work in general, and upon whom the chief responsibility rests to care for the cause. It is disorderly not to recognize men in their official, directive rights. If the law is properly interpreted, honored, and carried out, there will be no conflict, or humiliation to any one, but all rights will be conserved.

Paul wrote that there came upon him daily, "the care of all the churches." 2 Corinthians 11:28. He was in charge. Would not that be a bright spectacle to gaze upon, did Paul attend a district conference, or what is the same in Latter Day Saint parlance, conference; or some important branch business meeting; to counsel, advise and direct affairs, and the ruling officers should assume superior authority and right of direction, put up a challenge, invite him to a seat on the platform, to "assist" the presiding officers, etc., and this be all the recognition he received? Would not that be a bright procedure? Who would believe it to be the correct procedure?

But you say, "Our apostles are not like the New Testament apostles; if any one of them were present we would feel differently." The same old spirit of garnishing the tombs of the dead prophets but making war on and ignoring the living ones. See Matthew 23:29, 31.

Again: The Lord chose the apostles in these latter times, and this is equal to saying that it was the wisest selection that could be made at the time, out of the material from which he had to select. He had sixty thousand to select from; and it is fair to say that he chose as capable ones as there were, or he was at fault. If these are unworthy of respect, confidence, and trust, what shall be said of the remaining sixty thousand of membership? Now, who has the argument? It is not intended by this to laud or disparage any, but to set us thinking along proper lines. No matter what the distance between the ancient and the modern apostles, in their individual and moral worth and power, it is poor policy to undertake to subordinate the latter in the practical workings of the church, if unity is desired. And it is a fact that both ancient and modern apostles confess to be very human, and much weaker than they could desire, hence nothing to boast about. But when the returns are all in it may appear there is as great distance between the ancient and modern saints as between the officers assigned, and if so we are about even in the argument.

We cite another case; one of arrogance against constituted authority and advice, set out in the New Testament, and from his position and assumptions should judge he was a district president, or of a conference; may have been a branch president. We read: "I wrote unto the church; but Diotrephes who loveth to have the preëminence among them, receiveth us not."—1 John 1:9. This man had the rest of them sitting on the platform of courtesy or "assisting" him, and was "prating" against even John. What was the trouble with this man? He loved the "preëminence" and was in rebellion against proper church rule. Was there nothing that could move him? Is he to preside over all the conferences and business meetings? Listen: "Wherefore, if I come I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating against me with malicious words, and not content therewith, neither doth himself receive the brethren and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church."

Good thing there was some one in the church who could put such an arrant conceit as this in order; and John proposed to do it, not by merely sitting on the platform and acting as directed, or "assisting" him in casting out the brethren, but by exercising his authority of office, to "regulate"; and he proposed to begin with Diotrephes.

From the position assumed by some there would be little or no use for any other class of officers in the church, to govern and direct, but local presidents. It is the pride of the church, however, that it has in it twelve apostles. They are talked of and sung of, shook in the face of sectarians as a conclusive argument that they do not belong to the true order of things because they have not this class of officers. Yet when these apostles are placed in charge of mission work, and expect to receive proper recognition in directing the work, some of the local officers assume that they are out of place, and that they themselves are humiliated when the missionaries are acknowledged in their place as leading officers among the working force in the assemblies of the Saints. What use, then, have such local officers, from the position assumed, for apostles, anyway? Only as a sweeping argument against sectarianism? They can meet, direct, preside, oversee, call on the Twelve to sit on the platform and "assist" them in their work. They would have no especial need of even a First Presidency; however, if one chanced to attend one of their meetings he might be permitted to sit on the end of the platform along with the apostles, look on and "assist" the presiding officers to do whatever they elected to do. Does that look right, or anything squinting that way?

But let us see further, if all authority and direction in church business is vested in the local officers, and if they can stand in the way of others even, if so minded, and who really are some of the responsible parties in church matters. We quote:

"The Twelve are a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the presidency of the church, agreeably to the institution of heaven, to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations; first unto the Gentiles, and secondly unto the Jews."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:12.

From this it seems that the Almighty has some use for the traveling high council in the church. They are to "build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same in all nations." Is this to be done by merely sitting on platforms by invitation and "assisting" local presidents and other authorities to proceed in their own way? We think not.

But these apostles hold the view that in order that their mission work may be effective for good and not hindered, that when they are present in the assemblies of the Saints, where church interests are involved, this authority should be recognized and respected in some proper form, and they be allowed freedom under the "common consent" rule prevailing (and where proper order and decorum prevails this will be done), not by simply being invited to a seat on the platform to "assist" others in carrying out their proposed measures, but by being considered and acknowledged in their official place, along with the other working force; so as to suggest, advise, and direct in the business being done, without being required to "butt in" in the attitude of interferers in order to accomplish the work committed to them; but permitted to use the machinery of the church without the embarrassment of being dictated to by others or challenged on all sides. In evidence we have:

"In both branches and districts the presiding officers should be considered and respected in their offices: nevertheless, the traveling presiding councils of the church being made by the law, their calling and the voice of the church the directing, regulating and advising authorities of the church, and representing it abroad, should when present in either district or branch be regarded and considered as the leading representative authorities of the church, and be respected as such, their counsel and advice be sought and respected when given."—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 4.

This does not look much like that one of the traveling high council and missionary in charge is sent out to merely sit on the platform at the invitation of courtesy and assist others to work out their plans and purposes, with all due respect to these authorities and their rights.

Again:

"Where cases of difficulty are of long standing, the council may require local authorities to adjust them; and in case of failure to do so, may regulate them as required by their office and duty."—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 7.

This does not look like it is necessary for them to depend on a courteous invitation to a seat, or be selected to assist some one else in performing their work.

It really looks like the high council is to take the initiative if necessary, and "require" others to do things, and should they fail or refuse, for themselves to do it, no matter who stands in the way. It would not be a proper thing, then, to hold them subject to the directions of district officials or others, to act simply at their solicitation and direction in discharging their duties to the church. Proper courtesies are always in order, however, and from every one, but we are looking for a rule of procedure under which every one's rights are protected to the disparagement of none. From the citation above it really looks like the traveling presiding high council was in authority, whether acknowledged or not, or even if others should feel humiliated because it is not their prerogative to preside over one of these authorities in the various assemblies of the Saints. It really looks like it was the duty of the other officers of the districts and branches to work with the traveling high council and missionaries in charge, rather than the missionaries working with and being dictated to by them. The common consent rule obtaining always if practicable.

Again: "If my people will respect the officers whom I have called and set in the church, I will respect these officers; and if they do not, they can not expect the riches of gifts and the blessings of direction."—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14.

"It is my will that ye more fully honor and pay heed to the voice and counsel of the traveling ministry in spiritual things; which if ye do not, the office which they hold is not honored in my service, and the good they should do is made void."—Doctrine and Covenants 118: 3.

Somebody has been derelict of duty, selfish, and not willing to accord proper respect to others, or this language would not have been used.

The views of the First Presidency are expressed as follows:

"As a traveling, presiding council, your quorum [the twelve] has the active supervision and presidency under the first presidency, over the entire field of ministerial labor, and control over districts, branches, and the ministry as a whole and as a church organization, and not as local presiding officers in these several organizations; holding special local presidency where no organization has been perfected; in a similar way as the first presidency presides over the whole church."—Doctrine and Covenants 123: 23.

Like the other references cited, comment is not needed here to make it plainer. If it shows anything it is that the traveling high council holds the right of control over "districts," "branches" and other church organizations, and where there are no organizations throughout the world; and when present at the various assemblies for business, their authority should be recognized as a power for good, not evil; and he is a dull scholar who would assume that he was humiliated and displaced because one of these officers should be voted president of the meeting. He is the president of the districts and branches, whether consented to or not, and the flock is required at his hands. He is not there merely to "assist" or receive courtesies as the highest authority present, but to put things right that are wrong, and to encourage that which is right; and he is not required simply to "assist" others, but others are expected to aid him in directing the work. But can not district presidents preside over district conferences? Yes, and others, and they have many opportunities to do so, for it is the exception and not the rule when one of the traveling high council can attend; but when he is present, or one or more of the First Presidency, the president of the district should be associated with them in conducting the affairs of the meeting if it be a district conference, unless they see proper to decline. There is nobody elevated and no one lowered, unless it is in the mind of some one who "loveth to have the preëminence" and imagines it a fine advertisement to be occupying the president's chair and directing the high council and First Presidency along with the others. Personality, however, and mere act of presiding are nothing in this consideration, but the authority to direct and regulate is, and he that would aspire to the president's seat for the honor and show some may imagine attaches to it, would be too small a factor in mental and moral make up to receive consideration in this paper. Presiding means work and duty, capability and devotion, not flavor.

Here is a sample of right procedure as viewed by the writer. Once he was present at a district conference and was missionary in charge. Two of the First Presidency were present and also the district president. Now who should preside and what should be the procedure? The missionary in charge arose, did not wait for some one to make the wrong motion, and moved that the two members of the First Presidency preside over the meeting. This was seconded and carried. They requested that the missionary in charge and president of the district be associated with them, which by motion was done. The members of the Presidency were advised with, and at their request and direction the missionary in charge and president of the district went on with the business in hand. Now, who was humiliated? The members of the First Presidency presided by virtue of the authority of their office, acknowledged by the conference; the missionary in charge, by reason of being one of the traveling high council and his general conference appointment, also was acknowledged, and the president of the district by reason of having been selected to that office. Everything went well, each acting in the sphere to which he had been appointed, without hesitation, or the least feeling or suspicion that his rights had been invaded, or the least friction. The sequel was, the members of the First Presidency and traveling high council were held responsible with others for the business of the conference, and the Saints had recognized the authority imposed upon those men by the church to represent it abroad and look after its interests. How would it have looked had the president of the district arose and announced the presence of the members of the First Presidency and the missionary in charge, and invited them to a seat on the platform, with the privilege of assisting him in caring for the interest of the work, providing he thought he was in need of assistance? Any one can see that a theory like that carried out would not meet the demands in general church work. It is not objected that a better way obtain than the one cited if there be one. It is only desired that order and right procedure shall prevail, and every man know his place and learn his duty. There is no criticism on any other procedure or form of recognition obtaining, only that it mean as much and is clearly understood. We know of nothing better than the common consent rule to govern.

June 16 the writer joined a nice body of Saints at Clitherall, Minnesota, who were engaged in their annual reunion. A number of the ministry were present, several of the Brn. Whitings, H. A. McCoy, A. L. Whittaker, J. A. Gunsolley, Samuel Sloan, A. H. Kidder, Joseph, H. O., and Alexander Hale Smith. An excellent feeling prevailed all through; the services were good and contentment and happiness reigned. The writer was domiciled at the home of Bro. and Sr. Langden, where he received good care. Bro. Langden was baptized during the meeting. The prayer-meetings were inspiring and characterized with correctness; the speakers acquitted themselves well, so there was nothing lacking. Five were baptized by Bro. Whittaker.

Saturday, the 22d, the district conference convened. The president of the mission and the district president on motion were placed in charge. Everything went orderly and well. A motion was carried to hold another reunion next year. The Bishop's agent gave a good talk on temporalities. The interest continuing, the brethren concluded to continue meetings another week in charge of Bro. H. O. Smith, during which time several more were baptized.

To conclude: This letter is written with the best of feelings toward every one, with a view of agitation and correcting views where they need correcting, that each may revise, who may feel it necessary. It is written somewhere that it is a proper thing to "prefer your brother to yourself;" and "whosever exalteth himself shall be abased." Good things to think about.

It is quite important for somebody to revise or stop the farce of assigning missionaries in charge and holding general conferences. The question is, What is the correct procedure under the common consent rule to carry out church government as provided for in the law, in order to effect unity?

Personalities have been carefully avoided in this discussion, as it is not intended to involve or compromise any who do not wish to be involved. Neither is it intended to ask undue honors for a class, to the neglect and disparagement of others; for if there is any one thing the writer utterly detests, it is class distinction produced by either wealth or favor. It is necessary to keep up organization, however, and recognize proper authority, or there is no order. Individual merit is always and everywhere commendable. The most contemptible thing of all in practice is the exhibition of a conceited, flamboyant air in public, by one intrusted with a little brief authority and demanding homage from the multitude; and what is equally as despicable is a blind, obsequious truckling of the multitude to the desires of such heady conceits, whether in church or state. The church, under its disciples, is intended to grow men and women with enlightened judgment, decision, and character, not to form a blind servile following to some haughty nabob or stuffed prophet. There has been enough of that on all sides. We should reflect the true American spirit of loyalty, toleration, and freedom in this splendid American church; respect authority, accord honor to whom honor is due, hats off and proper civilities and regard extended to every one, cowering and truckling to none, with no prostration of body before any this side of the coming King.

In regard to the seeking and exacting of undue honors, the traveling high council has never been accused of this in their work; at least no report of such has come to the chairman of that council, hence it is fair to presume they have been exemplary, orderly, and consistent; so no worry or alarm from that source.

But how can a proper discipline and church unity be attained if the general church authority is not held to be paramount? How will the churches scattered over the world from Asia to the Eastern Pacific, and Nome to Cape Horn, be kept in harmony and advanced if each is left to its own caprice, holding the right to ignore, disregard, and subordinate with impunity the lawfully constituted, ruling authority in the church? All of this and more is involved in the theory of church government. These are issues involved, and the sooner settled the better. Evading responsibility and decision to curry favor help nothing. Savor of weakness.

This paper should have appeared some time ago, but for cause has been delayed. It is perhaps better, and that it be read as the weather grows cooler.

Very truly,

September 13, 1907.

WILLIAM H. KELLEY.

MALAD CITY, Idaho, September 5, 1907.

Editors Herald: Thinking a few lines from this part of this mission may be appreciated, I feel it my duty to write. I have been accused of not writing often, and some have thought I have been remiss in this regard. I am fully aware that some, on account of their too frequent writing, have been accused of trying to emblazon their own names, appearing to the readers of the HERALD and Ensign as monopolizers of the limited space set apart for correspondence. I observe, too, that many of our conservative men rarely appear in our correspondence column. And correspondents come in for their share of criticism. The overdrawn and highly-colored picture will elicit expressions of disgust; and if any great event is reported, with a neglect to mention all the factors and actors and participators in the most glowing terms (if the event is a favorable one), it will result in the accusation that the writer is partial.

I left home for this mission June 18, arriving at Denver the morning of the 19th. Being favored with an unlimited ticket I concluded I would visit some in Denver before proceeding further. Bro. J. D. White spotted me in the depot, and approached me, asking if my name was Hanson. However, he soon saw his mistake. We then discovered Bro. Scott sitting in the depot reading the days' doings. Bro. John D. was on his way to his mission, Hawaiian Islands. He seemed cheerful and determined on his mission. Because of past association in gospel work, Bro. Scott's countenance gave cheer and comfort to me. Our past experiences and trials in gospel work have formed a bond of interest.

"We met together as brothers;
Spirits made kindred by toil."

By kindness of some brother I was asked to occupy the rostrum in his stead the Sunday morning I was in Denver. Enjoyed fair liberty in discoursing to the people. Bro. Scott said God was with me, so you see I did not feel lonesome. The Saints of Denver appear to be active and interested in church affairs, with level-headed Bro. Everett president, and a good sister leading the singing.

I stayed at the hospitable home of my old friends, Bro. James Birchell, Sr. Aggie Dreher, and John Birchell, her brother. I visited Father Watkins' youngest daughter, Lizzie, at Leyden, also friends at Littleton. Denver has every promise of becoming the Chicago of the West. In the East we complain of oil kings. Denver can complain of a water king, for her great water supply is owned by one man.

Being anxious to get to my mission, could not spare the time to visit other old friends who reside there, so left Denver at half past nine Monday morning, reaching Salt Lake City at thirty-five minutes after one o'clock Tuesday afternoon. Made headquarters with my relatives, who treated me very kindly. While in the city I visited our chapel, attended the meetings, and preached once each Sunday the two Sundays I remained in the city. Bishop E. L. Kelley and Apostle Fred A. Smith were in the city some of the time during my stay. I understood that Bro. Kelley had sold our church building there and negotiated for another that he thought would suit our purpose better than the old one. Bro. Evan Davies is in charge, and looking after the work there. Bro. E. C. Briggs was there, too, going around with his Doctrine and Covenants and tracts, ready for every attack. Sr. Rachel LaRue, too, should be mentioned for her zeal in Religio and Sunday-school work.

I visited the Great Salt Lake and bathed in it on two occasions at Saltair. The water had greatly receded the last few years, and estimates had been made as to how many years it would be ere the great lake would disappear by evaporation. However, all that talk of a dry lake has fallen through, as the lake is some three and a half feet higher than it was, or about normal now. The rainfall in some districts during the last two years has been much greater than usual.

The Pavilion is said to have the largest dancing floor in the world. Railroad Magnate Harriman is talking of buying it. He has bought the street-car lines of Salt Lake City, and prophesies a great future for the city.

I visited the Lagoon, a pleasure resort sixteen miles north of the city. Return ticket to either of the above places is twenty-five cents.

In company with Bro. Davies I visited the State's prison. One of Orson Pratt's sons, Arthur, is the warden. The premises were very clean, and nearly all the inmates looked happy, healthy, and hopeful.

I also visited the Mormon church's historian's office, and was kindly treated by Mr. Andrew Jenson. He showed me one of the oldest letters now in their possession written by the Prophet Joseph Smith. It was written at Kirtland, February 22, 1831, addressed to Martin Harris, Palmyra, New York. He wrote a fairly good hand. In it he spells Hyrum Smith's name, "Hiram." He also uses the expression "old man Smith," in telling Martin to bring his father with him, then he had scratched the word old. I was pleased to be permitted to read it. Though I had occasion to visit the office three different times, I received courteous consideration each time, with an invitation to call again.

The Gentile and Jack-Mormon party are in control of the city. I presume it is safe to say that the city will be trodden down of the Gentiles for the future, until the fullness of the Mormons be come in. It is true the Mormon element may get a temporary hold a time or two again, before they realize they face a forlorn hope. They are selling out some of their great interests. There is, some think, a hidden purpose in the whole thing.

At present there is considerable dissatisfaction in the city on account of a combination among storekeepers that deal in food stuff to keep up prices. Also rents are very high, some stores pay twenty-eight dollars per front foot; one store seven hundred and fifty dollars a month. It is said to be the highest priced city in the United States, Butte, Montana, not excepted.

On my way hither, I called at Ogden to see Brn. J. D. Stead and Alvin Knisley. They are both busy, and quite pleasant. And if they will furnish the readers of the HERALD with the material having a direct bearing on this mission, which they intend doing, it will be valuable to all our missionaries. They have the books from which to cull.

A post-card awaited me at Bro. Wells Chase's, from Bro. Fred A. Smith, asking, if possible, that I get to Malad for Sunday, and I, after three hours' stay, proceeded on my journey. Laying over at Brigham City for three hours, I called to see Bro. John R. Evans' brother, William, and found a welcome. It was a pretty town, and wonderfully productive in fruits of various kinds.

Malad City has a population of sixteen hundred people, is nicely located in the Malad Valley. The word Malad is the Indian word for "bad water." The valley is about eight miles wide, good soil, scarcity of water in ordinary seasons; considerable dry farming done. People here, in general terms, have become wealthy. They seemingly care little for religion. There is an enormous amount of drinking done here. We have a small church building, and if all who are members would attend, we would have a fairly good-sized branch. There is a great amount of indifference and irreligious feeling even among many of our own members.

Yours faithfully,

Editors Herald: We have been having a hard struggle to keep the work going here; but with the intention of doing our duty we kept up all the meetings and the Sunday-school, and of late have been gaining in attendance, so that our Sunday-school is quite large. Many of the outsiders take an active part, and our preaching-services are quite well attended. Last Sunday, the first of the month, three were baptized; two sisters whose husbands were in the church, and a daughter of one of the Saints. We feel hopeful, willing to press onward, desiring to hold aloft the gospel banner.

We had conference of our district August 23 and 24, with a very large attendance of the whole district, and all apparently cheerfully trying to do their duty, showing improvement all along the line. Financially, the district has done well. Most all try to keep the law of tithing, and such feel cheerful, and are gaining in spirituality.

There is need that our elders be humble, and willing to do unto others as they would wish others to do unto them, that the work may progress faster. There should be no jealousy among the elders. They should esteem each other in love; and also elders in the field should be very careful not to run down other sects; for often they feel friendly toward our work, and then by harsh expressions are offended, and will hardly take up with the work again. It often takes years to overcome the effect of harsh words spoken by our elders. We should be patient with those who differ from us. Let us all do all the good we can while here, for life is short at best.

I was glad that I had the pleasure of attending General Conference last spring. It was indeed cheering to see so many of the young, with the old, stand for what they deemed was right. While there I also had the pleasure of baptizing three boys of the Andover Sunday-school in the Grand River, east of there. I would like to meet with them again there, for I was well treated while I was with them.

JOHN HEIDE.

JEFFERSONVILLE, Illinois, September 3, 1907.

Editors Herald: Near Vienna, beginning August 7, the writer held a debate of ten sessions of two hours each, with W. G. Roberts, of the Campbellite Church, on church propositions, in a church owned by that people. This was his twenty-eighth debate, the eighth with our people. For lack of space I will not state in full the peculiar way in which this discussion came about, but as I reflect over the matter I feel thankful to know that the steps taken by me were characterized by the spirit of wisdom, and that the many strong evidences presented in support of the great latter-day work were not overthrown by my opponent; and the friendship and kindness shown toward me by the many people whom I never saw before was in evidence of the fact that Mr. Roberts' own people made me welcome at their homes; and they furnished me a room in which to study, and board free of charge during the debate; and the kindness was so marked that my opponent made an effort to cause the love which was shown to wax cold; but his effort was feeble.

He is a very rapid talker, and claims to have twenty-five dollars' worth of our works; but I find that all such men who claim to know so much are just as feeble as any other mortals, so far as their efforts against the truth are concerned. I had no moderator during the first session, and I employed a minister of the same faith as Roberts to keep time for me during the second and third sessions, and during the remainder of the time Bro. E. W. Sutton moderated for me. As Mr. Roberts and his moderator were on their feet now and then, I found Bro. Sutton was able to control his part of it wisely. I never felt better or stronger in defending the truth; and at the close of the discussion on our proposition, with tears of joy running from my eyes, the thanksgiving of my heart ascended to God for the Book of Mormon and the mission of Joseph Smith in bringing forth this great latter-day work.

This brings to mind the words of Josiah Quincy, who visited Nauvoo in the lifetime of the prophet, as follows: "It is by no means improbable that some future text-book for the use of generations yet unborn, will contain a question something like this: What historical American of the nineteenth century has exerted the most powerful influence upon the destinies of his countrymen? And it is by no means impossible that the answer to that may be thus written: Joseph Smith, the Mormon Prophet."

The influence manifested in defending this servant of God is an evidence of his divine mission, and that the labors of our faithful ministry are not in vain.

His effort in trying to sustain his proposition was as weak as his effort in trying to disprove ours. At the close he stated to me privately that in case he ever met me again he intended to read every mean, dirty thing he could find; "for," said he, "you have done me that way." Certainly, the man felt his weakness, as the above statement shows; but the charge was untrue, as I had simply dealt with Campbellism according to the recorded facts in their own works, which included his articles in their church paper. A. Campbell was baptized by a Baptist minister in 1812, and according to J. R. Graves, the theory of baptism for the remission of sins was not declared by Campbell until 1823, who also declared that baptism without a belief in this principle previously availeth nothing, and as no Baptist minister ever baptized for this purpose, it is evident that he was not scripturally baptized, and the sect founded by him not in harmony with the scriptures, as Mr. Campbell had no authority from God to organize such an institution. Graves in his book says this sect was brought into existence by Campbell in 1827. The term sect was repudiated by my opponent; but he was at sea when I read from Campbell in his Christian System that "a sect may be formed by either adding to or subtracting from the divine code"; also on page 5 where he says, "Never until the present generation did any sect ever build upon the Bible and the Bible alone."

He made light of the term reorganized. I then read from Hayden, page 158, "I saw as its end and sought nothing less than the deorganization of sect, and the reorganization of the saints on the new covenant, in the express terms and conditions divinely set forth in the Holy Scriptures." This proved that Campbellism claimed to be a reorganization, and his criticism reflected back on his own people.

By a thorough study of the books and papers put out by Campbellism it is an easy matter to vanquish those who pretend to defend that inconsistency; and while we are affirming our work we can use many statements in their own periodicals which speak in favor of our position; and while affirming our work and denying theirs, we are standing in defense of the truth from first to last.

Bro. Sparling and myself are laboring together, and I find it a great pleasure to walk in the line of duty.

F. M. SLOVER.

WHEELING, West Virginia, September 20, 1907.

Dear Herald: As per appointment, am laboring in Wheeling, West Virginia. The geographical formation of this city reminds one of the story of the young man who was much given to exaggeration. His brother would coach the exaggerating one as occasion required. One day he started to tell of a barn he had seen, which, he said, "was nearly half a mile long" (a vigorous nudge from his brother,) "and ten feet wide!" That is about the way Wheeling is built, several miles long and a few squares wide; a canyon full of fog, smoke, spiritualism, and business; a Pittsburg satellite, dirt and all. Several of the brethren are engaged in selling water power washing-machines, and there is a good market for them. As you get a bird's-eye view of the city from the surrounding hills, one is reminded of the observation of the old lady who said, "It is strange that nearly every large city has a river running past it!" How nature does provide! Dirty Pittsburg has been supplied with three rivers, while Wheeling has only one to furnish water to keep it clean; but the river gets right to the heart of the town it divides, makes a good-sized island, spreading out well on either side, and in a spirit of liberality occasionally spreads out some more and spreads up, even trying to help the people wash away the dirt!

When you view the hills upon hills of West Virginia, you wonder sometimes where all the dirt came from. The farmers say the hills are a blessing because you can farm both sides; more ground to the acre than on a flat farm! How is that for optimism?

There is a good live branch here, well officered, and considerable talent among the laity; a nice, comfortable church to meet in, and a fine, good-hearted lot of Saints to live among.

Bro. Joseph Ebeling, one of the officials of the branch, lost his oldest boy, Ivan, twelve years old, on the 11th of this month. He was a fine, apparently sturdy lad, but succumbed to heart trouble. Bro. U. W. Greene preached the funeral sermon, the services being held in the church in order to accommodate the large gathering of sympathizing friends.

The same problems confront the missionary here as in other cities. Street-preaching was to be tried but the mayor has prohibited it by request of the business men. A systematic distribution of tracts will be begun as a means of reaching the people. The city is surrounded with small towns, where the gospel has never been preached. How one longs to have these souls hear the gospel and obey it. Our constant prayer is, Lord, open the way.

Am convinced we must give more thought and effort to the ones we have secured, and their children, than we have. Out in the rural districts the parents are hard-working and busy, with no branch privileges, often not taking any of the church publications to keep in touch with the work, and, as a consequence, the children growing up in ignorance of what the church teaches. Hope the time will come soon when the Sunday-school Association will be in a position to publish a quarterly to meet this demand, or make some necessary changes in our present Quarterly. The lessons are only studied more or less superficially, so there should be a special quarterly published for home class work, which will deal almost exclusively with the doctrines of the church, or the present plan should be altered and the Quarterly treat more of the gospel. We should have a quarterly characteristically Latter Day Saint. Our Sunday-schools should turn out Latter Day Saints; the scholars should have the gospel taught them Sunday after Sunday. Think the Quarterly is decidedly weak along this line. Every lesson should have some gospel point clearly taught, and less space given to Bible history. About all the gospel teaching many of the children receive is obtained at the Sunday-school, so in the formative period the teachings of the church should be drummed into them while we have the opportunity, and they should be prepared in the Sunday-school for membership in the church. I fail to see where our Quarterly does now, and if the present policy continues, will in the future, until we get out of the Old Testament, meet this demand. But if there will be no change made, some kind of a home class quarterly ought to be provided which will teach the gospel first and last, and have for its aim, not the turning out of a Bible student, but a gospel-believer.

C. EDWARD MILLER.

VIENNA, Illinois, September 9, 1907.

Saints' Herald: I will contribute a few lines to your columns, that the HERALD readers may know how the work is moving in this part. I am the only missionary who has labored in the extreme southern part of the Southern Illinois District. When I saw the report of the appointments of missionaries for the present year, I was well pleased with my appointment. If it had been left to myself to make choice of field, I think I could not have pleased myself better; but not receiving my certificate of appointment as early as I thought I should, I wrote to the minister in charge concerning it, and he sent it, with a letter expressing his good wishes for my success and the success of the work, also stating in his letter that there had been some complaint against me about not staying away from home long enough to make an agreeable missionary; and this may be the complaint next year, but I hope it will not be so serious.

Feeling that the Lord's hand was in the appointment of the missionaries as well as other parts of the work, and that he would direct me if I would ask, trusting in him, I started to my field of labor. As soon as I crossed the Ohio River, I realized I was in my field and should go to work. I walked out to an old town by the name of Stringtown, where I lived thirty-two years ago. There are very few people there now who remember my living at that place; but when I walked up into the town and looked about me, and realized the conditions and influences that surrounded me, it called to my memory a presentation of the field that was given me about a year before I was ordained to the ministry. I saw this part of the Southern Illinois District with very discouraging features for missionary work. All the people seemed to be engaged in things that did not pertain to religious matters, and I felt greatly discouraged, and it required a great effort upon my part to open the work there. And when I came here I found it even so, just as it was shown me in a dream; but knowing the Lord's hand was in it, from the fact that he had shown it to me about seven years before, I could put forth an effort. So I went to work in good faith, praying for the guidance of the good Spirit. I have been able to open the work in seven places, or to preach the gospel where it had not been heard before; have been blessed with success in getting places in which to preach, and with good liberty in presenting the word. I feel encouraged in the work, and still more strengthened in the idea that God is able and will make us able to accomplish a good work under very adverse circumstances, if we are willing to make the effort. And I feel to praise and bless his holy name for the many kind favors he has conferred upon me and my family. I shall never be able to repay him, though I should spend every moment of my life in his service.

I have preached three times in the Saints' church, and twice at the reunion since I have been in the district, and baptized Bro. John Smith's son, a young man twenty years of age, who is afflicted with something like lung trouble, in whom we feel a very deep interest, and we ask the prayers of the Saints in his behalf. The Saints I have met in this district seem very kind, the same good Spirit among them that we find elsewhere.

Bro. Lloyd Moore and myself have just closed a meeting which we held in a schoolhouse in the Tunnel Hill Branch. We had fair crowds, but poor interest. I will go south again to-morrow, the Lord willing, to seek new fields. It is my delight to get the gospel before people who never heard it. I like to be instrumental in gladdening the hearts of the honest ones with the glorious gospel news, that they may share in the hope of the Saints of God, and be made to realize its powers. May God bless the work of the HERALD, and all other departments of the work, and may his mercy and love be exemplified by all Saints everywhere!

Hopeful in the gospel,

MANTI, Utah, September 18, 1907.

Editors Herald: We are here at this "temple town," and thought perhaps a line from our pen would not be amiss. We are provided with a place to eat and sleep at the home of our aged Bro. and Sr. S. P. Rasmussen, who, though isolated, have held to the faith, and are glad to lend their aid in support of the work. I visited the bishop's office of this place, this morning, and made application for a house, but we were informed that they had no houses for us, and that the day was past for letting the "Josephites" have their houses. We suggested that they were not strictly in line with the golden rule, but were informed that they did not care to have us point out where they were wrong, and therefore they had to refuse us the use of their houses. The singular part of it all is that when we were here a year ago in company with A. M. Chase, we did not apply for a house, but went right ahead with street-services, and they rather took exceptions because we did not apply for a house, and said we could have had a house if we had only asked for one.

We left Springville yesterday, where we had been cared for during our stay by Mr. and Sr. Proctor Humphrey. Sr. Humphrey is a good Latter Day Saint, and her husband, though not a member of the church, is ready to aid in the good work, and always has a home for the elders.

The nights are beginning to get cooler, and it reminds one that winter is approaching. The woodlands are beautifully adorned with crimson and gold, thus indicating that autumn is here.

We expect our colaborer here on the morrow, and if the weather permits we will open fire on the street-corner, and try if possible to draw the line of division between truth and error.

We also wish to call attention to the fact that we are still ready and willing to receipt for tithes and offerings, and anything that is addressed to me at Pleasant Grove, Utah, will always reach me.

In a former treatise we set forth the needs of our district, and not having received a response to that we again announce that we are ready to receipt for any amount, either small or great. And let none make the mistake that one brother did: have fifty dollars in the house for tithing, and then just because the agent did not happen to get that way, turn it into something else; but send it in, and we will receive it, and place it in the treasury to provide for the Lord's work.

Your brother in Christ, J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Over the Mountains.

Editors Herald: Our Provo reunion is over, and Bro. Stead and the writer are down to street-work in the cool and scenic city of Logan. Its coolness is accounted for by the fact that it is so far removed from the main valley, and is more immediately surrounded by mountains than the cities to which we have devoted ourselves during the previous months. It is well watered, as all the mountain towns are that I have thus far visited. It is too cool for peaches,—just right to sleep,—but there is an abundance of apples and other fruits.

Here is one of the four temples of the Mormon church, standing on an elevation in the east of the city, built of what I would pronounce to be gray limestone, beautiful in appearance, dedicated in the eighties. I entered the yard and walked around it; but, like all their temples, it is inadmissible except to members of their church bearing a certificate. I thought, "Too bad that so much expense is laid out for nothing; too bad that so much energy is expended for the salvation of the dead, and the dead be not affected thereby."

And here is the home of Lucy Kimball, the professed surviving wife of Joseph the Martyr. She resides with her daughter. I called on her for an interview, stated that I had visited Nauvoo and many other places notable in Mormon history, and having understood that she had been associated with the early church, I would appreciate admission for the purpose of a friendly interview. Peremptorily she inquired for my name, which when she heard, she exclaimed, "Oh, you belong to the Reorganized Church!" When she had been answered in the affirmative, she very politely declined. This is the woman who bore testimony in the Temple Lot case that she married the Prophet without Emma's consent or knowledge; and in the Historical Record (impliedly) that Emma both knew about it and gave her consent. While in Brigham we had lodgment with her niece during all of our stay save one night. Her husband is a Mormon missionary and off on a mission. One day when we became involved in a friendly conversation on the subject of polygamy in connection with Joseph Smith, she took occasion to state that her Aunt Lucy had been sealed to him with Emma's consent. I went upstairs and got the Abstract of Evidence and read where she had testified the opposite. She was surprised, and lost for a response.

And here in this city is the home of the deposed apostle, Moses Thatcher. I have called on him at his fine residence and had a very friendly visit with, perhaps, the most intelligent Mormon I have met in Utah. We had an extended conversation, and he gave me a cordial welcome any time I have an inclination to come. He was glad for the opportunity to invest in a copy of the Inspired Translation, and accepted of other matter to read. He is well versed along general lines, and particularly on Mormon history. He talks unreservedly about his troubles with their leaders, and in conversational capacity takes the utmost freedom to denounce or to condemn according to his conviction of right or wrong. He evidently believes that the Mormon church is right, but that they are suffering under a greatly abused priesthood.

We are the guests of the wife and mother of one of our missionaries and her mother, whose home is here—Elder S. D. Condit. We came on the 12th, one week ago, in time to find one of the conditions that has more than once added pathos to the story of missionary life. What was the condition? Why, a little baby, about seven months old, was lying dead in the house, and the husband, the father, the missionary, was away on a mission in Oregon. In his absence the writer and colaborer conducted the funeral and laid away in the hill cemetery the little blighted bud, so flush and sparkling when papa went away. And now, since I started this letter, the anxious father has stepped in.

Our Provo reunion, the minutes of which may be officially reported, was enjoyable and educational. None of the Twelve were there. The preaching was by Elders Davis, Stead, Sheldon, Curtis, Abels, Briggs, Vanderwood, and as one brother said, "that other disciple." Preachings were held on the street and in the tent each evening at seven and eight o'clock. After one of the street-meetings one evening, some of the brethren became involved in an argument with some of the bystanders. Some assertions were made by one of our brethren with reference to promises that were made and broken by Joseph F. Smith. Presently Apostle Reed Smoot came pushing through the crowd and intruded himself into the bout. He called one of the brethren a liar several times, and when the other brother was pointing to a book in the hands of the brother who was prominent in the conversation, requesting him to read a certain portion of it, the angry apostle was undignified enough to smite his hand aside.

On the tenth of the month I met at the Ogden depot my fellow countrymen, President R. C. Evans and wife, on their way to the East from the California reunions. Time not permitting them to take a stopover, I hastily purchased a ticket and boarded with them for Salt Lake to spend the day with them. They were to stay there till the evening train. There are two lines operating between Ogden and Salt Lake; the Oregon Short Line and the Rio Grande. Bro. Evans was on the latter, and unfortunately—or fortunately as it afterwards proved to be—I purchased my ticket for the former. All went well till the conductor came around; and even then it went well after a little parley, for it was fixed so that there was no loss to me in a financial way, save a trifle of inconvenience. When we were but a few miles northward of Salt Lake, the train halted between stations, for cause at first unknown. Presently the alarm was sounded among the passengers that there was a wreck. Out we went, and there to find that the Short Line passenger which my ticket was good for, and which had left a little earlier than ours, was in a head-on collision with a freight traveling in the opposite direction. They had struck but a short time before our arrival. The two engines were both on the track, hugging each other with that closeness that one had to examine for some moments to ascertain if they were really two, and where the division point was to be located. Two freight cars were derailed, and the baggage coach had telescoped and enveloped in part the locomotive. In this condition it was on fire, the flames gradually eating it up. About twelve, I think, of the crew and passengers were injured. We saw them assist the engineer, who had a broken shoulder and a badly skinned and bruised head, on our train. Bro. Evans and I sat by him and proffered our ministrations wherever we might be able to alleviate the man in pain. He told us the story of the accident.

Bro. Stead soon goes to Salt Lake to join another of the ministry in a street campaign while the weather permits. The writer directly pulls out for Idaho to spend a season, if not the winter.

If any one thinks that my appearance in the HERALD is of conspicuous frequency, I might say that there are times when I am not in meeting of any description, when I am not disposed to read, when it is inopportune to call; and so I put in my time in writing in my diary, for the secular paper, or for the HERALD—rather than sleep. I think I ought not to be lost for that.

September 20.

LAMONI, Iowa, September 27, 1907.

Editors Herald: Since one of your Chicago correspondents has made a misapplied use of an interpretation to a tongue given at Plano, Illinois, September 1, 1907, it is thought best to give the interpretation in full. It will be seen that the young were no more upbraided than the old, and how such an idea could have originated I do not know. I was present during the entire reunion and if so much "boisterousness" and "gadding" was indulged as indicated in these items I failed to see it. In justice to all, the following should be published:

"Verily, thus saith the Spirit unto you, my people: At the commencement of this reunion I gave promise unto you. I promised that I would watch over and care for you; that promise I have kept. I have guarded you and done all that I promised I would. I warned my people as to the necessity of being faithful unto me, that on condition of such faithfulness I would bless and sanctify you unto myself.

"My people this morning are under condemnation for not having been as faithful as they should. Had they been as faithful as I commanded them to, I, the Lord, would have poured out my Spirit in a greater degree than I have done and you would have been more blessed. Let not one say of another, 'It is he,' or, 'It is she,' but let my people all take heed and be warned by this admonition, become more humble and more faithful, and I will grant unto you of my Spirit and bless you in time to come, and sanctify you unto myself in harmony with your faithfulness.

"Thus saith the Spirit unto you. Amen."

Trusting that this may relieve any of unnecessary odium,

She continued a member of the church at Benwood until she changed her residence to Kirtland, when she united with that branch, November 6, 1895. She was married to Mr. Newton P. Crawford, May 19, 1894, at Wheeling, West Virginia. Interment in the cemetery at Kirtland; sermon by L. W. Powell.

Progress and Value of Tree Planting.

Reports from all parts of the country show that the past season has undoubtedly been characterized by a more extensive planting of forest trees than any previous year in the history of the United States. The work is progressing very favorably in every State in the Union. It has been most extensive in California, in the great Middle West, and in the New England States. But even in the South, where planting has been more or less limited because of existing natural forests, the scope of the work has greatly broadened.

The trees planted have been mainly hardwoods. Several large nurserymen, however, report greater sales of conifers for forest planting than they have ever made before. In the Middle West catalpa, black locust, osage orange, and Russian mulberry were the favorite trees; in the North and northeast preference was given to white pine, chestnut, larch, and spruce; in the South the native conifers held the lead; and in California, where the immense annual planting area has been increased to at least five times its former size, eucalyptus had practically a monopoly.

A few figures readily show the value of forest planting from a commercial standpoint. In Pawnee County, Nebraska, a 16-year-old catalpa plantation gave a net return of $152.17 per acre at the time the plantation was cut. This meant an annual profit of $6.24 per acre. A 10-year-old plantation of the same species in Kansas showed a net value of $197.55 per acre. Still another plantation, in Nebraska, gave a net income of $170.50 per acre when 14 years old, which amounts to an annual income of $8.69 per acre. Several equally striking cases could be cited throughout the entire Middle West, and it is known that where the catalpa will succeed no other tree will pay so well. Good soil and moisture conditions are, however, essential for success with this tree.

Osage orange has been known to produce as high as 2,640 first-class posts and 2,272 second-class posts per acre, and it is well understood that no posts are better than those of osage orange. Land producing such a forest as this could hardly be put to a better use, since timber is the easiest of all crops to raise and from now on will never go begging for a market.

Red cedar in plantations 25 years old has reached a value of $200.54 per acre. European larch used for fence posts or telephone posts reaches an average value of $200 to $300. White pine plantations 40 years old have exceeded a value of $300 per acre, and it is known that the eucalyptus, even when grown for fuel alone, can compete as to profits with oranges.

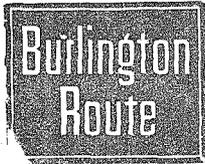

It does not take a lifetime to get results. Catalpa often reaches a post size in from eight to ten years, and will give service as a post for from fifteen to forty years. Osage orange, which reaches post size in from twelve to fifteen years, usually lasts longer than catalpa. Black locust, though badly affected by the borer in some regions, grows about as fast as the catalpa and has almost the same post value, while it has the great advantage over catalpa of being able to thrive on poor land. European larch reaches a size suitable for telephone poles in twenty-five years. When treated with preservative it will then last from fifteen to twenty-five years. Eucalyptus makes a heavy yield of fuel in seven years, and the crop should nearly always be cut before ten years. On favorable sites white pine will make saw timber in from forty to sixty years. Already the demand for the timber of this tree shows conclusively that the investment will prove immensely profitable.

In every region of the United States there is at least one forest tree, and generally there are several forest trees, which can be planted with a complete assurance of commercial success if the plantation is properly established and given proper care. The Government has made a very careful study of most of the forest plantations in the United States. Its publications on tree planting may be had free of charge upon application to the Forest Service, U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. The studies on which they were based were made especially for the benefit of farmers and other land owners, and to prevent the waste of thousands of dollars annually lost by planting the wrong forest trees or by improper care of plantations.

From the manner in which our natural timber has been cut it is clear that each region will have to be made as nearly self-supporting in timber growth as possible. The lesson of the past is that the right forest trees grown in the right way will bring a big profit.

President Joseph Smith sails this week for Honolulu, where he is to dedicate the new church. He is accompanied by Apostle F. M. Sheehy.

***

"The man who is acquainted with what he has to meet is the best prepared to meet what is before him. He knows the character of the foe, and may be prepared to meet it. Each must fight life's battles for himself."

***

"It is thought that you can change men and women by a different environment. That by statutes enacted, conference resolutions passed, etc, you can change the environment and hence change the subject. My friends, the doctrine of environment was smashed to pieces in the garden of Eden. So long as there is a disposition to make the slum the slum will exist."

We all have occasion to be happy under the influence of the bright prospects of success which attend us to-day. Every student, every teacher, every friend of Graceland is looking forward to a brighter future, perhaps, than ever before.

The importance of a college education can not be over-estimated; for, although some men have made a success in life without it, they could have made a much greater success had they been educated. I do not mean by this that education is success. Education is but an aid to success. There are numerous instances of men with splendid college educations, who have been failures so far as life is concerned. But while education does not insure your success, it will enable you to meet the issues of life in a much more comprehensive way, and accomplish results that would otherwise have been impossible.

To be successful, we must excel others, excel them in whatever way we wish to succeed, if it is nothing more than shoveling sand—to be successful we must shovel more sand than they. If we wish to succeed in music, we must become better musicians than others. If our ambitions lie in painting, to be successful we must paint better pictures than other artists.

Success is always comparative. We never see an instance of absolute success; but we determine the degree of a man's success by its relationship to the achievements of other men.

In every art, profession, or trade you will find the successful man making a preparation and devoting an amount of energy to the accomplishment of his ideal, which the ordinary man considers extreme and unnecessary. Ask the great artist how he is able to produce a picture in a few hours' time which excites your wonder and admiration, and which can not be equaled by his fellow artists, and he will tell you that he began his work in his childhood, while other children were playing, and who looked upon him as being strange and peculiar because he liked his paper and pencil better than their toys. He will tell you of hours, days, weeks, months, and years of work amid these same children as they grew to be men, they continuing to look upon him, from time to time, as being strange and peculiar, and perhaps a crank, because he worked so much, until at last his success compelled them to acknowledge his excellence; and then instead of giving him credit for the work he has done, they say, "He is a genius, and was born with a natural talent."

Genius is the willingness and capacity to labor. Only a short time ago I was allowed to read a letter from a lady who is studying music in New York—vocal music. Already she has advanced so far in her work that she has successfully filled an engagement in grand opera at a good salary, which she resigned at the end of the year to continue her studies. And now she writes, "I have been trying to make up my mind whether it is best for me to accept another situation [in grand opera, which has been offered her] or to continue my work. At last I have decided to continue my studies; for why should I be content to accept an ordinary situation, when every other member of the profession is doing the same thing?"

This lady has been studying music all her life; ever since she was a child she has had this object in view. And now, when having made a success most of us would be proud of, we find her still at work. And I will make the prediction that no matter how high she may climb in her profession, and even though she may be rewarded for her years of work by being acknowledged a genius, and though she may set people talking about her natural talent, you will always find her at labor.

Have you not noted successful men doing more than you thought was necessary? I have noted them devoting the best years of their life trying to perform a work and bring about results which they thought desirable. And as I have seen them after some particularly strenuous effort, I have thought? "Well, they are doing more than I would do." And afterwards I have seen that all their work was necessary to accomplish the results that marked their degree of success. And if I should have attempted to perform their work I should have failed simply because I underestimated the amount of necessary effort.

I remember when I was a boy, learning the carpenter's trade, I was attempting to plane a piece of wood that had a knot in it, and as I pushed the plane along it always stopped in the knot. Time after time I endeavored to get by that knot and it always stopped just there. I was becoming quite irritated. My employer noticing my efforts, said: "Will, what are you trying to do?" "I am trying to plane this piece of wood, but there's a knot in it, and I am not strong enough." He said: "Now, look here; you take the plane and shove it right through that knot; push twice as hard as you think you ought to." I pushed; and to my surprise I was successful. I had only underestimated the amount of necessary effort.

And that is one reason many men fail. They underestimate the amount of effort and energy necessary to accomplish the results they desire, and consequently are disappointed and discouraged when they find their labor does not accomplish what they had hoped for.

A friend of mine was employed as assistant engineer in a large office building. He had not been able to secure an education when a boy, so was attending night school, studying the principles of steam engineering. He was very anxious to advance in his trade. Hearing that a new office building was to be erected, he made application for the position of chief engineer before the building was completed—wanted to be sure that his application would be in at least. Not having the education or experience necessary, he was disappointed. They employed a man whose education and experience fitted him for the place. In a short time, however, it developed that this man had some bad habits which unfitted him. He attempted to work while in an intoxicated condition, and they discharged him at once. This left them without an engineer, and in the emergency they employed this friend of mine. He told me that when he looked upon the machinery and saw it running in a way that demonstrated the incompetency of the man they had discharged, he realized that he would not only have to keep it running, but that he would have to repair it and put it in good condition. He felt that he had undertaken more than he was able to do, and he thought of giving up then before he had started. And then it occurred to him that this was the opportunity for which he had been looking, and he made up his mind he would do his best. He took off his coat and went to work at once. Supper time came, and he was still at work. Bedtime came, passed, and he was still working. He worked all night long, becoming familiar with the situation, to be prepared for the emergencies of the following day. And for weeks and months afterwards, although he was required to work but eight hours a day, he put in from twelve to eighteen hours a day in order to meet the requirements of the situation. Now, if he had done anything less than this, he would not have made so great a success. If he had only worked eight hours a day he would have failed. He may have done more than was thought necessary. His friends may have thought he was making a fool of himself perhaps by putting in so much time when it was not required, but, although he was not qualified to fill the situation, he succeeded because of unusual effort. He correctly estimated the amount of effort necessary.

There is no secret of success. Success is the result of labor; just plain, quiet, steady, persistent labor. There is nothing that can take its place. It is useless to attempt to use a wishbone for a backbone.

Some successful men are regarded as being fortunate by others who regard themselves as being unfortunate. They seem to think that success is possible only to the lucky man; and that they fail in everything they undertake, simply because they were born unlucky.

I remember a young man who applied to me for work, who had been employed as elevator boy in an office building; and on one of the upper floors there were employed a number of boys. He got to scuffling with one of them and broke a window. In explaining to me how he happened to be discharged, he said, after relating the circumstances: "Now, it was just my luck to have the boss come upstairs just as the window was broken, and so he fired me. Seems as though I have the blamedst luck, anyhow. Every job I get, something has to go wrong." Now, if this young man had—I was going to say "happened"—if this young man had managed to do something well, he would have realized and considered that that was the result of his labor or skill; but if he had seen the other fellow make a success, he would have considered that as being fortunate; but he has to work for all the success that comes to him, simply because he was born unlucky. Now, he makes the mistake of considering himself peculiar, or differently constituted than the rest of us. We are all unlucky in that sense. We all have to work for all the success that comes to us.

The most successful men, however, really enjoy work for its own sake. The results are gratifying to them, of course; but they really like to work. And that is one of the elements which enables men to persevere when it seems almost useless. You will find them opposed by those who ought to help them, working alone for years, trying to accomplish their purposes, without complaint, not in the least discouraged or disappointed, and we can only wonder at their determination and courage. And yet you find them patiently and cheerfully continuing their work, seemingly as happy as if everything is just as they wish it to be.

Make up your minds as early in life as possible what you are going to do. Select your life's work. Have an object in life, and then devote all your energies to its accomplishment. If you are aimlessly drifting, stop it now. Determine your destination, and then resolutely shape your course to that end. Do not expect to make the journey in a day. All great achievements are preceded by years of preparation and labor.

There are several kinds of labor, and to be the most successful we must perform the kind that is most important. The horse is able to perform a great deal more work of a certain kind than a man; but he is not able to make a great success as a statesman. Man can perform the same kind of labor as a horse; but if he confines his efforts to work of that character, he will not be able to make as great a success as the horse. Man is able to perform a higher grade of work than mere horsepower. Man has that which the horse lacks. Man is able to reason, and it is the use of this capacity which enables him to make his best success. Education alone is not sufficient. A man may secure the best scholarships and graduate with high honors; but unless he develops the ability to think he is sure to fail. Mere memory may secure high grades at school, but when we leave school and enter upon the work of life, it requires original thinking; the power to determine what causes produce desired results. We must be able to reason from cause to effect.

I believe I am conservative in making the estimate that ninety per cent of mankind are traveling in the same ruts of thought made by their forefathers. They have a circle of thought in which their minds travel in one continuous round. The same thoughts pass through their minds day after day. If you doubt this assertion, carefully note the number of entirely new thoughts that come to you during a week, and this will be a test of your capacity for original thinking.

Many men perform their work in much the same way as the horse. They will pull their load as long as they are hitched to it and have a driver; but without one they are as helpless as a horse. And if anything unusual occurs, they are in about the same predicament a horse would be with a broken tug. I have seen young men at work, operating a machine producing a number of similar parts, and as long as their machines remained perfectly set they succeeded very well. But if they became deranged, they went ahead wholly ignorant, and regardless of the fact that they were not only producing a number of entirely useless parts, but were wasting material as well. Their minds were not at work. They did not see what they were doing. And I have thought, as I have observed these young men, how little they worked above the shoulders. Work from the shoulders down is horse power. Work from the shoulders up is man power, and will enable man to make his best success.

Apparently some boys and girls, and men and women, use their heads for little else than a convenient place to wear their hats. They think with them enough to eat when they are hungry, to sleep when they are tired, and to growl when they do not have their own way. The common brute does this; and it is often difficult to trace any other distinguishing feature. Brutes can not progress because they have no reason. Men can not progress unless they use reason. Reason, or thought-power, is the greatest and only force in the whole world by which men can progress. All improvements, of whatever character, spiritual, moral, or physical, are the results of thought-power. There is absolutely nothing which can not be improved. Even our conceptions of truth are continuously growing more perfect, under the influence of this marvelous force.

You, every one of you, are filling the reservoirs of your consciousness with knowledge secured by the thinkers of the past. Are you going to allow it to become a stagnant cistern, filled with loathsome microbes of disease, or will you convert it into a well of living water, springing up unto everlasting life, by giving it back to the world enriched with thoughts of your own, thus adding your share to the world's stock of knowledge and understanding, receiving the reward given all those whose efforts have earned success?

The Straight Road

THE NEW BIRTH.

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom of God.—John 3: 3.

Probably no text of scripture has received more consideration, and has been the subject of more contention and debate than the foregoing, and also the following quotation:

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter the kingdom of God.—John 3: 5.

Among the Jewish writers the repetition of the Greek term from which the word verily is taken is said to have been considered as of equal import with the most solemn oath; so there is something very positive about this statement of our Lord.

Whatever this new birth may be, it is evident that it is necessary; all professed Christians admit this. All have a desire to enter the kingdom of God.

The kingdom of God does not refer alone to the abode of God, or to heaven, as some have thought; but it also has reference to God's established government on the earth, for the present and eternal benefit and salvation of mankind, as the following texts will indicate:

Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Matthew 3: 2. (See Matthew 4: 17.)

And as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Matthew 10: 7.

And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.—Mark 1: 15.

And heal the sick that are therein, and say unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.—Luke 10: 9.

The foregoing, with the parables of Jesus concerning the kingdom, in Matthew, thirteenth chapter, clearly teach us that the kingdom of God is something that exists on the earth, as well as in heaven. But, though the kingdom was then at hand, those unregenerated ones could not see it. Jesus, in answer to the question of the Pharisees as to when the kingdom of God should come, said: "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation ["as with outward show"—marginal rendering]: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, Lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you ["or among you"—margin]. Luke 17: 20, 21.

The kingdom of God was in their midst—among the Pharisees, but they could not see it, for the reason that they had not been born again.

The majority of religious instructors throughout Christendom teach that this new birth has reference only to the birth of the Spirit, and that the birth of water is only a secondary or minor consideration and has nothing to do with our salvation. Some hold that it does not refer to water baptism at all. The claim that Jesus meant only the birth of the Spirit is often based on the following argument: The Greek words from which the phrase born again is taken, is rendered in the margin, and by various translators, "born from above." Hence they conclude that as it is the Spirit that comes from above, it is the Spirit birth that is alone referred to. And further, that in the conversation that followed with Nicodemus, Jesus does not again mention water; but in the sixth and eighth verses where he refers to the matter of being born again, he mentions the Spirit. So they argue that if water baptism had been meant by the Savior he certainly would have mentioned water again.

To the first part of this argument we answer: Admitting that the marginal translation, from the Greek text as we now have it, may be correct, it is a truth that "the word" which requires the birth of water as well as the birth of the Spirit, comes from above—or from God. (See John 12: 49.) As Peter says: "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever."—1 Peter 1: 23. Then, in the twenty-fifth verse he says: "But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you."

This word of the Lord, or the gospel, which is from above, requires the baptism of water before the birth of the Spirit; and this is the way Jesus presented it to Nicodemus in John 3: 5. (See also Acts 2: 38; 8: 2-19; 19: 1-6.)

But aside from all this, it is a fact that the words of Jesus (John 3: 5) are but an explanation and an elucidation of the language used in the third verse, that seemed so hard for Nicodemus to understand, as he evidently thought the Master had reference to a physical birth. But Jesus now tells him just what he meant by being "born again," or "born from above." If it was a mystery before, it should now be clearly understood. The words of Jesus are clear enough, and positive enough, without any repetition so far as there being any question as to his meaning.

To the latter argument, we reply: The fact that Jesus does not again refer to the birth of water, while he does twice again mention the birth of the Spirit, does not contradict nor destroy his words "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter the kingdom of God." To the mind of the writer, the reason that Jesus referred again especially to the birth of the Spirit, was evidently because this was the culminating or crowning work in the process of regeneration, or new birth—which also includes the birth of water—as the Holy Spirit is the seal of our adoption (see Romans 8: 15, 16), and the earnest of our inheritance (see Ephesians 1: 13, 14).

The birth, or baptism, of water is for the remission of sins. (See Mark 1: 4; Luke 3: 3; Acts 2: 38.) Therefore the birth of water should precede the birth of the Spirit, just as Jesus taught, as the Spirit of God will not dwell in unholy temples. Why this effort to make it appear that the teaching of Jesus to Nicodemus refers wholly to the baptism of the Spirit? Simply because when it is once conceded that "born of water" means baptism of water, the mode of baptism is so clearly apparent that their followers could at once see it; and this many desire to avoid.

Many to-day are in precisely the same condition that the Pharisees were; the kingdom of God is again established on the earth and it is "among" them, yet they "can not see" it because of their unregenerated condition. And they continue in this condition because of unbelief and lack of faith in the words of Jesus.

The steps by which this new birth may be attained are as follows:

1. Faith, which comes by hearing the word. (Romans 10: 17.)

2. Repentance, which is a godly sorrow for sin, and a turning away from the same. (See 2 Corinthians 7: 10.)

These are preparatory steps to the new birth. Having thus believed in God and his word, and then manifested the true spirit of reformation through proper repentance, we are in a position to enter into the realities and blessings of the new birth by taking the next step which is:

3. Baptism of water for the remission of sins. (See Acts 2: 38; 22: 16.)

4. Baptism of the Holy Spirit, which is given by the laying on of hands. (See Acts 8: 14-19; 19: 6; Hebrews 6: 2.)

Thus we discover that it is of a twofold character.

Its first stage being a birth of water, preceded by the prerequisites of faith and repentance, through which God has promised to cancel our sins. Then we are in proper condition to experience the second stage by being born of the Spirit. Then we know we are heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ. (See Romans 8: 16, 17.)

"And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood; and these three agree in one."—1 John 5: 8.

These three witnesses have their places in the plan of regeneration and redemption. For by the water we are purified, by the Spirit we are justified, and by the blood we are sanctified.

"THE FRUIT OF YOUR DOINGS."

ELDER ISAAC M. SMITH.

"Reader, do you realize the almost numberless opportunities for doing good that are lying before you? And do you realize what it may mean to you if you neglect those opportunities?"

I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings.—Jeremiah 17: 10.

Man is to be rewarded "according to his ways," and he is also to be rewarded "according to the fruit" of his ways; and the fruit of what a man does is not the thing done. The fruit of a tree is not the tree itself; but it is that which the tree produces. The fruit of the vine is not the vine itself; but it is that which the vine produces. And "the fruit of your doings" is not that which you do; but it is that which comes as the result or effect of your doings: that which your doings produce. And, as "every good tree bringeth forth good fruit," the fruit of good deeds must be good, too; and, as "a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit," even so will the fruit of a corrupt or wicked deed be evil also. Hence, the fruit of your doings will be good or bad, according as your doings are good or bad; but the fruit of your doings may be far more serious than that which you do. The Apostle Paul said: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Galatians 6: 7. And that is true. If a man sows wheat, he will reap wheat; if he sows tares, he must reap tares: whatsoever he sows, that will he reap. But whatever a man sows will bear fruit, after its kind, of course; and when the harvest is come, the sower must reap, not the bare grain sown, but he must reap the fruit which the grain sown has produced. Hence to the above the apostle adds: "For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."—Galatians 6: 8.

If he sows to the flesh, the fruit which that sowing will produce will be corruption, or death; but if he sows to the Spirit, the fruit which that sowing will produce will be life everlasting.

Coming back to the text, however, I wish to submit the following, as further proof that "the fruit" of a man's deeds will be considered when he is judged:

But I will punish you according to the fruit of your doings, saith the Lord.—Jeremiah 21: 14.

Great in counsel, and mighty in work: for thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men: to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings.—Jeremiah 32: 19.

They would none of my counsel; they despised all my reproof: therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices.—Proverbs 1: 30, 31.

And this principle applies to the righteous, too, as well as to the wicked. The Lord said to the prophet Isaiah: "Say ye to the righteous, that it shall be well with him; for they shall eat the fruit of their doings."—Isaiah 3: 10.

Yes, the righteous man shall eat the fruit of his doings, or, in other words, he shall reap the fruit which his good deeds bring forth. But it may not be clear to all, just what the fruit of a righteous man's doings may be; hence I wish to present a few brief texts to show what kind of fruit sometimes grows from good deeds.

James said:

Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins.—James 5: 19, 20.

And the Lord said to Oliver Cowdery:

And if it so be that you should labor all your days, in crying repentance unto this people, and bring save it be one soul unto me, how great shall be your joy with him in the kingdom of my Father! And now, if your joy will be great with one soul that you have brought unto me into the kingdom of my Father, how great will be your joy, if you should bring many souls unto me!—Doctrine and Covenants 16: 3, 4.

Unto Daniel, the Lord said:

And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever.—Daniel 12: 3.

The man or woman who brings one soul unto Christ, in the kingdom of our Father, "saves a soul from death;" hence the salvation of that soul from death is "the fruit" of the labor done, and the reward will be great "joy with him in the kingdom of my Father." And when we remember that our Savior said there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance; and also remember that he taught that, if a man should gain the whole world and then lose his own soul, all his possessions would not be sufficient to redeem his soul from death; when we remember all this, we begin to get some faint idea of the priceless value of a human soul, in the eyes of the Lord; and we begin to see, too, what priceless fruit our labors for the Master may produce. The fruit of the labor done in bringing one soul to Christ, in his Father's kingdom, is more precious in the eyes of the Lord than "the whole world." The fruit of that labor is a saved soul. That labor has "saved a soul from death;" something "the whole world," though a man had it all at his command, could not do. And as the labor done, in bringing one soul unto Christ in his kingdom, yields such priceless fruit, we can readily believe that those who "turn many to righteousness," those who "bring many souls unto me," shall have great joy with those souls in the celestial kingdom, and shall shine, indeed, "as the stars for ever and ever."

I have known Sunday-school teachers to become discouraged and feel like giving up their work, because they felt that their efforts were in vain; and yet, as the fruit of their labors, I have seen the little ones, whom they had taught, coming into the fold and becoming workers for the Master. And, seeing this, I have thought: "Oh, that those weary, disheartened teachers could only realize the priceless value of the fruit their labor for the Master is yielding; that they could only be permitted to lift the veil, look into the future, and get one glimpse of the great joy that will be theirs, with those souls, in the kingdom of our Lord!" Could they do this, surely they would return to their work with cheerful hearts, and with souls filled with hope and gladness; surely they would never again feel that their efforts were in vain.

I have known elders who were "poor speakers," timid, easily discouraged, and who felt that their efforts were so weak they could never accomplish any good; and yet, as the fruit of their labor I have seen the sick healed through their administration, the Saints cheered and comforted by their acts of kindness and words of encouragement, and men and women brought to Christ through their fireside talks and godly lives; and again I have thought: "Oh, that they could realize how precious, in the eyes of the Lord, is 'the fruit' which their humble labor for the Master is bearing." The labor done may not be so very much, and it may be done in weakness; but the fruit of that labor, though it be the salvation of only one soul, is of greater value than "the whole world;" and it will cause great joy among the angels of God in heaven, too. Many times the simple act of loaning a book to a friend, giving him a tract, or sending him the Ensign or HERALD, has been the means of bringing that friend and others to Christ. The labor done seemed a mere trifle, but it was done for the Master, and the fruit it yielded is more precious than gold or diamonds. Reader, do you realize the almost numberless opportunities for doing good that are lying before you? And do you realize what it may mean to you, if you neglect those opportunities? Please come with me to that blessed book, the Bible, and read what the Lord said to the prophet Ezekiel:

Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life: the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.—Ezekiel 3: 17, 18.

The wicked does not die innocent, because he has not been warned; he dies "in his iniquity;" but the man who should have given him warning has neglected his duty, and he, too, is held responsible for this wicked man's dying in his iniquity: held responsible to that extent that the blood of the wicked man will be required at his hand. In the next verse, the Lord tells Ezekiel:

Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.

If the wicked man has not been warned, he dies "in his iniquity;" if he has been warned and does not repent, he dies "in his iniquity;" but, in the first case, his blood is required at the hands of the man whom the Lord appointed to warn him, and, in the second case, the wicked man has been warned, hence "his blood shall be upon his own head." His death, in the first case, is reckoned as "the fruit" of negligence or disobedience, on the part of the one who was appointed to warn him; hence that servant of the Lord must reap the fruit which his negligence or disobedience has brought forth: "his blood will I require at thine hand."

In the next two verses of this same chapter there is a practical lesson for the church, to-day. The Lord says:

Again, when a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumblingblock before him, he shall die: because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Nevertheless if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned; also thou hast delivered thy soul.

In the foregoing it is said that this man who has not been warned shall die in his sin, "because thou hast not given him warning;" hence there can be no doubt that his death, in his sin, is the fruit of carelessness or disobedience, on the part of the one whose duty it was to warn him. It is also said, in the foregoing, that this man who is warned, and heeds the warning, shall surely live, "because he is warned." Hence, his salvation is the fruit of faithful obedience on the part of the one who warned him. But the practical lesson for the church, to which I referred, is this: We have in the church certain officers, and those officers have certain duties to perform; and upon the faithful discharge of those duties, the spiritual welfare of the church depends. For example: I am an elder, and we are taught that the elders should be "examples unto the flock." (1 Peter 5: 3; Titus 2: 7; 1 Timothy 4: 12.) Now, if I fail to show myself "an example of the believers," I sin, and for that I must suffer; but when others see me doing wrong and are led by my example to do wrong, thinking it all right to do what the elder does, there comes in "the fruit" of my doings, and for that I must suffer, too: the blood of those whom I lead astray will be required at my hands. We also have priests in the church, and their duty is to visit the members in their homes, and teach them their duty. If a priest fails to do that, he commits a sin, and he must suffer for that sin; but when members grow cold and indifferent and lose the Spirit as a result of the priest's negligence, that is "the fruit of his doings," and for that he must suffer, too: their blood may be required at his hand in the day of judgment because he did not faithfully instruct them. We also have teachers in the church, and their work is specially demanded "when a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity," as stated in the last verses quoted. The teacher's duty in such cases is to visit the offender and try to reclaim him: to see that there is no iniquity, such as backbiting, tattling, ill-feeling, and, in fact, no iniquity of any kind in the church. Now, when the teacher of a branch hears of members doing wrong, backbiting, lying, swearing, or anything that is wrong and calculated to bring reproach on the cause, if he fails to do all that is required of him to correct that wrong, he commits a sin, and for that sin he must suffer; but look what an abundant crop of fruit that sin of his is bearing: division, strife, contention, coldness, indifference, and apostasy are springing up as "the fruit" of his neglecting his duty, and for this he must suffer, too: the blood of many may be required at his hand in the day of judgment, because he failed to warn them.

And then we have deacons in the church, and their duty is to see that the house where the Saints meet for worship is opened at the proper hour, kept clean and in order, and that good order prevails during the services; and, if they neglect their duty, they sin, and must suffer for their negligence. But suppose people, not of the church, attend our meetings, and, when they come to the place of worship, at the hour appointed for service, they find the door locked and are compelled to stand outside several minutes before any one comes to open the door; and, when the door is finally opened, they find the house dirty, and everything in disorder. When the services are being held, they notice the Saints whispering and visiting; they notice the Saints' children running over the floor, out of doors and back again; and remembering that the Lord's house is declared to be a house of order, a house of prayer, they conclude that they have surely come to the wrong house, and all this "the fruit" of the deacon's neglecting to do his duty. Those people may never come again: may die in their sins, because of the condition in which they found the house of the Lord when they visited it; and in the day of judgment, it may be said to the deacon: "This is the fruit of your doings."

A duty neglected often seems to be a very small matter; but the fruit of that negligence may be the loss of many souls, and the blood of those souls may be required at the hand of the negligent party, in the great day of judgment.

I imagine I hear some one saying: "I am only a member, and my neglecting to do my duty could not be so serious because it would not affect the salvation of any one but myself." Wouldn't it? Let us see. Have you obeyed the gospel? Yes. Has the Lord blessed you with his Holy Spirit? Yes. Has he called you "out of darkness into his marvelous light?" Yes. And did he give you this marvelous light, "to put it under a bushel?" Listen: "Ye are the light of the world. . . . Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matthew 5:14-16.

Are you doing that? Do you realize that if you fail to let the light which the Lord has given you so shine before men as to lead them to Christ, they may die in their sins as "the fruit" of your hiding that light under the cloak of negligence? And, if you hide the light which the Lord has given you and commanded you to let it shine, and allow your neighbors and friends to walk in darkness, as "the fruit" of your failing to do your duty, will not their blood be required at your hands?

To bring the matter nearer home, I ask you to read this:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents.—Doctrine and Covenants 68:4.

And further on in the same paragraph, the Lord says again:

Now, I, the Lord, am not well pleased with the inhabitants of Zion, for there are idlers among them; and their children are also growing up in wickedness.

The Lord was displeased with the Saints, because their children were growing up in sin; and we justly placed the sin (under certain conditions) "upon the heads of the parents," because their growing up in wickedness was "the fruit" of the parents' doings. Parents neglected to properly teach their children, and as "the fruit" of that negligence the children, as might have been expected, were growing up in wickedness. Who was to blame? The children? No, they did not fully understand. The blame rests upon those whose duty it was to bring them up in the fear of the Lord, and who neglected to do so; and they must "eat of the fruit of their own way."

Lehi in blessing the sons and daughters of Laman said:

For behold, I know that if ye are brought up in the way ye should go, ye will not depart from it. Wherefore, if ye are cursed, behold, I leave my blessing upon you, that the cursing may be taken from you, and be answered upon the heads of your parents.—Book of Mormon, page 54: paragraphs 5 and 6. (l. e.)

And they were cursed, "for the curse of God had fallen upon them because of the traditions of their fathers."—Page 221, paragraph 12. And "it is because of the traditions of their fathers that caused them to remain in their state of ignorance."—Page 201, paragraph 18. Hence this curse came upon the Lamanites, and they remained in ignorance and wickedness, as "the fruit" of their parents' doings; and Lehi said that because of this the curse should be taken from the children and "answered upon the heads of your parents." Jacob warns the Nephites of this same danger, and tells them to "remember that ye may, because of your filthiness, bring your children unto destruction, and their sins be heaped upon your heads at the last day."—Page 104, paragraph 49. As "God is no respecter of persons," that principle holds good with us, the same as with them. If our children live and die in sin and ignorance because of our bad example or because we neglect to properly instruct them in the way of the Lord, then they die in their sins as "the fruit" of our doings, and their blood will be required at our hands. I do not claim that parents are always held responsible for the conduct of their children, for that is not the case; they are held responsible only when the conduct of their children is "the fruit" of the parents' doings, and that is nearly always the case. Examples might be given by the dozen proving this to be true, but it would be useless: a few examples, of men who are "in reputation for wisdom and honor," will make this clear. The wise man said: "Dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savor: so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honor."—Ecclesiastes 10: 1.

Eli, the priest of the Lord, was "in reputation for wisdom and honor;" but his sons "were sons of Belial: they knew not the Lord" (1 Samuel 2: 12), and because of their wickedness, "men abhorred the offering of the Lord" (verse 17). Eli was old; but he "heard all that his sons had done unto all Israel" (verse 22), and plead with them to quit their evil deeds; but they did not heed his counsel. Many parents make the same mistake that Eli seems to have made: they tell their children what they ought to do or ought not to do, and then allow the children to go ahead and ignore the counsel given and do as they please; and they seem to imagine that their responsibility ends when they have told the children what they ought to do. But when the "man of God" came to Eli he told him that he honored his sons above him (verse 29); and, after that, the Lord spake unto Samuel and told him that he would judge the house of Eli for ever "for the iniquity which he knoweth: because his sons made themselves vile and he restrained them not." (1 Samuel 3: 13.) Eli knew of this iniquity; he knew his sons had made themselves vile; he knew that because of their sin "men abhorred the offering of the Lord;" he knew, and told them, that "ye make the Lord's people to transgress" (2: 24); and yet, "he restrained them not." And, because of this, the Lord said he would "judge his house for ever;" that "there shall not be an old man in thine house for ever;" that "all the increase of thine house shall die in the flower of their age;" and "that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifice and offering for ever." (1 Samuel 2: 30-33; 3: 13, 14.) All this came upon the posterity of Eli as "the fruit of his ways;" and besides what his posterity must suffer and lose, "men abhorred the offering of the Lord" and "the Lord's people" were made "to transgress:" all as "the fruit" of Eli's failing to restrain his sons when they were doing wrong. Surely "a little folly" in an over-indulgent father did in this case "send forth a stinking savor." Eli did not set a bad example before his children; neither did he fail to teach them what they ought to do; but he was too indulgent; "he restrained them not." Thousands of parents are making the same mistake today. By over-indulgence they are cultivating a selfish, greedy, self-important disposition in the child that will ruin him, sooner or later, if not corrected; and the ruin of their child and, perhaps, of their grandchildren and great grandchildren, will be "the fruit" of that over-indulgence. Who will be held responsible? Who IS responsible? "I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings." There is no exception. "Every man," whether he be preacher or member; whether he be king or subject, must receive "according to the fruit of his doings." If a man "is in reputation for wisdom and honor," the "stinking savor" of his "folly" will extend farther and make a greater impression upon the minds and lives of others than what is done by one of less note; but every man's deeds will bear fruit, after their kind, and every man must sooner or later reap "the fruit" of his sowing. Examples by the score might be given, showing where whole nations have been led into sin and ruin as the fruit of a "little folly" on the part of those who were "in reputation for wisdom and honor;" and especially has this been true of kings and spiritual leaders. When Nathan, the prophet, was sent to David to reprove him for what he had done in the case of Uriah, he said to him:

"Howbeit, because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme."—2 Samuel 12: 14.

I have heard men, "enemies of the Lord" in a sense, refer to that act of David's, and then sneeringly remark: "There is a man after God's own heart, for you." That deed was done three thousand years ago, and yet it is still bearing fruit: still giving "great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme." David repented, and the Lord forgave his sins; and we may repent and get forgiveness for our sins; but the deed done may continue to bear fruit, may continue to cause others to stumble, long after we are dead. The Lord said of ancient Israel:

My people hath been lost sheep; their shepherds have caused them to go astray.—Jeremiah 50: 6. Thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets that make my people err.—Micah 3: 5.

And, further on in the same chapter, he said again:

The heads thereof judge for reward, the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money: yet will they lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us? none evil can come upon us. Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest.—Micah 3: 11, 12.

The heads judging for reward and the priests teaching for hire, and the prophets divining for money were evils; but look at "the fruit" of those evils: Zion is plowed as a field and Jerusalem becomes heaps, as "the fruit" of the doings of those spiritual leaders. Truly "their shepherds have caused them to go astray." And Peter, speaking of the "false teachers" in the church, "who shall privily bring in damnable heresies," said: "And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of."—2 Peter 2: 2.

It was bad enough to bring in those "damnable heresies;" bad enough to lead away "many" of the Lord's people after "their pernicious ways;" but just look at "the fruit of their doings:" "the way of truth is evil spoken of," everywhere; thousands are turned away from the kingdom, because of those abominations; and the very name of God's people is hated and despised. All as "the fruit" of the false doctrines and wicked deeds of those "false teachers."

You and I, dear reader, may not be "in reputation for wisdom and honor;" but our deeds are bearing fruit. And even the little acts of our lives, which we flatter ourselves are harmless, sometimes bear fruit which we shall be compelled to reap to our sorrow. Paul taught that "no man" should "put a stumblingblock or an occasion to fall in his brother's way" (Romans 14: 13), and that "when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ" (1 Corinthians 8: 12); and, on the principle that man should "abstain from all appearance of evil," he said that "if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend."—1 Corinthians 8: 13. And yet men and women who delight in the ball-room will excuse themselves on the ground that "there is no harm in dancing;" those who find pleasure in the card-table will excuse themselves on the ground that "there is no harm in a friendly game of cards;" and the man who indulges in his glass of beer, or something stronger, will excuse himself on the ground that "there is no harm in taking a glass occasionally." Suppose it should be admitted that there is no harm in any of these things; what then? What has been "the fruit" of the ball-room? What has been "the fruit" of the card-table? What has been "the fruit" of an occasional glass? If I take a glass of strong drink, and my brother, who is weaker than I, follows my example and is finally overcome and brought to a drunkard's grave, that is "the fruit" of my example. And suppose, while he is under the influence of that strong drink, he kills a man; is not that the fruit of my example, too? The occasional glass may never hurt me, so far as human eyes may discern; but the fruit of my indulgence may be the ruin of many. There was no harm in eating meat, Paul argued; and yet he would not do even that, if it caused his weaker brethren to stumble. As a follower of Christ, dear reader, you can not afford to do anything that will cause others to stumble, or that will in any way lessen your influence over others, for their good: you must let your light shine, in "good works." Weigh well every act of your life. Ask yourself: What will be "the fruit" of this act? And, however simple or innocent-looking the act may seem to be, within and of itself, if it is likely to bring forth "evil fruit," do not do it. Why, even your thoughts will bear fruit; and you must eat it, too. The Lord said of Israel: "Hear, O earth: behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts."—Jeremiah 6: 19. And the Savior said: "That which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man. For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts. . . . All these evil things come from within, and defile the man."—Mark 7: 20-23.

Evil thoughts will defile the man who indulges in them, because "a good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth evil things."—Matthew 12: 35.

In other words: If a man has good thoughts in his heart, the fruit of those good thoughts will be good words and good deeds; and, on the other hand, if a man entertains evil thoughts in his heart, the fruit of those evil thoughts will be evil words and evil deeds; hence it is that "evil thoughts" will "corrupt the man," because they bear "evil fruit." The Apostle Paul evidently had all this, and perhaps more too, in his mind, when he wrote:

Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.—Philippians 4: 8.

Thoughts of the above kind will bear "fruit," in the form of true, honest, just, pure, lovely, and virtuous characters; hence the advice to "think on these things."

There is great responsibility resting upon people who have received the light of the gospel. What the fruit of an idle word or a hasty act may be, is hard to tell; but one thing is sure: Every mean thought a man entertains in his heart, every mean word he utters, and every mean act that he does, will bear "evil fruit;" and he who plants the "corrupt tree" must reap the "evil fruit" which it bears. Take heed then, dear Saints, for unto you it is given "to be the light of the world;" and if you shall hide or darken that light that is in you, by "a little folly," that "little folly," may "send forth a stinking savor" and destroy your influence for good; and then instead of being a light unto others, you may become a stumblingstone unto them, and their blood may be required at your hands.

That which I have presented is somewhat disjointed, and is not connected together in as clear and concise a manner as I should like to have it; but I have done the best I could, under existing physical conditions, and commend it to the reader for what it may be worth. If my effort shall cause one soul to look more carefully to "the fruit of his doings," as well as "his ways;" and cause him to guard more carefully against every thought and every word and every act that might possibly bear "evil fruit" I shall feel amply repaid.

In gospel bonds,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

AN INDIAN CONFERENCE IN CALIFORNIA.

On Wednesday, July 17, the Zayante Indian Conference commenced its second annual session at Mount Hermon, California, which lasted until Tuesday, the 23d. At this gathering twenty Indians were present, representing nine tribes. They had come hundreds of miles to be present. They soon discovered the purpose of the conference and entered zealously into the matters before it. Some hesitated at first, for, as they said, "For forty years white men make many promises and no keep promises. Hope gone. Just come to hear." The conference, however, awakened fresh hope in every man, and led to the statement and plea from the Indians, as given below.

Mr. Edwin Sidney Williams introduced the report of the Prudential Committee of the conference with these words:

"Fellow Citizens and Friends: You will be glad of the assurance I can give you, with accompanying proof, that humanity is keeping pace with the business stride of our beloved country, its appreciation as a place of privileged homes and its increased accessibility by electric and steam railways.

"It is but a few years since a few humane enthusiasts began to rally at San José to be kind to the real, red original owners of our fair California. They met in church vestry and a few sympathetic homes. They talked of the obligations of humanity, of the pitiful condition of seventeen thousand Indians, the sad relics of two hundred and fifty thousand people who hunted and fished for easy and delightful sustenance in the delightful valleys of our paradise. Their labors ended with a few kindly letters to the brave missionaries who in a Christlike love dwelt among these needy outcasts, and with the sending of a few bundles of old clothes, some dolls for the Christmas-tree youngsters, here and there a little medicine for the old and pitiful sufferers. Ended? No! They have just begun. The Great Father who developed the growth of the Sequoia Gigantea cared for the tiny kindnesses whose fruit shall be celestial sempervirens when our mightiest forest monarchs lie low in arboreal decay.

"The courage of these workers rose to ask our servants in Congress to buy back enough stolen land to give these early inhabitants real land holdings larger and healthier than the graveyards of their ancestors, and more productive than the arid seashore to which cupidity had driven them. Senators Teller, of Colorado, Flint and Perkins, of California, helped. Congressman Hayes, of San José, led his associates in the humane effort. Now the young attorney, Mr. C. E. Kelsey, who stood by in the dark day, is the chosen assistant of Indian Commissioner Leupp in wisely locating our scattered bands of Indians on sure home foundations. The $100,000 is doing wonders, without waste. . . ."

THE PLEA OF THE INDIANS.

"MOUNT HERMON, California, July 19, 1907.

"The Prudential Committee of the Zayante Indian Conference reports as follows:

"The statement or plea of the Indian delegates is herewith presented, and is as follows:

"To the President and Government of the United States, and to the Governor and People of California: WE, the Indian delegates to the Zayante Indian Conference, representing the seventeen thousand Indians of California, after having held an Indian Council, desire and earnestly ask the following things:

"1. We want land for homes. By the coming of white people into California, our lands have been taken from us and we have been driven from place to place. We were kept by law from taking up good land until all good land was gone. Our land, our woods, and our streams from which we got our living were taken from us, leaving us to suffer and perish through hunger and cold. In our younger days we have seen many people in our tribes. We have seen our old people suffer and our children die. Now we are few. Therefore, we want lands and homes, that our people may not perish from the earth.

"2. We want protection from the liquor traffic. In the early days we did not fight among ourselves and kill each other. But now, the white people have brought liquor to us and it is ruining the Indians of California. We are told that there are laws for our protection against liquor, but we seldom get the benefit of these laws. The white man's whisky makes a bad Indian. We ask protection from the liquor traffic and the punishment of both parties, the white man who sells and the Indian who buys. We do not know of an Indian who keeps a saloon. We suffer from the white man's trade.

"3. We want education. We need common school education for our children. We need industrial education for our young men and young women. We need education for all our people, especially for the twelve thousand Indians who have no reservations. The Government schools we now have reach but few, and most of the public schools of the State do not admit our children. We want to become intelligent Christian citizens.

"4. We want field physicians. Disease gets among us without our knowing what to do. We have no Indian doctors, and white doctors often refuse to take care of Indians, or will only do so if paid too much big price.

"5. We want legal protection. We are told that the laws of California make no difference between white men and Indians. But we do not find that the laws help us. The courts do not often decide in our favor, even when we are right. Some judges and lawyers do befriend us, for which we are grateful, but in general our people do not get justice.

"From our knowledge we indorse the above statement and plea, believing it to present the things essential to the welfare of the Indians of California at this time, and worthy of the attention and favorable action of our President and National Government, and of the people of California.

"We report also to you for your favorable action the recommendation to the Northern California Indian Association, that if it is found possible, a special representative shall be chosen to investigate the religious condition of the seventeen thousand Indians of California, and to assist in securing from the evangelical churches of our State an active interest and faithful effort to carry the gospel to all our Indian tribes and peoples. And that the financial support for this work be sought from within this State. . . ." [Signed by the Prudential Committee.]

The San José Mercury not only printed the foregoing documents in full, but gave an interesting and sympathetic account of the gathering as well.—The Indian's Friend (New York City), September, 1907.

For Love of You.

One loves you. He has loved you long.
His love, and its sweet prayer and praise
Were in your mother's cradle song,
And made the music of your days
When flowers were fair, and skies were blue
For love of you.

Now, has the shadow touched your face?
Are the days dark? the prospects gray?
O heart, be brave! The time of grace
Can never pass from you away.
Your Friend is tender, wise and true
For love of you.

He walked for you earth's changeable ways,
He bore for you the lonely hour,
He lived for you through toilsome days,
He met for you the tempter's power,
And joy through sorrow this Friend knew
For love of you.

O child of love, be not still sad,
But change the sigh to happy song,
For you can make the Savior glad
By loving Him who loved you long.
So fill with praise the heavens above,
For God is love.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

The Mite Society.

Come, gentle muse, inspire my thoughts,
A story I would tell,
In verse most sweet, with language pure,
The task I would do well.

Some thirty years or more ago,
A noble little band,
With hearts sincere and purpose firm,
A work of love they planned.

Our great Creator in his love
Has sent his son to save
So would they try to emulate
The precious gift God gave.

To help the poor, those in distress,
Whom fortune did neglect,
Care for the aged and infirm,
As mercy might direct.

To aid the glorious gospel plan
By work so freely giv'n
In various ways, by devious plans
Thus helping souls to heav'n.

Where sickness or despair appears,
There some on duty bent,
With kindly words or tokens small
Oft and again were sent.

Our Savior shed his precious blood,
That man might ransomed be
From sin and woe and anguish great,
And human cruelty.

The noblest work that man can do,
Is set forth very plain,
In God's own book, by his own plan,
Of which none need complain.

It is, that we should always do
As we would have that others
Should do to us, and so they try
To help worn, weary brothers.

They helped to rear God's holy house
With patient, firm endeavor,
Nor let the enemy come in
To turn from them God's favor.

God blessed their efforts with results,
That have most gratified,
And helped them through some trials hard
In ways that satisfied.

Our first small church they helped to build
Under divine direction;
They felt God's kind hand over all,
Secure in his protection.

They helped install the font wherein
All who would serve him true
Must buried be beneath the wave
And rise to life anew.

They know this gospel is the same
Which Jesus brought to earth.
Such peace and joy it gives as makes
All else seem little worth.

When God commanded that a home
For orphans be prepared,

With zest and zeal they wrought and prayed,
Nor of their treasures spared.

In every effort that's been made
In deeds both great and small,
They've had your strong and firm support—
They thank you one and all.

Whatever work they undertake
They surely do most cheerily,
Then pray that God may ever bless
The faithful Mite Society.

The Word We Did Not Say.

Each one of us can remember a time when we left unsaid some word we should have spoken. Perhaps it was because we had not sense to say it, but oftener it was because we were afraid to say it. We are so chary of a word of praise or of cheer. We say, in self-extenuation, that we are fearful of spoiling our friends by over-praise; but it is seldom that deserved praise hurts any one. Indeed, our dear ones have a right to our expressed appreciation. Perhaps it is not kept back because we do not feel grateful or appreciative, but from some foolish fear of expressing our tenderness. Too many people pride themselves upon their reticence. It is a fault common to people of Puritan and Scotch descent. Children do not dream of the fire under the snow in these reticent natures.

Often both parents and children live to regret this fear of showing their feelings. "There may be times when silence is gold and speech silver; but there are times when silence is death and speech is life—the very life of Pentecost."

It is safe to say that more people suffer from lack of a sympathetic word from those from whom they have a right to expect it than from the great calamities of life. It is a poor excuse to say that our word is of so little account that it will not be missed. It is our business to speak the word in season. A kindly, cheery word will accomplish far more than we think.

We never hear Theodore Parker's name without thinking of the days when young Louisa Alcott was struggling alone in Boston. Often she would meet Mr. Parker, who would say: "How goes it, Louisa? Keep your heart up! God bless you!" She said she always went back to her lonely room comforted by his cheery words.

A sympathetic word helps in all troubles of life, from a pin-prick to a great bereavement. We can learn a lesson from the little fellow who went to show his father a cut finger.

"I can't help it, Tommy," said the father, who was writing a sermon.

"Yes, you could," said the child; "you might have said 'Oh!'"—Parish Visitor.

My Reflections.

As I was reflecting on the past the memories of my childhood pictured themselves to my view, and caused a sad, homesick feeling, and I will tell you some few of my reflections.

My thoughts wandered back to my dear old grandfather, and the beautiful stories he used to tell me. That has been thirty long years ago. He was eighty-four when he died. He told me of my great-grandfather who settled in Hocking County, Ohio, in an early day. I can not tell the date, but it must have been two hundred years ago. There were lots of Indians living there then. He told how my great-grandmother would look for them, for they loved the "red people," as they called them. She had a large kettle which she used for cooking purposes. She would kill chickens and cook it full of chicken and dumplings and call in her red neighbors who lived in what they called "wigwams." They loved chicken stew and the good corn bread she used to bake in her old Dutch oven, and her Indian neighbors loved her very much and were good protection for them; and he said they wept when cruel war robbed them of their redskin neighbors. The Indians never wanted anything they ate to be salted. They said salt was poison. And he said that during the time his father and mother knew them there was a drouth, and everything looked like it was going to burn up, and the chief set a time to pray to the Big Spirit to let there be rain. In a short time it rained, and they played on what they called their tamtam and danced all the time it rained, showing their god how glad they were. Of course they did not have any great dancing hall like we read about, but only the bare ground and no shelter. It must have been a touching sight.

He also told me how well they loved their pipes; but they did not use filthy tobacco until the white people taught them to use it. They used a bark they called kinnikinic.

My great-grandfather was a Spaniard, and my great-grandmother was a German.

I will give a little poem that my grandfather taught me, for the benefit of the children:

"Let dogs delight to bark and bite,
For God has made them so.
Let lions and tigers growl and fight,
For 'tis their nature to.

"But, children, you should never let Such angry passions rise;
Your little hands were never made
To tear each others' eyes."

Letter Department

SACRAMENTO, California, September 22, 1907.

Editors Herald: Many of your California readers will want to know of the death of our young sister, Clara Burkhart, of Sacramento.

Last Monday evening she was well and cheerful. But during the night she was visited by that dreadful disease, diphtheria, and yesterday morning at four o'clock she went with the Angel of Death to join her mother, who had preceded her a couple of months.

It is only a little while since Sr. Clara entered the kingdom of God, but she brought with her a wealth of character, gained by years of loving devotion to her invalid mother and others of the household who looked to her as their protector against the wolf, poverty.

The funeral had to be private, owing to the character of the disease. She was buried yesterday afternoon at four o'clock. A number of beautiful floral pieces were sent, among them one from the company and employees where she was employed. Those whom she left behind were also remembered in a substantial way by her fellow work people. I was cheered to hear a lady in the office say, "We all loved her here." I would that that could be said of all of us.

Our last reunion at Irvington was her first, and I think no one partook of that spiritual feast with more delight than she.

Those who became acquainted with her there, loved her, and will be sad to learn of her departure. 'Tis said of her that she never sang so sweetly or with so much feeling as when on last Sunday evening at Religio, she sang, "That beautiful city of gold."

God's people loved her here; the spirits in Paradise will love her there.

We write this little tribute as something due to true merit and an unselfish life; also as a reminder to others of our young people, that they can win, as she did, the love of many.

• CHARLES E. CRUMLEY.

TULSA, Indian Territory, September 25, 1907.

Editors Herald: I see by our papers that the missionaries are preaching everywhere on the streets, when they can not obtain a house, yet none have come here. I feel sure good can be done here, and if a place can not be had to preach in, why not use the streets? I will give any one a home that will come and try, and I think a few days only would not be a trial either. There are some here, I know, who are interested, and two who are anxious to hear our people preach, or they tell me they are. One of them has been reading our papers, and confesses he is not satisfied. I try to explain the best I can. I think it is worth a trial any way, and will be glad if some one will stop here and preach. I will do all I can to help.

One of the Baptist ministers called on me a few days ago, and was very polite, indeed, until he found out I was a Latter Day Saint. And when I checked him, while he was quoting the commission given the apostles, and asked him to put in the signs too, he got quite excited, and said, "Is it possible that one who had once belonged to the Baptist Church could follow that rotten, stinking Joe Smith?" I stopped him when he got that far, (I don't know what he meant to say further,) and made him ask my pardon. He then said he pitied me. Whenever he would quote a verse, I would quote what he left out, and he got so mad that he began to get boisterous. He wanted me to call in a Mormon for him, and raise the dead. Said he would believe then, and it was the only way the Mormons would ever make believers. I replied that when Jesus raised the dead it so angered the Jews that they proceeded at once to make arrangements to destroy him; and besides, it was the Devil that asked Christ to prove himself by a sign anyway. He was very angry, and will not call on an "ignorant Mormon" again. I offered him some tracts; but he refused them.

If any of the Saints know of the "Kelley and Bays" [Braden] debate, I would be glad to get the book. I have a friend who is anxious to read it. Any one coming to Tulsa will find a welcome at my house. I live on Third and Frisco Streets, five blocks west from the Robinson Hotel on Third Street.

Yours in the gospel,

MRS. HELEN SHERWIN.

BELVIDERE, Illinois, September 30, 1907.

Editors Herald: We are situated about twelve miles northeast of Belvidere, with six members belonging to the church. We have our prayer-meeting every week, and are wonderfully blessed in the effort we are putting forth in the gospel work. Honor and praise be to the Lord for restoring the light in these latter days!

Two years ago the writer came into the church at Plano, Illinois, and three more of our little number have been added since then. We have had some preaching in this neighborhood, and good interest has been taken. We had Bro. Hackett with us four nights last week, and had the Spirit with us each meeting, with fair attendance and good attention, and, I believe, some nearing the kingdom. I pray that God may open the understanding of all those who are seeking the truth. I feel like saying to the Saints everywhere, Be active in spreading the gospel story, for our brother warned us in his preaching that the time is not far hence when tribulation will come, and that there were some present who would live to see that day. I pray we may all do what little we can to assist in the upbuilding of Zion, that we may have a place to gather in troublous times.

Your brother in bonds,

J. A. BAER.

SEPTEMBER 26, 1907.

Editors Herald: As there has been nothing in your pages of late about the work in Southern Indiana, I will write. In the last three months I have visited five counties. Left my home July 8, and held seven meetings at Harves Schoolhouse, with good attendance. Then moved some miles south, to Derby, the Hope Branch. Some life in the branch,—not as much as there should be.

I joined Elder C. E. Harpe, July 29, at Millstone. We had eleven meetings, with fair interest. Baptized three ladies. They will make good Saints.

We began meetings at New Harmony, August 17, and held about twenty-one meetings. Life in the meetings; several quite lively in the work. We next held meetings at Plainville. Not very much spiritual life in the branch; no one to lead the Saints at that place. At Bicknell, beginning September 16, held five meetings, four of them on the street, with good order and large attendance. I think the Saints can do much good in that town of twenty-five hundred people.

P. A. FLINN.

FORT WORTH, Texas, September 25, 1907.

Saints' Herald: It has been some time since I have written you. I left Euclid, Arkansas, April 12, with my family, seeking a location; but it rained so much and was so cold, our travel by team was slow. Laid over one week at Bulger, Arkansas, at the home of Bro. and Sr. J. L. Reed. Enjoyed our stay with them. Was called upon to preach a funeral, also to preach at a schoolhouse three miles away, at night, to attentive listeners. Our next stop was at Muse, Indian Territory. Here we were shut in for one week on account of bad weather. Preached three times to fair audiences.

Our next stop was at Fanshaw, Indian Territory. Our passage over the Seven Devils Mountains was too much for Sr. Jackson. She was glad to reach Fanshaw, and make the acquaintance of Saints. We were treated well by the people of Fanshaw, where we were detained three weeks on account of bad weather. Held several meetings.

As soon as weather would permit, we wended our way westward by way of Wilburton and Hartshorn. Met with Saints who were glad to see us. Our next stop was at Wynne Wood, Indian Territory, where we met with a sister we had not seen for years. I held meetings here for a time, then left my family and went to my new field to do what I could in gospel work. Fell in with Bro. W. F. Renfroe, at Davidson, Oklahoma. Labored with him for some time. Bro. Renfroe baptized three at Davidson, and two at Seymour, Texas. On account of Sr. Renfroe's health, Bro. Renfroe could not be with me all the time, so I was alone part of the time. Held some good meetings. Made some new openings, one that should be looked after—Weirnert, Texas. Bro. Frost lives at this place, and would be glad to have the elders call.

Returned to Davidson, where we found Bro. Harp holding meetings, and we enjoyed ourself with the Saints. Afterwards Bro. Harp labored with Bro. Renfroe for a time, and Bro. Robinson and I went to Dumont, Lockney, etc., meeting with poor success. A letter from Bro. S. S. Smith told us of Mrs. Shreier near the Mexico line who desired baptism, so we started for the place. At Silverton we held two meetings; ask Bro. Robinson for particulars. We found the Shreiers, were nicely received, talked with the family, baptized Mrs. Shreier and two of her sons, and left them rejoicing.

After parting from Bro. Robinson, I went to Huckabay, Texas. Bro. M. A. Daugherty and family live there. Have made a good record among the people. The Christians (Campbellites) let us have their church. We held eight meetings. Were treated better than we usually are in the South by people of other churches.

Here I received a letter from Sr. Jackson, at Euclid, Arkansas, (she not liking the Territory had returned to the old home the first of August) stating that four of the family were sick, Sr. Jackson not able to be up. She would send money to come home with as soon as she could get to the office. I thought best not to wait for money, so Bro. Daugherty let me have money, and I am waiting now at station for the train to bear me home.

Any of the elders will find a welcome at the home of Bro. and Sr. J. A. Ewings, at Estelline.

In bonds,

J. W. JACKSON.

MCLUNEY, Ohio, September 30, 1907.

Editors Herald: I am at present holding forth at above named new place, trying to tell the gospel story to the people. Have no place to preach except in the open air, and in private houses. Have some hopes of getting a church building, but not sure of it. It is getting rather cool for outdoor work, yet I usually have a good hearing.

Held a series of meetings in Shawnee recently, preaching eleven time on the streets, and twice at Iron Point Church, out in the country. I was nobly assisted by the Saints. Baptized three, all daughters of Bro. and Sr. Neville.

I am alone now, as Bro. Jenkins has gone home for a while, and Bro. Rich, who was to have joined me, is detained in Columbus.

The Saints in Southern Ohio are saddened by the news of the death of Elder Thomas Matthews.

We shall continue the effort here for a while. Do not know where we shall go from here.

H. E. MOLER.

ST. CLAIR, Michigan, September 11, 1907.

Dear Herald: The days seem long till the mail brings the papers, then all else is laid aside to see how the work is progressing in all parts of the world. I have often thought, "Can a member be a live Saint and not get the papers? How can we grow in this work and not be interested in its progress. How many precious thoughts are lost to us for ever; how many words of admonition, cheer, and comfort from the Spirit, by neglect of this duty!" I have regarded with more surprise those who get them and do not read them, saying, as an excuse, that they have no time. Satan must laugh when he hears a Saint say, "I have no time to read the papers." He well knows the importance of neglect and carelessness in spiritual things. Could we not sacrifice something in order to get them? Our heavenly Father says, This is a day of sacrifice, of my people.

We have been trained and educated to think the luxuries of our time are absolutely necessary. Did our ancestors have any of these luxuries which we regard as necessities? They made many sacrifices in order to carve out homes for their families in the dense forests, underwent many trials and hardships, and to-day we are reaping the results of their toil; but the luxurious living of the present age will result in a degeneracy of character, which must end in ruin and disaster to our nation. Where can we begin to sacrifice? First, begin with table luxuries. It is necessary that we should "eat to live," but not that we should "live to eat." It is more necessary that we should have spiritual food, and if we sacrifice some of our luxuries we can then afford reading matter, and be better off in health and finance. We simply can not afford to go without the church papers. Can we ever again take up the thread where we have dropped it on the shores of time? No, this is a work of progression. We are not at all necessary to the work. It can move along without us. If we sit and fold our hands, the work still goes on, but we are left behind. Nothing can make up to us for the loss of the spirit of this work. This is a day of fasting, not a day of feasting. More fasting and prayer, and less eating and drinking would bring us more spiritual blessings.

Do we ever truly realize the sacrifices our missionaries and their families are called upon to make for the sake of the gospel? If we realized it more fully, we would be more willing to sacrifice many things which we at present think indispensable to our comfort. How many times we say we love the gospel; but to merely say, "I love the gospel," proves nothing. Faith without works is dead. It takes money to keep missionaries in the field, to support their families, to print church papers and tracts, to build the children's home and sanitarium, to support Graceland; etc. How is all this to be accomplished without sacrifice? What will all our hoarding amount to when the day of calamity is upon us, and the signs of its near approach are fast multiplying, "For, behold a crisis is at hand, a time of trial and commotion, such as the world has never known." Is this a time to cavil with God about what we owe? Better get paper and pencil, make up your account, and pay it like a man. God demands his tenth to-day. "Why withhold from him that which is his due?" "Is not all you possess mine?" are his words. God will have a tried people. We are being tested as gold is tried in the fire, purified from the dross. Who is going to stand the furnace?

MRS. A. MCKENZIE

MCKEESPORT, Pennsylvania, August 28, 1907.

Editors Herald: It gives me great joy and pleasure to write you again, especially on such an occasion. I am sending you five dollars from a dear sister who was baptized at Cash Branch last fall, before I moved here. I knew she had an honest heart, the first sermon she heard. And after thoroughly investigating she was convinced, and had a spiritual dream, as she asked God to direct her in some way, and she was wise enough to know that that was God's way of showing her, and I never shall forget the lovely talks we used to have. Her name is Flo Allen. Her home is in New York State, and she went there soon after being baptized. I felt as though she would be lonesome without the Saints, as there are none there, and I have been writing her and asking her to take the church papers, as they would be a comfort to her, so she has sent me five dollars to send and get what I thought would be best for her. I inclose her letter and would be pleased to see it in the HERALD, as many at Cash will rejoice, and remember the great blessing she received by obeying the gospel. She has had many trials in life, and like all God's true children, has been able to stand them, and I hope and pray God will abundantly bless her, and that she may yet be instrumental in opening up the work there.

The three or four numbers of Autumn Leaves that contain the article, "An instrument in his hands," will do her a world of good, as she is a young woman, and will be glad to read them and give to her friend. It is a fine article. I am letting several read it. I find that not all have to wait to be called to the priesthood before they can do good. There are many ways in which we may do good in this work. I am busy all the time, when at liberty, reading and learning, or telling others of the blessed gospel. Many times my trials seem heavy, but still they keep not the blessings of God away; that is when the blessings are sweetest.

FRED W. CADOW.

1100 Maple Street.

BINGHAMPTON, New York, August 26, 1907.

Dear Brother and Sister Cadow: Your kind letter received. I can not tell you how much good it did me. I am all alone here, as far as any of the Saints are concerned; and, oh, do not forget me in your prayers, as I feel my life comes far short of what a Saint should be. I have never been to church but once since I came from Michigan. Do not feel at home where I used to go, and am like a stranger in a strange land; but I feel that God has been with me and blessed me, and answered my prayers. I have a dear, dear friend that is in the world, and I do not know enough about the church to explain it properly, and as there are none where they can go and learn for themselves, it is a heavy burden on my heart. I ask you to pray that if it can be God's will the way may be opened and they may be brought into the church. You asked me to send for the church papers. I have never sent for any of them, not because I did not wish them, but you know I have not been in the church long enough to know anything about those things. Will you do me the favor to send me what you think would do me the most good with the five dollars I inclose? I have never paid a cent to the church, for this reason: I wrote to Sr. Dunn and asked her to whom I should send the tithing, and she has not yet answered my letter, so I have given to those I thought were in need, and felt I was doing good for the Lord. I am only too glad to take the papers, and do what I can in that way; and in any thing or any place where you know I can help, please let me know. I must close. With love to you all.

In gospel bonds,

FLO ALLEN.

LAMONI, Iowa, September 15, 1907.

Dear Herald: I have often been made to rejoice while reading the pages of the HERALD, and each week it becomes more interesting. The last number was especially so to me. At my first opportunity to read it, I chanced to scan the page containing the prophecy given the Providence Saints, April 1, 1907. The words of this prophecy impressed me very forcibly, and were indeed food to my soul. By the news from the various reunions, we learn that there were prophecies given in many places. It is cheering to know that the Lord does remember his people, and I trust that we all may be enabled to put aside everything that is displeasing unto him, and strive to do the duties required of us in order that we may receive the blessings promised through obedience.

We all have some difficulties and discouragements to meet, and trials to endure, which are for our benefit. We can not always have joy and sunshine, but must have clouds and gloom in order that we may better see and appreciate the brightness, and learn of our heavenly Father's goodness, love, and watchcare.

The Lord has blessed me many times and in many ways, for which I am truly thankful, and it is my earnest desire to overcome all my weaknesses and shortcomings, and live in an acceptable manner before him, and do what I can for the Master's cause.

My time at present is so taken up in caring for my two little ones (now left without an earthly father's love and protection) that I find it hard to do anything else. It is my desire to bring my children up in the right way, that they shall live righteous and useful lives, and I ask an interest in your prayers, that I may have divine assistance in so doing.

MRS. M. A. JOHNSON.

WESTVILLE, Nova Scotia, September 3, 1907.

Editors Herald: I have not seen anything from this part of the Eastern Mission since I came here, is my only apology for this writing, if one is needed. I landed in Nova Scotia, June 21, all alone and somewhat apprehensive, having been informed previously that it was a "hard field," and I have found it so to date. I expected to find Bro. H. J. Davison here, but was disappointed and doomed to labor alone, as I have had to do mostly hitherto. I appreciate the wisdom of the "two by two" plan, and trust that the time is not far distant when the Lord's way of prosecuting the gospel work can be more fully carried out. However, we are all creatures of circumstances, and must do the best we can.

My instructions were to visit the Saints first, which I did, doing what I could in my weak way to encourage them to continued faithfulness; but I was not cut out for pastoral work. I labored at South Rawdon, then went to Cumberland County, and found a band of good Saints, somewhat scattered, in need of a leader. The work is suffering there for the want of a live shepherd. They have a nice church building, and the preacher is greeted with a good audience, Sunday night, though there is not much to be done during the week, owing to busy times with the farmers. They have no meetings, except when a missionary happens along, no Sunday-school, Religio, or prayer-meeting; could not even have a branch business-meeting; and about all your correspondent could do was to encourage individual effort. There needs to be some "setting in order" before desirable results can be expected. At South Rawdon, Bro. Dimock has recently moved closer to the church, and when I left was making ready to renew their diligence.

I went to Glenville, where some of the Williamsdale Saints live, and held meetings at the home of Bro. John Hyatts, and organized a Sunday-school, with fair prospects, when unexpected opposition developed, and it died "a-bornin'."

I came to Westville one week ago, where Bro. and Sr. Thomas Mills, lately from England, live, and find them to be Saints to the core. If they represent the English Saints in general, I would like to see more of them coming Zionward, and not stop by the way. Perhaps I am selfish, though. We secured the Orange Hall, the most conspicuous public building in the place, got out a lot of "dodgers," and I spent nearly six hours tramping the streets, distributing them from house to house, assisted by Bro. Mills after his days' work was done, and just seven souls, aside from Bro. Mills' family, risked their lives in our presence the first evening. Sunday afternoon not one came. Sunday night a few more ventured in, but some made haste to get out shortly, and the others could hardly wait for the benediction. After a "council of war" we decided to make another effort, this time on the street, and if possible cause a shaking among the "dry bones" of creedology.

I was hopeful of receiving some benefit by the climatic change, but present indications are that my hopes are vain. A damp, heavy atmosphere may be beneficial to some afflicted with catarrh, but with me it has the opposite effect. The Saints have all been kind to me, generous to a fault. I rejoice in the success of co-laborers, and trust the year's work may be fraught with a large fruitage of precious souls.

HERBERT, Alabama, September 2, 1907.

Editors Herald: This writing finds me at this place battling away against error and sin, as manifest in the world, against my own weaknesses, and against the forces of evil generally. Also against the scorching heat, which at times seems almost unbearable, and against flies and gnats galore. These little pests lay a heavy tax on one's patience, especially when trying to read or write, or take an afternoon nap.

The Alabama reunion was held at the Pleasant Hill church, near McKenzie, from the 16th to the 25th of August, and passed off pleasantly. Attendance was fair, everything considered, and the meetings were well supported by the Saints, who seemed to enjoy themselves nicely. Only one baptism, that of a very young sister, Lee Miller, the daughter of Bro. J. E. Miller of this place. Sr. Lee's confirmation was full of promise, and, if faithful, I feel sure she will wield an influence for good in years to come. She was baptized by Bro. C. J. Clark.

The Saints were so well pleased that they voted unanimously to hold another reunion next year. So, while it was a small affair, as compared with some reunions in the North, the Saints were encouraged to try again, and I hope they may continue to feel thus.

July 20 to 28 the Kentucky and Tennessee reunion was held on the farm of Bro. Henry Dickson, near Paris, Tennessee. There was an abundance of water, good shade, and lots of welcome from the Saints living near, as well as others who were not so near, all of whom are comparatively new converts, being in earnest, and seeming to enjoy the work.

Bro. Shupe's whole family, himself included, are just running over with music. He is an excellent performer on the violin, also the cornet, while Ross plays well on the cornet and clarinet, as does Fred on the big bass horn, and Clyde and Karl on other horns. But I can not tell the names of all the instruments they use. Grace and Pearl can join the band and perform their parts as easily and elegantly as any of the boys; and when they all get started in dead earnest, "What music fills the air!" Bro. Shupe was placed in charge of the music, and so far as the instrumental music is concerned, I think the Kentucky and Tennessee reunion was not behind any of them, north or south.

Just as the meeting closed, on Saturday night, July 21, the little daughter of J. T. and Sr. Annie Griffin, who had been ailing for some time, suddenly grew worse, and shortly, to all appearances, passed away. The eyes were set, the heart was still, the breath was gone, and in agony of heart Sr. Griffin called her husband's name, and said, "She is dead," and began to weep aloud. This after she had placed her hand over the child's heart, under the clothing, making a close examination to discover any sign that would give hope that life was still there, and finding none. I asked her if she wished to have the baby administered to, and, through blinding tears and heavy sobs, she replied, "Yes."

Bro. J. W. Metcalf, A. V. Closson, and the writer laid our hands upon the child, and Bro. Metcalf prayed fervently for her recovery. We have reason to believe that all Saints present joined in the prayer. True to his promises, God heard our prayers, and the little one was immediately restored, and when I left there some ten days afterward, was well and hearty. To God and Christ be all the praise. Sr. Griffin deserves credit for faithfulness under her environments. Her husband is in sympathy with the church, and does a goodly share in supporting it in some ways, but is not in full fellowship with us.

After the reunion at Paris, I made short stops at Foundry Hill, Elm Tree, and Memphis, Tennessee, and High Hill and Oakland, Kentucky, trying to strengthen the Saints and build up the work. Three were baptized at High Hill. Saints and friends everywhere placed us under obligations for their kindness to us. May the good Lord bless them all.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, September 23, 1907.

Dear Herald: When we come to know and appreciate what has been done for us, and is still being done by the gospel, is it any wonder that we love it, and do what we can to aid in the great work that is being done? Could we show our gratitude in any better way than by obeying the requirements of the gospel law? Jesus said to his disciples, "If ye love me, keep my commandments."—John 14:15. And he also said, "This is my commandment, That ye love one another."—John 15:12. Are we doing this? Are we showing kindness towards others as we should? We should strive to help build up the gospel, and become useful servants, not be idle in any way, neither be found talking about others, but striving to keep ourselves in line of duty.

Your brother,

W. R. RUSH.

NEW ALBANY, Indiana, September 23, 1907.

Saints' Herald: No doubt it will be of interest to some to hear of the work that has begun in our city. We have now rented a music-hall, Corner of Ninth and Main Streets, and have Sunday-school at ten o'clock in the morning, Saints' meeting at eleven, and preaching at half past seven in the evening. We are proud of our location, and look forward with great hopes for the future.

Bro. Hanna, of the Louisville Branch, has been coming over every Sunday to preach for us. If any traveling elder should pass this way, we will certainly be glad to have him stop and preach any Sunday night. We have no member of the priesthood with us, so must depend on those from the outside to meet with us.

God is certainly with us, and we look forward to the time, and that soon, when an elder or priest will locate here. We have about twenty Saints here, and some faithful workers, who are moving forward. We have a nice piano in the hall, electric lights, and furnace heat. We can seat at least five hundred people. We just began August 1, so I hope to tell you more good things before the roses bloom again. We ask the prayers of God's honest Saints, for help in our efforts.

JOHN ZAHND.

GRAND VIEW, Texas, September 22, 1907.

Editors Herald: For the past month we have been having some very good meetings. Bro. S. S. Smith was here and held meetings for eight days, with a good hearing. Then Bro. John Harp came and preached some good sermons, and both had that love and influence to win the confidence of many. Several became very much interested.

We all know that this work is of God. I know that it is, for I once drank deadly poison unawares, and when I called upon God for help, I got it right then. But there is another feature of his work. Something more than faith alone is needed; faith must be coupled with works. (See James 2:4.) What are some of the works? One of them is tithing. Some may think that if this is God's work he can carry it on without money. Perhaps he could, but where then would be the opportunity for us to cooperate with him? It seems that God has always permitted his people to assist with their finances, and it is made a very important part of the work. He says in Leviticus 27:30-33, that if we redeem aught we should add a fifth part. Why does God require a tenth? You know he does not need it except for his work on earth? And he promises to greatly bless the one who pays it. (See Malachi 3:8-12.) Are you willing to pay it? Let me appeal to your reason: Do you not think you could get along better, both financially and spiritually, by having God on your side? Would you not rather have the Lord on your side than to be by yourself? If you do not have God in this world you can not have him in the world to come. And if the Lord is with us, and blesses us, and promises us an inheritance in Zion by our complying with the law, we can not afford to ignore that law.

If a man knows his duty, and does it not, he shall be beaten with many stripes. (See Luke 12:47-49.) I know this to be true; for I have experienced it. I remember one time when I had twenty dollars to live on through the summer. I was prompted to pay five dollars tithing, which I owed. I did not pay it, and my money was gone in a little while, and I saw my mistake when it was too late, and we found it harder to live that year than ever before in our lives.

ALBERT VANCLEAVE.

BOONE, Iowa, August 30, 1907.

Editors Herald: Having had my field of labor enlarged by consulting with Bro. H. C. Smith, so that I could labor in the Des Moines District, as well as in the Lamoni Stake, I left Lamoni on the morning of July 10, by horse and buggy, for my old home at St. Charles, Iowa, where our son Otis resides on the old homestead which we have sold since moving to Lamoni. Here we labored about three weeks, between showers, helping Otis with his hay, and doing what we could for the Master on the Sabbath day. Otis wished to see Lamoni and the farm we had purchased west of Lamoni, where he expected to locate next spring; so, as soon as the busy haying was over, we hitched to the surrey, and we, with his wife and baby, arrived at Lamoni the morning of the 6th of August. Spent three days viewing the sights in and around the city, and the 9th found me on my way back over the sixty-five miles of territory to take up again the duties of life. The young folks were pleased with Decatur County. So much so that they propose buying part of the farm we had contracted for. We saw no better crops along the way than adorned the fields of Decatur County.

Since returning, we have visited most of the scattered Saints of the St. Charles Branch, who live in the west part of Madison County, trying to encourage and build up the Master's Kingdom; but people at Winterset and vicinity were rather excited over the Ghautauqua which was then in progress, deeming it a great privilege to drive eight or ten miles and pay thirty-five cents to hear lectures on the life of Oliver Cromwell, or of travels in the Panama country. One week's exercise of that kind took from the people here three thousand five hundred dollars; and left in memory a few darkey songs, and a dozen speeches gotten up on purpose to tickle the ear. Surely we are living in the days spoken of by Paul, when men should be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. Not one of these great speakers, though lauded to the skies, and with Reverend Doctor, D. D., and LL. D. attached to their names, if asked the question, "What must I do to be saved?" could give a Bible answer, and prove it by the word of God.

I returned to St. Charles and began a series of meetings at the science hall schoolhouse, two miles east of St. Charles, where I discoursed for five evenings on the kingdom of God and the latter-day apostasy, with increasing interest, closing Sunday evening with full house, many asking questions, and for references.

On August 25, at eleven o'clock, I preached at the United Brethren church by invitation of the Sunday-school superintendent, Uncle Ben Carter, known to most of the missionaries who have labored here.

On the 27th came to the capitol city, and the great Iowa State Fair. Here were displayed the products of the earth in profusion, as well as the products of skilled labor, and fine stock, until one would tire looking—and we must not forget the thieves that lined the streets of the tented city, from the spectacle man who would have you believe that you needed a pair of his special pebble-glass spectacles, to the religious-looking woman who would sell you a ball of sweetened and frozen corn starch as large as a hen's egg, placed in an ice-cream cone, for ten cents. Most all vendors seem to think it legal to plunder their brother of all they can get.

From Des Moines I came to Boone, where my brother, Amos, of Lake View, Iowa, lies in the hospital with a badly broken leg, received from a fall from a building. He is, however, doing nicely.

To-morrow I will go to Rhodes to be a day at the reunion, and get in touch with the missionaries of the district, thence to work again, wherever opportunity offers. I would be glad to hear from any of the scattered Saints of the Lamoni Stake, or in the southern part of the Des Moines District, who wish preaching done in their vicinity. Let us work together to accomplish the work intrusted to all.

FAYETTE CITY, Pennsylvania, September 17, 1907.

Editors Herald: Having been assigned to the Pittsburg District, and located in the Monongahela Valley, have labored the best I could. There being so many foreigners here makes it almost useless to preach on the streets—besides I am not much in favor of street-preaching, except in certain localities. My throat will not stand it, anyway. I thought the best way would be to tract from house to house. . . .

Satan is in this valley as well as elsewhere. Wishing the gospel God-speed, I am

Your brother and co-laborer in gospel bonds,

THEODORE, Alabama, September 15, 1907.

Dear Herald: I will write a few lines to your columns. I have often thought of writing, but have neglected it. I often feel that this is one of my very weakest points—being careless, and am trying every day to overcome. We know our kind Father wants us to be up and doing; for we are taught that his people should be a diligent people. My heart's desire is to live so that I may be a light to the world. I feel that I am one of the very least of God's children, and ask that the dear Saints will kindly pray for me, that I may overcome every weakness of the flesh; for I feel that they are many.

Our Sunday-school and Religio are moving along fairly well in this part, and I feel that we are greatly blessed in every effort we put forth for the advancement of the truth. I am glad that I am engaged in this latter-day work; for I find there is peace and enjoyment given to us that the world can not give. And not only this; but it will elevate and bring us up to a higher and better plane of life, and give us withal the grand assurance of eternal life in the world to come.

We have a little girl nearly two years of age, and we want to rear her so that she may be useful in the work in the years to come. My husband and I are trying to prove ourselves worthy parents, so that we may have God's Holy Spirit with us to guide us aright. How grand it is to have the blessed privilege of serving our Master in truth!

Your sister in gospel bonds,

HIGBEE, Missouri, September 22, 1907.

Editors Herald: If any Saints desire to purchase a farm close to a Saints' church, also close to school, I am in a position to help them in getting a place around Higbee. I am not in the real estate business, but know of a good opportunity, and am anxious that a Latter Day Saint should profit by it. I consider that there is a good opening in this country for one who understands the making of molasses from sugar cane.

Editors Herald: Find inclosed subscriptions for HERALD and Autumn Leaves. The children are interested in the story, "An instrument in his hands." My daughter of fifteen says the Book of Mormon stories in the Autumn Leaves are more interesting than to read from the Book of Mormon.

Bro. H. C. Smith, we are waiting patiently to see some more of your soul-cheering sermons in the HERALD. We always look forward to the coming of the Autumn Leaves and HERALD with great pleasure.

There are no Saints nearer us than fifty miles, and no church of any kind nearer than twenty-five miles; and, as it is a Catholic Church, it might as well not be any as far as we are concerned. We would like this country better if we had a town and railroad. We are eighty miles from a town. We have a post-office twenty-five miles away, but the mail only comes every two weeks. This is a good country for cattle, but not so good for children, as there are no schools, and not likely to be any for several years. We ask an interest in your prayers out here in our faraway prairie home among the hills.

Your sister in the one hope,

MRS. L. V. WAHLSTROM.

CORONA, California, September 17, 1907.

Editors Herald: A few lines from this part of the Master's vineyard may be in place. The gospel has not found its way to this land of gold and pleasure seeking, but greed of gain and love of display are leading thousands to destruction with fearful momentum. The few Saints living here have so grown into the ways of the world that the spirit of the gospel is not discernible in them. This place has need of the gospel. There are many churches here, many creeds; but darkness covers the minds of the people. In their mad haste to get gain, they have no time to consider the vital question of eternal life.

We who live in the land of gospel light, where the trident of the cross is erected, are blessed in point of privilege. Do we appreciate those privileges and discharge the duties we owe to God in gratitude to him for the same? or do we put off the service due to him until another time, as was shown one in a dream? He dreamed he found himself in a meeting of evil spirits which had for its object the destruction of the souls of men. He saw one arise, and heard him say, "I'll tell them there is no God." The presiding spirit said, "That will not do; they know there is a God." Then one said, "I'll tell them there will be no judgment." The presiding spirit said, "That will not do; they all have a conscience." Then one suggested, "I'll tell them they have plenty of time." This time the presiding spirit said, "That will do."

The living present is ours, in which to work and carry out the divine purposes. We are to make a success of this life; but how are we to do this? Simply by living the Christ life and developing the Christ character in our daily walk and conversation. As a result all difficulties in our spiritual life will vanish. Angels will attend us during our journey here, and because of our faithfulness we will have a drawing influence on those around us. The millennial reign will be soon ushered in, and the King of Peace appear to reward his faithful children. Happy those who have lived the Christ life, for they shall share in the glory of their king, and shall sit down in his kingdom, with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to go out no more for ever.

E. B. FARRAR.

GAMBURG, Missouri, August 26, 1907.

Editors Herald: Bro. Davis and myself are helping the work along in Southeastern Missouri, taking advantage of opportunities as they present themselves. We have just closed a meeting of about fourteen days, which we held in the gospel tent at Dalto, Arkansas. I guess our missionary in charge will forgive us for stepping over our boundary line. As the way was open, and the call was to "come and preach," we went; and, in company with H. V. Brown, of the Naylor Branch, we had a fine meeting, from one hundred and fifty to two hundred and over out to hear the "old Jerusalem gospel."

The town was stirred from one end to the other when they heard that the "Mormons" as they called us, were in town; and the goody-goody Baptists of the town tried to break up our meeting, but failed to do so. One morning Bro. Davis was asked to come down to the drug store, and there they presented to him propositions for debate; but they looked as though a ten-year-old boy had written them, and nothing would do but they must get a lick at the "Mormon preachers" in debate, that they might pull off the covering of wool and show the wolf-hair. But when Bro. Davis wrote out propositions and presented them, it was a gray horse of another stripe, and before we left the wolf-hair was showing on the other fellow, and we left a good feeling with all except a few.

Bro. Brown and the writer are telling the "old story" to a large crowd in the tent here near Gamburg every night. It seems that sometimes we may preach and preach and no one will obey, and we are made to say, "O Lord, who has believed our report?" But when we do our part in telling the story, it is with them and God.

Your brother and co-worker in the great cause,
JOSEPH ENSLEY.

WHITTEMORE, Michigan, October 4, 1907.

Editor Herald: I am glad to say that the two-day meeting held in the Iosco Branch was a success, so far as the writer was able to judge. The Lord recognized our meeting and spoke words of cheer and approval to his children. Seven were baptized on Sunday, Elder J. Sheffer officiating. Elder O. J. Hawn remained there some days after the meeting, and, indirectly, we learn he baptized five more; so the good work moves on. We visited the Rose City Branch recently. The Saints are rejoicing there. Several have been added to their number this summer, and now they contemplate building a church in the near future.

We spoke for the Saints of Whittemore last evening. Expect to meet with the branch at Prescott this evening.

Dear Saints of the Central District, let us be very humble and prayerful, that we may be worthy of the blessings our Father has promised through the gospel. Let all malice, hatred, and contention cease, and let us love one another as our Master has commanded, and then we can be a power for good among those with whom we are associated.

I am striving to overcome self and the world; and, by the grace of God, I hope to succeed.

Your brother in Christ,

J. A. GRANT.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, Ohio, October 3, 1907.

Editors Herald: From my earliest recollection I have rejoiced in the high aim of the church, and have ever looked upon the three standard books of the church, the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, as containing the revelation of God's will as to how the church in all of its work should be governed. I now am glad to see the progress made in the redemption of Zion. In the early days of my ministry the fact of the redemption of Zion was revealed to me in these words: "Zion shall soon be redeemed, saith the Lord; yea, my people shall be gathered together, and my power shall be over them, saith the Lord God." As the Lord's work loomed up before me, I felt ready to leave ambitions which, if realized, would pale into insignificance as compared with the great work of the Lord.

I deem it to be the duty of every member of the church to safeguard the interests of the great latter-day work. The record of the past reveals that it is as necessary sometimes to speak of what we do not countenance, as it is to speak of what we approve.

God said to the Apostle Paul when he, with two hundred and seventy-five souls were shipwrecked: "Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Cæsar: and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee." Here was a sure promise, but the apostle did not fail to do all in his power to bring about the fulfillment of the Lord's promise, and to oppose anything that would interfere with its accomplishment. When some of the men were about to flee out of the ship, Paul, though God said all should be saved, said to the centurion and to the soldiers, "Except these abide in the ship, ye can not be saved." (Acts 27:24, 31.) He did everything in his power to bring about what the Lord had foretold. That, I understand, is the correct rule to follow. Labor to bring to pass that for which we hope and pray, and what God has said shall be.

This applies to the redemption of Zion as to all other things. Though God in his law has decreed that Zion shall be redeemed, it is folly to think of it being accomplished until Zionic conditions prevail. But I believe there will be a turning of things until God reigns in the midst of his people in Zion.

I may be expressing myself a little strongly, but my feelings impel me to say there is one thing in the church, which, if I understand it rightly, I do not countenance or indorse. It is this: There is a stipulated amount, which is supposed to be a proper amount per month for the wife of a missionary, and there is a certain amount for each child. I have no objection to that if it meets their needs, and if it is what they need. But it seems to be the basis of supplying all the ministry, whether they have a home or no home; whether they have much money or no money; whether they have acquired and have property when they enter the ministry, or have none by reason of having entered the ministry in youth; whether they live in the East or in the West; whether the cost of living is high or low—that seems to be the rule in ministering to the ministry's families at the present time. My soul revolts at such procedure! If that be the right amount for one who has a home, it is not the right amount for one who has no home. There is no basis in the law, so far as I know, for upholding any other way than the ministry being supplied according to their just needs and wants.

Is the present system going to continue? Is reform to come? I once heard of a German who cut off his little dog's tail, an inch at a time, so the operation would not be so painful. Is it a Zionie law, which, when it operates, does not deal equally with all? It may be said if one was in need, one could call on the bishop; that is true, but it is also true that the church at large supposes that the wife of a missionary is entitled to a standard monthly amount only, and I believe it is a fact that all, or a majority of the elders' wives receive according to that rule. That rule is obnoxious to me; I have no faith in it—none whatever.

Last Monday was a notable day in Canton, Ohio, thousands upon tens of thousands being present to pay respect to the memory of William McKinley. By music and oratory a beautiful monument, the tribute of our nation to his memory, was formally dedicated. The President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt, delivered the address of the day. The great mausoleum, built of granite, rose from a green hill in full view of vast concourses of people, but only a few, who had secured passes, were privileged to hear the President's speech. A bronze statue of McKinley, which stands at the entrance to the monument, was unveiled before the gaze of all by Miss Helen McKinley, a sister of President McKinley. When she pulled the cord, to release the flags that covered the statue, they did not fall, but opened out, and then were flung aloft from the statue. It was a very impressive scene. In the city, prior to the unveiling of the monument, was a grand parade. As far as the eye could reach, the streets of the city surged with people eager for a vantage point from which to view the parade. There was a sea of humanity. When President Roosevelt, before the parade started, passed through the streets, he was given an enthusiastic reception. Around his carriage were guards and secret-service men. Frequently he was obliged to rise and doff his hat as the assembled populace broke into cheers. The parade was an hour and a half long, and was a very imposing one. Leading it was a subdivision of the Twelfth Cavalry. In the first brigade was the Twelfth Cavalry band, and veterans of McKinley's old regiment. Various orders were in the procession, all in full dress, and presented a beautiful appearance. When the G. A. R. band played, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and "Onward Christian Soldiers," there were rounds of applause; and as the procession passed on, the city was moved as the strains of "Abide with me, fast falls the eventide" fell softly on their ears. When, from the uniformed bands, who were in step, as when going to war, there came the "Star Spangled Banner," the people could hardly contain themselves; their patriotism broke forth, and there was loud hurraing. The music was inspiring and quick, played for the living as well as in honor of the dead; but it all was reverential. A great day it was. At the conclusion of the ceremonies the thousands began to melt away; but the city was still thronged at eight o'clock, when I left for this place.

Our meetings have been fairly well attended. There is a great deal of malaria and typhoid fever in the city, from which some of our members have not escaped. But the Lord has been near, and his power has been manifest. His name be praised!

Having faith in the ultimate triumph of God's work, I am,
PAUL M. HANSON.

Northeastern Missouri Reunion.

The second annual reunion of the Northeastern Missouri District was held at Higbee, Missouri, from August 23 to September 1, 1907. There were not as many campers as at our first reunion, but the meetings were all interesting and beneficial. It was decided to hold another reunion in 1908.

Those contributing to the spiritual wants of the Saints were: H. C. Smith, F. C. Keck, Ammon White, J. A. Tanner, W. S. Macrae, F. T. Mussell, and W. B. Richards.

News From Branches

CADILLAC, MICHIGAN.

The work in this locality does not move along as fast as we wish, but we are living in faith and hope. If God be for us who can be against us?

We have been favored with a visit from Elders W. D. Ellis and James Davis, the latter being district president. We feel to thank the good Lord that he has sent his message to us through his servants in these last days; that we can feel the assurance of his Holy Spirit, which makes us rejoice.

The branch in this place is but a small one, and we have the influences of city life to contend with. Prejudice, pride, popularity, and the great monster, Individualism, are no small factors to meet. Some are investigating, and we think will come in, in the near future. While we have our share of trials, we have also our share of blessings, and are glad that our lot is cast with a "tried people." A. M. BOOMER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

President Joseph Smith left this week for Honolulu via San Francisco. We shall miss him greatly in Independence, as he was quite a regular attendant at all church services. We wish him a pleasant voyage and a safe return.

The union prayer-service of Wednesday evening was unusually good, the Spirit speaking encouragingly through Bro. Henry Kemp.

On last week Bro. R. C. Evans occupied Wednesday and Thursday nights at the Stone Church, speaking on the apostasy and restoration. The two services were unusually well attended, and excellent attention was given to the very interesting sermons.

The death of our young brother, Sam Lentel, which occurred Wednesday, October 2, is indeed sad news to his many friends. While returning from Kansas City on a crowded car, he was struck by a west-bound car, receiving a fracture of the skull which resulted in his death. Bro. Sam was a young man of excellent character, faithfulness, and cleanness of life, whom we can ill afford to lose, and he will be missed particularly in Sunday-school library work, in which he has been a worker for years. J. A. GARDNER.

NEW ALBANY, INDIANA.

We had quite a treat on last Sunday night, when Bro. G. T. Griffiths, of Columbus, Ohio, came to our city. He came to Louisville, and then with Bro. J. W. Metcalf and Bro. Hanner crossed the river to our fair city.

The Saints are certainly encouraged by the noble discourse. He cautioned the Saints to stand fast to the great ship of Zion, realizing the great danger of delay. Our numbers are increasing, and we are finding Saints who have not been in church for years.

On Wednesday night, October 2, the Saints met at Bro. J. W. Metcalf's home in Louisville, Kentucky, there to transact business, such as might come before us. A call came through Bro. Griffiths to ordain the writer to the office of priest, Bro. Willis to the office of teacher, and Bro. Ferguson to the office of deacon. The ordinations took place under the hands of Bro. Griffiths and Metcalf.

We have nearly three hundred thousand people at New Albany, Jeffersonville, and Louisville, and about sixty to seventy Saints, and we feel that there is opportunity for a wonderful amount of work to be done.

Church services every Sunday at ten o'clock, and at half past seven, corner Ninth and Main Streets, New Albany, Indiana; and at half past nine and a quarter to eleven in the forenoon, in Odd Fellows' Hall, Sixth and Walnut Streets, Louisville, Kentucky.

JOHN ZAHND.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the Central Michigan District; Greeting: We again wish to call your attention to the question of tithes and offerings, to carry on the work of the Lord, as we had to call on the Bishop to assist us to make the allowances for the month of August; and now September is at an end, and there is now another month's pay required, and nothing in the storehouse. What will you do? The harvest is passed, the thrashing is nearly done, and we can all count the many blessings we have received at the hand of our heavenly Father. What will you give in return that the preaching of the word may not be hindered?

We have about one thousand members in the district, and less than three hundred names on our books, and the word tells us that if we remain in Zion, it will be by reason of our keeping the law of consecration and tithing. Oh, Saints, you that have not paid your tithing, commence now. Sell a horse, a cow, a pig, a sheep, a chicken, and pay tithing. It may be sacrifice; but the greater the sacrifice, the greater the blessing, and surely God will do his part if we will but do ours. He has promised to open the windows of heaven and pour out blessings upon us, that there would not be room enough to receive them, if we would but pay our tithes and offerings into the storehouse of the Lord. Will you take God at his word? Will you rely on his promises? Will you keep his commandments? Jesus says that "if a man love me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." Do you want Jesus to abide with you?

In the last two months we have received $74.83, while our disbursements were $246.00. Will you come to our rescue? Will the sub-agents send in what they have on hand? Will the elders teach the law of tithing more? Besides this, the sanitarium is a special command. Will you assist? And the children's home,—will you help? God has made us our own stewards, and our own judges, but has said, "If a man love me, he will keep my words." And now, dear Saints, we appeal to you and ask your assistance to carry on the Lord's work, so that in the coming time we all may have works that will stand approved of God. Send all money by express or post-office order, or draft; or pay to Elder J. A. Grant, and he will receipt for it, and it will reach the proper channel.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

E. S. WHITE, Bishop's agent.

In "Following the hounds in California" we have in Mr. Charles F. Holder's usual delightful style a description of the variety of sport and the fun afforded in hunting on the Pacific Coast. Gardner Richardson tells of his experience "At sea with the Gloucester fishing fleet," the experience of two college men who desert the summer hotel of a Massachusetts resort to fish with old salts. Walter Prichard Eaton's good advice about the seasons is found as usual in "A calendar of travel." Clifford Howard describes "A dip in Great Salt Lake," and the sensations afforded by a salt-water bath inland. "Hunting elk and antelope in Wyoming" is Paul Townsend's record of a recent trip in the mountains of the northwest. Ernest Cawcroft tells us where to go and what to see in a limited amount of time in "A tourist's trip through Panama." "An American woman's German vacation" by Grace Isabel Colbron is the story of a summer Arcadia within the shadow of Berlin. "Motoring through the country of Millet and Rousseau" by J. Marchand shows how the fields of France and the forest of Fontainebleau present the reality whose pictured semblance is so dear to an art-loving world. "A trip down the Thames from Oxford to London" by Esther Brook is an account of the delights of the river life as followed in houseboat, launch or shell, between historic banks.

Results at the Hague.

It can not fail to be very gratifying to American citizens to realize that, just as in 1899, the American delegation saved the first Hague Conference from a virtual failure, so the representatives of the United States at the second conference, in the present year, have been the chief instruments in preventing that august international gathering from adjourning without the achievement of any substantial results. Disregarding the purely academic discussions during the conference, it may be stated that the real work can be divided into two classes,—the one largely composed of technical propositions aiming to render the conduct of war more humane, and the other of political propositions, involving the principle of preventing wars between nations. The proposition of the United States forbidding the bombardment of undefended towns and villages was unanimously approved in Commission; as was also the proposal to add to the rules of sea warfare the provisions of the Geneva Convention. The proposition for the prohibition of submarine mines was blocked by Great Britain and Germany. On the other hand, the British proposal for the abolition of contraband of war, although it received a majority of votes in the conference, is to be considered buried, since all the great naval powers, including the United States, except Great Britain herself, are against it. The American proposal concerning the collection of contract debts,—the much-discussed Drago Doctrine,—was unanimously approved. The American proposal, brought forward by Mr. Choate, for making the arbitration court more permanent and compact, was also approved. It now seems probable that during the last days of the conference (it is believed that the sessions will close by the middle of the present month), a permanent arbitration and prize-of-war court will be elaborated and made a permanent institution.—From "The Progress of the World," in the American Review of Reviews for September.

The "Arena" for September.

The Arena for September is richly laden with papers that will appeal to the more thoughtful men and women, especially those interested in social, economic, and political themes. Among leading papers, may be mentioned the following: "The Cable Telegraph Systems of the World," by Honorable J. Henniker Heaton, M. P.; "Robert M. La Follette for President," an extended sketch of the public services of the Wisconsin Senator by Professor William Kittle; "The Anomaly of Capital Punishment," by the Honorable Thomas Speed Mosby; "Victor Hugo: Critic, Prophet and Philosopher," by B. O. Flower; "The Meaning of the Invasion of European Socialism," by Henry Frank; "The Economic Basis of the Divorce Problem," by Reverend Roland D. Sawyer; "The Bugaboo of Direct-Legislation," by Linton Satterthwait; "Mr. MacKaye's 'Democracy and Socialism'; Yes and No," by Honorable George Fred. Williams and Professor Thomas Elmer Will, A. M.; "Daniel's Vision," by George Millen Jarvis.

In the editorial departments, Mr. Flower discusses among other things "The Great Mother as an Educator; or, the Child in Nature's Workshop"; "Sir William Perkin and One of the most Wonderful of Chemistry's Fairy-Like Tales"; "The Industrial Autocracy and Centralized Government"; "Authoritative Statements as to the Practical Working of Direct-Legislation in Switzerland and America"; "Misrepresentative Government and How to Make It Representative"; "The Past Years' Record of the Municipal Street-Car Service of Glasgow, and Its Significance"; "How the Reactionary Daily Press Poisons the Public Mind by Deliberate Misrepresentations"; "How the New England Telegraph and Telephone Company Squanders the People's Money to Control the Political Situation"; "N. O. Nelson's Coöperative Works."

Public-Ownership News, news of Direct-Legislation and the news of the Voluntary coöperative movements, all edited by Ralph Albertson, constitutes a very important feature of the Arena, as does the Proportional Representation News contributed each month by Robert Tyson.

THE WORK IN BROOKLYN.

ELDER GEORGE POTTS.

[The Saints in Brooklyn are building a new church, which is to be ready for occupancy the 19th of this month. Elder George Potts, pastor of the Brooklyn Church, has prepared the following account of the work that has led up to the present successful culmination, and believing that when one rejoices all should rejoice, we gladly give it space.]

The building of the new church brings to the oldest members of the branch memories of a meeting held at the home of Elder Joseph Squire in Henry Street, when a committee was chosen "to select a hall for divine services."

At this time, September, 1886, meetings of the branch were held at the home of Bro. Squire. The branch numbered about fifty members scattered over Long Island, New York, and Connecticut, and the possibility of ever rearing a church edifice of the character of the one now being constructed by the Saints of Brooklyn in all probability never entered the mind of the most sanguine.

In October, 1887, it was decided to take the meeting room at Brownsville at five dollars per month, which place was soon abandoned, and meetings continued at the home of Bro. Squire until June, 1888, when a hall, 156 Rockaway Avenue, was selected and occupied as a meeting room, until the landlord raised the rent, in July, 1890, when the meeting place was changed to a hall on Fulton Street, near Rockaway Avenue.

The next hall to be occupied as a meeting room was at 63 Stone Avenue. From here the branch moved its place of worship to a church on Powell Street, in 1894. In 1896, the hall, 199 Saratoga Avenue, was rented, and here it was that plans were perfected and ways and means provided that resulted in the erection of the first church built by the Saints of Brooklyn. A lot was secured on Prospect Place, one hundred feet east of Hopkinson Avenue. The building, a two-story brick structure, twenty-five by forty-three, with living apartments in the rear, was completed at a total cost of about six thousand dollars. This was first used for service in November, 1903.

This church having been built in what was then an undeveloped part of the city, the property in the immediate neighborhood was afterward purchased by those who were mostly of the Jewish faith, and were anxious to acquire the church property.

A number of offers were made by different congregations of this people, and an offer of nine thousand dollars was finally made and accepted, title transferred, and, on June 1, the Saints, like the ancestors of those to whom they had sold had done in ages past, moved on. The place at present appointed for the Saints to meet, until the completion of the new church, is Ceres Hall, corner of Fulton Street and Troy Avenue.

As soon as the contract of sale of the Prospect Place Church was signed, a committee was appointed to select a lot for the erection of a new church.

A rectangular plot thirty-six feet six inches in width, on Park Place, by seventy-five feet in depth on Schenectady Avenue, was finally selected and purchased; plans drawn by our Bro. Samuel Guilfooy were adopted; a committee consisting of Brn. George Potts, Captain George Potts, Samuel Guilfooy, Charles Harris, and M. E. Nichols were appointed and given full power to erect the church building in accordance with the plans adopted by the branch.

The church building is thirty-six by fifty-five feet. The foundation to the base course is of blue stone, the elevation being of gray speckled brick with limestone trimmings, windows of leaded glass, roof of the style known as a hip roof, in the front gable of which is one, and on the sides two dormer windows. The walls are decked with a high ballustrade cornice. The general style of architecture is Gothic.

There are two auditoriums. The entrance to the main one is on Park Place, and leads through a vestibule to the church proper. Under the rostrum in this room is the font, at the rear of which descends a pair of stairs to two dressing rooms in the lower auditorium or Sunday-school room. The entrance to this room is in the rear, and is approached from Schenectady Avenue. The seating capacity of each room is about three hundred.

The estimated cost of the lot and building when completed is twelve thousand dollars, on which there will be a mortgage of about four thousand.

The branch now numbers one hundred and seventy-three members, including one patriarch, six elders, four priests, three teachers, and two deacons.

The present officers are: Presiding elder, George Potts; presiding priest, William Hobson; presiding teacher, Ephraim Squire; presiding deacon, F. N. Lester; secretary and chorister, William H. Sanders; organist, Sr. Ella Squire.

On Sunday, August 4, 1907, as previously advertised, the Brooklyn Saints met at the uncompleted building for the purpose of laying the cornerstone.

Special invitation had secured the presence of our missionary in charge, U. W. Greene, who was introduced as the principal speaker by Presiding Elder George Potts.

After singing and prayer by Elder George Baty, Elder Potts proceeded with the actual laying of the cornerstone, for which purpose a silver trowel, which he had used in laying the cornerstone of the Prospect Place Church was presented to him by Elder Baty on behalf of the Brooklyn Branch. It is understood that it is the intention of Bro. Potts to forward this trowel, after it has been suitably engraved, to Grace-land for exhibition until such time as it may be needed by the Brooklyn Saints for a similar purpose.

When Elder Greene arose to address the meeting, he found himself facing an audience of five or six hundred people, of whom only about one-sixth were Saints.

For nearly an hour Bro. Greene claimed the rapt attention of his audience by his lucid discourse on the origin, history, and principles of the Reorganization, making clear those points of doctrine upon which the Saints are generally misunderstood and misrepresented to the public.

The musical program, in charge of Bro. William H. Sanders chorister, and Sr. Ella Squire organist, supported by members of the branch, seemed to be greatly appreciated by all present.

Since the laying of the cornerstone, work has progressed on the new church. The building being now inclosed, has been promised by the committee to be ready for the New York and Philadelphia District conference, which is appointed to be held here on October 19 and 20. These meetings, the first to be held in the new church, will be succeeded by a series of meetings during the following week. Bishop E. L. Kelley, apostles Griffiths and Greene, and others of the missionary force are expected to be present, and the Saints of Brooklyn looking forward to a time of spiritual refreshing are spending their best efforts to herald the glad tidings to the millions of inhabitants of the Greater New York.

May some honest souls thus be led to see the kingdom, is their honest prayer.

AN INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF RELIGIOUS LIBERALS.

The recent International Congress of Religious Liberals held in Boston, Massachusetts, seems to have been a notable gathering in more ways than one. It is reported in the Outlook, October 12, as follows:

The Fourth International Congress of Religious Liberals, held at Boston, September 22 to 27, was both in numbers and in spirit one of the most notable assemblies of this decade. It was also notable in this, that, though originally organized in 1900 by Unitarians, and continuing under their direction, it so attracted the sympathy and cooperation of many prominent men of other denominations as to have parted to a large degree with a distinctively denominational color. The long list of the honorary vice-presidents of the Boston meeting was quite undenominational. Fifty-seven religious bodies other than single churches sent delegates. Members of thirty-three separate church fellowships made addresses. Representatives of four distinct races and sixteen nationalities made it international. Of these two hundred and forty-two came from abroad, mostly from European lands, with a few from India, Japan, Australia, and New Zealand. With some sixteen hundred registered and fee-paying members of the Congress, the largest halls and churches could not contain the crowds, and overflow meetings were necessary. The dominant spirit was positive and constructive. Speaking from the President's chair, Doctor Samuel A. Eliot said: "The members of this council obviously belong to the progressive wings of the different communions. They are people who hold it to be the task of each generation to interpret religion afresh in the light of growing knowledge and experience, and in the thought and speech of their own time," with a freedom leading on to "brotherhood, and unity, and honorable serviceableness" in the love of God and man. The inseparableness of faith and freedom which gave the keynote to the Congress was set forth in a noble address by Doctor Gordon, of the Old South Church. "Among the religious people of this country," said he, "faith in its profoundest meaning stands for the life of the soul in God as God is presented to men in Jesus Christ. . . . Our American Christianity is so far apostolic Christianity; it is the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus. . . . Our great theologians have been men of profound religious experience." From Edwards to Theodore Parker "all began with religion as life, and in the service of this life each built up the faith as a body of ideas. . . . We no longer ask about a scholar in theology, . . . Is he a follower of the tradition of the church? but, Is he competent, eminent, sane, genuinely a person of the scientific spirit, working in the interest of a divine life in humanity, which he shares with all the wise and brave?" This interest in a divine life inspired the noble hymn by Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, sung at the opening meeting in Symphony Hall:

"Hail! Mount of God! whereon with reverent feet
The messengers of many nations meet;
Diverse in feature, argument, and creed,
One in their errand, brothers in their need.

"Not in unwisdom are the limits drawn
That give far lands opposing dusk and dawn;
One sun makes bright the all-pervading air;
One fostering spirit hovers everywhere.

"So with one breath may fervent souls aspire;
With one high purpose wait the answering fire.
Be this the prayer that other prayer controls;
That light divine may visit human souls.

"The worm that clothes the monarch spins no flaw;
The coral builder works by heavenly law;
Who would to conscience rear a temple pure
Must prove each stone and seal it, sound and sure.

"Upon one steadfast base of Truth we stand,
Love lifts her sheltering walls on either hand;
Arched o'er our head is Hope's transcendent dome,
And in the Father's heart of hearts our home."

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

One of our missionaries recently set a good example of self-sacrifice. He had made a new opening where interest was good, and the people were about to take up a collection in his behalf to show their appreciation; instead he persuaded them to make the collection in behalf of Graceland College. As a result he sends in an order for eight dollars and fifty cents.

An anti-saloon fight is on in Independence. Some of our brethren there are taking an active part in the conflict, as we note by the following from the Kansas City Times, October 9:

"At a mass-meeting held in the courthouse last night it was decided to organize it at once. J. McD. Chaney, chairman of the meeting, was authorized to appoint a committee of three to prepare and circulate petitions asking the city council to order a special election. Mr. Chaney said he expected to appoint the committee to-day.

"The time of holding the election is left to the committee. October 17, petitions asking for a special saloon election in Jackson County outside of Kansas City and Independence will be presented to the county court. If the work in Independence is ready in time it is probable that the same date will be selected for the election in Independence, although the two elections would have to be held independently.

"Independence has about one thousand five hundred voters, and the petition to the city council must bear the names of at least ten per cent of these. The purpose is to circulate at least one paper in each of the four wards of the city.

"About fifty were present at the meeting last night. After anti-saloon arguments had been presented by the Reverend Albert Bushnell of Kansas City, talks in favor of a 'dry' condition for Independence were made by Mr. Chaney, the Reverend L. J. Marshall, Roderick May, George W. Miles, the Reverend John Edgar Matthews, B. J. Scott, G. E. Harrington, and others.

"About fifteen years ago in a hard fought election Independence voted to close saloons. Four years later the saloons were again legalized. For many years they had been paying a city license of seven hundred and fifty dollars a year. About a month ago the city council doubled the license. Nine saloons are now doing business in Independence. The revenue from this source would be thirteen thousand five hundred dollars next year."

Elder David Anderson desires to learn the names and addresses of all church members, or others interested in our work, who are in attendance at the Iowa State University. He may be addressed at 4 East Prentiss Street, Iowa City, Iowa.

The mailing of the October Autumn Leaves has been delayed, but the number is worth waiting for. It contains the opening article of Professor Woodstock's series on the Industrial Department of Graceland. In this number Elder Asa S. Cochran closes his account of the founding of Lamoni and other work of the Order of Enoch.

The Joplin (Missouri) Daily Globe, September 30, has the following account of dedicatory exercises in Webb City:

"The dedication of the church of the Latter Day Saints, on the corner of Second and Oronogo Streets, in which President Joseph Smith and R. C. Evans, one of the noted orators of the church participated, attracted crowded congregations at three services yesterday.

"In the morning when Joseph Smith preached, the full capacity of the building; both for seating and standing, was tested, and all who desired to be present were not able to gain entrance. The novelty of listening to the highest official of the Latter Day Saint Church, doubtless attracted many, but for the most part the congregation was made up of the adherents of the religious body of which the venerable preacher has for a very long period been its recognized leader, a great number coming to the city from other points within a radius of fifty to one hundred miles where the Latter Day Saints have a considerable membership.

"President Smith took for his text the words: 'Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth.' From this starting point he delivered a sermon in which he quoted extensively from the Bible in proof of the theological positions for which the Latter Day Saints' Church firmly contends, and claims to be the one church that strictly and literally follows the teachings and practices enjoined upon the followers of Christ.

"In support of every point for which his church contends, the preacher had a scriptural quotation that according to his interpretation exactly fitted. He especially emphasized that only through baptism and the subsequent laying on of hands could any person get his name written in the 'Book of Life' on earth, and thus find recognition as one of Christ's people at the final judgment when the books are opened and every man is judged 'according to the deeds done in the body.' He closed with a graphic word picture of the judgment scene, as in the light of scriptural revelation, it had presented itself to his own mind.

"Following the sermon and the singing of 'Crown him,' a most impressive dedicatory prayer was delivered by R. C. Evans, of London, and President Smith pronounced the benediction.

"The afternoon and evening sermons were preached by R. C. Evans, whose home is in London, Ontario.

"The dedicatory services were unique in at least one respect. There were no collections to make up a deficit or for any other purpose. Whatever expense was incidental to the visit of the two distinguished preachers had been provided for in advance by donations from the officials and membership of the local church; and the offering thus made to President Smith and Mr. Evans was purely of a voluntary character, no demand whatever being made for their services.

"Probably not less than two hundred members of the Joplin congregation were over during the day, services in that city having been abandoned for yesterday in order that all might be present at the Webb City exercises. There also were numerous visitors from Pittsburg, Weir City, Columbus, Scammon, and several other points."

One of our worthy missionaries in sending one dollar for the benefit of Graceland College, says, "I will be one of the one thousand to send you one dollar, and you can feel assured that I will not let an opportunity to help Graceland pass by. I want to be always numbered among the friends of the College. I ran up against a hard world unprepared for the battle, and I know what it is to do the hard work and see the other man get the pay."

There is so little to redeem the dry mass of follies and errors that make up so much of life, that anything to love or reverence, becomes as it were, a sabbath to the soul.—Bulwer.

AUTHORITY.

The discarding of authority is a bar to all progress, as the abject submission to authority is a bar to all progress. If the student assumes that nothing is to be believed that has not been discovered in the past, the end of all his study is to leave him where his fathers ended their intellectual journey. If, on the other hand, he assumes that nothing can be known by any individual which he has not personally investigated for himself, the limitations of his time and energy and the difficulty and complexity of knowledge are such that he can at best only retrace the ground which his fathers traversed, and end practically where they ended. The utmost that he can hope for is to correct some of their errors, not to advance beyond the boundaries of their knowledge.

At least nine tenths of our knowledge is based on authority. All our historical knowledge, most of our geographical knowledge, an overwhelming proportion of our scientific knowledge, is founded, not on personal research or personal experience and observation, but on the testimony of others as to what they have seen or experienced. We know Julius Cæsar lived because others have investigated the Cæsarean tradition, and we accept their judgment as to its veracity. Most of us base our belief that Japan is an insular kingdom on the other side of the globe on the authority of travelers who have visited it. The simplest scientific premises are accepted by most of us for similar reasons. Let any reader of this paragraph stop at this moment, lay down the paper, and try to state what are his reasons for believing that the earth revolves around the sun, not the sun around the earth, and he will probably find it difficult if not impossible to do so. The real reason for that belief is that we trust the astronomical experts who have made a study of the phenomena of the heavenly bodies, and we accept their conclusions because they are experts.

Religious liberty does not discard authority. It uses but refuses to be subject to authority. It avails itself freely of the conclusions of experts, but claims the right to re-examine these conclusions whenever it chooses to do so. If the astronomers should form a scientific organization, proclaim the Copernican theory of astronomy, and persecute by fire and sword or by the somewhat milder and less efficacious method of social ostracism and general contumely every one who doubted that theory, they would create the very skepticism against which they were warring. What the lovers of religious liberty object to is not that the church bases its faith on the authority of experts; this is done by intelligent men in all departments of knowledge. What is objected to is the refusal to allow the present generation to reinvestigate the subjects and retest the conclusions. Any physician has an acknowledged right to repeat for himself the experiments by which Doctor Reed demonstrated that yellow fever germs are carried by the mosquito from the sick to the well. But most physicians wisely assume this conclusion, incorporate it in the common stock of medical knowledge, and act upon it in the further study of the problem how to prevent the infection. Any layman, if he has the time and ability, has a right to make an original investigation into the origin and composition of the Four Gospels. But no layman is under any obligation so to do. He has a right to assume as his premise the conclusion which practically all expert students of the Four Gospels have reached—that they are trustworthy historical documents of the first century, or, at the very latest, of the first decade of the second century—and to base his studies of the life and teaching of Jesus on that assumption. So any man who thinks that he possesses the trained mind and encyclopedic knowledge necessary for an original inquiry into the origin of the universe has a right to make such inquiry. But no one is under obligation so to do. We have a right—and for most of us it is expedient to exercise that right—to assume as a premise the conclusion reached by an overwhelming majority of all experts who have made such an inquiry—that there is one intelligent and beneficent Creator and Ruler of the universe—and base our conduct of life upon that assumption. If one attempts to coerce us to accept without inquiry the conclusions of our fathers on either scientific or religious questions, we have a right to resent and resist the endeavor. But we have an equal right to resent and resist any one who denies to us the right to assume, alike in the scientific and the religious realm, the conclusions of our fathers, and to employ those conclusions in our further investigation of truth and in our practical conduct of life.—The Outlook, September 28, 1907.

THE JAREDITE BOATS.

The quotations from the Book of Mormon are from the small edition. The description of the Jaredite boats in the Book of Mormon, pages 504 and 510, small edition, has been criticised and made fun of by some of the great lights, as Reverend Clark Braden of the Christian Church, in his debates with Brn. E. L. Kelley and I. N. White. Many others, in lectures and in their writings, have attacked the descriptions as outlined on the pages of the Book of Mormon just cited above; Paul and Barnabas, in Acts 14:17, 18, of Christ say, "Nevertheless he left not himself without witness, . . . And with these sayings scarce restrained they the people." Now if Paul and Barnabas could scarcely restrain the people from doing wrong with such witnesses that rallied to the support of Christ's cause, it may be hard to get some to believe in the construction of the Jaredite boats; but nevertheless we have some very strong and convincing proof that the construction of the Book of Mormon boats was far in advance of the civilized world when it was first given to the public in 1829, seventy-eight years ago.

The Government of the United States has had, and has at present, a life-saving boat that they are using on the coasts for saving persons who are in danger of drowning, caused by some large ships being wrecked by the fearful storms upon the sea. The life-saving boats are built almost exactly as the descriptions of Jaredite boats in the Book of Mormon. We will first quote from the Book of Mormon, and then from the description of the Government boat as built at present.

The Lord said unto the brother of Jared, Book of Mormon, page 504: "And the Lord said, Go to work and build, after the manner of barges which ye have hitherto built. And it came to pass that the brother of Jared did go to work, and also his brethren, and built barges after the manner which they had built, according to the instructions of the Lord. And they were small." It would look from a human standpoint that a small craft would not withstand such heavy seas as they would have to encounter in the journey to the promised land. We will show why a small boat can withstand heavy seas, and even storms that large ships may be wrecked in. We quote from Popular Mechanics for June, 1907, page 625, under the caption of "Life-saving by gasoline." "It seems odd, when one thinks of it, that a little cockel shell thirty-four feet long should live and ride out seas and wind which are too much for the huge hulk which wrecks and needs assistance. But these little boats are built with one single idea—safety—and all the skill and inventive ability of the builders are designed to this one end."

The Jaredite boats are small, and also the Government life-saving boats which are only thirty-four feet in length. Book of Mormon, page 504: "And the length thereof was the length of a tree." Thirty-four feet would be about the approximate length of a tree, so the two boats very nearly agree on that point. So we will take up another point. Book of Mormon, page 504: "And the ends thereof were peaked." The construction of boats have proven that each end must be peaked or pointed as shown in cut No. 2. The reasons are these: the pointed ends divide the water with but very little friction, and also allow the water to return to its original place after passing without causing a vacuum. So they are almost identical so far.

Book of Mormon, page 504: "And they were light upon the water, even like unto the lightness of a fowl upon the water; and they were built after a manner that they were exceedingly tight, even that they would hold water like unto a dish; and the bottom thereof was tight like unto a dish; and the sides thereof were tight like unto a dish. . . . and the door thereof, when it was shut, was tight like unto a dish."

Page 505: "For howbeit, ye can not cross this great deep, save I prepare you against the waves of the sea, and the winds which have gone forth, and the floods which shall come." Now we claim and think we can prove that God did prepare them against waves, winds, and floods of the sea by the peculiar manner in which he instructed Jared's brother to build the boats. It says that the boats were very light upon the water. What made them light upon the water? Because the top, sides, bottom, and door were very tight. Therefore, they were capable of holding either water or air. See cut 2 of Government boat which shows the boat's hull cut up into eight air-tight apartments, and a copper vessel also cut up into ten air-tight compartments which fit each of the eight departments and the two air spaces on top of boat which make eighty-two compartments.

We now quote from Popular Mechanics for June, 1907, page 626: "The boat can not sink, for there are eight water-tight compartments in it, any of which is sufficient to hold the boat on the surface full of men and women. And in these eight compartments are eighty-two copper air cases, so that the boat can be smashed into small pieces, cut in two, in ten, in a hundred parts, and still there will be enough floating for those in the boat at the time of the accident to hold onto." (See cuts 1 and 2.) Those compartments would make the boat very light, "even like a fowl upon the water." Above the deck on each side are air-tight chambers (see cuts 1 and 3), which are elevated above the deck at each end, and are oval-shaped on top (see cut 3) so that when the boat is capsized they will act as an axle or center on which the boat will readily return to its original place, rightside up. The heavy metal keel serves as a weight to bring the boat back to its proper place. National Magazine, November, 1906, page 163, says: "In order to procure the self-righting quality, each is furnished with a heavy iron keel, and well provided with ballast. If overturned it is impossible for the boat to remain so on account of the elevated air-chambers in the bow and stern, and as it rolls upon one side, the ballast and the iron keel, which by its own weight must naturally seek the water, quickly force it back into position."

Popular Mechanics, June, 1906, page 625 says: "The boat can not stay upset, and turns over with difficulty; on the bottom is a heavy keel of metal—gun metal. . . . This 1,800 pounds of keel flops a boat right side up as fast and as often as a wave upsets the boat—and it must be a mighty wave indeed which accomplishes the feat. . . . The photographs show the difficulty which is experienced in trying to upset one of the boats. A number of men with block and tackle, had to pull and haul a long time, until, inch by inch, the boat finally keeled over, took water, and at last turned bottom up. Released, and in a second the heavy keel flopped back the boat and in no uncertain manner—witness the splash."

Now while the Book of Mormon does not state that the Jaredite boats had iron keels, we can see a parallel in their construction of self-righting. The Jaredite boat had the air-tight departments in one above the deck, and as to the heavy iron keel it does not have one; but as the boat is built of heavy timber, and a heavy wooden keel with the air space above the deck, it would right itself. (See cut 5.) The top or cover of the boat forms one large air space above the deck which is much higher above the deck than on the Government boat, therefore it would not take such a heavy keel to right itself. Looking at a sectional end view of the Government boat (see cut 3) the dotted lines represent the Jaredite boat's cover on top, and as the top covers the whole length of the boat, it would make the boat lighter on top than the Government boat, therefore it would take less weight on the keel to cause it to right itself. This would make the Jaredite boats self-righting, and parallel in construction with the latest boat-building principle.

Now as to the hole in the top. Book of Mormon, page 504: "And the Lord said unto the brother of Jared, Behold, thou shalt make a hole in the top thereof, . . . and when thou shalt suffer for air, thou shalt unstop the hole thereof, and receive air."

Now as the Jaredites were to have an air-tight cover over them, therefore it was necessary to make a hole through the top to allow fresh air to enter that they might not be suffocated. The Government boat has one large hole in the top, or in other words the boat is open between the air-tight departments above the deck on each end. So they are almost parallel in this principle of construction. Now to the hole or holes in the bottom. Book of Mormon, page 504: "The Lord said unto the brother of Jared, Behold thou shalt make a hole in the top thereof, and also in the bottom thereof." National Magazine, November, 1906, says: "The excited spectators held their breath, but presently had leisure to notice certain peculiarities of construction, namely three round openings in the bottom of the boat, by means of which the self-bailing is accomplished. In the boat's floor, which is so placed as to be on a level with the water when it is manned, [the writer is in error about the floor or deck being on a level with the water, see cut 1] are several openings, each connecting by a metal with one in the bottom. As water can not rise above its own level, and as each tube is closed, at the floor level, by a valve which opens downward, no water can pass up into the boat, while any dashing in from above is at once shipped through the tubes. So quickly is this accomplished that a full boat can empty itself in about half a minute." Popular Mechanics, June, 1907, says: "The boat can not be sunk. They have a false bottom through which run eight-inch tubes, closed with valves, which keep the water out. But let a wave fill the boat and in less than half a minute the water all runs out of the tubes back into the sea."

The Jaredite boats were "tight like a dish," and no doubt the hulls were made similar to the Government boats with many departments holding air, and that would make them "light like a fowl upon the water," and with the cover with a hole in the top making an air-tight department elevated much higher above the deck than those in the Government life-saving boat, therefore, it would not require a heavy iron keel to right itself, because when bottom up the bottom would be very much higher above the water than the Government boat. The Jaredite boat, on account of the air-chambers being so much higher than the Government boat, when overturned, its bottom being elevated above the water, and being much heavier than the top, it would instantly return to its original place; and the deck being elevated above the water level, with a hole or tube through the deck and bottom, it would instantly empty itself of all water as the Government boats would do; so, therefore, they are parallel as to self-righting and self-bailing.

The Jaredite boats and the Government life-saving boats are both small, with air-tight departments, or air-chambers, both above and below the deck, making them very light on the water, even "light like a fowl upon the water." And the bottoms being heavier than the tops, when overturned each would return to its original place, thus being self-righting.

"Hole in the top." The Government boat has not a hole in the top because there is no air-tight housing or covering over all the deck. It has nine holes in the bottom to permit of the self-bailing principle.

The Jaredite boats being small, they could be made stronger, and to withstand a much harder strain from the waves and storms which they would have to meet on their journey. Being peaked at both ends, they would glide through the water much easier than if blunt at the ends, and could plow through the large waves with ease. Being light, as described, they would after plowing through the waves, immediately rise to the surface, and with the holes in the bottom would instantly relieve themselves of the water that might enter the boat while being immersed beneath the sea. All the qualities as described in the Book of Mormon in 1829 have been verified in the last few years by those who built the above described Government life-saving boat.

National Magazine, November, 1906, page 164, of the efforts to build a good life-saving boat, says: "It was not till about 1851, however, that designs for a self-righting, self-emptying boat were presented, in a contest for a one hundred guinea prize, offered by the president of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution for the best model of a life-boat. Two hundred and eighty models were sent in, from Great Britain, America, France, Germany, and Holland, that presented by Mr. James Beeching of Yarmouth gaining the prize, and with slight modifications becoming the foundation of the boat now in use. Since this was first introduced into the United States service, thirty-seven have been furnished to our stations, the majority being modeled after a boat sent by the Royal National Life-Boat Institution. Their record is a good one; in four hundred and seventy-one trips they have capsized but four times, and but one life has been lost for every one hundred and seventeen saved. As has been stated, the value of this style of boat lies in its special fitness for use on long trips or in heavy gales, when there is constant danger of sinking or capsizing. Under such circumstances, it is unquestionably much safer than the ordinary surf-boat."

Popular Mechanics, June, 1907, of the gasoline motor life-boat says:

"Nearly a dozen of these boats are now in use in this country, and every one has had a chance, and successfully demonstrated its superiority for the work it does, over any previous type of craft used for the same purpose. So successful are these boats that others are being built and installed."

National Magazine, November, 1906, says: "About thirty years ago the self-righting, self-bailing life-boat, an ingenious device which had been in use in Great Britain for a considerable period, was introduced into the United States Life-Saving Service."

The above quotations show that it was about twenty-two years before a self-righting, self-bailing boat was introduced in any part of the world. This is one among many strong points that proves to my mind that the Book of Mormon is indeed true.

IN HIS STEPS.

Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that we should follow in his steps.—1 Peter 2: 21.

Centuries have passed away, nations been born and turned to dust since the subject of this inspired declaration walked in Galilee, and yet, even down to the "dark valley and the shadow," and up to the "gates of Eternal Day," we can trace the prints of his shining feet, undimmed by the crooked paths made by the countless thousands who have attempted to follow in his steps.

Not only are we to be guided by his footprints in the narrow way; but he himself has said, "My sheep know my voice." And while we listen for its divine melody we hear him say, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow me."

"Let him deny himself!" In this brief sentence is comprehended the all-sufficient preparation for the successful walk with Christ.

How often we think the cross is heavy, while all the time it is only this burden of self which we are trying to bear, not realizing that the two can not be borne at the same time, because they are directly opposed to each other. This ever-present, all-invading ego, with its doubts and fears, its unsatisfied longings and carnal desires, must be persistently denied, and finally eliminated by that supreme factor, Love; that perfect love which casteth out all fear, the love which never faileth, but which beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

As we look at this shining example, this perfect pattern, we observe that the first eventful occurrence in his life, aside from his wondrous birth, was when he was taken by his parents to the temple to be presented to the Lord, and there, under the hands of the Prophet Simeon, received the blessing to which every child of the kingdom is entitled if we would follow in his steps. Later we would find him again in the temple, at the age of twelve years, eager to learn, anxious to be about his Father's business. The record of his remaining childhood years is briefly expressed in the statement, that the child was subject to his parents, and grew in wisdom, and in stature, and in favor with God and man. Obedience to parents then, is the vital principle by which the child is to be governed, if he would follow in the steps of his Master. Too much stress can not be placed upon this point, as the tendency of the age is to reverse this rule and allow the child to dominate in the home, under a mistaken sense of kindness and parental affection. Even Jesus learned obedience and the great lesson can not begin too early.

Passing swiftly from childhood to manhood, we find him seeking to know the will of the Father, communing long with him on the mountain-tops, secluded from the jarring discords of human life, resisting the pangs of hunger and the temptations of the Evil One, that he might know the will of his Father and secure the necessary strength for his great work. And as the Spirit led him to the mountain-top, so also it led him to the banks of the Jordan, that he might receive baptism at the hands of that humble man, sent of God, whose name was John, declaring, in answer to his protest, that "thus it cometh us to fulfill all righteousness." And, as he came up out of the water, the heavens were opened, and he received the baptism of the Spirit directly from God, while the voice from heaven declared, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased."

His subsequent history is one unbroken record of unselfish service to others. He himself declared, I came not to be ministered unto but to minister, and in the entire history of his life on earth, among all the mighty miracles that he did, not one was ever wrought for his own benefit, or to relieve any sorrow or distress of his own.

When Satan came to him at the close of his forty days' fast, just at a time when human weakness would naturally yield, he arose above the temptation and silenced the tempter with, "It is written"; thus placing the word of God before any earthly need. Yet when the multitudes followed him,—though from selfish motives—till faint with hunger, he had compassion on them, and looking to God, the abundant source of all supply, caused the loaves and the fishes to be multiplied that they might be fed.

We see him at Sychar's well, tired, hungry, and thirsty, yet forgetting, or refusing to eat, in his eagerness to teach the sinful Samaritan woman and her despised people the significance of the water of life, and the true worship of God. We see him weeping for sympathy at the grave of Lazarus, and again over Jerusalem because she would not permit him to save her from the desolation and anguish which he knew awaited her, yet never a tear of self-pity, though sorely "wounded in the house of his friends."

We see him mocked and derided, scourged and spit upon, seized by violent hands and nailed to the cruel cross; and though having it in his power to call to his aid legions of angels, his great love for the Father and for humanity seals his lips, and not one word does he utter in his own defense. But, when he witnesses the defilement of the temple of God, the oppression of the widow and the fatherless, and the burdens laid upon the poor, his great soul overflows with righteous indignation, and we hear falling from his lips, words that blister and burn in eloquent denunciation of wickedness in high places, though he well knew the result for himself would be the cross of Calvary. Always we find him going about doing good, no salary for him, no vacation, not even a place to lay his head; often footsore and weary, yet never complaining; laying hands on the sick and healing them, causing the lame to walk, the blind to see; blessing little children, raising the dead, and preaching the gospel to all, leaving us an example that we should follow in his steps.

We have been taught that we can not follow him in these things, that it is sacrilege to attempt it; but again we listen for the voice of the good Shepherd, and we hear him say, "As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you"; and "he that believeth in me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father." "And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; . . . if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." "And as ye go, . . . heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils; freely ye have received; freely give."

Always and everywhere, when Jesus sent men to preach the gospel, he sent them also to heal, thus bringing temporal as well as eternal salvation, and proving its power to save to the uttermost.

Modern teachers are beginning to understand the necessity of this, and in addition to their theological education, missionaries are given a course in medicine as a preparation for work in foreign fields, substituting the wisdom of men for the power of God, and thus failing to follow in his steps.

Even his church has fallen far short of the glory of God, and is living beneath her privileges. Repeatedly the voice of the Spirit has been, "Come up higher." And when that voice is heeded, and we have reached that high altitude where Jesus walked, we will need no other physician than the Lord Jesus Christ and those who minister in his name. Then, when we have conquered self, and made the perfect consecration, shall he lead us beside the "still waters," where we shall find "rest to our souls," because we have learned of him; and, denying self, loving as he loved, led by the same Spirit from glory unto glory, from strenght to strength, we shall truly walk—

"In the old, old path,
Made strangely sweet,
By the touch divine
Of his blessed feet."

"SING SOMETHING."

The ordinances of the gospel are all sweetly sublime, reflecting in their simplicity the attributes of a meek and lowly Savior. Many years ago I heard a brother say in the pulpit, "These ordinances are in the church, but we know not why." The thought of not knowing why struck me forcibly; and, as I pondered, I could see no reason why we might not know the purpose of each one; or perhaps the better expression would be: Why they were placed in the gospel economy for the purposes, which seem more visible than the reason why such ordinances, simple yet sublime, were set there, each for its specific purpose. I at once sought light from the Holy Spirit. Instantly there flashed into my mind the old hymn:

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners plunged beneath that flood Lose all their guilty stains."

I queried, "How can that plunging be done?" Had the precious blood shed on Calvary been carefully garnered, every drop, into a receptacle suitable to hold the precious price of our redemption, there was not enough of it in which literally to plunge a single needy one, to say nothing of the whole world.

Suddenly I recollected listening to a lady missionary home from India, who in her lecture said, "We were all taught, and read in our Sunday-school books, that the heathen nations, as we call them, worship gods of wood and stone, the work of their own hands." She further said, "They do not regard those images as their gods; but they are set before the eye, that they can the better comprehend the 'unknown' god in whom they believe."

I further thought of the display of the cross, the representations of the Virgin Mary and the departed saints, by the mother church, and still further of the Lord himself by all Protestantism. Then I thought, So the plunging of the unregenerated person in water, besides being directly for the remission of sins, following repentance of course (see Acts 2: 38), also the entrance into the sheepfold (see John 10: 1-3), and the means of putting on Christ (see Galatians 3: 27), not admitting the baptism of the Spirit (see 1 Corinthians 12: 13; John 3: 5), also by appealing to us by the natural vision enables us the better to comprehend the power of the blood of Jesus to atone for or wash away our sins.

The second ordinance, the laying on of hands, next presented itself, bringing the query: "Why this ordinance?" Quickly I remembered Habakkuk 3: 4: "He had horns coming out of his hand: and there was the hiding of his power." Instantly I saw that the laying on of hands was placed in the church, that while the hands of the elders are upon the little children while seeking God's blessing upon them, upon the baptized believer while invoking the baptism of the Holy Ghost, upon the sick imploring God's healing power, also upon those called to the ministry, conferring the authority of Christ upon them, we may the better comprehend the hand of God reached out with these blessings.

By this time it was easy to see that the emblems, bread and wine, had their mission in enabling us not only to "discern the Lord's body," but to feel the efficacy of his precious blood to atone for sin. These impressions were indelibly printed on my mind, that, even though twenty years or more have flown since, they are as vivid as when given.

While each ordinance is so sweetly sublime that none but a heart of "stone" can witness them without serious thought, one is more solemn than either of the others. I speak of the sacrament of what we sometimes call the Lord's supper.

I have always felt that the solemnity of this occasion is broken by the elder in charge saying, as the priest, one or more, starts on his most solemn duty of handing those sacred emblems to each participant, "Sing something," or by some other one leading, voluntarily, a verse or verses, according to the time required in passing those tokens of the body and blood of Jesus.

Thirty years ago this custom was unknown in the church, so far as the writer was then acquainted with it. In the spring of 1874 he was chosen priest of the Lamoni Branch, when it numbered but seventy-three, meeting alternately in each of two schoolhouses, one in the east and one in the west sides of the branch. In the summer of 1875 a rude church building was constructed one mile west and one mile south of the farming section where Lamoni stands. Three hundred communicants soon assembled in the country church on the Lord's day of each week to listen to the sound of the gospel trumpet, and each first Sunday of the month to commemorate the death and suffering of Him who bled on Calvary that we might live.

Well does the writer remember the sweetly solemn silence that reigned supreme while he tiptoed the floors of those two schoolhouses and later of that rural church, while eyes were moistened with the undisturbed meditation of the agony of that precious Savior, when he groaned, and "sweat great drops of blood" in Gethsemane, followed by the cruel tragedy of the cross.

Singing during the breaking of the bread or passing the emblems, disturbs the sweet solemnity of the occasion, and necessarily detracts from the acute sense of the Savior's suffering. We should not forget that the Lord and his disciples did not sing their hymn till the supper was entirely over. The opening hymn of the hour, and one after the ordinance are sufficient to express the sentiment of our sacramental hymns.

I would not pose as a dictator to the church, but have been requested to write on the subject, and have delayed doing so, for fear of wounding and stirring up strife.

To-day I have been constrained to pen these thoughts, leaving the event with the Lord.

Respectfully submitted,

O. B. THOMAS.

"Mr. Editor," said a patron one day, "how is it you never ask me to pay for your paper?" "Oh," said the man of types, "We never ask a gentleman for money." "Indeed," the patron replied; "how do you manage to get along when they don't pay?" "Why," said Mr. Editor, "after a certain time we conclude he is not a gentleman, and dun him."—Exchange.

How blunt are the arrows of adversity in comparison with those of guilt.—Blair.

Of General Interest

MANUAL TRAINING IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

How perfectly ridiculous it would have seemed to the sturdy school children of Iowa who dug their bare toes into the dirt floors of the little district schools fifty years ago if they had been told that they were to learn to make mission furniture, to draw plans for office buildings and carve wood with electric machinery.

But in those days the farms kept the average boy busy doing things useful, helpful, and self-improving and he was considered an important factor in the industrial life of the State.

The transformation of the population of Iowa from mostly rural to one largely urban; the coming of the factory system, and the passing away of the hoe and the plow, have deprived the boy of the educational advantages of work and left him often idle and useless. With this change of life from the country to the city the schools enlarged but the education was along literary lines. The educational authorities got their heads together and as a result the first manual training department in any public school of Iowa was established nineteen years ago in the west high school.

After years of experience it has been found that the child needs a training of the motor powers, and that this training enabling the eye, hand, and brain to work together, is educative, just the same as the study of history and the development of the memory cultivate the mental powers and help form character. The manual training department led to the kindergarten, which was originated and put in the schools to train the motor powers at an early age.

Authorities declare that a wonderful change in the industrial condition of the country is responsible for the installation in the public schools of the departments for training both the hand and the brain. Thirty or forty years ago the homes furnished this sort of work and because this home training is a thing of the past it is up to the public schools to give it to the children. Formerly, each family largely supplied its own wants, and was almost independent of other people. Each member was active. One or more could weave cloth, rugs, carpets, and others could make shoes, or assist in the carpentry work in erecting a house, barn, or shed. In fact, our forefathers could make most of the articles used about the home or worn on the person. To-day all this is changed.

In Des Moines four of the high schools furnish manual training, and five of the graded schools. In those grades where there is no manual training departments the pupils are permitted to go to the high schools in the afternoon where classes are held. Despite the other duties and outside attractions a very large per cent of the entire number of pupils taking manual training avail themselves of this privilege and many of them work as long as the teacher remains, and leave reluctantly.

Des Moines was the twenty-fifth city in the world to install manual training in its public schools, and it is not far behind in establishing the kindergartens. Forty-seven pupils took the work seven years ago and now the attendance in the nine manual training departments of the city exceeds one thousand. Hundreds have completed the course and some have developed into the greatest architects and hand workers in the country.

No attempt is made to teach a complete trade, as the aim of the work is educational rather than utilitarian. The pupils give only one fourth of their time to manual work, and it is practically impossible to teach a complete trade in so short a time. It would not be a very great value for a child to learn all the details of a particular trade unless he wished to follow that line of work later in life.

However, in manual training school parts of several trades are taught and important information is given that will help a child choose a trade later if he wishes. Manual training is taught as a part of general education and is not intended as a technical education.

The pupils are taught how to use tools, and given the underlying principles that are the foundation of all trades. The real and most important reasons for the manual training departments are to create a love for labor and respect for rough work with the hands; to develop independence and self-reliance; to produce habits of exactness, order and neatness; to cultivate dexterity of the hand; to train the eye to a sense of form, and to give the growing child physical exercise and turn his thoughts to useful things which will help him later in life.

"What shall we do with our boy?" is the question now asked, although fifty years ago this was no problem, "and how shall we keep him in school? He doesn't like books."

The manual training department answers this question better than any other department of the public schools. When parents fully realize that manual training will help the children to become better bread winners by making them skillful workers early in life, and that they will be capable of greater skill later on because of this early education, all the children of the poorer and the laboring class will be in school and they will stay in school as long as possible.

The idea is to furnish education for every child in every walk of life. The English departments train the literarily inclined. The science laboratories give early training for those who wish to study medicine. The art department of the Des Moines schools has been the first stepping-stone to three of the greatest illustrators in the country. The manual training department makes the more perfect carpenter and draftsman.

Students are continually making mission and all other types of furniture. Joinery and pyrography are popular not only among the boys, but the girls. The carving class spends twelve weeks learning the elements of wood carving. But the most technical work begins with wood turning. The pupils are taught how to handle the tools commonly used by turners, and have made many useful and beautiful articles. The turners are also taught how to keep their electric machines in repair.

Engines are designed in the mechanical drawing department and castings have been made from patterns originated by the third year pupils. Some have even drawn patterns for the broken parts of lathes.

No person can expect to do accurate woodwork unless he understands how to make a mechanical drawing. Manual training includes both woodwork and mechanical drawing, and pupils usually take both kinds of work. They are taught to make working drawings, machine drawings, isometric projections, perspective drawings and work out many problems in descriptive geometry. Those who take all the branches of mechanical drawing often do so because they intend to attend technical schools. . . .

The far-sighted statesmen of France, Germany, Sweden, and other nations have discovered that in order to have manufactured goods of the highest grade the workmen must be trained from youth through early manhood. This resulted in connecting something of trade-learning with schooling. Manual training was introduced into the grades to develop a skill of hand and a mind capable of solving mechanical problems. Manual training and industrial schools were also established to care for the higher education of the youth and the somewhat more technical training along industrial lines. Trade schools, technical schools and colleges were also provided for those who wished to specialize. This plan has worked well in many foreign cities and is working well in many of the cities of the United States to-day.—Register and Leader (Des Moines, Iowa,) October 6, 1907.

THE INDIAN COLONY IN NEW YORK CITY.

Friends of the Indian are consistent enough to befriend the red race and its blood wherever it may be found, and it therefore seems proper that the Indian's Friend should inform its readers in New York and its vicinity that Indians may be found nearer Fifth Avenue than some of them may be aware. For fifty years there have been Indians dwelling on Manhattan Island and for half that time the Indians themselves, and a few of their white friends, have dignified the shifting group with the name of "New York City's Indian Colony," while the region they chiefly inhabit on the lower west side of Manhattan the Indians term "The Indian Village." By a tacit peace pact these modern Algonquin and Iroquois people, whose ancestors were enemies, fraternize as though the ancient tribal wars with their savage atrocities had never taken place. For most of these red denizens of the metropolis are eastern Indians, hailing from reservations in the State of New York, from New Brunswick and Canada, although occasional members of the colony are representatives of western tribes.

"The Reservation" is west of Broadway and between Canal and Fourteenth Streets. In certain houses in West Broadway, West Houston Street, Varick, Charles, Hudson and other streets, Indians have dwelt continuously for years—or at least during the winter season; in the summer they are absent with tent shows or at seaside or mountain resorts or traveling about maintaining themselves by the sale of products of the artistic skill of the ever industrious women.

Red blood seems to be "thicker than water," for the possession of some of it is the only passport required to obtain a welcome from this little group, the questions of tribes and language being little considered. Real charity is the rule to a red man or woman in need from these Indians, although they often have a severe struggle for existence themselves in the midst of the most concentrated civilization in America. Food and shelter are first extended to a new arrival, but if after first aid is thus rendered the beneficiary does not put forth a creditable effort at self-help, he will first hear criticisms, then admonitions, and, if these be unheeded, he will receive permission to shift for himself.

The Indians of New York City are usually able to maintain themselves, but sometimes are in need of aid, for the same reasons that there are worthy—"poor but respectable"—white people, because, even if economical and desirous of being thrifty, their income is unequal to necessary expenditures. Rent is a hard tax on the Indian in town; Amerind dialects have no word for rent; throughout the Americas, before the white man's advent, the private ownership of land was never even dreamed of; hunting grounds and planting grounds were held, while used, by tribes and families and territory claimed and defended by confederacies, but no red man paid rent for wigwam or the site for one. Even our more than semi-civilized eastern Indians dwell on reservations—State, National, or Dominion—and pay no rent.—Allen Samuel Williams, in the Indian's Friend (New York City), July, 1907.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"None of Our Business."

How often have we heard the awful words fall from even the lips of professing Christians: "Let the country take care of the poor; it is none of our business." God have mercy on all who so cast aside the duty, and what ought to be considered the blessed privilege, of ministering to his homeless and his afflicted.

"None of our business!" Wandering and sinful,
All through the streets of the city they go,
Hungry and homeless in the wild winter weather;
"None of our business!" Dare we say so?

"None of our business!" Children's wan faces,
Haggard and old with their suffering and sin,
Hold fast your darlings on tender, warm bosoms,
Sorrow without, but the home light within.

What does it matter that some other woman—
Some common mother—in bitter despair,
Wails in a garret, or sits in a cellar,
Too broken-hearted for weeping or prayer?

"None of our business!" Sinful and fallen,
How they may jostle us close on the streets!
Hold back your garments! Scorn? They are used to it;
Pass on the other side lest you should meet.

"None of our business!" On, then, the music;
On with the feasting, though hearts break forlorn;
Somebody's hungry, somebody's freezing,
Somebody's soul will be lost ere the morn.

Somebody's dying (on with the dancing!);
One for earth's pottage is selling his soul;
One for a bauble has bartered his birthright,
Selling his all for a pitiful dole.

Ah, but ONE goeth abroad on the mountains,
Over lone deserts, with burning deep sands!
Seeking the lost ones (it is His business!)
Bruised though His feet are, and torn though His hands.

Thorn-crowned His head and His soul sorrow-stricken, (Saving men's souls at such infinite cost),
Broken His heart for the grief of the nations;
It is His business saving the lost!

FAYETTE CITY, Pennsylvania.

Dear Column: I pen these few lines with the desire to impress upon the minds of your readers the great importance of careful training of the youth. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he," are inspired words. Has it ever occurred to you that we make our own trouble and failures, our own enemies and obstacles? And by the same rule, we make our joys, successes, and friends, and the process is not at all difficult of comprehension. It is all embodied in the statement made by this wise man of old: "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

If we do not want unhappiness to come into our lives, we must eliminate evil from our thoughts. We must learn to think neither unhappiness nor evil for others. We must learn to know that we can not predict success for ourselves, and at the same time prophesy failure for our neighbors. This rule is an absolute one, and admits of no exception. That which we send forth comes back to us. It may be sooner or later, but it is sure to come.

The best way to bring success to ourselves, is to wish it for others. The mental picture which we thus form in our own minds will positively reproduce itself in our own environments. On the other hand, he who desires prosperity, health, and happiness, for his neighbors no less than for himself, who rejoices in another's good fortune as in his own, is sure to reap a harvest of good, increased an hundred fold.

I wish that children were taught this law. But since this teaching is not always given in schools, let each mother try to make it her duty to see that her children are properly informed. Tell the little ones that life is molded by their own thoughts; that to entertain the spirit of envy, jealousy, hatred, and fear, is to sow the seeds of a baneful harvest by and by, just as surely as the thoughts of good will, kindness, and joy, will reproduce their own kind. This is a lesson we all need to learn, and can not learn too quickly. Some other time I will be heard from. May the good work go on.

EMMA PERRIE.

Rather Too Late.

"If folks could have their funerals when they are alive and well and struggling along, what a help it would be!" sighed Aunt Jerusha, folding her Paisley shawl with great care.

"Now, there is poor Mis' Brown," she added, as she pinned her Sunday bonnet into the green veil. "How encouraged she'd have been if she could have heard what the minister said to-day? I wouldn't wonder one mite if she'd have got well.

"And Deacon Brown a-wiping his eyes and all of them taking on so! Poor soul, she never dreamed they set so much by her!

"Mis' Brown got discouraged. Yer see, Deacon Brown, he'd got a way of blaming everything on to her. I don't suppose the deacon meant it—'twas just his way—but it's awful wearing. When the things wore out, or broke, he acted just as if Mis' Brown did it herself on purpose. And they all caught it, like the measles or the whooping-cough.

"And the minister a-telling how the deacon brought his young wife here when 'twan't nothing but wilderness; and how patiently she bore hardship, and what a good wife she'd been! Now the minister wouldn't have known anything about that if the deacon hadn't told him. Dear, dear! If he'd only told Mis' Brown herself what he thought, I do believe he might have saved the funeral.

"And when the minister said how the children would miss their mother as though they couldn't stand it, poor things! Well, I guess it is true enough; Mis' Brown was always doing for some of them. When they were singing about 'sweet rest in heaven,' I couldn't help thinking that that was something Mis' Brown would have to get used to, for she never had none of it here.

"She'd have been awful pleased with the flowers. They were pretty, and no mistake. You see the deacon wan't never willing for her to have a flower bed. He said 'twas enough prettier sight to see good cabbage a-growin'; but Mis' Brown always kind of hankered after sweet smelling things, like sweet-peas and such.

"What did you say, Levi? Most time for supper? Well, so it is! I must have got to meditating. I've been thinking, Levi, you needn't tell the minister anything about me. If the pancakes and the pumpkin pies are good, you just say so as we go along. It ain't best to keep everything laid up for funerals."—Faith and Works.

Letter Department

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky, September 10, 1907.

Dear Herald: I will pen a few lines for the HERALD of the Saints of the true church of Jesus Christ, the one which has the true Prophet in it, which God set in his church or kingdom on this earth in latter days. It made me rejoice to see his picture in a late HERALD, and to know the difference between the two Josephs, the one called of God, our prophet and high priest of the true church, with headquarters at Lamoni, and the other, not called of God, of the Utah church, which is not the true church of Jesus Christ.

The HERALD is dear to me, and I love to read the grand words it contains. When this blessed work found me, I was striving to do my Master's will, and doing the best I knew how, going from one church to another, one mission to another, seeking for more light.

Before I became a member of any church, I went one night to a mission on Preston and Jefferson Streets, which was conducted by a woman, and I was drawn up to the altar, and tried to do what they told me to do, but no relief. On my way home I made the remark several times that I was going back the next afternoon, when there were not many out, and give myself unto the Lord. I went to the place as I said I would, and when they called for sinners to come to the altar, I did not go to the altar, but went off by myself to pray unto my Savior and Lord. This was on January 3, 1889. While on my bended knees, praying and pleading to him who sits on high, trying to do as he has said in his blessed word, Matthew 7: 7, 8: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you:" doing this with all my heart, crying for mercy, the blessed words of the Master came unto me, while still on my knees pleading with him who is tender and merciful, as follows: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."—Revelation 3: 20.

And still with uplifted eyes and hands and heart and mind I repeated those blessed words, and told him who was nailed to the cross, that the door was open for him to come in. I saw my Savior coming with outstretched hands toward me as I was still pleading with him. And while he was about fifteen feet from me, they raised me up from my knees, and then he disappeared from me. Oh, how I have wished many a time that they had let me alone a little while longer. I still wanted to follow my Master and keep his commandments, and was baptized, or at least I thought I was at the time. Then I read and studied the Book of all books to get nearer to him, praying often, and telling my friends what the dear Savior had done for me, and what I had seen, going from one church to another, one mission to another, seeking for more light, knowing that there was something else for me to do, but not being able to find it out in any of these churches.

I lived this way ten years, two months, and twenty-four days, when I was baptized into the kingdom of God, or his true church. When I heard the first sermon I knew I had found what I was looking for. When I heard the fourth sermon, I gave my hand for baptism, and on the 26th day of March, 1899, I was baptized, and had hands laid on, which I wanted from some of them with whom I had before come in contact, but none of them would do it.

That night, or rather two o'clock in the morning, I awoke from my sleep, feeling as free from sin as a new-born babe. Well, in about a week afterward I had a dream. I dreamed I was sitting in a room with a goodly number of people.

I saw my Savior in the form of a young man, just as they draw his picture when he was questioning the scribes and lawyers. As he lifted up his hands and stretched them from him, I saw the Twelve rise up, and then I heard a voice say that Joseph was among them. And ever since I have been rejoicing to know that I am in the kingdom of God.

I was ordained a priest May 17, 1904, by F. J. Ebeling, J. W. Metcalf, and W. H. Kelley in Cincinnati, lived there for a while, then moved to Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, and cast my lot with the Pittsburg Saints for about eighteen months. I have some dear friends among the Saints up there, whom I hope to meet soon.

Pray for me that I may be ever found in the straight and narrow way, for it is my desire to be faithful to the end. The judgment of God will be perfectly just. We may be surrounded by evil, but we shall be judged by what we are ourselves. The task set before us is to develop ourselves in goodness, in harmony with the word of Christ, and by his help. "That which ye have already hold fast till I come."—Revelation 2: 25.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, October 7, 1907.

Editors Herald: From expressions which have reached me from many sources during the last five months, I am convinced that the few remarks I made, under a question of privilege, at the close of the last General Conference, have been misunderstood; and I ask permission to correct the wrong impression through the columns of the church organ.

It will be remembered by those present at the conference that during the discussion of a certain resolution, reference was made several times to a communication received and published by me in the two church papers some time before, under the title of an "Epistle to the Saints." Some of the comments were thought to be strongly adverse to said communication. Just before adjournment of conference, I, under a question of privilege, explained to the body the manner of my procedure in relation to it and its publication, and concluded by saying that if ever I should be again favored of God with anything similar, I would take care that the church would not be disturbed with it IN THE SAME WAY.

Failing either to catch or comprehend what I meant by the last four words, many persons construed my remarks to be a kind of recantation or retraction of my former epistle and the communication included in it, hence the expressions that have reached me from various persons and places since then. Let me here state that nothing could have been farther from my intention than that. Let all that is within me perish before I allow anything said by any person or persons, be they whomsoever they may be, to cause me to so abuse the loving-kindness of my heavenly Father! What I meant, and all I meant by my closing sentence was, that if God should ever again show such favor to me, I would adopt some other way of utilizing it than I had in the former case done. I certainly would never, unless directly commanded to do so, expose anything of the kind to uncalled for and vicious attack, if I could discern some way of avoiding it. It may be that such conditions may never again confront me. I prefer that they shall not. I certainly prefer that channels less obnoxious shall hereafter be chosen. As for me, it has always been the message and not the messenger—the stream and not the channel, that has demanded criticism. The legal rights of the man in "Moses' seat" of course, must be regarded and maintained; and these were never trespassed upon, either by act or intention or aspiration by the writer. He who would aspire thereto would be worse than a fool. But all the rights as revelator, or claims to divine communications for the benefit of the church, do not belong exclusively to the man who answers to "Moses" in said position, and, thank God our "Moses man" is sound and strong in that conviction, for we have often heard him quote with stirring emphasis the words employed by a former Moses who, when notified by alarmists that certain elders were prophesying in the camp, and when requested by no less a personage than Joshua to forbid them, replied becomingly: "Enviest thou for my sake? Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them."

Never in my thirty-one years of membership in the church—twenty of which have been spent in the office of apostle, has it ever been my lot to have such an experience as when receiving that communication. Never was I so completely humbled before God, nor faced with such an arraignment, nor, I may add, so timid lest the use I was directed to make of the communication would place my motives in a false light before the body; but in due time, after fortifying myself, as I thought, legally, I published it, and,—dear as life is to me—much as I value the confidence and support of my brethren, dear to me are the ties that bind me to the Saints everywhere, and precious as is the privilege of membership in the great body, and the right to represent it among men—all so inestimable in value; yet, I am willing to die, or to forego all of these and go out an outcast and alone, without a spiritual home in this world for the rest of my days should it ever become necessary, rather than recant or retract one word of that document or the claim made for it by me, or change the attitude I was led to assume and maintain regarding it. It would not require a moment to decide if a decision were necessary.

Let no man hereafter misunderstand me in this, whatever reports may reach the ear regarding my little speech on the closing day of conference. I never felt stronger in the assurance of the divinity of said communication than when making that speech, and should I ever move from the position then occupied by me, I should consider every subsequent prayer of my life an insult to God—deserving only of his indignation.

If it be a deception or a mistake, I am willing to answer to either or both claims before the bar of unerring judgment, and to make my defense from the church standards, both for its matter and the manner of its receipt and presentation to the body. Surely this will not be misunderstood.

With unabating zeal for the cause, and earnest prayer for Zion's speedy and complete redemption, I am,

Your colaborer,

JOSEPH LUFF.

Editors Herald: This finds me in a place and territory where the gospel has scarcely been preached. I am trying to do all I can to introduce it in the plainest way to those I come in contact with, and while it seems to be scorned at, I believe the Spirit bears witness of some good. I am handing the HERALD to some few that seem to be interested. If this letter reaches any of the elders that know me, or any others, you can get to this part by writing me at R. F. D. No. 1, Pensacola, Florida. I will meet you at any time at Pensacola, where you can visit my home and this territory, only an eight-mile drive. It has already come to my ears, "Why do not some of your smart men come through here?" They say they have been told there is a secret in this church, and we will not tell until they join it. I tell them it is a secret that will do them more good than any they ever knew before. I have put some of them to reading, but God has some that are better able to explain it in the purest light. Oh, may some one come this way! We are poor, but are ready to impart what we have to those that are spreading the gospel; also to those that are in greater need than we are. There are only two families living here that belong to the church. This leaves me in good spirits.

Editors Herald: First conference at Far West, held by the Reorganization on this historic ground, is a thing of the past. Saints of Far West District met in Sunday-school convention, September 20, at Far West Branch. On the 21st conference convened. Both were attended by the peaceful influence of God's Spirit; not a jar in all the sessions. Many faithful testimonies were borne at the social meeting in the afternoon. The branch is presided over by Bro. Samuel Simmons, a young man. Bright future for Far West, if Saints live right.

We are now holding forth in a school building, north of Kingston, Missouri. Good interest and fair audiences. Bro. W. Bootman is assisting in the meetings. We have found plenty of work to do; no cause to be idle.

MANCHESTER, England, September 14, 1907.

Editors Herald: We left Manchester by the Great Western Rail for Plymouth on August 10, reaching our destination, the home of Sr. Ridolls, about seven in the morning, August 11. Here we met our missionary brethren, William Newton and J. W. Rushton, the latter having traveled south from Leeds.

After breakfast we called upon the Saints in order to invite them to our Sabbath meetings. We first visited Sr. Cox, whose husband is in the navy, then Bro. Sweet, next Bro. and Sr. Mitchell, both of whom are advancing in years. The husband is nearly blind and the wife is crippled with rheumatism, yet they are both cheerful, and they will travel to meeting, even to outdoor service. Such is their love for the latter-day work. Lastly we visited Sr. Rembridge and family.

In the afternoon we visited the famous Plymouth Hoe, a fine promenade, the scene of Raleigh's famous game of bowls prior to the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588. To the left of the Hoe, and near the citadel, is a magnificent granite obelisk with representations in relief of four of the principal engagements of the South African campaign. This column was raised to the memory of the Devonshire men who fell in that campaign, and it was unveiled by Miss Buller, daughter of General Buller, the idol of Devonshire. He is a typical British soldier. Towards the right we saw Drake's statue. He was the most famous of Elizabethan sailors, being vice-admiral of the fleet that destroyed the Armada. He circumnavigated the globe and was knighted by Queen Elizabeth. In 1582 he was mayor of Plymouth. The Natural History and Botanical Societies of the town have laid out gardens on the Hoe, which give it a very picturesque appearance.

The town of Plymouth is situated on a land-locked bay, formed by the united estuaries of the Plym, Tavey, and Tamar, the entrances being protected by the great breakwater, a mile in length and costing one million five hundred thousand pounds sterling, which has converted the formerly exposed bay into an immense harbor. A dockyard, a large arsenal and victualing-yard, and considerable fortifications contribute to make this the second naval station in England. This port is also a coaling-station for ocean steamers. Mount Edgecumbe Hall stands on the western horn of the bay, opposite to Plymouth. Saltram Park, Yealmpton, and Oreston, with their ossiferous caves, and Modbury so interesting to the geologist, and Ivybridge are on the east.

On this fine afternoon, with a blue sky overhead, the view from the Hoe was one of great loveliness. Battleships, cruisers, and other vessels lay in the harbor below. A swimming gala was in progress, and thousands of spectators lined the natural amphitheater of rocks that skirts the bay and pier, in order to witness the races. After the various events had been gone through, we visited the old quay and returned to our home. Our evening meal was taken and letters written, after which we retired to rest.

On Sunday, the 11th of August, we held our morning service on the old quay. Elder W. Newton was in charge and the speaker was Elder J. W. Rushton, who gave a rousing address, which was listened to by a large and attentive crowd. The spot was but a few yards from the place where the Pilgrim Fathers embarked for the New Plymouth over the seas. The words "Mayflower, 1620," are cut in one of the blocks of the quay pavement. Oh! what memories cling to this spot, sacred to the struggle for "religious freedom"! The little meeting-house, where these pious people worshiped, is in a narrow street just close by. One hundred and two of these people sailed from this port in a ship of one hundred and sixty tons in the month of September, two hundred and eighty-seven years ago. They anchored in Cape Cod Bay on November 11, and landed on Plymouth Rock December 23.

'Tis passing strange to think that representatives of our church, the very center stake of which is in the heart of that nation whose forefathers left this quay, and were the very Pilgrim Fathers who were shepherded by the pious William Robinson of Serooby, Nottingham, in the reign of James the First, should be standing here in this old Devonshire town, near this historic spot, contending for "the faith once delivered to the Saints," nearly three centuries afterwards.

There were an Adventist elder, a town missionary, and the social democrats setting forth their several claims at various points of the quay. This was not possible when James the First was king. Verily the times have changed.

There is a little Sabbath-school here in Plymouth under the charge of our aged Sr. Ridolls. She sets a fine example to the younger and abler, but indifferent people. Oh! for a few men and women with backbone. We have too many religious jelly-fishes. God grant that his servants may yet find in Devon men as stalwart in accepting and defending the gospel as in making history and extending empire.

In the evening we held service in the Odd Fellows Hall, and we were an odd lot—twenty-three all told. Your correspondent presided, and the preacher was Elder Rushton. Services over, we adjourned to meet on one of the public thoroughfares. Here Elders George Anderson and Frank J. Hills, of the Utah church, were preaching. Elder William Newton had previously met these gentlemen, when differences were freely discussed. At the close of their address Elder Rushton stood forth. A large crowd quickly gathered, when a vigorous and masterly speech was delivered. The dividing line between the two bodies was clearly drawn. At the close applause, which was not sought, was freely given. Of this we make little account, but inwardly felt thankful to God for the position taken up by the Reorganization, as led by the Martyr's son, in standing upon the written word. These Utah ministers defended as best they could a bad cause. We are afraid that "The fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge." We sincerely hope that the day is not far distant when the children shall be permitted to see where the fathers deviated from the right path, and that in their hearts a desire to return may be found.

At a late hour we turned our steps homeward, sadly thinking of the awful responsibility resting upon Brigham Young, and of the sorrow and suffering resulting from the "damnable heresies" he advanced in the name of our departed Prophet. The position of Elders Anderson and Hills excited our pity. They were far from home; they believed they were right, and that we of the Reorganization were wrong. The written word they did not understand, for they read into it meanings never intended. Truly a veil is over their hearts as in the case of ancient Israel.

On Monday, August 12, we called at the home of Bro. Sweet, where we were invited to take refreshments with our host and his genial wife. We afterwards took car to Devonport, where we crossed the River Tamar, which separates the counties of Cornwall and Devon, by the steam ferry. This part of the river is known as the Hamoaze. On every hand were cruisers, scouts, torpedo-boats, submarines, and other craft. When we reached the Cornish side of the river, we visited the home of Bro. William Rogers, a retired naval man. We visited our elder brother's garden, which lies in the midst of a beautiful country. He told us that his neighbor's potatoes were diseased, while he had had a good crop. When asked how it was, he replied, "I just planted them and looked up, and when I went to gather them they were all right." He told us of one specimen he had grown which weighed one pound and fourteen ounces. After taking a further look around, we again crossed the river and returned home.

In the evening we held outdoor service on one of the busy Plymouth thoroughfares again. A number of the brethren and sisters were present, and a large crowd of interested listeners soon gathered. Elder William Newton was in charge. The first speaker was Bro. Armstrong of Manchester, who had a thirty or forty minutes' talk on Matthew 16:18. Bro. Rushton followed with a ringing speech which stirred the souls of both Saint and sinner to their depths. Those who were present will long remember what they heard. There was no answer; no question at the close; but a deep silence. All felt that great and everlasting truths had been spoken, with the fire of a great enthusiasm born of the Spirit. Men had been made to know themselves and God as they never had done before. O Lord, incline the hearts of thy people to keep thy law, so that thy work may prosper in their hands. Nothing, nothing can stay its progress save the transgressions of thy people. The soul of our brother missionary, Elder William Newton, the father of the work in this part of the country, was greatly cheered by the results of the evening service, and we were thankful. Elders Anderson and Hills had been present during the service.

Tuesday, August 13, we visited the Keyham dockyards, which, together with Devonport, cover many acres, and form the second naval port of the British Empire. Here and at Portsmouth those most recent powerful battleships of the Dreadnought type, with thirteen-inch guns, are to be built. Many thousands of men and youths are engaged in the workshops here and on the vessels which line the docks and river. Naval men are seen everywhere. The navy is Britain's first line of defense, and millions of pounds are spent in maintaining its strength and efficiency.

In the evening we were unable to again hold open-air service on account of the rain. On Wednesday we took tea with Bro. Sweet and wife, and in the evening we were again prevented from preaching by rain. On Thursday, August 15, we left Plymouth for Torquay on Tor Bay, one of the loveliest spots in picturesque Devon. This fashionable seaside resort is said to be one of the most beautiful places in the world. We spent a day in this earthly paradise.

The coast scenery for twenty miles in journeying there formed a panorama of surpassing loveliness. Beautiful wooded vales with gently rising hills, carpeted to the top with rich verdure, were seen on every hand; snug farmhouses, herds of fine cattle and sheep quietly grazing in the rich pastures, and sheaves of corn waiting for the wagoner. We took the electric car from Torquay to Babbicombe Downs. Here we saw a piece of coast scenery which, even now as we write, fills us with wonder and delight. "Earth hath not any sight to show more fair."

On our return we visited the old Torre Church where, on May 29, 1866, Bro. William Newton was married to one whose memory is even now very dear to him. We sat down in one of the pews of the sacred edifice. The church is a beautiful little building dating back several hundred years. As we rested, we felt to bow our heads reverently in the place which possesses memories dear and sacred to one of earth's pilgrims, who in the sunset of life visited the spot after many years of toil and service in distant lands. We passed out from the church and looked over "God's acre," where the forefathers of the hamlet sleep the sleep that knows no waking until the resurrection morn. How long shall we tarry? As the still evening came on with its gray twilight, we left Torquay for Exeter, a distance of about twenty-six miles. The railway skirted the lovely Devonshire coast for some distance, and we passed some beautiful watering places on our right, while on our left rose up the bleak Dartmoor table-land, on which, near Princetown, is a large convict prison. We reached Exeter after seven in the evening and were met at the station by Srs. Emily Wilson and Rice. We traveled by street-car to Heavitree, a suburb of Exeter, where, at the home of Bro. Henry Wilson we met for the evening meeting, which was addressed by Bro. Rushton in his characteristic way. We thoroughly enjoyed the service. It was just a large family gathering. Service over, we partook of the evening meal and retired to rest.

On Friday, August 16, we visited the old Guildhall and the famous Exeter cathedral. The former dates back to the fifteenth century, while the latter is a beautiful example of the decorated Gothic of the fourteenth century, though parts are really much older. The complex vaulting and fine window tracery of the interior are a striking feature. The city of Exeter was first a British hill fort, then a Roman station, and, after the English conquest, the seat of a bishopric and the capital of the West. It offered a stubborn resistance for eighteen days to the Norman conqueror, who built a castle here and imposed a tribute to hold the city in subjection. It has since been besieged five times—once in the reign of Stephen, twice in Tudor times, and twice during the civil wars. We next visited a public park. Here some of the finest elm-trees in the British Isles are found. In the evening we again held service. The writer was asked to preside, and the speaker was Elder Rushton, who discoursed from Galatians 3:26. Sr. Elizabeth Ireland was administered to and the babe of Sr. Susan Nicholls was blessed, receiving the name Constance Elsie. Our meeting was a typical Saints' gathering. The members of the congregation lingered for some time after service, and the final parting was a reluctant one. We now partook of supper with our aged Bro. and Sr. Wilson and family, from whom we experienced great kindness. The meal over, in company with Brn. Newton and Rushton, we made our way to the Exeter station, near which stands a fine equestrian statue of General Buller, whose home stands but a few miles from this spot.

Here we parted company with our dear brethren of the missionary force, with whom we had spent some very pleasant, instructive, and profitable days. We caught the night train from Plymouth for Manchester, a run of over three hundred miles. After sunrise our journey lay through rural England, passing orchards, hop-gardens, meadows, and corn-fields on every hand.

Since our return we have heard of large and interested crowds at the open-air services in Plymouth, and would earnestly pray that the Lord may send forth more laborers into his vineyard.

Our missionary to London and Southwestern England has a herculean task. Indeed London, with its six million inhabitants, would occupy a hundred missionaries. It contains more people than Switzerland, more Jews than Palestine, and more Catholics than Rome.

Your coworker in Christ,

COLFAX, Washington, September 5, 1907.

Editors Herald: I write to let you know that we have changed our location from High River to Colfax, Washington, and wish the HERALD to be sent us at this place. We are still in the conflict for truth, striving to maintain the truth of the everlasting gospel which has come forth in these latter days, which was to unfold and bring to light hidden things of darkness, and reveal to us the gospel in all its fullness and power, giving us the privilege to enjoy and be partakers of the same; and I know and can say by the Spirit of God that it will measure up to the standard of the primitive gospel that was preached by Paul and Peter, and Christ, our living head.

Now if any of the elders are living in Colfax or near here, we would be glad to hear from them through the HERALD, as we are starving here for gospel food, for this is both meat and drink for the soul. May God in his mercy hasten the day when all may come to the true light and knowledge of him.

From your sister in gospel bonds,
HANNAH E. LIGNER.

ARGYLE, Michigan.

Dear Saints: I feel it is a pleasure to write to let you know we are still in existence, and located here in Michigan. We have lately been organized into a branch, and God is blessing our weak efforts, healing the sick, etc., for which we thank him. We have a fine little Sunday-school. All are interested, and it makes us rejoice to see and hear the young answering questions so eagerly and earnestly. We ask the Saints to pray for us, that we may be always a united band of Saints, loving each other as God would have us to love each other. We are few in number, only five families, but we feel if we are faithful others will come into the fold. We expect to witness the baptism of two of the Saints' children soon.

We desire through the HERALD to let our friends in Brooklyn, New York, also Cleveland, Ohio, know that we are still in the faith, are well, and would enjoy seeing any of them in our little branch here engaging in the worship of God. Pray for us that we may endure to the end, and we pray for all God's children. In the gospel of Christ,

R. F. D. No. 1. JOHN AND SARAH BURGESS.

ARLINGTON, South Dakota, September 8, 1907.

Dear Herald: Husband and I were baptized nineteen years ago, and we are not sorry for the step we took, but sorry we have not been truer to the covenant we made with our heavenly Father. Dear Saints, let us examine ourselves and see if we are in the faith. If we want the Lord to bless us, we must live for the blessing. The Lord wants a humble people, and we must serve him in spirit and in truth, for God can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. Let us then try to live a better life day by day.

I think we are all anxious for the gathering of God's people to take place. So let us see to it that we do our part, not leaving out things that we should have done. Let us be pure in heart, for the pure in heart will build up Zion. How beautiful when all things are done in accordance with God's command. Let us draw nearer to God and he will draw near to us.

It is good to be a Saint in latter days, not in name only, but in deed. Let us have our lamps trimmed and burning, that we may be able to enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb, for that will be glorious. Then all our tears will be wiped away, and all our trials ended. With love for all of God's people, I remain,
Your sister,
SOPHIA STONE.

Wind Cave.

Wind Cave is about a dozen miles north of the town of Hot Springs, South Dakota. Without trying to describe the somewhat circuitous route, we rattle on, sometimes over bare rocks, sometimes over smooth roads, and again across patches of gravel, very coarse, almost constantly rising, till, when about ten miles out we reach the edge of Wind Cave Reservation, indicated by an iron post set in the ground and suitably inscribed as a landmark. Still a little further on we pass another similar post on which is inscribed, "Elevation above sea level 4,233 feet;" also a further inscription that serves to notify the public that a fine of two hundred and fifty dollars will be imposed for tampering with or defacing. A few miles further on we reach the outer precincts of the cave and learn that at one o'clock the guides will escort a party through the cave. And now, as we have to wait so long, I may as well occupy the time telling you that the cave is said to have been discovered in 1881 by a cowboy whose name I did not learn; however, in conversation with a Mr. Petty, of Hot Springs, he asserts that as early as 1878 or 1879 a man by the name of Wells found it. His attention was attracted by a strange sound, and following cautiously the direction of the sound, and thinking of the possibility of hostile Indians, he found an oval shaped hole in the rock, out of which the air was rushing with tremendous force. Sometimes, however, the air passes into the cave with equal force. These peculiar characteristics, we are told, were the result of differing conditions of the atmosphere. Mr. Petty went on to say that in 1881 a Mr. Bingham blasted a large spring in the rocks; but in 1883 Mr. Petty and his companions were the first to enter the cave. They lowered one of their number with a rope to a point where he could make a light, then the others followed, penetrating the cave only a few hundred feet. The original hole still remains. The one made by Mr. Bingham has been plugged up and a new one made and a house built over it. The guides say that one hundred miles have been explored and three thousand rooms, but the end has not been found.

Now the hour has arrived and we go in and register our names, pay the guide fee, fifty cents each, hang up our hats and put on a white cotton skull cap, and are ready for the descent. A log building over the entrance secures it from meddlers, and to each of the tourists is given a candle. The guide counts fourteen of us, opens the trap door, and a deep, dark hole, dimly lighted by a few candles placed in sheltered positions, appears. He gives a few words of instruction and assurance and leads the way down an artificial stairway. We cautiously follow, and another guide brings up the rear. A strong current of air meets us until we get down about twenty-five feet to where the opening enlarges,

Here we light our candles and continue to follow the guide, constantly descending, sometimes by a gradual descent, sometimes by a steep artificial stairway. At one hundred and fifty-five feet below the entrance we reach an apartment called Bride's Chamber, to which place we were told a girl came to marry her lover, after promising her mother never to marry a man on earth. I do not vouch for the truthfulness of the story. The cave is marked by low and narrow passages, and large rooms with lofty ceilings, always rough and irregular in shape. Some of the rooms have been given particular names, also strange formations in the rock are given names according to the objects supposed to be represented by the formation. Thus we have Lincoln's Fireplace, Prairie Dog and Mound. This latter does look a good deal like the real.

Next our attention is directed to what the guide calls petrified clouds. And touching a match to a ribbon of magnesium, a bright light is reflected on the rocks, and the name petrified clouds seems not misplaced; and looking overhead we see adhering to the rocks, formations of carbonate of lime that resemble snowballs, as if thrown and crushed on the ceiling. We soon reach another chamber called the post-office, nature having made the boxes. These boxes are of various sizes and shapes, the corners usually being sharp angles, right, acute, or obtuse as the cracks in the rocks happened to be. I quote from Mr. Horn's book "Mazes and Marvels of Wind Cave." "The boxwork formation is an unsolved, but probably not an unsolvable problem. Various reasons may be advanced in accounting for it. If limestone had been cracked in every conceivable geometrical figure and afterwards the cracks filled with calcite, it is not impossible that hot water might have been forced in by geyser action to disintegrate the rock, clay, etc., leaving the boxwork foundation. Later the decorations might have been added by water overcharged with calcite."

Next we pass Roe's Misery, Red Hall, Liberty Bell, Wash Boiler, etc., etc. Passing the Opera House and World's Fair Administration buildings, where is pointed out a petrified alligator, though in fact it is simply a formation somewhat resembling one in form, we next come to Devil's Lookout, and the ceiling is raised in the highest place to sixty-five feet. Passing from this chamber, the guide strikes his hand against a rock which gives out a low sound, and each of the tourists in passing follows his example and hears the same tone from Sounding Rock. The interesting feature of the cave is the delicate formations on walls and ceilings called boxwork, frostwork, popcorn, etc. These formations are more or less in evidence in nearly all the chambers passed. The route taken by our party is called Pearly Gates route, and has many interesting features not found in this writing. Pearly Gates is a name given to an arched opening somewhat elevated from the floor of the chamber from which it leads, and when lighted up by the magnesium light, the delicate white frostwork all about the opening beautifully suggests the name given to it.

Having passed the Pearly Gates we enter Saints' Rest, and we all feel like resting before commencing the return trip. While we rest, the guide points out a spike driven into a rock, which he assures us is just one and one fourth miles from the entrance. We commence our return by a circuitous route, and are shown a beautiful grotto on account of the fine display of frostwork. It is so small that our party was divided, only part going in at a time to see this, one of nature's most beautiful formations. If you can think how some winter morning the trees are covered with frost which sparkles like diamonds in the sunlight, you will have some idea of this grotto. When lighted by the magnesium, I feared the heat would dissolve it, it so much resembled real frost.

Some of these spars were as much as two inches long, and so delicate that they looked as though they would crumble at a touch. We soon reach the path by which we came and are on our return. I should mention the fact that our guide assured us that the lowest level reached by us was four hundred and fifty feet below the entrance, and one thousand feet below the hilltop which stood over it. The largest chamber of the Pearly Gates route is something over four hundred feet long. The temperature of the cave, after reaching a certain distance from the entrance, does not vary, but always stands at forty-six degrees above zero. We were glad to again reach the entrance and daylight, and felt deeply impressed with the might of the forces that have wrought such wonders in the earth.

LEVI GAMET.

Northern California Reunion.

The reunion held at Irvington, California, in 1906, authorized the erection of a house suitable for an eating-house, and a place for storage of tents, etc., also such as could be used for a meeting place for the small branch residing at Irvington, presided over by Elder J. A. Saxe. The day after the reunion lumber was on the ground for the erection of one part of this house, which could be used for storage, and at reunion times as a cook-room. This was done at once. Just prior to the reunion of this year the committee concluded to build the other part, which was completed the day of convening of the reunion. It is but just that a report be made by the committee of the cost of same, which could not be done during the reunion. The figures are approximately correct: For lumber, $239.75; hardware, $8.40; plumbing, pipe, etc., $18.09; carpentering, $90.00; other labor, $15.00; making a total of $371.24.

Toward this expense, Sr. Stivers, a resident Saint, who, with her husband, has in years past given a home to the chief men of the church and others, donated one hundred dollars. There were three collections taken during the reunion, in which $225.17 were realized. There were donations aside from this of $33.50. The eating-house gave the reunion a margin over its expense, and from other sources, too numerous to mention, the building was all paid for and other expenses met, leaving the reunion free from debt, with a fund in the treasury of about sixty-five dollars.

The reunion just past was largely attended and greatly enjoyed by the Saints. Irvington was made the permanent place for the reunion. The same committee was continued, consisting of J. M. Terry, chairman; D. Joyce, treasurer; E. S. Chase, secretary; J. B. Carmichael, J. M. Cockerton, T. Cook, J. H. Driver, Doctor W. P. Bush. The time of next reunion left with the committee.

J. M. TERRY, for Committee.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana Reunion.

Reunion convened at Knox, Starke County, Indiana, September 7 to 16. The delay of tents along the Michigan Central Railroad, from Detroit, caused the opening session to occur Saturday evening, when Elder J. Arthur Davis delivered a splendid introductory. Sunday morning dawned a little unpleasant, but the tabernacle tent resounded with prayer and praise from nine o'clock to half past ten. At a quarter of eleven Elder J. W. Wight was the speaker, and the effort, to a nice sized audience, was inspirational. At half past two the audience was larger; Elder S. W. L. Scott was the speaker. At half past seven the attendance was still larger, and Elder Charles H. Burr of Plano, Illinois, gave a clear-cut sermon on the Book of Mormon. Monday morning prayer and social service. At eleven business session, when the following organization was effected.

J. W. Wight, S. W. L. Scott, and Charles H. Burr were chosen to preside; Sr. Irma Pierson, secretary; J. B. Prettyman, treasurer; S. W. L. Scott, chorister; Irma Pierson and Bertha Lohse, organists. Charles H. Burr, light janitor; J. Arthur Davis, usher, with W. B. Pierson, police, completed the organization, and the reunion swung into line. The order of the services was as follows: Nine o'clock in the morning, prayer and social service. At half past ten in the morning, half past two and half past seven in the evening, preaching-services. This order was broken into once, when the half past two session gave place to the funeral-services of little Bennada, the eight-year-old daughter of Bro. and Sr. Charles Prettyman. The weather was inclement until Wednesday, when the clouds rolled away, and ideal September dawned on the camp,—oh, so beautiful! There were Saints in attendance from Grand Rapids, New Troy, Galien, Coldwater, Clear Lake, and Hibbard; but these did not represent the district. The ministry in attendance were as follows: J. W. Wight, Charles H. Burr, J. Arthur Davis, S. W. L. Scott, W. A. McDowell, (the latter was called into Wisconsin to officiate at a funeral,) E. A. Blakeslee, Starr Corless, Samuel Stroh, Otto H. Story, Charles Green, J. B. Prettyman, and D. B. Teeters. Each person contributed his share of support to the good cause.

From the standpoint of missionary effort and effect, the reunion was an overwhelming success, as the attendance was large, especially of evenings, and the seed was sown with freedom, and a liberal hand. The only discouraging features, were: The poor backing given by the district, and the sickness and death of little Bennada Prettyman, which prevented the family attending until the closing days.

The interest in the services was fine. Some of the Disciples present were asked, "What do you think of these people?" They answered, "Oh, they are ahead of anything else, if they would only leave Joseph Smith out." There is the rub. Why blame Joseph Smith for indorsing a genuine note? We all place our names by the side of his name, as co-indorsers of the same genuine note issued by the divine government. Men are held reprehensible for withholding their indorsements of that which is genuine, as well as for attaching their signatures to that which they confess is not genuine.

Well, we all enjoyed the services,—both "the sunshine and the rain." Mrs. Hudson catered to the appetite at twenty cents per meal, and it was the universal wonder how she could set before her guests such elegant repasts for the cost. But she did it. Of course she did not realize any great sum. She said to me on the last evening, "Bro. Scott, I did not come out quite even, but I believe the sacrifice is on the side of truth." Noble conclusion. She is a Disciple lady.

Bro. Wight left us Thursday morning for the Moorhead (Iowa) reunion. This placed the burden of the work on Elders Davis, Burr, and Scott; but the local brethren came to the rescue valiantly. The effort at Knox placed the latter-day work more prominently before the people, and brought it into respect with a class which probably never would have heard it in this life.

The Knox Branch is entitled to commendation for the share of success and sunshine which they contributed. May their hearts be cheered.

The Lord has said, HERALD No. 37, vol. 54, "You remember that I told you a year ago, that it was pleasing unto me that my people meet together from year to year. But all have not been sufficiently faithful."

He advises them "to prepare for the next reunion," with the promise of "blessing," and the "sacrifice required of my people to thus attend, will be nothing." Saints, why not get educated to the responsibility? Do we wish to please God? Do we believe him? 'Tis privilege, opportunity, duty. The opportunity is one where you may do good to the greatest number. Why not, then, do as the Lord says, "begin to prepare for the next reunion." The child of God must "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of the truth." Time is winging us on to old age. We must keep pace with the grand march of the latter-day evangel. The secret counsels of the heart, it will one day manifest before the world. The ebb and flow of the great systems of life in one age, stand confessed before its successor. What was true is confirmed and applauded; what was evil is stripped of its flimsy veil of pretense and excuses, and is exposed in its horrid deformity. The tide rolls on, and we are the factors for the present and future. May we all help our heavenly Father, as "colaborers," to bring the "lost sheep" into the fold, and establish truth and righteousness.

Hopefully yours,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

Reunion Notes.

The reunion and district conference held at Blue Rapids, Kansas, September 19 to 30, inclusive, is now a matter of history, and the remembrance of it, we trust, will long be cherished as a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. An organization was effected, consisting of Warren E. Peak and Samuel Twombly in charge; Ammon White and Sr. Mary Smith, choristers; Sr. Julia Smith, and Sr. Kidd, organists; the writer, secretary; ushers were duly selected, and a committee of three authorized to solicit means towards defraying reunion and conference expenses. The speakers were in fine trim throughout, enjoying grand liberty and power. The services were held at the pleasant and commodious Saints' church, and which speaks well of the zeal, push, and faithfulness of the struggling Saints in that ancient place, for many years the home of Father and Sr. Landers, now deceased. The seating capacity at times being severely taxed, many eager listeners were wont to content themselves with standing on the outside.

Elder Mahlon Smith, who is president of the branch, has a corps of noble young men at his disposal to shoulder the work and carry it on to victory. Three new recruits entered the portals of the church conference Sunday, together with two sisters the following day. If faithfulness and purity of life shall be the girdle of their loins, the intimation of the Spirit to them was that they should be useful in the hands of God in doing much good in the building up of the kingdom of Christ.

Patriarch Ammon White was heard from repeatedly, giving timely warning and admonition under the constraint of the Spirit of God. One good feature of the reunion was the daily course of normal lessons conducted by Bro. White, which was appreciated by all. Saints were in attendance from the following counties: Doniphan, Atchison, Nemaha, Riley, Clay, Washington, and Marshall. And the Blue Rapids Saints are to be commended for their kindness in entertaining the visitors. The day prior to the convening of conference the Sunday-school and Religio societies transacted their regular routine business, and were presided over as usual by district officers, Frank G. Hedrick and Sr. Flo McNichols, respectively. One evening was given to an educational entertainment, and the reading of the district journal, edited by Mrs. McNichols, was a rare treat, and bids fair to be continued at the next convention. Please bear this well in mind, ye dilatory members.

On Saturday, at four o'clock, the Saints were treated to a free ride on a motor-boat, up the Big Blue, under the soft-ing rays of a September sun. The writer could not but look at it in the light of a miniature ocean-ride; when all is fair and all is calm, and with the exception that he did not have to cry out E-u-r-o-p-e, E-u-r-o-p-e, as upon former occasions. The time went pleasantly along in chatting and singing; and, when we returned, three hearty cheers were given "the boys" for their thoughtfulness and kindness.

In conclusion, we feel safe in stating that good was done, and that the Lord favored the reunion with the smiles of his blessings. And now let each member carry with him new vigor, zeal, and determination in the prosecution of the Lord's work, that his choice blessings may abide, and his glorious name be given the praise, honor, and glory, now and evermore.

News From Branches

DES MOINES, IOWA.

The College Day collection here was: Sunday-school, $5.03; and the branch, $7.26. Nearly every one contributed something, and it seemed to be with a cheerful heart.

The Religio gave a sociable on Friday evening, October 11. It was what we call a sociable social, there being no charges for the refreshments and no collection.

Plymouth Congregational Church, one of the strongest religious organizations in the city, will, before the year closes, celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the church in this city. Next year we will celebrate the forty-fourth anniversary of the organization of a branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in this city, and on July 10, 1914, we will be entitled to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary. If the church here continues to make as much progress during the next seven years as it has the past seven, we will be able to celebrate the anniversary in a way and manner that will certainly attract attention in the city, in the State, and we believe throughout the church.

The lessons in the new Religio Quarterly are taken up with fair prospects of being the most interesting and profitable of any of the lessons yet prepared. And is there one Latter Day Saint who will not be interested in the course of lessons which the Religio society is now presenting? The doctrinal course taken up in the first issue of the Quarterly designs to take up all that is essential to salvation and the establishment of Zion on earth. And in this course the temporal law, tithing, consecration, equality, will be taken up in their proper time.

General Booth, the founder of the Salvation Army, will appear in this city on October 15. His coming is an extraordinary event to the local Army here.

Elders Christy and Sheldon have been at Sandyville recently, and have baptized several there. A. A. REAMS.

BUFFALO, NEW YORK.

Your readers will no doubt be pleased to learn that there is now a branch of the church at Buffalo, New York. It was organized last Thursday evening by Elder U. W. Greene, with twenty-three members. The writer was chosen president; Fred Harper, priest; William Brothers, teacher; Noble Wilkenson, deacon; Sr. Isabel McLain, secretary. Our place of meeting is at 356 Grant Street. Grant Street cars pass the door. Saints and elders, especially elders, passing through the city please remember our address and give us a call.

The resident Saints made a request for an elder to be sent to assist them. In response to this call, I was sent. I arrived last January. A Sunday-school and Religio had already been organized, and we soon had regular meetings started at the little hall where we still continue to meet. We found an earnest band of workers here, anxious to do their part to build up the work in their midst. A branch organization is now the result.

We are not able to boast of any great work, such as converting the city or attracting great crowds. The fact is we have only baptized two; and if we have thirty-five present we think we have a good audience.

But even that does not compare unfavorably with larger branches. Those branches numbering over a hundred, generally consider themselves fortunate if they have that many in attendance at their regular meetings.

The condition of our finances, too, I think, will compare favorably with our most prosperous branches. These twenty-three members, some of them children, all working people, none rich, have succeeded in neatly furnishing a hall, and meet a monthly expense of some thirty dollars, besides retaining a good sum in the treasury for emergencies. Just stop and think what this would mean if our large branches did as well. Our average is something over fifteen dollars and fifty cents per member per year, which would mean one thousand five hundred and fifty dollars for a branch of one hundred members, or seven thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars for a branch of five hundred members; or twenty-three thousand two hundred and fifty dollars for a branch of fifteen hundred members. And all this, mark you, without any begging; but by each member giving a small amount every week. In other words, each member doing his duty.

It seems to me that every branch should have a proper system of finance, and each member be expected to do his part. Then we would soon be out of debt, with a sanitarium, children's home, and college all in good running order. Is not this worth our consideration? F. G. PITT.

LONDON, ONTARIO.

The annual rally day of our Sunday-school was held on September 29. The attendance at all services was large. Special music, speeches, and papers by prominent Sunday-school workers composed the program. The church was beautifully decorated with bunting, pictures, and flowers. The rally was a decided success and showed great interest by the Sunday-school workers.

Elder R. C. Evans and Sr. Lizzie arrived home from their trip on the 4th. A reception was given them by the branch, and the church was beautifully decorated for the occasion. R. C. gave quite an interesting account of their visit to the Northwest, British Columbia, and California, after which refreshments were served. Sr. Lizzie was pleased to get home, and in a few words thanked the Saints for the effort made on their behalf.

Last Wednesday night Mrs. Ethel Gray was baptized in the church font by Elder T. R. Seaton and confirmed by Elder Shields.

Elder Fligg, our branch president, attended the dedication of the new church at Stratford on the 6th.

W. A. HARDEY.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Sunday at Lamoni was a beautiful day, and the services were all well attended. W. H. Kelley occupied the stand at the chapel in the morning; Elbert A. Smith in the evening. John Spaulding spoke at the Saints' Home, C. J. Spurlock at Liberty Home. The sacramental service, which was postponed one week on account of the funeral of Sr. Church, familiarly known as Grandma Church, was held at half past two. The good Spirit of the Master was present to the edifying of the Saints. The attendance at Sunday-school was four hundred and twenty-five.

So far as reported the local ministry labored as follows: Moroni Traxler and E. E. Long at Downey morning and afternoon, and at Andover in the evening; H. A. Stebbins at Jack Wood's in the morning, and at Greenville in the afternoon; Nephi Lovell at New Buda morning and evening; R. M. Elvin at Terre Haute in the evening; J. F. Garver at Wion in the evening.

A series of meetings are being held at Davis City, in charge of Wardell Christy, of the Des Moines District. A goodly number of Lamoni young people were there on Sunday to help in the song-service and to start the effort. The preaching on Sunday was by J. F. Garver at eleven, S. M. Reiste at half-past two, and Wardell Christy at half-past seven.

The Lamoni Sunday-school at a special business-meeting on Tuesday evening of last week voted to contribute ten dollars toward the Graceland College fund. We are informed by the secretary of the Board of Trustees that the contribution of the Lamoni Saints to this fund will aggregate about four hundred dollars when all is in.

J. F. GARVER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Last Sunday was a record-making day in many ways. Attendance at Sunday-school was seven hundred and seventy-five, with a collection of sixteen dollars. Bro. Fred M. Smith occupied the morning hour, talking in behalf of the college, and brought the college question to the minds of a good many in a way that they had not thought of it before. The collections for the college, at the close of the sermon, amounted to one hundred and eighty-nine dollars.

Last Wednesday night, by common consent, a union meeting was had, and we had the pleasure of listening to a sermon from Heman C. Smith. At the close of the meeting two ordinations were attended to: Bro. R. J. Parker to the office of high priest, J. A. Gardner to the office of elder, Brn. H. C. Smith, J. R. Lambert, and George E. Harrington officiating.

On Tuesday night a meeting of Independence citizens was held at the courthouse in the interest of local option, which was attended by several of our people, as may be noted elsewhere in this issue.

Bro. Buschland, from Canada, is here, intending to remain, and, like many others, has started in to help.

I have been too badly afflicted to travel since August 22. Bro. Birch Whiting, the Bishop's agent, will be there with his receipt book, so you need not be afraid to bring your tithing with you. Died.

HUTCHINSON.—Bro. Edward Wadington Hutchinson was born in Yorkshire, England, July 30, 1830. He was married October 23, 1857, to Miss Elizabeth Storer, and of this union were born nine children. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church in 1866, at Newton, Iowa. He died at Brooklyn, Iowa, September 25, 1907. The remains were taken to Kellogg for burial. He leaves a wife, two sons, and ten grandchildren to mourn. He tried to live a straight-forward Christian life, never complaining of his burden, or suffering. He and his faithful companion walked along life's journey for nearly a half century.

KUYKENDALL.—Sr. Ella A. Kuykendall was born April 3, 1860, near Tabor, Iowa. She united with the Latter Day Saints in early childhood, and continued a faithful member until death. On October 3, 1880, she was united in marriage to A. R. Kuykendall. Of this union one child was born, Lillie Fern, who preceded her mother to the haven of rest, January 20, 1904. Sr. Ella was taken sick some time in July, and continued to grow worse until she was compelled to take her bed. All was done that loving hearts and willing hands could do for her comfort, but on the 30th of September, at 12.45, fell asleep in Christ. She died firm in the faith. She leaves a loving husband, an aged mother, three brothers, and two sisters. She lived 47 years, 5 months, and 27 days. Sermon by Joshua Carlile.

GOLLOP.—Agnes M. S. Gollop, born February 3, 1819, at Dumfirlin, Fifeshire, Scotland. She was one of those who for the gospel's sake endured the sufferings of a hand-cart journey from Iowa City to Salt Lake in 1854. Was baptized at Scipio, Utah, March 7, 1884. August 1, 1890, her husband died, and her departure from turmoil and life occurred at the Saints' Home, September 12, 1907. She was one of the first three to enter the Home, from where the funeral-service occurred the 13th, in charge of John Smith; sermon by Robert M. Elvin. Interment in Rose Hill.

BURKHART.—At Sacramento, California, September 21, 1907, Sr. Clara Burkhart. She was born June 29, 1885, in Santa Barbara County, California; lived twenty years in Sacramento; baptized Thanksgiving Day, 1906, by C. A. Parkin; interment in city cemetery, at 4 p. m., September 21. The services were conducted by C. E. Crumley and T. J. Lawn. As diphtheria was the cause of death, the interment had to be soon after death and services could be held only in the cemetery. The branch was well represented. Our sister was a consistent Saint and a worker. She will be greatly missed.

PRICE.—Edward, only son of Howell and Jane Price, was killed by a train at Farson, Iowa, September 14, 1907; was born at Bevier, Missouri, March 3, 1881; was blessed when a child, but put off too late accepting baptism, and was suddenly cut off from that opportunity at the age of 26 years, 6 months, and 11 days. Funeral-service at the home in Ottumwa, Iowa, the 17th. There were present and left to mourn, father, mother, and six sisters, as also many other relatives. Service in charge, and sermon by Robert M. Elvin. Interment in Ottumwa City cemetery.

DAVIS.—Charles Davis was born in England, May 14, 1819. Baptized December 25, 1840. Left Liverpool for America, October 29, 1842. Married to Miss Ann Scott, October 14, 1845. At Nauvoo, Illinois, he passed through some of the trials that came upon the church about that time. He and wife came to Wisconsin, June 12, 1846. Sr. Davis passed away May 24, 1891. Bro. Davis lived a good, honest, upright life; used his means to comfort others. Died at his home in Lyons, Wisconsin, September 20, 1907. Funeral sermon by W. A. McDowell, assisted by C. H. Burr.

We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity, governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood, shorn of all political ambition, with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation, and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. I point with considerable just pride (I assume) to our Board of Directors as named below. Feel at liberty to write us on matters that concern you in Jackson County, Missouri.

OFFICERS: Ellis Short, President; M. H. Bond, Second Vice-president; William Crick, First Vice-president; J. D. Briggs, Cashier.

DIRECTORS: Ellis Short, William Crick, M. H. Bond, J. D. Briggs, G. H. Hilliard, Doctor Joseph Mather, Doctor O. H. Riggs, Horace Sheley, A. L. Yingling.

Very truly yours,
J. D. BRIGGS, Cashier.

THE BOOK OF MORMON IN LITERATURE.

(From an address by the Associate Editor at Nauvoo, Illinois, reported by Sr. Annie E. Allen.)

STYLE, CHARACTERIZATION, FORCE, OBJECT, TRUTH.

The Book of Mormon has been criticised by a great many people, ranging from those who have not what some would call ordinary "horse sense," to those who would be considered equal to the task of criticising almost anything, like Rudyard Kipling, who spent a day or two in Salt Lake City and read one or two pages from the Book of Mormon and then criticised it. He said that its style was discursive, diffusive, and a few other things. We will comfort ourselves with the thought that it is not so bad as some of the things that Kipling has written; if it were we had better take it up with a pair of tongs and drop it into some garbage barrel.

Each book has certain characteristics which determine its place in literature; among them may be named, style, characterization, force, object, and truth. I have noted these characteristics on the board. As we proceed through the list of these characteristics they grow stronger; and the book is stronger on the more important counts.

In the first place, we take up the style of the book. We will admit on the start that its style might be considered bad by one who has a sensitive literary taste. But the style of a book like this is not so important as it is in the case of a work of fiction. In fact, style is all there is to some modern books of fiction. In them great importance is attached to the manner of saying a thing and none to the thing that is said; in the Book of Mormon the method is at least partially reversed. Some of our books of fiction remind me of the story of Gordon E. Deuell, who refused to cast the devil out of a certain sign-seeker on the ground that there would be nothing but the man's clothing left; cast the style out of them and all you have left is the paper and the covers, and they are of a cheap grade.

The Book of Mormon has been objected to, and the charge has been made that from beginning to end it has just one style; and hence was written by one individual, that individual being Joseph Smith.

There are reasons why greater variety of style is not in evidence in the Book of Mormon. First, it was nearly all abridged by one individual, and his characteristics necessarily appear all the way through and tend to obscure the individuality of the original writers. Second, it was all translated by one individual, which further tended to make it more composite than the Bible, which never was abridged by one man and was translated by many.

But I think that if we examine the book we will find varieties of style preserved; at least enough to clearly indicate different writers. I wish to read two or three short extracts to show the difference in style. I will read from the letter written by Moroni to Pahoran. (See Book of Alma, 27.) Moroni was a soldier, and Pahoran the governor. By force of circumstances, for which Pahoran was not to blame, he had been compelled to neglect the soldiers in the field. Moroni did not know the reasons, and he was angry because of the neglect. He sat down and wrote a letter from which we read:

And now behold, I say unto you, that myself, and also my men, and also Helaman and his men, have suffered exceeding great sufferings; yea, even hunger, thirst, and fatigue, and all manner of afflictions of every kind. But behold, were this all we had suffered, we would not murmur nor complain; but behold, great has been the slaughter among our people: yea, thousands have fallen by the sword, while it might have otherwise been, if ye had rendered unto our armies sufficient strength and succor for them. Yea, great has been your neglect toward us. And now behold, we desire to know the cause of this exceeding great neglect; yea, we desire to know the cause of your thoughtless state. Can you think to sit upon your thrones, in a state of thoughtless stupor, while your enemies are spreading the work of death around you? . . . I would that ye should adhere to the word of God, and send speedily unto me of your provisions and of your men, and also to Helaman. And behold if ye will not do this, I come unto you speedily; for behold, God will not suffer that we should perish with hunger; therefore he will give unto us of your food, even if it must be by the sword.

You see the character of this individual; he was a soldier, ready to make his demand known and then to draw the sword and enforce it. His method of address shows the style of the warrior.

Next we turn to the writings of Jacob (see Jacob 5), and I wish to contrast the two. Here is his lament as he closes his record:

And it came to pass that I, Jacob, began to be old; and the record of this people being kept on the other plates of Nephi, wherefore, I conclude this record, declaring that I have written according to the best of my knowledge, by saying, That the time passed away with us, and also our lives passed away, like as it were unto us a dream, we being a lonesome and a solemn people, wanderers, cast out from Jerusalem; born in tribulation, in a wilderness, and hated of our brethren, which caused wars and contentions; wherefore, we did mourn out our days.

This is not the language of a warrior; it is that of a man who was born while his mother was an outcast, wandering in the wilderness, and who is now a melancholy old man.

Next we read the language of Nephi. (See 2 Nephi 15.) It is also his parting message:

I glory in plainness; I glory in truth; I glory in my Jesus, for he hath redeemed my soul from hell. I have charity for my people, and great faith in Christ, that I shall meet many souls spotless at his judgment seat. I have charity for the Jew: I say Jew, because I mean them from whence I came: I also have charity for the Gentiles. But behold, for none of these can I hope, except that they shall be reconciled unto Christ, and enter into the narrow gate, and walk in the straight path, which leads to life, and continue in the path until the end of the day of probation. And now, my beloved brethren, and also Jew, and all ye ends of the earth, hearken unto these words, and believe in Christ; and if ye believe not in these words, believe in Christ. And if ye shall believe in Christ, ye will believe in these words; for they are the words of Christ, and he hath given them unto me; and they teach all men they should do good. And if they are not the words of Christ, Judge ye: for Christ will show unto you, with power and great glory, that they are his words, at the last day; and you and I shall stand face to face before his bar.

This is the language of the preacher and the prophet. You note the styles of these various individuals. These extracts sufficiently disprove the charge that the book has but one style.

Next we take up characterization—the power of the writer to delineate and portray character. The characterization of the Book of Mormon is not so strong as that of the Bible, though it is strong. We take up the Bible and we read of men who lived in olden times, and their individual characters stand out very plainly. There was impulsive Peter—affectionate, kind, fighting for his Master, yet tempted and overcome of evil. How sharply delineated is the character of Judas, or Moses, or Pilate!

We turn to the Book of Mormon and read of Lehi, Laman, Lemuel, the brother of Jared—each stands out plainly, as an individual, with his own peculiar traits.

The next thing is force. When the Book of Mormon was published it was thought that it had no special force or power and that it would soon die. But it has proved its vitality. It is still living and is constantly increasing in circulation despite the desperate attacks which have constantly been made upon it. Few other books have outlived such persistent and malignant attempts upon their lives.

The truth contained in this book has laid hold upon the souls of men with such force that because of their belief they have gone from this very city to their death. Scarcely would men die for a bad book, though peradventure they might even die for a good book. No weak book ever claimed such sacrifices as have been made for this one.

Now we observe the object of the Book of Mormon; and that is very important, whether with books or with men. We read in the beginning of this book that its object is to convince both Jew and Gentile that "Jesus is the Christ, the eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations."

Can you imagine a higher or better object or one that would entitle the book to a greater place in literature? Notice one way in which the book is accomplishing its object: Prior to the days of Columbus this whole world was divided into two worlds, the "Old World" and the "New World," as they are called. These were separated from each other as completely as though some mighty hand had cleft them asunder.

Ingersoll at one time said something like this, "Your God was ignorant of the fact that there was another continent until Columbus told him so."

It is a fact that you may search the Bible through, and you may search the libraries of the world through, and you will find no clear, positive statement that God ever knew anything about the New World until Columbus told him of it. The Book of Mormon comes forward to tell us that God was not ignorant, and further, that he was not content alone to send sunshine and rain impartially upon two worlds, but that he sent them both spiritual blessing as well, and above all that both had the revelation of the Lord as the Son of God, "manifesting himself to all nations."

The next thing that we notice is truth. In a book which professes to teach men, this is most important of all. In this regard the Book of Mormon stands side by side with the Bible. The truth of both is proved by evidences both internal and external.

Back of the Book of Mormon stand three witnesses, Archæology, Prophecy, and living human beings through whom the Spirit speaks.

The book vindicates its own right to a place in literature. I believe that in the Christian world it will be admitted that any book is entitled to respect and belief that teaches faith in God and the virtue of womanhood and integrity of manhood. When we turn to the sixteenth chapter of Alma we find one of the noblest exhortations to faith that is found anywhere. Alma exhorts his hearers to have faith, which he likens to a seed. He tells them if they have no faith to at least desire to have it. That reminds me of a statement made by James Whitcomb Riley, that if an individual would desire to have faith, and would declare, "I will believe," each year would find it easier for him to believe, until his faith would be established.

The second chapter of the Book of Jacob teaches purity of life, both of men and women, and the sanctity of the home. Polygamy is condemned more plainly than it is in any other known book of antiquity, the Bible not excepted.

The Book of Mormon is superior to most other ancient books in that it contains no paragraph which may not with propriety be read before a mixed audience or in the presence of children.

We wonder sometimes why societies, denominations, leagues, and individuals pass by the presses that are turning out an enormous yearly grist of obscenity, and attack this book, that teaches faith, integrity, and virtue. Why do not they shut down those other presses, regenerate them, and set them to printing Books of Mormon?

I believe that this book is worthy to take its place in literature along with the best books of all time. May we heed its teachings.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

The Pacific Commercial Advertiser, Honolulu, October 2, contains a notice of President Smith's approaching visit to Honolulu. A very fine likeness of President Smith accompanies the notice; also a brief and accurate write-up of his position and work.

If all goes well, ere this reaches the public, the editorial staff will be installed in their quarters in the new HERALD Office. Other departments of the office force will move in ere long. Machinery is being installed in the bindery and in other rooms.

The College Trustees have purchased a forty-acre farm, joining the college grounds on the east. The purchasing price is four thousand dollars. The purchase includes a good barn and house, the latter twenty-four by fifty-six feet in size. The house will be converted into a dormitory for boys. The barn and land will be used in developing the industrial idea at Graceland.

The complement of help in the Bishop's Office at the present time consists of Brn. D. J. Krahl, E. L. Kelley, Jun., and J. P. Buschlen of Toronto, Canada, bookkeepers, and Sr. Grace Kelley, stenographer. Every effort is being made to have the business of this office up on time, the determination being to have no lagging accounts by the first of the new year.

The offerings upon Graceland College Day are being sent in more promptly than at any time hitherto. This is a full indication of the progress of the Saints in their work. If the present average keeps up, soon the Bishop will have heard from every part of the country, and while the donations may not be as large as could be wished, yet the work that has been done has been done promptly. God will bless such workers as these. It is certainly distasteful to our heavenly Father to have his children promise, and neglect to perform or defer performance of his work. The idler, the laggard, the indifferent, are never approved; and the fact that the Saints have arrived at the position that what they find to do they do quickly is an indication of advancement in the divine way. The position will be welcomed by every lover of the truth. We are advised that the list of college offerings for the present year will be submitted for publication during the present month, so the Saints may know that this part of the work is accomplished for the time, and that it may not interfere with any other legitimate work in the household of faith.

Those who have made inquiry regarding the matter will take notice that Elder J. C. Clapp's autobiography begins in the November number of Autumn Leaves. In the same number Professor Woodstock closes his articles on manual training in Graceland College. The new addition to the college lands and the broadening out of the industrial department makes these articles doubly valuable. Also in the November number Elder Charles Lake begins a series entitled, "Experiences in Southern Seas." Those who do not invest one dollar in Autumn Leaves will miss many dollars worth of benefit.

Elder Joseph Burton writes from Papeete, Tahiti, under date of September 26, as follows:

"When the mail arrives every thirty-six days, (for the Mariposa is nearly or quite as punctual as a mail train) there is quite an exciting time here, for it is the event of its time, and generally by noon we get our mail. After the letters are read we turn to the HERALDS, and for hours we feast on the news from all over the world, from the United States, England, the German States, Hawaii, Australia, and the Society Islands. The senior Editor has written us some excellent editorials; I think that just those entitled, "The course of honor," are worth the price of the paper, and as far more as you may think. And the paper written by the associate Editor, entitled, "Did God say that he would speak otherwise?" is just simply excellent. May God bless the HERALD and its editors, not forgetting Bro. Leon, who enjoyed some of the rough and tumble of this mission for a few months; his excellent work as shorthand reporter will remain a blessing to the natives for many years to come.

"And there remains in the hearts of the Saints here very much love and respect for Alexander H. Smith, the patriarch of the church, or as he is known here, "Aritana H. Temita, te Patereareha, te Metua no te etaretia:" "The Patriarch, the Father of the church." Some of them have lost their blessing he gave them and which brother Leon Gould wrote down from the lips of the servant of God as he by the influence of the Holy Spirit revealed events to transpire in the future or counseled them as he was moved upon by the Spirit which leads into all truth; and now they are seeking for him to restore their blessings lost in the storm when the "sea heaved itself beyond its bounds," for they generally think their blessing a very sacred paper indeed, and "Aritana" will not be forgotten while this generation lasts at least.

"Bro. and Sr. Lake are in Manihi now we expect, and from there are trying to get to Hikueru, Hao and Amanu before they return to the conference next April. They are enjoying their work and are busy all the time helping the Saints. Sr. Burton is fairly well and is very busy helping the Saints here."

The missionaries to South Dakota, Elders H. O. Smith, L. G. Wood, and Edward Rannie, have gotten out a sixteen-page tract entitled "Good news," designed to be used in the mission work in that field. It is filled with articles on the church history and faith. These articles are short and to the point and cover a wide range of topics.

Elder William Lewis has gotten out a neat four-page folder for use in his work in Scranton, Pennsylvania. It is entitled, Only the one church of Christ, and extends an invitation to come and hear the old Jerusalem gospel at Ivorite Hall, 126 South Main Avenue, Scranton, Pennsylvania.

The Straight Road

HOW TO BE SAVED.

This question has been answered very plainly on three different occasions. The first time by man. The second by an angel. The third time by our Savior.

To make it personal and plain, the first question concerning how to be saved virtually was, What shall I do? The second, What ought I do? The third, What must I do? The answers all applied to religious people, who had been serving God the best they knew how. They were all very devout and honest in their efforts to please him; but had left undone something that was of vital importance, and without which they could not be saved in a full salvation.

The first question was answered by Peter. When preaching on the day of Pentecost, he convinced the devout men gathered at Jerusalem of their sins in rejecting Christ, and they—these devout men—in their anguish asked, "What shall we do?" Peter replied, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2:38. Here these religious people are told what to do in order to receive the gift of the Holy Ghost and be saved. Regardless of their past religious life, this act was still required of them; and in order to be saved they are told to obey this ordinance.

The second case introduces an angel. Cornelius, the Gentile, was a religious, God-fearing man. He fasted and prayed often, and gave alms to the poor. He came into such favor with God that an angel was sent to him who told him that his prayers and alms were heard and accepted. And now, the angel said, send to Joppa for Simon Peter: "He shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do." (Acts 10: 6.) Cornelius was here told by the angel that regardless of all he had done, there was something else he ought to do, and that Peter would tell him what it was. He sent for Peter. Peter came to him and his little assembly, and "commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." (Acts 10: 48.) So, with all his prayers, fasting, alms-giving, and religious life, he had not complied with the terms of salvation until he was baptized.

The third question was answered by our Savior himself! Saul of Tarsus was a very religious man. He was of the strictest of sects—a Pharisee. In his religious work, he says he was void of offense toward God and man. He was so sure he was doing God's will, that he gave his time and talent, traveling from place to place to bring to punishment those who were preaching the gospel. He was, in his blind zeal, persecuting the saints, and doing all he could to break up the church organized by Christ. But at the same time he was religious to the extreme, and very zealous in his observance of the law of Moses, and the ceremonies connected therewith.

While on his way to Damascus, Jesus appeared to him, saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" And Saul asked, "Who art thou, Lord?" The Lord said, "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest." Then Saul asked in amazement, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" And the Lord said unto him, "Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do." He went to the city, and the Lord spoke to Ananias, and sent him to Saul, and when he came he said to Saul, "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." Jesus said Saul would be told what he must do; and when he was told, he was baptized, and received the gift of the Holy Ghost.

From these three instances, we are shown that it makes no difference how religious a person may be, he must comply with the terms of salvation—be baptized for the remission of sins, or he can not be saved in God's kingdom. All who would be saved, must have faith, all must repent, all must be baptized, and receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF J. W. WIGHT.

ELDER J. W. WIGHT.

"And, that the quorum may be filled and be prepared to stand as a unit in the councils of the church, in equality with the Presidency and the Seventy, choose and set apart to act as apostles in the quorum of Twelve, my servants I. N. White, J. W. Wight, and R. C. Evans, for they are called unto this office and calling. And, if these will accept this appointment and remain humble, faithful and diligent, they shall with their brethren be greatly blessed in ministering the word and bringing souls unto me. Let the quorum be not doubting but believing and I, the Lord, will bless them."—Revelation given on the night of April 7, 1897.

I was born August 8, 1856, in Bandera, Texas. Of my ancestry on my father, Lyman Wight's side, I am not apprised; but think that he descended from the English. My mother was born in Rocksburgh Shire, Scotland. My father dying when I was but two years of age, my nurture and training were left to the care of a mother, whose piety and conscientious scruples have so enstamped themselves on the tablets of memory as to cause me to be grateful for such a maternal blessing. As to my father, my memory, of course, is a blank; my uncle, mother's brother, being nearest to a "father" of any man ever known by me, as he was the directing provider. Of Scotch descent, however, he taught us to work—a pleasant thought to memory now—and from the time I was seven years old I had to work nine months of the year, my school privileges being accordingly very limited. So much so in fact, that at the age of seventeen I could not repeat the multiplication table. In justice to all concerned it is but right to say that this was to a degree the result of being deprived the opportunity of attending school from the age of thirteen to seventeen on account of having moved to a frontier locality where no school existed.

At the age of four my Southern experience ceased and life was begun in Iowa. And yet two events of that youthful Southern age were so completely memorized as never to be forgotten. One was the playful act of an older brother, the throwing me into water over my head, and the fear of drowning as a result. The other was the act of some fierce hounds in downing that same older brother (now dead), he being saved only by the heroic action of a young lady who instantly attacked the fierce brutes with a large knife and drove them away. Young as I was at that time, those two events so fixed themselves in my memory as to seem as fresh as though occurring but yesterday.

Taking up the thread of my Northern life, memory brings in review the long hot days of summer, premised by the early spring work of shouldering the hoe at seven o'clock in the morning and off to the stalk field to cut the tall corn stalks at a level with the ground, so that they might be raked and burned to prepare the ground for the new crop. This work was followed by the dropping by hand of the corn in the cross check of the carefully marked out ground. The corn once "up," and then came the labor of hoeing the weeds; oh, how long and hot the days seemed to be! Then the harvest, threshing, haying, and cornpicking, with the multitude of small things for the small boy to perform—his feet and legs being too small to get tired! And one of those "small boys," the only one left of a trio, remembers the deep snows, the large ears of corn at times so earnestly tugged at to get them off the stem, and withal the interspersing of tears as a part, not intended to be on the program but that served well the purpose of appeal when naught else would, and at times brought the home furlough. The warmth that served to culminate the furlough came all too rapidly.

Next came the season of school, interspersed with the night and morning chores, and betimes during the day with "the pulling up north," (the catching of one by the hair with an upward jerk which had a strong tendency to cause such "one" to stand up very quickly!) and the multitudinous other small things that usually looked large to the young hopeful. The log schoolhouse, the hewn-out benches with round sticks for legs and with no support for the youthful vertebræ, all served to kaliedoscope a memory-scene that will never be effaced while memory remains unclouded. And yet, within that same old log schoolhouse there was, in after time, the enactment of events that so served their purpose in the tutoring of a young and pliable mind as to perchance turn the whole course of that youthful mind into paths of righteousness that might otherwise never have been trodden. In the seasons of social gospel service enjoyed within that antiquated structure, reared more especially for mental development but often used for gospel culture, there was the enactment of events that served well their purpose to influence for good. And now in the after years how thankful I am for the opportunities and their use in the development of spiritual life. In fact it will require senility, or some other faulty condition of the mind, to ever eradicate those early scenes in the weekly prayer-meetings where was being enacted the things that made life impressions for good and the sure spiritual foundation that in after time served well its purpose when the maturer years brought with them their train of doubts. Born and cradled in the Latter Day Saint Church, it was but a natural thing that at the age of eight I would ask for baptism. And through all the changing scenes of the time since intervening, memory has not effaced that event from my mind. On that October day, 1864, as the president of the church led me into the gurgling Mill Creek, memory recalls the tiny tear drop that coursed down the cheek and the nervous hesitancy of the little boy. But it was done, and into the life of one little fellow there now was implanted the desire to be "good." And who shall assume to say that a child of that early age is too young to be baptized? Judging from the influence such an enactment had upon me, it would require more than the statement to the contrary to convince me that it is not all right. I now felt that I had to be a good boy and was kept from the commission of many a naughty deed as a consequence. But this is neither the time nor the place to argue the question. I just felt like bearing my testimony to God's plan, that was all. He knew. And I know it did me good.

When thirteen years of age we moved to an undeveloped country to the west of the one where nine years of my life had been spent, and soon after severed our relations with the uncle aforementioned. At the end of a four years' residence, a schoolhouse was erected in our neighborhood, and it was here that the before-mentioned wrestle with the multiplication table was had. Large in stature, gawky in manner, uncouth in appearance, with an inherited bashfulness almost beyond compare, my arithmetical bout very naturally made my embarrassment all the more complete. But directly in connection therewith there was formed the resolution to do or die. Who shall say, after all, that bashfulness is not a factor of the better sort in helping one in the struggle among his fellows?

From now commenced the real struggle for existence along the lines of educational development that finally culminated in the vocation of school teacher. For some six years this pursuit was followed with a view to higher mental development which demanded so much labor as to be hard on the constitution.

Next came the pursuit of clerking in a country store. Like the previous one, this vocation gave ample opportunity to determine human character. Availing the privilege thus afforded, the facial contour was so earnestly studied with a view to determine the character of the individual so unconsciously posing, that it became a pleasure rather than a "pastime," and afforded food for thought. But during all this time there was being laid the foundation for future work that finally changed the course of my life's work to that of preaching. In the year 1881 a start was made as a preacher that ended in a failure that came near being my undoing in this direction. It was during this period, however, that I was for a short time thrown into contact with Bro. J. R. Lambert, and was permitted one of the best lessons that ever came to me along the line of true criticism. He proposed that each should with pencil and paper note the mistakes made while speaking. Both were afforded surprises and were made to benefit by the practice. But to me, of course, did the principal benefit accrue, and the association was of that nature that it left its life impress upon me for good. The benefit was almost incalculable, and the moral influence of this brother was of the nature to endure.

We soon separated, however, and as a consequence I got my first real experience as a missionary. This I endured for some six weeks and then returned home quite discouraged as to my ability to ever become a missionary. The years intervening between this and my later start as a preacher were some of the most peculiar of life's existence. Events not necessary to relate here transpired that led me to have a desire to turn from religion altogether. To execute this desire and give to me a panacea for my wounded soul I subscribed for and read the Truth Seeker, and other literature from the pen of R. G. Ingersoll and others of like belief, continuing this effort with the hope of becoming satisfied with their peculiar belief. All the time, however, that hope grew fainter, for despite the desire to the contrary I was compelled to admit that these writers used, to a large extent, ridicule rather than argument. Upon the basis of my former tutoring this would not answer, and I "returned to the fold" a stronger if not a wiser adherent of the truth as revealed in the gospel. Whether the "experiences" were for my real good or not, I am not assured, but think they were. Amidst all this night of spiritual gloom that so severely encompassed me for a time, there was one fact that stood out as a prominent factor in the holding me in check. In the ordination ceremony, when being ordained an elder, a peculiar promise had been made to me, and every time that promise recurred to my mind the same influence that had accompanied it during the ceremony seemed to recur in all its forcefulness, and possibly was the means of holding me from "falling."

In 1886 my name was presented to and accepted by the Twelve, and a field was assigned me. For reasons that at the time seemed good, that appointment was not filled. The following spring I was again appointed, and in July of that year the start was made that has not since terminated.

The following spring, in company with Elder C. A. Butterworth, I attended the General Conference at Independence, Missouri, and was selected for the office of seventy. It was during the last meeting of the Second Quorum of Elders ever attended by me that Bro. David Chambers told of a vision concerning me and seen some years before, and in its recital he gave utterance to the very words uttered in my ordination seven years previously and which he had not listened to!

In the mission appointments that year Bro. C. A. Butterworth and I were assigned to Australia. The previous year's work had been of profit, and an attachment to the mission had been formed. Prior to leaving, knowledge had come to me that the next year I would have "to go south." This had been told to different ones, but how little I had dreamed that this "south" had meant beyond the confines of the equator! From boyhood I had been regaled with stories of the sea until there had been formed in my mind the awfulness of the sea with its mountain waves. This appointment revived all the terrors of the ocean's horrors that had in the years ago found lodgment in the meshes of the brain, as in youthful wonder I had listened to the recital by one in whom complete confidence was reposed, my mother. Almost a feeling of rebellion came at first, but in due time this passed away, and in its stead there came a peaceful feeling of resignation that completely calmed the turbulence previously reigning within.

As soon as we could do so conveniently we were away, and on June 2, at two o'clock in the afternoon, the good ship Alameda cleared the wharf and was soon through the "Golden Gate" and out upon the boundless sea. From the terrors of a steerage passage and the attendant horrors of yielding to the demands of Neptune we can well afford to relieve this narrative. At the conclusion of twenty-four and one half days we landed in far away Australia—strangers in a strange land.

No notification of our going had been sent, so that when we landed none were at the wharf to greet us. There was no other alternative but to go to a hotel. It so happened that we had Bro. R. Ellis' address, and as soon as dinner was over we started to find him. Reaching his place in due time we learned that a conference had been called at North Foster, now Tuncurry, and that a boat would leave for that place the next night. This conference was for the purpose of organizing a district. The New South Wales District resulted.

On Thursday following Bro. and Sr. Burton, with their daughter Addie, and young Bro. Sydney Wright, started for America. With these we had associated long enough to feel the separation all the more keenly, and the loneliness was certainly complete. But all this, together with the blues, the trials, the heart-yearnings for the home-land, etc., are but incidents to the life of all so engaged, and are perhaps out of place in a writing of this nature.

After some rather exciting gospel experiences we were transferred to Victoria, the southern part of this island continent. It was not long after reaching this "colony" that I became acquainted with one who was destined to become a factor in the writer's life, that, taken all in all, has been of the nature to uplift and make life's realities all the sweeter and purer. It should not be considered out of place to introduce into this autobiography the fact of the influence for good that has thus come to me as a result of this union. The attributes of a wife and mother, as well as a true companion and helpmeet, have been so fully made manifest that it is with a commendable pride that these facts are pointed out. It is the belief of the writer that in answer to prayer the divine help was made manifest in the selection. And why not?

After six years' sojourn in that distant field a return was made to America, and it was here that the qualities of companionship were made manifest by her who had linked her life with mine. To leave relatives and other loved ones to go to a distant field, and with the prospect of not again seeing them, is much easier to read about than to do. That she did it bespeaks more than can possibly be portrayed in the construction of language. But there was yet a severer trial to come. In 1902 the church saw fit to ask me to again return to Australia. Before giving my consent I sought her counsel. In time she said, "Go." Now came the trial of trials. I proposed to sell our place and with the money take all the family. Here was the opportunity to return to her native heath (near the home of her birth the heather abounds) and see and once more associate with her relatives. It was simply the fact of separation on the one hand or the permission to see and participate once more with loved ones at the expense of home. The former was chosen. In the brave women of the church manifesting like sacrifice, is found the real Spartan courage after all.

There are those in the church who advocate the necessity for a foreign separation, or rather the separation incident to a foreign mission, should be at least three if not five years. Let them show their belief by practical demonstration and their advocacy of the thought will manifest greater sincerity. They believe in it—for the other fellow.

After an absence of some eight months the postal system conveyed to me the intelligence that another heir had come to our home. It was not until ten more months had been added to our separation that I was permitted to behold the face of the new arrival. Some tell me it is no sacrifice, but I regard such statement as either the mere vaporings of unsound mentality or the lack of true love for those who help to make home what it is.

Some of the incidents of the twenty years of ministerial experience may not be out of place before this recital is closed. While holding services near Kingsley, Iowa, during the summer of 1887, a sudden attack of what had every appearance of ague placed me in an embarrassing position, there being no other minister with me. This was on Friday, and my appointments were out for over the following Sunday. After a severe chill and with a voice that could not produce a sound above a whisper, I retired to the seclusion of a nearby patch of corn, and there laid the matter before the Lord. The facts of my being alone and the extent of the appointment were plainly stated, and the Lord was asked to witness by his Spirit his desire for me to continue beyond that night to the completion of the appointment. The Lord was told that with an outpouring of his Spirit to the degree of the return of the voice would come the belief that he desired me to stay. It was a warm August night, and yet I rode to church with a heavy overcoat on, and none too warm at that. The hour of service arrived, the opening hymn was sung, we kneeled to pray. Inspiration took possession, and the petitioner prayed in a clear voice. Two thirds of that congregation, most of whom were outsiders, were in tears when we arose, and from that time on there was no recurrence of hoarseness. It was simply the power of God to the degree that those not in the church felt it. It was a demonstration beyond man's ability to dispense. Why not give to God the glory and let it rest there?

During the conference in Australia above referred to, the following incident occurred: The social service of the conference was on the afternoon of Sunday, and just prior to the commencement the writer sought the seclusion of the woods skirting the place, and there poured out his soul to God. It is not necessary to state the nature of the petition. Returning to the place of worship, the meeting already in session, Bro. T. W. Smith beckoned me to a place on the platform. It was but a short time when Sr. Smith arose, and addressing me by name, uttered a complete answer to the petition offered but a few minutes before in the secluded wood. Many pages might be written descriptive of such events, but it is thought to be unwise to expect so much HERALD space for such narrative.

It was but a short time subsequent to this that Bro. Smith uttered a prophetic statement to the effect that the time would come that I would be called into the Quorum of Twelve. As it was a position that I shrank from occupying, I thought but little of it, and sought to dismiss it from my mind. Others in turn and on different occasions uttered like prediction, but I still sought to dismiss the thought from my mind. Try as I would it would not at last "dismiss," so that when the call finally came it was not a matter of surprise. But were a revelation to come to-day removing me from the quorum, it would bring to me much more pleasure, and certainly a feeling of very great relief. Of course I desire to become qualified to labor wherever God requires, but would feel the removal of one of the greatest loads that I have ever been called to carry, if he would but say, "'Tis enough." It is from this view-point that I would be glad to have the statement come. As to the work of the gospel, and its final accomplishment, I doubt not.

THE IDEAL LIFE.

And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power.—Colossians 2: 10.

From this statement of the apostle we learn that man is incomplete, and the means of his completion is the gospel of Jesus Christ. So we read, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3: 16; that by his example and teaching we might reach a condition of life that would admit us by and by into his presence.

All organisms, whether animal or vegetable, are perfect or imperfect according to the application of law to their being. So it is with regard to the spiritual life of man. In order to his advancement it was necessary that he should have an ideal by which to build, and this was furnished him in the person of Jesus Christ. Hence we read, "And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory."—1 Timothy 3: 16.

This teaches us that Jesus Christ was an incarnation of his Father. God was manifest in him, that our transformation of character may become complete by faithfully observing the ideal, thereby becoming an incarnation of Jesus Christ, and thus manifesting Jesus Christ to the world as truly as Jesus did his Father to his disciples, as we are taught in Saint John 14: 8, 9: "Philip saith unto him, Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us. Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Show us the Father?" He that had seen him had seen the Father simply because of his being an incarnation of his Father. (See 1 Timothy 3: 16.)

This likeness of character between Jesus Christ and his disciples, should be as plainly seen as the likeness between the Father and the Son. This seems to be the ultimate object of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

This thought is further impressed upon our minds by this scripture: "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." It was this grand conception that enabled Saint John to declare, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—1 John 3: 2. The conclusion from this is that if we do not reflect his image, we can not see him.

The process by which we are brought into this ideal life in Christ is referred to by Paul as follows: "In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ: buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead."—Colossians 2: 11, 12.

This ideal life can be maintained by the addition of the following graces: "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."—2 Peter 1: 5-8.

We learn from this that fruit-bearing is an indisputable evidence of our being in Christ, most conclusively showing that we are not only applying the law of the Lord to our daily life, but drawing also from the infinite fountain of life and light, from him in whom "dwells all the fullness of the godhead bodily," being directed by his Spirit into all truth, by which the image of Jesus Christ is formed within us, completing the conception of this ideal life in Jesus Christ, as indicated in the language of the apostle at the beginning of this article: "And ye are complete in him."

Saved in Christ.

As you're sailing o'er life's sea,
Seek for Christ;
Many storms are sure to be,
Flee to Christ;
When temptations oft assail,
Do not let your courage fail,
Nor yet your lot bewail,—
Lean on Christ.

Do you your sins deplore?
There's a Christ;
Why not enter by the door,
As did Christ?
Make Jesus your best friend,
And his righteous laws commend,
Love and serve him to the end,
All for Christ.

Accept no man-made creed,
Believe in Christ;
They do not the Spirit feed,
As will Christ;
Study well the Book divine;
In every page and line,
There are truths that brightly shine,—
Bright like Christ.

Do not trust to faith alone,
Faith in Christ
And works will then atone,—
Work for Christ.
Be baptized beneath the wave,
There is power in Christ to save
From death, hell, and the grave,—
Saved in Christ.

The Genuine.

Love's a thing to talk about
When day is done and stars are out,
And when the road you walk along
Seems gently fading into song.
And fireflies darting here and there
Light up the perfumed summer air
With little spangles just of light,
Now visible, now out of sight.
And all the world is full of blooms
And spilling over with perfumes.
But when the world's gone all awry
And youth is of the years gone by,

And summer days and nights are fled,
And skies are brassy overhead,
And nothing goes just right at all,
And not a bird sends forth its call,
And poverty grinds more and more,
And the gaunt wolf is at the door,
And hard luck comes with leer and shove
Is the best time for proving love.

Then is the time true love shall stand
Steadfast by you and, hand in hand,
Go with you down life's darkened way,
Your staff, your comfort, and your stay,
Quick to encourage and to lift
Your soul above the dark and drift
Of circumstances and to be
Smiling beside you steadfastly;
Something to live for and to plan;
God's best and greatest gift to man.

PULPITS DESERTED. PAY IS TOO SMALL.

Reports received by the Tribune from ten of the Methodist Episcopal conferences in Illinois and neighboring States show that the question of higher salary for the average minister of that church has reached a crisis.

The generally expressed opinion is that religious work soon will suffer for lack of preachers unless salaries are raised. In many of the conferences just held there was an exodus of preachers from the pulpit to enter business life.

The higher salaries movement was discussed and advocated at practically all the conferences.

From the Des Moines conference, held recently at Council Bluffs, Iowa, comes the report that thirty-seven of the two hundred and seventeen pulpits are vacant because of the insufficient salaries paid to the preachers. Ten years ago there were more preachers than pulpits in this conference.

Salaries have been advanced about one hundred dollars each during the last four years, but this increase—which has not kept pace with the increase in cost of living—has failed to stem the ministerial stampede into business life.

Five withdrawals from the ministry were reported at the Northwest Iowa conference, held at Sioux City, and the same reason was given in every case—insufficient pay.

The topic was exhaustively discussed at the Indiana conference at Columbus. Speakers read statistics showing that the cost of living had increased forty per cent in the last few years, but there had been less than ten per cent increase in salaries.

Several ministers withdrew from this conference to enter lay pursuits. Invariably they said they preferred the preacher's life to a business career, but the obligation to "support their families in decency" caused them, they said, to decide in favor of business.

Resolutions favoring higher pay for the preachers were adopted by the lay conference of Southern Iowa at Burlington.

From the Wisconsin conference at Milwaukee comes an especially pessimistic report. Salaries there have not increased at all in the last decade or so. It was revealed that twenty pastors in this conference receive less than four hundred dollars a year, and, at that, each preaches in two different villages every Sunday. In this conference there has been a decrease of twenty per cent in salaries during the last thirty-five years, while the cost of living has increased forty or fifty per cent.—The Chicago Daily Tribune, October 7, 1907.

A CLERICAL VIEW.

The eminent Charles Cuthbert Hall, writing for the Atlantic Monthly on "The ideal minister," sums up his view of that character in the following language:

"He is a scholar, but criticism has never violated that shrine of the spirit where the pure in heart see God. The unfading newness of everlasting truth gives to his speech the freshness of springtime. The unsearchable mystery of infinite holiness gives to his thought and conduct gravity and reserve, as one who has beheld things which it is not possible for man to utter. The demands of social service have not stamped him with the professionalism of a reformer. The ardor of churchmanship has not made him an ecclesiastic. He remains a prophet of the highest. When he speaks men feel that he is standing on holy ground. When he prays men perceive that he is prostrating himself before the risen Christ."

This is an exalted ideal, and few there are who attain unto it. Those who do, however, wield an influence far above their fellows. Mr. Hall's view is of interest at a time when so many clergymen are abandoning the ministry for more lucrative pursuits. In this they have both defenders and accusers. Yet how does such a life as that portrayed by this eminent divine square with the mercenary motives which prompt so many men to give up a calling to which it was supposed they had consecrated their lives? The picture would be sadly out of joint, indeed.

If the gospel ministry is a mere means of livelihood men who can not thrive in it with so much success as the carpenter or mason or lawyer or insurance agent do well to abandon it. If it is justified in exacting of its devotees such consecration and relinquishments of self as Mr. Hall deems essential to the highest usefulness and influence, men who are not willing to abandon worldly prospects should turn from it to other and more profitable fields of labor. But, having put their hands to the plow they should not turn back.—Des Moines Capital, October 9, 1907.

THE THEORY OF "FLETCHERISM."

"If people did their eating according to right principles, the increase in the price of food need not be a serious matter."

This is the declaration of Horace Fletcher, millionaire and food enthusiast, who sat yesterday in his rooms, at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Horace Fletcher is fifty-five years old. A few weeks ago he went to Yale and broke the records for physical endurance, defeating all the husky youths who had tried their strength in the college gymnasium. He says he was able to do it because he eats properly.

His eating philosophy is called "Fletcherism." It is a simple philosophy. It consists in eating only when you are hungry, in chewing what you eat until there is nothing left to chew, enjoying the taste of every morsel, eating only what tastes good and ceasing to eat when the appetite is satisfied.

This sounds easy, but it is not. To ask the hustling New Yorker to pause and enjoy everything he eats is to impose a hardship. The average man, according to Mr. Fletcher, swallows but does not eat. Because he does this he eats vastly more than he needs, has less enjoyment, has more sickness, is less strong and energetic as a worker—and spends so much more money than he need spend that a "high price" rumor brings him panic.

"I could start a boarding-house," continued Mr. Fletcher; "and, if every one in it would practice what I teach, their food would not cost me more than fifteen cents a day—of course, exclusive of the cost of serving, cooking, rent, etc. I mean I should have to pay the grocer, the butcher, and the baker not more than fifteen cents a day for each one of my boarders. And, what is more, they would be fed on the best in the land, the most exquisite dainties in the market."

"What would it cost an average mechanic, with a family, to live, on your system?" asked the writer.

"If he were to spend twenty cents a day for each member of his family," was the reply, "he could live well, do his work more efficiently and never have any doctor's bills."

"Of what, for instance, would his breakfast consist?"

"He would eat no breakfast. He would go out to work on an empty stomach and would work better therefor. His morning's labor would give him an appetite and about noon he would be hungry, legitimately hungry, and ready to eat the principal, if not the only meal of the day."

"Then you hold that it is unnatural to be hungry on arising in the morning?"

"An appetite for breakfast is artificial. It is the result of years of habit. A man could not rid himself of this habit all at once; but it would not take him more than two weeks. The appetite that is not caused by work of some sort is an unnatural appetite. The body has been lying dormant for many hours when a man wakes up and it is less in need of food at that time than at any other time of the day."

"And of what would such a mechanic's midday lunch consist?"

"He could get all the best bread, butter, potatoes, cheese, milk, fruit, or vegetables that he wanted. Any of these would be within his limit of twenty cents."

"Suppose he wanted meat?"

"He would be unlikely to want meat. A man who lives as I live prefers the simple, quickly digested foods and enjoys them more than any others. You see, my system is the height of epicureanism. Every mouthful of food gives to the eater all the enjoyment that is in it. He chews it as long as it has any taste and enjoys it as long as it is in his mouth. By the time a man has followed my instructions for a few weeks he has found just what his system needs, and these are the foods he craves for, these are the foods out of which he derives the most enjoyment. Eating is a genuine pleasure, for wholesome foods are a delight to the taste, and it is perfectly true that the body of a healthy man craves for the aliments which most nourish it. Therefore the appetite is the safest guide, and whatever one's system craves for is the food that he should eat.

"I eat no breakfast, and generally my midday meal is the only meal of the day. But sometimes when out walking in the evening I pass a baker's shop and suddenly crave a cake, a biscuit, or a piece of butter-scotch. To such a craving I always yield, for I know that my body needs just that very thing. At other times I have a longing for peanuts, salted almonds, or pistachio nuts. Then I buy a few cents' worth and eat them with relish. An apple, a banana, or some other fruit may tempt me on some other occasion. I can not tell what constituent of that fruit or that nut my body is needing; perhaps it is some mineral salt or some form of sugar, but I know I need what I crave, and, therefore, I take it.

"This is the principle upon which all men should eat. If they were to do so they would grow stronger as they grow older, instead of wearing out their bodies by overloading them with unneeded foods and thus making their digestive apparatus work far harder than is necessary. I, at fifty-five, as you know, broke all the endurance tests at Yale. And it is only a few years ago that a life insurance company rejected me as too poor a risk!

"Look at the Italian laborer, the man who performs the really hard manual labor on our streets and on our buildings to-day, and see what he eats. Meat has a very small place in his dietary. He goes out to work in the early morning with scarcely any breakfast, perhaps none at all, and at noon, when his labor has whetted his appetite to a keen edge he sits down and eats—what? A piece of bread and an onion, or a bunch of finocchio, or a tomato. He may drink some beer with it, or he may not. After this meal he starts in working again, thoroughly refreshed, thoroughly satisfied, and works up an appetite for his evening meal, which probably consists of a dish of spaghetti or macaroni and some cheese. I do not say the Italian way of living is ideal, but I cite it as an example of what the simplest diet will enable a man to do. A contractor in this city, an employer of large numbers of laborers, tells me that the average Irishman can lift a heavier weight or do a harder piece of work than the average Italian, but he is exhausted by it, while the Italian can keep on all day doing hard work steadily and without fatigue. I explained to him that the Italian was capable of greater endurance than the Irish laborer because he ate more wholesome food and in smaller quantities.

"The fact of the matter is that when a man has acquired a natural appetite by working hard his stomach is in a condition to digest rapidly and thoroughly. His body sucks up food as a blotting-pad absorbs ink. There is no more waste than is necessary and the stomach does no more work than is necessary, while the system derives the nutriment for which it is calling and in the amount which it needs. Consequently, there is no indigestion, no feeling of repletion after eating, the digestion takes place rapidly, the stomach gets rest and the man can return to his work immediately after his meal and work all the better for it."—Selected.

"The good book says God has given man power to bring forth much good. If this is true, then he is the author of all good. Then why should I assume the position that all who do not see as I do, will be damned, and have no reward for the good they have done? Why should I do this if my righteousness exceeds the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees of the present time?"

"Say, pop, I saw you riding on the sidewalk last night. You'll get nabbed some day."

Mr. Jennings laughed at the pertness of his ten-year-old son.

"Oh, I guess I'm smart enough to keep out of the hands of the police. It's a perfectly ridiculous law, anyway. Of course, it's all right down town where there are lots of people, but out here, where there's no necessity of running into any one, it's all nonsense."

"But, it's the law," asserted the lad.

"Yes, I know, but there are some laws that are so ridiculous that they are just as well broken as kept."

"The game law, for example," said Harry with a snicker.

"Well, you just keep still," said the father. "You don't have to tell all you know."

Harry smiled knowingly, for he fully understood that his father was sensitive, and with good reason, on the question of breaking the game laws; but the subject under discussion was put in the background by the insistence of the young daughter, who brought forward a grievance of her own.

"Say, ma," she exclaimed, "I think Miss Bell is real mean. She only gave me sixty in English and sixty-five in arithmetic, and I know I ought to have more. She is awful partial. She gives Mabel Doane ninety and ninety-five, and Mabel doesn't study any harder than I do. It's only because she's the teacher's favorite."

"Well, if there's anything I despise in a teacher," said Mrs. Jennings, "it's partiality. I really don't see why Mabel Doane should be the teacher's pet. I don't think I'll invite Miss Bell here again very soon, if she doesn't treat you with any more fairness than that."

"My sakes," exclaimed Mrs. Jennings, hurriedly. Here it's most church time. Fly around now and get ready, or we'll be late."

"I'm not going to church," said the oldest son. "It's no use sitting there listening to that old blatherskyte. He's too stupid for anything."

"Right you are," said Mr. Jennings. "If a man can't preach a better sermon than he does, he'd better stay out of the pulpit."

"Oh, come," pleaded Mrs. Jennings, "I think it doesn't look well if we don't all go to church."

"Well," said Mr. Jennings, settling himself in an easy chair with a newspaper, "get a minister that can say something and say it in an interesting way, and we'll go."

"Well, Annie, you and I will go," said the mother.

"All right," laughed Mrs. Jennings, "I think the preacher is about suited to the intellect of women."

"Say, pa," exclaimed little Harry, whose thoughts had been directed in a new channel by his father's last remark, "I was with Philip Barrows last night, and we met his mother and sister, and what do you think! He took off his hat and bowed to them just as if they were strangers."

"Well, I think that was very nice," said Mrs. Jennings.

Mr. Jennings laughed, "I suppose you will be asking me to tip my hat to you in the street next?"

"Why not?" asked Mrs. Jennings. To this remark, however, she received no reply, but another laugh from her husband and the exclamation of, "How perfectly ridiculous!"

"I asked Philip what he did it for," said Harry, "cause I didn't see why a boy should bow to his mother or sister. They're just his home folks. Of course, it's different when you meet a grown-up lady. But I'd feel awfully queer to take off my hat to Annie."

"I imagine I see you," said Annie somewhat sarcastically. Then she continued with a new expression of interest in face and voice, "Say, ma," Isabel Barrows' father tips his hat to her. I saw him do it the other day. I asked her why he did it. It seemed so odd to me. She said it was because he respected her. What do you think of that?"

"Perfectly absurd," said Mr. Jennings, with a little sneer. "But that's the way it is now-a-days. Young America demands the respect of the parents instead of showing respect for the parents. I think it's a pretty state of affairs when a man tips his hat to his little snip of a daughter."

Mr. Jennings settled himself to the reading of his paper. Harry went to his room, while Annie and the mother went to church alone.

II.

"Philip, didn't I see you riding on the sidewalk?" asked Mr. Barrows of his youthful son.

"It was only out here, papa, where you almost never meet anybody. Of course I wouldn't do it down town where there are lots of people. All the boys do it, and some of the men."

"That may be, my son," responded Mr. Barrows, "but I want you to be a law-abiding citizen, and when there's a law, we really have no choice in the matter."

"But that seems such a foolish law, papa."

"It may seem so to you, and yet be very reasonable. At any rate, whether foolish or not, it is your duty to obey it. We have no right to decide that we will obey the law only when we feel like it, and disobey it whenever we are inclined; and this fact I would like to have you fix in your mind now while you are young."

"But, papa, suppose the law really is unreasonable?"

"Then, my son, we should try to have it done away with, and a just law put in its place; but so long as it is law, every one should obey it. The lawlessness of American youth is a question of serious significance, and I am exceedingly anxious that you should grow up with a sincere respect for the law."

"Mamma," interrupted little Isabel, "I don't think Miss Graham is at all fair. I study real hard and she never gives me as high marks as she does some of the other girls who don't study as hard as I do; and one or two of them I know look in their books during recitation. I don't think teachers ought to have favorites, do you?"

"Do you think Miss Graham gives you poor marks because she likes to do so?" asked Mrs. Barrows, gently.

"It seems as if she might give me good marks, sometime," said the little girl poutingly.

"I am of the opinion that Miss Graham would give you good marks all the time, if she could. It would certainly be a greater credit to her."

Isabel looked up in her mother's face with surprise. "I don't see why it's any credit to her to give me good marks," she said questioningly.

"Judging from my own experience as a school-teacher," said Mrs. Barrows, "Miss Graham feels that every good scholar reflects credit upon her as a good teacher, and that every poor scholar detracts from her reputation as a teacher. So I must believe that it is a grief to her to be obliged ever to give poor marks to any of her scholars. I think we can prove it if, during the next two weeks, you will work hard to secure a good standing in class. Try it for two weeks, my dear, and if you aren't succeeding in winning a good standing during that time, then I will see Miss Graham and get her opinion as to the reason. Perhaps she and I working together can find out what is the matter. And now we will get ready for church."

"Who is to preach to-day?" asked Mr. Barrows.

"The Reverend Mr. Porter supplies our pulpit to-day," responded his wife.

"Oh, mother!" exclaimed Philip, "must we go to hear that old stick?"

"My son," expostulated the father, "I can't allow you to use such an expression in regard to a minister who is also an old man."

"But, father," urged Philip, "his sermons are so dry. I never can listen to them."

"I wonder if you think that our only reason for going to church is to hear the sermon."

"Why, what else do we go for, father?"

"To worship God," replied Mr. Barrows. "And the sermon really is only one means of directing our thoughts in the right channel. If you find the sermon uninteresting, you can withdraw into yourself."

"Well, father, I don't know how to do that. I get to thinking of all sorts of things."

"It will be good training for you to try to follow the sermon. If you can not understand it, then you might think of all the things you have to be thankful for; and don't forget that the privilege of church-going is one of them. There are boys who never can go to church, and I am sure you would not want to change places with them. You might commit a hymn to memory while you are sitting quietly in the church. You can't understand it now, but when you are as old as I am, you will realize that it is a very great pleasure to have the memory stored with beautiful thoughts, and now is the time when you can best commit such thoughts to your memory. Try it to-day. If you find the sermon tedious, see if you can't learn the hymn, 'How gentle God's commands,' so that you can repeat it to me after church. And then, my son, I want you never to speak of an old person with disrespect. This afternoon you might employ yourself to good advantage by looking up in the Bible the places where you are commanded to reverence age."

"Oh, father," interrupted Isabel, "do you know Annie Jennings laughed at me because, when she asked me why you tipped your hat to me in the street, I said it was because you respected me. She seemed to think that was the funniest thing she had ever heard. It isn't funny, is it, father?" asked the young girl eagerly.

"Certainly not," replied Mr. Barrows. "There are no women whom I respect more than my wife and daughter, and I certainly should be very remiss if I didn't manifest that respect to them under all circumstances. I think we should have children manifesting more respect to parents, if parents treated their children with great respect. And now we will all show our respect for the Sabbath and our love to God by going to church as a united family."—Mary Wood-Allen, M. D., in American Motherhood.

Questions on November Reading.

In these two pictures what four kinds of respect are lacking in the first and manifest in the second? What was wrong in the first address of Harry to his father? Did his father merit his respect? How should pertness in a child be regarded? What disrespect did the father show both in his conduct and his conversation? What effect would this example have upon the son with regard to keeping the law?

What was the example of Mr. Barrows to his son? What two forces would work to make his son a law-abiding citizen? How did Mr. Barrows show respect for his son? Do you agree with his reasoning? What laws are boys most liable to violate? What can we do to lessen the lawlessness of American youth? What would be accomplished by a general attitude of respect in the family, such as was manifest in the Barrows family?

What difference may be observed even in the complaints of the two little girls concerning their teachers? What reason may we see in the hasty conclusions of Mrs. Jennings for the manner of speech of her daughter? What do you think of Mrs. Barrows' position in regard to her child's standing at school? Who would be helped by such a course?

What respect for authority may be noticed in Philip's disrespectful question about attending church? In what different ways did Mr. Jennings and Mr. Barrows meet the disrespect shown by their sons? What effect would the remark of Mr. Jennings about the intellect of women have upon his sons? How do you regard Mr. Barrows' advice to his son about going to church? Would you approve of his suggestion about committing the hymn to memory? Which man showed the finer disposition in his idea of courtesy toward wife and daughter? Can Young America be expected to respect parents who are not themselves respectful? How will respect for the law of God induce respect for other law?

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky, October 8, 1907.

Editors Herald: We have just had a very profitable visit from Bro. G. T. Griffiths, who was with us from September 28 to October 3, and did some ordaining and setting in order in the branch here. He saw fit to have your humble servant placed in as president of the branch, and suggested that I look after the work at Louisville and vicinity, and so has instructed me to visit the branches at Middletown, Ohio, and Dayton, thence to Wellston, Creola, Vales Mills, Radcliff, and Ironton. I hope all the above branches will please correspond with me, as to the way I shall come. This is by order of the missionary in charge. I hope we may have a profitable meeting with the Saints of the above places.

I am still rejoicing in this great latter-day work, and only trust that I may be able to do more in building it up. May the Lord hasten the redemption of Zion, is my prayer. I am, as ever,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

Green Valley Road, NEW ALBANY, Ind., Oct. 4, 1907.

Dear Herald: Will you please publish a few lines for us, to let our many kind brothers and sisters know how we are, as we can not write to all individually. My father was taken bedfast June 22, and was very low for six weeks, when he made a little change, got some better, but was unable to sit up without fainting. He remained in that condition for several weeks, then began to get better, and now has a good appetite, but can not get out of bed without help, and can not stand on his feet without being held up.

September 27 he got tired of lying in bed, and while mother and I were out of the room he got up and tried to get to the rocking-chair. We heard him fall, and being nearly worn out in caring for him for over three months day and night, and my poor old mother being eighty-four years old, faithfully doing all she could, but not able to be up nights, it took all of our combined strength to get him back in bed, and he has not been so well since. I ask the Saints to pray for us that we may be able to care for my poor old father, who was eighty-five years old August 6. I know God has given me strength thus far, or I could not have kept up, with no help except my dear niece from Chicago, Sr. Emma Castins, who came to our help and assisted us four weeks, doing all she could.

We are some in debt. Have had two doctors, and have them to pay. That is not our faith; but we couldn't get the elders. We sent for Bro. Metcalf once, but as he was in his field we could not get him often without inconvenience to him, we thought. The weeds took my garden, our time being taken with caring for my father. We have everything to buy this year, and if any of the dear brothers and sisters can help us a little in this our time of need, we will be very thankful. The good Bishop of our church has helped us all he could, but he has so many to look after.

In the one faith,

JAMES G. SCOTT AND FAMILY.

WOODBURN, Indiana.

Dear Herald: I am at Woodburn, trying to preach the gospel of Christ. This is a place where the gospel has never been preached before, and, as David says, "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?" It is true at this place.

I have been holding street-meetings. Have had a large crowd each night, thus far; but don't know how long I will stay here, as the weather is getting bad. When I came to Woodburn, I got the consent of two of the leading members of the Methodist Church to use the hall. As yet I had not met the preacher, for he was not in town. So I was told to go and give out notice of my meetings; but the preacher came, heard there was going to be meeting, and that it was a Latter Day Saint, so that changed the order of things; for it was then all "Mormonism." On the night of my meeting, I went to get the keys to the hall, and was refused. The preacher told them I would have to come and see him. I suppose he thought I would not come to him; but I surprised him, and went to his house. The first thing I had to meet was "Mormon." But before I left I think he was sorry he met the so-called "Mormon." After a long interview with him, he said I could have the hall for that one night. But on arriving at the hall I soon learned that the people were afraid of the hall, and so I went on the street and commenced preaching.

I have had good interest, but do not know how I will come out yet. Am trying to present the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, for of it I am not ashamed. It is a grand thing to be a Saint in these latter days. Pray for my success in this latter-day work.

GROSSLICHTERFELDE WEST, Germany, Sept. 18, 1907.

Dear Herald: As a member of our Reorganized Church, after having apostatized from the Utah church like Bro. Abels, I have regularly read your numbers, and also studied the editorial of the 4th of September, "The problems of life," which greatly interested me. Considering now that kind advice at the close of said article, "And the first great need is to become thoroughly assured of the verities of the Christian religion, then we can bear with the problems of life without losing faith, even if we do not understand them for a time, because we have our feet planted on something substantial," I wish to call the attention of those, satisfied with the quoted sentence, to the following passage of Doctrine and Covenants 101:32-34, Utah edition of 1893, reading in German: "Ja, Wahrlich, ich sage Dir, and jenem Tage, wenn der Herr Komen wird, wird er alle Dinge offenbaren. Dinge, die vergangen sind und verborgene Dinge, die Kein Mensch wusste—Dinge der Erde, durch welche sic gemacht wurde und den Zweck und das Ende derselben—sehr Kostliche Dinge—Dinge von oben und Dinge von unten—Dinge, die in der Erde, auf der Erde und in Himmel sind."

This section 101 of the Utah edition corresponds with section 98 of the Lamoni edition, and therein will be found the cited German verses in English. They run approximately, freely translated:

"Yes, truly, I tell thee, at that day when the Lord will come, he will reveal all things—things which are past, and hidden things which know no man—things of the earth, by which it was made, and the purpose and the end of it—very precious things—things from on high and things from beneath,—things that are in the earth, on the earth, and in heaven."

As I have no Lamoni edition at hand, I must leave it to the reader of my lines to look over section 98 to find said passage.

I only mention said passage for the purpose of showing that, in my humble opinion, our Lord Jesus Christ has reserved to the day of his coming the revelation of the things and mysteries regarding "the problem of life," and that we must have patience till that time, as his obedient adherents.

Trusting to have contributed a little to lift the veil from gospel truth, in giving the above explanation, I remain, with kindest regards to all interested in the matter.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

ALEXANDER KIPPE.

[The passage from Doctrine and Covenants quoted above reads, in the Lamoni edition, 1906, as follows: "Yea, verily I say unto you, in that day when the Lord shall come he shall reveal all things; things which have passed, and hidden things which no man knew; things of the earth by which it was made, and the purpose and the end thereof; things most precious; things that are above, and things that are beneath; things that are in the earth, and upon the earth, and in heaven."—Doctrine and Covenants, 98:5. BRADFORD, Manchester, England.

Dear Herald: May I beg a little space of your valuable paper to bear my testimony to the goodness of God, and the truth of his gospel? Many years before I entered the church I was connected with a body commonly called Plymouth Brethren, who used to say, "Read your Bibles and compare with what people say"; and, though only a poor reader I persevered and became well acquainted with its contents, and soon found that the people believed but very little that was inside the covers of the Bible. They did not believe there are any apostles at the present time, still the scriptures were very plain that they were to be in the church. I asked one of the leading brethren a question the other day. What did that scripture mean found in the fifth chapter of James about calling for the elders to lay hands on those that are sick? He said it meant that Jesus Christ died on Calvary's cross and now was seated at the right hand of God pleading for us. I told him I believed it meant what it said, as I have realized its truth again and again; for I have been raised up many times through administration, which causes me to love the gospel, and I would like all my loved ones to obey the same gospel, that they may have the same experience.

I would just like to bear my testimony with regard to tithing. Many years ago I used to read the paper called Christian Herald, and I learned there something about tithing. Not having been taught this truth, it was a long time before I understood what it meant; but through prayer and reading I saw the Lord required a portion of our possessions. I was willing to pay my portion. At this time my husband was not converted, but he gave me his wages to do the best I could. At this time we had a son just going to commence work, so I thought I would give the Lord his first week's wages which was seven shillings and sixpence, which I sent to a Mr. Muller and said, "From one whom the Lord has blessed." And I can tell you the Lord has paid me back with good interest.

Another time one of our boys got discharged, and when he got another place he received twenty-one shillings more wages, so I promised the Lord I would give him this twenty-one shillings until Christmas, it then being October. When Christmas time came his work mates had a draw, and they asked him if he would go in. He said yes. I did not know anything about it, but he won a fine large goose. The first week's wages in the new year he had twenty-one shillings extra in his wages. So he asked his master if he had made a mistake. He said no, he had given him a raise; this they did not do until they had been there two years.

Soon after my husband and I entered the church, we went for an outing in the country. As we sat on the banks of a stream we were talking about tithing. We had taken stock of our possessions. We had not such a finely furnished home, but would not part with it for less than eighty pounds, that meant eight pounds for tithing. My husband said, "Do you think the Lord wants eight pounds from an old collier who works without shirt?" But I said all the strength is from the Lord. So he was willing, and we both went on our knees to ask the Lord to accept it. That was about fourteen years ago, and there is no trouble about paying tithing now. Each year it is always ready, and right glad we are to pay it. We have had testimony upon testimony that it is the Lord's will. Since then we have gone into a little business, so my husband no longer pulls off his shirt under the bowels of the earth. The neighbors said we would not be in it a month; but six years have passed, and we are still there. We have much opposition from those who keep open all day Sunday, but we close. They do us no harm, for the Lord is with us and for us. I am very deaf, and my husband's eyesight is poor, so my husband is ears for me, and I am eyes for him; so with the blessing of God we have prospered.

With best love to all in the gospel, I remain,

SR. SCHOFIELD, Sen.

DEER ISLE, Mountainville, Maine, Oct. 5, 1907.

Editors Herald: I have recently moved from Stonington to this place, which will be my headquarters, at least for the coming winter. There is little of unusual interest to mention with reference to our church and its work in this vicinity. Here, as in other places, we are told of the good old days that have been, and if things now were as in former days, what an incentive to the performance of duty it would be. How is it that Saints are so prone to overlook the fact that we must personally and individually approve ourselves to God by faithful service? This is our day—our time and opportunity to act is in the living present. What has been or what may be should not serve as a constant theme upon which to fasten prejudice. Paul gives us the remedy when he says we should "forget things which are behind," and "reaching forth unto those things which are before," "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Is any one, for any cause, justified in failing to "press"? Is there any excuse that can be given that would justify any person in disobeying God? For my part I do not believe that there is, and I am for the individual who will try, make an effort, be willing and cheerful in doing the best he can, even under hard and discouraging conditions. We do not need an excitement as an antidote for our faith. The witticisms and eloquence of some star preacher may entertain nicely and draw crowds, but what we really need is to assimilate and receive the engrafted word of Christ, and then act upon a righteous desire in the heart, and not from attraction or unmasked pride or fear of the world. We are not sent out as actors upon the stage to entertain people. We are sent to preach the gospel of Christ, to make disciples for Christ, to build up souls in Christ. This is our business, we have a message to live and to preach to the world, and we should go about it with earnestness, straightforwardness, and sincerity.

Our recent Sunday-school convention held at Stonington passed off in the usual quiet manner. We would like to see a greater number enlist in this department of work, for therein is an opportunity to help and be helped.

While holding a series of meetings at Little Deer Isle, last February, I inaugurated a movement to build a new church. A report from there a few days ago tells me that they have raised wholly from voluntary contributions the sum of four hundred and sixty-five dollars. This is certainly gratifying. One good brother promised that when, if ever, they could raise five hundred dollars, he would add his check for one hundred dollars more, so that sum is practically assured. During the summer we have made a much-needed improvement upon the church at Stonington, by erecting a stone platform and steps at the entrance. Thus the work goes on, but it seems that some would rather "lean" than "lift." How is it with you? Are you lifting or leaning?

Hopefully,

W. E. LARUE.

FREEDOM, Oklahoma, October 6, 1907.

Editors Herald: It has been quite a long time since we sought space in your columns, but we are not dead, neither, we trust, sleeping.

Since March 14, we have been busy trying to fulfill the requirements of Uncle Sam, that we may obtain deed to a quarter section of Oklahoma land. Think we are succeeding admirably. That has kept us pretty busy, but we have found time to keep an appointment going at what is known as Burnham schoolhouse, only missing one Sunday since April 7, except for one month, from July 12 to August 11, when, with our family, we attended the Richmond reunion, and afterward preached upon the streets of Mutual and Woodward. In these street-services we were assisted by our family. Thus we had quite a choir along, and attracted good attention in both towns.

Mutual is a new opening, but we met some Braden echoes there. They seemed to come from an affair of a year or so ago at Seiling, Oklahoma.

At Woodward we baptized two, a Bro. and Sr. Mikel. We left them rejoicing in the work. We left some interested in both places.

We have many calls for labor in the surrounding country, and, as soon as we can get our crops gathered, have planned to occupy.

This point (Burnham schoolhouse) is a new opening, and much interest has developed.

A request came to us a couple of weeks since, that we permit a collection to be taken up for us, in appreciation for our work here in the preaching and Sunday-school work. We told the people that we did not wish to refuse them the privilege, but suggested that we make it a collection for Graceland instead, then we could have part in the work with our neighbors: telling them that what they did for the cause, they did for us.

The result is that we inclose eight and one half dollars, the amount raised here for Graceland. We are happy to be able to assist our college in this and any other way that opens up.

Our crops are good this year, and we hope to reap, spiritually as well as financially.

Ever working and praying for the triumph of Christ's cause.

Your brother in Christ,

A. M. CHASE.

Dear Herald: I wish to say that I received a card from an elder saying he would come over and preach for us. The card was rubbed so badly I could not tell what his name was. I guessed at it and answered, and my letter came back. Now, I am ready with my part of it. Remember money will not keep. Come on. It seems to me that this is as good a time as we will ever have. Wish he was here now. Will tell you how to come. Come to Mansfield, Louisiana, Desoto Land and Lumber Saw-mill. Come out on tram to the log camp, and you will be within one mile of me. Most any one there can tell where I live. If you write before you come, address R. F. D. No. 1, Logansport.

Your sister in Christ,

STEWARTSVILLE, Missouri, September 24, 1907.

Editors Herald: I understand that the General Sunday School Association has taken up work on normal lessons, published by Curtis and Jennings, Cincinnati, Ohio, and written by J. L. Hurlbut. Now I find, by a close application, that not only are the dates incorrect, but, also, a great many points in the body of the work, and you know that it is a great deal easier to learn anything right at the outset than it is to unlearn it and relearn it afterwards. Permit me to point out some places wherein I think, and can prove it to be incorrect. I will take up the chronology first.

In the second revision of the work the author states that the call of Abraham was about 2,280 B. C. I can prove that he is at least 152 years wrong here, and shall proceed to do so from the Bible. You will see that I place the creation of man at 3996 B. C. I do so because the astronomical part of it warrants me in so doing. So I will figure from this as a basis. Adam made 0 A. M. 3996 B. C. (see Genesis 2: 6.) From Adam to the birth of Noah 1056 years, or the birth of Noah was 1056 A. M. or 1940 B. C. (see Genesis 5: 3-28). From the birth of Noah to the flood was 600 years (see Genesis 7: 6), making it 1656 years from Adam to the flood.

From the flood to the birth of Abraham was 352 years (see Genesis 11: 10-24.) From Abraham's birth to his call was 75 years (see Genesis 12: 4), making it 2083 from the creation to the call of Abraham. 1656 plus 352 plus 75 equals 2883 A. M., or 1913 B. C. Hurlbut puts this date at about 2280. Guess again, Mr. Hurlbut.

Allowing 430 years for the bondage in Egypt, which is too much by 215 years (see Josephus, book 2, chapter 15: 2; Exodus 12: 40, 41), here Moses puts it the self same day, etc. Now we have 130 years for Jacob's age when he went down into Egypt (see Genesis 47: 9). Isaac was threescore or 60 years old when Jacob was born (see Genesis 25: 26), and Abraham was 100 years old when Isaac was born (see Genesis 21: 5); and Abraham was 75 years old when he was called (see Genesis 12: 4), and 100 minus 75 equals 25; and 25 plus 60 plus 130 equals 215. Then we have 215 years from the call of Abraham to the going down into Egypt, and 430 years for the sojourn, according to Hurlbut, which makes 215 plus 430 equals 645; and 2280 minus 645 equals 1635 years, as against 1483 for the Exodus and 1635 minus 1483 equals 152, which is too much by 152 years.

But let us begin at some fixed date, one that we all know to be correct.

For instance, let us take 711 B. C., or 3285 A. M., the date that the city of Samaria was taken by Sargon the Chaldean king (see 2 Kings 17: 6-23; also any good ancient history).

By looking through 2 Chronicles, and 1 Kings, you will find that thirteen of the nineteen Hebrew kings reigned 292 years; and, in Kings 6: 1, we have the words of Solomon to the effect that it was 480 years from the Exodus to the building of Solomon's temple. This should be conclusive.

I can give the reigns of those thirteen Hebrew kings, but will reserve it for another article on this subject. As above the reigns of those kings were 292 years, and 292 plus 480 plus 2513 equals 3285. 3996 minus 3285 equals 711; and 3285 plus 8, equals 3293; and 4004 B. C. minus 3293 equals 711.

Thus we see that Hurlbut is wrong from three different starting points; and figurings both from the creation and the reign of Hezekiah king of Judah. I can take the kings of Israel and figure backward to the same point, and also the reign of the judges which was 450 years. Now, shall we hang to an error, or shall we drop it and take up something that has been tried and found correct.

If the officers of the General Sunday School Association say that we are to hang to Hurlbut as regards his dates, etc., I prefer not to study the work, for I have found several places wherein he is wrong, not only in dates, but otherwise.

I have lately finished a system of chronology on the Bible and Book of Mormon which, I think, is nearer correct than anything I have ever seen. It is founded on astronomy and the equinoxes; and also, on the history of the Bible.

I hope that this article may, at least, set some of the leading lights of the church to looking this matter up, and that the leaders of the Sunday-school movement will, at least, discard everything in Hurlbut that is wrong. I shall then feel more than repaid for my trouble.

Yours for the truth,

W. C. FLANDERS.

MOUNTAINVILLE, Maine, October 1, 1907.

Editors Herald: As I pause for a few moments in the busy conflict of every-day life, and look back briefly over the ever-changing scenes of the years now gone for ever, and compare the past events in my life's history with the present, and the possible future, I feel to thank God very much from the very depth of my heart, for his unfathomable, unmeasurable goodness, love, and mercy to me, who am indeed unworthy of the least of these many blessings. And when I think, with a deep degree of sadness, of those years when I would not only refuse to accept this blessed latter-day gospel and work, but proved indeed a formidable enemy, moving strongly against it in word and deed, I often wonder why that dear Father's mercy was so extended, or his arm so held out as to cause me to at last be compelled, through the awakening of my deadened and darkened mind, to accept that which is now dearer and nearer than all else to me, and which has brought, in a few short years, more real, true, genuine peace, joy, and contentment into my life than I ever dreamed existed beyond the portals of heaven before. Oh, why is it, alas, true, that so many who are sin-sick, whose lives are so darkened, and who need just the thing which the gospel can and will supply to fill their every spiritual need and want—why is it they will persistently refuse to receive the truth into their lives, and close the heart's door to the knocking of the One who died for those in just their dying condition? If such could only know and feel for only a short time the unutterable peace and lasting satisfaction which come through obedience, and the natural result of the Holy Spirit's presence within, how many would accept this truth at once, and how eagerly they would demand admittance, instead of the labor now bestowed by our people to bring them in! I feel like saying in the words of David: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple."

The work here, I believe, is in many respects better than it has been, and we are hopeful for the future. While there is much of a discouraging nature, it is true, there is also much to be thankful for; and, between the clouds of despair and doubt, we now and then catch a glimpse of promising blue and genial sunshine. If only each member will see to it that his or her life is made clean and pure in God's sight, and that his or her example before the world is beyond reproach, it will not be long before the branch here (or anywhere) will be wonderfully improved and strengthened. A branch can never be better or stronger than the individuals who compose it. And in the degree that we advance along spiritual lines, in that degree will our branch be uplifted and purified. And the only way to do this is to study our church books and publications, and unceasingly watch and pray. May the dear Father help us to so desire, and, desiring, to work continually along these lines of spiritual success.

With an earnest desire for the prayers of the Saints everywhere, I remain,

Your brother in the faith,

WALLACE A. SMALL.

TULARE, California, September 30, 1907.

Editors Herald: I am here in Tulare again after an all summer's trip to the north, most of the time in Oregon, visiting many places where I had the honor of planting the standard of truth many years ago; and I saw quite a number of familiar faces, although now grown old and wrinkled by long service.

I spent about ten days with old Bro. and Sr. Morris, of Lebanon, Oregon. They are the first two that I led into the waters of baptism in that mission, and I can truly testify that it was a pleasure to meet with these old veterans, and find them not only strong in the faith of the restored gospel, but quite active bodily, considering the weight of years they carry.

I attended the reunion of the Western Oregon District, and it was a time of rejoicing for the Saints. We had with us Bro. E. Keeler, the hero of many battles for the truth, Bro. A. A. Baker and S. W. Condit, besides the local priesthood, and all seemed not only to enjoy the meetings, but to try to make others happy.

One little thing occurred near the close of the reunion that was especially interesting to me. It was on the 24th day of August, and the reunion closed the 25th. I noticed that the Saints were making an extra display with their dinner. Before this the Saints had taken their meals in their tents or their boarding-house; but on this occasion they had laid a long plank on the tops of the backs of seats in the big tent, and as I was sitting in the stand near one end of the table I could look along the whole length of the long tables, and I thought I never saw so much victuals put on a table for the number of Saints I supposed were to eat at that table, and in my mind I felt to condemn the act. I thought we were there to worship, and I thought, after partaking of such a rich repast we would be in poor condition to worship in spirit, as I knew we ought to worship. But while my mind was discussing the propriety or impropriety of such a dinner at such time, our venerable patriarch, E. Keeler, came to me and took hold of my arm and said: "Bro. Clapp, please come with me." And, knowing I would be in good hands, I yielded, and Bro. Keeler led me up just opposite a cake, which I will not attempt to describe further than to say that it was three or four stories high, and also very broad at the base. As we stopped the people all fell in line along the long table, and Bro. Keeler made a nice little speech in which a number of unmerited bouquets were thrown at me. He spoke of my early efforts in that country, and the great difficulty under which I had planted the standard in that country, and said as an evidence of the people's good will and confidence they had prepared that dinner for me, and as a further token of their appreciation of my labors they had also commissioned him to present me with a purse of money (which I found to contain six dollars and seventy-five cents). I did not think of it being my birthday that morning, although I knew and spoke of it the day before. But it was a great surprise to me, for I was not used to it. Although it was the seventieth birthday, it was the very first time any one ever paid any attention to it; so I was completely surprised.

I undertook to make a reply to Bro. Keeler's speech, but was hindered by a sudden abnormal growth that took place in my throat. But I could say, and do now say, "God bless the dear Saints of Oregon." Of course I immediately forgave them for the extravagant dinner, and felt very much chastened for finding fault with them in my mind, and I was glad to think I was accounted worthy the fellowship of such noble people; and I pray that the Lord will never allow them to lose sight of the great light that now beckons them on to salvation; and that I, erring as I am, may conduct myself in such a way that to the end I may retain their confidence and good will.

During our dinner we had a little merriment which you will allow me to relate. It is a custom among the people (as I learned at that dinner) to put a button in the cake, and the one who gets the button has to buy a present for the one whose natal day they are celebrating. When the cake was cut, Sr. Annie Giles said, "Now, Uncle Joe, I know you don't eat cake; but you must eat a piece of this one, for I made it especially for you" (and by the way let me say that Sr. Annie is no freshman at the business of cake-making). And of course I consented to sample the cake, but asked for a very small piece. When I broke it open, out rolled the button. As I had never seen the like before, I supposed the button had gotten in by mistake and sought to hide my discovery; but some one saw the button, and quite a bit of merriment ensued, and the laugh was all on me. I told them I would buy the present—I would buy myself a tin whistle when I got down to California.

It fell to my lot to make the closing speech of the reunion, which I did to the best of my ability. The crowd was very large, but orderly, and we think that we left an impression for good. I left early Monday morning, with Bro. S. J. Culver of Cumas Valley, to cross the coast mountains in his lumber wagon; and, although it was a hard ride of three days, we reached Rosebury in time for me to take the train for the Irvington reunion, where I landed in time for the opening of the meeting. I was weary and worn on account of much labor, having preached over seventy times, and baptized some, and done other church work according to my ability, but in spirit I was never better.

I suppose you have had reports from the reunion, and I shall only say it was a very enjoyable meeting. Peace and good will seemed depicted on all faces. The preaching was good; I may say very good from start to finish, unless we exclude just one sermon. With a heart full of love for Zion and her children, I am, as ever,

KANSAS CITY, Missouri, October 2, 1907.

Editors Herald: I moved from Utah about two weeks ago, and came here to Kansas City. Not being acquainted here, I write to the HERALD, thinking by so doing I may get help to find a position as barber in a barber-shop. I am not greatly experienced in the trade, but have been to the Moler Barber College for about three months. If unable to get a position in a barber-shop, I will take any light, respectable occupation, where rapid speaking is unnecessary. Having been a very severe stammerer, I am slow of speech, and would not accept a place where rapid speaking would be necessary.

Your brother in Christ,

OSCAR PETERSON.

CONDON, Oregon, October 7, 1907.

Editors Herald: We are still about the Master's business, doing whatever our hands find to do, though but little fruit is as yet in sight. We comfort ourself with the blessed fact that as far as sounding "the trumpet" is concerned, we try to have a conscience void of offence toward God and man, though of course man sometimes is offended when we "hew to the line."

Since my arrival in this field my lot has been mainly in Wallowa County, a very prosperous county, with a very enterprising people. Every opportunity to enlarge possessions is grasped with eagerness. Every moment is employed. The words of the Savior, "The night cometh when no man can work," will not apply to Wallowa County, and of course many other places in the Northwest. This labor for the "bread that perisheth" crowds out the time which should be employed in order to secure that which "endureth for ever." This condition prevails among Jews and Gentiles alike, so the lonely missionary becomes blue at times. However, am happy to state that through it all the Spirit of the Master has been my guide, and has led me to a few who would hear the word. Two precious souls obeyed the message; and if there is a great reward for one soul, there can not be a less reward for two.

I came to attend the district conference, which closed yesterday. Not many attended, but those that did seemed to enjoy the privilege. Bro. N. E. Austin was ordained an elder, Bro. J. Barr to the office of priest. The Spirit of peace, love, and unity was present throughout the session. The principal speaker was Bro. E. Keeler, whose forceful arguments and admonition were well received. Several patriarchal blessings were given to the joy of the recipients.

Since last meeting with the Condon Branch a marked change has taken place, which is due to the wise administration of the district president and the branch officers. Our prayer is for their success, in being instruments in the hands of God to purify the Saints, that they may present them spotless to the Lord at the crowning day that is coming by and by.

The Bishop's agent is looking after the Lord's storehouse, and his family are making themselves felt in actual branch service. The ladies' mite society is a power for good, and will receive many mites, when "the books" are opened.

In viewing what we have just penned, we feel encouraged, and intend to press onward with renewed vigor, and by the assistance of the good Spirit overcome whatever may confront us in the future.

Bro. Moore and the writer expect to return to Wallowa in a few days, where meetings have been arranged by Brn. Merryman and Feagins, who are the mainstays in a financial way in that region.

Your brother and colaborer in the Lord,

N. C. ENGE.

HECLA, South Dakota, September 28, 1907.

Dear Herald: As the Saints in general are interested in the progress of the gospel work, and what the men whom they send into the various fields are doing, I contribute my portion of news. It has been acknowledged by men who have been in the work for upwards of twenty years, that this part of South Dakota is the hardest mission they ever saw, so you need not be surprised when I tell you I have been unable to hold a week's uninterrupted meetings since June, 1906. Whether it is my fault, God knows. I have done what I could, and am willing to keep on trying; but do not know how long that willingness will hold out. I do not wish to be thought as complaining, for I know God is in this glorious latter-day work, whether the people are or not, and I want to be in it soul and body in whatever line of work God may want me to do. I know that God (with what efforts I can put forth) can qualify me for the work he wants me to do, so with the intention of doing my part, I, in company with my wife and other Saints, on May 30, went to Sioux City and attended the quarterly conference. Had an enjoyable and profitable session, in which the Saints were encouraged and strengthened, and friends made among non-professors. With many regrets I parted with the Saints there on June 3, and, with Bro. C. H. Anway and family, I rode across the country to their home at Akron, Iowa. I remained there and in that vicinity for two weeks and encouraged and instructed the Saints, and all who would listen. Through the efforts of Bro. Carl Mann I obtained a school-house five miles from town for services, and a home with a Methodist family who treated me fine; and I have a standing invitation to return. But on account of the busy season I was unable to get a sufficient crowd to justify my staying, so I closed the effort after four services.

I met with Bro. Ed. Daugherty and family on Sunday. Spoke to several of their neighbors who gathered at his home, which is always open for the ministers and for services.

On the 24th of June I went to Salem, and stayed two days with Bro. Lytle. Had a talk with some street-preachers who did not represent any organization. I got them to promise to read the Book of Mormon. I also met Bro. Rannie here, and in company with him proceeded to Bro. Booker's, near Spencer, where we had made arrangements for a two-day meeting of which you have had details. I feel some good was done, and friends made to the cause.

From here we went to the home of Bro. E. E. Willard, at Huron, who had just previously taken a partner for life, one of North Dakota's best young ladies, so he says, and when I enjoyed their hospitality, I was inclined to believe his statement. We stayed there a few days and enjoyed their fine home, and on the 6th of July Bro. Rannie went to Warrington, and I to Columbia. While waiting for "Nahum's chariot," at Redfield, to proceed on my journey, I inquired for a Bro. Burns, whom I had heard last year was going to move there, and found them to be nice young people, he being employed in a music store. I had a short but pleasant visit with them, and proceeded to Columbia. Had service on Sunday, and on the 12th returned to Redfield. The next day

Bro. Rannie came, and we proceeded to Clark, and to the home of Bro. J. J. Johnson, thirteen miles from town, where we had been invited. Friends were made, and an invitation extended to return. Bro. Rannie remained there till August 28, having meetings on Sunday eve. I left on the 5th for Columbia. It being harvest time, nothing could be done except on Sunday, and then but few to talk to, and they mostly too much occupied with their secular business to be much interested in the gospel of Jesus Christ. I talked the gospel whenever I could get the opportunity. Have sent in some subscriptions for the church publications, and have some more to send now.

I came here on the 23d of September, and unexpectedly met Bro. Sparling of North Dakota, and at present am with him, visiting the few Saints here and instructing them. They are young in the work, and eager to learn of the ways of the church; and it does them good to talk to the elders of the work. I can see their eyes shine and their faces light up with pleasure when new truths are shown them. Ah! there truly are comforts and blessings in the gospel that the world knows not of.

On Sunday, September 29, Bro. William Sparling baptized Sr. Mary Barry, wife of Bro. George I. Barry. Now their hearts beat in unison in the gospel light. She is a noble woman, and was led by an open vision to have Bro. Sparling baptize her; and in answer to her husband's prayers she was brought into the fold. She will be an honor to the cause, and her soul will rejoice in the Holy One of Israel. At three o'clock Bro. Sparling preached at a schoolhouse, instructing the Saints, after which I confirmed Sr. Barry, and at eight o'clock I spoke in the hall at Hecla with good liberty.

Monday morning, in company with Brn. Bierlein and Sparling, I went to Bro. Bierlein's home to administer to his daughter. I find them all good Saints, and my stay was all too short.

"How will the Saints rejoice to tell,
And count their blessings o'er,"

When they dwell safely in Zion. Then these pleasant associations will not come to such abrupt endings. I am anxious for the advancement and spread of the work. There are good Saints in this mission, and most of them isolated from church and Sunday-school privileges. They are pleased when an elder comes to see them. The opportunities for preaching to outsiders are very scarce, so the most we can do is to visit and instruct the Saints. I have not been in a church building since last May.

May God bless all his Saints and help them to be coworkers with him in the consummation of this grand work. I sincerely ask an interest in the prayers of all God's people. Still battling for the truth.

Statement of Healing.

I lived in Utah, north of Ogden, in the year 1869. I had left the Utah body, and had joined the Reorganized Church. There I knew a man named Nels Rasmussen, then forty-six years old. Since he was twenty-two years old he had been tormented with an evil spirit. He joined the Utah church and had a great desire to be made free from the evil power, so he went to Salt Lake City and into the tabernacle on Sunday. While there the evil spirit came upon him and he screamed very loud and made much commotion in the great gathering. Then Brigham Young gave command that he be thrown out and not be permitted to come in again, and it was done. If any of their elders had ever administered to him I do not know of it.

When he returned to where I lived, he came and stayed at my house five weeks. He suffered greatly every week, and sometimes it took him twice a week. Then he said he would try the Josephites and wait for Alexander and David Smith. I think they arrived in July, and he went immediately to the city, and there they administered to him according to the holy ordinance of the Lord. But the evil spirit stayed in him. Then David said to Alexander that it would not leave Bro. Rasmussen without they had fasting and prayer together; so they fasted and prayed and administered again, and the evil spirit departed from him. As soon as I saw Bro. Rasmussen I asked him about it and he told me. He said that when the spirit left him it used his tongue and spoke saying: "Now the sons of him that was martyred have come; I must leave you."

News From Branches

FIRST KANSAS CITY.

Sr. W. W. Blair, from Lamoni, is visiting with her children and relatives here. Her presence, and faithful testimony, are inspiring to us all, and we love to have her with us.

Bro. R. M. Elvin was with us College Day, and gave us a good college sermon, and we were all glad to have the privilege of assisting with our mites.

Our Sunday-school Christmas offering is growing nicely. We have only a small number of pupils (forty) and our collection for this year is nearly ninety dollars. Bro. D. H. Blair is quite active in that part of the good work.

Our preaching-meetings are well attended, and the preaching has been excellent. Besides our home talent, we have had Elders H. O. Smith and R. Etzenhouser. Bro. M. Leeton was ordained priest by Brn. Elvin and Winn.

Our city thronged with visitors to witness the carnival parades and stock show. It was grand in the extreme. But the many accidents that occurred on the crowded street-cars made it sad to many.

We are holding prayer-meeting every Tuesday evening at private houses a mile east of the church, and the result is good. Some outsiders meet with us, and enjoy the meetings very much.

The Sisters' Prayer Union meets Thursday at two o'clock. A good spirit prevails, and a lively interest is manifested.

I have been here (one hundred and sixty-five miles east of Denver) since September 29. I have preached every night and Sundays, and have celebrated one marriage.

Some are listening to the gospel restored, who have never heard it before.

Died.

COWLISHAW.—William C. Cowlshaw was born November 14, 1847, at Manchester, Lancaster County, England. Was baptized April 23, 1865, at St. Louis, Missouri, by Joseph Baugh. He was overcome with the heat August 30, and died August 31, not regaining consciousness during his illness. Funeral-services conducted from the Saints' church; discourse by J. A. Tanner.

CHURCH.—At Lamoni, Iowa, October 2, 1907, Sr. Sally E. Church, aged 86 years, 10 months, and 28 days. She was born in Portage County, Ohio, and married Horace Church in 1837. Of nine children, five died in childhood, and Sr. Carrie A. Thomas in 1883. Sr. Mabel E. Cochran, Edward C., and Charles F. Church are the surviving children. Her husband died in 1892. They obeyed the gospel in 1867. She was a worthy Saint, her life full of devotion and good works. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by C. H. Jones.

MERRILL.—At the home of his grandmother, Sr. N. S. Moses, in Santa Cruz, California, darling little Norman Moses Merrill, passed from a purifying baptism of suffering to the loving embrace of the Savior, September 3, 1907, at the age of 5 years, 18 days. He was the only child of Bro. and Sr. George D. Merrill, who feel the deep heart-wound of separation from their dear one. Bro. Jacob Smith spoke words of comfort at the funeral. How very dear the hope of the gospel under such conditions!

MOONEY.—Mr. James Mooney, born November, 1856, in Scranton, Pennsylvania; died October 1, 1907. He was the husband of our esteemed sister, Mary A. Mooney. He was brought up in the Catholic faith; but of late years made no profession. Prior to his death, he requested that his remains be buried in the Washburn Cemetery, which belongs to the Protestants. Scranton has always been his home. He leaves a wife, two stepsons, six stepdaughters, two brothers, and three sisters, and many friends to mourn. William Lewis in charge of funeral.

VAUGHAN.—William J. Vaughan, of Kimberly, Missouri, died September 7, 1907. Was born in Langeneach, Wales, in November, 1833. Came to America in 1854. He was married in July, 1864, to Mary Evans. Three children were born, to them, two of whom died in infancy. His wife died in 1870. Later he was married to Anna Jacoby. Of this union five children were born, three of whom survive him. The deceased professed faith in Christ when quite young, and united with the Reorganized Church, and lived a devoted member of that church until his death. Funeral-sermon by W. S. MacRae.

RIDOUT.—Ethel V., daughter of Elmer W. and Emily J. Ridout, died October 9, 1907, aged 4 months and 24 days. Funeral October 10, John Smith being the speaker, assisted by Eli Hayer.

JOHN.—Died at Florence, Colorado, August 9, 1907. Sr. Margaret John, wife of Mr. Thomas John. Born in Cumbach, South Wales, September 13, 1848. Came to United States in 1868, locating in Brookfield, Ohio. Baptized in 1874 by James Brown. Moved to Coalercreek, Colorado, 1883. She leaves a husband, eight children, and three adopted children. The local paper spoke very highly of her. The writer [William Lewis] knows her to have been a faithful Saint. Reverend Bell, of the Presbyterian Church, officiated at the funeral.

BENTLEY.—At Lamoni, Iowa, October 5, 1907, of cancer of the bowels, George H. Bentley, aged 35 years, 4 months, and 24 days. He leaves wife, three children, a mother, three sisters, and one half-sister. His father was killed in Michigan in 1880 by a falling tree. For nearly three years he suffered from the terrible disease, often with intense pain. In 1893 he married Sr. Hattie B. Butler. His mother is Sr. Eliza Shaw of St. Joseph. He was baptized in 1883, when eleven years old. H. A. Stebbins preached the funeral sermon; George Hicklin offered prayer.

What Books In Our Local Library.

Our great purpose is to become church members in the fullest and largest sense of the word—Zion. Hence no department of knowledge can be finally shut out, though in each department we never expect to have room except for the best books. Still, there are books of more importance to us just now. Many insist that the public library fills our needs. But the public libraries have not as a rule the books we most need; and again, what they have is often mixed up with the undesirable.

For home use our library should be complete as possible. Yet with the most earnest effort we can not all of us afford to buy all the church books at once. But acting together for the common good, there should be no branch without one complete collection of church books, which may be used for reference, study, and home examination by each and every one.

So all can not afford all the church papers. But acting together there should be no branch in which access can not be had to any church periodical. Nor should members cease subscribing. Many will want a home copy, but none should be without possible access to all church papers.

Then there are books of reference for the Sunday-school and Religio. For the Sunday-school: a good Bible encyclopedia, dictionary, concordance, and commentary; for the Religio: American Archaeology (see list in Sunday School Exponent, October, 1906), philosophy, Great World Religions; and for both: Teachers and Teaching, Normal work, Child Study, and the like.

In time, when our purse and time warrant, we shall want a general encyclopedia, general dictionary, histories, and some of the world's best literature. As we grow, our ability and needs will grow and we may take a much larger view. Many other subjects may be added as we go along,—and even now volumes picked up on the history of the church, including attacks thereon.

But at the very threshold another need appears, and that is for a select list of books for the children. To turn them loose to choose would certainly be a mistake, especially when so readily a good selection can be made for home use. We can afford to select the best of juvenile and fairy stories, histories, travel books, science books, nature studies—all written especially for children, and graded from imaginative period to history. This part is still under the direction of the stake or district library board, though the books while in any particular library will be in charge of the local board. In this way a larger selection can be made for the use of all the schools and branches in the district.

The General Librarians are preparing a suggestive list, giving title, author, publisher, price, and brief sketch of character of books, and they hope soon to have it ready for publication. This list will not only include juveniles, but books for local library as well. We want it to be but a nucleus, however, from which to grow. S. A. BURGESS.

information and suggestion as to how a winter may be spent to the best advantage in the Mediterranean countries. The trip was taken this year by the author of the article and the suggestions for a plan of route are such as can be carried out next winter. There are many steamship lines between ports in the Mediterranean, and a little preliminary care in selecting the order of use will greatly facilitate the traveler's journeying. The Calendar will give practically a six months' itinerary of time spent in the countries on the north and south coast from Gibraltar to Jerusalem. "Motoring in Italy" will dispel the fears of motorists who have been advised by pessimists that this is not a wise route. It is a delightfully written account of a veritable triumphal car on its way from "the border" to Naples. "Winter Sunlight in the Nile" weaves a spell under which readers in chill remote countries will live in fancy in the fairy winter land of the lotus. "Housekeeping in the Riviera" makes us feel that life has never been enjoyed quite to the full unless there is in one's own memory a gardened villa by a blue sea coast such as is described in this article.

In "Rambles in Rome" by Anne Hollingsworth Wharton, a prominent American writer on Italy gives a familiar account of the life of her own household during a season in the Eternal City. "A little journey in Greece" tells us the familiar classic paths about Athens and journeys inland, visiting the Meteora Monasteries in Thessaly. "The land of the garden of Allah" by Alice Lounsberry is the account of a trip taken by two women through Northern Africa from Tunis to Algiers. "Constantinople: the edge of the Orient" by F. L. Harding describes a little tour through the fascinating capital of the Ottoman Empire with a launch ride on the Bosphorus. "A month in Spain" by Frances E. Kraft is a trip from Gibraltar to Madrid through a land as yet unspoiled by tourists. "Italian Beggars" by Julian Street pictures the delightful pests that follow one everywhere in Italy. "Books of help on the Mediterranean trip" is a book review of all the latest books that serve as guides or lend interest to the Mediterranean.

Do Business Women Elevate Their Associates?

"One of the most vital results of the presence of women in business," says Anna Steese Richardson, in the Woman's Home Companion for October, "is the tendency of the average girl of natural refinement and good home training to harden and coarsen under the influences of store or office life than to raise the tone of her environment by her own gentle breeding.

"I believe there are women who exert a good influence in the offices and stores where they work, but they are the exception, not the rule. They have such nobility of character, such rare natures, that they would be a power for good anywhere, under any conditions. But, alas, the average woman wage earner has only the average moral and mental nature, and she can no more be a power for good in business than in the home. On the other hand, I firmly believe that the presence in business of thousands of silly, inexperienced, unbalanced girls is lowering the standard of manhood and womanhood all over the land. Barrier after barrier is going down before the familiarity of business life, and already many of the large corporations, like the life-insurance companies, have found it necessary to segregate the men and women during the working hours, to supply them with separate offices, separate lunch rooms, separate elevators. Does this look as if the refining, elevating influence of women had stood the test of a generation of freedom and equality in the wage-earning field?"

A Japanese Statement of Japan's Case in Korea.

We shall be frank about it,—we shall say that we are carrying things with a high hand in Korea. We have gone over into the back yard of our neighbor, and are telling him to kindly move on,—simply because we need his home. We are doing this just as the Americans have done to the Indians, the rightful owners of America; just as the British have done to the Hindus; just as the Russians have done to the Tartars and the Chinese; as Germany in Africa, and Kiau Chau and France in Cochinchina and northern Africa have done. Nippon has joined the household of great powers; she has become civilized.

When England absorbed India, her home isles contained about 16,000,000 people; when Russia played her clever game, through Muraviev, and ran away with the treaty of Aigun and with Siberia, she was supporting about 68,000,000 people on her five million square miles; when Kaiser Wilhelm heard from the gods of his ancestors that he was to be the military Emmanuel to the benighted African races, and forthwith went down there to establish an empire in the name of all the Christian virtues, Germany had less than 40,000,000 people on 208,830 square miles. Now Nippon goes over to Korea. She is supporting about 50,000,000 people on about 160,000 square miles, of which the possible arable land is less than 20 per cent., and the actual cultivation is 13.8 per cent., that is to say, about 15,000,000 acres. She has heard the logic of necessity.—From "The Japanese in Korea," by Adachi Kinnosuke, in the American Review of Reviews for October.

Keep Your Eyes Bright.

Eyes red from over-use are not pretty to look at. Preventive measures are always more easy than corrective ones, and in this respect there are many "don'ts" which may be observed with satisfactory results. Here are a few:

Don't read facing the light. Don't read with the head lowered. Don't read on a moving train. Don't read while you rock. Don't tax the eyes when you are tired. Don't use the eyes if they smart. Don't face the wind on dusty days without glasses. Don't squint; it weakens the eyelids. Always hold a book on a level with the eyes, and with the light coming over the left shoulder.—From Home Department, in National Magazine for October.

When Wall Street Cries "Wolf, Wolf."

Wall Street sometimes cries out panic, panic, when there is no panic. It is to the interest of some speculators to make the public and the other speculators believe that the business outlook is dark, and that the conditions will be still worse three or six months hence. And not all those prophets of disaster belong to the element who are always and under all circumstances bears.

Now I am not going to make any attack on Wall Street. As the designation is popularly used, there are two "Wall Streets." At one of these Wall Streets there are cliques of gamblers or wreckers who sometimes raid the exchanges and send quotations up or down sharply, without any regard for basic values. That is the Wall Street which, on May 9, 1901, on March 14, 1907, and on many like occasions, made forays on the market, in which securities rose or dropped spectacularly, irrespective altogether of intrinsic worth, and in which fortunes were made or lost in a few minutes. That is the Wall Street which the public has in mind when it condemns that place. That, too, is the Wall Street which is doing most, though not all, of the pessimistic talking about the business outlook in 1907.

The other Wall Street is the point to which a large part of the country's surplus cash gravitates for employment when it fails to find profitable work to do at home; the place from which most of the country's larger enterprises are financed; the locality which talks and acts for the United States in all its great financial transactions with Europe, Asia, and the rest of the world. That is the real and the greater Wall Street.—From "Why prosperity will continue," by James W. Van Cleave, President of the National Association of Manufacturers, in The Circle for October.

Open accounts can be placed with us for safety at your convenience and command. We have opened a savings department, paying interest on accounts of $1 or more and each member of the family should become interested in having a bank account building for future needs. We also pay interest on time deposit certificates. A number of the brethren are living here, others are looking forward to this location as a future home, and late revelation and admonition foreshadow coming events, adding materially to our spiritual holdings necessary to signs of the times, and in this connection our Board of Directors propose to safeguard the financial interests of the Saints by offering to them a depository proof against graft, greed, or calamity, governed by a kindred feeling born of the interest we have in common. It is not popular men, large capital, heavy deposits, National or State laws, that offer absolute security to depositors, but directors and officers progressive and conservative, possessed of the virtue of true manhood, shorn of all political ambition, with no taste for frenzied finance or mining speculation, and no inclination to furnish funds for others in that line. ### THE STUDY OF MAN.

A man's ledger does not tell what he is, or what he is worth—count what is in man, not what is on him, if you would know what he is worth, whether rich or poor.—Beecher.

There is no study so fascinating and absorbing as the study of mankind. No book can beguile the hours of waiting at a depot, on the street, or in any public place, with such varied amusement and information as is gained in the mere watching of men and women. From outward manifestations, as individuals meet different problems, we come to an understanding of the inner man, the man that often seeks concealment; from what we see we judge of that which we do not see.

Yet we must ever bear in mind that our own defects may render our judgment faulty, and we should exercise a sweet and wholesome charity toward the objects of our scrutiny. No one understood human nature better than Christ understood it, yet he gave man a sympathetic study and was tolerant of his shortcomings, and he urges us to avoid an unrighteous judgment. Also in view of our liability to err we may well afford to keep our opinions of individuals to ourselves, excepting on occasions when justice demands that we express ourselves, and until developments have fully determined the correctness of our conclusions.

The opening words of the seventh chapter of Matthew, as they stand in the King James Version, "Judge not, that ye be not judged," convey a wrong idea. Literally interpreted they forbid any attempt to recognize good men or to detect bad men, and leave us the victims of false and designing individuals, and without the privilege of observing and appreciating the true and good. They enjoin an impossibility, because our intuitions will form some estimate of men whether we will or no.

The true rendering of the Master's words is found in the Inspired Version: "Judge not unrighteously, that ye be not judged; but judge righteous judgment." No man has the right to forbid the exercise of our judgment. God himself did not venture to do that—the commandment is that we shall not judge in certain ways, and the one following it is just as much a commandment, namely, that we shall judge. It is an obligation to avoid judging unrighteously; it is an obligation to judge righteously.

The study of human nature then is a legitimate study, and it is legitimate to arrive at conclusions as a result of that study. True, the use we make of these conclusions may result in harm, and may place us among the law-breakers, ourselves,—scandal-bearers, etc.; but it is equally true that a wise use of our conclusions, as they result from study, may result in good, both to ourselves and to the church or community.

Surely no Latter Day Saint will contend that he is justified in passing a harsh or unrighteous judgment on any individual; yet we do not all always abide one of the conditions that will prevent such an undesirable act. We refer to the fact that we must first secure clear spiritual vision. We may detect the presence of the mote in our brother's eye, but the beam in our own eye distorts it and perhaps hides some desirable qualities in our brother's makeup. The Master says, "First cast out the beam out of thine own eyes; and then shalt thou see clearly."

Charity is not blind. We could not be said to bear with one another's faults if we were ignorant of the existence of those faults or were unable to see them. Indeed true charity at times recognizes a fault and administers a severe yet needed correction. Yet "charity suffereth long, and is kind;" and, though not blind or deaf, or for that matter dumb, can see with a sympathizing eye, hear with a pitying ear, and if necessary keep a still tongue.

Probably all men are worth studying, yet naturally they fall more or less into two classes. By studying the average, ordinary man, we gather some idea of the advancement of the race as a whole, and of its present social and moral standing, because he represents the masses. What he does and thinks, others are doing and thinking. When we succeed in understanding and reaching him, we can succeed in reaching others. By observing the other class, the extraordinary, those above or below the average in any way, we have a projection of what the race would be if lifted up to that plane or if dragged down to that level, as the case may be. We can form some idea of how very important it is to work for the uplifting of men and to avoid that which degrades.

Perhaps the most pleasing and profitable field of study is found in the character of those persons who have accepted the gospel and are really trying to live in harmony with its laws. In them we can see the fulfillment of the promise made to Joseph, regarding Christ, "He shall save his people from their sins." This is one of the Bible promises that can be put to a test.

In fact in individual cases we see evidences of the truthfulness of the old Bible doctrines of the fall of man and the redemption of man. We note, perchance, a young man who has a strong mentality and is possessed of many excellent traits. Yet he is controlled by base passions, depraved appetites, and filthy habits that keep him far below the plane that he is otherwise fitted to occupy. He is a living witness that man has fallen. He is one of millions who are living far below where they might be. This young man accepts the gospel, and through its power and by virtue of living its precepts he becomes a better man, a better citizen; he rises to the plane that his mentality fits him to occupy. He then becomes a witness of the redemption. So in human nature we see the field of God's greatest operations. Another exhibit is brought into the court to support God's side of the controversy.

The study of man is an excellent remedy for self-conceit. The man who ignores others and thinks all the time about his own personality soon assumes an undue importance in his own estimation. But when we look about us we easily find so many men who are greater than we, on one or more counts, that we can maintain a reasonable degree of humility.

Even a casual glance at the passing throng fills one with wonder at the diverse individualities that go to make up the world. Surely it is a great God who can rule and at last justly judge all these varying entities.

In the light of these facts, and of others that immediately come to mind, we can see that it is not only pleasant but profitable for those who are engaged in redeeming men to study men.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

GENERAL CHURCH ITEMS.

Elder F. M. Smith writes, "It may be of interest to note that while President Smith is in Honolulu to be present at the church dedication, Bishop Kelley is in Brooklyn to attend like ceremonies, and President Evans is somewhere in Canada to make a few more. Rather an indication that we are spreading out somewhat in our work."

The church dedication at Honolulu occurred October 13, President Joseph Smith, Apostle F. M. Sheehy, and Elder G. J. Waller officiating. The sermon was by President Smith, the dedicatory prayer by Elder Sheehy. Elder Waller presented the key to President Smith, as representative of the Bishop, and he returned it to Elder Waller to be used by and for the local congregation. The total cost of the new church is about seven thousand dollars, and it is free from debt. The Honolulu Advertiser has a three column account of the affair, and the senior Editor has sent in an article describing the services, which will appear next week. It arrived a little too late to appear in this issue, as the HERALD is made up early this week, preparatory to moving into the new office.

Our young elders show a commendable willingness to comply with the instruction of the Twelve to go out "two by two." October 25, Elder James E. Kelley, son of William H. Kelley, left Lamoni for Bayard, Nebraska, where he is to enter the active missionary work. With him went Sr. Audentia M. Hayer; known since the above date as Sr. James E. Kelley. Sr. Kelley is the daughter of Bro. and Sr. Lorenzo Hayer. It is a pleasure to see the young people of the church moving out into active church work, taking up the work of their fathers in harmony with the revelation of 1897. Some years ago we noticed a complaint in one of the organs of the Utah church that when their missionary lads returned from the field they often found the girl of their choice wedded to some one else who could offer financial inducements. Our girls do better than that, they are ready to bear their share of the hardships, and if necessary go with their missionary lads.

At the Lamoni Stake conference, October 26, President John Smith presented the name of Elder John Garver for ordination to the office of counselor in the stake presidency. The recommendation was approved and Bro. Garver was ordained at the Sunday afternoon prayer-meeting.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

The elders are giving considerable attention to the literature that they use in connection with their gospel campaigns. Bro. William Lewis (among others) has recently mailed us samples of his work in that line. His tract is brief, neatly gotten up, and of convenient size—four pages, three by five inches in size. The cover (of an attractive color) bears the title, "Only one church of Christ;" and the additional title, "There are many churches of men." Upon the back is the motto, "Our creed all truth. Open Bible. Free Pulpit." We give the contents below:

ONLY THE ONE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

There were many churches of men in the days of our Savior and his apostles, but they were not approved by the Lord; if they were, there would have been no need of Christ to establish his, and send his ministers into all the world, promising salvation to all that believe and obey his commandments. There are many churches of men in this age, teaching conflicting creeds, which is displeasing to the Lord. "Be ye one, as I and the Father are one,"—Jesus. "Now I besech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you."—1 Corinthians 1:10. "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."—2 John 9. In Hebrews 6:1, 2, we learn of six of the principles of the doctrine of Christ: "Faith," "repentance," "baptisms, of the water and of the spirit," (see John 3:5) "laying on of hands," "resurrection," and "eternal judgment." It is inconsistent and unjust to expect that the Lord will approve of the various conflicting creeds of this age and condemn them in other ages. Consistency is a jewel; it's name is not, pardon me for saying, Sectarianism, for it promises salvation, in the divided conflicting condition. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."—Proverbs 16:25.

Excuse not yourself by saying, "I have my own church, and shall not attend any other." A committee of ministers called on President Abraham Lincoln at the outbreak of the Civil War. They expressed sympathy with the administration, and said, "We shall pray that the Lord will come on our side." "Not so, gentlemen, let us get on the Lord's side," was the wise President's reply. It has been the mistake of man all along the ages to set stakes and invite the Lord to come to them, rather than to go to the Lord. Such is the condition of the religious world to-day. Be wise, heed the injunction of the apostle Paul: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."—1 Thessalonians 5:21. "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord."—Isaiah 55:8.

We believe in God the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost. (See Hebrews 11:6; John 14:1; Matthew 3:11; John 3:5; Acts 1:5.)

That through the atonement of Christ all men may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel. (See Romans 5:11.)

That these ordinances are: 1. Faith in God and in the Lord Jesus Christ. 2. Repentance. 3. Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins. 4. The laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, for healing the sick, for the blessing of children, and for ordination. (See Hebrews 6:1, 2; Mark 1:4, 5; Luke 3:3; John 3:23; Romans 6:3-5; Acts 8:17, 19, 6, 7; Matthew 19:14, 15; Mark 18:16; 16:18; Acts 9:17, 18, 13, 2, 3.)

We believe in the first and second resurrection, that the dead in Christ will rise first, and that the rest of the dead will not come forth until the thousand years are expired. (See John 5:25, 29; 1 Thessalonians 4:16; Revelation 20:4, 5, 6.)

That all shall be rewarded or punished, according to degree of good or evil they shall have done. (See Matthew 16:27; 1 Corinthians 3:8; Revelation 22:12.)

We believe in the same kind of church organization that was established by Christ and his apostles, viz.: apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, bishops, elders, and deacons. (See 1 Corinthians 12:28; Ephesians 4:11; Acts 14:23; Philippians 1:1.)

We believe in the powers and gifts of the gospel, faith, healings, prophecy, tongues, interpretation of tongues, visions, and dreams. (See 1 Corinthians 12:1, 12; Mark 16:16, 19; Joel 2:28.)

We believe that man must be called of God, and ordained by the laying on of hands by those who have authority, before he is entitled to preach the gospel and minister in the ordinances thereof.

We believe that the canon of scripture is not full; that God by his Holy Spirit, and angelic ministrations, will continue to reveal his word to men. (See Amos 3: 7; Malachi 3: 6; Hebrews 1: 13; Acts 2: 38.)

We believe that marriage is ordained of God, and that this law of God provides but for one companion in wedlock, for either man or woman, except in case where the contract of wedlock is broken by death or transgression. (See Genesis 2: 24; Mark 10: 6; Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6-9.)

THE NAME OF THE CHURCH.

"And it came to pass that as the disciples of Jesus were journeying and were preaching the things which they had both heard and seen, and were baptizing in the name of Jesus, it came to pass that the disciples were gathered together, and were united in mighty prayer and fasting. And Jesus again shewed himself unto them." "What will ye that I shall give unto you?" he said unto them. "And they said unto him, Lord, we will that thou wouldst tell us the name whereby we shall call this church; for there are disputations among the people concerning this matter. And the Lord said unto them, Verily, verily I say unto you, why is it that the people should murmur and dispute because of this thing? Have they not read the scriptures, which say, Ye must take upon you the name of Christ, which is my name? for by this name shall ye be called at the last day; and whoso taketh upon him my name, and endureth to the end, the same shall be saved at the last day; . . . therefore ye shall call the church in my name; and ye shall call upon the Father in my name, that he will bless the church for my sake, and how be it my church, save it be called in my name? For if a church be called in Moses' name, then it be Moses' church; or if it be called in the name of a man, then it be the church of a man; but if it be called in my name, then it is my church, if it so be that they are built upon my gospel."—Book of Mormon, 3 Nephi 12: 3.

I do not wish to pose as a prophet, neither am I seeking the title of "crank" or "calamity crier"; but it seems to me that we may be falling into the habit that may drift us upon dangerous ground when we publicly or privately call the true church of Jesus Christ by the name of the Latter Day Saints. Is it not one of the common errors of all other churches to have a wrong title to their church for them to be the real church of Jesus Christ? Among the many churches we find a great variety of names, such as may have seemed appropriate according to the ideas
