Reorganized Church be established at Nauvoo. This petition was signed by a list three and a half yards long, and included the names of nearly all the leading business, professional, and laboring men of the city and immediate vicinity. Does not this indicate a praiseworthy change in the attitude of the people? And are not the children of Joseph Smith and the true Latter Day Saints who have associated with them to be congratulated that by their good morals and upright citizenship they have commanded the respect of the children of those who killed their fathers? A religion that can stand the test of time will not fail to attract the attention of the world, and when falsehood, ignorance, and prejudice have been exchanged for truth, knowledge, and justice, the names of Joseph and Hyrum Smith will appear in honor; and in the ages of time to come, many who may read of the tragic event of their death will recognize them as prophets of the Lord and martyrs of the true Christian faith.

THE TOMB OF THE MARTYRS.

By Eleanor Waldorf Kearney.

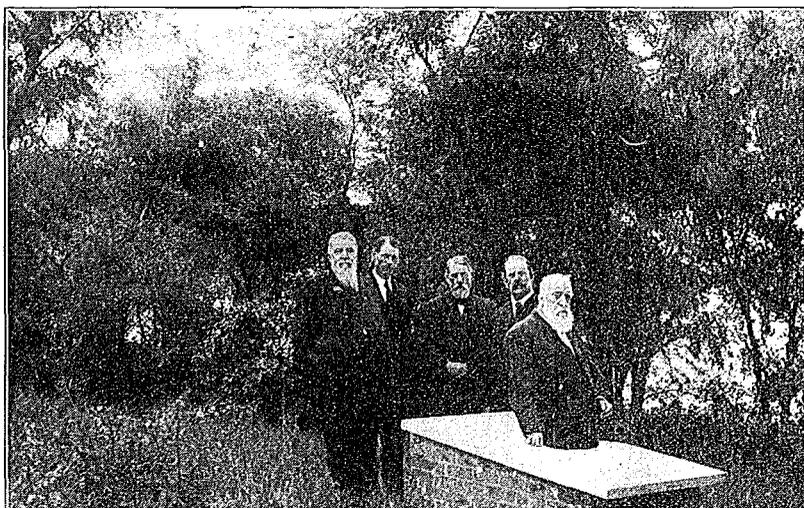

We stood beside the Martyrs' tomb,
And thought upon the day
When here amid the summer bloom
Sad hearts laid them away.
Flowers were blossoming as fair,
The trees as deeply green,
But veiled in woe's black despair.
June's beauty was unseen.

In secret and in fear they made
The Martyrs' lonely tomb,
Here tenderly the dead were laid,
'Neath night's shadowing gloom.
Near by the mighty waters flow,
Like sentries guarding trust;
Flowers and trees luxuriant grow,
Nourished in sainted dust.

Reverently we bowed our heads,
An holy influence near,
It seemed that angel voices said:
"Behold! they are not here";
They are not here, though here entombed,
These martyred Saints of God;
Like as the grass that here has bloomed
Has sown its seed abroad,

So friendly winds o'er sea and land

These sacred atoms bear,
And where they rest upsprings a band
Of noble Saints and fair.
Assassin hands these Martyrs slew,
But truth was never slain,
And where two fell a thousand grew,
The witness to maintain.

AT THE TOMB OF THE MARTYRS.

This illustration shows the committee on the erection of a monument. They are standing by the tomb of Emma Smith Bidamon. Joseph and Hyrum rest side by side in the neighborhood. The song, "The Unknown Grave," in another part of this issue, took its theme from the fact that for many years the exact location of the grave of the Prophet Joseph Smith was kept secret, and in fact to-day the exact location is known only to the family and a few friends.

And, reader, is it not rather strange that the citizens of Nauvoo and vicinity should recently propose to assist in building a monument to the memory of the martyrs whose blood was shed by their fathers? Such is the case. More than this, in 1877 the "citizens of Nauvoo and surrounding country" framed a petition asking that the headquarters of the "Except a corn of wheat shall die

It must remain alone,"
Dying it grows to multiply
Till full fruition's shown.
"Truth crushed to earth shall rise,"
The seed of martyrs grow,
And in all lands beneath the skies
The harvesting will show.

SIDE BY SIDE.

By Vida E. Smith.

Side by side, two boys they played,
Side by side in manhood prayed;
Side by side defended right,
Side by side felt rest or flight.
'Mid joy or persecution sore
The banner of the Christ they bore.
Side by side on that dark day,
All innocence, they rode away
Across the hills that summer time,
When bird and flower were tune and rhyme,
And only friends were dumb
To Earth's sweet call and Nature's hum.
Side by side and hand in hand
They prayed in that fair sunlit land,
Until—! a few short hours and now
No pulsing breast, no soul-lit brow

Yet side by side they bear them slow,
How sad the low-voiced carriers go
Across the June-green, hill-crowned way
To where the sweet home shadows lay;
Then side by side let softly down
In yonder gloom-enshrouded town.
Down, down to sleep, left side by side
Close where the mighty waters glide.

The years go by—half hundred more;
By kind old earth all covered o'er
Their ashes lie, who shall decide
They sleep not on,—thus, side by side?
Ye who would bear from one
The powdered dust or moldering bone
Of brothers—stay, let fall thy hand.
On this dear spot let memory stand
In shaft or column or low stone,
Where brother's bone with brother's bone
Has lain for years; let them abide
In life, in death, thus, side by side.

THE DIRECTOR.

By Estella Wight.

(1 Nephi 5: 11, 32-36; New Edition.)

Long ago, in the still watches of the night, the prophet Held discourse sweet with God most high within his humble tent,
Till the night shades passed away without, and within Came light of morning sun. Then forth the prophet went,

And, lo! close beside his door a wondrous instrument of brass
Lay glist'ning in the morning sunlight on the dull gray sands;

A ball of workmanship most strange to earthly sight,
And strange as well to touch or skill of human hands.

Slowly Lehi turned, and, lifting up the glittering ball, Beheld two spindles, carved with care divine from finest brass,
Designed to lead his band of wand'ring Abraham
Through years of journ'ing in an eastern wilderness.

And, praising God, the prophet took the wondrous gift divine,
And thence through fertile spots the way the strange director led,
And by the sea's broad shore, where cool and soft the breeze,
And sweet the tropic's fruits a bounteous harvest spread.

And when in need of earthly good, or clearer, fuller sight
Of God's commands and laws and ever righteous ways, there came,
According to their faith and diligence and prayers,
Upon the shining spindles, writings new and plain.

And so through desert fields, and by still waters oft it led,
And 'cross wide-rolling seas, storm-tossed or calm, till new strange lands
And promised hills with vision clear and glad they viewed,
And pressed at last with weary feet its wave-washed sands.

So are we led, though mayhap not by spindles turning oft,
Nor by an instrument of burning brass or shining gold,
Nor by strange writings, howsoever new and plain,
As patriarch and prophet in the days of old.

But by the whisperings of that pure Spirit that comes oft
In stilly night, or in the noisy throbbings of the day,
Or by the unseen hand that gently leads us out
Through desert wild, by waters still, or troubled way.

By storm and tempest tossed, still by our faith and diligence
He points the way, as surely as he then on spindles fine
Of burnished brass did write in language clear and plain
The outlines of his righteous will and laws divine.

Still on and on, till in the light of some bright evening star
Or crimson dawn, we catch the vision of the far-off strand
Of that fair country, whither our director true
Has safely guided our frail barks—the promised land.

JOSEPH SMITH; HIS REAFFIRMATION OF THE ETERNAL VERITIES.

Eternal truth! What is truth? The world has been asking itself this question through all of its existence, and has been giving itself answers to its every question. Some of these answers have not been very satisfactory for long, excepting to a few, while other answers have served for the satisfaction of many, for centuries. As we turn over the pages of ancient and modern history, we readily come to the conclusion that man has been struggling with earthly uncertainties.

Theories that were the foundation of the faith of nations; hypotheses upon which had been built intellectual structures that were perfect in logic, have not stood the onslaught of subsequent investigation, and the beautiful structures have fallen with the crumbling foundations.

There are, however, certain self-evident truths which have to do with human life that need no essayist, and have been always known—effects with well-known causes. These with such glimmerings buried and ruined cities tell of a greatness that has passed, a civilization of the Middle Ages' highest genius; temples of stone and gold bear witness of worship and established priesthood.

To-day we have a new race; a new civilization; new standards of justice, of religion, of living; new luxuries; new poverities, undreamed of by an unawakened and more contented proletariat of former times; new women and new children. This complex and wonderful modern structure of civilization is built upon a hypothesis wrought out of human experience. Had human experience been more with God, together with such lessons as success and failure teach, the foundation and structure of this

of the divine light as man's inner consciousness has been able to perceive through the film that sin has caused to grow over his eyes, have been as a lubricant to the wheels of the social machinery. Error, mixed with the oil of truth, has gummed the lubricant in machines that ran swiftly; some have gone dry and have fallen to pieces.

In Egypt the desert silence reigns where stand ruins of temples and monuments which speak to the traveler in mute eloquence of a day when proud princes rode in chariots through these once wealthy and beautiful cities, and of multitudes of toiling slaves who bore the burden of it all.

In our own Americas,

"The voice of Michael on the banks of the Susquehanna, detecting the Devil when he appeared as an angel of light. The voice of Peter, James, and John, in the wilderness between Harmony, Susquehanna County, and Colesville, Broome County, on the Susquehanna River, declaring themselves as possessed of the keys of the kingdom, and of the dispensation of the fullness of times."—Joseph Smith in Times and Seasons, vol. 3, pp. 935, 936.

The student of history who is observant of present-day conditions can not fail to see that the foundation of present-day society is sinking beneath the weight of the structure man is building—"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."—1 Corinthians 3: 11.

And now we get to the foundations and fundamentals; to eternal truths; to those great principles that God, who made our earth and us, is most desirous that we should know. All things else would then fall into place—"be added."

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness [to establish it] and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matthew 6: 33.

Said Daniel Webster: "Philosophical argument, especially that drawn from the virtues of the universe, in comparison with the aparent insignificance of this globe, has sometimes shaken my reason for the faith which is in me; but my heart has always assured and reassured me that the gospel of Jesus Christ must be a divine reality. The sermon on the mount can not be a merely human production. This belief enters into the very depth of my conscience. The whold history of man proves it."

Yes, the whole history of man, which has been one of blood and violence, greed and self-aggrandizement, proves the cause of fallen empires and blasted hopes; proves that love and goodness alone will endure.

Three things revelation teaches: God is Father and King; he is our Lawgiver, and all men are brothers. As Father and King, the race should love and respect him; first of all because of its relationship to him; also, because his wonderful love and majesty should make it impossible for us to withhold our love and veneration.

As our Lawgiver, we should make his law a basis of all government, and his counsel should be woven into the whole social fabric. As a brotherhood, men should love each other. Love worketh no harm. Love seeketh not its own but its neighbor's good. Love would establish equal opportunity for all. Revelation teaches it.

Ages of war, transient glories, and human miseries, instead of bringing man to a sense of his helplessness and of his need of the Creator's help, has led a large number of both educated and ignorant men to deny the very existence of their heavenly Father. We find atheism and agnosticism very prevalent in our present age.

Among others, God is believed to exist, but far away among the dead. With lips he is honored; but hearts are set upon earthly treasures, and God is not expected to interfere in human affairs. When the earth was young, sacred history tells us that God took an active interest in his little family: directing, warning of dangers and of the results of broken law, promising blessings as the result of obedience.

Through the early patriarchs, God kept affirming and reaffirming the fact that he lives—"As I live, saith the Lord"; that he is the rock, the foundation for all human building; that his revelation is man's law, and that the government built upon it and kept by it will endure for ever. Earliest revelation foretold earth's future King in whose mouth God's word would be found. All revelation spoke of God's fatherhood and man's brotherhood. In the light of revelation, brotherhood means equality, socially and politically; economically, it means equality of opportunity.

Through four thousand years of Bible history God affirmed and reaffirmed these great truths, the ignorance of which was causing nations to perish. At last he gave the world a glimpse of its future King in the person of his Son. He reaffirmed the teachings of past witnesses whom God had sent, and as the word of truth incarnate, he furnished much detail of living near to God and for each other, that had been lost in the march of centuries. He knew that his kingdom would suffer violence and the violent would take it by force; and yet he knew that it would leave a seed that could not be destroyed, and that the light that it shed would not be altogether incomprehensible to the children of men. He taught men the lessons of love by precept and example. Hear him: "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my disciples fight."

If it was of this world he would have occupied a throne surrounded with pomp and glory; the taxation of his people would have contributed to the splendor of his court; his ministers would have been under-lords, differing in wealth and splendor only in degree; his laws would have recognized no higher authority than his human self. As it was, he said, "The birds of the air have nests and the foxes have holes, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." Yet he was a King and came into the world to bear witness of the truth.

His kingdom was in the world but not of it. To his officers in government he said, "Let him who would be greatest among you be the servant of all." Of them he said, They were in the world but not of it: "They are not of the world even as I am not of the world."—John 17: 15-17. They were his witnesses—witnesses to the kingdoms of men that the kingdom of God was at hand, and that they should seek to establish it first, whereupon, all the happiness and prosperity they had vainly sought through the medium of man's government would be added unto them.

The law of God's kingdom is the law of righteousness, God's right way of doing all things. The gospel would be an imperfect system if it did not apply to every human necessity, to all things that concern us. It is "the perfect law of liberty." It reveals the eternal truth: "The word of the Lord endureth for ever, and this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you."—1 Peter 1: 25. It came "not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." The Holy Spirit in human life would bring love and peace. Where much assurance would be, perplexity and fearful apprehensions would depart.

Following the example of Jesus, the meek and lowly, the lords of earth would be engaged in a loving service to all. The talented and successful men of business would impart their abundance to the common good, that all might enjoy the earth's increase (Ecclesiastes 5: 8-13) and have equal opportunities. Then the recognition of God as King would be the recognition of his right to command and to continue to command. This he does through human agencies of his own choosing. To his ministers Jesus said, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you."—John 15: 16. In his prayer to his Father he said, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world."—John 17: 18.

Where God's kingdom (his officered and peopled church) exists, its King will never be silent. At times when "violence took it by force," and imitations sprang up, the king was silent. As Father, we recognize in him love supreme—an active, working love; an intense interest in our affairs, manifest in fatherly counsel when we will believe in him and seek his counsel in his own way.

As for brotherhood, history proves that something has been lacking in our nature as well as in our mental ability to solve our own problems, else the history of the race would not be one of wolfish fierceness; of the fall of men and nations before the sword. Neither would we see the greed that has marked the whole industrial effort. Man knows not how to love his brother as he ought, only as he becomes acquainted with God and with Christ, that great Lover of man, and partakes of the divine nature.

Since the morning time of the world the heavenly Father has been pleading through his prophets for the heart of man, so that he could teach him his ways and give him happiness. This selfish, sinful human nature must be changed, regenerated. "We must be born again," said the Master.

The King of Glory came; manifested God in the flesh in wonderful wisdom and gentleness; he was rejected of the world and was slain. To as many as received him, he gave power to become the sons of God; citizens of his kingdom, heirs of his own degree of glory. To them he promised that when the world sank under its own weight because of the insecurity of its foundation he would give unto them the kingdom of earth when he would return to his glory. Then would be joined in one the lovers of God and man of all ages; and in that kingdom "nothing would hurt or destroy." (Isaiah 11: 9; Matthew 5: 5.)

The signs of our times, viewed not only in the light of prophecy, but in the light of history, reveal the fact that the whole world is approaching a momentous day. The spirit of unrest is world-wide. Confidence of man in man is shaken. Governments are changing and tottering. Men no longer accept their station in life as their normal position; the most unlettered and uncultured man looks upon the scholar and prince with swaggering familiarity and with a glitter of greed in his eyes. Thoughtful working men look fearfully upon the unequal conditions of men and upon the class hatred, engendered by inequality and fanned to a mighty flame by demagogues and pseudo-statesmen.

It is a day of extremes, of for or against. Middle ground is a desert place. The golden mean is the path which the sage walks alone. Activity smiles and chooses the two outlying broad roads. It is a day of doing, of quantity. Quality will come with the kingdom that Isaiah saw. Quality will come with love and personal goodness, with King Jesus. Has the Christian world forgotten the example of him they honor? Have the rich forgotten his words? "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."—Luke 12: 15. Do the poor bring in remembrance his answer to the man who asked him to speak to his brother that he might divide his inheritance?—"Who made me a judge and divider over you? . . . Take heed and beware of covetousness."—Luke 12: 14, 15.

Does the world know that their day of sorrow, such as was not since there was a nation until this time, draweth nigh? (Daniel 12: 1-4.) Does it know that he is coming to judge the world? Where, O God, is the door of escape? Where are thy witnesses of these great things? Do we look for them among the spiritually impotent shepherds who feed not the flock, but themselves; among such as know thee only through dead witnesses who left a record behind? Or do we, Lord, look for living witnesses—for a new manifestation of thy kingly prerogative to command, and of that Fatherhood which proves itself in its activities toward the deliverance of those who call upon thee?

In this age of "higher" criticism in which the simple teachings of Jesus of Nazareth seem to need an apologist who can make them fit the twentieth century thought and twentieth century convenience, where is the fearless witness of God who will reaffirm the old truth, point out the old, old path that Jesus walked? Who can say by present-day revelation to him that he is the Christ; that the God of Israel is the Father of us all?

Behold the Seer of Palmyra, Joseph Smith! His first witness to his fellows was that God lives and that Jesus is his Son. Like Stephen of old, he beheld the Father and the Son. From the mouth of him who said at the baptism of Jesus, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," he heard the soul-exalting words: "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." From the mouth of that Son he heard the admonition to be true; that God had a great work for him to do. Subsequently from the mouths of angels came the assurance of God's directing hand; came the restoration of the old Jerusalem gospel with its priesthood and gifts.

Through the instrumentality of this young prophet, came from the dust of a fallen empire a record of God's work among its people, through prophets and seers. This record, upon golden plates, buried in the Hill Cumorah for centuries, translated by Joseph Smith, makes a strong affirmation of the divinity of Jesus. It tells of the relation of God to ancient American prophets, of the virgin mother, the crucified Savior, the risen Lord.

In an age of skepticism this record comes forth with the remarkable statement that the same Christ who revealed himself after his resurrection to several, to the eleven, and to five hundred of the brethren at once, revealed himself also to the people who builded the magnificent cities of stone, the ruins of which are scattered through Peru; Yucatan, Central America, and Mexico. The truth of this testimony rests upon the authenticity of the book. The book is susceptible to proof.

What matters it whether we call him by the Jewish name of Jesus or by the Aztec name of Quetzalcoatl, when both the Bible and Aztec and Toltec mythology agree that this wonderful personage was born of a virgin; was crucified upon a cross; was raised from the dead; was an incarnation of Deity; ascended to the Creator; shall come again, and that he was the high priest in his happy realm?

To the Book of Mormon we are indebted for the wonderful story of American antiquity; of the great Shepherd's search for his "lost sheep" which were not of the Jerusalem fold (John 10: 16). To archæologists who have since searched the ruined cities for evidence that would throw light upon a vanished civilization which some writers say surpassed that of Europe and Asia of that period; who have also searched the Archives of Spain for old documents, forgotten even by scholars since the Spanish conquest of Mexico and Peru—to them are we indebted for a vindication of the book's story.

Ye busy people, pause and see that God has done a marvelous thing in your days; that he has reaffirmed his ancient truths in your day, to save you from the wave of infidelity which is sweeping the twentieth century into an oblivion that will leave again magnificent ruins to tell the children of the millennium where men struggled for gold and women lived for pleasure. Prove the Book of Mormon true and you have proved the Fatherhood of God and the Sonship of Jesus; you have proved the gospel which Jesus and the apostles preached to be the "truth that endureth for ever," for in this land was it also preached centuries ago.

This article is not an exposition of proofs; others have written and their works are published. We desire only to show the nature of the work of Joseph Smith and what his affirmations as a witness included. Thus we have him testifying of the Father and Son through the medium of a restored record. We have from him the same testimony through the hearing of his ears and the seeing of his eyes, through the power of the Holy Spirit; also, by the ministration of angels. Next, and of great importance in a day in which the gulf is rapidly widening between the rich and poor, in this our own beloved America, we have a prophet, who speaks for temporal equalities. Hear him:

. . . That you may be equal in the bands of heavenly things; yea, and earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things; for if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things;—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.

And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent, that every man may gain other talents; yea, even an hundredfold, to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4.

With a "thus saith the Lord" he gave a system by which the surplus of the successful and able citizens of God's kingdom would exalt the unfortunate and give all men equal opportunity to magnify the talents with which God and nature has endowed them. In a work which God himself was conducting by his voice, and by the Holy Spirit manifested in revelation to many, in prophecy, tongues, visions, healings, angel ministrations, etc., men would naturally love God first of all. In the consideration of his marvelous work and his loving favor the heart must overflow with love and gratitude. With the gift of his Holy Spirit, man knows how to love his brother as he never knew before. To him love means service; brotherhood means unity and equality.

The affirmations of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Malachi, and others, with the prophecies of Christ and the apostles concerning the restoration of Israel and the second advent were reaffirmed by this prophet of the dispensation of the fullness of times. With his reaffirmation came also the announcement that the time had come in which these things would begin. Only a few years after his prediction the great Jewish movement began and the powers of nature united to bless the land that is Israel's inheritance, with fertility and the restoration of its early and late rains in their seasons.

His prophecies of the Civil War and other events of the day are local in their nature and have not to do with this article. Our theme is eternal principles or verities, "the foundation of God that standeth sure." (2 Timothy 2: 19.)

As for the personality and character of this young nineteenth century prophet, he stands the test of criticism. His life proves that his motive was not mercenary. Nor did he seek by flattery or by wearing sheep's clothing (which might be called nineteenth century wool) to gain fame and popularity. From the time of his first experience with God until he met death at the hands of the fiendish mob, at the age of thirty-eight, his life was one of tribulation and of loving sacrifice. With undaunted courage and the consciousness of his divine mission, he endured to the end and left to his fellow man an heritage of love and truth that has turned the hearts of many to God. To his sons he left no inheritance of gold or silver, but the heritage he gave them has enabled them to become prominent in the work of love and sacrifice which he began.

His oldest son, Joseph, has been prophet and president of the church for nearly fifty-three years. He, like his father before him, has given his time, his all, to God's service. Although poor in this world's goods, he is rich in the love of his brethren, and in the wisdom God has taught him. With the snows of eighty winters on his honored head he stands as a witness still of the integrity of his father's work and of that most vital truth, that Jesus is the Christ. These two prophets left no name of fame in the world of finance or in the annals of war, but they have written their names in the hearts of those who knew them. The blood that was shed at Carthage sanctifies the hearth at Independence where sits the aged son of the young, martyred prophet. Blessed be his meditations and blessed the name and character that he leaves to his sons. May their endings be as glorious as his will be.

Glory to God in the highest; and on earth peace, and good will toward man. CHAS. E. CRUMLEY.

• * * * •

The education of the people is not only a means, but the best means, of attaining that which all allow to be the chief end of government; and, if this be so, it passes my faculties to understand how any man can gravely contend that government has nothing to do with the education of the people.—Macaulay.

JOSEPH SMITH; HIS ATTITUDE TOWARD PROPERTY, ITS DISTRIBUTION AND USES.

Joseph Smith, as an instrument in the hands of God, gave to the church the correct solution of the economic problems confronting the world in the use and distribution of properties. The world's standard of economics will not solve the problems connected with the kingdom of God on earth. It will be our purpose to point out to our readers the high standard revealed in the word of God, as given through Joseph Smith, and compare this word with his teachings.

JOSEPH SMITH.

"He was sweet in his soul and mild,
With the innocent trust of a child,
As he prayed to an immanent Lord;
But, stirred by the wrath of the fight,
He seemed as an angel of light
With a sword."

It is of interest to note that the revealed law will not admit of one individual building up selfish interests at the expense of the brethren. As a safeguard to protect the church from ambitious leaders who might aspire to divert property interests unto themselves through the prestige of ecclesiastical office by the exploitation of the membership, the financial department of the church is removed from the immediate control of the spiritual head, and that department is placed close to the membership, who delegate authority to bishoprics and industrial organizations.

JOSEPH SMITH WAS NOT AN ASPIRANT.

Accustomed to association with those in the humble walks of life, and trained to labor for the temporal necessities, the Almighty speaks and calls him, while yet a young man, to enter upon a life's work of sacrifice and service to humanity. He is found yielding himself obedient to the divine message which comes to him for the guidance of his brethren, and in common with them, he shares in their sacrifices and their triumphs. Together with God they seek to build up the Zion of latter days.

The thoughts and acts of Joseph Smith, as recorded in authentic history and accepted revelation, are the channel through which we ascertain the attitude of the individual toward the subject under consideration.

Joseph Smith, through the revelations to the church, builded wiser than he knew. That is, his attitude was not first assumed, then afterwards he received revelations to bolster up positions already taken; but rather, the revelation is first given, then his attitude is either changed or formed in keeping with the revelation. This is shown by subsequent events throughout his life; therefore we have but to point out the law as given in the revelations through him to the church concerning property, to indicate correctly his attitude.

JOSEPH SMITH ON COMMON STOCK.

And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless: wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio; and there will I give unto you my law.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 7.

Church History, volume 1, pages 152 and 153, gives an account of a movement started near Kirtland, Ohio, to carry into operation the "all things common plan." This movement was started and participated in by those who were then strangers to the restored gospel, yet those whose hearts had evidently been touched with the spirit of sacrifice and brotherly-love in the consideration of each other's welfare. We believe the lives of those individuals were being wrought upon through the divine Spirit, and the way was being prepared in the regions of the Ohio against the time when the law as promised would be given, thus enveloping the message in an atmosphere congenial to its acceptance when the Lord should give the revelation. Joseph states (and in no way condemns their efforts) that the greater number of the adherents to this theory embraced the restored gospel and readily abandoned the "common stock" idea and accepted the "more perfect law of the Lord." (See Church History, volume 1, page 169.)

Afterward Joseph Smith explaining to a certain individual who came to him while at Kirtland, Ohio, making inquiry concerning the holding of property, states that they had no common stock business among them, that every man enjoyed his own property, leaving each individual to his own disposition to consecrate to the support of the poor or to withhold. (See Church History, volume 1, page 593 for this account.)

We are not to conclude from this account, however, that Joseph Smith unduly antagonized such common stock concerns as were attempted at that time, but he was simply taking the affirmative stand in favor of the more perfect way of the Lord, and recognizing in it the higher standard of the gospel. In this connection, read on page 307 of Church History, volume 1, an article setting forth the attitude of some of the followers of Joseph Smith upon the subject of common stock as compared with "the more perfect plan." The positions are almost identical with those stated above.

INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS WITH A COMMUNITY OF INTERESTS.

The individual rights of the membership of the church are recognized in the revelations as given to the church through Joseph Smith in such terms as inheritances, stewards, and stewardships. The community of interests is represented by the Lord's storehouse. Compliance with the complete law of Christ constitutes heirship in the kingdom of God. The ownership of God and the stewardship of man are the basic principles to be recognized in the distribution and use of property under the revealed law.

OWNERSHIP OF GOD.

I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

And, again, a commandment I give unto you concerning your stewardship which I have appointed unto you; behold, all these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain, and ye are found hypocrites, and the covenants which ye have made unto me are broken.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10.

STEWARDSHIP OF MAN.

Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9.

A commandment I give unto you, that you shall organize yourselves and appoint every man his stewardship . . . for it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings which I have made and prepared for my creatures.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

And if the properties are mine then ye are stewards, otherwise ye are no stewards.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 10. See also 42: 19.

The idea of responsibility is attached to the principles set forth in the revelations. The rights of the individual are regarded and each is responsible before the law for his stewardship.

Thou shalt stand in the place of thy stewardship; thou shalt not take thy brother's garment; thou shalt pay for that which thou shalt receive of thy brother; and if thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it unto my storehouse, that all things may be done according to that which I have said.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 14.

What is true of the responsibility attached to individual stewardships, is likewise true of the responsibility attached to local organizations.

And let that which belongs to this people not be taken and given that of another church; wherefore, if another church should receive money of this church, let them pay unto this church again as they shall agree.—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 3.

It is required that every man improve upon his stewardship, that every man gain other talents to be cast into

THE LORD'S STOREHOUSE.

"And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church. . . ."—Doctrine and Covenants 82: 2. These consecrations are referred to in section 42: 8 of Doctrine and Covenants as that portion of the individual properties which the steward transfers to the Lord's storehouse with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken. Such individual properties then become the "common property of the whole church." (Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4.) Thus the storehouse represents the community of interests: those having a surplus contributing to, while those in need receive assistance from it.

This is not to be loosely construed to mean a free "hand-out" to any and all, but with the idea in view of those receiving who are needy and worthy to eat the bread and wear the garments of honest industry. (See Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12.)

Note the successive steps taken in order of time with reference to the operating of the storehouse:

1. In February, 1831.

The law was given to consecrate surplus properties. See Doctrine and Covenants 42.

2. In May, 1831.

Bishop Partridge was commanded to appoint a storehouse unto the church to receive consecrations. See Doctrine and Covenants 51: 4.

3. In March, 1832.

The Lord states that the time had arrived to organize his people to regulate and establish the affairs of the storehouse both in Kirtland, Ohio, and in Zion, Missouri. (Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.)

As a result of the positions set forth in the revelations as indicated above, attempt was made to effect organization to place in operation the law dealing with temporalities. The organization at Kirtland, Ohio, was to be called "The United Order of the Stake of Zion," and the one at Independence "The United Order of the City of Zion." (Doctrine and Covenants 101: 9.)

We are not prepared to measure the degree of success or failure attached to this attempt at industrial associations to carry out the will of the Lord in the use and distribution of properties, but we are warranted in the belief, however, that whatever failure there may have been connected therewith was not the fault of the revealed system, but the neglect or unwillingness on the part of the Saints to do the things the Lord required at their hands. (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.)

THE SINGLE STANDARD OF OBEDIENCE.

The Lord requires the same obedience to his laws of one individual as of another. Any requirement short of this has the stamp of humanity upon it. The mark of humanity is also indicated where the standard of obedience admits of conditions of inequality or special privileges. These are some of the severest tests to which a revelation purporting to be from God may be subjected to discover the degree of inspiration connected therewith. Will the revelations given through Joseph Smith relating to property stand these tests? Let us examine. In Doctrine and Covenants 58: 7 it is stated that Martin Harris should be made an example unto the church in laying his moneys before the bishop according as the law directs. The law (section 42) directs the consecration of surplus properties. What was required of Martin Harris is also required of every man that comes to the land of Zion.

Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties.—Doctrine and Covenants 106.

No stamp of humanity here.

Joseph Smith's attitude is in harmony with the above position, as is indicated by his instructions given to Edward Partridge on the subject of consecration of property.

"A man is bound by the law of the church to consecrate to the bishop before he can be considered a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion; and this, too, without constraint; and unless he does this he can not be acknowledged before the Lord on the church books.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 300.

Those that claim leadership under the law must needs yield themselves obedient to the law.

NEEDS AND JUST WANTS.

The standard affecting the distribution and use of property is one which applies alike to all the membership, regardless of station in life, wealth, or poverty in property, or occupation of the individual; to one and all the rule applies. Each provided according to his needs and just wants. "And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

This is the position outlined in the revelations, and it is reiterated over and over again, as the following citations attest: Doctrine and Covenants 18: 5; 42: 9; 51: 1; 58: 7; 70: 2; 81: 4; 101: 2, 12; 106: 2.

THE LORD'S TENTH.

Like Jacob of old, Joseph Smith, with one of his fellow laborers, Oliver Cowdery, on the evening of November 29, 1834, entered into a solemn covenant:

That if the Lord will prosper us in our business, and open the way before us, that we may obtain means to pay our debts, that we be not troubled nor brought into disrepute before the world, nor his people; after that, of all that he shall give us, we will give a tenth, to be bestowed upon the poor in his church, or as he shall command; and that we will be faithful over that which he has intrusted to our care, that we may obtain much; and that our children after us, shall remember to observe this sacred and holy covenant; and that our children, and our children's children may know of the same, we have subscribed our names with our own hands.

JOSEPH SMITH, JR.
OLIVER COWDERY.

This covenant was entered into some years previous to the receiving of the revelation commanding the giving of the tenth to the Lord. (Doctrine and Covenants 106.) Yet, prior to this time the Lord had instructed his priesthood to teach the principles of the gospel which are in the Bible and Book of Mormon, in which is the fullness of the gospel. (See Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.)

The Lord evidently remembered this covenant'en-

If I had to live my life again, I would have made a rule to read some poetry and listen to some music at least once every week; for perhaps the parts of my brain now atrophied would thus have been kept active through use. The loss of these tastes is a loss of happiness, and may possibly be injurious to the intellect, and more probably to the moral character, by enfeebling the emotional parts of our nature.—Charles Darwin.

A PART OF THE GOSPEL.

Joseph Smith recognized in the industrial order of things inaugurated through divine inspiration, a part of the great gospel economy for the salvation of men. The revelations state that it is "a permanent and everlasting establishment and order unto my church, to advance the cause which ye have espoused, to the salvation of men and the glory of your Father who is in heaven." (Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.)

The system is unique. It is independent of human systems established in the earth. Any attempt to compromise the divinely appointed with the human or worldly order of things does violence to the revealed word of God:

Behold, this is the preparation wherewith I prepare you, and the foundation, and the ensample, which I give unto you, whereby you may accomplish the commandments which are given you, that through my providence, notwithstanding the tribulation which shall descend upon you, that the church may stand independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world.—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 3.

AS REASONABLE MEN.

A judge in giving his charge to the jury said: "You must determine to the best of your ability whether or not the defendant was acting as a reasonable man would be supposed to act under the circumstances."

This is a charge that in substance is frequently given, as it involves a principle in law. All the civil law requires of any man is that he shall act as a reasonable being should act under any given circumstance.

And that is all the divine law requires. Paul had some such idea in mind when he wrote about "our reasonable service."

Do men as a rule conduct themselves as reasonable beings? Not long ago we were talking with a reporter for one of the great daily papers. He said: "I do not expect to live more than ten years longer, at the most. I have valvular disease of the heart, and I smoke fifteen or twenty cigars a day. It is only a question of time, and a short time at that, when they will finish me off."

He was a young man perhaps thirty-five years of age. In response to the question: "Why don't you quit smoking?" he had no answer,—merely a shrug of the shoulders.

Knowing what he knew, was he acting as a reasonable being should act? The great jury on high will surely find against him. The world is full of men and women who are pursuing a somewhat similar course.

We have just read a very thoughtful treatise by one of the best thinkers of Great Britain. His subject was, "Race poisons"; not those poisons that affect individuals, and leave posterity untainted; but those poisons that injure the very germ of life,— "race poisons," that get at the germ of life, the racial element in men and women, and poison life before it is conceived or born into the world.

He included alcohol, drugs, including the lead poison of lead workers, and the blighting poisons of those unmentionable diseases that result from immoral sexual indulgences long continued by humanity.

He argued that though science may determine that acquired traits are not inherited, and traits resulting from functional disorders are not inherited, (and such is the position of many authorities) this racial poisoning is not a matter of inheritance. The individual germ of life generated in male tissues soaked in alcohol is poisoned from the start; the dawning physical life borne by an alcoholic woman, is poisoned at a time when the undeveloped cells are most susceptible to such injury. Degenerates are the result; not alone by inheritance; but by reason of direct injury inflicted upon them during the early processes of their individual growth.

Is the human race acting as reasonable beings might be supposed to act, when it goes on consuming such enormous quantities of alcohol, drugs, tobacco, and tolerating wholesale immorality that generates a poison that blasts and blights unborn generations? Graft and greed and lust and appetite dictate such a course, but is it the course of reasonable beings, knowing what men do know about the results?

Turning now from the world, to ourselves, as Latter Day Saints, we may well push the inquiry, individually and collectively. Knowing what we know as a church, in possession of all that has been revealed to us, knowing the glorious promises, and the rich rewards awaiting the faithful, conscious of our duty, realizing the infinite love of God, and the great sacrifice of Jesus, considering all the circumstances, are we individually acting as reasonable beings might justly be supposed to act? When we become indifferent, luke warm, derelict to duty,—is that the act of reasonable beings,—knowing all that we know about all that is at stake?

Let each answer for himself, under the injunction to "examine yourselves," and so answer as he may be compelled to answer by a fearless consideration of facts. If not fully in line with reason let us make a radical change. The only reasonable course is to conform to the law, obey the example of Christ, and fully perform every known duty.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

CONFERENCE NOTES.

Great pleasure is felt by the Saints that President Joseph Smith is able to be with them in General Conference. Because of his condition it is quite natural that he should be reluctant to attempt a journey by train and a somewhat prolonged visit away from home, but he has done so, and is here to be of service. While he suffers at times with his old trouble, facial neuralgia, it is likely that he will be able to attend the business sessions of the conference.

The reception committee reports an attendance far in excess of that of two years ago. The accommodations of the local Saints are taxed to the utmost. It is hoped that all may be taken care of, and the committee is strenuous in that attempt.

The Quorum of Twelve has been in session since the 15th of March. Joint sessions of the Presidency and Twelve have been delayed until to-day (7th) because of the absence of Frederick M. Smith, of the Presidency. Urgent matters affecting the church required his presence in Washington, District of Columbia, delaying his arrival at Lamoni until the 5th.

Interesting speeches were made on Sunday at the opening session of conference, and we hope to be able to reproduce them in whole or in part for HERALD readers.

Church Recorder C. I. Carpenter will report gains by baptism 3,383; received by letter 2,513; losses by letter 2,483, by expulsion 61, by death 536, making a net gain of 2,796, which added to our total of 65,415, gives us a present total of 68,211.

Baptisms this year exceed that of last year by 321. Missouri leads with 690 baptisms; Iowa follows with 366; Michigan with 322. Missouri made a net gain of 708, Michigan 233, Kansas 214, Illinois 200.

Four thousand one hundred twenty-three hold the priesthood. There were 314 ordinations and 368 marriages. Over twenty-seven thousand are reported as absent from their branches. There were 1,014 blessings of children reported.

One new country is included in this year's report, New Zealand; and one new State, New Hampshire, Brother J. H. Baker having baptized one there.

Brother Frederick M. Smith has just returned from a visit to Washington, District of Columbia, where he had been called upon to make petition with the Department of State in behalf of our German missionaries. In the progress of his work there he succeeded in meeting President Wilson and had an interview with Secretary of State Bryan.

The week opens with disagreeable weather, but we observe that it requires very much of this kind to dampen the ardor of our conference delegates.

A very interesting feature of the conventions was the conferences. On Saturday afternoon a grand round table was held by the Sunday school convention. A great many questions had been submitted and incorporated into the printed programs. Delegates desiring a certain question answered called the number of the question, and answers were given by the workers having such work in charge or engaged in that department. It was gratifying to note how promptly the answer was given to almost every question. The difficulties already had been met and overcome and the solution was presented without hesitation.

For instance, when Brother G. E. Harrington had made a talk on keeping the Sunday school children in for the preaching service, a sister asked:

"What would you do if the chapel was not large enough for all the members and the school also?"

"Build another room," came the quick response from Brother Harrington.

"What if it were a branch where the members would not do any building?"

"Hold another service for the children,"—without hesitation, from the same brother.

The presidency of conference have appointed A. N. Hoxie, jr., chorister for the conference. He has chosen as assistants Sisters May Skinner and Audientia Anderson. The work of the choir already speaks volumes for the year's work done by this brother and assistants. The singing of the conference choir gives promise of what will follow if this work is followed up. A splendid start has been made. The music is of a high class. The same anthems having been practiced by the various branch choirs, the conference singers come with a familiarity and knowledge which makes it easy to get them in line for united and harmonious effort. Brother Hoxie's labor is commended, and we trust he and his corps of helpers will go on to perfection.

When conference is held in Independence there is always a small body of reporters from the Kansas City papers present. When in Lamoni the absence of regular reporters is evident, but many Des Moines, Kansas City, and Omaha papers are represented by private individuals. Our stock of embryo reporters is quite in evidence. That is not all: Many missionaries come to conference with request to send items to papers in their fields. F. A. Russell was requested to supply a Colorado Springs paper with a report. E. E. Long was promised space by a Calgary, Saskatchewan, paper. This is a field well worth a little effort in developing.

Religio Convention.

The seventeenth annual convention of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society was held at Lamoni, at the Saints' church, beginning on Wednesday, April 2, 1913.

A prayer meeting was held in the lower room from 9 to 10.15 a. m., in which a large number of Religians took part. The service was in charge of President J. A. Gunsolley, and J. F. Garver of the stake presidency.

The first business session was called to order by President Gunsolley in the auditorium promptly at 10.30. Number 19, Zion's Praises was sung, and opening prayer offered by T. J. Elliott, vice president, of Saint Louis, Missouri. Number 187, Zion's Praises, was then sung.

Secretary Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser read report of credentials committee. Certain corrections being offered, a committee was appointed by the chairman to incorporate them into this report. The report as corrected was then adopted.

A motion prevailed making the president and associates the presiding officers of the convention. A similar motion carried, making the general secretary of the society the secretary of the convention and giving her the right to name assistants.

Further organization was left with the presidency.

The chair then announced that Paul and Jeannette Craig, of Omaha, Nebraska, would have charge of the singing and music, they to choose their assistants.

A motion to have the presidency appoint nominations, resolutions, appropriations, press, and notification committees, after considerable discussion, was amended and passed, empowering them to appoint all these committees except that on nominations.

Number 2, Zion's Praises, was sung.

The nominations committee was then selected by the body, as follows: R. S. Salyards, J. O. Dutton, F. A. Russell, J. W. Wight, Mrs. R. S. Salyards.

S. A. Burgess then made an address entitled, "The appeal of the Religio."

J. W. Wight replied under the subject, "The response of the general church."

Benediction was offered by S. A. Burgess, and adjournment taken at 12.08 p. m.

At two o'clock the session was called to order by President Gunsolley. Song number 3 was sung and prayer was offered by J. C. Page.

The credentials committee made report, which was adopted.

The chair announced the following appointments of committees: On Resolutions; H. J. Davison, W. W. Scott, Maggie Macgregor, Mrs. O. E. Prall, and J. O. Dutton. On Appropriations: J. A. Gardner, Harvey Sandy, Mrs. S. R. Burgess, T. J. Elliott, and Edward Rannie. Press committee: Charles Fry and I. A. Smith. Notification committee: B. W. Taylor and Richard Ellis.

President Gunsolley then made his annual report, which follows:

ANNUAL REPORT.

To the Convention; Greeting: As for a number of years past, my work has been only such as could be performed in connection with my duties in Graceland College. These duties have been such that most of the time I have been unable to attend the sessions of the local Religio, so as to keep in touch with the practical workings of the society and its program and lesson features to the extent I should have liked, much to my regret. From September to June, I am busy with college duties, and from June to September away from home in field work, leaving me small opportunity for regular attendance at local meetings. I have tried as best I could under the circumstances not to lose interest and become a back number.

Immediately upon close of college work, I planned for field work, my first point being Port Huron, Michigan, where I arrived June 17. I spent Sunday in Detroit en route, speaking twice, and visiting the Sunday school. At Port Huron, the work was ably represented by a goodly number of capable young Saints, besides the district officers. Both the Sunday school and Religio were in the hands of energetic and capable officers who were magnifying their calling. A new venture was started at this reunion, in the matter of organizing an association of district presidents.

The next point was Chetek, Wisconsin, arriving on June 24. The attendance at this place was small, but there were quite a number who were deeply interested in the work, and the good Spirit was present to encourage and bless the humble efforts put forth. A number of sessions were held, to the enjoyment and edification of those present.

The homeward trip was by way of Sioux City, Iowa, where I addressed the little gathering that ventured out on that sultry July first, evening.

After a little over two weeks at home, the place next claiming attention was Stewartsville, Missouri, where a two-day institute was held by the Far West District, July 19 and 20. This was a very fine meeting, many good papers and addresses being given, some of which were procured for publication.

July 26 found me with the family encamped upon the reunion grounds at Lamoni, Iowa. The time here was just spent in attending meetings, and giving attention to the duties of the college office. I occupied one service and took part in a college program.

August 8 found me alighting from the slowest train on the crookedest road known to my experience, at Wilburton, Oklahoma. But, once there, you soon forget how you arrived, for there is certainly a hospitable and earnest band of Saints there, and such meetings were held as were found practicable. There is an opportunity for doing much good among the Saints of this locality, as there is a willingness to learn, and they have not enjoyed the advantages had in many other places.

Pittsburg, Kansas, reunion has in some respects the most nearly ideal place for a reunion had anywhere. I reached there August 13 and soon found the Saints beautifully located in Lincoln Park. Sister Florence McNichols had the Religio work in full blast, having come at the invitation of her father, one of the committee. I did little more here than to sell books and attend to the interests of the college. Sister McNichols and Sister Stebbins conducted the Sunday school and Religio work.

My last stopping place for field work was at Council Bluffs, Iowa, where at the request of the officers of the association formed from the several districts, I had charge of the Sunday school and Religio work. The plan here was to a goodly extent an experiment. An organization was effected in the nature of a school, consisting of the following departments, each with its teacher at its head; Primary, Intermediate, Senior, Doctrine and Covenants, Music, Normal, and Literary. A daily program was arranged, consisting of, in addition to the general opening and closing exercises, and lessons, a lecture, or address, on some live topic, representing the various departments, and review, or special exercises. This was pronounced a splendid success by those present, and might with profit be tried by others.

A number of brethren and sisters have done field work, among whom are Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, Sister Altha Deam, Sister Florence McNichols, Sister Eliza Chase and daughter Alice, Sister Madden, Brother J. F. Garver, Brother G. R. Wells, Brother J. M. Terry, Brother R. S. Salyards, Brother Daniel Macgregor, Brother H. J. Davison, and doubtless many others whose work has not been especially called to my attention. Certain it is that most of the brethren of the missionary quorums do what they can in the interest of the auxiliaries, recognizing them as "helps" indeed, and an effort is being made to bring about a more general effort by the missionaries, and to afford them more assistance in preparing for the work. To such end the appointing quorums are being asked to consider the needs more fully of the auxiliary departments in the various fields, and to make appointments with these needs in view, the Religio pledging to sustain appointees financially and giving them other aid.

The demands of the office touching correspondence are somewhat heavier than hitherto, and same has been carried on by means of my helpers in the college office. I can not report the number of letters received and the number written, as I have enough details without burdening myself with such as these, but they are not a few.

I have acted as a member of the committee on lesson revision in connection with Brother Heman C. Smith, and Sister Flora L. Scott. This work has been pleasant, and the utmost harmony and good feeling is enjoyed by the members of the committee towards each other, and between the committee and the Editor upon the one hand and the publishers upon the other.

I have assisted in revising the constitution as ordered by the convention and getting it again printed. I have written a number of brief articles for publication in the Arena and secured a number of papers from others for that purpose.

The writing of the parliamentary lessons has continued to be my task, and sometimes it has truly been a task. I have felt at a loss to know what to give next, and am wondering just how the lessons on our Constitution will be received.

The Executive Committee held two days' sessions of meetings during the holidays. In addition to the full Executive Committee there were present by invitation the superintendent of the Normal Department, Sister D. H. Blair; Superintendent of the Gospel Literature Bureau, Brother Harvey Sandy, both of Kansas City, Missouri, and John W. Rushton, of Independence, Missouri. This was a very enjoyable session, and very important measures were discussed, and some of them adopted. But the proceedings of this meeting have been published some time since in the Arena, and do not need repeating here.

I have tried to keep a sharp outlook in behalf of the general interests of the work, surveying the field from end to end, advising here and counseling there. One's comprehension of possibilities grows the more his mind is put to it.

The various departments have been carried forward with reasonable vigor and wisdom. Everyone in charge of special work or department is employed in other work which in itself might claim about all his time, and yet by willing sacrifice of time, which might be given to other things, and not by employing idle moments, the work is taken care of.

In the editorial work the two grades of Quarterly are written by a missionary who is caring for the church work intrusted to him by conference appointment. Our official organ, the Religio's Arena, a department in Autumn Leaves, is edited by one of the First Presidency, assisted by the Managing Editor of the Hope.

The Quarterlies have been undergoing a trial the past year, or rather the course of study has been in the crucible. A large number of people have developed a feeling of dissatisfaction. They seemed to have acquired the habit of thinking the Religio was a synonym for Book of Mormon, and vice versa, that there is no text for study so nice as the record of ancient America. They said, "We can not get interested in the new lessons, and we can not interest the nonmembers of the church in these lessons, like we could in the old," and so on. But upon due consideration it appears that the real difficulty in the situation lies in the fact that more study and effort is required in the preparation of these lessons than were required for those. And it would seem that it ought to be apparent to all that the study of the law dealing directly with work lying immediately in hand; namely, Zion and her redemption, ought to be considered the thing of paramount importance. How long would it take one to learn his duty touching his part in the redemption of Zion, from study outside of the revelations to the church? He could never do it. He would continue wandering in the wilderness, and only being able at times, if faithful, to ascend some mountain peak and enjoy a brief glimpse of the promised land. He would not be qualified to enter. It is so with the church. She will never come fully out of the wilderness until she learns the law, not only to say but to do. And this learning will come only from study and practice. The bishops and other ministers should expound it, of course, but we of the membership must study it, and get it into our minds and hearts.

It is admitted that the lessons have been very imperfect; but it should be remembered, too, that it is a much more difficult task to write lessons upon the revelations than upon the Bible or even the Book of Mormon. This has not only been pioneer work, but based upon matter that is not historical, as are the other records largely, but upon revelations which, many of them, contain a score of topics in a single paragraph. The convention, in my judgment, took a mighty stride in advance when it authorized the change, and it will do well to stand firm. Time will fully vindicate the wisdom of the change.

The Junior Quarterly relieved the situation to a large extent, with the little folks, and the lessons on the biographies of the noble men and women so prominent in the founding of the work, ought to be an inspiration to our young people. The Junior Quarterly has met with much favor, and the circulation of both is gratifying.

The Religio's Arena still continues to occupy fourteen pages,—more or less—of the Autumn Leaves. But it seems that the editors have had great difficulty in obtaining matter to fill the space allotted. The news from societies has been entirely too brief. One would think from what appears from time to time in the Arena that we have about a dozen local organizations. The officers and heads of departments might have been heard from more frequently. We can scarcely expect the editors to drum up patronage, especially since we pay them no salary.

The various departments have done excellent service this year. The one in charge of each has kept things moving. The Home Department has demonstrated its usefulness in bringing blessing to many stay-at-homes and isolated ones. Since each of these departments will have its own individual report, this report will only speak of generalities. This department merits the encouragement and support of all Religians and all members of the church.

The Gospel Literature Bureau has prospered notwithstanding the obstacle of indifference has been a hard one to surmount, and can scarcely be counted as removed entirely. By a little effort upon the part of many who now are not interested, the church publications could be more widely circulated and read. In very many places subscribers to the church papers could by a little thought and effort pass them along to their neighbors. Then a little more thought and effort might bring about a report to the superintendent of the department near at hand.

The Normal Department continues to train for teaching and other service. There is a mistaken notion held by some that the benefits of this work are applicable only to those who may teach; they should be a means of help in any work requiring a knowledge of the Scriptures and a knowledge of mind development and activity. In addition to gaining a certain outline knowledge of the sacred records and of the fundamentals of the laws of teaching and mind development, the habit of systematic study and analysis is of untold value, and should encourage more studiousness, resulting in a higher order of intelligence among God's children.

The matter of library work is causing some inquiry along the line of suitable books for children of various ages. If lists could be prepared, giving quite a number of books suitable for children of the different grades, and such lists made available to those desiring them, the department would be of greater usefulness to the people. This department deserves to be sustained and encouraged.

The effort to raise funds for translating the Book of Mormon into foreign languages has been vigorously pushed. We do not know the results. They will be reported by the treasurer. But it will be a matter of disappointment if a better showing is not made than for any previous year.

A movement has been inaugurated by the Booster Club of Graceland College looking toward a closer affiliation between our educational institution and the young people's society. This plan contemplates the appointment by each local of a committee to be designated as Graceland Booster Committee, to furnish certain data to a committee appointed by the Graceland Booster Club designated as Graceland's Religio Booster Committee. These committees are to cooperate in disseminating information to the Religians by the college committee, assisting them in giving entertainments and so on, and the Religio committee furnishing the college with names and addresses of prospective students, gathering funds for the purchase of scholarships, offerings, etc. A closer touch thus brought about should be mutually helpful, and should be encouraged. It would be only a consistent thing to do, if each local and district that could do so, (and all could) would take at least one annual scholarship. This would give a material boost to the educational work and relieve the church of a part of the burden of debt.

There has been a material slump in attendance and interest in some localities, but not so bad as when a change was made from so much entertainment in a more sincere study. We have believed this condition would only be temporary, and already signs of a revival are apparent. We predict that ere long a large attendance and a better interest will be realized than ever before.

It has been felt by some that the general society should be made to benefit more the work in the districts and locals. To this end, the work of the Executive Committee has been subdivided, or apportioned, so that each member of the committee represents a department that is placed under his charge. Then, too, institutes and convention programs should be given more attention and be made of more practical value.

A closer affiliation with the general church through its quorums and ministry is being sought. To this end request had been made by the Executive Committee of the Quorums of Twelve and First Presidency, that in the appointment of missionaries the needs of auxiliary work be considered. The great help given in the past by these brethren is not by any means overlooked, and is much appreciated, but this is an effort to secure more of what has proved a good thing.

Concluding, I wish just simply to say that I have enjoyed the thought of being held in so great confidence and esteem by the young people. None knows better than I how poorly the duties have been performed. I have seen how little has been done compared to what might have been done, and perhaps ought to have been done. But I have enjoyed thoroughly what I have done, and hope more may be done in the future. God's work is worthy our very best service, and I desire to render whole-hearted service in all that is undertaken for the Master's cause.

Thanking all coworkers therefore, for their love, confidence, and cooperation, and working and praying for the progress of the work destined to bring about the Zion of God on earth to meet the Zion from above, I am sincerely,

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

This report was followed by a talk by the president on the legitimate phases of program work. Discussion followed.

On the censorship of Religio programs three minute speeches were made by Hyrum O. Smith, Paul Craig, and John F. Garver.

The attitude of pastors toward the Religio was discussed by M. H. Bond, who spoke in the absence of J. A. Tanner, and Mrs. S. R. Burgess.

Vice-president T. J. Elliott then reported, after which he read a paper on the need of organized social committee and the results to be sought.

Vida E. Smith then followed with a paper on the value of social work in the lives of our young people.

On motion the papers of T. J. Elliott and Vida E. Smith were ordered published.

Songs numbers 47 and 206 were then sung by the assembly.

President Gunsolley made verbal report for the revising committee, and stated that the lessons committee would report later.

Edward Rannie made a brief statement in regard to the work of the committee on constitutional amendments.

Elbert A. Smith made a report as editor of the Arena, as follows:

REPORT OF EDITOR OF THE ARENA.

LAMONI, IOWA, April 2, 1913.

To the Convention of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society; Greeting: During the past year I have continued as editor of the Arena Department in Autumn Leaves. Sister Estella Wight has acted as associate editor, and has done most of the editorial work. She has solicited special articles from various sources, particularly from the general officers of the society. This policy will probably be continued during the coming year, should the present editors be continued. As editor of Autumn Leaves I have endeavored to make the entire magazine useful and valuable to Religians. Many interesting and instructive articles have been secured from competent writers, in response to a systematic campaign for such material. Some of these have been published during the year, others will appear later. We solicit the aid of all Religians in securing subscribers. Every Religian should boost for Autumn Leaves, the young people's magazine.

Wishing you a profitable convention and a successful year's work, I remain,

Yours in the conflict for truth,

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Mrs. J. A. Gardner, historian, reported as follows:

REPORT OF THE HISTORIAN.

At this time we have notes concerning the early years of the Religio ready to be compiled into suitable form for publication.

In writing the history of the Religio it became necessary to learn from its originators the need which incited its organization, also the original plan. Hence, last May we immediately got in communication with those, who, as we could learn, could give us the most information.

Our main difficulty has been to get correct information concerning the origin of the movement. This difficulty will be lessened in writing the history of later years, as the secretary's account will contain much of the information needed, while the secretary's account in early years is very meager.

MRS. J. A. GARDNER.

The assembly then divided into three conferences, as follows: Program committee conference, led by J. A. Gunsolley; social committee conference, led by T. J. Elliott; and lookout committee conference, led by Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser. These were in the nature of round table talks.

At 5.15 the various assemblies adjourned.

SECRETARY'S COMMENTS ON STATISTICAL REPORT OF 1913.

A glance at the totals of our report would give one the impression that the year 1912 had been a very poor year for Religio work, but sometimes figures are deceiving, though it is true that this is the first year since I have been keeping the records (1906) that a loss has been shown in the number of active locals and the enrollment of the home department.

We first wish to call your attention to the fact that though our active locals show a loss of 3, our average attendance shows the splendid gain of 431. This is the third highest gain shown during the last seven years; the banner year being shown in our report of 1912, when our gain in average attendance was 620, and the lowest in our 1911 report, when our average attendance only showed a gain of 180.

Though our home department shows a loss this year of 131, a great many of its members have been transferred to locals, thereby cutting down the enrollment of the home department and building the enrollment of locals. The enrollment of this department is now almost five times as great as it was in 1907, it having grown from 459 in 1907 to 2,273 in 1913. Enrollment of locals has increased from 6,249 in 1907 to 10,984 in 1913. Average attendance has increased from 2,296 in 1907 to 5,748 in 1913.

We can report one new district organized, "Southern Nebraska." We were unable to get report from them, though we wrote both president and secretary in reference to the matter. Last year we received an incomplete report from the Portland, Oregon, District; this year we have heard nothing from them. No report has been received from Oklahoma. We received a letter from Sister James Yates saying that if there were any active locals in Oklahoma she had not heard of them.

We are pleased with the steady growth the Religio is making, and though our enrollment does not show any marked increase this year, we account for it by the fact that the amendment to our constitution that was passed last year has been taken advantage of, which was, "Those who have become lost to the society by moving from local or through failure to report, after an absence of three months shall be dropped from membership in said local society." The membership has been weeded out, and as a consequence this year's report shows a higher percentage of attendance than ever before since I have been keeping the records.

MRS. M. A. ETZENHOUSER, General Secretary.

REPORT OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

APRIL 1, 1913.

To the Convention: In the matter of providing maps for the Society Islands Mission and extending the circulation of Autumn Leaves referred to the Executive, our report is that these matters were sub-committed with the result that the following is reported by the subcommittee:

"In the matter of Zion's Religio-Literary Society report of executive committee, would respectfully report for the committee on increasing circulation of Autumn Leaves, that we approached the Herald Publishing House with various propositions, but finally reached the conclusion from their expression that they fear we should hinder than help them by any of the offers we have planned. We should, however, strongly urge upon all Religians that they subscribe for and read that paper, and encourage and secure as many subscriptions as they can in their respective localities. We may add that we are still trying to see what can be done in a practical way, but have nothing further to report at this time.

"On the matter of maps for the South Sea Islands, we spoke to Mrs. Lake and have written since their departure, but although it is now some months since, we have heard nothing in reply. Doubtless after they are located they will find time to arrange what they wish and send it in, so that a committee should be continued and provision made for carrying out this work the coming year if possible."

In the matter of junior lessons referred to this committee, we have to report that it was decided to issue separate Junior Quarterly, to be edited by the present lesson editor. Three quarters' lessons have been published and circulated.

In the matter of additional translations of the Book of Mormon, we have to report that we have not been called into council upon the matter.

Having been authorized to appoint a society historian, Sister Pearl Gardner was selected for that position.

The Thanksgiving offering to the Translation Fund was authorized to be continued and the treasurer instructed to carry it out. This was referred to this committee.

Signed for the committee,

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Chairman.

The Wednesday evening session begun at 1.15. Songs numbers 8 and 37 were used in opening, and prayer was offered by Gomer T. Griffiths.

The general secretary made report as follows:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, March 27, 1913.

To the General Convention Assembled; Greeting: Outside of the regular routine work of the secretary's office I have done but little. Have attended reunions at Moline, Illinois, and Magnolia, Iowa. The reunion committee at both of these places gave us one session a day for auxiliary work. The attention and attendance was all that could be desired, and the work done both by our local Religians and the traveling ministry present was what made our auxiliary work a success.

Half of our time was devoted to Religio and Sunday school work proper, and the following subjects handled. Teaching problems; methods; Book of Mormon map talk; home department work; good literature work; and Religio and Sunday school round table. We had papers written by Sisters Audentia Anderson, Carlotta Hartnell, Della Braidwood, and Brethren J. F. Rudd and Charles Babb on the above subjects. After the close of the reunions these papers were sent to our Arena, so that others may receive the good instruction contained therein.

The other half of each day's session was devoted to round table discussion of gospel subjects: The restoration; first resurrection, the millennium; second resurrection; eternal judgment; Word of wisdom, and church organization. This part of our sessions were presided over by Elders James McKiernan, F. B. Farr, John Harp, O. E. Sade, Heman C. Smith, S. W. L. Scott, J. W. Wight, George H. Hilliard, Sidney Pitt, and R. C. Evans. We also had a twenty-minute talk by Elder John F. Garver, subject, The power of heredity and environment as related to the subject of eugenics.

We believe that our meetings resulted in much good, and favorable comments were heard not only from our membership, but from outsiders that were present. A peaceful spirit of love and good feeling pervaded all of the meetings.

All traveling expenses, etc., were met by the reunion committees, but $1.77, which deficit was met by the General Association.

Your sister in the work,
Mrs. M. A. ETZENHOUSER.

This was followed by a speech on special qualifications of members of the lookout committee by Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser.

A paper on the value of purpose of reports written by Floralice Miller was read by F. A. Russell.

Special music was then given as follows: Music by the Graceland College orchestra; vocal solo by Zylphia Fenn; piano solo by Miss Morgan.

Certain resolutions were reported by the resolutions committee which were left for later consideration.

Song number 62 was sung. Adjourned.

President Gunsolley opened the morning session at 8 o'clock. Meeting opened by song number 111.

J. A. GARDNER, General Treasurer.

This was followed by a paper on gospel work of the Religio by J. A. Gardner.

Edward Rannie followed with a discussion on extension of relief work.

The committee on appropriations made recommendations as follows:

For general expenses, $300; for Social Purity Committee, $50; for Home Department, $50; for Gospel Literature Work, $75; for Hebrew tracts, $100.

The committee also submitted the following recommendation:

Whereas one of the purposes of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society is to encourage practical Christianity,

We recommend the appropriation of three hundred dollars annually for the purpose of aiding Graceland College and helping worthy and needy young men and women to obtain a better education, and that it shall be used subject to the following regulations:

1. A committee of three shall be elected to devise a plan whereby students can be obtained to avail themselves of the benefits of said fund, and they shall have full power to carry the same into effect. The committee shall serve for three years.
2. The three hundred dollars shall be paid during the month of July of each year by the Zion's Religio-Literary Society treasurer to the treasurer of Graceland College.
3. The money shall be used to pay for scholarships and incidental expenses of the students, and it shall not exceed the sum of sixty dollars per year for each student.
4. The amount of financial aid received by each student may be repaid to the treasurer of Zion's Religio-Literary Society in such amounts monthly or yearly, as shall be agreed upon with the committee.
5. All money repaid to the treasurer by the students in connection with the annual appropriation of three hundred dollars shall constitute a perpetual fund to carry into effect the purposes of this resolution.

J. A. GARDNER,
Chairman Appropriations Committee.

The recommendation to donate three hundred dollars to Graceland College was warmly discussed and finally adopted along with the collateral recommendation to create a committee of three to disburse these funds.

Special order being resumed, S. A. Burgess, librarian, reported. He followed with a talk on library work.

The Home Department made report, from which we extract as follows:

Independence Stake has the largest enrollment, but shows a loss of 64, but to offset that two Religios have been organized from their numbers. Lamoni Stake has second largest enrollment and shows a loss of 24, with one Religio organized from their membership.

Toronto, Canada, is steadily growing with gain of 35. Northern California leads in contributions, having $14.05; Colorado second, with $10.28; total contributions, $100.40.

Nearly all districts show gain. The lessons are well liked and the interest has greatly increased in them.

A very interesting blackboard demonstration was made by Mrs. W. H. Deam.

Song 171 was sung.

Harvey Sandy read a paper on the object of good literature work, followed by Mrs. A. M. Chase on the ways and means of good literature work. Mrs. W. H. Deam read a paper by Vernon Lee on results and testimonials of good literature work, and Harvey Sandy read one prepared by A. L. Keen on the relation to missionary and branch work.

Mrs. D. H. Blair, normal superintendent, made her annual report. This was followed by a short talk on the value of trained teachers by Mrs. A. M. Chase, and one by John F. Sheehy on how a missionary may assist. Mrs. Blair then talked briefly on the same subject.

Deferred business being taken up the committee to disburse the donations for use of students in Graceland College was appointed by the body. For the three-year term, J. A. Gardner; for the two-year term, J. A. Becker; for the one-year term, Alice E. Cowan.

Other recommendations of the appropriations committee were then taken up and discussed and adopted.

Song number 166 was sung and adjournment taken at 12.10 p. m.

Thursday afternoon session began with prayer by Daniel Macgregor after the singing of songs numbers 232 and 104.

The committee on nominations then presented the following names for consideration: For president, T. J. Elliott, J. A. Gunsolley, and F. A. Russell. J. A. Gunsolley was elected.

For vice president: Paul Craig, T. J. Elliott, and R. V. Hopkins. T. J. Elliott was elected.

For secretary: Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, Mary

Steel, Louise Giesch. Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser was elected.

For treasurer: M. H. Siegfried and John Smith. The body nominated J. A. Gardner, who was elected.

For librarian: S. A. Burgess and Alice E. Cowan. S. A. Burgess was chosen.

Song number 136 was sung.

John W. Rushton then made a talk on the renaissance, dealing with sociological conditions which directly bear on the religious conditions of the country.

The resolution to merge the Sunday school and Religio societies was then taken up for consideration.

The resolution was as follows:

Resolved, That we favor merging the Religio Society and Sunday School Association into one organization.

That a committee of three be appointed to act for the Religio in connection with similar action that may be taken by the Sunday School Association or General Conference.

Resolved further, That we believe a rule should be adopted to provide that the president or superintendent of the consolidated organization be nominated by the joint council of the Presidency and Twelve, subject to confirmation, other officers to be nominated by the organization.

R. S. SALYARDS.
F. A. RUSSELL.

The resolutions committee reported as follows:

After a careful, serious deliberation upon the foregoing resolution, with all that it involves, we have concluded that, in our judgment, it involves an entire change in the constitution and would therefore be unconstitutional without the required month's notice.

H. J. DAVISON, Chairman Resolutions Committee.
MARGARET MACGREGOR, Secretary Resolutions Com.

The resolution was moved and the report was moved as a substitute.

The question was discussed for some time, when the matter was deferred until the evening meeting.

The assembly then took the conference work as follows:

Good Literature, led by Harvey Sandy.

Home Department, led by Mrs. W. H. Deam.

Normal Department, led by Mrs. D. H. Blair.

Relief Committee, led by J. A. Gardner.

Adjournment was taken at 5.15 p. m.

The Thursday evening meeting marked the close of the Religio convention for 1913, and because of the importance of deferred business it was impossible to live up to the program printed.

J. A. Becker offered prayer after singing songs numbers 71 and 66.

The matter of merging Religio and Sunday school was again discussed. The debate took the meeting along toward regular closing time before final action was taken. The question was then disposed of for the session by referring it to a committee for consideration and report to the next annual convention.

This committee consists of R. S. Salyards, J. W. Rushton, and Frederick M. Smith.

A proposed amendment to create a standing nominating committee was laid on the table. Another relating to the appointment of a superintendent of the Normal Department by the joint executives of the Sunday school and Religio organizations was adopted.

A resolution changing article 3 of section 1 of the constitution to provide for election of officers by means other than the ballot when desired was adopted.

Graceland College Glee Club rendered an excellent number, followed by a piano number by Miss Laura B. Kelley, instructor in piano of Graceland College.

The present lessons committee was retained. It is composed of F. M. Smith, J. A. Gunsolley, Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, Mrs. W. H. Deam, and the editor of the Quarterly.

C. B. Woodstock was reelected a member of the social purity committee. This committee is made up of one from the Religio, one from the Sunday school organization, and one from the church.

An appropriation of five hundred dollars was made for a Chinese mission in Hawaii.

Heman C. Smith made an address on home training, and was followed by J. A. Gunsolley.

J. M. Baker, representing the relief committee of the local church, expressed thanks for the money appropriated for the Omaha sufferers.

Miss Anna Mae Morgan, teacher at Graceland College, sang two numbers, accompanied by Miss Laura B. Kelley.

The College Glee Club gave a closing number, after which the convention adjourned, being dismissed after benediction by T. J. Elliott.

Sunday School Convention.

The closing sessions of the Religio Convention gave promise of increased attendance during the sessions of the Sunday School Convention. In fact the attendance at both conventions is much larger than at former conventions at Lamoni. The town is filled with delegates to the conventions and General Conference and every train brings new arrivals.

A prayer meeting was held from 9 to 9.45 a. m. in the lower room under the direction of John Smith and A. B. Phillips. And at 9.45 delegates registered and were given badges. At 10 o'clock, after a short song service, Superintendent Macgregor called the assembly to order, song 105 was sung, and G. W. Robley offered prayer.

A solo by Stella Bandy was rendered.

Superintendent Macgregor read a greeting from President Joseph Smith to the convention.

Organization was effected by electing Superintendent Macgregor to preside, with power to choose his associates. He chose D. J. Krahl and F. B. Farr.

General Secretary D. J. Krahl was chosen as secretary, with power to select his assistants. He selected F. A. Russell and Estella Wight.

The credentials committee reported, which report was adopted and the committee continued.

The chair was empowered to appoint committees. He named as committee on resolutions, George Thorburn, Arthur Allen, and John Zahnd; as additional members of the committee on appropriations, M. H. Bond and T. A. Hougas, to serve in connection with himself as superintendent, the general secretary and general treasurer, as per resolution of the body; as press committee, W. H. Garrett, H. E. Moler, and H. J. Davison; as notification committee, G. W. Robley and F. J. Ebeling.

The general secretary reported. A net gain of over 700 in membership is reported. The Home Department reports a gain of 4,696.

Hattie R. Griffiths then held a conference on the beginner department.

"Teaching Intermediates; obstacles and how overcome," was treated by Mrs. F. B. Farr, and adjournment taken at noon.

The afternoon session begun at 2 o'clock, T. W. Chatburn offering prayer. A piano solo was given by Florence Thompson.

The chair announced further committee assignments.

A roll call of the delegates was taken.

The Home Department Superintendent, Florence McNichols, made report from which we quote as follows:

The home department is no longer experimental. It is here to stay and is one of the growing features of the church, as evidenced by statistical reports. With 4,216 reported members now, with 480 reported transfers to local schools during the year, with 12 organized districts failing to report their numbers, we may consistently conclude our membership has reached, if not actually passed the 5,000 mark for the year 1912.

Six hundred HOPES and 3,110 Quarterlies have been utilized by the department, $681.80 is the year's offering, according to incomplete reports. We quote from last year's report: "Home department correspondence is growing to such magnitude that it requires a vast deal of time to handle it. Originating and planning for an extension of the work has had to be abandoned to some extent in order to meet the current demands. The superintendent of the home department is also the assistant, and the secretary, corresponding, financial, and otherwise, and we believe the time is right now when one person can not do justice to the growing needs of the department." We have written more than one thousand letters in the interest of the home department this year, and yet we feel that we have covered very little ground compared to the vast area it were our privilege to cover, had we the time to forge into the unexplored. The capacity of the home department is unlimited, as the whole world is its field. True it is, that district superintendents of home classes are doing a noble work, but there are thousands of families outside of their limited territory, some of whom could, and would be reached; yes, many of whom would be glad to be reached if the general superintendent were not literally tied to current demands.

We are not pleading for less work for the superintendent, whoever it may be, but we are pleading for relief in one direction that more efficient work may be accomplished in general, for the home department. And it is our hope that the general association may find the way, the best way, the way that will permit this great asset of the Sunday school, and therefore of the church, to get into the very heart of the big possibilities lying all around it.

MRS. FLORENCE McNICHOLS,
General Superintendent.

Mrs. D. H. Blair, normal superintendent, reported, same report having been made to the Religio Convention.

John Smith, general treasurer, made report, from which we give the following summary: Balance on hand March 29, 1912, $2,602.09; receipts, $6,133.58; expenditures, $5,964.51; balance on hand, $2,771.16. The auditing committee reported the same correct.

Mrs. D. H. Blair discussed "Training for service," and Joseph Arber made a talk on "Practical methods for senior teachers."

A paper was read from Florence McNichols by Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, on the subject of home department work.

Superintendent Macgregor made the following report:

REPORT OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT.

One year ago, as you are aware, we launched on an un-sailed sea, that of graded lessons, and with all graded schools.

The voyage was not undertaken without forethought and consideration. For several years the matter had been before us.

Unaccustomed as we were to voyages of this character, some of us have become sick. But this was to be expected, as disorders of this description are but natural.

We shall not say, however, that this sickness was not quickened by unskillful work on the part of the crew. It was a new experience to us all, and so perhaps we may be pardoned for our imperfections.

But this does not destroy the fact that our graded gospel boat is seaworthy, nor that we shall not reach the haven of satisfaction. As we hasten on, working off the bile of antiquated customs, and taking on the sea legs of progress, our voyage will become the pleasanter.

True we have not as yet reached our post of destination; we have not perfected the grading of our system, so that the reward that awaits us is not to be measured by the trial along the way. But we have this to offer by way of assurance, that if the cross of inconvenience has been severe the crown of triumph will be correspondingly the brighter.

So far as my personal observations have permitted me to note the conditions of the schools at home and abroad I have this to say, that the whole association is at work. The hum of industry noted in class work, committee, and counsel, is heard on every hand.

With this unusual activity the cry for skilled teachers is resounding far and wide. It is a cry for teachers of understanding, teachers of inspiration, teachers of love, and teachers of enthusiasm. Let me emphasize this as the greatest need of the school to-day.

In view of this fact I submit that steps should be instantly taken to aid the Normal Department. As you may be aware, the present incumbent is called upon to occupy for both societies, the Religio and Sunday school. The burden is too great for one, help should be extended.

With a view to strengthening our relationship to the church and solidifying our forces, I recommend that this association add to its General Executive force a member of the First Presidency and a member of the Quorum of Twelve who, representing the parent body, may serve us in an advisory way. As we understand it, it is the duty of these presiding quorums to extend their help and labors into all the world and in all the church.

Further affiliation with the parent body may be practicable and profitable by associating district president with the directing staff of the district association, and the branch president with the executive of the local school. It is a little premature, however, to inaugurate this latter measure, time and experience will soon determine.

The help rendered by my esteemed associates, Brother G. R. Wells, and Sister Annie Reynolds, has been rendered in a very harmonious and efficient way. I appreciate to the full their sympathy and support.

The work of the Normal Department has been cared for in an admirable manner by our long proved worker, Sister D. H. Blair. The good resulting from her untiring toil is being demonstrated in a competent staff of teachers constantly coming to the front.

The Home Department, that awakened giant of the church, extending his far reaching arms from shore to shore, reaching into every hamlet and hill is proving an indefatigable toiler, and wonderfully successful. Being such a ponderous fellow, needless to say his wardrobe is extensive and requires constant attention.

Sister McNichols is doing splendidly in the office of Home Department Superintendent.

The General Secretary, known to all through years of faithful service, has served us excellently, but his burdens are increasing with the growth and development of the association. Some help should be extended him, for the work's sake.

Of the other officers, committees and editors, time and occasion prevent us giving to each due consideration, but each and all have endeavored to render the association their best services, which can not but result in a crowning success.

Respectfully,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

The resolutions committee reported the following resolution:

We, your committee on resolutions, beg leave to report as follows: Resolution number 1, which reads, "Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to consider the question of combining the Sunday school and Religio Society, such committee to act in connection with the committee appointed by the Religio organization, to report to the convention of 1914, with the following recommendation:

We recommend to table indefinitely.

A motion was made that the resolution be adopted, and as a substitute motion was made to adopt the committee's report.

Speeches were limited to three minutes, and much discussion followed. Final action was taken by adopting the resolution, and naming the following committee to act in connection with the committee named by the Religio Convention: T. A. Hougas, Daniel Macgregor, and D. J. Krahl.

A resolution from the Saskatchewan District that the district be divided was adopted, subject to the action of General Conference.

A resolution from the Southern California District in regard to a field worker was referred to the district officers of that district, with power to act.

A vocal solo was sung by Doris Anderson, song 107 was sung, and adjournment taken.

At the evening session the young people's choir, assisted by the Graceland College Orchestra, under the direction of May Skinner, led in song service.

Meeting was in charge of the secretary, D. J. Krahl. The opening prayer was by T. A. Hougas, after which two numbers were rendered by the Lamoni Mandolin Club.

The "March of the Nations" was rendered by a large number of public-school children, carrying the flags of forty-eight nations. After being marshaled upon the platform, under the direction of Miss Nora Carter, a teacher of the schools, D. J. Krahl called for those bearing flags of various nations to line up in front. When a large number had done this, he asked all those who had been on foreign missions, including the ladies, to arise. A considerable number arose. While they were thus standing, the old-time missionary song, "From Greenland's icy mountain," was rousingly sung by the children and the audience. When the children left the platform one small girl was left, bearing the American flag, which was a signal for a song by the assembly: "My country, 'tis of thee."

"The qualifications of a teacher" was the subject of a speech by W. W. Scott.

Rudolph Etzenhouser, who also represented Rees Jenkins, of Jerusalem, presented the General Religio Society and the Sunday School Association with a gavel made from the stump of a tree which grew on the Hill Cumorah, and a base upon which to strike the gavel, made from wood procured by Brother Jenkins from Bethlehem. These were presented to the presidents of the two associations by S. A. Burgess; speeches of acceptance being made by J. A. Gunsolley and Daniel Macgregor. A paper knife made from wood from the same stump as the gavel was presented to Marietta Walker, editor of the Hope, through Estella Wight, also one given to the secretary of the Religio, Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser.

"Teaching," was the subject of a paper written by Annie Reynolds, of California, and read by F. M. Sheehy.

"Interest in the class," was briefly outlined by A. Carmichael.

A vocal solo was given by Frances White, assisted at the piano by May Skinner and A. N. Hoxie, jr., with the violin.

Superintendent Macgregor then presented diplomas to graduates of the normal lessons course. This was followed by an address to the graduates by J. W. Rushton.

Benediction by E. F. Robertson. Adjournment.

Saturday morning session began with prayer by a Lamanite brother from Oklahoma, Chief Three Fingers. His prayer was made in his own tongue. He holds the Melchisedec priesthood.

Mrs. A. N. Hoxie, jr., then gave a piano number.

The auditing committee reported the treasurer's report as correct.

Financial report of the Home Department was read.

The following was reported by the resolutions committee:

Resolution dated Burlington, Iowa, from the Nauvoo District: "That we petition the General Convention to reconsider and return to the uniform text."

The Resolutions Committee reported as follows, to which they appended the following recommendation:

We do not favor the passage of this resolution for the following reasons:

1. The present lesson system has not had time to prove its merits or demerits.
2. The present system, before being put in force, was submitted to all the districts, hence it would be unfair to change without submitting to all the districts again.

The recommendation of the committee was adopted.

A second resolution was presented by the committee as follows:

Resolved, That the Beginner Quarterly be prepared for the teachers' use only, with such helps and suggestions as may be necessary for their work, and that a small leaflet containing the lesson story be published, to be given to the pupil on the day when the lesson story is presented in the school. It should also contain the golden text for the following Sunday, to be memorized at home, with recommendation that it be referred to the Lessons Committee. This recommendation was adopted.

Annie Allen was reelected a member of the auditing committee.

J. A. Gunsolley was reelected a member of the Lessons Committee.

R. S. Salyards, John Smith, and A. Carmichael were reelected members of the revising committee.

The Lessons Committee reported as follows:

To the Convention; Greeting: Pursuant to an action of the convention of 1912, by which the issuing of graded lessons was referred to the Executive Committee and the Lessons Committee, joint sessions were held with the Executive Committee, resulting in the adoption of a plan to issue five grades of quarterlies, each with its separate editor.

In response to a call by the chairman of the committee, a meeting of the committee and the editors was held at Lamoni, Iowa, July 5 to 8. There were present at this meeting general superintendent of the association, Daniel Macgregor, Saint Clair, Michigan, chairman; J. A. Gunsolley, Lamoni, Iowa, secretary; Christiana Salyards, Lamoni, Iowa, editor of the Senior Quarterly; Lucie H. Sears, New Bedford, Massachusetts, editor of the Intermediate Quarterly; Margaret Macgregor, Saint Clair, Michigan, editor of the Junior Quarterly; Anna Zimmermann, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, editor of the Primary Quarterly; Hattie R. Griffiths, Columbus, Ohio, editor of the Beginner Quarterly; Heman C. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa, John F. Garver, Lamoni, Iowa, and Gomer R. Wells, Lamoni, Iowa, assistant superintendent and editor of the Exponent.

The following resolutions were adopted: "Moved, That it be the sense of this body that all editors of the various grades of Quarterly should be considered members of this committee by virtue of the action of the convention making the editor of the Quarterly a member, at the time there being only one editor, the other four having since been provided for and that this action be reported to the next convention."

"Moved, That G. R. Wells, editor of the Exponent, be invited to sit with the committee, and that he have voice and vote in our deliberations."

The five editors were then appointed a subcommittee to arrange the various grades of lessons, they to work independently or conjointly, as they found necessary, and present their report to the whole committee for further consideration. This was done, with the result that outlines for lessons for three years in each of the five grades were adopted. This outline was published, and appears on pages 42 and 43 of the Exponent for October, November, and December, 1912.

A meeting of the committee was held this morning at nine o'clock, with the following persons present: Daniel Macgregor, chairman; J. A. Gunsolley, secretary; Christiana Salyards, editor of the Senior Quarterly; Maggie Macgregor, editor of the Junior Quarterly; Hattie R. Griffiths, editor of the Beginner Quarterly; Heman C. Smith and John Garver.

Each of the editors present reported lessons for the third quarterly written and ready for the printer, prepared in harmony with the outlines previously adopted. Said reports are submitted herewith.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Secretary Committee.

G. E. Harrington gave a talk on the "School in relation to the pastor."

A. M. Chase gave a talk on the environment of our youth in Utah.

A vocal duet was then given by Paul and Jeanette Craig, entitled, "For ever with the Lord."

The remaining time of the session was devoted to conference work under the direction of Superintendent Macgregor.

After a song service at 2 o'clock the afternoon session was largely devoted to a grand round table, at which numberless questions affecting every department of the work were discussed.

A violin solo was then rendered by A. N. Hoxie, jr., assisted by his wife at the piano.

A communication was read from the Quorum of Twelve in which they noted the work of the convention and their appreciation of the work of the association.

J. F. Mintun extended greetings to the association on behalf of the quorums of seventies.

A report of the revising committee was read; in which they related their labors for the year and stated that all had been done in harmony.

The committee on resolutions reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That an appropriation of $500 be made for the purpose of aiding young men and young women to secure an education at Graceland College, said money to be expended under direction of the trustees of Graceland College and subject to the following restrictions:

First: The amount furnished any student shall not exceed $60 for the year.

Second: This amount shall be considered as loaned without interest to the recipient and shall be returned by the student as soon after he leaves school as practicable.

Third: Said money when returned shall again be loaned to a needy student, returned as above, thus making a permanent aid fund.

It was referred to the appropriation committee.

A resolution of thanks to Anna Salyards for her twenty years' labors was passed unanimously by a rising vote, as follows:

Resolved, That the General Association in convention assembled express their hearty appreciation of Sister R. S. Salyards' efficient, faithful and consecrated devotion to the arduous task we have imposed upon her during the last twenty years.

The appropriations committee reported the following resolution:

Whereas the work of the church in the city of Salt Lake City is under a very serious handicap of having no church or other suitable building for Sunday school, Religio or other church work, and realizing not only the present need for such an equipment, but the earnest interest of the Sunday School Association in our work. Therefore we earnestly petition this body to appropriate the sum of one thousand dollars, or such other sum as they may deem expedient, to assist in providing a suitable church or headquarters building for the work in that city.

Appropriations Committee recommends that five hundred dollars be appropriated for the purpose of the erection of a church building in Salt Lake City, said money to be expended under the direction of the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric and Salt Lake City Branch.

Moved to adopt the report of the appropriations committee.

Moved as a substitute that the General Sunday School Association turn over the sum of two thousand dollars to the general church funds.

Moved that the substitute be amended to read that five hundred dollars be appropriated on behalf of the Salt Lake chapel, to be expended according to the discretion of the joint council of the Presidency, Twelve and Bishopric, and that five hundred dollars be donated to the general church fund.

The substitute as amended carried.

A resolution affecting the work of the social purity department was called from the table, but was deferred, and an election of officers ordered.

Nominations were: Daniel Macgregor, J. A. Gunsolley, J. A. Gardner, and Gomer R. Wells.

The hour of 5.30 having arrived adjournment was taken to 7 p. m.

At 7 o'clock song service under charge of May Skinner. Mandolin solo by J. H. Anthony.

Deferred business was resumed and officers were elected. Daniel Macgregor was reelected superintendent; Gomer R. Wells, first assistant; Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, second assistant; W. N. Robinson, secretary; John Smith, treasurer. E. H. Fisher was chosen to library commission.

The appropriation committee recommended the five hundred dollars appropriation to Graceland College. The recommendation was adopted.

The rest of the session was devoted to program as follows:

A demonstration, "The old and the new," conducted by Miss Mabel Knipschild, of Graceland College and Miss Lydia Thomas, of Lamoni High School.

A ladies' quartet, "Sleep baby mine," Misses Zylphia Fenn, Doris Anderson, Mabel Carlile, Frances White.

Benediction by D. J. Krahl, and adjournment.

General Conference.

The General Conference held its first session yesterday (Sunday) at 11 o'clock a. m. Counselor Frederick M. Smith called the assembly to order and prayer was offered by Counselor Elbert A. Smith. President Joseph Smith was in the stand but took no part. Partial organization was effected and speeches were made by the following brethren: W. H. Kelley, H. O. Smith, Charles Derry, E. L. Kelley, and F. M. Smith.

The day was occupied as follows: A young people's prayer meeting at 8 a. m., in lower room in charge of Paul Craig, A. N. Hoxie, jr., and S. A. "Men should not be judged by their rank, appearance, or social charm, but by the character of their lives and works. It is better to be praised by our work than by another man's words."

JOSEPH SMITH; HIS PROPHECIES.

Joseph Smith's brief life was phenomenal. Born December 23, 1805, in the town of Sharon, Windsor County, Vermont; he died at Carthage, Illinois, June 27, 1844, age thirty-eight years, six months, and four days. This remarkable man can only be measured correctly by what he taught as the ethical and spiritual doctrine of the Christian religion. These are found in the verified revelations vouchsafed to the church through him, and the principles he taught, over his own signature, on his own volition.

As time modifies the asperities growing out of prejudice and bigotry, the claims of Joseph Smith as a prophet of God will be discussed upon their merits, and he will be accorded his true place both in religion and ethics. The recession of the wave of human prejudice has already begun.

The early religious pronouncements of this man indicated his inspirational and prophetic mold, for "he spoke as one having authority," and not as the religious teachers of the modern world. The best they could do,—being blinded by the traditions of ages,—was to place on exhibition the historic skeleton of primitive Christianity; admitting, of course, that the spiritual gifts and powers that once animated the Christian institution, throughout its various ramifications, had long before disappeared; and the church, as a veritable spiritual entity, which blazed with the light and power of God as indicative of its supreme divinity, had disappeared from the world. We must agree with the Protestant reformers that the particular specie of church organism, established by Jesus, became extinct after the days of the apostles, because of spiritual degeneracy and apostasy, and to deny this is to repudiate the necessity of a reformation, or a restoration of primitive Christianity.

If it were not for New Testament history we could not know the type of church that Jesus established, for in organization, doctrine, and power, there was no church like it in all the world at the time that Joseph Smith came upon the religious stage. It would be as logical to say that the modern goat is the ancient, extinct megalosaurus in succession as to claim that modern church institutions are, in fact, the apostolic church in succession. The truism, that "like begets like" refutes such claim, for instead of modern Christianity teaching the organic form, doctrines, and promises of original Christianity, it negates many of them and arrays itself in war against the most important features of the Christian institution. Joseph Smith's prophetic character was demonstrated in the work accomplished by him through the Almighty. This must appear in the analysis of the proposition.

JOSEPH SMITH'S PROPHETIC AFFIRMATION OF THE RESTORATION OF PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY AND ITS ACCOMPLISHMENT.

Mr. Smith proclaimed a restoration of primitive Christianity—the exact counterpart of what it was in the days of the apostles. This restoration was not to be "a make-believe," it was to be a living, vital system, embracing all of the spiritual features of original Christianity—inspired apostles and prophets, with the nine spiritual gifts of the Holy Spirit. The veritable powers of the ancient Pentecost were to be restored. None of the reformers dared teach such a doctrine, for failure of fulfillment would have overthrown their claims. The voice of prophetic inspiration through Joseph Smith was, "Whosoever believeth on my words, them will I visit with the manifestation of my Spirit, and they shall be born of me, even of water and of the Spirit."<sup>1</sup>

"In my name . . . they shall cast out devils; they shall heal the sick; they shall cause the blind to receive their sight, and the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak, and the lame to walk."<sup>2</sup> "The manifestation of the Spirit may be given to every man to profit withal. . . . To some is given, by the Spirit of God, the word of wisdom; to another . . . the word of knowledge . . . to some it is given to have faith to be healed, and to others it is given to have faith to heal. . . . To some . . . the working of miracles; and to others . . . prophecy . . . to others . . . discerning of spirits. It is given to some to speak with tongues, and to another . . . the interpretation of tongues: and all of these cometh from God, for the benefit of the children of God."<sup>3</sup>

Joseph Smith could have said that this ancient order of spiritual power and blessing was to be restored, but he was as powerless to bestow these blessings himself as he was to create a world or to pluck the stars from the sky. He said, in substance, "God authorized me to teach that He,—our heavenly Father,—would confer the gifts of the Holy Spirit upon those who obeyed the restored gospel." Those gifts came in confirmation of Joseph's declaration. Divinity alone could confer them. This proves, with the precision of a mathematical demonstration that Joseph was both prophet and priest of God, and that the restoration of original Christianity was an accomplished fact. Through the manifest power of the Holy Spirit the marks of divinity were as firmly fastened to the religion taught by Joseph Smith as they were upon the same system as taught in the days of the apostles.

LOOKING INTO THE FUTURE.

The human mind, by careful analysis of forces already operating, may be able to approximately tell future results as effects following existing causes; but where such data does not exist, the mind is a blank as to specific events of the future. Do you know that you will die this year? That your son will die next year? That war will exist between the United States and the British Empire in the near future? The information to answer these questions correctly does not exist in the mind of any living human being; and no mind can know unless such information is transferred to that mind by the infinite mind that does know. Joseph Smith, through the revelations of the Holy Spirit, disclosed things yet future,—things which none but the infinite Mind could know. Prove this and it would be intellectual insanity, in the light of axiomatic fact, to deny his prophetic character. To deny the validity of this proposition, if once established, would transform all of the prophets of the past, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, into myths, and their prophecies into mere imaginations growing out of mental hallucinations.

JOSEPH SMITH FORESAW IMPORTANT DETAILS IN THE GREAT AMERICAN CIVIL WAR WHICH NO HUMAN MIND BY ITS OWN VOLITION COULD KNOW.

This modern prophet received this information in a revelation vouchsafed to him December 25, 1832, twenty-nine years before the war began. (See Pearl of Great Price, 1851, English edition) "Verily thus saith the Lord, concerning the wars that will shortly come to pass, beginning at the rebellion of South Carolina, which will eventually terminate in the death and misery of many souls. . . . The Southern States shall be divided against the Northern States. . . . Slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshaled and disciplined for war."

Nearly twenty years after Joseph had received this revelation on the rebellion, Henry Clay, speaking on the floor of the Senate of the result in case there should be a war, said: "Interminable wars would follow until some Philip or Alexander, some Cæsar or Napoleon, would arise and cut the Gordian knot, and solve the capacity of man for self-government, and extinguish this last and glorious light upon which all mankind is gazing in hope and anxious expectation that the liberty that prevails here will sooner or later be diffused throughout the whole world."

Daniel Webster, about the same time of Clay's utterance, speaking hypothetically of the effects of civil war between the two sections,—the North and South,—declared, in substance, that it would be as rational to expect that "the stars could be hurled from their orbits and jostle against each other in the immensity of space without crushing the Universe," as to expect there could be a great civil war without obliterating the American Republic from the map of the world. The hypothetical predictions of those great men, based upon conditions and forces then operating, were errors of judgment, for instead of being overthrown, our Government came out of that war stronger as a democracy than it was before. Their belief in a coming conflict was hypothetical; their prediction as to result was wrong. What are the facts narrated in Joseph Smith's prophecy, given twenty-nine years before the war? 1. There was to be a great civil war between the North and the South. 2. This rebellion against the Federal Government was to begin in South Carolina. 3. The slaves were to rise up against their former masters and be disciplined for war. 4. The conflict was to terminate in the death and misery of many souls. No hypothesis here, but absolute historical facts predicted twenty-nine years before their occurrence. The war began in South Carolina; from there spread to the Southern States, until the Southern States were arrayed against the Northern States. The slaves supported the Union cause in that war against their masters. No human mind, by any mental process of its own could know these facts over a quarter of a century before they were crystallized into the basic facts of concrete American history. These facts had been transferred to the mind of this inspired man by the infinite Father, who knows the future as well as the past.

CONCLUSION.

As I stood by the grave of Joseph Smith and thought of him as he was, in what he taught—what he was in the principles he enunciated—I said, "Here rests the dust of one who was brother to us all." He stood for the liberty of mankind both in the church and in the State. His interpretation of God's grace was as broad as human necessity, and his love for mankind so tense and his ideas of justice so exact, that the gospel he preached was to all—both to the living and the dead. To his mind neither life, nor death, nor hell, nor time, nor eternity, can hinder the uplift of the soul that struggles for the higher levels of being—the soul for ever free to work out its own inherent possibilities.

Hated only by those that did not know and understand him: betrayed by false friends whose misrepresentations have done most to hide his true worth—the clouds are passing.

In his conception of God's grace and love for mankind; in his analysis of divine justice as it relates to human destiny; in his belief in the immanence of God in human life; in his plea for the broad and universal work of Jesus Christ in the salvation of the human race—for these, and many other things, the name of Joseph Smith will grow brighter and brighter, with coming time.

The mind that appreciates worth in the lives of others who have labored for the good of others, must cherish the memories of such men as Martin Luther, John Wesley, Alexander Campbell, and a host of others; but, in the last analysis, richer than they in his conception and comprehension of divinity in its work for humanity, Joseph Smith's star is rising, and will yet shine brightest of all that has arisen on the religious horizon of the world since the apostolic age.

JOSEPH SMITH; HIS INFLUENCE ON MODERN RELIGIOUS IDEAS.

As a matter of fact, who knows that Joseph Smith had any influence on the religious opinions of to-day? How many people, competent to express the religious opinions of to-day, such as might well be considered as embodied in the caption,—have given either Joseph Smith, or even the church established through his instrumentality, credit for their ideas? Most, if not all of them, though they may be close students of the doctrines of the church as given through Joseph Smith, rather than give him or the church credit for having been the pioneer teacher of them, are anxious that his name shall not be associated with what they teach.

On the other side of the question, it may be asked, who can successfully deny that it has been the powerful influence of the restored gospel (for I take it that this title refers more to the work the man was enabled to do by divine direction through the Holy Spirit than simply the life of the individual) that has changed the religious creeds and dogmas of the various churches throughout the land and given rise to so many new denominations, springing out of the old ones, primarily because these new organizers believed the new thought could no longer be cast in the old mold?

There are, however, some men writing and speaking in the name of religion, who, judged by their public utterances, are solely influenced by the work of Joseph Smith. They stand in this relationship to him: wherein he represents truth, they are the propagandists of its antithesis. I refer to such men as represent the Anti-Mormon League of America. To reduce this to a mathematical nicety it might be stated in this wise: The gospel restored through Joseph Smith equals the truth; The Anti-Mormon League equals the minus truth. We have here a class of men whose sole object seems to be opposition to the restored gospel.

But what of those who have been moved to adopt some of the ideas of which Joseph Smith was the pioneer and against which they then waged relentless warfare? We can not say that Joseph Smith is directly responsible for these changes having been made in the church governments in which they have been made, but we can say that he advocated them and that they were adopted, not as changes, but as fundamentals, in the church over which the Lord made him the human head. And who can say that their being taught throughout the world had not so molded the modern religious intellect as to force them to be made a part of the government and teaching of other churches?

WHAT OF THESE CHANGES? LET US SEE.

When the church began teaching the law of tithing as found in the standard books of the church, so far as we have been able to discover from the histories and disciplines of the most prominent denominations of those days, none of them believed or taught a system even resembling tithing. To-day many of them and their auxiliaries—the Epworth League for instance—are declaring in favor of it. As a sample of these denominational changes we give a paragraph from the Methodist Discipline, edition of 1908:

TITHING.

We believe that the evangelization of mankind can best be accomplished by an adequate support of all the agencies used by the church, and that to this end the scriptural doctrine of systematic giving should be taught in our pulpits and practiced by our ministers and members.

It may be said in this connection that as late as 1904 neither this paragraph nor anything relating to the subject is published in the Discipline.

GATHERING OF JEWS.

When Joseph Smith and the church announced a determined belief in the prophecies relating to a gathering of the Jews back to their promised land, the religious world was blind to the subject. None of them seemed to believe in such a thing. When it was announced that the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah was a prophecy relating to the restoration of the gospel, and with that the priesthood which had existed in the primitive church, soon after which Lebanon should become a fruitful field, few men believed it; and many declared that the Jews should not be again gathered and Lebanon should not be turned to blossom as the rose. But most of these negatives lived to see the recording of falling dews and rains in Palestine,—forced by the providence of God to believe that Joseph Smith and the church were not mistaken.

CREEDS REVISED.

Hard as it seemed at the time when the angel said to the young Seer, "Their creeds are all wrong," it has been found, by the then prominent churches, expedient and wise to change every one of them.

When the church began teaching that children were not to be condemned for the transgressions of their fathers, and that the atonement of Christ had made provision for them until they reached the years of accountability, it ran counter to some long-established church regulations and laws. From "The confession of faith agreed upon by the assembly of divines at Westminster" and published in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1788, we quote the following:

By the decree of God, for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life, and others foreordained to everlasting death.

These angels and men, thus predestinated and foreordained, are particularly and unchangeably designed; and their number is so certain and definite, that it can not be either increased or diminished.

Those of mankind who are predestinated unto life, God, before the foundation of the world was laid, according to his eternal and immutable purpose, and the secret counsel and good pleasure of his will, hath chosen in Christ unto everlasting glory, out of his free grace and love, without any foresight of faith or good works, or perseverance in either of them, or any other thing in the creature, as conditions, or causes moving him thereunto; and all to the praise of his glorious grace.

As God hath appointed the elect unto glory, so hath he, by the eternal and most free purpose of his will, foreordained all the means thereunto. Wherefore they who are elected being fallen in Adam, are redeemed by Christ, are effectually called unto faith in Christ by his Spirit working in due season; are justified, adopted, sanctified, and kept by his power through faith unto salvation. Neither are any other redeemed by Christ, effectually called, justified, adopted, sanctified, and saved, but the elect only.

The rest of mankind, God was pleased, according to the unsearchable counsel of his own will, whereby he extendeth or withholdeth mercy as he pleaseth, for the glory of his sovereign power over his creatures, to pass by, and to ordain them to dishonor and wrath for their sin, to the praise of his glorious justice.

The doctrine of this high mystery of predestination is to be handled with special prudence and care, that men attending the will of God revealed in his word, and yielding obedience thereunto, may, from the certainty of their effectual vocation, be assured of their eternal election. So shall this doctrine afford matter of praise, reverence, and admiration of God, and of humility, diligence, and abundant consolation, to all that sincerely obey the gospel."

This is taken from chapter three; and from chapter ten we quote:

All those whom God hath predestinated unto life, and those only, he is pleased, in his appointed and accepted time, effectually to call, by his Spirit, out of that state of sin and death in which they are by nature, to grace and salvation by Jesus Christ; enlightening their minds spiritually and savingly to understand the things of God. . . .

This effectual call is of God's free and special grace alone, not from anything at all foreseen in man; who is altogether passive therein, until, being quickened and renewed by the Holy Spirit, he is thereby enabled to answer this call, and to embrace the grace offered and conveyed in it.

Elect infants, dying in infancy, are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, who worketh when, and where, and how he pleaseth. So also are all other elect persons, who are incapable of being outwardly called by the ministry of the word.

Others not elected, although they may be called by the ministry of the word, and may have some common operations of the Spirit, yet they never truly come to Christ, and therefore can not be saved; much less can men not professing the Christian religion be saved in any other way whatsoever, be they ever so diligent to frame their lives according to the light of nature, and the law of that religion they do profess; and to assert and maintain that they may is very pernicious and to be detested.

A DAY OF SANER BELIEFS.

It is a well-known fact that the Presbyterian churches all over Christendom do not now believe this. They have, as gracefully as they well could without doing serious violence to the authority and ecclesiastical sovereignty of these Westminster divines; dropped this question and declared themselves locally against predestination and election, all of which has come to pass since the restoration of the gospel through Joseph Smith.

Here is an old hymn which some men sang, believing it to be praise to God and an expression of his desire:

Conceived in sin, oh, wretched state,
Before we draw our breath.
The first faint pulse begins to beat
Iniquity and death.

There is a never-ending hell
And never-dying flames,
Where infants must with demons dwell
In darkness, fire and chains.

Have faith the same for endless shame,
For all the human race.
For hell is crammed with infants damned,
Without a day of grace.

It is indeed consoling to note that the nightmare of such sentiment has been supplanted by a more sensible, saner belief in the justice of God and the love of the Christ for those who could not reasonably be held responsible for the sins of their progenitors; and the change has been wrought since the restoration of the gospel.

SECOND ADVENT OF CHRIST.

What does the history of the religions of the early part of the nineteenth century reveal to us concerning a belief in the second coming of Christ? Why, practically none of them believed it, particularly as the church and Joseph Smith announced it and as they understood the Scriptures to teach it. Here is a statement published recently in the Kansas City Star, purporting to be from the Reverend Charles R. Nesbet, at the Central Presbyterian Church, Kansas City, which shows very largely the sentiment of the religious thinkers of to-day. We quote:

Christ is coming again personally and visibly. He who was crucified is coming in his own personality back to the world. The date is uncertain. No man will know when the Son of God cometh.

It is said he preached the sermon by request, he having delivered it on a previous occasion. He also referred to the old prophecies, having reference to the wars, famine, and pestilence that would precede the coming of Christ. He said Christ would come out of the clouds in the same manner as he ascended into heaven following his resurrection. "We are going to be men, and walk the streets, but there will be no possibility of sin," said he.

DIVINE HEALING.

Since Joseph Smith began teaching that God had not changed, but that he would hear the prayers of the righteous as he did in the early days of our Savior, many men have come to believe the same. When he said the Lord would heal the sick through prayer and the laying on of hands, many,—in fact all religionists,—denied that such an ordinance should exist in the church. Now, a great many are inventing many ways of approaching God so as to be worthy of receiving his blessings. The tendency of many has been toward a belief in the healing power of God. Light has come into the world, and some are partaking of it.

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

When the Book of Mormon was first published it was not known that it contained so much of a historical nature that would be proven true by archaeological research. A certain reverend gentleman by the name of Lamb, for instance, wrote a book in opposition to the Book of Mormon. As one of his reasons (supposed) for branding it false, was its reference to the horse having existed here prior to the coming of the Spanish in the fifteenth century. How queer Mr. Lamb must feel since archæology has revealed the fact that the horse existed here many centuries ago? How queer others, who have spoken and written against this wonderful book must feel when, day by day, its contents are being proven true by the discoveries of science,—revealing buried cities and writings and potteries of ancient peoples, intellectual and trained. This must have an effect on the religious thought of to-day, if men are to reason. What shall the fruitage be?

Of General Interest

THE GIFT OF TONGUES.

Because of the recent revival of interest in the "gift of tongues" movement in this city, the sermon preached by Reverend Doctor Manning in Dundas Center Church on Sunday is of special interest. Doctor Manning took as his text, 1 Corinthians 12: 31: "But covet earnestly the best gifts, and yet show I unto you a more excellent way." Proceeding, he said:

"It is reported the last few years that some Christians in different parts of the world are speaking in tongues. These reports are received by us in various ways; most persons disbelieve them, some are perplexed, not knowing what to believe, and some are indignant, but to all it is strange.

"As this is a matter of local interest, it being much talked of in the city, I have purposed to say what I can upon it. What I have to say will, I think, remove prejudice, allay anxiety and increase faith and holiness.

"If one had entered a religious meeting of Christians not so very long ago, one would not have been shocked to hear one and another speaking in an unknown tongue. Instead of it being a surprise, it would be a frequent thing and nothing unusual. I say not very long ago, because in the matter of Christian experience time is very short. Abraham's faith which justified, was Paul's faith which justifified, and the faith of the early church is our faith. The effect of spiritual worship upon the individual is similar in all ages and places. Why then should we be shocked at that transpiring in one of our religious meetings which was a normal occurrence in such meetings at a period when our religion was in its first purity and power? There is no reason in the nature of Christianity why these manifestations should not continue to appear in the church. We are disconcerted, not because the gift is abnormal in its nature, but abnormal to our times. Once the gift was germane to the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and it is not impossible, it may be not improbable that it is germane to it still. In the Acts of the Apostles it is written:

"While Peter yet spake these words the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word. And they of the circumcision, which believed, were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost. For they heard them speak with tongues, and magnify God."

"It is further written concerning Paul at Ephesus:

"And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues and prophesied."

"It need shock no one if what took place then at Cæsarea and at Ephesus takes place now among us. It should rather be welcomed as a former sign confirming to us the continuity of the faith, and the genuineness of our Christian experience.

"To speak with an unknown tongue was believed by Saint Paul to be one of the gifts of the Holy Spirit. He had this very gift among others in his mind when he wrote, 'Covet earnestly the best gifts.' And when some were against using an unknown tongue, he wrote, 'And forbid not to speak with tongues.'

"It is to be observed that on Pentecost those who received this gift used it in speaking of the wonderful words of God. At Cæsarea they magnified God; at Ephesus they prophesied. It would seem that speech was a necessity to them that were filled with the Spirit, and that utterance overflowed into an unknown tongue. Tongues may be symbolic of the effect of the fullness of the Spirit. In the prophecy of Jeremiah it is written:

"Then I said I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name; but his word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay."

"When Charles Wesley wrote the hymn:

Oh for a thousand tongues to sing
My great Redeemer's praise,
The glories of my God and King
The triumph of his grace, he expressed the sentiment of not a few persons rejoicing in those times of powerful revivals. To speak with an unknown tongue is a miracle in the realm of the intellect, but it is normal in the realm of grace. If we estimate grace by either the assurance given us by Jesus or the apostles, we must acknowledge that it can reach a degree where it is 'joy unspeakable and full of glory,' as Paul says.

"I am acquainted with persons who tell me that they have received this unutterable grace—the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ. These persons possess the qualifications competent to know whereof they speak. They are intelligent, undemonstrative, sensible persons. They have had knowledge for years of much experimental religion. And when they tell me that during the last few weeks or last two years they have received such joy in God, and liberty from sin, as they before could not have imagined possible, I believe them. And when a few of them say that at times, and frequently, they are constrained to praise God in articulation they do not understand, I believe them. One of the features of a cold and formal religion is its dumbness and silence. And when I behold the happiness and hear the testimony of those who 'can not from his praise forbear,' I recall the words of the Psalmist, 'Open thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth thy praise.'

"Let us now consider what is the value and use of the gift of tongues. To understand this will greatly diminish our concern. For it will appear that it is not the greatest gift of the Spirit, nor a gift for all persons.

"It has not the use that many imagine, viz, of qualifying one to preach in a language one has not learned in the ordinary way. There is no record that anyone at any time in any place preached to people of another tongue. At Pentecost, it is written of the foreigners, 'We do hear them speak in our tongue.' That the disciples themselves knew in what tongue they spoke is not recorded, and from conditions in the meetings at Corinth it may be inferred that they did not know. I think the conclusion on that point is this: That no one ever did and no one ever shall preach with a tongue given by the Holy Ghost. There will be no foreign missionaries preaching to the heathen in a tongue they never studied.

"Its use in a meeting at home is comparatively very small. Saint Paul says that it is a sign to unbelievers, and that is all the use he attributes to it. He says it is of no use unless some one interprets what is said. And where there is no interpreter, it is not to be used at all. He says that five intelligent words are better than ten thousand unintelligible words.

"He says that at Corinth they made too much of tongues, because uncharitable, produced confusion and disorder, until some said they should be forbidden. It is to be observed that it was in the midst of writing instructions upon this matter that he breaks in with those inimitable verses upon charity.

"Saint Paul is the only apostle that refers to this gift. Peter does not mention it among the fruits of the Spirit. No prayer asks it. No command enjoins. No promise invites. No hymn is sung of it.

"The letter to the Corinthians makes it one of many gifts of the Spirit, and one of the last. One may have all the other gifts and not this one. Or this one and none of the others.

"Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administration, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom, to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit. To another faith by the same Spirit, to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit. To another the working of miracles, to another prophecy, to another discerning of spirits, to another divers kinds of tongues, to another the interpretation of tongues. But all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.'

"The Spirit gives or withholds tongues at His pleasure. I think it should neither be sought nor shunned.

"One thing is certain, it is the privilege and right of every believer to be filled with the Spirit. One thing only is important, viz, that we be filled with knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding, . . . and be filled with the fullness of God.

"I offer a word of counsel. All states of deep emotion are close by danger. Elijah saw his prayer answered, saw the fire fall and lick up the water in the trenches, consuming the stones and the sacrifice, and then he sank down to despair, to its very bottom. Jesus went from his baptism as Messiah to his temptation in the wilderness. Excesses, disorder, confusion and counterfeit stand hard by every work of grace. Remember Corinth.

"In conclusion, let everyone be true to the grace which God has given. Each is obligated to bear his testimony. It is partly through the testimony of one who has received a blessing that another is encouraged. John Wesley's mother came to believe she might know her sins were forgiven because she heard many people around bearing witness to their own full assurance of faith. John Wesley began to preach Christian perfection, not because he ever became perfected in love (which he asserted he never did), but because he said he knew hundreds who had. The knowledge of God is not the possession of learning, it is a gift to faith. As Jesus said: 'Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes.' And if God has given you great grace of love and holiness and joy, do not hide your light.

"I have observed for years that whenever anyone obtains what he believes to be a blessing above the common he is liable to leave the church to form a small band of people, and to conduct their services by themselves apart. I can not believe that this is useful. God gives us grace, and not so much for our happiness as for our service. And to withdraw into small bands is to narrow one's opportunities, to remove such leaven as one is oneself from the larger mass, and to deprive the church of the very thing that will revive it. Personally I feel as a poor man might feel, whose dear old friends have forsaken him because he is poor and they have become rich.

"Again, I say, do not deny the grace you have.

It may be only a little. Be it so, it is some. If you think you are no Christian because others are better you will lose heart; stand up to such religion as you have. It is good what there is of it. Take your place with what you have. And hope and wait and trust and labor until the word of Jesus is fulfilled: 'He that drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst, for that water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life.'—Reverend Thomas Manning, in The Free Press, London, Ontario, March 6, 1912.

There's nothing in the world I know
That can escape from Love;
For every depth it goes below,
And every height above.
It waits as waits the sky
Until the clouds go by.
Yet shines serenely on
With an eternal day,
Alike when they are gone
And when they stay.—Thoreau.

Big Opportunity to Profit on Increased Value of Government Irrigated Land

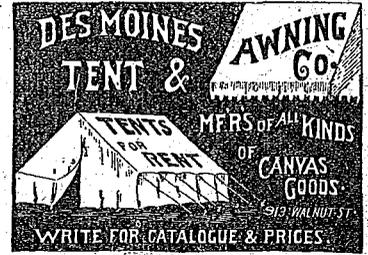

Time after time land in the great prosperous West has jumped from a nominal value to hundreds of dollars an acre when the first railroad tracks opened it up to the markets of the world. That is what is likely to happen in the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming.

Soil there, under proper irrigation has for years proven itself capable of making farmers rich with bountiful crops of fruit, alfalfa, grain, sugar beets, garden truck, etc. All it needed was an outlet to market. Now the Railroad is about to put a line straight into the heart of this wealthy territory. Those who get in before the track is laid will reap the big profits.

You can now file on an 80-acre government irrigated homestead at no cost except the actual cost of the water right—and you are given twelve years to pay for that. Light payments the first five years. No taxes for three years. So you can get started with very little capital. The climate is mild and healthful; neighbors, towns, churches and schools nearby.

This is one of the best chances I ever saw in all my experience. Write and ask anything you may want to know about it, and I will send you full information, illustrated booklet, map, etc. My service is free. Send me a postal quick.

ALMA ON FAITH.

AN EXAMINATION OF A PART OF THE SIXTEENTH CHAPTER OF THE BOOK OF ALMA.

But behold, if ye will awake and arouse your faculties, even to an experiment upon my words, and exercise a part of faith; yea, even if ye can no more than desire to believe, let this desire work in you, even until ye shall believe in a manner that ye can give place for a portion of my words. Now we will compare the word unto a seed. Now if ye give place, that a seed may be planted in your heart, behold, if it be a true seed, or a good seed, if ye do not cast it out by your unbelief, that ye will resist the Spirit of the Lord, behold, it will begin to swell within your breasts; and when you feel these swelling motions, ye will begin to say within yourselves, It must needs be that this is a good seed, or that the word is good, for it beginneth to enlarge my soul; yea, it beginneth to enlighten my understanding; yea, and it beginneth to be delicious to me. Now behold, would not this increase your faith? I say unto you, Yea; nevertheless it hath not grown up to a perfect knowledge. But behold, as the seed swelleth, and sprouteth, and beginneth to grow, then ye must needs say, that the seed is good; for behold it swelleth, and sprouteth, and beginneth to grow. And now behold, will not this strengthen your faith? Yea, it will strengthen your faith, for ye will say, I know that this is a good seed, for behold, it sprouteth, and beginneth to grow. And now behold, are ye sure that this is a good seed? I say unto you, Yea; for every seed bringeth forth unto its own likeness; therefore, if a seed groweth, it is good, but if it groweth not, behold, it is not good; therefore it is cast away.—Alma 16: 151-158.

THE DESIRE TO HAVE FAITH.

Sometimes we meet people who say: "I can't have faith; but I wish that I could have." For such there should be encouragement in the words of Alma: "If ye can do no more than desire to believe, let this desire work in you." Those who desire to believe, have the first requirement, that of predisposition. If they will encourage this natural desire, and obey the commandments of God, fully, faith will come, and its increase will be inevitable.

It is those who are indifferent, and those who feel their own superiority so keenly that they can not be taught, who are hopeless, so far as any attempt to reach them with the gospel is concerned.

AN EXPERIMENT; TESTING SEED.

Alma used sound reason, and homely, practical common sense in his appeal to humanity. He begged them to try the experiment of giving room for the word of God in their hearts, assuring them that it would grow, and that by thus testing it they would know that it was a good seed. We may suppose from this that he was addressing an agricultural people,—probably those who were familiar with both agriculture and horticulture. So he took the very familiar simile of a seed and its germination and growth.

The State of Iowa maintains an agricultural school. At this school there is an experiment department, where during the past decade, at least, great study has been devoted to seed corn, for this is the staple crop of Iowa. What oranges are to southern California, corn is to Iowa.

Every year "seed corn specials" (special trains) are sent over the railroads of Iowa, to visit the farming districts, and professors who accompany these specials instruct the farmers regarding methods by which they may test their seed corn. Better seed corn for the entire State means thousands of dollars profit on the increase of the yield.

Probably some of these farmers when they first hear the message of these college-bred professors are inclined to be skeptical. But if they can be induced to "try an experiment," in the language of Alma, they may soon know for themselves. If they plant the tested and tried seed in the ground, in a week or ten days they can examine it, and if it is beginning to swell and grow, they know that it is good seed.

That is a simple proposition, isn't it? They may have a degree of faith in the seed, at the start. When they see it begin to swell and sprout, faith gives place to knowledge, to that extent.

Thus Alma presents his proposition. It is just as plain and simple. God has conducted a great experimental station. He sends out his messengers. They plead with humanity to accept their message. And Alma assures men that if they will but try the experiment they may know for themselves.

If they will give room for the word of God in their hearts, they will soon find that it grows. It has life and power. Then they may know that it is good seed.

One young man was heard to say: "When I was a boy, my parents made me go to church until I wore away about a foot in stature." Another young man, hearing him, said: "Since I became a member of the true church, I feel that I have grown in stature, at least a foot." He knew that he had grown spiritually and mentally.

Thus Alma says that the one who tries this experiment can soon know of the merits of the word, and will be able to say: "It must needs be that this is a good seed, or that the word is good, for it beginneth to enlarge my soul; yea, it beginneth to enlighten my understanding; yea, it beginneth to be delicious to me."

Those of us who have actually tested the merits of the gospel, believe it because of what it does for men and women. We believe it "for the very work's sake," as the Master said. We know that it makes men and women better—better husbands and fathers and citizens; better mothers, wives, and neighbors. What better evidence could we have than the internal evidences of its workings within our own characters? The experiment has worked thus far.

FAITH GIVES WAY TO KNOWLEDGE.

Alma says:

And now, behold, because ye have tried the experiment, and planted the seed, and it swelleth, and sprouteth, and beginneth to grow, ye must needs know that the seed is good. And now behold, is your knowledge perfect? Yea, your knowledge is perfect in that thing, and your faith is dormant.

The man who tests the seed corn and sees it begin to grow does not have faith any longer that it will grow,—he knows that it is growing. He still has faith that it will continue to grow, and by and by a rich harvest will result. The man who has given room for the gospel in his life, no longer has faith that it is a good thing, that it has power to enlarge his understanding and change his life, he knows that such is the case. He knows that the process of changing and transformation is going on. His knowledge, to that extent, is perfect. He still has faith in the great promises of God that remain to be fulfilled to him and all mankind. But to the extent of his experience faith has given place to knowledge. And for that reason, many of the Saints are fully justified in their testimony that they know that the gospel is true.

Thus faith always goes before knowledge, and rapidly gives place to knowledge. Step by step, as God can persuade us to "make the experiment," we move from faith to knowledge. As Paul expresses it, at present "we know in part," but by and by when the experiment is fully completed, we shall "know as we are known."

SHOW US GOD AND WE WILL BELIEVE.

The infidel says: "Show me God, and I will believe."

His challenge is not altogether unreasonable. God does not ask any man to believe without evidence. But the infidel is wrong when he insists that he shall dictate the terms of revelation. Granting the existence of such a God as the one that he desires to see, it is at once apparent that he is immeasurably superior to man. He is far above the finite.

How unreasonable it would be for a little child just beginning to study the A, B, C's, to say to the teacher: "You must teach me according to my notions. You must give me complete knowledge of the alphabet in a minute, or I will not study." The teacher would reply: "I am the teacher; you are the pupil. I will teach you in my own way, or not at all."

God is willing to reveal himself to man. But those who are away down in the A, B, C class must not dictate the terms. They must not demand complete knowledge in a minute. And they never will obtain the knowledge that they crave so long as they continue to refuse to obey the rules of the school, laid down in the gospel, under which God operates to reveal himself.

THE SEED MUST BE NURTURED.

Alma does not abandon his simile short of completion. He assures his hearers that they must nourish the seed and care for it, even after it has begun to grow. He tells them that if they will not do this the seed will not take root and grow to maturity. And the reason will not be because the seed was not good and its fruit desirable, but because they did not put forth the necessary effort.

The farmer whose seed corn begins to grow, knows that his work is just begun. He must cultivate the soil, and keep the weeds down. If this be done, the harvest follows naturally.

So with the seed that we cultivate with care—the gospel seed, the word of God. The promise is: "Ye shall pluck the fruit thereof, which is most precious, which is sweet above all that is sweet, and which is white above all that is white; yea, and pure above all that is pure."

A SEED CONTAINS POWER.

Alma made a fine comparison when he said: "We will compare the word unto a seed." A seed has two characteristics: life and power. There is more power locked up in a little seed than in an equal amount of dynamite.

In his lecture, "The Prince of peace," Mr. Bryan tells how he marveled at the power of a watermelon seed. Planted in the warm soil it sends up a little, tender sprout, and then through this little tube it forces up a weight of material thousands of times greater than itself, and builds a mass of vines, and two or three melons, each one filled with little black seeds, any one of which has power to reproduce this miracle.

As a boy, the writer noticed a little sapling that had come up in the midst of a pile of great boulders. A little box elder seed had lodged in that unfavorable place. Years later when we returned to the old home, the sapling had grown to be a large tree and had shoved the rocks aside to make room for its growth. Had one told us that this little seed had power to move those great rocks, we would scarcely have believed him.

We have seen a picture of a cemetery scene in Hanover, Germany. A princess, who was a skeptic, died. Not content with preaching skepticism while living, she wished to preach it when dead. So, in harmony with her instructions, her grave was covered with a huge, flat slab of granite. Granite slabs were placed on either side, and at the head and foot of the grave. These slabs were bound together with iron clamps and rods. And on the tombstone was inscribed in German: "This for ever bought grave must never be opened."

There was infidelity's challenge to the power of God. But, unnoticed, a little seed of a great tree had lodged in the soil under the granite slab. It came up through the crevices at the side. It grew into a large tree, and broke the iron clamps and rods, and shoved the granite slabs away. That was God's answer to infidelity.

Now Alma says that the word of God is like a little seed, if we have faith in it, and permit it to grow. Thus will our graves be opened by its power in the great resurrection of the just, when Jesus comes again, and all the doubts and challenges of infidelity will be defeated by an unsuspected power that was concealed in the hearts and lives of those who obeyed the gospel of life.

A SEED CONTAINS LIFE.

The most obscure little wayside seed contains a secret that science can not explain—the secret of life. Thus it is with the gospel message,—the mystery of godliness that science can not understand.

The old Catholic fathers who came to southern California so many years ago brought with them olives from sunny Spain. These olives grew in the new land, just as they had done in the old. Some of those trees are still living; they bear the same fruit that they bore in sunny Spain.

Every seed bears after its kind. The gospel seed will grow in any land and in any clime. It produces the same fruits that it bore in old Jerusalem. It transformed the lives of Peter, and Mary Magdalena, and John; it will transform our lives.

A WHOLE NEW WORLD OF TRUTH.

Faith in the word of God opens up a world of truth that is not accessible to those who reject revelation. The great questions of the immortality of the soul, the future of the human race, the true character of God, can only be solved by way of revelation. Science can solve many problems; but not these.

Not long ago we saw a little boy, who went into the kitchen, to get a drink of water. Absent minded, instead of holding his cup under the faucet, he held it under the electric light bulb.

Humanity, trying to compass all truth with the little measures and metes and bounds of science, is like that little boy trying to catch light in a drinking cup.

We can apprehend light, and analyze it, but not in that way. We can not measure it in a tin cup. The great mysteries of the universe may be solved; but only in one way. Physical senses may discern physical things. Spiritual things are discerned and appraised spiritually. Revelation, as contained in the word of God, found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, opens up a realm of truth and thought not known to those who reject revelation. Faith in these things puts one in touch with divine truth and power. Thus it is, as Alma says, that our souls are enlarged, and our understanding enlightened.

"HANDS ACROSS THE SEA."

Alma's message is in full accord with the message of Jesus, who taught his disciples: "Have faith in God." Jesus strikes hands with Alma. Truth from two continents is found in perfect harmony. Jesus in Jerusalem, and Alma in America, taught the same thing. In this particular, as in others, the Stick of Joseph (the Book of Mormon) and the Stick of Judah (the Bible) are one in our hands, as the prophet said that they should be.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

SUNDAY SERVICES.

Sunday meetings at conference were as follows: Sunday school at 9 a. m., in charge of local officers; preaching in the auditorium at 11 by Heman C. Smith, assisted by Arthur Allen; in the lower room by Ammon White, assisted by I. N. White and Swen Swenson; prayer meeting at 2 p. m. in the auditorium in charge of John Smith and G. E. Harrington, and in the lower room for the priesthood, in charge of Fred A. and E. A. Smith and J. A. Tanner; at 7.45 in the auditorium a song service by the conference choir, under the leadership of A. N. Hoxie, jr., and assistants, with a talk on musical lines by Frederick M. Smith, the meeting in charge of W. H. Garrett. Speakers at the homes at the evening hour were J. B. Wildermuth and Hubert Case.

PRESENTATION OF BOOKS OF MORMON TO LAMANITE BRETHREN.

On Saturday afternoon, just before the close of the business session, the chairman, Brother Elbert A. Smith, asked the assembly to sing the first verse of hymn number 1. He then made the following speech of presentation:

The matter before us now is not one of business; it might perhaps be termed a matter of sentiment. It involves the making of a presentation speech. It has been insisted that either Brother Fred M. or myself should make this speech. Brother Fred M. insists that I shall make it, perhaps feeling that having been credited with making the most sensible speech of the day [referring to a statement made by one delegate upon the floor] he has done his duty for one day.

You are aware that we have with us two men who are representatives of our Indian brethren,—Brethren Philip Cook and Chief Three Fingers, of the Cheyennes. Brother Cook is a medicine man, representing the spiritual interests of his people; Chief Three Fingers is one of forty chiefs, one of the highest among them, and represents the civil or temporal interests of his tribe. These are men of influence.

They assure us that they believe that many more of their tribe will follow them into the church. They also think that the Arapahoes will accept the gospel, though Brother Cook assured us yesterday that he could not say as to that, for, he says, "There is just as much difference between Indians as there is between white men and Dutchmen."

Of course these Indian brethren are in the minority among us to-day; but there was a time, not so many years ago, when the white man was in the minority and the Indian decidedly in the majority in this country.

But according to the Book of Mormon it had been predicted long centuries before that if the Lamanites and Nephites would not conform to the law of God they should be swept away to make room for other peoples. When the Pilgrim Fathers landed in this new country a little incident occurred that was typical of that which followed on a larger scale. A large Indian village existed near the point where they landed, but just a few months before their coming a pestilence swept the inhabitants away, with the exception of one Indian; so that when the Pilgrim Fathers landed they found the Indian fields all cleared for their planting. This was in a way typical of the manner in which the hand of God swept the Indian aside all over this land to make room for the white man.

This one Indian who remained taught the white men to plant Indian corn and to catch fish from the bay and fertilize the fields by putting a fish in each hill of corn. So if it is true that to-day we are teaching the Indian agriculture, it is equally true that the Indian first taught the white man the rudiments of agriculture in America.

With the prediction that the Indians should be swept away was associated a promise that a remnant should remain and that the gospel should go to them and many of them accept it and be lifted up out of degradation to become once more prominent in gospel work.

You and I have lived to see that ingathering begun. Chief Three Fingers here has said that he has received the assurance from God that this is the true church; and since coming here he has felt assured that many of his brethren will follow him and Brother Cook into this church. So we welcome these men among us as the first fruits of this work.

Some of the brethren have thought that it would be well to present these men with copies of the Book of Mormon as a token of our esteem. Bishop Kelley has kindly furnished books for that purpose.

So, in the name of the church, I present to Brother Philip Cook a copy of the Book of Mormon containing the record of his fathers. And to you, Chief Three Fingers, I also present, in the name of the church, the history of your fathers, known as the Book of Mormon. We shall be glad to hear anything that you may wish to say to this conference.

Brother Philip Cook responded as follows:

I want to say to the conference that this is just what I am looking for, as I have said in my speech the other day that I was hungering for the word of God. I thank the Lord, and thank you people that I am indeed happy, that I have received what I am searching for, and I thank you more than words can tell.

Chief Three Fingers, through Brother Cook as interpreter, made response as follows:

I thank the Lord that he has given me a blessing to-day, that I may take it back to my people and that the Lord might so bless me that I may have such a broad influence in me so that I may turn the minds of those ignorant Indians into the new church by taking this gospel to them. I thank you ever so much, and will always appreciate your loving kindness towards us.

This incident made a splendid impression on the conference. The short responses of the Indian brethren were made with feeling, as they seemed to appreciate to the full the significance of the gifts from the conference.

Just as Chief Three Fingers closed his remarks, he turned and grasped the hand of President Joseph Smith and they were introduced. The assembly waited with silence while these two men exchanged compliments. It was an interesting spectacle, these two men of different races, with their contrast in appearance, the one a chosen leader of a great movement, the other a chieftain among his people and one who has espoused the work of God and is actively engaged in promoting its activities among his people.

At the close of the session the Lamanite sisters met President Smith.

The brethren who are attending conference are the two on the right. They are accompanied by the wife of Brother Cook and the granddaughter of Chief Three Fingers.

All those in the picture are elders in the Reorganized Church.

The minutes of the sessions on Sunday and Monday were read, and with minor corrections were approved.

The credentials committee made additional report. The Church Recorder made report as follows:

APRIL 3, 1913.

To the General Conference; Greeting: During the past year the work of this office shows the following results: We have recorded as gains by baptism 3,383, received by letter 2,513; losses by letter 2,483, by expulsion 81, by death 536; making a net gain of 2,796, which added to our total of 65,415 gives us a present number of 68,211. The number of baptisms exceeds last year by 321; the losses by death and expulsion were not unusually large, but the number of transfers exceeds by far any previous year.

Missouri leads with the number of baptisms, having 690 to her credit; but this is larger than it would otherwise have been because it included nearly two years reports from the Independence Stake, the reports having been delayed by reason of a change in their system of records having been effected. Iowa follows with 366, and Michigan with 322, all others have less than 300.

Missouri also leads in the matter of net gains, having 708, this item also being affected by the conditions above mentioned. Michigan follows with 233, Kansas 214, and Illinois 200; all others are under 200.

The reports show 4,123 members holding the various orders of the priesthood. 314 ordinations were reported and 368 marriages. 27,787 are reported as absent from the branches of the church. 1,014 certificates of blessing of children were reported.

The totals for Canada, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Utah, and West Virginia do not represent the work done in these fields, for the reason that the reports from them were not received in time to be recorded before closing our books for the year, some arriving as late as April 1. They are all in the office at the time of this writing except from Canada, and we are informed that the district secretaries are at work upon them and we are to receive them soon.

It will be noted that one new foreign country is added to our list this year, that of New Zealand, they having a branch of 15 members at Dunedin; and one new State, New Hampshire, with 1 member baptized there by Elder J. H. Baker.

We have the work of perfecting the records of the quorums of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons well under way, but not sufficiently completed to give any data at present.

During the year we have added the following branches as new to the records: Dunedin, New Zealand; Lowell, Arkansas, Spring River District; California Mesa, Colorado, Delta, Colorado, in the Colorado District; Fairview, Florida, Florida District; Weiser, Idaho, Idaho District; Troy, Illinois, Alton, Illinois, O'Fallon, Illinois, Saint Louis District; Indianapolis, Indiana, Southern Indiana District; Anamosa, Iowa, Eastern Iowa District; Quindaro, Kansas, Independence Stake; Clear Springs, Michigan, Lachine, Michigan, Northern Michigan District; Centropolis, Missouri, Second Independence, Missouri, Lexington, Missouri, Independence Stake; Bourbon, Missouri, Saint Charles, Missouri, Saint Louis District; Warm Springs, Montana, Montana District; Lincoln, Nebraska, Southern Nebraska District; Buffalo, New York, New York District, and Centralia, Washington, Seattle and British Columbia District. Besides these which have been recorded there are a number of others shown on the belated reports which have been received.

The records of this department manifest two weaknesses in our system of transferring members from one branch to another, which in our judgment are serious. First: Members are permitted to obtain letters of removal and for reasons of their own retain them in their possession indefinitely; they are reported as removed by the branch granting the letter and they are deducted from our total numerical strength. The transfer is not effected—the system has failed to accomplish its object, and the church has suffered numerical loss. Second: Members are permitted to change their residence from one branch to another, and for reasons of their own fail or even refuse to obtain letters of removal to the branch where they reside; they are reported as absent members by the branch where their membership is recorded, though in fact living in and participating with an organized branch, and recognized by the law as amenable to the authorities of the branch where they reside. As a result, the number of absentees as shown by the reports does not represent the facts, and few branches are credited with their actual numerical strength of resident members, and many members do not enjoy the voting privileges of the branches where they reside unless by courtesy. Since the church claims the right of jurisdiction over its members by the authorities of the branches where the member resides, we believe it should assume the right to transfer the membership of such members upon their change of residence, whether requested so to do by the member or not. Because of the above conditions, which are emphasized by the records of this office, we would recommend that a system of transferring our members be adopted which will be effective, and will relieve the undesirable condition above referred to.

Our work has been hindered by lack of proper office facilities, valuable papers and reports being mislaid and some even lost, for want of suitable desk room in which to keep such papers until finally disposed of in the permanent files. We need a desk. The increased range of work being done by this department greatly increases the volume of correspondence, and the constantly increasing amount of recording which must be done demands the use of more than one typewriting machine much of the time in order to handle the work to the best advantage. We need two typewriters.

We have enjoyed our work and desire to more thoroughly perfect it in all its details.

Respectfully submitted,
C. I. CARPENTER, Church Recorder.

The Church Historian made a report from which we give the following extracts:

HISTORICAL REPORT FOR 1912.

General Organization.

During the year the personnel of the church organization remained practically as at last report. There have been no changes in the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, or Presidents of Seventy.

The High Priests' Quorum lost by death George H. Hilliard, a member of the Presiding Bishopric, and Ebenezer E. Keeler, a member of the Order of Evangelists.

The following ordinations were provided for at the General Conference: James C. Page, Edward Rannie, William Anderson, John F. Pêtre, Parley T. Plumb, and Francis L. Sawley to the office of seventy; William Sparling, Eli Hayer, Hugh W. Goold, Thomas J. Elliott, Andrew St. Lewis, and William E. Winkworth, sr., to the office of high priest; John Shields, Henry Greenwood, and Josiah E. Matthews to the office of evangelical minister.

Rival Organizations.

There are now but two organizations disputing our claims to succession, of sufficient activity to demand notice; one the organization in Utah under the presidency of Joseph F. Smith, and the one in Independence known as the Church of Christ. Though both have continued active opposition, neither have made any material progress. The latter has suffered severe loss in the death of Elder John R. Haldeman.

Children's Home.

A change was made in the policy of operating this institution by the appointment of a board of seven trustees, Richard Bullard and Callie B. Stebbins were elected for a term of three years each, and Heman C. Smith and Lucy L. Ressegue for a term of two years each, and Joseph Roberts, Oscar Anderson, and Minnie B. Nicholson for a term of one year each.

The home is still operated under the superintendency of Brother W. P. Robinson and family.

The first half of the year was discouraging, from a financial standpoint, but later the Saints and friends responded nobly to the call for help, and the institution not only met running expenses but has paid several hundred dollars on arrears. This board organized by selecting Heman C. Smith president, Joseph Roberts treasurer, Oscar Anderson secretary.

Local Work.

Some of the force of local historians are doing faithful and acceptable work, a work that will be more fully appreciated as time passes.

This department, however, has not yet secured representatives in some parts of the church.

Young People's History.

The manuscript for this work up to 1852 is still in the Historian's office, awaiting the action of the Committee on Revision.

No one has yet been selected to write the history after 1852.

Press and Pulpit.

There has been a revival of the spirit of opposition of late which has found expression from the pulpit, and resulted in the production of several new books.

A Bishop Spalding has recently made quite a scholarly attack on the accuracy of the translation of the Book of Abraham. But this does not directly concern the Reorganized Church, as the church has never adopted the Book of Abraham as a standard work. The Bishop's criticism, however, received able attention from those to whom the Book of Abraham is a standard work. Though the controversy has not yet closed, at the present status of the argument the translation of the book has not been seriously discredited.

Office Work.

It will be recognized by all who have had experience in historical work that it is of that nature that it can never be said to be finished. The more there is accomplished the more the possibilities develop, so that even now a large force of helpers could be employed with profit to the church were the finances available to sustain the effort.

We have offered our services to many authors and publishers to enable them to get reliable and authentic information concerning the latter day work. In some instances we have been treated courteously and we have had a respectful hearing which has resulted in placing our position before the public. In some instances we have been ignored; but the disposition to treat us fairly is growing, and those who do not recognize our right to speak in self-defense are coming into disfavor.

We have written many articles for periodicals, and several critiques on books, most of which has been favorably received.

The proofs of the articles mentioned in our last report written for the American Biographical Encyclopedia have been submitted to this office for examination.

Through the courtesy of Mr. L. L. McShane, of Kansas City, representing Dodd, Mead, and Company, The New International Encyclopedia has been submitted to us for examination and criticism. Our criticisms were received with gentlemanly courtesy and consideration. We hope future editions of the work will give us the proper representation.

Many invitations reached us to attend historical gatherings, but much to our regret, finances are not available to comply in every case.

January 14, 15, and 16 of the present year we attended the Nebraska State Historical Convention at Lincoln, and on the 16th accepted an invitation to deliver an address, which was received with every mark of respect both for the speaker and the church he represented.

The Journal of History remains the chief medium through which we reach the influential circles in the historical world, and has done more to get proper recognition in such circles than any other venture ever made.

Though we feel our work has been very imperfect, we are profoundly grateful for the recognition and respect shown us by our coworkers in the church, and for the divine guidance so manifestly felt at times. We are willing to continue to serve in this capacity, or give place to another, as shall best advance the interest of the work growing dearer to us year after year.

Suggestions.

There will be a great gathering at Keokuk, Iowa, in the autumn of the present year, for which extensive preparation is making, President Wilson, the governors of all States, and other notable persons are to be invited.

The Trans-Mississippi Congress, which met at Salt Lake City, Utah, in September, 1912, indorsed a plan for a celebration in the fall of 1913 to celebrate 1st; The opening of the dam.

2d; The home coming of the Mormons at Nauvoo.

3d; The centenary of the evacuation of old Fort Madison.

The Utah people will doubtless make special provision to be represented at the "home coming." Should we not be suitably represented?

Is it not also an opportune time to push the erection of the monument under contemplation?

As early as June, 1831, the Lord instructed two of the best educated men of the church (Doctrine and Covenants, section 55) to write schoolbooks. Because this work was not accomplished we have been humiliated and embarrassed. Should not this matter receive our serious attention? Since we have established an institution of learning, should we not have textbooks based upon the divine declaration, "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him, male and female created he them"? instead of using borrowed books based upon "science falsely so called," the use of which creates a demand for instruction and influence to counteract impressions received in our own school, should we not have textbooks based upon the great scientific principles revealed in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants? Respectfully submitted, HEMAN C. SMITH, Historian.

Following the reading of this report Bishop E. L. Kelley made a statement in regard to the value and force of Bishop Spalding's attack on the work, the Historian following along the same lines.

I. N. White, of the Twelve, made report. This report is of special interest because of an inspired dream or vision which the brother had at a time when he was near death, in which a messenger appeared and declared his willingness to take the brother across the river of death or return him if he desired. The brother choosing the latter, he was brought back to life and has improved considerably in health since that time.

Report from J. F. Curtis, member of the Twelve, was read.

Committee on Compilation of General Conference Resolutions reported that their labors had brought the printing of such resolutions up to date.

The Order of Evangelists made report as follows:

To the First Presidency: We herewith submit the annual report of the Order of Evangelists, closing with March 1, 1913, as follows: During the past year Josiah E. Matthews was added to our number by ordination, and Ebenezer Keeler was removed by death, leaving the present number of our order at seventeen. Some of our members are aged and infirm, yet they have attended 2,319 services, preached 1,149 discourses, baptized 53, confirmed 82, ordained 4, blessed 72 children, solemnized 7 marriages, administered to 626 sick persons, and have given 1,713 patriarchal blessings.

They express, as we represent them in few words, an earnest desire that the Lord by his Spirit may bless the "order," and all the deliberations of the coming General Conference. E. C. Briggs and Joseph Greenwood have not reported and the work referred to above has been done by the fifteen members that have reported. We attach itemized report, thinking you might desire something of the kind.

Respectfully submitted,

J. R. LAMBERT, President.

CHAS. E. BUTTERWORTH, Secretary.

The Quorum of High Priests reported. From this we make the following summary: One of their number is a missionary in charge, 52 are in field work, 18 are patriarchs, 12 are standing high councilors, 30 are in stake high councils, 15 are bishops, 4 are bishop's counselors, 11 are bishop's agents, 2 are stake presidents, 4 are counselors to stake presidents, 41 are pastors, 28 are district presidents, 42 are branch presidents; sermons preached 7,115, baptisms 490, confirmations 608, ordinations 41, children blessed 456, marriages 193, administrations to the sick 7,528; present enrollment 158, of these 142 reported.

The committee which was appointed at last General Conference to have the resolutions then passed appreciative of President Smith's services embossed, reported that their labors had been performed. From this report we use the following description of the memorial as finished:

The design is a wide conventional border of intricate pattern, after the best class of book plates, in the three primary colors, red, yellow and blue, illuminated with pure gold leaf, and emphasized with black. The letter is a severe English print, and remarkably clear except that the capitals at beginning of paragraphs and the words "President Joseph Smith" are also illuminated. The whole is on parchment. The frame is simple, yet in keeping with the rest of the work.

The work was done by Brother A. P. Burgess, of Saint Louis, Missouri. The committee in charge of this work was T. W. Williams, R. C. Evans, and S. A. Burgess. The report was adopted and the committee was discharged.

The Council of Seventies reported as follows:

LAMONI, IOWA, April 8, 1913.

To the General Conference: The Council of the Presidents of the Seventy have held fourteen sessions, at which all the council were present except James McKiernan, who has been hindered by sickness. Since the beginning of the conference one of our number, H. O. Smith, has been ordained to the office of high priest, thus leaving a vacancy.

This vacancy has been filled by the selection of Brother Arthur B. Phillips to be ordained to the office of a president of the seventy, and we ask that this selection be approved and his ordination be provided for.

The council is now composed of Brethren C. Scott, senior president; James McKiernan, J. F. Mintun, W. E. Peak, T. C. Kelley, and J. A. Davis.

Respectfully,

J. F. MINTUN,

Secretary of the Presidents of Seventy.

The recommendation that Arthur B. Phillips be ordained a president of seventy, after a statement from the brother in which he expressed willingness to serve, was adopted, and the ordination was ordered provided for.

A lengthy recommendation from the President of the church relative to the nomination and election of members of the board of trustees of the Sanitarium was read and referred to the First Presidency and Twelve.

The Board of Trustees of Graceland reported at length to the body, action on the same, by request of the trustees, being deferred.

The chair announced that only eight of the standing High Council being present, it was necessary to select others to fill the council temporarily, for the purposes of present work, and requested permission to appoint. This was granted.

The joint council of the Presidency and Twelve made a report on the communication referred to them from New South Wales relative to the use of fermented wine. They presented a resolution which they recommended for adoption.

No action was taken on this recommendation at this time.

After announcements were made, song number 214 was sung, and J. A. Tanner made the closing prayer.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9.

Wednesday opened with fog and continued throughout the day even more rainy and disagreeable than the previous day. Conference crowds were not to be denied, however, and attendance remained good.

The prayer meeting at 9 o'clock in the morning was in charge of George A. Smith and W. H. Garrett.

The 10.45 preaching service was in charge of Wardell Christy, preaching by J. W. Davis.

The assembly came to order for business session at 2 p. m., Frederick M. Smith presiding. Song number 28 was sung and prayer was made by Ammon White, of the evangelists.

Minutes of former session were read and approved.

The Credentials Committee made additional report, which was approved.

An appeal was read from the Wheeling, West Virginia, Branch, for help in repairing their chapel, which has been damaged by flood. After discussion the matter was left with the Bishop, with power to act.

The committee to which the various petitions in regard to boundary lines and change of name were referred, reported as follows:

LAMONI, IOWA, April 9, 1913.

To the General Conference Assembled; Greeting: We, your committee appointed to consider petitions on boundary lines beg to report as follows:

1. We recommend that the Saskatchewan District be divided in harmony with their petition, the dividing line being the line between the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and that Alberta be organized into a new district.

2. That the petition of the Spring River District be granted, and that the counties of Cowley and Butler be severed from the Spring River District and annexed to the unorganized territory of Southern Kansas.

3. That the petition from the Central Michigan District, concurred in by the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, be granted, and that Gatriot County be annexed to the Central Michigan District.

4. That the petition of the Northern Nebraska District be granted, and the name changed to Northeastern Nebraska District.

5. That the petition from the Seattle and British Columbia District be granted, and that portion of Kittitas County lying west of the 121st meridian be annexed to the Seattle and British Columbia District.

6. Owing to a division of one of the counties in the Panhandle of Idaho, it becomes necessary for us to correct our records and record the two new counties, Lewis and Clearwater, organized from what was formerly Nez Perce County, along with what is now known as Nez Perce County as a part of the Spokane District.

7. That the dividing line between Eastern Oklahoma District and Central Oklahoma, the 96th meridian, be continued south to the north line of the Central Texas District, and that portion of Texas lying west of this line which was formerly in Eastern Oklahoma District, be annexed to Central Oklahoma District.

8. In regard to the petition of the Central Oklahoma District for a change of line between them and the Eastern Oklahoma District, we suggest that the matter be referred back to the district with the recommendation that they confer with the Eastern Oklahoma District authorities and reach some agreement as to just where they would like to have the line, and then present their petition to conference for ratification.

Respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK A. SMITH, Chairman.

O. W. NEWTON, Secretary.

This report was adopted and the recommendations of the committee were concurred in.

The Sanitarium Board made a report. The institution was run at a net loss of $2,995.31 during the year. Total assets are $65,345.50, and total liabilities are $68,047.81. Thirty per cent more patients were treated during the year than during 1912. Several important improvements have been made around the buildings and grounds. One hundred eighty patients were handled, eighteen of them dying. Of those dying, seven were over seventy years of age, and six were brought to the hospital in a hopeless condition. Of those treated the larger percentage by far were nonmembers.

The committee on historical relics made report that quite a collection of relics of the Martyrs and others had been made, all being open for inspection in a special case now in the rooms of the Church Historian, who is a member of this committee.

The Presidency, in answer to a question submitted to them by the Church Recorder in regard to what might be the age limit over which children should not be blessed, made report as follows:

LAMONI, IOWA, April 9, 1913.

To the General Conference, Greeting: Brother C. I. Carpenter, the Church Recorder, has called the attention of the Presidency to the fact that reports of blessings of children which come to the Recorder's office show that there seems to be no recognized age limit above which a child should not be entitled to the ordinance of blessing. The Church Recorder, as a consequence, has raised the question as to whether the church should take any action in the matter of placing such limit. He has submitted to the Presidency a partial list of cases in point, showing that children of twelve and even fourteen years of age have been blessed by members holding the priesthood.

The Presidency are of the opinion that the ordination of the blessing of children is designed for children who have not reached the age of accountability. It would, therefore, follow that the ordinance of blessing should not be administered to children who are old enough to be baptized. Whether the limit for blessing children should be placed below the age of eight we are not prepared to say.

Respectfully submitted,

THE FIRST PRESIDENCY,

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary.

A motion that this be adopted as a safe rule by which the church may be guided, after considerable discussion was adopted.

The Presiding Bishop made report. The financial report given by the Bishop was published in our issue for April 9. The rest of his report related to general conditions of the work of his office.

This report shows that while the expenses of the general church officers and missionaries and their families, and foreign missions, and aid extended for the aged and helpless and the sick and afflicted, were in excess of any previous year, there was a net gain in the financial condition of $17,966.07.

The Library Commission reported as to their labors during the year. A total of $269.14 remains in the hands of the commission treasurer and with the member who has the purchasing of books under his direction.

The report made on yesterday relative to the use of fermented wine in the sacrament was taken up. A motion was made to adopt the resolution as presented, as follows:

Resolved, In reply to the New South Wales resolution touching the kind of wine to be used in sacrament services of the church, we are of the opinion that fermented wine should not be used, but that either unfermented wine or water should be used, and so be in harmony with the spirit of the revelations. See Doctrine and Covenants 26: 1; 86: 1; 119: 5.

Consideration of this motion brought about a lively discussion, final action resulting in its adoption.

Announcements of coming meetings were made by the chair, song number 223 was sung by the assembly, and closing prayer offered by Bishop Kelley.

Preaching at 7.45 p. m. by Fred B. Farr, assisted by James E. Page.

THURSDAY, APRIL 10.

The weather on Thursday was a continuation of that of the preceding days, with fog and rain. The attendance at the afternoon session was, however, the largest of any of the business sessions to date.

Morning prayer service was in charge of William Lewis and Ammon White.

At 10.45 Russell Archibald was the speaker, assisted by T. J. Elliott.

The business session was called to order by E. A.

Smith. Number 34 of the Hymnal was used in opening, and prayer offered by J. A. Gunsolley.

Minutes of Wednesday's sessions were read.

The Library Commission reported that it was their opinion that this year would be an inopportune time to erect a library building.

The Presidency reported in regard to the organization of quorums during the year. Elders' quorums have been organized in the Eastern Mission, Michigan, Northern Illinois, Ontario, Pacific Slope, Southeastern Mission, Western Iowa and Nebraska districts, and in the Independence Stake; quorums of priests in the Eastern Mission, Little Sioux, Northern Nebraska, Ontario, Pottawattamie and Fremont districts, and in the Southeastern Mission; quorums of teachers in the Chatham, Knobnoster, Little Sioux districts, and in the Southeastern Mission; and a deacons' quorum in the Southeastern Mission.

The Physician to the Church reported as follows:

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 5, 1913.

To the General Conference Assembled at Lamoni, Iowa; Greeting: My report is brief as Church Physician. I have filled the office to the best of my ability. My health has been very poor at times and I have almost feared a collapse, but it is somewhat improved again at present.

No distinction between members and nonmembers of the church has been made by me, and all appeals from everywhere have been met with the best I had of skill and means. Some are thinking better of the church in consequence, I learn. Medical details would not interest you so I withhold them.

The Sanitarium work has been separately reported through the board. The house physician, Doctor W. E. Messenger (who is also business manager), has had the details of service and management in his hands. During the winter months I was able to visit the institution but a very few times, but acted as consultant with Doctor Messenger when appealed to. A vast and ever-increasing amount of the work required there is of a character that I am incapable of and does not come under my directorate, even suggestively, as the institution is in every practical sense a public hospital.

Should you wish to further sustain me in the office of Church Physician, the Sanitarium and responsibilities connected therewith must be placed in other hands, as my work outside of it is all I can stand up under. My opinion is that whoever performs the practical work in and over that institution should have the credit for it and be recognized as its superintendent.

Should this separation be not approved by you, please do not consider me as available for office of Church Physician, as I can not serve.

Should further explanation be required, I hope to be with you in time to furnish it. My present thought is to be in Lamoni by the 11th or 12th.

In gospel hope,

JOSEPH LUFF.

The Social Purity Board made report. They requested an appropriation of fifty dollars. This was granted. John F. Garver, retiring member, was re-elected.

The Committee on the Book of Mormon Concordance made the following report:

LAMONI, IOWA, April 10, 1913.

To the General Conference: The committee on Book of Mormon Concordance reports that progress has been made on the work committed to us. By the assistance of Elder Duncan Campbell, a compilation of every important word in the Book of Mormon, alphabetically arranged, has been provided, and which will constitute the basis of the subsequent work of compiling the concordance.

The committee has been hindered in its work because of other duties; also because of financial conditions.

Respectfully submitted,
 FREDERICK M. SMITH,
 HEMAN C. SMITH,
 R. S. SALYARDS,

Committee.

The Joint Council made the following report on the petition from Utah District:

LAMONI, IOWA, April 10, 1913.

To the General Conference; Greeting: The Joint Council has instructed us to return to you the petition from Utah for a church building at Salt Lake City with the following report, which has been adopted by the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric:

1. We favor the erection of such a building, which will provide both a place for public meetings and also apartments for the minister who may be appointed there, but would advise that the whole amount expended in such scheme do not exceed $5,000.00.

2. We favor the investment of $3,000.00 out of the general church treasury, out of which a suitable lot may be purchased; and with the balance, together with the appropriation from the Sunday School Association of $500, together with what the local congregation may be able to supply, a plain and substantial building shall be erected.

3. We advise that the selection of the lot, the plans, material and equipment of the building, be placed in the hands of the Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and the members of the Quorum of the Twelve who shall be in charge of that mission, with whom the local building committee shall collaborate.

Very respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.
 FREDERICK A. SMITH, Secretary Twelve.

This report was adopted.

The committee reported to which had been referred the matter of uniformity in reporting the number of high priests, but a correction appearing necessary, the report was referred back to the committee.

The elders present reported having held a joint session.

The Board of Trustees of Graceland College made report, stating a proposed change in their articles of incorporation.

The Auditing Committee reported having audited the books and accounts of the various officers and boards, and finding them correct. The report was adopted.

A resolution was read, interpreting the Bishopric to mean the Bishop and his counselors and the bishops and their counselors. A motion to postpone to a future session was made, and various amendments and subsidiary motions were made. Final action resulted in a reference of the resolution to the Bishopric, the bishops and bishops' agents.

A roll call of the ex officio delegates was had and corrections made.

The evening was devoted to the work of the Women's Auxiliary Society, the time being taken up with discussions of questions affecting the status and welfare of our women.

FRIDAY, APRIL 11.

The nine o'clock prayer meeting was in charge of J. M. Baker and J. S. Snively.

The morning preaching hour was devoted to the work being done among the Lamanites. Hubert Case and Alvah Christensen were in charge. The Lamanite brethren were present and made addresses to the Saints in regard to their people and their acceptance of the gospel. Chief Three Fingers, a Cheyenne Chieftain, spoke through Philip Cook. The latter is also a member of the same tribe and a member of the church. He has been doing special work for his people at Washington, District of Columbia, and is accompanied by his wife. A granddaughter of the chief is with them.

This meeting was crowded by delegates and was one of the very most interesting of the sessions to date. The speeches of these brethren were dignified, and eloquent after the Indian fashion.

Business meeting was called to order at two o'clock, by Frederick M. Smith; song number 109 was sung, and prayer offered by Sidney Pitt.

Minutes of former sessions were read and approved.

A report from the majority of the Committee of Revision of the Rules of Representation was made as follows:

LAMONI, IOWA, April 11, 1913.

To the General Conference; Greeting: We, the majority of the committee to whom was referred by the General Conference of 1912, the matter of revision of the rules of representation (see Conference Minutes, page 1629), report that after due consideration we recommend that the following be adopted as our rules of representation, they being substantially the ones submitted some years ago by President Joseph Smith, except that among the general officers specified as being entitled to ex officio vote we have included the Presiding Patriarch and the Church Historian:

1. That the general officers of the church known as the Presidency, the Presiding Patriarch, the Church Historian and the Presiding Bishopric, the Twelve, the High Council, and the Seventy, are ex officio members of conference, and entitled to a voice and vote as representatives of the spiritual authorities of the church at large.

2. That high priests, elders and priests engaged in the ministry and under missionary appointment of General Conference, or the general authorities of the church, and not laboring in and by the authority of organized districts, are hereby declared to be entitled to voice and vote in General Conference when present.

3. That organized districts be authorized to appoint from their members, at their last quarterly session of district conference next preceding the session of General Conference, delegates to said sessions of General Conference, who shall be entitled to represent said districts, which delegates so appointed shall be declared members of said General Conference entitled to voice and vote.

Provided: That the choice and appointment by said districts shall be made by a majority of those present and voting, in regular or called session of district conference, of the holding of which due notice shall have been given, as to time and place within the district, to each and every branch composing said district; together with a statement of any important business or action that is to be presented to, or likely to be had by said general session, affecting said district, and to which their consent or denial is desired, that instructions to said delegates may be given as to their action.

And provided further: That the only qualifications to eligibility to the office of delegate from district to General Conference shall be membership and good standing.

Provided further: That no less than one, nor more than five delegates may be sent from any one district; but that said delegate, or delegates, shall be entitled to voice and vote in such General Conference to which they may be appointed, upon a presentation of a certificate from the clerk of district conference to the said General Conference, upon their organization at the time specified for their assembling.

And provided further: That said delegate or delegates shall be entitled to cast one vote for each branch of six members; and one vote for each twenty members in excess of six, that there may be in the branches of their said districts, in all cases where such a vote may be necessary, or desired, to secure the common consent designed in the law; but that in the common routine of business said delegates may vote as units, each in his own right, and in cases of division, the majority of the delegation from a district shall cast the whole vote of said district.

4. That each branch of six or more members, not included in an organized district, be authorized to appoint one delegate to the General Conference, who may or may not be a member of said branch, but who shall be a member of the church and in good standing, whose qualifications to eligibility shall be the same as those required in districts, and who shall represent said branch and be entitled to voice and vote in said conferences to which he may be appointed; and who shall be entitled to cast one vote for the six members required to appoint, and one for each twenty members in excess of six composing said branch.

Provided further: That two or more branches in near proximity to each other, not in organized district, may unite in choosing a delegate, who shall cast their vote, one vote for six members of each branch, and one vote for each twenty members in excess of the number six, multiplied by the number of branches represented; the manner of casting their votes in cases of importance and common routine of business to be as provided in cases of districts.

Provided further, That due general notice to the members of branches of the time and place of meeting for the choosing of said delegate be properly given, as required in cases of districts; certificate of appointment of branch delegate to be signed by the president or clerk of branch, and to be presented as provided in cases of districts.

5. That in all questions of grave importance, affecting the polity and faith of the church; districts and branches may instruct delegates to cast a majority and a minority vote, for and against; but in no case shall the number of the votes cast by said delegates so instructed, exceed the number to which the district appointing him or them shall be entitled as hereinbefore provided, and in cases of a tie in districts or branches on questions presented to them, certified to said delegates, the votes of said district or branches shall be cast in equal numbers by the delegates.

6. In all questions of debate, incidental motions, and routine business, representatives, ex officio, and delegates, appointed, shall speak and vote as units and in their own separate and personal right.

That the foregoing rules on representation may be altered and amended at any General Conference of the church, and that all the provisions of said Report on Representation may be altered or amended at the next conference of the church to be held at —, on —, which shall be composed of members as provided by the rules adopted for the purpose of obtaining the voice of the whole people of the church.

Provided, That at least six months' notice of the nature of such amendment or amendments shall be given in the official church publication, before the date of the sitting of the session of conference at which such amendment or amendments will be presented, giving manner and form in which such amendments are desired.

A minority report was presented as follows:

MINORITY REPORT.

The undersigned members of your committee, after having carefully examined the instruction of the Lord given to the church touching further change in the rules of representation, are firmly of the opinion that any change made at the present time further than providing for an enlargement of the number entitled to delegate as stated in section 125, paragraph 7, will be another violation of the later instruction to the church upon representation which reads:

"The direction of the Spirit is that they be left as they now are until such time as the increased numbers of the members of the church shall require either an enlargement of the number entitled to delegate or that there may be a closer line drawn as to the number of delegates which the church shall require to meet." Such time has not arrived, nor does it exist, and to adopt the majority report would disfranchise a large number of the active and helping officers of the church who now have voice and vote with us, to the great detriment of the church and its work.

The undersigned, therefore, respectfully present this minority report as a substitute for the majority report of the committee already read before the conference.

J. A. TANNER.

E. L. KELLEY.

A motion was made and seconded to make this question the special order for Tuesday, April 15, at 2 p. m. A substitute was offered to adopt the majority report. An amendment was offered to strike out the word majority and substitute the word minority.

The matter was discussed until time for adjournment.

Announcements were made, song number 172 was sung, and Richard Bullard pronounced the benediction.

Graceland College trustees had in charge the service of Friday evening. The time was devoted to a musical and educational program.

SATURDAY, APRIL 12.

Morning prayer meeting was under the charge of Sidney Pitt and Eben Miller.

Preaching at 10.45 by R. T. Cooper assisted by J. E. Kelley.

The afternoon session was called to order by Frederick M. Smith. Song number 83 was used in opening, and prayer was offered by V. M. Goodrich.

The discussion of the matter deferred from yesterday was resumed, E. A. Smith in the chair, and consumed the entire time of the session. At 4.30 a verse of song number 1 was sung, and Elbert A. Smith on behalf of the church presented to the Indian brethren, Chief Three Fingers and Philip Cook, copies of the Book of Mormon bound in flexible leather. Each of the brethren responded briefly but feelingly, the former through the services of the second as interpreter.

Announcements were made for meeting over Sunday, song number 92 was sung, and closing prayer made by Joseph Luff.

Of General Interest

THE CHARACTER OF WASHINGTON.

(From an oration by Charles Phillips, an Irish lawyer and statesman.

It is the custom of your board, and a noble one it is, to deck the cup of the gay with the garland of the great; and surely, even in the eyes of its deity, his grape is not the less lovely when glowing beneath the foliage of the palm tree and the myrtle. Allow me to add one flower to the chaplet, which, though it sprang in America, is no exotic. Virtue planted it, and it is naturalized everywhere. I see you anticipate me—I see you concur with me, that it matters very little what immediate spot may be the birthplace of such a man as Washington. No people can claim; no country can appropriate him; the boon of Providence to the human race, his fame is eternity, and his residence creation. Though it was the defeat of our arms, and the disgrace of our policy, I almost bless the convulsion in which he had his origin. If the heavens thundered and the earth rocked, yet, when the storm passed, how pure was the climate that it cleared; how bright in the brow of the firmament was the planet which it revealed to us! In the production of Washington, it does really appear as if Nature was endeavoring to improve upon herself, and that all the virtues of the ancient were but so many studies preparatory to the patriot of the new. Individual instances no doubt there were; splendid exemplification of some single qualification. Cæsar was merciful, Scipio was continent, Hannibal was patient; but it was reserved for Washington to blend them all in one, and like the lovely chef-d'oeuvre of the Grecian artist, to exhibit in one glow of associated beauty, the pride of every model and the perfection of every master. As a general, he marshaled the peasant into a veteran and supplied by discipline the absence of experience; as a statesman, he enlarged the policy of the cabinet into the most comprehensive system of general advantage; and such was the wisdom of his views, and the philosophy of his counsels, that to the soldier and the statesman he almost added the character of the sage! A conqueror, he was untainted with the crime of blood; a revolutionist, he was free from any stain of treason; for aggression commenced the contest, and his country called him to the command. Liberty unsheathed his sword, necessity stained, victory returned it.

WERE MAYAS BABYLONIANS?

The towers and pyramids built by the Mayas, the ancient civilized inhabitants of Mexico, who flourished before the Aztecs, are the greatest wonders of antiquity in America.

An interesting theory, now strongly held by scientists and scholars of the Smithsonian Institution, is that the Mayas are descended from the ancient people of Babylon who were dispersed over the face of the earth after the capture of that famous city by Cyrus.

If this be so, then the ancient Mayas built the tower of Babel of the Bible, and those inhabitants of the earth were in a sense Americans. This view is confirmed in a great degree by the extraordinary resemblance between the ruined towers and pyramids of Babylonia and those built by the Mayas in Yucatan. In addition to this there is other evidence that the Mayas came from somewhere in Asia.

The tower of Babel was the largest one of many a similar structure of pyramidal shape in Babylon which were crowned with temples. But where the ancient Assyrians constructed scores of such terraced towers the Mayas built thousands, many of them of huge size and of substantially the same pattern—likewise upholding temples on their platform summits.

According to the Maya legend, Xelhuc, one of the seven giants who survived the Deluge, erected a pyramidal tower of enormous height for the purpose of storming heaven. But the offended gods destroyed the languages of the builders.

The pyramids of Yucatan are square or rectangular in shape. Some are nearly one hundred feet high, and the largest is more than five hundred feet square. They have sloping sides, some are nearly vertical, and many rise in steps. Faced with stone and dressed smooth or plastered and embellished with sculptures, they are ascended by steep stairways on one or more sides. The interior mass is of earth and stones, or of stones and mortar. In some cases the slopes were filled in to a smooth slant.

The loftiest is the pyramid of El Castillo, or the Castle, at Chichen Itza, which is of the stepped type. The largest and most imposing is the so-called governor's palace, at Uxmal, which stands on a natural elevation artificially heightened by stone blocks and rising in three terraces. It is considered by ethnologists the most important prehistoric structure in America. The building, 320 feet long, 40 feet deep and 26 feet high, is covered with a marvelous elaboration of sculpture, one belt of which, ten feet wide, running entirely around the palace, contains 20,000 stones, nearly every one of them a separate work of art.—Mesita, Colorado, Herald, May 31, 1912.

AMERICA, THE HOPE OF ROME.

From the papal throne, the great head of the Roman Catholic Church looks out across the sea to the United States of America as a place for the future concentration of his papal strength and power. It has been announced that this country is to be divided into eighteen ecclesiastical provinces, or subdivisions, for convenience of administration. Will Rome conquer in the United States? Her former footholds have been gradually slipping away. South America has thrown off the galling yoke. The republics of Central America and Mexico have been, little by little, breaking loose. France has deserted her, Portugal has repudiated her, Spain has lost faith in her, and Italy defies her.

Her bishops are required to take the following oath:

"THE OATH OF A ROMAN CATHOLIC BISHOP.

"I, —, elect of the — diocese, from hence forward will be faithful and obedient to Saint Peter the Apostle and to the Holy Roman Church, and to our lord, the Holy Pope of Rome, and to his successor canonically entertaining, I will neither advise, consent, nor do anything that they may lose life or member, or that their persons may be seized or hands in any wise laid on them, or any injuries offered to them under any pretense whatever. The counsel with which they shall entrust me by themselves, their messengers, or letters, I will not knowingly reveal to any, to their prejudice.

"I will help them to defend and keep the Roman Papacy and the Royalties of Saint Peter against all men. The legate of the Apostolic See, going and coming. I will honorably treat and help in his necessities. The rights, honors, privileges and authorities of the Holy Roman Church of our lord the Pope and his aforesaid successors, I will endeavor to preserve, defend, increase, and advance. I will not be in any counsel, action, or treaty in which shall be plotted against our said lord and Roman Church anything to the hurt or prejudice of their persons, rights, honor, state, or power; and if I know any such thing to be treated or agitated by any whatsoever, I will hinder it to my utmost and so soon as I can I will signify it to our said lord.

"The ordinance and mandate of the Pope, I will observe with all my might and cause to be observed by others. Heretics, schismatics, (Protestants) and rebels to our said lord or his successors I will to my utmost persecute and oppose."—Gospel Trumpet.

THE KING OF SERVIA'S HYMN TO LIBERTY.

One would scarcely expect to hear from a monarch of the Near East a prose hymn to Liberty, like the one which follows. Yet its author is the present king of Servia, who, when he was plain Peter Karageorgevitch, expressed these lofty sentiments in the preface to his Servian translation of John Stuart Mill's "Liberty":

"Of all principles," says the royal author, "that govern the life of a people, and individual, or mankind, none is of so essential significance as liberty. An innate law gives every man the right to make his own decisions and to follow his inner prompting, such as he conceives it to be. The free man alone is capable of mastering himself, developing his natural gifts, arriving at the consciousness of his rights and duties that determines his actions. The free man only is able to strengthen his will power, to struggle for his self-improvement, to fight in good or bad days for the people to which he belongs.

"The liberty of a nation is based upon the individual liberty of the citizens of which it is composed. And liberty is to an individual, as to a nation, the source of all progress, of every virtue. Among a free people the dormant gifts develop much more rapidly, more strongly and more harmoniously than among enslaved people. In a free country there are no faults that remain concealed, and consequently no evils that can not be remedied. A free nation develops its material and moral strength and welfare quite normally; it renders itself fit to cooperate with other nations in helping all mankind advance on the way to the highest goal.

"Everything that constitutes the pride of modern civilization, everything that spreads love and fraternity in the world, everything that improves the material life of men and raises their moral dignity—all this is but one and the same thing; the fruit of human liberty."—New York Times.

With God it is impossible that anything, how small soever, if only suffered for God's sake, should pass without its reward.—Thomas a' Kempis.

It is better to fail in a noble purpose than to be content with a selfish one.

There is no elevator to the heights of character. They are reached by climbing.

News from Missions

Experiences of W. H. Kelley.

This recital should have appeared in December last, but circumstances which will be noted in the narrative hindered. Though late it may be read with interest by some.

About 3.30 o'clock p. m., on the 3d of August, the train that carried the writer arrived at Los Angeles, California, and he soon landed at the depot all alone, except for the multitude of strangers swarming about. I did not have the address of anyone in the city. I knew that Brother T. W. Williams and family lived somewhere thereabout, so I secured a telephone directory and soon located them at 1307 West Forty-fifth Street. In a little while I was out at their house, by electric car, to meet with a pleasant reception from Sister Williams and family, and later, on his arrival, by Brother Williams. We were neighbors at one time in Kirtland, Ohio, and there had always remained the most cordial relations between us. A pleasant visit followed. The only thing disturbing was the sickness of their little boy. Seems strange to see the small, little family of one time so soon grown up, some of them much larger than their father.

Sunday, the 4th, following, we attended the morning service at the church. Brother Adam, the president of the branch, was in charge and he invited Brother Williams and me to assist in the sacrament and prayer service, which we did. All present seemed to manifest an interest in the service. It was a good meeting all through. At the close I was greeted very cordially by the Saints, some of whom I knew and some knew me.

This being my first visit to Los Angeles, everything was new to me, and of course was scrutinized closely. However, Saints are Saints wherever they are. Being introduced to Sister Hermina Badham, I was invited to her home for dinner. This was very agreeable to me, as her husband's father and I were at one time schoolboys together in western Iowa, and I had never met any of the family since they went west. I received a welcome from Brother Will Badham, her husband, with others of the family, and was made to feel at home. Met Brother Badham's mother and family, Sister Badham's mother and sister, also Brother Fisher, of Lamoni, who was here visiting. It turned out that this became my permanent home place while in Los Angeles, and a good enough one.

At evening I preached in the Saints' church to a good-sized audience, with seeming interest; at the close of which, good feeling, so I was among Saints, and glad of it.

Los Angeles is a remarkably beautiful city, with its smoothly paved streets, asphalt walks, long rows of tropical shade trees, not to mention its bungalows, all of which have received elaborate pen pictures in prose and poetry by skilled writers; so we shall not attempt a sketch of it. But, oh my! while occupying in these new and charming surroundings, all at once the toothache struck me. Had not had anything of the kind for years, and this all of a sudden. My, how it hurt! Did you ever have the toothache? If not, it is no use to tell you; you can't believe. It seemed to start every nerve in my body, from head to foot. Sister Badham was full of sympathy for me, as she is, really as nearly all sunshine as they ever get to be in this old world, but pshaw! sympathy won't stop the toothache. That little sister went with me to the dentist. Three times I appeared there, determined to get rid of it, but the pesky thing occupies at the old stand in perfect repose now.

But what is a little startling, there came out in the newspapers a report that there were forty-nine divorce cases presented before one judge in one day. So it seems that charming surroundings, wealth, and beauty do not produce lasting happiness, congeniality, or contentment.

Saturday, the 10th, in company with Brother Paul M. Hanson, I went out to the reunion grounds and into camp, tenting with the missionary in charge, Brother F. M. Sheehy. The large assembly tent and quite a showing of smaller ones were pitched on the sand hill, a goodly number of Saints being present. At two p. m. the reunion convened and organized by selecting Brethren Elbert A. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, the district president, Brother N. Carmichael, with the writer, in charge. This gathering was at what is known as Hermosa Beach, by the seaside. Rather an ideal place for meetings of this kind and an outing; but it does not impress one that way at first appearance. One needs to see it in its prospective future. The ocean as a place for bathing is an attraction, but when one is made aware that there are great sharks in there it is a little embarrassing to strike out far from shore. A great deal could be written of the push and enterprise manifest by the Saints in locating and preparing these reunion grounds, everything modern, toilets, walks, dining arrangements, etc. It meets a present demand and paves the way to a better and more elaborate and gratifying entertaining place in the future, besides stimulating those directly interested to be up and doing.

There was a good interest manifest in all the proceedings of the reunion. The preaching services were filled with merit, some of fine presentation, and the prayer services were edifying, instructive and encouraging. So we decided that the reunion was a success. The death of Brother Keeeler produced a feeling of disappointment and sadness among the Saints, as they all knew him and held him in high esteem. Brother Keeeler was known as an energetic worker and faithful servant in the cause, so has gone to a good reward. But one can not write of all the interesting matters that take place at a reunion or interesting persons in attendance, the Sunday school and Religio, the interest manifest in these departments and the workers so worthy of notice, so will only say the Los Angeles Saints are moving on, striving and looking to the future.

The reunion over and the Saints returned home, on Friday the 3d, in company with Brethren F. M. Sheehy and Holmes J. Davison, I started to Irvington, at evening, to attend the reunion provided for at that place. Kind hands helped me to the depot. We arrived at Irvington the next day in time to meet with the reunion folks at eleven o'clock in the morning. The organization was effected by appointing F. M. Sheehy, J. M. Terry, C. A. Parkin, and myself in charge; Holmes J. Davison, chorister; and an organist was provided. Tents were up and ample preparation made to entertain those attending. This being the first visit of the writer to these parts also, everything was new and most of the people strangers, except that they were Saints. A sincere body of believers, come together to unite their efforts in the furtherance of the cause in which they are so much interested, and exhibiting a zeal that insures success. The services were all well-arranged and well-conducted, a thorough interest being manifest in them. The Saints had come together to attend meetings and secure the benefit to be derived from them. Brother J. D. Stead was present also, as a helper at this meeting.

The social greetings were most excellent here; the preaching, the prayer service, the Sunday school, the Religio, the thought and inquiry manifest, with some criticisms, all indicative of interest, and the presence of the Spirit, with its animating and confirming influence, were intensely interesting and educational. Those present were comforted and confirmed in the restored gospel. Everything went well, so it was arranged to meet again next year. Brother and Sister

Terry were animating factors at this meeting, with many others, whose names we can not give. Those in charge of the grounds, tents, and dining hall, etc., were up-to-date hustlers, so met all demands, and they are looking to the future for more elaborate preparations.

Reunion closed, by invitation, I went to the home of Brother and Sister Holling in San Francisco, to suddenly come down with the grip, but I was not alone; others were seized there-with. However, I soon rallied, under good care. I will not soon forget the dear, good Sister Holling. She does not belong to the church, but is fine as silk. Sister Bohall was present also, staid and faithful. I called on some of the Saints and attended a few meetings in San Francisco and Oakland. In Oakland was pleasantly domiciled at Brother and Sister Smith's. While in San Francisco, I spent a day pleasantly with Sister Ewing, who secured a horse and buggy and conveyed me to some of the most interesting places in the city. Sister Ewing is a promising young woman, whom I had the pleasure of baptizing some years ago down on the coast of Maine, now married to a devoted husband of southern extraction, who appreciates her. They appear to be very happy. Among other attractions, while here we had the pleasure of listening to William Jennings Bryan and Theodore Roosevelt, of political fame, and note the throngs of people who came together to hear them.

Brother F. M. Sheehy thought I would be doing about the right thing to go into the northern part of his mission field for a while. To this I agreed, but knowing our Frank, I asked him if he did not have some bad cases up there that he had been walking around, and wanted to get me into trouble. But of course Frank would not do anything like that! So I picked up courage and on Friday, September 12, Brother and Sister Lawton helped me to the boat landing and I got aboard the Beaver, bound for Portland, Oregon. Brother and Sister Lawton's assistance came in mighty good that day. Thanks. Brother Sheehy came aboard to see that I was safe and say good-bye. At noon the boat started and we were soon out on the great Pacific. I was not feeling well and had some fear of the dread seasickness, so committed myself to the Lord with the expressed desire that he would temper the waves for my sake, if need be. The boat glided along smoothly all the way to Portland. No one was seasick, and I never missed a meal. The captain said it was the smoothest run he ever had. And just think, we saw eight big whales on the way, lying out there in the ocean, spouting water and moving about, diving and coming up spouting water as if on exhibition, and they were certainly the main show for the passengers. But this is enough about whales until we hear from the coast of Maine again.

I imagine some skeptics breathing out, "You do not think your prayer had anything to do with the calming of the waves of the sea, do you?" Well, the prayer was made and the ocean was smooth. What are you going to do about it? "It just happened so." How do you know? Better have some faith and believe that God can calm the waves of the sea, as well as to pluck up mountains and cycamine trees and cast them in. The main thing is to have faith in God, and there is plenty of power in reserve for accomplishment all the time.

Sunday, the 29th, in the afternoon, we arrived in Portland, Oregon. Passing along the way out from the boat I was met by Brother Leonard Stover and I accompanied him to his home at 406 West Twenty-first Street, Vancouver, Washington, to receive a cordial welcome. Later, I met with Saints in their Religio, which was of striking interest, and at the conclusion preached for them. A glad feeling seemed to prevail all around. While here I visited with Brother and Sister Williams, Brother and Sister Marcus Cook, and Brother and Sister Dopp, attended several meetings, and helped the cause what I could.<sup>2</sup> Went with Brother Cook to Portland and met with the Saints there several times, being pleasantly cared for at Brother and Sister Russell's, and others of the Saints in the neighborhood. There is a nice society of Saints here also.

October 8 I left Vancouver for Centralia, Washington. On arriving there I was made welcome at the home of Brother Sterling B. Cox. Attended several meetings and visited among the Saints. There is a nice body of young people here, interested in Sunday school and Religio work and trying to make themselves useful to the cause. Brother Cox is president of the branch and was pushing things, being very much interested in getting the church building completed so as to have a pleasant place in which to meet; and he succeeded. Mr. Andrew Fisher resides here, whom I knew many years ago. His wife is sister to Brethren Columbus and Leonard Scott. The family belong to the church, but the father has not seen fit to unite with it. He treated me nicely and we had several chats together, and I was pleasantly entertained at his house. The young folks are grown up, Byron, Lulu, and Agnes, all earnest workers in the cause. The mother was away from home visiting her sick mother at Coldwater, Michigan. The Chehalis and Centralia Saints are united in their church work and moving along nicely.

Tuesday, the 15th, Sister Crum helped me to the station and at noon I started for Seattle. This was an interesting trip. The whole landscape and the towns passed through were new to me and all pleasant to see. At 3.15 I arrived at Seattle, another new experience. I soon found the home of Brother William Johnson, 3618 Evanston Avenue. Brother Johnson was not at home, but Sister Johnson found room for me and made me very welcome. In the evening, I attended the young people's Religio social at the church. They had a cheerful time and I noted there is good material among the young people in the church at work in Seattle. The next evening I attended the prayer meeting at the church. The interest was good. I met there Brother Fred Holman, who at one time was employed by me at Kirtland, Ohio. We had not met for some years, but Fred is still strong in the faith and helping the work along in Seattle. It is pleasant to know that Saints who go abroad in the world hold on to their integrity and let their light shine wherever they are. I went home with Brother Holman to meet his pleasant little family, and was cheerful indoors, secure from the storm, much rain falling.

Met Sister Martha Proctor here, Nellie and her sister, the little Saint, all of whom I met in Ogden, Utah, some moons ago. Sister Proctor is still battling for the right, and Nellie the same agreeable but persistent little deflection.

Sunday, the 30th, I preached in the church in the morning and evening, assisted by officers of the branch, and made a talk to the Religio class. Dined with A. M. Corbett at 6542 Sixth Avenue N. W. A cheerful sister from Chicago was visiting there. The following Wednesday evening, I preached again in the church. In the meantime I met Brother Johnson, who had returned home from a preaching tour. There is a good body of Saints in Seattle. They need some more active workers in the field to insure success. They have a good church building and are moving along as best they can. We did what we could while there to help them.

Thursday, the 24th, Brother Johnson accompanied me to the depot, and I boarded the train for Tacoma, where I stayed over night with a family of Saints, isolated, a Sister Meyers and daughter. It rained hard, but we talked on the gospel theme, just the same. Good-Saints.

Saturday, the 25th, I returned to Centralia and received a welcome at Brother A. Briggs's. I was entertained here also again at Brother Crum's, Fisher's, Cox's, Steele's, and others'. Remained over two Sundays, helped in the meetings, attended the sewing society at Sister Price's, the Sunday school, Religio, etc., and attended the Halloween social given at Brother Briggs's, which I think was a success, but of this I can not say, as I would not be competent to judge; for of all the foolish things that people engage in there is none that beats the Halloween craze. Of course this does not include indoor socials. With Sister Lulu Fisher I visited Brother and Sister Ward at Chehalis. They are from Farmington, Iowa, and are staunch Saints. Have a nice family and the girls are energetic in church work, as is Sister Pearl De Von of the same place. Things are going very well in this section, only they need some more energetic workers to help wake up the people and invite a wider interest. Brother J. D. Stead's name is held in good repute here as a Christian and a worker. Also G. W. Thorburn and T. C. Kelley.

Monday, November 4, I returned to Vancouver, stopping at Brother Stover's again, and meeting with the pleasant smiles of Sister Stover and family. Attended meeting on Thursday evening at the house of Sister Harvey. Appointed for prayer meeting, but was changed to preaching. Good meeting. I spent a day at Brother and Sister Shippy's. They had moved to Vancouver and he was holding a series of meetings with good interest. We made a visit to Brother and Sister Gages, where we tested the merits of a Chinese pheasant. Good enough.

Friday, November 8, I went by invitation to Hood River, Oregon, and received a welcome at Brother Chapman's. Several meetings were held while here, in charge of the local officers and Brother Cook, president of the district, who was in attendance some of the time. The brethren procured the Unitarian church so as to accommodate any who might desire to attend the meetings in the central part of the town. But this effort failed of a proper advertisement, so the audience was not much improved. But it was rainy and muddy, so I left further meetings to Brother Cook and branch officers. There is a nice little body of Saints at this place, moving along as best they can. There is good native talent among them, well informed in the faith, but they need active help and encouragement from outside to aid them. Good care was given me at Brother and Sister Chapman's.

While here I met unexpectedly a number of parties belonging to the Strannahan family, whom I knew a number of years ago in the State of Minnesota. Some of them joined the church in Little Cannon Valley and later moved out here and settled, amassing considerable wealth. I was with them so long in Minnesota that it was like meeting relatives to see them, and they surely gave me a cordial greeting. One Sister Osro Strannahan, lives over near Vancouver, at Homan. Her husband died and she married a Mr. Hayes, a Congregationalist, and a pretty stiff one. Sister Osro believes as of yore, however she attends church with her husband in order to keep peace in the family; a very sensible course. I visited them at their home and had a pleasant acquaintance with Brother Hayes. I think he hasn't a very bad opinion of the Latter Day Saints, except what may arise from old stories he has heard and prejudices entertained in the past. He took an interest in me and invited me to come again. Spent an evening pleasantly with Mrs. Emma Prichard, daughter of Sister Osro, at 313 East Third Street, North Portland, Oregon. Uncle James Strannahan and wife, two good Saints, are buried here at Hood River. Horace is a member of the legislature, Mrs. Crowell, a daughter, resides there also, formerly a Miss Berdan of Cannon River, Minnesota. Osro is dead. His widow resides there.

On the 13th, I returned to Portland with Sister Eva Chapman, who proved to be an interesting and a safe guide. Sister Haws kindly provided supper before going to meeting. I remained here until the 6th of September. Met with Brother Crumley and we alternated in a series of meetings, well attended. Brother Crumley is an exceptionally good representative, a defender, and is companionable. In the meantime, during this stay, I accompanied Brother Goodman over to a distant neighborhood where a few families of Saints live. We spent the day pleasantly among them. Sister Hudson and her daughter reside here. At one time in youth Sister Hudson lived at my wife's father's in the State of Minnesota. Of course we had some pleasant chats, but held no meetings, as meetings were being held evenings in Montavilla. During this interim also, I went out to Escado. Met with Brother and Sister Upton, stayed over night with Brother and Sister Coops, held one meeting, but there were so few out I thought it unwise to stay longer. Left an appointment to be filled by Brother Crumley later. He reported an awakened interest. Only a few families of Saints live in that community.

Sunday, December 1, I attended sacrament service at the church and at 3 p. m. preached the funeral discourse of a Mr. Willard Johnson, at the undertaker's parlors in Portland. Mr. Johnson was born in 1849 in the State of Michigan. It was a long ride out to the cemetery, but beautiful scenery along the way. At 7.30 I preached again in the Montavilla church. Also on December 2 I preached the funeral discourse in the undertaker's parlors in East Portland, of a sister eighty years old, born in the State of New York. Brother N. L. Chapman assisted in this service.

But I must not forget Thanksgiving Day. On Thursday, November 28, the Saints met at the church by reason of the Thanksgiving Proclamation issued by the President of the United States and the Governor of the State, sung hymns and offered prayers and thanksgivings to the Lord of the whole earth for a land of liberty, where men have the right to be free, learn, and think, and worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences. For the abundance of food produced for the inhabitants of the land, free schools, peace and happiness that prevail in the Nation.

Brother Crumley and the writer made twenty-minute speeches in laudation of the Constitution of the United States and Old Glory with all the appurtenances. The meeting closed with a glad feeling in the hearts of those present, and a deeper feeling of appreciation of our great country. Later I accompanied Sister Clark to see a sick sister at Milwaukee. Sister Clark is an active worker among the Saints at Montavilla.

Tuesday evening, December 3, I attended the branch business meeting at Montavilla, in Portland. I was voted in as chairman of the meeting. The branch had not been in the most congenial condition for some time, so rigid rules were adhered to in case of a storm rising. But no storm arose. The business was transacted agreeably to all. On motion of the president of the branch, Brother Barker, N. L. Chapman was chosen by a unanimous vote president of the branch. Brother Barker had given good satisfaction and is well liked, but wished to be released. Priests, teachers, deacons, secretary, chorister, organist, were all chosen with good feeling and unity. So everything went well.

Deciding that the time had come for me to leave Portland, Friday morning, the 6th, Brethren William Russell and W. A. Goodwin accompanied me to the depot on their way to their daily duties, and I boarded the train and started for California. Stopped over night at Ashland, thinking to gain a point, but did not. Sunday morning, the 8th, I arrived in Oakland, California. Breakfasted at Brother Ingham's; lunched at Sister Smith's, and went over to Brother Anthony's in the afternoon. Met Brother Holmes J. Davison and friend there. Later returned with Brother Chalmers to Oakland, and at 7.30, preached to an appreciative audience in the church. Returned in company with Brother Chalmers to Brother Anthony's; to San Francisco for the night.

Tuesday morning following, December 10, I sat down to write, broke my fountain pen holder and went out and down on Market Street to about Third and Fifth Streets, in order to make an exchange for another, thinking to walk back to Brother Anthony's, but feeling a little tired I decided to get on a car. Looking across the street northward, opposite where I was standing or walking along, I saw a car standing, bound eastward. Thinking that to be the place to catch a car going west I started across the street. On the way across I saw the car coming about a block and a half away, and, as I supposed, running on regular time, and I thought it would likely stop at the street below, which I could see. I passed on in front of the car that was standing and when I passed it took a look out for danger coming from the other way and started to step across the track, on which the coming car was; but mindful that one can never be too careful in walking about and crossing car tracks, I looked in the direction of the coming car to see if it was safe to start across, and the car was right on me, going with a speed, it seemed to me, of forty miles an hour, without check or signal. I jumped back and cleared it, as I thought, but the speed was such that it created a suction which drew me back against the car and I struck on my back with greatest force upon my right side, breaking five ribs, as diagnosed by the surgeon; four on my right side and one on my left.

The street car crew say the upper corner of the car struck me, but this appears very unreasonable, as I was facing the car track, and if the car had struck me it would have hit me on the right arm and chest rather than to have thrown me on my back against the car. However, it was all done in a twinkling, so one can not be over certain. The car passed on without stopping; that is, it did not stop until it passed me; after that I could not say.

Some were inclined to think the statement extravagant that a street car should run forty miles an hour on Market Street, but I learned from others that at times they do run not only forty miles, but fifty miles an hour, and it is conceded and reported in the papers that on New Years Eve, when the citizens were out shopping and the streets lined with people, a car came down, running at a speed of thirty miles an hour, and killed a woman a few streets below where I was struck. Many of the citizens saw it and were so incensed that it was proposed to string the crew up, but they were hustled off to prison by the officers and charged with manslaughter. While I had no means of measuring the velocity of the car that ran into me, the conclusion that it was going forty miles an hour is not wide of the mark. Mr. McDonald, the surgeon, seemed to be very skillful in his work and soon bandaged me up and I lay in the emergency hospital over night. It was a close call, and for a while seemed doubtful as to how things would go, only I did not think I was quite done with the grand old earth yet.

Wednesday morning, the 11th, I was taken in an ambulance to the Hehnemann Hospital, a homœopathic school, where I received good care and kind treatment.

December 31st, through the kindness of Brother Benjamin Franklin Parks, I was taken to 2112 Union Street, and occupied a room provided by Brother Parks, secured from Mrs. Elizabeth Hartman, where I stayed four or five weeks, mainly through the care and good will of Brother Parks. I received sympathy from the Saints, too many to try to name if I knew them, some rendering material help. Brother Parkin, the bishop's agent, was awake to my interest all the time. Mrs. Hartman and Mrs. Anna Gilfeather were very kind to me, and helped me in many ways while at their place.

In faith, one is Catholic and the other Baptist. But sectarian religious claims are nothing in case of the care and sympathy to be extended to humanity, and should not be, and not much in anything else save in an effort to find the truth and abide in it.

After getting so I could go about, I attended a meeting in the San Francisco church, visited some of the Saints, being well cared for at Brother and Sister Chalmers's, and Sister Hazel Parr's. Attended church in Oakland on Sunday, visited some of the Saints, being cheerfully cared for at Brother and Sister Taylor's and Sister Crocker's. Monday following Sister Taylor was kind enough to accompany me to Sisters Neal's and Teale's, where we made some new acquaintances, and spent the time pleasantly until afternoon, when I returned to San Francisco, Sister Taylor being careful to see me safely on the car before leaving me.

The morning of February 14, Brethren Parks and Parkin helped me to the boat landing, when Brother Parks left for his daily employment. Brother Parks had been very good to me. Brother Parkin accompanied me across the bay to the Oakland wharf, where I got aboard the train at 10.20 a. m., Brother Parkin seeing me safely on the car. Thanks to Brethren Parks and Parkin for a whole lot of help received from them. The train was soon moving very rapidly over the Southern Pacific towards home. Sunday following, at noon, we arrived at North Platte, Nebraska, where by invitation I stopped off, so as to get acclimated before going farther east. Received a welcome at the home of Brother and Sister Richards. Met Brother Prettyman, who had just closed a meeting, a little showing of Saints earnest in the work and anxious to attend meetings. They seem to make due allowance for my idiosyncrasies, if I have any, so occasionally meetings are being held, seemingly with satisfaction. Brother A. J. Layland has dropped in with us and is helping along and lo! two Brighamite elders have put in appearance in the town.

Have passed through a few perils in the last year, by land if not by sea, and am pushing along, improving by the way, and later arrived at home at Lamoni, Iowa, improved. I am still hopeful in the restored faith of the last days and going on.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 17, 1913.

Saskatchewan.

It has been a long time since I have written for your pages. After coming up here into northwestern Canada I have been very busy, as all might expect when so many are coming into a new place. There is much building to do in a new country, especially so where we must build warm and comfortable places for the cold winters.

According to conference appointment I should have been in the field by October 1 of last year, but I could not. However, I labored hard, early and late, and by November 1 I was ready to go into the ministerial field, but just then several boils came upon my body, and shortly after they started, a felon came on the front finger of my right hand, which was very painful, and at one time for seven days I was unable to sleep, day or night. Although that came on in the early part of last November, it is not yet so I can write without difficulty and pain.

Notwithstanding this, by the first of January I began laboring in the ministry and have not been at home since that time.

I began in a village two years old; the place is named Herschel. Not many attended, as the whole place seemed to care more for dancing, skating, (a large building being prepared for that purpose) billiards, etc. But on Sunday, those places were closed, still, nearly all who attended those places were either too tired or careless to attend meeting. However, we put in a few sermons and some of the few who attended are favorable to the work.

At present writing I am in a branch called the Minnesota Branch, as several of the Saints coming here from the United States call their branches after the names of the States from whence they came, hence we have the Minnesota, Iowa, and Michigan branches. The Michigan Branch became so large and scattered that we had to make two branches out of it, the name of the other being called the Artland Branch, after the name of the village of Artland, and depot on the Grand Trunk Railway.

At this place I have been opening up in the Detroit School-house, and at the Vanscoy town hall, etc., and as a whole I have been well blessed with the Spirit and good liberty; so much so that although it was quite cold at times, I put in fifty-four sermons during the months of January and February. I do not remember the time when I was better blessed with freedom of speech and Spirit. It put me in mind of a time of my labors in Bay Port, Michigan, many years ago. But of course there were only about one fourth or less of a congregation here, hence there can not be so much good accomplished to as many people. The reason for this is that in Michigan people usually have farms having forty or eighty acres of land, while here they have from one hundred and sixty to fifteen hundred acres or more, hence much more scattered and thinly settled here.

I am of the opinion that there will be some obey the gospel in this place in the near future. Some have said that they believe it to be true, and that when a proper opportunity presents itself they wish to be baptized.

The Saints in these parts seem to be alive to the work, although in the Minnesota Branch they have been haled out, and have suffered considerable loss for two years, yet they are hopeful, and are going on with their meetings: Sunday school and Religio.

Settlers are coming in very fast; trains are loaded, and some specials are loaded with settlers from the old country, Ontario and the United States. Papers report a greater percentage from the old countries and a shade less from the United States now than at this time last year. As the land is about all taken around here, the new settlers will have to go farther back, and in the Peace River district, etc., but thousands of miles of railroad are laid out for this year to be opened up, and new openings are made, so all will be accommodated as fast as can be done.

May the blessings of the heavenly Father be with all his Saints, and in a special manner bless all who attend the soon-coming conference, and with best wishes for all mankind, I remain,

Your little brother in hope,

J. J. CORNISH.

SENLAC, SASKATCHEWAN, March 22, 1913.

Lose this day loitering, 'twill be the same old story,
To-morrow, and the next more dilatory.
Each indecision brings its own delay,
And days are lost, lamenting o'er lost days,
Are you in earnest? Seize this very minute!
What you can do, or draem you can, begin it.
Boldness has genius, power and magic in it.
Only engage, and then the mind grows heated.
Begin, and then the work will be completed.

Opening Session Speeches

Editor's Note.—The following speeches were delivered at the opening of the General Conference, at Lamoni, Iowa, April 6, 1913.

SPEECH BY CHARLES DERRY ON SUNDAY, APRIL 6, 1913.

I am glad to be here. I am here because I felt that I needed my lips touched with a live coal from off the altar of God. I am here because I believe in this work and have believed it from the time I have received it, with one little exception when I found that false shepherds had crept in. I had thought that they must be the true shepherds, but I found that they were the false ones, and it tried my faith, and for a short time doubt entered my mind; but evidences had come to my mind in the past from the time I received this work that would not down. They loomed up before my mind, and however careless I tried to be with respect to God and his truth, those evidences loomed before me and I was compelled to acknowledge them.

Sixty-five years ago, on the third day of last October, I was buried beneath the waters of baptism, and arose from a watery grave to thank God for his goodness, his loving kindness unto me, that I had found the precious pearl of great price. Sixty-five years ago, in December, I was called into the ministry. I accepted the call—not because I believed I was capable of fulfilling the duties that should devolve upon me, but I believed that God would qualify me. He had taken me from the blasmith's anvil, an untutored boy, and had sent me out to declare his gospel to the world; and from that time, whenever I have attempted to declare God's truth, I have proved that he was with me; and that has been one grand evidence that this work was of God, that he could take an uncultured boy, fill his mind with light and truth and enable him to declare that truth to the sons and daughters of men, and to realize the very blessings that he was inviting them to partake of.

I thank God to-day that I have the privilege to meet in your presence. The days are past when I may stand before the people as I have in the past, but I still remain a witness for God and his truth and hope so to remain. I see my brethren all around me, younger than myself, many of them—some perhaps, older—and I see many that have made more rapid strides in the advance of light and knowledge than myself. This is not the fault of the gospel of Christ. My own fault, that I have not cultivated, as I should, my mind, and cherished, as I should, the great principles of eternal truth. And as I look upon my younger brethren that are going forth, I look upon them in a somewhat similar sense as John the Baptist did upon Jesus, when he used this expression: "He shall increase but I shall decrease." I recognize the fact that my brethren shall increase, while I must decrease, at least so far as physical power to declare the truth of God. I united with the Reorganized Church on the 3d day of March, 1861.

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. I never have been; not even in the darkest hours of my life; but when I heard men speak of that gospel and of that work with contempt, I was right to the fore and defended it, and I told them that that was the only means that had ever given me comfort and consolation and the hope of eternal life, and while I had thrown it behind me for a time, I realized that there was truth there, and I realize that truth to-day.

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. I realize it is the power of God unto salvation. I know it has made me a better man. I know it has preserved me from a great many evils that I should have fallen into. My wayward mind and feet would have wandered into dark and devious paths, but the gospel of Jesus Christ, was the light to my soul and God gave me sufficient grace to enable me to follow that light, and I have found it a blessing to me individually, spiritually, and physically, and in every sense, and hence I am still determined to testify to the truth of that gospel and do what little I can for the spread of that truth.

May God bless you all, my brethren and my sisters, and help us all to come up to that unity of faith which the gospel is calculated to bring us into. As my brother has stated before me, I walk by faith and not by sight. I may not have had the privileges that many of you have had, but I believe in God. I believe in Christ. I believe in his gospel. I believe in this latter day work. I believe in the great message that God has sent to men to-day. I believe that he is working among the children of men in ten thousand ways to bring mankind to God, and I trust that we, as a people, shall let our light so shine before men, that they, seeing our good works, may be led to glorify our Father which is in heaven. May God bless you, each and all, and bless our conference to each and every soul and those who have the charge, that all things may be done in accordance with God's will, is my earnest prayer. Amen.

SPEECH BY H. O. SMITH, ON SUNDAY, APRIL 6, 1913.

Twenty-five years ago this spring I was selected to be ordained to the office of seventy, and I have been in the field continually from that time until the present occupying in that particular office. My association with the work and its needs has taught me quite a number of things. One of the things that is confronting us to-day is the development of the church itself. We sometimes wonder why it is that the world seems to be indifferent, and I believe that one of the reasons why that this condition of things exists, is that we are expecting too much of the ministry, and the lay members are not doing their part of the work entrusted to us all.

I look upon the organization of the church in branches and districts as homes for those whom we bring into the church, and until these branches and districts become so far advanced that they may take the raw material that is gathered from the world and educate them and make them Latter Day Saints indeed, we are not hoping for any great progress to be made in the preaching of the word outside. And hence I believe, that while in the inception of the work, the burden of its success largely depends upon those whom the church sends out to preach the gospel, to-day, to a large extent, that burden has rolled from the shoulders of the ministry and rests upon the membership. And until we recognize the fact that any position in this church is a sanctified one, just as holy a position as can possibly be occupied by the man that stands behind the sacred desk, and that any position in this church that we may hold, whether it shall be the highest office within the gift of the people, or the calling of God, or simply a membership in the church, should be consecrated to the service of God fully and completely, we shall not succeed to the extent that we hope to succeed.

We are wont to look upon the individual who stands behind the sacred desk, or one who holds that mysterious position called the priesthood, as the only one who can work in the church, and that we have not very much to do, but I believe that revelation that has been given to the church in recent years where it is said, The responsibility or care of this work rests upon all; and each and every individual should occupy according to the gifts of God unto them. And I believe that the man who can live his religion, the individual who may, by example, show to the world the benefits of the gospel of Jesus Christ, is doing a mighty work for the advancement of this work; a mightier work than the individual can do goes out into this world and preaches the gospel unto the people.

The local man comes in contact directly with those with whom he is thoroughly acquainted. I may go into a neighborhood and be a perfect stranger unto the people; they may recognize that I can present the gospel of Jesus Christ eloquently and convincingly, but one of the little lines of poetry that has impressed itself upon my mind many times is the thought presented—I don't know who the author is, but in a little poem called "Easter-tide"—the last line of the first verse reads: "But we watch for the signs of his living in the lives of the children of men."

The eyes of the world are upon us, and they are watching for the signs of the value of our message in the lives of the children of men; and I believe that that is the essential thing for us to hold always before the people, that every calling, humble though it may be, occupying even as a member of the church, is just as sacred, just as worthy of being sanctified, as the individual who occupies in the priesthood. And until we can come to that conclusion, and work upon that line, and so place ourselves in the condition that we may be an example to those who come in from the outside, we shall fail to magnify our calling as a church.

SPEECH BY WILLIAM H. KELLEY ON SUNDAY, APRIL 6, 1913

I guess I had just as well break the ice as anyone. I am pleased to be here this morning. I am pleased to see you here. We are not here to make creeds or revise creeds. We are trying to teach the principles of the gospel, as found in the 6th of Hebrews, and it seems a little wonderful that people in creed making passed over them without giving them consideration, so one of the things, suggested in this latter day philosophy was that the creeds were not acceptable to God, as they were instituted at that time. They produced dead works and doubt instead of increasing faith, so we find ourselves confronting the world to-day with these fundamental principles, so that we have not only the faith antagonized as before, but our religious books are antagonized and denounced to-day, by critics, and men endeavoring to undermine our faith; so we go out into the world to-day and meet opposition upon the right hand and upon the left, a little different than they did some centuries ago at least as Christians, because of the analytical criticism that is going on regarding the Bible and the exercise of faith in God.

In the book of Revelation we are told to worship God, who made the heavens and the earth, and the sea and the fountains of water. At one time that impressed my mind as rather singular; it seemed that everyone ought to believe in and worship the God that made the heavens and the earth; but to-day there are a host of people that don't believe God at all and it is just as essential to advocate that thought to-day as it has been in the ages of the past, that "God is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." That Jesus Christ was sent into this world to teach the gospel and that the gospel remains to-day as it was introduced in the past. It is to produce forth and one statement is very significant—"Except ye believe in me, ye can not be saved." So in our assembling together it is not to advocate new things along gospel lines, but to see whether we are in the faith of the old things or not, and lay the foundation of this faith that, as Paul declared, is "the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believed." And these things should be our teaching in going out to the world to-day, and this gospel theme should be our message, and it will attract attention, rather than to be carried away with modern philosophy and the theories of men that produce doubt rather than faith.

We are called upon to defend the idea of the one eternal God; no God besides him the Bible tells us, and there shall be none after him. Some get a little mixed on this, on account of the mention of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, but we are told that these three constitute one God and this is the God of the Bible and the one who created the heavens and the earth, and the one that we have to defend before the world to-day, along with other things that we have to talk about; men that do not believe in God that made the world, the intelligent power and force in the universe. They have their views and their ideas in other lines.

The revelation of this latter day work was introduced that faith might increase in the earth—not that we should necessarily know anything more about philosophy or the things of this world than others, but that faith might increase in the earth; so in the promulgation of the gospel theme, that is the work of the church to-day, that it should be presented in such form that men and women may understand and be led to have faith in God and in these things that are manifested in our own time, that when trouble, calamity, and all these things come, the people may have faith in God, whether they know much about philosophy or the intricate speculations of science or not.

So I want to suggest this morning, that the eldership who are to go out, who are called upon to preach the gospel—and the Lord says that he called upon the weak things of the earth and the unlearned to preach the gospel—that is the power of God unto salvation to people that believe, rather than to be entangled in the things of the world and the philosophies of the world; to present this faith that is antagonistic to some things that may be presented that do not produce faith; so I think if we will occupy ourselves along this line, that we will properly represent Jesus Christ and his doctrine to the sons of men, and get them to believe in God, and that Jesus Christ's time of appearing in this world is near at hand, and that he is trying to gather out a people in this world that have faith, that will constitute the Bride, the Lamb's wife; believing in him and trying to serve him, keeping his commandments; and when they believe in him they will try to serve him, and make for themselves a character that will be recognized of him when he does come, that they may receive the "Well done, good and faithful servant."

When men and women do not believe in Christ, they leave that moral code that should govern them, and if they do not try to prepare themselves to meet the Lord, they try to have a good time in this world, gratify their appetites, seek pleasure. When Jesus Christ was here he talked about a straight and narrow way, in which we should walk and not to be interested in that broad way as far as walking in it was concerned; the contrast is seen here in this world to-day. And as lights of the world we are sent out into the world to represent Jesus Christ and his doctrine, we are under obligation to let that light shine in the sense and in the way that the apostles of old time meant it and preached it, which is the power of God to salvation to everyone that believeth.

So in our experience in the past we have been blessed in that service, and especially this last year we have felt better than we have for some time in the advocacy of this message—felt free to act, everything has not been smooth—but right-doing is not always smooth in this world; but here is our saving point, when we keep the commandments of our heavenly Father he will be with us, and by the manifestation of his Holy Spirit will emphasize the truth upon our hearts and minds, so that we will be strong in him and in his truth whatever the trial. It is because of the power that is in it, and been manifested to us that sustains the faithful; and there is no elder, priest, or teacher, or deacon here to-day that has stood for this truth with proper devotion but what has felt the illuminating influence of this Holy Spirit. When we have this, we have everything needful to establish us in this great latter day work as coming from God in these latter days. By and by, when we have toiled we shall triumph. So we are in the faith this morning, and I trust each one here may have an increased touch of the divine Spirit, so that we shall indeed be the light of the world, the people of God, because we are of one heart and one mind, as they were in olden times when the people were imbued with faith and the power of God rested upon them. Let us go on.

I am certainly pleased to meet so many at the opening of our conference, and also to be able to state that notwithstanding the work of the past thirty-one years, which I have been especially engaged in helping the finances and noting the progress that has been made each year, the progress made during the different periods, that I know of none where I could come before General Conference and say that the work of the Bishopric has been in a better condition than it is at the present time. I say this, however, with this thought in mind, to you; that notwithstanding it has not stood heretofore in a better condition than at the present time, yet at the present time it is far from what we ought to have it.

The past year we have had some sad and serious losses to our work that you will remember. Bishop Hilliard, who was an earnest, successful and energetic worker, and who had been for twenty-one years in your service, passed over to his reward. He had done a good work. His methods in some regards were trying until the people got acquainted with him, but he was a man who spoke out what he believed to be true all the time; was never found to be a man who was willing to condone evil, but always held to that which he believed to be true. When the people learned him, they were willing to trust him.

In the work of the Bishopric we have learned how many misunderstand the quality of soul and mind that it takes in order to fulfill the law relating to temporalities, and for that reason our work has been retarded. It is the principle that underlies the gospel of our blessed Lord, that men can only work with him and in his gospel upon voluntary action. They must not be driven. You can not gather from the people until the people have been instructed to move voluntarily; and if the bishopric of the church should undertake to move men in any other way, Christ would not approve their work. It is contrary to his teaching and his work; so that whenever we call upon men and women to fulfill the law relative to temporalities in the church, it is that we may administer that law in the same Spirit and with the same recognition of duty to our heavenly Father that the elders administer any other law; and if we should undertake to carry out the law relating to temporalities in any other way, instead of building, we would tear down.

The Bishopric, in the twenty-two years just past, have been trying to move in accordance with the divine Spirit, in administering the law whatever other things we have had to meet in the world. And it would be just as wrong for me as the Bishop of the church to take from an individual, member or otherwise, that which he was not willing to freely give and contribute to the good of the church, as it would be for me to take the funds that are contributed to the good of the church for the forwarding on of the Lord's work, and cast them where God would not have them go. Either is condemnable, and the Bishop is instructed by the law that he shall be as careful with reference to the ministering of that law, doing so in accordance with the voluntary action of the individual fulfilling as the elder should in administering the law or rite of baptism, and administer only to those who have been truly repentant and who desire to accept the rite at the hands of one of God's ministers. And when you think that the Bishopric, because they are dealing in temporalities, can work outside of the divine law and Spirit, you fail to see their work, and fail to note the great work that is ahead of us at the present time.

One thing I have noticed in the church at the present time touching carrying out the law relating to temporalities, has been in the fact that the people have not been developed under the divine Spirit sufficiently so that they can cast away from them dispositions that are unbecoming in the sight of God. We must not think that Zion can be built up except it is by the law of the celestial kingdom. We must not think that we can carry out the law relating to temporalities in the church unless we can put away from our hearts and minds, selfishness, covetousness, and other things, of which our heavenly Father said in 1833 that the church could not succeed at that time because the Saints would not put these things away from them. You and I can not succeed unless we can do the same things ourselves.

I refer to it for the reason that sometimes people think that it doesn't make much difference whether we deal with our brother according to the law that our heavenly Father has laid down or not. If we are in the way with him, or out of the way with him, and there is no difference in the administration of the law of Christ and in the duty of his people, whether it is in becoming properly reconciled to our brother or sister after we have been out of the way with them, or whether it is in any other feature of the law; and until the Saints, each and every one, can move upon that high and gospel spirit, that if they know that an individual has aught against them, that they will move in accordance with that law and go to that individual first, or if they think that the individual has done wrong in the church that they will approach him first before they speak of it to another person, they are not upon the plane taught by our blessed Lord—they have fallen off. If we could have such a oneness as that in the church we would not have so much trouble in bringing individuals before the courts of the church. There would be a forward movement by all; and for us to talk about a forward movement in the church of Christ unless we take the people along would be as futile as it was in 1834, when our heavenly Father said that you can not succeed now because the church as a church, is not observing these things. I do not charge to-day that the church as a church is not trying, but I do feel this, and know it, that there are too many men and women among us that are ready to criticize their brethren, when their brethren are not present; speaking evil here and there against a brother or a sister or a neighbor or a friend, when it is impossible for us to rise to the conditions of the redemption of Zion in its true sense until we can put all of these things behind us, and do as we would be done by, in all things. That is where we find the trouble. It is not in the fact that our brothers or sisters are not willing to give from time to time—it is in the fact that we have too much to contend against and meet with too much selfishness in carrying out the work that is before us.

In our work, then, I want to assure you this morning, that I was never more confident in its triumph than I am to-day, and the certainty of him who is directing in his work; and I was never more confident of the fact that it is the same as was revealed in the first century, when he announced himself—that it was not on lines of special theories, that he was to build up on this special rule, or that which you may find in the message of everyone who came before him claiming to be the great one prior to his time, and since his time. But his message was that he came to present to the world the truth, and he wanted the men and women of the world to accept the truth. And his doctrine to-day is the truth and he wants his children to examine everything that comes before them, whether the Bishop presents it, or the Presidency, or anyone else. We never say, You shall not examine, but we do say, you shall examine in accordance with the rule that Jesus laid down when he presented that truth: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them"; and when we build in this way, we do not have to look back and see that Jesus was only one of the so-called crucified saviors, but we can say that he is the only individual in the world who ever came to build a church who laid down the principles that the church should be build upon the truth and only the truth, and that we may discard everything except the truth.

I am glad that we have such a messenger as that to follow. There is no danger of moving out of the way, if we walk by him but each and every one of us has to move according to the law, which is the truth. And when he was upbraided before the multitudes, when he was a preacher and they were ready to stone him, he says, "If I speak the truth, why do you not receive it?" He had the word of God as far as they had accepted it and received it at that time; they were to judge him by it. You have that truth as it is contained in the Bible here, that you may judge the work of God by it to-day. Whoever is in accordance with the truth of God as it is found in the Bible is right to-day, and whoever moves outside of that is wrong to-day, whether he be the Bishop or any other individual in the church.

So in making my announcements to you from time to time, I state that I want you to examine what I present, and to examine what I do, and I have never criticized the brother or sister who has examined it; and if they have presented anything showing that I was contrary to the laws in a single particular, I have been as ready to change, I believe as any other one in the church.

Now I don't want to run over my ten minutes. I thank you for your patience, I trust that the Lord will be with you, and that hereafter you will remember that the way to build men and women in the church of God is to build by faith, and no man and woman will stand long who does not walk by faith.

What Rudyard Kipling Said About the Grand Canyon in Yellowstone National Park

"I looked into a gulf 1,700 feet deep, with eagles and fish-hawks circling far below. And the sides of that gulf were one wild welter of color—crimson, emerald, cobalt, ochre, amber, honey splashed with port wine, snow-white, vermilion, lemon and silver-gray in wide washes. The sides did not fall sheer, but were graven by time and water and air into monstrous heads of kings, dead chiefs—men and women of the old time. So far below that no sound of its strife could reach us, the Yellowstone River ran, a finger-wide strip of jade green.

"Evening crept through the pines that shadowed us, but the full glory of the day flamed in that Canyon as we went out very cautiously to a jutting piece of rock that overhung the deepest deeps of all."

I want to send you an illustrated pamphlet on the Yellowstone Park. It contains a fine map in colors, showing all the points of interest, and describes the many wonders to be seen. And I would like to tell you just how to go there most comfortably. May I do so? Kindly call or write

Comparative Digestibility of Food

Made with different Baking Powders

From a Series of Elaborate Chemical Tests:

An equal quantity of bread (biscuit) was made with each of three different kinds of baking powder—cream of tartar, phosphate, and alum—and submitted separately to the action of the digestive fluid, each for the same length of time.

Bread made with
Royal Cream of Tartar Powder:

100 Per Cent. Digested

Bread made with phosphate powder:

68 1/4 Per Cent. Digested

Bread made with alum powder:

67 3/4 Per Cent. Digested

These tests, which are absolutely reliable and unprejudiced, make plain a fact of great importance to everyone: Food raised with Royal, a cream of tartar Baking Powder, is shown to be entirely digestible, while the alum and phosphate powders are found to largely retard the digestion of the food made from them.

Undigested food is not only wasted food, but it is the source of very many bodily ailments.

General Conference

MONDAY, APRIL 14.

Morning meeting was in charge of F. M. Weld and D. E. Powell.

Preaching at 11 a. m. by J. A. Dowker, assisted by William Anderson.

Business session began with song number 185, and prayer by G. T. Griffiths, with E. A. Smith presiding.

Minutes of previous sessions were read and approved.

E. A. Smith resigned the chair to Frederick M. Smith.

The trustees of the Children's Home made report as follows:

LAMONI, IOWA, April 14, 1913.

To the General Conference: The Board of Trustees of the Children's Home at Lamoni, Iowa, have held eleven meetings since our last report.

The regular meetings of the board are held four times a year, on the third Tuesday of the months of April, July, October and January. The present officers of the board are Heman C. Smith, president; Oscar Anderson, secretary; and Joseph Roberts, treasurer.

Since the Board of Trustees were appointed, four children have been placed in homes; two in Iowa, one in Michigan, and one in Montana, and another had been placed in a home in Lamoni, Iowa, before the trustees were appointed, making a total of five children placed in private homes. Fifteen have returned to their former homes, and one removed by death, leaving the present number now in the home twenty-nine.

By arrangements with the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, the children of the home are receiving free schooling at the college.

Those of the Board of Trustees whose term of office expires at this conference time are Sister Minnie B. Nicholson, and Brethren Joseph Roberts and Oscar Anderson.

A committee on incorporation was appointed by the board to carry out the resolution of last General Conference to incorporate. It was thought best by the trustees to defer the incorporating until more experience was had in managing the home, hence the incorporation has not yet been effected.

Much encouragement has been received from many of the Saints and from many of those outside of the church by their freely giving in different ways to help maintain the institution so much needed in the church.

Very respectfully,

OSCAR ANDERSON, Secretary.

The report was indorsed, and Mrs. M. B. Nicholson, Bishop Joseph Roberts, and Oscar Anderson were reelected members of the board.

The matter deferred from Saturday's session, as to rules of representation, was then taken up and discussed.

The previous question was finally ordered.

The motion to defer until the Lord gives further instruction in the matter was lost.

The motion to amend by striking out the word majority and inserting the word minority prevailed, and the amended substitute to adopt the minority report prevailed. Delegate votes were taken on the amendment and the substitute as amended.

A motion was made to make the basis of representation one delegate for every fifty members. This was amended to read one delegate for every one hundred members, and carried.

The chair ruled that districts and branches having a membership less than one hundred would have one delegate.

Necessary changes in the Rules of Order and Debate were ordered to be made.

Announcements were made, the doxology was sung, and closing prayer was offered by Bishop Kelley.

At 7.45 preaching by V. M. Goodrich, assisted by M. H. Bond. The service was preceded by stereopticon views and songs by the men's chorus.

TUESDAY, APRIL 15.

B. J. Scott and William Bradbury had charge of the morning prayer meeting.

At 10.45 H. N. Hansen was the speaker, assisted by John Harp.

The business session at 2 p. m. was called to order by Frederick M. Smith, song number 12 was sung, and prayer was offered by R. C. Russell. U. W. Greene was called to the chair and he presided throughout the session.

Minutes were read and approved.

The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service made report.

The general Religio Association made annual report.

The First Presidency reported concerning the choir work of the year and the work of A. N. Hoxie, jr. The brother was chosen by the body to continue in charge of the musical work.

Frederick M. Smith made an announcement concerning the peace conference at Saint Louis, to be held some time during the year. The First Presidency was authorized to appoint delegates to this conference.

The Quorum of Twelve reported concerning baptisms, stating as their belief that candidates for baptism should satisfy the authorities present that they are worthy.

The committee to which had been referred the matter of uniformity in reporting high priests, made report. Their report was rejected.

The general Sunday school executive made request that the juvenile history be completed at an early date.

A report of the joint quorums of elders was read concerning the transfer of elders from different branches.

A resolution was presented that the special reports made by the Board of Auditors to various officers be presented to the conference. The matter was deferred.

The Quorum of Twelve, the seventies, high priests, elders, and priests reported that they indorsed the communication which had been submitted to them.

The communication was read to the body. It is as follows:

To the Elders and Members of the Conference Assembled, Greeting:

1. In obedience to the spirit and design of the day of fasting and prayer I observed the day with the church. I have hitherto made supplication to the God whom we serve and renewed my supplication in the spirit of the desire of the church, for instruction and light, and I am now prepared to lay before the church what has come to me as the presiding officer, through whom the Master may speak to his people.

2. Thus saith the voice of the Spirit: In order that the Quorum of Twelve may be placed in better condition to carry on the work of the ministry in various fields of occupation, it is expedient that Elders W. H. Kelley, I. N. White, and J. W. Wight be released from the active duties of the apostolic quorum, on account of increasing infirmities of age and incapacity, caused by illness of body, and stand with their associates among the high priests and patriarchs of the church for such special service as may be open to them, according to wisdom and the call of the Spirit.

3. It is also expedient that Elder Frederick A. Smith be released from the quorum activities that he may take the place of his father, Elder Alexander H. Smith, as the presiding patriarch of the church. According to the tradition of the elders he should be chosen and ordained to this office, thus releasing Elder Joseph R. Lambert from the onerous duties in which he has faithfully served since the death of the presiding patriarch.

4. To fill the vacancies caused by the release of these elders from the apostolic quorum, Elders James E. Kelley, William M. Aylor, Paul M. Hanson, and James A. Gillen may be chosen and ordained as apostles to take with others of the quorum active oversight of the labors in the ministerial field. These servants, so called and chosen, if faithful, will receive the blessings which those have enjoyed who have preceded them in the apostolic quorum, and will be entitled to receive such ministration of the Spirit as will continue to qualify them for the discharge of the duties of the position whereunto they are called. The Twelve in its reorganization for its work may choose its own officers (president and secretary) by nomination and vote.

5. The Spirit saith further: Elder E. A. Blakeslee is hereby called into the more active participation of the duties of the bishopric than he has hitherto engaged in, in order that he may give such assistance to the Bishop, E. L. Kelley, as is essential unto the success of the work intrusted to the bishopric. It is also expedient that he be ordained unto the office of bishop, that he may serve as did his father, George A. Blakeslee, who has preceded him.

6. The Spirit saith further: That the bishopric may be still further put in condition to perform the duties of the office of caring for the temporalities of the church, the imminent necessity of which appears clear to all, the church should authorize the presiding bishop to make choice of some one who may be qualified to take active participation in the work of the bishopric and become in due time a part thereof; and this one so chosen should receive the support and sanction of the church until he shall have approved or disapproved himself as a servant of the Master, in the office whereunto he shall be called.

7. The Spirit saith further unto the church assembled and at large: In order that the temporal affairs of the church may be successfully carried on and the accumulated debt of the church in its respective departments where debts have accumulated may be properly met and in due time discharged, the church is instructed, both as members and as the body at large, to avoid the unnecessary building of houses of worship or places of entertainment or otherwise expending the tithes and offerings of the church in that which may not be essential unto the continued onward progress of the general work; and both in private and public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants; and thus permit the accumulation of tithes and offerings in such amounts as may be needful to properly discharge the existing indebtedness of the church as a body. And the Spirit counseleth the church in this regard.

8. The Spirit saith further that the elders and delegates assembled in business capacity are counseled to cease permitting the spirit of recrimination and accusation to find place in their discourse, either public or private, as it tends to destroy confidence and create distrust not only in those present at councils where they occur, but to those to whom the knowledge of such a course of procedure comes by the voice of those who are present and witness what is said and done. There should be harmony, and the Spirit enjoins it upon all, that the Master may be remembered as in meekness and due sobriety he carried on the great work to which he was called.

9. The Spirit saith further: That the church has been warned heretofore that the sons of the leading officers of the church are called and may be chosen to the respective offices to which the Spirit may direct, and the church should be prepared when necessity arises to properly choose such officers as may be pointed out as those who should fill the positions to which they are respectively called. There are others still in reserve who are fitted through the testimony that Jesus is the Christ and the doctrine is true to serve as those who are sent as apostles of peace, life, and salvation to those who are laboring in the valleys of humiliation and distress of spirit.

Given at Lamoni, Iowa, April 14, 1913.

A resolution was made to adopt the communication as a revelation from God.

Statements were made by the following: Joseph Luff, M. H. Bond, E. L. Kelley, Charles Derry, F. A. Russell, R. C. Russell, J. E. Yates, G. T. Griffiths, J. F. Curtis, J. S. Snively, J. O. Dutton, Charles Jones, and Frederick M. Smith.

The resolution was then adopted.

A motion to provide for its publication was made.

President Joseph Smith made a statement.

The motion to provide for publication prevailed. Statements were made by William M. Aylor and James E. Kelley.

Frederick M. Smith stated that he had communicated with J. A. Gillen and had received from him a telegram that he accepted the call and would arrive in Lamoni to-morrow, Wednesday; that he had wired Paul M. Hanson, but had received no word from him.

Announcements were then made.

"We thank thee, O God, for a prophet" was sung, and benediction was pronounced by Heman C. Smith.

Evening preaching was by Hyrum O. Smith, assisted by Charles Fry.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16.

M. M. Turpen and J. S. Snively were in charge of the 9 o'clock prayer service.

Preaching at 10.45 by James E. Yates, assisted by Burton L. McKim.

Business meeting at 2 p. m. was called to order by Frederick M. Smith. Song number 156 was sung, and prayer offered by R. Bullard.

Minutes were read and approved.

The chair read a telegram from Paul M. Hanson, in which he stated that if his ordination was approved by the conference he would accept, and that he had left Los Angeles for Lamoni.

The chair announced that some of those affected by the change in the Quorum of Twelve might be willing to make statements to the body. Responding to this invitation speeches were made by William H. Kelley, I. N. White, J. W. Wight, F. A. Smith, and J. R. Lambert.

At this juncture J. A. Gillen came into the assembly room and the chair asked if he cared to make a statement. The brother stated that he had had manifestations of the call and could do nothing but accept it, though he knew nothing of the revelation other than that indicated to him by the telegram from the Presidency.

The joint council of the First Presidency, Quorum of the Twelve and Bishopric made report as follows:

The joint council of the Presidency and Twelve have had under consideration for some little time the special report of the auditors which was made to the body, and we are instructed to report the following as their action on said report and touching the financial policy of the church.

1. The Bishop assures us that he already has measures in hand to meet the increased demands of his work by reason of the settlement of the Saints and the extended missionary work, and we recommend that these measures be prosecuted and that the financial department of the church be rearranged and the work of the department be put upon thoroughly up-to-date business basis. We recommend that the necessary department help be secured, that Bishop Blakeslee, in harmony with the late revelation, give as much of his time as is possible to the work of the Presiding Bishopric, and that the Bishop select some other man in whom the church has confidence to assist him in this work.

2. The Bishop assures us that he has under consideration the formation of an organization that can hold properties and still be within the provisions of the laws of Missouri, and we recommend that this organization be completed within the conference year and necessary transfer of titles be made, and in this matter the Presiding Bishopric cooperate with a committee of the Presidency and Twelve, as suggested by the Bishop.

3. The joint council recommends that the Presiding Bishop's annual report embrace the several reports of the church institutions, known as the college, sanitarium, and church homes, and also a statement or budget outlining, so far as practicable, the minimum amount that may be required for the ordinary work of the ministry, the general church administration, and the several institutions named.

Respectfully submitted,

F. M. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.

F. A. SMITH, Secretary Twelve.

To the General Conference Assembled; Greeting: We are authorized to present the following report on the matter referred back to the Quorum of Twelve on the 17th inst.

Whereas, the collection of prophecies and statements other than those which are accepted and approved by the general church claiming to be of spiritual origin, some of which may be of doubtful character, and the records of what may be regarded as miracles and the publishing of such in books or pamphlets and so parading them before the public partake of the nature of boasting, which is contrary to the instruction of the Master, "But a commandment I give unto them, that they shall not boast themselves of these things, neither speak them before the world; for these things are given unto you for your profit and for salvation" (see Doctrine and Covenants 83: 11; also 102: 4) and

Whereas, we believe that such publications are detrimental to the best interests of the church and encourage an undue desire for such experiences, therefore be it

Resolved, That we look with disfavor upon such publications and recommend that the resolutions which are already on record have the respectful consideration and observance of the brethren who are affected thereby. See General Conference Resolutions numbers 288, 368, 550, and Conference Minutes of 1912, page 1622.

Respectfully submitted,
FRED'K A. SMITH, Secretary of Twelve.

The Order of Bishops made report that they had held four sessions, which had been highly beneficial and profitable.

The term "The bishopric," as used in the revelations to the church, refers to the Presiding Bishopric, and also to the association of men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head, therefore:

1. Be it resolved that when reference is made to the Presiding Bishop and his counselors the term "The Presiding Bishopric" be employed.

2. Be it further resolved that when reference is made to the bishop of a stake and his counselors the title "Stake Bishopric" should be used.

3. Be it further resolved that when the association of all the bishops and their council is referred to, the term "The Bishopric" or "Order of Bishops" be applied.

The committee to which had been referred the question from the Little Sioux District in regard to the rights of districts in holding reunions, made report to the effect that in accordance with General Conference resolution number 83, in which the jurisdiction of districts was declared to be coextensive with their geographical limits, the jurisdiction of reunion committees could not therefore extend beyond the limits of their districts. As to the present situation in western Iowa, the committee recommended that the Little Sioux District either arrange to hold their reunion with the other districts or make a change of dates for holding their own.

The General Sunday School Association made a report as follows:

The General Sunday School Association has had a year of considerable growth and development. While the reports show a substantial increase in membership, we are confident that the growth which is not shown by statistics has been by far the greater and more important.

The General Organization of this organization of the church was held on April 4 and 5 at Lamoni, Iowa. Seven sessions were held.

The change to graded lessons ordered one year ago has met with both favor and disfavor. The movement with only a few months' trial can not be properly passed upon. Yet the majority of the schools seem to appreciate the change.

The association has a present membership of 31,066 with 628 schools and 69 districts, a gain in membership of 1,121 for the year.

THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

This department has, under the direction of Mrs. E. S. McNichols, shown great activity and accomplished results very commendatory. The present membership is about 5,000, and increasing daily. We wish to call attention of the conference to this special gospel educational department, and request that the ministry cooperate with Mrs. McNichols in the establishment of classes in their respective fields.

LIBRARY WORK.

E. H. Fisher has acted as the representative of this association on the Library Commission, the report of which is made direct to your body.

THE NORMAL DEPARTMENT.

This work the past year has been conducted in connection with the Religio Society, as heretofore. Mrs. D. H. Blair has acted very creditably as superintendent: 202 first examinations have been taken; 105 second examinations; 61 have graduated, with 16 post graduates; 3 have graduated on the "One to Twenty-One" course. Over half of this number are taking the Book of Mormon Normal.

PUBLICATIONS.

The association is now publishing five grades of the Gospel Quarterly with respective editors for each grade as follows: Beginners, Mrs. G. T. Griffiths; Primary, Miss Anna Zimmermann; Junior, Mrs. Daniel Macgregor; Intermediate, Miss Lucie H. Sears; Senior, Mrs. R. S. Salyards. The Sunday School Exponent is still published by the association, being now issued quarterly and principally for teachers and workers. This periodical and the Senior Quarterly are furnished free upon application to all under General Conference appointment.

FINANCIAL CONDITION.

The receipts for the year as reported by the treasurer, John Smith, are $6,133.58; expenditures, $5,964.51. A gain of receipts over expenditures for the year of $169.07. Balance on hand one year ago was $2,602.09. Present balance, $2,771.16. The following appropriations were made: five hundred dollars to Graceland College Trustees, to be loaned to young men and women to secure an education in Graceland College under the following restrictions: First. The amount furnished any student shall not exceed $60 for the year. Second. This amount shall be considered loaned without interest to the recipient, and shall be returned by the student as soon after leaving school as practicable. Third. Said money when returned shall again be loaned to a needy student, returnable as above. Thus making a permanent aid fund.

Five hundred dollars was appropriated toward the erection of a church building in Salt Lake City, to be expended at the discretion of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric.

One hundred dollars for Library Commission's work; $50 for Social Purity Committee; $50 for the Normal Department; $750 for contingent expenses.

The same officers as selected last year were continued, with the following exceptions: Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser was chosen as second assistant superintendent, and W. N. Robinson was chosen as secretary to succeed D. J. Krahl, who had acted in that office for the past twelve years and had requested to be released. The present officers are: Superintendent, Daniel Macgregor, Saint Clair, Michigan; first assistant superintendent, Gomer R. Wells, Lamoni, Iowa; second assistant superintendent, Mrs. M. A. Etzenhouser, Independence, Missouri; secretary, Wallace N. Robinson, Tulsa, Oklahoma; Home Department Superintendent, Mrs. E. S. APRIL 18, 1913.

A report of the Joint Council was read in regard to the second offense in adultery, as follows:

LAMONI, IOWA, April 18, 1913.

To the General Conference; Greeting: By order of the Joint Council of Presidency, Twelve and Presiding Bishopric we present the following for consideration and adoption as a substitute for the resolutions referred to us:

"Resolved, That in cases of adultery where the guilty member has repented, and the matter is not publicly known, a written confession duly signed and witnessed by one or two officers of the church shall be sufficient to establish the fact of the first offense; said confession, and associated statements by the officer or officers, to be forwarded to the First Presidency's office to be filed in the archives, which are not open to any other officers than the Presidency. The offense should not be made a matter of record in the home branch or district and should not be published by these officers receiving the confession.

"If, however, the person should later fall into delinquency, then there should be some way to protect the interests of the church in the operation of the law which requires that the second offense of adultery shall not be forgiven, but there would be no way for the first offense to be known unless there was provision made whereby the officers could be acquainted with the first offense. This can be reached in the instance above cited if the request recently made by the First Presidency will be complied with by local officers, namely that whenever charges of a serious character are preferred against a member, the Presidency shall be immediately notified of the charges. This would enable the Presidency to notify the officers in case they had record of a previous offense unknown to the officers who had formulated the later charges. We think the filing of the confessions with the Presidency would be safer than having them filed with either branch or district presidents, as there is less likelihood of them becoming public property if lodged there than if lodged with a local authority.

Respectfully submitted,
FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.
FREDERICK A. SMITH, Secretary Twelve.

PRACTICAL WORK OF THE PRIEST'S OFFICE.

NUMBER 5.—"DUTIES OF OFFICERS" SERIES.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—At the time when this article was written Brother George Wixom was president of the Eighth Quorum of Priests, of southern California. He has since been ordained to the office of elder.

The word practical means; (1) "Derived from practice, use, or experience; (2) capable of being used, or turned to use or account." With this definition before me I shall endeavor to show that the priests' office is practical, or in other words, I will show that the purpose of this office is to supply a real need in the church of Jesus Christ; and that he who occupies in the office of priest in order to serve where he will be a real benefactor in the kingdom of God on earth, must take Jesus as his leader and example, and his soul must be fired with the spirit of service so prominent in the life of our Savior. Following are some statements made by him along this line:

I am among you as he that serveth.—Luke 22: 27.

Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant; even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.—Matthew 20: 27, 28.

With these expressions of our great Teacher before us, we can clearly see that when the Master came on earth, he came to serve, to help, to encourage, to build up. We find from a careful study of his life, that all that he taught, all that he did, all that he stood for, was practical, and he was always consistent. He gave no command that he did not himself obey; he was a living example of the grand message he came to teach.

As ministers and representatives of this same Jesus, what is the lesson to us? How did Jesus regard it? What is expected or demanded of those upon whom the holy priesthood has been conferred? Listen while the Master speaks. He is addressing his Father:

As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them [his servants] into the world.—John 17: 18.

Now, let us look at the work that a priest is called upon to do, and try if possible to learn his real mission in the church. Right here let me say: Before a priest can be a success in his particular line of work, he must be inspired by the same Spirit that inspired Ezra the priest, who led a colony of Israelites out of Babylon into Jerusalem, as recorded in Ezra 7: 10. Here we are informed that his chief desire was to know the law of God thoroughly, and then to teach it to the people. The Spirit that inspired the latter day prophet was in harmony with this thought, as expressed in Doctrine and Covenants 104: 44:

Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence.

If a priest enters into the spirit of his work with all diligence and fully prepares himself, by careful study of the law of God, and fervent and earnest prayer, he is then in a position to serve whenever and wherever the opportunity may present. The Lord has defined his duties in a few words:

The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret and to attend to all family duties; and he may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons; and he is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present. . . . In all of these duties he is to assist the elder if occasion requires.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10.

From the above we note that one of his first duties is to preach the gospel of Christ. By way of encouragement to those who feel unable to perform this great task, the Lord said to Hyrum Smith while he was yet young in the work:

First seek to obtain my word and then your tongue shall be loosed; then if you desire, you shall have my Spirit and my word; yea, the power of God unto the convincing of men.—Doctrine and Covenants 10: 10.

Surely there is a crying need for ministers endowed with this gift and power, men who can stand before the world and fearlessly tell the gospel story, as did John the Baptist, son of Zacharias, a priest of the temple at Jerusalem, who called upon the people everywhere to repent and be baptized and prepare for the coming of their King.

Regarding this special feature of the priest's work, Joseph the Seer had this to say:

From a retrospect of the requirements of the servants of God to preach the gospel, we find few qualified even to be priests; and if a priest understands his duty, his calling, and ministry, and preaches by the Holy Ghost, his enjoyment is as great as if he were one of the presidency, and his services as necessary in the body.—Millennial Star, vol. 15, p. 850.

The next duty referred to by the Master in setting forth the duties of a priest, is to teach, expound, exhort. We believe that this has reference to his work among the Saints, and believe it is what the Apostle Paul referred to in Ephesians 4: 11, 12, where he says:

And he gave some apostles; and some prophets; and some evangelists; and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ.

Here you will notice, associated with the apostles, prophets, evangelists, and pastors, are teachers, whose special work will be to labor among the Saints as teachers, that through their efforts the Lord will lead the Saints on to perfection, and the body or church of Christ will be edified and built up and made perfect.

In this field of service the priest will find opportunity to reach the members and converse with them in their homes. (You will note that he is commanded to visit the home of each member.) He is to teach the members to pray, to make clear the importance and necessity of prayer, and to call attention to the example set before us, in the life of our Savior, who not only instructed his disciples how to pray, but was ready to kneel before his Father in heaven before undertaking any important work, and offer up a prayer for instruction, wisdom, and aid, that he might do his Father's will.

The priest should be, above everything else, a social being. He should love everybody and everything that is good. He should be a close student of human nature, and particularize in studying the individual rather than the collectivity. His work lies largely with the individual, and he should specialize in this respect. He should be a psychologist, understanding the power a good man can have over other men, and use this God-given faculty to direct the energy of the membership. He should be a lover of children, and should give special attention to the home conditions and family life.

As the priest goes forth among the Saints to talk with the members in their private homes, he has opportunity to teach and instruct as at no other time, for here he is away from the gaze and ears of the world. He will often hear statements that should never be repeated, but he should at all times seek to protect, encourage, and build up. If he should hear an adverse criticism of one of his brethren, he should not repeat it. He should refuse if possible to hear the criticisms and complaints of aggrieved members, and should teach them their duty along this line. If necessary, he should write the facts of the case, and have the person sign same, then turn the matter over to the president of the branch, who is in a position to have the grievance adjusted. The Saints should be taught that a priest is not called upon to settle difficulties of this nature, and that other officers are called to handle this special work.

Before a priest can be a real factor for good in building up the church of Christ, he himself must be practical. As I view it, the priests would be a greater power for good if they would not try to carry the air of official dignity into their work; or in other words, if the priests would throw dignity and self-consciousness of authority to the winds, and make it a point to get in touch with the people, enter into their lives, share their pleasures, and assist them to bear their pain, the church would be far ahead of what it is to-day. There is nothing whatever in authority better than the privilege to do good and to help men and women to a better life.

A priest may read over the law giving him instructions as to his duty; he may go forth and obey the letter of the law, then exclaim, "What lack I yet?" and be answered something like this: "You have kept the letter of the law, but you have neglected to exercise judgment, show mercy, and have faith."

When we begin to realize the magnitude and grandeur of this marvelous work of God, we might stop and ask: "Are we fit to represent God as priests? Are we examples of the law? Do we refrain from doing the things we should not? Do we do what we ought to do? Do we obey the word of wisdom? Do we speak crossly to a stranger, friend, or enemy? Do we pray as often as we should? And, do we have family prayer in our own home? If we expect to succeed, we must look to Christ as our example. In Isaiah 45: 22, we are told: "Look unto me and be saved." We should ponder over the sayings of Jesus, then go forth to our labor, and thrust in our sickle and reap. We should be cheerful in our labors, and try never to be discouraged. Jesus once said: "No man having put his hand to the plow and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God."

We should heed the admonition of the wise man: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."—Ecclesiastes 9: 10. We should forgive and forget any injury from another, and be like the Master: "Turn the other cheek." When unkind words are spoken or unkind criticism offered, we should not retaliate, but try to be big enough not to notice small things, and at all times be quick to hear but slow to speak.

In order to be of greater utility and power in the gospel work, we should learn a lesson from a statement of Jesus: "Ye are the salt of the earth." We all know that the place of salt is not in self-assertion, but in self-surrender; its service is not in exhibiting itself, but in losing itself. Like the candle, it illuminates by self-surrender.

One might ask, "Is there a real need for active, earnest, God-inspired priests in the church to-day?" Every wide-awake, observing branch president will answer, "Yes; and we need more of them: The work is being hindered because of the lack of such priests."

Wherever there is a band of Saints struggling to overcome the world, shepherds and teachers should be there to encourage and help. The Saints should be instructed to live pure, humble, prayerful lives in their homes, to deal justly and honestly with their neighbors, to be faithful in small things. I have known honest, noble Saints who were not helping in the work as much as they were able, because they thought that their humble efforts would not be of any value, forgetting that Jesus commended the poor widow who gave her mite, while others gave of their abundance. They do not fully sense the full meaning of the statement of Jesus where he said:

He that is faithful over a few things, I will make him ruler over many things.—Matthew 25: 21.

The Saints should be taught to be frugal, not wasteful; to be industrious, not idle. Their attention should be called to the law of God in regard to tithing, consecration, and free-will offering, that through a united effort on the part of the Saints, the different institutions of the church may advance and succeed; that Zion may be established, and a people prepared to meet their Savior when he shall come on earth again to establish righteousness, justice, and peace.

The Saints should be encouraged to love one another, and taught to appreciate the power of love as a factor in our development. Love is like the showers of rain and the warm sunshine, by which all nature is made to blossom, grow, and unfold; while hate has the effect of frost, the cold, chilly blast of winter which causes the leaves and flowers to wither and die. Selfishness and hate bring untold misery and destruction, while love brings happiness and joy unspeakable. If it were not for the love of the parent or some one for the little helpless babe, how long would the child live? How long would anyone want to live without the love and interest of friends?

From experience and study, we find that the work of a priest is to be a real shepherd, a true, loving friend, and a broad-minded, well-informed teacher of the law of Christ; not to drive or compel, but in a kind, humble, loving spirit, call the attention of the Saints to their duty, show them that it is to their advantage and best good to acquaint themselves with the beautiful law of Christ, and practice the same in detail in everyday life. Impress upon their minds that you have come to them as one of their truest friends to help them avoid those things which bring shame, sorrow, and defeat. When the Saints are made to realize fully their duty, as a rule they will esteem it a pleasure to obey. They will be made to realize that true happiness and success come as a result of service and obedience.

Right here, I will relate an experience which gave me encouragement in my work, and made me to feel that if I were willing to do my part, the kind Father would be willing to cooperate and assist. On one occasion, I was notified by telephone that one of the members of our branch had met with an accident, and had to have a part of one foot amputated. I called and found that this member had suffered a great deal. There being no elder available, to administer, the family had called for me to pray for this afflicted one. As I knelt by the bedside, I offered an earnest, humble prayer, asking God to have mercy on this suffering child, that He would rebuke the pain and cause the affected parts to heal. As soon as I rose to my feet, the pain of the sufferer ceased, and the child fell asleep. In a short time, this young Saint had completely recovered. I have had many experiences in my work as a priest, which have remained with me as bright spots on memory's page.

As I write, my soul rejoices as I recall the many occasions when I have been permitted to encourage the Saints and to do them good. My life is made happy in the thought that I can be of service in helping to strengthen the Saints and to build up this great work of Christ.

May the Lord abundantly bless his chosen priesthood, that they shall be made to realize and fully sense the importance of the work that the Master has called upon them to perform; that they may not be slothful, but diligent, earnest, and humble; that they may be filled with the spirit of love and service, is my earnest prayer.

Yours for the cause of Christ in all the world,

GEORGE H. WIXOM.

THE PRIEST AND HIS WORK.

NUMBER 5, "DUTIES OF OFFICERS" SERIES.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—At the time when this article was written Elder R. T. Cooper was acting as presiding priest of the Los Angeles Branch. While occupying in that capacity he organized the visiting officers of the branch in a very practical way, so that a thorough and systematic work was done during the year. Automobiles belonging to various members were pressed into service, and a great deal of territory was covered, especially on Sunday afternoons. As the priests were all working men, with limited time, this enabled them to use their time and energy to the best advantage.

Christ's work in the world was and is effective because he lived the same as other men, subject to the passions, temptations, desires, struggles for a livelihood,—and accomplished his work in spite of them.

The priest's work is effective and bears results largely in the ratio his life is a living example of overcoming and performing his work under the same difficulties and environments as surround those among whom he lives and labors.

His ability to teach even when enlightened by the Spirit will be largely measured by his ability to exemplify the laws of God and the church under the same conditions, and circumstances at least equally severe as experienced by those taught.

Personally, I believe that to be enlightened by the Spirit, so as to be enabled to see clearly and understand and then teach what one knows, is more effective than to be swayed and carried away in the Spirit, so that it becomes apparent it is not the priest talking, but some other power. In other words, let the priest teach by the Spirit and not the Spirit through the priest,—the same as the elders are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost. (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 8.)

VISIT THE HOUSE OF EACH MEMBER.

This is the explicit duty imposed by direct revelation of the Lord on the priests (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10), exhorting the members to pray vocally and in secret and attend to all family duties. The Book of Mormon states unequivocally, "Pray in your families unto the Father, always in my name, that your wives and children may be blessed," thus fixing this responsibility on the fathers. (Book of Nephi 8: 8.)

Don't let us allow the desire to "preach," study, or prepare for other work, monopolize our time to the exclusion of this duty to "visit the house of each member." This visiting furnishes the best opportunity to "teach," "expound," and "exhort." Some of the results from this systematic visiting are most surprising, such as removal of great misunderstandings, meeting of and correcting wrong doctrine, warming up discouraged ones, including some who seem hopelessly gone toward the other churches are brought back, and all kinds of things can be met here that never could be touched from the pulpit or even found out until discovered by the teacher, when too late.

The priest's calling is to be a savior.

Many a good crop can be raised on poor and stony soil if carefully nourished and kept clean of weeds.

TO ADMINISTER THE SACRAMENT.

In addition to assisting in the sacrament services at the church, as called upon, the presiding priest should secure the names of all members prevented from attending, especially by sickness, and administer the emblems at their homes with a short season of prayer and fitting communion.

Taking the emblems occasionally to the house of well persons habitually absent from the sacrament services, will frequently discover there is a secret cause which may be healed by the teacher, and in case of sheer indifference will be the most gentle and effective way of teaching the importance of this service and leave an impression that will be carried to the judgment day, that the Lord said, "But remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations and thy sacraments unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren and before the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2.

BY APPOINTMENT.

This is a question for individual decision, depending upon the priest, parties to be visited, the location and exigencies of the case. Visiting only by appointment should save calling and finding no one at home, but if visiting is done by neighborhoods, there would not be much time lost in getting to the next house. If two or three calls show parties to be habitually away from home or in case of a special matter with an individual, an appointment would be eminently proper. But appointments tend toward formality by all parties concerned, and a certain preparedness which is not conducive to best results, while simply calling unannounced finds the homes as they really are, leaves the priest at liberty to change plans, as he might feel proper, and often brings a rift of light or comfort in trouble, more cheering when not expected, although in a general way it is deemed advisable to let it be known the priests are now visiting a certain section of the city and a call may be expected.

COVERING THE CITY.

Divide the city into sections, organize the priests' forces into pairs, dividing up differently every Sunday or two, to secure benefit of interchange of methods and ideas and avoid becoming mechanical, make a separate card for each member in the section, divide the cards among all the sets of priests, and keep all the forces in one district until it is finished; then take up another. Take the names as they come, without special selection or assignment of special names to certain priests, (wisdom may dictate a few exceptions) but "ye are equal in calling" and authority and right to the help of God's Spirit by putting forth equal effort. Suburban towns to be assigned as deemed best.

ABSENT MEMBERS.

Members known to be absent from the city or who can not be found, should have a personal letter written to the last known address. They may be located through the post office. Don't use a circular letter,—put the soul into each letter—don't write one letter for a whole family. It might fall into the hands of a lukewarm member and reach none of the other members of the household. A letter was written this summer by one of the Los Angeles priests and mailed to the navy yard at San Francisco, and in due time a warm-hearted reply came from the Asiatic Squadron in Philippine waters.

THE VISIT.—DIFFICULTIES AND GRIEVANCES.

It is best to promptly and candidly state the purpose of the call for a priest's visit, and the family should then be assembled, as well as possible. Visits should be opened or closed with prayer.

The priest is to "teach," and encourage in attendance on family duties, especially observance of family and individual prayers to develop love, consistency, obedience, and forbearance. He is not to be a family censor, nor arbiter, but rather to teach self-government.

In case of hardness, bitterness toward another member, or grievance toward the church, which the law assigns to the work of the teacher, the priest should not allow himself to become embroiled. He should kindly, gently, but firmly instruct such parties that they are not allowed to entertain such matters; but if they persist in talking, have it reduced to writing and signed and refer to the branch president, through the presiding priest. The priest should not, however, retreat altogether behind the teacher, but remember one of the priest's God-given duties is to "teach," and then is the golden opportunity to teach, "If thy brother offend thee, take him or her between him or her and thee alone." If that effort fails, they are then to take a teacher, and after coming into the presence of the other party, try again. This rule kindly and faithfully lived up to, will stop many difficulties, even serious ones, before going even to the teacher, and prove the laws of God will work.

WHEN VISITORS ARE FOUND AT THE HOUSE.

Don't be abashed altogether and beat a retreat of your own accord. It would be better to state the object of the call. Frequently the visitors are willing to take part in a little visit and listen to a frank outline of the work and system that brings you there according to God's law and have an object lesson in our church work. If it should be inopportune, or the member called upon not be willing, withdraw and call again, but let the decision on such grounds be theirs and not the priest's.

REPORTING.

This should not be omitted or neglected. It is prescribed by the church, in keeping with God's laws, and is necessary.

Have an alphabetical index book kept by the presiding priest, in which is entered the name and address of each individual member, leaving roomy blank spaces under each name.

From this book the cards are made up, one for each member, showing name and address on one side; also blank lines to show by whom visited, date, and remarks.

These cards are then returned to the presiding priest, who copies the record in his book and the cards are then forwarded to the branch president.

On reverse side of card is printed the official church name and local meeting place, with several blank lines. When no one is found at home, this side of an extra card is filled out and left to show that the priest called and will return.

In addition to this, each priest reports to the branch, and also to the quorum.

Each house is reported as one visit, and the number of persons visited shown separately. When no one is found at home, it is reported as a "call." An afternoon report might read: Visits, 4; persons visited, 7; calls, 2.

COMMON OBJECTION.

"Missionaries in foreign lands better stay at home and convert our own members," etc.

Remember the parable of the sower: Some seed fell by the wayside and was devoured by fowls; some withered for lack of moisture; some was choked by thorns; also some fell on good ground.

It is a fact that some good farmers set up scarecrows, and in some places they even hire men with guns to keep the gulls away, until the grain is well rooted. Weeding is a universal custom, for the benefit of almost every individual hill of corn. Some of the finest orange groves are on ground so stony it looks as though nothing could grow, and southern California's paradise would become a desert without irrigation by human agency.

God has ordained the Twelve to open up the fields. The Seventies sow the seed. But the "standing ministry" are the husbandmen to scare away the devouring birds, irrigate, fertilize, and weed the growing plants. So by actually doing our part, the priests become the connecting link, the spiritual gates are opened, and God giveth the increase.

The angels will do the harvesting, but the priests shall visit the house of every member.

Of General Interest

THE POOR, FALLEN DESCENDANTS OF THE MIGHTY INCAS.

Sir Roger Casement, the British Consul General, who exposed the atrocities committed on the Putumayo Indians, has written a most interesting article about these people in the Contemporary Review.

He says that these Indians have the air of civilized children who have been lost in the forest. They are, in fact, descendants of the wonderful Incas, who once covered Peru with their mighty cities and palaces. The only defect of these people seems to be a lack of pugnacity as compared with the white man.

There are some six or seven distinct tribes, speaking different languages, but identical in manners and customs. The principal tribes are:

The Huitotos, the Boras, the Andokes, the Muinanes, the Recigaros, the Ocianas and the Nonuyas, inhabiting the region in which the operations of the Peruvian Amazon Company have been carried on. Of these the Huitotos are the most numerous; while the Recigaros are probably reduced to a mere handful.

The Huitotos are the least sturdy and courageous; the Boras and Recigaros are the finest physically and in morale. The former are still largely unconquered, but many have been turned into rubber collectors, and have suffered much in the process. They are fine specimens of manhood, as are the Recigaros, straight and clean-limbed, with often very pleasing features, and are brave, intelligent and capable.

All these Indians are, indeed, notably intelligent. Their weakness lies not in lack of intelligence so much as in that prevailing docility of mind which leads the Indian everywhere, in that part of South America, to submit to the white man and to render him an ever too ready obedience.

Sir Roger expresses the view that all the Indians of the New World are derived from a common origin, and he places the tribes interned in the vast Amazon forests as of identical origin with the Aymaras and Quichaus of the Inca Empire.

These "innocent, friendly, childlike human beings," go almost quite naked—the men only wearing a strip of the bark of a tree, wound round the loins, while the women, entirely nude, stain their bodies with vegetable dyes, and, at dances, stick fluff and feathers with an adhesive mixture to the calves of their legs and sometimes down the hips.

The men, too, stain their bodies with varied native dyes.

Both sexes are chaste and exceedingly modest. Their minds are alert, quick and perceptive and their dispositions cheerful and courteous. Their possessions are practically nil, and their surroundings depressing in the extreme—a morbid, dense and gloomy forest, inhabited by wild beasts, serpents and insects and subject to one of the heaviest rain-falls in the world, accompanied often by the most tremendous storms of thunder and lightning to appall the stoutest heart.

No metals anywhere exist, and even stones are very scarce—the forest is their end-all and their be-all. They have no domestic animals of any kind, and no food or materials, save such as might be derived from the unending woodlands in which they are submerged.

Such surroundings as these, says Sir Roger, neither offered a future nor held a past, yet nothing became more clear the more these Indians were studied than that they were not children of the forest, but children of elsewhere lost in the forest—babes in the wood, grown up, it is true, and finding the forest their only heritage and shelter, but remembering always that it was not their home.

While the Indian is spoken of as a savage his mind is not that of a savage. He is an intelligent human being, even a singularly intelligent one in some respects, who finds himself by some strange fate lost in the woods and compelled to reside in surroundings for which he has no true affection.

Although the wild tribes in the great Amazon forest live in a constant state of hostility with one another, they are averse to bloodshed. Even their weapons, says Sir Roger, are the most gentle engines of death—the silent blow-pipe with the tiny dart only a few inches long, the small throwing spear that a woman or boy can hurl, and the noiseless bow and arrow. The blow-pipe is, perhaps, the most effective of these weapons.

Turning to the subject of the influence of the white man over these natives, Sir Roger says that the Jesuits might have saved all the Indian tribes of the lower and middle Amazon had it not been for the greedy savagery of the Portuguese "colonists." "Wherever the Franciscans, who are in Peru to some extent what the Jesuits were in Brazil, have had means to protect and help the Indians, they have carried on the good work that Lieutenant Herndon and others noted in the early and mid years of the last century. Where they have failed, it has been due to the success of 'commerce' over the civilization, of covetousness over Christianity."

"Is it too late," the author asks in conclusion, "to hope that something of the good will and kindness of Christian life may be imparted to the remote, friendless and lost children of the forest still awaiting the true white man's coming into the region of the Putumayo?"—New York American, October 27, 1912.

The Crisis.

Once to every man or nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of truth with falsehood, for the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,

Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right.

And the choice goes by for ever 'twixt that darkness and that light.

Careless seems the great Avenger; history's pages but record
One death grapple in the darkness 'twixt old systems and the word;

Truth for ever on the scaffold, wrong for ever on the throne—
Yet the scaffold sways the future, and, behind the dim unknown,

Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.

Then to side with truth is noble when we share her wretched crust,

Ere her cause bring fame and profit, and 'tis prosperous to be just,

Then it is the brave man chooses, while the coward stands aside,

Doubting in his abject spirit, till his Lord is crucified,
And the multitude make virtue of the faith they had denied.

For humanity sweeps onward; where to-day the martyr stands.

On the morrow crouches Judas with the silver in his hands;
Far in front the cross stands ready, and the crackling fagots burn,

While the hooting mob of yesterday in silent awe return
To gleam up the scattered ashes into history's golden urn.

New occasions teach new duties; time makes ancient good uncouth;

They must upward still, and onward, who would keep abreast with truth;

Lo, before us gleam her camp fires! We ourselves must pilgrims be,

Launch our Mayflower, and steer boldly through the desperate winter sea,

Nor attempt the future's portal with the past's blood-rusted key.—James Russell Lowell.

"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain."
—Exodus 20:7.

Oh, puny man, how can you dare

Defy the powers of heaven,

And use God's name to curse and swear

With breath which he has given?

Beasts hide in terror when they hear

The thunder in the sky;

"Thou shalt not," has thundered through the years

From sacred Sinai.

Go hide thyself as doth the beasts
Which man can scarcely tame,
E'er that thy tongue shall in the least Misuse God's holy name.

Letter Department

LOWER LAKE, CALIFORNIA, February 27, 1913.

Dear Herald: The last few days we have been confined to the house, sitting around the fireside, on account of the inclemency of the weather, during which time we enjoyed reading old HERALDS, Ensigns, and other good literature, wishing the time would arrive for the stage to pass and toss our mail bag over the gate, then we would receive our latest church papers. Soon the rumbling of the stage over the graveled road, announced the response to our wish. After shaking out the mail from the bag and tearing off wrappers, to our joy there was the Journal of History, HERALD, and Ensign. Drawing our chairs close to the fireplace, we read with eagerness and pleasure the biography of A. H. Smith, autobiography of Charles Derry.

We have just finished the biography of Joseph Burton, which brought vividly to my mind, the last time that I had the pleasure of meeting him, about fifteen years ago, while working in the Sonoma Pickle and Preserve Company's establishment in Petaluma. I had closed and locked the door after the day's work was over, and stepped down from the platform and started up the street which was almost deserted, about 6 p. m. On looking up I saw a portly gentleman advancing toward me. I had an intuition that he was no ordinary person. His first words were, "Can you tell me where the Adamson Farm is, and how I can get there?" On learning his name, I said, "Brother Burton, you have come to the right one, and you can take the cars and get off at Pen Grove Station, which is about four miles from Petaluma, and I'll be there with the horse and buggy and you and Sister Burton may ride, and I will walk and pilot you to the farm, which is about a mile from the station."

In due time we arrived there. As Brother Burton drove up to the gate my mother appeared at the door and I announced our visitors. After the usual greetings we soon gathered around the table. After appeasing our hunger, we assembled around the fireside and listened to the interesting experiences of Brother Burton, until a late hour.

Many years have passed since that pleasant evening. I have the old horse yet, faithful as ever; but will soon be on the retired list. The buggy,—well, an old Indian bid three dollars on it, and he is now the proud owner.

Our branch now numbers five lonesome members. We have our regular meetings; our Religio and Gospel Quarterlies are our home work. We have three Two-Story books, three R. C. Evans's books of Sermons, Brother Roth's Gospel Messenger, four volumes Church History, and HERALDS, Ensigns, Autumn Leaves, and Glad Tidings, which we loan to those who will read; also many tracts. I can not report on "Good literature" because none of the locals send me their reports.

The Saints of this district are rejoicing that the reunion is to be held earlier this fall, and at Irvington!

Very recently we have received a letter from Sister Savage that she and family contemplate moving to this place. They will be a welcome addition to our depleted little branch. At present they are in Wittitts, Mendocino County, California.

A little instruction on the following points of doctrine will meet with much appreciation. Will brother J. S. Roth, or other well posted elder enlighten me? I have puzzled and pondered over the matter for some time:

1. I understand that all the spirits of the worthy saints, at death find rest in paradise, and the spirits of sinners go to prison. Now; will such men as Joseph Burton, A. H. Smith, E. E. Keeler, Joseph Clapp, go to prison with the sinners to instruct them; or will they rest from their labors in paradise? If they must labor in prison to redeem lost ones, do all of the spirits of the departed elders go there also? If not, Why not? Are some chosen to go, and others to remain in paradise?

2. Will all who hold the authority, whether Melchisedec or Aaronic be called upon to preach to the spirits in prison? There is no record that anyone preached to the spirits in prison but Christ.

3. Will those who have had an opportunity to hear the gospel in this world, and reject it, have an opportunity in the next world?

In conclusion, I will say that we have just read Brother Roth's sermon, on the "Immutability of God's law," and think it a splendid sermon.

Your brother in the true faith,
EDWARD F. ADAMSON.

THE GIRL.

Some tell us that a girl is sheltered and shielded from contaminating influences by the nature of the life she leads at home. Yes, she is more constantly under the parents' watch-care than the boy, whose games and instincts lead him to an outdoor life.

But the girl is not as free from undesirable influences as you may suppose. She is at school six or seven hours a day among other girls, each from a different home with a different atmosphere. Some with careful training, some with indifferent, and I fear the majority are from homes where the busy, tired parents can do little more than satisfy the physical needs of their families.

Then your child with unformed ideals and inexperienced judgment of character is in a motley crowd of children, and its love for these companions make it an easy prey to their influence whether good or bad. This gives you some idea of the magnitude of the task before you, and you must make your training and teaching strengthen this other force.

Of course you are striving daily to implant in this child of yours a love for higher things, lofty ideals, clean thoughts and a desire for wholesome companionship. One important help suggests itself—try to know her companions; encourage her to come home and bring them, rather than to go elsewhere. Some mothers make their children feel that their friends are unwelcome and in the way. A better way would be to regulate rather than forbid such associations.

One great factor in the building of character is the reading of good books. Some one must oversee the selection of these books, and those that hold up a high standard of morality, and present strong characters should be chosen. I have known parents who would not let their children read such books as Little Women, classifying them as novels. A book like that can do more toward character building than many sermons—it sinks deeper into the child mind.

Another influence necessary to watch is the moving picture show. Some are instructive and educational, others immoral. Make a demand for clean pictures, refusing to patronize a place that gives any other kind.

I do not believe in restricting youth to the habits of old age. We should heartily indorse all innocent and harmless amusements. Too much of a good thing is a bad thing. Let me here remind you that you can wear out your children with too many sermons and too much moralizing. I know children who hate to go to church because of having to sit so often under long, incomprehensible sermons. Wouldn't it be a good plan to preach special sermons to them oftener?

Every child should go to Sunday school and know its lesson every Sunday. It will reap benefits a hundred fold greater than if it were allowed to go and sit there a fidgety, disinterested pupil. When a child knows his lesson he is eager to tell what he knows.

When I see a child that comes to Sunday school time after time without any preparation of the lesson I know that those parents are not teaching that child much about the gospel. In pity I think of poor Topsy in Uncle Tom's Cabin, who "just growed." These Sunday school lessons are the easiest instructions and should be only one of the many, many little talks and lessons given to the children.

The young receive their ideas from their elders, and ideas once impressed upon the plastic plate of the young mind can not be removed.

Another important suggestion is to keep your girl's confidence. Any mother that has the confidence of her girls and knows their secrets, enters into their schemes, and is one of them, possesses a happy security.

No secret that can be told mother is harmful. When mother is always welcome and is included in their trips, she is undoubtedly the right sort, and her girls will blossom into a glorious womanhood under such influence.

It seems to me that this comradeship between mother and daughter is the greatest and grandest method in child training possible to conceive. It is the anchor of your girl's safety. And every mother should turn a sympathetic and interested ear to all the girl recitals. Then she knows just when and where to gently reprove or advise. Such a mother is not fighting a foe in the dark.

About the only thing some mothers say to their children is, "Oh, run along, I haven't time now." Mothers, what is the most important thing in life to you? Is it the sweeping of floors, mending clothes, making jam, or is it the molding of that child of yours into a good woman or a manly man?

These things you mothers do, the sweeping, the mending, the jam, are written on the sand, while the love and labor spent on that girl or boy is carved in granite; more than that, it endures after the granite has crumbled into the sea, for the soul is eternal.

Your daughter should have some responsibility in the home, be given a share in the household work and prepared for a woman's part in life, taught the simple arts of bread making and of sewing, and given a knowledge of food values. These she will use more than any other accomplishments.

She may be taught that a pure, innocent girl is the sweetest thing in all the world. It is the mother's duty to tell her the sacred secrets of her womanhood, nor leave them to the ruthless, perhaps vulgar tongue of some other child. Go to the public library and get some books on eugenics for her to read.

Do you pray for wisdom to train that dear girl? Did you pray for her before she was born? Did you try to mold her disposition and shape her character by watching your own self? You can mold and shape your child as the potter molds his clay; beautiful thoughts, right living, careful reading, self-control, cheerfulness, all leave their impress on a human being.

I know a mother who was not an artist herself, but loved nature and loved art and her interest in and study of these produced a genius. Another whose love for music produced a talented musician.

Young mothers, follow out the possibilities merely hinted in these suggestions. I know a dear little white-haired woman who says she can account for the disposition of every one of her children. I have often heard her say, "How I wish I had known these things when I was raising my family!" Though the knowledge came too late for her use, she carefully trained her daughters, and sons too, to recognize the value of early influences. And they, now, in homes of their own, are carrying her teachings into effect. In one of these homes not a cross or unkind word was uttered. That young father let no circumstances whatever bring forth a shadow of displeasure. Together these parents lived a beautiful, an ideal life, realizing that in partnership with God a human soul is fashioned.

I leave with you an appeal for higher education. You owe it to that girl to do all in your power to place her on a higher plane in life, and to make of her a useful vessel in the service of the Lord. Education does help. It helps the girl. It broadens her field of influence, makes her a more efficient worker in God's kingdom. It gives her a finer life here, and better service to Him here means a greater reward in eternity.

Remember, "pray always" was the Master's instruction. Prayer is the key that unlocks the storehouse of God's blessings. Let us use the key.

Prophecy.

GIVEN THROUGH SISTER BUSH, AT LAMONI, IOWA, SUNDAY,
APRIL 13, 1913.

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, oh, my people: I am well pleased with many things that you have done since you have met in this conference. But there are many things yet—things of great importance that will be settled during this conference. And I say unto you, oh, my people, if you will come before me in fasting and in prayer, you shall receive the light that you need. You shall be guided and directed by my Spirit, and I will bless you: yea, with greater blessings than you have received before.

Oh, my people, saith the Spirit, draw near unto me, for verily I say unto you, Except ye draw near unto me, there shall be greater darkness come over you than you have known in this church. Oh, I say unto you, Hear the things that have been given unto you; do not turn away; do not let them come before you lightly, but remember the many times that you have been told and admonished to come nearer unto me—thus saith the Spirit unto you, oh, my people!

General Conference Hymn.

SUNG IN THE SPIRIT, AT A PRAYER MEETING, SUNDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 13, 1913, BY ELDER JOSEPH LUFF. TUNE, "NEARER, MY GOD, TO THEE."

Nearer, my Saints, to me,
Nearer to me,
Dost thou, in verity,
Desire to be?
Hail'st thou, with joy, the cross;
Pain, grief, or worldly loss,
If they but purge thy dross
And lead to me?

Though be thy pilgrimage
Dreary and lone,
And here thy heritage
To joy unknown;
Content by these t'ascend,
Wilt thou to me commend
Thy course, and to the end
Trust me alone?

Wilt thou, to nearer be,
Pleasures forego?
And give thy store t' relieve Another's woe?
Spend not for laughter brief
What may thy neighbor's grief
Assuage, and sweet relief
In gladness sow?

Daily I speak, but few
My voice have learned.
I stand within thy view,
Yet undiscerned.
Each human tear and plea
That asks relief from thee,
Invites thee near to me,
As thou hast yearned.

Pillows of down or stone
Lead not to me;
Nor deeds, nor gifts alone,
But charity.
What'er, where'er thou art,
Wealth, want, or woe, thy part,
If love but rule thy heart,
Thou'rt near to me.

No station, rank, or gift,
More than is thine,
Need'st thou, thy life to lift
Nearer to mine.
From every state and sphere
Ascending steps appear;
To sight by love made clear,
Steps all divine.

Each, by the store he hath,
Time, wealth or skill;—
Rugged, or smooth his path,
On plane, or hill—
May, in his service, be Close, always close, to me,
And my companion be, Eternally.

mations that might profitably be made by those who are interested in a more spiritual type of consciousness.
 Finally—To see the beautiful world, to breathe the fragrant air, to hear accordant sounds, to feel, to be,—this is not life! There is a larger view, there is a deeper breath, there is a finer touch, and a diviner sound, than sense can ever reveal. To see the glory in the infinite, to feel the breath of the Almighty, to hear the voice of the I Am,—this is to live.—William Arch McKeever.

A Symphony.

To see the goodness in other people, and to help them to find it in themselves; to be tolerant of the opinions of others, giving them credit whenever possible for sincerity of purpose; to be frank and open-hearted and honest in my dealings with others, showing a willingness to accord even a competitor a fair opportunity in the race of life; to deal fairly and affectionately with those who are in any sense criminal in their acts or tendencies, and to rebuke and criticize only in love; to respect and care for my body as a fit temple of the soul by temperance in eating and drinking, and to work hard enough to appreciate rest and recreation; to refuse utterly to worry unnecessarily about anything, but to strive at all times to entertain only pure and ennobling thoughts; to get good and to give good everywhere; making somebody glad of my presence;—these are some of the affir-

Heroes in Whom All Believe.

The Greeks surpass all men till they face the Romans, when Roman character prevails over Greek genius. Whilst degrees of intellect interest only classes of men who pursue the same studies, as chemists or astronomers, mathematicians, or linguists, and have no attraction for the crowd, there are always men who have a more catholic genius, are really great as men and inspire universal enthusiasm. A great style of hero draws equally all classes, all the extremes of society, till we say the very dogs believe in him. We have had such examples in this country, in Daniel Webster, Henry Clay, and in the seamen's preacher, Father Taylor; in England, Charles James Fox; in Scotland, Robert Burns; and in France, though it is less intelligible to us, Voltaire. Abraham Lincoln is perhaps the most remarkable example of this class we have seen. His heart was as great as the world, but there was no room in it to hold the memory of a wrong.—Emerson.

Editorial

AN INDIAN MEDICINE MAN IS DEAD.

This might be the heading of an announcement appearing in some daily newspaper where respects to those prominent in terrestrial affairs only are paid, but to the readers of the HERALD a more significant heading should be used for the announcement of the passing of Elder Leonard Tyler, the spiritual advisor, and in reality the leading and most influential man of the Cheyenne tribe of Lamanites. Those who knew him personally at once classed him with Alma, Nephi, Moroni, and others, whose character when compared to theirs was similar in quality, though not developed by years of service and experience. He did not depart from this bourne without a testimony to people that will be of as much service to his brothers as his life would have been.

Just before his death he called to him the other leading men of the tribe and said: "I am going to die; I am ready; I have found the true church and have entered it. The Spirit has borne witness of that fact to me. I want you men to take up the work where I leave it off and devote your life to the establishing this gospel among our people."

Brother Tyler united with the church about eight months previous to his death. He requested Elder A. W. Sanders to conduct the funeral services, also Latter Day Saints were the pallbearers. Was buried at Darlington, Oklahoma, April 5, 1913. Other details than these are lacking.

Thus has passed one of the first to realize the promises of the Lord to the Nephite fathers, and no doubt he is now rejoicing with some of those ancient, just men.

"GREAT IS TRUTH AND IT SHALL PREVAIL."

We call attention to a condition of affairs which is confronting us. From Utah we have an attack upon "Mormonism," made by Bishop F. S. Spaulding, of the Episcopal Church. While in the East there is a bitter and prolonged effort put forth by the quasi-Christian associations, led by the women's societies, and largely working under the influence of R. B.

Neal, of Kentucky, who publishes the Sword of Laban. These societies are very active in the East and Southeast, reaching quite well down to the Gulf.

Quite lately one of the young missionaries, B. McKim, who has been in the field in western Iowa and elsewhere in Iowa, in connection with Brother Griffiths and others, came in with a work lately launched upon the notice of the public by a Reverend Kenney, of the Presbyterian Church, also making a bitter attack upon "Mormonism"; but very warily stating at the beginning that nothing contained in his work must be construed "necessarily" as applying to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, commonly called "Josephites," but is leveled at "Mormonism," whatever that may be, abstract and concrete—an hypothesis that the whole plant should be torn up and its influence forever destroyed.

The writer admits cheerfully that the members of the Reorganized Church are good citizens, upright and law-abiding, and thus gives credit at least to the better part of the philosophy he is attempting to destroy.

It is not a little strange that there should just now be such accumulated activity and venom in the attacks made upon the doctrine of the Savior, as presented by the Reorganized Church, and its advocates, unless it is because of the activities of the eldership in the fields where they are at work assuming the character of aggressiveness from the credit they have received as to their continuing good citizenship and well-being in character, in society, together with the progress that they are making in the field in securing hearers and advocates to the faith such as we have mentioned heretofore, and may mention again. For instance, following the effort of Brethren J. F. Curtis and William Lewis, at Holden, Missouri, some twenty-two or twenty-three baptisms occurred, and following a discussion at Joplin, Missouri, by Brother Curtis with an oldtime Baptist adversary met in other fields by other brethren, some eleven baptisms occurred, and the return statement of Brother F. M. Slover in regard to the work in the Southeastern Mission, that seventy-six had been baptized during the last year, together with similar reports coming from other places in the field of activity show that the Spirit of the Master is still upon the people and follows the efforts made by those who are making an active demonstration of the truths which they have to present.

There is no need for discouragement; there is, however, need for a general rally everywhere throughout the church that we do not become disintegrated from undue agitation from within and family dissension, here or there, in any of the fields occupied by the Saints. It will be remembered that the angelic account in the Book of Mormon of what the writer beheld when the country was moved by the Spirit moving among the people, causing them to make inquiry of each other, agrees with this idea. Brethren returning from their fields in the Northwest report excellent progress and openings for preaching that are very favorable. Brother J. W. Peterson, coming down from Winnipeg, indicates that there are opportunities up there. Also from the field where Brother E. E. Long is at work, and the far Northwest, Vancouver, where Brother Daniel Macgregor has been passing a part of his time in the field work there.

Of course there are some things in the field that we would prefer to be otherwise, but we hope that wise counsel will prevail, and that the caption of this article may not be forgotten by the Christian soldiers worthy to bear the name of Christian gentlemen. "Great is truth and it will prevail."

It is not needful for any of us to become frightened because of this vigorous renewal of attack of antagonism in disguise. It is the same spirit and motive that has ruled in every book and paper published against the doctrines of the church since Doctor D. P. Hurlbut issued his screed in 1834.

There is in addition to those named above a book published in 1911, we think called, The Mormon Menace, ostensibly named, Confessions of John D. Lee. It is no part or counterpart of the confessions of John D. Lee as written by John H. Howard or J. H. Beadles, written long ago, soon after the confession of John D. Lee to complicity in the Mountain Meadow Massacre. The writer of that "Menace" may have read the Confessions of John D. Lee and attempted to weave in some things Lee wrote, but it was so carelessly done that he even misnames individuals and misplaces by name the localities where events in the lifetime of Joseph Smith took place. It is but a clumsy attempt of some "pencil shaver" to foist a popular-selling book on the market, out of which to make a little money. The old proverb still seems to be true: "Of the making of many books there is no end," and the contemplation of such multiplicity should not beget fear in those who are conscious of having the truth as their "Magna Charta," in the religions of the world.

A BRIEF REVIEW OF THE LATE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

After the closing of a General Conference the query is frequently heard, "Well, what kind of a conference did you have?" The answer may perhaps be determined by the viewpoint of the one who undertakes to reply to this question, and that viewpoint may be influenced or colored by his spiritual and physical condition. A confirmed pessimist seldom attends a good conference. A constitutional optimist seldom attends one that is a total failure. The general impressions of the majority of the normal men and women in attendance would furnish a more correct guide to a true conclusion; and prevailing sentiments of the body of the people can be estimated in this case only as we get the "feeling that is in the air," as the expression goes.

Since the close of the late General Conference, numbers of members, of mature and apparently normal judgment, who have attended many conferences, have declared that the conference of 1913 was the biggest, the best, and the most important that the church has ever held. Others may be inclined to modify this statement; but probably the majority of those in attendance would admit that it was one of the most important that we have ever held, as well as one of the best, and in point of size perhaps the largest.

OPENED WITH FASTING AND PRAYER.

We may note some of the distinguishing features of this important conference. To begin with, the opening day fell upon Sunday, something that rarely occurs. The day was observed as a day of fasting and prayer, and thus those in attendance were attuned to the spiritual conditions that should obtain at such a gathering. The joint prayer service of the various quorums and orders of the Melchisedec priesthood held in the lower auditorium on that day was especially efficacious in that regard. Here were men who in solitude had lifted their voices to their God in supplication in many distant fields, from Maine to California, from Canada to Florida, as well as in Australia and Jerusalem; here they were privileged to join their voices in united and fervent prayer. Surely there were none so dull or heavy as to fail to respond to the quickening influence of such an assembly. Here was an objective presentation of the army of the Lord. And the Lord was there with his presence, too, recognizing and leading his army.

IMPORTANT CHANGES IN THE QUORUMS.

It had been feared by many that President Joseph Smith would not be able to attend this conference; but all were rejoiced when it was learned that he was there. He gained in health and vigor during the entire time of the conference; and the Lord was pleased to speak to the people through him yet once again.

The revelation indicated important changes in the quorums, particularly in the Quorum of Twelve; and these changes, when effected, as indicated, could not fail to leave an impress upon the body. According to the terms of the revelation, four new members came into the Quorum of Twelve, to replace those who were released. These are young men of excellent repute among the membership; we may hope, with a degree of assurance, that they will do a good work and leave a record as bright as that which was made by those members who preceded them, and who were released on account of age or physical infirmities, or to assume other responsibilities of importance. These young men are: Paul M. Hanson, James E. Kelley, James A. Gillen, and William M. Aylor.

By the terms of the revelation Frederick A. Smith was set aside and ordained as Presiding Patriarch and head of the Order of Evangelists, to succeed his father, Alexander H. Smith, who passed to his reward some years ago. This relieved Brother Joseph R. Lambert of responsibilities, which he has borne as acting president of this order, which were too heavy for his failing strength, but which he has carried with the conscientious devotion to duty that has ever marked his work. Presiding Patriarch Frederick A. Smith enters upon an important work, and should receive the support of the Saints. The patriarchal work of the order has been well developed; and while it will not lose in importance, it is probable that as the years go by the evangelical work of this department will gain in importance, as the work of "evangelists" and "revivalists" (Doctrine and Covenants 125:3) is more fully developed, and is more fully understood by the church at large.

In harmony with the revelation, Elder E. A. Blakeslee was ordained bishop, to continue to assist the Presiding Bishop, E. L. Kelley, and in time to occupy as did his father before him. The active service of Bishop Blakeslee can not fail to strengthen the Presiding Bishopric, and the ordination met with general approval. I. N. White and J. W. Wight were set apart as evangelists and patriarchs. These men have served in the Quorum of Twelve since 1897, both having been called to that position by the revelation of that year.

Brother W. H. Kelley has occupied in the Quorum of Twelve since 1873, having been called by that memorable revelation in which W. W. Blair and David H. Smith were called to the Presidency, and W. H. Kelley, T. W. Smith, James Caffall, John Lake, A. H. Smith, Z. H. Gurley, and J. R. Lambert to the Twelve; and E. C. Brand, C. W. Wandell, Duncan Campbell, Glaud Rodger, and others to the Seventy. So it will be seen that he has occupied in his quorum for exactly forty years. This is a unique record, not paralleled, so far as we are aware,—that a man should serve forty years as an apostle, and then go out of the quorum as his son comes in.

THE PREACHING OF THE CONFERENCE.

The preaching of the conference is said to have been of a high order, and the prayer meetings excellent and spiritual. The members of leading quorums have little opportunity to judge of these things, being kept busy in quorum meetings so continuously that no time is left to attend such services, excepting on Sunday, and then the fatigue consequent upon long continued mental strain leaves them in poor condition to enjoy the services. We will hail the day when our conferences may be arranged in some way so that the "grind" may be lessened and the men of the leading quorums be privileged to meet with the people more frequently.

LAMANITES IN THE JOINT COUNCIL.

Many little variations from the beaten path enlivened this conference. The presence of several of the Lamanite brethren, as before noted, was an interesting feature. The meeting of Philip Cook, "medicine man," and Chief Three Fingers, both men of native ability and tribal influence, in council with the First Presidency, Twelve, and Presiding Bishopric was a unique occurrence that will not be forgotten by those who took part in this council, at which time the welfare of the Indian mission was discussed and an attempt made to get at the Indian viewpoint by questioning Brethren Cook and Three Fingers. During the conference these men craved and received a special blessing under the hands of President Joseph Smith and Patriarch Frederick A. Smith.

BROTHER HOXIE AND THE CHOIR.

We must not forget the musical features of the conference. One hundred and twenty-five singers, under the able leadership of the general chorister of the church, Brother A. N. Hoxie, jr., made the songs of Zion swell and roll forth with a sweetness and volume indescribable. Brother Hoxie seems to have found a mission to which he is devoted, and who shall say that it is not a consecrated mission? He is fortunate in combining musical ability with the knack of getting into the hearts of his musical adherents, so that jealousy and friction are avoided. Not content with singing in the church, these worthy musicians visited the Saints' Homes, and the homes of various church members in the city, making the starry night jubilant with their bravely chanted hymns. The writer was aroused from his couch on one occasion by the sound of marching feet, and looking out saw some ninety-five of these musicians assembled in the bright moonlight under his window. As their voices swung into a well-loved hymn, we brushed away a furtive tear and exclaimed, "It is worth while, after all, to live in Zion and be one with this people."

We are glad to see the development of the musical department of church work, and hope that it will continue to remain consecrated, Spirit-inspired, and genuine, as at present, never becoming formal, worldly, and artificial. Like all gospel work, it must pulse with inspiration and devotion, or it is worthless. The words of Jesus are of quite general application: "Without me you can do nothing."

God has set his approval upon the service of song when the Spirit and the understanding prevail. He says:

Therefore, in all the congregations of the people of God, let all strife and contention concerning song service cease; and that the worship in the house of the Lord may be complete and wholly acceptable, let them who shall be moved thereto by a desire and the gift to sing take upon them the burden and care of the service, and use therein instruments of music of the reed and of the string, or instruments of brass in congregations that are large, and as wisdom and choice may direct. Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song; let not the middle-aged and the old forget the gladness of their youth and let them aid and assist so far as their cares will permit; and remember that Saints should be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph.

During some of the evening services songs by the "missionary chorus" were illustrated by stereopticon views, including pictures of well known church members. This feature was under the direction of Brother Rudolph Etzenhouser, and seemed to be much appreciated.

BACK TO THE MISSION FIELDS.

All experiences must terminate. We pass speedily from phase to phase of this earth life, and thus on to the half-glimpsed and partially realized experiences that await us "over on the other side." So this conference closed, and immediately began the work of the conference year. From quorum session to distant mission field the busy workers went, singing, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord."

Being unexpectedly required to pronounce the parting benediction, we were moved upon by the Spirit, as we believe, to pray after this manner: "With hearts filled with tenderness and solemnity, dear Lord, we ask at thy hands a parting benediction. Some of us are to labor in the stakes of Zion, and some in far away Jerusalem; some in Australia, some under the sunny skies of the South, and some among the storms of the North; but wherever we are, dear Lord, be there to bless and strengthen. It is easy for us to stand here, shoulder to shoulder. It is hard for us to stand alone. Strengthen us, Lord, that we may stand. Though some may die, grant that not one may be lost because of transgression. Remember the families of the elders. When the husband and father is gone from the home, may the Lord from on high send another Comforter and Protector. Bless the men who remain to toil in the affairs of business, and to accumulate wealth. Grant that they, too, may understand the sacredness of their calling, and realize that it is their duty to sustain the work of the Lord financially, and to support the families of those who go forth to preach the gospel. May the peace and power and the benediction of thy Spirit be with us during this year, in Jesus' name. Amen."

TERMINUS.

It is time to be old,
To take in sail:
The god of bounds,
Who sets to seas a shore,
Came to me in his fatal rounds,
And said: "No more!
No farther shoot
Thy broad ambitious branches, and thy root.
Fancy departs; no more invent;
Contract thy firmament
To compass of a tent.
There's not enough for this and that,
Make thy option which of two;
Economize the failing river,
Not the less revere the Giver,
Leave the many and hold the few.
Timely wise accept the terms,
Soften the fall with wary foot;
A little while Still plan and smile,
And—fault of novel germs—
Mature the unfallen fruit,
Curse, if thou wilt, thy sires,
Bad husbands of their fires,
Who, when they gave thee breath,
Failed to bequeath
The needful sinew stark as once,
The Baresark marrow to thy bones
But left a legacy of ebbing verse,
Inconstant heat and nerveless veins,
Amid the Muses, left thee deaf and dumb,
Amid the gladiators, halt and numb."
As the bird trims her to the gale,
I trim myself to the storm of time,
I man the rudder, reef the sail,
Obey the voice at eve obeyed at prime:
"Lowly faithful, banish fear,
Right onward drive unharmed;
The port, well worth the cruise, is near,
And every wave is charmed."

—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Elder M. A. McConley writes from Honolulu announcing the death of Brother Joseph M. Poepoe. Besides being active in church work, translator of numerous church publications into the native language, and teacher of the Hawaiian classes in Sunday school and Religio, he was prominent in local public matters, being a member of the Territorial Legislature. The funeral services were held in the Capital Building. Elder McConley preached the funeral sermon and explained the religious position of the departed brother to the edification of two thousand people, according to the newspaper reports. Further particulars will appear in our next issue.

THE DUTY OF THE PRIEST.

NUMBER 7.—“DUTIES OF OFFICERS” SERIES..

(This will be followed by an article on the duty of the teacher, by Elder G. E. Harrington, president of the Independence Stake, and later by articles on the work of the pastor, by various authors.—EDITORS.)

The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties: and he may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons; and he is to take the lead of meetings wherè there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he is only to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties. In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10.

In Church History, volume 1, chapter 6, page 67, in relation to the above, the Prophet says, “And among many other things of the kind, we obtained of him the following, by the Spirit of prophecy and revelation,” then follows section 17; so that this office, with others, is according to the revealed will of God to the church.

The first duty named is to preach. Webster says to preach is “To proclaim or publish tidings; specifically, to proclaim the gospel; to discourse publicly on a religious subject, or from a text of scripture; to deliver a sermon.”

Psalms 40: 9: “I have preached righteousness in the great congregation.” So says David. Luke 4: 18: “The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor.”—Jesus. Second.—To “teach,” that is, to instruct, to inform. Mark 9: 31, Jesus “taught his disciples.” Third.—“Expound.” To explain, to make clear, Mark 4: 34, Jesus “expounded all things to his disciples.” Luke 24: 27, “He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures.” Acts 11: 4, Peter “expounded it by order unto them.” Fourth.—“Exhort,” to encourage, to advise. Acts 2: 40, Peter, “And with many other words did he testify and exhort.” Acts 27: 22, Paul: “And now I exhort you to be of good cheer.”

IN PREACHING.

They are to observe the rule given by the Lord to the church in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5:

The . . . priests . . . shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach.

MISSIONARY WORK.

And, behold, the high priests should travel, and also the elders and also the lesser priests.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 22.

Therefore take with you those who are ordained unto the lesser priesthood, and send them before you to make appointments.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 20.

HE CAN BAPTIZE.

There are, in the church, two priesthoods; namely: the Melchisedec, and the Aaronic, including the Levitical priesthood. . . . All other authorities, or offices in the church are appendages to this priesthood; but there are two divisions, or grand heads—one is the Melchisedec priesthood, and the other is the Aaronic, or Levitical priesthood. . . . The second priesthood is called the priesthood of Aaron, because it was conferred upon Aaron and his seed, throughout all their generations. Why it is called the lesser priesthood is, because it is an appendage to the greater, or the Melchisedec priesthood, and has power in administering outward ordinances. . . . The power and authority of the lesser, or Aaronic priesthood is, to hold the keys of the ministering of angels, and to administer in outward ordinances—the letter of the gospel—the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins (agreeably to the covenants and commandments.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 1, 2, 8, 10.

ADMINISTER THE SACRAMENT.

It is expedient that the church meet together often to partake of bread and wine in remembrance of the Lord Jesus; and the elder or priest shall administer it.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 22.

“VISIT THE HOUSE OF EACH MEMBER.”

The ruling of the church in this is that the “elder, priest, teacher, and deacon” mentioned here refers to the presiding officers of branches, from elder to deacon, and all others who may be appointed to assist them by vote of the branch, and by virtue of this appointment it becomes his duty to “visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and to attend to all family duties.” A priest performing these duties in his own home will be blessed in teaching others to do likewise.

No one in the church should assume to teach what he does not believe or practice himself. The Lord evidently intended to be understood when he gave this revelation for he tells what these duties are a second time in the same paragraph.

Every person that is ordained a priest should be willing to work and offer his services to the branch where he resides, because he was ordained to be a worker, and a willing one and, not to stand a landmark like a guidepost that shows the way but never goes. In every branch in the church where the Saints are visited in their homes according to this duty regularly, you may find spiritual activity on the increase.

Branches are not limited to one priest in a branch if they have work for more and more can be found. In the Rules of Order and Debate, page 3, paragraph 6:

Complete Branch Organization.—A branch is said to be fully organized when it has a presiding elder, a priest, a teacher, and a deacon. If necessity requires, two or more priests, and teachers, and deacons, or two or more of either of the officers of these three grades may be chosen.

Who Preside, by Right.—The officers of the church recognized by these meetings as having a right to preside, are: A presiding elder who has been regularly chosen by vote of the branch; a priest or priests, also regularly chosen by vote of the branch.—Rules of Order and Debate. p. 100, par. 161.

In the following paragraph, on page 101, they are called "associate priests"; that is, they are associated with the presiding elder and the presiding priest in the work of the branch. There is no need of any priest saying there is nothing for him to do.

A branch may be presided over by a high priest, an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, chosen and sustained by the vote of the branch.—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 2.

In answer to question from Runnells, Iowa, Branch: Where there is no elder in a branch, and several priests, can one priest be sustained or chosen as president of the branch, another as priest of the branch, or would the two be of equal authority? That such action of the branch, the priest so chosen would be the priest of the branch, and preside, and the second priest so chosen would be his assistant priest.—General Conference Resolution number 521.

And it came to pass that Alma, having authority from God, ordained priests; even one priest to every fifty of their number did he ordain to preach unto them, and to teach them concerning the things pertaining to the kingdom of God.—Book of Mormon, Mosiah 9: 51, Authorized Edition.

In Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10, it says "he may ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons." When requested by proper authority "he may" ordain according to the above statement.

QUORUM OF PRIESTS.

He should also seek to become a member of the priests' quorum, (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 40) which consists of "forty-eight priests," and it is the "duty of the president of the" quorum to "sit in council with them, to teach them the duties of their office as given in the covenants."

He should attend the meetings of the quorum when he can, for it is in these meetings that he is to be taught his "duties," and this seems to be the prime object of quorum organization, and the intent and purpose is that he may become for efficient in church work.

Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand. Even so. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 44.

The Lord expects results from all men, especially from those who are ordained, and none are exempt from that earnestness and devotion of faith and purpose that the Lord delights to bless.

I give unto you a commandment, that every man, both elder, priest, teacher, and also member, go to with his might, with the labor of his hands, to prepare and accomplish the things which I have commanded.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 9.

In the effort to learn our duty the Lord says:

But treasure up in your minds continually the words of life, and it shall be given you in the very hour that portion that shall be meted unto every man.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 14.

The Lord requires of all earnest and persistent study so that we may be successful in our labor and service for him, and such the Lord will bless.

The Reorganized Church realized in an early day the necessity of earnest and devoted labor on the part of all its officers. See General Conference Resolutions, adopted October 7, 1868, number 97: "That this conference expects all the official members of the church to do their duties to the utmost of their abilities."

Brethren, are we all doing our best with the "talent" that the Lord has given to us? If not, why not?

PROPOSITIONS FOR DEBATE.

"METHODS AND TACTICS" SERIES.

I am informed by the managing editor of the SAINTS' HERALD, that the "subject of debate (upon which I am asked to write, as suggested by the above caption) has been assigned to five or six writers," each one, of course, having his particular part. Therefore I will confine myself as closely as is found to be practicable, to the particular topic assigned me, lest I trespass on others' ground.

PRELIMINARY CONSIDERATIONS.

If it is right for ministers of the gospel to engage in public and joint discussion (and we believe that it sometimes is), then it follows that it is gospel work, and should be entered into carefully, conscientiously, and intelligently. Do not misunderstand. All our work, both in business and labor, done by employer and employee, should be entered into and performed in the same way; but because of existing conditions (some of which I regret), and because there is so much at stake in this matter, I write as I do.

That debating, when necessary, is important gospel work, is evident from the following word of instruction to Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, given by Him who had called them to be ministers of the word of life:

Call upon the inhabitants of the earth, and prepare the way for the commandments and revelations which are to come. Now, behold, this is wisdom; whoso readeth let him understand and receive also; for unto him that receiveth it shall be given more abundantly, even power; wherefore, confound your enemies; call upon them to meet you, both in public and in private; and inasmuch as ye are faithful, their shame shall be made manifest. Wherefore let them bring forth their strong reasons against the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 71: 2.

I call special attention to the words, "Inasmuch as ye are faithful." How much does this statement mean?

The true purpose of a joint discussion is not simply to vanquish an opponent, much less to show our great ability in defending the truth; but, rather, to serve the interests of truth and right, as revealed in the gospel. Therefore, as ministers for Christ, with the precious message of the gospel given to us, in trust, and the salvation of souls at stake, we are required to deport ourselves as we would in any other gospel work.

Permit me to emphasize by repetition. We are more than mere disputants. We are ministers for God, with the message of eternal truth to tell to the people. That is, we are "workers together with God" and for God. It is evident, therefore, that while working for God, we can not "walk in crooked paths," neither "turn to the right hand nor to the left," nor "vary from that which he [God] hath said," for "his paths are straight and his course is one eternal round."

The truth never requires evasion, prevarication, deception, or any kind of crooked work in order to sustain it. Or, in other words, we can not build up the cause of truth, or vindicate the right, except by doing straight, gospel work.

WORDING OF PROPOSITIONS.

It follows, therefore, that as the propositions are rightly presumed to correctly represent the issues at stake, too much care can not be used in formulating and wording them, especially the propositions which we affirm.

When our opponents come properly indorsed by the churches or religious societies to which they belong, or whose faith they claim to represent, we must, of course, concede that it is their right to formulate their own propositions; but if they are so worded as to prevent us from denying their well-established faith, covered by the issue, or issues, named in the propositions, or to compromise us to any extent with error, it is our right and duty to object. But, of course, we must accord the same right to our opponents.

Three things, at least, are important: First, our proposition should cover our faith in full, concerning any given part of our belief. Second, it should not affirm anything more than what we believe, according to the standard books of the church. Third, our propositions should express as clearly and definitely as possible that which we desire to affirm. In wording them, the greatest possible degree of freedom from ambiguity and equivocation should be sought and secured.

To go before the people obligated to affirm more or less than we believe, is to place us in a very embarrassing and unenviable position. We are left to choose between two evils: Either make an effort to keep our agreement at the sacrifice of placing ourselves in a false light, misrepresenting our faith, and, as results, unfitting ourselves for true service, and misleading and deceiving the people: all this we must do or, on the other hand, try to make the people believe that the proposition does not mean what it says; that is, indulge in prevarication and evasion, which would be equally wrong, and sooner or later, disastrous to the cause of truth.

There is another way in which undue advantage is usually sought by our opponents. They are anxious that the most unpopular parts of our faith should be made the most prominent, and by the wording of the propositions and the order in which they are to be debated, they seek to bind us to this policy. This should be carefully watched and guarded against; and should it become necessary, at any time, to accede to their requests, we should, at least, and in the same way, require them to affirm those facts of their faith which we regard as the most absurd and contrary to the teachings of the Bible. The order in which propositions are debated is sometimes very important. Permit me to illustrate:

In 1877, at New Jefferson, Iowa, the writer engaged in public debate with P. F. Willoughby, a minister of the Christian Adventist Church. This was the first time he had met, in debate, an Adventist minister. The propositions agreed upon were as follows:

First, "Resolved, That man is conscious between death and the resurrection."

Second, "Resolved, That the Book of Mormon is a true record and contains a revelation of God's will to man."

After the propositions had been agreed upon the writer asked Mr. Willoughby if he had any choice as to the order in which the propositions were debated. He answered No; he had no choice, but presumed the writer would want to debate the Book of Mormon proposition first. To this the writer replied, "No; I prefer to debate the other proposition first."

The elder seemed to be greatly astonished, and said in reply, that he would bring forth evidence on the first proposition which would be very damaging to the teachings of the Book of Mormon. The reply to this was, in substance, "I don't mind that, but prefer to be before the people a while before attempting to defend the unpopular claims which we make for the Book of Mormon."

Well, the sequel showed that it worked like a charm. On the first proposition the writer had the popular side. The people were pleased with his work, and when the Book of Mormon proposition was debated, they were in a very much better condition to properly weigh the evidence. Fifteen voted that the writer had won both propositions, while there were only five negative votes, including Elder Willoughby's wife. Most of the people refused to vote at all.

OBSERVATION AND EXPERIENCE.

"But what will you do," it may be asked, "if our opponent refuses to debate fairly and properly worded propositions?" Defend the work and expose his unfairness in some other way. Debate, or joint discussion, is not the only means of defense. It may, possibly, be necessary, under peculiar and exceptional conditions, to accept propositions which are not fairly worded, but all my experience and observation are against it.

Some twenty years ago, or more, (I am not good on dates) Elder Clark Braden of the "Church of Christ," advertised that he would deliver some lectures in the Fremont District, near Thurman, Iowa. Elder Braden, in his usual way, affirmed, on his posters, that the Latter Day Saints were afraid to meet him in debate. That he had backed out E. L. Kelley, Joseph Luff, J. R. Lambert, I. N. White, and I think some others.

The excitement ran high. Our brethren in the Fremont District became very anxious for debate. They wrote me concerning the matter (I was missionary in charge), and I replied that we would meet Mr. Braden in debate, if he would debate propositions which were fair, but up to date he would not do it. This was in the fall.

I was watching the interests of the work, to the best of my ability, and pursuing the course which I thought to be the wisest and safest. Meanwhile I wrote up and selected matter intended for a poster in reply to Elder Braden's false statements, under the heading of "FRAUD." In this bill I quoted from correspondence between Elder Braden and myself in 1884, and published in the SAINTS' HERALD of February, 1885, showing what propositions I offered to debate, at that time, not one of which Elder Braden would accept. I also stated that the offer was still open for acceptance.

In a short time, the people of Thurman and vicinity were notified by Elder Braden that he could not come at the time stated on his bills, but would come at a later date. Sometime in the following spring, or early summer, the time was set for one Sunday in June, when Elder Braden was to deliver his famous lectures, which were to be the death-blow to "Mormonism" in that region of country. The brethren became more anxious and more excited than ever.

About this time, I think it was, the good and anxious brethren of Thurman and vicinity concluded to temporarily drop the missionary in charge (though they gave him no formal notice of it), and go elsewhere for advice and help. They wrote to Bishop E. L. Kelley, who was then residing at Kirtland, Ohio. As I was afterwards informed by the brethren themselves, Brother Kelley advised them to have a debate, even if they could not get propositions just to suit them. The right way was to get before the people and educate them.

So, in line with this progressive (?) movement, they asked Brother Kelley if he would meet Elder Braden in debate. He replied that he would if his work would permit.

Meanwhile, I had gone to spend a few weeks at the Lineville mineral springs, as I was in very poor health. And as the time for Elder Braden to put in an appearance approached, Brother Kelley notified the anxious brethren at Thurman that he could not fulfill his conditional promise. But they must have somebody, for the matter was very urgent, and the work was in danger—so they thought.

The next move was an effort to secure the services of Elder Mark H. Forscutt, of Nebraska City, Nebraska. This also failed. He could not go.

The dreaded time was now dangerously near and, apparently, the danger becoming still more imminent. "Dreaded time" and dangerous, because they could not get anyone to meet Elder Braden, at that time and place.

About this time, President W. W. Blair passed through McPaul (the nearest railroad station to Thurman), and some of the brethren met him, and put in the time while the train was stopped in describing the extreme embarrassment of their situation; but he could not stop and help them out.

On Friday, about four o'clock in the afternoon, at the mineral springs, near Lineville, Iowa, I received a letter from Brother Blair, calling my attention to the situation as related to him by the brethren. I read the letter and then retired to the woods to pray before reaching any positive decision. I returned with my mind fully made up to reach Thurman by Sunday morning, if at all possible, notwithstanding my physical weakness. My conclusion was based on the following reasons:

First; I was so impressed by what I clearly understood to be the Spirit of God.

Second; the interests of the great gospel cause, which are dearer than life itself, seemed to require my presence on the battle ground.

Third; I thought it would be an opportune time, with my presence, for the brethren to learn a valuable lesson, if they would, and I did not doubt their ability, nor their willingness to learn it.

It would be somewhat interesting to relate the details of the hurried trip, but space forbids. Suffice it to say, as Nephi would probably have put it, I reached the grounds early Sunday morning. The brethren, both ministers and nonministers, seemed to be very glad to see me, but were as much astonished as pleased.

Elder Braden had advertised two lectures on his bills, but after learning that I was present, they announced a third, to be delivered in "Roberts' Hall," in the town of Thurman, and at night. By this means I was shut out entirely; that is, for the day.

Just before the morning lecture a paper was read, presuming to deal with the issues between the Church of Christ and the Latter Day Saints. It contained a number of preambles and resolutions in which it said, "We, the people of Thurman and vicinity, in mass meeting assembled, desire to have discussed," etc. The chairman of the meeting coolly informed the people that all would have the privilege of voting, "except the Mormons and their immediate sympathizers." So, of course, the paper was indorsed.

Up to this time, as the sequel proved, Elder Braden did not know that I was on the grounds. He announced that in the afternoon lecture, he would pay his "special respects to Elder J. R. Lambert." But instead of doing so, we were treated with another characteristic paper, which, like the other one, must be made the property of "the citizens of Thurman and vicinity, in mass meeting assembled," the Mormons and their immediate sympathizers not being permitted to vote. Just before the vote was called I asked permission to speak, but was peremptorily and promptly denied the privilege.

By this time, Brother William Leeka, with whom I was staying, had become thoroughly discouraged. He said it seemed like everything was against us, and in their favor. I told him it was too soon to render a decision. "The battle is not over." Not being acquainted with Mr. Roberts, the owner of the hall, I finally prevailed on Brother Leeka to go with me to the night lecture, early, and see Mr. Roberts before the opening of the meeting, secure the hall for Monday and Tuesday nights, report to me, and I would see that our meetings were advertised.

Well, we went early, met one of Brother Leeka's friends at the door (a man in whose judgment he had confidence), who was engaged in conversation with others, and speaking of the much-talked of debate, he made this statement: "I don't see why Mr. Lambert don't accept Braden's propositions. They seem to be fair." This was too much for Brother Leeka. His countenance changed at once. He took his seat and made no further effort to see Mr. Roberts.

I took my seat, too, and seriously pondered over the situation. I said in my soul, "I still believe that my course was right, and that I was divinely impressed to come here at this time. I will continue to exercise faith in God, and await results."

Near the close of Elder Braden's lecture, he made a bitter and personal attack on "Elder J. R. Lambert." I decided to try it again. I rose and addressed the chair kindly, but in a tone that everyone in the hall could hear what I said:

"Mr. Chairman, may I have about five or ten minutes in order to reply to Mr. Braden's personal attack on me?"

"No, sir!" came the reply. I stood a few moments, held my hand over the audience and said: "You see how I have been treated all day." "You sit down," said the chairman. "All right, I will," and down I went.

Just as I sat down another thought darted into my mind. I arose at once and said: "Mr. Chairman, may I make an announcement to this people?"

"Yes, sir," said the chairman. I then said, "Is Mr. Roberts, the owner of this hall, in the audience?" The chairman replied, "He is just ahead of you, to your left." At this juncture, Mr. Roberts turned around and looked at me, and I said to him, "Mr. Roberts, can we have this hall for Monday and Tuesday nights in which to reply to Mr. Braden's three lectures?" "Yes, sir," was the reply, and I then added, "Thank you. You are all invited to attend."

At this time Elder Braden was gathering up his books, and when he saw what was done (and there was none took it in more quickly than he), he was evidently greatly displeased. The way in which he slammed his books and moved about on the rostrum, was really amusing.

On our way home, that is, to Brother Leeka's, all was quiet, till I broke the silence by saying, "Brother Leeka, I rather got ahead of you on your part tonight." "Oh, Brother Lambert, I don't know what we would have done if you had not come," was his reply. So it is evident that some most excellent men in times of peace, are not so good (I mean useful), in times of war.

Some time after this, several years I think, I met Brother Leeka again. He told me that he was now convinced that a debate was not always necessary when the people clamored for one. He said the effect of our work at Thurman was most excellent, and far-reaching. "Why," said he, "all the better part of the people, who had been misled into their nefarious work, are ashamed of it, and are glad to keep still. The effect is wonderful." (I have used quotation marks here, though I would not vouch for the correctness of all the words, but can vouch for the exact sentiment expressed.)

Some of the important lessons I was so anxious these brethren should learn had been impressed very deeply; namely: It is seldom, if ever, necessary to meet a popular clamor for debate unless you can do so by giving the best cause on earth its just due, which is a fair chance and an even start with its opponents; and if the ministers of God's church are respected and relied upon for the work which belongs to their office and calling, the cause we love will not come to grief, nor will those who are required to stand in the breach suffer defeat. The triumph may not come in the manner we might choose when left to ourselves, and to our human wisdom. Last, but not least, a battle is not won by bluster and unfair methods, even though prejudice against us should be a strong factor, for as a rule, the people love justice and fair play, and God, the infinite One, is always on the side of truth and right. Let God's servants and people be "very courageous," but not rash, egotistical, or careless, and all good and noble-minded men and women will leave an unjust cause and espouse a just one. The way in which an unjust cause triumphs, even temporarily, is by our failure to give the truth an even start, or to be truly humble, watchful, and prayerful, or by permitting error to place us under a handicap, as can easily be done by attempting to affirm or deny unfair or misrepresentative propositions. In this, as in other things, "eternal vigilance is the price of our liberty."

Some may wonder how we disabused the minds of the people of the impression that Mr. Braden's propositions were fair and right. This was the way:

I wrote a letter to Mr. Braden, addressing him in care of W. D. McClure, so he would be sure to get it. I also made a copy of the letter. I then told Brother Leeka that I wanted two witnesses, one of them outside of the church. He suggested the Thurman postmaster, and I chose Brother Leeka for the other. Early in the evening, before beginning my reply, we drove to the office and, fortunately, found the postmaster at leisure and alone.

I handed him the copy, requesting him to watch closely while I read the original. He did so, saying, when I was through reading, "It is correct, word for word all the way through." I then sealed up the original and dropped it in his mail box in the presence of these witnesses. At night, I read the letter to my audience, in which I had called Elder Braden's attention to the fairness of the offer I had previously made, and the unfairness of some of his propositions. Then I added the following:

"But if you are not willing to accept my offer, which is fair, and more than fair, I am willing to leave our differences on propositions to a committee of three, one to be chosen by you, one by me, and they two to choose a third, who shall not be a member of any church," etc.

The people could see that this test offer was fair, and Brother Leeka's friend, who had discouraged him so badly, by his remarks at the door, when we came in, was among the first, if not the first, to announce its fairness, and affirm that if Braden will not accept this offer, it is because he does not want to meet them in debate.

My purpose in rehearsing this matter is to show one of the ways in which we can defend the work, and at the same time refuse to meet a rough and unfair man on a set of unfair propositions.

When I started to Thurman on this brief but important mission, I knew that it would be a failure unless I received, from God, wisdom, strength, and the Holy Spirit. I tried to keep myself in that glorious element of prayer and feel my dependence. I trusted in God and he did not disappoint me.

J. R. LAMBERT.

HOLD OPTIMISTIC IDEALS.

Hold to optimistic ideals, and you will drive out pessimism, the great breeder of disease, failure and misery.

When you feel the "blues" coming on, concentrate your mind vigorously upon the very opposite qualities, hold the ideals of cheerfulness, confidence, gratitude, good-will towards everybody, and you will be surprised to see how quickly the enemies which were dogging your steps and making your life miserable will disappear.

A tremendous power permeates the life and solidifies the character from holding perpetually the life-thought, the true-thought, the optimistic-thought, and the beauty-thought. The one who has the secret takes hold of the very fundamental principles of the universe, gets down to the verity of things, and lives in reality itself. A sense of security, of power, of calmness and repose comes to those who are conscious of being enveloped in the very center of truth and reality which can never come to those who live on the surface of things.

If you are dissatisfied with your condition, if you feel that life has been hard and fates cruel, if you are a complainer of your lot, you will probably find that, whatever your condition may be, in your home or business or social life, it is the legitimate offspring of your own thought, your own ideals, and that you have nobody to blame but yourself.

Right thinking will produce right living; clean thinking, a clean life; and a prosperous, generous thought followed up by intelligent endeavor to make your thoughts and your ideals real will produce corresponding results.—Orison Swett Marden in Nauticus Magazine.

THE AUTHORIZED VERSION.

"The Bible is the greatest book of all," says Mayor Gaynor, and throughout the Christian world he will hear few dissenting voices. He adds:

The philosophy, the poetry, the imagery, the elevation of thought of the Old Testament have never been approached. No one has since come into the world capable of writing the twenty third Psalm, for instance.

In our admiration and reverence for the Bible as a monument of Hebrew poetry and wisdom, however, we are apt to forget our debt to those who have made its English version as beautiful and authoritative and final in our eyes as any original could ever be. Nor does the verdict rest wholly upon faith or moral teaching. To English speaking people, for example, the mayor might have said with equal truth: "The English Bible is the greatest book of English."

Almost without exception, the famous writers and speakers of our language, even those farthest removed from moral or theological dogma, have for ten generations and more worshiped the Bible as a sacred font of pure English. No child grows up in an English speaking country without breathing in its influence. More than any other heritage of written English the Bible and Shakespeare permeate the style and thought and imagination of everyone who writes and speaks the language for any purpose, exalted or commonplace.

Admiring the English Bible as a sheer masterpiece of translation, how many people know anything of the careful, conscientious scholarship and toil that went into the making of it? A few of us may have read the dedication of the famous Authorized Version of King James I, and wondered at the fulsome adulation, so strange to our ears, with which the worthy translators address their royal patron. But who has ever sought their names?

Yet they were a noble list of scholars in their day—forty-seven of them. At their head stood Doctor Launcelot Andrewes, Dean of Westminster, "who knew Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, Greek, Latin and at least ten other languages." The rest were men of similar stamp. They began their work in January, 1604, when James I called a great conference at Hampton Court for the purpose of determining "things pretended to be amiss in the church." The final results were not published until 1611.

These translators took up their task with zeal and thoroughness. They divided their number into companies of six or eight each, and assigned a special part of the Bible to each company. They drew up fifteen elaborate rules to guide them in their work. The eighth well illustrates their industry:

"(8) Every particular man of each company to take the same chapter or chapters; and having translated or amended them severally by himself where he thinketh good, all to meet together, confer what they have done, and agree for their parts what shall stand."

They had plenty of earlier translations to adopt or amend. Wycliffe and his followers in the fourteenth century, Tyndale in the sixteenth, and later a house of bishops in Elizabeth's time had each and all bravely toiled to provide a Bible in the common language for the use of the English people. Tyndale's version was a fine work, faithful and scholarly, yet simple and popular in phrase. The King James translators owed much to it. They determined to keep their new text as close and familiar as possible to the hearts and older associations of the people.

One of the forty-seven, Doctor Miles Smith, bishop of Gloucester, finely displays the spirit of his fellow workers and himself in a preface to one of the first editions:

"Neither did we run over the worke with that posting haste that the Septuagint did, if that be true which is reported of them, that they finished it in seventie-two dayes. This worke has cost the worke-men, as light as it seemeth, the paines of twice seven times seventie-two dayes and more. Truly, good Christian Reader, we never thought from the beginning, that we should need to make a new Translation, nor yet to make of a bad one a good one . . . but to make a good one better, or out of many good ones, one principall good one, not justly to be excepted against. To that purpose there were many chosen, that were greater in other men's eyes than in their owne, and that sought the truth rather than their own praise. . . . Neither did wee thinke much to consult the Translators or Commentators, Chaldee, Hebrew, Syrian, Greeke or Latine, no mor the Spanish, French, Italian or Dutch (German); neither did we disdain to revise that which we had done and to bring back to the anvill that which we had hammered; but having and using as great helps as were needfull, and fearing no reproach for slowness, nor coveting praise for expedition, wee have at length, through the good hand of the Lord upon us, brought the worke to that passe that you see."

The actual labor of revision occupied about two years and nine months. After another nine months of preparation for the press, the Authorized Version appeared in 1611. Ever since, despite many attempts at improvement, it has been the dominant Bible text for the English speaking world.

In 1870 the Convocation of Canterbury began the well-known Revised Version in which the churches of England and America were invited to join. Only the Roman Catholic Church refused to take part. The New Testament was finished in 1881, after ten years' work, while the Old Testament was not published until 1884.

The Revised Version was not welcomed. The changes were denounced as petty and silly, tending "to spoil the familiar, sonorous style of the Authorized Version." Nevertheless its claims to a more up-to-date scholarship have steadily won favor for the Revised Version, until now it has replaced the Authorized Version in many churches.

It may be doubted, however, whether English literature and English speech will ever change its instinctive allegiance to the simplicity, the dignity, the dearly remembered cadence and benignity of the King James text.—New York Evening World.

HAPPINESS IS HARD TO GRASP.

Happiness is the bluebird which ever lures man on, elusive, escaping, always beyond his grasp. Joy, content, pleasure, these are his as a mood or a moment, again and again in his human experience. But happiness, which means a permanent condition or state, is not his, nor intended to be. When he finds the good or the beautiful dear and desirable, it is because he recognizes it as fleeting, a thing that beckons him onward, a lure toward perfection, not of earth, or at least not as present on earth. Thus beauty, of whatever kind, is a promise of happiness and holiness; not a state to be completely realized, but a splendid ideal to be striven for, with the hope of a final destination where only the holy shall abide.

Stevenson, in a letter to a friend, declared that he had known many a delight, that joy had often been his—he learned the great lesson, too, that “the spirit of delight comes on small wings”—yet he affirmed he had never grasped happiness. These are significant words, coming from a man who, conspicuous in his generation, loved life, enjoyed it to the full and in all his writings cried up the idea that it was richly worth while. His remark, therefore, was not pessimistic or cynical, although superficially it might be taken as the expression of disillusionment. It was rather his philosophic reminder that life was so constituted, and happiness, in the scheme of things, a desideratum, a dream.—Richard Benton in the Bellman.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original

Songs Used During General Conference.

During the progress of the afternoon prayer service at Independence, Sunday, January 5, the congregation sang the last verse of hymn number 361 in Saints' Hymnal, immediately after which Elder Joseph Luff sang by the Spirit the following with the same tune: “Shall we gather home to Zion?”

Gathered where I have appointed—
Fed and nourished by my hand—
Chosen, planted, and anointed—
Blessed people! favored land!
What to you shall mean this token?
What the fruitage of my grace?
My word kept—shall yours be broken
And my covenant efface?

Chorus:

Will ye make of this my Zion,
Whence my glory forth may shine?
All my promises rely on
And henceforth be only mine?

Henceforth, till the consummation
Of my purpose, who with me
Will in glad cooperation
Work, till they my glory see?
Will ye 'bide when peace hath taken
From the earth its lasting flight?
Will ye stand, nor e'er be shaken,
'Mid the gloom of lingering night?

Chorus:

Will ye—good for ill returning—
Enemies befriend and bless—
True discipleship discerning,
And the seal of righteousness?

Who, though death or dire disaster
Threaten every hope, will cling
To my counsel, firmer, faster,
Whatso'er that trust may bring?
Will ye pain esteem as pleasure,
And each sacrifice as gain,
If thereby ye may the measure
Of your Master's stature gain?

Chorus:

By these tokens faith hath voicing,
Love hath exhibition clear:
These in heaven shall cause rejoicing,
And proclaim my Zion here.

Wist ye not when praying often
That my will on earth be done,
Grace must first your spirits soften
And in service make you one?
One in sweet self-abnegation,
One in fellowship of love;
Without marks of wealth or station,
Save those mirrored from above.

Chorus:

One with me, in which blest union
God and angels will combine;
Zion's light, by such communion
Will in glorious luster shine.

ADMONITION.

Given by the Spirit through Elder Joseph Luff. Tune: “I Will Sing of My Redeemer.”

Oh, my people, saith the Spirit,
Hear the word of God to-day;
Be not slothful, but obedient;
'Tis the world's momentous day!
Unto honor I have called you—
Honor great as angels know;
Heed ye, then, a Father's counsel,
And by deeds your purpose show.

Be ye not deceived! Remember,
I have sworn to execute
All my purpose—naught can hinder—
Vain what man may institute.
Take ye, then, my hand extended—
Let me lead you where I will;
Peace and safety, light and glory,
Crown the crest of Zion's hill.

I have spoken! Few have heeded!
 What remains for me to do?
 Warnings old wait vindication!
 Man must learn that God is true.
 The restraining gates my mercy
 Led me oft to interpose,
 Shall the devastating currents,
 Fraught with woe—no more oppose.

Time is ripe! my work must hasten!
 Whoso will may bide the hour.
 Naught can harm whom God protecteth—
 Elements confess his power.
 Up ye then, to the high places
 I have bid you occupy!
 Peril waits upon the heedless!
 Grace upon the souls who try.

Whoso lusteth after pleasure,
 High estate or mammon's store—
 Envious or proud remaineth—
 Though he gain the world, is poor.
 If you would be rich, be holy!
 Would you dwell all heights above?
 Heed ye, then this admonition:
 Climb to atmosphere of love.

Love ye me and love all people—
 Love as I have loved you;
 This your calling—this my purpose—
 Thus be my disciples true.
 Then in this exalted station
 Your companion I will be;
 Every promise of my Scriptures
 Will be verified in thee.

Get ye up, then, to your mountain!
 Zion of this closing day!
 For the glory of my coming
 Waits to break upon your way!
 Forth from thence your testimony
 Shall to trembling nations go,
 And the world confess that with you
 God has residence below.

SONG IN THE SPIRIT BY JOSEPH LUFF.

Given Sunday, June 25, 1911, to the tune: "Lead, Kindly Light."

Sweet unto me the voice of supplication
 From hearts sinceré.
 Sweet to my ear the humble adoration
 That greets me here.
 Be glad of heart; let not thy faith decline,
 I still am near and thou art ever mine.
 Walk in the light that on thy path now shineth—
 Church of my choice—
 And whatso'er to me thy heart inclineth,
 Heed as my voice.
 Talk not of night, nor give to sadness room—
 I am thy God; for e'er dismiss thy gloom.

Whoso in love my counsel shall obey,
 No fear need know;
 My hand shall guide their feet and guard their way
 'Gainst every foe.
 Yea, I will lead; thou shalt not plead in vain;
 My covenant with Zion shall remain.

Lift up thine eyes! thy skies are now aglow
 With rays divine!
 I am thy light! and o'er thy course below
 For e'er will shine.
 My Spirit shall thy daily portion be,
 And thou art safe if thou'lt abide in me.

SONG OF INTERROGATION.

At the afternoon social meeting in the basement of the church at Independence, Missouri, Sunday afternoon, October 25, 1908, the Saints had just finished singing the first verse of that familiar hymn, "Jesus, I my Cross Have Taken," to the tune: "My Redeemer," when Elder Joseph Luff arose and sang in the same tune, the following:

I have listened and recorded—
 Every word before me lies,
 Like the incense of mine altars
 Doth your testimonies rise;
 For mine eyes behold among you
 Some whose words and works agree;
 But not all who "Abba Father"
 Call me, sing in verity.

Have you really—have you truly
 All things left to follow me?
 Have you, without reservation,
 Consecrated all to me?
 Lingers there no old ambition—
 Love of place or power or gain?
 Seek ye now no longer pleasure
 'Mid the scenes impure or vain?

As you've lived, so now make answer;
 As you've labored sing to-day;
 Add no whit to fill the measure—
 Add no words for vain display.
 For the virtue of your service
 Must in righteousness be shown,
 And your songs are good or evil
 As your lives to me are known.

If in song ye would me worship,
 And my favor thus secure,
 Sing in truth and sing in Spirit—
 Thus be comely—thus be pure.
 For the lips that praise me vainly
 Yield no honor to my name;
 Lips and songs are holy only
 When with truth and love aflame.

Letter Department

IPSWICH, QUEENSLAND, AUSTRALIA, April 3, 1913.

Editor Herald: In HERALD under date of January 15 is an article signed Alice R. Corson, entitled, "Why I am what I am." In perusing the article I notice that the third paragraph, first column, begins, "The word grace means favor," etc. As this is a favorite doctrine of a sect known as Plymouth Brethren. Will some one of the priesthood kindly explain to me through columns of HERALD what is the literal rendition and correct meaning of Ephesians 2: 8, 9, Inspired Translation. Grace, we are told, means undeserved favor, and to me God's love is so great that I fail to see where we can find room for favor. An explanation of above will oblige.

Your brother in Christ,

F. EDGWORTH.

SOUTH EDMONTON, ALBERTA, CANADA, March 18, 1913.

Editor Herald: We as a band of God's Saints are still alive and striving to do the Master's will by upholding the banner of King Immanuel as best we can, and we feel that the victory will be ours if we follow in the straight and narrow path that our Master trod.

At present we feel quite lonesome without our aged and esteemed Brother J. C. Crabb, who is attending General Conference. I can assure him his presence and fatherly advice will be missed by many, as our esteemed and well beloved Brother J. L. Mortimer was, and who is still missed by many of us. We hold meetings in Odd Fellows Hall, corner Griesbaugh and Namayo Avenue, Edmonton proper.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. N. BALDWIN.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: We wish to express our sincerest thanks to all those who so kindly assisted us by applying the "Golden Rule" after our sad loss of our house and household goods and clothing by fire, and feel glad to know the Lord notes and rewards every act or deed done for good.

Sincerely,

MR. AND MRS. A. A. CHRESTENSEN.

KNOX, INDIANA, March 9, 1913.

Saints' Herald: I feel this beautiful Sunday afternoon like writing to the HERALD and letting your readers know how we are getting along at this place. We are trying to do our duty, as no doubt all the Saints are in every place. We are a little band struggling to keep the gospel work on the move. We think as the Bible says, that we should "seek first to build up the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and sometimes I study this saying and I don't believe we realize just what is meant; for how natural it is for us to say, "If I get this or that done, I will study my Sunday school and Religio lessons"; or "If I have time, I will do so and so for the church." I do not believe it is right to put off our church duties until everything else is done. I believe we ought to so plan our work that our church work will be a part of it, and that it should be attended to the same as anything else, and even come first, or according to the Bible we are not seeking to first build up God's kingdom.

I have often noticed that I have more strength for church work than for household duties. At times I will feel almost too tired to do anything at all; but knowing that some church work must be done, I go right ahead and do it and actually feel rested when it is done.

We ought to take God's word just as it is, and when it says to seek first to do a thing, that is what we should do or we are not doing as God wants us to, and we can not expect his blessings to as great a degree as we can if we do just as he says.

Two young men have recently been baptized here. One is now janitor and the other lives too far away to meet with us very often. We feel that we need more help here. That is, we need brethren to take the lead; and our prayer is, that before many days some will be raised up or sent here to help us. And as this is God's work, why won't the necessary help be raised up to carry on the work? We believe if we are faithful it will be so, for the promise was made to this branch that if the few who were trying to carry on the work would be faithful, many would be added to our number. Let us be faithful and prove God, as he has said we should.

We dreamed not long ago of going to Sunday school and on the north side of our church were about a dozen people of different ages looking in at the windows to see what was going on inside. Once in a while they would look at each other and smile, but were not making fun. After a while they all went into the building and sat down by themselves, as a class. I followed them in and saw besides them another new class of girls; so I, being the superintendent, began to look around for some one to teach the new classes; but there was not a soul to teach them, as all of our people had their own work to do, and each was in her place doing her work. So I decided that I would have to teach the new class of girls; but who would teach the other new class? I looked around to see what they were doing, and they were trying to teach each other, as they appeared to be in earnest and wanted to know what was in the lesson. When the school was dismissed I started toward the door and met one of our elders coming in, and I stopped him and said, "Now, didn't I tell you we needed help?"

Your readers no doubt read in the HERALD of February 26, of the work done here through the efforts of Elder S. W. L. Scott, and we shall endeavor to keep the good work going. In April sometime Elder Scott expects to return, and then under his management the Religio here expects to give a program, and the main feature will be the cantata of the ten virgins. Such programs, if given in the right spirit, sometimes accomplish more good than preaching services.

I have a sister in Denver, Colorado, who was sent there by the doctors for her health. I hope if the Denver Saints see this they will call on her, as she is very lonely at times. Her name and address are Mrs. Mae Vaillancour, 2300 Champa Street.

In the faith,

MISS B. E. LOHSE.

Editor Herald: We love to read the many letters from the various writers throughout the world, so thought perhaps your many readers might enjoy reading a few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard.

We can not report great progress, neither can we boast of great ingatherings. At the present time there is not much effort being made to advance the Lord's work, for we are few in number, and scattered so that there are not many that can attend the meetings. We have had no preaching or work in our branch for over a year, but we are trying to let our light shine the best we can in our weak way. However, we are glad that we have been permitted to enjoy many great and marvelous blessings from God.

There comes to mind one special and marvelous manifestation of God's power: There was one of the sisters of the branch that had been sorely afflicted and had lost her voice. She called for the elders, and we held a special prayer meeting. While there the Spirit came to the meeting in great and marvelous power, and during the administration we heard the voice of angels also pleading in behalf of the sister. This was marvelous, and oh, such influence as was there! Even the children marveled at what they saw and heard, for as soon as the elder withdrew his hands, she arose, spoke, and praised God. This, with many other blessings, has given us courage to fight the fight of faith. But we find, as I suppose all other Saints find, that our path is not all flowery beds of ease, for God has said he would have a tried people.

On the 3d of December, 1911, I was walking across the floor of my home and I suddenly became very dizzy and fell. The next day I lost my hearing and have been entirely deaf ever since, and for about ten days I was dizzy and confined to my bed and could not walk. I was in the best of health so far as I know.

I have consulted several specialists and none of them seem to know just what caused it or what to do for me. I am hopeful that the Great Physician will see fit to restore my hearing again, for I find it a great loss. This has hindered our work considerable, for I was presiding officer of the branch, and it has left us without anyone to hold the banner aloft.

The adversary of all righteousness has tried hard to overthrow us in our faith, but I can thank God that I am stronger than I ever was, and can look back and see where my sad loss and trial has brought many lessons that I could not have learned any other way. I was very active in the Lord's work, and never felt better than when engaged in the work.

Several of the Saints and friends have invited me to write for the church publications, but I never have had any experience along this line. My education is limited, and feeling that the church has more able writers, I have hesitated. If I can do any good writing I certainly am willing to do what I can, as I love the work. It has been a severe trial to be taken out of the work so suddenly.

I believe the priesthood (while they are teaching the Saints faith) should teach patience very strongly, for we may have faith to be healed, but if we have not the patience we will deprive ourselves of the blessing sought for.

God has said, as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 119: 9: "Be clean, be frugal, cease to complain of pain and sickness and distress of body." This statement calls for patience, and I believe it should be taught among the Saints. We are hopeful that the near future may hold the blessing of my hearing, so I can again take my place in the Lord's work, and spend my life, talent, and strength in God's service.

Our prayer is for the upbuilding of God's church and kingdom, and the final triumph of Zion.

F. A. WINDERS.

CLEBURNE, TEXAS.

Dear Herald: About two years ago I sent a notice to the HERALD for the Saints to send me some of their old HERALDS, Ensigns, and Autumn Leaves, and I would give them out to the people to read. I received 1,370 HERALDS, 442 Ensigns, and 285 Autumn Leaves, all of which I gave out, with the exception of a few that I saved for myself and the other Saints that are living in Mobile.

I thank all that sent me papers. I truly hope that seed was sown that will bear fruit for good.

Now, as some are still sending papers, and as I am not in Alabama at all, I would request that they send no more, as it takes a considerable amount of postage to bring them on to me.

Pray for me that I may do good at all times and at all places.

ALBERT VANCELAWE.

Extracts from Letters.

Sister Sadie Long, Loveland, Iowa: "I wish to acknowledge the good I have received from the HERALD as it comes each week, a silent messenger in my home. It is a great comfort to me. Brother H. N. Pierce, of Bartlett, Iowa, has just closed a series of meetings at this place, with the result that six precious souls were led into the waters and buried with Christ in baptism, and others are ready for the kingdom. Brother Pierce is a mighty man of God, and doing a wonderful work, as he is filled with the Spirit and power of God, and interested in putting the work before the people in so plain a manner that a little child might understand."

Sister Ethel Gideons, Robertsedale, Alabama: "We haven't had any elders to visit us in quite awhile, but we still live in hope that they will be around soon. My sister and I have been baptized not quite a year, and have never regretted the step. I enjoy reading your HERALD as it helps me to think more about this great latter day work. I ask all who read this to remember me in their prayers."

Sister Sadie Burch, Ute, Iowa: "I do love to read your dear pages, and I get much comfort reading the letters and articles from others, and pondering over the ideas of each of you as regards the near approach of our Savior."

Sister Della Hogue Watson, Avant, Oklahoma: "I ask the prayers of all the dear, faithful Saints that if it be the dear Master's will I might be healed."

Sister A. M. Lambert, Erie, Pennsylvania: "The HERALD is a great pleasure to us. We love to read the dear letters. We have met but one Saint in our city. If any elder ever comes to our city, he will find our home welcome to him."

Sister Emeline J. Davidson, Milford, Utah: "I live nine miles from Milford and have been a shut-in since last December with throat trouble. Brethren Stubbart and Christensen gave us a short call last week, which was very much appreciated. I also appreciate the HERALD and Ensign, as through them I hear from friends and branches of long ago."

Sister Ira Mullin, Exline, Iowa: "I am glad to receive the HERALD from week to week and to read its contents, so full of love and words of cheer to its many readers. I feel proud to know that I have been privileged to know and accept this glorious gospel and feel the best when I can hear the gospel preached by God's chosen servants. I have tried to help open the way for others to hear the message. Brethren Wells, Morgan, Salyards, and Slye have all preached in the communities where I have lived. Also must mention Brethren Boden and Taylor of our local force at Centerville, so the people have had a chance to hear the good work and none have accepted it yet but I think a favorable impression was left with the most of the people."

Sister Viola Mizell, Escatawpa, Mississippi: "It has been only a few short years since I came into this glorious latter day work, and I find it very interesting work indeed. It has been only six months since my dear father passed away, and ever since it has been my earnest desire to take a deeper interest than I had been taking. We live in a very lonely place, and the branch of the church here has almost gone down. On the 6th of this coming July I will be thirteen years old."

Brother R. N. Burwell, Blue Island, Illinois: "We are still alive. We are holding a series of meetings, Brother David Dowker, our Chicago missionary, being the speaker. So far, just a few outsiders have attended, but we feel that we are giving the people an opportunity to hear the gospel if they will but come. There are no Saints in this place that I know of. If any one knows of any living here let us know and we will hunt them up. Should any Saints know of members of the church living in West Pullman, Pullman, or Rosland, please give me their addresses and we will hunt them up."

Sister Nettie Clarissa Shepherdson, New Liskeard, Ontario: "I for one feel that we are one of the weakest branches of God's church. Satan has been striving daily for the last three months to throw us all off the narrow path; which God has placed for his children to walk in. But I am thankful to say, however, that a few of us are still trying to keep the camp fire burning. We are going to try this summer to build a church. We have paid seventy-five dollars. My father is drawing the plan for the church. I would like if we could arrange to have a two-day meeting, for the opening and dedication of the church. The sisters of this branch have started a prayer union, and I feel and know that there is much good can be done through it. We hold it from house to house every Thursday afternoon at three o'clock. We have had a portion of God's Spirit felt in each of our meetings."

Sister A. B. Hawley, Houghton Lake, Michigan: "There are but two of us here that claim the name of Saint or Josephite: myself and Brother Charles Brooks. We are of the scattered ones from the Britman Branch, and we would like to hear some one preach, but as Brother C. Brooks is a widower and has no home for himself and I would not know when my husband could be at home so we could say come to our house and stay, we can not write to any of the elders to come and preach, but if any of them have the courage to come and risk finding lodging I know there can be good done here."

News from Missions

Utah.

Two and one half years have been devoted to the consideration of this peculiar environment, and to the particular problem we have to solve. While in contact with our own membership here and with that of the dominant church somewhat, the opportunity for study at first hand has been appreciated and improved to some extent. I have formed my conclusions as to some things. A recent experience has had something to do with one conclusion. Not long ago a Mormon cottage meeting was held at the house of one of our members, Brother A. G. Mathis, who, being asked this privilege, very properly granted it. Other meetings had been held in the neighborhood by the same elders. I attended this one, and behaved myself very well I think, while the Reorganization was under fire by Elder O. K. Hansen, one of the Brighamite elders, who caused our Heman C. Smith to turn pale at Lamoni, or so reported. At the close of his sermon, I announced to reply to it, and invited all present to attend. The date agreed upon was the 11th. The attendance was about fifty, double the number of the first meeting.

Elder Hansen had stated in his meeting that at our conference of 1899, Elder W. H. Kelley received a revelation directing or commanding the appointment of a committee from the Reorganized and the Hedrickite churches to confer with the presidency of the Mormon Church with reference to the building of the temple at Independence, for the time had come. Elder Hansen said that the committee was appointed, came to Utah and conferred with the presidency and the twelve in the temple. But President Joseph F. Smith's decision was, that the mission of the committee could not be entertained; that when the time comes for the building of the temple, "we think we will know it." Said committee returned and reported to the Lamoni conference of 1900, at which Elder Hansen was present. He had traveled extensively over historic trails, fields, and places of the early days; had been among the Strangites, Hedrickites and Josephites; had been entertained by President Joseph Smith, etc. Thus his opportunities had been good for informing himself according to his desires.

Well, while not denying Elder Hansen's statements in regard to said revelation, committee, etc., in toto, I challenged them, giving my understanding and recollections in reference to a committee appointed by the Reorganized Church to confer with the Church of Christ exclusively, but not in regard to building the temple. I wrote immediately to Brother W. H. Kelley, who replied that there was no truth whatever in Elder Hansen's statement concerning said revelation or committee. I broke this gently as a prelude to my meeting. Elder Hansen had consulted his notes meantime, or refreshed his memory, and found that it was Alexander H. Smith who received the revelation, but he knew the committee was appointed as he stated, and reported at the conference of 1900, for he was present and heard with his own ears, so he did not relish being called a liar, which however he was not.

mon Historian's office and found the report of a committee appointed to confer with the Hedrickite brethren as I had stated, but no report of the other matters, as Elder Hansen testified. If the editors of the HERALD will kindly publish Patriarch Alexander H. Smith's revelation to the Church of Christ, it will be a sufficient answer to Elder Hansen's revised misstatement or mistake.

Elder Hansen covered considerable ground in his talk on the differences from his standpoint and methods of reasoning. I will not attempt to report his subject matter or my own, but will criticize myself for trying to get over so much territory, and give the conclusion that this meeting was in part responsible for, as aforesaid. It is one thing, however, to have a theory or faith, and another to put it in practice; one thing to take a text and another to stick to it. My argument or talk on the differences was satisfactory to myself, at least in part, if Elder Hansen was disappointed. If disappointed with Heman C., why shouldn't he be with my lesser oratorical and debating powers? My conclusion is this, that it is better generalship in meeting our Brighamite opponents (and I am willing they should know my plan of warfare) to assault and batter down their defenses as we go, not leave an Adrianople in our rear, a strong and key point, to attack others of minor importance, or to attack too many points feebly.

I will try to make myself understood, for any advantage that might accrue to any who are or may be engaged in the warfare. I received this latter day gospel as the "old gospel restored and sustained by the ancient order of things," according to the desire of Alexander Campbell and others who saw such a need. It was no new gospel then that Latter Day Saints received through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith. The Book of Mormon contained the fullness of the gospel as delivered to the ancient inhabitants of America. It is the new covenant, being directly revealed to us and translated for us. The revelations given in connection with it, as well as its own witness, certify that it was to "bring to light the only true points of my [Christ's] doctrine, and the only doctrine which is in me; and this I do that I may establish my gospel, that there may not be so much contention."—Doctrine and Covenants 3: 15; Utah Edition 10:62. But Brigham Young and his successors have virtually, or in reality repudiated this book as a standard. Hear Orson F. Whitney, General Conference, Salt Lake City, October 7, 1910: "We are not governed by the gospel to the Nephites." He is one of the prophets, seers and revelators, sustained as such at every general conference at Salt Lake City. Much of a like character has been said by his associates or predecessors as far back as Brigham Young, or much stronger, touching all three books, in regard to which the original revelation was: "The elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and Book of Mormon, in which is the fullness of the gospel, and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings as they shall be directed by the Spirit."

The elders have access to the various sayings of the modern seers, repudiating the standards in terms. How then shall the contentions be laid down, the differences settled? We must decide in our discussions upon the differences, what the standard of appeal or argument shall be; if upon the gospel as restored through Joseph Smith and contained in the three books, one of which when published was to be the Inspired Translation. If there is a refusal to accept as a basis for enmity or as a means of reaching a unity, the originally accepted standards of all Latter Day Saints, the war is endless; the controversy can never be settled, and who wants war or contention for its own sake? The battle for the original standards should be fought until it is won or lost; until our opponents are forced to deny them, or accept them.

The United States, according to the latest news, has received an ultimatum from foreign powers, bearing on the Mexican situation, viz: "That the Monroe Doctrine must be either maintained or repudiated." Even so our ultimatum to the Brighamites should be: "The original standards must be accepted or denied." The Book of Abraham, or Pearl of Great Price, does not come into the question of the original standards, or the gospel as restored through Joseph Smith. But why not, as enjoined upon the church in the first revelations, accept the Seer's translation of the Bible? If Joseph Smith delivered the gospel to the church, then as the records show, another gospel has been substituted. Utah Doctrine and Covenants 132 must necessarily displace as it did, the section on marriage (in all the old editions number 109; in ours, 111), and be in conflict with sections 42 and 49. The Brighamites do not like the "old dope" of polygamy, Adam God, and blood atonement in the new standards upon which the church here is organized. They would rather not give up this holy city of Adrianople. They want us to leave it in the rear and background and go on with endless contention. To return to the old standards or agree upon these as a basis of enmity and peace, is to concede or give up their whole empire, their organization. They must, to be logical and true to Joseph Smith and his revelation, accept his standards, or the standards of the church in his day. Fight the battle to a finish on this line I say. Make them either own or disown Joseph Smith and the original standards which were to be the law to govern the church. If they accept them, they concede all. If they refuse them, they have begged the whole question of "Mormonism." No use of endless and unlimited controversy. This is in brief or in outline as I see it.

There are some good indications and developments here of which I will not write at length. There are a number of Armenian Mormons who are spoiled for Brighamites at least. They are studying and praying over the Reorganized Church, but have been so disappointed and hoaxed in the Utah Zion and people, that it is hard to displace distrust, with confidence in anyone or anything. I am by no means discouraged in the great conflict for right. I will resist the encroachments of Satan as I discern them at any and every point where I am called to occupy and give battle. No compromise with evil or wrong principle need be made. Be good to men, but resist the Devil inside or outside the church, and see that he does not get us through any of his allurements or devices. It is a great work to rescue any individual from the power and devices of the Evil One. "Charity suffereth long and is kind," and I would remark is patient and persistent, because of a persistent foe. Those who have the watchcare of souls in the church, as well as outside, need to take it to heart. Never give anyone up to Satan unless Satan has absolutely captured and obtained entire dominion over that one. This is God's policy as I understand it, and it means work, spiritual work, not only for the elders, but the priests and teachers of the church, and the words are applicable, "Wherefore, labor ye, labor ye in my vineyard for the last time."—Doctrine and Covenants 43:7. It is an exacting work, but it gives not only joy in heaven over the sinner that repents, but great compensation on earth to the faithful, patient laborer.

We have had another cottage meeting since those referred to above. Brother J. C. Christensen was present at the last one, and still the Mormon sisters are not satisfied. One wants it finished at her home. The priesthood were mostly at the weekly priesthood meeting. While we are hoping to furnish work in Utah shortly, I hope we will not get into it so much that we can not let go. It is as hard sometimes to say, I'll stay where you want me to stay, as "I'll go where you want me to go." In my dreams I had a hint not to run away, which was not lost on me, and I have also remembered my fault in not staying the time out at Atchison and Topeka, for which I now ask forgiveness. Patience did not have its perfect work with me there. Perhaps I have made it up here, and am ready to graduate. With good will to all.

Your brother,

M. F. GOWELL.

PROVO, UTAH, 210 West Fourth South Street.

Arizona.

While our little church here held their accustomed services, only ten miles away the closing scenes of the six-day battle was being enacted at Naco, resulting in the escape of the remnant of Ojeda's little band to the protection of our troops, to whom they surrendered. They were leaving all the forenoon in trenches under a withering fire directed on all who exposed themselves, General Ojed being near the last to make his escape. The death toll reaches into the hundreds, but is not fully known. This leaves the posts of entry into Sonora all in the hands of state troops.

Some of the Saints are preparing to move upon claims located this spring, which will deplete the church force here in Bisbee materially, but they expect to continue the usual services. Sunday school, Religio, and two preaching services from 2 to 10 p. m., Sunday, and prayer meetings Wednesday nights. We try to keep an interest at a new opening we have made eighteen miles distant, but were prevailed upon to cancel it yesterday to occupy here.

Some are near the water but procrastination is so convenient.

In bonds,

Australia.

I again pen you a few lines after a long silence, and though it is somewhat late, I wish you a very happy and prosperous New Year. Your pages have wonderfully enlightened my mind, and also conveyed to me some deep truths and useful knowledge, and you have become a dear and welcome visitor to my home.

I am the only Saint in this city, with the nearest Saints some twenty-eight miles distant. Through your pages I have realized that when we are bound to our dear Father in heaven, and to each other by the hand of charity, we can be with one another in Spirit, no matter though great seas divide. Since you have been a constant visitor here, Zion has become dearer to my heart day by day, and I am earnestly trying, by our heavenly Father's help, to keep the celestial law here, so I shall be able to abide the laws of Zion should I be permitted to gather there. I thank my heavenly Father for all his blessings to me and mine through the year that has gone, and I can fully trust him for all that is to come.

Sunday, March 2, I visited and worshiped with Saints in South Brisbane. It was sacrament meeting in the afternoon, and a real blessed time it was to me, proving a real spiritual feast, with a good portion of the Spirit of the Lord present. One thing made me feel sad. Quite a number of the Saints declined to testify and I wondered why, as I thought surely the least we could say to our dear Father in heaven was, Thanks for all thy mercies.

We experienced some very hot and trying weather a few days ago, yet our dear Father brought us safely through it all. How wonderful is the Father's love, and how great the ingratitude and unthankfulness of some of his people. I pray that we may be imbued more and more with the spirit of thankfulness and praise to him who is the giver of all good, and that all through the changing scenes of this year we may cling to him and live day by day in the enjoyment of his blessings. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, and hoping to some day gather there,

Your brother in Christ,
IPSWICH, QUEENSLAND. F. EDGEWORTH.

Maine.

When last I wrote you I was at Washburn, Maine, where we have a church building, but the Saints who once lived there are gone, with the exception of four in Washburn, and one sister a short distance from town. There are also a few others in the surrounding towns. I believe there about ten Saints in Aroostook County. I found a pleasant home at Sister Elizabeth Foot's, who is a real mother in Israel.

After a week of meetings in Washburn, I went to the "Robert Foot Schoolhouse," preaching there during the week and at Washburn on Sundays. Then I went to the "Dun Town Schoolhouse," where Brother Calvin Rich and others had preached some years before. The interest in these places was fairly good, and I found that Brother Calvin Rich was held in high esteem by the people. Brother "Dolph" Brewer was a good assistant to the writer in many ways.

On November 20 Brother Brewer met with a sad accident while working in a sawmill, losing two of his fingers and splitting a third. After the hand was dressed, and while in severe pain, Brother Brewer received a blessing<sup>r</sup> through prayer by the writer, the pain stopped instantly and never pained him at all again.

I continued preaching in Washburn, Dun Town, Param, and Dead Water. Sister Foot, who held a mortgage on the church building in Washburn, decided to turn over the amount owed her to the general church, and have the local church free of debt. This was done and all we need now is good people to fill the church.

There is much prejudice existing there, but a persistent effort will bring good results. I spent a few days at Christmas time at home. Preached for the Attleboro Saints on December 29.

January 5 found me in Brockton where an enjoyable day was had. Next day I went to Wareham and held service in the home of Sister Sears. The Saints are all so kind to me that I would have to mention all of them if I mentioned any in this connection. I preached one sermon at Tremont at the residence of Mr. Gault, who has kindly opened his house for services.

January 12 was "District Presidency Day," so assisted in Providence, where the exercises were held.

January 17 found me in Portland and at home with Brother Thomas Summerfield. We tried to get the few Saints together that are here in the city of Portland and held a few interesting services.

Monday (27th) found me at Brunswick, at the home of Brother and Sister Young. Left Brunswick Friday for Stonington, where I was requested to join Brother Francis Ebeling. Arriving in Rockland I took passage on the little Vinal Haven for Deer Isle. The wind blew, oh, how it blew, but what of that! Brother U. W. Greene was safe on land somewhere and I was glad he was. It was grand. The little steamer tried to bring her nose in the sea and then like a New Foundland dog shake her head free from the spray while she took another leap across the crest of a green monster. It was not a long voyage, but a little exciting while it lasted.

I found a home with Brother Henry Eaton and assisted Brother Ebeling in the services he was holding. Good interest was manifested on the part of the Saints and friends, so we continued the services. Brother Ebeling led three souls into the water, and according to previous arrangement left for his home while the writer remained.

On February 17, Brother Joseph Eaton kindly took the writer in his wagon to Little Deer Isle, where he found a home with Brother John Billings, an old gospel warrior, firm in the faith, and still active at the ripe age of seventy-three. He is a branch president and active Sunday school worker. It was good to be with him. Services held at Little Deer Isle were interesting.

On Sunday, February 23, crossed the "Reach" in company with "Uncle John" and found a welcome at Brother and Sister Robins' and a home at Sister Black's. I remained there at Sargentville for a week, holding services every night. The men were working hard on the ice, so the services were not so well attended as they would have been otherwise. However, there is a good interest and some are near the door.

March 1 I landed at the head of Deer Isle in a rainstorm and found a home at Brother Lafayette Thompson's. Next day we all went to Little Deer Isle and had a nice meeting. Monday a ride of twelve miles brought me to Stonington, where the Saints were holding a public dinner, the proceeds of which were later given to the writer by vote. I continued holding services at Stonington until the 17th, when in company with Brother Moody Eaton and Lewis Eaton I left for Rockland where we found a home at Brother Hardy's. We held two services there and left for Portland. Arrived here yesterday and led one into the cold water of the old ocean, Sister Mattie Woods, who will be a good worker for the Master.

Yours as ever,
THORNTON, RHODE ISLAND. GEO. W. ROBLEY.

News from Branches

Bennington Heights Branch.

It has been some time since I have contributed anything to your valuable columns, and I hope you will not think me presumptuous in doing so now.

My wife and I were baptized by Elders J. F. Curtis and J. D. Curtis about five years ago in Pueblo, Colorado, and since that time the dear old HERALD has always occupied a conspicuous place in our home, and I assure you it has been read with pleasure.

Our branch is located in the eastern part of Kansas City, on Thirteenth and Bennington, just two blocks from the car line.

Under the direction of Brother C. A. Selbe, our branch president, ably assisted by quite a number of the local priesthood, our branch is on the upward move.

The Saints of this branch have started a cooperative bakery and confectionery, and I think it is going to prove a success.

Sister Wilburton, formerly of Colorado Springs, Colorado, has moved into our vicinity.

Last Sunday many of the Saints here were fasting and in prayer for the conference at Lamoni, Iowa.

May God's Spirit comfort all the Saints, and truth in its fullest be established among the children of men in the prayer of your brother in gospel bonds,

Chicago, Illinois.

FIRST BRANCH.

Our Sabbath services to-day were held under exceptionally fine weather conditions. The air was clear and dry, and the sun shone beautifully, animating all nature—both plant and animal life. This, together with many other advantages we now possess, would have made us abundantly happy, but our hearts are carrying a heavy load, due to the fact that Elder David Dowker and his devoted wife have just lost their youngest child, after a severe illness of long duration. But this is not all—one of our cradle roll members, Alma Sly, the son of Brother and Sister Frank Sly, has also received a call from the "great beyond."

We deeply mourn the loss of these little ones, and sympathize with our dear friends and coworkers; and may the hand of our great God of Israel overshadow and comfort them.

Should you ask, "How are you all getting along in the work?" we would answer, "Quite well."

The branch officers are engaged in their service with unabated vigor and earnestness, and the auxiliary societies are doing good work.

The Hope of Israel Sunday School is aiming to reach a high point of efficiency, and bids fair to succeed.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

The corner stone of the Second Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Church (better known as the Beacon Light Chapel) was laid on April 6, 1913. A large concourse of Saints and friends witnessed the ceremony. Bishop John Zimmermann, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in charge of the services. Addresses were made by Elders Benjamin R. McGuire, of Brooklyn, New York, and Walter W. Smith, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Elders Daniel T. Shaw, A. D. Angus, and E. B. Hull assisted in the service. It is expected that the basement will be ready for occupancy about the first of June; in the meantime services will continue at the mission building, 1824 East Cambria Street.

Cleveland, Ohio.

This city has not suffered much on account of the Ohio floods. Some of our visiting Saints told of damage done to church property, but we have not yet heard of any Saints being injured personally.

We had a good gathering here last Sunday, the 6th, to celebrate our day of freedom and liberty, the birthday of the church.

We still have only one place of meeting in this large city. We have plenty of priesthood, but not sufficient council and cooperative action as to warning our neighbors: but as that is no excuse for individual effort, we will mention what has been done in that line. Recently our president divided the city into sections, making each of the priesthood a kind of lookout committee for his neighborhood. We do not know what the others have done, but will make a report of our own efforts. We are correspondent for the branch by election. We have a store in the east end; we have used one corner of the store window for notices of meetings; we have put marked copies of the HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, and many other of the church publications on view, including Evans's Sermons Old Jerusalem Gospel, etc.; we have had writings and illustrations of our own. This has given us lots of opportunity to make our neighbors and customers acquainted with our belief. We have made our position known amongst the local preachers, one of which read Old Jerusalem Gospel; we have loaned out copies of Book of Mormon; have given away tracts; took one preacher out to see and hear Brother Etzenhouser's illustrated lecture on Book of Mormon; saw the local editor and had him insert an article showing our position in the world, which was a good deal of free advertising and attracted extra attention to our window display. We have agreed to let anyone who thinks they know of anything better than we have, to present their side of the question in our window. We have not received any opposition worth mentioning, the sustaining power of the truth has been with us in our efforts for good.

We had Brother C. Ed Miller with us at the church Sunday evening with his lantern and lecture on 'The American Indian. A good sized crowd out, who enjoyed his lecture, illustrated to advantage by a brilliant electric lantern and lots of views.

We are entertaining plans to improve the front of our church building.

Promptly at 9.15 a. m. the Sunday session opened in charge of the district officers, opening prayer by local superintendent, O. L. Martin. ### The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Seattle and British Columbia District;
Greeting: We are entering into another conference year. It is due to us that we take a view of the year that has just passed, with this thought, that it has not gone not to appear again, but, that it is on file to be called for at the appointed time, when the books are to be opened and each one is to be judged by that which is written in the books.

There has been committed unto us the custody of the plan of redemption, and strange though true, our responsibilities begin when we learn what our duties are. What are they? may be asked with all propriety. Can we recall with what feelings of joy we entered into covenant relationship with our heavenly Father through the ordinance of baptism, and is it not a fact we wanted everyone to know and taste of the joy we experienced by obedience to the word of God? There was nothing that seemed too hard for us to do that we might please him. It was then we received that Spirit that filled us with the ambition to do something for the Master.

It is a high and holy calling to be associated with God in the redemption of our fellows. How wonderfully it has been arranged that we may share the joys if we are willing to share the responsibilities and the sacrifices. Some are called upon to leave home and loved ones for years of service, with only an occasional parole. Is it a sacrifice? Try it. What was the first sacrifice? Earthly attainments. What was the prospect now for this world's goods? Others are called upon to make the sacrifice in another way, but it is much pleasanter, to the writer's mind, to remain at home and pay to the Lord that which the law provides.

"And, again, thus saith the Lord unto you, Oh ye elders of my church, who have given your names that you may know his will concerning you; behold, I say unto you, that it is the duty of the church to assist in supporting the families of those who are called and must needs be sent unto the world to proclaim the gospel unto the world; wherefore, I, the Lord, give unto you this commandment that ye obtain places for your families, inasmuch as your brethren are willing to open their hearts."—Doctrine and Covenants 75: 4.

The following is as emphatic as the command to be baptized: "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man,) and verily it is a day of sacrifice and a day of the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming); for after to-day cometh the burning; for verily I say, To-morrow all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and I will burn them up; for I am the Lord of hosts; and I will not spare any that remain in Babylon. Wherefore, if ye believe me, ye will labor while it is called to-day."—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

"Behold, it is not meet that I should command in all things, for he that is compelled in all things, the same is a slothful and not a wise servant: wherefore he receiveth no reward. Verily I say, Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their free will, and bring about much righteousness, for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in no wise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned."—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.

I appeal to you. Send your tithes and offerings every month, whether it be much or little. Let us be as prompt with our heavenly Father as we are with our earthly obligations. You will be duly receipted if it is only fifty cents. Remember the address. WM. JOHNSON.

Requests for Prayer.

Sister Velma Addlph, of the Michigan Fremont Branch, requests the prayers of the Saints in her behalf, that God may have mercy on her in her affliction, and shield her from the powers of disease. She looks to God for strength and resigns herself to the will of God.

Died.

BERG.—Bertha Berg was baptized at or near Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, about eight or nine years ago, by George Day on the 12th or 13th of April; died [date not given] at Lake City, Iowa.

THARP.—At Flora Vista, New Mexico, March 12, 1913, Sister Annie Tharp, wife of Edward Tharp, and the youngest daughter of Sister Estella Gribble Tharp. Sister Annie was nineteen years old the day she was buried. She was a member of the church, being baptized by Brother Farley about five years ago. She leaves a dear little baby girl two days old, husband, father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, one sister, and two brothers and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss. Funeral by Reverend Bunday, of Aztec, New Mexico. Interment in Aztec Cemetery.

LINQUEST.—Bernice Izetta, infant daughter of Brother and Sister Linquest, died January 7, 1913, after a brief illness. She was 14 months old at death, lacking 6 days. She was the only child and was unusually bright for her age. Funeral services were held in the home and the address was made by Elder F. M. Cooper, of Plano, Illinois. The gospel hope of immortality is the only parental solace to these grief stricken young people.

GLAUNER.—Sarah E. Glauner died April 8, 1913, at Hagerman, Idaho, aged 67 years, 11 months, 16 days. Baptized by J. D. Stead February 27, 1906, at Soda Springs, Idaho. She leaves 5 children and 29 grandchildren to mourn their loss, Brother Glauner preceding her to the great beyond. Sermon by New Madden. A host of friends attended the services, showing the high esteem in which she was held. It is an enjoyment to hold up such a character as a type of true motherhood and Christian devotion. We are assured that her reward is sure.

Summer Board in Colorado Very Moderate Charges

"I'd like to go to Colorado," said a man the other day, "but it costs so much to live there that I'm afraid I—"
"Forget it," said his friend, who had spent a month last summer seeing the show-places of the Wonder State. "I had the same idea myself last year until I got that folder the Burlington gets up-telling the hotel rates. And I was mightily surprised to find that, besides the hotels, which are as elaborate as you please, there are hundreds of good, cleanly, wholesome ranch houses in Colorado, where the rates are as low as $3.00 a week, and they give you mighty good fare."
That folder is published by the Burlington Railroad to show folks how they can enjoy a vacation in Colorado at a very reasonable expense. And I'd like to mail you a copy of it—free. It tells all about the country, gives a complete list of hotels and boarding houses, addresses, rates, conveniences, elevation and nearby attractions.

THE LINE OF ATTACK AND OF DEFENSE.

In our great controversy with the world, relative to the "latter day work," there is a pretty well-defined line of attack, and an equally well-defined line of defense. The line of attack is an old one, and is quite clearly set forth in the following scripture, which needs the change of only a single word to fit more modern conditions:

Then said they, Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah. . . . Come, and let us smite him with the tongue, and let us not give heed to any of his words.—Jeremiah 18: 18.

THE GREAT "ANTI-JEREMIAH LEAGUE."

Latter Day Saints will understand why we quote this language. They can see the application. Experience has made them wise. They have frequently suffered from conduct and a policy similar to that set forth in this scriptural reading.

There was Jeremiah, representing the will and word of God. And there were the representatives of the old order, particularly the priests and ministers, the "clergy" of those days, the "orthodox ones," the "ministerial alliance," of Jeremiah's times.

They could not meet Jeremiah in argument. He had the truth, and the Scriptures were back of him. They were not willing to accept that truth, for had they not position at stake? Were they not priests? Were they not wise? So they said, "The law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wise."

And in their extremity they formed this conclusion: "Let us devise devices against Jeremiah. . . . Come, let us smite him with the tongue, and let us not give heed to any of his words."

A DEAD WITNESS IN COURT.

We always think of this passage of scripture when we attend one of the usual popular lectures on "Mormonism," such as are always recurring at irregular intervals in almost every community. The usual stock in trade consists of a tirade against the character of Joseph Smith, his ancestors, and his followers. The most absurd and false stories are told. We hear how Joseph Smith dug for money, stole sheep, drank whisky, had forty wives, etc. Usually we hear the old Solomon Spalding Romance story, to the effect that Joseph Smith manufactured the Book of Mormon out of an old romance written by one Solomon Spalding. It does not matter that the Spalding Romance has come to light and is now in the library of Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, and that a comparison shows that it could never have served as a basis for the Book of Mormon. Despite all this the old fossil is resurrected from time to time. And we are reminded of the anecdote of the witness who failed to appear in court. The judge said, Does anyone know of any good reason why John Jones should not appear in court?"

After the query had been repeated, an old man in the rear of the room arose and said, "Your honor, I know of two good reasons why John Jones can not appear in court to-day. First, he died yesterday; second, he is still dead."

This old Spalding Romance story died several years ago, it is still dead, and should not be dragged into court.

DO NOT LISTEN, DO NOT READ, DO NOT THINK.

Inevitably when listening to this method of attack, this text comes to mind: "Come, and let us smite him with the tongue." And the man who is doing the smiting is like those of old. He does not intend to give any chance for a fair rebuttal. The right to correct false statements is almost invariably denied. If there are exceptions, they but prove the rule. For inseparably joined to this policy is that other: "And let us not give heed to any of his words."

That was what a learned, dignified, and pompous clergyman said some years ago, when we had listened to his attacks on Joseph Smith, and at the close had been refused the right to reply. He said, "Do not talk with these men. If they come to your house do not listen to anything they may have to say. And do not read anything they may give you." How nicely he carried out the old policy of the Anti-Jeremiah League.

That is the policy of many so-called pastors. After filling the minds of the people with prejudice, as a result of their activity in smiting with the tongue, they say, "Don't go to hear these people. Don't talk with them. Don't read their literature."

Now we admit that such a policy when carried out offers quite effectual resistance. It is the safest policy that our opponents can adopt. Opposition we can overcome, when given the opportunity; but when people will not hear and will not read, it is difficult to set ourselves right before them.

COWARD'S TACTICS.

Such methods are effectual, we say; but they are coward's tactics. When a pastor gives his people such advice, he virtually says, "Do not read, do not listen, do not think. You have not brains enough to know the truth when you hear it. Your only safe course is to shut your ears to everyone but me, and let me do your thinking for you." Either such is the case, or else he knows that the message which he has given to them will not bear comparison with the message that we have, and so takes this way to prevent a comparison.

That was the policy of the Catholic priests in the dark ages of the past. They said that the laity could not think for themselves; that the priests must read the Bible and do the thinking, and the members must accept their decisions. But Luther and others of the great reformers protested against this policy, and declared that men and women had a right to listen and read and think and weigh the message of any man. It ill becomes Protestants to-day to revert to the methods of the Catholic priesthood of a darker age.

SLANDER PREPARES THE WAY FOR MURDER.

Practically every one of the old prophets had an experience similar to that which came to Jeremiah. Jesus challenged the Jews to name one of the prophets that their fathers had not killed. But the tongue of slander always did its work before more violent attacks were made. Thus was created a public sentiment that would permit murder to be done in the name of religion. History repeats itself.

In a lesser degree the reformers suffered in like manner. These who could not meet Wesley, Luther, Fox, Rodger Williams, and other such men, because of the degree of truth that they had, and who were not willing to accept that truth, said, "Come now, let us get up a device against these men. Let us smite them with the tongue." And it was so. Just as evil stories were told against John Wesley by his old neighbors as ever were told against Joseph Smith. The Methodists were mobbed, the Quakers were hanged, as a result of just such a work of slander.

Then came Joseph Smith. Like Jeremiah, he had the word and will of God to teach to the people. But many of them, especially the clergy, the priests of the existing order, were not willing to accept that truth, and they could not meet it, so they said, "Come, and let us devise devices against Joseph Smith. Come, and let us smite him with the tongue, and let us not give heed to any of his words."

They were quite successful in carrying out their "devices." Men of the type of Doctor Hurlbut, disgruntled adulterers who had been expelled from the church because of their iniquities, were ready and anxious to take revenge and help to accumulate and exaggerate evil stores born of religious intolerance, and perpetuate them in book form in those early exposes. And these in turn furnished a basis and material for later works of the kind, and found their way into encyclopedias, and are still at hand to help the man who is doing the smiting with his tongue,—for it is an old adage, that "a lie will travel around the earth while the truth is getting its boots on."

And in this way the same old public sentiment was created, so that when Joseph Smith was cruelly murdered while under the "protection" of the governor of Illinois, many were well pleased, and few indeed had the courage to resent such an outrage on the modern spirit of liberty and justice. His murderers were never brought to justice. Their trial was a farce. And that is evidence of the thorough work that the tongue of slander can do in assassinating a man's reputation and preparing the way for the actual assassination of his body.

"Anti-Mormon" leagues and associations and alliances still carry on the work. They are still saying to each other, "Come, let us devise devices. Let us get up a conspiracy. Let us accumulate a lot of stuff, and go out and smite these people with the tongue. And above all things let us not give any heed to their words of defense."

JUDGE HIM BY HIS WORKS, NOT BY THE STORIES TOLD BY HIS ENEMIES.

Once in a while we meet with an opponent who passes by all this evil mass of falsehood, so ready at his hand, and follows the true policy of examining the real work of Joseph Smith. A man should be judged by his works, and not by the evil stories told about him by rabid enemies. This should be self-evident. We are not afraid to meet the issue. Let Joseph Smith be judged by the Book of Mormon, which he gave to the world, by his revelations (as published by him during his lifetime) by the church that he organized, and by his teaching as set forth in standard church works. We will hail the day when such a policy is generally adopted. In that day Joseph Smith will stand forth in his true character, —like Jeremiah, far superior to the little minds that conceived a conspiracy and devised against him.

Our line of defense is based on the teachings of the Master, "By their fruits shall ye know them."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

HOMEWARD BOUND.—Letter from Brother A. C. Barmore informs us that he and Sister Barmore were to leave Australia April 19, expecting to arrive at San Francisco May 15. They were to be accompanied by Brother James Cornelius and family, who, also, are coming to America. Brother and Sister F. G. Pitt were expected to join the party at Papeete.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEVELOPMENT.—Brother M. A. McConley writes from Honolulu, stating that on April 2, a Sunday school convention was held there, the first ever held in the mission. A district organization was effected, the constitution of the General Association being adopted.

SAINT HONORED.—By clipping from The Carson Weekly we note that Brother David R. Jones, aged eighty-two, and said to be the oldest pioneer resident of Nevada, was recently honored by the Nevada state assembly. By invitation he sat at the right hand of the speaker of the assembly, and also addressed the house. His remarks were "roundly applauded."

FAVORABLE MENTION.—The Sacramento Valley Union, of March 4, makes favorable mention of the dedication of the new church there. Cuts of the church and of Brothers H. A. Hintz, J. M. Terry, and F. M. Sheehy accompany the writeup. From the article we quote: "The handsome new church was paid for in record time, and the indebtedness has been liquidated in less time than that on any other church building in this section."

FAVOR JEWS.—Nearly eight thousand Levantine Jewish refugees have been granted naturalization in Spain. It was Spain that with such merciless severity expelled the Jews in the fifteenth century. Slowly but surely are conditions shaping themselves for that time when "Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face now wax pale."

J. PIERPONT MORGAN.—The following paragraph is quoted from the will of J. Pierpont Morgan: "I commit my soul into the hands of my Savior, in full confidence that, having redeemed it and washed it in his most precious blood, he will present it faultless before the throne of my heavenly Father; and I entreat my children to maintain and defend, at all hazard and at any cost of personal sacrifice, the blessed doctrine of the complete atonement for sin through the blood of Jesus Christ, once offered, and through that alone."

MISSIONARY WITHDRAWS.—With the passing of the conference we note with mingled sadness and joy the changes that have been wrought. For many years the name of James Moler appeared in the list of appointments, but this year, by his own request, it is missing. Increasing years and home conditions made it impossible for him to fill his appointment to his satisfaction. He has made a good record, served the church long and well, and now retires to the ranks of the local workers, where we are assured that he will do all his strength and circumstances will allow. We commend Brother Moler for his faithfulness, and pray that the Lord may bless him to the end.

In our advertising columns will be found an advertisement offering for sale two second-hand boilers by the Electric Light Department of the Herald Publishing House. The business of the Electric Light Department has grown until it becomes necessary to buy boilers of much greater capacity than those now in use so that the present equipment will be sold at a sacrifice. Anyone interested should write at once to F. B. Blair, manager of the Electric Light Department.

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM

OR

THE CURRENT REFORMATION IN CONTRAST WITH
TRUTH REVEALED.—PART 1.

BY E. E. LONG.

ORIGIN.

In the study and examination of the reformatory efforts of Thomas and Alexander Campbell, we wish to give them and their admirers every advantage of telling the story in their own way as we find it recorded in their numerous publications; our object being to show the weakness of their position in contrast with the church of Christ of the New Testament.

In the estimation of their followers their work as reformers comprises one of the most important chapters in church history. They not only teach a reformation but a restoration of the primitive faith in all its essential elements. This alone entitles them to more than ordinary consideration. If they have succeeded in their efforts to restore the Christianity of Christ, the glad hand should be extended to them by all people of whatever persuasion.

From the Introduction of a little work entitled, Concerning the Disciples, we excerpt the following:

No chapter in American church history, none, we may truly say, in universal church history is more fascinating than that of the work inaugurated by the Campbells and their collaborators. No religious movement of the century has been more important and wide-reaching in its purpose, none has had in its early struggles and progress more of the heroic element, none has been more effective if we view its results. Its origin, genius and growth are more and more attracting the attention and even the wonder of thoughtful people.

Their claim to have restored the apostolic church is an important one and should attract thoughtful people; and since so much importance is attributed to the movement, and in order to get the clearest possible understanding of it, we will commence at the very beginning of the early influences that led to its inauguration.

Thomas Campbell was a Presbyterian minister of the Seceder sect, and he educated his son Alexander in the Westminster Confession of Faith. Desiring that his son should enter the ministry, he sent him to the University of Glasgow, where he first imbibed his reformation ideas.

From the Life of Alexander Campbell, by T. W. Grafton, we read:

But the religious atmosphere of Glasgow began at once to exert a modifying influence upon his views, and was destined to work an entire revolution in his convictions and feelings with respect to existing denominations. . . . Among the circumstances which contributed to this change was the meeting with Greville Ewing, pastor of an independent church in Glasgow, to whom he brought a letter of introduction. This meeting was a fortunate one for the young student. An acquaintance sprung up between them which ripened into intimacy, and brought Alexander into touch with a group of earnest men, who were at that time making themselves felt as a religious power, not only in Glasgow, but throughout Scotland. Taking a deep interest in young Campbell, Mr. Ewing often invited him to tea at his home. On these pleasant occasions he frequently met Romert and James Haldane, two brothers of wealth and influence who were devoting their fortunes to the establishment of a better religious condition in Scotland. In their zeal for the revival of the Lord's work, these brothers began to search the word of God for a remedy for the religious deadness of the times. They soon discovered a wide discrepancy between the religious practices of the churches of their acquaintance and that authorized by the Scriptures. Believing this to be the chief cause of religious dearth, they became the heralds of a return to the gospel requirements. . . . Everywhere this movement, which for a time spread rapidly, was characterized by renewed devotion to the Scriptures; and many changes were made from existing practices in order to bring their obedience into a closer conformity to the New Testament model. For example, while the Scottish Church celebrated the Lord's supper only twice a year, Mr. Ewing was the first to introduce the custom of celebrating it every Lord's Day, as more in harmony with the Scriptures. Later still, this movement led its adherents to abandon infant baptism as unscriptural, and finally to submit to immersion as the only authorized form of baptism. While Alexander was in the midst of his studies, this agitation was at its height; and his warm friendliness for its chief promoters caused him the more earnestly to investigate the truth of their claim. Cherishing as he did the feeling of religious unrest, he listened the more readily to men, who, like himself, were longing for some better way than the old beaten paths of tradition. Though not as yet accepting their peculiar views, a profound impression was made upon his mind, and the defense of the principles which they advocated, in a modified form, was destined to become the ruling passion of his life and ministry.—Pages 37-40.

From the foregoing it is plain to be seen that the "current reformation" is not a purely American institution, having as it does its taproot in a foreign soil; but coming to America soon after, Mr. Campbell found a fertile field in which to develop the embryo. We will have occasion to refer to these "profound impressions" later on.

From another historian we read:

There was dissatisfaction also in the Methodist Church and a desire for larger liberty. The Reverend James O'Kelly, of Virginia, was a member of the General Conference in 1792. He made an ineffectual effort to secure a modification of the power of the bishops in the appointment of preachers. He and his friends left the body. At first they were called "Republican Methodists"; but later the name "Christianian" was taken and the Bible alone was received as the only book of authority.

A man named Jones—Abner Jones—member of a regular Baptist church, in Vermont, "had a peculiar travail in mind in regard to sectarian names and human creeds." In the year 1800 he gathered a small church in the town of Lyndon, Vermont, on the general principles named above. In 1802 a congregation was organized in Bradford, Vermont, on the Bible alone. In 1803 a similar organization came into existence in Piermont, New Hampshire. A Baptist church in Portsmouth, same State, adopted similar views on the subject of creeds and names. In many parts of New England, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, human names and creeds were abandoned for the name "Christian" and the word of the Lord alone.

Influences were meantime at work on the other side of the Atlantic destined to be powerful in the New World in aiding to secure a better faith and more Christlike life. Thomas Campbell was a minister in the Presbyterian Church in Ireland. He was grieved by the divisions in the church of his choice in Ireland and Scotland. He made earnest, but ineffectual, efforts to bring about union. His health failed and in 1807 he came to the United States. Here he found the sectarian spirit against which he had contended in Europe. Desiring to bring about cooperation in caring for the people in their spiritual destitution he organized "The Christian Association, of Washington, Pennsylvania." It failed to accomplish the purpose of its organization. Alexander Campbell came to America in 1809. He knew something of the grief of his father because of the division of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland and Scotland. For a year before he came to the United States, he had been in contact with and under the influence of the Haldanes and others, in Scotland, who were dissatisfied with the sectarian divisions in the church and were earnestly seeking for "a more excellent way." He was, therefore, prepared to sympathize with and enter into cooperation with his father in an effort to find a basis of peace and union for the children of God.—Concerning the Disciples, pp. 19, 20.

We refer to these reformers to show that there was a movement in both Europe and America antagonistic to sectarianism before the Campbells came upon the stage of action.

Arriving in America, the Campbells found the party spirit rampant. We will allow the historian, Rowe, to describe the situation.

Thomas Campbell came from Scotland to the United States in May, 1807, and his son Alexander landed in New York, September 9, 1809. They both settled in Washington County, Pennsylvania. When Thomas Campbell landed in Philadelphia, he found the Seceder synod in session, and upon presenting his credentials, he was cordially received and at once assigned by this synod to the Presbytery of Chartiers in Western Pennsylvania. Both father and son were educated from childhood in the Westminster Confession of Faith. When the Campbells landed on the shores of America, they found the various denominations in a deplorable condition, and the Presbyterian "branches" were, if anything, more powerless, as spiritual agencies, than any other "branch of the church." All around, as they viewed the religious horizon, and as they gazed upon the broken ranks of fiery zealots, they saw nothing but dissension and disunion. Bigotry, party intolerance, and sectarian selfishness, were everywhere phenomenal of divided churches and of distracted members. Infidelity—gross infidelity—was fattening and waxing wanton on the spoils of an inglorious conquest. The aspect of religious affairs was dark and gloomy in the extreme. The great soul of Thomas Campbell was moved within him when he saw the whole land given over to the idolatrous worship of opinions, speculative theology, scholastic dogmas and manmade creeds and to visions and dreams and to mysticism and dreary superstition. He saw that where there is no "vision"—no divine revelation—the people "perish" for the want of spiritual food. In the fearfully distracted condition of things, he saw the immediate necessity of providing an antidote, and that antidote was to be found in pleading for Christian union, in making an effort to remove all barriers, and in a determination to unite all hearts, if possible, upon the word of God, as the only solvent of an intolerable evil.—Reformatory Movements, by John F. Rowe, pp. 127, 128.

Acting upon the hypothesis that there had been grave departures from the simplicity of the ancient gospel, and that humble souls were being neglected; he set about to correct the "evil," with the result that charges were laid against him and he was "censured" for transcending the bounds of his ecclesiastical authority. His first efforts were an attempt at a reformation within the ranks of the Seceder Church wherein he was born and cradled. As noted above, his effort resulted in failure.

Again we read:

There was a pandemonium of sectism at the time the Campbells attempted a reformation of the Seceder Church, in the Presbytery of Chartiers; the Bible was a dead letter and inoperative among the people; the consciences of church communicants were fettered with creeds and confessions of faith; the masses were ignorant of the word of God; the clergy seemed to be absolutely ignorant of the rules of Bible interpretation; the various sects were quarreling and fighting over party shibboleths, and ungodly rivalry existed among the Protestant denominations; a line of distinction was clearly marked between the "clergy and the laity"; the denominations were all lost to the apostolic order of things.—Ibid., p. 129.

According to the above observations of Campbell and son, the great reformation under Luther, Wesley, Calvin, and others, was a failure in the restoration of the apostolic order of things; and if the historian Rowe, gives them proper credit, the Protestant denominations were no better than the Mother Church.

Disappointed in his efforts to reform the Seceder Church, Mr. Campbell withdrew from them, renouncing their authority, and continued to labor in schoolhouses, groves, and other places where he could get a hearing. Calling a special meeting for the purpose of presenting his views, he announced the following "rule" by which he purposed to be governed, and which has become the slogan of Campbellism to the present day. "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; and where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent."

Acting upon the foregoing "rule" they set about to restore primitive, apostolic Christianity, "in letter, and spirit, principle and practice."

The first piece that was written on the subject of the great position appeared from the pen of Thomas Campbell, senior, in the year 1809. An association was formed that year for the dissemination of the principles of reformation; and the piece alluded to was styled "The Declaration and Address of the Christian Association of Washington, Pennsylvania." The constitutional principle of this "Christian association" and its object are clearly expressed in the following resolution: "That its society, formed for the sole purpose of promoting simple evangelical Christianity, shall, to the utmost of its power, countenance and support such ministers, and such only as exhibit a manifest conformity to the Original Standard, in conversation and doctrine, in zeal and diligence; only such as reduce to practice the simple original form of Christianity, expressly exhibited upon the sacred page, without attempting to inculcate anything of human authority, of private opinion, or inventions of men, as having any place in the constitution, faith, or worship of the Christian church; or anything as matter of Christian faith or duty for which there can not be produced a "Thus saith the Lord," either in expressed terms or by approved precedent.—Christian System, p. 8.

The "Christian Association" was organized August 17, 1809, and marks the actual beginning of their "restoration." (?)

At a meeting held on the headwaters of Buffalo Creek on the 17th day of August, 1809, it was decided that they would formally unite themselves into a regular body under the name of the Christian Association of Washington,—the place being in Washington County. This act and this date may be regarded as the actual beginning of our reformation in an organized form.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 38.

This movement, which took on, in 1809, the public form of a voluntary Christian association, finally developed into the organization of churches to restore, as it was then expressed, in letter and in spirit, in principle and in practice, the faith and discipline of apostolic times.—Ibid., p. 360.

The next year Thomas Campbell presented the association he had formed to the Presbyterian Synod, but it was promptly rejected, and they who composed the new movement found they were compelled to stand alone.

It was at this juncture that young Alexander came prominently into view in defense of his father's position.

Thomas Grafton, in his Life of Alexander Campbell, page 57, says:

On this new and rising wave of religious feeling came this young prophet of God, commissioned to speak burning words of fire against the bitter hatred of sectarianism, and to call men's attention to the old landmarks which had been hidden beneath the theological rubbish for centuries.

He preached his first discourse July 15, 1810. (Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 44; Christian Baptist, p. 92.) Now, they have found the sects "all lost to the apostolic order of things, seceded from the Seceders, organized their first church or association, and under the leadership of the young "polemic" they begin their war on the sects, which has since characterized their "current reformation."

Remember they have started out to restore primitive Christianity, "in letter and in spirit, in principle and in practice," to be governed by the rule, "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; and where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent," and to make no move without a "thus saith the Lord either in express terms or by approved precedent"; because it is by those rules, and by the Scriptures, that we purpose to measure their work and determine their success or failure. We read:

In his protest against religious error, he was not simply a reformer, he was more than a reformer; instead of trying to put a new piece of cloth into the old, worn-out garment of theology, he cast it aside altogether for one which, though ancient, was without rent, and as strong and beautiful as when first wrought out by the hand of God. Instead of reformation he attempted restoration,—to replant in the fertile soil of the nineteenth century the church of the first century.—Life of A. Campbell, p. 230.

He saw plainly that the church when considered from the New Testament point of view, had gradually gone into an apostasy, and that the movement in which he was engaged had for its object the restoration of the primitive gospel and order of things.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 204.

Mr. Campbell, himself, wrote:

Besides, do not the experiences of all the religious—the observations of the intelligent—the practical results of all creeds, reformations and improvements—and the expectations and longings of society—warrant the conclusion that either some new revelation, or some new development of the revelation of God must be made, before the hopes and expectations of all true Christians can be realized, or Christianity save and reform the nations of this world? We want the old gospel back, and sustained by the ancient order of things.—Christian System, p. 250.

With the lofty aspiration expressed in the sentiment, "We want the old gospel back, and sustained by the ancient order of things," no fault is to be found; and we certainly agree that a new revelation was necessary to bring order out of chaos—but we call in question the method of procedure as employed by Mr. Campbell.

As touching these matters he wrote as follows:

In endeavoring to use our feeble efforts for these glorious objects, we have found it necessary, among other things, to attempt to dethrone the reigning popular clergy from their high and lofty seat, which they have for ages been building for themselves.—Christian Baptist, p. 32.

They not only tried to rebuild, but they undertook to demolish everything in sight; because, as Mr. Campbell wrote in the Christian Baptist, "All sectarianism is the offspring of hell." (Page 238.)

The worshiping establishments now in operation throughout Christendom, increased and cemented by their respective voluminous confessions of faith, and their ecclesiastical constitutions, are not churches of Jesus Christ, but the legitimate daughters of that mother of harlots, the Church of Rome.—Millennial Harbinger, vol. 3, p. 362.

Every party in Christendom, without respect to any of its tenets, opinions, or practices, is a heresy, a schism—unless there be such a party as stands exactly upon the apostles' ground. Then, in that case, it is a sect just in the same sense of the old sect of the Nazarenes, afterwards called Christians, and all others are guilty before the Lord, and must be condemned for their opposition to Christ's own party; whose party we are, provided we hold fast all, and only all, the apostolic traditions, and build upon the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible.—Christian System, p. 111.

An era is just at the door, which will be known as The Regeneration for a thousand years to come. The Lord Jesus will judge the adulterous brood, and give them over to the burning flames, who have broken the covenant, and formed alliances with the governments of the earth.—Ibid., p. 310.

At the risk of being tedious we will give two more quotations to show their aniquus toward others.

If not ecclesiastically under the power of the "Mother Church," they are religiously and spiritually of the same affinities. None of these creeds, whether Catholic or Protestant, tells a man how to become a Christian. They tell a man how he may become a Catholic, a Lutheran, a Reformer, an Episcopalian, a Presbyterian, a Methodist, a Baptist, perchance. There is not a confession of faith in existence that ever saved a soul. As human compositions, one is just as full of light and knowledge as another, and just as efficacious in the salvation of the soul. They all originated in the councils of men; they were digested in the heat of human passion; they were concocted and planned by envious and rival theologians; they became the symbols—the insignia—of rival princes; they have always engendered strife, hatred, malice, bigotry, intolerance and persecution, and will continue to do so until the end of time. There is no Christian love in them. There is nothing in them that will unite the people of God and make them one people. The mind of God is not found in them, and the Spirit of Christ does not breathe through them. . . . All creeds must be crushed under the weight of divine authority.—Reformation Movement, pp. 51, 52.

A reformation of popery was attempted in Europe full three centuries ago. It ended in a Protestant hierarchy, and swarms of dissenters. Protestantism has been reformed, into Presbyterianism,—that into Congregationalism,—and that into Baptistism, etc., etc. Methodism has attempted to reform all, but has reformed itself into many forms of Wesleyism. None of these have begun at the right place. All of them retain in their bosom, in their ecclesiastical organizations, worship, doctrines, and observances, various relics of popery. They are, at best, but a reformation of popery, and only reformation in part. . . . All creeds are mere theories of Christian doctrine, discipline, and government, exhibited as a basis of church union. Being speculative, they have always proved themselves to be "apples or discord" or "roots of bitterness" amongst the Christian profession. They have, in days of yore, erected pillories, founded prisons, provoked wars, kindled fires, consecrated autos da fe, instituted star chambers, courts of high commission, and horrible tribunals of papal inquisition. Exile, banishment, confiscation of goods, lands, and tenements, and martyrdom, have been their convincing logic, their persuasive rhetoric, and their tender mercies.—Campbell's Christian Baptist, pp. 15, 16.

We might multiply the foregoing indefinitely, and we will refer to some other caustic remarks ere we are through; but enough has been presented to show that all parties were condemned without reserve and the boastful claim made that "we are the party," "set for the defense of the gospel of the Son of God."

Now we purpose to examine their "restoration" critically, and see just how well they succeeded in getting the old gospel back, "in letter, and in spirit; in principle and practice." They tell us they intend to speak where the Scriptures speak, and to have a "thus saith the Lord" for every move.

As noted above, the first step was the organization of the "Christian Association." We pause to inquire: Did they have a "thus saith the Lord" for such action? No; because Mr. Campbell said:

We want no new message from the skies—no embassadors from Christ. In short, there is no need to have among us men professing to be called and sent by God.—Christian Baptist, p. 21.

Again, we ask, where did they find an "approved precedent"? Surely not in the Bible, because He who founded the primitive church "spake as one having authority," and "no man taketh this honor to himself but he that is called of God as was Aaron," (Hebrews 5:4) was a fundamental principle with God in all ages. So Campbell and company had no authority to act from the fact that they denied all divine authority and repudiated all human authority.

In the creation of the physical "body" it required a miracle to infuse life, and so the apostle finds a simile for the "body of Christ." In the physical creation means were provided for the propagation and perpetuation of life so long as the body contained life within itself; but when the body dies it has no power to transmit or beget life. The same principle governs the spiritual "body of Christ"—the church.

As we have seen, the Campbells condemned everybody as "lost to the apostolic order of things," the "harlot daughters of the old scarlet mother"; "the offspring of hell," etc., and as such they certainly could not beget nor transmit that which they did not possess—life. The old "body" was dead, and disintegrated, so there was no life to be had from that source. It required supernatural power to create the first "spiritual body" or church; and to work according to "approved precedent" there must be supernatural power to create a new body when the old one has become dead. So that we discover in the very first step they violated their own rule. But their inconsistency will become more glaring as we proceed.

July 15, 1810, Mr. Campbell started out as a preacher of the gospel, and he states that he "pronounced one hundred and six orations" during the year. (Christian Baptist, p. 92.)

He has renounced and denounced all existing parties and denied Almighty God the right to be heard by saying, "We want no new message from the skies"; and yet he proposed to create a new spiritual body when he himself was as dead as the deadest of all. He says:

Christians must learn that the conversion of the world is the honorable employment to which the Lord has called them, and that they may have the whole honor of this great work. He has sent neither apostles, prophets nor angels to assist them since the establishment of the church in the world.—Millennial Harbinger, vol. 1, p. 271.

That there were apostles, prophets, and angels engaged in the establishment of the primitive church is admitted,—the only "approved precedent" on record,—but that church ceased to exist, so far as her relation to Christ is concerned. Listen:

As we have shown, corruption, division and apostasy has done their evil work; and his church which his apostles left pure, undivided and uncorrupted, wearing his name alone, and observing his ordinances, worship and commandments, has apostatized from him, left her first love, and become an abominable sectarian organization called the Roman Catholic Church, full of loathsome corruptions, cruelties, evils and abominations, and has persecuted and tortured, and evil entreated and put to death his faithful followers, until their blood has flowed in rivers and oceans, and cried to heaven for vengeance upon this apostate church! Nor is this all. She has committed fornication with the kings of the earth, and has by this illicit intercourse, played the harlot and become the mother of a numerous progeny of illegitimate daughters, wearing other names than that of Christ, as "Episcopal Church," etc., full of the spirit and corruption of the old scarlet "mother and mistress of all." Such "churches," and these daughters have "played the harlot" too, and produced a brood of illegitimate granddaughters to the old mother, as the "Episcopal Methodist Church," and others in the same category. The blood of the grandmother is in their veins, and full of her spirit, traditions and corruptions. Hence the Lord Jesus Christ, when he comes the second time to be united to his bride—the church, will disown everyone of these corrupt, unauthorized religious organizations remaining—will reject everyone of them, and will recognize but the one true church, wearing his name to the exclusion of all others.—J. R. Howard, in Sketch and Writings of Benjamin Franklin, pp. 218, 219.

Thus we see, in their attempt to "restore" the church they depended entirely upon their own wisdom, without any authority from God, either by transmission or revelation. They were a part of this "corrupt" institution until their separation and were as destitute of spiritual "life" as any other part of it. Like begets like, hence it was utterly impossible for them to beget a "body" having more life than they were in possession of themselves, since they denied the only means by which the life could be obtained.

THE LESSON OF EVIL.

(Read before Men's League and Department of Sociology and Political Economy, Independence, Missouri.)

Now I hope that each of you will take into consideration this fact, that as we start into this work (I say work, because active study means work to us) in the study of political economy, and combining this with sociology, we must have a beginning; and that is why I have selected this subject, entitled, "The lesson of evil." In order to attain to success we must first observe this one great truth in the study of the problem confronting us, and that is that to come to a definite conclusion we must learn that success means absolute control of the body politic. Then to reverse this and educate ourselves to absolute obedience. I mean in this that when we choose those whom we would have to lead we are free to know that we have the power of recall and at the same time we are in duty bound to sustain, and to submit ourselves into absolute obedience while so sustaining.

Remember that unrest and pain and sorrow are the shadows of life. There is no heart in all the world that has not felt the sting of pain; no mind that has not been tossed upon the dark waters of trouble; no eye that has not wept the hot, blinding tears of unspeakable anguish. There is no household where the great destroyers, disease and sorrow, have not entered, severing heart from heart, and casting over all the dark pall of gloom. In the strong and apparently indestructible meshes of evil all are more or less securely caught; and pain, unhappiness, and misfortune wait upon mankind.

With the object of escaping or in some way mitigating this overshadowing gloom, men and women rush blindly into innumerable devices; upon pathways by which they fondly hope to enter into happiness which will not pass away. Such are the drunkard and the harlot, who revel in sensual excitements; such is the exclusive aesthete, who shuts himself out from the sorrows of the world, and surrounds himself with enervating luxuries; such is he who thirsts for wealth or fame, and subordinates all things to the achievement of that object; and such are they who seek consolation in the performance of religious rites, rather than religious duties.

To all these the happiness sought seems to come; their souls, for a time, are lulled into a sweet security, and an intoxicating forgetfulness of the existence of evil; but the day of disease comes at last, or some great sorrow, temptation, or misfortune breaks suddenly in on the unfortified spirit, and the fabric of its fancied happiness is torn to shreds.

So over the head of every personal joy hangs the Damocletian sword of pain, ready at any moment to fall and crush the soul of him who is unprotected by knowledge.

The child cries to be a man or a woman; the man and the woman sigh for the lost felicity of childhood. The poor man chafes under the chains of poverty by which he is bound, and the rich man often lives in fear of poverty, or scours the world in search of the elusive shadow he calls happiness. Sometimes the soul feels that it has found a secure peace and happiness in adopting a certain religion, in embracing a mental philosophy, or in building up an intellectual or artistic ideal; but some overpowering temptation proves the religion to be inadequate or insufficient; the theoretical philosophy is found to be a useless prop; or in a moment, the idealistic stature upon which the devotee has for years been laboring is shattered into fragments at his feet.

Is there, then, no way of escape from pain and sorrow? Are there no means by which the bonds of evil—error—may be broken? Are permanent happiness, secure prosperity, and abiding peace foolish dreams? No; there is a way, and I speak it with gladness, by which evil can be slain for ever; there is a process by which disease, poverty, or any adverse condition or circumstance can be put on one side never to return; there is a method by which a permanent prosperity can be secured, free from all fear of the return of adversity; and there is a practice by which unbroken and unending peace and bliss can be partaken of and realized. And the beginning of the way which leads to this glorious realization is the acquirement of a right understanding of the nature of evil.

It is not sufficient to deny or ignore evil; it must be understood. It is not enough to pray to God to remove the evil; you must find out why it is there, and what lesson it has for you. It is of no avail to fret and fume and chafe at the chains that bind you; you must know why and how you are bound. Therefore, get outside yourself, and begin to examine and understand yourself. Cease to be a disobedient child in the school of experience, and begin to learn, with humility and patience, the lessons set for your edification and ultimate perfection; for evil, when rightly understood, is found to be not an unlimited power or principle in the universe, but a passing phase of human experience; it therefore becomes a teacher to those who are willing to learn. Evil is not an abstract something outside yourself; it is an experience; it therefore becomes a teacher to those who are willing to learn. Evil is an experience in your own heart, and by patiently examining and rectifying your heart you will be led gradually into the discovery of the origin and the nature of evil, which will necessarily be followed by its complete eradication.

All evil is corrective and is therefore not permanent. It is rooted in ignorance, ignorance of the true nature and relation of things; so long as we remain in that state of ignorance, we remain subject to evil. There is no evil in the universe that is not the result of ignorance, and that would not, if we were ready and willing to learn its lesson, lead us to higher wisdom, and then vanish. But men remain in evil; and it does not pass away because men are not willing or prepared to learn the lesson it came to teach them.

There was a child who every night when its mother took it to bed cried to be allowed to play with the candle; and one night, when the mother was off her guard for a moment, the child took hold of the candle; the inevitable result followed, and the child never again wished to play with the candle. By its one foolish act it learned, and learned perfectly, the lesson of obedience, and entered into the knowledge that fire burns. This incident is a complete illustration of the nature, meaning, and ultimate result of all sin and evil. As the child suffered through its own ignorance of the real nature of fire, so children of a larger growth suffer through their ignorance of the real nature of the things that they weep for and strive after, and that harm them when they are secured; the only difference being that in the latter case the ignorance and the evil are more deeply rooted and obscure.

Evil has always been symbolized by darkness; good by light,—and hidden within the symbol is contained the perfect interpretation, the reality; for, just as light always floods the universe, and darkness is only a mere speck or shadow cast by a small body intercepting a few rays of the illimitable light, so the light of the supreme good is the positive and life-giving power that floods the universe, and evil the insignificant shadow cast by the self that intercepts and shuts off the illuminating rays that strive for entrance. When night folds the world in its black, impenetrable mantle, no matter how dense the darkness, it covers only the small space of half our little planet, while the whole universe is ablaze with living light, and every soul knows that it will awake in the light of morning. Know, then, that when the dark night of sorrow, pain, or misfortune settles down upon your soul, as you stumble along with weary and uncertain steps, you are merely interposing your mere personal desires between yourself and the boundless light of joy and bliss, and that the dark shadow covering you is cast by none and nothing but yourself. Just as the darkness without is a mere negative shadow, and unreality coming from nowhere, going nowhither, and without permanent abiding place, so the darkness within is equally a negative shadow over the evolving and light-born soul.

“But,” some one may say, “why pass through the darkness of evil at all?” Because, by ignorance, you have chosen to do so, and because, through doing so, you may come to understand both good and evil, and may the better appreciate the light by having passed through the darkness. As evil is the direct outcome of ignorance, so, when the lessons of evil are fully learned, ignorance passes away, and wisdom takes its place. But as a disobedient child refuses to learn its lessons at school, so is it possible to refuse to learn the lessons of experience, and thus remain in continual darkness, suffering continually recurring punishments in the form of disease, disappointment, and sorrow. He, therefore, who would shake himself free of the evil that encompasses him, must be willing and ready to learn, and must be prepared to undergo that disciplinary process without which no gain of wisdom or abiding happiness and peace can be secured.

A man may shut himself up in a dark room and deny that the light exists, but it is everywhere without, and darkness exists only in his own little room. So you may shut out the light of truth, or you may begin to pull down the walls of prejudice, self-seeking, and error that you have built around yourself, and thus let in the glorious and omnipresent light.

By earnest self-examination strive to realize, and not merely hold as a theory, that evil is a passing phase, a self-created shadow; that all your pains, sorrows, and misfortunes have come to you by a process of undeviating and absolutely perfect law—have come to you because you deserve and require them; and that by first enduring, and then understanding them, you may be made stronger, wiser, nobler. When you have fully entered into this realization, you will be in a position to mold your own circumstances, to transmute all evil into good, and to weave, with a master hand, the fabric of your destiny.

I trust that we may in the further study of our work be enabled to grasp the beginning thoughts contained herein.

ERROR OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PHILOSOPHY.

Christian Science assumes that God is omnipresent in the sense that by his immediate presence he is at all times as much in one place as another. Public lecturers of the Christian Science persuasion denounce the idea that God has an individual personality and specific habitation as being grotesque and ridiculous; yet what can be more grotesque than a God literally occupying every inch of space everywhere, authorizing Jesus, his representative, to say: "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again I leave the world, and go to the Father." "I am not yet ascended to my Father; but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and to your Father; and to my God, and your God."

Then, again, this God who is literally spread all over and filtered all through everything—absolutely everything—where flowers bloom and where putrid filth abounds, where holy ambitions find expression in righteous behavior, and where lewd and fiendish propensities delight in everything that is base,—this indiscriminately expanded God, gave man his word, saying: "My Spirit will not dwell in unholy temples."

If the Christian Science philosophy about God being everywhere be true, then the prayer which Jesus taught his disciples to pray should be revised to read: "Our Father who art everywhere, hallowed be thy name"; and what a false idea it was indeed for Christ to leave in the minds of his followers, when he taught them to pray: "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name; Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven."

It is a curious state of affairs, to say the least, where in this present world evil actually predominates above the good, as observation proves, and

Christ himself testifies, when he says that the many walk the broad way and few find the straight and narrow way—it is a strange state of affairs if all these wicked people are actually walking about in God; and all this avalanche of wickedness is literally perpetrated in Him!

Then, since the character of every substance, thing, or principle is to be determined by the quality of its component parts, there is no escape from the conclusion that if the foregoing idea of the veritable expansiveness of God is correct, then so far as God's presence in this world is concerned, he would be made up of more evil than good, because evil predominates here; he would be more devil than angel, because Satan is the "Prince and power of the air," at present, and "Prince of this world," as Christ said.

Thus in the immediate presence of God, himself, there would be more hell than heaven, because sin brings its victims in touch with hell's conditions, and this kind of a God would really embrace all, in his closest presence; and every conglomeration of good, bad, and indifferent would be squarely in God and hence a part of God.

No wonder some Christian Scientists have arrived at the place where they say: "Nothing is of itself evil; but only as the human mind makes it so," and that the very origin of sin is in the human mind.

The whole Christian Science philosophy tends in that same direction—that there is no personal, individual God, having a specific habitation,—puts darkness for light and calls it "Absolute Truth,—contradicts reason, and annuls and reverses the plainest teachings of the Holy Scriptures.

Paul said concerning God that Jesus was the express image of his person.—Hebrews 1: 1, 3. Also that he upheld all things "by the word of his power," not presence. Also that Jesus went to sit down at the right hand of his Majesty on high. It would be a desperate undertaking for any, men or angels, to attempt to sit at the right hand on high of a being that had no right hand, left hand, nor any other bodily member, nor any place of habitation, either high or low. The Lord looketh from heaven; he beareth all the sons of men. From the place of his habitation, he looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth.—Psalm 33: 13, 14. For God is in heaven, and thou upon earth.—Ecclesiastes 5: 2.

If Satan can counterfeit some of the Lord's miracles, as he did before Pharaoh, and as the Bible says he will do before the Lord's coming, (see 2 Thessalonians 2: 8, 9; also Revelation 13: 13), and can get people to believe there is no personal God, the next step for his Satanic Majesty is easy, namely: persuade people to believe there is no personal Beelzebub, no Evil Prince of this world—no Devil at all.

Satan is very willing to bottle up most any kind of a soothing concoction and put a pleasing label upon it, if by its administration he can lead men duped before the screen which hides himself.

The Christian Science banner reads: No personal God; no personal Devil.

God's own banner reads: God, the Father, dwelling in heaven; Christ, his Son, sent to earth and now returned to his Father; and the Holy Ghost delegation sent to minister unto men—sent from God's governmental headquarters, to execute the will of God among the righteous, and to minister to those who are heirs of salvation.—John 14; Hebrews 1: 14.

The warning finger upon God's banner also points out Lucifer as a fallen angel, Isaiah 14, Beelzebub the prince of devils, Matthew 12: 24, and informs us that they are individualities abroad exerting their power to deceive.

It is unsafe for men to ignore or distort these plain scriptural bases. Without a correct idea of God every religious concept is maimed or distorted, for the knowledge of God, or acquaintance with him, must form the very foundation for devotion and service to him.

Thus Christian Science begins wrong at the very foundation, which makes it absolutely certain that their theological building can not from such a basis be reared correctly, although many valuable building stones of real truth be used in the structure; for they are nearly all mislaid, poorly jointed, and are bedded in "untempered mortar," (Ezekiel 13: 15).

So we are not surprised to see the Christian Science philosophers building upon the God everywhere theory, with such faulty material as the following: "The Bible account of the creation of man from the dust of the earth in Genesis 2 is merely an allegory." "The earthly substance which composes the body which we say dies is not of God, for God creates no dead thing." "Our physical senses can not be relied on; these bodies are not the expression of any truth, they are entirely a false concept of human or lower mind, and Divine Mind is all!" When man evolves out of the mortal mind (by the path Mrs. Eddy blazed out) into the allness of Divine Mind, he may here and now have complete dominion over every sickness, trouble and death."

But the Scriptures teach that all they who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer. (2 Timothy 3: 12.) Christian Science says: Man need not die. The Bible says: It is appointed unto man once to die, but after this the judgment. (Hebrews 9: 27.)

So, with all due respect for the honest, intelligent, and refined people who adhere to Mrs. Eddy's creed, and with careful consideration, and, using the word of God for our measuring rod, we discover that so-called Christian Science is extremely unscientific, though in some respects a neat imitation; and the time will come when those who have embraced it as the divine expression of "absolute truth" shall discover that it was indeed a poor substitute for the truth.

TRIUMPH OVER DEATH.

(Synopsis of funeral sermon of Mrs. Clara Brown, delivered by O. R. Miller, at Fort Madison, Iowa, March 21, 1913.)

O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires. And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones.—Isaiah 54: 11, 12.

In this world the reign of death is as universal as it is appalling. The young in their beauty and loveliness, and the old in their maturity and wisdom are borne down and swept away. About one week ago I preached the funeral sermon of one who had lived more than her allotted time on the earth. She had passed her ninety-sixth summer. But to-day I recognize the form which lies here was cut down in the bloom of youth. It reminds us that life, here, is uncertain.

I can do the departed no good. She is in the hands of a just God. To know that she has been an active, faithful member of the Church of Jesus Christ should assure you more comfort than all the cold words that might be spoken by human lips. I know, my friends, that human words are poor vehicles to convey comfort to the harrowed mind and torn breast. But the words of God will soothe the pierced soul as the balm of Gilead will the torn flesh.

I find that the good old man Simeon who blessed Jesus and then expressed a willingness to depart in peace also told the virgin Mary that a sword should pierce her soul. I know you have wondered why Clara should not have been spared to comfort the home and loved ones. I perceive that you can not understand why she was taken in her youth; but, my friends, glance back over the pages of sacred history and view the scene at Calvary,—a young man, the very Son of God, who did nothing but good. Not a shadow of sin had ever dimmed his fair countenance, yet he was abused, cursed, and finally crucified. On the rugged cross he hangs, too pure for earth, and not ready for heaven. His work was not completed. I can scarcely control my feelings when I view the picture of his mother prostrated at the foot of the cross. The words of Simeon were being fulfilled. Her soul was being pierced, her heart-strings bleeding. She could not understand. He was but a youth. His mission had, seemingly, just begun. But it is God's way; so, can we not revive and say as the Master of men, "Father, thy will be done"?

Once I heard a song of sweetness as it cleft the morning air, Sounding in its blest completeness like a tender, pleading prayer;

And I sought to find the singer whence the wondrous song was borne,
And I found a bird sore wounded, pinioned by a cruel thorn.

I have seen a soul in sadness, while its wings with pain were furled,
Giving hope, and cheer, and gladness, that should bless a weeping world;
And I know a life of sweetness was of pain and sorrow born;
And a stricken soul was singing with its breast against a thorn.

Ye are told of One who loved you, of a Savior crucified;
Ye are told of nails that pinioned, and a spear that pierced his side;
Ye are told of cruel scourging, of a Savior bearing scorn;
And he died for your salvation with his brow against a thorn.

Ye are not above the Master; will you breathe a sweet refrain?
And his grace will be sufficient, when your heart is pierced with pain;
Will you live to bless his loved ones, though your life be bruised and torn,
Like the bird that sang so sweetly with its breast against a thorn?

Many of the writers of the Old Testament gave vent to their feelings of doubt. Death was the horror of horrors to them. But, thank God, since the Son of Man came and broke the bands of death and hell, the parting from this life should be passed upon with joy!

Especially should we be the most free and happy people on the earth, for amid the thunderings and blackness of the Dark Ages came a lightning flash from the heavens. Behold it was an angel clothed in the glory of the Infinite. With solemnity, the open ears of the boy prophet listened. The gospel in its purity was again being restored. With anger the black clouds of ignorance and superstition began to retreat. Not only does its brilliant rays lighten the earth, but it has found its way into the deep and dark abyss. The afflicted minds which once gave birth to nightmares of a brimstone hell are rapidly being healed. The zephyr of God's love is daily carrying to earth, on its wings, the aroma of enlightenment. A burning hell is being transformed into a school of correction. The "one heaven theory" is being changed into "a house of many mansions" which reveals to the mind the fact that God will judge and reward every man according to his works.

REDEEMING LOVE.

I often contemplate with delight and never-failing wonder the mystery of redeeming love. How great must have been the Father's love for his children, to have devised for them so great a salvation. In these words the apostle speaks of this matter:

"Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be a propitiation for our sins."

Christ's love seems to us a golden chain that binds humanity to the infinite heart of God, and the more we feel the influence of his love, the more Christlike we become.

In love God sent his only begotten Son to die for us; in love the Savior came that he might draw all men unto himself. He said to his disciples on one occasion, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend."

I like to think that everyone who is born of the Spirit is as fully known and loved of the Father as if he were the only one for whom Christ died, and that the trials and sorrows of each one of God's children touch his great heart of love, and their cry for aid receives a ready response from him whose love is everlasting, and surpasseth that of a mother.

Our temptations are known to him also, and our shortcomings, and weaknesses. He knows, too, the indwelling evil which we have to contend with through life; but he remembers, too, that we are dust, and in love he bears with us, and strives to draw us back to the fold. He invites us to fly to Christ our refuge, and cast on him all our burden of care, assuring us that upon Christ hath been laid the iniquity of us all, and with his stripes we are healed.

Said Jesus, "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you; continue ye in my love."

It is our privilege to rest in his love. Human love may change, grow cold, and fail us; or circumstances may separate us from those we love. Then how sweet and heart-cheering is the thought that God's love changeth not. He is the same, yesterday, to-day, and for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

When Christ was here in the flesh, he foresaw the future of his disciples that were then with him.
One he saw brought to the scaffold; one to suffer death on a cross; one to banishment on the lonely, rockbound Isle of Patmos; others of them to various kinds of persecutions and death. Probably the Savior talked with them about it, to encourage and strengthen them for the trying ordeal, for we read in the Scriptures that he promised them that he would never leave or forsake them, but in every trial would be with them; and as a final word said, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

How comforting to us is the thought that those precious promises have lost none of their force in our day; but that the dear Lord knows all about his faithful servants who suffer for his sake, whether they are in prison, or in exile, or are slandered, reviled, and persecuted for his sake. He will not forget them in the day of recompense.

Dear Saints, let us, his chosen people, stand firm; faithfully, cheerfully, doing the Master's will. We can not tell beforehand what winds of adversity may overtake us; or, through what dangerous paths we may be called to pass; but this we do know, God is faithful to his promises, and the promise is, "Lo, I am with you alway."

"Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

Antiquity of American Civilization.

Back, since ages at whose birth we can only guess, but which in all human probability go deeper into the past than the reign of Arab in Yemen or Kirghis in Turkestan, the wild red man has roamed these wastes: back into that dark night which hangs for ever over all we know or shall know of early America. "The time before the white man came," what a measureless eternity lies hidden under the words! This prairie was here when the stones of the pyramids were unhewn, and the site of Babylon was a river meadow—here as it is to-day, treeless, desolate, and storm-swept. But where and whence came the wild denizens of the waste? Who shall say? Fifty writers have broached their various theories, a hundred solutions have been offered. The missionary claims them as the lost tribes of Israel, one ethnologist finds in them a likeness to the Tartar, another sees the Celtic eye, another the Roman nose, another traces them back to Japan, or China, or Australia; the old world is scarcely large enough to give them room for their speculations. And what say we? Nothing; or if aught, a conjecture perhaps more vague and shadowy than the rest. It has seemed to us when watching this strange wild hunter, this keen, untutored scholar of nature, this human creature that sickens beneath our civilization, and dies midst our prosperity—it has seemed to us that he was of a race older and more remote than our own, a stock coeval with a shadowy age,—a remnant, perchance, of an earlier creation which has vanished from the earth, preserved here in these wilds—a waif flung by the surge of time to these later ages of our own.

This new world is older than our old one. Its thirty thousand feet in depth of Azoiic rock tell us of an age when naught of living form moved over the iron earth. And here, probably first of all, the molten sands rose above the boiling floods, and cooled and crusted into a chaotic continent.

These are but idle speculations; still the antiquity of the Indian race rests upon other foundations. Far to the south, where the prairies rise into the lofty plateau of New Mexico, ruined monuments, weed-grown, and hidden beneath ivy and trailing parasites, stand like specters from the tomb of time. Before these moldering, rock-hewn cities conjecture halts; the past has drawn over them a veil that no research can pierce, no learning solve. Inscrutable as the vestiges of an earlier earth they stand, the lonely, ruined wrecks of the red man's race.—Butler, in The Wild North Land.

"The Changing Armaments of Europe."

What is the net result of the pace Germany has set in the competition of armaments? Relatively the result is nil. The instantaneous counter-strokes of France and Russia leave Germany, so far as her two chief antagonists are concerned, precisely as she was. But her action has produced or seems likely to produce other and less negative consequences. Absorbed once more in her military problem, it is probable that she will be obliged to slacken off in her naval rivalry with Great Britain. Whether that will relieve the United Kingdom from participating in the gigantic increase of military armaments to which all Europe is now committed is a question that threatens to precipitate a sharp controversy among British statesmen and publicists; and, indeed, the whole position of Great Britain, an island State, safeguarded by an apparently invincible navy, no longer capable of playing any very effective part in a Continental land war, but at the same time bound both to France and to Russia by somewhat indefinite ties of mutual interest and keenly apprehensive of all that a German victory over either power would mean for herself, is one of singular and arresting anomalies. Meanwhile the piling up of armaments on this colossal and unprecedented scale fills all minds with a tense foreboding that they may prove as much an incentive to war as a preventive of it. Well over $1,500,000,000 is now being spent by the leading nations of Europe on preparations to wage war or avert it; and peace itself is in danger of becoming a luxury too expensive to be borne. That is an amazing commentary on the madness of the world in which we live, on the persistence of force in the midst of what we are pleased to call our civilization, and on the inexorable influence over the minds and actions of mankind which is still exercised by the idea of nationality. Americans, I imagine, viewing the spectacle which Europe presents to-day, would hardly for one moment be tempted to exchange their happy and remote security for the imminent contentions and the intolerable and wasteful burdens that oppress the older world.—Sydney Brooks, in the May number of The North American Review.

Letter Department

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, February 27, 1913.

Editors Herald: A sister from Ashland, Wisconsin, has sent to this mission a copy of the Book of Mormon. The wrapper was so mutilated that her name was entirely illegible, so I take this means to thank her for her kindness and to inform her that,

The Book of Mormon that she sent
Is now in Bethlehem;
For on a mission there it went,
To teach the truth to them
Who dwell to-day where David did,
And where the Christ was born;
And thus the light long since been hid
Once more to them is born.

If the sister will please write us a card, we shall be very thankful.

I am glad to say that the prospects are brightening. Notwithstanding the searing influence of our Christian friends, there are some investigating. The Book of Mormon seems to be most in demand. It is so vehemently attacked by the Christian missionaries as an addition to the word of God, that curiosity is aroused with regard to it. The future prosperity of the work is assured; but we have yet much to do. We need the Book of Mormon, Voice of Warning, and a few of our tracts translated into Hebrew and Arabic. The Hebrew language is being revived and all Hebrews coming to this land are required to learn it.

We read with much interest the request, "To the Prayer Union" in behalf of the work in this land, which as I have said, is assuming a much more encouraging aspect.

The war, however, is causing much suffering and distress.

Ever since the Turko-Italian war began provisions have gradually been advancing, but about two months ago, metallics from Tripoli and Asia Minor began to pour in here, and in about two weeks they were sold at the rate of about one hundred and sixty piastres or more for twenty francs. Storekeepers began to refuse metallics altogether. This action caused much suffering among the poor, and the local Government was appealed to. The Pasha sent out an order to all the stores that the metallic must be honored as a legal tender. No doubt this order would have had the desired effect had it not been that the Government itself refused the metallics. But, under these circumstances, the storekeepers replied to the order that if the Government would honor the metallics they would. To this the Government replied that all stores refusing metallics would be closed. The storekeepers' reply to this mandate was closed stores.

The whole city was thrown into a confusion verging on pandemonium. The bakeries refused to bake and bread could not be bought for gold. The starving multitude gathered at the Jaffa gate and demanded bread, enforcing their demand by breaking into some of the bakeries in the neighborhood. The repeated appeals of the Pasha for order were met by, "We are starving; give us bread to eat!" So the Government ordered bread from the bakeries. After a few hours it was delivered, the Government paying for it in gold and silver and selling for metallics.

The Government at Constantinople, also, at first, refused to take any notice of the situation; but it finally relented and called in the surplus metallics, so that at present the metallic is at its old value—seventeen and one cubac to a franc. But the Government at Constantinople seems hard pressed financially, and it is feared that the metallics will again depreciate in value.

In the midst of all this confusion, everything went up to famine price, and remained there! so that the suffering in Jerusalem is beyond description; and it would seem to me that Satan himself can not help but weep at the sight! We hear of the "horrors of war"; "ravages and woe." But words, mere words, can never depict the abject condition and utter destitution and wretched misery of the poor, forlorn victims of the misrule of modern Pharaohs and Cæsars. It was bad enough here before the war began, but now, alas, who can fathom poverty's profound, or turn a ray of light into this dismal, woeful, and death-stricken realm: this bottomless pit!

Well did Isaiah speak, when, foreshadowing the coming of the Holy One: "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord has anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn; to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord that he might be glorified,"—Isaiah 61: 1-3.

None but Omnipotence can do the work. Nothing short of charity—(agapeen) i. e., "love to God and to man for God's sake"—can ever accomplish the task. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not charity," (or in other words have not love to God and to man for God's sake), "I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries and all knowledge; and though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains and have not charity, I am nothing."

Charity is the dynamic power by which the whole world must be brought to a condition to be prepared for its regeneration. No church, therefore, separated from God, can ever bring to pass the purposes of God in man; for in order to have love toward God and toward man for God's sake, we must make the purposes of God our own. We must become coworkers with him. But we can cooperate with him only in the proportion that we work righteousness.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation, because it reveals to man the righteousness of God. The application of that righteousness to our lives makes us coworkers with him. Being coworkers with him, we partake of the divine nature; and our work begins to become the work of love, and is then acceptable to God. But if on the other hand, we fail to discharge our duties in accordance with the spirit of the law of the celestial kingdom, it will be to our eternal loss; for when He who descended below all things and fathomed the dismal depths comes, and, "with righteousness . . . judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth," and "recompense unto every man according to his work, and measure to every man according to the measure which he has measured to his fellow man," we shall learn that it matters not how slight nor how sleight the injustice done or the wrong inflicted, it will have to be remedied, in one way or another, before forgiveness can be obtained. For the great laws of the spiritual universe . . . are what they are, of themselves, of necessity. Moral good and moral evil are immutable, and never were and never can be other than they are, in the slightest degree. Veracity, fidelity, rectitude, purity, lovingness, are for ever good, and their opposites are for ever bad. To all rightly constituted moral beings, everywhere and always, they are unchangeably the same." There is no middle ground here that we can occupy. We either must be clean or unclean. And so long as we will have pleasure in unrighteousness we can not be justified by law, mercy, justice, nor judgment.

We were glad to have Brethren Davis and Robertson with us for a few days. Their stay was very short. While they were here Brother Frederick Roos was ordained to the office of elder. He accompanied them to the several places of interest in and around Jerusalem; also to the Dead Sea, Jordan, and Jericho. While at the last we visited the ruins of ancient Jericho and Elisha's Spring. The corner of the wall of Rahab's house was pointed out to us. However, we have grave doubts of even the ruins themselves being the actual ruins of ancient Jericho, which may be many yards beneath the present ones. The pointing out of the wall of Rahab's house will serve for an example of what one can hear here with regard to the incidents of the past. Even Adam was buried, or at least his bones were brought to Jerusalem and buried here. And Melchisedec was the man that did it! And the Roman Catholic Church is the church that says it.

We have had quite a long winter. The early rains began on October 17—much earlier than the year before—and have continued more or less ever since until this morning. It is now clearing up for better weather, and, perhaps, though we hope not, we have seen the last rains until next October or November. The rains have not been very heavy, but the benefit to the land has been increased by its long continuance and gradual downfall. It is quite evident the land is being prepared for the return of the rightful heirs.

Reverting to the matter of the war, will say that we know nothing about it. The Government has stopped the publication of any telegrams and ordered all papers not to comment on the war in any way. There are various rumors afloat. Some say that Adrianople has fallen; others say that so far as provision is concerned, it can stand the siege for another eight months. Now we hear that the war has ceased on account of snowstorms. We also hear that both sides are getting tired of it; both sides being financially handicapped. But the fact that the Government has prohibited the publication of telegrams and, also, all comments on the war, is interpreted as indicating that Turkey is getting the "worst of it." So we do not know what may happen here any day. But so far as our personal safety is concerned, we feel sure the Lord will take care of us. We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Dear Herald: I have been blessed through reading your pages, and I feel I should add my testimony. It is twenty years next September since my husband and I entered the church, and in that time we have had many testimonies, and also many answers to our prayers. We have also been blessed in basket and in store.

We have four sons in the church, two active ministers. Our youngest son is in South Africa and, according to his letters, is bearing his testimony in that country. Though six thousand miles away from home and loved ones, he finds that his experiences are as happy there as they would be at home, through trying to serve God, who is the same in all lands.

I will tell you of an experience I had with a man representing the British and Foreign Bible Society. He wanted to sell me a Bible. When I told him I had one he wanted me to buy a story book. I told him I had recently purchased one, handing him Brother Evans's book. After reading a little, he remarked that Bishop Evans did not believe in sprinkling, nor did he, the agent. In answer to the question of what church the elder represented I told him the Church of Christ, which he said was all right. He then inquired what the members of the church called themselves. When told Latter Day Saints, he raised his hands and poured out a storm of abuse. I asked him what he knew about these people. He said, "There are two bodies, but they are all a bad lot." When told I was one of the Reorganized Church, he picked up his bag and left, not even saying good-day.

I have been very deaf since I was fourteen. I am now sixty-one, and of late my hearing is not so good as formerly. Will my brethren and sisters pray for me that my hearing might be restored? With love to all,

35 BARLOW STREET. SISTER SCHOFIELD.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, February 2, 1918.

Dear Herald: While sitting before the fire this afternoon, and wondering what I could do to forward this great and marvelous work, the thought came to my mind, "Why not write to the HERALD?" During this last week I read with very great interest the experiences of two sisters, who, like myself, had a hard struggle to separate themselves from the church to which they formerly belonged, and the associations that were so dear to them.

This morning our lesson was taken from the fourth section of Doctrine and Covenants, and we read there the qualifications one requires for the work, viz, "faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God"; and, again, "If ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work."

These words impressed me very much, and I thought, although we as sisters in the church are not called to preach, there are many ways in which we can serve God if the desire is really within our hearts.

I became a member of the Reorganized Church three years ago last December, and will try by the help of God's Spirit to show how I became a Latter Day Saint, and the experience I passed through at that time.

I had been a member of the Church of England all my life; but circumstances arose in my associations with that church which caused me great sorrow, and for several weeks I felt compelled to stay at home instead of following my usual course on the Sunday, although at the time I had no intention of leaving altogether.

Why these circumstances arose I never could tell, but I felt like one who was being persecuted for righteousness' sake, not being able to trace them to any other source. I tried to endure like a good soldier for the Master's sake and return good for evil, although this persecution went on at intervals for about three years.

Sometimes I would get anonymous letters, then again insulting post cards, until at last I thought the Lord must be wanting me to work in another part of his vineyard. I made up my mind to rest for a time and wait and see the results.

For months I had prayed most earnestly, "Open thou mine eyes that I may behold the wondrous things out of thy law." Oh, how I did long to know if I understood the Scriptures properly, and prayed that God would teach me what he wished me to know; for at times I felt a need that nothing could satisfy.

I had worked up to this time very zealously according to the light that I possessed, for my desire had been to serve the Master to the best of my ability and try to influence the minds of the young who were under my care so that they might grow up in the likeness of Christ. I taught a class in the Sunday school of between thirty and forty young girls, and had become very much attached to them. I think it was my greatest trouble to have to give up that class and not be able to return and teach them the gospel as I now understand it.

During the interval of rest, while my mind was so disturbed by what had taken place, this latter day gospel was brought to me by two of the elders of the Reorganized Church, viz, William Newton and William R. Armstrong. I had previously heard this gospel through Brother Armstrong, about ten years before, but took no interest in it, nor had any desire for it just then.

On this second occasion Elder William Newton was the first to renew the subject, and he is one who does not beat about the bush, but makes straight for the point. After a little conversation about the doctrine of the Church of England, he told me I did not know God, which aroused within me somewhat angry feelings and caused me to contradict him. He then referred me to 1 John 2:4: "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." Needless to say, I did not finish the verse, but stopped very abruptly. We had been speaking of baptism, and I had not understood until then that it was a commandment of the Lord's. I was sprinkled in the usual way when an infant, and thought I had fulfilled all the requirements necessary to salvation; and yet I was never quite satisfied, when reading John 3 that I had been born again, and wished many times I could say so definitely.

I decided to study the question of baptism, but nowhere in my Bible could I find a case of infant baptism. The little children who were brought to Jesus, I found were blessed, not baptized, and every case of baptism was preceded by repentance and faith in God. It was quite clear to me that some knowledge of the gospel was required before baptism could be performed, and as this sacred rite was for the remission of sins, it could not have been meant for babies or young children who were not capable of understanding.

I found our Lord's command to the apostles was to teach and preach first of all, and to baptize only those who believed on their words, and repented of their sins.

These points had been quite overlooked by me, but I read my Bible now with a desire to know the truth, and it was wonderful what I had failed to see hitherto.

I wrote to the rector of the church to which I belonged, stating that I was not quite satisfied with the teachings of the church and asking if baptism by immersion for the remission of sins was essential to salvation, why it was not taught in the Church of England? He replied that he would like to have an interview with me. Accordingly a time was fixed and I expected he would bring his Bible and try to prove his teachings were in accord with it. I was very much in earnest, for it was a matter of life or death to me; but he treated the subject so lightly, and answered my questions upon baptism in such a way that it gave me no satisfaction whatever.

He said it did not matter at all whether one was baptized or not; but if that were all I wanted, he could baptize me. "It could not possibly make any difference either way," said he, considering the many thousands of good people who were not baptized, and he did not believe for one minute that God intended they should be lost. I would have referred him to several passages of scripture, but his manner prevented my doing so.

He said by reading the Bible a certain way, he could prove to me there was no God. It just depended upon how one read it. That was the impression he gave me, if not the exact words. He asked me no questions, but mentioned several religious bodies, among whom were the Latter Day Saints, of whom he said, "They will not bear investigation." He left, promising to call again, but that proved to be his last visit.

Brother Armstrong had called many times previous to the rector's visit, and set forth the principles of the doctrine of Christ in such a way as I had never seen before. We had many conversations upon the gospel and every question was answered by the Bible itself. He never once put his own interpretation upon any single question that was asked.

I read the Voice of Warning, also the Book of Mormon, as well as other church publications, and was finally quite convinced that the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints was the true church of Jesus Christ; that its teachings were wholly in accord with the gospel; and much as I would have liked at that time to find a loophole to escape, I could not do so, for the truth met me at every turn, and I felt bound to acknowledge it. Such a struggle commenced within me as I never wish to experience again. It was as if the two powers were contending with each other for the mastery.

How could I separate myself from the large congregation with whom I had been accustomed to worship for so long, leave my scholars, and join myself to that poor, despised sect known as Latter Day Saints! "The scum of the earth," as they were represented to me. What would my friends and relatives say? Could I bear their reproach, or the severance of their friendship?

Then the words of Jesus came to me, "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me."—Matthew 10: 37; "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he can not be my disciple."—Luke 14: 26; "He that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me."—Matthew 10: 38. Oh, how hard it was, and yet I felt it must be done, or I stood condemned.

I held the position of infant mistress in a church school, and I knew even my means of livelihood might be taken from me, should the church authorities get to know; for in England there is the greatest possible prejudice toward Latter Day Saints.

Again, the good Spirit whispered, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." It seemed to me the Lord was clearing every obstacle out of the way, and I felt that no sacrifice was too great to make for the One who had sacrificed himself for me, and if I did what was right he would take care of the consequences. Like Saint Paul, "I counted all things but loss, that I might win Christ." I determined in my own mind to end the struggle which had been going on for about three months. Many a time I was on the point of yielding to the wrong power, but the day came when I felt I must decide one way or the other, for the conflict was too great to bear longer. That was the crisis of my life, and my eternal destiny depended upon my choice. The good Spirit prevailed, and I chose "affliction with the people of God."

October 29, 1909—I shall ever remember the date, not because of any spiritual manifestation, vision, or dream, which some receive as a witness to the truth, but "the peace that passeth all understanding" filled my heart and soul, in place of the continual strife—which was clear testimony to me that I had pleased God by accepting his word and ceasing to contend for my own way.

From this time I have attended the services of the East Manchester Branch, and was baptized December 17, 1909, by Brother Maddock and confirmed December 26, 1909, by Brethren Henry Greenwood, John W. Green, and William R. Armstrong.

Many times have I thanked God for bringing me out of darkness into his marvelous light, and out of error into truth. I feel that his hand has guided me step by step, and led me all the way, until he finally brought me into his kingdom. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled." "He shall fulfill the desires of them that fear him."

God knew my desires, and that was why he sent his servants along with a message. Although at first I was "slow of heart to believe," yet in the end I am thankful to say the message was not in vain, and I accepted the gospel as presented by them.

Then began the greatest opposition I ever met with in my life. All the bad things that possibly could be said about Latter Day Saints were poured into my ears. It did not matter what I said about the two distinct churches, I was classed as a "Mormon," and a "Mormon" I am still in the eyes of a great many.

One said I had gone "right out of my head"; another told me he was surprised that I could be so easily led away; a friend whom I had known and loved for twenty years has become an enemy, and will have nothing to say to "a Mormon." I have been despised and ridiculed, as well, but I am not discouraged. No; if ten thousand were against me, they could not take away the testimony that I have of the truthfulness of this latter day work.

Saint Paul said of Moses: "He considered the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, for he endured as seeing him who is invisible."

God has given me the grace to endure. I feel I have something that will help me along in this life, and bring joy and happiness throughout eternity.

This gospel of the kingdom, known as the restored gospel, is the only gospel that has satisfied my soul. I find in it everything I need, for it embraces and teaches all the truth, while other churches teach only part of it, leaving the soul unsatisfied and uncertain.

Our Lord said when he sent out his disciples: "Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.

The true servants of God will obey the Lord's command, and it is our duty to judge between the false and the true, between the commandments of men and the commandments of God. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8: 20.

Again Jesus said: "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God, for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him."—John 3: 34. How necessary it is, then, that we should apply ourselves to the word of God, and try the spirits whether they be of God. We are told by Saint Peter, "There shall be false teachers among us." I believe that if we seek the Lord with all our heart we shall find him in spite of all the false teaching that exists in the world. "My sheep hear my voice," said Jesus, "and I know them and they follow me."

There are many good, honest-hearted men and women who have yet to hear his voice, and who will recognize it and obey his command when he says, "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues."

"The humble soul He guides;
Teaches the meek His way;
Kindness and truth He shows to all
Who His just laws obey."

I have met with many disappointments when telling this gospel story. Some whom I expected would receive it gladly treated it almost as a fairy tale, while others were afraid to listen for fear their minds would be disturbed.

Nothing gives me greater pleasure than to write or tell of this "great and marvelous work," and I believe if we sow the seed God will give the increase.

I am only young in this work as yet, and feel as one who is just beginning to walk, but I thank God for the knowledge he has already given me. It is wonderful how the Spirit guides into all truth, and teaches us little by little. I pray that God may help me to use that little for his honor and glory.

His command is that we should warn others, when we have been warned ourselves. Although the warning is not always heeded, yet we shall have the satisfaction of knowing we have tried to fulfill our part, and God will bless us.

My earnest prayer is that God will give me wisdom and patience to speak and to act so that I may not bring discredit upon his name, but be the means of helping forward this great work.

Let me state here, before concluding, The Lord has been true to his promise, and what I have lost by sacrifice, he has more than made up in blessing. If I remain steadfast unto the end I know I shall meet him when he returns to gather together his saints, and shall reign with him a thousand years and throughout the ages of eternity.

I pray that God's blessing may attend these few words, and that he will fill us with renewed zeal to go on laboring for the Master in every possible way; and amidst discouragements, disappointments, and misunderstandings, to still go on, knowing that God's word shall not return to him void, but accomplish that wherunto he sends it.

Your sister in Christ,

ALICE M. ARMSTRONG.

OTTAWA, KANSAS, February 2, 1913.

Editors Herald: I am glad I am a Latter Day Saint. I was baptized in 1907 by Brother James Yates, and have never been sorry I took the step.

I have not been where I could hear much preaching, but I have heard enough to satisfy me that we have the truth. I have much to be thankful for. When I read the articles and letters in the HERALD, written by brethren I have heard preach, it makes my heart rejoice, and I long to be with Saints. We are isolated here. I take comfort in that my companion understands the gospel so well and can explain it to his family.

He was called on recently to preach for the Brethren Church in Ottawa, their minister being sick. I rejoiced to hear the latter day gospel preached once more. It had been about a year since we had heard any of our brethren.

I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may grow in grace, and may have faith and courage to pass through the dark storms of life.

MRS. MABEL WRIGHT.

EVANSVILLE, WISCONSIN, February 23, 1913.

Dear Herald: When I read the letters from the Saints of different parts of the world, I feel that I ought to add my testimony. I have been baptized a little over a year; and I must confess that this is the true and only true gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

When I first heard this gospel I did not pay much attention to it, for I was a member of the German Lutheran Church, and I thought that one church was just as good as another, so long as one did the best he could. I always had a desire to do good. I really did not care very much for any church. Nevertheless, I believed that there was a God, as I was taught in school in Germany.

Brother J. O. Dutton was the first elder I heard preach. Later I heard Brother Flint. I became interested, especially in the apostasy of the primitive church. My mother was the first of the family baptized. When I heard of it I told her they would never get me in the creek, but later I followed.

Pray for me, Saints, that I may be faithful.

RICHARD GRASSHOF.

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, February 22, 1913.

Editors Herald: Since my last letter I have undergone the greatest trial of my life. I trust that I have passed through the worst of it. Only faith in Jesus Christ and his everlasting gospel, and the encouragement of the dear Saints here, upheld me. I have at times been very weak and discouraged.

The latter part of January we had with us Brethren E. F. Robertson and J. W. Davis, who were on their return from the Australian Mission, coming to the General Conference. They were with us only a week, visiting from here the most important places of the Holy Land. Their only too short stay brought to us many blessings and much encouragement.

Through their instrumentality and that of Brother Rees Jenkins, I realized the fulfillment of a dream which I formerly had. In this dream I was very much surprised to see myself with Brother Jenkins and two others of the brethren occupying as an elder. This dream had its literal fulfillment. The "modern Diogenes," as an elder of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, without the lamp formerly carried, desires now to let shine the light of the everlasting gospel into hearts and minds of honest people, to the glory of God.

Nevertheless, I would like to emphasize as with a burning lamp the necessity and importance of sanctification, not only of the spirit, but of body,—the habitation of the spirit. Mens sana in corpore sano; this old Latin phrase, which means, A sound, healthy mind, in a sound, healthy body, is now as true as in olden times. If we keep our blood and body pure, we help in a great measure the development of our mind and spirit, and I am sure that the Spirit of God does not abide in an unclean temple, in an impure vessel. Since the spirit is bound to the body, the relationship between both, the influence of each upon the other, have an effect one upon the other. Impure thoughts, immorality, passions, such as hatred, envy, covetousness, have their effect upon the body, and vice versa, the condition of the physical being has its effect upon the spirit.

Many temptations we might easily forego if in addition to earnest prayer for strength and help from the Lord, we, ourselves would do our part through a pure bodily life, to strengthen our nervous systems, cleanse our blood, and regulate the circulation thereof. Is it not expecting too much of our Lord when we every day through unclean food and drink, unsuitable clothing, neglect of fresh air, irritate the blood and nerves and create in our bodies the seed of disease, is it not asking too much of our heavenly Father, to at once remove from us the results of unrighteous living, we ourselves continuing in the old way? Every cause has a certain effect, and the justice and mercy of the living God finds its most complete expression when we forsake our evil ways and live righteously before him, spiritually and bodily.

Therefore, we should do what we can, with the help of the Lord, to cleanse our temples so that the Spirit of God may enter, to abide, ruling more and more over the whole man, forming us more and more into His likeness. What we can do, the Lord will never do; but when we make our best efforts, the Lord will do the rest and show us more and more what we can and should do. The sanctification of the body must be continued, although we are growing more and more in spirituality and climbing to higher altitudes; the same as a child has to practice, yet in the higher school, the principles learned in the primary school.

As we are called Saints, we should be saints according to the body as well as according to the spirit. And we should be in the forefront in all movements which seek to bring about a more simple, natural life, through the medium of food, clothing, healthy homes and occupations, avoiding the evil influences of the modern, unnatural culture.

We have in the Bible much counsel, not only for our spiritual, but also for our bodily welfare. And in the restoration of the everlasting gospel, we have the "word of wisdom." This kind of advice we should observe very closely, to preserve us from sickness, sin, and misery. In the light of these revelations we should not be thoughtless machines, but should ponder over the word of God, going out and coming in, rising and retiring, using the intelligence the Lord has given us. We should consider the word of wisdom a fundamental upon which to build, a leading principle, not being satisfied to observe these principles more or less, and allow ourselves many other things which the Lord has not named in his revelation, and Satan has introduced to poison humanity. Neither should we wait for new revelations in this line, after having the directing principles; we should not ask for more details, for instance how to cook, how to dress, etc.; because the Lord wishes that we study and subdue the earth, and acknowledge the good wherever we find it.

As I had observed the word of wisdom, without knowing it, for more than ten years, and the hygienic principles of the Bible nine years before I came into the church, about seven months ago, and as I have worked during these years in this line for the sanctification of body and spirit, together with my wife, who had given twenty years of her life to work along the same line, I would like to join any movement in our church which works for the uplifting of the hygienic principles of the Bible and the word of wisdom. I would like to see the members of the church come more and more to the front, not only in spiritual but also in bodily health and strength, and set an example to the whole world.

If we would help bring about the state of things prophesied for the millennial reign, we have need to rid ourselves of bodily weaknesses and diseases through a holy spiritual and bodily life. We need to strengthen our nervous systems through all religious means, so as to be able to fight the last spiritual battles just before us. Satan is doing his best to weaken us bodily, so as to overcome us easier spiritually. Let us therefore sacrifice our petty lusts and bad habits, and prepare ourselves bodily and spiritually for the trials and battles which are yet before us, that we may stand ready when our Lord Jesus Christ comes to set up his millennial reign of justice and peace. A pure life will help towards a pure heart, and only those pure in heart may inherit Zion.

Your brother in Christ Jesus,

F. L. T. Roos.

Extracts from Letters.

Mrs. E. G. Davis, Deckerville, Michigan: "We are few in number, being only three families, but are striving to do what we can. We had a Sunday school started, but had to close on account of sickness; hope if it is the Lord's will, we can start it again this year. I think if some good elder would come here there could be good done. As my health is not very good, I would ask the Saints to pray for me, that if it is God's will I may get strong."

Brother Levi Dungan, Kennebec, South Dakota: "We want to come to Missouri as soon as we can sell our property. There are no Saints in this part of the country, that we know of. We have not heard a sermon preached for about ten years. We have two sons who wish to be baptized, but there is no one here who has the authority to do it. Can you give us aid?"

Sister Ida Hall, Lamar, Nebraska: "There is no branch near here and only a few scattered Saints. Brother Prettyman preaches at Lamar about twice a year. There is a little band of Saints in Colorado. They have a nice little Sunday school, and are going to start prayer meeting soon."

Brother J. P. Weddle, Memphis, Tennessee: "There will be two Utah elders to see me to-morrow. I am going to put all my trust in the true and living God, that he may enable me to withstand the powers of Satan. It is my desire to let my light shine, and with a strong arm to help rescue those who are in the dark. I ask the prayers of the Saints."

Brother E. T. Rodwell, Burgesville, Ontario: "As we are few in number and living in a neighborhood which is very much opposed to our faith, we have to be very careful how we walk, for I believe we are watched on every hand. I love this latter day work. Our heavenly Father has blessed us many times in the past. My desire is to discharge my duty at all times, that I may live worthy of the name I bear. We have had two-day meetings in our grove and expect to try again this coming summer. We have had large crowds and we hope that some seed may have lodged in good ground and that we will have a branch in this part before long."

Brother Joseph Powell, Ravenwood, Missouri: "I have oft-times been encouraged by reading our church papers, and I am made to rejoice when I read of the progress of this work. I notice here in the Nodaway District nearly all the landmarks are gone over to their reward, and the work now rests upon the younger ones. I am glad to say that they are going forth in faith, trying to carry on the work which they have learned to love."

Brother J. M. Taylor, Big Fork, Arkansas: "There have been some Utah elders through this country. One of them stopped with us a few nights ago. I learned from him that they have twelve elders in this State, and from his tactics I suppose they are doing what they can to tear down the Reorganized Church."

Brother W. R. Rush, Boicourt, Kansas: "We should strive to become useful servants; not be idle in any way, nor be found talking about others, but striving to keep ourselves in the line of our whole duty. Thus will our lives be better sermons than we can preach by word of mouth. We are the light of the world, and we should strive to let all the light we have shine out to saint and sinner. Let us do what we can to prove the truth of the restored gospel."

News from Missions

Southern Missouri.

I have just closed one of the most successful meetings here that has ever been held in the branch. Held forth in the Saints' chapel, preaching fourteen sermons, baptizing eight dear souls into the kingdom, organized Sunday school, and established a prayer meeting. Closed last night with a full house and as fine interest as we could think of creating. Five more have said that they are going to be baptized in a little while. This will make about twenty new members for this little branch in a short time. Brother Grant Burgin has been doing a good work here, of late, having baptized four.

The Saints of the Southern Missouri District may look for a conference and big reunion with the Ava Branch this summer. We want all to begin now to get ready to come and stay until the close of these meetings.

The conference has just closed, and I see by my notebook that in the year that has past, I have preached one hundred seventy-two times, baptized twenty-seven, confirmed eighteen, assisted in eighteen meetings, sick calls, ten; held one debate, organized one Sunday school and made three good new openings.

May the Lord bless his Saints.

J. T. DAVIS.

Ohio.

I came to this part of my field after the holidays, deeming it wise to do so. Brother Jesse Hardin of Uniopolis accompanied me, it being his virgin effort in missionary work.

Arriving at Oak Harbor we found the Saints and friends busy in the effort to build a church. The rent for the Grange Hall used by them had been increased more than double, so they concluded to build. They set to work, appointed a building committee, got several hundred dollars subscribed, and all the help wanted to put up the building. Mr. J. M. Floro donated the land, also contributed some money. A friend, a carpenter, made out the bill for materials, size of the building, twenty-eight by forty, with fourteen-foot walls.

When we reached there, the foundation was laid, the frame up, and some of the sheathing on. We remained till it was closed in and ready for plastering. In the course of two weeks it was ready for the casings.

During this time, I was called to Conneautville, also to Sharon, doing labor at both places. When I returned I helped put the casings on, and finished the woodwork inside, doing some of the painting, also making a pulpit. In a month or six weeks seats are expected to be installed, and the building ready for occupancy.

The Saints and friends may now worship in a nice place of their own, without the friction incidental to the use of halls, or denominational buildings. The neighbors and friends have done well, both with their means and labor, for which we feel grateful. Long may this building stand to unfurl the banner of King Immanuel.

Your colaborer,

SAMUEL BROWN.

Honolulu.

Under separate cover I am sending you marked copies of the Honolulu Star Bulletin and the Pacific Commercial Advertiser, in which an account is given of the funeral of Brother Joseph M. Poepoe, which took place Sunday, April 13, 1913. On account of the prominent part which the departed brother took in the development of our work in Hawaii, I thought it fitting that his death should receive special notice in the HERALD.

Joseph Mokuohai Poepoe was born on March 27, 1852, at North Kohala, Hawaii. He was educated in the Royal School and at Ahuimanu. He taught school for about two years, and then took up the study of law, which profession he followed until death, being licensed to practice before all courts in these islands.

As a scholar, he has been equaled by few Hawaiians. Besides being fluent in both English and Hawaiian, he was well versed in French, Latin, and Hebrew. He was recognized as one of the best living authorities on the Hawaiian language, customs, etc. And, in fact, was one of the grand old men among the Hawaiians, of whom there are but few left. The deceased was a close friend to the late King Kalakaua, and other members of the royal family.

He was the second man to be baptized into our church in these islands, which event took place April 3, 1891, Elder Albert Haws officiating. He began at once to act as an interpreter in the church, and on August 16, 1891, he was ordained a priest. On September 17, 1892, he was ordained an elder, which office he held until April, 1894, when he resigned from the priesthood.

Following is a list of the most important translations done by the brother: In 1891, a tract on succession in the office of prophet and president of the church, and also one on baptism were printed in Hawaiian, and a small paper was also published for a time called the Gospel Messenger (Elele Eumanelio).

March 6, 1893, arrangement was made to translate the Doctrine and Covenants, which was completed and printed in September, 1895, Elder Clapp assisting.

November 9, 1898, the Hawaiian edition of the Book of Mormon was printed, the translation up to and including the third chapter of Alma, being the work of Brother Poepoe. He also translated articles of interest from the church papers which were printed in the Hawaiian newspapers here from time to time.

At the time of his death he was the teacher of the Hawaiian class at both Sunday school and Religio. He was serving his first term in the Hawaiian territorial legislature as a representative from the fifth district, island of Oahu. He was sick only a short time, having been at his desk in the legislature on Monday and Tuesday. Wednesday he was confined to his bed with what was supposed to be la grippe, and being worse on Thursday, Elder Barrett and I were called to administer to him, which we did about one o'clock p. m. He received benefit and after we left was up and around the house. He had an attack later which the doctor pronounced heart trouble, and passed away about fifteen minutes to four. After he realized that he was going he counseled the family to stay by the church.

In life he had espoused a cause which was not popular, yet few people receive the honors he did at death. The house of representatives took charge and gave him a state funeral. His body lay in state in the capital building from six p. m. Saturday until Sunday at three p. m. This building was the royal palace in the days of the monarchy, and the room where the services were held was the throne room.

In delivering the funeral address I stood directly in front of the platform upon which the throne originally sat, and as all the high officials of the territory and city were present, including the governor and mayor, it was rather a trying event for us all. We were wishing Elder Waller were here.

In the brief time given we did not have time to tell them very much, but I gave them to understand that the deceased was not a Utah Mormon, as many thought, and I explained how there were two churches, giving briefly their difference, and showing that the Book of Mormon condemned polygamy.

One of the senators present was a leading Utah Mormon, and I suppose there were many of them in the crowd, and they did not like it. It also makes some of the other so-called Christians feel bad to find we are in favor of morality and virtue. It was the first and will probably be the last time that I will have such an audience. I hope it may have been of profit to some.

We are doing what we can to spread the work here in Honolulu during Brother Waller's absence, and are anxiously waiting for news from conventions and conference.

With best wishes and kind regards from all the mission force.

In gospel bonds,

M. A. McCONLEY.

HONOLULU, TERRITORY OF HAWAII, April 15, 1913.

"Nearly 2,000 persons gathered at the capital building yesterday to witness the funeral services over the body of the late Representative J. M. Poepoe and nearly one hundred vehicles formed the procession that followed the remains to their last resting place at Nuuanu Cemetery. In the crowd that witnessed the service and paid homage to the memory of the departed were the representative territorial and county officials, including the governor, the territorial secretary, the mayor and the entire membership of both branches of the legislature.

"Outside the building the Royal Hawaiian Band played mournful airs; in the old throne room, where the casket reposed in state, a choir of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, of which Mr. Poepoe had been a member and leader, sang hymnals appropriate to the occasion.

"Chaplain Akaiko Akana, of the house of representatives, offered prayer and read a scriptural selection; Miss Bernice Kakanamoku sang the solo, "One sweetly solemn thought," and Elder M. A. McConley spoke, narrating the religious activities of Poepoe's life. In the course of his talk Elder McConley took occasion to explain wherein the sect to which the representative belonged, differs from the Mormon Church of Utah, stating the Reorganized Church does not believe in plural marriage.

"The service ended with a prayer by Elder Barrett, after which the casket was moved to the hearse and the procession formed, moving up King Street and out Nuuanu Street to the cemetery.

"Senators Judd, Baker, and Pali, and Representatives Sheldon, Paele, and Paxson served as honorary pallbearers. The band led the procession from the cemetery gate to the grave, where interment was given and the little mound heaped high with the floral offerings of the scores of friends of the deceased and his family."—Honolulu Star-Bulletin, April 14, 1913.

Utah.

My last was dated January 7, hence will begin just where I left off. On the 9th, Elder J. M. Stubbart joined me at Elsinore, and on the following morning, cold, bright, and early, we moved on southward, close behind our gospel team. Landed in Joseph City, and through the kindness of Bishop Christensen we were permitted the use of both their ward house and schoolhouse during the week. Were kindly cared for by a Mr. William Shelton, and others.

On the 13th, we speeded on southward, over mountain and dale, looping the loop, and twisting the twist,—got lost twice in a wilderness, without a house or soul in sight, regained our course, passed through, and over the seemingly impossible, winding the wind; and just as night was about to overtake us, we pulled up at the home of a Mr. Nels Rasmussen, where we were kindly entertained.

After exchanging thoughts along gospel lines a day or two, we moved on in our "ought-to-go-billy" to Marysville. Here no one would keep us for love or money, except at an inn. We hired a bed at fifty cents per night, and took our meals from a shoe box,—a lunch put up by Sister Lorenson a few days before (bless her soul). Hunger made our meals taste just fine, although frozen dry and hard.

While here I formed the acquaintance of a Mr. Jeremiah Dennis, a brother of Sister Frank Young, of Lamoni, Iowa. On learning who we were and from where we came he at once handed a full wheel to the landlady of the Grand Hotel, and remarked: "Give these men their dinner," which she did, but no more. May God reward the giver, who invited us to his home three and one half miles out of town. While here we had the use of the Methodist Episcopal church. About six attended the first night, and one the next. The following morning fifty cents was the charge for six cold, doughy biscuits, buttered, and two cups of water. The lady, I was informed, was a Brighamite, and she told me that she boarded and gave lodging to the Mormon missionaries free of charge; but of course we were not of that dye.

Our next stop was at Kingston. Here Bishop R. A. Allen granted us the use of the ward house, but after the first night requested that one or more of their elders should review us each night. Nothing would have suited us better, only it was hardly fair play for us to be in the lead all the time; but it was either that or nothing, hence we waded in, followed by Doctor A. M. Blanchard, M. D. Allen, and William J. Luke. We continued about one week, when the bishop cried enough. However, Bishop Allen acted the part of a gentleman throughout. In one of these reviews, M. D. Allen gave the quotation wherein Brigham Young made the statement that the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants were not worth their ashes, as compared with the living oracles. We were thankful for that admission, as we have been charged with manufacturing that statement out of whole cloth (as a church). Here we were kindly entertained by A. C. Peterson and T. F. Young and their families.

From thence to Circleville, where we have one lone sister, Mrs. Thomas, (formerly Miss Barton of Greenville). Here we applied to Bishop Peterson for their ward house, and were told that we might use it one night if we would agree not to tear down their church. As that would prevent us from quoting from the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price, to which they lay claim as their standards, (but in claim only, seemingly), we refused to be bridled, and secured the use of the schoolhouse. We held forth three nights, attendance quite small; not on account of abusing their church or any other denomination, however. We do not believe in abuse, unless facts are abuse. Facts are facts, and that is what hurts. A church that can not stand that pressure must fall sooner or later; the church we represent included. We need have no fear whatever of being tried by the books, history included; and we will not bridle our opponents, either. Let them fire away; our fortifications are impregnable.

Our next stop was at Panguitch, where we were made welcome by Mr. Thomas Haycock and family, and treated with great courtesy. They are members of the Brighamite Church, but he does not work at the trade. Here we obtained the use of the courthouse. Called on Mr. Fred E. Eldridge, editor of the Panguitch Progress, who printed handbills, and notice of our meetings in his paper, free of charge. However, and notwithstanding the fact that the town had been so well billed, only a few attended the meetings, while at the same time the skating rink, theater, picture shows, etc., were well patronized. The pleasures of this world were hindrances at Circleville, also.

I should have stated that while at Circleville we were kindly cared for by Mr. George Horton and J. C. Whitticar. Panguitch was the home and hiding place of the much married John D. Lee, of Mountain Meadow fame, and his perforated body is here numbered in the city of the dead.

Our next move was across the mountain to Greenville, where we were hospitably cared for by Mr. Daniel Barton and others. Held a few meetings at Mr. P. Jack Barton's. From thence to Milford, where we put up at Hugh J. Barton's. Chances for holding meetings there were not inviting, so we went to the Red Warrior, a mining camp, to the home of Sister E. J. Davidson and her sons, Grant and V. M. Here we held a few meetings in a tent schoolhouse, with few in attendance. Thence to Deseret, where I again left my collaborer, and went to Provo. Held a number of well-attended meetings at the home of Brother and Sister J. H. Carter, thence to Salt Lake City, to attend district conference. That over, I went to Malad City, Idaho, where I followed Elder A. M. Chase in holding a series of very interesting meetings, notwithstanding the rain, snow, and mud. It was talk, talk, talk, day and night—the joy of my life. My next stop was Logan; from there I went to Pocatello, Idaho, by request, and held meetings at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Daniels. Thence to Ogden and Salt Lake City, where I packed my trunk and departed for Denver, Colorado.

Here I visited my brother, N. Chrestensen and wife; had not seen him for over thirty years. Thence to Lincoln, Nebraska, where I called on another brother that I had not met for about the same length of time. At both the last named places I was called on to break the bread of life to noble bands of Saints, the latter remembering the needs of the missionary from a financial standpoint.

Let me say in conclusion, that the Saints and friends in my mission have been very kind to me in every respect. There will ever be a warm feeling in my heart for them. With reluctance I gave them the parting hand; but took comfort in the thought that I carried the good will of the Saints with me. So ends my labors for another conference year.

I trust that God will accept my feeble efforts.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of Mission Number 13, comprising Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida: Having been placed in charge of the gospel work in the above States, I take this means to address you. I consider we are intrusted with the greatest work on earth, that of assisting in building up the kingdom of God.

I enter upon our work this year with great hope and confidence in the assurance that if we do our part God will not forsake us. Jesus said, "Without me you can do nothing"; also in Doctrine and Covenants we read: "Behold I speak unto you and also to all those who have desire to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care." Remember these injunctions are still in force. I hope we will have these qualifications; if so, our work will be effectual.

I select the following brethren to assist me in charge: Hubert Case, Western Oklahoma; B. F. Renfro, Central Oklahoma; W. P. Bootman, Eastern Oklahoma; J. T. Riley, Arkansas and Louisiana; F. M. Slover, Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, and Florida. The brethren laboring in the above districts and States may report to the men in charge; those in Texas may report direct to me. Reporting dates are, July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1.

The financial arm of the church is not in as good condition as it should be. One reason for this is, some have not done their part in paying their tithing, and consecrations. I believe the fault is to some extent with the ministry; they have been too backward in teaching this subject. Let us see to it that this part of the work does not lag.

I think in our preaching we ought to avoid personal attacks on other denominations. Preach our gospel in the affirmative,—tell the people what we have and why we have it. In this way we will make more friends, and convert more people. If we are attacked we have the right to defend; but let us work on the defensive. We will then have the sympathy of the people, and do more for the cause we represent. Also, I think we should preach more sermons in a place where we have an interest, and do less traveling, thus saving expenses. Our missionary work takes on the form of visiting too much sometimes.

Those who have their families in the field should not count the time spent at home as in the field. When our year's work is done, I hope we can look over the reports and say of all, They have done well.

My home address will be Independence, Missouri, 824 South Crysler Street. Mail sent there any time will be forwarded to me.

APRIL 29, 1913.

To the Saints of Mission Number 11, the Great Lakes Mission, comprising Ontario, Quebec, Wisconsin, Michigan North-eastern Illinois, and Northern Indiana; Greeting: It has pleased the appointing powers to place me as minister in charge of this field for this year, and I hope that I shall have the cooperation of both the ministry and the Saints. The gospel work is intrusted to us all. All can assist in some way or other. I hope that those of the local ministry will assist as much as possible to move the work along by getting out appointments where you live and filling them, so that the work near you may not suffer, while the missionary force is pushing out into new places as much as possible.

The conference just closed was a good one, indeed, causing us to take fresh courage for the work before us. No doubt the Master will assist us if we do our part well. Do what you can, and all you can, to build up the work of God. The church needs your help, both spiritual and financial. Help while you can, where you can, and the future will find you rejoicing over the work accomplished.

I desire that the following brethren should assist me as helpers in taking charge of the following fields:

O. E. Sade, in charge of Kewanee, Illinois, District, assisted by C. E. Willey and John R. Grice.

J. O. Dutton, in charge of Northeastern Illinois District, assisted by C. H. Burr, W. A. McDowell, David Dowker, and J. A. Bronson.

E. J. Goodenough, in charge of Southern Wisconsin District, assisted by L. O. Wildermuth and A. E. Gratz.

A. L. Whiteaker, in charge of Northern Wisconsin District, assisted by Leonard Houghton and B. C. Flint.

Arthur Allen, in charge of Eastern Michigan District, assisted by William Grice, Otto Fetting, and Elmer Marshall.

Brethren H. E. C. Muir, R. D. Weaver, and John Shields will labor in both the Chatham and London Districts.

Arthur Leverton will labor in the Chatham District.

R. C. Longhurst will labor in the London District.

Brethren James Pycoc, W. D. Ellis, G. C. Tomlinson, and S. G. St. John will labor in the Toronto District. J. T. Thompson will labor in the Toronto District after October 1.

S. O. Foss will labor on Manitoulin Island.

Reports should be made to me and sent to my home address, 426 South River Boulevard, Independence, Missouri, at reporting times, which are July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. Secure your blanks on which to report at the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. Please report promptly, as it will greatly assist me in making my report to the First Presidency.

I hope that all will feel free to write me when necessary, as I desire to keep in touch with the work in the different parts of the field.

Hoping that our works may be approved of the Master whom we seek to serve, and our labors together be in the spirit of brotherly kindness and charity,

I remain in gospel bonds.

The Bishopric.

To the Saints of Spring River and Central Oklahoma Districts; Greeting: Having just closed one of the most important and far-reaching conferences that has ever come to the church, I feel to congratulate you as the people of God, and assure you that our work was never on a more prosperous and permanent basis.

As our noble ministry for Christ go out to their appointed work, leaving home and loved ones, I hope and firmly believe our hearty cooperation with them and God will not be wanting, but that a keen sense of personal responsibility will be felt, and a faithful, loving effort to assist in the redemption of mankind will stimulate us all to renewed diligence and service.

Let us not forget our duty in tithes and offerings, so that the work will not be hindered; and let the watchword be one of courage and on to the victory.

Your brother in Christ,

ELLIS SHORT, Bishop of Districts.

Correction—"Exponent."

Please note the following and mark it in your Exponent, current quarter:

On page 71, lesson 1, under caption, "Whom God loves he proves," this question occurs: "If God intended that Abraham should kill Isaac why did he not tell him to offer him as a sacrifice?"

The not is in the wrong place. It should read: "If God did not intend Abraham should kill Isaac why did he tell him to offer him as a sacrifice?"

Again on page 74, lesson 7, May 18, the "aim" is given thus: "To show God's people may be governed by law." It should read, "Aim: To show God's people must be governed by law."

These errors crept in when the typist copied the editor's manuscript and were printed as submitted.

EDITOR OF Exponent.

THE CHURCH AND SOCIAL SERVICE.

During the past decade the popular Protestant churches have awakened to a keener sense of the fact that Christianity should be of practical benefit to humanity. They have laid increasing stress upon that which they termed "social service." Whether or not this is to be a great saving element that will stay the decline and dissolution of Protestantism; long predicted by Catholics, or merely a passing fad, it is too early to determine. Time tests all movements among men. The ephemeral pass away, the permanent remain. Let us trust that this particular movement, so commendable in its essence, will prove to be permanent.

This change is due, first, to an awakening sense of the brotherhood of man among a considerable class of people, who are honestly desirous of helping those who most need their help, thus following in the footsteps of their Master; and second, to a spirit of self-preservation, which is somewhat selfish in its desires. It has been evident for a number of years that the Protestant churches are losing their hold on the common people. A great problem that has confronted pastors has been how to hold the laboring man. The failure to solve this problem has resulted in rapidly emptying churches, sustained by a small class of wealthy or well-to-do people.

The average man has begun to think that he can find in fraternal orders, trade unions, insurance societies, political parties, and clubs, all the benefits that he requires in this world,—and his interest in the world to come seems to have lessened. Consequently he looks to institutions outside of the churches for fellowship, and for benefits, both material and mental or spiritual.

Viewing this situation with alarm, many church members have set themselves to the task of making the church more effectual as an agent in bestowing social benefits, with the intent to attract this dissatisfied element, so that the churches may rehabilitate themselves and regain their former prestige and power in the community.

It must be evident to the thoughtful that conditions in the world are such that there is a broad field where men and women may serve humanity in the name of the Man of Galilee. Ritualism and dogmatism have served their day. The churches are on trial. The demand of the age is for practical Christianity, and if it is demonstrated that Protestantism is not practical, its doom is sealed.

It would be but natural that any organization formed by man, with purely human wisdom, should be taken by surprise, as it were, by changing conditions in the world, and its adherents find themselves obliged to change their structural plan in order to perform tasks for which their organic structure was not originally fitted. But in a church founded by divine direction, we may expect to find provision made for changing conditions, and a certain complexity of organism that will enable the church to perform its labors under changing conditions from century to century.

We believe that we find in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, evidence that God was fully aware of modern needs long before they developed.

The church is organically fitted to perform many functions of "social service," and provision is made in the divine law so that work along that line may be elaborated to any degree necessary.

The preaching of the gospel is the first and greatest act of social service. This is true from a theological standpoint and also from a philosophical standpoint. Theologically, the preaching of the gospel is the means by which men and women are saved from eternal loss and misery in the world to come, and are brought into a condition of everlasting happiness and peace. This is the thought that has inspired missionaries to make untold sacrifices and endure great hardships in all ages of the world.

But there is another phase of this question that justifies the preacher in the thought that he is performing a great service to society as well as to the individual. The teachings of Jesus Christ are of a nature to make men and women better citizens here and now. They contain the antidote for every known social poison that is corrupting the social system.

The teachings of Jesus strike at the immorality, the greed, the dishonesty, the reckless atheism, and the cruelty of this age. And those who go out preaching the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation, here and hereafter, are helping to reform individuals, thus aiding in building up a social structure composed of units having virtue and merit. Humanity can not be reformed in the mass.

You may talk of reformations, of the economic plan,
That shall stem the social evil in its course,
But the ancient sin of nations must be got at in the man,
If you want to cleanse a river, seek the source.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

The church is divinely organized to carry out its work of preaching the gospel. No other organization or church whatsoever, so far as we have knowledge, was ever so well equipped and organized to carry on its propaganda. It is not necessary to enumerate the divisions of the priesthood, the Twelve, the Seventy, high priests, elders, evangelists, and others, whose duty it is to preach the word, not only to the stranger and the unconverted, in new territory and in old, but also to strengthen and build up the membership in local organizations.

In addition to this, we have those officers whose duty it is to labor from house to house. Of the priest it is said, "The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and to attend to all family duties."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 10.

This is intimate and personal work in the homes of the people; such work, in one sense, as is performed by "social settlement workers" who move from house to house working among the people, trying to lift them to higher planes of living. These officers are set in the church to visit the homes of all members, exhorting them to attend to all family duties, keeping themselves upright and honorable. This is splendid work in the interests of good citizenship. When properly done, it will surely equal in thoroughness and usefulness any arrangement of bureaus or committees that men could devise.

Then there are those other men who are officers set in the church, whose duty it is to look after the poor and needy. While all persons are enjoined to feed the hungry and clothe the naked, visit the fatherless and the widow, God recognizes that sporadic charity is not sufficient. There must be organized distribution of material benefits among the people, and an intelligent effort to help men and women to a position where they can become self-sustaining. The presiding bishop, with his counselors, and the bishops, with their counselors, and the bishop's agents, are a great working force throughout the church, engaging in "social service," seeking out the poor, and helping those who need advice, counsel, or material assistance, caring for the fatherless, and aiding and assisting the widow.

This division of labor meets a need that was discovered in the days of the apostles. While in the early days of the church it was said that all things were laid at the apostles' feet (Acts 4:35), there came a time when these men concluded that it was not meet for them to "serve tables" when there was such great demand for missionary work in all the world (Acts 6:2), so others were set apart to engage in the ministering of material things, while these men prosecuted their spiritual labor. And so to this day there continues a line, at times rather indistinctly drawn, between the department of spiritual things, and the department of temporalities, so called, though it is true that the two overlap, and men engaged in either department constantly perform labor calculated to assist those engaged in the other department.

Nor is this all. There is a provision in the law under which the people may be organized to any degree desired to engage in any form of "social service" that changing times and changing social and industrial conditions may require. Section 101:2 of Doctrine and Covenants says: "It is wisdom in me; therefore, a commandment I give unto you, that ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship." While in section 128:1 we read: "The conditions surrounding the work, the increase of the membership of the church, the increasing desire for gathering together, and the necessity existing for the obtaining places for settlement in the regions round about, under the existing laws of the United States, and especially the State of Missouri, requires that the bishopric be authorized to take such measures as will bring to pass the organization of those who are desirous and willing to form parts in colonization under terms of association in different localities where settlements may be made and may lawfully secure and hold property for the benefit of themselves and their fellow church members and the whole body of the church when organized."

In the sixth paragraph of this same revelation we read: "The great variety of callings, avocations, and professions will present difficulties precluding the practicability of all settling and living in near proximity to each other. It is therefore within the province of those upon whom the burden of organization may rest to provide for other organizations or associations than those simply pastoral or agricultural. Under this head there may be placed industrial associations of such sorts as the varied qualifications existing among workmen may demand."

It will be discovered from reading this paragraph that all sorts of organizations may be developed in time among workmen of different callings and vocations, so that the spirit of the gospel may permeate every corner of the social structure within the church, and the spirit of mutual helpfulness be given practical form among all classes of people.

This editorial does not attempt to cover all lines of thought suggested by our topic, but enough is brought to mind to convince us that provision is made within the church for many forms of "social service" among members of the church, and even among those who are not numbered with us, following the injunction of the Apostle Paul to do good unto all men, but especially unto those of the household of faith.

Nor has the Lord forbidden us to cooperate to an extent with other denominations, or with people not of any denomination, who may be engaged in the service of humanity, providing we do not become allied with any organization that is forbidden in the law, or neglect our first great work of building up the kingdom. The extent to which we may cooperate with our neighbors not of the church must be determined by our own judgment, assisted by such good counsel as we may secure, and by the Spirit that is promised to guide and direct us in all of our efforts in the search after truth.

The Lord tells us that the Saints "can not withdraw themselves so completely from a qualified dependence upon their Gentile neighbors surrounding them as to be free from intercommunication with them." But he assures us that in this intercommunication we should continue to be, in our character and dealings, those of whom it may be said that they are in the world but not of the world.

In the past we have not always been permitted to labor with others in social service, even when we have been willing to do so. Some of our men have been denied membership in ministerial alliances wherein they have thought that they could assist others in securing civic reforms, and our delegates were denied entrance into the councils of the federation of Protestant churches in America, some years ago. But these prejudices are breaking down in some sections, and there will probably be many opportunities for men and women of the church to cooperate with other people not of the church in securing needed reforms in the city or State, or even the Nation at large. And we find no provision in the law forbidding them engaging in such work; in fact, the spirit of the law would certainly uphold them in such activities.

Some of the services required by humanity are now performed by the Government, and are involved more or less in political activities. It is not the function of the church to enter the political arena, nor should the members become involved in partisan strife and bitterness; but they, as individuals, are left free to support any party that in their opinion justly claims their allegiance, with the injunction found in Doctrine and Covenants 95:2: "And now, verily I say unto you, concerning the laws of the land, It is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them, and that law of the land, which is constitutional, supporting that principle of freedom, in maintaining rights and privileges belongs to all mankind and is justifiable before me; therefore, I, the Lord, justifieth you, and your brethren of my church, in befriending that law which is the constitutional law of the land; and as pertaining to law of man, whatsoever is more or less than these, cometh of evil. I, the Lord God, maketh you free; therefore, ye are free indeed: and the law also maketh you free; nevertheless when the wicked rule the people mourn; wherefore honest men and wise men should be sought for, diligently, and good men and wise men, ye should observe to uphold; otherwise whatsoever is less than these, cometh of evil."

There are those who contend that we should have a "government of laws" instead of a "government of men," meaning that certain great principles of law should continue to govern in the affairs of the Nation, unchanged from generation to generation, while men shall come and go.

There are others who habitually look for some great and strong man to arise as a leader, solve all problems, impress his personality upon his era, and lead the people on to higher ground.

Whether we advocate the one idea, or the other, or a wise commingling of the two, we are left free under this law to sustain and support all good legislation which is constitutional, and to seek after and sustain those men in office who are honest, wise, and good. And this is as great a liberty as we could ask for in reason.

So, while the church as a body may seldom express itself on any particular question of legislation calculated to be of service to humanity, individuals are left free to sustain and support such measures as may appeal to them as being of service to society at large. Whether proposed legislation is really calculated to be of social benefit, remains for the individual to decide when he exercises his right of franchise, either directly for or against the proposed legislation, or indirectly in choosing legislators who favor or oppose it.

From this rather hasty review of the situation we conclude that the church is organized to perform many and valuable functions of social service, and individual members are left free to engage in many functions of like nature, cooperating with other citizens in seeking such limited reforms as may be secured by legislation, for we hold that legislation of a remedial nature has its definite limitations, beyond which it can accomplish nothing, and agree with Lyman Abbott, when he says: "Law can do something. But law can not make a humane community out of cruel men, nor a catholic community out of intolerant men, nor a great age out of sordid men."

While we heartily support those legislative measures that aid good men and restrain bad men, we recognize that in this matter men are of supreme importance, and pure laws on the statute books of a rotten people count for little. So we revert to the thought that the preaching of the gospel, and the "follow-up" work of practical Christianity among those who have accepted the gospel, is of primary importance, as this is the work that gives society her pillars and foundation stones,—regenerated men and women. This is the specific work of the church, and men divinely called and set apart for that work can not well afford to neglect it for anything else, no matter how urgent the appeal may seem to be.

The work of the organizations previously mentioned, as contemplated in the law, includes the securing of employment (a stewardship), and a home (an inheritance), for every worthy man, and support for the widow and the fatherless, as well as the helpless. Surely this is "social service" of a high order, and in this, as in other things, if we but awake to our privileges, we need not sit at the knees of others to learn, but will be among those sent out to teach, and not to be taught. The extent to which such a work may be developed under the provisions of the law can not by any means be judged by that which has been accomplished. Our success in the future will be measured by our willingness, and will not be limited by any structural weakness in the organization, or lack of divine forethought and provision to equip the church for the needs of the Twentieth Century.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WORK AGAINST VICE.—According to reports that seem authoritative a school is to be opened at Washington, District of Columbia, for the purpose of instructing men and women in the best methods of working against the white slave traffic, and for the reclaiming of abandoned girls and women. Similar schools are expected to be organized elsewhere. In the light of the investigations of recent years which reveal the fact that there are in the United States thousands of men and women making a business of securing girls and women for immoral purposes, and that there are in the country hundreds of thousands of women and girls in houses of disorder; the need of such schools, and of organized effort is immediately apparent.

REPRESENTATIVES AT PEACE CONGRESS.—At the late American Peace Congress, held at Saint Louis, the church was represented by Brethren F. M. Sheehy and J. W. Rushton, of the Quorum of Twelve, and T. J. Elliott and Russell Archibald, of Saint Louis.

BUSINESS EXPANDS.—The Electrical Department of the Herald Publishing House is materially extending its facilities. The two sixty horse-power boilers now in use are to be disposed of to make way for two new boilers of two hundred horsepower each. A new boiler room is to be built, and the one now in use to be reserved for additional engine room. A new engine of two hundred and fifty horsepower will be installed. Besides furnishing light and power for the Herald Publishing House, the electrical department furnishes light and power for Lamoni, Kellerton, Iowa, twelve miles away; and for Davis City, Iowa, eight miles away. The management contemplates extending electrical lines to other neighboring towns. A new ice plant is under construction, and Lamoni will soon be using ice manufactured under Herald Publishing House management.

THE RECESSIONAL.

God of our fathers, known of old—
Lord of our far-flung battle line—
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

The tumult and the shouting dies—
The captains and the kings depart—
Still stands thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

Far-called, our navies melt away—
On dune and headland sinks the fire—
Lo, all our pomp of yesterday
Is one with Nineveh and Tyre!
Judge of the nations, spare us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

If, drunk with sight of power, we loose
Wild tongues that have not thee in awe—
Such boasting as the Gentiles use,
Or lesser breeds without the Law—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

For heathen heart that puts her trust
In reeking tube and iron shard—
All valiant dust that builds on dust
And guarding, calls not thee to guard,
For frantic boast and foolish word,
Thy mercy on thy people, Lord!

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM

OR

THE CURRENT REFORMATION IN CONTRAST WITH
TRUTH REVEALED.—PART 2.

BY E. E. LONG.

THE BRUSH RUN CHURCH ORGANIZED.

The Christian Association was a failure, and the next important step was to further perfect their organization, when on May 4, 1811, the association was organized into the "Brush Run Church," with twenty-nine members. (Sketches of Our Pioneers, pp. 26 and 37.)

From Grafton we read:

Upon the failure of this well-meant effort, nothing remained for the members of the association in their desire for church fellowship, but to resolve themselves into an independent church. Thomas Campbell, with great reluctance, finally gave his consent that steps should be taken to effect such an organization, and a meeting for this purpose was appointed for May 4, 1811. At this meeting it was proposed that admission to membership should be granted to those who gave satisfactory answer to the question, "What is the meritorious cause of a sinner's acceptance with God?" To this test question, which was never again propounded, thirty gave satisfactory answers, and were enrolled as the members of the new church. Thomas Campbell, the originator and leader of the movement, was selected as the elder, four deacons were chosen, and Alexander Campbell, whose great talents were now recognized, was licensed to preach the gospel. Thus was formally organized a distinct religious communion, known as the "Brush Run Church," a veritable church in the wilderness.—Life of A. Campbell, pp. 78, 79.

And so we have a church organized with an elder and four deacons, and another man licensed to preach the gospel, but not yet ordained. What about that "approved precedent"? Where did they find it? In the Bible? Nay, verily! We have heard them vehemently deny, in public discussion, that the Campbells ever started or founded a church, but in their writings they affirm that they did.

So far as we have been able to learn, Thomas Campbell, the leader to date, had neither license nor ordination other than that which he received in the Seceder Church, and we are gravely told that they were restoring the primitive church after the apostolic pattern!

Turning to Luke 6: 12, 13, we read:

And it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and he continued all night in prayer to God. And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles.

Mark 3: 14 says:

And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach.

Jesus, himself, said:

Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go forth and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain.—John 15: 16.

Here we have the "apostolic pattern," as given by the Master. Later when men were placed in office the pattern was scrupulously followed.

Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; . . . as they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away.—Acts 13: 1-3.

The call and ordination of men in the apostolic church was something more than a mere assumption on the part of those set apart. How different the initial steps in the "current reformation." However, Alexander undertook a step in advance of his father. We read:

Having first convinced himself of the scripturalness of his position, he was ordained to the ministry upon the recommendation of the Brush Run Church on the first day of the new year, 1812. He had already, as we have seen, been doing acceptable work as a preacher, but he felt that the time had come that his life must be irrevocably dedicated to religious work. He did not regard the ceremony of ordination as conferring any authority which he did not already possess, but as a public testimony that the person ordained possessed the necessary authority.—Grafton, p. 84.

So Mr. Campbell assumed the right to exercise divine prerogatives, and when he was finally ordained it was simply upon the recommendation of the "body" he had helped to create, and of which he was a part. What did such an ordination, if it may be called such, amount to? Indeed, he recognized the fact that no authority was conferred. Then the whole thing was mere mimicry. A farce. Where is the evidence that his position was scriptural? Can any man among his followers point to a single precedent?

So now we have it. He begins to preach, gets a license, is ordained, but not yet baptized. It would seem from the foregoing scriptures that the Campbells got the cart before the horse in their efforts at "restoration" of the apostolic faith. If their "self-evolved efforts" were faulty as to the origin of their movement, we need not be surprised to find the thread running the entire length of the fabric.

Mr. Grafton continues:

The new church was to be a beacon-light calling the attention of the world to the prayer of the Master that "They all may be one." Farther than this it did not, at this time, seem prepared to go. Its members had not even stopped to consider the logical conclusions to which their own principles would lead them. The plan of salvation, the form and meaning of baptism, and many other questions that were dividing the religious world, had not as yet claimed their serious attention.—P. 80.

It was but a short time after, however, until their "attention" was claimed by some of them coming to realize the fact that there was something lacking. Thomas Campbell undertook to supply the deficiency resulting in the following "episode," as recorded by Mr. Grafton.

THE FIRST BAPTISM.

An episode occurred at this first meeting which soon led to important changes in the practice of this infant church. It was resolved that the Lord's Supper should be celebrated weekly in conformity with the example of the primitive church; but at the first communion service it was observed that several who were regarded as members did not partake of the emblems. On inquiry, it was discovered that they did not consider themselves scriptural subjects, as they had not been baptized. Upon further inquiry it was learned that they would be satisfied with nothing but immersion as scriptural baptism. Though Thomas Campbell had himself been sprinkled in infancy, and did not as yet question the validity of his baptism, he did not scruple to accede to the demands of those members, since they had never been baptized. So they were taken to a pool in Buffalo Creek, and with due ceremony immersed.—P. 82.

But listen:

It is curious to observe the manner of this first immersion in the new church which would now scarcely be regarded as befitting the solemnity of the occasion. He requested the candidates to wade out into the pool, to the depth of their shoulders, while he climbed out on an overhanging root and bent their heads beneath the water, repeating as he did the baptismal formula.—P. 83.

Where do you suppose they found a precedent for that? At the outset they announced, "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak"; but when we search the Scriptures for a "precedent" for the above procedure we search in vain. The scriptural precedent was this: "And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him."—Acts 8: 38. And nowhere do we find a man baptizing others without a commission from God when he himself had not been baptized. Remember that from this incipency we have the wonderful restoration (?) of which they boast so much. How unlike the establishment of the first church by the lowly Nazarene!

But to continue:

As soon as the Campbells and their associates had reached the correct conclusion on baptism, in prompt obedience to divine law they were baptized in the primitive, scriptural way, and on a simple profession of faith in Christ. Elder Matthias Luce, the Baptist preacher to whom application was made to administer the ordinance, at first hesitated because it was not according to Baptist usage to baptize candidates without a previous satisfactory experience; but finally he yielded, believing that the proper conditions were present. The Campbells and others with them were immersed by Elder Luce in June, 1812.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 52.

Mr. Campbell himself wrote, "I was accordingly baptized by Elder Luce, who was accompanied by Elder Henry Spears, on the 12th day of June, 1812."—Christian Baptist, p. 92.

Now notice the conditions to date: He begins to preach July 15, 1810; he is licensed to preach the gospel May 4, 1811; he is ordained to preach January 1, 1812; and was baptized June 12, 1812; and in the face of the declaration that "where the Scriptures speak, we speak."—"A thus saith the Lord," or an approved precedent would have directed him to be baptized, called of God, ordained, receive a license, before he could preach authoritatively. But the picture becomes darker the closer we scrutinize it. Elder Luce, the administrator, was a member of one of those "corrupt," "abominable," "loathsome," "illegitimate," daughters of the old scarlet mother," and as such he had no right to baptize anyone. Besides, it was not a scriptural baptism any more than where Thomas Campbell immersed the candidates from the overhanging root, because:

Now if our baptism is for any other end or purpose than was that to which Paul submitted, it is another baptism, as much as bathing for health is different from a Jewish ablution for local uncleanness or impurity. The action has a meaning and a design; and it must be received in that meaning and for that design, else it is another baptism.—Campbell-Rice Debate, p. 439.

The "design" of baptism was and is for the "remission of sins," (Acts 2: 38); but the Campbells had no such ideas in mind when they were immersed by Elder Luce, and, indeed, they never "discovered" that truth until 1827, as we will show later; so that Mr. Campbell, according to his own argument, never had a scriptural baptism. It was the "mode," and not the "design" that led them into the water. The "meaning" of the "action" had never dawned upon their darkened vision at that date.

Baptism is the means of pardon, and no one is a child of God until the conditions are complied with, (Galatians 3: 27-29) so the Campbells were preaching, and immersing people when they themselves were "foreigners" and "aliens" to the commonwealth of Israel; and their whole "restoration" movement hangs upon an assumption without a parallel in all the pages of divine law.

In order to evade the force of the facts so plainly apparent, we are asked to accept the following logical (?) deductions:

What is "sect-baptism"? That depends on the meaning of the word "sect," and the meaning of the word "baptism." But if we admit that the word "baptism" means "immersion," then what is meant by the expression "sect-baptism"? That is then determined simply by the meaning of the word "sect." By examination of the Greek text of the New Testament we find that the Greek word translated "sect" is the same as that translated heresy, and it means "choice, option, hence, a sect, faction; by implication, discord, contention." According to this definition of the word translated "sect" it becomes evident that what is called "sect baptism" is nothing more or less than choice immersion, or immersion that originated in human choice. . . . Whence comes the authority for calling single immersion "sect baptism" when performed in connection with certain sectarian errors? There is no authority for so doing either in divine revelation or in right human reasoning. . . . Is the preaching of immersion by certain sectarians a matter of choice? No. Those who preach immersion do so because they believe it to be of divine authority. How is it with those sectarians who do not advocate immersion, but only give persons the choice of immersion? Such sectarians regard immersion as a matter of choice, but those under their teaching who insist upon being immersed do so, with very few exceptions, because they believe that Christ requires it. Thus while the preachers among such sectarians have the idea of "choice" in their minds, yet those under their teaching who decide to be immersed generally do so because they wish to do what divine authority requires. Their immersion is not sect-immersion because it is not choice-immersion, but it is authority immersion. Moreover, their immersion is not faction-immersion, when measured by the New Testament, and therefore it is not sect-baptism, and is faction-baptism, which makes a faction in the Church of Christ.—Sectarianism Analyzed and Exposed, published by Daniel Sommer, Indianapolis, Indiana, pp. 30, 31, 32.

Thus, in order to shield themselves and make it appear that their illustrious progenitors were scripturally baptized, after the apostolic order, they are forced to take the ridiculously absurd position outlined above. Now notice the application: A is a sectarian preacher. B and C are candidates for baptism. A gives them their choice of mode. Both choose "single immersion." B does so because he believes it is "an outward sign of inward grace." According to the above logic (?) it is "sect-immersion" and not valid, because he didn't properly comprehend the meaning. C chooses "single immersion," at the hands of the same administrator, and it is O. K., and passes at par value, because, forsooth, the candidate had the proper conception of the "design," though the preacher may be destitute of moral character, religious character, and official character. (Ibid., p. 39.) The "approved precedent" for such philosophy would certainly be interesting reading. But more about their baptism a little later.

Here was an effort not so much for the reformation of the church as was that of Luther and Calvin, but for its complete restoration at once to its primitive purity and perfection.—Sketches of Our Pioneers, p. 35.

This great enterprise to restore in spirit and form in doctrine and life, apostolic Christianity was conceived and projected in its principles by Thomas Campbell.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 41.

Instead of reformation he attempted restoration, to replant in the fertile soil of the nineteenth century the church of the first century.—Grafton, p. 230.

From the above excerpts it is plainly set forth just what they started out to do. To us the strange and inconsistent feature of the whole matter is that, recognizing as they did, an apostasy, and the necessity for a restoration of the gospel, they should deny the only possible means by which such a work could be accomplished; namely, divine revelation.

Now notice:

All the extraordinary gifts vouchsafed to Moses and to the apostles and prophets of the gospel institution, ceased when these institutions were fully developed and established.—Christian System, p. 82.

During the present administration of the reign of heaven, no change is to be expected; no new mission is to be originated, no new order of preachers is to be instituted.—Ibid., p. 82.

All the supernatural attestations of divinity ceased with the "full development of the perfect revelation"—the Bible—about 100 A. D., nevermore to be enjoyed by the people of God; and yet they proposed to "replant, in the fertile soil of the nineteenth century, the church of the first century." In all candor, how could they give us the "church of the first century," and eliminate the major portion of that which constituted the church of the first century? Would it be the "church of the first century" with any portion of it lacking? It is admitted that that church has been "lost" for ages; buried under the "theological rubbish" of the Dark Ages for centuries. Now Campbell and company come along and present us with an institution which they call the Church of Christ, claiming it to be the church of the first century; but when we compare it with that institution as described in the New Testament, we find but very little resemblance. But before we criticize them too severely, we will allow them ample time to perfect their work in its various departments.

UNDER THE BAPTIST FLAG.

Shortly after their baptism in 1812 they began to negotiate with the Baptists with the result that a union was effected. An opportunity as a "passport to favor" was offered them and they were quick to seize it. We will allow them to tell the story:

After a more particular acquaintance with some of the members and ministers of that connection the church of Brush Run did finally agree to unite with that association on the ground that no terms of union or communion other than the Holy Scriptures should be required. On this ground, . . . we united with the Redstone Association in the fall of 1813.—Christian Baptist, p. 92.

A new situation now confronted Mr. Campbell and his followers. The course which brought them into disfavor with Pedo-baptists secured their acceptance with Baptists. Since they had become immersionists, the latter began to manifest a friendly interest in them, and urged them to become members of the Redstone Association, which embraced all the Baptist churches of that region. The matter was laid before the members of the Brush Run Church in the autumn of 1813. After much hesitation and prayerful consideration, it was decided to enter the association, on condition that its members should be independent of all human creeds, and should enjoy the privilege of preaching whatever they learned from the Holy Scriptures, "regardless of any creed or formula in Christendom." Upon these terms they were received, and a union was formed which for several years furnished a home for this infant church.—Grafton, pp. 91, 92.

So now they are Baptists, in name at least, and the idea of restoration seems to have been abandoned and reformation the object aimed at, or they were surreptitiously acting under disguise. In either case their tranquility was of short duration.

Mr. Grafton continues:

The situation in which Mr. Campbell found himself, soon after his connection with the Redstone Association of the Baptist churches, was far from inviting. The originality of his method in dealing with the Scriptures, and his utter disregard for customs, however time-honored, which were not sanctioned by primitive precept or example, awakened the suspicion of the more narrow-minded of the Baptist ministers, who were not slow in manifesting their disapproval. His popularity among the churches of the association, no doubt added to their displeasure, and at every opportunity he was made to feel the sting of their resentment.—P. 94.

What else could be expected when the young "polemic" was everlastingly lambasting their creed? It is but natural to conclude that the Baptist ministers would resent it sooner or later. Mr. Campbell could feel the "sting of their resentment," but he could not appreciate the effects of his attacks.

The Redstone Association met at Cross Creek in August, 1816, and among others young Alexander was appointed to address the association. He preached his famous "sermon on the law" which, in Campbellite parlance, was the "sudden explosion in the Baptist camp of an apostolic bombshell," and the mask was removed.

Subsequent to this unanswerable address, the Baptist Association for several consecutive years by means of self-constituted ecclesiastical courts, brought charges of heretical teachings against Thomas and Alexander Campbell. . . . The two Campbells foreseeing that it was the fixed intention of their mischievous persecutors to gain a majority of votes in favor of their excommunication, severed their connection, and withdrew from the Redstone Baptist Association.—Reformation Movements, p. 173.

At last, wearied by the continued hostility of his enemies, Mr. Campbell determined to place himself beyond the bounds of their jurisdiction. He had received a cordial invitation to become a member of the Mahoning Association, which embraced the Baptist churches of eastern Ohio, and as he had already been cordially received by the preachers and churches of that region, he determined to accept. In order to make the change with as little friction as possible, he took a letter from the Brush Run Church, and with thirty others organized a new church at Wellsburg, Virginia, which applied for membership, and was at once received into the Mahoning Association. Thus, in the month of August, 1823, was organized the second church of the Reformation, and by this means Alexander Campbell escaped excommunication from the Baptist Church, which would certainly have been his fate had he longer remained a member of the Redstone Association.—Grafton, pp. 104, 105.

Sometime in 1826 Mr. Campbell expressed himself as follows:

I and the church with which I am connected are in full communion with the Mahoning Baptist Association, Ohio; and through them, with the whole Baptist society in the United States; and I do intend to continue in connection with this people as long as they permit me to say what I believe, to teach what I am assured of, and to censure what is amiss in their views or practices.—Christian Baptist, p. 217.

Again we ask, Was it possible to "replant" the church of the first century through the instrumentality of one of the "harlot daughters" of the "old scarlet mother"? Had they lost sight of their "approved precedent"? The church of the first century was not established in that manner. The "old bottles" were not considered fit receptacles for the "new wine." But Mr. Campbell's hopes of a continuance in the Baptist Church were soon "blasted."

A series of events now transpired which changed the religious situation, blasted Mr. Campbell's hopes of a continued reformation within the borders of the Baptist Church, and set him adrift with a large following but without denominational ties. . . . He was denounced as a breeder of heresy and sedition, and undeserving of fellowship or recognition among Baptist churches.—Grafton, p. 122.

The principles taught by the Campbells were now widespread, especially among the Baptists, and in 1827 the Baptist associations began to declare nonfellowship with the brethren of the reformation. From this time we may date the rise of the people known as the Disciples of Christ.—Sketches of Our Pioneers, p. 43.

This marked the formal separation from the Baptists. Up to this time the association was a Baptist body, though many of their Baptist peculiarities had been abandoned.—Ibid., p. 59.

We can hardly blame the Baptist people for their action in seeking to sever connection with the "reformers" when we remember how they were attempting to "dethrone the reigning popular clergy." By playing the wolf-in-sheep's-clothing-game for fifteen years the Campbells had succeeded in drawing off quite a following. Mr. Campbell had climbed into "Moses's seat," having been ordained a bishop in 1823, the highest office in their church, and was now the recognized leader of the movement. Indeed, 1823 is an important date in their history. A church—the second church of the reformation—was organized at Wellsburg, Virginia, Mr. Campbell was appointed bishop, founded the Christian Baptist, and held a public discussion.

Having been denied fellowship among the Baptists, Mr. Campbell once more found himself alone and was compelled to seek new fields of operation.

We pause here long enough to reflect on the probable results had not the Baptists disfellowshipped them. Where would their so-called "restoration" come in? For fifteen years they had been sailing under false colors merely as a "passport to favor" (See Millennial Harbinger, N. S. vol. 3, p. 338); had accomplished nothing in the way of practical results that would entitle them to the distinction of "restorers." As a reformer among the Baptists Mr. Campbell was a failure.

The failure of Alexander Campbell's endeavors, and those of his father, to secure the adoption of reform principles within existing parties, for a time limited his aim, and caused him to despair of seeing any change in religious society. So far from assuming the position of a public reformer, he abandoned all expectation of achieving more than the formation of a single congregation, with which he could enjoy the exercise of gospel privileges, as he conceived them in the New Testament.—Grafton, p. 100.

What have they accomplished in the discovery of divine truth that some of the reformers preceding them did not find? Mr. Campbell claims to have discovered the "true meaning and design" of baptism as early as 1823. Giving him the full benefit of 1823 as the date of that important discovery and what does it avail him? He, himself, was immersed eleven years preceding his "discovery" without understanding the "meaning or design" of the institution which, according to his own deductions, was not baptism at all. On page 521 of the Christian Baptist he informs us that unless we have the proper conception of baptism "immersion is as empty as a blasted nut"; and when he tells us that he, in debate, promulgated the true meaning and design of baptism for the first time in 1823, he admits that he did not have the proper conception of it in 1812 when he was immersed by Elder Luce; and, per consequence, he never had a scriptural baptism.

THE CHURCH AND SOCIAL SERVICE.

(Read by John C. Grainger before the Men's League of the First Independence Branch, February 9, 1913.)

Sociology formulates the conditions of social welfare. Life itself, the nature of the universe, ultimately determines what is good for mankind; but the sociologist surveys the totality of human relations and conditions, and thus determines what is to be declared good, what is to be sought by all available means. The race preserving instincts and the ethical impulses are the earlier formulations of duty, and sometimes these are wiser than the results of elaborate calculation. But all reflective men seek to consider the sum of forces and relations with reference to the best possible arrangement in a community, at least the conduct which is tolerable and consistent with general order and happiness. All this lies deeper than legislation. The conduct which becomes illegal must first be recognized as evil or hurtful to the people. Social conditions are changing; there are new standards, new evils, new methods of business, which must affect the statute books and decisions of courts. The discovery of the new factors in life is made by direct study of society, not by study of law books.

Thus sociology rationally formulates standards for defining and judging antisocial conduct. Ordinarily the more thoughtful men of experience do this work of criticism without consideration of any particular science, simply by applying traditional moral maxims to the situation. But there is need of an intermediate stage of reflection; there is need of a science of society which will test even the ethical sentiments themselves by the standard of facts, at the points where those sentiments seem to demand concrete actions, habits, or customs.

Sociology, having made a general survey of the institutions of society, assigns the task of each institution. The reaction of a community against antisocial persons and its system of defense are far wider than the mechanism of penal law. Many of the arrangements and devices of business and industry are made to check egoistic conduct, as books, accounts, auditors, securities, private watchmen, detectives, supervisors, and foremen. In every residence the citizen introduces protective devices, as bolts, bars, locks. There is social censorship, ostracism, repulsion, and a thousand nameless ways of inflicting punishment on disagreeable and selfish or cruel men. There are voluntary associations which act with and even before criminal law, as citizens' leagues, law and order leagues, social service commissions of religious organizations, and legally authorized commissions and boards of public welfare, the purposes of which are to secure improved legislation, to enforce laws, and bring offenders to justice, to educate public sentiment, to study the phenomena of crime and vice, and apply the teachings of science to institutions of law and charity.

Government naturally assumes the most obvious and conscious functions in relation to antisocial conduct in commerce, industry, and society; but family, church, school, and many other forms of association must carry part of the burden, and do for the community what the ponderous machinery of government can not accomplish.

In this paper I will attempt to sketch the duty of the church in regard to greater activity in social service; suggest practical methods of interesting and organizing church members for effective social service activities; and give a brief review of the work accomplished and in progress by other churches.

The Saints would do well to study and "obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion" (Doctrine and Covenants 90:12). The idea that the Lord will remove all evil from this world in some mysterious way, and without intelligent effort by his people, is not supported by any authorized doctrine of his church.

The doctrine of social service was made prominent by the divine Author of our faith on November 1, 1827, when he spoke to the people of this church through his Prophet Joseph Smith, saying:

The Lord shall come to recompense unto every man according to his work, and measure to every man according to the measure which he has measured to his fellow man.

Eighty-five years ago Latter Day Saints were teaching that "service for mankind is service for God." The height of virtue is service for mankind.

At the present time we see this doctrine recognized in a very forceful way by the many churches and other organizations carrying on effective work for the moral, social, physical, and industrial betterment of men, women, and children. This activity among the churches shows that they do not believe in the doctrine: "By faith alone are you saved and not by works." But it shows they believe that, "Every man shall be rewarded according to his faith and works."

Confessions of faith and creeds are not strictly adhered to since the gospel of the new dispensation has been heard. Good works are a means of grace;

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Latter Day Saints should cooperate with other organizations for promoting public welfare.

In the "Men and Religion Messages," volume on social service, the chapter headed "The church organized for social service," contains many pertinent and stimulating statements of facts and conditions which should arouse those who have not already awakened to their opportunities for social service.

Quoting from this chapter, I read:

It was not many years ago, not many months, indeed, that the phrase "social service," in the minds of most church members, was a vague and meaningless term. One pillar of the church, when it was mentioned in the prayer meeting, said: "I want to hear no more about it; we have too many socials now." Another wistfully ventured on a definition: "I suppose it's getting people to stand near the church door and welcome strangers." Still another, at a preliminary meeting of a Men and Religion campaign, rather angrily asked, "Do I understand that this thing is going in for social service?" And when told that this undoubtedly was, he took his hat and bolted, saying: "Then I'll have nothing to do with it." The opinion largely prevailed not long ago, in many religious circles, that "this social service business" was something closely akin to infidelity; that the people who professed to be interested in it would bear watching. This judgment was partly a survival of the notion that a religion which emphasized "good works" was defective; it was partly the product of a reasonable fear that such an emphasis might make some folks comfortable. . . .

The one great thing which the Men and Religion Forward Movement has done for the American churches is to set blazing before them the truth and the tasks which are suggested by this phrase "social service." This truth they can never again deny, these tasks they can never again evade, without the consciousness of apostasy. The tremendous work that is waiting for them is in plain sight, and they can not without deadly injury to themselves, turn away from it to the formalities and fervors of an individualistic pietism. Religion will either mean a great deal more in America in the next ten years than it has ever meant before, or it will find itself, before the end of that time, in the way of meaning nothing at all.

The business of these churches is to fill the community with the life of the spirit, which is the life of good will, the life of brotherhood—to Christianize the whole of it. Their success is measured not by counting the list of their communicants or by reckoning up their pew rents or their missionary contributions, but by estimating the tendencies of the social life around about them; by finding out whether the people of their neighborhood are living healthy, contented, peaceable, thrifty, virtuous, happy lives. The test of a political system is in the men it produces. The test of an industrial system is in the men it produces—those who organize the work and those who do the work. The test of a religious system is in the men it produces.

Reverend Henry Sloane Coffin, of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, answers the question: What is social service? in the same volume, by saying:

What is social service, or, rather, what is Christian social service? for in Christ everything becomes new, and has a distinctive meaning. It is everything that men plan and do to accomplish the purpose of God in Jesus Christ for any man, woman or child—for any group of persons—for the whole world. It includes evangelism, for the saving of a man is the chief social service that can be rendered him. It embraces missions, for the bringing of the gospel to any village where it is unknown is the highest social service it can receive; it comprehends church unity, for the correlation of the Christian forces in any community is unquestionably a great social service.

Social service means repentance from dead works, it refers to saved baseball, redeemed penitentiaries, regenerated government, sanctified tenements, to business born again. It recognizes the importance of the house in which a man lives, the food he eats, the conditions under which he works, the forms of recreation he takes, the system of political authority by which he is ruled—above all, the ideals of the home, of industry, of amusement, of government which control his conscience, shape his soul, and affect his eternal destiny. A home enervated by self-indulgent luxury or cramped by squalid poverty or wrecked by domestic discord can not nurture a child in Christlikeness. An industrial world dominated by unbrotherly competition, moved by selfish gain-seeking, and permitting the irresponsible private ownership of great public utilities, can not form its workers into the image of the Son of man. Pleasures so unequally distributed that some have no play, and others do nothing but play, so debased by the commercial instinct that games do not afford sufficient interest of themselves but must be made exciting by gambling, so connected with the liquor traffic that they can not be indulged in without hazard to morals, can not be recreations for Christians. Politics which do not enlist the activities of the most conscientious citizens, an administration of justice which punishes the theft of a loaf of bread with a jail sentence, but lets the looters of a street railway system go free, prisons which degrade the characters of those committed to them, international relations inspired by mutual jealousy and the peace of the world inspired by mutual fear—these can not give us a government which will mold the governed into the mind and heart of Christ. Our aim has been to hold up the vision of Christianized social institutions, because these are creators of Christian men.

Reverend A. Herbert Gray, of Glasgow, Scotland, says:

Religion that stops at feeling is always a poor and counterfeit affair. It is especially true of men that they feel that they are being made fools of if they are made to feel intensely and are not at the same time offered some way in which they can express their feelings by action. The whole spirit of our day demands that religion express itself in action, or in other words in service.

Mr. Graham Taylor, of the editorial staff of The Survey, of New York, speaking of the church and the community, says:

Among many signs of better times coming is the growth of the common ground upon which church workers and social workers meet, mingle and exchange values.

That religion and society, the church and the community, have values to exchange becomes clearer in the consciousness of those working for each. Indeed it becomes more and more evident that work truly done for one serves the other. Though not identical in aim or method the church and community can not be separated.

If the community fails the church can not succeed.

If the church fails the community is not successful.

Reciprocity is more and more sought by each. The church needs the social spirit and method of the best work for the community. And social work no less needs the spiritual ideals, sanctions and passion which religion only can give to any and every kind of service.

The common ground upon which this religious consciousness in social work and this social consciousness in religious work are being born anew is growing under the feet of those most actively and effectively at work for their fellow men. The National Conference of Charities and Correction, with Roman Catholic, Jewish, Protestant, and Ethical Culture members equally interested and active, is a new kind of "Ecumenical Council," which broadens the ideal and scope of the service which the early church sought to render when it was one in all the world. Church assemblies and missionary conferences, congresses of social workers and gatherings of specialists vie with each other in laying both the religious and social emphasis upon the same aspect of human life.

Mr. Taylor's philosophy teaches us that while sometimes it is necessary to be negative, it is stronger to be positive and affirmative.

The growing cooperation of Protestant churches is nowhere faced with greater or more practical opportunities than through the Commission on the Church and Social Service, through which the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America seeks to fulfill its social function.

The commission has brought out a very useful volume on the Social Creed of the Churches. It contains sixteen planks, as follows:

The churches must stand:

1. For equal rights and complete justice for all men in all stations of life.
2. For the protection of the family, by the single standard of purity, uniform divorce laws, proper regulation of marriage, and proper housing.
3. For the fullest possible development for every child, especially by the provision of proper education and recreation.
4. For the abolition of child labor.
5. For such regulation of the conditions of toil for women as shall safeguard the physical and moral health of the community.
6. For the abatement and prevention of poverty.
7. For the protection of the individual and society from the social, economic, and moral waste of the liquor traffic.
8. For the conservation of health.
9. For the protection of the worker from dangerous machinery, occupational diseases, and mortality.
10. For the right of all men to the opportunity for self-maintenance, for safeguarding this right against encroachments of every kind, and for the protection of workers from the hardships of enforced unemployment.
11. For suitable provision for the old age of the workers, and for those incapacitated by injury.
12. For the right of employees and employers alike to organize and for adequate means of conciliation and arbitration in industrial disputes.
13. For a release from employment one day in seven.
14. For the gradual and reasonable reduction of the hours of labor to the lowest practicable point, and for that degree of leisure for all which is a condition of the highest human life.
15. For a living wage as a minimum in every industry, and for the highest wage that each industry can afford.
16. For a new emphasis of Christian principles to the acquisition and use of property and for the most equitable division of the product of industry that can ultimately be devised.

To those who test this federation by their aspirations for the organic unity of the churches, little advance toward that goal will seem to have been made. But organic unity is not and never has been the aspiration of those constituting this federation. And it is claimed that the basis for cooperative unity has been reached not by minimizing differing tenets and polity to the lowest terms in an attempt to reach colorless uniformities upon which there could be no disagreement, but by magnifying the spirit and loyalty which all held who owe allegiance to the one supreme Leader and Lord.

There are cheering signs all along the horizon that both the churches and the body politic are recognizing the public function of religion, and are depending, as never before, upon its fulfillment for the support and progress of state and church. This indicates no reversion to any organic union between church and state. More and more, in other lands, as always in America, the state-church and the church-state are realized to be disadvantageous alike to civil and ecclesiastical interests.

But signs multiply that the churches are reawakening to their quasi-public functions and their semi-official status, and that the body politic is increasingly aware of its dependence upon the religion of the churches for its stability and progress.

No intelligent student of church history will question the statement that the Latter Day Saints have been largely instrumental in bringing about this emphasis on "good works." But are we living up to our own theories and doctrines? The men of our church should seek cooperation with the men of other churches in every good cause. We quote:

The sins of the age are in larger part industrial and commercial. Should not salvation be as directly applied to commerce and industry? The fratricidal strifes of the age, and even its international wars, are industrial and economic struggles for commercial advantage. Has the church no gospel of industrial peace to offer? The very diseases and death rates of the age are occupational and due to industrial causes. Are there no leaves from the tree of life for the healing of the nations? The personal and class injustices are almost wholly industrial. Has Christianity lost its Amos-like prophets? The political corruptions which shame and menace the states of William Penn and Abraham Lincoln are—as everywhere else,—due to commercial corruption. The very vices which debauch our youth and sell our maidens are artificially increased, perpetuated and protected by being commercialized for the profit that is to be made off the loss of souls. Is there no arm to save, stretched out far enough to prevent the loss of the many as the prey of the few?

The legislation of the age is industrial. Has the gospel no law for the church to apply to protect life and limb in the peaceful pursuits of labor, to prevent the exploitation of childhood's right to play and learn, to limit the hours and conditions of women's work for the sake of girlhood, wifehood and motherhood? Have the dead and disabled soldiers in our vast armies of industry and navies of commerce no claims upon the church to induce or compel the industries by which they lose life and livelihood to recognize them as the "pensioners of peace"? The captaincy of the age and its greatest achievements are industrial, attracting men and women of the choicest powers and capacities. Do they not need the incentive and restraints of the gospel and the claims of the church upon their social service for the community?

You will all agree that they do.

The present industrial system produces and promotes selfishness. The ideal society is one where people are governed by the most indirect appeal.

The ideal system of distributing the products of industry, is according to each one's needs. This ideal condition can be obtained only by cooperation of forces with like ambitions for the accomplishment of liberty, equality, grace, and service. These principles are all summed up in the one word, "Brotherhood."

Interest in this direction can be accomplished by pastors, presidents, superintendents, and members, presenting the subject in sermons and talks at meetings, and by those not definitely assigned to official duties taking it up as a special vocation. The men's league of this branch could appoint a social service committee. Manifest your faith by your works.

Agitation prevents stagnation. Progressive activity will eliminate the necessity for negative statements against false charges relative to our attitude in regard to public morals and social conduct.

The question has been asked by the men's league, How can we interest the young people of the church in social service?

Provision should be made for training young people in our church for social service.

The matter of interesting and organizing young people of small congregations in local social service is being considered by not only our own church, but also by the social service and educational agencies of other communions. As yet, however, I am aware of no systematic attempt to relate young people in the churches to community service, with the exception of a plan which is being treated in the Disciples School in Boston.

An important factor in holding the interest of the young people in our church is organization for social service. It is true that the note of service is clearly sounded in young people's meetings of all denominations, but rarely with a steadiness of tone to command constant attention and response. Spasmodic efforts have no place in the church school, which at best can secure comparatively small allotments of time for its various activities. Efficiency in social service requires well-considered plans for progressive and related effort. The subject of morals is so intimately connected with that of service that the importance of efficiency as an ideal is clear. There should be careful organization from the youngest groups of children to the oldest, not only for the sake of the good cause to be served, but for the distinct purpose of arousing and sustaining in young people an interest in the world outside of self.

A department or commission of social service should be appointed and sustained by General Conference, for the purpose of promoting social service for the betterment of mankind in all the world. This proposed commission should cooperate with similar agencies everywhere.

The Prayer Union.

In this issue of our column we give place to a dream, together with its interpretation, which was given to Sister Kearney some time since. This dream has relation to the revival or reestablishment of the Prayer Union, which not many years since had a flourishing existence in many branches of the church, but which was diverted from its original object, and lost, to a great extent, its life-giving vitality and power. Recently, however, there has been in many directions an awakening interest in the subject, and as memory recalls to some of the faithful ones the blessings brought to them through setting apart and sacredly observing this hour of prayer, a strong desire seems to have arisen that it should be revived. Nor is this all, the Spirit of the Lord seems to have been moving very strongly upon the heart and mind of Sister Kearney to lead out in reestablishing the union. That this movement is needful and comes none too soon, we will give some of our reasons for believing in the next issue of the column.

A Dream.

It seemed that I went to a Latter Day Saint church, and as I entered I saw a very young woman seated near the door; she seemed to be little more than a half-grown girl. She held in her arms an infant which she handled awkwardly like one inexperienced. There appeared to be something wrong with the child; it seemed to be suffering. I felt such pity for it that I lifted it from her arms, then I found what was wrong with it. The child had no backbone. I exclaimed, "Why, its back is broken!" I got a pillow and placed it on the seat by the woman, laying the baby on it. I told the woman that she was hurting it in handling it: to let it lie on the pillow. Again I dreamed I went to church at the same place. I took a seat at one side about two-thirds of the distance from the door. Soon after I saw three men enter; one was carrying an infant wrapped in a woman's skirt. All three walked straight to me. The one carrying the child placed it on my lap, and with a wave of his hand towards it said, "You take care of it." He appeared like Brother Hilliard.

I looked at the child and said, "It's that same baby I saw before." They all three nodded their heads, and the speaker repeated, "You take care of it."

It was not spoken like a request; he did not ask if I was willing, nor did it seem like a command, rather a demand. It did not occur to me whether I wanted to care for it or not.

I took off the woman's skirt which was of peculiar make and color, but clean. The child was dressed just as I had seen it in the first dream, in a dark calico slip very much soiled. I went and got some new material of white goods and made some clothes. I washed the baby and dressed it in the new clothes. It began to grow strong in my hands. Its backbone grew so that it could raise itself up and sit up. As I sat holding it the man returned. He looked at it in a satisfied way, saying, "It's much improved." Then I awoke and found it morning.

ELEANOR.

INTERPRETATION.

Later, as I thought over the details of the dream, the following was received, which appears to me to be the interpretation:

The child as I first saw it represented the Prayer Union in its present disorganized state, shown by the absence of backbone, and in the hands of those who do not understand it or its aims.

In the second dream by some authority I was required to reorganize it, which I did, shown by the new backbone. The new white clothes were the reestablishment of its original purpose, which was prayer and the study of the three books in connection with the subjects for which prayer is offered.

ELEANOR.

To the Prayer Union.

Dear Sisters: After presenting the matter to the consideration of the First Presidency of the church, have decided to reorganize the Prayer Union on the lines approved by them in their letters to me, hoping thus to avoid entirely the errors into which the union formerly fell.

First. It is that those taking part will do so in their own individual homes, either alone, or with their children as in family prayer.

Second. That there should be no assembling together for this purpose. The object being to study the scripture lessons, and to offer concerted prayers for the subjects provided. This is the way that was first intended, but at the request of many the sisters began meeting together, where they assembled to exercise the gifts, bearing testimony, etc. These things are objectionable outside of the regular prayer meetings provided over by the proper church authorities. So to avoid these errors we are to return to first principles, namely: to observe the hour alone at home.

Our union is not a society in the accepted term, therefore, there is no need of officers. The sole object, other than those set forth in the prayer subjects, is an increased growth in faith and spirituality. To lay aside all cares of the mind, all temporal pursuits, to devote ourselves to spiritual concerns. The question of Christ to his world-weary followers, "Could ye not watch with me one hour?" should be our motto. To give the time thus employed to Him alone. The scripture lessons selected are intended as a guide to the study of the subjects and prayer. All three of the standard books will be used.

There are many prophecies in all of them, that are beginning to be fulfilled, and with study and prayer we shall be more alert in watching their fulfillment. They must all be fulfilled before the coming of the Lord. So, as we see them come, they will be like the spring that foretells the coming summer and we will not be caught asleep or without oil in our vessels.

The auxiliary departments of the church furnish scope enough for raising all the financial aid needed that is not provided for in the temporal law of tithes and offerings. Therefore, we do not think it desirable to associate the Prayer Union with any aid society work.

As will be seen, we have changed the subjects somewhat from the old program to meet more nearly what seems to be present requirements.

The time set apart is from two to three p. m. But where there is unavoidable hindrance for this hour, any other hour of the afternoon or evening will be right. We can see no objection to the father of a family taking part if he is a member of the church and is present at the time.

This new plan may be a disappointment to some who prefer to meet together, but it will also be a relief to the mothers of young children, and I am quite convinced that it will accomplish more real good as here outlined and approved by the authorities.

With love,

Your sister,

ELEANOR WALDORF KEARNEY.

Subjects of Prayer for the Prayer Union.

First Thursday in June. The church, its priesthood and lay members, that all may earnestly engage in the building up of Zion to the ideal condition of oneness and equality revealed in the revelations to the church. Pray that each member of the church may be clothed with that charity which will lead him to speak evil of no one, but regard the reputation of our brother or sister as we regard our own.

That greater power may be had in the healing of the sick. See John 17: 11, 21, 22; Zechariah 8: 16, 17.

"One prize achieved, ahead then glows the next,
 He who would win must make the further quest,
 Success is his, who, wearied and perplexed,
 Still ever onward to new goals has pressed,
 Who sees each day more misty heights to climb;
 Who feels each day new thrillings in his breast;
 Who does not count the loss of thought or time
 Which brings him step by step up to his best."

Letter Department

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA, March 15, 1913.

Dear Herald: God has recognized us here in days that are past. It was here that God gave me to understand that this work was true. I was baptized by Elder S. W. Simmons four years ago. When I was confirmed a member of the church I was given to know of its divinity. In July following I was ordained an elder, and have been trying ever since to tell the gospel story.

I have learned much since I came into this church, and have found ample room for employment; yet oftentimes the clouds appear dark and lowering, and it seems as if everything has gone wrong. Upon these occasions I look back to the time when I did not know God in the forgiveness of my sins; and then comes the thought, What have I to fear? For Jesus said, If I am for you who can be against you? Then I look beyond the vale of tears, and meditate upon the glorious day when Jesus Christ shall come. If faithful unto the end, I know that I shall meet him.

The work in this district is doing fairly well, so far as I know. There are many openings here for preaching. I have not been out much on account of bad weather, but intend to labor as I can, as soon as spring opens up. We have had some good meetings in the past, and are looking forward to more.

Last summer I held a meeting three miles from town. There was a lady came to the meeting who said she had been living there five years and never heard of a Latter Day Saint; but she was willing to hear, and by so doing was baptized.

Christ said he that is warned should warn his neighbor. I am afraid that if we do not do our part, when the end comes, the blood of this people will be required at our hands.

May God bless his cause here and elsewhere, is the prayer of one who loves the work.

V. L. LUM.

ALTON, ILLINOIS, April 28, 1913.

Dear Herald: If any Latter Day Saints attend the G. A. R. convention here, May 20, 21, and 22, we would be pleased to have them look us up. Our meeting place is a storeroom at 1000 East Second Street, corner Central Avenue, and Second Street. A family of Saints live just back of this address.

We will have prayer meeting on the 20th. There are ten thousand people expected to attend the convention. There surely ought to be some Latter Day Saints among them.

Your sister in bonds,

593 EAST TWELFTH STREET.

MISS MARY McDONALD.

PERYEAR, TENNESSEE, March 16, 1913.

Editors Herald: Our thoughts sometimes wander back to the time when we were in darkness without God and hope in the world; we could not tell how great that darkness was until we came into the marvelous light and liberty of the true gospel.

There are no pleasures that equal those obtained through the gospel. I often am made to wonder why we so easily forget our first love, and wander away in forbidden paths—become cold and indifferent to the work that once meant so much to us.

I can not understand how and why some who have tasted of the good word of God and the powers of the world to come can deny the faith, even when they know that they have received a truthful testimony of the gospel of Christ.

We receive blessings through the gospel that we can not receive from any other source; and if we will but live for these blessings they will increase from time to time until the theme of salvation will become our all in all.

"To be spiritual minded is life and peace." Many Latter Day Saints know personally the truthfulness of this statement. Is it not grand to be able to live in a way that we can trust our heavenly Father serenely in the hour of trouble and despair? This we can do with a faith that never wavers, if we keep all the commandments and remember our God in the time of peace and prosperity—serving him every day and every hour, whether our day be dark or bright.

We should not forget God, the giver of all the good we receive, when all is well with us, and expect him to bless us at all times, and especially in the time of distress.

Our hearts are made sad to see some of the Saints, who once stood in the front ranks of the army of the Lord, fall out of line and become careless and indifferent to the work that we so dearly love. How our hearts would rejoice to see them put on the whole gospel armor and march forth to the conflict with a desire to win.

Often many of us who are located where opposition is great, and it takes courage to keep the camp fires burning, long to go up to Zion, where the conflict is not so trying and the church is in a more prosperous condition than is found in outlying districts of the church. This desire is not vain, I hardly think, but we should be sure that we are not too much needed at the place we are leaving—the work is often seriously crippled by some moving away.

Several months ago the writer was at Kirtland, Ohio, where there is a good sized branch and the interest of both Sunday school and Religio was fairly good. There I had best of church privileges, often attending six services a week. There were plenty of Saints to carry on all the work, so I was not needed so much, yet I liked the people and the place very much.

While I was enjoying such splendid church privileges my thoughts were turned toward my home district, not so prosperous—having no Religio and very little interest in Sunday schools. I was made to realize that I was needed in Kentucky and Tennessee more than elsewhere. I felt that there was a work for me to do here and I was satisfied that it would be best to return and be of whatever aid I could.

Since returning I have found many opportunities to assist in Religio and Sunday school work. Conditions are not ideal here. There is not a local Religio in the district, and six months ago there was only one home class member in the entire district, composed of more than four hundred Saints. The Sunday schools seem to be improving some in interest, and we hope to see them continue to live up.

We often long for the good times enjoyed with a live band of Saints—the social meetings had at Kirtland, but we must be submissive to the One who doeth all things well, and be content with our surroundings for the present, and say with the poet, "I'll go where you want me to go."

I have received some very great blessings of late through dreams, which seem to strengthen and confirm me in the work.

If you will bear with me I will relate one instance. I dreamed that I was very thirsty and was wandering about in search of water—there seemed to be a drouth. I came to a place where once there had been a fine spring of pure water, but it was filled with blue mud and green moss, with about a half cup of clear water in a little sunken place in the center. I realized if the mud and moss could be removed there would be an abundance of pure water.

While I was standing looking at the spring a middle-aged man came along and asked: "What are you here for?" I replied that I was there in search of water. He said that I could not obtain any water there. I told him I was sure that I could by cleaning out the spring. He looked at me in a scornful way and said, "What have you to clean it out with?" I replied that I had my hands and I began to roll up my sleeves. The stranger went his way, and as I was making ready to put my hands into the mud I happened to look around and lying near me was a bright, new spade. I seized it and began to remove the mud and moss.

When I had fairly begun I saw a crowd of about fifty or sixty children, ranging in age from eight to fifteen years, coming toward me. When they reached me I asked what they wanted; they said water, stating they were very thirsty. I told them there was none just then; but for them to come again, that when I had finished the spring there would be water for all. They went away. When I had finished the spring it was filled with the clearest water I ever saw. The children returned and I gave each water from the spring.

The stranger then came back and when he saw the spring filled and overflowing with sparkling water remarked that he never would have thought that water could be obtained there any more. We long to see the time when all God's people will strive to live together in love and unity, when there will be no slothful and idlers among them.

We hope the day will soon come when conditions will be better in this district—when we can have a Religio and a Sunday school at each branch. This time will come when the Saints awaken to their duties, and put forth their best efforts in carrying on the work intrusted to them.

Saints, the ministers can not perform their work and ours too. All the elders of the church might preach to you from now until the day of your death, and if you sit still and refuse to act your part you will be farther from salvation than if you had never heard an elder preach in your life.

Yes, this is a serious warfare, a battle of right against wrong. It calls for brave and fearless men who are willing to fight and not afraid to die, if need be. Let us be up and doing and strive to enter in at the straight gate; "For straight is the gate; and narrow is the way that leadeth to life and few there be that find it."

LOUISE A. WALL.

DAHINDA, ILLINOIS, March 16, 1913.

Dear Herald: No doubt there are some who would like to hear from the old haunts once again, who have left for other places in the last few years. Because we have been silent for so long does not mean that we are altogether dead, although there is always much room for improvement.

In the last year or two we have had considerable preaching by Elders Sade and Arber. Fifteen new members have been added to our branch in that time. Brother Arber just left this country a short time ago. Brother Sade has not been with us for some time. We are hoping he will visit us soon.

A few of the sisters here, learning what others have done to help the good cause, were anxious to do the same; so Brother Arber came last fall and organized the "Willing Workers," since which time we have been busy. Have made three comforters for the Children's Home, and other things; and have been wonderfully blessed in so doing.

On February 15, we gave a chicken-pie supper, and program at the hall, and had splendid success. This was our first effort of the kind, and certainly God was with us. A nice, quiet, orderly crowd was present, and a good time enjoyed by all. The proceeds were about forty-five dollars. We met in fasting and prayer for its success, and we know God rewarded us, and that we met with his divine approval. Even while working upon different articles we had for sale, and all through the preparations, we felt the sweet influence of God's Spirit, and knew he was with us. We mean to do more of this work, as the work of God must prosper financially as well as any other way. Brother Arber was with us and helped in many ways.

The sisters can do a noble work here as well as in other places, and with God's help we mean to be "Willing Workers!" indeed.

Work will soon begin on a brick plant to be operated in our "little burg," which will give Dahinda quite a boom, and afford work for many.

We hope some good live Saints may come among us, especially some good, live elder, as we are sorely in need of one here. We have only a priest and teacher; a good, active elder would be much help to them, and to the branch. We have a good, large church, and have been promised, if faithful, the work would grow here. Oh, may each and every one of us improve every opportunity for good, and keep strong and courageous in the work, and thus be worthy of God's blessings.

Personally, my companion and I are happier and stronger in the faith than ever. We have recently been blessed with a fine baby boy, and every day comes some new blessing to it, and ourselves. To God be all the praise.

Ever wishing for the best welfare of all God's people, I am,
In gospel bonds,

MRS. CHARLES DAWSON.

SCAMMON, KANSAS, March 20, 1913.

Dear Herald: I am sure it will be interesting to all to know that the promises of God are being confirmed to some in our day.

John A. Davis came to Scammon and commenced a successful meeting, but not being able to continue, I was called to carry on the work. The interest has continued up to the present. While we have not succeeded in leading any into the water, yet some say they are ready—only waiting for companions or a more convenient time.

The Saints say this is far the best interest that was ever had here. Brother Pierce helped by scattering tracts, visiting, etc. The Saints are built up; proving, I am sure, that the visit of a missionary to a branch once in a while is a very good thing. It pleases the Lord, too, at times, to use one of his servants in blessing his children, as the following testimony will show.

Sister Hisle has suffered great bodily pain. The doctors here called it a case of chronic Bright's disease, and could give her little or no hope; they said she might be called away at any time. But she says she never lost faith in God's power. She was administered to at different times and got relief, yet she was very poorly when the writer came here. She was so bloated that she could not wear her own clothing; but in ten minutes after the writer and Brother Pierce administered to her she returned to the room smiling; dressed in the clothes she could not wear before. The power of God during the administration was beyond anything I have experienced for many a day. I received a testimony then and there that she was healed.

The Saints all rejoiced when they saw Sister Hisle at the church that evening, singing the glad songs of Zion. How much we have to be thankful for; and still how weak we are! Many times we fall short of doing our duty.

May God continue to bless his people in my prayer.

HENRY SPARLING.

EXETER, DEVON, ENGLAND.

Dear Herald: I have never written to you before, but I thought some of the Saints might like to know how God has helped me. I left my home and my dear mother three years ago, and came to this country to stay with some Saints until I obtained work. I had never seen them previously, and only knew them by writing.

I knew the gospel was true, and so gave myself into God's keeping; left all and went forth in obedience to his commands.

I was baptized by Elder William Newton. The Lord has blessed me more than I ever hoped for. I have had dreams and visions and manifestations of the Spirit, and God used me to bring a dear sister into the fold. The Spirit led me to write to her, which I did, explaining all about our gospel. She saw instantly it was true, and now she is an earnest Latter Day Saint. The Spirit witnessed to me three nights in succession that she would obey the gospel.

I am now contending with my own mother for the cause of the gospel, as she thinks we are Mormons. She has tried in every way to get me away from the dear Saints, but I won't leave them. I will never look back to what I left behind, for our Savior has said, He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me. I love my mother dearly, but I love my Savior best. So I am determined, hard though it is, to fight on till the end, that I may hear his "well done."

Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may remain faithful to my promise, and so live my religion that my heavenly Father's name may be glorified.

Your sister in the one faith,

4 HAVERLY AVENUE.

FLORENCE E. WRIGHT.

FRUITLAND, NEW MEXICO, April 14, 1913.

Dear Herald: Thinking perhaps you might like to hear how the work of the Lord is progressing in this land of ancient ruins, I write.

We are located on our desert claim of one hundred and sixty acres in the northwestern corner of New Mexico. I can stand on my claim and look into Colorado, Utah, Arizona; also view the Mesa Verde, where all those ancient cliff ruins are found. We have three rivers running through this country, and on both sides of these rivers are ruins.

When I stand on the mountainside with my Book of Mormon in my hand and view the country o'er, I marvel that it describes this land so strikingly. It tells us that as they traveled northward they came to a land void of timber. They began to build houses of cement. This land is void of timber, and here are indications that they built with cement. I read again, how the Gadianton robbers lived in the mountains and came down into the valleys to plunder and to steal, then retreated into their strongholds; and here are the ruins, the mountains, and valleys. It is said by those who have tried that it is almost impossible to get up the mountains to these ruins.

At the south side of these mountains is a beautiful spring of very fine water. In the valley about half way between my place and the foot of the mountain is a very large, round mountain about three hundred feet high. When I visited this mountain, near the top, on the south side, I discovered that a stoneway had been built, and there I found a battle-ax; also some corn. From the appearance of the soil on top of this mountain, there seemed to have been a watch tower there.

This is a stronghold of the Utah Mormons. Sometimes I wonder what good I am doing here. Well, I have this consolation; I keep before the people that law in the Book of Mormon which says that no man shall have more than one wife. But the Mormons will not have it; they believe in polygamy as much as ever. I have a good union Sunday school organized, and am teaching the people the old Jerusalem gospel. Sometimes I regret that I am doing so little for the Master.

This is the only place in my thirty-five years in the church that I could not, by the help of the Lord, build up his church. But I see a brighter day ahead. In conversation with a Navaho Indian, I told him of the history of his forefathers, and the promises of the Lord to the Indians in these the latter days. When I handed him the Book of Mormon to read, he said, "I thank you; I thank you." My ruling desire is to tell the people about the restored gospel.

My health is better now than it has been since I was hurt in the coal mines in Indian Territory.

May God bless his Saints.

As ever in Christ,

PETER ADAMSON.

Extracts from Letters.

Sister Nettie Coonce, Goreville, Illinois: "I am burdened with the cares of life and responsibilities of my loved ones. This little branch needs reviving occasionally, and would welcome the elders at any time."

Sister Mary U. Morris, Saint Marys, Ohio: "I am new in this grand and glorious latter day work, but I can realize the hand of God directs it, and I am striving in my weak way to live a Christian life and advance our cause as best I can. I once belonged to the Church of Christ, but I am thankful that I have learned of this latter day gospel, and can walk beneath its banner. I was baptized last November at Uniopolis by Brother C. E. Miller. Soon after, we moved here, and while we are still faithful to that we know is right, we feel that life would be much better could we associate with our own brothers and sisters."

Sister Ellen Billings, Deer Isle, Maine: "I am thankful for the gospel. It brings comfort to those who live the best they can. We will be rewarded for every good deed, but we should keep the whole law, that we may reap the reward of the righteous. I am trying to live here so that I may come forth in the first resurrection. We are in hopes Brother F. J. Ebeling will be sent back here. The work he left in Sargeantville is still advancing."

Brother David C. Hollingsworth, Mabton, Washington: "I love to read the good letters and sermons in the HERALD, as they are all the preaching I hear. I am the only Saint around here, that I know of. If there are any Saints nearer than Spokane, I would like to hear from them. Would like the name and address of the branch president of the Omaha Branch, also of the Spokane Branch."

Brother Herbert Pugh, Transcona, Montana: "Will an elder please call on my wife, Mrs. Herbert Pugh, Simcoe Street, Lindsay, Ontario, and bless our baby. I ask the prayers of the Saints that our little son's life may be spared, as he is afflicted."

Sister Jennie Searry, Ripon, California: "Our branch is small, but we have a few tried and true Saints who are doing all in their power to advance God's work. There has been quite an interest aroused of late through the efforts of our worthy and sacrificing missionary, D. R. Chambers. He has made many friends to the cause by his forceful and eloquent sermons, which have been so plain that a child could understand them."

J. H. Lewis, Fanshawe, Oklahoma: "I have just read the magazine number of the HERALD, giving a sketch of the life and work of Joseph Smith, jr., together with letters written by him. My wife had a dream a few nights before we received this HERALD, and saw the Prophet and his brother standing before her. Hyrum pointed out Joseph to her and said: 'This is the man God sent before his latter day glory should shine out, to the glory of God, and the calling forth of his ministry. Behold him!' The HERALD came, and she recognized the pictures as those of Joseph and Hyrum. My wife has only been in the church a short time, and has complained that although she had sought a testimony of assurance she had failed to receive. She is now rejoicing in the knowledge of the restored gospel."

News from Branches

Toledo, Ohio.

The Toledo Branch is prospering. The Saints are all striving to come up higher, and God is good in remembering us. He has blessed us abundantly with his Spirit, and with tongues and prophecies, cheering us on in the good way and warning us of dangers.

Several are investigating the angel's message, also telling it to others. Our officers have been tracting the neighborhood around the hall, and many appear to be seeking after more light. We hope and pray honest hearts may be reached through this means.

We were glad to see the smiling face of Brother Jesse Harding, as he stopped here for a short time on his way back to Oak Harbor, where he and Brother Samuel Brown were holding forth. The Saints also had the pleasure of having Brother R. Etzenhouser lecture one evening.

Brother Hettrick was called upon to preach the funeral sermon of Sister Paul Thatcher of Mermill, who departed this life on March 4, at Bowling Green Sanitarium. Brother Hettrick had good liberty in expounding the resurrection to a house full of attentive listeners, and we hope some seed fell on good ground, which will bring forth fruit in God's own due time.

MRS. A. P. CROOKER.

Arkansaw, Wisconsin.

The Frankfort Branch was organized nineteen years ago. Brethren H. P. Curtis, C. H. Burr, and W. A. McDowell were the first elders to bring the gospel here, and largely through their efforts a branch was organized which now has a membership of one hundred and twelve, with a Sunday school and Religio.

On February 15 and 16, the conference of the district was held here, with a good attendance. We had a splendid conference, the Spirit being present to cheer and instruct. The work is onward and the Lord is striving with his people to bring them up higher.

The Sunday school convention was held in conjunction with the conference, Brother Leroy Colbert presiding. This department of the work is progressing nicely.

There are a number sick and afflicted among us. We fasted Sunday and administered to some of those present at the afternoon meeting, with good results. We feel to praise the Lord for his goodness toward us, and the many blessings he is giving us day by day.

Your brother in Christ,

S. E. LIVINGSTON.

Scranton, Pennsylvania.

Since last report we have been meeting in our own new church building, the opening date being March 1, when we assembled with the Saints of the New York and Philadelphia District conference. The conference was a peaceable one, and seemed to be enjoyed by all.

The corner stone of the church was laid by Bishop John Zimmermann, after being presented with a silver trowel, handed to him by Sister Irene Birch, on behalf of the Scranton Sunday school. Short speeches were given by Brethren John Zimmermann, sr., Archibald D. Angus, E. B. Hull, Willard J. Smith.

The order of branch services is as follows: Social service, 10 a. m.; Sunday school, 2.30 p. m.; preaching at 7; Religio Tuesday evenings; prayer meeting, Wednesday evenings at 7.30.

On the 21st inst., the branch choir rendered a cantata, entitled, "The great lights," repeating the same on the 22d.

Since the opening of the church five persons have been baptized. Brother W. J. Smith, of Detroit, Michigan, who has been traveling through this section, has preached many times for us.

San Bernardino, California.

Just a line to say we have been enjoying some very spiritual meetings at San Bernardino. We have just completed a baptismal font, and the writer had the blessed privilege of leading two precious souls into the watery grave, a child of eight, and a Mrs. Swinney, formerly a member of the Christian Church.

Sister Swinney is rejoicing in the Spirit and said: "When I was baptized by the Christian minister, I felt no change, no satisfaction, no joy, but now I know I have been baptized by one having authority. I am in the true church. I feel a part of the body of Christ." Blessed be the tie that binds.

Earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, I am,

Yours in bonds,

WILL A. BOREN.

Ottumwa, Iowa.

We would like to avail ourselves of the privilege of your letter department. We have here a branch of about seventy members. We are trying to let our light so shine that our work in this place may be as is a lighthouse to the storm-tossed mariner. Our objective being perfection, as pertaining to godliness, finds us not always as we would be, on account of our limitations and weaknesses; but with God's help we desire to go onward and upward, for we know that if we follow the cause we have espoused, victory shall at last be ours.

The major portion of the branch duties are being borne by the young, and we ask an especial portion of the prayers of the Saints in their behalf, that their lives may be so lived as to draw many souls to the banner of King Immanuel. May God speed the day when our work shall be more effective.

We desire to call the attention of all those interested to the fact that this city has been chosen as next meeting place for the district conference in June. We take this means of inviting all who can possibly do so to come and be with us, that mutual good may result. We would like to see this conference the largest in attendance of any held for years; for we are believers in the theory that the greater the number of Saints assembled, the greater the benefits enjoyed. "Come ye that love the Lord, and let your joys be known" in convention assembled.

We have petitioned the proper authorities, praying that we may have a resident minister here; and hope, nothing preventing, to hear favorably from them when the routine of General Conference is over.

We realize that the measure of our reward will be as is the service we render to our fellow men; and we ask the prayers of all Saints to the end that we may truly transform our realizations into deeds, to the glory of God and to our reception among those who shall inherit the glory of the sun.

Yours in bonds,

JOHN E. BAKER.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Our sacrament services were well attended the past few months. The last one, on May 5, was held at 3 p. m. instead of 11 a. m., owing to our having the privilege to listen to two excellent discourses delivered by Apostles Sheehy and Rushton. They, with Brethren Archibald and T. J. Elliott, were appointed by General Conference to represent us as a church at the Peace Congress, which was held here in Saint Louis.

Brother Sheehy spoke to us in the morning, his subject being "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." He commended our Saint Louis choir for their efforts. Brother Rushton occupied in Lansdowne in the morning, Brother Sheehy speaking for them in the evening, and Brother Rushton favored Saint Louis in the evening, his theme being "Peace." We were indeed made to rejoice because of the beautiful thoughts expressed by both of these servants of God, and trust they will continue to be blessed by God's Spirit.

Our local men have done well during the last few months. Brethren Archibald, Trowbridge, Reeves, and Bell delivered the precious word. Our prayer services, we are sorry to say, are not so well attended as they should be. We should ever remember to be in the spirit of the work. The prayer services should not be neglected. The young people's prayer services at 8.45 a. m. Sundays are reported, as a rule, to be good. The Sunday school and Religio work is progressing.

Brother Joseph Betts, of Belleville, Illinois, has been very ill and the past few weeks has been in a very serious and dangerous condition. Many sincere prayers have been offered for him, and we desire that he be remembered by God's people elsewhere, that if it is consistent with God's will he will receive a blessing. We sincerely sympathize with his family in their distress.

Your sister in Christ,

2789 GREER AVENUE.

ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

The month of April has been a very eventful one for the Philadelphia Saints. Tuesday, the 1st, we were visited by Brother Frederick M. Smith, who stopped only a few hours for consultation with some of the brethren, but long enough to give us a little glimpse of the onward progress of the great work of the Lord. Brother Smith was returning from Washington, District of Columbia, where he had been in the interest of the church.

April 6, was celebrated by the laying of the corner stone of the Second Philadelphia Church, to be known as the Beacon Light Chapel. The day was most unpropitious—rain, snow, wind; altogether disagreeable, but notwithstanding this a fine crowd witnessed the ceremony. Bishop John Zimmermann presided; Brother Benjamin R. McGuire, of Brooklyn, New York, officiated at the laying of the stone. Brethren E. B. Hull, D. T. Shaw, Walter W. Smith, and A. D. Angus assisted.

The new church will be complete by the first Sunday in June, when we hope to occupy it for the first time. It is being just now only completed one story, a fine large building of granite 40 by 52 feet, with tower entrance outside. It will furnish a fine meeting place for the mission, now long since overcrowded. It is hoped that Brother E. B. Hull may be able to stay in Philadelphia until it is completed and occupied. His untiring labors, together with those of Sister Hull and many other loyal Saints who have helped him, have made this work possible, and we trust he may enjoy it with us ere he departs to his new charge at Brooklyn.

On the 18th, Brother B. R. McGuire returned again to Philadelphia, and preached most acceptably at the church; he was greeted by a fine gathering.

On the 20th we were greatly favored by a visit from Brother Gilbert J. Waller, of Honolulu, Hawaii Territory. Brother Waller was not very well, owing to the severity of the weather as compared with that of the "Paradise of the Pacific"; but he attended the young people's prayer service at 8 a. m., and his word of testimony was appreciated, and his heart in turn was gladdened. At 11 a. m. he gave the Saints a most touching testimonial of God's goodness in directing the work in the islands; all enjoyed it. Brother Waller's presence is like a ray of sunshine; he is so full of faith and courage. He visited a few days, and departed, going as far as the "Hub," and returning, having visited Brooklyn on the way.

The conference news filtered through very sparingly, and it was well on toward the last of the month before we were definitely assured of the appointments and arrangements for our district and city. The Saints in Philadelphia regret the loss of Brother E. B. Hull, who joined the church in Philadelphia, and so seems to be one of us. His excellent work at the mission has endeared him to many. What is loss to Philadelphia is gain to Brooklyn. We are glad to be honored again by the choice from our number of another general church worker, in the selection of Brother A. D. Angus, as evangelical minister to labor in our district.

The Philadelphia Saints have heard, though not officially, that Brother J. A. Koehler is to be located at Philadelphia, which is very gratifying. Brother Walter W. Smith will labor again in Philadelphia, which makes ten years of service among us. We look for a very prosperous year. We are pleased to announce that four have given their names for baptism, among them Brother Jacob Wilson and wife, whom we have confidently expected for eight or ten years.

May the Lord richly bless his work.

Notices.*ATTENTION, GOOD LITERATURE COMMITTEES.

With a desire to cooperate with the good literature committees, who are doing such a good work in distributing church literature, we have decided to allow them, for the balance of the year, to send subscriptions for the Ensign to nonmembers at 50 cents a year. This gives eight months, from the first of May till the last of December, time enough to accomplish a great work. Others can cooperate with the committees in making the work thorough, that the greatest good may be accomplished. The only restrictions are that the paper be sent to nonmember families, and not transfers from a member to a nonmember in the same family, nor must it be for parties outside the United States' possessions, where the postage alone costs 52 cents a year on each paper. Address Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri.

W. H. DEAM, Manager.

Isolated Saints living in the Little Sioux District, where an opening can be made for our work, or where a missionary may make an effort to get the gospel before the people, please let the undersigned hear from you at once. In this way you can help me in my new field of labor, and oblige.

Yours respectfully,

ALMA BOOKER.

SIoux CITY, IOWA, 4315 Van Buren Avenue.

The Bishopric.*AGENT'S NOTICE.

Dear Saints and Friends of Western Nebraska: You are doubtless aware ere this that I have been appointed to labor this conference year in northeastern Nebraska. And as the Bishop wishes me to still look after the tithes and offerings in western Nebraska, please respond along this line as the Lord may prosper you.

I am indeed grateful for the effort you made last year to comply with this part of the gospel law. I think it is indeed a blessing God has bestowed upon us, giving all an opportunity to help roll on the great work. Paul says: "We are laborers together with God," and that "every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labor." Then, as we are "laborers together with God," let us do our best, so there will be nothing lacking on our part. May the Lord bless you in every righteous effort. Send money by check or draft to my address at Comstock, Nebraska.

Please accept my thanks for your many acts of kindness to me during the many years I was with you as an ambassador for Christ. Your loving kindness for me will only be forgotten when my knowledge of the things of this earth ceases. May the God of Israel bless you, with all his Saints.

Yours in the one faith,

C. W. PRETTYMAN.

COMSTOCK, NEBRASKA, May 8, 1913.

Correction.

Editors Herald: About ten days ago I mailed you a letter of correction as to the date of our Eastern Iowa district conference, and I noticed in the HERALD for April 30, that my correction was overlooked. Please make the correction in the next issue so the date will read June 14 and 15, and not 15 and 16 as per HERALD of April 30. Am sorry I made the mistake in the first notice, and sorry if my first correction letter did not reach you in due time.

J. B. WILDERMUTH.

OSTERDOCK, IOWA, May 5, 1913.

Address.

Alma Booker, 4315 Van Buren Avenue, Sioux City, Iowa.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Little Sioux District; Greeting: Your president will not be able to visit all the branches in the district during the current quarter, owing to circumstances beyond my control. This is a source of deep regret to me, for I would much like to meet all the Saints once more.

Our district conference convenes at Pisgah, June 7, and it is hoped that there may be a good attendance; that each branch will be represented and fully reported. Will the brethren be sure and report, no matter how much or how little you may have done? It is also hoped that the missionary in general charge, Brother James A. Gillen, also his associate in charge, Brother W. A. Smith, will be with us.

Let us make the current conference year one of glorious results. The Lord is calling to us to move forward. Our brethren, holding aloft the missionary banner are saying, Come; everything is in our favor. Oh, then, let us make a united effort.

Four were baptized at Logan yesterday, three adults and one small boy. May God's blessing attend your efforts and assist you to speed the good work.

Your brother,

SIDNEY PITT, SR., District President.

To Those Interested in Mission Number 1, Greeting: With the object in view of obtaining the best possible results during the ensuing conference year I have arranged the following, and trust that accordingly everyone interested will put forth every legitimate effort to "build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness."

Bishop J. A. Becker will have financial oversight of the three districts of Kirtland, Ohio, and Pittsburg, and will report his missionary labors to the associate minister in charge of the Kirtland District.

Richard Baldwin will act as associate minister in charge of Kirtland District, and to him Brethren Samuel Brown and Jesse Hardin will look for the necessary directions, and to him they will report. C. Edward Miller will have charge of the Kirtland Temple during the summer months, and later may travel, delivering lectures on Book of Mormon, etc.; his reports will be sent to R. Baldwin.

N. L. Booker will be my associate in charge of Ohio District, and assisting him will be John Davis, C. E. Bozarth and William C. Hidy; he will direct the labors and receive reports, etc.

Leon G. Burdick will, as my assistant in charge, direct the labors and receive reports of A. V. Closson and J. E. Bishop; he has the supervision of the Pittsburg District.

James C. McConaughy is my assistant in the Virginias, and if Fred Moser, jr., will accept the appointment to labor this year he will receive instructions relative thereto from Brother McConaughy, and I will endeavor to send more help later.

H. E. Moler is my associate in charge of Kentucky, Tennessee, and Southern Indiana and will have as his assistants Brethren J. G. Halb, J. W. Metcalf, J. A. Roberts, W. S. Shupe, S. E. Dickson and Charles Nolan. Evangelical minister F. G. Pitt, upon his return from the Australian Mission, will labor in those districts.

J. R. McLain and A. C. Barmore will labor in Southern Indiana District and I would deem it advisable to elect Brother McLain district president at the ensuing district conference.

To Brother Moler all reports will be sent, and he will direct the labors of the brethren as he may consider for the greatest good.

That the general interests of the church may be preserved, it will be necessary before final arrangements for debate are concluded that consent be had of the minister in general charge.

The increasing alertness of the enemy of our cause makes it incumbent upon us that for the general benefit of the kingdom of God we throw about the bestowal of the priesthood all the safeguards possible; therefore, that such may be more completely done, we advise that before such honorable responsibilities are bestowed upon any man consent be obtained from the minister in general charge or the district conference.

It being almost impossible for the minister in general charge to visit all the local congregations of the mission during the year, and the district conferences and reunions being the most convenient places for him to meet the scattered membership of the mission, it is advised that the setting of such days of meeting be delegated to the officials thereof and the minister in general charge, so that he or one of his assistants may be present to look after the general interests of the work.

We would encourage the mission and local authorities to make all the new openings possible, and when so made to cautiously and prayerfully advance the interests of the kingdom of God by every legitimate means.

The recent General Conference being one of marked encouragement to those within the fold, it behooves us, individually and collectively, to observe not only the revelations of past years but to become thoroughly acquainted with the instructions and admonitions of the Lord given April 14, 1913, and live by every word thus given.

The assistant ministers in charge will see that their helpers are supplied with the necessary blank forms for quarterly and yearly reporting, and to have the work done in order the following rules should be observed: Send to the assistant minister in charge at the end of each quarter, your reports closing June 30, September 30, December 31, and February 28; and your annual March 1, 1914; who will by the fifth of the following months forward to the minister in general charge.

With a united, prayerful effort we can accomplish great good during the ensuing year, therefore, to that end let us all walk hand in hand with each other and the divine Guide, and in so doing the Lord will abundantly bless all thus engaged.

May the peace of the Holy Spirit abide with each and all.
Your collaborer for final triumph of righteousness,

R. C. RUSSELL,

Minister in General Charge of Mission Number 4.
CHATHAM, ONTARIO, 135 Selkirk Street.

To the Saints and Friends of Those Portions of Missouri, Kansas, and Illinois included in Mission Number 2: Greeting: Having been placed in charge of the work in this field by the church, I take this way of outlining the work for the new conference year; and also of introducing myself to you, trusting to become personally acquainted during the course of our work.

The field and its conditions are altogether strange to me, and I will therefore need your patience and help in a larger degree than if I were acquainted with the work and its needs. Though there are the same abiding principles which underlie our work everywhere, there are still the local peculiarities and color which necessarily have to be taken into consideration, and can only be appreciated by experience.

The purpose of our work in all places is to preach Christ, that souls may be saved. Everything must be subordinate to this supreme end, and nothing must be permitted to obstruct our work in this regard. We are therefore only able to justify our claims as a church in proportion as we identify ourselves with him in his ideals, spirit, and methods.

It is also important that in this portion of the field, particularly, we ever keep before us the object of our work in these latter days, which is to build up the kingdom of God, and so commence the work of bringing human society into that condition of organization which recognizes and responds to the immediate rule of God. This is of course the building up of Zion, and of all places in the world we should here at the center stake of Zion and the regions round about, be able now to give to the world an object lesson as to the practical results of our eighty years culture under the spirit and law of the restored gospel.

In this pastoral letter we therefore feel specially directed to summarize the policy which we trust will obtain among ministers and members, individually and collectively; remembering always that character is the foundation of all society, and to secure the kingdom of heaven the first demand is the heavenly character.

I call attention especially to the effort which has been decided upon this year by the Bishopric, together with the joint council of Presidency and Twelve, and that is to make a very strenuous effort to raise the extraordinary sum of $75,000 in order to reduce the immediate pressure of debt upon the church. We earnestly invite the hearty cooperation of each individual member to make this a success by complying with the policy which the presiding bishop may advise.

The missionaries for this field will labor as herein directed for the present. It will be observed that we have discontinued the appointing of subministers in charge, as we prefer to keep in direct touch with the ministry both local and general, and shall be glad to hear from each and all and to consider any suggestion which may be offered.

We would advise that there be close and intimate cooperation between the local and missionary officers, each working together either in initiating or supplementing as circumstances may afford. Especially in the case of the Independence Stake do we advise this course, and at any time we wish the brethren to respond to calls made by the stake officers for help in such places as may be opened.

I request that all will please be prompt in reporting to me at the usual times, and request that all correspondence be directed to Independence, Missouri, 701 Cottage Street North.

Independence Stake: George Jenkins, F. L. Sawley, R. O. Self, and T. W. Chaburn.

Far West District, Missouri: B. J. Scott and W. P. Pickering; Saint Joseph: E. L. Henson and John Ely will labor in the district.

Faithfully yours,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

MAY 8, 1913.

To the Saints and Ministry in Mission Number 1, Comprising Iowa, Nebraska, North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Alberta, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan; Greeting: Inasmuch as I have been placed in charge of the above mission, I desire to make a few observations relative to the work in this part of the conference field, that I trust will be of interest to those directly concerned, and likewise conserve the interests of the body.

First, let me remind you of the statement of the Apostle Paul, wherein he declares: "I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." Such fidelity to the confidence imposed in him, at once challenges our admiration, and strengthens the desire within us to emulate the example of such a noted representative of Christ.

Now, we have no other object than to represent Christ in the world as he would represent himself; in the spirit of meekness and love, forgetful of his own personal interests. If we do this, I am confident that no weapon formed against the work of the Master will ultimately triumph.

I am glad to be associated with such a body of coworkers; I am glad to be numbered as one of the many lively stones that are to form the tabernacle of God. Let us, therefore, as Saints, whether in branches or in isolated condition, remember that we are a part of the church, the body of Christ, consequently we can not afford to let the little things, so incident to life, estrange us from our brothers and sisters, or the love of the work. If we as Saints have some little differences, let them be lost in the thought: The work of the Master must move forward at the sacrifice of these little things that are neither here nor there as compared with the gospel.

I have decided not to appoint subministers, but am going to ask that all make their reports directly to me. I am sure this will be satisfactory to all; and I assure you, brethren of the ministry, that I will be glad to hear from you, and will also be pleased to give you any assistance relative to the work. I want, and shall try to merit your confidence. The best counsel I can offer is that we as ministers coordinate to the accomplishment of the great work intrusted to us.

Please observe the dates for reporting, July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1, and get in promptly, so that I can make my report to the First Presidency.

Permanent address, 635 South Fuller Street, Independence, Missouri.

I am yours in bonds,

JAMES A. GILLEN.

In Memoriam.

Whereas, In the providence of God it has pleased him to remove from our midst our beloved and esteemed brother, William S. Pender, after long and faithful service of devotion and sacrifice, the later years under great affliction, during which he accomplished efficiency in the Spanish language, and with Brother W. H. Mannering, opened the Mexican Mission, under Apostle F. M. Sheehy,

We regret deeply our loss and that of the church, as well as that of the bereaved ones, but we bow to the overruling providence of him who doeth all things well, to whose grace we commend the bereaved ones, and extend to them our sympathy, in copies presented, and in suitable publication.

Yours respectfully,
J. F. MINTUN, Secretary of First Seventy.

Laugh at Your Burden.

Most of us are bending under the burden of some great load. It may be care, it may be disappointment, it may be injustice, it may be physical pain or spiritual discouragement, but it is heavy. Often it seems heavier than we can bear and we cry out and protest. These burdens are very real, but really they are not half as big and heavy as we make them. We have had them upon our shoulders, entirely out of our sight, so long that they have been magnified by imagination or weariness or impatience, until they seem unbearable. Now, then, whatever your burden may be, however long you have been carrying it, and however proud you may have become of your self-imposed martyrdom, just take your burden down and look at it honestly, and you will be surprised how it has dwindled away while you have been magnifying it in your mind. Look at it frankly and fearlessly and in nine cases out of ten will your tears be turned to laughter and your sighing into song.—From the Universalist Leader.

The education of the people is not only a means, but the best means, of attaining that which all allow to be the chief end of government; and, if this be so, it passes my faculties to understand how any man can gravely contend that government has nothing to do with the education of the people.—Macaulay.

Summer Board in Colorado Very Moderate Charges

"I'd like to go to Colorado," said a man the other day, "but it costs so much to live there that I'm afraid I—"

"Forget it," said his friend, who had spent a month last summer seeing the show-places of the Wonder State. "I had the same idea myself last year until I got that folder the Burlington gets up telling the hotel rates. And I was mightily surprised to find that, besides the hotels, which are as elaborate, as you please, there are hundreds of good, cleanly, wholesome ranch houses in Colorado, where the rates are as low as $8.00 a week, and they give you mighty good fare."

That folder is published by the Burlington Railroad to show folks how they can enjoy a vacation in Colorado at a very reasonable expense. And I'd like to mail you a copy of it—free. It tells all about the country, gives a complete list of hotels and boarding houses, addresses, rates, conveniences, elevation and near-by attractions.

Let me send these, and if you wish I can tell you all about the trains and cost of railway tickets to the most wonderfully charming country in America.

Editorial

EDITORIAL COMMENT ON VARIOUS TOPICS.

IS THERE HOPE FOR THIS WOMAN?

There lies upon the editorial desk a letter that we have been unable to destroy. Each time we have essayed to thrust it into the wastebasket an inner impulse has stayed our hand. For written at the top of this letter are these words, "Do not throw this into the wastebasket. If there is any hope for me, let me know."

The letter is unsigned and there is no address. Yet it contains confession of a mistake that causes the soul of the author, whoever she may be, to writhe in repentance and anguish. This letter comes from a young married woman, who, blinded by the wicked advice of worldly friends, and discouraged by that poverty that seemed to compel her to choose between little children and attractive material things upon which men and women set their hearts to-day, did that unnamed thing, with the aid of a practicing physician who should hang higher than Haman, that to-day makes her feel that she is without God or hope in the world, that her prayers are unheeded, and that she has committed the "unpardonable sin." She pleads for a ray of light in this dark state, and prays that we may have divine wisdom to answer.

Awful though that deed was, who can consider her anguish without compassion? Is God less merciful to the repentant sinner than man? If Jesus were here, would he stoop and write in the sand while he considered that invitation, later to be extended the man without sin, that he might cast the first stone? Would he tell her to go and sin no more?

Was this young girl entirely accountable for what she did at that time? It seems to us that no mother not naturally depraved could have done such a deed while in full possession of all her faculties. Her repentance, now that her eyes are opened, shows that she is not a depraved criminal; but rather a weak woman who was blinded by the evil influences of wicked friends, and the pernicious philosophy of a materialistic and godless age, and became the victim of a physician who is a Judas Iscariot to his own noble profession, a murderer so base that for a fee he kills little, unborn children.

Our advice to this girl, and as we can not give it to her by private correspondence, we seek this avenue, is to make due and full confession to her God and trust his abundant mercy and justice to consider all circumstances and pass a just judgment. Let her then go on in the fear of heaven, making such success as she can of life; and in the performance of duty in the home and service to humanity about her, make atonement, so far as is possible, seeking in these ways to secure respite from the accusing conscience. If God shall grant other children to this home, their laughter may yet drown the sad echoes in her heart. If the sinless have stones to cast at this unfortunate girl, her identity not being known, they may be cast at the editors. To our mind she is now in a fair way to begin upon a reconstructed life. Those are without hope who are willing to continue in their sins, self-blinded to the enormity of their conduct.

A LESSON FROM THE SHOP OF THE OLD VIOLIN MAKER.

One day a certain Great Master of the violin wandered into the shop of an old violin maker. Upon the shelves there were violins in all stages of repair, some cheap and poor and dilapidated, others of great beauty of design and finish and of almost fabulous value.

Selecting a carefully-cherished and ancient Stradivarius of soft and mellow tone, he drew the bow across the strings and began to play as he alone could play. Passers-by who knew the Great Master, and others who fancied that they knew him, paused to listen, enraptured with the music that issued from the shop of the old violin maker.

But presently the Great Master put the priceless Stradivarius away in its case and turned to an instrument of more humble origin. As he drew the bow across the strings of this instrument doubt began to appear upon the faces of some. And a little later, when he chose to play upon a warped and battered violin whose notes were sometimes harsh and discordant, one declared, "That is not the Great Master playing. That is some novice or impostor who has taken his place."

But another replied, "That is the Great Master; I know his touch on any instrument. The harsh and discordant notes are due to the imperfect instrument on which he plays, for even the Great Master expresses himself through his instruments, and if they are not perfect they mar his expression. Still it is the Great Master, and none other could do so well with a broken instrument; though in truth I prefer to hear him play upon the Stradivarius."

Thus it is with the Great Master of Men who plays upon the heartstrings of humanity, and expresses himself through men,—only in this instance volition belongs to the instrument of expression, and He will not speak through an instrument that refuses to submit to his touch.

When he speaks through a mind that is refined, talented, educated, and obedient, there is marvelous beauty of delivery and expression. But such an instrument is not always at his hand, and obedient to his will; and he may sing the same strain through the heartstrings and brain cells of another who is willing to obey but is not capable of such refined beauty of expression. When this latter occurs men should have enough of the spirit of discernment to be able to detect the touch of the Master even when it falls upon a broken instrument; and the message that comes to them, if understood and comprehended, may be as valuable as though it saluted their ears clothed with the greatest beauty of expression and emanating from a polished instrument of world renown.

The Saints of God are to be the light of the world, the Master says, and our light should never burn so low that we ourselves will be left in doubt, unenlightened, and undecided when God speaks to us.

The abrupt and unpolished Peter and the educated and refined Paul do not speak after the same manner, yet the Holy Spirit inspired the minds and hearts of both and both gave a message to the souls of men.

Many of the writers of the Book of Mormon were unpolished men, pioneers, active men of affairs and adventure, not of the litterati, and they apologize for the defects contained in their record, saying that they are the faults of men, and not the faults of God. The Great Master did not always play upon the Stradivarius. The Master of Men does not always speak through a silver-tongued Isaiah. At times he uses a Lehi or a Moroni, or even an unlettered boy prophet and seer of Palmyra. Nevertheless, it is the Spirit of the same Master working all in all, for the salvation of men; and those who know him best, recognize his touch on any instrument that he may choose to use and finds obedient to his touch to the extent of its limitations.

THE FIGHTING SPIRIT OF LATTER DAY SAINTISM.

By the term, "The Fighting Spirit of Latter Day Saintism," we do not mean to indicate any spirit of contention which seeks trouble for the sake of trouble, but rather that spirit which the Apostle Paul had in mind when on different occasions he exhorted the Saints to contend earnestly for the faith, to prove all things, and be ready always to give an answer to every man who might ask it, presenting a sound reason for the hope that was in them.

When we consider the weight of opposition that was flung against the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in the early years of its history, we can readily see that but for its fighting spirit it would not now be in existence. The elders of those early days stood ready to meet all opposition, asking, but seldom being accorded the privilege of a fair opportunity to defend themselves. In a figurative sense the church was obliged to form itself into a hollow square, like the indomitable British army in the Soudan, ready to meet the attacks of religious and irreligious fanatics from every side.

Nor is this opposition abating to any perceptible degree. In fact, though it has assumed new phases, it seems to have become intensified, if such a thing were possible, during the past ten years. It is manifested in the temporarily successful effort to exclude our missionaries from Germany; in the nation-wide crusade carried on in Great Britain, which seemingly makes no distinction between the Reorganized Church and the Utah Church; and in a nation-wide, concerted campaign by various alliances and organizations in the United States, as well as in Canada. This war is waged through diplomatic circles, from the pulpit, in papers both religious and secular, by means of many tracts, pamphlets, and books, and in divers ways too numerous to mention. There seems to be a concerted and almost world-wide effort to incite the people to arise and extirpate all forms of Latter Day Saintism. Our opponents aim at nothing less than the complete crushing out of the work founded under the administration of the Seer of Palmyra.

We are pleased to note that in the church there still continues that fighting spirit which is ever ready to rally to the defense of truth. Our elders and members generally stand ready to defend their faith and are eager to crowd in wherever there is the least possible hope of an opening, to defend that which they believe to be true and to refute that which they believe to be false.

Bishop F. S. Spalding, himself author of the recently published pamphlet, Joseph Smith, jr., as a Translator, says in that pamphlet, "Those who attacked the Mormons felt moved to publish everything they could discover or invent to the discredit of 'Joe Smith' and his parents."

We can heartily agree with Bishop Spalding that our opponents have been good inventors; and the bishop further pays this tribute, "A rather careful reading of the controversy leads this writer to the conclusion that the Latter Day Saints set an example of dignity and courtesy which their opponents rarely follow."

Among other attacks that our elders have been compelled to meet is the one previously mentioned in the HERALD, entitled, Mormonism, the Islam of America, by Bruce Kinney. This book is issued under the direction of the Council of Women for Home Missions, and is being studied all over the United States by societies of church women and young people's associations of various denominations. Wherever possible, our men have made an attempt to meet the charges set forth against Joseph Smith in the first two chapters of the book. The remaining chapters of the book are devoted to Utah Mormonism, and with them we have no concern. It has been the general rule, so far as we have been able to learn, that these societies of women, engaged in the study of this book have refused to hear the other side of the story. Brother S. W. L. Scott writes that he delivered a reply to the book in Coldwater, Michigan, but only one member of the society attended his lecture.

Brother Leonard S. Rhodes writes from Centralia, Washington, inclosing a paper written to be read before the local organization of the Ladies' Home Missionary Society of that place at their monthly class meeting, during the course of their study of Mr. Kinney's book. The ladies refused to hear the paper read, saying that they did not have the time.

Another example of the work done by our elders is an enterprise carried on by Elder U. W. Greene, who during the past year began a systematic campaign of distributing literature among lecturers representing the Evangelical Alliance of New England. He published in very neat and attractive style, "An open letter to the clergy," written by a member of the First Presidency, and mailed this in connection with a personal letter bearing his own signature. In this way he distributed something like three thousand copies, and letters received from various members of the clergy indicate that an excellent work was accomplished in explaining our position.

The fact that the opposition to our work is better organized than formerly impresses us with the thought that we ourselves must perfect the organization of our defenses. To this end the Presidency contemplates the organization of that which may in time develop into a fully-equipped "bureau of publicity," and we hope during the present year to distribute the aforementioned "Open letter to the clergy" far and wide in the United States and Canada, and possibly in foreign fields. Further announcement along this line will probably appear in due time, providing the plans contemplated are perfected.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

COST OF WAR.—Since the beginning of the war in the Balkans there have been business failures in Austria amounting to over sixteen million dollars; exports to the Balkan States have fallen off twenty million in three months; and debts to the amount of over eighteen million remain unpaid because of the war. It is not surprising that Austria has wished to see the war with Turkey ended, and get back her market in Serbia, Bulgaria, and Montenegro. Aside from this monetary consideration the cost in human suffering and the loss of amity between men and nations is inestimable.

ALERT ADVERTISING.—Many of the elders of the church have learned the value of legitimate advertising in church work. Bishop C. J. Hunt, of Deloit, Iowa, sends us a neat four-page folder announcing the convention and conference of the Gallands Grove District to convene at Mallard, Iowa, June 12. Programs of the convention and a statement of the meetings of the conference accompany the announcement, as does also a brief though comprehensive history of the Mallard Branch. By taking advantage of such occasions the work may be brought before the world in many localities in a way to attract both attention and attendance.

THE STAFF.—Under the caption "The Staff" a new feature will be found in the HERALD of this issue. The musicians and music lovers of the church will from time to time find expression through this column, devoted to the development of the "gifts of music and of song." Those who caught the inspiration of the work of the general choir at the late General Conference will welcome every effort to advance this movement throughout the church. In the spirit of cooperation the HERALD columns are opened to our musicians. "The Staff," edited by Sister Audentia Anderson, will appear once a month, or at such intervals as may be deemed necessary and consistent with this feature of church work.

INDIANS BAPTIZED.—We learn by letter from Brother W. M. Aylor that Brother Hubert Case was to have met with a band of Indians near Clinton, Oklahoma, May 10, a number of whom were to be baptized. Brother Aylor expects to make his first stop in that part of the field and will labor for a time personally among the Indians.

GRACELAND PRESIDENT.—The Board of Trustees of Graceland College report the election of Elder S. A. Burgess, of Saint Louis, as President of the College. Brother Burgess is a young man of learning; he is a man of spirituality, thoroughly imbued with the genius of the latter day work; he has the confidence of the church. With these essential qualifications he combines a rare executive ability. With the cooperation of the friends of Graceland his identification with the school should be strengthening.

CHURCH HOME.—By letter from Brother A. M. Chase we learn that the authorities to whom was referred at the late General Conference the matter of securing proper and adequate buildings for the work of the church at Salt Lake City have purchased what was formerly the English Lutheran church and parsonage, at 336 South Fourth East Street. This is said to be an excellent location. With this church home the Saints of Salt Lake City, as well as our official representatives there, should find the promulgation of the interests of the Reorganized Church in that city more pleasant than heretofore.

LAMONI SCHOOLS.—The patrons of the Lamoni, Iowa, school district, at an election held May 12, by an overwhelming majority, voted forty thousand dollar bonds with which to build a schoolhouse or houses in the town of Lamoni. This movement is made necessary on account of the inadequacy of present buildings, as to room, condition, and equipment.

SOMEBODY CRAZY.—Under title, "Joseph Smith vs. the Bible" one J. F. Hight in the Christian Leader for May 13 states, among other things: "The members of this cult are usually apostates from other religious bodies and of a mental organization to look for the silly, superstitious, and something that requires a form of insanity to believe." The tenor of this brief article reminds one of the insane man in the custody of the sheriff and on the way to an asylum, who, at every stopping place, insisted that it was the other fellow who was crazy.

Restoration.

Glorious light of the latter days,
By prophets long foretold:
Spirit of truth again restored
With blessings manifold.

No more need souls who love the truth
With doubt and myth be riven;
For God has designed to rend the veil
Between the earth and heaven.

As promised in the changeless word,
Prophetical, divine,
In many ways its writers saw,
This light of evening time.

Marvelous work, its messengers,
Angels from paradise!
Yet few receive, many reject—
Old systems all despise.

We know not why so few receive;
So few the faith defend.
Enough to know it is God's work,
And Jesus is our friend.

Not by might and by power,
Will the gospel win its way;
But the humble, Christ-like spirit
Lived by the Saints each day.

A SISTER.

At the Cross-Roads.

An old man sat at the cross-roads
On a stone by the village street.
He was weary and worn and travel stained
And faint from the dust and heat,
And his gray head drooped as he sat there
With hunger and travel spent.
While the noonday throng went hurrying by
On their homeward journey bent,
And I passed by with the others
In that heedless current caught
That recked nor cares for the stranger poor,
Nor the homeless wanderer's lot.

But the picture left its image;
I could not drive it away.
And I thought of One who would surely have paused
Had he been in the crowd that day.
How his eye sought out the outcast,
Who was barred from his fellow's door,
How he gave his hand to the woman shamed,
And bade her sin no more.
I saw him kneel by the leper,
As he shuddered and cried, "Unclean!"
And health and joy and manhood came
At the touch of the Nazarene.

They are waiting there at the cross-roads,
Weary and faint—alone.
There are many bowed with a sinner's shame
Or a shame that is not their own.
It may be a friendless orphan,
Or a slave in the thrall of drink—
Your path may lead to a happy home,
And his to the river's brink.
The wretched, the weak, the burdened,
The pilgrim with wayworn feet—
They are sitting there as the old man sat
At the place where the cross-roads meet.

Oh, linger a bit at the wayside,
And let your heart be heard,
As it bids you pause by your brother man
And give him a cheering word,
For the life that loves is lovely
And the soul that gives expands,
And the heart that warms to a brother's need
Is like to the Son of Man's,
And the meed will be right royal,
When he says to you and me,
"Inasmuch as you did for the least of these Ye have done it unto me."

—F. C. Wellman, in the Christian Herald.

Original Articles

HISTORICAL ARTICLE UPON THE INSPIRED VERSION.

About June, 1830, Joseph Smith, directed by inspiration, began a translation of the Jewish Scriptures. He was directed to begin this work by the revelation of June, 1830. According to this revelation the Lord said unto Moses:

In a day when the children of men shall esteem my words as naught, and take many of them from the book which you shall write, behold, I will raise up another like unto you, and they shall be had again among the children of men.—Doctrine and Covenants 22: 9.

The purpose of this inspired version was therefore to restore these lost things.

Also in the Book of Mormon, we have the statement:

For, behold, they have taken away from the gospel of the Lamb many parts which are plain and most precious; and also many covenants of the Lord have been taken away; and all this have they done that they might pervert the right ways of the Lord; that they might blind the eyes and harden the hearts of the children of men: wherefore thou seest that after the book hath gone forth through the hands of the great and abominable church that there are many plain and precious things taken away from the book, which is the book of the Lamb of God; and after these plain and precious things were taken away, it goeth forth unto all the nations of the Gentiles.—1 Nephi 3: 169-172.

And then we learn also from history by many authors that additions, corrections, and subtractions were made in the versions, not only by the transcribers, but also by those who set them at work. They took liberty to add, to retrench, and correct divers things. The critics have sometimes reformed the text and boldly corrected it upon a mere conjecture. The primitive Christians, persecuted by Jews and pagans, had lost the originals of their books. Any copy whatever might be relied upon as if it had been the first original, written with the hands of the apostles. Also, the Jews were sometimes careless and negligent, and lost some of the sacred books and burned and destroyed others.

Concerning the restoration of the Scriptures, we read in the Book of Mormon:

Wherefore, the fruit of thy loins shall write; and the fruit of the loins of Judah shall write; and that which shall be written by the fruit of thy loins, and also that which shall be written by the fruit of the loins of Judah, shall grow together, unto the confounding of false doctrines, and laying down of contentions and establishing peace among the fruit of thy loins, and bringing them to the knowledge of their fathers in the latter days; and also to the knowledge of my covenants, saith the Lord.—2 Nephi 2: 19-23.

And again:

And the angel spake unto me, saying, These last records which thou hast seen among the Gentiles shall establish the truth of the first, which are of the twelve apostles of the Lamb, and shall make known the plain and precious things which have been taken away from them, and shall make known to all kindreds, tongues and people, that the Lamb of God is the Son of the eternal Father, and the Savior of the world; and that all men must come unto him or they can not be saved; and they must come according to the words which shall be established by the mouth of the Lamb.—1 Nephi 3: 192-194.

From all this we see that it is the purpose of the Inspired Version to restore those plain and precious things which were lost from the Scriptures.

Joseph Smith was engaged at this work as opportunity offered, and when Sidney Rigdon came into the church, he assisted him [as scribe] a great deal. While engaged in this work they received in December, 1830, by revelation, an extract from the Prophecy of Enoch. The work was finished July 2, 1833, in the twenty-eighth year of Joseph Smith's life.

In Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15 we have again a revelation about this work:

Thou shalt ask, and my scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues and people.

The manuscript of the Inspired Version, at the death of Joseph Smith, in 1844, was left in the hands of his widow, where it remained until the spring of 1866, when it was delivered to William Marks, I. L. Rogers, and W. W. Blair, a committee appointed by the annual conference of April, 1866, to procure it for publication; by them it was delivered to the Committee of Publication, consisting of Joseph Smith, Israel L. Rogers, and Ebenezer Robinson. The printed Inspired Version of the Scriptures was published by these three men, according to the act of Congress, in the year 1867.

The last HERALD of the year brought to the waiting Saints the glad tidings that the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures was at last ready for mailing, five hundred out of the first edition of five thousand having just been received at the Herald Office. The church has ever been willing and anxious that this translation should be criticized in comparison with other translations of the Scriptures, and then judged upon its comparative merit. The year 1867 will be remembered in the annals of the church history as an important one because of the publication of this sacred record.

TENT WORK.

NUMBER XI.—"METHODS AND TACTICS SERIES."

As the season for tent work is about to open, this article may be timely. Brother Ebeling is enthusiastic, and a perusal of his article makes one wish to get out and try tent work for a while,—and probably that was exactly the effect that is was intended to have. At a little later date we will publish an article on the same topic by Brother N. L. Booker, another experienced tent worker. Brethren Ebeling and Booker were companions-in-arms in a very successful campaign of tent work in Ohio some years ago and are qualified to write on this subject. No doubt they will be pleased to answer questions or give further advice to any who may be contemplating tent work for the summer.—EDITOR.

I know of no more practical and effectual way to proselyte in the present day than by means of the canvas covered tabernacle.

In this day of the growing sentiment for a return to the simple life, tent work in preaching the gospel has a special charm. There are a large number of people who are looking for that which tends toward the romantic and dramatic, for whom the white canvas, or tented city, has a drawing power. Again, we have a large class of people who feel that the popular churches, with their mahogany pulpits, rented pews, paid choirs, and preachers, do not welcome them there. These find their congenial climate under the canvas, with pulpit made of rough lumber. And, again, we have the curious, who are always looking for that out of the ordinary, who frequently "drop in" out of curiosity. In fact, the tent may be properly termed the drag net in the sea of humanity.

Tent preaching is no longer considered the faker's or babbler's business, to which none but the "baser sort" gravitate, but in the last few years has become quite popular. Many of our leading churches in the large cities have their meetings under canvas during the hot period of summer, and find it remarkably successful. Beyond doubt there is a charm and novelty about tent service productive of much good. So much for the sentimental; now for the practical.

LOCATION.

The location has a great deal to do with successful tent operation. It will not do to put the tent in some dark, obscure place, or one difficult of approach; nor is it prudent to erect it in the business part of the city, where the incessant noise of the street cars, the rumble of wheels of the carriages, or the screeching yells of the street urchins drown the preacher's voice. If in a city, it should be on a nice, clean street, where the "common folks" reside, on a lot with an elevation a little above the street, giving particular attention to the cleanliness of surroundings. Scraps of paper, boxes, cans, parings, etc., will be constantly accumulating, especially where you do your own cooking. The grounds should be gone over each morning, gathering up all such accumulations. If in a village, the public school grounds is an ideal place, one of easy approach by all. If in the country, get near the crossroads, with shade trees. If you have to forego either one, let it be the crossroad, and try to get a shady grove as near the public road as possible.

METHOD OF LIVING.

Those operating a gospel tent should by all means eat and sleep on the grounds. There is an originality, freedom, and simplicity about this kind of life, especially during the hot summer months, that is of fascinating interest. You eat better, sleep better, and, added to all this is the independence which one can not feel in having some one else wait on them.

But the main feature of living right in the tent is that you are always there to wait upon all callers, who are not a few. On pleasant days have the side curtains raised, letting the warm sunshine and gentle summer breeze find a welcome in your tabernacle. This will often be an inducement for the tired, weary traveler to step in and spend a few hours with you, which invariably results in religious conversation.

At the beginning of the meetings don't fail to inform the people how you get your living. You are there to give them the gospel, and all you ask in return is to bring a little of whatever they can spare to feed the outer man. You will have no trouble in being abundantly supplied, in which they seem to take special delight. Don't be fastidious, it may be beans, beans, and beans; but eat them with thanksgiving,—but you will find the variety expanding the longer you remain.

THE PERSONNEL.

We can not emphasize too strongly the importance of having some one or two with the tent who can sing and perform on the folding organ. Good singing is the redeeming feature of tent work, if indeed tent work needs any redeeming. Throw wide open the side curtains, and about a half hour before preaching make the soft zephyrs of the evening resound with the sweet melody of song. And, like insects that crowd around the burning flame of twilight, will the eager denizens be drawn. Hand them a book, and in every way make them feel at home. I have known some to drive twelve miles to hear the singing. Good singing preceding a sermon will make the sermon seem more interesting. It is sort of a tonic for the rest of the evening.

If at all possible, let one or both of the elders have his wife with him. I know of no place in the church where the sisters can shine to better advantage than in tent service. The main feature in this will be to prevent the characteristic timidity in the gentler sex in coming to meeting where none of their kind can be seen. And, again, many privileges and considerations will be accorded a tent party if a woman is along, that would not be in her absence. Should they be blessed with the gift of song, they have a double duty to perform. Do not think you must have them along only to cook, wash dishes, and mend your clothes. A missionary who can not or will not take pleasure in doing this had better start life over again. By all means have a sister along with you and treat her as one of the company.

LITERATURE.

Always have on hand a good supply of the cheaper tracts for free distribution. I would not advise going around the audience or standing at the entrance and sowing them everywhere, for many people will take a tract simply through courtesy. Announce from the stand that you have tracts on various subjects, to give gratis to all those who come forward. Thus you will get only those who are more or less interested. Also have books and higher priced tracts for sale, not neglecting to advertise our church books and papers, giving them to understand that it is not for your personal gain. In all our work we want to avoid anything that caters to the commercial. An excellent way to advertise the meetings is to take a few tracts to the houses, with the location of the tent written on or stamped on them. Don't throw them in the yards, but have the people come to the door and hand them the tract, at the same time inviting them to come. Don't get discouraged if many of those who promise to come never appear at all. You have filled one part of your mission there,—you have given them the opportunity.

DURATION.

As to the length of our stay in one place, let the interest entirely govern that. By all means don't leave a good interest. Stick to it if it is all summer. You may think to go back there next summer, or sooner, and possibly you may do so, but you will never find the interest you left. There is a psychological moment in all things, and more especially in appealing to the souls of men, and the psychological moment is when you have the people talking about the meetings. It is far better and more business-like to stick to one place and continue the work, although it may take an entire season, than to follow the squatter method.

FINANCES.

Not unlike all other active lines of work, a certain amount of money is needed to run the tent. Tell the people very frankly and kindly your needs, about once each week, Sunday being the best time. Give the people a chance to help, and by the proper appeal to their better manhood you will be surprised to see how readily they will respond.

On each Sunday you should have a basket dinner. Urge all the Saints and friends far and near to come next Sunday and bring a basket filled with good things and spend the day with you. It will be a real happy outing for them. Furnish them good music, and the best you have in the preaching line, and in return for all this they will gladly make good all financial obligations. Many times our brethren fail to have sufficient means to carry on the work because they fail to let the people know how they are provided for. Do not get into the detestable habit of begging, hinting, by pleading poverty; but frankly and honestly let the people know how you expect to secure the necessary help.

I have frequently had people come to me and ask, "How do you people get along? You don't take up collections. We feel we would like to help a little if you will give us a chance." This has led me to believe that others feel the same way, but are too timid to express themselves. Hence the collection, preceded by an explanation, will set them at ease, and comfort the campers. In my many years with the tent, I have always ended with a nice little surplus. Others can do likewise, for the milk of human kindness still flows everywhere.

CARE OF THE TENT.

Too close attention can not be given to the care of the tent. In a manner it is perishable property. One putting away for the season will end its usefulness, unless it has first been thoroughly dried. Wherever there has been a drop of water not dried when folded, there will be a little hole. A tent should not be folded for the winter until along in the afternoon on a good drying day. While it may dry the canvas in less time, the ropes and sticks would be wet, and on putting up the tent next spring it would fall apart.

A tent can be made to last years longer by applying a coat of oil for that purpose. It can be secured from any mail order house in Chicago. As soon as a tear or hole is noticed in the canvas, it should be mended. Like everything else, a tent needs attention along the repair line.

COMFORTS OF TENT WORK.

I know of no other line of church work where more real and solid comfort can be taken than in tent work. It can be made so homelike that the neighbors will envy your method of life. You live near to nature. The pure morning air, the song of the birds, the quaint, simple life, unannoyed with the drudgery of domestic conventionalities, is a rare treat not found elsewhere. Added to this is the happy realization that you are engaged in the service of the Master in blessing humanity.

Along with the preaching tent there should be one or two small ones for sleeping and cooking, in which there may be wardrobes, bookcases, etc., improvised from dry goods boxes. Under a shade tree, the dining hall is made out of mosquito netting, which keeps out the many pestiferous visitors,—a most excellent place to enjoy your repasts and satisfy the appetite made keen by the bracing morning air. Under the shade trees, a rocker or two may be placed, a hammock being where you can repose and prepare your mind for the coming service. The neighbors will be quick to seek your acquaintance and exchange visits, and be mindful of your recurring wants and take pleasure in giving. If we expect to find friends, we must make ourselves friendly. We should not charge at the people in "hammer and tongs" style, but leave the impression that we have the best thing on earth for them, and are anxious for them to share it with us.

CONCLUSION.

As a practical, pleasant, economical method of spreading the gospel, tent service leads. There are many places where we can not secure a building, but there are very few places where we can not get a spot of ground on which to set a tent.

Tent work, however, is not the place for the "bandbox" preacher, who may be afraid to soil his hands. There are ropes to tighten, stakes to drive, lamps to fill, cleaning up to be done, all of which will be pleasant if we enter heart and soul into our work. A certain amount of physical exercise is necessary; take it, and less apothecary dope.

Every district in the church should fit out two of their elders with a tent, and cooperate with them in taking the gospel to others. This is a peculiar opportunity for each and all to use the talent God has given them. Each district should have a tent fund, and devise methods to supply it for the use of the tent. At your reunions the tent can be used to good advantage. In my eighteen years of church work I am personally aware of hundreds having brought into the church through tent work.

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM

OR

THE CURRENT REFORMATION IN CONTRAST WITH TRUTH REVEALED.—PART 3.

BY E. E. LONG.

BUILDING THEIR OWN HOUSE.

But now that the lines had been drawn, and he and his followers were denied fellowship with every existing religious organization, a new burden was laid upon Mr. Campbell and his collaborators, that of gathering together their followers into organized communions and instructing them in the principles of the gospel.—Grafton, p. 144.

As faithful students of the New Testament, they recognized grave departures from the teachings of Christ and his apostles and sought straightway to restore the simplicity of the gospel, so that men could understand it, receive it, obey it, and rejoice in its blessings.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 496.

But who would have thought it remained for any so late as 1827, to restore to the world the manner—the primitive manner—of administering to mankind the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ!—Hayden's History of the Disciples, p. 173.

So the "restoration" actually began as a distinct movement in 1827. It was about this date that they "put to sea," when some of their boldest efforts at restoration were attempted. Prominent among their big doings were the meetings in the Western Reserve, of Ohio. Here some of the most astounding "discoveries" of the "current reformation" were made. We will let the historian, Hayden, tell the story, and in the meantime we will keep in mind their adopted "rule," "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak," and the importance of having an "approved precedent."

AN EVANGELIST CALLED. SETTING THE CHURCHES IN ORDER. APOSTOLIC PREROGATIVES ASSUMED.

It was apparent, no less in the wants of the people than in the light of the sacred Scriptures, that a suitable person should be selected to travel among the churches, to preach the gospel, and to set things in order according to the teachings of the primitive church. So evident had it become that this long-neglected duty must be resumed, that a petition to this end was sent to the Mahoning Association from the church at Braceville. It was understood that the church in Nelson was consulted, and that it concurred in the movement. Mr. Campbell came to the association with this same purpose in his heart. Passing through Steubenville, he called on Walter Scott, principal of the academy in that place, and persuaded him to come to New Lisbon, with the intention of securing his appointment as the evangelist of the association. On this occasion, memorable in history, the association met by regular appointment in New Lisbon, Columbiana County, August 23, 1827.—Hayden's History of the Disciples, p. 55.

There were fourteen churches represented by thirty-three "accredited messengers," besides other prominent preachers. Among other things it was:

Voted, That all the teachers of Christianity present, be a committee to nominate a person to travel and labor among the churches, and to suggest a plan for the support of the person so appointed.—Ibid., p. 57.

A committee of fifteen was appointed, including Mr. Campbell, whose unanimous report was as follows:

1. That Brother Walter Scott is a suitable person for the task, provided the association concur in his appointment, to devote his whole energies to the work.
2. That voluntary and liberal contributions be recommended to the churches for creating a fund for his support.
3. That at the direction of Brother Scott, as far as respects time and place, four quarterly meetings for public worship, be held in the bounds of the association this year; and at these meetings such contributions as have been made, in the churches in those vicinities, be handed over to Brother Scott, and an account be kept of the same to be produced at the next association; also, that at any time and in any church, when and where Brother Scott may be laboring, any contributions made to him shall be accounted for to the next association.

Voted, That the above report, in all its items, be adopted.—Ibid., p. 58.

The historian continues:

This association deserves much more than a passing note. It was the first ecclesiastical body in modern times, which, transcending the limits of its own constitutional prerogatives, initiated a movement exactly conformed to the word of God, and utterly disentangled from all sectarian restraint. . . . Here was the appointment of an evangelist in the pure New Testament idea of that official minister, by the concurrent action of the ministry of a given district of country. In this it took upon itself the new duty of establishing and regulating an evangelical agency, or ministry. . . . This association assumed a new power, and with this higher prerogatives, entered upon the discharge of a far higher and wider responsibility. And what was it? Simply to revive the work laid by divine authority upon its hand at the beginning, to "preach the gospel to every creature." This pure, simple, most significant act was here for the first time performed by a body of churches assembled in delegate capacity. The selection of an evangelist to travel among the congregations of a given district, clothing him with power to set things in order, to preach the gospel, and by every means to promote the work of Christ, deserves the clearest and most emphatic statement as a direct, practical measure in restoring the apostolic order to the world. No one church assumed the grave responsibility of selecting, authorizing, and sending forth an evangelist. . . . This was a bold and untried step. It was a long step toward Mount Zion. But it was a safe step, as the Scriptures can lead no one astray; and, also, it was the only method of bringing about the restoration of original Christianity in fact, in faith, and in form, in letter, in spirit, and in practice.—Pp. 60, 61.

Now for the analysis. Here is the "call," appointment, and sending forth of a man clothed with the prerogatives of an apostle, to travel and set things in order, and not one single scripture reference is given as an "approved precedent," though it is declared that it was a "bold and untried step." No "thus saith the Lord" was announced authorizing such a step, but simply a petition from a local congregation at the "suggestion of a wise preacher." On the way to the association, Mr. Campbell, who has the same thing "in his heart," visits Walter Scott and "persuades" him to go with the understanding that he, Scott, is to get the appointment.

Remember, this is the most important "step" in the movement to date, and surely we should have something more in the nature of a divine call than we see in this event. Philip, the evangelist, was not "called" in that manner and he was in the "church of the first century" of which it is said this modern affair is the "replanting." Besides, it is nowhere recorded that Philip, or any other evangelist, was invested with the apostolic prerogative of "regulating and setting in order," the churches. To set the churches in order was a duty primarily belonging to the apostles (1 Corinthians 11:34), or some one immediately under their direction. (Titus 1:5.) But these men meet by appointment, select a committee to appoint a man to this important position; the committee selects one of their own number, because it was to a certain extent cut and dried beforehand, and he is sent out to demonstrate that it is the "only method of restoring apostolic Christianity." The officials of the "church of the first century" were sent out as teachers, instructors, and were to feed the flock.

THE GREAT DISCOVERY.

Suppose we accompany this new evangelist on his first tour of the churches. The first quarterly meeting was held at Braceville, the home of Jacob Osborne, the father of the petition asking for an "evangelist."

From Hayden's history we quote:

It was Lord's day, September 16, 1827. It was largely attended, and was prolific in important results. The principal preachers were Scott, Bentley, and Osborne.

Baptism was the absorbing topic.

A new light was dawning, and a farther glimpse into the light of the gospel was obtained at this meeting at Braceville. After the services of the day were over, Scott, Bentley, Osborne and Atwater walked out together. Conversation turned on the subject. Bentley had preached on it. He urged that it was intended to bring penitent sinners to the immediate relief they sought, by bringing them into the new covenant, whose immediate and distinguishing blessing was the actual pardon of all past sins. Osborne, turning to Scott, asked him "if he ever thought that baptism in the name of the Lord was for the remission of sins." Holding himself somewhat in reserve he intimated a desire for Osborne to proceed. "It is," said he, "certainly established for that purpose."

After discussing the subject pro and con, Scott remarked:

"It is evidently so." After a little, Mr. Osborne said to Elder Bentley, "You have christened baptism to-day." "How so?" "You termed it a remitting ordinance." Bentley replied, "I don't see how we can avoid the conclusion with the Bible in our hands."—Pp. 66, 69, 70.

Now, gentle reader, you have it. These restorers of the primitive church had been preaching and "replanting" for seventeen years, and it never dawned upon their benighted vision that baptism, one of the plainest gospel principles, was for the remission of sins until the 16th day of September, 1827. Even the evangelist, Scott, who was "regulating and setting in order" never dreamed of it before. So Mr. Campbell did not discover the true meaning and design of baptism in 1823. A little later Scott classified the elements of the gospel as, Faith, Repentance, Baptism, Remission of Sins, The Holy Spirit, and Eternal Life.

The historian remarks:

This arrangement of these themes was so plain, so manifestly in harmony with soundest reason, and so clearly correct in a metaphysical point of view, as well as sustained by the Holy Scriptures, that Scott was transported with the discovery. The key of knowledge was now in his possession. The points which before were dark or mysterious, were now luminous. . . . A new era for the gospel had dawned.—P. 71.

On page 100 we read:

It is due Brother Walter Scott to give him credit as among the first on the Continent of America, if not the very first, who took the old field notes of the apostles and run the original survey, beginning at Jerusalem. The first man I ever heard preach baptism in the name of Jesus, with its antecedents, for the remission of sins, and reduce it to practice, and from this period, 1827, it spread like fire on a prairie all over the country.

So, after all the years of reforming and restoring, they actually "discovered" that baptism was for the remission of sins, when it was right there in the Bible long before they were born, just as plain as it was in 1827.

In the casual observation of that important "discovery" we discover something else. Mr. Campbell says:

Now if our baptism is for any other end or purpose than was that to which Paul submitted, it is another baptism, as much as bathing is different from the Jewish ablution for legal uncleanness or impurity. The action has a meaning and design; and it must be received in that meaning and for that design, else it is another baptism.

Now we turn to page 168 of Reformatory Movements and read:

In 1813, as in 1809, baptism, as taught by Baptists, was not a command of Jesus Christ, made essential to the salvation of a sinner, as one of the conditions of pardon and acceptance, but it was simply made a door into the "visible church"—a door into the Baptist Church.

If Scott was the man who took the "old field notes" and run the "original survey," then the Campbells knew nothing about the "meaning and design" of baptism when they were immersed by Elder Luce in 1813; and since Baptist baptism was "not a command of Jesus Christ" the Campbells never had a scriptural baptism, and they lived and died "foreigners and aliens" to the kingdom of God.

Now listen to what Mr. Campbell has to say! "I do, indeed, contend for the restoration of the original gospel and order of things, and I do think that no sect in Christendom has the one or the other."—Millennial Harbinger, vol. 5, p. 251.

He says it was "lost in the Dark Ages," consequently not in existence. Can an individual, or an institution, give something which he does not possess? If "no sect in Christendom" had the ancient gospel or order of things, then Campbell's own immersion was as "empty as a blasted nut," and all this hue and cry about "sect-baptism" is a flimsy farce.

There is another feature of Scott's "discovery" that we wish to notice before we leave it. Scott classified the "elements of the gospel," as "Faith, Repentance, Baptism, Remission of Sins, Holy Spirit, and Eternal Life." The fact that the Holy Spirit was to be received after baptism was as much a part of the discovery as baptism, and was one of the elements of the gospel "restored." They believed in the operation of the Spirit, and, along with other principles, it became an "advocacy." There could be no mistake about the matter, because Scott had the "key of knowledge in his possession and was reducing it to practice." We pause to inquire, Why not teach it that way now? One word, "Apostasy," answers the question, more of which we will learn later.

Now let us compare Evangelist Scott's classification of the elements of the gospel with the Apostle Paul's arrangement of the principles of the doctrine of Christ. Turning to Hebrews 6: 1, 2, we read:

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.

It will be noticed that in this apostolic classification the laying on of hands is given equal prominence with the others, and when we refer to such scriptures as Acts 8: 14-20, and 19: 1-6, and 13: 3; Luke 4: 40; Mark 10: 13-16; Acts 6: 3-6, we discover that it was reduced to practice by the ministry of the church of the first century; but it remains an undiscovered element with the Disciples to date.

Be it remembered that the great meetings in the Western Reserve at Braceville, Austintown, Warren, and other places, and where the great "discovery" was made, were under the auspices of the Mahoning Baptist Association; and the "current reformation" was entirely dependent upon the generosity of the Baptist people until the association had become so impregnated with the restoration ideas that it is no longer recognized as a Baptist institution. The Baptists had already taken decisive action against the Campbells in various places until they were compelled to withdraw. However, prospects were bright in the "Reserve" and great things were expected.

HAS PRIESTHOOD BEEN ABOLISHED?

[Reprint from The Gospel Standard, published at Rozelle, New South Wales, Australia.—Error.]

A certain type of Christians who seek to combat the idea that men should be called of God by direct revelation to-day, as they were in days of old, confidently assert that the priesthood has "been done away," and by so teaching mislead many honest people. Do the Scriptures justify such an assertion? Let us examine them and see.

WHAT DOES THE TERM "PRIESTHOOD" MEAN?

The word priesthood is generally regarded as an ugly expression, and carries the Protestant mind, at once, back to the Dark Ages, when "priestcraft" dominated the Christian world. But "priestcraft" is the very opposite of "priesthood," in spirit, and can not exist where the priesthood is held as a sacred trust from God.

Webster defines priest thus: "One who officiates at the altar or in offering sacrifices; one who is set apart to the ministry of the gospel or who serves in a sacred office; a presbyter." Burnt offerings and sacrifices having been superseded under the gospel by the one sacrifice offered by Christ, our great high priest, the secondary definitions are the only ones applicable to the "priest's" office now. According to Webster, priesthood means "the office of a priest or an order of priests." Priestcraft, he defines as "The management of corrupt priests to gain power, etc.; pious fraud of imposition in religious concerns." "Priestcraft" is, therefore, shown to be the corrupt use of the powers of the "priesthood" by those who have not the right to the office.

DOES ANY ORDER OF PRIESTS EXIST NOW?

According to Hebrews 7: 11, there are two orders of the priesthood—the Melchisedec and the Aaronic. "But," says the advocate of the abrogation of the priesthood, "the priesthood has been changed and now Christ is the only priest of the Melchisedec order." And in proof of this assertion Hebrews 7 is cited: "For the priesthood being changed, there is made, of necessity, a change also of the law." True, the priesthood is changed; but the text does not say it is abolished.

Just as there has been a change in the law, there has been a change in the priesthood. We are informed that the law "was added because of transgressions." (Galatians 3: 19.) Added to what? Why, to the gospel, of course. But, was the gospel known before the Mosaic law? Certainly. It is as old as the truth that Christ was a "Lamb slain from before the foundation of the world." The principle of divine atonement is the cardinal feature of the gospel, and with the remainder of the plan of redemption was framed before the foundation of the world. According to the King James Version of the Bible, we can at least trace the gospel back to Abraham, in proof of which read Galatians 3: 8. It was preached, also, to the Israelites by Moses (see Hebrews 4: 2—read also the preceding chapter). It contained the broad principles of the law but did not prescribe, as the latter did, what men should not do. Not being able to live in accordance with this higher law, the gospel, the Mosaic law was given to the Israelites as a schoolmaster to bring them to Christ. (See Galatians 3: 24.)

Just as the gospel contained all the principles of the law in a higher form, the Melchisedec priesthood, which was before the Aaronic, exercised all the powers and privileges contained in the Aaronic, and more. Melchisedec, after whom the order was called, was a priest-king. The Scriptures describe him as "Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the most high God" (see Hebrews 7: 1). His priesthood was of the highest degree, and exceeded in power the Aaronic, for the very Son of God, our great high priest, received the same priesthood. As the greater always contains the lesser, this priesthood had appertaining to it all the powers and prerogatives of the Aaronic order. When the law of Moses gave way to the higher gospel law in which all of its principles were incorporated, the priesthood was also changed, and the Aaronic priesthood, which through the Levites, had been the administrative order under the law, now took a secondary place to the Melchisedec order.

DIFFERENT OFFICES IN THE PRIESTHOOD.

The Apostle Paul informs us in 1 Corinthians 12: 28, that God has set in the church the offices of apostles, prophets, and teachers, while in Ephesians 4: 11, he mentions also evangelists and pastors. Elsewhere we find elders (Acts 20: 17; 1 Peter 5: 1; etc.), bishops (1 Timothy 3: 1, 2), and other officers mentioned. Why were these officers set apart? Ephesians 4: 12 informs us that they were set apart for "the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." It is thus seen that the incumbents of the various offices were men ordained and set apart for the ministry of the gospel. What does Webster's Dictionary call such men? Priests, does it not? "Priest: One who is set apart to the ministry of the gospel."

THE PRIESTHOOD NOT LIMITED TO NEW TESTAMENT TIMES.

The language employed in 1 Corinthians 12: 28, "God hath set some in the church, first apostles," etc., points out the perpetuity of these offices and consequently the perpetuity of the priesthood held by the respective officers. The sun and moon were set in the firmament in the beginning and they are there yet. So with the God-appointed offices mentioned above. But Paul goes further in Ephesians 4: 13, and intimates that they would be continuous offices within the true church. He says that they were given for the purpose already mentioned, and were to continue "till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." With such a multitude of churches in the world it can not be said that we are yet "in the unity of the faith," and so the offices in the priesthood mentioned above should be still in God's true church.

IS THERE ONLY ONE HIGH PRIEST?

Another erroneous idea is that there is only one high priest in the Christian dispensation—Christ, our mediator. This theory is based upon a misunderstanding of Hebrews 3: 1: "Wherefore holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the apostle and high priest of our profession, Christ Jesus." If the argument that Christ is the only high priest because of the language of the above text, is good, then the same language would also prove that he was the only apostle. But the latter is not correct, and so the former can not be. Christ was an apostle as well as a high priest, and from this we reason that every apostle is, a high priest. . . .

HOW MEMBERS OF THE PRIESTHOOD ARE CALLED.

God is the best judge of the integrity of the hearts of men and the uprightness of their principles, and has reserved unto himself the prerogative of selecting those who are fitted to be his ministers. "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron."—Hebrews 5: 4. Aaron was called by direct revelation from God, and so all other ministers for God should be called. It was the Holy Ghost who said, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them."—Acts 13: 2. Similarly, when a man is called to-day, the Holy Ghost should witness his call to those of the priesthood and the church.

Thousands of men claim to be ministers of God who have not received such a call. Is there any wonder that they try to make it appear that no such call is necessary, and that a God-selected ministry or priesthood is not upon earth to-day? Reader, do not be misled. God's ministers have in every age been an authorized priesthood, and so it will continue to be till the end of time. Those who would discredit the priesthood, have it not. They go out to represent God without his sanction or authority, depending altogether on their scholastic attainments and their power to "pass" a committee of their fellow men as to their fitness to be ministers.

In the true church, to-day, there are apostles, prophets, sevens, evangelists, elders, priests, teachers, bishops, deacons, etc., just as there were in the New Testament church, and each occupies in his particular office because of the degree of priesthood conferred upon him. "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God."—John 3: 34. Those claiming to be the ministers of God may be tested. If they speak in harmony with the Scriptures they may be the servants of Christ. If they do not so speak, they can not be his true ministers. The ministry of the church represented by this paper preach the same gospel as that taught by the Savior and his servants of New Testament times. This is a sure testimony to the fact that they have been sent of God. The doctrines they advocate differ from those preached by self-appointed teachers, for such men speak their own words and not the words of God. We are ready and able to prove these assertions at any time or place.

CHINESE APPEAL FOR CHRISTIAN PRAYERS.

In response to an official request from the Chinese Cabinet, special prayers for the new Republic were offered on April 27 in Christian churches throughout China, United States, and probably all nations. This unprecedented action on the part of China's new Government is generally interpreted by our religious press as at once a vindication of our missionary efforts and a spur to fresh activities. Typical of the comment in many quarters is the remark of the Portland (Maine) Zion's Advocate (Baptist): "China has invited her own evangelization; the missionary enterprise will henceforth stand on a very different footing in that old land." "The world has heard nothing like this before," exclaims the Chicago Advance (Congregational), and the Cleveland Evangelical Messenger (Evangelical) hails the incident as "prophetic of the coming supremacy of the principles of the Christian religion in China." The appeal, as telegraphed to the various Chinese provinces and cabled to the Department of State at Washington and to foreign mission boards, is as follows:

"Prayer is requested for the National Assembly now in session, for the new Government, for the President who is to be elected; for the Constitution of the Republic; that the Government may be recognized by the Powers; that peace may reign within our country; that strong and virtuous men may be elected to office, and that the Government may be established upon a strong foundation. Upon receipt of this telegram you are requested to notify all churches in your province that April 27 has been set aside as a day of prayer for the Nation. Let all take part."

This is said to be not only the first time in the world's history that a non-Christian nation has called for the prayers of Christian peoples, but the first time that any nation about to adopt a new constitution and enter on a new order of life has asked the prayers of other nations for success. And it is little more than twelve years since the Boxer uprisings in China resulted in the martyrdom of 135 missionaries and 16,000 native converts!

Our religious papers are naturally jubilant over this recognition from so unexpected a source of the importance of Christian prayer. "Not only will this action of the Chinese Government impress the millions of its own subjects with the importance of Christianity," says the Philadelphia Christian Instructor (United Presbyterian), "but it should impress the so-called Christian nations with the importance of recognizing their dependence upon God, and their need of looking toward him continually for his guidance and blessing." Another Philadelphia paper, The Catholic Standard and Times, also sees in this act of the Chinese Republic, "a very good example to the rest of the world." And it notes, "How different this attitude of the newest republic from that of the greatest one of Europe—France!" "The motive of China's call to prayer can only be conjectured," says the New York Christian Advocate (Methodist), but "the simple fact that such an appeal has been made is tremendously significant, indicating that the influence of Christian missions has extended far beyond the mere numbers of converts. It will give strength to the Christian movement in Asia and to the operations at the home base, upon which foreign missions, must depend for their maintenance and extension."—Literary Digest, May 10, 1913.

Seeking a New Continent.

The fact that the Mellville-Bryant casks have floated across from Point Barrow and Cape Bathurst to Iceland and Norway, respectively, shows that there is a northward current through the Polar Sea, but the further fact that the abundant driftwood coming from the Mackenzie River does not lodge to any extent upon the shores of Banks Island, lying to the north of the mouth of the Mackenzie, shows that this current can not be straight north from Alaska across the Pole, but must be a circuitous one, running for the first portion of its way westward nearly parallel to the coasts of Alaska and Asia—a thing which is substantiated by the known drift of the Jeanette after September 6, 1879, until she sank on June 12, 1881, and of the Fram from her freezing in on September 22, 1893, to her becoming free from the ice July 19, 1896.

Because a hypothetical land such as Harris has plotted satisfactorily explains these otherwise mysterious facts and many others, and because no other explanation is readily discernible that really does explain them, the students of tidal phenomena consider that there is land yet to be discovered in the northern ocean. But be that as it may, a successful expedition to the Beaufort Sea will either discover this land or establish the fact of its nonexistence.

The expedition will sail from a Pacific port of Canada in late May or early June. The ship is a 247-ton barkentine with steam auxiliary power which, under the name of Karluk, has for many years sailed the Beaufort Sea as a whaler. Although in many seasons the whalers in the Beaufort Sea find no ice to the north of them and every indication of an open ocean stretching far in the direction of the Pole, they have never had any occasion to explore to the northward because their business is to get whales, and whales, in their opinion, are not abundant farther north than a diagonal line drawn from the north end of Banks Island to Flaxman Island on the Alaska coast. Success in arctic exploration is always partly a matter of luck. If we happen to go north in a season of prevailing westerly or northwesterly winds we shall find the Beaufort Sea choked with ice and our ship will be compelled to hug the mainland closely; but if the summer of 1913 happens to be a season of easterly or southeasterly winds, such a season as we have had almost every year since 1906, we shall find the Beaufort Sea open farther north than any ship has ever tried to go and open probably to the latitude in which Harris lays down his theoretical land. The general plan is, therefore, to cruise northward from the mouth of the Mackenzie as far as it seems safe or feasible to go, and to establish a winter base on any land that may be discovered. —Viljalmur Stefansson, in Harper's Weekly.

JEW'S ARE GOING HOME.

Under the above caption the Kansas City Star for May 3, 1913, makes reference to the work of one Joseph Colm, of New York City, a Christian Jew, who recently lectured in various Protestant churches of Kansas City. With reference to the return of the Jews to their home land this Joseph Colm, son of a converted rabbi, is quoted as saying:

The Jews are preparing plans to restore the temple of Solomon. The whole world is being stirred by a sudden and startling movement of the Jews toward their home land. Ten years ago there were only one thousand Jews in the city of Jerusalem. There are now one hundred thousand within its walls. More than two hundred thousand Jews are found in colonies established in recent years in the country of Palestine about Jerusalem. The colonies are proving very successful. Good crops are being raised where formerly all was waste.

More than twenty million dollars is being invested in railroads. Within the next few months Jerusalem will have become a city of electricity. Rails are being laid for electric cars and interurbans. The Jews have five million dollars in a Jerusalem bank. They have purchased a large amount of land near the old mosque of Omar. They will rebuild on that land the old temple of Solomon, with modern equipment.

Until twenty years ago the land of Palestine was dry and arid. There were no rains, no crops and few inhabitants. There is a prophecy which reads, "In the last days I will pour out upon you again the latter rains." Rain has come in abundance in the last few years. Jerusalem and Palestine again blossom for the first time since Titus destroyed the city. Several colonies of Jews have planted ten thousand olive trees on the hills of Samaria, a fulfilling of another prophecy.

I firmly believe Jerusalem will become as of old the market place of the Orient, and that Palestine will again be a land flowing with milk and honey. Electricity is being used more and more, while the desert tracts are being reclaimed from the sand and debris of centuries. When water has been placed on the Holy Land it will be able to maintain a population of millions of people. And there will be millions there before long. The country is being generally improved and will be an altogether different Palestine from what it has been during these centuries. The Jews are going home.

How the Races Jostle at the Holy Tomb.

"Room!" It is the Syrian bishop, with a long white beard, emerging from the little subterranean chapel. Then come the Greeks, with Byzantine ornaments; and the Abyssinians, with their black faces. Quick, quick, they pass in their sumptuous garb, while boys swing silver censers ahead of them, pushing aside the mob as they pass. In this sea of humanity there is a continuous roar, unending sounds of psalmodies and sacred gongs. It is so dark that everyone needs a candle in hand to find his way between the dark columns, beneath the shaded galleries, and so thousands of jets of flame follow and cross each other. Some are praying aloud, others weep bitterly, hastening from one chapel to the other, here to kiss the rock where the cross once stood, there to bow and weep for Mary and the Magdalen. Priests beckon to lead you through narrow gates to the caves of the tomb; old women, their cheeks running tears, ascend after saluting the tomb itself.—Christian Herald.

It is difficult to rest if you are doing nothing—Roman Proverb.

The Staff

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

By Way of Greeting.

It was with great pleasure we looked forward to the establishment of this department, for we saw great possibilities for it—a wide sphere of usefulness.

Since being placed in charge, however, a heavy sense of responsibility has served to dim our enthusiasm slightly, for we realize that unless others rally to our assistance, it will be beyond our ability to make it a success.

However, getting around among the people at the close of conference, telling them of the plans, and soliciting their support, we really harvested an encouragingly fine crop of promises. May these promises speedily leave the hazy realm of thought for the tangible one of materiality.

Come, now, let us conspire together! Let us use this department as a medium for all things musical which can be shared or passed on! Let us feel that it belongs to each of us,—a point from which we can reach others interested in that which interests us,—a source of inspiration to which we may never turn without receiving new impetus to our endeavors, new faith and courage for all our efforts to uplift our musical standard before the world.

The door of this department is open to you,—please come in! Have you an idea which would be helpful to music lovers? Send it in! Have you a suggestion regarding the public song worship? We welcome it! Have you a criticism concerning popular ways and methods of using the art of music? Let us have it! Do you feel to lift your voice in warning or reproof against the prevalent abuse of this divine art? Let it be heard! Have you a musical hobby of any sort? Trot it out! Let all our effort be with one idea in view,—the building up of this branch of our service to God—in obedience to the injunction, "Let the young men and maidens cultivate the gifts of music and of song."

We expect to publish from time to time such songs as may reach us, which have been given by the Spirit. Perhaps, also, poems of merit, whose composers have expressed in that way their praise and devotion. If you run across any of these you deem worthy of reproduction, please send them in.

And for our "Notes of the Staff" column, send items of any musical activities you become aware of, either in your local district, or in the world at large, which would be of general interest.

With the hearty cooperation of all, we feel sure this department will find a corner of its own—a sphere of much usefulness in centralizing our interests; and we bespeak for it your most earnest and loyal support.

Address all communications to Audentia Anderson, 1300 West Electric Street, Independence, Missouri.

The Conference Choir.

All who attended conference this year unite in praising the work done by the new organization known as the Conference Choir. It is a thing apart, as all local lines and interests are wiped out, and everyone loses his identity for the good of the combined effort.

Much credit is due, for this success, to the unbounded faith and energy of the General Chorister, Brother Albert N. Hoxie, jr. His vocation is such that it carries him about the country, throughout the East, and the Middle West, and he combined his business and pleasure in such a way that he met with many local choirs in the course of the year, and trained them on these anthems for use at conference. And to him it was pleasure, for he met with hearty response; and found the choristers all over the country willing, yes, eager, to help forward this project.

His success was manifest at Lamoni, when the chorus of over one hundred voices combined to render in artistic and enthusiastic manner those splendid offerings of praise and worship. It was truly an inspiration and an eye-opener—for it is only a beginning—the pioneer work of the movement. From Lamoni there went out all over the country enthusiasts for this general choir movement, and great things are assured for the future.

Incidentally, the choir members had several occasions of sociability, when the spirit of comradeship and unity prevailed to the achievement of a "royal good time." One of these was when, on Monday evening, April 14, the members of the Lamoni choir entertained the visiting members, at the Music Studio. A program, varied in its character, but evincing, to the fullest extent, the great powers of the Lamoni people to entertain, was carried out most enthusiastically, and a bond of fellowship was woven there that night which will endure throughout the future.

On the Thursday evening following, permission having been granted by the authorities, the choir withdrew from the evening services after the anthem and special song services were rendered, and repaired in a body, first to the Saints' Home, and then to Liberty Home, at both places singing many songs of cheer and inspiration to the aged inmates.

Afterwards the party went to many different places, serenading softly with the beloved songs of Zion. The members gradually dwindled as the singers neared their homes or became weary, until finally only a crowd of twenty-six out of the original one hundred and twenty-five sang the doxology as a fitting closing offering.

The Conference Choir has come to stay! It has a power and enthusiasm about it that wins its way to all hearts.

Preparations are already under way for the work for next year, and only a constantly rising standard of excellence and acquirement will satisfy those who have it in charge.

So, all hail, the Conference Choir!

Notes of the Staff.

General Chorister Hoxie dropped around by Independence on his way home from conference, and gathered the singers of the two local choirs together for three big rehearsals and a grand concert. The rehearsals were Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoon, and the concert Sunday night. The church building was crowded to the limit, the halls and galleries being packed with standing listeners. Four big numbers by the choir of one hundred and ten voices, vocal solos by Sister Pearl Crick and Brother Paul Craig, piano solo by Sister Marie Riggs, trio for violin, organ, and piano by Brother and Sister Hoxie and Brother Craig, organ numbers by Brethren Ralph Smith and P. Craig, and a duet by the latter and Brother Orville James were the musical features. A scripture reading and remarks by Brother Garrett and a beautiful prayer by Brother Bond, were contributory settings to a most inspiring and scholarly address by President F. M. Smith. Altogether the musical enthusiasm of the community received a pronounced impetus, and from the vast attendance of nonmembers as well as members, came one big chorus of approval and delight.

At the reception given the Conference Choir by its Lamoni members, there was developed a phrase which has apparently become the choir slogan—because of its spirit of enthusiastic readiness. Here it is:

"All in favor—hurry up!"

It is suggested that the conference choir members either memorize the entire Hymnal and Zion's Praises, or else provide themselves with flashlights in order to sing intelligently while Brethren Etzenhouser, Griffiths, and others show their interesting stereopticon pictures.

Brother Hoxie was presented with a fine baton at conference. It is made of wood from the Hill Cumorah, ornamented with wood from Palestine—surely the "stick" of Judah and the "stick" of Ephraim combined in one. This was through Brother Rudolph Etzenhouser's instrumentality.

Now, please remember that every music lover in the church is on the staff of this department, and we shall expect a liberal supply of notes from each one.

Our talented young sister, Marie Riggs, of Kansas City, is to give a recital soon. Her work has won the flattering approval of Mr. L'Hivonne, the famous pianist, and he has arranged to take her for a pupil. She will go to Europe in August to begin her study with this master.

Our General Chorister, Hoxie, manages to keep alive musically wherever he goes. He met with the Saints of the South Chicago Branch on Sunday, May 4, giving them generously of his violin music, Sister Marguerite Wickes ably accompanying at the piano. Last Sunday evening he gave a recital in the Methodist church at Waterloo, Iowa. The door of opportunity is always open for a young man or woman who has made himself master of the art of music in any of its varying forms.

The General Choir Movement.

With the joyful and triumphant strains of the "Unfold Chorus" the Conference Choir disbanded, and the exchange of farewells demonstrated that our musicians had established not alone new ideals, but had formed a closer comradeship, which was good to behold.

The service rendered was of a most pleasing character, enthusiastic, noble, uplifting, and inspirational. With one accord all responded to the call of prayer, and it ran from heart to heart, for the presence of the Spirit was beautifully manifested by peace and unity within our ranks; and from pure hearts came purified voices, which has left the impression that was so desired.

The only expressions of regret that we heard were by those who failed to respond to the call, and did not prepare for this pleasant service. We trust that through the HERALD and Autumn Leaves a greater range of publicity will be given this work. Mrs. Audentia Anderson, of Independence, Missouri, assumes the arduous task of editing musical matter. Her interest in the success of this branch of church work dates back many years, and it is with pleasure that we announce her willingness to assume this important role. Inasmuch as this department will be regularly represented in the Autumn Leaves from now on by articles on this subject, we urge those interested to subscribe to this worthy publication.

We have but fifty copies of books containing the seventeen anthems used by the Conference Choir this year, which we will send on application for one dollar each, plus eight cents for postage. Quantity orders are sent by express, collect. Inasmuch as some of these anthems are to be used again, it would be well to have a copy if you are interested. Our new collection of anthems will not be placed on sale until August 15, 1913. A special announcement concerning these will be made in a later issue of this paper, and also in Autumn Leaves.

We are taking into consideration a further uniform work suitable for small choirs, composed of singers of limited experience. We would appreciate hearing from leaders of such choirs who would support a special edition prepared for their use. Announcement concerning district choristers and their appointment will be made an issue of separate discussion later.

May I again refer to that beloved word that means so much to a Latter Day Saint, "consecration"? This is the only word that can be used to emphasize the true spirit of this musical movement. My friends, keep this gift of music and song sacred, develop and use it in places of good repute, and remember that spiritual music eats into the very soul of man, and brings to mind things lovely, things beautiful, consoles and comforts him, creates good desires and prepares his heart to listen, understand, and appreciate the music that is found in the message of salvation.

Prayer and fasting are necessary requirements to bring our work to a spiritual instead of a purely physical effort. We are admonished to sing with the Spirit and understanding. How can we without spiritual preparation? Let us, therefore, prepare now for the days of triumph. What would those days be without music? or let us say rather, What will they be with music and by consecrated musicians? Trim your lamps, and keep them burning.

Henry IV's Apostrophe to Sleep.

O sleep, O gentle sleep,
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frightened thee,
That thou no more will weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness?
Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee,
And hushed with buzzing night flies to thy slumber,
Than in the perfumed chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly state,
And lulled with sound of sweetest melody?
O thou dull god, why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leavest the kingly couch
A watchcase or a common 'larum bell?
Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast
Seal up the shipboy's eyes and rock his brains
In cradle of the rude imperious surge
And in the visitation of the winds,
Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
Curling their monstrous heads and hanging them
With the deafening clamor in the slippery clouds,
That, with the hurly, death itself awakes?
Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet seaboy in an hour so rude,
And in the calmest and most stillest night,
With all appliances and means to boot,
Deny it to a king? Then happy low, lie down!
Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.—Shakespeare.

Chaste and immaculate in every thought.—Shakespeare.

Questions.

In our last we said that we would give a reason for believing that the revival of the Sisters' Prayer Union was timely and much needed. There are many reasons (or so it appears to us) why this is so. But for the present it now seems best that we put the matter, to which we wish especially to refer, in the form of questions, hoping in this way to elicit answers which may cause each one to stop and think for a space, and having thought, then to turn the searchlight of truth upon our most secret act and word, questioning if we are indeed guilty.

From our recent conference many of the Saints went home strengthened to renew the battle of life, having their faith in both God and man renewed. But was there ever a time when the Saints of God met together, that Satan did not come also? and of him it is written, "He was a liar from the beginning," and we have never heard of his reforming.

In her letter to the Prayer Union, Sister Kearney says: "I have changed the subjects somewhat from the old program to meet more nearly what seems to be present requirements."

One of those changes we note is this: "Pray that each member of the church may be clothed with that charity which will lead them to 'speak evil of no one,' but regard the reputation of our brother or sister as we regard our own."

That the tongue still remains all that the Apostle James described it to be, we have reason to believe, and that no one is safe from its venom we have reason to fear—we will not say know. That age and uprightness of life is no shield, neither official position, nor the reverence due to both combined.

Far back in the years, in the very inception of the Prayer Union, the following memory texts were given to Sister Kearney in answer to prayer, and she herself had no knowledge of what they were until she turned to them and read them.

The first is found in Isaiah 41: 6: "They helped everyone his neighbor, and everyone said to his brother, Be of good courage."

Question: Is not this my duty? Have I done this?

The second is found in Zechariah 8: 16, 17. "These are the things that ye shall do: Speak every man the truth to his neighbor, execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates; and let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbor; and love no false oath; for all these are things that I hate, saith the Lord."

Question: Have I obeyed the former, and been careful to avoid the latter?

Zion can never prosper until her children are living in obedience to God's law. Can we be doing this if we are doing the things God hates?

A Parting Word to Home Column Readers.

More than twenty-seven years have now passed since we first took charge of this department of our church paper. During that time many changes have taken place in our own life, and many and greater ones in the advancement of church work. How well our department has kept abreast of these latter changes, or how much it may have fallen behind, is for those who have been its readers to judge, and with them and the Father we leave it.

There is always more or less of sadness when we come to the parting of the ways, come to where the words of farewell must be spoken. And this is especially true when we realize that the work we resign is being laid down by weary hands—hands which in this life will not take any other in its place.

But in this instance the sadness is entirely overbalanced by the knowledge that we surrender it into far more capable hands—to the guardianship and care of one whose soul is fully imbued with the spirit of the great latter day work, and who will bring to this department of the Master's work the same zeal and knowledge of its needs which has characterized and made eminently successful her labors in other departments of church work. Sister Christiana Salyards, who has consented to assume charge of the Home Column, is too well known to our readers to need any introduction from our pen, and while we thank you most sincerely for your loving loyalty of these many long years, and the charity received at your hands, we do as sincerely congratulate you because of the fact that the interests of your department in our church paper passes into her hands. That many years of increasing usefulness may come, to the "Mothers' Home Column" under its new editor, is the wish of

FRANCES.

Letter Department

CASTLEBERRY, ALABAMA, May 6, 1913.

Dear Herald: I see the conference appointed three hundred and forty-eight missionaries. Hope some may come this way. Brother A. G. Miller came to my place last year and preached a few sermons, baptizing a fine young man. Brother Miller is an able young man, and his wife is a great help to him.

He left my place too soon, on account of other calls. I believe that when a minister gets an interest in a place he ought to stay, if possible, till he sees that he has done all he can. Now, when Brother Miller left here I learned that there were three others who were going to unite with the church; but two of them have moved away, and they may finally lose all interest, and never come into the church. A little faith is well at times.

Some members are a great drawback to their own selves. They use tobacco and alcoholic drinks, eat bacon and beef, and drink coffee. All this gives them a spirit of don't care. They are angry a great part of the time, full of poison, aches, and pains. I do not see how they can use all these things, when the great King says they are not good for man.

There is a time to use meat, sparingly, but no time to use coffee, tobacco, or liquors.

I once used all the above, after I came into the church. I will tell you how I came to discontinue the use of whisky. I was raised to believe that we ought to have an eggnog every Christmas. Well, I ordered a gallon of whisky. I made my nog, and thought it was good. For the children who couldn't drink nog, I made a little toddy. We all drank. I sat by a good fire; it was a cold day, and I began to hum an old tune. The children were all standing about the fire, and I began to count those who had shoes; I could only count one; the other four were barefooted. I have often felt bad, but I never felt so bad before nor since. I tried to hum that good old tune, but I couldn't. I paid $3.75 for that whisky, which would have bought the shoes the children needed. I looked at the jug, then at the children. I said to myself, "I will never buy another drop." That has been twenty years ago and I am still a sober man, and the good Lord has forgiven me for that, because I quit.

I felt good when I got so I could sing again. I thank the Lord for turning me around and starting me toward the other end of the road. May God bless those upon whom the accursed habit has fastened itself, that they may have power to overcome.

I also quit the use of coffee and tobacco. My whole body was full of pain. I was nearly blind. I was almost a total wreck; my mind was weak and I was sickly. But, dear Saints, after that poison got out of my system, I began to feel well; and could see better. That has been many years ago. I will soon be seventy-three years of age. I do not use glasses and I haven't a single pain in my body, and I feel as if life is worth living.

Now, dear Saints, I am able to advise many of you; if you want to feel well, keep the commands of the good Lord. My prayer is that our Father may encourage us to love to obey these commands.

G. H. SHELL.

R. 2, Box 43 A.

HAGERMAN, IDAHO, May 6, 1913.

Dear Herald: As we have just returned from Anthony, Florida, to our home in Hagerman, Idaho, I will write a few lines so our friends who have been so good as to write us while we were in a land of strangers may learn that we have reached home. We will be pleased to hear from any, and will never forget the encouraging letters received in the South.

We may sometime write and tell you all about that southern country; but I want to say right here I saw the most lovely home in Missouri, that I saw anywhere while gone.

I found the Saints here alive in the work, and pray that we may all work together for the crown that is laid up for the faithful.

When our work has been finished here may it be well with us and all Saints everywhere is my humble prayer.

FLORENCE MCKNIGHT.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 8, 1913.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have written to the HERALD. For a number of years I have been passing through the furnace. I can look at myself now and think of the blessings that have come to me, and truly thank God that I have been permitted to be tried. I don't feel that I want to still taste of the fiery trials, but God knows best.

I am greatly afflicted in body, but that is the least of my trials. I am not grumbling, neither complaining; I thank my God for the gospel, and that I have a testimony to bear of his work.

A circumstance I passed through one time caused me to call upon God for his Spirit to be with me, for I knew that I could not at all times be able to keep all of his commands, except he should strengthen me, and give me wisdom. I told the Lord exactly how I felt, that I would give my life before I would do anything that would cause another to do wrong. (Oh, I would that I could always be as willing as I was at that time to give myself for others.) I asked him to forgive me of my sins, and to give me his Spirit. No sooner had I thought it than the Spirit fell upon me, and my soul exclaimed, "Lord, it's enough." My joy was full beyond expression. Surely it was a testimony that the greatest command ever given to man (love) is true.

Brothers and sisters and friends, to this day I love my bitterest enemies. Hate will spring up, but it is soon lost in love. Wrong thoughts will come, but, Saints, we can put them away, immediately, if we have learned that great commandment, love, on which hangs all the law. My soul rejoices this day that I have heard this gospel. Saints, when this love is found in us, Zion will be redeemed. We ought to love one another and help each other in every way we can.

Your brother,

W. A. WILSON.

VANSCOY, SASKATCHEWAN, March 30, 1913.

Dear Herald Readers: As we so seldom see anything from the writers of this locality, I thought I would send in a letter. We are, some of us, still among the living, and I trust that none of us are spiritually dead. We are trying to keep the faith, though we may be on the frontiers, far from the stakes of Zion.

I read Sister Eleanor Whiting's letter with pleasure, and am glad to know that she, too, has learned that God does hear and answer prayer, in this, our day. I was shown a few years ago that if we would not be so determined to plan for ourselves, but would trust more fully in our heavenly Father, trying to be faithful and prayerful, we would find that he was overruling all for our good; and that if we would trust to his guidance all would be well.

Our branch, Sunday school, and Religio, are all in working order. We are glad to welcome any of the missionaries who can visit this locality. Brother J. J. Cornish has been doing a good work here in the last two months. In the past year we have had the help of Brethren J. C. Crabb, Leroy Wood, G. T. Griffiths, and J. W. Peterson, all of whom gave us good sermons and good counsel.

Brother Birch Whiting has also been of much help to this branch. I wonder if he remembers a dream he related in a prayer meeting on Sunday, September 10, 1911 (if I am not mistaken), to the effect that troublous times were upon us; and that he saw that some great calamity had overtaken some cities, that seemed to be far away; and that the dead were being loaded into wagons, and on drays, wrapped in blankets, to get them out of the cities. Then it seemed that some near us were being hauled away, after the same fashion.

Perhaps I can not tell it as he did; but it was brought vividly to our minds, soon after, for on September 12, two days after he told his dream, our peaceful community was shocked by the tidings of a terrible crime, committed only a few miles from us. James Ellick murdered his young wife and both her parents, though I believe the old mother lived nearly a week after being shot. After the inquest the bodies of the young wife and her father were wrapped in blankets and hauled to Saskatoon, over twenty miles. And now we read of cities far away, where the dead are hauled in every manner out of the city, as the result of the cruel war between Turkey and the Balkan States, many of them murdered in as cruel a manner as Satan can suggest. Truly troublous times are upon us.

And now while it is hard times all over, it must be doubly so where the floods and fires, tornadoes and cyclones have been doing their work. Yet, all that we can do is to "Pray for one another," and try to keep the faith.

In the last year the greatest trial of my life has come to me. Yet, through it all, I was made to know that my God had not forsaken me. For over forty-two years we had walked together along life's pathway, and if we could have had our way, we would have greatly preferred to pass a peaceful old age together; but it was not to be. Some four or five weeks before my husband's death, the last Sunday he was able to go to church, while singing the first verse of the first hymn, I raised my eyes to my husband's face, and the impression came to me that it was the last time we would see him there. I tried to put it out of my mind, and said, "No, Lord, it can not be," but again was the impression borne in upon my spirit that the next time he came there it would be his funeral. I could sing no more all that day, and I carried a burden home with me that seemed greater than I could bear.

My husband had been gradually running down in health, but had not consulted a physician. I persuaded him to go and see a doctor, who immediately pronounced it heart disease. I had so often taken it to the Lord in prayer, but the only reply I received was to talk it all over with my husband, and for us to unite in prayer for the Lord's will to be done, and all would be well. So we prayed, asking if it could be God's will he might be healed.

Then my companion asked for the consecrated olive oil, and as I knelt by his chair, he anointed my head and prayed that the spirit of peace and perfect trust in our heavenly Father might come to us, and that I might have strength and faith to endure whatever trial I should be called upon to meet.

On May 23, 1912, my companion was called to his eternal home. Through all the trying time I felt that I was upheld by a power higher than my own.

Pray for me that I may keep the faith.

EMMA L. ANDERSON.

ASHLAND, WISCONSIN, March 25, 1913.

Dear Herald: I enjoy reading the letters in the church papers very much. I hope the Lord will help me by his Spirit to be able to write something that will be helpful to others. I have just finished writing a letter for the Ensign, and desire to treat both alike.

We have a population of about eighteen thousand, most every kind of work, churches of all denominations, except Utah Mormons (who could not get a hold), and an Indian reservation joining us. The Scandinavian Adventists drew enough converts out of the other churches to start one of their own here last summer. They had three tents and presented stereopticon views every night all last summer. I dislike to see others presenting what they call the truth, and no one here to show the people the difference between real truth and error, till they become so steeped in false doctrine that they can't be gotten out.

Oh, yes, there is no English Baptist church here, either. That went to pieces a number of years ago. I was once a member of that church. Those poor people are scattered all over the city, and I know they don't feel satisfied in other churches. I did not, though I joined another so I would have some place to call a church home, and a place to do church work.

It is fine here in summer. Boats will run between here and Duluth and Superior twice a week, and every two hours between here and Washburn, Bayfield, and LaPoint. Twice a week they make trips among the Apostle Islands.

The old church at LaPoint, built by Father Marquette, a hundred years ago, burned a few years since, but the old mission is still remaining, and a new church stands in place of the old one. The old Indian cemetery bears very old inscriptions on the tombstones, and some very peculiar ones. Anyone wishing to preach to the Lamanites has an abundant opportunity here in summer. This is supposed to be the scene of Hiawatha's home and surroundings.

This land of the Ojibways, or Chippewas, as we call them, and the Gitchee Gumi, Shining Big Sea Water, is our lake, Lake Superior. I think that poem of Longfellow's, Hiawatha, is the most beautiful thing I ever read in that line.

I wish we might interest some one who holds the priesthood enough to come and preach all summer, or come and locate here. We will do all we can to help along if anyone wishes to come. Elder B. C. Flint might tell you of the big four or five pound fish he caught last summer when here for a week.

There will be big shipments of ore from here this season, according to reports. It would be fine if some one would come before people begin to go for outings, when school is out June 15. The teachers of the schools go then, too.

Can't we interest some one in coming to help us build up the work in this place?

Your sister in the one faith,
1711 FIFTH STREET EAST. MABEL M. DENNIS.

LUCERNE, MISSOURI, April 28, 1913.

Editors Herald: I am holding meetings in this place, in the Christian church. Will continue all week and over Sunday, if the Lord wills. Fair attendance and some interest.

Only one member of our church here, Sister T. H. Jones. She is a worker, and it is through her influence that I am permitted the use of the church. Her husband is not a member of any church, but is a fine man. Their niece plays for us at the church, and she is a nice young lady.

Respectfully,
D. E. TUCKER.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, May 13, 1913.

Dear Herald: Will you please say to your many readers that I have been changed from the Clinton to the Far West District. Will the Saints in the Far West District please make arrangements for meetings, and let me come and help them, especially in new openings. Write me at 700 South Fuller Street, Independence, Missouri.

E. L. HENSON.

BENTON, ILLINOIS.

Dear Herald: We love to read the many letters written by the brothers and sisters, so thought some would like to hear from this part of the vineyard. There are a few Saints here who are striving to keep the gospel banner floating.

We can not all be preachers, but we can help spread the gospel by giving our neighbors our church papers to read. We think much good can be done this way.

We are glad we have been permitted to hear the gospel preached as it was presented by Christ and his apostles. It has been about six years since we were baptized, and we have never regretted it. We hope to live so our lives will be a shining light to those around us, so they may know there is a reality in what we claim.

May God bless his Saints everywhere. Our prayer is for the upbuilding of God's church and kingdom, and that all the honest in heart may be gathered in.

Your brother and sister in the gospel,
MR. AND MRS. MET ROBBERSON.

DES MOINES, IOWA, April 9, 1913.

Dear Herald: The appended letter was returned, unclaimed, from Flint, Michigan. Would it be too much to ask that you give this matter place in your columns, as I have no means of reaching the Jewish brother except through your pages?

Fraternally yours in the work,

W. T. MAITLAND.

M. NAWOK, Flint, Michigan.

Dear Brother: I was much interested in your breezy letter in HERALD of March 19, which lies before me now, concerning the return of the "captivity of Jacob." I am writing a story based on the Book of Mormon history of the colonization of ancient America by the seed of Jacob as represented in Manasseh of the tribe of Joseph. I want to make it historically correct so it may be instrumental in convincing some of Israel's seed that Joseph lived here, made a history, and wrote it too. If you are interested in this subject, let me hear from you.

Hoping to hear from you soon, I am,

Yours in the holy bond,

W. T. MAITLAND.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, May 8, 1913.

Dear Saints and Friends: We are back at Salt Lake City, after our trip to General Conference, but working overtime to get ready for our move to our new field, New York District. We think to be ready to move from here by June 15, and it may be July 1 before we reach New York.

We enjoyed the good things of the Spirit at the General Conference, and came back somewhat strengthened for the work of the coming year.

We have exhausted our edition of "notebooks," so take this opportunity of notifying the Saints and friends that we can fill no more orders for the same. Should the church think that the matter in its present form is worthy of preservation, or perpetuation, rather, it can be issued from one of the publishing houses. I only put this edition out to meet the insistent demands from some of our people here, who wished to possess my notebook. Had I known that the demand would have been as great, I would have, at least, doubled the number printed.

We are glad to say that we have secured a church home here, through the purchase of what was the English Lutheran church and parsonage, at 336 South Fourth East Street, and it is an excellent location and plant for our work here. I congratulate Brother and Sister Farr, and pray for the success for them that it seems should accompany this acquisition of equipment here.

Trusting that we may realize the promise made us at the General Conference of an outpouring of the Spirit and success in our work this year, and working and praying to that end, I am sincerely yours,

A. M. CHASE.

KUTCH, COLORADO, May 9, 1913.

Editors Herald: I arrived here the 14th of last month, and on the following Sunday organized a Latter Day Saint Sunday school. There were several interested, and I think we will make a success of it, if we are only prayerful and zealous in our work. For this is the kind of people the Lord is waiting to bless, not the slow and indifferent. We hold our meetings in the schoolhouse, which is near the center of our settlement.

We hold our meetings: Sunday school 10.30 a. m., and in the evening at 7.45 preaching. The meetings are both well attended, and we are hopeful of doing some good for the Master.

I expect to hold meetings in the surrounding schoolhouses during the summer, while I am on my claim. In the fall and winter I will be free to go to any place where I can accomplish good, or be a help in carrying on the Master's work.

For the advancement of the cause,

R. E. BOZARTH.

BOISE, IDAHO, May 9, 1913.

Dear Herald: The appointments made for the Idaho District were read with pleasure, in your columns. It makes us look forward with great hope for the future work in Idaho—to begin the year's work in earnest.

We will assemble at Weiser, Idaho, June 10, for reunion, and district conference, to hold twelve days. We are very much in hopes all of the appointees for this district will be present, also a liberal attendance from over the district, and a part of the unorganized territory of Oregon.

The future work of this section, so far as we can see, looks very encouraging. Local helpers desire to see the work move on. The bishop's agent's book has a very encouraging appearance, about double the amount contributed during the past year, compared to that of any year previous.

The prejudice runs pretty high in places, but when we show that we have a message of love and good will and do not use our weapons as a club, the feeling is overcome in many instances. The gospel message is worthy of all the attractions that can consistently be placed around it, and one of the best attractions is a human heart thoroughly warmed with divine love. The commercial or business world is an example of coldness, "the survival of the fittest," which might under present conditions be excusable for the lower animals; but if that principle be exhibited among representatives of "the meek and lowly Nazarene" the cause will be greatly hindered.

Many souls are hungering for the bread of life, but they have been tempted with "hardtack" so much that they have made up their minds that everything offered is the same; a sort of an "April fool" joke; so the responsibility rests with us to show that there is no cotton, cayenne or limberger on the inside, but that it is the "Simon-pure" all the way through.

Let us, then, be up and doing, with a heart that's brave and true, warmed by the sunlight of heaven, and our reward is sure. Where are our willing workers? May your presence or temporal support, Saints of the Idaho District, be in evidence as to how you feel towards the beautiful message we all profess to love and will strive to beautify during the reunion.

Yours for the spread of the truth,

NEW MADDEN.

AYERS, WEST VIRGINIA, May 4, 1913.

Editors Herald: I am away down in among the West Virginia hills, trying to preach the gospel of the Son of God to this people. While there is much prejudice, yet we find occasionally an honest soul who will accept the angel's message.

I had the pleasure of leading three precious souls into the waters of baptism April 13, at Indian Creek, and to-day I baptize three more, at this place. I have been here for two weeks preaching each night to good crowds. Others are much interested.

I expect to leave for home to-morrow, with the promise to return this fall, as I see by the Ensign I have been appointed to this mission for another year.

Our heavenly Father has wonderfully blessed me in the past year in the preaching of the word. Hope to live worthy of the same until my work is finished.

In bonds,

JAMES MCCONNAUGHY.

To the Researchers.

Let me try again: It is not the fact, as to whether the horse or elephant lived in America in prehistoric times that we want to know—science concedes that point. But did these animals live here at the same time that man did in that prehistoric past? Is there proof that either or both were used as domestic animals? Any evidence will be gladly received.

J. W. WIGHT.

LAMONI, IOWA, May 13, 1913.

Extracts from Letters.

Brother L. C. Buchanan, Matherville, Illinois: "I have enjoyed reading your valuable pages for several years. Brethren F. A. Smith and O. E. Sade organized a branch here some four months ago. Brother George Sackfield was called and ordained an elder; Brother R. Elvin was chosen priest; Brother Charles Davis was ordained deacon; and the writer was chosen teacher. The most of the Saints here are alive to the work, striving to do what they can to advance the cause."

Brother John C. Mhore, Kingman, Kansas: "We are striving to live in the light. Sometimes we get a little down-hearted for the want of being with other Saints, but we find we are not alone, for we have the good Spirit with us. We moved here from Saint Louis, thinking the change would be better. I am doing well. Our health has been good since we came here. If Brother J. Arthur Davis sees this and sends me the names of some of the Saints at Iuka, I will be very glad."

Sister W. T. Ramsey, Lagonda, Missouri: "I love this latter day gospel. It is all the world to me. It seemed after I came into this work, that this old world was a new place. We are poor in worldly goods. I pray the Lord to bless us temporally, that we may help in that way."

A Sister, Deer Isle, Maine: "This branch is sorrowing today over the departure in death of Sister Bessie Bray, one of our best members. Dear Saints, I have loved ones on the other shore. My thoughts revert to the days when I had them with me, which brings sorrow to my heart. I am trying to so live that I may meet them where parting will be no more."

S. White, Dimondale, Michigan: "A dream that I had a few months ago had its fulfillment in the terrible storm that passed through this part of the country last March. I will be sixty-nine years old in May and this is the worst storm that I have ever seen. Another dream which I have had indicates a storm much more devastating than the one we have recently experienced. Surely the scriptures are having their fulfillment."

O. P. Miller, Meek, Nebraska: I read the HERALD, and like it very much. I get it of a dear sister here, Mrs. Frank Manchester. We would like to dispose of our two hundred and eighty acres of land here, and move near to Lamoni, where we could have school and church privileges."

Mary Hogle, Comins, Michigan: "We have a good supply of officers in the Comins Branch. The Holy Spirit is with us to comfort and strengthen. Many times has God's power been manifested in healing the sick and afflicted."

J. L. Rust, Gladstone, Illinois: "I greet the HERALD editors and readers with love and humiliation in this, the eleventh hour, the dispensation of the fullness of times. This is the time in which Elias was to come and restore all things, before the great and dreadful day of the Lord. So God in his wisdom and mercy gives ample warning of what is to transpire in our day, that none may be found without opportunity of preparation."

News from Branches

Burlington, Iowa.

The fact that the Burlington Branch has not reported through the HERALD for some time does not indicate that we are asleep. We have not reported oftener, partly because there did not seem enough of general interest to write more frequently, and partly because it has for a time been a physical impossibility for the correspondent to do much writing of any nature.

Our branch has not grown in numbers, but we feel that there is an effort toward development spiritually that promises much for the future. One of our workers told in a letter to the Ensign of the first sacrament service of the year, when the Spirit spoke through Brother Joseph Arber, admonishing us to greater unity, and telling us that if unity prevailed there was a great work here for young and for old.

Earnest, humble effort in that direction has brought further promise by the voice of the Spirit through Brother Ed Schweers at our sacrament service Sunday, May 11. Eyes were filled with tears of gratitude as we sang praises to the Lord for acknowledgment of our effort, and for the promise that if we would come closer he would pour out blessings such as we are not now able to endure. The influence was felt strongly throughout the service, which lasted for nearly an hour and a half, with scarcely a moment lost, and through administration at the close, when comforting promise was given.

The writer has, herself, had cause within the past few months to be very humbly grateful for the assurance of help and comfort in time of need. Threatened with incipient cataract, the need was presented in fasting and prayer by the branch, other locals of the district, and friends elsewhere, and assurance was given of help and restoration. Whether the help should come through our physician or directly, the source shall be acknowledged. Realizing that every promise is coupled with the admonition to be humble and faithful, we are praying earnestly that these conditions may prevail and our Father's name be glorified.

Brother O. R. Miller has, by conference appointment, been returned as pastor of the branch, and we understand is planning to make added effort toward reaching outsiders. There is some talk of a summer school, and the press is, perhaps, more favorably disposed than heretofore.

A debate is anticipated between Reverend W. G. Roberts, representing the non-progressive Christians (who challenged Brother Miller through one of our daily papers), and Brother E. E. Long, representing us, the debate to be held during June. Owing to the disposition of our opponent, this did not seem altogether desirable to some, but with an able speaker to present our cause, some good should be accomplished and some prejudice cleared away. We are hoping and praying that such may be the case.

Our last district conference and conventions held here in February were exceptionally good in attendance and interest, and gave promise for the future. It is to be hoped that the approaching one at Ottumwa, June 6, 7, and 8, will bring as good a representation.

The auxiliary work is doing reasonably well, the Religion still in charge of Brother W. H. Thomas, and the former Sunday school superintendent still retained. In the latter department, some difficulties were met in the new lesson work, but these are being met with determination by our teachers, and we are satisfied that good work is being done. Much depends upon the teachers—even more, it seems, than in larger schools,—and our teachers have responded loyally, making little need for providing substitutes.

The beginner class was divided early in the year and five advanced to the primary work, in charge of our assistant superintendent, Sister Jule Ortleb. That class soon had an addition of two, and the beginner bids fair to reach its former proportions before a great while. Much interest centers in our primary corner, and justly so. Especially gratifying, too, is the interest taken by the parents, who are helping both by attendance and interest to make the school a power for good that it could not be without them.

The first Sunday after the General Conference the morning service was given to short talks by the priesthood of the branch: priest, teacher and deacons, and the pastor in conclusion. The talks were both interesting and helpful.

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Rocky Mountain Mission, including the States of Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah, and Colorado; Greeting: Following the custom of the missionaries in general charge, allow me to say to you that the brethren of the general ministry named below will labor as follows the ensuing year:

Arthur Mills, Colorado, Denver, objective.

Samuel Twombly and R. E. Bozarth, Western Colorado.

F. A. Russell and J. D. Curtis, Central Colorado.

J. R. Sutton and J. F. Petre, Eastern Colorado.

J. M. Stubbart, Southern Utah.

W. H. Kelley, Provo, and vicinity.

F. B. Farr, Salt Lake City, and vicinity.

J. C. Chrestensen, Malad, Idaho, and vicinity.

W. E. Peak, Idaho, Boise City, objective.

G. W. and H. E. Winegar, Minidoka Valley, Black Foot, and the Teton Basin.

Lyman Fike and New Madden, the country between Weiser and Hagerman.

L. E. Hills, Eastern Montana, Bozeman, objective.

W. R. Smith, George Thorburn, and A. J. Moore, Montana.

Bear in mind, brethren, that there is no intention to establish closely drawn boundary lines. Should you find a good opening in the vicinity of your appointed field do not hesitate to step over and occupy.

I trust to your good will and judgment to occupy wisely and well in your appointed fields; to labor together as brethren should, diligently, and yet, "in honor preferring one another," also considering the rights and feelings of the local ministry, as they will yours, so that there may be harmony throughout, all striving to conserve and advance the interests of the Master's cause.

You will remember the times for reporting. I only need to ask you to be as punctual and prompt as you consistently can be, and report conditions in your respective fields as fully as possible. All may report directly to me. My home address is 419 East Fifth Street, Cameron, Missouri, but I hope to be able to publish field address before July 1.

Will the brethren who have not yet received their letter of recommendation, please write me, and I will forward at once.

To the local brethren and Saints, I want to say that your service is as needful and honorable as that of the general ministry, and I hope that you will continue to sustain the work financially and otherwise, as the Lord may prosper you. All may feel free to write me as to conditions, needs, etc., in their respective localities, and I will do my best for you, either in person, by correspondence, or otherwise.

Let us all pray and labor together for a successful year in the mission.

Respectfully your brother,

PETER ANDERSON.

To the Saints of the Eastern Michigan District: Just starting in another year's work, and being again appointed to labor with you, I hope that you will all join with us to make this year the best we have ever had in bringing the gospel before the people. We as missionaries need your prayers and help. Let me know of new openings, or where I can help you, and I will be glad to do so. May God bless us all in doing what we can for the Master's cause, in my earnest prayer. Address me at 1031 Gillett Street, Port Huron, Michigan.

MAY 14, 1913.

OTTO FETTING.

To the Saints in Various Localities Throughout the Independence Stake, Not in Branches: Having been asked by the missionary in charge, Elder J. W. Rushton, to assist in arranging for missionary services, and wishing the cooperation of the members in these various localities, I desire all such to communicate with me, expressing themselves relative to the opportunities and advisability of holding services at these places.

Elders George Jenkins and R. O. Self have the stake tent at their disposal, and will begin operations in Independence shortly; from this point they will go where it is thought the greatest amount of good can be accomplished. Elders W. S. Macrae and T. W. Chatburn will be available to a limited extent. Each of these brethren, because of conditions, will labor in close proximity to their respective home towns. Brother Rowe, of the local force, will also be available.

We desire that all who can will arrange so that services can be held, as far as possible, that each minister engaged in this mission work may be in action to the extent that they are able, and that as a result of the combined efforts and sacrifices we may have an ingathering of souls that will reveal the depth of interest we feel in the work.

There will necessarily be expenses created as a result of the movements of these missionaries, which perhaps will make it necessary at times for sacrifice to be made in order that the work of the Lord may be extended. It is a sacrifice for the missionaries to leave their homes, and this should not be increased by the failure of those among whom they labor, and belonging to the church, to contribute to their necessities.

Trusting that with thoughtful and prayerful earnestness, we may cooperate to the end that the offers of salvation may reach the homes of many as yet unacquainted with the latter day work. My address is 1401 West Short Street, Independence, Missouri.

Yours very sincerely,

G. E. HARRINGTON, President Independence Stake.

MAY 15, 1913.

To the Ministers and Saints of the Kirtland District; Greeting: Having been appointed as assistant minister in charge of the district, I thus address you.

I wish to say to the ministers that a great responsibility has been placed upon us as the ministers of Jesus Christ, and we are sent out to represent him and not ourselves. I feel that each one senses this fact, and will do so.

We ask the cooperation of all the local ministry and members that we may do all that is possible for us to do this year to make the year a success in building up the kingdom of God, and thus be instruments in his hand of helping to save the souls of men. We have been admonished of the Lord, "He that is warned, let him warn his neighbor."

Those living away from the branches and who can get a place for an elder to preach, please write, and as soon as we can we will have some one come.

We can all do something if we just think so. Let us all go to work in earnest and do all the good we can, remembering that when the year has passed we can never live it over again; for we only pass this way once. Let our aim be first, last, and all the time, the salvation of poor souls; and let every move that we make be to save.

As ministers for Christ let us not wait for something to turn up, but get busy and not let one moment be lost for the work the Lord has intrusted to our care. We must answer to God for our stewardship while here. Let us ask ourselves the question, How many souls will there be around the pleasing bar of God who will have the crown of everlasting life placed upon their heads by reason of our assistance to them in helping them over the rough places of life?

May the good Lord add to each such blessing as will be for his good and his glory.

Your brother and colaborer for the great work of God,

RICHARD BALDWIN.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, 8016 Carnegie Avenue.

To the Ministry and Saints in Kentucky, Tennessee and Southern Indiana; Greeting: Again the task of looking after the work of the ministry, as an associate minister, in the above named territory has been allotted to the undersigned. We therefore take this opportunity of most earnestly asking for the assistance and cooperation of both the ministry and the Saints in an endeavor to make this a successful year in the building up of the church, and in the extension of the gospel through this territory.

Our ministerial force for this year is much larger than for some years past. Let us make a special effort to make as many new openings as possible without neglecting the work already started. To this end we ask the assistance of all the Saints and friends in securing places to preach the gospel, whether churches, schoolhouses, or private houses. Inform us of the opportunities or prospects, and we will respond as promptly as possible.

Elders Alma C. Barmore, J. R. McClain, Jacob G. Halb and Priest Charles A. Nolan will labor for the present in southern Indiana. Brother Halb may do some work in Kentucky, later.

Elder J. W. Metcalf will labor in Northern and Central Kentucky for the present.

Elders J. A. Roberts, S. E. Dickson, and W. S. Shupe will labor in the Kentucky and Tennessee District for the present. Evangelical Minister F. G. Pitt, will labor in the Kentucky and Tennessee District, as per appointment, but may also divide his time with the Southern Indiana District.

Let us not forget that the increase of our ministerial force means also increased expense for their expenses and for the support of their families. So do not neglect to send in your tithes and offerings to the bishop's agent of your respective district.

We desire to keep in touch with the Saints of the mission, and we hope all will be free to write us concerning the needs of the work in the various localities. Mail sent to my home address will be forwarded promptly to me in my various locations in the field. Address box 144, Holden, Missouri.

Yours, hopefully for the coming year,

MAY 11, 1913.

H. E. MOLER.

What Rudyard Kipling Said About the Grand Canyon in Yellowstone National Park

"I looked into a gulf 1,700 feet deep, with eagles and fish-hawks circling far below. And the sides of that gulf were one wild welter of color—crimson, emerald, cobalt, ochre, amber, honey splashed with port wine, snow-white, vermilion, lemon and silver-gray in wide washes. The sides did not fall sheer, but were graven by time and water and air into monstrous heads of kings, dead chiefs—men and women of the old time. So far below that no sound of its strife could reach us, the Yellowstone River ran, a finger-wide strip of jade green.

"Evening crept through the pines that shadowed us, but the full glory of the day flamed in that canyon as we went out very cautiously to a jutting piece of rock that overhung the deepest depths of all."

I want to send you an illustrated pamphlet on the Yellowstone Park. It contains a fine map in colors, showing all the points of interest, and describes the many wonders to be seen. And I would like to tell you just how to go there most comfortably. May I do so? Kindly call or write

A PROPOSED STUDY IN HEREDITY.

In 1834, E. D. Howe began his "expose" of "Mormonism" by saying:

All who became intimate with them during this period, unite in representing the general character of old Joseph and wife, the parents of the pretended Prophet, as lazy, indolent, ignorant and superstitious—having a firm belief in ghosts and witches; the telling of fortunes; pretending to believe that the earth was filled with hidden treasures, buried there by Kidd or the Spaniards. Being miserably poor, and not much disposed to obtain an honest livelihood by labor, the energies of their minds seemed to be mostly directed towards finding where these treasures were concealed, and the best mode of acquiring their possession.—Mormonism Unveiled, by E. D. Howe, p. 11, chap. 1.

In 1870, Beadle began his book, Mysteries and Crimes of Mormonism, by saying:

Joseph Smith, the founder of Mormonism, was born December 23, 1805, at Sharon, Windsor County, Vermont. His parents, Joseph Smith, sr., and Lucy Mack Smith, belonged to the lowest grade of society, and, by the testimony of all their neighbors, were illiterate and superstitious, as well as indolent and unreliable. They could believe in the supernatural as easily as the natural; for they were as ignorant of the one as the other. These qualities seemed to descend upon the son by "ordinary generation."—Mysteries and Crimes of Mormonism, by Beadle, p. 21.

In 1899, Lu B. Cake, author of The Bright Little Lantern I Swing, began his paper-backed "novel," called Peepstone Joe and the Peck Manuscript, by saying:

Seventy reputable men who knew, stated under oath that this Smith family was ignorant; that the males were drunkards, blasphemers, liars, thieves; who put in their time digging for hidden treasures of the Captain Kidd kind, and defrauding their neighbors. Reputable citizens aver under oath that these Smiths were a low, wicked household and Joe the worst of the lot.—Peepstone Joe and the Peck Manuscript, by Lu B. Cake, chap. 2, p. 9.

In the good year of our Lord 1912 Reverend Bruce Kinney began his work, Mormonism the Islam of America, by saying:

Joseph Smith, jr., the founder of the Mormon Church, was born December 23, 1805, at Sharon, Vermont. He was the fourth of nine children. His parents and relatives were all poor, ne'er-do-we's; visionaries, guided by dreams, seeking hidden treasures and often in conflict with the officers of the law. Joseph was regarded by his neighbors as the worst of the lot.—Mormonism the Islam of America, p. 17.

POVERTY OF EXPRESSION.

We say that these works were begun in that way, meaning that these words are found in the very opening chapters, if not in the opening paragraphs. Similar stereotyped expressions might probably be quoted from a score, at least, of similar books. Aside from the fact that they indicate extreme lack of originality of expression among the writers of the opposition, they illustrate the almost universal method of beginning attack upon our work.

While as a church we have no inordinate desire to give publicity to Joseph Smith as a man, or to his family, we are constantly forced to meet this line of attack and answer it before we can disabuse the minds of the people and get a hearing for the gospel which it is our greatest ambition to present. This may be sufficient apology for occasional mention of the man or the family in these columns.

THE APPEAL TO HEREDITY.

Reread the passages quoted from Howe, Beadle, Cake and Kinney. Reading these in connection with many others of like import, you will discover that the first effort made is to discredit the parents of Joseph Smith. This is done for the purpose of bringing in an argument on heredity. The old adage is, "Like father, like son." The first undertaking, then, is to prove that the parents of Joseph Smith were low, ignorant, drunken, dishonest, and criminal. As a result the fact is supposed to be established that nothing good could be expected from the scion of such a family; their supposed bad qualities come to him naturally, by "ordinary generation."

But the appeal to heredity is an argument that may be made to cut both ways. We propose to use it to cut in the opposite direction, by way of change.

If it is proper to judge Joseph Smith by his ancestors, it is equally proper to judge him by his posterity. Heredity is a definite force with which sociologists reckon to a greater or lesser degree. It is not difficult to trace hereditary influences in families.

THE JUKES FAMILY.

We cite the reader to the celebrated case of the Jukes family. About 1874 R. L. Dugdale, while investigating conditions in penal institutions in New York State, began an investigation of this family, and his report was published in the thirtieth annual report of the Prison Association of New York (see New International Encyclopedia, vol. 11, p. 326; also Ladies' Home Journal, March, 1912).

Items of the report taken from the Home Journal of the date given show among 1,200 identified descendants of Max Jukes (born 1720) 300 in the poorhouse, 2,300 years in all; 440 viciously diseased; 400 physical wrecks; 50 notorious prostitutes; 7 murderers; 60 habitual thieves, who averaged 12 years each in jail; 130 convicted of crime; "none of them contributed to social welfare"; and their "actual and potential cost to society was $1,250,000."

In the Jukes family we have a concrete example of conditions obtaining in a family springing from degenerates and criminals such as the Smiths were said to have been. Now what we propose is that any reliable and unprejudiced commission shall investigate the roll of the descendants of Joseph Smith in a similar manner.

ONE HUNDRED AND ELEVEN DESCENDANTS.

At this writing one hundred and eleven lineal descendants of Joseph Smith have been born into the world. Eighty-eight of these descendants are still living.

These are descendants from Joseph Smith and his one and only wife, Emma Hale Smith. We point out in passing that this is not a bad showing under monogamy. It must be embarrassing to those who claim that Joseph Smith had other wives to be confronted by such a posterity from Emma Smith, while they have hitherto failed to meet our oft-repeated challenge by producing even one descendant born to Joseph Smith from others who are put forward as his wives. But that is only as an aside, and not in line with our main argument at this time.

The record of these descendants, both living and dead, is easily accessible, and the truth regarding them is more easy to come at than in the case of the parents of Joseph Smith. How many inebriates, thieves, paupers, illiterates, adulterers, prostitutes, criminals, bigamists, polygamists, and inmates of penal institutions are to be found in this list of descendants?

We face such an examination with equanimity, not knowing of even one (remarkable though that may seem to some) who will come within the scope of such a list. If there are any, the number is so small as to be negligible.

Let the commission report further as to the number of adult descendants who have filled or are filling places of trust and rendering services to society in the various honorable professions or vocations, such as ministers, lawyers, editors, members of the legislature, school teachers, printers, artists, authors, musicians, stenographers, mechanics, farmers, and the like; the number who are graduates from schools of learning; and the number who are total abstainers from drink, drugs, and tobacco.

Let the family record thus critically analyzed be compared with the record of almost any average family of equal size, covering the same number of years, selecting for such purpose a family of accepted respectability and good parentage. We would not even exclude the family of Mr. Kinney or any other of these critics, providing the experiment is conducted fairly and without prejudice, and providing further that they are of unquestioned respectability.

Our opponents have proposed the test of heredity, and as sure as the sun shines on high such a report fairly made and published would force a revision of opinions commonly held by the public concerning Joseph Smith as a man.

DID THE FAMILY STREAM SUDDENLY CLARIFY?

A filthy fountain can not give forth pure waters. On only one hypothesis may we suppose that the family stream suddenly clarified and became pure just this side of that terrible man who has been portrayed for our consideration by Messrs. Howe, Beadle, Cake, and Kinney; and that is the hypothesis that the gospel restored through Joseph Smith had power to cleanse the family and make it what it was from his day onward. If our opponents choose to accept that alternative we will not object. Let the restored gospel have the glory of working out such a miracle and let the reputation of Joseph Smith and his ancestors stand.

OUR OPPONENTS GOOD "INVENTORS."

However, our opponents are not likely to accept this alternative, and the logic of affairs will soon force many of them to concede with Right Reverend Bishop F. S. Spalding that "those who attacked the Mormons felt moved to publish everything they could discover or invent to the discredit of 'Joe Smith' and his parents." (Joseph Smith, Jr., as a Translator, p. 4.)

Messrs. Howe, Beadle, Cake, Kinney, Braden, Neal, Shook, Roberts, and a host of others have been good "inventors." They have had recourse to the testimony of old-time enemies who were blinded by that most unreasonable of passions, religious hatred, and were themselves good inventors, as the worthy bishop indicates. But we suggest that a careful study into old records in the United States and England, such a study as Mr. Herbert Salisbury is now prosecuting in the leading libraries of the United States, will tell a different story about the lives of the ancestors of Joseph Smith, one that will not accord with the inventions of these inventors.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A CENTURY OF PEACE.

A conference of delegates from the United States, Great Britain, Canada, Australia, and the city of Ghent, Belgium, was recently held in New York City in preparation for the celebration of the signing of the treaty of Ghent and the one hundred years of peace between English-speaking nations. This conference had for its purpose the settlement of a definite program for the celebration, and for international permanent memorials. These arrangements include:

"First: The erection of two monuments, identical in design and inscription, in Washington and London. It is proposed that the foundation stones of these two monuments shall be laid at the same time, by the King of England and the President of the United States, and that at the time of the ceremony the English-speaking world shall recognize the significance of the moment by a five minutes' cessation of all business.

"Second: The institution of traveling scholarships and exchange professorships; the compiling of a history of the one hundred years; the erection of commemorative tablets as memorials to individual events; religious services; a commemorative celebration in Ghent, where the treaty was signed in December, 1814.

"Third: The erection of permanent memorials and monuments along the American-Canadian frontier, including arches over the Quebec-Miami and Vancouver-Los Angeles highways where they cross the boundary. Among the monuments to be erected along the Canadian border will also be a bridge over the Niagara River near Niagara Falls, and a bridge, accompanied by water-gates and possibly a tunnel, at Detroit."

It is a matter for national pride that the Canadian-American boundary is the longest unfortified frontier in the world; it is a matter for national congratulation that for one hundred years there has been peace between all English-speaking nations. These associations, covering so long a period, and so extended an area, in every quarter of the globe, are matters for world emulation.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WORD OF CAUTION.—Sufferers from tubercular troubles should have a care with reference to the claims of Doctor Friedmann, the German physician who has recently made arrangements by which his remedy is to be manufactured in the United States. Doctor Friedmann has persistently declined to open to medical authorities his laboratory method and his records as to tests; consequently no one has any way of knowing as to the composition or permanent effects of his serum or vaccine. Until such time as this discovery, so called, is submitted to open and careful professional scrutiny, or has actually been demonstrated as effectual, which at best will require a number of years, sufferers or their friends should not build hope upon the claims of Doctor Friedmann.

COMING TO THE LIGHT.—At the sixty-seventh annual convention of the Southern Baptist Church, held in Saint Louis, the body, last week, went on record as indorsing the tithe system as a basis for church financing. The recommendation provided that the tithe be made the minimum standard of giving, and that additional opportunity for free will offerings be provided. Pastors and churches were encouraged to seek to enlist all the members in the observing of the standard. The resolution passed contained these words: "Anything less than the Jews gave under the law is inconceivable to those who are saved by grace, and who regard all things from the viewpoint of God's unspeakable gifts to us." Gradually, they come to the light.

PROMISE OF PEACE.—A new movement which promises to be a factor in promoting international amity is the formation of associations of college students of different races. In many large universities in the United States, in past years, foreign students came together with a certain number of American students and formed local societies known as cosmopolitan clubs. These clubs are federated into a national association of cosmopolitan clubs, embracing thousands of students from fifty-five different countries. A similar movement started in Italy, in 1898, with affiliated organizations in other European universities. Now these two federations have joined forces and will meet at Cornell University, in August, as an international congress of students. Since these young men are in many cases being educated for the express purpose of qualifying for positions in the administrative or diplomatic service of their respective countries, it is hoped that this intimate association during the companionable years of youth will facilitate friendly relations between the nations in time of stress.

INDIANS BAPTIZED.—We are glad to report the continuation of the good work begun among the Lamanites. Under date of May 15, Brother Hubert Case writes: "I have the work started for the year among the Lamanites. We had a fine meeting among them last Sunday, at Bessie, Oklahoma. I preached to them, then Chief Three Fingers told his good impression at the conference, as also did Philip Cook. Reuben Taylor preached to them for about fifteen minutes. I baptized five splendid Indians. So the good work moves on."

CHURCH DEDICATION.—A very neat card of invitation reaches us, announcing the dedication of the newly purchased chapel at Atchison, Kansas. The card consists of a picture of the chapel, with announcement written by hand, giving the invitation a pleasing personal touch. The dedicatory services were to have been held May 25.

COMMENCEMENT AND INAUGURAL.—The Graceland College commencement season opened May 21, to conclude on the evening of June 4. Recitals in the departments of oratory, piano and voice are being given, to be followed on the latter date by the commencement exercises proper. At this time, as a fitting climax to the season, Elder S. A. Burgess, president elect, will deliver his inaugural address.

Selected and Original

The Armies of Peace.

After the tea things are put away,
After the paper is read,
After the noise and the cares of day,
And the youngsters are abed;
After the prayers and the good-night kiss,
She by the fire and I,
And the winds may blow, but I'm glad for this,
And the dreams that go smiling by.

After the children's time for play,
After the voices of care
Have echoed in distance and died away,
And night with its peace is fair,
After the little stories are told
And the lilt of the lullaby,
The day seems dross by the evening's gold
And the joys that go laughing by.

After the crib and the trundle bed
Are canopied high with dreams;
After the last little curly head
Is shorn of its golden beams
By the snuffing out of the candle's light,
When she by the fire and I,
And I'm glad for the stillness and peace of night
And the hopes that go gleaming by.

After the gnomes and the goblins drift
Out to the sleepy sea;
After the hearth fire muses lift
Songs of the joys to be;
After the workaday world's asleep,
She by the fire and I
In the dream-a-while time, when fairies peep
And gladness goes dancing by.

And this is the strength that the nation boasts,
And this is the nation's pride,
And these are grander than panoplied hosts
And ships on the sea beside:
The lullabies and the hearth fires bright,
And the cribs where the children lie,
And the dreams of love that hallow the night,
And the faith that goes smiling by.

—J. W. Foley.

Oh Soul.

Heed the counsel of Jehovah,
Let thy heart be stayed on God:
Look to him in highest pleasure,
Upward haste to heights untrod.

Thou art blest with boundless promise,
God designs thy work to bless:
Trust the Lord and let him lead thee
In the paths of holiness.

Cast thee out all thoughts of evil,
These but bar thee from the goal:
Ever let the thoughts of pureness,
Sanctify and make thee whole.

Soul, the earth is bound in darkness,
Satan reigneth near supreme,
And the depths of degradation
With his countless millions teem.

Canst thou sit and watch this idly,
While these souls are clothed with gloom,
Couldst thou e'er be glad and happy
Leaving such unto their doom?

Jesus Christ the Lord has called thee,
His glad message to declare:
For the work that lies before thee,
Bids thee study and prepare.

God has given some the priesthood,
To reclaim the sons of men,
And he soon will place the glory
Of his power and grace on them.

Oh be true and be thou faithful,
Only these are clothed with power:
Being thus the Lord will bless thee—
As a light thou mayest tower.

Opportunities are boundless
And thy fair ideals should be—
Service true and service loyal—
This the Lord requires of thee.

EARL ROY CURRY.

Spring Song.

BY RITA SCHERMAN.

Spring came dancing down the glades,
Her arms with violets laden;
And Spring met Love, and Love was sad,
Love vowed he'd never more be glad.
Spring sighed,—the tender maiden!

Spring scattered violets through the glades
And hid them in the blowing grass;
And Love bent down and plucked a flower
And hasted to his Lady's bower.
Spring sang,—the happy maiden!

Spring whispered to the waiting birds
To trill a roundelay;
Along came Love, and Love was glad,
He vowed he never could be sad.
Spring laughed,—the witching maiden!

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM

OR

THE CURRENT REFORMATION IN CONTRAST WITH TRUTH REVEALED.—PART 4.

BY E. E. LONG.

MILLENNIAL EXPECTATIONS.—DISAPPOINTMENT.

The ardor of religious awakening resulting from the new discoveries in the gospel was very much increased about the year 1830, by the hope that the millennium had now dawned, and that the long-expected day of gospel glory would very soon be ushered in. The restoration of the ancient gospel was looked upon as the initiatory movement, which, it was thought, would spread so rapidly that existing denominations would almost immediately be deorganized; that the true people, of whom it was believed Christ had a remnant among the sects, would at once, on the presentation of these evidently scriptural views, embrace them, and thus form the union of Christians so long prayed for; and so would be established the kingdom of Jesus in form, as well as in fact, on its New Testament basis.—Hayden, p. 183.

The rapid spread of reformatory principles, his great success in combating infidelity, and in correcting religious errors, led him to conceive of the millennial period as near at hand. This feeling was shared by Walter Scott and other of the pioneer preachers of the reformation.—Grafton, p. 144.

We are not at all surprised at the general "expectancy" that seemed to pervade the minds of men engaged in religious reform about that time. The surprise to us is the fact that the major portion of them rejected that "something" when it came. We would naturally suppose that men with such lofty aspirations for the complete restoration of the apostolic order of things, and who had so ardently prayed and labored for the return of the gospel glory of former days, would be in a receptive mood to welcome divine truth from whatever source. But the fickle depravity of human nature must be reckoned with. It was so nineteen hundred years ago, and it is so to-day.

About this time a series of events transpired which "changed the religious situation, blasted Mr. Campbell's hope of a continued reformation within the borders of the Baptist Church, and set him adrift," and his restoration scheme received a shock from which it never recovered. They "put to sea" against "head winds" but they never reached the harbor and they still continued to "drift" upon the stormy billows of speculative uncertainty. True, they grew and multiplied and waxed strong numerically, like so many sprouts from the parent stump, but the fruit is of divers varieties and lacking in spiritual flavor. In other words, they suffered from the effects of a reaction that was disastrous in its results. And Mr. Campbell, with all his great mental resources, was not able to cope with it, as the following excerpt from his own pen would seem to indicate:

I have before intimated my approval of the Baptist Association formulas, pruned of certain redundancies and encroachments upon faith, piety, and humanity. I was present on the occasion of the dissolution of the "Mahoning Baptist Association" in 1828 (1830), on the Western Reserve, State of Ohio. With the exception of one obsolete preacher, the whole association, preachers and people, embraced the current reformation. I confess I was alarmed at the hasty and impassioned manner in which the association was, in a few minutes, dissolved. I then, and since, contemplated that scene as a striking proof of the power of enthusiasm and of excitement, and as dangerous, too, even in ecclesiastical as well as in political affairs. Counsel and caution, argument and remonstrance, were in vain in such a crisis of affairs. It would have been an imprudent sacrifice of influence to have done more than make a single remonstrance. But that remonstrance was quashed by the previous question and the regular Baptist Mahoning Association died of a moral apoplexy in a quarter of an hour.—Hayden, p. 298.

The historian continues:

At the dissolution of the association the system of evangelization under the auspices and direction of the brotherhood ceased and perished. No one was sent out by that body, as it ceased to be; nor by the yearly meeting, for no such power was then assumed by the "yearly meeting," nor has been since. Then perished the principle of concert of action among us for evangelical purposes; and it lay dormant for years. Therefore we have been, in this respect, in a state of apostasy from our first principles.—Ibid., p. 297.

So ended the Mahoning Association as a Baptist society, and the "only method of bringing about the restoration of original Christianity in fact, in faith, and in form, in letter, in spirit, and in practice," was abandoned after a brief period of three years of practical application. It was born in the heat of excitement without a thus saith the Lord or an approved precedent, and it died in like manner. Peace be to its ashes.

THE ADVENT OF MORMONISM.

Among the numerous perplexing problems that confronted the reformers at this time, and "taxed their energies" to grapple with, nothing so exasperated them and disclosed their real character as the "advent of Mormonism." The idea that an untutored youth, scarcely out of his teens, could outdo these "experienced pioneers" in the discovery and application of gospel truth was too much for their vanity; and the idea that God had any hand in the matter taxed their credulity beyond the limit. They never stopped to consider the probability of God arising to maintain his own cause after his own fashion; and while they were trying to restore the church of the first century they overlooked the fact that that church was established contrary to the then popular expectancy. The Jews were "expecting" the Messiah and rejected him when he came, because of the conditions attending his arrival. The "reformers" were looking for wonderful happenings to precede his second advent; but, like their predecessors, they passed it up as an inferior article because it did not measure up to the standard of their expectation.

The conditions were exactly parallel. In each instance a "thus saith the Lord" was proclaimed to the astonishment of the watchers, whose vision was be dimmed by the glory revealed.

Like the ancient Pharisees, the modern product could not maintain their traditions, even with the advantage of their "discoveries," when the searchlight of revealed truth was brought to bear upon them; and so there was consternation in the reform camp. The old Pharisaic challenge, "Show us a sign," was loudly vociferated, and in like manner rejected with a scoff and a sneer when the manifestation was given.

From their own chronicles we quote:

In the latter part of 1830, the founders of Mormonism began to effect a lodgment in northern Ohio. Sidney Rigdon, a preacher among the Disciples, of great eloquence and power, had joined them, and commenced preaching their doctrine. Whatever we may say of the moral character of the author of Mormonism, it can not be denied that Joseph Smith was a man of remarkable power over others. Added to the stupendous claim of supernatural power, conferred by the direct gift of God, he exercised an almost magnetic power—an irresistible fascination—over those with whom he came in contact. Ezra Booth, of Mantau, a Methodist preacher of much more than ordinary culture, and with strong natural abilities, in company with his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, and some other citizens of this place, visited Smith at his home in Kirtland, in 1831. Mrs. Johnson had been afflicted for some time with a lame arm, and was not at the time of the visit able to lift her hand to her head. The party visited Smith partly out of curiosity, and partly to see for themselves what there might be in the new doctrine. During the interview, the conversation turned on the subject of supernatural gifts, such as were conferred in the days of the apostles. Some one said, "Here is Mrs. Johnson with a lame arm: has God given any power to men now on earth to cure her?" A few moments later, when the conversation had turned in another direction, Smith rose, and walking across the room, taking Mrs. Johnson by the hand, said in the most solemn and impressive manner: "Woman, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, I command thee to be whole." and immediately left the room. The company were awe stricken at the infinite presumption of the man, and the calm assurance with which he spoke. The sudden mental and moral shock—I know not how better to explain the well-attested fact—electrified the rheumatic arm. Mrs. Johnson at once lifted it up with ease, and on her return home the next day she was able to do her washing without difficulty or pain.

Ezra Booth became a convert and an elder, May, 1831. Coming to Hiram in the same month, he attended church, and at the conclusion of Elder Ryder's sermon sought and obtained permission to make an address, in which he stated, in the strong, clear language of impassioned enthusiasm, the ground of his new faith and the inspiring hopes which it gave him. A deep impression was made upon the minds of many who heard him. Elder Ryder was himself staggered; and "lest haply he should be found to fight against God," he sat in silence, neither approving nor disapproving. Determined, however, to know the truth and follow it wherever it might lead, he made a journey to Kirtland, and heard for himself. On his return, he seemed for a short time to have rejected the claims of Mormonism; but in the month of June, he read in a newspaper an account of the destruction of Pekin, in China, and he remembered that six weeks before, a young Mormon girl had predicted the destruction of that city.

Shortly after this, he openly professed his adhesion to the Mormon faith; but he and Ezra Booth, who were most intimate friends, promised that they would faithfully aid each other in discerning the truth or falsity of the new doctrine.—Hayden's History of the Disciples, pp. 249, 250, 251.

Thus we see that the "fertile field" which had been so prolific of results for the "current reformation" was now being invaded by a movement exactly the opposite in its character and claims, and which immediately began to draw heavily upon the best material in the restoration company. Something must be done to "stay the tide." Supernatural power was claimed for the new evangel, and this historian just quoted records two remarkable manifestations as, "well attested facts" which could not be gainsaid. Ezra Booth, the Methodist preacher, and Elder Ryder, the Disciple preacher, with a "large number" of others, espoused the new cause; but it was too much for the indomitable Campbell. He was a determined leader with a large development of the ego, and it was simply out of the question for him to submit to the dictation of an unlettered boy like Joseph Smith. No matter about the supernatural manifestations. The Devil could work miracles, so this modern exhibition of "power" was of "satanic origin." Besides, Mr. Campbell had already issued his brazen challenge to God by declaring, "We want no new message from the skies—no ambassadors from Christ." (Baptist, p. 21), and it would never do to admit so egregious an error now. So it was branded as a "coarse imposture," a "delusion," etc.

But that failed to put it down. To add color to the charge, some, including both Booth and Ryder, shortly renounced the whole thing and exerted all their influence against it, but with poor success. While some unstable souls, like themselves, followed their lead, many others continued to believe. We will let them relate the story in their own way.

Booth was soon commissioned to go to Missouri to explore the new land of promise, and lay the foundation of Zion. Ryder was informed that by special revelation he had been appointed and commissioned an elder of the Mormon Church. His commission came, and he found his name misspelled. Was the Holy Spirit so fallible as to fail even in orthography? Beginning with this challenge, his strong, incisive mind and honest heart were brought to the task of reexamining the ground on which he stood. His friend Booth had been passing through a similar experience, on his pilgrimage to Missouri, and when they met about the first of September, 1831, the first question which sprang to the lips of each was, "How is your faith?" and the first look into each other's face gave answer that the spell of enchantment was broken, and the delusion was ended. They turned from the dreams they had followed for a few months, and found more than ever before that the religion of the New Testament was "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." A large number of citizens of Hiram had given in their adhesion to the doctrine of Smith and Rigdon, but the efforts of Ryder and Booth went far to stay the tide, and lead back those who had been swept away on its current.—Ibid., pp. 251, 252.

Did the mere fact of Booth's apostasy prove "Mormonism" to be a fraud? The same historian says:

Let us not fail to remember, however, that Mormonism in northern Ohio, in 1831, was a very different thing from Mormonism in Utah, in 1870. It then gave no sign of the moral abomination which is now its most prominent characteristic.—Page 252.

It is a well-known fact that men espoused the cause of the "lowly Nazarene," and, finding things distasteful to their comprehension of matters, renounced it; but that is no argument that the thing advocated was a deception. Indeed, Campbell and company were, themselves, having a similar experience about the same time.

We read:

About this time (1830) Tillinghast Vaughn, a young Methodist preacher of considerable ability, falling in with Mr. Campbell in Virginia, was baptized by him, and returned to the Western Reserve. He preached in Middlebury about a year. But he forsook the faith, and embraced some scheme of universal skepticism, and drew away a number from the gospel. Vaughn's defection disheartened many; yet though cast down the cause was not destroyed.—Pages 355, 356.

So that, in so far as recantation and apostasy are concerned, we put the one against the other and let it go at that. However, we should not overlook the fact that Ryder's incredulity was first aroused because his name was misspelled. That one little omission on the part of the Holy Spirit (?) was enough in the "strong mind and honest heart" of this astute critic to overbalance the "destruction-of-Pekin-in-China" prophecy to which he had listened.

Notwithstanding the defection, "Mormonism" continued to menace the "reformers" and gain adherents from among them until it was discovered that polemic force was not the weapon with which to combat the new "enemy." It thrived on that kind of opposition. Frenzied over their discomfiture, a council of war was held and it was decided to adopt more drastic measures, and the tar bucket was suggested as a possible panacea.

So it is written:

But some, who had been the dupes of this deception, determined not to let it pass with impunity; and, accordingly, a company was formed of citizens from Shalerville, Garrettsville, and Hiram, in March, 1832, and proceeded to headquarters in the darkness of night and took Smith and Rigdon from their beds, and tarred and feathered them both, and let them go. This had the desired effect, which was to get rid of them.—Hayden, p. 221.

The above is from the pen of Symonds Ryder, the apostate, and an active participant in the scene he describes. To visit a man, or men, in the "darkness of night" and drag them from their peaceful slumbers is enough to brand the perpetrators anything but Christians; but to subject an innocent, helpless mother, and her infant twins to the exposure of March weather, causing death, is beneath the dignity of barbarians. In this, and other depredations in which the "Disciples" took an active part, the mask was raised, disclosing the identity of the "wolf" in all his hideousness; a progeny of the "Dark Ages."

We will not contest the fact that they can find a "precedent" for once. The latent malignity inherited from their "grandmother" asserted itself, and innocence had to suffer. It was the old Jerusalem scenes being enacted again. With the historian quoted above we can truthfully say, "Though cast down, the cause was not destroyed."

DUTIES OF THE OFFICE OF TEACHER.

NO. 8.—"DUTIES OF OFFICERS SERIES."

This article will be followed by one on "Suggestions to teachers," by Elder Charles Fry, Editor of "Zion's Ensign."

If there is any office in the church that requires a profound study of human nature, and the law of God, it is the office of teacher; for it has to deal with the subtle workings of the minds of the people, in false reasonings, stubbornness, insults, pride, rebellion, apostasy, indifference, and iniquity of all kinds; calling for the highest form of courage, wisdom, tact, patience, together with a thorough acquaintance with the law of God, General Conference resolutions, Rules of Order, and court procedure; also, a penetration into the mysteries of sophistry, both as an analytical and synthetical reasoner, always holding a proper mental poise.

The teacher is a custodian of information that is sacred, pursuing his course with diligence, with true and fixed purposes, an assistant to all, to enable all to understand how to remove the interferences preventing the members from the attainment of the spiritual eminence made possible through the gospel law, to furnish them with a knowledge of constructive Christianity.

It is a beautiful, saving service; dealing with souls under the most trying as well as the most delicate conditions; but unswerving in integrity to God, man, and the church:

To God, recognizing his love, his wisdom, and his law as superior to all.

To man, for his present and eternal welfare.

To the church, to aid in keeping it free from evils that would render it useless as a saving factor in the redemption of mankind. See Doctrine and Covenants 120: 7, latter part of paragraph, which reads:

Where cases of difficulty are of long standing, the council may require local authorities to adjust them; and in case of failure to do so, may regulate them as required by their office and duty; and this that the work and church may not be put to shame and the preaching of the word be hindered.

What greater service could man be called to perform? What greater intelligence is necessary to qualify for such service? What greater compensation might be expected than that which comes through a service of this kind?

The nature of God needs to be understood, and his relations to men, and their relations to him, and to each other; also an effort is necessary to get a clear conception of the conditions and environments in which men dwell, so as to be able to place before them, when needful, their positions, their attitudes, the safety and correctness of each, leading them to the understanding of how the true relations to all may be secured; teaching them fearlessly, courageously, as well as kindly, carefully, and intelligently, the way of God regardless of whether it be painful or pleasant.

The performances of one engaged in this office, and required of him; places upon him the responsibility of an effort to embrace a comprehensive view of the ideal life; for he is "to warn, exhort, expound, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ" (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 11). Besides this he is to "watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them." Further, he is to "see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking"; also "see that the church meet together often," and to "see that all the members do their duty," and "in the absence of the elder or priest" "is to take the lead of meetings."

Taking up these duties separately, we discover the magnitude and importance of the work to be done.

VISITING.

He is "to watch over the church always, and be with and strengthen them, . . . and see that the church meet together often."

We have associated these parts, believing in this way we can better emphasize the value of the teacher's knowing the members. Here we are informed he is to watch over the church. The church building is the spiritual home of the Saints, here is where they are admonished to attend, see Doctrine and Covenants 59: 2, reading thus:

And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High; nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord.

Bearing in mind the teacher is to see that the church meet together often, it will not be difficult to see the advantage it will give both member and officer if proper attendance at church is had; it will give him an excellent opportunity of exercising the function of exhorting and teaching, besides observing whether or not all are in attendance. By this latter means he is made acquainted with the need of visiting the members; by it will be seen the necessity of his having an acquaintance with them. If it be necessary for the members to meet together often, and it being the duty of the teacher to see that they do so, he must know the membership by face, name, and their residence, so as to be able to see them when necessary; which necessity is clearly evident upon a continued absence from meetings. This applies to all, regardless of position in the church, for it is possible that even those in high places in the church may neglect a proper attendance, and need to be reminded. However, in his visits, with this object in view, there may be found several justifiable causes for a nonattendance; for instance, sickness, lack of proper clothing, old age, caring for others, absence from home, special church work,—all of which should be known by the teacher.

The Saints ought not to feel the teacher's visit an intrusion; but rather encourage a disposition to welcome him as an interested official, looking after their spiritual well-being. The teacher may find indifference in spiritual matters, which would call from him kindly counsel, a bright testimony, or a personal observation of value had in a prayer meeting, or some good thoughts presented during a discourse, something to arouse interest in public services; again, he may find bitterness or hardness of heart against some of the members, or a state of apostasy.

By this will be seen readily the nature and scope of the work involved, the necessity of information which should be available to meet the various conditions. All these conditions may be found from visits by the teacher, thereby revealing the importance of his work.

These visits may not be needed for long periods of time; indeed, it is possible that some may not require visits at all, except in a social way, or merely for the purpose of forming an acquaintance, which is right and should be had. The conduct of the membership and their interest in the church determines largely the need of these visits and his services.

TREATING WITH TRANSGRESSORS.

He is to "see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking."

Here is where intelligent, painstaking work, is needed. Passion, self-will, pride, bitterness, deception, have to be treated; here is where the trained and consecrated mind is in demand. The teacher feels under such conditions the great need of a power and a wisdom not his own, to enable him to properly discriminate between right and wrong, to say the needed word, to so far as possible retain the respect of the principals,—to save all, to lose none; never losing sight of the fact that he is not alone dealing with flesh and blood, but with spiritual powers; the cunning, the shrewd, selfish, as well as the ignorant and the innocent.

Complex issues have to be studied; the seeing of the right in all questionable propositions; to be able to approach the fiercely antagonistic forces with such grace as will leave the most favorable impression of his fairness, honesty, integrity, and intelligence, upon those with whom he is laboring.

To dare to do right, to speak words of truth under some circumstances, demands the highest form of courage,—it may be a friend who has aided you in time of need with whom you have to deal, a relative for whom you have love; it may be some high church official; or some exceptionally well cultured person; making it all the more difficult as you appreciate friendship, and the goodwill of all; but a true teacher appreciates the friendship and love of God more than that of men, and moves forward with his work unflinchingly, knowing that his Master's eye is upon him, and that is sufficient.

That his movements may be safe and be regarded legal, it will be necessary for him to carefully study the standard books of the church (particularly Doctrine and Covenants 42 and 58, paragraphs 5 and 9); also Rules of Order, pages 90 to 96; Court Procedure, adopted by General Conference, and Resolutions 343, 412, 317, 377, 220, 297, 92, 593, 298, 189, and several others having a bearing on the conduct and discipline of the membership, also adopted by General Conference.

COURT PROCEDURE.

The teacher should have some training in court procedure; he should know how to carry out every detail in the necessary procedure leading up to a court action, and when the case is to be heard should be capable of presenting it in an intelligent manner, clear in marking the distinctions necessary, possessing a knowledge of the evidence needful to present to establish his case, capable of making the valuable points prominent, so as to be clearly seen by the court; first having the assurance that he has done all he could to spare the offending member the humiliation of an exposure of his wrong, then standing firm, courageously proceeding in line of his duty.

HAS THE RIGHT TO PRESIDE.

"He is to take the lead of meetings, in the absence of the elder or priest." This makes him the third ranking officer to preside; where branch officers are so chosen. The rules in electing branch officers seem to vary according to the judgment and rights esteemed to be possessed within the rules adopted by General Conference. Some large branches are electing a presiding elder, a presiding priest, a presiding teacher, and presiding deacon; but in other branches where more than one officer of a kind is needed, several of each class are elected. However, it is the elected officers who preside, see Rules of Order, section 161.

He may preside over a branch (see Doctrine and Covenants 120:2). In paragraph 4 of the same section we are told: "In both branches and districts the presiding officers should be considered and respected in their offices." Still it is the duty of such officers to give respectful consideration to the opinions, counsels, and decisions of the regulating authorities of the church when present with them, and in the absence of good cause, courtesy should be extended those holding higher positions in the church.

RELATIONS TO A PRESIDING OFFICER OF A BRANCH.

While we have no specific instructions given us regarding the relation of a teacher to the presiding officer of a branch, except in case there is need for the appointment of an "elders' court," there is evidently a relationship intended. The larger responsibility for the elder is clearly indicated in Doctrine and Covenants 17:8-11, inclusive. If, then, more responsibility is to be felt by him, it involves a superintendency and right of direction; consequently he should be regarded the proper counselor of all other officers in the branch, and from whom they might look for advice. Questions will arise, quite difficult to solve; various conditions have to be met, and it is usually more safe to secure whatever of counsel is available before entering upon important matters very far. Therefore, the teacher will do well to associate with the presiding elder, who will most likely assist him in his work.

However, it should not be regarded necessary for a teacher to bring matters of minor importance to the attention of the presiding officer, and the more competent the teacher, the less need of direction; and while all officers should cultivate self-reliance, yet it should not carry them beyond the point of safety.

QUORUMS.

Provision has been made for the association of officers of like service, the teachers among others. The importance of this association will be realized more fully as matters are presented for discussion pertaining to their work,—the different methods advocated to do the same work; the various attitudes taken upon the same cases, which if not considered in council together would perhaps result in unnecessary humiliations to the membership as well as the teachers.

The thought applies here that in the multitude of counsel there is wisdom. By the present system of organizing the quorums, it is becoming easier to get together and counsel, making possible a clearer understanding of official duty, and privilege, which means greater development, because of working from the basis of an intelligent unity. The teacher to be successful will avail himself of every known means of development for his work, associating himself with his brethren in quorum capacity, and in other ways open to him.

CONVEYING RECORDS TO CONFERENCES.

One duty that seems to have become obsolete is that of the teacher taking a list of the names of those who have united with the church between the conferences of the elders, see Doctrine and Covenants 17:25.

REPORTING.

Reporting the services done and conditions existing, enables those to whom reports are made to understand the state of affairs, and to act more intelligently, and administer their services more effectually. Teachers should report to branch presidents as well as to the branches. All should report to their quorums, as well as to districts and stakes; and quorums to the Church Historian, see Conference Resolution 470.

We close this article with the excellent statement found in Doctrine and Covenants 104:44:

Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand. Even so. Amen.

OUR FAITH CONFIRMED BY RESULTS.

Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds. Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin.—Hebrews 12:1-4.

I invite your attention this morning to the scriptural lesson that we have already read—I do not know that I shall choose any particular sentence in this as a text. There are some thoughts suggested to my mind in the reading that may or may not appeal to you. I believe that what the apostle affirmed regarding his day is true to-day, that we are compassed about with a cloud of witnesses; the word cloud being understood to mean many. I have had no practice in law. I have studied the theory of law some, and I have come to the conclusion that in introducing witnesses, about as much depends upon the witnesses introduced on the other side as upon those introduced upon the side you are engaged upon. It makes about as much to the success or otherwise of your case what the other fellow proves as it does what you prove. Therefore, in introducing witnesses, though I do not expect to introduce this whole "cloud," it may be possible that we will introduce some of the witnesses upon the other side, for the purpose of using their testimony to establish our cause.

Our latter day work, as we are pleased to call it, has been before the world for nearly a century, and it would be very peculiar if something had not transpired in all that time that would strengthen our faith. It would be just as peculiar if something had not transpired that had a tendency to weaken our faith. Therefore, it is to our interest to consider both sides and to weigh the evidence upon either side for what it is worth. But I want to say that no matter how much evidence you may have for or against this work, or, for that matter, of any other work, that it can not be conclusive, so far as matters of this kind are concerned, that have to do with the spiritual realm.

A great many people have been mistaken in regard to spiritual influences, and therefore we have to consider the testimony both from the spiritual standpoint and from the standpoint of evidence. If they agree in the support of any conclusion, we may be practically certain; but to depend upon the spiritual alone, we would likely be led astray; depending upon testimony from individuals alone, we would be just as likely led astray.

So after the apostle had spoken of the cloud of witnesses that encompassed them about, he exhorted them that they should depend upon One as the author and finisher of our faith. So it needs finishing and it needs one who is competent to bring out the finished product; but this morning I have thought to call your attention to some of the witnesses from a material standpoint, whose testimony is calculated to strengthen our faith, and we do not ask you to take any of these as conclusive, as I said before, because the Finisher will have to put the finishing touches on it after you have gotten all you can from other sources. You will have to get in communion with him who is the author of our faith in order to have that faith finished.

But as I look back over the history of the past, I see all along the line evidences that have a tendency to confirm our faith, and I also see a confirmation oftentimes in those who are adverse to us. We can not depend upon one side alone for the conclusion to these issues, no more than you can depend upon one of our natural senses to determine a thing. Your senses have to agree so far as they are capable to judge ere you are certain. I see some things sometimes that look all right to me, and if I were to judge by the sight of the eye alone, I would pronounce them sound, but when they come nearer to my nose, I discover there is something wrong. One sense alone is not able to determine its value, and one class of evidence or one set of evidences is not able to determine the value of the thing we have under consideration.

One of the greatest evidences we have outside of the finishing touches upon our faith in this latter day work is the result of it. Our faith ought to be stronger than the faith of our fathers because they believed, though they had no experience to confirm that belief, but we can believe, and have a record of the past in confirmation of our belief. We can believe, or ought to believe, stronger in the divine purposes of God and in his overruling power than they did.

I think I see evidences of a weakness of faith in the history of our people. I was asked but a short time ago why it was that what is known now as the "Revelation on the Rebellion" was not published at the time, and I frankly said, I believe it was because of the lack of faith. Why, you know, the circumstances were like these: The Lord spoke about a rebellion that was to commence at South Carolina and it was to continue and involve other nations, and certain events were specified that were to follow. Just before that revelation was given there was a little stir down there in South Carolina, the same place the revelation pointed out, there was a Nullification Act proclaimed by South Carolina and there was a show of military forces, and this no doubt caused the Prophet to inquire of the Lord regarding results. It subsided. Of course the Latter Day Saints who had that revelation looked for its fulfillment. The breach was cured up so quickly they began to think: "That is a failure; we had better hold on to our revelation and not make it public for a while." That is what I think. But after events proved that that was not the time referred to by inspiration. Another disturbance commenced down there in South Carolina followed by all the events predicted.

Now we ought not to be like them, afraid when the Lord speaks that it is not going to come out. We have the advantage of them. We have the advantage of their experience, and we know that notwithstanding appearances were against its fulfillment, it was brought about in time. That ought to strengthen our faith so we would not be as fearful as were they; and taking into consideration every move made by the men of this work, there is a confirmatory evidence connected with it.

If I examine the life of a man who has been faithful, watching his course from the time that he enters into it, perhaps in his youth, until he departs because of old age, I see in that character an evidence of this latter day work. If, upon the other hand, I am called upon to watch the career of a man, who, under just as flattering prospects and just as good a chance as this man, enters into the work in his youth and departs from it, I see just as strong an evidence in the character developed in that man of the strength of this work as I can see in the faithful man. The character that the one has built up in our own observation, is so in contrast with the character of the other, that there is no question but the one who has been faithful has chosen the wiser part.

I could call your attention by name to scores upon either side, and there has not been an exception to the rule that the man has been the wiser who has proven faithful, wiser than the man who has not—and his character shows it. Convince me, as some have tried to do, that some of the leading men of the church in other days were unfaithful in some things, even that they were morally impure, and you add another testimony, another witness to the truth of this latter day work. Let me give an instance. While it does not affect the faith of the church at all as to the moral character of Joseph Smith or any other man—convince me that, as some claim, he was immoral in the latter part of his life—that he actually taught and practiced polygamy, as is affirmed—convince me of that, and it is only a witness of the truth of the message he bore. Why? Because if he introduced the theory, the system, that we now advocate and it has resulted in such a splendid result as I see portrayed before me here this morning in the character of the men and women in my audience, if that has been the result, notwithstanding polygamy, it is evidence to me of the truth of the work. Even polygamy has not been able to destroy it. So I do not care, so far as my faith is concerned, what you prove in regard to man. I have had that matter under consideration largely, and I have not seen a single exception to the rule that the man who is faithful to the cause, no matter what other men may do, has had the better chance and has had the best results in his own development and the usefulness that he is capable of in the world.

I am not inclined to believe all the stories that I hear people talk about, and I don't want you to believe, if you live when I am gone, that I am guilty of wrongdoing unless the evidence is conclusive. Have that much respect for my memory. I have that for the men that have gone before. I will not believe without the evidence is conclusive that they were guilty of wrongdoing; but I say, if they were, and notwithstanding that wrongdoing we see the result that we have before us to-day, it is only a stronger testimony of the virtue there is in the faith.

Some people believe things against the character of men because they do not understand the nature of evidence. I do not know that I do, but I know this much, that, no circumstance is strong enough to convict a man, if that circumstance, however damaging it may be, stands alone. It is said that circumstantial evidence is the strongest evidence that can be introduced, stronger than the testimony of witnesses, but circumstantial evidence has no force when it stands alone. I don't care how damaging the circumstance may be, you will have to connect your circumstances; make a chain where one links into the other and connects with the man who is under trial, before you can convict him. One circumstance with nothing connected with it will not convict.

We have recently been confronted with certain publications that by putting a certain amount of inference with them and calling attention to the damaging circumstances, then inferring that those circumstances were linked with something else, convict certain men of wrongdoing. I refuse to accept it. If I were on a jury, I would not convict a man on such testimony as that. You may have a damaging circumstance but you must have other circumstances connected together in a continuous chain until the meshes are thrown around the man complained of, or indicted, before you can convict him.

I admit there are circumstances that seem to indicate that certain men, whose memory I cherish, have been guilty of wrongdoing, but I will venture to say that there is not a man in this audience with whose life I am acquainted but what I can find some circumstance that indicates that he is guilty of something; and shall I say he is when that circumstance stands alone? Never. I may not know very much about evidence but I know this, that that is a poor way to convict a man. They ask me: "If Joseph Smith or Hyrum Smith or somebody else did so and so, don't you think it is damaging?" Yes. It is damaging just to the extent that it implicates, but if it is alone, and the whole character of the man is on the opposite side except that circumstance, I give the preponderance of weight to the life of the man and not to that particular incident.

I was asked one time when I was over in England—a little friction occurred in the branch where I was, and a brother said, "What do you think of a man that will do so and so?" I said: "I think that particular act is wrong if he did it, but I could not tell you what I think of the man until I know more about what he has done aside from that." I could not pass a judgment upon a man because he did that or said that. I want to know what else he said, what else he did before I can pass judgment. I don't know how it is with you—if you want to pass judgment upon a man because he did, or said a certain thing, you may; I will not. I will want to know the man better than that before I pass my judgment. I may not approve of that act, and yet he may be a good man.

Neither can you judge a man by a good act. Sometimes I am told that a man is a good and noble man because he did so and so. That is a good thing. I want to know what else he did before I know whether he is a good man or not. It is just as strong on one side as it is on the other.

I have been reading history some. I read of the men who commenced this latter day work away back in early times when it took more courage to be a Latter Day Saint than it does now; and I wonder at the work they did, and the more you prove to me their weakness, the more I wonder! The more I am surprised at the results that have followed! That the Lord could take such weak instruments as these and accomplish such a great work! Now, it is wonderful to me, in every step! When Joseph Smith first received the plates and began to translate them, he had not proceeded very far until he found in that translation that there were to be certain men that would testify to certain things. Well, if he were guessing at it, the chances are that he might have failed to find his men who would testify to what it was expected they would testify. He might guess it once or twice but when there is a long series of events of that character, and every time he finds what he says will transpire, and finds men to occupy where he said they would occupy, that is good evidence.

Not only did he say, or did the translation say that there would be three witnesses who would make certain testimony, and it would be shown to others and they would testify to certain things, but as early as 1831 a revelation came through Joseph Smith that appointed certain men to look out for men who would occupy in the Quorum of Twelve. There were not enough men in the church then of the character described to have formed that quorum. He told these men how they could determine who they were when they found them. Who could foresee that they would find men of the description given who would be willing to come forward and abide where they were designated to occupy? They were found, however. These men were selected in due time, and—honor to whom honor is due—though some of them afterwards proved to be insufficient to the trials that awaited them, they did in the beginning do a noble work, and stood in the place they were appointed to stand with that strength of manhood that could only be born by the influence of that power who is the author and finisher of our faith; and all along, I might call your attention to a hundred instances of that kind—no human power could foresee that they could fulfill all that was promised, but the means were raised up.

One of the most peculiar things among this cloud of witnesses is that this work has never yet needed a friend but that friend has been forthcoming. In early times when the translation was still under prosecution, the men who were working on it had exhausted their means—they could not go any farther because money was needed, provision was needed. In the first place, Martin Harris steps up and says, "Here is fifty dollars." That allowed them to go on. A little later, out of provisions, having to labor for the things that sustain life, they could have made no further progress in the work in hand unless some means were provided. Here comes Joseph Knight, right in the hour of need, and provides the thing needed.

Again, when persecution was closing around them in Pennsylvania, they were hindered in their work, and the prospects were dark, Peter Whitmer sends his son David to them and invites these men to come to his home. He makes them a home in a place where persecution will not trouble them, and they are able to accomplish their work. That might happen once in a while without there being any God in it, but it doesn't happen all the time.

A revelation came early after the organization of the church and said: You send four young men to preach the gospel to the Lamanites. There were the five powerful tribes of the Iroquois right around them. It occurs to me that the natural conclusion would be that they would go out there in the neighborhood and preach to those Indians—and why didn't they? It is a wonder to me, always has been a wonder, to look at it from a natural standpoint, why, if they were called to go to the Lamanites, they didn't go to the first Lamanites they could find; but they didn't—they started for the West, into the unsettled, uncivilized country, called on one or two tribes in northern New York, didn't tarry there long, but went on and did the work among the white people at Kirtland with which you are so well acquainted; then they pursued their journey on through the wilderness until they crossed the line over into what is now Kansas, and visited some of the tribes over there. Why was it? They didn't know. I am satisfied they didn't know, but events afterwards designated why they went there. They went right into the country where the Lamanites were less numerous than they were in other places, but they went into that section of the country where the Government afterwards gave reservations to the Indians and brought these eastern tribes out there. The missionaries were in advance of that movement, went out there and planted the gospel, or made an effort to do so, in fulfillment of the command given them, where God knew the Indians were to be removed to. Who could foresee that? To me that is wonderful. That is one of the cloud of witnesses. These testimonies are among the cloud of witnesses surrounding us. The longer we live the more we have of these things to confirm us. I sometimes wonder how these men stood it—they didn't have what we have. They were just taking the word of God and going on, trusting that these things would come out all right. Though they didn't have these examples behind them like we have to confirm their faith, yet they were faithful.

I honor all these men, not one family in particular, for while there was one family selected to do a certain work, that work was not to be accomplished without the cooperation of others. When I look with respect, and reverence, and thankfulness upon the work of Joseph Smith, I am confronted with this conclusion that without Oliver Cowdery, Joseph Smith's work would have been futile. He could not have accomplished it. Nor could Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery have accomplished it if God had not raised up other men, faithful men, strong men. I love them, notwithstanding errors that they may have committed. I honor them. They made some failures, as it looks to us, and some of the things that they were required to do by revelation did not result very well.

They were commanded to gather to Missouri. Disaster followed, but in looking over the situation as it has now developed by history, I have concluded that the cause of the disaster was largely their unfaithfulness to duty imposed. "But," says some one, "didn't the Lord know they would do that way? Didn't he know what the result would be? Why did he send them out for the purpose knowing that they would suffer?" That was an ideal city that was portrayed in the revelations of God, when Zion should be built up and become a joy to the whole earth, and it inspired them to make the effort, but really they did not need that city half as much, in the condition they were in, as they did the schooling that they got in trying to establish it, and they got the schooling all right. That wasn't any failure. It is neither a failure to them nor will it be a failure to us if we learn by the things that we observe in their work.

I was telling the Sunday school class this morning that some things that some men condemned in men of the past I do not feel at liberty to condemn. I do not know enough about it. For instance, they were considering the idea of Joseph Smith being a candidate for President of the United States. I said I didn't know whether that was wrong or not. I would not commit myself. Some of the class committed themselves against it, some few did, but I am not ready to commit myself, or condemn or commend Joseph Smith. I do not know whether it was Joseph Smith's duty to offer himself to the Nation or not. I do know that if the principles that he advocated in his argument called "The powers and policies of government" had been adopted by the Government and put in practice we would have avoided the Civil War and many other things. I know that. He couldn't have had any idea of being elected—he couldn't have had any hope—there was some other motive. It may have been his duty—I am not affirming or denying. It may have been his duty to offer himself to the Nation, and when we condemn him for doing it, we do so unadvisedly, without sufficient evidence.

Another thing, not only were the principles that he advocated those that would have saved our Nation from its troubles in after years, but the man that was finally raised up that stood in the breach, in the crisis, came from the same congressional district that Joseph Smith did. I don't know anything about it—that is all there is to it, but with these considerations before me, I dare not condemn.

I don't know whether I dare to say it, but I am going to risk it—out of the teachings of Joseph Smith and others at that time in politics as well as religion, has come an education to the people that is doing its work to-day in our Nation as well as elsewhere. Now, don't say that I am defending it. I am just telling you that I am not going to condemn it. Maybe it was all right. Maybe it was not. There are other things I don't see as much in as I do in that—other things that he did that I do not see as good a chance to defend as I do in that. If I were going to take a choice in debate on the question whether Joseph Smith was justified in that political move or not, I'd rather take the affirmative than the negative as far as evidence is concerned.

It brought about conditions. Do you know some of these conditions developed early? Do you know that Abraham Lincoln was a member of the legislature of Illinois when the charter of Nauvoo was presented to the legislature? And he voted for it? That is true. Do you think a man of the character of Abraham Lincoln would vote for a thing before he investigated it? He had some knowledge of the conditions there, and doubtless had a knowledge of the position occupied by these men. If he did, don't you suppose it had some effect on his after life? The investigation he made of these things, and the very things learned when considering that charter for Nauvoo, as he sat a member of that legislature of Illinois might have effected his subsequent administration. Don't you see the possibility? It may have effected his policy when he was President and our country has been benefited thereby. I can see it—see the possibility. Nothing bad would come of it any way. Again, some of the measures he advocated were identical with the political policies of Joseph Smith. If Joseph Smith had not entered into politics to some extent, and declared his policy for others to investigate, I don't know whether it would have been as well with us now as it is.

Just put me down as not knowing near as much as I did twenty-five years ago. I am not near as wise in some things as I was then. It arises from the fact that I have been trying to look at the other side of matters.

Now I have simply introduced this subject. Wish I had time to preach on it, but the hour is past and I leave it with you.

ASK FOR A RECEIVER.

William G Danielsen, inventor and patentee of a large number of agricultural implements, and who established the Danielsen Implement Factory in this city [Independence, Missouri] about six years ago, and his son, Verne Danielsen, to-day asked for the appointment of a receiver for that plant, and the transfer of a controlling interest back to William G. Danielsen, which he says is now held by representatives of the Utah Mormon Church. Two years ago Danielsen, the petition states, owned $60,000 of the capital stock of $100,000; transferred it to representatives of the church, he says, in trust, and for no consideration, to be used, however, for his own benefit as before. He claims that it is being managed in a way that is prejudicial to his interests, and that he has been deposed as president and active manager of the business affairs of the corporation.—The Jackson Examiner, May 16, 1913.

PAINTING WITHIN FORBIDDEN PORTALS.

The ancient Mosque of Eyoub at Constantinople, for centuries jealously guarded by the Turk, is no longer closed to unbelievers. Wearing a fez, one may pass unheeded in the court. It was not without some dread, however, that I entered one day, set up my easel, and began to paint. The black specters paused in amazement, then passed on. The children ceased their play, and gathered in silent groups to regard the sacrilege of the infidel. A crowd of men and boys gathered and spoke in low tones. Often I heard the dreaded "Yasak" passed among them. Priests passed about and looked with a puzzled air, surely believing that I had some powerful protection to dare this thing, and fearing to interfere.

Absorbed in the painting of marble against a sky of delicate blue, the sense of danger had been lulled to sleep in me by the somnolent chant of the holy man repeating his Koran near the grille. Suddenly his chant ceased. I heard hurrying feet and looked up to see a police captain and two men, followed by a number of priests, a noisy mob at their heels, making toward me. I kept my seat and regarded the captain quietly. With unmistakable gesture, but in a language that I did not understand, he ordered me out of the place. But I remained seated, and indicated that I did not comprehend either his word or his meaning, and painted a stroke or two to show my unconcern. My coolness affected him. He seemed to conclude that I must have permission. After some further parley he put a guard of two police over me, and went off to consult I know not whom... I called him back, then led him to the shop of Abraham Effendi, who championed my cause nobly, and returned with me to the crowd, the deserted easel, and the two policemen in the court. The captain had gone off to report. A fanatic promptly shouted defiance at Abraham, and he, no longer peaceful, shouted a reply. Then we witnessed an Oriental duel, in which the human hand and face performed the most vehement gestures and violent contortions, and the sacred court rang with a noise that frightened away the pigeons and brought the holy man hobbling on his stick.

Abraham Effendi and his black-bearded adversary were still shouting at each other when a third policeman arrived smiling, to say that I might stay and "paint freely," as a naval officer interpreted. He and his companions saluted pleasantly, and went to pray at the shrine. The crowd melted to normal proportions.—Sydney Adamson, in Harper's Magazine for June.

Woman's Auxiliary.—June Reading.

HOME AND CHILD WELFARE DEPARTMENT.

With the June reading, the work of this department for the convention year begins. It is the intention of those having the department in charge to provide a systematic course of readings which will include some study of child nature; but, before entering upon this, the following subject is presented as being worthy of discussion; in fact, as demanding our attention.

DRESS AND MORALS.

The matter of dress has long been a serious problem, but the styles of the past few years have added a new phase, which places it among the moral questions of the day. Among those who recognize the tendency to immorality in the present prevailing styles, we find judges and other men and women whose duty it is to safeguard the morals of the people. From some of these we quote.

Judge Backus, of the Milwaukee municipal court, who has heard many recent cases which have involved well-known men with young girls, and who has been forced to send to prison young men for crimes of similar nature, says that when girls walk the streets so garbed as to give passers-by more than a hint of feminine charms, ill-concealed and more often accentuated, they can not expect to escape offensive attention when, in fact, they actually invite such attention. He adds, "I often sit and hear testimony on such cases and wish we could return to the days of the hoop skirt, when such display of the form was unknown. I thoroughly believe it may be true that men are led to crime by the passion inspired by modern immodest clothing."

Miss Bartelme, public guardian of girls for the city of Chicago, and assistant judge of the juvenile court, after having made an inspection of the costumes of girls in the loop district, said: "It is the tendency of the girl to-day and of the last two or three years, to think more of dress than of character; to mimic the wearer of the extreme rather than to pick out something becoming; to show off her physical charms rather than her girlish attractiveness. . . . It is no single class of girls or women that wears the unattractive and immodest clothes. . . . It is the immodesty of the dress that is so displeasing. It seems too bad that girls should be permitted by their parents to dress so shockingly. I refer particularly to the skirt. It is worn exceedingly tight. We don't consider it an act of modesty to appear on the street in a nightgown, but the dresses so commonly worn show the figure more plainly than would a nightgown. . . .

"To me such costumes are not pretty, and there are so many things that might be becoming. It is a pity men stand on the street corners and stare at girls with no feeling of kindly admiration. It is a laughing matter to them, and they can't be blamed, considering the dresses and the willingness of girls to display themselves and their figures in a way that is both unbecoming and immodest. It doesn't lead to respect. I think it has a bad moral effect upon both men and women. Instead of arousing the admiration that a rightly dressed girl would, another thought and feeling is awakened by the immodest costume. I have heard the same thing expressed by others. I have heard men of education and influence regret exceedingly the extremes to which women are going in their dress to-day, saying that it arouses nothing complimentary to the girls nor good for the men."

Miss Bartelme declared the dress of one girl she saw would have caused her arrest ten years ago.

Eugene C. Foster, City Secretary for Boys in the Detroit Y. M. C. A., writes the following in the W. C. T. U. Champion:

"It is my privilege to do my thinking in terms of thirty thousand boys in the teen age, the entire boyhood of a great city. Not that I have relationships with any such number; but along with definitely constructive duties, I am set as a watchman upon the wall to sound the alarm when any danger seems to menace the boyhood life of the community. This charge makes me of necessity a student of boyhood life in large cities and I have in mind to write with earnest frankness concerning an element that appears to be a new menace.

"I refer to the prevailing manner of dress among women, more especially as seen upon our city streets. I have no hesitation in saying that it is not alone immodest, but is as well immoral; and I greatly fear we shall soon see an overwhelming torrent of moral laxity engulf our youth. Indeed, it is here. . . .

"Never in all my observation until lately, have I known a time, when, by day or night, in thoroughfares devoted to shopping or business, a procession of girls sweep past a young man in dress so vulgar that he might fairly—even though mistakenly—assume that they are on parade to invite his advances. The dress of the girl of to-day causes her to be thrust upon him, perhaps at times when his own thoughts are far from the realm of ungentlemanly conduct, and perhaps with no desire on her part to arouse such interest.

"The seventeen-year-old boy who sat in my office a few nights ago and recounted the struggles of a young man to keep himself pure was, unfortunately, but a type of many; and the girl of chance street acquaintance who caused him to lose his fight is but a type, too. That is sad enough; but one bows his head in shame when the boy says: 'How did I know she wasn't decent?' Hundreds of girls on the street dress and act like she did.'

"A man of considerable experience recently designated a certain country hotel as a 'low resort.' He was promptly challenged by another, who happened to be circuit court judge. The first man defended his criticism by citing the women who were seen at this hotel; whereupon the judge remarked: 'You are wrong: the women who go there go with their husbands, and are the respectable matrons of the community. You fail to make allowance for the present immodesty in woman's dress; an immodesty which causes me to be ashamed to meet some of my most respected women acquaintances on the streets of our city.'

"Unhappily the judge was right. And right here is the crux of the difficulty. If only immodest women and girls dressed in vulgar fashion, the line would be sharply drawn. But this immodest dress prevails among all classes.

"Those of us who give our lives to boys find no harder task than to help the boy in his battle to keep pure. Imagine such a boy, fighting such a terrific battle as only a man can appreciate, confronted not once but a hundred times with indecencies in dress as he walks a few blocks in the heart of a city! Will he win or lose?

"I do not write as a fashion critic; I write as a man who daily faces the moral issues raised by these things. But I want to be specific. There are prevailing styles of dress which are offensively immodest. Among these are tight-fitting waists; the 'peek-a-boo waist,' in its really offensive forms (a common object of jest while it goes on sowing seed for its unhallowed harvest); some styles of low neck and short sleeves which many girls affect; many forms of tight-fitting skirts: skirts offensively short; certain types of hosiery. The list might easily be made longer; it is merely used by way of illustration.

"Women are crying because of the libertines among our men. I believe their cries rise to heaven, and that heaven weeps over the shame of it. But I say without hesitation that these prevailing styles of dress are loosing the passions of countless thousands of growing boys whose physical fight is already severe.

"When will women understand? I make no charge of indecent design against thousands of women whose thought and lives are far above such a thing. Granted that they are above such thoughts; will they not listen to those who know these things?

"Two girls of irreproachable character passed me on the street but a day or two since; they were dressed conspicuously and, I should say, immodestly. The crossing policeman, caught the eye of a teamster and winked, and the teamster replied with a sneering smile. The girls never knew of the estimate those two men placed upon them.

"Just ahead of me the other day walked a young woman whose face, apart from her costume, betokened refinement; but her dress was of the extreme, close-fitting type, with low neck and short sleeves. Young men behind spoke in the coarsest terms of her; others stopped and stared; still others turned about and walked in her direction to get a better look. Apparently, she was unconscious of the fact that with her appearance on the street, the ideals of womanhood were lowered in the minds of many men.

"But it does not stop there. These women of better circumstances set the pace absolutely for the girl of small wages. The girl may have no home to which her friends may be invited; her social effort is expended in her dress. She follows the prevailing fashion of immodesty; she inflames the passion of the young men she meets; she may not be sheltered and safeguarded; and she is swept under.

"Is there a cure for it all? It is a woman's problem. If going to the extreme in dress is more important in the eyes of womankind than safeguarding the pathway of sons, and brothers, and husbands, then it will continue. But those who see it as it is must raise their voices in protest."

Where do we get the styles that are so offensive as to give rise to this remonstrance? Is there no hope of something better?

It is well known that our fashions originate in Paris, but it is not so well known with what class of people they originate. Edward Bok is authority for the statement that a French gentlewoman would not for a single moment dream of wearing the clothes that are offered the American woman as Paris fashions. He asserts that this is an indisputable fact, known to every importer and buyer.

He says further: "The Parisian fashions that come to America are not those that the nice women of Paris wear: they are essentially the styles of the mannequin and the Parisian underworld. That which is the hallmark of a particular class of women on the streets of Paris, known to every Parisian, becomes the hallmark of the same class in America, but the French girl of modesty never wears these styles, and that is where our American girl of modesty goes astray. She does not dress like her French sister, but like the girl whom her French sister disdains. We have got things a bit mixed up in this country, as far as Paris fashions are concerned, and the time has come when American parents of daughters should wake up to this fact. It is not at all an impossible transition from the Parisian imprint upon the hat or the dress to the Parisian imprint upon the character of the wearer."

In the April issue of the Ladies' Home Journal Mr. Bok writes on this subject: "What we must not forget is that there is a distinct point of morals in this question of how a girl dresses. When we see young girls, as we saw them in larger numbers last summer than ever we saw them before, brazenly or innocently displaying in their attire their physical rather than their innocent charms, the fault is not so much with the girls as it is with the mothers who permit them to buy and wear such clothes. The excuse that mothers can not control the attire of their daughters is begging the question: a mother is a pretty poor failure when she has to confess such inability. When a girl is permitted to buy and wear the amazing hats she wore last year, set on a head loaded down with puffs and 'rats': the waist so thin and transparent as to be absolutely indecent, with sleeves so short and neck so low as to transgress the line of decency, and a skirt so tight that the figure is displayed at every step, with stockings of the thinnest transparent silk, there is a question of morals involved that is tremendous.

"There is no sense in our being shocked at the social evils that exist and threaten our young girlhood at every turn, so long as we directly add to these evils, yes, bring many of them about by allowing this shamelessness in the dress of our daughters. It is all well enough to deplore the vicious habits of men, but is this sort of dressing calculated to check them? It is hard to see what the mothers, or fathers, or guardians, of these girls are thinking about to allow this sort of dress to go on. It deliberately courts danger, and then when danger comes, and its deadly result is stamped on the girl for her lifetime, the parents are in tears or they explode in anger.

But why? They deliberately invited the danger in the girl's method of dress. Why be surprised that the method succeeded? Rather let them and us be surprised when the girl escapes danger.

"It is nothing short of a crime to allow an unthinking young girl to wear clothes that, when she goes out into the world, are the very signals of danger. She doesn't know. How could she? But her mother does, or her father, or her brother, or her sister. Some older person is responsible for allowing the dangerous dress, and that same one will be directly responsible, if danger comes to the girl and she goes under.

"Every mother of a young daughter is a tremendous factor in this question. She may think she is only one woman, and as such, is powerless. But she is watched by some other mother: her girl is looked up to by some other mother's daughter, and so the circle widens from one to many, and an influence is set in motion that it is impossible to control or to recall."

The writer of the above states that there is need for and a distinct movement toward American designed fashions for American women. Let us, as American women, as women of the church, study modesty in dress for ourselves and for our daughters, and be ready to support the movement that will free us from the conditions that have foisted upon us the extreme and grotesque fashions of the lower element of a foreign nation.

OWANKA, SOUTH DAKOTA, May 8, 1913.

Editors Herald: I see by the HERALD that Brother James A. Gillen is in charge of South Dakota. I wish he or some of the missionaries of the Black Hills would come our way and hold some meetings. We haven't heard a sermon in four years. We live thirty-five miles east of Rapid City, South Dakota, on the Chicago & North Western Railway, seven miles northwest of Owanka.

Your brother,

GLASGOW, MONTANA, May 9, 1913.

Beloved Friends and Saints: Many good things come to me through the HERALD. I find much pleasure reading all the precious things it contains. I look longingly for my HERALD; it seems like a letter from home, and I feel strengthened by the sermons, etc. We poor, isolated members need all the good sermons and articles that can be published; for we hunger and thirst for spiritual food and drink, and miss the opportunity enjoyed by those who have the church privileges.

Oh, to mingle together, and be comforted by the gospel, the glad tidings of great joy! I miss our gospel, and my loved ones I left behind. If it wasn't for the promise of celestial glory, where I feel assured we shall meet again, I could not endure the absence and heart cravings. I love my people, that are of the household of Israel, and pray we shall all meet again.

I am doing well here; but I often find things that are grievous and hard to bear; so many tribulations. I know our God liveth, and will never leave me nor forsake me. I trudge on, feeling my isolated condition. I wonder, sometimes, why the gay old world continues so long. I see nothing here on earth to live for, only more of our precious gospel. I see many things that need doing.

One day I chanced to peep into the county jail; never was in such a place before. I thought of our martyred prophets, how they had to lay in prison, and their loneliness.

As I looked at some who were closeted in the dingy, lonely cells, aliens to the gospel, deprived of mother and friends, I wondered why this rich old world didn't provide enough Bibles, that every soul imprisoned could read and study the precious word of God. Why open our public libraries for those who have their freedom, and leave these poor souls in jail without a word of cheer, a prayer, or Bible to comfort their loneliness? Can't we do something to help them by distributing literature, etc.?

We would be glad to entertain an elder, would enjoy feasting on the good things of the gospel.

Oh, remember me in your prayers, lest I falter by the way-side, or go astray.

Your loving sister,

MRS. LILY BELL STEARNS.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, May 11, 1913.

Dear Herald: Many times it seems that the powers of darkness get the upper hand within us, but by a persistent effort to keep the enemy at bay, we will, through the grace of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, be able to overcome the obstacles that lie along our path. We have cause to rejoice in that life is made more happy by being able, through his love, to overcome the evils that so easily beset our earthly tabernacle.

Having been isolated from church privileges for years, I can sympathize with all those who are, and have been in like circumstances; yet, there is consolation in that we hope to meet and enjoy the company of each other, and share the joy from our works here in this preparatory life, in the sweet by and by. If it were not for this blessed hope our faith in the great Shepherd would indeed be vain and fruitless.

Dear Saints, it is a pleasure to know that our late General Conference was the best that was ever held by the church. I am glad that we are thus progressing as a church, not only as to numbers, but in right living, and in obedience to the commandments of God.

I feel that I am one of those who are not doing very much to spread the gospel, but I feel that God will excuse me on account of my imperfect speech, as I am not able to take part in this glorious warfare to bring souls to Christ. Yet, I will do what I am able to do in the ways that God has opened for me.

I am anxious to come to Zion, to be with the Saints in some place in the East where I may feel more contented. If any of the Saints need a helping hand on a farm, or otherwise, I would be pleased to hear from them—give full particulars. I am thirty-three years of age.

Wishing great success in a forward move toward a high standard of living in all parts of God's vineyard.

Your brother in bonds,

WAYNE, NEBRASKA, May 15, 1913.

Dear Herald: I have been in very poor health this spring, after many years of lung trouble. I am at present improving. I ask the faith and prayers of all the Saints, and especially of the Prayer Union, that our God, among the many blessings that he bestows, will give to me health and strength, and that from these afflictions I may be kept free. Nevertheless, I am willing to remain afflicted if God sees best.

I am receiving much comfort in the ministration of the Spirit. I have sought God and have again been spoken to. The comfort of our God is bestowed upon me, and I fully realize that our times are in his hand.

So may we ask in faith for healing, yet in a yielding way, being willing to trust God, even though we are denied our urgent request. Ask that I may have faith and wisdom, and unwavering trust in God; and in so far as healing may be made to help me to build a holy character, may God be the giver of the healing.

Your brother,

GEORGE ELSON.

OWENSOUND, ONTARIO, May 15, 1913.

Dear Herald: I enjoy reading the HERALD, especially the letters of the brothers and sisters—they are grand.

I wish to present a few observations on 1 Corinthians 13. I have often read and thought over this chapter. It contains a very important lesson to all Latter Day Saints.

Christian love excels all the gifts. By the best gifts we may fairly infer that Paul meant the best adapted for the edification of the church. Yet he says, "Show I unto you a more excellent way." He goes on to show that way, consisting in love to God and to each other. The word must be here taken in the noblest form; such love to the whole church and the whole world as arises from principles of true piety, and ultimately centers in God.

Love is commended for its indispensable necessity, for without it all other things are as nothing. The eloquence of an angel would be as unmeaning as the tinkling of a cymbal. The greatest miraculous gifts are of no avail; the most liberal charities or the most ardent zeal, even martyrdom, are alike unacceptable to God, unless they spring from love to him. Again, love is commended for its many amiable qualities. It is intimately connected with all the Christian graces; patience, kindness, meekness, whatsoever is virtuous, and of good report. Again, love is praised for its durability. When all gifts fail, this love is eternal. When all things else have failed, love continues through all eternity.

Now, dear brothers and sisters, I have only one motive in view,—that we may love one another as we are commanded. I love every brother and sister. I have a warm feeling for every member of the Latter Day Saint Church.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints, that I may be found faithful to the end.

Your brother in the gospel,

ALEX. WHITE.

SILOAM SPRINGS, ARKANSAS, May 16, 1913.

Dear Herald: I have been a member of the church for several years, and am very sorry to say I have done little to help get the truth before the people.

I feel as if I have lost all my children, because they have not been raised up as they should have been; not that I have not tried, for I have endeavored to teach and raise them to be Christians. It would have been my greatest pleasure to get them interested in the latter day gospel. I have had little time to teach them, as I was overburdened with work, having little help when the children were small. Had I had a little more time to teach them as I tried to do, though in my weak way, I might have done better by them.

As for myself, I am happy. I have told my neighbors I am happy in my religion, and I would have been glad to have had any and all share with me in it. There is so much said in the pulpit, so many false reports, that they will not read our papers.

I am very sorry we could not have lived near some Latter Day Saint church, to have brought our children up in the true church as I desired. Dear Saints, pray for them that they may be gathered in before it is too late.

I am far from a true Saint, but bless the Lord for the light he has given me. I am so thankful I had the privilege of hearing the true gospel. It has been a comfort and a blessing to me many times during the past twenty-two years.

My husband had been in poor health, growing worse all the time, until September 26, 1912, when he died, leaving me enfeebled from overwork. I am stronger now. I am sixty-six years old, and am alone, except for one son and his little three-year-old daughter, whom I have taken care of since she was eighteen months old.

I enjoy reading the HERALD and Ensign very much; also the Bible and Book of Mormon, since I can see how well they compare with the latter day work.

Of my eight children, only one is in the church. What a comfort it would be to me and what a blessing to them if they could embrace the true gospel. It is my prayer that they may do so.

Your unworthy sister,

M. S. SPANGLER.

HAO, TUAMOTUAN ISLAND, April 15, 1913.

Dear Herald: As we are here attending the Islands Conference, will tell a few of our pleasant and unpleasant experiences in reaching this island. We spent two weeks or more in Papeete, where we were located at the Mission House, with Brothers and Sisters May and Savage, and their happy little families. In Papeete, Elder Pitt held many meetings; Brother Savage kindly interpreted, and they, as well as the natives, rejoiced in this privilege.

The Saints, with Brothers May and Savage, chartered a sailing vessel named Toerau, which was to take about one hundred Saints from different islands to conference; so we left Papeete February 23, about four p. m., for the long voyage. We had anticipated a two-week trip, and felt brave in undertaking the new experience.

Reaching the first island, Makatea, we had many new and wonderful experiences, especially going ashore in a small boat with the sea very rough; as the little boat was raised high with the huge waves we were told to jump, and then were caught by men who pulled us up on to the landing. We finally reached a cool, shady spot in a niau house, one made of cocoanut leaves and branches of the trees, and here we had a refreshing rest and a good dinner, served by a Chinaman cook in the house of one of our members.

We left this part of the island, which is famous for the phosphate fertilizer, millions of tons being shipped to all parts of the world, and walked fully four miles to the city part of Makatea, and that walk we shall not soon forget. The heat was intense, and not yet being acclimated, we both felt completely exhausted. We rested several times under the great cocoanut trees, when fortunate enough to find a breezy spot, and occasionally refreshed ourselves with a drink of the cocoanut, which we had learned to like very much.

We reached the other part of the island about six o'clock. We were escorted to the governor's house, he being a member of the church, and here we found a number of large, comfortable American rockers on the veranda. Here, also, most of the Saints came to welcome us, and after the customary "Urana," had been spoken, and we had seated ourselves, we heard the familiar request, "Hymna," meaning, Sing a hymn. We felt so rejoiced in having a pleasant and comfortable place to rest for the night, for the vessel was not to leave until the next day, that we sang hymns for them. Having learned to ask them all to sing together, in their language, I requested them, by saying, "Hymna Oto," and they seemed delighted that we could speak to them, and they sang. And such wonderful singing is beyond my descriptive powers, as it must be heard in reality to have any idea of it. We oftentimes remarked after hearing the Saints of the different islands sing, that they are natural musicians and orators.

That evening, at Makatea, Elder Pitt was requested to preach, which he did, Brother Savage as interpreter, and the Saints felt to rejoice in meeting with us all. We were presented with two beautiful quilts, the handwork of the sisters, and many beautiful shells of many descriptions, some being rare and very pretty. We left next day for Rairoa, and had expected reaching there in a couple of days, but the wind was very unfavorable, and we were delayed in reaching each island. At each place we were welcomed by all the Saints, and as we entered the church, immediately upon our arrival, they all arose and sang, "God be with you till we meet again." Then, after prayer, they came up one by one, and said "Urana," and presented us with shells, necklaces, rings, and many beautiful souvenirs, and also sums of money. The natives are very fond of giving, and feel they can not do enough for the missionaries sent among them.

After calling at the islands of Makatea, Rairoa, Kaukura, Ahe, Takaraoa, and others, we reached our destination to this island of Hao, March 28, just twenty-eight days on the voyage, and to say we were delighted is not expressing all we felt. Many times during the voyage we felt we could scarcely survive, so unpleasant were the experiences. There were about seventy or eighty natives on board, and they sat around in the front part of the ship. There was just one little cabin, with five berths, one occupied by the captain, two by passengers, two by Elder Pitt and me. There was a little store-room, with one berth, occupied by Sister Savage and baby, and with all the boxes, packages, and groceries crowded in, it was almost impossible to get in sometimes. The little table was in our cabin, in front of the berths, and you can imagine how one felt, seasick, and no escape from the fumes of the dinner being served, just at one's side. Fortunately, when we had fair wind, the vessel scarcely rolled at all; but when there was not much, it tossed and rolled until we were almost ill.

The writer felt fairly well part of the time, and at such times was usually busy, as biscuits seemed to be in demand, Sister Savage and I made them usually twice a day, and occasionally made a sponge cake, chocolate pudding, etc. The native man cook attended to the meals in general. How we dreaded the rainstorms, as at such times we had a full cabin, I assure you. There was not a vacant spot available. Imagine my surprise one rainy night, as I glanced out from my berth, and saw a tall boy, about sixteen, crawling on a trunk which was crowded in under the table. He had a difficult task to squeeze in, and not room to move at all after getting there, yet he was contented and slept well all night, he informed me in the morning. Sometimes I awoke at one a. m., and arose and dressed, thinking it was morning; but as I managed to step around the natives asleep on the floor, and get out on deck, I learned my mistake. Such were some of our experiences.

How happy we were when the cocoanut trees of Hao appeared in the distance, and how fortunate we were in having just sufficient wind at the right time to get through the pass. It had been so calm all morning that the captain was fearful of not getting through that day; but just as we approached the pass the wind came to our rescue, and we passed through quickly, and sailed into the entrance to Hao. Brother May was there to welcome us, with the natives, he having gone there on a motor schooner, starting two weeks later than we left Papeete, and arriving there a week earlier. They were all delighted to see us, as they had watched eagerly for days and days for signs of the little sailing vessel. Upon our arrival on shore, Elder Pitt and I were escorted to our little island home, the house which is called a niau house, being built of cocoanut leaves and branches, woven beautifully together. We are very comfortable and happy here, and with our work we are kept very, very busy. The writer scarcely finds time to attend but one service a day, as we like to keep caught up with our work as much as possible, before leaving.

Brother and Sister Lake and the Saints from the island of Niau, were delayed in reaching conference on time, on account of unfavorable wind for the voyage, and did not reach here until Friday, two days before closing of conference. There are about five hundred in attendance, and all seem happy indeed. There is a pleasant rivalry between the singers of the different islands, and while each group of singers from each island deserves special mention, Niau seemed to carry off the honors, on account of having been taught several Zion's Praises selections, by Brother and Sister Lake. They seemed to take well with the conference. The Saints are always eager to learn. We feel that all are doing excellent work in every line. It is marvelous how easily they all memorize, and with what enthusiasm they enter into all the lessons and meetings of the conference. We have taken many photos of different groups and scenes, and we hope to get some good results.

The time is drawing near, now, when we shall have to bid them all good-bye, and we can not help feeling sad, as we have grown to love these dear ones. As we try to visit with them, the tears are in their eyes many times, as we say to them "Eita parau Tahiti," meaning, can not speak Tahitian. We expect to leave in a day or two by the schooner Heitiare, for Papeete, where we hope to have a week in preparing for our long trip to San Francisco, on the R. M. S. Tahiti, leaving there May 3.

The conference has encouraged many to move forward in their various duties the coming year, with renewed interest, and we hope to hear of much good having been accomplished, after the great efforts put forth by Brothers Lake, May, and Savage. They have been untiring in their efforts to make the conference a success. They are excellent workers, and seem to enjoy their labors in the islands very much. Sister Savage is excellent help to her husband, and is kept busy in various ways, especially in caring for the sick. Sister Lake is always busy, we are told, as she teaches and translates for the natives. Sister May can not do all she would like in that line, as her little family keeps her time fully occupied.

We learned just a few minutes ago, that the Heitiare, the vessel we leave on, sails to-morrow, so we shall be busy packing to-night.

"Farewell, our little island home,"

We leave you now, elsewhere to roam;

We are feeling sad to go away,

But, perhaps we may come back, some day.

Your sister in the gospel,

ROSA PARKS PITT.

LANSING, MICHIGAN, May 18, 1913.

Editors Herald: I wish to say to the Saints of this district that we wish a good representation to be present at the conference to be held June 6 to 8. We are making every arrangement to entertain one of the largest and best conferences that was ever held in the district.

You may hesitate to come on account of the recent trial, in which we were successful, thinking that we have been to a heavy expense, and would not be able to care for so many. But this is not the case. We want you all to come, and bring the Spirit of the Master. The old and feeble, or those who are delicate in health, will be given special attention.

Some have suggested that those coming should bring baskets. To this I might say, if it is convenient and you are farmers and have lots of good things to eat, and wish to do so, all right. Regarding this matter I rather hesitate, however, because it has not been customary in the past. Do as you think best, dear brothers and sisters, but come and let us have a feast; not of good things to eat, but a feast of the good things that our Master has in store for us.

We expect Brethren Curtis and Wight, as has already been announced:

Your brother,

JOSEPH DEXTER,

President Capital City Branch.

Simmons--Austin Debate.

Just closed a fine debate at Lime Stone Schoolhouse, four miles west of Wilburton, Oklahoma. W. C. Austin, of the Free Will Baptist faith, of Indianola, Oklahoma, and Jesse M. Simmons, of the Reorganized Church, of Haileyville, Oklahoma, were the representatives. Beginning Saturday night, April 26, they continued over the second Sunday. They signed up for twelve sessions, but during the week Elder Austin asked off one night, so as to get through on Sunday, which was granted.

Elder Austin affirmed the Free Will Baptist Church to be the church of God, or Christ, and in harmony with the same in origin, doctrine, organization, and practice, trying to set up his church with righteous Abel and continue it until the present time. This was denied by Elder Simmons, he showing the different dispensations, and proving the Baptist position a mistake.

Elder Austin claimed his organization to be the same which Christ set forth; this was also defeated by Elder Simmons, using a chart with pastors and elders, mourners' band, and passing the hat.

Elder Austin denied baptism for the remission of sins, claiming it was only to show to the world that the candidate was a follower of Christ, contending that the church was constituted of men and women found in the aggregate among all churches under the sun. Elder Simmons showed that the house of the Lord was peaceful, not one of confusion, and that there was no unity among the churches,—that they could not commune together, etc.

Elder Austin said Revelation 12: 5 had reference to Christ, though he admitted the apostasy, that there had been a falling away, 2 Thessalonians 2: 3, believing the church went into the wilderness. Still he claimed succession, admitting, at the same time, that the Free Will Baptist Church would not compare with the church of Christ; that it was too narrow, all run down at the heel, and was only a part of the great church of Christ. Elder Simmons congratulated him on setting out the truth, and was glad he had confessed to the inefficiency of his church.

So he struggled on for five sessions, to prove his position, but he failed, and the people saw it. Closing his affirmative, we took the lead for six sessions.

Brother Simmons read the Epitome of Faith, then began setting up the church, which he, in his gentlemanly manner, established so far as he had time, giving some attention to answering the slang heaped upon Joseph Smith, which was about all Elder Austin tried to work on.

Elder Austin stated that he would accept everything but Joseph Smith, but denied it the next day. He said Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy, using Doctor Foster as a witness. Elder Simmons showed up Foster, as being cut off from the church for adultery, and the people didn't fail to understand. Said he thought more of Brigham Young than he did of Joseph Smith. Elder Simmons told him, "Birds of a feather flock together."

Elder Austin offered fifty dollars for a miracle. Brother Simmons read him one. The next day on the street a man outside of the church said Elder Austin ought to pay the fifty dollars. A young lady belonging to the Christian Church prepared a nice bouquet for Elder Simmons.

I am sure much good was done, if closely followed up, which I am sure will be done. You could hear on every side that Elder Simmons had the best of it. Elder Austin said that Elder Simmons was the nicest man he had ever met in fifty discussions. This spoke well for our people. I am sure the people could feel the Good Spirit when Elder Simmons was in defense of the cause.

The Saints rendered good assistance during the debate. The writer moderated for Elder Simmons, while a brother of Elder Austin moderated for the Baptists. We all feel good as a result of the discussion, looking forward to a great ingathering in this community.

Since I began this letter, I have been out to Lime Stone, preaching with fairly good interest. V. L. LUM.

Extracts from Letters.

Brother and Sister R. A. Rockhold, 158 1-2 East Fifty-Sixth Street, Los Angeles, California: "We are still holding to the rod of iron, and rejoice in the glory of the Lord and the gospel of latter days. Thus we are striving against the powers of evil that seek to destroy our faith. We thank our heavenly Father for the hope we have of a glorious resurrection."

Brother W. H. Greenwood, 23 Cicero Street, Moston, Manchester: "I rejoice to learn through the HERALD of the splendid conference you had, and trust that it may foreshadow a most prosperous year for the church in general. We are moving along here fairly well. The outlook for missionary labor is bright, and if the brethren will only abide the instructions of the latest revelation I am sure much good will come to the church, and blessing to the world. For the more faithful the Saints are, the greater and more powerful is their influence upon their fellows."

Sister Emma E. Park, Runnells, Iowa: "The Runnells Branch suffered a heavy loss on the night of May 14, when during an electrical storm our church building was struck by lightning and burned to the ground. Some of the furnishings were saved, but were in bad condition. Although we had some insurance, which will help in rebuilding, yet the loss to us is severe. We will begin rebuilding as soon as possible. The community are anxious that we build again. For the present we are meeting in a vacant store building."

C. J. Hunt, Deloit, Iowa: "The Master has blessed me in my labors since the General Conference, for which I praise him. At this writing I am in Carroll County."

F. Edgeworth, North Ipswich, Queensland, Australia: "Truly the industrial turmoil in the world to-day is appalling, and no one knows just where it is going to end. Here in Australia the people are just what we call full up to the neck of strikes, and still the end does not seem to be in sight. I feel sometimes that the time is not far distant to which the Master referred when he said: Every man's hand should be against his neighbor; and safety will only be found in Zion. I can not help but feel that I need to be much more pure and holy to be able to escape the judgments that are coming on the earth. I think, too, that only love, truth, righteousness, and faith are going to make Zion so terrible in the eyes of the nations and fill them with fear because of her power. I pray that we may continue to serve our dear Master faithfully to the end of life's journey, and that we may be bound closer to our heavenly Father and to each other by the bonds of charity."

R. T. Cooper, Los Angeles, California: "The last General Conference did me more good than any other one thing I have experienced the last few years in the way of getting a broad understanding of the church and her work; and how the different institutions have already put her in position to be all things to all people. I see how each one of these institutions has been designed by the Lord to do its part in the redemption of Zion, and caring for the dispersed as they begin to be gathered."

To be free from evil thoughts is God's best gift.—Aeschylus.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Minnesota: Having been appointed a missionary to the State of Minnesota, I take this means of notifying you that I am ready for work.

Unacquainted as I am with the Saints, and not knowing the addresses of any, I shall be greatly obliged if anyone interested in having the gospel preached in their midst will please notify me at the very earliest opportunity. Or if any desire me to go to other parts in the mission where possible openings may be effected among their relatives or friends, I shall be pleased to learn of such places.

I am out to do all I can to teach the children of men the glories of our gospel, and anybody who can put me in touch with anyone with whom I might labor with promising success, I will be greatly obliged.

Write me at once, box 407, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan.
May 19, 1913. J. L. MORTIMER.

To the disciples of Christ in mission number 3, comprising Maritime Provinces, Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, New York, Massachusetts, Maryland, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and District of Columbia; Greeting: The church has appointed to labor in your mission the following named brethren, ranking in office from those of the lesser priesthood, authorized to travel, to those occupying in the leading quorums of the church. With such "gifts" there should come to the mission, especially to the church, joy and rejoicing, and a well balanced spirituality leading to commendable works. This will be the result if heed is given as it should be to the teachings of all these ambassadors for Christ.

The following assignments have been decided upon:

To Eastern Maine: H. A. Koehler; G. W. Robley, Jonesport, objective point.

To Western Maine: J. F. Sheehy.

To Western Maine District and Nova Scotia: F. J. Ebeling and H. L. Rushfelt; if tent work can be arranged for by these brethren in Nova Scotia, their efforts to prosecute the work in that way should receive proper support. Removal from Nova Scotia will likely be advisable as winter comes on.

To the Massachusetts District: H. O. Smith; R. W. Farrell, Boston objective point; A. B. Phillips, Fall River objective point; William Anderson, Cape Cod objective point; J. W. Davis.

To the New York District: A. E. Stone; B. L. McKim; A. M. Chase.

To the New York and Philadelphia District: J. R. Lentell; A. D. Angus; W. W. Smith, Philadelphia objective point; J. A. Koehler, Philadelphia second church objective point; E. B. Hull, Brooklyn objective point; T. U. Thomas, Scranton objective point.

A humble, well-informed minister for Christ who is wisely aggressive will be able to do much good.

Times of reporting: July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. Let promptness characterize this matter, lest reports be delayed in reaching the Presidency. Get blanks from Herald Office.

Let each one of the missionaries develop his personality, and feel free to take initiative steps along all lines that contribute to the success of the Lord's work.

Criticism coming from anybody unless actuated by a desire to extend the glory of God, is hurtful—faultfinding is unchristian and should by all be rendered unpopular.

It is a joyful service to participate in Zion's cause; therefore, let all her institutions be sustained, and the treasury of the church be kept replete with funds to draw from instead of allowing a condition to develop that makes it necessary to appeal for funds to support the general administration of the church, the ministry and their families. He who expects to be saved through the church should cheerfully sustain the church.

By making known and then sharing burdens there should be no room for discouragement.

Mail addressed to 343 Medford Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts, will safely reach me.

With faith in the triumph of our work, I am,

PAUL M. HANSON, Minister in General Charge.

To the Saints of the Pacific Slope Mission, comprising British Columbia, Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico, Republic of Mexico, Territory of Hawaii; Greeting: As coworkers with God in that part of the work assigned to Jesus the Christ, we are favored to enter another church year; conscious and appreciative of past and present recognition of divine love, we may consistently look to the future hopefully. The gospel is still potential, and as time moves onward will be found ready for any possible and legitimate demand. The evidence is confirmative and accumulative that we are living "in the dispensation of the fullness of time." Let us arise to the dignity of our calling and work.

The conference has made some change in the personnel of our staff. The following arrangement on general lines seems best to us for present:

Seattle and British Columbia District to have Daniel Macgregor, P. Premo, P. T. Plumb. (The latter two labor together in tent work.) William Johnson, who attends to the duties of district president and bishop's agent.

As Brother Macgregor is General Superintendent of Sunday school, don't neglect to utilize him some on those lines.

M. H. Cook and D. M. Shippy continue their missionary labors as heretofore.

C. E. Crumley will look after church interests in Southwestern Oregon District.

M. Cannon in Northern California and Southern Oregon, and C. W. Earl may associate with him as the way opens.

J. M. Terry as district president of Northern California, with Oakland as objective point.

C. A. Parkin as bishop in care of finances, and also such missionary work as he may find opportunity.

J. D. Stead and S. M. Reiste look after the tent work in San Joaquin valley, as wisdom may direct.

C. W. Deuel follow lines as formerly made by his labors in California, entering Nevada when opportune.

Roy F. Slye and C. J. Cady, we will more directly arrange for later.

V. M. Goodrich as per appointment, Los Angeles, objective point.

William Mannering and S. D. Condit in Arizona.

T. J. Sheppard and W. A. Brunner in New Mexico.

M. A. McConley and J. B. Barrett in Hawaii.

Most sincerely your fellow laborers,

F. M. SHEEHY.

J. E. KELLEY.

P. S. That part of Washington including the Spokane District has by agreement with the First Presidency and Minister in Charge of Rocky Mountain Mission been attached thereto.

At present correspondence and reports may be sent to my mission address, 281 Castro Street, San Francisco, California. Brother Kelley will settle on address later.

F. M. SHEEHY.

To the Saints of Northern Michigan District; Greeting: I am in the district, having been sent here by the appointing powers, and have a desire to do all the good I can, and desire the cooperation of all.

I would like to hear from scattered or isolated Saints who may desire to have an elder come and do some preaching, and we will make arrangements to supply your wants.

My field address will be East Jordan, care of H. Goodman. Home address, Ubyly.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM DAVIS.

To the Ministry and Saints of the British Isles Mission; Greeting: I have just received this day, May 6, the SAINTS' HERALD containing the missionary appointments for the year. It has pleased the conference to again appoint the writer in charge. It, therefore, becomes our duty to organize our forces, to put forth our best effort for the advertisement of the work of the Master, and to engage ourselves once again in the proclamation of the gospel of peace (not pieces).

Our commission is to preach the gospel, brethren. Never mind the church of the Devil, or any other church, if such there be. Let each one exercise faith, preach faith, and practice faith. Do not cavil, do not trouble about victory in debate; our business is to bear witness, bear testimony. If the gospel has saved you thus far, just say so. If the gospel has given you divine impression, and power over self and sin, that is your message. Preach of the restoration of gospel power, blessing and inspiration. This message will bless all who hear it.

Our Father says: "My word shall not return unto me void." Let us, therefore, have faith to abide in the word of God; preach the word, be instant in season. Let Socialism, Brighamism, and every other-ism take care of themselves. If they should run against your message (God's word) their contentions will be ground to powder; the promise is that truth shall prevail. Have faith, my brethren; the gospel is the power of God.

Let all personal feelings of envy and jealousy be put away from you, otherwise you are totally unfitted for this work. To some I have already spoken of this folly. I wish you to understand, my brethren, that I have unsuspecting confidence in you, everyone.

Let us be united as one man, standing in defense of the truth and each other,—see paragraph eight of the latest revelation, which concludes with these words,—"There should be harmony, and the Spirit enjoins it upon all, that the Master may be remembered, as in meekness and due sobriety he carried on the great work to which he was called."

MONEY WANTED.

We must have money. We can not get something for nothing. Railway tickets, tram car tickets, and every other requirement must be purchased. Therefore, as a last word, especially to those who love this work and wish to see it prosper, we remind you that the Lord has provided that his people shall have the privilege of assisting this great work by means of tithing, free will offering, and donations, of whatever kind. These will provide the Bishop with means by which he can meet all the traveling expenses of the missionaries, the needs of the poor, and all other requirements of our mission.

This will also secure for you the intelligent service and assistance that you may require in your efforts for the spread of truth. Therefore, crown the efforts of the Bishop with success. You pray the Lord to give the Bishop success. How does the Lord work? The Apostle Paul provides the answer: "We, then, as workers together with him, beseech you that ye receive not the grace of God in vain." May God bless us all, and give us courage to be workers, that we may fill the Lord's storehouse.

Our organized effort will be as follows. Each of the brethren will labor under my personal direction, concentrating at the objective points herein named:

London, Bishop R. May, J. W. Worth, Enfield, John Judd, Manchester, G. W. Leggett, N. J. Weate, Wigan, J. W. Taylor, Farnworth, W. R. Armstrong, Stockport, S. F. Mather, Denton, James Schofield, Warrington, W. H. Chandler, Leicester, William Eccleston, Birmingham, J. E. Meredith, John Schofield, Albert Kendrick, Chesterfield, Charles Cousins, Clay Cross, Ernest Wrage, Mansfield, John Holmes, Chesterfield, Joseph Holmes, Gloucester, E. J. Trapp, Porth, John G. Jenkins, Neath, T. J. Picton, Aberaman, John Pughley, Leeds and Bradford, T. Taylor, North Manchester, H. Greenwood. No objective point, Evangelical Minister J. Baty, Stafford, G. P. Greenwood, Eccles, John Bailey, Belfast, Ireland, Thomas Adams.

Here is your work, my brethren. Go forth in the Spirit of the Master, with faith and confidence. Let us mind each his own business, and seek each to discharge his responsibility, with an eye single to the glory of God.

In conclusion, my final word to you is preach the gospel, and God will bless his own message.

May the peace of our Father be with us all, and give us success in all our labors, is my prayer for one and all, in Jesus' name.

Your brother,
W. H. GREENWOOD.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, 23 Cicero Street, Moston.

P. S. We should be pleased to have our Brother U. W. Greene come this way, in going to his mission, the Holy Land; and on behalf of the British Isles Mission, I herewith extend to him a hearty invitation to attend our annual mission conference, which convenes on August 2. We find joy in wishing him Godspeed in his most important mission. W. H. G.

To the Saints of Montana, Greeting: I wish to state to the Saints of Montana that I am now in my field of labor, and would be pleased to hear from anyone at any time, with regard to the needs of the work and the opportunity for preaching in the various localities. My address is 121 South Fuller Street, Independence, Missouri. A letter addressed to me there will reach me in due time. I hope to hear from many of the Saints at once.

"JOSEPH SMITH, JUNIOR, AS A TRANSLATOR."

A REVIEW OF THE WORK PUBLISHED BY BISHOP F. S. SPALDING.

"Joseph Smith, jr., as a Translator," is the title of a pamphlet recently published by Right Reverend F. S. Spalding, D. D., Bishop of Utah, representing the Protestant Episcopal Church. This pamphlet is an attempt to discredit the Book of Abraham, and through it the Book of Mormon, and contains the findings of eight prominent students of Egyptology, who have passed upon facsimiles of certain plates appearing in the Book of Abraham.

We have delayed making any extended reference to this book for two reasons: First, because the questions discussed involved a knowledge of the ancient Egyptian language; and second, because the attack was directed primarily against the Utah Mormon Church. However, in regard to the first consideration, we have concluded that what is needed is not so much an expert knowledge of Egyptology as an application of good common sense to the principles involved. And we are not prepared to concede that the worthy bishop has a monopoly of this valuable commodity. In regard to the second consideration, abundant time has been given the representatives of the Utah Church to reply to the attack, and they have not failed to avail themselves of the opportunity.

There remains yet a third consideration which prompts us to write at this time. Though we may not be particularly interested in the fate of the Book of Abraham, yet when any defects that are supposed to have been found in it are used as a basis for an argument that the Book of Mormon is of spurious origin, the matter becomes one of common interest to all believers in the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. They may not be interested in the Book of Abraham particularly, but they are interested in the arguments based upon these supposed defects.

HISTORY OF BOOK OF ABRAHAM.

The history of the Book of Abraham (which book has been published by the Utah Church, as a part of the Pearl of Great Price, originally having appeared in Times and Seasons, March 1 and 15, and May 16, 1842,) is thus presented by Bishop Spalding in his pamphlet, the quotation being from the history of Joseph Smith:

On the third of July, Michael H. Chandler came to Kirtland to exhibit some Egyptian Mummies. There were four human figures together with some two or three rolls of papyrus covered with hieroglyphic figures and devices. As Mr. Chandler had been told I could translate them, he brought me some of the characters and I gave him the interpretation, and like a gentleman, he gave me the following certificate:

"KIRTLAND, July 6, 1835.

"This is to make known to all who may be desirous, concerning the knowledge of Mr. Joseph Smith, jun., in deciphering the ancient Egyptian hieroglyphic characters in my possession, which I have, in many eminent cities, showed to the most learned; and, from the information that I could ever learn, or meet with, I find that of Mr. Joseph Smith, jun., to correspond in the most minute matters.

"MICHAEL H. CHANDLER,

"Traveling with and Proprietor of Egyptian Mummies."

Soon after this, some of the Saints at Kirtland purchased the mummies and papyrus, a description of which will appear hereafter, and with W. W. Phelps and Oliver Cowdery as scribes, I commenced the translation of some of the characters of hieroglyphics, and much to our joy, found that one of the rolls contained the writing of Abraham, another the writing of Joseph of Egypt, etc.

We understand that the rolls of hieroglyphics mentioned in this extract, together with the mummies, were afterward placed in a museum in Chicago, where they were destroyed by the great fire of 1871, so that the original text from which the Book of Abraham was translated is not now in existence. However, there were certain facsimiles made from plates or drawings which accompanied these rolls, which were published in the Times and Seasons in connection with the text of the Book of Abraham, and to these drawings Joseph Smith appended an explanation of their meaning. These facsimiles, three in number, Bishop Spalding has submitted to eight well-known students of the ancient Egyptian language. These students are: Doctor A. H. Sayce, Oxford, England; Doctor W. M. Flinders Petrie, London University; James H. Breasted, Ph. D., Haskell Oriental Museum, University of Chicago; Doctor Arthur C. Mace, Assistant Curator, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York; Doctor John Peters, University of Pennsylvania, in charge of expedition to Babylonia, 1888-1895; Reverend Professor C. A. B. Mercer, Ph. D., Western Theological Seminary, Custodian Hibbard Collection; Doctor Edward Meyer, University of Berlin; Doctor Friedrich Freiheer Von Bissing, Professor of Egyptology in the University of Munich.

These savants are unanimous in rejecting the idea that Joseph Smith's translation or explanation of the plates is correct, but do not agree among themselves as to the correct translation.

Doctor Petrie says that this is an embalming scene; Doctor Breasted says it is a resurrection scene. Doctor Myer thinks the reclining figure is a cadaver; Doctor Bissing sees in it the rising god Osiris. Doctor Breasted thinks the bird represents Isis; Doctor Petrie says it is the hawk of Horus; Doctor Peters says it is the soul of the dead man; we suggest still another interpretation, see context.

BISHOP SPALDING'S WORK UNIQUE.

Bishop Spalding's approach to the subject under consideration is unique, in that he admits for argument's sake the existence of the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated; but he proposes to challenge the correctness of the translation, by attempting to prove that Joseph Smith was not a competent translator of ancient languages, and attempts to support that argument by the case in point, that of the Book of Abraham. He is also unique in his treatment of the question, in that he approaches it with an apparent spirit of fairness and candor, and avoids all personalities and low reflections upon the life and character of Joseph Smith and his parents and associates, which have been so disgusting and prominent a feature of "Mormon exposés," in years past. In fact, he says:

Those who attacked the Mormons felt moved to publish everything they could discover or invent to the discredit of "Joe Smith" and his parents, while those who believed in him replied with a partisan record of virtues of life, and miracles of power.

And he pays Latter Day Saints the following tribute:

A rather careful reading of the controversy leads this writer to the conclusion that the Latter Day Saints set an example of dignity and courtesy which their opponents rarely followed.

He also has this to say about the Book of Mormon:

If the Book of Mormon is true, it is, next to the Bible, the most important book in the world. This fact has been appreciated by the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and by them alone. . . . On the other hand it is inexcusable that the book has never had the serious examination which its importance demands.

He confines himself closely to his effort to discredit the Book of Abraham, and, assuming himself to be successful in that work, bases upon his supposed success the argument that the Book of Mormon is equally unworthy of acceptance as a divinely inspired record.

OUR POSITION.

In considering this little pamphlet we shall take the position that the worthy bishop has not been entirely successful in his effort to discredit the Book of Abraham; and second, that even if he were entirely successful in his effort to discredit the Book of Abraham, that fact would not affect the Book of Mormon in the least.

The Book of Mormon must be considered upon its individual merits. Whether the Book of Abraham stands or falls, it can not materially affect the fate of the Book of Mormon.

The Book of Mormon was a divine revelation, and Joseph Smith's ability to translate it was a divine gift. He did not study it out, or work out any alphabet or attempt to get at its meaning by the ordinary mental processes of study in an attempt to interpret from one language to another.

The case of the Book of Abraham was quite different. Bishop Spalding himself quotes Joseph Smith as saying:

The remainder of the month, I was continually engaged in translating an alphabet to the Book of Abraham and arranging a grammar of the Egyptian Language as practiced by the ancients.

This is taken from his diary, and we find another entry as follows:

Tuesday, 17, exhibited the alphabet of the ancient records to Mr. Holmes and some others. Went with him to F. G. Williams to see the mummies.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 605.

This shows conclusively that Joseph Smith had studied out an alphabet and a grammar, with the aid of which he believed himself to be capable of reading the Egyptian language. In fact this occurred at the very time when the "School of Elders," at Kirtland, with Joseph Smith at the head, was engaged in a study of the ancient languages.

DOCTOR BISSING'S VIEWPOINT.

Doctor Bissing, of the University of Munich, one of the authorities quoted by Bishop Spalding, seems to share this view with us. He says that he has been interested for a long time in Joseph Smith's supposed translation of Egyptian texts, and adds:

A careful study has convinced me that Smith probably believed seriously to have deciphered the ancient hieroglyphics, but he utterly failed. . . . He probably used Athenasius Kirsher the Jesuit's work, and there found a method of reading the old Egyptian signs very much like his own.—Joseph Smith, jr., As a Translator, pp. 80, 81.

Kirsher (or Kircher), who lived 1601-1680, was professor of mathematics, philosophy and Oriental languages at the University of Wurzenburg. He was one of the pioneers in an effort to unravel the mystery of the ancient Egyptian language, his work along that line now being discredited.

We use this simply to indicate that it was possible for Joseph Smith in 1835 to have worked out a system by which he seriously believed himself capable of translating ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics. Bishop Spalding's own witness seems to conclude that Joseph Smith professed to have studied these things out, instead of claiming to translate by virtue of a divine gift, as in the case of the Book of Mormon, and that he was honest and serious in the matter.

BOOK OF ABRAHAM MUST STAND ON OWN MERITS.

The Utah people have accepted the Book of Abraham as a divine production and have regarded the Pearl of Great Price, in which it is published, as one of their standard church books.

The Reorganized Church has never indorsed the Book of Abraham or accepted it as a standard church work, and has never seen any reason to regard its translation as anything more than a human performance. Consequently the bishop's attack strikes us at a different angle, and we are not particularly concerned with its effect upon the Book of Abraham. Even if he is successful in proving that Joseph Smith's translation is unreliable, that does not affect the Book of Mormon.

In his attempt to get at the Book of Mormon in a roundabout way, he has gone so far around that apparently he has lost his connections.

The Book of Abraham was not adopted by the church in the days of Joseph Smith, or put upon the plane that was accorded to the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants. The only language that we are aware of that could be construed to indicate that it was regarded by Joseph Smith as a revelation is that quoted by Bishop Spalding in which he says: "Truly we can say the Lord is beginning to reveal the abundance of peace and truth."

This may or may not have been intended to apply to the Book of Abraham. And even if intended to so apply, he may have had in mind truths which he believed that he had been able to study out of this ancient record with the aid of the alphabet and grammar which he had arranged.

If he was unsuccessful in his attempt as a student to unravel the Egyptian language, he was only one of many who were equally unsuccessful. But his failure as a man in his very human effort to study out this record does not prove that the Lord made any failure in revealing the Book of Mormon and directing in its translation.

HUMAN ERRORS VERSUS DIVINE REVELATIONS.

The Apostle Paul received certain divine manifestations, and the revelation of the divinity of Jesus Christ was granted to him in his remarkable vision upon the road to Damascus. At a later date the apostle studied out certain matters and reached conclusions, particularly upon the question of marriage, which he says in his epistles were not directed by the Spirit and were not given him of God. Proof that the Apostle Paul was wrong as a man in the conclusions that he studied out would not in any way discredit the truthfulness of that which he had received by divine revelation.

OUR WORK NOT TO BE OVERTHROWN SO EASILY.

We must remind Bishop Spalding that the fate of that which the world chooses to term "Mormonism" is not to be determined by the findings of eight scientists. If religions were thus to be disposed of we fear that many of the great central truths of Christianity would soon be overthrown.

Would it not be possible to secure the opinions of eight leading scientists who would affirm that there is no evidence to support our belief in the resurrection of Jesus, and that belief in that great event is belief in that which is contrary to the ordinary processes of nature? In fact, on similar authority many people have asked us to abandon our belief in the Bible as an inspired record.

Bishop Spalding does not permit the conclusions of certain scientists to overthrow his belief in Christianity, but goes calmly on representing one of the great "Christian" denominations.

While due respect should be accorded to the findings of science, and we have no word to say against scholarship and learning, we shall go steadily on, like Bishop Spalding, pursuing the even tenor of our ways. The church that we represent rests upon foundation stones of truth that these scientists have never touched.

There is a cloud of witnesses affirming the truthfulness of the great latter day work that is not to be affrighted and dispersed by the findings of eight men on an isolated work that has no vital connection with the church and her teachings.

"AN ACT TO ABOLISH DIVERSITY OF OPINION."

We now approach the proposition that the bishop is not entirely successful in his attempt to discredit the Book of Abraham. His critics find many flaws in the findings of his eight scientists, some of which are of considerable importance.

King Henry VIII, spiritual head of the Episcopal Church, at one time caused an act to pass Parliament, entitled, "An act to abolish diversity of opinion."

Bishop Spalding evinces a desire to resurrect this old act of Parliament, and would have all Latter Day Saints immediately conform to the opinion held by himself and his eight scientists. But alas, so great is the perversity of humanity, he can not enforce King Henry's will even among his little group of scientists. Even there, that horrid and detestable thing, "diversity of opinion," creeps in.

Herewith we reproduce the first of the three cuts submitted to these students of Egyptology.

Joseph Smith says that this represents an attempt by an idolatrous Egyptian priest to offer Abraham as a sacrifice.

Doctor Petrie says that it is an embalming scene, "The well-known scene of Anubis preparing the body of the dead man."

With this Doctor Peters agrees, saying that the plate "represents an embalmer preparing a body for burial."

But Doctor Breasted says that it represents a resurrection scene, "Osiris rising from the dead."

WHEN DOCTORS DISAGREE.

When doctors disagree, who shall decide? If Doctor Breasted has a right to differ from the learned Doctors Petrie and Peters, Joseph Smith had a right to differ from all three. It can not be both an embalming scene and a resurrection scene; one must be wrong; perhaps both are wrong. Until this matter is settled among the doctors we may venture the opinion that Joseph Smith may be right, and that it is neither an embalming scene nor a resurrection scene, but a sacrificial scene.

Referring to figure 2 in this plate, Doctor Petrie, of London University, says that it "is the dead person."

Doctor Meyer, of the University of Berlin, says, "The body of the dead lying a ba' (bier)."

Doctor Bissing, of the University of Munich, says, "The dead man is lying on a bier."

But Doctor Breasted, of the University of Chicago, says, "Number 1 depicts a figure reclining on a couch, with a priest officiating and four jars beneath the couch. The reclining figure lifts one foot and both arms. This figure represents Osiris rising from the dead."

When Chicago and Berlin and Munich disagree there is a possibility that Kirtland may be right. Doctor Petrie's undertaker becomes Doctor Breasted's priest (Joseph Smith also said that it was a priest). The common corpse that Doctor Petrie and Doctor Meyer and Doctor Bissing see, is to Doctor Breasted the God Osiris rising from the dead. Doctor Breasted's courage in differing from his infallible colleagues across the waters stiffens the backbone of the trembling layman in the presence of such learning. Here is a possibility for different readings! It is not so clear as we had supposed from the bishop's introduction! We had thought that it was all settled and fixed by concerted action of eight great scientists before whom we should be dumb. But here are differences that require explanation.

If learned Egyptologists of the bishop's own choosing, men who minister ever at the right hand of knowledge, see things so differently that whereas one beholds a cold cadaver where another sees a rising god, we may yet withhold our anathemas from the head of Joseph Smith for having seen in the same figure Abraham lying upon an altar.

HAWK OF HORUS? OR POE'S RAVEN?

The figure marked 1, appearing on this plate, in the form of a bird, is said by Joseph Smith to represent the angel of the Lord.

Doctor Petrie says that it "Is the hawk of Horus."

Doctor Breasted says, "A bird, in which form Isis is represented."

Doctor Meyer says, "The soul in the shape of a bird flying above it."

Doctor Peters says, "The soul (Kos) is flying away in the form of a bird."

Here again we find a wide range of renditions, from Petrie to Peters. We have our choice: The hawk of Horus, Isis in the form of a bird, and the soul of the dead man (dead man or rising God Osiris, which was it?) flying away in the form of a bird. Which shall we take in preference to the explanation offered by Joseph Smith? Which would the good bishop prefer us to choose? An attempt is made by one writer to explain these differences by saying that this remarkable bird might have represented any or all of these things,—a sorry explanation, which if allowed to stand, opens the way for us to insist that the versatile fowl may also have represented that which Joseph Smith says it represented.

But hold, we are seized with another thought! This free expression of divergent opinions emboldens us. This bird may even be Poe's raven. And even now it may be croaking to the good bishop, "Nevermore!"

B. H. Roberts comments upon this conflict of opinion among the scientists, and is reminded of the dialogue between Polonius and Hamlet:

Polonius, the tiresome old courtier, has been sent to bring Prince Hamlet to the presence of his mother, then—

"Hamlet: Do you see yonder cloud that's almost the shape of a camel?"

"Polonius: By the mass, and 'tis like a camel, indeed."

"Hamlet: Methinks it is like a weasel."

"Polonius: It is backed like a weasel."

"Hamlet: Or like a whale?"

"Polonius: Very like a whale."

"Hamlet: Then I will come to my mother by and by."

All right, bishop, for one, I will change my belief in Joseph Smith's translation of these Egyptian plates, "by and by," perhaps, but it will not be until there is more harmony among your Egyptologists.

POSSIBLE PREJUDICE AND HASTE.

Other features to be considered are possible prejudice and lack of careful consideration. We have no copies of Bishop Spalding's letters to these men, so do not know his method of presentation. Even scientists are human, and the scientific mind is not always free from prejudice.

It develops, for instance, that though Doctor Peters is set down as of the University of Pennsylvania, he has, in fact, not been connected with the University for about twenty years past, and is now rector of Saint Michaels Church, in New York City. This is the same church that is represented by the Right Reverend Bishop Spalding.

We would have more respect for the decision of Doctor John Peters, of the University of Pennsylvania, in this matter, than for that of the Reverend John Peters of Saint Michaels Church. For Reverend John Peters of Saint Michaels Church is a leading representative of one of the great churches whose enmity Joseph Smith incurred by declaring that their creeds were wrong and an abomination in the sight of God.

Without in the least reflecting upon the good intentions of Reverend Peters, we fear that in this matter it would be impossible for him to prevent his religious right hand from knowing what his scientific left hand was about.

Doctor Von Bissing, of Munich, evidently gave the matter careful thought and respectful consideration, as he says that he had been interested in it "since a long time," and he concludes that Joseph Smith studied out his interpretation just as any student might have done, and that he was serious and honest in the belief that his interpretations was genuine and correct.

But others of this group of Egyptologists, we greatly fear, dismissed the matter with greater haste and contempt than was consistent. Doctor Mace gives it one paragraph of fourteen lines, three more than it receives from Doctor Sayce. Doctor Mace says, "Joseph Smith's interpretation of these cuts is a farrago of nonsense from beginning to end."

This is strangely like the spirit of E. D. Howe, who says of the Book of Mormon, "The God of heaven, that all-wise Being, could never have delivered such a farrago of nonsense to the world."—Howe's work, p. 19.

The appearance of this rather unusual phrase, "a farrago of nonsense," may not indicate that Doctor Mace drew his conclusions from E. D. Howe, though if these two sentences, so nearly identical, were to be found in the Book of Mormon and the Manuscript Found it would confirm many in the belief that Solomon Spalding was indeed the author of the Book of Mormon.

CONCLUSION.

To recapitulate: There is no vital connection between the Book of Abraham and the Book of Mormon. The power to translate the Book of Mormon was a divine gift, and the translation went on with the aid of Urim and Thummim. There is nothing to indicate that divine help was even claimed in the translation of the Book of Abraham, certainly the Urim and Thummim was not used. Everything thus far brought to light indicates that Joseph Smith went at this work as any man might have done, in connection with his studies of ancient languages. Though it were to be demonstrated that his translation of the Book of Abraham is utterly unreliable, the Book of Mormon would not be affected. But because of possible haste and prejudice, and because of the contradictory readings returned by these eight scientists, we are not prepared to concede that the bishop has carried his point even to the extent of discrediting the Book of Abraham.

Again, there are thousands of evidences supporting the great latter day work that are not touched, and can not be touched by a scientific consideration of an isolated fragment of translation having no vital connection with the work in general and forming no part of the church system of belief. Indeed, great though our regard for science is, we can not conceive of any condition arising under which the verdict of eight scientists upon a given question could overthrow this work.

WOULD A RELIGIOUS LOBBY BE PROPER?

A singular idea is suggested in the following clipping from the Kansas City Journal of Wednesday, May 21:

Election of officers yesterday afternoon and a reception at the Knights of Columbus Clubhouse last night ended the three days convention here of the United German Catholic Societies of Missouri. At least two thirds of the three hundred delegates left for their homes in various parts of the State last night.

During the session yesterday the maintenance of a lobby at Jefferson City while the legislature is in session, to look after the interests of the church, were discussed and laid over until the next meeting which will be in the capital city itself, a few weeks previous to the next legislature. The establishment of a legislative lobby for the protection of the church, was the suggestion of Bishop Thomas F. Lillis in a speech before the convention Sunday.

What may have been the motive under the influence of which so prominent a man in church and secular circles where he is known should have advanced such a proposition, it would not be advisable for us to suggest; and even if we had a very fair conception of what such a motive might be, it would not be proper under existing conditions to discuss such motive. It is fortunate for readers of the HERALD that the community which includes the field of Bishop Lillis's activities is very likely to be alive to the importance of the situation, evidence of which appears in the following editorial taken from the Kansas City Journal for May 22:

If it is easy, on the one hand, to receive a false impression from the utterances of a man high in official rank, it is, on the other hand, just as easy if not more so to convey such an impression. In a recent address Bishop Lillis of the Kansas City diocese urged, in effect, the maintenance of a lobby during sessions of the legislature, for the protection of the Catholic Church's interests from unfriendly legislation. With all due respect to the bishop, such suggestions are ill-advised for various and obvious reasons. No denomination should be identified with any movement which can be construed, or misconstrued, into an attempt to effect an alliance between church and state, any more than should laws be passed infringing upon the rights of any body of citizens. Only as citizens, and not as the representatives of any particular church, should any effort be made to secure legislation that is desired or to avert any that is threatened. It is altogether probable that from time to time there will arise misguided bigots who will propose laws inimical to the interests of certain religious organizations, but the latter may, as they must, rely upon the fairness of the great body of the state's citizenship. Certainly any effort to organize a frankly clerical lobby would provoke antagonisms that would be vastly more injurious than any legislation that has been proposed in recent years. Anything approaching in the faintest degree revival of animosities happily buried for years is to be deplored most earnestly, even though the suggestion of protection may have been made in the broadest and kindest spirit.

There can be no controversy over the good citizenship of the Catholics, or of the representatives of any other religious denomination. The point must not be raised, for there is no foundation for raising it. It goes without saying that the members of every ecclesiastical body are good citizens to the extent that they obey the laws by which all citizens are governed. For this very reason no denomination can expect to receive immunity from any laws affecting the general good. It is no answer to a suggestion of closer scrutiny into the affairs of a denomination's schools, for instance, to say that they are maintained without cost to the public. A very close and intimate relation is sustained toward the public by all who are to be the future citizens of the state and by all who are fitting pupils for that citizenship. When it comes to pass that any class of citizens is not safe from the encroachments of lawmakers, lobbies will only aggravate the situation. There is no present need of a religious lobby to protect any organization from threatened dangers, nor will there be, at least, until those dangers are very much more imminent than they are at this time.

The question which we believe to be pertinent and which can be asked without resorting to animadversion upon the church which Bishop Lillis represents would be, "Would the appointment of a lobby composed of any number of members of any so-called militant church or association of religious believers for the purpose of attending the legislatures of the States or any one of them, for the purpose of exercising watchfulness as to legislation which enacted might possibly be inimical to the religious interests of said churches or associations, be permissible or advisable under our republican form of government?"

We are safe in suggesting that if the Catholic Church would be warranted in taking such a measure every other existing church or religious association would be justified in pursuing the same course. It would not be a difficult guess for any reader of the HERALD to assume that should the Latter Day Saints or any divisible portion thereof send such a lobby to the legislature in the State where an organization might be, it would arouse a storm of indignant protestation practically amounting to frenzy, possibly to unlawful violence against such action.

We assume that the right of petition for redress of grievances made to existing governmental power as couched in the language of one of the revelations, is open to us or any other religious body, and will remain open while the form of government remains. With this it is wise for us to be content, and we can safely commend the editorial published in the Journal of the 22d.

NOTICE.

In another place in this issue there appears a pastoral letter from Frederick A. Smith, president of the Evangelical Order. It appears therein that the president of the order intends to promote the evangelistic features of their work. The Presidency is in sympathy with this, and we trust that the local authorities, branch and district, will cooperate heartily with the order to this end.

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM

OR

THE CURRENT REFORMATION IN CONTRAST WITH
TRUTH REVEALED.—PART 5.

BY E. E. LONG.

THE CAMPBELL-STONE MERGER.

The next important move in the history of this reformatory effort was the Campbell-Stone merger. In 1804, the Christian Connection Church was formally organized by James O'Kelley, Barton W. Stone, and Abner Jones, a coalition of three simultaneous reform movements. After some correspondence between the Campbells and Stone, a union was effected by Stone and his followers uniting with the Disciples, in the spring of 1832. The body of the Christian Connection, however, refusing to merge, the "reformers" succeeded in only drawing off a faction, as they had done with the Baptists; but it gave them a mighty boost numerically, and added renewed vigor to their fiery zeal.

In order to properly understand the situation, it is necessary to briefly notice the origin of the movement under Stone's direction.

After being "consantly tossed on the waves of speculative theology" for a considerable length of time, Mr. Stone united with the Presbyterian Church, and in 1798 he was "regularly ordained" in Bourbon County, Kentucky, and in harmony with the creed, he "taught that mankind were so totally depraved that they could do nothing acceptable to God till his Spirit, by some physical, almighty, and mysterious power, had quickened, enlightened and regenerated the heart, and thus prepared the sinner to believe in Jesus for salvation."—See Pioneer Sketches, pp. 11-15.

In 1801, he was led "out of the labyrinth of Calvinism and error into the rich pastures of gospel liberty." He preached from Mark 16:16, on the universality of the gospel and faith as the condition of salvation and urged sinners to believe now and be saved. He tells how religious excitement ran high at that time. In the revivals scores would fall to the ground pale, trembling, speechless. Some attempted to fly from the scene panic-stricken, but either fell or returned to the crowd as if unable to get away. An intelligent deist approached him and said, "Mr. Stone, I always thought you an honest man, but now I am convinced you are deceiving the people." "I viewed him with pity and mildly spoke a few words to him. Immediately he fell as a dead man, and rose no more till he confessed the Savior."—Ibid., p. 16.

In August of the same year came the great meeting at Caneridge. "The roads" he tells us, "were crowded with wagons, carriages, horsemen and footmen, moving to the solemn camp." The number was estimated as between twenty and thirty thousand. Methodists and Baptists united with them in these meetings. The services continued six or seven days until provisions gave out. There were many conversions. Most remarkable bodily agitations were seen here.

Some with a piercing scream would fall like a log and appear dead for an hour at a time and awake crying for mercy. Others would be seized with the "jerks," sometimes the head alone being affected, jerking backward and forward, or from side to side so quickly the features could not be distinguished, or moving backward and forward till the head would almost touch the floor. Wicked people cursing "the jerks" would be seized with this exercise. Sometimes the jerks would cease and they would begin to dance, praying and praising as they moved until they fell exhausted. Barking would also at times accompany this strange affection, and at other times loud, hearty laughter.—Ibid., p. 17.

On page 92 of the same book we read:

"The reformation," he says, "had an easy conquest over all our churches, for the reason that they were right constitutionally; they had taken originally the Bible alone for their rule of faith and practice. This explains the fact of the early triumph of the reformation in the Blue Grass region of Kentucky. Stone, and those laboring with him, had constituted churches throughout central and northern Kentucky upon the Bible and the Bible alone, and all these without exception came early into the reformation. Stone's reformation was the seed bed of the reformation produced by Campbell."

Samuel Rogers was another "pioneer" with Stone and company, of whom it is said:

He was the second preacher to carry beyond the Mississippi the doctrine of the Bible and the Bible alone as a sufficient rule of faith and light, Thomas McBride having succeeded him.—Ibid., p. 93.

On pages 94 and 95 we find the following choice bit of "history":

On his fifth tour to Missouri he had a most successful visit to Gasconade County. He tells how the primitive teaching was introduced here. A daughter of James Parsons heard him, was convinced of the truth, and demanded baptism at his hand, but her physician prevented her obedience. Later, finding her days were numbered, she desired her father, an unconverted man, to baptize her. He declared himself unworthy to perform the sacred rite. She urged him, saying that the validity of the ordinance did not depend on the administrator. Her family and friends were greatly moved by her dying entreaties. They sent far and near for a preacher, but could find none. Finally, the girl remembered her old colored "Mammy" was a pious woman and she called for her and demanded that she should baptize her. The old colored woman consented, a bathtub was provided, and Sarah, the believing girl, was immersed, and rejoiced in the Lord. This opened the doors to the hearts of the people, and the gospel triumphed in all that region.

The above event happened long after the union with the Campbells, and is a part of "Disciple" history. It has the unique feature of being original.

These illustrious reformers, with other mighty men of influence, from the Protestant denominations, from this time forward began to advocate, not simply church reformation—which was all that the earlier reformers sought to accomplish—but an entire restoration of the apostolic order of things.—Reformation Movements, pp. 29, 30.

Mr. Grafton writes thus:

We have witnessed in these pages the laying of the foundation of a religious movement deep and strong in the imperishable word. Mr. Campbell had from the beginning insisted that every principle used in its construction should have the stamp of divine approval; and now it was his daily concern that the superstructure should be in every particular be worthy of the foundation. In securing results commensurate with his great undertaking his energies were taxed to their limit.—Page 162.

For twenty years, and more, they have been "laying the foundation," and preparing for the complete restoration of the apostolic order. Yes, we have "witnessed" the work, and a brief comparison with the apostolic order will determine their ability as restorationists without divine assistance.

The apostle wrote to the saints at Ephesus as follows:

Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone.—Ephesians 2: 19, 20.

Jesus began the laying of the foundation immediately after his baptism—not before—and it took organic form with the ordination of the apostles (Matthew 10: 1-16; Mark 3: 14), laying the material upon the bedrock of divine truth—the fact that he was the Christ, revealed to each obedient believer—as the following scriptures clearly show:

Whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like: He is like a man which built a house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it; for it was founded upon a rock.—Luke 6: 47, 48.

And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it (the fact that he was the Christ) unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say unto thee that thou art Peter, and upon this rock (the truth revealed) I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.—Matthew 16: 17, 18.

My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.—John 7: 16, 17.

The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God.—Romans 8: 16.

And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.—Acts 5: 32.

Did Campbell and company lay such a "foundation"? Where is the promise they ever made that those who submitted to immersion at their hands would receive a testimony that the doctrine embraced was true? Echo answers, "Where?"

The apostle wrote to the Ephesians that they were "fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God"; built upon the "foundation" of the apostles and prophets; for a "habitation of God through the Spirit."—Ephesians 2: 19-22.

In Acts 19: 1-6 we learn when and how the Ephesians became "fellow citizens," and, further, that the promised testimony was given. They were foreigners and "aliens," "having no hope," until they obeyed the gospel law of adoption at the hands of a legally authorized administrator. (Galatians 1:11, 12.) Being properly immersed, they were confirmed by the laying on of hands, after which they received the "witness of the Spirit" (1 Corinthians 1: 22; 1 John 5: 10); the "testimony of Jesus" (Revelation 19: 10). How different this from the overhanging-root-colored-mammy-immersion of the "current reformation"!

But what of their organic structure? The foundation of the primitive church consisted of apostles and prophets (Ephesians 2: 20), and the same authority says, "Other foundation can no man lay," (1 Corinthians 3: 11). Mr. Campbell and company put neither apostles nor prophets in their foundation, yet they have the audacity to say they have "replanted the church of the first century."

Turning to page 83 of the Christian System we read:

The standing and immutable ministry of the Christian community is composed of Bishops, Deacons, and Evangelists.

To the above we enter no protest so long as the application is confined to the current reformation; but when they seek to limit the New Testament ministry in conformity with the above arrangement, we object. The apostle wrote to the saints at Corinth that, "God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."—1 Corinthians 12: 28; all in the church of the first century, and not a single one of them is to be found in either the foundation or the superstructure of Campbell's restored church.

In the church of the first century both ministry and laity enjoyed the "gift of the Holy Ghost" which was manifested in various ways to the comfort and edification of all (Acts 5: 32; 1 Corinthians 12: 1-12; Ephesians 4: 4; Acts 8: 17-19; 19: 1-6). Mr. Campbell admits that "in ancient times official and unofficial persons sometimes possessed miraculous gifts," but he asserts that they ceased when the church was "fully developed and established." W. G. Roberts, a modern "polemic" of considerable reputation, says they "ceased by divine appointment, because no longer needed." If that is true, what is the use of all this blow and bluster about "replanting the church of the first century," or the "restoration of the apostolic order of things"?

The church of the first century—the apostolic order of things—consisted of apostles and prophets as a part of its official personnel, with the promised gifts and blessings attending their labors,—if this order of things was to cease after the apostolic age, or first century, why talk about restoring the church of the first century? However, we are informed by Eusebius that they enjoyed those extraordinary gifts as late as 180 A. D., and he was in much better position to know concerning the matter than was Mr. Campbell.

That they did finally cease we are frank to admit, but we emphatically deny that they ceased by divine appointment, because no longer necessary. Peter announced on Pentecost day that the promised gift of the Holy Spirit, with its accompanying manifestations, was "unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call" (Acts 2:38). Unlimited as to time in its application, the "promise" holds good to-day, Campbell and company to the contrary notwithstanding. They ceased in fulfillment of the prophetic declaration of Paul, "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."—2 Timothy 4:3, 4. One of the biggest "fables" of modern times is, "the gifts of the gospel ceased with the apostolic age by divine appointment, because no longer necessary." Men like Mr. Campbell and followers crept into the church, who had the brazen effrontery to defy Almighty God and attempt to carry on his work after their fashion to the disparagement of the precious jewels with which the early church was so beautifully adorned, and thus "perverted" the gospel to the "subverting of the hearers." (Titus 1:10, 11; Galatians 1:7.)

Again we read from the erratic pen of Mr. Campbell:

A Christian is by profession a preacher of truth and righteousness both by precept and example. He may of right preach, baptize and dispense the supper as well as pray for all men, when circumstances demand it.—Christian System, p. 87.

That such is the doctrine and order of Campbell's restored church we are willing to concede, but that it was ever promulgated by Jesus or the apostles we just as emphatically deny. Under such a loose system of interpretation any old granny woman can officiate in the sacred ordinances and it passes current at par value. In Zachary-Smith Debate, pages 111, 112, and Sectarianism, by Daniel Sommer, page 39, the absurd argument is advanced that a man may preach and baptize who has "neither moral character, nor religious character, nor official character," and those who see differently are branded as "miserable reasoners." No thus saith the Lord, or approved precedent, can be found in the sacred volume for such "miserable" philosophy. In all probability it belongs to Campbell's "law of expediency" which is very elastic when knotty problems are encountered.

SUGGESTIONS TO TEACHERS.

NO. 9. "DUTIES OF OFFICERS SERIES."

Our next number in this series will be devoted to "Duties of a High Priest," by Elder Joseph A. Tanner, president of the Quorum of High Priests.

The office of teacher is one which Christ gave to the church, according to the statement of the Apostle Paul, in Ephesians 4:11, which office is perpetuated in the church of Jesus Christ, as restored in the last days. In the revelation given upon the day that the church was organized, which was April 6, 1830, the office is given place and the duties attaching to it are defined in the following statements:

An apostle is an elder, and it is his calling to baptize, and to ordain other elders, priests, teachers and deacons.—Doctrine and Covenants 17:8.

The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and to be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty, and he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest, . . . to warn, expound exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ.—Paragraph 11.

That part of the teacher's duty touching the ministering of the word is still further emphasized in section 42, paragraph 5:

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit.

The office of teacher being one appointed by Jesus Christ, is thereby clothed with the same honor, and entitled to the same power, as any other office in the church. The teacher is a servant of Jesus Christ, the same as the elder or apostle, though having different duties and jurisdiction. He has the same responsibility of teaching the principles of the gospel as does the elder and priest, and he is also entitled to the same Spirit to direct him in that teaching, and if faithful he no doubt will receive the same reward.

It has seemed to the writer that the importance of the office of teacher, the honor attaching thereto, and the extent of the responsibilities of one occupying it, have been considerably underestimated, so that the teachers as a class have not met the demands of the work to the extent that they might have been met and should have been met. Nor are the teachers alone responsible for this condition, but the body as a whole. The underestimation is common to the whole membership, and until the place of the teacher, and the comparative importance of his duties, are properly recognized by the membership, his work will be beneath the standard set forth in the law. So our first suggestion is that teachers seek to recognize the dignity and sacredness of their office, and the importance of the work for which that office provides.

IN THEIR WORK.

If the question should be asked, "Of what part of the official work provided for in the law is the church most in need?" I would unhesitatingly answer, "The work of the teacher." The evident lack of spiritual life in many of the members, and in many instances in whole branches, indicates the need of the teacher's work of teaching, warning, expounding, and exhorting, that they might be led to repentance and a revival of spiritual life. The fact, too, of many transgressors who live in total disregard of the law, remaining unmolested in the church, is a further evidence of the need of the teacher's work in watching over the church and seeing that there is no iniquity in the church.

It may well be observed that the first duty named for the teacher is to watch over the church, not to watch the members to see if he can find some fault in them, but to guard the interests of all. While the welfare of a single member is very important, the welfare of the whole body is more so. The principle laid down in the Book of Mormon that it is better that one man should die than that a whole nation should perish in unbelief, may also be adapted to the church; and that a member who persists in living in transgression had better be cut off from the church than that the whole branch should be brought under condemnation.

The welfare of the body should be carefully guarded by the teacher, to the extent that members who maintain a reproach against the church should be dealt with, and if unrepentant be brought before the proper tribunal to answer for their conduct. Only in this way can the integrity of the church be preserved. In cases where branches decline, by careful research the cause may in many instances be traceable to the sinful acts or sinful lives of one or more members. Sometimes it may be the subtle influences of pride, or covetousness, or other forms of worldliness, which are destroying the spiritual life of the members, and against which they need to be warned, and from which the body needs to be safeguarded.

There are many acts which Saints may do, and many conditions into which they may fall which are dangerous to the spiritual life of the individual and of the church, but which are not of a character to bring serious reproach upon the church, and can not be considered as transgressions of the law such as would render the members doing them liable to labor and trial before the courts,—such, for instance, as pride, extravagance, slovenliness, unkindness, etc.; but what would be the lawful duty of the teacher in such cases? Must he wait until the member's pride has led him away from the church; or his extravagance has led him to forgery; or his unkindness to do some inhuman act, before looking after that member? Or does not his duty to "watch over the church" require him to visit such members when he sees those sins beginning to creep into their lives, and put forth every effort to save them therefrom, and thereby save the church?

The idea seems to be prevalent that the teacher is under no necessity or obligation to visit members unless they have committed some serious offense, but the teacher who follows such a rule will certainly fulfill only a small part of his duties. How can he "be with, and strengthen them," when many members do not attend the church services, unless he goes to their homes? How can he "see that the church meet together often," unless he "goes after" the neglectful ones? How can he "see that all the members do their duty" when he goes to church and sees that one half are not doing their duty because they do not come, unless he visits them personally? His duty of seeing "that there is no iniquity in the church" can hardly be fulfilled by coming in contact with the members only at the house of prayer, for it is not usual that the iniquities are directly manifested there.

A careful study of the law and of the necessities of the membership in relation thereto, by the teachers, would certainly convince them that they are visiting officers, not alone to the ones guilty of serious offenses, but to the whole body of the membership; for few, of any, are so free from fault that they do not need the help that a faithful and wise teacher can give in the performance of his duty.

THE RIGHTS OF HOME.

The home is the primary organization of human beings. It is the first institution into which the child enters by birth, and in it he gets his first knowledge of government. It was ordained of God and perpetuated by his authority, and its rights are protected and maintained by the civil law. Without homes there could be no church, no nation, no government. The injunction to "be subject to the powers that be" must apply to the teacher in this connection. He must recognize the sacred rights of the home which he would enter, and must be subject to the authority of that home while there. His authority in the church does not give him authority in the home, hence his work must all be done in the Spirit of Christ, "inviting all to come unto Christ," exercising the power of gentle persuasion by the invitation or consent of the head of the house, rather than that he should either by word or manner manifest any tendency toward dictation or coercion.

Many difficult situations are likely to arise under various circumstances, but the teacher will be safe if he takes the safe side. Should a teacher desire to visit one or more members of a family, and the head of the family, whether member of the church or not, refuses to receive him, he should retire without lowering his self-respect, or forgetting the dignity of his calling as a servant of Jesus Christ. Perhaps the refusal was due to some misunderstanding, and a quiet explanation at some other opportune time upon the street or farm, may remove the barrier. A member of the church persistently refusing to receive an accredited teacher while in the performance of his duties, is certainly exhibiting conduct that is unbecoming a Saint, and if patient and honorable effort by the teacher does not overcome the difficulty, he may be under the necessity of taking other action.

Two teachers visited a member who was a sister of the head of the family to talk over a matter which did not concern any other of the family but herself, and while the teachers were welcomed into the home, the man insisted upon remaining in the room, thereby denying the officers and the member they came to visit the privacy which the nature of the case demanded. What should be the attitude of the teachers under such circumstances? Could they "order" the man out? It is apparent that if urgent requests and quiet reasonings fail, the only thing left for the officers to do is to submit to the authority of that house and retire, seeking some other way by which to accomplish their work, or waiting for some more opportune time.

The teacher's visits may be formal or informal, that is, he may request the head of the family to call his family together in order, or by consent may do it himself, and begin with prayer or with singing and prayer, and proceed to teach, exhort, expound, or do any other work properly in line with his duties; or, if thought best, he may proceed as a friendly visitor and lead gradually to the matter which he desires to bring up. In this latter way the demand for official work can at times be fully met and the work satisfactorily accomplished, and the family scarcely realize that they have been "officially" visited. A study of the conditions in each case, with tact in meeting them, will enable the teacher to be successful in his work.

One part of the teacher's work which is perhaps the most difficult of all to perform is to deal with some member who has fallen into grievous sin, and yet maintains his innocence by falsehood and brazen effrontery. He will seek to baffle the teachers in their work at every step, and it will be essential for them to determine what the law is as applying to the case, and to carry it out in mildness and meekness, without fear or favor. In many such cases it is but a trick of the Adversary to discourage the teachers in their work, or to arouse their personal passions until they do some act of impropriety in dealing with the case, or so confuse them that they will blunder in their work so that it will become of no effect. Special care is necessary in such cases to determine definitely the law, and the method of procedure, and it may be of considerable advantage for them to counsel with the branch president on those things. But the law should be carried out with firmness, though with mildness, without bitterness or vindictiveness.

Evidently the teacher will have plenty to do if he does all that needs doing along his line in his branch. If there be some (we have seen them), who say, "The members are all at peace, and there is nothing for us to do," they had better wake up, for those are the times Satan likes to see, for then he can easily creep in and sow the seeds of evil, the harvest of which will last for many years. It was while men slept that the enemy sowed the tares.

The office is ordained of God, and the teacher who occupies faithfully is a servant of Jesus Christ. He is the watchman of the local church, the guardian and instructor of her children, the preserver of her good name, and the maintainer of her integrity. He is to cleanse her vessels from impurity, and keep her temple from defilement. He is to strengthen the hands of the weak, lift up the fallen, and refresh the weary; to take by the hand those who walk in darkness and bring them into the light, to invite and lead all to Christ. Other offices may bring one into greater prominence, but none place before him any work more necessary, more noble, or more grand; or which can bring more joy and peace in this life, and more honor and glory in the life to come.

Of General Interest

PALESTINE CALLS TO JEWS.

That the present world-wide movement among the Jews to return to Palestine and reclaim the land of their ancestors is the beginning of the fulfillment of the ancient Hebrew prophecy, was denied yesterday by Rabbi M. S. Levy of the Beth Israel Temple, San Francisco, on his arrival here to speak before a mass meeting to be held to-morrow night at the Arrow Theater, Hamburger Building, under the auspices of the Los Angeles Hoachooze Palestine Land Development Association, a Jewish organization to assist those who wish to return to Palestine.

But the present migration of the Jews to the land of their forefathers, admitted the rabbi, may be in preparation for the fulfillment of the prophecy. The prophecy, however, he said, would not be fulfilled until all the world was at peace and men "became as little children."

TOURS BIBLICAL LANDS.

The rabbi has recently returned from an extended tour of the biblical lands and has great faith in the future of Palestine.

The desire of the Jew to return to Palestine is as old as the ages, but it has been recently given an impetus by the work on Zionism by Theodore Herzl. Now there are more than one hundred and fifty thousand Jews living in that country who have returned since the publication of that work. Of course all of the Jews can not return, for the land is not large enough. But that is not the plan. Those who return are mostly those from the countries where they are oppressed, though a good many have returned from this country.

Palestine is one hundred and forty by seventy miles, so it would be unable to sustain the twelve millions of Jews upon this globe. Herzl was the man that gave the impetus, in order to create a better sentiment toward making the land of our ancestors a legal home. A large number of families have taken advantage of the protection offered them by the Turkish Government and have made Palestine their home.

INHABITANTS ARE HAPPY.

From Hermon on the north, to the Jordan on the south, and from Joppa on the west to the plains of Jericho on the east, the Jews are engaging in agricultural pursuits with the exception of the school at Bezalel, under the direction of Boras Schatz, where the arts and crafts are taught.

As the result of this activity the inhabitants there are now making a comfortable living and are happy. The agricultural lands there are magnificent. Last year one million francs' worth of oranges were exported from Patach Tikvah and more than one million and five hundred thousand francs' worth of wine was exported.

The Jews who are going back to Palestine are doing more than satisfying a sentiment of prophecy. They are advancing themselves. Palestine is the place for young men of brains and brawn to show their worth.

There is a common belief among the Jews that the migration back to Palestine is in the fulfillment of the ancient prophecy, but I do not believe it. That time has not yet come, is my belief.—Los Angeles Herald.

LONG-DISTANCE WIRELESS TELEPHONY.

The Paris daily papers state that wireless telephone messages were lately sent over a distance of more than six hundred miles from Rome to Tripoli. Wireless telephony does not appear to have made any marked progress until the present time, since the well-known work of Poulson and Professor Majorana's experiments in Italy. This latter inventor used a sensitive microphone of his own design, and in this way the torpedo destroyer Lanciera covered two hundred and fifty miles in the region of Sicily. However, the recent results obtained by Professor Vanni of the Military Wireless Institution near Rome, are quite remarkable, as he is able to connect with a post in Tripoli, or about six hundred miles from Rome. In these experiments he makes use of a liquid microphone based upon the ideas of Chester Bell, brother of the celebrated Graham Bell. Using a microphone of this kind, together with apparatus of the Moretti type, the voice could be very well heard at Tripoli, and the persons there were able to recognize the professor's voice. A still more striking effect was had by using a phonograph to deliver the voice into the telephone transmitter, and even here the words were distinguished very clearly in the African post. After improving his apparatus, Professor Vanni hopes to telephone between Rome and Paris. Although the distance is not over seven hundred and fifty miles, the natural obstacles, such as mountains and forests, will make the work more difficult than in the case of the over-sea transmission.—Scientific American.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

Weary Hands.

In the farewell words of the editor who has given over this column to the one who now enters upon its work there is a pathetic line, "The work we resign is laid down by weary hands—hands that in this life will not take any other in its place."

One who has been sufficiently intimate with the work accomplished by those hands now weary, once so busy and capable, must feel the pathos of the fact that the physical powers of the most devoted and energetic wane and finally can no longer perform the will of the spirit which never grows old.

Our sister looks forward to a condition and time when we may enter again into labor after our preparatory years here are ended. Work, with her, has been pleasure; for she has entered into the spirit of Him who said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." Of her sure reward she has already known a foretaste in the joy of service.

There will remain long with us pleasant pictures of Sister Walker, not only as she toiled at the desk with her pen, but as she worked among her flowers, in her kitchen, or with the needle; as she presided in a well-ordered home, or at a table spread well by her own thrifty hands; for the retiring editor was a home-maker who knew woman's work.

She has wrought well. The influence that went out from her has been uplifting and ennobling. The work of her hands will long be felt in its results. Her hands may be weary, but "God accepts as signs of worship toilworn hands and weary feet."

"Work, for the Night Cometh."

For each of us, sooner or later, the time will come when we can no longer labor in this life. We are admonished to work, "for the night cometh when no man can work."

Another word of admonition, given in recent times, admonishes each of us to learn his duty. In this column, we have opportunity to consider especially things which belong to the duties of women, things which, as women of the church, we may well think upon as we strive to learn our duty in our homes, and in the church in general, but especially in our homes.

A recent book bears the suggestive title, The Business of Being a Woman. The woman who fulfills the mission life offers in her home has her hands full of business, very important business, too. Great results, for good or ill, come out from the home. The home is a great business center, and the father and mother are very influential factors in it.

So many modest mothers, busy with the work of home, many times greatly overburdened, have never regarded themselves as women of business. It becomes necessary to impress the thought that the business of conducting a home is of the greatest importance, that, when a young couple establish a new home, they enter upon a great business undertaking, and that it should be considered as carefully as any other business in order to insure success.

We do not forget that love enters in and beautifies and glorifies that which here we term business, the making and keeping of home; but the old people are right who tell us sagely that love flies out of the window under certain unfavorable circumstances; and those unfavorable conditions often result from neglecting to apply the principles of sound business in conducting the home. We can not rear a safe structure on false principles.

"Work, for the night cometh." Now, in the spring of the year, the birds are building and nesting. They will rear their young and guard them to maturity; the birdlings will grow strong and fly away; empty nests will sway in the winter boughs. In new homes just founded and in those where young children are growing up, the opportunity for work is now. So soon the children will be grown up and gone into the world, independent men and women, and the parents, whose love will follow them always, can no longer be an influence to mold and shape their lives.

Has not the woman of the home business? Is she not a partner in a most responsible business, the business of helping her children to fill their places in life honorably and intelligently? Has she not need to work, not only with her hands, but with her head and her heart in the short years of opportunity, for so soon the night cometh in which we can not work?

The Strength of the Church.

Some years ago an earnest woman voiced the thought that "the strength of a nation is in the intelligent and well-ordered homes of the people." We make here the assertion that the strength of the church is in the intelligent and well-ordered homes of the Saints. If the strength and wisdom of God be in us, it will manifest itself in such homes.

God is glorious in intelligence, order, purity, and all those qualities which make up the sum of his excellence. He dwells with the intelligent, with the pure and clean. He requires us to be clean in our persons and clothes, in our homes, in our thoughts and deeds.

"Intelligent and well-ordered homes"—the expression means much. An intelligent home is more than a place of many books; it is more than a library; it is more than a place where its members read and think and talk learnedly. It is a place where the wisdom of God is found, that wisdom which is pure and peaceable, gentle and merciful, not partial or deceitful.

A well-ordered home is more than a place where all the appointments are scrupulously correct, where everything is in apple-pie order and moves with the precision of clock-work. The writer was once in a home most beautifully clean and well-ordered in a material sense, in close proximity to and conducted by the same people who were proprietors of a wine room. The wine room, from a commercial standpoint, was well-ordered, but it could not be said that either the neat home or the prosperous wine room was a place of intelligence, especially in that pure wisdom described above in the language of the inspired writer.

Upon the homes of the Saints should be the beauty of order, cleanliness, intelligence, and, above all, of holiness. We need not be wealthy people, but we should be clean, happy, wholesome people.

If it be true, as we believe, that the church is strong in proportion to the number of intelligent and well-ordered homes in it, is it not the part of self-preservation for the general body to protect and foster the homes of the Saints, giving particular attention to such as can not alone wage the warfare of life successfully? Is not every family that rises in the scale of development added strength to the church? Is not every family that goes down a loss to the church?

The Deserted Home.

There comes to this column a letter from a sister in the church who has suffered that keenest of sorrow known to a wife, the desertion of herself and her helpless children by the husband and father. Upon this woman devolves the care of five children, the eldest eleven years old, the youngest but one year old when the father deserted his place of honor and duty two years ago.

Let those of us who have homes of plenty and those of us who have sufficient from day to day, where fathers and mothers are working together, imagine, if we can, the heavy pressure upon a woman who must be both breadwinner and breadmaker. She goes out to her work which takes her from home a large part of her time, and how many fears must cross her mind for the safety of her children in her absence, fears of accident for the small ones and other fears for the older ones. So many dangers lie about the pathway of children left all day without the natural protector in the home, mother!

And, aside from the appalling dangers to which neglected children are liable, it is impossible for a mother whose labors take her out of her home to maintain proper conditions in her home. She has not opportunity to teach her children the things which will fit them for good homemakers in the time when they shall have reached maturity.

So serious is this matter that certain of the States are enacting laws to punish men who abandon wives and children; and, of more importance, certain States are beginning to pension mothers who have the sole care of their children, that they may be placed in position to give their children that care which will save them as useful citizens, instead of permitting them, through neglect, to become a source of weakness to the State.

There came recently to the Children's Home a delicate young woman with an infant under three weeks of age. At such a time, this sister should have been the object of tenderest care and protection from undue hardship, such care as more fortunate women receive from devoted husbands who fulfill the vows they make at the altar of marriage. But this little sister of ours was another deserted wife, left to her fate by a husband who shirked the responsibilities that attended his parenthood.

Following the wearying journey by rail, there came the heart-breaking ordeal of giving away the little babe she loved as her life, and a speedy return to the care of a sick child who was hourly calling for his mother. When she had gone, kind-hearted men, officers of the church, said among themselves that it ought not to be so, that we ought to be able to furnish this young sister a little home where she could keep her children with her and be to them what God intended her to be, their teacher and guide in their tender years.

Why can not the church do all the good it willingly would do in the work of help and relief? Why can not the church do all it willingly would do to foster the homes of the worthy and needy, which homes, by proper nurture, might become a source of strength instead of weakness? Because the cofers of the church do not receive all they should to place it in position to do its work fully. The latest word of the Lord to us counsels us to be careful in the use we make of our money. It warns us to repress unnecessary wants and the expenditure of money for that which is merely entertaining. In other words, the warning to us is against too much indulgence in pleasures.

One of the things that should be taught and practiced in the homes of Saints is the paying of tithes, the principle of the repression of self in the interest of others, for the sacrifice of self in behalf of others is the spirit of the gospel. Christ loved us and gave himself for us. So should we love others and give to them as they have need and we have ability.

Letter Department

TRYON, NEBRASKA, May 24, 1913.

Dear Herald: I have not seen a letter from this part of the country for some time, so will write.

Brother Prettyman was here a short time ago, and preached some good sermons. He is now in his new field, and we wish him well. Will be glad to have him come again whenever he is able to leave his field.

Brother Grimes is now here, and we expect to hear some good sermons from him. He was here about two years ago, and some were very much interested in the work, but have now grown very indifferent. I hope he can get them interested again. One young lady that was interested has moved away.

This morning as I was reading the HERALD I noticed an extract from a letter of S. White, of Dimondale, Michigan, speaking of the two dreams he has had. The storm he spoke of in March was certainly a bad one here. I would not want to see one worse, but we may expect it. Truly these are "perilous times," and the Scriptures are being fulfilled.

One of our near neighbors, Frank Parkhurst, who is well known to many of the HERALD readers, was struck and killed by lightning the 5th inst. He was hurled into the other world, not even being warned of what was to befall him. Let us all be prayerful, faithful, true and good, so when the Master calls we may be ready. Your sister,

LILLIE M. RENEAU.

TROCHU, ALBERTA, May 11, 1913.

Dear Herald: It might be of interest to the Saints to hear how we are progressing here in Alberta.

We are feeling very sad as our darling baby Etty departed this life April 17, aged five months. Oh, how we miss the little angel! But we try not to grieve, as we know she has gone to be with Jesus.

We have no church here yet, and I don't know whether we ever will have or not, as it is hard to get the people out. They always have some excuse; in summer they are busy putting in their crops, and in winter it is so cold. I think they could go to church if they wanted to. I notice they can always find time to go to a dance, or a party. People don't want anything good it seems, or they are so afraid of the "Old Mormons" as they call us.

I would like to see an elder come this way, as we have no elder here at present. We would be glad to keep an elder as long as he would stay. We would enjoy hearing a good Latter Day Saint sermon, as the sermons we hear from these other ministers here seem so dry.

I will close, with love and best wishes for my brothers and sisters.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. J. H. THOMAS.

GUTHRIE, OKLAHOMA, May 22, 1913.

Dear Herald: HERALD readers may be interested in that the gospel work with the Indian people moves gradually on.

We baptized two more at Red Rock yesterday, and have two other names for baptism, including the venerable Indian, Watson, who, morally, and in his habits of life, is one of the cleanest men in the Otoe tribe. He is a thorn in the flesh to his people in lecturing them against their "hand game dances," and against the "Peote," which stimulant many of them use in a way to do nearly as great violence to their health as strong coffee does to the whites; and the old man is so pronounced against tobacco that he will permit no one to use it in his home. That is a red Lamanite's example to some of our more fair skinned Latter Day Saint noblemen.

This man Watson is a typical "old-timer," having a tattooed face, and can not speak a sentence of English. If not lost in the mails, the HERALD editors have a large and splendid likeness of this interesting Indian, which was mailed some weeks or months ago.

Possibly it would be worth while, upon occasion or convenience, to give HERALD readers who may need an example in correcting the tobacco habit a view of a living Indian who does not coincide with those at his elbow who are steeped in the weed, nor with the other wooden fellow who differs from some in that he keeps one posture in front of a cigar store, and never spits.

Our Otoes are now asking for branch organization, which will no doubt be attended to before long.

One young Indian speaker addressing the gathering yesterday made this striking statement: "The white man has brought the gospel to Mr. Indian it is true, but Mr. Indian will grab it from his hand and echo it to the world." He may have spoken wiser than he knew. We observe, of course, that in order to do such work, much preparation upon the part of any man, race, or color, is essential, and that Mr. Satan is not asleep yet, neither very badly disabled, and that the fight is on.

Awards await the valiant—dismay, the faithless. Let us be strong in the Lord.

JAMES E. YATES.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, May 22, 1913.

Editors Herald: Perhaps it might interest some of your readers to know that there is a little band of live Saints here in Houston. There have been seven baptized here within the past year, and there are several others that seem nearly ready for the water.

The first work done here under an organization had its beginning the 30th of last June, when through the efforts of Sister Clara Armstrong and Brethren Mannering and Cady we succeeded in organizing a little Sunday school of twenty-three members, with Brother Walter Birkhead, superintendent; Sister Clara Armstrong, assistant superintendent; Sheldon Armstrong, secretary; and Brother J. W. Clevenger, treasurer.

Through the efforts of Brother J. M. Crawford we began holding prayer meetings, and the Spirit has been with us to cheer and strengthen us in the gospel. Brother Crawford did a good work here, but he only remained with us a short time, on account of ill health.

There have been several series of meetings held here by Brethren Mannering and Cady, with more or less success. Brethren W. E. Peak and J. M. Nunley also made us a call. The weather being bad it broke into their efforts, but they delivered to the Saints spiritual food which we were much in need of.

Quite a number of the Saints seem willing to make any sacrifice needful to build up the work, and are letting their lights shine. But there are some that appear to be less interested, and do not attend meetings very regularly. We need an elder to settle in our midst, and help build up the work here, that we might be organized into a branch.

We have a nice little Sunday school at 110 East Ninth Street, Houston Heights, where we meet every Sunday at three o'clock. If there are any Saints located here that we have not been able to find, we hope you will try to look us up.

We feel our weakness, and we need your prayers, that we may have grace to rise to that high standard of perfection in Christ Jesus. Trusting that the great Lawgiver who has been with us in the past will continue to guide and direct us through life, we are,
Yours in the one faith,

SHELDON ARMSTRONG.

FAIRVIEW, MONTANA, May 19, 1913.

Dear Herald: It is now about six years since my wife and I were led into the waters of regeneration by our beloved brother, William Sparling, who was then laboring in the northeastern part of North Dakota. This was the first time I ever heard the angel's message. I was confirmed in the evening, and was told in prophecy that I would yet preach the gospel and that I would become a powerful instrument in the hands of the Lord. Having no education and not being gifted in speaking in public, I could not understand how this could be.

Many times I was made to doubt the prophecy, and drifted back into the ways of the world again, until our beloved brother, W. P. Bootman was riding along on the train in western Montana and a voice spoke to him and told him to go to Fairview. This was the means of bringing me back to that straight and narrow way.

Shortly after this I was called to the office of elder, and was again told that my tongue should be loosed. At this time we were organized into a branch here, and I have since been officiating as presiding elder.

Yesterday our hearts were made to rejoice when the writer led two more precious souls into the waters of baptism. These were confirmed in the afternoon, the writer officiating, when the whole house was basking in the Spirit of God. These people, Mr. and Mrs. Hillman, will be much help to our branch, he being a college graduate, and she a school-teacher. She was a member of the Christian Church, and he a member of the Presbyterian.

So the little stone which Daniel saw cut out of the mountain continues to roll on, and will do so until the great King of kings comes to reign. Hoping that we may all be laboring when he comes, is my constant prayer.

Your brother and colaborer in the gospel of the Lord.

R. C. NEWBY.

ROCKVILLE, MISSOURI, May 24, 1913.

Dear Herald: I wish you would announce through your columns that we would like for some of the elders of the Clinton, Missouri, District to come and do some preaching here. I am sure we can get good crowds, and I believe good could be done. I think we could get a schoolhouse to use, but if we could not, we have a nice grove that we could use, or plenty of room in our house. An elder could have a home with us as long as he wanted to stay.

There has never been preaching in this neighborhood that I know of. The nearest branch to us is Taberville, eight or ten miles away. We can not get outsiders to go that far, so would like very much to have an elder come and open up here.

Address,

SAM DILLER.

ROCKVILLE, MISSOURI, R. F. D. 3.

Curtis-Roberts Debate.

Last night at 11.45 the concluding session of the theological tussle which has been on for twelve nights in this place came to an end, the contending parties being the Latter Day Saints and the Church of Christ, sometimes called Campbellites. Elder J. Frank Curtis took care of our side of the conflict, with Brother J. Arthur Davis as his moderator. Elder W. G. Roberts was the champion of the opposition, with an Elder Freed of the same faith as his moderator. The usual church propositions were debated, each man affirming his church in faith, organization, doctrine, and practice to be identical with the pattern given in the New Testament.

Elder Curtis led out and affirmed for the first six nights. From the start it was Elder Curtis's fight, and as the debate continued this became more apparent to the majority of the people. There are only a few Saints here. Prejudice was high to begin with, but Brother Curtis, by a straightforward course and gentlemanly conduct, caused much of it to break away. He stayed with his propositions, was careful of his language, and answered each and every argument brought out by his opponent. He kept the slate clear all the time, even Mr. Roberts's unseemly attacks on Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon, and the character of all Latter Day Saints, all the time keeping his own building before the mind of the audience.

On the other hand, Mr. Roberts steered so far as it seemed possible to do from the real issues all the time. While in the negative he dwelt almost entirely upon the character of Joseph Smith, using Utah witnesses mostly in his argument, and in ridiculing the Book of Mormon; even in the affirmative he could not keep away from these two subjects. His language at times was vulgar, occasionally bordering upon the obscene, and often was insulting. Time and again while talking he referred to Brother Curtis as a coward. He started out to try to bulldoze his way along, but Brother Curtis kept his end up so well that Mr. Roberts had to let up a little. One evening just before the debate opened he called Brother Curtis a bulldog. "All right," Brother Curtis replied, "I am bulldog enough for you." And so he proved. To the writer it was very apparent that Mr. Roberts cared little as to the condition in which he was leaving his church in the minds of the people, compared to the desire to be the victor in the debate. His tactics were questionable much of the time.

One evening when Mr. Roberts had the last speech of the evening and the crowd was extra large, he thought it a good time to "pull off" something great. He was ardently trying to establish immorality in the life of the Prophet. He brought to view a paper, went on about its age, its rareness, its originality, its truthfulness and great value, just one issue had been printed,—The Nauvoo Expositor. He said it was published by honest people who knew all about the life of the Prophet, and it contained the sworn affidavit of ten women that they were spiritual wives of Joseph Smith. He rushed to Brother Curtis's table and shaking the paper in his face said: "It is right there and you know it is there. Read it! Read it!" Brother Curtis replied in a very quiet manner, "You read it." "I am going to," Mr. Roberts said, and began to open the paper, then began an explanation of the value and frailty of the paper, and its fineness of print and that he would just read the same affidavit from a book.

He, of course, was going to read the affidavits of the Utah women in the temple lot case. But Brother Curtis out-generated him. He arose to a point of order, calling for the correctness of the assertion about the Expositor, and asking for the reading. There was no chairman of the debate, so it was rather difficult to tell just how a point of order would be handled. Mr. Roberts began at once to cry that "He wants to interrupt. He is scared. I don't blame him. He wants to take up my time." Again Brother Curtis came to his feet and said, pointing to the paper. "It is not there! I'll give you an hour to read it. Give me the name of just one woman's affidavit from it." Of course Mr. Roberts could not, and did not. He was caught and the crowd saw it. From then on Mr. Roberts's "stock" took a decline.

Again, Mr. Roberts represented the Book of Mormon as stating on page 17 that "Christ was baptized by Nephi," but Brother Curtis caught him at it. Again, he said that Brother Curtis was quoting only from one book of their own. Brother Curtis showed that he had quoted from three or four. In reply Mr. Roberts said he had misspoken "book" for "man," but Brother Curtis showed he had quoted from three of their own men, in his next speech, and Mr. Roberts was caught again. When Brother Curtis was quoting Israel's blessing of Ephraim, Mr. Roberts attempted to palm off the land of Ephron in Genesis 23, as Joseph's land, reading Ephraim for Ephron. But his duplicity was exposed to all.

Mr. Roberts became so hard pressed on the question of officers in the church that he fixed it so they now had all the officers in their church but apostles. A prophet is a teacher, Roberts is a teacher, hence he is a prophet; but not an inspired one. Brother Curtis in reply reminded him that the night before when contending for only elders, teachers, and deacons, Mr. Roberts had said there were only two kinds of prophets, inspired, and those of the Devil. Now, since Mr. Roberts was a prophet, and not an inspired one, according to his own classification he belonged to the other class of prophets.

The last session was just nicely under way when Mr. Roberts's moderator arose to a point of order, and with great solemnity said that Mr. Roberts had shown that they were not Campbellites, but that Brother Curtis persisted in calling them Campbellites, and that it must stop. He was quite officious about it. Brother Davis in a slow, matter of fact way informed him that all along Mr. Roberts had persisted in calling us Mormons, and whenever he would make Roberts desist in calling us Mormons, then Brother Davis would endeavor to have Brother Curtis desist calling them Campbellites. Well, the crowd cheered and clapped. To quiet the moderator's nerves, Brother Curtis recited this story:

"Once during hard times in Kansas the Lord sent manna to a poor farmer and his wife and hired hand in the form of jack-rabbit. This they had three times a day, with variation as to manner of serving. It grew to be a little tiring to the hired hand, so he asked one day to be allowed to say grace. When asked to do so the next meal he recited: 'O Lord, we have had rabbit young, and rabbit old; rabbit hot, and rabbit cold; rabbit tender, and rabbit tough; and now, O Lord, we have had rabbit enough.'"

This prayer, Brother Curtis stated, was quite similar to the debate, and recited, "We have had Alex. Campbell young, and Thomas Campbell old. We have had Campbellism hot and Campbellism cold. We have had Campbellism tender and Campbellism tough; and now, O Lord, we have had Campbellism enough!" Perhaps it was not just the proper thing, Brother Editor, but we laughed.

Often Mr. Roberts, when attempting to be tragic at a vital point in his argument, would bawl out as he extended his arms heavenward, "Oh, my soul." Once, time was called just as he got this out, and he had to sit down. Brother Curtis on rising turred to him and said, "What in the world is the matter with your withered up soul"; and that was the end of that expression for the debate.

Mr. Roberts contended that the church was not in existence until after Pentecost, but admitted that Judas fell from his office. When Brother Curtis asked him to state in what Judas held that office he was glad to move on and leave it unanswered.

To the writer, the wisdom of keeping the same men after such as Mr. Roberts was clearly demonstrated. Time and again it was easy to see that Brother Curtis had forestalled an argument of his opponent, because from former experiences he knew what Mr. Roberts would bring on next.

The Lord was with his Saints, and his work through it all, and at the close appeared to take from Mr. Roberts the natural ability he usually shows. His last speech was a complete failure—flat. He was in the woods completely—lost. He got his scripture mixed and nearly all else. Tried to show that King Saul lost his kingdom because he offered sacrifices and was not a priest. All through the debate he had asked to be struck dumb as a sign, and it appeared that the Lord had granted his request so far as his mentality was concerned.

Mr. Roberts stakes everything on "the more excellent way" spoken of by Paul, as meaning the doing away with the gifts, the Holy Ghost, and all officers but elders, teachers, and deacons. So one can readily see how easily and soundly he must have been beaten in this debate.

Brother Curtis's greatest work was his first night on the negative. It was inspiration from the start, both speeches. He went like a cyclone. It was wonderful, great! The next day one of the men who sent for Mr. Roberts acknowledged that Brother Curtis "trimmed Mr. Roberts on every corner" and left him flat. Humility and application on the part of God's servants makes it easy for the Lord to show forth his hand in behalf of his own work.

Brother Curtis is a good, clean workman. In a few days he goes to Lucerne, Kansas, to hold another debate, this time with an Elder Ellmore, of the non-progressive wing of the Christian Church. In the interim he and Brother Davis are holding services in the tent here each night.

In gospel bonds,

News from Missions

Northeastern Texas.

A few lines from this field may be of interest. Ten days before I left home I attended a debate between Brother Jesse M. Simmons, and Elder Austin of the Freewill Baptist faith. The debate was well attended and carried on in good order, and we think quite a victory was gained for the truth. The propositions were the Freewill Baptist Church and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints on trial by the Bible.

Brother Jesse Simmons is a bright young man, and will make quite an able defender of the gospel if he will live a meek, humble, and faithful life.

I am here in northeastern Texas, at Dalbey Springs, doing some preaching and arranging for a reunion which is to begin August 9. The water at Dalbey Springs is said to have some of the finest medical properties of any water in the United States, especially for kidney troubles. I hope that all in reach of this place will attend the reunion, as well as the Saints in other countries. If the Lord will bless us we want to make this reunion one of the finest ever held in this district. So come, one and all, and see this fine country where the pines grow tall, and the owls hoot, the mocking birds sweetly sing, and catch a foretaste of Zion in all of its beauties.

I am feeling fine spiritually, and hope and pray we may have a successful year in the preaching of the gospel. I feel greatly encouraged over the last General Conference. The Lord is remembering Zion, and if we will do God's commandments and live pure and good lives, we can soon build up Zion, and the Lord will make it a city of refuge, a place of safety for the pure in heart, where we may be cared for during the destructions that are passing over the earth. The judgments of God are here; the end is near. So let us be up and doing and make ready for the great day so near at hand.

May all be blessed this year in delivering the angel's message. Let us preach the beautiful gospel and let other people and their faith alone.

Asking an interest in the prayers of all that I may be faithful to the end and meet the Master when he comes in peace, I am, Your brother in the great gospel work,

E. A. ERWIN.

DALBEY SPRINGS, TEXAS, May 13, 1913.

Des Moines, Iowa.

While the General Conference of 1913 is past, the effects of the work done there are just beginning to be realized. In the experiences of more than thirty general conferences that I have attended, none stand out as more clearly inspirational, and the best evidence of that fact is the effect it has had on those who were not there, as well as those who were.

With what I have said I do not wish to be understood that every action taken was inspired, or as God would have it; but the manner of executing the business, both in the quorums and in the general body, was more fully governed by the spirit of good will and Christian forbearance than previously, and the spirit in which the actions of the conference was accepted was truly as it should be from men and women of God.

I note by letters from all parts that the results of the conference have been of a very inspiring nature, and the brethren are moving out this year with more confidence and cheer than formerly, while in some cases it has called for more sacrifice than usual. Surely the conclusion of Reverend George R. Wallace in The Advance, of Chicago, is a correct one. He says, as quoted in the Literary Digest of May 24: "Never has there been greater need, nor greater opportunity, for ministers to present intelligently, rationally, and earnestly the fundamental truths of Christianity. Men are hungrily seeking for true guidance in things spiritual. This is the age for ministers with a divinely inspired message; the world turns disappointed from all others."

When men who do not claim to be inspired will thus conclude, how much more will those who are inspired thus feel impressed.

I will not be able to get into my appointed field of labor till about the middle of June. In the first place, my work on the records of the Seventy and Presidents of Seventy and in concluding the work of writing a history of the Seventy has occupied nearly all my spare time till this week; and since Brother J. M. Baker could not enter upon his work in this mission, I was advised by the minister in charge to labor here till he could come. Other matters will occupy my time till about the time above specified, and then I hope to enjoy the spirit of my calling in the special work appointed this year.

Increasing interest in seeing the word scattered in this part of the vineyard, and because of difficulties that have long existed being settled, or in process of settlement, there is an increased confidence and cheerfulness on the part of the Saints to act.

Last Sunday Brother Henry A. Stebbins was the speaker in the city, both morning and evening, which was much enjoyed, especially by those who have known him for many years. He remarked that since he was here about five years ago that "there had been a marked improvement, which he could see and feel."

On May 5 I was called to preach the funeral sermon in commemoration of the life and death of Mr. John Carter, of Osceola. While not a member of the church, he had been kind and hospitable to the elders, and had never opposed his companion in her faith of the gospel. The G. A. R. assisted in the services, he being one of their number, which is decreasing rapidly year by year.

Several remarkable healings have occurred of late, for which the hearts of the Saints are made to humbly rejoice. Surely God is with his people, and acknowledging the authority of his servants, by giving them power over disease and evil spirits.

The Saints of Perry, Iowa, are rejoicing over their opportunities for the worship of God, which opportunity has been encouraged by the Saints of Des Moines, Iowa, Branch, donating them seats for their new church. The Saints at Des Moines have placed some kindergarten chairs in the primary room, thus making some of the seats previously used unnecessary, besides increasing the interest of the Sunday school.

Much interest is being taken in the preparations being made for the conventions and conference to be held here on the 6th to 8th. We are expecting the new missionaries for the district to be here by that time, and we hope to have with us the minister in charge, and see our worthy brother, O. Salisbury, set apart to the calling of a high priest. Others here have been designated for office in the priesthood, and others to occupy in higher offices in the near future.

Never has the work in the district or in the city of Des Moines been in a more spiritual condition, with brighter prospects for other improvements than at the present time, for which we praise the Lord.

Gallands Grove, Iowa.

"Time and tide waits for no one" is still a true saying. It was twenty-one years ago to-day that I preached my first sermon as a General Conference missionary, and I can recall from memory's cherished pages that beautiful Sunday morning when I took my place in the lower schoolroom in Auburn, Iowa, being greeted with the saintly sympathizing faces of the Carrolls, the Haineses, the Skinners, the Reynoldses, and others who were true fathers and true mothers to me in the blessed gospel of peace and salvation.

At my request Elder Carroll, president of the branch (he still holds that office), announced meetings for every other evening in order to give me plenty of time to acquaint myself with the topics to be discoursed upon. One Sunday evening the Holy Spirit was given me in wonderful power, and it remained with me all night and the following day. My joy was full.

From Auburn I went to Coalville, Iowa, where I held a series of meetings and was shown the same respectful consideration by the Jordisons, the Teasdales and others, that I had enjoyed at Auburn. Elders C. E. Butterworth and W. W. Whiting carefully guarded and directed the inexperienced missionary, for he needed the wisdom gained by their experience in gospel work. May the Lord reward them for their letters of instruction and fatherly care.

From that time to the present my labors have been in the Gallands Grove, Iowa, District, and if it is the Master's will that I should spend twenty-one years more in the same field I will gladly do so.

There are twenty-one counties in the district, but only ten branches. Every branch but one holds Sunday school, and all but three have Religio societies. The Home Class Religio and Sunday school workers are truly alive to the interest of their respective departments and have accomplished much good. The normal department, the cradle roll, and the Woman's Auxiliary societies have added their quota to the general results for good.

The Saints in the historic Gallands Grove District would hardly expect me to close a letter even to the HERALD without mentioning church finances, hence these closing words to everyone having tithes and offerings to spare for the Lord's work. Please hand your gift, large or small, to your branch agent, or mail it to me at your earliest possible convenience. The missionary force of the church has been increased, as you already know, in order to meet more of the growing demands upon the ministers in general charge for bearing this gospel of assurance that has cheered your hearts. We should, with the bright and growing prospects before us, make a reasonable effort to save. Then remember the Lord's storehouse by paying our portion according as we have been prospered. Do what you can and do it now.

In order to get better schooling I have concluded to locate my family at Independence, Missouri, by the first of September, but my mission address will continue to be Deloit, Iowa.

This change of residence was not arranged for until Bishop Keyes Kelley and Bullard were consulted.

Seattle and British Columbia.

A word from this part of the vineyard is due you and the Saints. It is for joy in the work and its blessings to us that cause us to write. While we can not report a marvelous work being done in the way of baptizing people into the church, we can report that the gospel is proving its authenticity in the minds of the people.

Of late I have labored in Vancouver, New Westminster, British Columbia, where there are a few faithful Saints who extended to the elders a substantial welcome. I also occupied a week at Langlev, Washington, where there are a few humble followers of the Master, who have won the confidence of their neighbors and friends. We are sorry to say that it is the reverse in some places.

At Centralia there is a lively branch of Saints, equipped with a working corps of officers, supplemented by a band of good workers in Sunday school and Religio. Every Sunday there is an appointment filled by one or more of these officers in adjacent schoolhouses, etc. By this method seed is sown that will eventually germinate and produce. Last, but not least, in the city of Everett, Washington, there are a few Saints (sisters) who are doing a work that is and will count for good in the future. It is encouraging to note the effect they are wielding for good to the work there.

I was asked a question by one of the intermediate scholars of Sunday school with reference to a lesson for the month of April, (date has escaped my memory.) How the history of Egypt could reach back four or five thousand years B. C., when according to chronology the creation began 4004 B. C., the earth being destroyed according to chronology about 2400 B. C. We are free to confess that we were not able to locate Egypt at such a remote date, and accept the accredited age of the creation. Maybe some one can and will.

Yours in Christ,

WILLIAM JOHNSON.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

We have had some very encouraging and instructive discourses during the past month, delivered by Brethren G. Trowbridge, S. A. Burgess, R. Archibald, George Vandel, of Lansdowne, and E. C. Bell. We are promised the privilege of hearing Brother Hale W. Smith the evening of June 1. He is preaching for the Lansdowne Saints this week.

We are pleased to learn of Brother S. A. Burgess being made president of Graceland, and we wish him success, though we regret very much that our pleasant association must be broken. Sam must come and visit us as often as he can.

Some talk of a district reunion. Officers have met to make arrangements. A district Religio and Sunday school convention will be held in Lansdowne June 14. A very good program is arranged, and an instructive as well as pleasant time is anticipated. District conference will convene June 14 and 15 in Lansdowne.

The Cheltenham Saints with their pastor, Brother T. J. Elliott, are pleased with the appearance of their little chapel since its spring cleaning. Arrangements are being made to have the Saint Louis Rock Church thoroughly renovated and repaired in the near future.

Brother Joseph Betts, of Belleville, who has been so seriously ill, has been greatly blessed through administration and prayer, but is still very much in need of our continuing to remember him, and he so requests, thanking the Saints for their interest in him and his trial.

Your sister in Christ,

ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

Pastoral.

VALEDICTORY WORD.

TO THE ORDER OF EVANGELISTS AND ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

Dear Brethren and Saints: Nearly four years ago I was intrusted with the grave and important responsibilities belonging to the president of the Order of Evangelists. I understood from the beginning, of course, that my occupancy in that position was only temporary; indeed I fully expected that it would have terminated long before it did. But, as usual, God has been watching over his work, and now, in the light of unfolding events, and the testimony of the Spirit of truth, I am fully convinced that Brother Frederick A. Smith was called and ordained as the successor to his father (and per consequence I was released), at precisely the right time for the good of the work in general, and the order in particular; also the personal good of both Brother Smith and myself—not in a selfish sense, but in the best interests of the cause of God.

I have tried to do the best I could, under existing conditions, for the order in particular and the Lord's work in general. I am comparatively happy in the belief that the order has made a degree of progress, which is as it should be, for progress, all along the line, is the urgent demand of the hour, and without it the condition is an abnormal one.

I am your ex-president now, but it will be my good pleasure to do all I can in my office and calling as a patriarch in the church of God. I shall, too, God being helper, do all within my power to assist and help our new president to perform the important duties which belong to his important office and calling. Dear brethren of the order, it is our reasonable duty to do this, and a sincere and intelligent discharge of personal and ministerial duty will be the most effectual way of sustaining our president, which will, of course, include our faith and prayers for his success. If we do this, we have a right to expect that he will do all he can do for us, as members of the order, to whom, in part, has been committed the weighty and important interests of the restored gospel.

I herewith express my profound gratitude to God that, through his grace, I have been permitted to care for the interests of this important department of church work, during the interim between the departure of Brother Alexander H. Smith and the call and ordination of his successor. I also keenly appreciate the kindly support afforded me by the members of the order and the leading authorities of the church.

I am, as ever, your brother and coworker for Christ,
J. R. LAMBERT.

LAMONI, IOWA, May 22, 1913.

To the Evangelical Order and the Saints of God Everywhere; Greeting: In response to the call of God and the action of the General Conference, I assume the responsibilities and duties of "Presiding Patriarch and Evangelical Minister to the whole church." Sensing keenly my own weakness and the grave responsibility that attaches to the office, I shall seek for aid divine to in some measure supplement my weakness and give the needed wisdom and strength essential to properly conduct the office.

I feel that it is justly due the retiring president of the order, Joseph R. Lambert, who has been acting since the death of Alexander H. Smith, to say that I appreciate the hearty support and good will he has shown me since accepting this office. It is needless for me to say he has done all his health would permit in the interests of the order; and while he is relieved of the burden and care as president of the order, he will still do all his health will permit as an active member of the Evangelical Order. I shall be glad to avail myself of his wise counsel and experience so far as possible.

In my travels during the last few years it has been forced home to me that many of the branches were in sore need of some help to revive them and build them up spiritually. For the missionary force to do this was to neglect, to some extent, at least, the work in the missionary field, and subject the missionaries to severe criticism. Furthermore, in many instances their efforts were seriously minimized by those who opposed them, because it was believed that such work was not the duty of missionaries, and that they had no business in the branches. The question would arise, Where is the help to come from, if not from these men who were in condition to spend the time and study necessary to bring about the results desired? The only answer I saw then, and see now, is that God had provided for the necessity by giving to the church the Evangelical Order of ministers, who should be free from the care of the local work as presiding officers, free from the entanglements that to a greater or less extent will come to those who are under the necessity of settling the differences that arise from time to time, and who can devote time and study to the work commensurate with its needs.

While this has not been fully understood as it should be, I am hopeful that a better understanding may obtain; and that the order may receive the recognition and hearty support by the various officers in charge of mission, stake, district, and branch that should be accorded those called of God for the advancement of his work. Then will the members of this order be able to do the work that justly belongs to them, and then will the value and blessing of God's provision for the needs of his children in providing this order be manifest to the church.

Believing as I do that the work of building up this church of God, should be cooperative, and that no department is independent of the other; and since the Lord has made provision in the law that the evangelical ministers are not subject to the direction of the ministers in charge, the burden of care and direction of this line of work will fall on the First Presidency and the President of the order.

Feeling that some system is necessary in order to facilitate the work and do the greatest amount with a minimum cost, I appeal to the ministers in charge of the various fields and the missionaries in the field to cooperate with us in this work so far as they can. There should be no conflict or jealousy between these two arms of the great army of the Lord, as one should follow and sustain the work of the other; the one going before gathering in from the fields of sin, the other following up, instructing and strengthening those reclaimed. I do not intend to convey by this that others can not hold revival meetings, for I am of the opinion that others of the priesthood, both local and missionary, can hold such meetings if necessary. Nor would I have any disregard the general oversight of the ministers in charge of the various fields.

In order that the work of this order may be systematized and prosecuted to advantage, and without unnecessary loss of time or money, I desire the hearty cooperation of the local officers, and since the order has no jurisdiction over local organizations, and to more effectually carry out the work of cooperation, I recommend that all stake, district, and branch presidents who feel the need of or desire the assistance of an evangelist in their stake, district, or branch, (where such has not been already provided for by appointment,) or for some special occasion, correspond with the First Presidency, who will at once take the matter up with me as President of the order, and we will seek to make such provision as will meet the necessity or desire. In this way we can work together as the law directs, in building up the spirituality of the church, and obeying the mandate of God, "Come up Higher."

I am conscious of the limited number in the order who can do the work outlined as belonging to a revivalist, but as an order we are anxious to utilize what we have to the best possible advantage. It is true that some of the order have been assigned to specified fields, and will labor therein unless an urgent demand is made; but in special cases or where exigencies may arise not provided for by such appointment, the First Presidency and Presiding Patriarch will endeavor to meet the demand by special appointment, or change.

If reunion committees will write me or the Presidency when desiring the assistance of a member of this order at their respective reunions, stating their preferences, if they have any, we will try to arrange the work so as to get the one they desire; but they should give time for correspondence in case we could not get the one wanted, so we can get one who will be satisfactory.

In order to help this work along I earnestly request the members of the order to keep me informed as to where I can find them and what appointments they have ahead of them from time to time. In this way we may be able to save some traveling expense, as well as time.

I stated in accepting this office that I would urge the revivalist part of the work belonging to the office, and the more I study the work of the order the more convinced I become that we should make this the primary work of the order. By this I do not say that I would discourage the giving of patriarchal blessings, for I realize that it is a very comforting part of the work of the Evangelical Order. But this is more particularly to the individual; and while it is accompanied by much of the Spirit of God, and may carry that which is prophetic, which would all be strong factors in building up the spirituality of the individual, nevertheless, I believe there should be some preparation upon the part of the candidate for such a blessing as well as the officiating Patriarch, in order to obtain the good desired. And I believe that one of the ways in which this preparation can be made is through an effort along the revival line, where they can be instructed as to the purpose and benefits to be sought through this ordinance.

When this work is done, and the revivalist by holding meetings, preaching, instructing, visiting, encouraging, exhorting, etc., supplements the work of the stake, district, and branch presidents, the visiting priests, each doing his own peculiar part in the work of building up the church, working together, then will the value of the Order of Evangelists be made more manifest, and the church be strengthened and built up spiritually, and, God be honored.

We ask an interest in your prayers and your hearty cooperation that we may all be coworkers with God.

FREDERICK A. SMITH,

President of the Order of Evangelists.

LAMONI, IOWA, May 23, 1913.

A New Book of Sermons

The Gospel Messenger

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c. Order No. 248a.

Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa loved by all. Funeral services in Saints' chapel, Porcupine, in charge of S. E. Livingston, sermon by C. H. Burr. Interment in Arkansaw cemetery.

BARTLETT.—Enoch Bartlett was born December 5, 1838; died May 6, 1913, in the province of New Brunswick. He was married in 1857 to Susan Keating. To this union were born six children, four of whom, with his wife preceded him in death. Married to Lulu J. Davis, at Maple City, Michigan, March 14, 1887. Four children were born to them, three of whom survive him. He was a member of the Latter Day Saints' Church, being baptized in 1897, by J. C. Smith. Buried at Langley, Washington, William Johnson preaching the funeral sermon.

New Book Notes.

The Century Company reports on press the nineteenth printing of The Century Cook Book, the twentieth of Rudyard Kipling's Second Jungle Book, and the forty-sixth of Alice Rice's Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch. The Century May issue include a new book May 19, by George J. Kneeland—"Commercialized Prostitution in New York City," published under the auspices of the Bureau of Social Hygiene.

The June "Century."

The June Century is a travel number, taking the reader into many countries. Frances Little, author of The Lady of the Decoration and The Lady and Sada San, contributes an entertaining and instructive article on "The Training of a Japanese Child," in which she describes many quaint Oriental customs, and shows the influence of American educational methods.

Robert Hichens, containing his "Skirting the Balkan Peninsula" series, sketches Delphi and Olympia in word-pictures that are no less brightly colored than the accompanying paintings by Jules Guérin. In a similar way Ernst von Hesse-Wartegg and André Castaigne describe and draw "The Great Saint Bernard," while Joseph Pennell furnishes six lithographs of "The Grand Canyon of the Colorado," which need no text to help them.

The fiction includes an exciting automobile tale by Edward Lyell Fox, called "Black Blood," and further chapters of Frances Hodgson Burnett's new novel, "T. Tembarom."

Comparative Digestibility of Food

Made with different Baking Powders

From a Series of Elaborate Chemical Tests:

An equal quantity of bread (biscuit) was made with each of three different kinds of baking powder—cream of tartar, phosphate, and alum—and submitted separately to the action of the digestive fluid, each for the same length of time.

The relative percentage of the food digested is shown as follows:

Bread made with Royal Cream of Tartar Powder:

100 Per Cent. Digested

Bread made with phosphate powder:

68¼ Per Cent. Digested

Bread made with alum powder:

67¾ Per Cent. Digested

These tests, which are absolutely reliable and unprejudiced, make plain a fact of great importance to everyone: Food raised with Royal, a cream of tartar Baking Powder, is shown to be entirely digestible, while the alum and phosphate powders are found to largely retard the digestion of the food made from them.

Undigested food is not only wasted food, but it is the source of very many bodily ailments.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM, THE ISLAM OF AMERICA."—PART I.

This is a book written by Reverend Bruce Kinney, D. D., formerly superintendent of Baptist Missions in Utah, now of Topeka, Kansas. It is issued under the direction of the Council of Women for Home Missions, being dedicated to "the womanhood of America," and published by Fleming H. Revell Company. We understand that it is being used by various councils and societies of women of various denominations in various parts of the United States as a textbook for study at stated periods. In reviewing this book we have had access to papers prepared by Elders Rhodes and McKim, and desire to give them due credit.

Before we indulge in any adverse criticisms upon this book we must thank the author, Reverend Bruce Kinney, for a statement made in the preface regarding the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He says:

Nothing that may be said in this book must be taken as necessarily applying to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, having headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa. The official name of the Utah Church does not have the word "Reorganized." The Iowa Church claims to be the true church, asserts that after the death of Joseph Smith the control should have passed to his son and namesake, now their head, and that Brigham Young usurped authority and corrupted the practices and doctrines of the church. The Iowa adherents of Joseph Smith are called "Josephites" by their Utah brethren and they, in turn, hurl the epithet "Brighamites" at the Utah Church.

The Iowa Church accepts the Book of Mormon and some of the Doctrine and Covenants, but repudiates polygamy. To further set forth their differences is not within the scope of this work. It may be said, however, that the Josephites are a law-abiding body of American citizens and that there is no direct descendant of the original prophet in the fellowship of the Utah Church, the present president of that church, Joseph F. Smith, being a nephew of Joseph Smith, jr.—Mormonism, the Islam of America, Preface, p. 10.

Mr. Kinney should have credit for making this very fair statement regarding our position.

WHY DO WE REVIEW THIS BOOK?

This distinction having been made so clearly at the very beginning, we may be asked why we concern ourselves with the book at all. To this we reply that it is not our intention to make any attack upon those portions of the work which are devoted to Utah Mormonism (mainly included in chapters 3 to 6, inclusive). But the first two chapters are devoted to Joseph Smith, the Book of Mormon, and the history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints prior to the rise of Utah Mormonism. With these chapters we are more concerned than any other people. The civil courts have twice decided that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the true successor to and continuation of the church founded by Joseph Smith, and continued under his administration until his death, in 1844. (See decision by Judge L. S. Sherman, Court of Common Pleas, Lake County, Ohio, 1880; also decision of Judge John F. Phillips, Circuit Court of the United States, Western District of Missouri, Western Division, 1894.)

The first of these decisions in part reads:

That the church in Utah, the Defendant, of which John Taylor is president, has materially and largely departed from the faith, doctrines, laws, ordinances and usages of said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has incorporated into its system of faith the doctrines of celestial marriage and plurality of wives, and the doctrine of Adam-god worship, contrary to the laws and constitution of said original church.

And the Court do further find that the Plaintiff, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the true and lawful continuation of, and successor to the said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized in 1830, and is entitled in law to all its rights and property.

In the light of these two decisions, which are based on the law and the facts in the case, it will be seen that any attack upon the character of Joseph Smith or the church organized by him is a matter of concern to us, to say the least. Though we may assist good Christian people everywhere in every legitimate effort to extirpate polygamy and other evils of Utah Mormonism, we can not join with them in an attack upon Joseph Smith and a people who were in no way responsible for these evils. We trust that this is perfectly clear, and that no one will be so heavy-witted as to imagine that our challenge of the first two chapters of this book in any way allies us with Utah Mormonism.

THE SIN OF POVERTY AND THE CRIME OF VISIONS.

Mr. Kinney says that he lays no claim to originality, excepting in arrangement of material. That statement is rendered somewhat unnecessary by the fact that he begins the first chapter of his book by saying of Joseph Smith: "His parents and relatives were all poor, ne'er-do-well visionaries, guided by dreams, seeking hidden treasures and often in conflict with the officers of the law."

This has been the stereotyped approach to this subject by the opposition for so long that we would have felt startled and disturbed had he begun in some other way. But now we feel assured, for we know the exact course that he will follow. He will follow the same old trail nearly all others have followed, and the only originality will be in the arrangement of his tracks.

So Joseph Smith's parents and relatives were poor! Well, it is no crime to have poor relations; if it were, the jails would all be full. How much money must one have before he would be eligible to become a prophet of God, or the father of a prophet?

But they had trouble with the officers of the law! So did Paul and Sifas. So did John Wesley. So did Roger Williams, one of the patron saints of Mr. Kinney's own denomination. Why did Mr. Kinney fail to mention even one crime of which they were convicted, citing us to the charges and findings of the court?

They were believers in inspired dreams and visions! Witness Joseph and Mary driven from the Holy Land to inhospitable Egypt,—by a dream! Witness the boy Samuel disturbed by night by a vision! Review the sacred history of the past and name the men and women of godliness who were not visionaries and dreamers.

Evidently Mr. Kinney does not believe in dreams. The poet says: "When dreams depart, then it is time to die."

ONE PROPHECY FULFILLED.

But, it is urged, the spiritual manifestations received by Joseph Smith and his parents were false. They failed of fruition. Not so fast. We are indebted to Mr. Kinney himself for a striking refutation to that charge. Speaking of Lucy Smith, he says: "She had said to friends in Vermont, long before, that she would be the mother of a prophet."—Mormonism, the Islam of America, p. 50.

If that be true, as stated by Mr. Kinney, that prediction, made before Joseph Smith was ten years of age, perhaps before he was born, was strikingly fulfilled, considering the remarkable career of her son at a later date, and the fact that he has been accepted by thousands all over the world as a true prophet, and has been rejected by other thousands as a false prophet. Was it a coincidence, that her prediction was fulfilled? Not one woman in eighty millions could make such a prophecy with any prospect that it would be so strikingly fulfilled; for say what we will, this son of whom she prophesied in Vermont did a work that riveted the attention of the civilized world, and still rouses men to unfair and futile attack.

Mr. Kinney is our first witness that the spirit of prophecy was with the Latter Day Saints, even at that early date.

GOD MAY SPEAK, SAYS MR. KINNEY.

While we are on this line of thought we must thank Mr. Kinney for another admission (found on page 48 of his work) where he says:

God may reveal himself to any man, woman or child, but that he would choose such a man as we know Smith all his life to be his "vicegerent on earth" we can not for a moment believe.

This admission that "God may reveal himself to any man, woman, or child," is a recession from the position strenuously maintained by the colleagues of Mr. Kinney for the past eighty years or more, that the day of revelation is past. We have been told by the clergy of nearly all denominations that revelation ceased with John on Patmos. This admission comes as a grateful change. Our contention that there may be prophets in the church, and that inspired dreams, visions, and revelations may be received at any time, is practically conceded. Instead of being told, as formerly, that it is impossible that Joseph Smith should have received the revelations that he claimed to receive, because God does not give revelations in this age, we are now told that it is quite possible for any man, woman, or child to receive revelation, but not probable that Joseph Smith received any, because of his character.

Now this objection can be removed, for we can produce witnesses who knew Joseph Smith well and who testify that his character was most excellent. This at least balances the testimony of those who affirm that he was a bad man; and in such a situation wisdom directs that we should turn from the testimony of bigoted enemies and partisan friends and examine the revelations that he claimed to receive, judging them on their merits. This would be the safest course to pursue, not trusting the statements of intolerant enemies, for the Right Reverend Bishop Spalding, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, says:

Those who attacked the Mormons felt moved to publish everything they could discover or invent to the discredit of "Joe Smith" and his parents.—Joseph Smith, Jr., as a Translator, p. 4.

Whether or not Bishop Spalding had in mind Mr. Kinney's work when he penned those lines, we do not know; but evidently he had read similar books, and recognized the inventive powers of such writers.

Mr. Kinney, in fact, does make an effort to examine some of these revelations, and the straits to which he is driven in his effort to find something damnable in them is illustrated in a startling and spectacular manner, as we shall show by three examples.

EXAMPLE NUMBER ONE.

On page 18 of his book he says:

Smith soon received a revelation in which the Lord was reported as saying, "I will consecrate the riches of the Gentiles unto my people" (Doctrine and Covenants 42). It is said that this was so liberally interpreted by his people that they were soon in disrepute among their neighbors, and in 1832 Smith and his associate, Rigdon, were tarred and feathered by a mob.

We might imagine that this garbled version of the revelation on consecration was based on a rendition supposed to be found in the Book of Commandments (a book which the Saints attempted to publish in Missouri, but which was destroyed by the mob before it was completed; some sheets of which were preserved, but which were so full of typographical errors that they were never indorsed by the church) but Mr. Kinney himself cites us to Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, which shows that he knew the accepted version and indicates that he had it before him at the time.

Now note the true rendition of this commandment: "I will consecrate the riches of those who embrace my gospel among the Gentiles, unto the poor of my people who are of the house of Israel."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 11.

WHY DID MR. KINNEY OMIT THESE WORDS?

We have italicized certain of the words omitted by Mr. Kinney. These words explain that this is to be a consecration made by those who voluntarily accept the gospel and unite with the church; and it is to be for the aid of the poor and needy, a most worthy work, and quite in line with the teachings of Jesus, as well as with the policy of certain good Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians, who since the day of Joseph Smith have awakened to the necessity of paying tithing regularly into the church coffers for charitable purposes.

Joseph Smith himself explained it clearly:

Now for a man to consecrate his property, his wife and children to the Lord is nothing more nor less than to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the widows and fatherless, the sick and afflicted; and do all he can to administer to their relief in their afflictions, and for himself and his house to serve the Lord. In order to do this he and all his house must be virtuous and "shun the appearance of evil." Now if any person has represented anything otherwise than we now write they have willfully misrepresented us.—Times and Seasons, vol. 1, p. 85.

Now this was the teaching of that awful man, "the worst of the lot,"—for which he was tarred and feathered.

Possibly it was a fine thing that he had been poor in his youth. He seemed to have developed sympathy for the poor, who were so close to the heart of Jesus.

Now we press the query: Why did Mr. Kinney omit those explanatory words from his quotation, thus transforming a very innocent and commendable statement into something dark and damnable? The reader may judge.

BAPTISTS AND DISCIPLES USE TAR AND FEATHERS.

Right here we wish to remind Mr. Kinney that the Columbian Encyclopedia says: "1832, March 22d, a mob of Methodists, Baptists, Disciples, and miscellaneous zealots broke into the prophet's house, tore him from his wife's arms, . . . and tarred and feathered him."

While the historian, Hubert H. Bancroft, says: "On the night of the 25th of March, Smith and Rigdon were seized by a mob, composed partly of the Campbellites, Methodists, and Baptists of Hiram. . . . The captives were roughly treated, and expected to be killed; but after they had been stripped, beaten, and well covered with tar and feathers, they were released."—History of Utah, p. 90.

It is not a matter of surprise that Mr. Kinney should seek to palliate the conduct of his fellow Baptists on that occasion, and that others should smile at the work of their fellow "Campbellites" or Disciples; but when the facts are all known, of all the people involved in that dastardly act, the Saints have least cause for shame, and our friends of these popular churches should be last to mention the affair. This is but one of many instances showing who the lawbreakers were in those days.

EXAMPLE NUMBER TWO.

On pages 56 and 57 Mr. Kinney considers the testimony of the witnesses to the Book of Mormon. He attempts to prove that the eight witnesses were granted privileges that the Lord had previously said should be given to the three and to none else. He attempts to make it appear that the Lord had said that no one but the three should see the plates, asking if it is possible that the Lord had "forgotten that he said, when he showed the plates to the 'Three,' that no one else in that generation should see them?" He cites the reader to Doctrine and Covenants 5. No such statement appears in section 5; but it does appear that the Lord said that to none else would be given power to receive "this same testimony." While the eight saw the plates, they did not receive the same testimony, for the three testify that an angel appeared unto them bearing the plates, and that the voice of the Lord commanded them to testify. The eight bore no such testimony, nor anything like it. Many people saw Jesus; but to only a few, comparatively, was the peculiar testimony given that Peter bore (see Matthew 16: 16).

WHY DID MR. KINNEY DO THIS?

But here comes the most damaging feature of all. Mr. Kinney says:

The "Eight" in their testimony say:

We have seen the plates which contain this record, . . . and we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates; and they have been shown to us by the power of God . . . an angel came down from heaven and he brought and laid before our eyes and it is by the grace of God that we beheld and saw the plates.

Here he has taken language found only in the testimony of the "three" and ascribes it to the "eight" in an effort to prove that the "eight" received something that the Lord had previously said none but the "three" should receive, thus discrediting the revelations. The testimonies of the witnesses are found in the front of every copy of the Book of Mormon, and anyone who cares to do so can verify our statement and see for themselves what Mr. Kinney did.

Why did Mr. Kinney do this? Is it necessary to do these things in order to find flaws in the revelations? Are there no evils there that can be pointed out in the text as it stands, without garbling and twisting?

If this is simply carelessness, as we prefer to think of it, of what value is the book as a textbook for the study of church societies? If there were any ulterior motive back of it, which we would not suppose to be the case with a member of the Baptist clergy, the situation would be even worse.

Are such methods fair? Does this accord with the indorsement of the Editorial Committee of the Council of Women for Home Missions? They say on page 7 of this book: "Doctor Kinney's point of view is intelligent, broad, and just."

EXAMPLE NUMBER THREE.

On page 63 Mr. Kinney says:

There is a long prophecy (pp. 65-67) in reference to Joseph Smith in which it is said that he was to be a descendant in direct line of the elder Joseph through Lehi. Now the account further says that all the Nephites were destroyed and only Lamanites (Indians) were left upon this hemisphere. Therefore Smith must have been an Indian, but his mother tells us that he was descended from one Robert Smith who lived in England three hundred years ago. It will not do to say that he was the "spiritual" seed of Lehi, for in the prophecy the expression "fruit of thy loins" is used too often in referring to Joseph.

The descendants of Joseph of Egypt through Ephraim and Manasseh were to be scattered among the nations, becoming a "multitude of nations," and a "multitude of people," as the Bible assures us. It would not be impossible or even improbable that Joseph Smith's lineage might run back to this man, even though his immediate ancestors may have lived in England.

But in order to make a case Mr. Kinney inserts the clause, "through Lehi," dragging in a proposition that does not appear anywhere in the Book of Mormon. It is not stated anywhere in the book that this descent was to be through Lehi, neither did Joseph Smith to our knowledge ever make such a claim.

Are errors so scarce in the Book of Mormon that it is necessary for critics to manufacture them? Why pass by the absurdities which he says abound, and settle upon one of his own making? Is this another example of carelessness? The reader may decide.

We have selected three instances which demonstrate beyond a doubt that this book, so far as the first two chapters are concerned, is not a reliable textbook. However accurate Mr. Kinney's personal observations may be upon conditions existing in Utah, as set forth in chapters three to six, inclusive, his book is not reliable as a textbook on the work and teachings of Joseph Smith and the early church prior to 1844.

We have written personally to Mr. Kinney, calling his attention to two of these examples, and in order to be perfectly fair to him, will reproduce his reply in our next number. We can not afford to be less "broad" and "just" than Mr. Kinney is supposed to be by those good women who indorse his work and worshipfully regard it as an exact, reliable, and fair presentation of the subject.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

CHILDREN'S CHORUS.—We hereby acknowledge receipt of the program of the third semiannual concert of the Children's Chorus of Independence, Missouri. This concert was given in the Independence church on the evening of June 3. These children are under the direction of Sister B. M. Anderson. The work of this chorus is very highly spoken of. The success of the Independence Saints in this connection is suggestive of what might be done along the same line elsewhere.

TESTATOR DERANGED.—In the Word of Truth for May 28, R. B. Neal of "anti-Mormon" fame introduces a signed statement of one Robert H. Ford in an effort to show that Joseph Smith was the author of polygamy, and that he unlawfully cohabited with other women than his legal wife, Emma. A. B. Deming, represented as having witnessed the signing of the statement of Mr. Ford, is made to say of the witness that he is, "I fear, deranged on the subject of Mormonism." Little cares Mr. Neal. He would use the testimony, though the testator be a full-fledged subject for the asylum.

INDEPENDENCE SUMMER SCHOOL.—The Independence, Missouri, Branch is to have a summer school this season, similar to those conducted by our people at Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and Boston. This feature is a great factor in church work among the children, and through the children, among parents. It could with success be developed in many localities throughout the church.

BIBLE ASSOCIATION ACTIVITY.—At the recent annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society the report of the secretary brought out some interesting features in connection with the work of that institution. The Bible is said to be translated into 450 languages and dialects. The society issues 7,899,562 copies of the scriptures annually, comprising 963,346 Bibles, 1,266,919 New Testaments, 5,696,297 smaller portions. The scriptures are being circulated in Africa in 112 languages and dialects indigenous to that continent, including 19 complete Bibles in different African languages. The total expenditures for the year were considerably over a million dollars, with receipts slightly less.

CHURCH STATISTICS.—From a report furnished the Christian Herald by Church Recorder, C. I. Carpenter, we note the following statistics which will appear elsewhere, but not in collected form. The church at last report had a membership of 68,212, communicants in 42 States of the Union, in various countries of Europe, in Australia, Canada, Mexico, and the islands of the Pacific; 4,123 hold the priesthood. During the year 1912 the gain by baptism was 3,383, the loss by death and expulsion 617, leaving a net gain of 2,766. The General Sunday School Association had a membership of 30,584, including 622 local schools, 69 district organizations, with 4,216 enrolled in the home department. Zion's Religio-Literary Society had 10,984 enrolled members, 266 local societies, 46 districts, with a home department enrollment of 2,273. The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service had 1,222 members, 69 locals, 4 districts. A great army, truly, under the power of Israel's God; and if thus equipped, capable of performing the mission of the latter day dispensation.

INFANT ELECTION.—The Southern Assembly of the Presbyterian Church on May 19, by a vote of 135 to 44 refused to change the infant elect clause in the Confession of Faith. It, therefore, continues doubtful, according to the faith of this branch of the Presbyterian Church, whether all children are to be saved. It was Jesus who long ago said, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." We venture the suggestion that all infants may be saved, even in the absence of church action.

This Is My Duty.

To use what gifts I have as best I may;
 To help some weaker brother where I can;
 To be as blameless at the close of day
 As when the duties of the day began;
 To do without complaint what must be done;
 To grant my rival all that may be just;
 To win through kindness all that may be won,
 To fight with knightly valor when I must.

If.

If you can keep your head when all about you
 Are losing theirs and blaming it on you;
 If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you,
 But make allowance for their doubting, too;
 If you can wait and not be tired by waiting,
 Or being lied about don't deal in lies;
 Or being hated don't give way to hating,
 And yet don't look too good, nor talk too wise;

If you can dream—and not make dreams your master;
 If you can think—and not make thoughts your aim;
 If you can meet with triumph and disaster
 And treat those two impostors just the same;
 If you can bear to hear the truth you've spoken
 Twisted by knaves to make a trap for fools,
 Or watch the things you gave your life to, broken,
 And stoop and build 'em up with worn-out tools;

If you can make one heap of all your winnings
 And risk it on one turn of pitch-and-toss,
 And lose, and start again at your beginnings
 And never breathe a word about your loss;
 If you can force your heart and nerve and sinew
 To serve your turn long after they are gone,
 And so hold on when there is nothing in you
 Except the will which says to them, "Hold on";

If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
 Or walk with kings—nor lose the common touch;
 If neither foes nor loving friends can hurt you;
 If all men count with you, but none too much;
 If you can fill the unforgiving minute
 With sixty seconds' worth of distance run,
 Yours is the earth and everything that's in it
 And—which is more—you'll be a man, my son.

—Rudyard Kipling.

The Blessing of the Butterflies.

The waters of the valley spring
 Were pure as angel dreams, and clear
 As truth. A young thrush tried to sing
 From out the whispering copice near,
 While, by the spring and all around,
 Live blossoms decked the moistened ground.

Two varied groups, a multitude
 Blue as the ether of the skies,
 An equal host were golden hued,
 Twin legions of fair butterflies
 Escaped from chrysalitic prison,
 For some brief space to sport and glisten.

My footfall filled them with a fright.
 At once they leapt from their repose
 And floated in the evening light,
 As if the flowers from earth arose
 To gaze upon the silent sod
 That took them from the hand of God.

My peaceful attitude allayed
 Their panic fear, and once again
 On earth their plumage they displayed
 As stars adorn the azure plain.
 With hand uplifted toward the skies
 I stood, and blessed the butterflies.

My benediction breathed a prayer
 That for their tiny breathing spell
 They might enjoy, on earth, in air,
 His blessing who doeth all things well;
 Till painlessly, the hand of death
 Should claim the tribute of their breath.

Ay! Man may deem my deed "absurd,"
 "The folly of an aging mind."
 But he who marks the falling bird
 Is far, far older, and more kind.
 To him is ours a briefer span
 Than insect life to mortal man.

Far weaker are we, in his eyes,
 Than feeblest flutterer in ours,
 Yet as I blessed the butterflies,
 His blessings upon us he showers.
 For his very love's sweet sake he gives His benison to all that lives.

—Henry Tudor.

My God Is Here.

Now what's the use of grieving
 When something goes dead wrong?
 When we have little courage
 To push ourselves along?
 There's nothing gained by fretting,
 We win not by our fear;
 Then onward, soul, go onward—
 He's here! My God is here!

When sunbeams round us scatter
 Their golden rays of light;
 When raindrops softly patter
 In the middle of the night,
 One feels a thrill of pleasure,
 Or sense of love so dear,
 As the voice of nature whispers,
 "He's here! My God is here!"

When spring with all her flowers,
 With bird and busy bee,
 Fills brook with laughing waters,
 Puts leaf upon the tree,
 Old winter into silence
 Is hushed without a tear;
 We need no one to tell us
 He's here! My God is here!

When darkness fills our haven,
 And doubt obstructs the light,
 We stagger on our pathway,
 We falter in the night;
 We often lack for courage
 When there's really naught but cheer—
 'Twas Christ, my Master, said it,
 "He's here! My God is here!"

THE DUTIES OF A HIGH PRIEST.

NO. 10.—"DUTIES OF OFFICERS SERIES."

In the various dispensations of the gospel, God had a priesthood to administer the law and rites of his kingdom, to govern the membership by teaching, expounding, interpreting, and executing the law. They were also God's authoritative speaking body upon the earth through his church to the human family. The priesthood consists of two orders, denominated the Melchisedec and Aaronic, sometimes referred to as the higher and lower priesthood.

In the personnel of the priesthood we find various grades of officers, differing in authority and prerogative according to the grade they are in. In the Melchisedec or high priesthood we have apostles, high priests, seventies, and elders. Connected with and in the quorum of high priests are the orders of patriarchs or evangelical ministers, and bishops.

Referring to the duties of a high priest, it will be necessary to use such evidence as we may find in the standard books of the church. From the book of Doctrine and Covenants, section 104, we learn that Adam, Seth, Enos, Cainan, Mahalaleel, Jared, Enoch, and Methuselah were of the high priesthood, and held the office of high priest; and from this section and others we get the evidence that the duties and prerogatives of the office of high priest are that of presiding, and largely in caring for local work. We believe that Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jethro, and others were high priests; and though the history does not give as full an account of their priesthood work as we might desire, yet, vague as it is, the account leads us to believe the work done by those men was of a pastoral and presiding character. They were leaders, spiritual advisers, feeders of the flock, and organizers of the people to establish better conditions in the Lord's work and his kingdom.

The duties of high priests are more clearly set forth in latter day revelation, and no doubt for the purpose of properly carrying on the Lord's work.

In Doctrine and Covenants 104:9 some of the privileges as well as the power and authority of the Melchisedec priesthood are set forth:

The power and authority of the higher, or Melchisedec priesthood, is to hold the keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church; to have the privilege of receiving the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; to have the heavens opened unto them; to commune with the general assembly and church of the Firstborn; and to enjoy the communion and presence of God the Father, and Jesus the mediator of the new covenant.

What wonderful power and authority! what grand privileges! Yet man does not fully appreciate such a blessing until he attains to a high degree of spirituality. In this priesthood that holds the keys of spiritual blessings are high priests, and Doctrine and Covenants 104:5 says of them:

High priests after the order of the Melchisedec priesthood, have a right to officiate in their own standing, under the direction of the presidency, in administering spiritual things, and also in the office of an elder, priest (of the Levitical order), teacher, deacon, and member.

We note from this reading that high priests have a standing called their own standing, in which they may administer in spiritual things, thus differentiating them from other classes of officers in the same priesthood, and inferring a line of work clearly distinct and apart from the work of other officers.

High priests may, if God wills it, become a presidency over the high priesthood, Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11:

Of necessity, there are presidents, or presiding offices, growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church.

The duty of a high priest, if called to one of the offices mentioned, would be to carry out the function of the office;—if three are called and form a presidency, their duty would be to carry out the functions of the presidency, which vary according to the demand of the work of the church. They would preside over the church, the high priesthood, and the high council, and care for the work in general.

High priests compose the high council over which the Presidency presides, and as such council it is their duty to sit as a court on original or appealed cases. Doctrine and Covenants section 99 clearly defines their duty in court work. It is the duty of high priests as a high council to be connected with the bishop of the church in some features of work. From Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10 we quote:

Therefore, the residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and the needy, as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, etc.

High priests can, when necessity demands, as a high council, authorize the ordination of other high priests. They can also form a high council when abroad to try difficult cases, if appointed to do so. High priests may be bishops when appointed by the Lord and ordained by the First Presidency.

The above indicates the duties of high priests according to the various offices in which they may be working. Doctrine and Covenants 107: 42 gives us further information of the duties of high priests:

And again, I give unto you, Don C. Smith, to be a president over a quorum of high priests, which ordinance is instituted for the purpose of qualifying those who shall be appointed standing presidents or servants over different stakes scattered abroad, and they may travel, also, if they choose, but rather be ordained for standing presidents; this is the office of their calling, saith the Lord your God.

This clearly sets forth the primary duties of high priests, and we have the following points very dis-tingent: First, the quorum of high priests is instituted for the purpose of qualifying high priests to be standing presidents over stakes; second, high priests may travel if they choose, but their chief duty and work is to be standing presidents—hence their work is local and their duty pastoral; third, this is the office of their calling.

The church organization of 1830 no doubt sought to carry out this idea, for at a conference held in August, 1844, men were selected to go abroad in all the congressional districts of the United States to preside over the branches (see Millennial Star, vol. 5, p. 125). On page 126 we note the object for which the high priests were sent out was explained, and they were informed that the design was not for them to go and tarry for six months and return, but to settle down where they could take their families, and tarry till the temple was built, and build up stakes. To preside over branches, build up stakes, is pastoral work, and as high priests are designated for this kind of work we see their duties are to be pastors and ministers to the flock, to preside over, watch after, and care for and feed them.

To do this and fulfill the duty to the honor and glory of God it is necessary they should qualify themselves for the work, and the purpose of their quorum is that they may receive training and instruction, so that, with the actual experience they get while presiding, their ability will increase, and their efficiency become more pronounced each year. As the attorney is to his client the guiding hand in explaining the law and directing him in his legal affairs, so is the high priest as pastor of the flock. He expounds, explains, and helps them in every possible way, so that their efforts may be directed aright, and their procedure be always in harmony with the law, church custom, and usage. As the physician is to his patient in diagnosing, giving medical attention, and instruction how to do, and what to do to get well, and afterward keep well, so is the high priest and pastor to his people. He must diagnose their case, tell them just how and wherein they are sinsick, give them spiritual attention and advice that they may be healed, and the disease removed. He should teach them how to live that they may avoid sinsickness. He should teach them the necessity of quarantine (removal, suspension, discipline) in cases of contagion. He should lecture on surgery (expulsion, separation) in cases of abnormal growths, and foul conditions wherein the health and welfare of the body is at stake. He should be a wise counselor, a safe and judicious adviser, a sane and correct instructor.

All of the foregoing enters into the duties of a high priest in the line of work the Giver of all good has placed him in. That high priests have the duty of pastoral work placed upon them and should be left free to care for it and carry out the obligation, is in evidence from Doctrine and Covenants 122: 7:

The work now lying before the missionary quorums of the church is of such increased magnitude and importance—the field so white unto the harvest, and the need for laborers so great—that the twelve and the seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible; thus freeing these spiritual authorities and leaving them at liberty to push the preaching of the word into the new fields now widening before them.

It will be noticed in this quotation that high priests are mentioned among others as a standing ministry, and where organization of branch and district is effected they should be left in the care of the standing ministry,—indicating a special work of a pastoral character, also stating who should do the work. The duties devolving in this kind of work upon a high priest would be preaching, expounding, inviting to come to Christ, presiding, ordaining, administering to the sick, blessing children, baptizing, confirming, and pastoral visiting, teaching to pray in public and in secret, and to attend to all family duties, etc. In connection with this it would be his duty to organize such legitimate institutions and auxiliaries as would help and strengthen the branch, and at the same time carry out practical religion in service, helping others, and thus develop his flock in every good work, practical and spiritual, that will make them the children of Christ indeed and a blessing to humanity.

It seems as if the Lord desired to emphasize the necessity of caring for pastoral work, for in paragraph 8 of the section last quoted, he instructs the twelve to observe the law already given: "To ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and districts"; and then adds, "then will those officers set in the church be useful and he who gave the law be honored."

In conclusion we might sum up as follows: That there are two priesthoods in the church, the Melchisedec and Aaronic, sometimes called the higher and lower priesthoods. That high priests belong to the higher priesthood. That three high priests, when called of God and ordained, and received by the body, constitute a Presidency, and their duties would be the carrying out of the functions of that quorum. That twelve high priests may form a high council when appointed to that work, also a stake council; their duty would be to carry out the demands of the council. That high priests are to administer in spiritual things. That they may occupy in the office of bishops. That they are pastors, presidents, and local workers, and as such their duties are as herein stated. That the quorum of high priests was instituted to qualify them for the work the Lord has outlined. That the Lord clearly points out the duty and work of high priests. That when they are set apart to this work they will be useful and he who called them and gave the law will be honored. Other duties and features of a high priest might be detailed, but the above is sufficient on general principles to give the reader an idea of the duty and work of a high priest.

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM

OR

THE CURRENT REFORMATION IN CONTRAST WITH
TRUTH REVEALED.—PART 6.

BY E. E. LONG.

THE SCAPEGOAT OF EXPEDIENCY.

One of the most fortunate "discoveries" of the current reformation was the "law of expediency,"—an unwritten apologetic substitute for divine inspiration. By this lucky find we gain a point that will be observed as we proceed.

Mr. Campbell postulates as follows:

There is, therefore, a law of expediency, as well as the expediency of law. . . . Still, there are many things left to the law of expediency, concerning which no precepts are found in the apostolic writings. . . . Many things, indeed, that are of vital importance to the well-being and prosperity of the kingdom of Christ, are left to the law of expediency.—Christian System, pp. 96, 97.

Heretofore he has assumed that the Bible, "as we now have it," "in Hebrew and Greek," is perfect; and all that God ever gave, or ever intended to give to man, is contained therein. But in the study of the book he discovers that it fails to reveal many things of "vital importance," and he further assumes that they were all knowingly left to the law of expediency. What a travesty on the wisdom of the Holy Spirit! Could it be a "perfect revelation" so long as there were matters of vital importance left unrevealed over which Christians would contend, even unto bloodshed? We have a higher conception of the goodness of God than that.

Some of the "important" matters are referred to as follows:

There is no law, rule, or precedent for the manner of eating the Lord's supper, no hint as to the quantity of bread and wine to be used by each participant; nothing said about who shall partake first, or how it shall be conveyed from one to another. . . . Touching these and very many other such matters and things, nothing is enacted, prescribed, or decided by apostolic authority. . . . That "marriage is honorable in all" is clearly taught; but who ever read a verse on the manner in which this most important of all social institutions is to be performed?—Page 98.

And so he continues finding "important matters" for which he can discover no "thus saith the Lord" nor "approved precedent."

After discussing the matter at some length, another obstacle is encountered. "But here arises a practical and all-important question, viz: Who shall ascertain and who shall interpret this law of expediency?" A perplexing problem, truly; but Mr. Campbell was equal to the emergency, and the vexatious difficulty was finally surmounted. Here is how they did it:

We flatter ourselves that the principles are now clearly and fully developed by the united efforts of a few devoted and ardent minds. . . . The capital principles which have been elicited, argued out, developed and sustained in a controversy of twenty-five years, by the tongue and pens, of those who rallied under the banner of the Bible alone. . . . This cause, like every other, was first plead by the tongue, afterward by the pen and press. . . . We began with the outposts and vanguard of the opposition. Soon as we found ourselves in possession of one post our artillery was turned against another; and as fast as the smoke of the enemy receded we advanced upon his lines. . . . Every inch of it was debated, argued, canvassed for several years in Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Ohio. On this bottom we put to sea, with scarcely hands enough to man the ship. We had head winds and rough seas for the first seven years, a history of which would be both curious and interesting.—Christian System, pp. 8, 9.

Thus we "discover" that the whole scheme was evolved and developed in the fertile brains, and by the prolific ingenuity of Mr. Campbell and company. Neither God, Christ, nor the Holy Spirit, had anything to do with it; so these self-appointed restorers could look back over the field of hard fought battles, and view the scars of many conflicts, and with singular complacency say, "We did it." A man-made church par excellence.

EQUIPPING THE MINISTRY.

From the pen of Mr. Grafton we read:

Now that the work of restoration was fairly inaugurated, he marshaled all his resources to defend it from its open enemies.—Page 148.

If his cause were to continue to prosper and commend itself to thinking people, it must be supported by an educated ministry.—Page 165.

From the halls of Bethany College he continued from year to year, to send out an army of young men, trained and equipped to carry forward the work which he had so auspiciously begun.—Page 218.

Bethany College was founded in 1840 for the express purpose outlined above. Under the tutelage of Mr. Campbell, young men were "trained and equipped" to carry out his plans, under his direction. How unlike the apostolic training.

But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.—John 15: 26.

Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come.—John 16: 13.

But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you.—Acts 1: 8.

But tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high.—Luke 24: 49.

But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.—Galatians 1: 11, 12.

Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter.—Revelation 4: 1.

Yes, we can find a "precedent" for "training and equipping" men after Mr. Campbell's fashion, but we have to go to the Church of Rome, "Mystery Babylon" and her "harlot daughters," to locate it. Jesus chose the unlettered fishermen, and the Apostle Paul informs us:

Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty.—1 Corinthians 1: 26, 27.

Yet they continue to affirm, "where the Bible speaks, we speak," while their Bible colleges have multiplied exceedingly, and preachers are manufactured galore.

Reader, you can begin to understand why Clark Braden, who, after numerous attempts to maintain their position in public discussion, should advise his colleagues, "Brethren, what are known as church propositions are a humbug, and should never be debated." Braden was not the first man among them to detect the "great disparity," and admit failure.

THE CINCINNATI CONVENTION.

We must pass over many "curious and interesting" portions of their history until we come to their first national, or general convention which was held in Cincinnati, Ohio, October, 1849, where we will stop awhile and observe some of the proceedings, ever on the alert for an "approved precedent," as we have long since learned that no "Thus saith the Lord" is to be expected.

Turning to one of their latest historical productions we read:

Our first general convention was held in Cincinnati, in 1849, beginning October 24; it continued, with the preliminary meeting, five days. What were the motives that summoned this national assembly? First of all, it was urged on all sides, and by our wisest men, that it was of great importance that a closer acquaintance and fellowship of mind, heart and hand should now be established among us, because of the increasing number and widespread extent of our people. But, furthermore, also because we were beginning to awaken to the duty of executing the command of our King to carry the gospel to all parts of the world. These were the two leading motives that called this memorable convention. A. Campbell, in an article strongly advocating this step, said: "The purposes of such a primary convention are already indicated by the general demand for a more efficient and scriptural organization—for a more general and efficient cooperation in the Bible cause, in the missionary cause, in the education cause." . . . During the spring and summer of 1849, the calls for a general convention became more numerous and stronger. A. Campbell early in that year advocated such a meeting to devise methods "for the setting in order the things wanting among us to perfect the church and convert the world."—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 103.

From the above we learn the object and design of the convention as advocated by Campbell and others. On page 114 we read:

It was manifest on the first assembling of the convention that the chief burden on the hearts of the brethren was the organization of a general missionary society.

What about an "approved precedent"? Did the church of the first century ever organize a "missionary society"? Was not the church of Jesus Christ in and of itself a missionary organization? If the Jerusalem church was completed without this extra touch, would the organization of a missionary society add anything to its perfection? But hold! Has not Mr. Campbell written something concerning "missionaries and miracles"? Let us see.

Those spiritual gifts continued until the gospel was preached to all the world, Jews and Gentiles, and until churches were planted in all nations, then they ceased. Why? Doubtless because, in the eyes omniscience, they were no longer necessary. The missionary work was done. The gospel had been preached to all nations before the end of the apostolic age. The Bible, then, gives us no idea of a missionary without the power of working miracles. Miracles and missionaries are inseparably connected in the New Testament.—Christian Baptist, p. 15.

Now, will the proposed missionary society be able to confer the power of working miracles upon whomsoever it may send forth? If the Bible gives us no idea of a missionary without the power of working miracles, then there is neither a thus saith the Lord, nor an approved precedent for the step about to be taken. If missionaries and miracles are "inseparably connected"; and if missionaries are needed now, can they send out missionaries after the "apostolic order" without the power of working miracles? Here is, indeed, a problem. What is to be done? Why, that is very easy. Elder John T. Johnson offers the following resolutions and the "lion in the way" disappears:

Resolved, That a missionary society, as a means to concentrate and dispense the wealth and benevolence of the brethren of the reformation in an effort to convert the world, is both scriptural and expedient.

Resolved, That a committee of seven be appointed to prepare a constitution for said society. . . . J. T. Johnson's resolutions were adopted with spirit and without debate.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 115.

Here we again observe how the wonderful elasticity of the "law of expediency" comes into play. It stretches over and around this monster "innovation," because it has the stamp of popular approval; completely separating missionaries and miracles, and leaving the "power of working miracles" in the apostolic age. Wonderful indeed! Who but a convention of "progressive" Disciples could ever hope to overcome such a difficulty? But it was done and the American Christian Missionary Society was born with Alexander Campbell as president (p. 347). James Turner Barclay was selected as first foreign missionary, with Jerusalem, Palestine, as his base of operations.

While all this was accomplished amidst much enthusiasm and rejoicing, in the distance could be heard the ominous rumbling of an approaching storm. A discordant element must be reckoned with who are ever on the alert for heresy, and who have their theological pruning knives ready for "innovations."

We pause to meditate: Just forty years ago they started out to "restore" primitive Christianity, in order to save the world, depending entirely upon their own mental resources, independent of any additional light from God. What have they accomplished in the meantime? For forty years they have been debating, arguing, and discovering, by tongue, pen, and press, and after adopting and abandoning various theories and propositions, they have finally concluded that the only way of saving the nations of the world lies in the organization of a missionary society; something entirely separate and apart from the church of Jesus Christ, and one of the very things they had been so mercilessly gibing others about. Acting upon the impulse of forty years of premeditation they conclude to send out at least one missionary. Ho, ye slumbering nations! The Campbells are coming, adorned with the habiliments of modern sectarian trappings! They have organized a modern missionary society, a Bible society, a Sunday school; and paved the way for innumerable other necessary adjuncts; all under the gracious benevolence of the law of expediency. After forty years! "Progressive" par excellence.

But what of the other "restoration" movement that crossed the path of the "reformers" in the Western Reserve? What have they done in the meantime to preach the gospel to the nations of the world? They started out on a different plan, by first proclaiming a "Thus saith the Lord," announcing the restoration of the ancient order of things under God's direction. Naturally we may expect results commensurate with the claims made. Their movement took organic form April 6, 1830, with six individuals as charter members, nearly twenty-one years after the Christian Association was formed by the Campbells. Five years later, as soon as the material was available, the "Missionary Society" of the Church of Jesus Christ was organized by the ordination of twelve men after the apostolic order (Matthew 10: 1-15; 1 Corinthians 12: 28), to carry the gospel to the nations of the world, without "purse or scrip," and in less than a single decade mission work had been prosecuted in the United States, Canada, England, Wales, Russia, Australia, and other countries, accompanied by attestations of divine prerogatives in the way of prophecy, tongues, dreams, visions, and gifts of healing, so prevalent in the church of the first century (Acts 19: 1-6; Ephesians 4: 11-14; 1 Corinthians 12: 1-11), and all without the aid of a Bible college, or the wealth of a missionary society. Eight years before J. T. Barclay was appointed by the Cincinnati convention, a man of God's choosing had been sent to the holy land, and upon the Mount of Olives, in humble prayer, he dedicated the "promised land" anew to the gathering of the long dispersed Israelites, preparatory to the coming of the Lord in glory; but he made no attempt to convert the Jews.

But all that was as nothing with these pseudo restorationists who had gone on record as opposed to such things, and advertised their blindness by teaching that such things had long since ceased by divine appointment nevermore to be revived. It was all frowned upon as a delusion, and a snare; doubtless because of the first pronouncement, "Their creeds are all wrong," fell as heavy upon Mr. Campbell and company as on anyone else. The cruel persecutions through which the "Saints" had passed, and against which they lifted their weary pleadings, found no response from the adamant consciences of the self-appointed reformers. Indeed, a disposition was manifested at times to gloat over the sufferings of helpless victims. Even though they may have been the very worst of "dupes," it was no part of Christianity to persecute. That relic of barbarism was a peculiar trait of anti-Christ. If determined opposition on the part of Satan, manifested by persecutions without and dissensions within, may be taken as a token of divinity, measured by the same rule, the preponderance of evidence is ten to one in favor of "Mormonism" as against "Campbellism."

But be that as it may; we are content, yea, anxious, that the two movements shall stand on their respective merits as ecclesiastical productions, the Bible to be the standard by which to measure them, without any reference to the idiosyncrasies of the harbingers. These two movements are unique in that they are contemporaneous, and the only contestants in the arena of religious controversy for the honors of restoration.

But back to the "convention." Why form a missionary society apart from the church organization? Ah! the answer to the question involves the validity of the whole "reformation" church. There was nothing in the whole ecclesiasticism bigger than a local congregation. There was no such thing as a governing head, and as they had repudiated present-day revelation, they were limited to the "Bible alone," and every man was his own interpreter. Dilemma does not express the situation at all. They have awakened to the fact that such stupendous work as missionary labor must be under organized control, with a directing "head," which they did not have. The "society" was conceived and organized to meet the emergency. They have steadfastly repudiated the idea of an earthly "head" for the Church of Christ, but in this action they admit the necessity for it.

None better than the men here assembled understood the character, the value and the objects of the great cause we plead; they were its pioneers. None, too, ever comprehended better its power and destiny as a reformation leading to a restoration of apostolic Christianity, in doctrine, form, discipline, spirit and life, and to a mighty missionary activity that should seek the uttermost limits of the earth. None ever could and did understand better the wisdom, the duty and necessity of our establishing large and strong and well-organized enterprises to carry into execution the great commission of our King to conquer the world for him. It is because these "men of God" felt deeply our shortcomings and our wants that hindered the realization of all these ardent desires and hopes, that they thus met together, spoke and acted in this memorable convention.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 122.

We leave the above without comment further than to say that for egotistical assumption these "pioneers" and their biographies are entitled to first honors.

GRACELAND COLLEGE.

In the realm of politics it is quite frequently the custom for a platform to be presented by a candidate. This is usually done before election, however, and one ordinarily needs a platform on which to get into office. The work of Graceland College is not political in any sense, nor were we a "candidate" for the position. In fact, had we seen it coming in time we might have been able to dodge, but now having not only been elected, but also "inaugurated," it is a good time to lay down a platform of work and purposes.

Several, referring to a speech made at the conference of 1905, have asked us how we have happened to change so much toward the college, as, first, to get on the Board of Trustees, and now to assume the greater responsibility of president. In the first place, we do not claim unchangeability, and believe that unchangeability is only a virtue when combined with infallibility; hence we should take the utmost pleasure in changing a position when it is found to be mistaken; and we hope we will always have the courage to do so. In the second place, and purely incidentally, in 1905 we merely claimed that the church had a right to run the college or to close it, and we are still of the same opinion. But we take no special pride, that this is a fact, but merely state it as a fact. We did not then and do not now say it should be closed.

We are entering this work on that distinct platform that the college belongs to the church, and not to the Board of Trustees or the president of the college. What is past can not be changed. The future and the present are alone open for progressive work. The past is only important as giving us assistance in directing the future course of the work.

Our first and best allegiance is due the church, and then to the college as a part of the church work. Hence, we hope to see the college run in such a manner as both to deserve and secure your enthusiastic interest and support.

We believe we are approaching an era in the work of the church that will require trained minds to a greater extent and in a different way than has been the case in the recent past. In our own institution we can and should direct the instruction, so as to get at the same time such training as is given and is readily accredited in other institutions of learning, and also such philosophical and religious training as will best fit our students for service in life and in the church. Our educational standards should be placed as high as possible, and maintained there. The work of the college should be extended as rapidly as the needs of the church may require and as the church in conference may deem advisable. We are considering the advisability of taking up extension work, or work with those who are not able to take their studies in residence at the college, but would like to know what demand there is for work of this kind. The expense to the church must be considered, as well as the good to be gained.

As to finances, we are planning to treat the present indebtedness separately so that the tuition and regular income for the year may be first applied to meeting current expenses. Bishop Kelley plans to raise means to assist us in materially reducing the present debt, and this money shall be so used and so reported. It is regrettable that the college can not be run without a deficit, but at the same time we realize that all schools of college rank must be supported from outside, either by taxation, or by endowments.

As many departments as possible should be and will be placed on a self-sustaining basis. With the college work proper this is, however, impossible, as it has not been done and is not done in any institution of college rank. For this reason the support of the church will be needed, but to that support of the church there should be and will be the response on behalf of the board and executive officers of the college of reducing as rapidly as possible the debt by means raised for that purpose, and running the work of the college in such a manner as to keep within the annual donations. It is your college and you have a right to know how it is being run and why. If you know anything you think needs correcting, let us know; that is what we are here for,—to try to run the college for the very best interests of the body, and to measure its value by its service to the body and to society.

And in asking for your support, we are not asking for money alone, but even more for your interest, and by interest we do not mean blind support; but we will gladly receive intelligent criticism if furnished to us where it will do some good, rather than elsewhere where it will not help.

We are not convinced that it is best for everyone to come to Graceland College, but we do wish to increase our enrollment, and help all whom we possibly can. It is not simply the interest of Graceland College we have at heart, but that of our young people as well, and where work can clearly be done to better advantage elsewhere we shall not hesitate to say so. One member of the faculty, Professor C. B. Woodstock, has been on leave of absence at the University of Wisconsin the past year, and another, Professor F. M. McDowell, will be away this year, at least, at Clark University in order to take advanced work under Doctor G. Stanley Hall. Others of our young people have been encouraged, and have been and are taking more advanced work in other schools. It is the good of the church in the long run, not the making of a showing for this year; and it is the good of the church and not simply to make a special showing of one department at the expense of others, that we have at heart. We want those who wish to do serious work and to secure tangible results to prepare themselves for larger service.

We want your moral support; we want your attendance and interest if we can help you or any of yours; we want in due course your financial support, and such an expression from you through the conference as to how you wish the college run. We enter upon the work with no set prejudices, but with open mind to consider the best good of all.

The number desiring to work their way through college is so large that we are forced to permit only those to enroll in the industrial department who need the work in order to attend, and even then the demands are so large that we can not accommodate all. The board is continually hoping to be able to enlarge the industrial facilities, so as to admit all those who want to work their way through, as well as all those who must. The Sunday school and the Religio Society have appropriated a limited amount to help needy students through college by loaning them money to be repaid after the close of school work. This work is in charge of special committees; we hope to see its power increased for good. Business notes and proper securities will have to be given, but in such a way as to make it really helpful to those worthy and desirous of having such assistance.

We look for a large enrollment this year. In fact, the college department will certainly show a marked increase. With each one to help, the burden will not be heavy on anyone.

If the support of the church is continued, even as it has been in the past, it will be possible gradually to reduce the present indebtedness. No new buildings or expensive improvements should be undertaken without the approval of the church.

If it succeeds, it will be because the student body is aroused, because the alumni association is giving the institution their support; because the church is becoming interested and is giving not only money, but moral support and enthusiasm as well. It will take all of this, as well as earnest work by the Board of Trustees and the faculty of the institution, and the support of the general church officers to make it all it should be. The value of the college is not to be measured by its buildings, but must eventually be determined by its student body and graduates, and by its influence for higher educational standards, using that word in the high sense of intelligence, or in other words, light and truth.

THE BOOK OF MORMON AS A TRANSLATION.—PART 1.

BY W. R. DEXTER.

A REPLY TO THE REVEREND F. S. SPALDING, D. D., BISHOP OF UTAH.

Reverend Spalding opens his work as follows: "If the Book of Mormon is true, it is, next to the Bible, the most important book in the world."

He next asks the question: "Was the translation of the Book of Mormon correct?" He then endeavors to cast reflection upon the translation of the Book of Mormon by giving two different accounts of Professor Anthon's opinion in regard to the origin of characters written on the plates from which the translation was made. Following this the Reverend Spalding gives his clinching argument against the Book of Mormon by endeavoring to show that the so-called Book of Abraham was incorrectly translated by Joseph Smith, jr. To do this he places the opinion of various "scholars" in juxtaposition with that of Joseph Smith as to the interpretation of certain fac similes published in the Pearl of Great Price in connection with the Book of Abraham.

Reverend Spalding's argument, then, may be summed up as follows: Since certain scholars differ in the interpretation of the fac similes printed in connection with the Book of Abraham, therefore the Book of Abraham is a mistranslation. Since the Book of Abraham is a mistranslation, therefore the Book of Mormon was not translated correctly, and Joseph Smith was a fraud.

JOSEPH SMITH'S WORK AS A TRANSLATOR OF A DUAL NATURE.

The work of Joseph Smith, jr., as a translator, is necessarily divided into two parts; that done by divine direction and inspiration, and that done by his own initiative and as a man. The first translating that he did of which we have any record was the translation of the Book of Mormon from golden plates delivered to him by an angel, as an unlearned young man, from the language written on those plates to very good English, by the voice of inspiration. Joseph Smith claimed to do this at the instigation, under the direction, and through the inspiration of God. Subsequent to this, after Joseph Smith had secured some knowledge of foreign languages, of his own accord, without direction from God, he essayed to translate the inscriptions written upon papyrus said to have been brought from Egypt, of which the so-called Book of Abraham constituted a part.

We will first investigate in this paper Joseph Smith's work in translating the Book of Mormon, then his work of translating the Book of Abraham, and finally test the conclusions of the Reverend F. S. Spalding, D. D.

Reverend Spalding does not question the origin of the Book of Mormon, admitting that Joseph Smith translated the plates delivered to him by the angel; but endeavors to show through Professor Anthon and the so-called scholars that there might be an error in translating the book from the plates.

MARTIN HARRIS'S TESTIMONY.

Mr. Spalding quotes Joseph Smith's statement received from Martin Harris published in the Pearl of Great Price, as follows:

I went to the city of New York, and presented the characters which had been translated, with the translation thereof, to Professor Charles Anthon, a gentleman celebrated for his literary attainments. Professor Anthon stated that the translation was correct, more so than any he had before seen translated from the Egyptian. I then showed him those which were not yet translated, and he said they were Chaldaic, Assyriac, and Arabic, and he said they were true characters. He gave me a certificate certifying to the people of Palmyra, New York, that they were true characters, and that the translation of such of them as had been transcribed were also correct. I took the certificate and put it into my pocket and was just leaving the house, when Mr. Anthon called me back and asked me how the young man (Joseph Smith) found out that there were gold plates in the place where he found them. I answered that an angel of God had revealed it unto him. He then said to me, "Let me see that certificate." I accordingly took it out of my pocket and gave it to him, when he took it and tore it to pieces, saying there was no such thing as ministering angels, and that if I would bring the plates to him he would translate them. I informed him that part of the plates were sealed, and that I was forbidden to bring them. He replied, "I can not read a sealed book."

Following this, Reverend Spalding introduces another version of the Anthon episode, from Professor Orson Pratt, in his essay on "Prophetic evidence in favor of the Book of Mormon," Liverpool, January 15, 1851, who reprints from a periodical entitled The Church Record, as follows:

Many years ago, the precise date I do not now recollect, a plain-looking countryman (Martin Harris) called upon me with a letter from Doctor Samuel S. Mitchel, requesting me to examine and give my opinion upon a certain paper, marked with various characters, which the doctor confessed he could not decipher, and which the bearer of the note was very anxious to have explained. A very brief examination convinced me that it was a mere hoax and a very clumsy one, too. The characters were arranged in columns, like the Chinese mode of writing, and presented the most singular medley that I ever beheld. Greek, Hebrew, and all sorts of letters, more or less distorted, either through unskillfulness or from actual design, were intermingled with sundry delineations of half moons, stars and other natural objects, and the whole ended in a rude representation of the Mexican Zodiac.

These two quotations establish the fact that Professor Anthon did examine a copy of characters presented to him by "a plain looking countryman" (Martin Harris). In the former quotation Professor Anthon admits the correctness of the translation, as well as the genuineness of the characters. In the latter he deals with the genuineness of the characters and says nothing about the translation. Then Mr. Spalding establishes nothing in regard to the translation, but questions the genuineness of the copy. Further than that nothing is established as, we have the statement of one man in contradistinction to that of another, and some further evidence must be introduced to establish the claims of the Reverend Spalding.

Reverend Spalding, after making these quotations with reference to the opinion of Professor Anthon, places a discount upon Professor Anthon's opinion by saying: "There was no scholar living whose opinion would have been of real value, even had all the plates been submitted for his inspection." Hence, if Professor Anthon's opinion would have been of no real value, there is no consistency in Reverend Spalding introducing it as argument against the correctness of the Book of Mormon translation. And Mr. Spalding, on page 25, quotes James H. Breasted, Ph. D., Haskell Oriental Museum, University of Chicago, as follows:

In 1822 Champollion published the first successful steps in the decipherment of the Egyptian hieroglyphics. It was only very gradually after this that he gained the ability to read the simpler and clearer sentences in hieroglyphic records. Little of the language, comparatively speaking, was understood when he died in 1832. He left in manuscript an elementary grammar, which was published by the Government, beginning in 1836, and reaching completion in 1841. It would have been impossible for any American scholar to know enough about Egyptian inscriptions to read them before the publication of Champollion's grammar.

Thus we see that Professor Anthon's opinion is worthless so far as the correctness of the translation is concerned; for if he was not able to decipher Egyptian hieroglyphics, it is reasonable to suppose he would not be able to decipher the characters of the Book of Mormon, copies of which had been presented to him for translation; and when Professor Anthon ventured an opinion as to what language the characters represented, he was mistaken; and it is no wonder that the copy of the characters was unintelligible to him, as they would be to any other who did not have a reading knowledge of the language in which they were written.

SAINTS PURSUE A LOGICAL COURSE.

The Reverend Spalding pays the believers of the Book of Mormon a compliment in stating:

The question we now ask is, "Was the translation of the Book of Mormon correct?" As far as we can discover, no further attempt was made to give an answer to this question from competent linguists. The emphasis was rather placed upon the actual objectivity of the plates themselves, and that end was secured by the exhibition of the plates, first to three and later to eight witnesses, and the publication of their testimony. This was the logical method of procedure, because there was no scholar living whose opinion would have been of real value, even had all the plates been submitted for his inspection.

He says, "As far as we can discover, no further attempt was made to give an answer to this question from competent linguists;" and then tells us, "There was no scholar living whose opinion would have been of real value, even had all the plates been submitted for his inspection." He practically admits that he would have done just as the Lord did, in introducing the Book of Mormon to the world,—shown the plates to eleven competent witnesses, and would have told them that the work done for him by Joseph Smith was correct.

To translate from one language to another, or judge as to the correctness of a translation, it is necessary that the scholar or judge be in possession of three things: the manuscript from which the translation is to be made; a knowledge of the written language in which the manuscript is written; and a knowledge of the language into which it is to be translated. If an individual lacks any one of these he is not in a position to judge as to the merits of a translation.

Mr. Spalding tells us on page eight of his work that:

Champollion published the first successful steps in the decipherment of Egyptian hieroglyphics in 1822, and little of the language was understood when he died in 1832. The grammar which he began was not completed and published until 1841.

The translation of the Book of Mormon was begun in 1827 or 1828, and was published in 1830 for the first time. Thus the Book of Mormon was in print before Champollion died, and eleven years before the Egyptian grammar started by him was completed. So that, according to Reverend Spalding, Professor Anthon did not have a reading knowledge of the Egyptian language. Is it not reasonable to suppose, then, that Professor Anthon did not have a reading knowledge of the language in which the plates of the Book of Mormon were written? If so, he was not in a position to judge as to the genuineness of the characters, copies of which were presented to him by Martin Harris. Professor Anthon did not know what the characters were, so his testimony can not be accepted as against the correctness of the translation.

THE SITUATION.

Since "there was no scholar living whose opinion would have been of real value," who was acquainted with the language written upon the plates to be translated, it was necessary for the Lord to use some other method of getting the translation before the world than submitting the work to some scholar. It was necessary to have it translated, for a book or plates written in a language unknown to the people of the world would be useless, so far as imparting knowledge is concerned.

Here is the situation: The Lord desired a translation to be made from plates, written by men whom he had chosen to write an account of some past epochs of history. He desired to use the testimony of the men who wrote this book in conjunction with a book already in the field (the Bible) for the accomplishment of his purposes, the salvation and eternal life of man. He knew there was no man living who had a knowledge of the language in which the plates were written, and consequently was under the necessity of performing that work himself. It was the Lord's work; it was for him that the translation was to be made. He understood the language of the plates and the language of the people whom he desired to reach, and he had the plates. He desired to translate the work and chose to do it through the instrumentality of man, and chose for that purpose an unlearned young man by the name of Joseph Smith. This was not new to him; he had used a man by the name of Moses to write a history of the creation and of his people down to the time of Moses. In fact, Moses wrote the first five books of the Old Testament. John the Revelator, on the Isle of Patmos, at the command of God, had written what God revealed to him.

THE WITNESSES.

Joseph Smith alleged that to do this work God delivered into his hands the plates containing the record, and also the Urim and Thummim, by the use of which the translation was made. Joseph Smith did the work and the Book of Mormon in the English language was the result; a book which bears the strongest testimony that Jesus was the Christ, and that the principles he sought to establish in Palestine were true.

But God did not leave us without testimony in regard to the correctness of the translation nor the existence of the plates from which the translation was made. Three witnesses, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris, testified as follows:

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that we, through the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen the plates which contain this record, which is a record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites their brethren, and also of the people of Jared, who came from the tower of which hath been spoken; and we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for his voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore we know of a surety, that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates; and they have been shown unto us by the power of God, and not of man. And we declare with words of soberness, that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and saw the plates, and the engravings thereon; and we know that it is by the grace of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, that we beheld and bare record that these things are true; and it is marvelous in our eyes, nevertheless, the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it; wherefore, to be obedient unto the commandments of God, we bear testimony of these things. And we know that it we are faithful in Christ, we shall rid our garments of the blood of all men, and be found spotless before the judgment seat of Christ, and shall dwell with him eternally in the heavens. And the honor be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost, which is one God. Amen.

OLIVER COWDERY.
DAVID WHITMER.
MARTIN HARRIS.

Eight witnesses bear record as follows:

Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom this work shall come, that Joseph Smith, jr., the translator of this work, has shown unto us the plates of which hath been spoken, which have the appearance of gold; and as many of the leaves as the said Smith has translated, we did handle with our hands; and we also saw the engravings thereon, all of which have the appearance of ancient work, and of curious workmanship. And this we bear record with words of soberness, that the said Smith has shown unto us, for we have seen and hefted, and know of a surety, that the said Smith has got the plates of which we have spoken. And we give our names unto the world to witness unto the world that which we have seen; and we lie not, God bearing witness of it.

CHRISTIAN WHITMER.
JACOB WHITMER.
PETER WHITMER, JUN.
JOHN WHITMER.

HIRAM PAGE.
JOSEPH SMITH, SEN.
HYRUM SMITH.
SAMUEL H. SMITH.

From the above we discover that eleven witnesses bore record that they saw the plates; eleven, that they saw the engravings; and three, that they knew by the voice of God that the plates had been translated by the gift and power of God, and that the work was true. And this testimony has never been successfully controverted. In addition to this testimony, there is the testimony of thousands of believers in the Book of Mormon who have lived since the introduction of the work to the world: God has testified to them by the same voice that it is true.

In order to disprove the testimony of these eleven witnesses, it is necessary to destroy their testimony by one or both of two methods: either (1) by introducing witnesses who testify to the contrary, or (2) by impeaching the witnesses themselves. To do the former it will be necessary to find some one who claims to know: (1) that Joseph Smith did not have the engraved plates, and (2) that the translation was not made, and (3) that the translation was not made by divine revelation. To do the latter it would be necessary to introduce witnesses who were acquainted with these eleven witnesses at the time this testimony was given who would testify that these eleven witnesses were unreliable men whose veracity could be questioned.

To show that Joseph Smith did not have the plates it would be necessary to find some other source from which the Book of Mormon could have been taken, or find those men who claimed that God had revealed to them that Joseph Smith did not have any plates from which to translate. To prove that a translation was not made it would have to be shown from what source then the Book of Mormon as we have it came. This could be done only by producing the source or by divine revelation (a possibility which the enemies of the Book of Mormon do not admit). The best way to disprove the divine assistance in the translation of the Book of Mormon would be for God himself to reveal it to some men to-day that he had nothing to do with that translation; but so far as recorded to whomever he has revealed himself to date, he has given a testimony of his assistance in that work.

Up to the present time no other origin for the Book of Mormon has been presented or maintained successfully before the world, and the testimony of these eleven witnesses remains unsuccessfully challenged. Every theory to the contrary has been successfully met, and the Right Reverend Spalding himself does not question the existence of the plates, but endeavors to disprove the correctness of the translation. He evidently accepts part of the testimony of the three witnesses, that the plates existed and the translation was made, but refuses to accept their testimony that the translation was correct. Is it not clear that if Mr. Spalding could have discovered some other origin than the plates for the Book of Mormon he would have produced it?

We now ask the question: "Shall the testimony of the witnesses stand?" Up to the present time its enemies have been unable to overthrow the testimony of the witnesses for the Book of Mormon. Their reputation as men has not been successfully impugned. Then, if there can be no direct evidence offered to contradict their testimony, and their reputation for veracity is not overthrown, the "words of soberness" of these eleven witnesses must stand.

THE SMALLEST THING IN THE UNIVERSE.

We know that the big telescopes, aided by the photographic plate, reveal stars to the number of at least one hundred millions lying utterly beyond the confines of unaided vision. Now it appears that a pinch of salt which one could hold on the point of a pen-knife is made up of atoms numbering not hundreds of millions merely, but billions of billions. The population of atoms in the smallest particle of matter visible under the microscope is greater by far than the total human population of the globe since the race developed. And a little instrument composed of two fragments of gold-leaf makes it possible to perform the miracle of counting these denizens of the realm of infinite littleness.

Within the smallest atom there is a something almost two thousand times smaller than the atom itself—a something that is detachable from the atom, and susceptible of being measured as to its mass and tested as to its electric charge with the aid of apparatus actually in use in the laboratory. This ultimate particle of matter is called the electric corpuscle or electron. We owe our knowledge of it chiefly to Sir Joseph Thompson. It is the smallest thing in the world; and it is probably the basal substance out of which all matter of whatever character is built.

As regards bulk, the electron is, according to the French physicist Jean Becquerel, billions of billions of times smaller than the atom. To make the comparison vivid, Becquerel likens the electrons in an atom to a swarm of gnats gravitating about in the dome of a cathedral. As we penetrate thus far and farther into the realm of the infinitely little, seeing in imagination the smallest visible particle of matter resolved into myriads of molecules, each molecule into sundry atoms, and each atom into its teeming swarms of electrons, the question naturally arises, what lies beyond?—Doctor Henry Smith Williams, in Harpers Magazine for June.

START ON ARCTIC TRIP.

Vilhjalmur Stefansson and his men will leave New York next week to spend the next three or four years in the Arctic regions. . . . Mr. Stefansson will be at the head of the most important scientific expedition—as distinguished from an exploring expedition—that ever entered the polar regions. In several respects it will be unique. Its aim is more comprehensive than that of any of its predecessors. It is the largest purely scientific expedition ever to enter these regions.

It will be accompanied by more specialists of science than any previous one. And it is the only scientific expedition—so far as Mr. Stefansson can discover—that was ever sent out at the sole expense of a government. Canada is paying the cost. No individual has contributed a penny, although the National Geographic Society of Washington first voted Stefansson the sum of $22,500 for the trip, and only relinquished its claim on the explorer's services when it was found that the Canadian Government desired to "father" the expedition and would do so, in accordance with the National Geographic Society idea, this year.

Mr. Stefansson's primary aim is to learn whether or not there is land in that vast unexplored area which lies to the north and west of Beaufort Sea. This is the largest portion of the globe still unexplored. . . . The secondary purpose of the expedition is to find out all that is findable about the birds and beasts and land and sea of that portion of the Arctic which touches on the Beaufort Sea.

Stefansson doesn't really hope to find a new race in that dark patch on the map. There may be no land there, to begin with.

"Even if there is land I do not expect to find man there. But I would be sure of finding the remains of human habitations."—Washington (District of Columbia) Evening Star, May 22, 1913.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

"The Least Among You."

"He who is least among you all, the same shall be great."

We are but beginning to appreciate in the full what mothers are. They and their work have been depreciated far below their worth. It is only as the problems of social development are being worked out that the responsible position of the mother in her home and the need of preparation for it are coming to be recognized.

When we say the work of the mother has been depreciated, we do not mean to say that this has always been, or even in many instances has been, unkind depreciation. There are, however, too many instances in which mother means the one whose duty it is to prepare the meals, repair the clothing, and have general charge of the affairs inside of the house. In some cases, and by no means isolated ones, the mother is a household drudge.

It is coming to be recognized that mother is something more than cook, laundress, dressmaker, and nurse all in one. It is coming to be recognized that to mothers is committed the opportunity of being the most influential factor in the development of their children into good men and women. Society, the church, the Nation are compelled to look to the mothers in their individual homes to do the most important part of the work of developing the race. No other class of teachers has the opportunities that mothers hold in their hands.

Mothers are teachers, the greatest of all in their influence upon their children, either by what they do or by what they fail to do. For good or for ill, they are the teachers of their children. In the plastic years of infancy, childhood, and youth they teach, and much of their teaching becomes indelible in the habits of their children.

The Obscure Teacher.

In one of the reunions of the church a young woman sat in the audience during a meeting devoted to auxiliary work. Beside her was her child, a little boy. As the program progressed, various other women appeared on the platform and did the parts assigned them, singing, reading, or addressing the audience as the case might be.

As she listened, a feeling of discomfort began to stir in the heart of the young mother, which at last found expression in the words, "I wish I could do something like that." Her face was clouded and her voice was decidedly regretful.

The stranger to whom she spoke the wish that had welled up in her heart smiled encouragingly and pointed to the little boy, saying gently, "Here is your work."

How much the words meant, "Here is your work!" If only it could be realized that there is no greater work in all the world than that intrusted to the mothers of men! If only it could be realized that the work done by mothers in their homes may be vastly greater than any public work they could do!

Let the plain, modest mothers, obscure teachers of their children, called seldom or never before the public, not underestimate themselves or their work. "Least among you all" they may feel, but they shall be great if they do well that paramount work God has intrusted to them.

We assert with all reverence that the salutation of the angel to Mary of Nazareth places upon motherhood its true stamp, "Hail, thou . . . who art highly favored of the Lord." Mary received into her custody the Son of God, and every mother receives in her arms a child of God. So should she regard her charge; so should she appreciate its greatness with holy joy that passes all that public applause might bring to others.

Overworked Mothers.

Always, when we urge the earnest subject of the necessity of mothers being the teachers of their children, there is present with us a great sympathy for the many overburdened mothers of whom too much is required, and there comes to us a couplet from a poem which reads,

"A little elbow leans upon your knee—

Your tired knee which has so much to bear."

There is a limit to human strength and endurance, and more than one woman, upon whom life presses heavily, knows what it is to toil unceasingly at the immense task of feeding and clothing a large family. And such women may ask with good reason how it would be possible for them to do more than they are doing.

Aside from being unkind, it is unwise to permit the mother to be overworked. It may not be intentional, but it is both unkind and unwise. Many a mother falls by the wayside when the load becomes too heavy, and it is left to others to give her children the care which, naturally, they should have had from her.

The last issue of The World's Work makes the statement that investigation into the reasons why prosperous Missouri farmers gave up their farms and moved to town showed the chief reason to be the life the women were compelled to live on the farm. We quote from the article:

"And as it is in Missouri, so it is elsewhere. If you will ride through the country-side you will pass farm after farm equipped with modern machinery to help the men do their work. You may even see an automobile standing by the old well from which the farmer's wife draws the water for her kitchen, for her house, and for her washing, but you will see few such conveniences to lighten the labor of the home."

The mother should be spared where it is possible the unceasing toil that degenerates into drudgery. She should have time for the child who comes to lean upon her knee, and tell her his sorrows or his joys. How often the tired, nervous mother sends the child from her as she would not do, had she more time to give him. Sometimes she sends him away when he comes with a question which gives her just the opportunity needed to teach him one of those little lessons mothers can give and which so few other teachers have opportunity to give.

A Husband.

When we speak of husbanding our resources, we mean that we use them frugally, with care. A husband, to fulfill the significance of his title in the household, should be careful of his wife. He should see that she is not overworked, that she is not taxed beyond her strength.

The Scriptures teach that a man should regard his wife as a part of himself, that he should love her unselfishly and devotedly, that he should give himself for her, as Christ gave himself for the church.

We quote again from The World's Work:

"The farmers near Chatfield, Minnesota, have established a cooperative laundry next to the cooperative creamery. A farmer coming to the creamery on Monday morning brings the wash with him. On Wednesday he can take it home with him. Even by such homely things as these—were such laundries established through the country—could a very vital change be wrought in the economics of the Nation."

The vital change wrought would be not only in the economics of the Nation, but in the intelligence and morality of the Nation, were the mothers of the land, set free from household drudgery and given opportunity to devote themselves more to their children.

We have not said the mother should be free from work, but that she should be free from excessive work, from drudgery, from that which makes her dull and lifeless, nervous and irritable, worried and careworn.

Mother is entitled to her share of the brightness and happiness of this world. She does not always have it. Father and the children should do what they can to lift the burden of the household. Mother is something more than the servant of all. She should have opportunity to be the companion of all, to share their joys as they expect her to share their troubles.

Give mother her chance, if she has not been having it in your home.

"The Questions of Children."

From The Golden Now we quote the following letter of a mother:

"My little two-and-a-half-year-old boy is one of those regular little chatterboxes you hear about. It occurred to me it would be interesting to keep an account of the questions he asked in a day, to answer them as truthfully and plainly as I could, and then, on the following day to go over them again with him, only this time I would be the questioner; this was to find out how much his young mind had retained.

"His questions had a wide range—all along the scale from 'Where is God now?' to 'What are nasty old spiders made for?'—and there were just forty-seven of them through the day.

"Imagine my surprise to find that he could give a very clear and correct idea of nearly all that I had, with pains, explained to him the previous day. When I saw this I began to realize what an important factor a mother is in the daily mental development of her child, and I pledged myself never to grow impatient again at baby's innumerable questions, even if I had to neglect some household duty to give them necessary attention."

The Prayer Union,

Dear Sisters: We wish to inform you that all personal requests for prayers should be sent directly to the editor of the Home Column, Sister Salyards, Lamoni, Iowa. Also please note that all who intend to take part in this work are requested to send their names to Sister Eleanor Kearney, 926 Sprain Street, Clinton, Missouri.

It has been suggested that the Scriptures should be committed to memory, but I think this will not always be possible, as those from the Book of Mormon will sometimes be of considerable length. But there will be a special memory verse from the Bible. There is no objection, of course, to memorizing all you can; it is a help in fixing the mind on the subject.

All requests for prayer are to be observed for each individual as well as the general prayers for all sick and afflicted.

ELEANOR WALDORF KEARNEY.

Requests for Prayer.

A mother requests prayers for her son who is afflicted, that the affliction may be removed, if according to God's will.

A sister in distress sends the following request: "I will beg of you to have my name in remembrance before our Father in heaven, that he may bless me with his Spirit and remove the (as it seems) spirit darkness which is troubling me. And may God's blessing rest upon you all."

Brother S. D. Allen, of Milton, Florida, writes: "Please present the name of Brother Montgomery Allen to the Prayer Union, as he began treatment to-day for the removal of a very large cancer from his neck."

Letter Department

WEST PLAINS, MISSOURI, May 26, 1913.

Editors Herald: We enjoy the weekly visits of the HERALD. I read nearly all there is in each paper. I am very much interested in the articles that relate to the United Order of Enoch, and in the letters.

I was associated with the united order that was organized in Sevier County, Utah, in 1874, and closed in 1877. The last work I did for that order, was tending masons on the terraces around the Manti temple, in Sanpete County. While there we heard of the death of Brigham Young. I had a strange experience, with many others, but I believe the order is truly a step in the right direction. To my mind the order is for equal opportunity and brotherhood. The Savior said, Unless ye are one, ye are none of mine.

We are still very much in love with this part of Missouri and are trying to help build up the waste places. I wish to relate a very interesting dream I had on the night of the 7th inst. I saw an aeroplane, or flying machine of some kind, coming through the air, perhaps a mile distant, and it was my first sight of anything so grand. I watched it very closely. It drew nearer where I was standing in the moonlight, circled around where I stood. When it was within three hundred feet of me it looked like a chariot covered in with the most beautiful flowers. Presently it stopped just in front of me—a glorious sight, about twenty feet in the air.

In the center of this bower stood the Savior, looking straight at me, and he spoke to me and said: Go and preach my gospel. The aeroplane turned and vanished, but I seemed electrified, and I said in my joy, like Job of old: Now I know that my Redeemer liveth. My voice awakened me. I shall not soon forget this dream. Those who know me will think this is a strange dream for a man so unsophisticated as I am; but in early youth I was called the dreamer of my father's family.

My idea of the gospel has always been to do unto others as you would have them do to you. I would like to encourage the Saints to cheer up. Don't be downcast. Keep your Sunday religion on all the time. If you live afar off, come to Zion, and help build up the waste places. There is plenty of room here for thousands of people, a beautiful climate, cheap land, and all the natural advantages. This part of the country is not nearly so thickly settled as the West. Nearly all the land is useful, while out there nine tenths of the arid States are waste—useless desert. From observation I think the land here will produce as much as in the West, while it is only valued at about one fifth.

Let us as Saints try to live so our light may be seen. I would like to suggest to the Saints near West Plains that we get together and find a suitable location for a meeting-house, as there are plenty of Saints in this neighborhood to justify such action, and we should meet together often. We should take more interest spiritually, and give others a chance to hear the glad message.

We ask to be remembered by the Saints in their prayers, that we may hold on to the iron rod. Hoping to remain faithful we are,

ED AND ALLVINA L. NAZER.

OTTUMWA, IOWA, June 3, 1913.

Editors Herald: Would say to the Saints of Iowa, if they know of any German settlement where we could get a place to hold a series of meetings to let me know and I will gladly come. Address me at Box 225, Montrose, Iowa.

Have been holding a series of meetings at Bear Creek, about five miles southwest of Ottumwa, Iowa, with fair success. Some are almost persuaded and will join soon, I think.

In gospel bonds,

C. C. JOEHNK.

DENNIS PORT, MASSACHUSETTS, May 28, 1913.

Editors Herald: The outlook in this region is quite favorable at present. Last week a minister of the Pentecostal Church made an attack on Joseph Smith, and the Latter Day Saints in general, on the strength of an objection being raised in roundabout way, and a statement we would meet him, quite unknown to the writer. However, we attended his service two nights. On the second night he apologized, and said he had no reference to the Reorganized Church.

At the close of the service I thanked him, and then took up the defense for Joseph Smith. He, of course, had no use for Smith, but in the end he said he believed Joseph Smith to be an honest man.

Before coming here and while at home in Providence I attended an oratorical contest at Brown University. One of the subjects was, "The Menace of Mormonism." The speaker said some very hard things about Joseph Smith. Having no opportunity to talk to him, I took the next means and wrote him. He is a young man, and I think fair-minded. I like the tone of his reply, though short.

Yours for final triumph,

WILLIAM ANDERSON.

KEMPTON, NORTH DAKOTA, May 28, 1913.

Editors Herald: I am one of the isolated ones. I have been a member of the church sixteen years, and am rejoicing in this grand gospel.

I was administered to at one of our reunions at Nebraska City by Brethren Hilliard and Self and was healed; had been a sufferer for over two years. Have also had other manifestations of the truthfulness of this work.

I take the Ensign, and my father sends me the Autumn Leaves and HERALD. I love to read them all, and hand them to others. I rejoice in reading of the good work among the Lamanites.

We had some good meetings here last June, Brother William Sparling being the speaker, and expect to have more this summer if an elder can come. A number of families here are reading the Ensign, through the kind offer made in Ensign. Have loaned out a number of good books. One young man requested me to send for a Book of Mormon for him if I could get it in the Swedish language.

Dear Saints, I ask an interest in your prayers for this community; also that I may ever be found with the faithful.

Your sister in Christ,

LILLIE R. BUNDY.

PERRY, IOWA, June 2, 1913.

Editors Herald: Though not long since I found the true church, God has given me many blessings; and it seems I must tell them to others. While working to-day and thinking, a great difficulty arose in my mind. I was unable for a time to see what was right for me to do, so I thought I would write and ask the president of our church what I should do. I prayed, asking God to point out to me if I should write a letter, and if so that he would give me words proper for what I wished to ask.

After I had finished my prayer I did not seem to feel like writing, but still was not clearly satisfied, so I went to the Bible, praying in my heart for words that would bring me relief. I opened the Bible and there found relief from the difficulties.

Now, dear sister, Saint or sinner, let us take more to kindness in our homes, and by so doing build up our husbands and children for the work intended for them; and let not woman take the place of man in the work intended for man.

I have heard some so expectant of tongues. I think we need plenty of plain English, spoken with God's loving kindness in our hearts, to help us to do the great work that will benefit others as well as ourselves. Let us set an example before the world.

ONE OF THE TRUE CHURCH.

FORT MORGAN, COLORADO, May 27, 1913.

Dear Herald: I am isolated and deprived of church privileges and am in poor health. One of my sons is also afflicted with a nervous trouble that has developed into something like convulsions. My husband is suffering from chronic kidney trouble. I realize that God permits us to be tried to bring us to that condition wherein he wants his people to occupy. If it was not for the hope I have I do not know how I could endure. I thank God things with us are no worse. I sincerely ask an interest in your prayers for my son, my companion and myself, that we may live worthy of being healed. O Lord, help us and hear our prayers, and answer in thine own due time!

Two of my sons are in the church with me. How I do wish if any of the elders come this way they would stop and see us. We will do the best we can for them. There are no other Saints here, so far as I can learn, which makes me feel lonely. We live two miles west of Fort Morgan.

We resided in Denver, Colorado, since last September, having recently moved here. I am glad I had the privilege of meeting with the Denver Branch, and also that I met Brother Scott, of Independence.

My husband had the misfortune to break his limb while in Denver. The elders came and administered to him and he was instantly healed, for which I thank the Lord.

I should like to hear from some of the Saints. A few words of encouragement would help me very much. Now, dear Saints, please lay this all before the Lord. I shall do all I can and ask God to do the rest.

As ever, your sister in Christ,
MARTHA HAMM.

Extracts from Letters.

Elder J. D. Stead, San Jose, California: "Missionaries in California are not turning the world upside down—we are merely delivering the message of warning, like poor old Noah. What will the end be? We certainly are in need of a greater endowment of power from on high, to reach the people. Success to the HERALD and all of its force."

Sister Sadie Chuning, Bigelow, Missouri: "Before I became a Latter Day Saint I was a follower of the Holiness cause, living in all the light that I had. Since being baptized I have been tried in many ways, and am yet being tried; but Jesus, through his Holy Spirit, comforts me. Pray for me that I may be faithful. I ever pray God's blessing to be upon all, and that the HERALD may bring light to every home into which it enters."

Brother F. M. Sheehy, Independence, Missouri: "Word from Brother Parkin says that Brother Pitt and wife have started for Chicago, via Los Angeles. Brother Barnore had gone from Oakland to San Francisco to hold some meetings there."

Brother and Sister Edwin E. Lambert, Vinton, Ohio: "We can say from our hearts that the Lord has blessed us for all we have done, but can not say we have done very much. Wish we could have done more. Pray for us, dear Saints, that we may live faithfully, and do more, and be prepared to meet our blessed Savior."

Sister May Hawkins, Stewartsville, Missouri: "I have taken the HERALD a long time, and have been blessed many times by reading its columns. I love this gospel more than all the world, for it is the power of God unto eternal life. I have had many trials in my life, but God has helped me to endure. I pray that whatever may come in my old days he may give me his Spirit to guide me in his ways, and that I may be ready when the Lord says, 'It is enough.'"

Brother and Sister G. W. Leigh, Alexandria, Louisiana: "There are no Saints here that we know of. The people do not know anything about our church. We have talked to several who seem eager to do right so far as they know, and to learn all they can. There is a large field here for elders."

Be thoughtful; the iron enters the soul in afterlife when we have been neglectful of those who loved us.—Byron Williams.

Smile, once in a while,
'Twill make your heart seem lighter;
Smile once in a while,
'Twill make your pathway brighter;
Life's a mirror, if we smile,
Smiles come back to greet us;
If we're frowning all the while,
Crowns for ever meet us.—Nixon Waterman.

News from Missions

Southern Wisconsin.

The last news I noticed from this part of the Great Lakes mission was my letter to the HERALD when I was at Soldiers Grove last August. At the time of writing five had been baptized as a result of a month's meetings held there by Brother E. J. Goodenough and the writer.

A few days later six others were baptized, making eleven in all, before I left to attend the Belvidere reunion. Some time afterward Brother Goodenough came back and held services, and we understand that four others were added to the church there.

After the joint reunion at the above named place the writer and Brother Henry Williams visited Beloit, where there dwell several families of faithful Saints. After a protracted effort of two weeks, on Sundays in a hall situated near the center of the city, on week nights in the homes of the Saints, two were inducted into the kingdom through the ordinances of the gospel. Afterward a branch was organized there by the district president and missionary in charge.

In October, in company with Brother Williams, held a series of meetings in Milwaukee; also at this place we held cottage services, and two were immersed, in waters of Lake Michigan.

Later on I wended my way to Lancaster, Wisconsin. I stayed over one Sunday with the Saints in Madison and preached for them in their neat new chapel, of which they are justly proud.

I started meeting at Lancaster and was joined later by Brother Goodenough. We afterward held some services at the Saints' church at Flora, ten miles west of the town. After this, it being near the holidays, Brother Goodenough started for home, and I visited Oak Ridge Branch, about nine miles east of Lancaster, where the Saints also have a nice little church building, always kept in a neat and presentable condition by the worthy deacon of the branch there, Brother Will Matthews.

After holding forth there a few days I was strongly impressed that I was needed very badly at home (I had not intended to go home for the holidays). I arrived home, at Plano, Illinois, on Christmas Day, and found my oldest boy, Jerome, aged fourteen, very sick with pneumonia. He afterward developed ulcers on the lungs and was between life and death for two months. Through administration and the faith and prayers of the Saints he began to improve, and in March I again started for my mission. I held forth in Lancaster and Oak Ridge till near General Conference time. Some became much interested, and after conference the Saints and friends there wrote me to come back.

Arriving here I found Brother Goodenough, but he was called home by the severe illness of his wife the next day after I came. On the 18th of May I baptized Brother Earl Belscamper, a bright young man whom we believe will make a useful worker in the church, if faithful. The 28th of May I baptized a married lady, Sister Minnie Drew, formerly a Catholic, who is now letting her light shine by warning her neighbors and friends and telling them the good news of the gospel restored. On June 1 I baptized three more, all adults. A Mr. Fry, a very worthy brother, and his son and wife. All are now rejoicing in the work. We were very much blessed by the Master in the work here; the Spirit was present in power at the confirmation services.

There are others investigating, and near the kingdom in Lancaster. There is no branch there, but there are several families of faithful children of God, who will be rewarded for their kindness to the missionary, and their faithful attendance at the services. I expect to attend the district conference at Soldiers Grove, the 14th and 15th of June.

Yours hopefully,

LESTER O. WILDERMUTH.

FENNIMORE, WISCONSIN, June 4, 1913.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of Southern Indiana District; Greeting: Having been appointed bishop's agent for our district, we take this means of acquainting its membership with the needs of the work; and as this is an age which deals with facts and figures, we desire to present a few for your consideration.

At the May, 1912, conference, an appeal was made to the minister in charge for more missionary labor, and in harmony with that appeal we have been given three missionaries to labor in our district during the entire year, and two or three others to assist as the needs of the work may demand. We are all aware of the fact that each and everyone of us is called into partnership with God and Christ in their great business—the salvation of the world. We are all to be collaborators in this great project; but do we ever stop to consider the magnitude and importance of it? Southern Indiana, by reason of our residence, is especially intrusted to our care, and we will have to render an accounting of the efforts we have put forth for its salvation.

Our district comprises some 49 counties, with a population of about 1,226,000; also Louisville, Kentucky, with its 224,000, making about a million and a half of souls. To accomplish this great task we have engaged, or covenanted to support, three missionaries in the field constantly during the year, and we have agreed to support their families while they are laboring for us in the interest of this great work, which we all love so well. Then we have the poor and needy, the unfortunate ones, to care for; and in looking over the field we have estimated that it will cost the district about one hundred dollars per month to meet its obligations this year; one thousand two hundred dollars for the year.

While this may look like a large amount, it is not so large when divided among our four hundred or more membership; about three dollars per year per member, a little over twenty-five cents per month; and, remember, this will keep three missionaries actively in the field. We venture the statement that there are a half dozen churches in either Louisville or Indianapolis paying one man double this amount to tickle their itching ears with fables; and a score or more in either place where one man is receiving as much, or more, than we ask for the entire work of our district.

Saints, keep these facts and figures before you! Meditate upon them, digest them thoroughly, and in the light of God's revealed word to us, even at the last General Conference. Let us arise to our duty, impart of our substance for the progress of the work, loosen the hands of God's servants, the missionaries, and we will have a brighter and better year in Southern Indiana District than we have ever known before.

There are many whose names are not yet recorded on our books; we would like to see every name there. All amounts sent in will be promptly receipted for, and will be welcomed, be they large or small. Let us manifest our faith by our works, and leave the results to our heavenly Father.

Trusting that this will be a banner year for the district, I remain,

Your servant for Christ,

CHARLES H. FISH, Bishop's Agent.

INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, 645 West Twenty-ninth Street.

Pastoral.

To the Saints throughout the Manitoulin Island, Spanish Station, Cockburn Island, and the Soos; Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in your territory this year, I take pleasure in addressing you. Doubtless before this goes to press I shall have reached the island. Shall commence my work at Manitou; and shall branch out from there over the island, as I did last year. Shall visit and labor with you at Spanish, Cockburn, and the Soos, as early as practicable. I trust we may be workers together, seeking the crown of life through labors assigned to us. Great responsibility has been placed upon us as followers of Christ.

I look back with pleasure upon our work of last year together. I appreciate your helpfulness of the past, and seek your hearty cooperation for this year. Should any of you know of any place where openings could be made, please inform me. My mission address for the present will be Manitowaning, Ontario. Home address, 2 Court Street, Auburn, Maine. S. O. FOSS.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO, May 30, 1913.

To the Saints of Minnesota; Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in Minnesota this year, I desire the names and addresses of all members who are not in a branch, also of any who may be interested or desire to hear. I am anxious to learn of places where a new opening can be effected. There is much of this State that has not been worked, and by sending names and addresses of either members or those interested you can help us get the gospel before the people.

Your brother,

B. S. LAMKIN.

FRAZEE, MINNESOTA, May 31, 1913.

To the Saints of the Spring River District; Greeting: Having been transferred from the Independence Stake mission back to this district, our first effort was to comply with the desire of our minister in charge, and in order to suit his itinerary the date of our conference was changed to July 12, 1913, to convene at Weir City, Kansas. Brother J. W. Rushton, minister in charge, will be with us. We hope for a large representation. We also desire that all reports be in on time. Send to Mollie Davis, 115 West Jefferson Street, or to T. W. Chatburn, Pittsburg, Kansas.

Our reunion convenes at Joplin, Missouri, in Cunningham's Park, August 8 to 17 inclusive. We hope to make this the grandest reunion of the series. Car line has been extended to the park, and every convenience provided for caring for a large crowd. We shall have some excellent speakers, yet we desire the young local force to have ample opportunities for development. We also want a patriarch for the term. Will the Presiding Patriarch please see that we are supplied.

T. W. CHATBURN, President of the District.

Quorum Notices.

Michigan Quorum of Elders will meet at Port Huron, Michigan, June 21, on the reunion grounds, foot of Thomas Street. A program has been arranged; come and take an active interest in the meetings. Reports are very encouraging. W. L. Bennett, secretary, Detroit, Michigan.

Inasmuch as the Sixth Quorum of Priests is in bad condition spiritually, numerically, and otherwise, an effort will be made at the coming mission conference, to be held at Longsight, Manchester, August 2, 3, and 4, to establish the affairs of the quorum so that it may be a help and a strength to each member. The general church authorities are anxious about us, and desire to help us attain the standard set up in the law. The mission president will help all he can. Our presi-

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c.

What Rudyard Kipling Said About the Grand Canyon in Yellowstone National Park

"I looked into a gulf 1,700 feet deep, with eagles and fish-hawks circling far below. And the sides of that gulf were one wild welter of color—crimson, emerald, cobalt, ochre, amber, honey splashed with port wine, snow-white, vermilion, lemon and silver-gray in wide washes. The sides did not fall sheer, but were graven by time and water and air into monstrous heads of kings, dead chiefs—men and women of the old time. So far below that no sound of its strife could reach us, the Yellowstone River ran, a finger-wide strip of jade green.

"Evening crept through the pines that shadowed us, but the full glory of the day flamed in that Canyon as we went out very cautiously to a jutting piece of rock that overhung the deepest deeps of all."

I want to send you an illustrated pamphlet on the Yellowstone Park. It contains a fine map in colors, showing all the points of interest, and describes the many wonders to be seen. And I would like to tell you just how to go there most comfortably. May I do so? Kindly call or write.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM, THE ISLAM OF AMERICA."—PART II.

Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.—Jesus.

Before beginning this review we wrote to Mr. Kinney, calling his attention to certain matters that we intended to mention. Our letter follows:

LAMONI, IOWA, May 15, 1913.

REVEREND BRUCE KINNEY, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

Dear Sir: A correspondent of the SAINTS' HERALD mentions two matters set forth in your book entitled, Mormonism, the Islam of America, concerning which we have thought it best to write you personally. On page fifty-seven of your book you quote language which purports to be taken from the testimony of the eight witnesses of the Book of Mormon. This is used to indicate that the Lord gave to the eight witnesses a testimony which he had previously said should only be received by the three witnesses. The facts are that the language which you ascribe to the eight you have taken from the testimony of the three, as anyone can see by referring to the testimony found in every copy of the Book of Mormon. The correspondent charges that this indicates either gross carelessness upon your part, or downright dishonesty. But before commenting at any length upon this in our publication, we thought it only just to write to you personally and hear any explanation that you might wish to make regarding the matter.

Again, on page eighteen of your book, you say, "Smith soon received a revelation in which the Lord was reported as saying, 'I will consecrate the riches of the Gentiles unto my people.'" You cite the reader to Doctrine and Covenants, section 42. The language as found in the Doctrine and Covenants, section 42 reads: "I will consecrate of the riches of those who embrace my gospel, among the Gentiles, unto the poor of my people who are of the house of Israel." From this it will be seen that the consecration of money was to be made only by those who were converted from among the Gentiles, and voluntarily gave of their riches for the support of the poor and needy. Your omission of the explanatory words could hardly have been accidental, but as in the former case we have thought best to write personally before commenting at length in the HERALD.

We shall be glad to hear any statement that you may wish to make regarding the matter. If the work founded by Joseph Smith was a fraud, as you contend, you, yourself, would hardly care to be placed in the attitude of combating it by dishonest and contemptible methods.

Sincerely yours,

ELBERT A. SMITH.

To this Mr. Kinney replied as follows:

TOPEKA, KANSAS, May 21, 1913.

ELBERT A. SMITH,
LAMONI, IOWA.

My Dear Sir: Yours of the 15th at hand and would have received earlier attention except for the fact that I am just recovering from a serious illness of several weeks. I have not the time or strength to look up the matter to which you refer, as my books of reference just now are not convenient. After all, it does not seem to me to make much difference as far as the essential point is concerned, as to whether the "8" or the "3" uses that expression, and I fail to see also any essential difference when the language is carefully examined in your alleged correction of my quotation of section 42 of the Doctrine and Covenants.

Your letter is very courteous, but I wish to say that I have received several letters from your people that were anything but courteous, some of which made threats, which if I cared to push in the United States courts might get them into trouble for violation of law, but I don't care for anything of this nature, and I shall absolutely decline to enter into a discussion public or private with you or any of your representatives on this topic. It does not bother me what you do or don't do. If you will carefully read at the top of page 10 in the preface of my book you will notice what I say. "Nothing that I say in this book must be taken as necessarily applying to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints, having headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa." I lived too long at Plano, Illinois, not to know something about your people, some of them are my personal friends, though we radically disagree as to our beliefs; that is my right as well as theirs. Your people have always maintained that you are not at all in sympathy with the Utah Church. I am in a position to know that there is a feeling in the minds of some of those who are the closest students of the Mormon situation that there is some kind of a secret alliance of understanding between your church and the Utah Church. I have always denied this. If you people can not ignore some trivial things which you do not like in my book for example; and if you can not make common cause with us against the Utah hierarchy you will convince many and myself among the rest that you are in secret collusion with the Utah Church, and have the same motive as they have. If you will adopt this policy and ignore some of these things upon which we disagree no one will know that anything in this book does apply to your people. If you make a "big noise" the people will know and you will attract unfavorable attention to yourself.

Sincerely yours,

BRUCE KINNEY.

MR. KINNEY'S LETTER EXAMINED.

We will comment briefly upon four points suggested in the letter from Mr. Kinney.

Regarding the threatening and abusive letters which Mr. Kinney says he has received from some of our people: Frankly, we do not believe that any of our representative men have been writing to Mr. Kinney in a threatening and abusive manner. Probably these letters came from irresponsible persons. We have written Mr. Kinney, requesting him to give us the names of those who have written to him in this manner. Our people should ever be courteous in their treatment of others, as becomes those who profess to be followers of Jesus.

We wrote to Mr. Kinney calling his attention to the fact that in his book a professed quotation from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants was published, vital parts of the quotation being omitted in such a way as to transform an entirely innocent commandment or statement into one that might be considered very damaging, and very offensive to honest people, if not understood, and to the further fact that in order to make a point which did not in reality exist, language was taken from the testimony of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon, and was ascribed to the eight.

We wished to give Mr. Kinney an opportunity to defend his course in this matter if it was intentional, or to acknowledge an error if his conduct was the result of a mistake. His explanation is before the reader. We do not care to make any comment. Nothing that we would have the heart to say would be more damaging than his own statement that he does not see that it makes any difference.

Is this according to the golden rule?

Regarding the statement in his letter that some believe that there exists a secret alliance or understanding between the Utah Church and the Reorganized Church: Mr. Kinney, from his experience with our people in Plano and later with the Mormons in Utah, knows very well that such an alliance does not exist. Yet he professes to be ready to conclude that it does exist if we venture to refute any statements made in his book reflecting upon the character and work of Joseph Smith and the early church. Because we are in sympathy with legitimate efforts to extirpate polygamy and kindred evils in Utah, must we remain silent when an attack is made upon the character of Joseph Smith, who, as we believe, was in no way responsible for those evils, and upon the Book of Mormon, which we accept as a revelation from God?

We believe that Mr. Kinney, upon mature reflection, will readily conclude that our defense of the Book of Mormon and the mission of Joseph Smith in no way compromises us with Utah Mormonism, in view of the fact previously cited that the courts have twice decided that Utah Mormonism is not a legitimate outgrowth of the church founded by Joseph Smith.

Mr. Kinney thinks that we should make common cause with other churches against the Utah hierarchy. This we are willing to do, so long as legitimate methods are used, either to curb and restrain the teaching and practice of polygamy, or to convert members of the Utah Church to something higher and better. Our works in that regard are our best defense.

Mr. Kinney tells about the hardships endured by the missionaries of his church (the Baptist Church) and other denominations in early days when they established missions in Utah. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was the pioneer in this work, and he can not tell us anything about the trials and hardships of those early days when fearless men went into Utah, prepared to defy the power of Brigham Young, and to denounce polygamy in its stronghold.

We first established our mission there in 1863, when Elder E. C. Briggs opened up the work in Utah. This was eighteen years before the Baptist Church established its mission, according to the date given by Mr. Kinney (page 173). Other churches, according to his figures, opened their missions in the following order: Congregational Church, 1864; Protestant Episcopal, 1867; Methodist Episcopal, 1870; Presbyterian, 1871.

During the years of our mission work there we have probably made more converts than any other one denomination. And whereas Mr. Kinney complains that many of the converts from Mormonism made by the other churches return to their former faith, we have had very little trouble in that regard, as most, if not all of our conversions have been permanent.

We notice that he says, "I shall absolutely decline to enter into a discussion public or private with you or any of your representatives on this topic."

We had no thought of drawing Mr. Kinney into a debate. His decision in that matter does credit to his discretion. It may not appear courageous, but it is discreet. A debate is very searching. It permits both sides to be heard. It is safer for one to publish his side of the story in a book and cause it to be studied in little select societies of his own church people, undisturbed by vexing questions, new ideas, and evidence in rebuttal. Clergymen are not as other men. They are protected by the cloth of their profession. To drag one from behind the skirts of the "Council of Women for Home Missions," would be ungallant and uncourteous.

So much for Mr. Kinney's letter. Frankly we do not believe that he intended to be dishonest in his treatment of the subject, but prefer to think that he passed over the matter carelessly, as many others have done, and instead of giving careful research to original textbooks of the faith, he accepted the statements of sensational writers who had preceded him and were thoroughly dishonest and unfair in their treatment of the the subject.

So, however accurate his personal observations in Utah may be, as set forth in chapters three to six, inclusive, his digest of the early history of the church and its teachings is utterly unreliable.

CRITICISMS OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

On page sixty-two of his work Mr. Kinney says, "The accounts of alleged miracles given in the Book of Mormon are puerile in the extreme."

Mr. Kinney is making exactly the same criticism of the Book of Mormon that Ingersoll made of the Bible. In one of his lectures, Mr. Ingersoll said:

There must be a mistake somewhere or somehow. Do you believe the real God—if there is one—ever killed a man for making hair-oil. And yet you find in the pentateuch that God gave Moses a recipe for making hair-oil to grease Aaron's beard; and said if anybody made the same hair-oil he should be killed. And he gave him a formula for making ointment, and he said if anybody made ointment like that he should be killed. I think that is carrying patent laws to excess. There must be some mistake about it. I can not imagine the infinite creator of all the shining worlds giving a recipe for hair-oil. Do you believe that the real God came down to Mount Sinai with a lot of patterns for making a tabernacle—patterns for tongs, for snuffers and such things. Do you believe God came down on that mountain and told Moses how to cut a coat; and how it should be trimmed?—Colonel R. G. Ingersoll, Forty-four Lectures Complete.

Concerning the Bible Mr. Ingersoll was an infidel. Concerning the Book of Mormon, Mr. Kinney is an infidel; and possibly if he were questioned closely regarding some of the miracles recorded in the Bible, he would not be found very sound in the faith in that particular. In any event he is as unjust and as wide of the mark in his criticism of the Book of Mormon as Ingersoll was in his similar criticism of the Bible. The fact is that most of the stock arguments used against the Book of Mormon are borrowed from infidels who first used them against the Bible.

On page sixty he says: "Whoever was the author of this book had various pet words and expressions which are used over and over again in spite of the absurdity."

This may be true regarding some parts of the Book of Mormon, concerning others it is untrue. It is equally true concerning some parts of the Bible, as infidels affirm; for instance, read this:

And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, show them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof, and the goings out thereof, and the comings in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the laws thereof, and write it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them.—Ezekiel 43: 11.

In neither instance is the inspiration of the book destroyed by the fact that some of the writers were not polished in their style.

He says concerning the Book of Mormon: "Everything is stilted, complicated, diffuse, meaningless or even brutal." To refute this one has but to read the following language from the Book of Mormon:

Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women.

Does Mr. Kinney find this stilted, complicated, diffuse, meaningless, or brutal? These "brutal" statements are our bulwark against the polygamy of Utah and the concubinage of other places.

UNSUPPORTED CHARGES.

Many serious charges are made against the members and founders of the church during the early days of its history; but no evidence is cited to support these charges, and no reliable witnesses are brought forward, nor the findings of any court shown, so we will not examine these charges in detail. How easy it is to make charges of a very damaging nature based on rumor and the assertions of enemies, and how flat the same charges may fall when both sides are heard and accurate and reliable evidence is demanded.

EVIL STORIES BORN OF RELIGIOUS HATRED.

The old stories circulated against the character of Latter Day Saints in an early day (though some of them are set forth in great detail as coming from men who knew) in reality had their origin in religious hatred and neighborhood scandal. All people should know the unreliable character of neighborhood gossip, especially when it is tintured with denominational bigotry.

Every religious reformer has suffered from this thing. Men who claimed to know swore that the good John Wesley was a scoundrel, a pickpocket, a traitor, and that he had been convicted of selling gin. We read: "In London also, the Methodists were exposed to persecution and the fury of an enraged and bestial population." (See History of Methodist Episcopal Church, by Reverend P. Douglass Gorrie.)

This has been the experience of nearly every religious agitator, and Joseph Smith was no exception, —only now our good friends of the clergy are not willing to let these stories die. Why not? Why not begin to treat Latter Day Saints according to the golden rule that Christians profess to honor?

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE STORY.

How different the stories told by men who were fair-minded and who knew.

The Honorable George Edmunds, one of the best known lawyers of western Illinois, an honored man in the community where the Saints, under Joseph Smith, had headquarters, at Nauvoo, says:

I can say for the Mormon population, so far as I knew them, that I think I never knew so INDUSTRIOUS, FRUGAL, AND VIRTUOUS a set of people as they were.—The Mormon Settlement in Illinois, an Address by Senator O. F. Berry before the Illinois State Historical Society, p. 11.

Robert Lucas, governor of Ohio from 1832 to 1836, during the stay of the Saints at Kirtland, and governor of Iowa at the time of the settlement at Nauvoo, wrote to President Van Buren under date of April 22, 1839, saying:

I think it is due to that people to state, that they had for a number of years a community established in Ohio, and that while in that State they were (as far as I ever heard) believed to be an INDUSTRIOUS, INOFFENSIVE people; and I have no recollection of having ever heard of ANY OF THEM being charged in that State as violators of the law.

It is true that the Kirtland Bank failed. But it was started with good motives, and was only one of hundreds of similar institutions to fail during the great panic. At a later date the church sent an agent back to Kirtland to settle with all creditors so far as possible. Our detractors, however, never mention that fact.

Mr. Kinney attempts to revive the old, senile and anemic Solomon Spalding romance-theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon. This we will examine in our next number.

ACTIVITY OF THE OPPOSITION.

But the Jews stirred up the devout and honorable women, and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts. But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came into Iconium. And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost.—Acts 13: 50-52.

And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth; for it is not fit that he should live. And as they cried out, and cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air, the chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined by scourging, that he might know whereof they cried so against him.—Acts 22: 22-24.

The situation of the Saints in a number of communities throughout the country is similar to the ones in which Paul and Barnabas found themselves upon the occasions presented in the language above quoted. This similarity of experience was brought about by a similarity of activity.

Jewish zealots, Pharisaical bigots, blinded leaders of the people were ever active in their attack upon the truth; and in an effort to discredit the message very often they ostracized the bearers thereof. One effort failing, their fertile opposition invented another. On one occasion, as cited, the prejudices of the "devout and honorable women" were worked upon, a persecution being raised which expelled Paul and Barnabas from the association of those whom they desired to reach. On the other occasion a cloud of dust was raised to prevent Paul from further defense, and to detract from the force of what had already been said.

The age-old opposition to truth has found these means peculiarly effective, and so continues them in this dispensation of restored gospel propaganda. In denominational churches the flock leaders have instituted an activity among the "devout and honorable women" of their congregations. The cooperation of these worthy sisters is largely secured through the recent and vigorously renewed attack upon the leader and faith of the restored church.

As one means to the end sought, women's clubs, organizations, etc., are put to a study of "Mormonism." Bruce Kinney's late book, Mormonism, the Islam of America, has in a number of places been adopted as a textbook on this subject. This line of attack works like a charm. These industrious women,—very studiously avoiding any book, publication, or utterance from the people whose faith is under investigation,—profoundly studying the work of Mr. Kinney, rise up in their righteous indignation against the representatives of the latter day faith and expel them "out of their coasts."

At Centralia, Washington, the local organization of the Ladies' Home Missionary Society is studying Mr. Kinney's book. Some weeks ago our Brother Leonard S. Rhodes, of Centralia, prepared a reply to this work and submitted it to these women with the request that it be read at one of their meetings. The manuscript was not accepted, the women saying they "could not spare the time." A few wished to read it privately, however. One admitted that Brother Rhodes had established his criticisms, but could not see how that invalidated the book as a text on "Mormonism."

We understand that at Colorado Springs, Colorado, these same tactics have been adopted. It is represented that in the study of Mr. Kinney's book the women of Colorado Springs supplemented their study with lectures by a traveling representative of the opposition, or supplemented the lectures by this lady with the study of Mr. Kinney's book, probably. Elder F. A. Russell requested permission to reply to Mr. Kinney's criticisms, but was denied the privilege, being given to understand that his presence among these students of Colorado Springs was not desired.

At Kansas City, Missouri, the local branch of The Women's League of the National Daily Vacation Bible School Association on June 9, by unanimous vote, adopted the following: "Resolved, That membership in this league be refused to members of the 'Mormon' or Latter Day Saint Church." This action was taken while members of our church were present in the meeting, and after the most excellent work of our people in connection with the National Daily Bible School work in Philadelphia and Brooklyn had been, on invitation, presented by our workers; and, furthermore, in a community where our people are well and favorably known for temperance, moral integrity, good and loyal citizenship, in fact for every Christian virtue.

Brethren John C. Grainger and O. K. Fry were told by one of the "devout" that in connection with the evangelical churches of other places, the women of Kansas City were studying Mormonism, the Islam of America. This lady added that the women of Kansas City were more wide-awake in the cause of Christ than were those of other cities where the Latter Day Saints had been allowed to participate in the work of the league. She further stated that two of her daughters were expecting to teach in the Kansas City Bible schools, and that she did not want them to teach in any schools where there were Latter Day Saints.

Appropriating the casting out method, the latter day opposition forgets not the other used in earlier times. Unwilling to hear Paul further upon the occasion cited, the Jews "threw dust into the air." While not dealing in literal dust, yet the means used by the present day opponents to the truth—a refusal to hear—has the desired effect. It prevents the parties attacked from making answer.

Whether or not this modern "dust heaving" is significant of a grief stricken people, or whether it has the same significance as when resorted to by lower orders, and is the expression of animal passion, we shall not undertake to say.

So goes the work of the opposition. Unfair though the means, it is effectual among those turned aside by the bitterness of religious prejudice, or among religious zealots who think only in the terms of the "blind leaders of the blind."

We observe, in passing, that the women of Kansas City have not studied very closely their text. The brethren there were told that our people were rejected upon two principles: Present direct revelation from God; and Joseph Smith as a prophet of God. On page 48 of his book, Mr. Kinney says: "God may reveal himself to any man, woman, or child, but that he would choose such a man as we know Joseph Smith was all his life to be his 'vicegerent on earth,' we can not for a moment believe." It is admitted, then, that God may even to-day reveal himself to man. We add that God has never left the choosing of his prophets to men like Mr. Kinney and his kind, nor is it likely that he would do so now. The dust these good women have raised seems to have been blown into their own eyes.

Present day Saints are not surprised, nor should they be discouraged when denied affiliation with denominationalism. Paul, John the Baptist, Isaiah, Moses, Noah, all these, and, in fact, all others of God's representatives upon earth, not excepting Jesus the Christ, were "cast out" by the "devout and honorable women" at the instigation of the file leaders of the religious thought of the day. It was Jesus who said, "If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you." When cast out, therefore, we find ourselves in most excellent company.

Reverting to the experience of Paul and the early saints, we note that: "They shook off the dust of their feet against them"; and "were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost." We understand this scripture to mean that Paul and Barnabas left the Jews here to their fate, under the consciousness that they had performed their duty in faithfully endeavoring to present the truth. Thus, with charity toward all, and with malice toward none, despite the bitterness of the persecution, they, with others equally devoted, were filled with joy, under the divine assurance of the presence of God in their midst.

Let not the Saints despair because of the opposition. It is as certain to follow the work of God in the world as night follows the day. If less violent in our time, it is so only that it may be more subtle. As the converging lines of prophecy approach more nearly the point of meeting, with all his original vigor and with the accumulating machinery of the ages, Satan turns loose every opposition to divert the people of God from the consummation of their hopes and aspirations. But, if we stand firm, he shall not be permitted to conquer. Like those of old, we may move along, not only rejoicing in the truth, but also under the great spiritual power of Israel's God. We stand to-day upon the threshold of our opportunity. Let us step in and occupy.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

NEW "ANTI-MORMON" BOOK.—Since E. D. Howe wrote his Mormonism Unveiled, so many books have been written against the church that it would appear that new writers are hard put to it to find new names for their productions. They run the gamut from "Peepstone Joe" to "Sixty loaded bombshells in the Mormon camp." Each writer selects a name dignified and modest or bombastic and sensational, according to his own nature. R. B. Neal now announces that he is in travail bringing forth a new product to be called: "Smokeless powder and solid shot [smut?] for anti-Mormon polemics," or some such title. We suggest also the use of one of the new Maxim silencers with this little gun,—its noise is so sure to be infinitely out of proportion to its execution.

PRESBYTERIANS ASSEMBLY.—For the first time in the history of Presbyterianism in the United States, its three largest General Assemblies have met simultaneously and in the same city. This meeting was in the city of Atlanta last month, the communicants there gathered representing the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America (Northern Assembly), the Presbyterian Church in the United States (Southern Assembly), the United Presbyterian Church of North America (United Assembly). The consolidation of the Southern Assembly with the United Assembly was discussed by both bodies, final action being postponed for one year. The serious split in the Presbyterian Church resulting from the Civil War is slow to heal.

NEWS FROM LOS ANGELES.—Word from Los Angeles, California, informs us that Brother V. M. Goodrich arrived there May 30, and was warmly welcomed by the Saints. At a business meeting of the branch June 5 he was by unanimous vote chosen to preside for the remainder of the year. The conference year at Los Angeles thus has a hopeful beginning.

NEW PUBLICATION.—A new Sunday school paper is to be put out by the Board of Publication of the church. This paper will be illustrated, attractive in form, and suitable for boys and girls of 'teen age. The first issue will appear on July 2, to be followed weekly. The Hope is to be reduced to a four-page paper, appropriately illustrated, and adapted to the beginners.

Original Articles

THE DUTY OF A BISHOP.

NUMBER 11.—"DUTIES OF OFFICERS' SERIES."

This article will be followed by one entitled, "Some things we may expect from a bishop," by Bishop Richard Bullard, Bishop of the Independence Stake.

And the duty of the bishop shall be made known by the commandments which have been given, and the voice of the conference.—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1.

The duties of the bishop are such that they call for certain qualifications resident within the individual who assumes to administer for the church in this important position. We present a list of qualifications as enumerated in 1 Timothy 3, and Titus 1. Note them carefully, as they are not nonessentials; all are desirable.

QUALIFICATIONS.

1. Blameless.
2. Husband of one wife.
3. Vigilant.
4. Sober.
5. Of good behavior.
6. Given to hospitality.
7. Apt to teach.
8. Not given to wine.
9. No striker.
10. Not greedy of filthy lucre.
11. Patient.
12. Not a brawler.
13. Not covetous.

14. One that ruleth well his own household.
15. Not a novice.
16. Of good repute of those which are without.
17. Not self-willed.
18. Not soon angry.
19. Lover of good men.
20. Just.
21. Holy.
22. Temperate.
23. Holding fast the faithful word.

The foregoing are sturdy qualities which should stand out prominently in the life and character of the individual, fitting him for the Lord's service. While these distinct qualities may appear in the personality of some individuals as object lessons indicating to every true Saint his trustworthiness, yet, this is not sufficient safeguard to the security and well-being of the church in the selection of a bishop, as the Lord reserves to himself the right to designate through the First Presidency the ones who are approved of him, the privilege being granted to conference to ratify or reject the choice. See Doctrine and Covenants 68: 2.

HAVE CHARGE OF TEMPORALITIES OF THE CHURCH.

The Lord through his revelation to his church calls individuals and prescribes their duties. To honor the law does honor to the Lawgiver. The law to the church is that men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head are to act for the church in gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the Saints in the form of moneys or properties (see Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8). Either directly, through personal contact, or indirectly, through their authorized agents, these men should be held responsible before God and the church, and a due account be rendered of all funds.

"Tithing, surplus, free-will offerings, and consecrations," are the four processes by which the Saints are called upon under the law to contribute. There is no one who has the proper desire to do something to further the cause of Christ in a temporal way, who can not reach his end, in one or more of the four ways above mentioned. The Lord has given to his church a thorough system of finances, and there is no occasion for haphazard or unsystematic collection and disbursement of funds. Funds should be placed in the hands of the bishopric and distributions made according to needs, thus precluding the possibility of advancing one department of church work at the expense or neglect of some other. Every institution worthy of the fostering care of the church should receive its support from the funds and properties of the church, gathered in the authorized way, and in the hands of the ones ordained as keepers of the Lord's store, or else why the necessity for bishops?

RENDERING ACCOUNTS.

According to resolution passed by the late General Conference, the association of all the bishops and their council is known as "The Bishopric" or "Order of Bishops." The accounting by these men of the temporalities of the church is first made to the branch in its business meeting through the branch agent, where there is an agent appointed. The branch agents in turn report to the bishop under whom their appointment was made. The local bishops are thus enabled to make up their account and in turn report to the district or stake conferences from time to time. The local bishops furnish from their accounts the Presiding Bishop with itemized reports, which, along with the reports furnished from the Presiding Bishop's agents (the term agents here is used to include committees and boards concerned in handling church properties), go to make up what is designated "The Presiding Bishop's Financial Report," which is presented to General Conference for its action. This is nothing more nor less than the presiding head of the body of bishops, to whom is intrusted the care of the temporalities of the church, reporting conditions of such temporalities to the church in General Conference assembled.

The head has only the authority to represent the body correctly, and when there are objections raised to certain items connected with the Bishop's report it should be held in mind that all the other bishops and their council are responsible as well as the Presiding Bishopric for such report, and when corrections or amendments are contemplated being made in such report, the body and head should act conjointly in the matter.

DUTIES WITH RELATION TO THE AARONIC PRIESTHOOD.

The office of bishop is in administering all temporal things.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 32.

The bishop should not be burdened with the spiritual care of the church, except as such might be brought before him in pursuance of the law which provides for the bishop's court. See Doctrine and Covenants 126: 5.

The priesthood of Aaron has power in administering outward ordinances. (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 10.) "The bishopric is the presidency of this priesthood and holds the keys or authority of the same." (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 8.) Referring to Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8, the term, the bishopric, is defined as men holding the office of bishop, with a presiding head. Agreeable to this definition we are instructed in Doctrine and Covenants 104: 40, that "the duty of the president over the priesthood of Aaron, is to preside over forty-eight priests, and sit in council with them, to teach them the duties of their office, as is given in the covenants. This president is to be a bishop; for this is one of the duties of this priesthood." (Italics mine.) Associate with the above passages this one: "The offices of teachers and deacons are necessary appendages belonging to the lesser priesthood" (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 5), and we have:

THE UNIT OF ORGANIZATION OF THE LESSER PRIESTHOOD.

1. A bishop the presiding head over
2. Forty-eight priests after the order of Aaron assisted as necessary appendages by
3. Twenty-four teachers and twelve deacons.

The bishop is to sit in council with the priests and teach them their duties, as is commanded. The priests are thus better prepared to visit the house of each member and instruct the membership, exhorting them to attend to all family duties. The teachers, as necessary helpers to the priests, are to see to it that the instructions of the priests are lived up to. Failure on the part of the membership to do their duty should be reported to the branch president, who in turn takes such action as is wise; and if needs be the case is placed before the president of the Aaronic priesthood, who is a bishop or judge, and as the law states: "And a commandment I give unto them [the inhabitants of Zion], that he that observeth not his prayers before the Lord in the season thereof, let him be had in remembrance before the judge of my people."—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

The commandments of the Lord contemplate the growth of the church and the extension of his work in every department. As the work of organization develops, bishops will be supplied to meet the requirements, as the following quotations attest:

There remaineth hereafter in the due time of the Lord, other bishops to be set apart unto the church to minister even according to the first.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 2.

Thus shall he be a judge, even a common judge among the inhabitants of Zion, or in a stake of Zion, or in any branch of the church where he shall be set apart unto this ministry, until the borders of Zion are enlarged, and it becomes necessary to have other bishops, or judges in Zion, or elsewhere: and inasmuch as there are other bishops appointed they shall act in the same office.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 33.

The bishop of my church may also choose and appoint bishop's agents, until it shall be wisdom in me to ordain other bishops, in the districts and large branches of my church.—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 10.

These working units of the Aaronic priesthood exist in more or less fragmentary form throughout the church. We appreciate the fact that the organizing authorities of the church are uniting the forces of the priesthood preparatory to the time when the "land of Zion" shall be sanctified, that the statutes and judgments of the Lord may be kept.

It is no idle dream to conceive of one or more of these units existing within each stake and district, or large branch, each presided over by a bishop, with a stake or district bishopric over their respective territory, and the Presiding Bishopric over all.

TEACHER OF THE LAW.

It is through the council of the bishopric that the church is to look for the rendition of the temporal law. (See Doctrine and Covenants 129: 8.) The several bishops should be united in their understanding and practice of the law, that their teachings may prove effectual. These are some of the very necessary things connected with the bishopric department.

"Apt to teach" is one of the chief qualifications of the bishop. He is a teacher not alone of the financial duties but of all other duties which, performed, go to make up a true Saint. It is very necessary that Saints understand their duties under the law if they are to be judged by the law. So important is this matter that the Lord has made provision in the gospel service that the homes of the membership shall be visited for the purpose of instructing the Saints with relation to duty, that ignorance may not be justifiable.

TO SIT IN JUDGMENT UPON TRANSGRESSORS.

Also to be a judge in Israel, to do the business of the church, to sit in judgment upon transgressors, upon testimony, as it shall be laid before him according to the laws, by the assistance of his counselors.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 32.

And whoso standeth in this mission is appointed to be a judge in Israel, like as it was in ancient days, to divide the lands of the heritage of God unto his children, and to judge his people by the testimony of the just, and by the assistance of his counselors, according to the laws of the kingdom which are given by the prophets of God; for verily I say unto you, My law shall be kept on this land.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 4.

For a more extended discussion of the subject of court functions connected with the bishop, see THE SAINTS' HERALD for September 18, 1912. This is the magazine number on "Our Church Courts."

TO TRAVEL.

Bishop Newel K. Whitney was instructed to travel among all the churches, searching after the poor, to administer to their wants by humbling the rich and proud (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 23). The object in visiting the poor and needy as stated in Doctrine and Covenants 44: 3, is to minister to their relief that they may be kept until all things be done according to the law, which had been given. When all things are carried out according to the law which is given each will have according to his needs, then there will be no poor and necessitous to visit; but until such time some of the bishops are to travel and search out and provide as best they can.

There is reference made in Doctrine and Covenants 17: 16 to traveling bishops. This reference would lead us to infer that it becomes the duty of some bishops, either by appointment, or position, to travel, hence the distinction, "traveling bishops." The Presiding Bishop in consequence of the general nature of his work is a traveling bishop. The stake or district bishops are traveling bishops in a more limited sense in that their territory is more limited. A local bishop placed over a large branch or ward could not be considered a traveling bishop.

TAKE AN ACCOUNT OF THE ELDERS.

Verily I say unto you, The elders of the church in this part of my vineyard shall render an account of their stewardship unto the bishop which shall be appointed of me, in this part of my vineyard. These things shall be had on record, to be handed over unto the bishop in Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1.

Newel K. Whitney was the man to be appointed a bishop in Kirtland. Among other duties he was to take an account of the elders in his respective territory, and the record kept to be reported to the general bishop.

And now, verily I say unto you, That as every elder in this part of the vineyard must give an account of his stewardship unto the bishop in this part of the vineyard, a certificate from the judge or bishop in this part of the vineyard, unto the bishop in Zion, rendereth every man acceptable. . . .—Doctrine and Covenants 72.

This places the responsibility upon the local bishops who are on the ground to look after the detailed matter connected with bishopric service, and report the same to the Presiding Bishopric. This relieves the "bishop in Zion" of much detailed matter, freeing him to devote his energies to labors of a more general character.

APPOINT STOREHOUSE.

"And again, let the bishop appoint a storehouse unto this church, and let all things, both in money and in meat, which is more than is needful for the want of this people, be kept in the hands of the bishop" (Doctrine and Covenants 51: 4). This refers to the church in Kirtland, Ohio, in 1831, given in May of that year.

"And it is wisdom, also, that there should be lands purchased in Independence, for the place of the storehouse. . . ." (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 7.) This refers to Independence, Missouri, given in 1831, three months after the one received at Kirtland.

"Therefore, the residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and needy." (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10.) "And the storehouse and the temple and the salvation of my people, are the same to me now that they were in the day when I gave the revelation." (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 6.)

This last revelation was given to the Reorganization in April, 1894, and is no dead issue. The following outline will be of service in this connection to those who desire to make a more extended study of the subject:

THE LORD'S STOREHOUSE.

1. WHAT IT IS.

(a) The depository of "all things," moneys and

- properties belonging to the church. D. C. 51: 4.
2. HOW SUPPLIED.
    - (a) Through the consecrations of the church. D. C. 82: 2.
  3. MAY CONSIST OF
    - (a) Moneys, lands, herds, houses, factories, plants, mines, merchandise, elevators, granaries, banks, etc. D. C. 81: 4; 101: 12; 128: 6.
  4. WHAT THE PURPOSE.
    - (a) To supply the widow, orphan, and the poor. D. C. 82: 2; 42: 10.
    - (b) To supply stewardships. D. C. 101: 2.
    - (c) To foster the temporal interests of the church. D. C. 128: 1, 2.
  5. GENERAL MANAGEMENT.

Bishopric and organization. D. C. 51: 4; 77: 1; 128: 2, 3, 8.

TO ORGANIZE FOR GATHERING AND FULFILL THE LAW.

It becomes the duty of the bishopric to organize and form industrial associations among the Saints under existing federal and state laws for the following reasons set forth in Doctrine and Covenants 128:

1. The conditions surrounding the work.
2. The increase of the membership of the church, an increase from a membership of 26,706 in 1892, to 68,000 in 1913.
3. The increased desire for settling together.
4. Necessity existing for obtaining places for settlements in the regions round about.

The end designed in such a movement we state, and for emphasis we segregate the parts: To form settlements—In different localities—In the regions round about—Under terms of association—Of those who are desirous and willing—For the benefit of themselves—Their fellow church members—The whole body of the church—Using the things of this world in a manner designed of God, that the places where they occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord.

The custodians of the properties of the church (men holding the office of bishop with a presiding head) are empowered to prosecute the work of caring for and using such properties as are confided to their care to accomplish the end designed. (See Doctrine and Covenants 128: 2.)

These associations among the Saints are to be varied according to the varied qualifications existing among working men. Farmers would need agricultural associations; miners, miners' associations; manufacturers, manufacturers' associations; tradesmen, tradesmen's associations, etc.

The burden of organization is placed upon (1) The Presiding Bishop and his counselors. (2) Other bishops of the church. (3) Such other officers as the bishop may call together.

What are these organizations whose duty it is that the Bishop should take steps to organize?

Answer: They are the "organizations contemplated in the law," Doctrine and Covenants 128: 8.

These organizations referred to in the law are such as the following:

I will speak unto my servant Edward Partridge, and give unto him directions; for it must needs be that he receive directions how to organize this people, for it must needs be that they be organized according to my laws, if otherwise, they will be cut off.—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1.

The time has come, and is now at hand; and, behold, and lo, it must needs be that there be an organization of my people, in regulating and establishing the affairs of the storehouse for the poor of my people, both in this place and in the land of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.

See also Doctrine and Covenants, sections 81, 89, 93, 101.

GRANTING INHERITANCES AND PLACING OF STEWARDSHIPS.

The Savior makes the statement unto his people as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 38: 4, and promises them a land for their inheritance upon which there shall be no curse when he comes. If faithful they are to possess it, and their children after them forever, while the earth shall stand; and to possess it again in eternity, no more to pass away. This matter of inheritance is something that is not to exist alone in the mind of the Saints, but the promise is "to possess."

The Lord speaks unto the bishop of the church, Edward Partridge, and those whom he chooses as counselors, and assigns unto them the duty of appointing the Saints gathering unto the land of Kirtland their portion, which portion is according to the gospel standard of equality; that is, each family according to its just needs. This portion is to be the inheritance of the Saints, for them to hold in the church so long as they are members of the church. If they prove themselves unworthy they claim only that portion which is deeded to them, the consecrated portion they can not claim (Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1). This is the rule which applies to every man that comes unto the land of Zion to receive an inheritance. (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 7.) The surplus consecrations are placed in the hands of the bishop to purchase lands for the inheritance for the children of God. (Doctrine and Covenants 58: 11.) Too much importance can not be attached to the purchase of land in the gathering places. "Back to the land" should apply to the Saints. The wealth is in the soil and when the Saints are able to occupy upon the land in righteousness, the curse being removed therefrom, the redemption of Zion, the receiving of inheritances and granting of stewardships may be made possible. Settling upon the fertile acres in the rural districts in the regions round about is as big a factor in the gathering of the Lord's people as is the purchase of houses and lots in the chief cities of the stakes.

All should have an inheritance, a home; and all who are physically able should have a stewardship or employment. This stewardship is appointed under the law to every man. Notice the emphasis which we place upon the terms every man. "Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 9.

There are two classes of individuals in the church, namely, (1) those who own property, and (2) those who do not. Both classes are to be made stewards. "Every man," according to the law, that comes up to Zion, must lay all things before the bishop in Zion. (Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3.) In making this showing before the bishop, if the individual is of the class which has property, he is made steward over such portion of his own as is sufficient for himself and family; while such property as is a surplus, or that which is more than he has need for himself and family, is consecrated unto the bishop. So much for class number one, those who are made stewards over their own property. Now for class number two, those who have not property sufficient for themselves and families. This class is to be made stewards also, but the law says how it shall be done: He "shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over . . . that which he has received by consecration." So all classes are to be provided for with stewardships.

To aid the bishopric in the matter of establishing stewardships, the industrial organizations, as discussed in another part of this paper, are in evidence. "It is wisdom in me, therefore, a commandment I give unto you, that ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2. The bishopric is a part of the organization, and as bishops they perform their functions in connection with the organizations.

The foregoing are only the more important duties of the bishop, as the writer discerns them. Much detailed matter of necessity had to be eliminated. We have sought to prepare this article with care and wisdom, and to occupy upon those grounds warranted in God's revealed word.

Bishop of Lamoni Stake.

THE BOOK OF MORMON AS A TRANSLATION.—PART 2.

BY W. R. DEXTER.

THE WITNESSES DO NOT RETRACT EVEN AFTER LEAVING THE CHURCH.

On April 11, 1838, charges were preferred against Oliver Cowdery, by Seymour Bronson. He was tried before the bishop's court on the 12th, and expelled from the church. This account is found on page 133 of Millennial Star, volume 16, where reference is made to Book "A," Far West Record.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 150.

From the above we see that Oliver Cowdery, on April 11, 1838, was expelled from the church. His testimony in regard to the Book of Mormon will be strengthened, if he still maintained that testimony till his death. Below we quote from a letter written by Hiram Page to Doctor Warren Cowdery, brother of Oliver Cowdery, after the death of Oliver as printed in the Church History, volume 4, page 515.

During his (Oliver Cowdery's) sickness his mind was strong; although his bodily strength failed, his mind was clear and active. . . . Among his last words, was to reaffirm his testimony to the Book of Mormon.

On April 13, (1838,) charges were preferred against David Whitmer, upon which he was tried before the high council and expelled. An account of this trial is found in the Millennial Star, volume 16, pages 133 and 134, where reference is made to Far West Record, Book "A."—Church History, vol. 2, p. 150.

As in the case of Oliver Cowdery, if this man maintained his testimony in regard to the Book of Mormon until his death, while remaining out of the church, the evidence is materially strengthened. Below we give the testimony of David Whitmer toward the close of his life, preceded by an article appearing in the Richmond (Missouri) Conservator, March 24, 1881:

Elsewhere we publish a letter from David Whitmer, an old and well-known citizen of Ray, as well as an indorsement of his standing as a man, to some unwarranted aspersions made upon him.

There is no doubt that Mr. Whitmer, who was one of the three witnesses of the authenticity of the gold plates, from which he asserts that Joseph Smith translated the Book of Mormon (a facsimile of the characters he now has in his possession with the original records), is firmly convinced of its divine origin, and while he makes no effort to obtrude his views or beliefs, he simply wants the world to know that so far as he is concerned there is no "variableness or shadow of turning." Having resided here for near a half of a century, it is with no little pride that he points to his past record with the conscientiousness that he has done nothing derogatory to his character as a citizen and a believer in the Son of Mary, to warrant such an attack on him, come from what source it may, and now with the lilies of seventy-five winters crowning him like an aureole, and his pilgrimage on earth well-nigh ended, he reiterates his former statements, and will leave futurity to solve the problem that he was but a passing witness to its fulfillment. His attacks on the vileness that has sprung up with the Utah Church, must have a salutary effect upon those bigamists who have made adultery the corner stone in the edifice of their belief.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 57.

Following is the indorsement as published in the Richmond (Missouri) Conservator:

We, the undersigned citizens of Richmond, Ray County, Missouri, where David Whitmer has resided since the year A. D. 1838, certify that we have been long and intimately acquainted with him and know him to be a man of the highest integrity, and of undoubted truth and veracity.

Given at Richmond, Missouri, this March 19, 1881.

Gen. Alexander W. Doniphan.

Hon. George W. Dunn, Judge of the Fifth Judicial Circuit.

Thos. D. Woodson, President of Ray County Savings Bank.

J. T. Child, Editor of Conservator.

H. C. Garner, Cashier of Ray County Savings Bank.
 L. C. Cantwell, Postmaster, Richmond.
 George I. Wasson, Mayor.
 James A. Davis, County Collector.
 C. J. Hughes, Probate Judge and Presiding Justice of Ray County Court.
 George W. Trigg, County Clerk.
 W. W. Mosby, M. D.
 W. A. Holman, County Treasurer.
 J. S. Hughes, Banker, Richmond.
 James Hughes, Banker, Richmond.
 D. P. Whitmer, Attorney at Law.
 Hon. James W. Black, Attorney at Law.
 Thomas McGinnis, Ex-Sheriff Ray County.
 J. P. Quesenberry, Merchant.
 W. R. Holman, Furniture Merchant.
 Lewis Slaughter, Recorder of Deeds.
 George W. Buchanan, M. D.
 A. K. Reyburn.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 56.

This establishes the witness as of good reputation and of "the highest integrity," at the time he published the following:

A PROCLAMATION.

Unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, unto whom these presents shall come:

It having been represented by one John Murphy, of Polo, Caldwell County, Missouri, that I, in conversation with him last summer, denied my testimony as one of the three witnesses to the "Book of Mormon."

To the end, therefore, that he may understand me now, if he did not then; and that the world may know the truth, I wish now, standing as it were, in the very sunset of life, and in the fear of God, once for all to make this public statement:

That I have never at any time denied that testimony or any part thereof, which has so long since been published with that book, as one of the three witnesses. Those who know me best, well know that I have always adhered to that testimony. And that no man may be misled or doubt my present views in regard to the same, I do again affirm the truth of all my statements, as then made and published.

"He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear," it was no delusion! What is written is written, and he that readeth let him understand.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 55.

We quote the following from Church History, volume 4, pages 361 and 362:

The Kansas City Journal of June 5, also contained an interview with David Whitmer. Among other things Mr. Whitmer said:

"A few months after the translation was completed, that is in the spring of 1830, Joseph had the book published, and this (showing a well-worn volume) is a copy of the first edition, which I have had in my possession ever since it was printed."

"When did you see the plates?"

"It was in the latter part of June, 1829. Joseph, Oliver Cowdery, and myself were together, and the angel showed them to us. We not only saw the plates of the Book of Mormon, but he also showed us the brass plates of the Book of Ether and many others. They were shown to us in this way, Joseph and Oliver and I were sitting on a log when we were overshadowed by a light more glorious than that of the sun. In the midst of this light, but a few feet from us, appeared a table upon which were many golden plates, also the sword of Laban and the directors. I saw them as plain as I see you now and distinctly heard the voice of the Lord declaiming that the records of the plates of the Book of Mormon were translated by the gift and power of God."

"Who else saw the plates at this time?"

"No one. Martin Harris, the other witness, saw them the same day and the eight witnesses, Christian Whitmer, Hiram Page, Jacob Whitmer, Joseph Smith, sr., Peter Whitmer, jr., Hyrum Smith, John Whitmer, and Samuel H. Smith saw them next day."

"Did you see the angel?"

"Yes; he stood before us. Our testimony as recorded in the Book of Mormon is absolutely true, just as it is written there."

"Can you describe the plates?"

"They appeared to be gold, about six by nine inches in size, about as thick as parchment, a great many in number and bound together like the leaves of a book by massive rings passing through the back edges. The engraving upon them was very plain and of very curious appearance. Smith made facsimiles of some of the plates, and sent them by Martin Harris to Professors Anthon and Mitchill, of New York City, for examination. They pronounced the characters reformed Egyptian, but were unable to read them."

The above clearly shows the position of David Whitmer eight years before his death, which occurred January 25, 1888. Much more evidence could be offered concerning the testimony of this man, but it is unnecessary.

Martin Harris, who died at Clarkston, Cache County, Utah, Saturday, July 10, 1875, wrote from Smithfield, Utah, to Mr. H. B. Emerson, of New Richmond, Ohio, in November, 1870, and in January, 1871, and bears a renewed testimony.

SMITHFIELD, UTAH, November 23, 1870.

Mr. Emerson; Sir: I received your favor. In reply I will say concerning the plates: I do say that the angel did show to me the plates containing the Book of Mormon. Further, the translation that I carried to Professor Anthon was copied from these same plates; also, that the professor did testify to it being a correct translation. . . .

SMITHFIELD, CACHE COUNTY, UTAH TERRITORY, January, 1871.

To H. Emerson; Dear Sir: Your second letter, dated December, 1870, came duly to hand. I am truly glad to see a spirit of inquiry manifested therein. I reply by a borrowed hand, as my sight has failed me too much to write myself. Your questions: Question 1, Did you go to England to lecture against "Mormonism"?

Answer. I answer emphatically, No, I did not; no man ever heard me in any way deny the truth of the Book of Mormon, the administration of the angel that showed me the plates; nor the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, under the administration of Joseph Smith, jr., the prophet whom the Lord raised up for that purpose, in these the latter days, that he may show forth his power and glory.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 51.

John Whitmer, one of the eight witnesses, in 1836, in an address published in the March issue of the Messenger and Advocate, upon leaving the editorial chair, writes:

It may not be amiss in this place to give a statement to the world concerning the work of the Lord, as I have been a member of this church of Latter Day Saints from its beginning. To say that the Book of Mormon is a revelation from God, I have no hesitancy; but with all confidence have signed my name to it as such; and I hope that my patrons will indulge me in speaking freely on this subject, as I am about leaving the editorial department. Therefore I desire to testify to all that will come to the knowledge of this address that I have most assuredly seen the plates from whence the Book of Mormon is translated, and that I have handled these plates, and know of a surety that Joseph Smith, jr., has translated the Book of Mormon by the gift and power of God, and in this thing the wisdom of the wise most assuredly has perished; therefore, Know ye, O ye inhabitants of the earth, wherever this address may come, that I have in this thing freed my garments of your blood, whether you believe or disbelieve the statements of your unworthy friend and well-wisher.—Messenger and Advocate, vol. 2, pp. 286, 287.

FAR WEST, CALDWELL COUNTY, MISSOURI, December 11, 1876.

H. C. Smith; Dear Sir: Your letter came to hand—your request considered. First, as for giving all particulars that I know of the Book of Mormon, can not be written on one sheet of paper; therefore permit me to be brief. From what you have written I conclude you have read the Book of Mormon, together with the testimonies you read my name subscribed as one of the eight witnesses to said book. That testimony was, is, and will be true, henceforth and for ever.

Respectfully yours, JOHN WHITMER.

The testimony of these men and the thousands who have testified since the coming forth of the Book of Mormon that that work was brought forth by the power and inspiration of God must stand until some one is found to whom God has revealed the contrary, or who by other substantial evidence is able to gainsay the strong testimony of those who have claimed, and do claim that this book is of divine origin. The Book of Mormon has now been extant as a book since 1830 (eighty-three years) and as yet has not been successfully accounted for by any other way than that suggested and certified to by the eight and the three witnesses, on the fly leaves of the book.

To assume a mistranslation, without having the data from which to prove such an assumption, is the height of folly; and for anyone to assume that because certain scholars differ with Joseph Smith as to the translation of certain facsimiles published in connection with the partial translation of the so-called Book of Abraham, that the Book of Mormon was not correctly translated, is a far-fetched argument, for the following reasons:

BOOK OF MORMON AND BOOK OF ABRAHAM NOT ON SAME BASIS.

1. God submitted the Book of Mormon for translation; Mr. Chandler, the Book of Abraham. 2. The Lord superintended the translation of the Book of Mormon, directly through the Urim and Thummim and revelations from time to time; there is no evidence that such was the case with the Book of Abraham; in fact, the evidence is to the contrary. 3. God placed his approval upon the Book of Mormon by revelation to the church; not so with the Book of Abraham or Pearl of Great Price. 4. The church prior to 1844 indorsed and the Reorganized Church has since indorsed the Book of Mormon; but neither ever indorsed the Book of Abraham, either as to translation or doctrine. 5. Eleven witnesses are on record as to the correctness and divinity of the Book of Mormon; not so with the Book of Abraham. 6. Joseph Smith claimed no knowledge of the language of the Book of Mormon plates and of necessity depended upon inspiration for that knowledge; Joseph Smith claimed to have a knowledge of Egyptian, hence was not necessarily dependent upon divine aid in his translation of the Book of Abraham.

The following from the Doctrine and Covenants will show that according to a revelation given to Joseph Smith, March, 1829, God had submitted the plates to him and assumed a superintendency over the work of translating:

He who spoke unto you said unto you, I, the Lord, am God, and have given these things unto you, my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and have commanded you that you should stand as a witness of these things, and I have caused you that you should enter into a covenant with me, that you should not show them except to those persons to whom I command you; and you have no power over them except I grant it unto you. And you have a gift to translate the plates, and this is the first gift that I bestowed upon you, and I have commanded that you should pretend to no other gift until my purpose is fulfilled in this; for I will grant unto you no other gift until it is finished.—Doctrine and Covenants 5: 1.

And to further show that Joseph Smith claimed the Lord's superintendency, we quote the following:

And if this be the case, behold, I say unto thee, Joseph, When thou hast translated a few more pages thou shalt stop for a season, even until I command thee again; then thou mayest translate again. And except thou do this, behold, thou shalt have no more gift, and I will take away the things which I have intrusted with thee.—Doctrine and Covenants 5: 6.

We need not give evidence that the papyrus from which the so-called Book of Abraham was translated was secured from Michael H. Chandler, as the Reverend Spalding gives this in his pamphlet, page 14.

There is no direct evidence that Joseph Smith, jr., translated the Book of Abraham by divine revelation, and there is absolutely no evidence that he did it at the command of the Lord. The strongest and only statement in defense of the idea of divine assistance in translating this book is quoted by Mr. Spalding, as follows: "Truly can we say, The Lord is beginning to reveal the abundance of peace and truth."—Church History, volume 1, page 569. There is no evidence to show whether Joseph Smith had reference to the Lord bringing the papyrus to light, or the Lord's assisting him in its translation; but from other statements we discover that Joseph Smith proceeded to translate an alphabet to the Book of Abraham.

The remainder of the month, I was continually engaged in translating an alphabet to the Book of Abraham and arranging a grammar of the Egyptian language as practiced by the ancients.—Mr. Spalding's pamphlet, p. 14.

From this we discover that Joseph Smith must have had a knowledge of Egyptian or he could not have been engaged in arranging a grammar of the Egyptian language. Nothing of this kind took place in the translation of the Book of Mormon; he translated it by the power of God without a knowledge of the language in which the plates were written; he made no grammar of the language of the plates. The preponderance of evidence is that Joseph Smith did not claim divine assistance in the translation of the Book of Abraham, but did it from his knowledge of the Egyptian language as a man, or scholar, and not as the prophet of God.

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings as they shall be directed by the Spirit.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doeth according to these things, shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 16.

The revelation from which we quote above was given February, 1831, four years before the papyrus was submitted by Mr. Chandler to Joseph Smith for translation, and this revelation was accepted August 17, 1835, by the General Assembly.—See Doctrine and Covenants 108A. At no time up to the death of the Prophet in June, 1844, was a revelation given placing the stamp of God's approval upon either the translation or the doctrine of the Book of Abraham.

By adopting the Book of Doctrine and Covenants (1835 edition), the General Assembly adopted the forty-second section, and with it the Book of Mormon. The church as a body never took any action approving or disapproving of the Book of Abraham, and therefore can not be bound by any error Joseph Smith may have made (if indeed any has been made) in translation.

Judge John F. Philips, in his decision in the Temple Lot Case, says:

The only authorized and recognized books of doctrine and laws for the government of the church from 1830 to 1846 were the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

The reader will notice that 1846 is two years after the death of the Prophet Joseph Smith. No mention is made of the Book of Abraham or The Pearl of Great Price.

Mr. Spalding's argument is weak when he attempts to hold the church responsible for the actions of Joseph Smith as a man, and to claim that the Book of Mormon is a mistranslation, offering as proof statements relative to the Book of Abraham. He can not construe the argument against the Book of Abraham to apply to the Book of Mormon, because the circumstances surrounding the translation of the two are entirely different, no claim to divine direction and supervision being made for the Book of Abraham.

CHURCH HISTORY ON THE SUBJECT.

The Reorganization is best represented in the language of the church historian, who, speaking concerning the Book of Abraham, says:

These extracts, as we understand, are from a translation of a roll of manuscript found with some Egyptian mummies purchased of a traveler who visited Kirtland, Ohio, a few years before for the purpose of exhibiting the mummies. The church has never to our knowledge taken any action on this work, either to indorse or condemn; so it can not be said to be a church publication; nor can the church be held to answer for the correctness of its teachings. Joseph Smith, as the translator, is committed of course to the correctness of the translation, but not necessarily to the indorsement of its historical or doctrinal contents.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 569.

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM

OR

THE CURRENT REFORMATION IN CONTRAST WITH TRUTH REVEALED.—PART 7.

BY E. E. LONG.

SELECTING A FIELD.

Now that the society has been organized, the next matter of concern is the field to be occupied.

The historian says: "The first question of importance to be decided was in regard to the definite field to be cultivated. The selection was made with deliberation."—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 128.

After considerable "deliberation" with reference to the Chinese, the Koreans, the North American Indians, et al., to use their own words,

This principle guided those in authority in the newly organized society in the selection of our first foreign mission field. But the dictates of a discriminating judgment and sound policy plainly indicate that our first efforts should be expended more in reference to permanent effect and extended influence in order to ultimate success than to immediate results, and hence our labors should be devoted to that nation which, when evangelized, will exert the most powerful and widespread influence.—Ibid., pp. 128, 129.

It was decided "with one voice" that the "sons and daughters of Abraham" promised results "beyond that of any other people," because "the signs of the times also seemed to be auspicious for a successful presentation of the gospel to this historic people," and because, further:

The ultimate restoration of the Jews to their ancient home was generally accepted as the teaching of the Bible. How appropriate, how wise, how truly Christian, previous to this event, to bring the Jews residing in the Holy Land into the fellowship of the Christ and into the enjoyment of "the great salvation!"—Ibid., pp. 129, 130.

Delusive hope! They may establish a church, restore baptism, separate missionaries and miracles, and organize societies by resolution, but they will never convert any considerable number of the "sons and daughters of Abraham" without a "thus saith the Lord" in the full meaning of the term. Israel has learned his lesson too well to be decoyed by any such makeshift as Campbellism.

After the selection of the people and the field, with whom and in which to begin work, there was no difficulty in securing the services of a man eminently qualified by nature, education and grace to work among the Jews in Jerusalem. This man was James Turner Barclay.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 134.

The sum of $1,200 was appropriated by the board to convey Doctor Barclay and his family—wife and three children—to Jerusalem. In a meeting held October 14, 1850, after the departure of the missionary family, it was "Resolved, That the board place at the disposal of Brother Barclay $500 in addition to the $1,200 already appropriated for his passage to Jerusalem, and the support of the mission for one year." Surely, this accomplished gentleman did not engage in this work from mercenary considerations.—Ibid., p. 146.

Arriving at his destination, Doctor Barclay found "missions and missionaries" galore, while money was used in extravagance in an effort to "Christianize (?) the sons of Abraham," and the historian adds:

It was an occasion of surprise also to find "the bitter hatred of everything called Christian on the part of the Jews. . . ." Doctor J. T. Barclay and family left New York at noon, September 11, 1850, and arrived in Jerusalem at sunset, February 7, 1851. Upon his return to the United States, he noted carefully that he had had an official connection with the Board of the American Christian Missionary Society just "four years, four months and four days." After a varied experience, in which there were signs of success which often did not realize their promise, and in which there was much opposition, not only from the Moslems, but from those who claimed to be Christians, it was decided to discontinue the mission.—Ibid., pp. 150, 151.

So, over against this "pioneer" effort to "Christianize Judah" we write failure, in great, big letters; a monument to the blind zeal of those who walk in darkness.

Right here we wish to call attention to the fact that at this time, 1849, the restoration of Israel to his long lost possessions was looked upon by the "reformers" as a certainty from a Bible viewpoint, to be followed by the ushering in of the millennial reign and the second coming of Christ. But their failure to interest Israel seems to have cast a blight upon the ardency of their hopes, because that great truth is now generally denied, especially in public discussion.

For a time the American Christian Missionary Society had no work in a foreign land. Alexander Cross, a negro slave in Kentucky, had been purchased by Christian men, given his freedom, educated, and sent to Africa as a missionary. Before he did any work he fell a victim to a fever. Thus ended the first effort to evangelize Africa—the first effort made by the Disciples of Christ.—Ibid., p. 152.

So ended their pioneer missionary efforts, and all they can report is failure.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF DISCORD.

The period immediately following the Cincinnati convention, up to the death of Mr. Campbell in 1866, has gone down in history as the "Turbulent Period." As already noted, we detect in the convention the rumblings of discord. There were men in the convention, and out of it, who looked upon the new move as a departure, an "innovation," without divine warrant; but the failure cited can not be attributed to their opposition. The difficulty was with the thing itself. It was faulty. A proposition of the soundest principles, premised upon divine truth, may miscarry for a time because of adverse conditions, but when circumstances are favorable to its application and it fails of results, there is something wrong with the principle involved.

Doctor Barclay was a talented man, one of the best men the convention could produce, with plenty of money at his disposal, and four years opportunity; but, so far as the primary object of his mission is concerned, his work was a dismal failure. Why? Because he had "run without tidings." God did not authorize his mission, and Judah will never be "Christianized" until He gives the command (Isaiah 11:11; John 10:4, 5); and it will not likely be given to a convention of men who say, "We want no new message from the skies—no ambassadors from Christ."

Mr. Campbell had sown the seeds of discord that were destined to shatter his reformation into fragments. One of the planks in the "bottom" on which they had "put to sea" was, "A divine warrant has always been essential to any acceptable worship. The question, 'Who has required this at your hands?' must always be answered by a 'Thus saith the Lord.'"—Christian System, p. 38. That plank, and some others equally important, had been surreptitiously removed by the convention. There was an element who positively refused to stand on the re-modeled structure.

Mr. Campbell, in his Christian Baptist, had taken a decided stand against everything sectarian. Nothing escaped his satirical caricatures. Missionary societies, Bible societies, Sunday schools, and the like, had been held up to ridicule and branded as marks of the beast. His influence had extended far and wide, and his peculiar hobbies had become deeply rooted in the minds of many of his most faithful admirers, who cherished the hope that the "reformation" would accomplish the purpose of its inauguration. His opposition to everything creedish had struck a responsive chord with men who were imbued with reformatory ideas, and he had gathered around his standard an army of stalwarts who were as ready to attack "innovations" within as they were heresies without. We read:

While authoritative definition always has its evils, it is equally true that no definition at all is sometimes not entirely free from difficulty. The anti-creed doctrine of the Disciples was, in some respects, a boomerang. Having no authoritative interpretation of the Scriptures, every man became his own interpreter, and consequently there were times when it was eminently true that in the movement there were "all kinds of doctrine, preached by all kinds of men."—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 211.

What else could they expect? One man had as much right to interpret the Scriptures as another. When men depart from that which is written they should not be surprised at confusion. It is plainly stated in the Scriptures, "No prophecy of the Scriptures is of any private interpretation."—2 Peter 1: 20.

It is an evident fact that there had been a grave departure from the divine method as manifested by the condition described above, "all kinds of doctrine, preached by all kinds of men."

It is not too much to say that a crisis had been reached in the movement. It was impossible to make progress by many of the old methods, and yet some held on to the old with a tenacity worthy of a better cause. . . . But when they came to the period of readjustment and progress, on the lines of the new society which the war had produced, they found that they could not any longer work upon the old lines with any hope of permanent success, and yet there was great apparent danger that in their anxiety to set their house in order they would lose much of the evangelistic fervor which distinguished them during the earlier period of their movement.—Ibid., pp. 210, 211.

So Mr. Campbell was mistaken when he wrote in 1835, "We flatter ourselves that the principles are now clearly and fully developed." In the short space of fourteen years "many of the old methods" had become a hindrance to progress. Instead of uniting all believers in Christ "with honor to themselves" the Disciples were themselves being rent asunder by the application of the methods that required twenty-five years to "argue" out.

But when the period of introspection dawned, and the Disciples became deeply interested in their own organization and development, then it was that some of the straightest among them began to feel the reflex force of the anti-creed doctrine which they had so earnestly preached. When brethren began to think for themselves, with respect to church organization, the public worship and missionary societies, then it was that most intense preachers of the anticreed crusade began to feel the need of some interpretation of the Bible that would help them to scotch the forward movement which had broken with the obsolete methods of the past.—Ibid., p. 212.

So, after more than forty years of labor in trying to restore the primitive order of things, they have made the startling discovery that their methods are "obsolete," a hindrance to progress, and must be abandoned. Some authoritative standard of interpretation of the Scriptures is necessary in order to maintain unity; and the anathemas that they have been hurling at others for their "human inventions" fall heavily upon their own heads. Such is the fate of man-made devices when opposed to the wisdom of God.

This introspection, as I have called it, led to an earnest desire on the part of many to make progress commensurate with the demands of the new conditions of society which had been evolved out of the war. These are called the "progressives." There were others, however, who refused to accept the changed conditions; or, if they were compelled to accept them, they utterly refused to adapt themselves to these conditions. These men were called the "anti-progressives." Thus, two opposing forces were definitely formed.—Ibid., p. 213.

On page 215 the same writer says:

It can not be denied that at the very beginning of the movement Mr. Campbell in his Christian Baptist had laid the foundation for much of the opposition which was now experienced with respect to organized missionary work.

Mr. Campbell had opposed everything that squinted at "sectarianism" until he exhausted his prolific vocabulary in the use of satirical invectives. But now he, with the majority of his followers, find it "expedient" to adopt certain sectarian methods in order to make progress.

During this "turbulent period" the defection became more pronounced as the clouds of error thickened, and the breach between the contending factions gradually widened, resulting in two separate bodies, which continue to the present time.

A noted "anti" sounded the following note of alarm as early as 1865:

He is a poor judge of men and things who does not see slowly growing up among us a class of men who can no longer be satisfied with the ancient gospel and the ancient order of things. These men must have changes; and silently they are preparing the mind of this brotherhood to receive changes. Be not deceived, brethren, the Devil is not sleeping. If you refuse to see the danger till ruin is upon you, then it will be too late. The wise seaman catches the first whiff of the distant storm and adjusts his ship at once. Let us profit by his example.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, pp. 207, 208.

The heresy hunters were busy marshaling their forces in opposition to the "innovations" of the progressives. Open attacks were made upon the "societies," and "instrumental music" became a bone of contention. A prominent writer says: "Thomas Campbell had unwittingly planted the seeds of this controversy in giving utterance to the now famous declaration: 'Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent!'"—Ibid., page 279. Having taken deep root in the fertile soil of independent thought, it grew and waxed strong. A minor party contended for the rigidity of the text, while the others pointed to the great elasticity of the law of expediency. With one the "societies" were "innovations" contrary to the original standard. With the other the organization of the missionary society was merely "the first tardy attempt to undo the mistakes" of Scott and collaborators in the dissolution of the Mahoning Association.

The introduction of instrumental music in public worship by some congregations added fuel to the flames.

In the next few years the question had taken a broad range, and the conflict between the progressive and conservative elements of the church, in many places, became bitter and unchristian. The great truths of the gospel, which it had been the mission of the Disciples to proclaim, were consigned to the rear, while brethren quarreled and sometimes divided over the means to be employed as to the worship of God.—Ibid., p. 283.

In many places the public witnessed the spectacle of a church, whose leading tenet was the union of all Christians, going to pieces over the use of a mere expedient. The situation was critical. The antiorgan element, though usually in the minority, were for refusing all fellowship with their more progressive brethren.—Page 285.

The controversy was never settled. The anti element are still pushing the fight with unabated zeal. The "bitter" and "unchristian" spirit still exhibits itself, dividing congregations, the fate of the "wooden devil" depending upon the majority of the contestants. J. W. McGarvey, the pioneer antiorganist, who refused to worship in a congregation where the organ was retained, died recently, and the "antis" say the "digressives" played the organ at his funeral. Here is the text in full:

All of our readers know that J. W. McGarvey was opposed to the use of instrumental music in the worship, several years ago withdrawing from his church at Lexington, Kentucky, when they introduced it, and placing his membership where they did not use it. I fail to see the consistency of McGarvey's course in opposing instrumental music, and yet spending his life in building up a religious body which did believe in and practice it even to the disrupting of hundreds of churches. Contrary to the faith of the old man, they played the organ at his funeral. It seems that they thought they would not give the "antis" any more consolation from McGarvey than they could help.—D. A. Somner, in Octographic Review, December 26, 1911.

The strife is certainly fierce that follows a victim to his grave.

Another writer, who evidently was not in sympathy with the progressive element, wrote:

We can not by any possibility know that a certain element of worship is acceptable to God in this Christian dispensation, when the Scriptures are silent in respect to it. To introduce any such element is unscriptural and presumptuous.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 282.

All the bitter strife and unchristian controversy might have been averted had they not severed the line of communication between themselves and the fountain of truth by denying God the right to reveal his will to them. It is a sad plight to be in when men are face to face with a proposition upon which the Scriptures are silent, and when the ties of love are being rent asunder, that they must listen to the resounding echo of their despairing cry, "We can not by any possibility know . . . when the Scriptures are silent." Why, the Scriptures are very plain upon the matter. "God is no respecter of persons."—Acts 10:34. "Ask and ye shall receive."—Matthew 7:7. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."—James 1:5.

When "contentions" arose among the Saints over the "service of song" in divine worship the "voice of the Spirit" put an end to the controversy.

Let the young men and the maidens cultivate the gift of music and of song; let not the middle-aged and the old forget the gladness of youth and let them aid and assist so far as their cares will permit; and remember that saints should be cheerful in their warfare that they may be joyous in their triumph. Nevertheless, let the organ and the stringed instrument, and the instrument of brass be silent when the saints assemble for prayer and testimony, that the feelings of the tender and the sad may not be intruded upon.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6.

The Sabbath question, too, arose,

And the Spirit saith further: Inasmuch as there has been much discussion in the past concerning the Sabbath of the Lord, the church is admonished that until further revelation is received, or the quorums of the church are assembled to decide concerning the law in the church articles and covenants, the saints are to observe the first day of the week commonly called the Lord's day, as a day of rest: as a day of worship, as given in the covenants and commandments.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 7.

That settled the matter; and on such questions there is unity of sentiment and concert of action the world over, while the ranks of our contemporaries are still broken and the strife continues, according to the latest issues of the "anti" journals.

THE PARTING OF THE WAYS.

A brief note from the "transition period" must suffice. The death of Mr. Campbell brings us to the parting of the ways. The passing of the "great leader" removed the magnetic force of adhesion and the power of unity among the Disciples had vanished.

For seventeen years Alexander Campbell stood at the head of the marching column of our missionary host. . . . During all these years he served as president of the Missionary Society and contributed of his means to its support. But his voice was scarcely hushed in death before the enemies of missionary cooperation in general, and the American Christian Missionary Society in particular, made use of his great name in defense of their methods of obstruction.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 288.

The closing months of the year 1866 witnessed widespread disaffection.—Ibid., p. 290.

While the cause of world-wide missions had suffered loss through the sudden crystallization of a distinctly antimissionary party, the battle was not so nearly over as the enemies of cooperation imagined.—P. 292.

The next three years were spent in fruitless attempts to devise some plan that would harmonize all factions and secure the cooperation of the entire brotherhood.—Page 293.

Whoever read where the apostles spent any time devising "plans" in an effort to harmonize dissenting factions? We leave the foregoing without further comment, and pass on to the next important "landmark" in their history.

Comments.

OPPORTUNITY.—We are wondering if you music-loving people of the church realize just what door of opportunity is opening to you in the establishment of this column. We desire to see it used! We want The Staff to scintillate with notes, vibrant to every wave of musical activity which passes over our people. Are you alive? Get in touch and keep in touch! Be attuned!

SINGING SCHOOL.—What has become of the old-fashioned singing school? Its passing is coincident with the establishment of public school music. Which plan is the better? Is the present generation of young people better equipped—can they read more accurately at sight, or more independently than those who preceded them? If we are progressing let us rejoice; if not, let us revive the old-fashioned singing conventions! Let us hear from everyone who has had experience or opportunity to observe conditions along these lines.

Notes of the Staff.

Brother H. E. Moler closed just prior to his departure for his missionary field, a term of singing lessons given to a class of over thirty. This class was composed of pupils from the age of nine to fifty years, and was formed for the purpose of teaching the rudiments; chiefly with the object in view of reading vocal music at sight. This is a fine beginning, Brother Moler, and the fruit of earnest endeavor in this direction will be harvested in later years. Keep going!

The Children's Chorus of the Stone Church in Independence gave their third semiannual concert on Tuesday evening, June 3. A program of fifteen numbers entertained the large audience, which responded with a liberal financial contribution, which goes to the music fund of the chorus. These classes are composed of children from the age of eight years upwards, and when combined, as in concert work, number one hundred and fifty. It is the intention to take up a cantata or operetta for next year's work.

The farewell concert given by Sister Marie Riggs in Kansas City, Monday evening, was enjoyed by a throng which filled the New Casino. The playing of this young sister is truly wonderful. Her delicacy of touch, her accuracy, both in memory and technique, her soulful interpretations are certainly beyond that of the usual girl of her age. We trust her work abroad, under Mr. L'Hivene, may be characterized by the same thoughtfulness and consecration she has shown in these preparatory years; and that success unqualified may attend her efforts.

The Sunday school orchestra at Independence, under the direction of Brother A. H. Mills, will give a concert about the middle of June. It is with regret that we are to lose Brother Mills in this capacity, but since it is a "call higher up" that takes him away we are content. He was appointed by conference to labor in Colorado.

The following newspaper extract shows the power of music over the human mind even when that mind is not in tune: "NEW YORK, May 20.—The presence of mind of a nurse at the Amityville Asylum prevented a terrible panic among the four hundred insane patients when one of the outbuildings at the institution took fire. Screaming with fear, intensified by the hideous laughter of some of the hysterical inmates, the patients crowded the corridors, or beat at the doors of their cells. Doctor O. J. Olsey and his eighty attendants expected at any moment that their charges would get beyond their control. Suddenly one of the young women nurses ran to the piano and began a lively march song, singing the words in a clear, high voice that rose above the clamor of the excited maniacs. The music had an instantaneous effect, and in a few moments perfect quiet was restored."

Some years ago, Brother Joseph Luff composed the following little poem, and having a number of copies, distributed them among the worshipers at the Independence church prayer meeting on our fast Sunday last April. They are inspiring and acceptable, and came as an uplift.

FAST DAY INVOCATION.

Tune: Arlington, O. M.

With outstretched hands and yearning hearts
Thy kneeling church appears
To dedicate to thee, O Lord,
Its fasting, prayers, and tears.

Our needs impel—thy words invite,
And love the act inspires;
Come, then, O Lord, and sanctify
Our offerings and desires.

Truth is thy realm and wisdom shines
Where'er thy voice is heard;
Sweet peace pervades the atmosphere
By thy dear presence stirred.

Desiring these and loving thee,
We ask that thou wilt bring Thine angels, Spirit, light, and power
To grace our gathering.

Our sessions, councils, meetings bless—
Thy ministry inspire;
Let love on all our altars burn—
A holy, ceaseless fire.

Pardon the sins that stain our past;
Strengthen our future need;
Speak to our list'ning ears, and all
Our hung'ring spirits feed.

Perfect our ranks—our course prescribe—
Courage with meekness give;
Equip thy pleading church, O God,
To labor, love, and live.

Musical Notes.

German statistics of opera show that Richard Wagner's works were performed more than twice as many times as those of any other composer, or 1,815 times. The next highest being 850 performances of Puccini's works, for the year. The Metropolitan Opera House, which closed for the season on April 19, also employed Wagner's works more than those of any other composer, but the number of times was only 85, while those of Puccini numbered 28. Some room for reflection here.

Commencing July 1, 1913, Columbia University will have a new department under the management of Professor W. H. Hall, who will occupy the new Chair of Choral and Church Music, to be maintained by an endowment fund now at the university's disposal.

One prominent authority, Mr. Kriens, has expressed his conviction that as efficient, if not superior, teaching is to be had in America as in Europe; though he admits that a superior "musical atmosphere" exists in the latter country, because of government and municipal aid that is there given. Concerning this it may be noted that Boston has given municipal concerts for a number of seasons past, with splendid success. These are usually held in the halls of municipal buildings, one of which has a capacity of about one thousand two hundred people, and has been crowded to its utmost capacity, admission being by ticket which may be procured free. The concert opens with a lecture by Professor Elson, of the Boston Conservatory of Music, in which is explained the character of the composition to be performed, and of the instruments employed in their rendition. This is followed by orchestral, and instrumental and vocal solo numbers. As the season's course is progressive it has proven to be not only popular but educational to a marked degree; and the result shows already in a gratifying increase of interest in music among the people.

The director of music of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in San Francisco, in 1915, is to be Professor George W. Stewart, of Boston, who held a similar position at the Saint Louis Exposition. It is expected that about fifteen thousand singers will arrive from Germany. Valuable prizes will be given in competition for male choir, mass chorus, and folk song rendering. The latter will also be sung, comprising those of all nations, by a great chorus consisting of twenty thousand trained choristers from various countries.

In New York the park commissioner has arranged for concerts in about twenty-five parks. He has determined to have both brass band and orchestra music, in order that the people may decide which is the most popular. The result may be interesting to us.

Marcell Sembat, of the French Chamber of Deputies, lately has argued for the use of music as a cure for crime. This is being sustained by psychologists of world-wide reputation. Professor Gates claims to have demonstrated that disagreeable emotions develop poison in the blood, while those of an opposite nature are beneficial. This principle was in use among oriental nations anciently.

There are loyal hearts and spirits brave.
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have.
And the best shall come back to you.

Tincture all your thoughts with kindness, all your ambitions with helpfulness, all your acts with determination, if you would make a lasting impression upon your world, be it big or little; but remember that the possession of these virtues, and all others, can not save you from calumny if you insist upon doing your own thinking.—Selected.

Properly speaking, everything depends upon a man's intentions. Where these exist, thoughts will likewise appear; and as the intentions are, so are the thoughts.—Goethe.

INSECTS THAT MENACE HEALTH.

At this season when we look for the return of the fly and other summer pests, it is timely to consider some of the conclusions reached by men interested in questions pertaining to the public health. We have long regarded these insect intruders as annoying, but it is now known that they are disease carriers, and, as such, should be guarded against as a menace to health.

DISEASE CARRIERS.

The Iowa Health Bulletin is authority for the statement that thousands of deaths from typhoid fever and other intestinal diseases, caused by germs carried by flies, occur annually in New York City. Frank Parker Stockbridge in the World's Work (May, 1912) asserts that "science has definitely fixed upon the mosquito the responsibility for every case of malaria and for every case of yellow fever."

The Farmers' Bulletin, How Insects Affect Health in Rural Districts, issued by the Government at Washington, District of Columbia, states that, while in malaria and typhoid we have the two principal diseases common to the United States which may be conveyed by insects, the agency of these little creatures in the transfer of disease germs is much more widespread in warm countries, and it is by no means confined to human beings. In Egypt and in the Fiji Islands there is a destructive eye disease of human beings the germs of which are carried by the common house fly. In our Southern States an eye disease known as pink eye is carried by certain very minute flies. . . . In certain tropical countries a disease known as filariasis, which somewhat resembles certain forms of leprosy, is transferred among human beings by certain mosquitoes. There is good reason to suppose that the germs of bubonic plague may be transferred from sick people to healthy people by the bites of fleas. The so-called Texas fever of cattle is unquestionably transferred by the common cattle tick, and this was the earliest of the clearly demonstrated cases of the transfer of disease by insects. In Africa a similar disease of cattle is transferred by the bite of the famous biting fly known as the tsetse fly. The germs of the disease of cattle known as anthrax are carried by gaddies, or horseflies, and when these flies subsequently bite human beings malignant pustules may result; and other discoveries of this nature are constantly being made. Even the common bedbug is strongly suspected in this connection."

F. C. Walsh, M. D., writes in Technical World for June, 1913: "Science backs up the natural instincts of the good housewife who is so often considered 'cranky,' or overzealous in her unceasing battle with filth, vermin, and similarly 'horrid' things. To-day science is suspicious of all insects or vermin which can in any way come in contact with man. . . . Many of the insect pests have already been indicted; others have been found guilty of scattering diseases; but none should be acquitted until proved innocent. . . . First came the mosquito in connection with malaria; soon after a cousin of this fellow in connection with yellow fever; then . . . it was learned that an insignificant flea which infested rats was criminally involved in dealing not only death to humanity [through transmission of bubonic plague] but destruction to commerce as well."

INFANTILE PARALYSIS.

Doctor Walsh writes further: "While all this discovery in relation to insects and disease was going on, a destroyer, new to the minds of many, was silently reaping its harvest of death among the children throughout the entire country. For some unknown reason, this destroyer prefers children near the age of three as its victims. Widespread and fatal as it is, strange to relate, there are thousands of physicians who have never seen a case. . . . Yet in 1907 New York alone had an epidemic of the terrible infantile paralysis which struck down 2,500 children. . . . Since this epidemic there is scarcely a section of our country which has not received repeated visits from this treacherous menace. A child in perfect health may become its victim in an instant and there is no cure for it—any form of treatment up to the present is of little avail! . . .

"A disease of such destructive capabilities, coming on often with as little warning as a thunderclap from a cloudless sky, naturally would receive the attention of some of the most noted investigators. . . . It has been observed in a wide range of cases that the stable fly, common to all barnyards and places where horses are kept, was found in the household of everyone of the victims afflicted with the disease."

Scientists are now satisfied, from experiments made, that the stable fly is at least one means by which infantile paralysis is transmitted. "There will be waged this season a more vigorous campaign than ever before against all pests which infest the home or with which we are likely to come in any possible contact."

THE HOUSE FLY.

In Good Housekeeping for April, 1913, Woods Hutchinson, A. M., M. D., writing of infantile paralysis as, "An ancient enemy under a new name," says: "There can be little reasonable doubt that the disease is chiefly, if not exclusively, transmitted by insects; and,—what is the peculiarly encouraging feature,—these insects are not wild, but domestic animals and household pets. In fact, by far the most active criminal of the group of suspects is our old household friend and parlor boarder, the fly, just recently discovered to be one of our deadliest enemies. And why shouldn't he be? For he is both the product and the penalty of our own dirtiness and carelessness. . . . He is born of filth, he is attracted by filth, he breeds in filth.

"Every method adopted to exterminate the house fly, which may quite possibly play some part in the spread of this distressing disease, will also wipe out of existence his near cousin, the stable fly. Both alike breed chiefly in manure heaps, and principally in horse manure. Both require from ten to fourteen days to hatch from the egg laid in the manure heap. So that strict cleanliness and regular removal of all the accumulations of manure once a week will go far to do away with both of these pests.

The stable fly and the common house fly are so nearly alike that only an expert can distinguish them apart. The only visible difference between them is that the stable fly is slightly larger and his body a little lighter in color. . . . If a fly bites you, you may be sure it is a stable fly and not a house fly."

KEEP OUT THE FLIES.

The official organ of the Iowa State Board of Health contains the following statement: "Scientists of all countries agree upon this point—flies not only carry disease germs in their bodies but also upon their feet. They are readily attracted by filth which they devour greedily, so common decency would suggest the advisability of keeping them out of our houses and off our food.

"It is true they are scavengers, but they spread filth and disease in doing their work. It were better to do our own scavenging; keep clean, protect all apertures with screens, capture the stray intruders, use sanitary garbage pails which are provided with a device for disinfectants, and then discharge the fly.

"Flies should be carefully excluded from sick rooms. It has been clearly demonstrated that flies carry the bacillus of tuberculosis in their bodies after being in the room where a consumptive was confined."

WATCH YOUR SCREENS.

"One of the most useful devices of the last quarter century is the window and door screens which make it so easily possible for all classes of people to avail themselves of the opportunity for protecting their homes and their food supplies from the dangers of disease as carried by the fly in the daylight and the mosquito at night."

Screens may be of little use if not properly fitted and kept in repair. Even young children may be taught the necessity of using the screens carefully, to avoid breaking them or holding them open unnecessarily. They should be taught not to throw the door wide open, but only so far as to permit them to pass through easily.

GET RID OF THE FLIES.

Says the Iowa Health Bulletin: "The doctors have declared war on the house fly. It probably disseminates every disease. It is a nuisance. Its habits are filthy. It breeds in stables and garbage pails and carries the filth it revels in and tracks it across the sugar, the butter, and the beefsteak. It paddles its horrid feet in the baby's milk. It must be exterminated. It can be driven out of every city. In an age of knowledge, screens and cheap disinfectants there is no excuse for flies in any household. Clean up your premises, get rid of the breeding places of flies, and you will get rid of flies."

HOW TO GET RID OF THEM.

The Farmers' Bulletin from which we have already quoted says: "All horse manure accumulating in stables or barns should be collected, if not daily, at least once a week, and should be placed in either a pit or vault or in a screened inclosure like a closet at the side or end of the stable. This closet should have an outside door from which its contents may be shoveled when needed for manuring purposes. Each day's or each week's accumulations, after they are shoveled into the closet or pit, should be sprinkled over the surface with chloride of lime, and a barrel of this substance can conveniently be kept in the closet. If this plan be adopted (and these recommendations are the result of practical experience), house flies will have almost no chance to breed, and their numbers will be so greatly reduced that they will hardly be noticeable."

From authoritative sources, we glean the following suggestions for the extermination of flies: Spray the floors around horse stalls with a good disinfectant. Pyroligneous acid is a very valuable spray, because it is effective and not inflammable. Kerosene is good, but increases the fire risk.

Screen doors are a favorite gathering place for flies, which hang about them waiting for some one to let them in. Mix a teaspoon of carbolic acid with a quart of kerosene and rub the solution on the screen door. It will at once cease to attract the fly. The same solution may be used in an ordinary plant sprayer to spray the garbage can.

A cupful of kerosene poured into each sewer trap after a rain protects it against mosquito infestation for weeks. Vaults of outside closets also should be treated with kerosene, with lime, or with both. "A form of fly trap especially effective in stores and restaurant kitchens consists of a trough of tin three quarters of an inch wide and of the same depth, and as long as the depth of the window. If this is placed close against the window on the inside and kept half filled with kerosene, every fly approaching the window will fall into it, for the fumes of the kerosene have an overpowering effect on the insect."

When a house has become infested by flies it may be cleared of them by pouring twenty drops of carbolic acid on a hot shovel. The fumes from the acid will kill all the flies from a large room. Fresh pyrethrum powder (Persian insect powder), heaped in a cone and set on fire at the top, will burn slowly, giving out a dense smoke, which will stupefy either flies or mosquitoes in a room. They must then be swept up and burned.

Other expedients resorted to in destroying flies in the house are the sticky fly paper, the poison fly paper, and the wire fly swatter, the last named being most effective in the hands of an energetic person.

Clean up every place where decaying animal or vegetable refuse accumulates. Waste paper and old rags if exposed to moisture will afford breeding places for flies. Remember all the time that flies and filth begin with the same letter and mean the same thing. An hour's work of vigorous cleaning up in the spring is worth a day's work later in the summer, as you prevent the first crop of flies. This is an important consideration from the fact that the offspring of a single fly in the course of a summer reaches a figure almost beyond belief.

Letter Department

DES MOINES, IOWA, June 11, 1913.

Editors Herald: Perhaps there are some of your readers who would like to know that we have landed in our new field all right. We are now quite comfortably located at 813 East Twelfth Street, Des Moines. Please note that this is not the address that was first published. The man we first rented of failed to put his house in proper condition, as per contract, so we had to find another. Please send all mail to me to this address.

We had a very good conference at Decatur, Nebraska. Brother C. W. Prettyman, of Comstock Nebraska was elected president of the district, and member of the reunion committee. Brother H. A. Scott, of 1534 Spruce Street, Omaha, was elected superintendent of the Sunday school association of the district. May the loving Father bless the work and workers of that district who have been so kind to me all the years that I have been with them.

We were permitted to attend the convention and conference of this district, and find the Saints alive to the work here, which gave me courage. I hope that our coming in their midst will not in any way hinder the progress of the Father's work; but that we all may work together in love and as the good Spirit may direct.

Brethren Parker and Williams are to start tent meetings at Boone in a few days. There are many calls for tent work in this field, and I pray the Father that he will qualify these young men for the task. I see that there is plenty here in the city to keep me busy, so I will not need to be running after the things of the world in order to find something to do.

Wife's health is still poor, but some better than when last writing. It was remarkable to see how well she has been for the past four or five weeks and how she has stood the constant strain and worry of moving. But we can see where she has received especial strength for the task.

May the Father's blessing rest upon all. If any have relatives or friends whom they think a call from me would do good, send me their addresses. As ever I remain,

J. M. BAKER.

EAST JORDAN, MICHIGAN, June 9, 1913.

Dear Herald: I have not seen a letter from this part of the country for some time, so will write. Brother William Davis was a welcome visitor here, and it was good to hear him tell the gospel story and instruct the Saints. It truly was food to the soul. Most of the Saints are trying to lift the banner of Christ and let the gospel light shine.

I love to read the Mothers' Home Column. It does me much good when I read how our homes ought to be. While I try in my weak way, yet I see where I fail at times. When I read how we could deny ourselves things we want and do not really need it makes me rejoice in the gospel. While my dress does not trouble me to the extent to persuade me to overdo, I am made to see I could yet do with less in order to benefit others. That is where my work seems to lie, it is to impart to others; and that is when I am blessed most.

How I long to see the time come when we will be equal and all will be peace and love, and not so much evil environment for the young. I am a mother, and while we have two children in the church, we have one not yet of the fold. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may live in such a way that he will obey the gospel.

Ever praying for the church, I am,

Your sister,

CAROLINE DUDLEY.

HUGOTON, KANSAS, June 9, 1913.

Editors Herald: After arriving in San Francisco, Sister Barmore and I remained ten days before starting east. Brother and Sister Pitt remained a week. We held a week's meetings in Oakland, both Brother Pitt and I preaching. We also occupied in the pulpit in San Francisco. Brother Charles E. Crumley preached in Oakland once during the series there. He was en route to his mission field in Oregon.

We left Oakland for our trip east, Monday, May 26. Stopped one day in Los Angeles, where we were the guests of Brother and Sister Williams. Had a pleasant time. We stayed one day in Salt Lake City, where Brother A. M. Chase made our sojourn agreeable. Sister A. M. Chase was absent from home, but the children were there. They were all getting ready for removal to Brother Chase's eastern mission field. Brother Chase took us out in the automobile. We saw our new church and the principal sights of the city. We also had a general view from the roof of the Utah Hotel. It is a magnificent building, ten stories high.

We traveled from Salt Lake City to Denver over the Denver and Rio Grande Railway. We saw some delightful scenery. Arrived at Dodge City, Kansas, early Sunday, June 1. Laid over there all day. Could not get a train for this place until Monday. Arrived in the midst of my relatives here at 3 p. m. the 2d inst. We were pleased to meet again after a separation of eleven years. My mother, my two brothers and two of my sisters have moved here since I left America. Will reach my mission field in Indiana some time in July.

In gospel bonds,

A. C. BARMORE.

News from Branches

Omaha, Nebraska.

The somber heaps of ruins that are silent testimonials of the Easter tornado are slowly disappearing, and new and, in some places, more substantial buildings are being erected to take the place of the destroyed ones. There is still much of the shattered districts that have not been touched. These deserted, aged looking heaps, with the grass and weeds growing tall about them, are frightful reminders of the terror of that awful night.

The church was soon repaired so that the services were continued the next Sunday after the disaster. It is still a somewhat sorry looking object, all mudspattered and patched, but we will soon realize what wonders a couple of coats of good, white paint can work upon such a homely aspect.

The branch certainly appreciated the generous donation made by the General Religio Association. The gift of two hundred dollars went a long way toward lightening a heavy burden. Some of the Saints who sustained considerable loss of property have been helped greatly by such assistance. The city relief committee, Saints, and others, were quite liberal.

The work in the Omaha Branch is prospering. An ever-increasing interest is being manifested among the Saints. Our prayer services are always good, and occasionally the Spirit has instructed us in prophecy.

Some time ago one of our young men suggested that we have an early morning prayer service, at six o'clock. The idea met with favor, and after considering it we decided to try it one Friday morning. There were eighteen present and the meeting was very good. It was decided to make the meeting a regular weekly service; so every Friday at six in the morning we meet and enjoy an hour of prayer and testimony. Some have to leave for work before it is over, but that is understood, and it does not disturb the service. Another very successful meeting, which is held every once in a while, at the call of the branch president, is a men's meeting, at different homes Sunday afternoons. Many important topics are informally discussed, and prayer is made the first feature of the meeting.

Four of our men, big and strong physically and spiritually, were recently called to the ministry. This was welcome news to the branch, for there is great need of a larger working force here.

The Sunday of June 8 was Children's Day, and four were baptized. Large audiences attended all the services of the day. In the evening a cantata was given by the Saints' choir of Council Bluffs and our choir, making a chorus of forty voices. Excellent talent was displayed. We have been shown the great possibilities along musical lines, and the value of the choir work is becoming more and more evident.

Our Zion's League is busy raising funds to help pay the debt of the branch. The Sunday school shows good growth both in attendance and interest. The primary department especially shows this. The junior and intermediate classes are all organized, and much good has come from it. We have a Bible normal class before Sunday school, and a Book of Mormon normal class before Religio in the evening. The normal work has had a hard struggle here, but valiant efforts are being exerted to make it successful. We expect to start the summer school July 7. We have some excellent instructors for this year's teaching staff, and are expecting good results, and a much larger school. Bro. J. A. Gillen, our minister in charge, is with us this week, and has delivered two splendid sermons to large and interested audiences. He will speak again for us Thursday night.

Our district missionaries, Elders C. W. Prettyman, president of the district, and W. E. Shakespeare are in town, and will hold meetings in the new district tent which has just been purchased. We expect the services to start next Monday, the 16th, in the south part of Omaha. There is a good field for work here, and we are looking hopefully toward results from the tent work. The church choir will help, and with the united prayers and earnest efforts of the Saints we are sure much good can be accomplished.

We hope to have the prayers of all Saints for the interests of the work in Omaha.

CORRESPONDENT.

First Presidency.

NOTICE OF TRANSFER.

Notice is hereby given of the appointment of C. Ed Miller to Australia, the First Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and ministers in charge concurring in the appointment.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Utah District, Comprising Utah, and a Part of Western Idaho; Greeting: Having been appointed to labor with and among you another conference year, will state that I am now in my field, and will labor to the best of my ability, God being my helper. To him, you and I will be held responsible for our stewardship while here. Hence we ask for a liberal cooperation of all the local ministry and members. Write me of your needs. I shall be glad to hear from the local elders and priests. Tell me to what extent you are ready and willing to labor, where and when, in or outside of branches.

No one should hold an office in the church, great or small, and lie down on it. We can all do something, little or much, ministry or members. The field is large, the laborers few; so let us go to with our might and gather in the ripe, golden grain before the storm is on, and before the time of the fullness of the Gentiles comes in. Let us pray the Lord of the harvest for success.

My home address is Tigris, Douglas County, Missouri; field address, Malad City, Idaho, care lock box 12. Write me at once.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. C. CHRISTENSEN, District President.

To the Saints and Friends in Arkansas and Louisiana: As I have again been appointed to labor among you, and have also been appointed assistant minister in charge, I wish to say to all: Let us labor to make this the most successful year this field has ever had. Let us labor with a greater interest than ever before.

I wish to say to the missionaries who have been appointed to this field: Let us push out with courage. If we do all we can the Lord will be with us to help, and our work will not be a failure.

To the local ministry I would say: We need your help. We want you to feel that you have an interest in this work as well as the missionary, and that you can assist in the building up of the work.

To the Saints in general: Let us all bear in mind that the Lord requires us to remember the poor, and consecrate of our properties. Now remember, Saints, there are many poor that have never heard the gospel. So let us support them with the gospel. To do this it is necessary that we pay our tithes and offerings that the gospel may be sent. The missionary can not travel on good looks, nor can his family live on the wind. So let us do our part along this line. The Lord will bless us in this as well as in preaching. Those who preach and those who labor in the affairs of the world and pay their tithing are laborers together with God.

I would be glad to hear from any and all who want preaching done. We will try to reach you in due time. My address is 109 West Adams, Pittsburg, Kansas. A letter sent there will reach me.

With regards and best wishes to all, I am

Your brother in gospel bonds,

J. T. RILEY.

LOWELL, ARKANSAS, June 12, 1913.

To the Saints of Gallands Grove; Greeting: As one of the missionaries to your district, I desire your cooperation and assistance in missionary work, and would be glad to receive invitations for preaching, especially where little or no preaching has been done. Until further notice address me at Deloit, Iowa, in care of C. J. Hunt.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

EDWARD RANNIE.

To the Saints and Ministry of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District; Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in your district for another year, we take this means of notifying you that we are ready for work. Our missionary force has been enlarged, and we are hopeful of making a marked advancement in the district.

In order that this be accomplished we need the hearty cooperation of all the Saints and local ministry. We are especially desirous of pushing into new fields, so that those who now "in darkness lie" may have taken from them the veil of uncertainty, and have given to them the knowledge of an unadulterated law.

Names and addresses of isolated Saints are desired.

My field address is 511 South Logan Street, Lansing, Michigan.

Your humble servant,

CLYDE F. ELLIS.

LANSING, MICHIGAN, June 14, 1913.

A REVIEW OF "MORMONISM, THE ISLAM OF AMERICA."—PART III.

THE SPALDING ROMANCE THEORY.

"A very pretty 'theory,' and somewhat ingenious, but where is the evidence to support it?"—D. H. Bays.

"Barring the question of the hearsay character of the evidence, I believe that a case can be made out much stronger than the circumstantial evidence upon which many a man has been hung."—A. T. Schroeder.

"This may be true, but it must be borne in mind that many an innocent man has been hung upon purely 'circumstantial evidence.' . . . I need not remind an experienced attorney that there is a vast difference between 'hearsay evidence' and 'circumstantial evidence.' . . . The former Greenleaf peremptorily excludes." . . . —D. H. Bays.

In his effort to explain the book of Mormon, Mr. Kinney has recourse to the old Spalding romance theory. He is aware of the existence of the famous Solomon Spalding manuscript in Oberlin College, and the fact that it bears no resemblance to the Book of Mormon; but being unwilling to abandon the old, worn-out theory, he concludes that there was a second manuscript, an imaginary, enlarged revision of the first, which has never been discovered, and which served as a basis for the Book of Mormon. In this idea he joins a few others who have tried to make it appear that there were two or even three of these Spalding manuscripts, and who probably would enlarge that number indefinitely, if necessary to bolster up their cause.

This resurrection of the old, decayed Solomon

Spalding story suggests a review of the whole question. Our people met this question years ago and defeated their opponents, even before the manuscript now in the Oberlin College library was discovered. They were able to do this because the testimony connecting the Book of Mormon with the Spalding romance was contradictory and utterly unreliable. Bishop E. L. Kelley characterized it very aptly in his debate with Braden when he said:

That thing is so rotten and deceitful in conception, so false and malicious in publication, so absurd and ridiculous in belief, that you shall in your hearts feel ashamed that you ever entertained the thought that there might be something in it.

The old story may be briefly epitomized as follows:

First, that one Solomon Spalding, a Presbyterian minister, about 1811 lived at Conneaut, Ohio, and being in poor health, for diversion in his invalid state, and with the hope of pecuniary profits, wrote a story which was like the present Book of Mormon and left it in manuscript form.

Second, that from Conneaut, Ohio, he moved to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, in 1812, and while there handed the manuscript of this story to a publisher by the name of Robert Patterson for examination and publication.

Third, that the manuscript, instead of being published, was returned to Mr. Spalding, and in the year 1814 he left Pittsburg and went to Amity, Pennsylvania, where he died in the year 1816, when his effects, including the manuscript, fell into the hands of his widow.

Fourth, that at the time the manuscript was in the office of the publisher, Mr. Patterson, one Sidney Rigdon was employed there, or in some way connected with the office, and either stole the manuscript or copied it. (The widow of Reverend Spalding testifies that he copied the manuscript and that the original was returned to her. Others claim that he stole it. Still others claim that Joseph Smith himself either copied it or stole it after it had passed into the hands of one Sabine. The vascillating and elastic methods of stating the case give it away at the start.)

Fifth, that Sidney Rigdon at the time knew of Joseph Smith and had opportunity to get this manuscript to him.

Sixth, that this was done in order that Rigdon and Smith might concoct the Book of Mormon and start a new church.

ORIGIN OF THIS CANARD.

The Spalding theory was first exploited in 1834, in a book entitled Mormonism Unveiled, by E. D. Howe. Howe was a "Mormon hater" and was assisted in his work by Doctor Hurlbut, who was seeking revenge for having been excommunicated from the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for indecent conduct. (See Church History, vol. 1, p. 294.)

Doctor Hurlbut secured the Spalding manuscript from the widow of Reverend Spalding and turned it over to Howe, as is shown by his testimony and the testimony of the widow. But Howe did not see fit to publish it, although to have done so would have been the surest way to have exposed the fraud, providing, of course, that his theory was correct. The fact that he did not do so was fatal evidence of the weakness of his position.

Instead of publishing the manuscript he contented himself with publishing affidavits from John Spalding (a brother of Solomon Spalding), Martha Spalding (John's wife), Henry Lake, John Miller, Aaron Wright, Oliver Smith, and one or two others who testified that they had heard the Spalding romance read and later heard the Book of Mormon read and discovered a striking resemblance between the two.

DOCTORED TESTIMONY.

The widow of Solomon Spalding later joined in this denunciation of the Book of Mormon; and in Smucker's work, called the History of the Mormons, pages 43, 44, she tells how, years after the death of her husband, a "woman preacher" came to New Salem, where a meeting was held and copious extracts were read from the Book of Mormon. Mr. John Spalding was present and immediately recognized the book as one almost identical with the work written by his brother years before. This statement, signed by Matilda Davison, widow of Solomon Spalding, in its early form says that this was a "woman preacher." It appeared that way in Smucker's History of the Mormons; in the work by T. W. P. Taydler, published in London at a very early date; in Mormons or Latter Day Saints, by another English author (1851); also we understand in Mackey's early work. When it was pointed out that we had no women preachers in the church, our opponents with characteristic mendacity, changed this signed testimony, and Mr. Kinney uses it in its changed form on page 54 of his work (perhaps not knowing its original form), where he says that a Mormon elder came to this meeting and read copious extracts from the Book of Mormon. This is but one of many disreputable tricks that the opposition has resorted to, which indicate that they are contending against the truth. If our work is not the truth, why should they fight it with evasion and deceit?

THE MANUSCRIPT FOUND COMES TO LIGHT.

For many years the Spalding manuscript was lost sight of; but in 1885, Mr. L. L. Rice, who over forty years previously had purchased the Painesville Telegraph from E. D. Howe, and had transferred the printing department, with type, press, and manuscripts to Honolulu, discovered this manuscript while going over old documents, in connection with his friend, President Fairchild, of Oberlin College.

They read the manuscript carefully and reached the very just conclusion that it could never have served as a basis for the Book of Mormon. The manuscript was delivered into the care of President Fairchild and was placed in the library of Oberlin College. Mr. Fairchild prepared under his own supervision an exact copy of this manuscript, which was published, and may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

This manuscript bore the following indorsement, signed by D. P. Hurlbut:

The writings of Solomon Spalding proved by Aaron Wright, Oliver Smith, John N. Miller and others. The testimonies of the above gentlemen are now in my possession.

Mr. Kinney claims that this manuscript does not bear the title of "Manuscript Found" on the title-page. Others have made the same criticism. This is explained by the fact that Spalding's widow says that the publisher urged him to make out a title-page and he refused. But in the very introduction of his work the author says that he translated it from manuscript found in a cave. This at once suggests and acknowledges the name by which it was known to the family and friends, so this trivial objection is removed.

SPALDING'S WIDOW TESTIFIES.

We quote from Matilda Davison, Solomon Spalding's widow, as follows:

From New Salem we removed to Pittsburg, in Pennsylvania. Here Mr. Spalding found a friend and acquaintance, in the person of Mr. Patterson, an editor of a newspaper. He exhibited his manuscript to Mr. Patterson, who was very much pleased with it, and borrowed it for perusal. He retained it for a long time, and informed Mr. Spalding that if he would make out a title page and preface, he would publish it, and it might be a source of profit. This Mr. Spalding refused to do. Sidney Rigdon, who has figured so largely in the history of the Mormons, was at that time connected with the printing office of Mr. Patterson, as is well known in that region, and as Rigdon himself has frequently stated, became acquainted with Mr. Spalding's manuscript, and copied it. It was a matter of notoriety and interest to all connected with the printing establishment. At length the manuscript was returned to its author, and soon after we removed to Amity, Washington County, etc., where Mr. Spalding deceased in 1816. The manuscript then fell into my hands, and was carefully preserved. It has frequently been examined by my daughter, Mrs. McKinstry, of Monson, Massachusetts, with whom I now reside, and by other friends.

After the Book of Mormon came out, a copy of it was taken to New Salem, the place where Mr. Spalding's former residence, and the very place where the Manuscript Found was written. A woman preacher appointed a meeting there; and in the meeting read and repeated copious extracts from the Book of Mormon. The historical part was immediately recognized by all the older inhabitants, as the identical work of Mr. Spalding, in which they had all been so deeply interested years before. Mr. John Spalding was present and recognized perfectly the work of his brother. He was amazed and afflicted that it should have been perverted to so wicked a purpose. His grief found vent in a flood of tears, and he arose on the spot, and expressed to the meeting his sorrow and regret that the writings of his deceased brother should be used for a purpose so vile and shocking. The excitement in New Salem became so great that the inhabitants had a meeting, and deputed Doctor Philastus Hurlbut, one of their number, to repair to this place, and to obtain from them the original manuscript of Mr. Spalding, for the purpose of comparing it with the Mormon Bible, to satisfy their own minds, and to prevent their friends from embracing an error so delusive. This was in the year 1834. Doctor Hurlbut brought with him an introduction and request for the manuscript, which was signed by Messrs. Henry Lake, Aaron Wright, and others, with all of whom I was acquainted, as they were my neighbors when I resided at New Salem. I am sure that nothing would grieve my husband more, were he living, than the use which has been made of his work. The air of antiquity which was thrown about the composition, doubtless suggested the idea of converting it to the purposes of delusion. Thus, an historical romance, with the addition of a few pious expressions, and extracts from the sacred Scriptures, has been constructed into a new Bible, and palmed off upon a company of poor, deluded fanatics as divine. I have given the previous brief narration, that this work of deep deception and wickedness may be searched to the foundation, and the authors exposed to the contempt and execration they so justly deserve.—Smucker's History of the Mormons, pp. 43, 44.

Also we quote from an interview in which Mrs. McKinstry made the following statement:

Q. Mrs. McKinstry, have you the Manuscript Found, Mr. Solomon Spalding is said to have written, in your possession?

A. I have not.

Q. What became of it?

A. My mother delivered it up for publication to a Mr. Hurlbut who came to our house in Massachusetts for it, bearing letters of introduction from my uncle, a Mr. Sabine, a lawyer in New York State.—Braden-Kelley Debate, p. 82.

These quotations show that this was known as the Manuscript Found, and that it passed from the possession of the Spalding family into the hands of Doctor Hurlbut, Howe's coloborer in exposing Mormonism.

A letter signed by D. P. Hurlbut and published by Mr. Patterson of Pittsburg shows that Hurlbut placed this in the care of E. D. Howe. From this letter we quote:

GIBSONBURG, OHIO, August 19, 1879.

I visited Mrs. Matilda (Spalding) Davidson at Monson, Massachusetts, in 1834, and never saw her afterwards. I then received from her a manuscript of her husband's, which I did not read but brought home with me and immediately gave it to Mr. E. D. Howe, of Painesville, Ohio, who was then engaged in preparing his book, Mormonism Unveiled. I do not know whether or not the document I received from Mrs. Davidson was Spalding's Manuscript Found, as I never read it; but whatever it was, Mr. Howe received it under the same conditions on which I took it from Mrs. Davidson, to compare it with the Book of Mormon and then return it to her. I never received any other manuscript of Spalding's from Mrs. Davidson or anyone else. Of that manuscript I made no other use than to give it, with all my other documents connected with Mormonism, to Mr. Howe. I did not destroy the manuscript nor dispose of it to Joe Smith nor to any other person.—Braden-Kelley Debate, p. 91.

DUBIOUS BUT "WILLING" WITNESSES.

Thus we have traced the manuscript into the possession of E. D. Howe, among whose effects it was found by L. L. Rice. When Howe came to examine the manuscript he did not publish it, giving as an excuse that it did not read as he expected.

How, then, do we account for the fact that relatives and friends of Reverend Solomon Spalding testified that the Book of Mormon resembled his manuscript story?

Sometimes the human memory is treacherous. We have frequently heard men and women of undoubted veracity in important cases before the courts squarely contradict their own testimony given at a preliminary hearing one year previous. A judge of one of the superior courts says that this is a common experience. It must be remembered that these men and women whose affidavits Howe used were testifying concerning a book that they had heard read more than twenty years before they testified. How many of our readers are competent to give accurate testimony regarding a novel that they casually heard read twenty or twenty-three years ago,—especially when there was nothing to lead them to think that they would ever be called upon to bear witness as to its character, and so did not particularly charge their minds with its contents?

They testified to the appearance of exactly similar names in both books. How easy for one who had heard Spalding's manuscript read twenty-two years previously to imagine that the word Mormon, appearing in the Book of Mormon, was identical with Mammoons, found in the Manuscript Found, especially as some of these witnesses remembered these names by the initial letter only,—as they declared that Spalding made peculiar initial letters.

Again witnesses whose memory has been made hazy by the lapse of time can be very skillfully directed in their testimony, if they are properly handled by an unscrupulous attorney. These people were bitter enemies of the Saints. They hated the Book of Mormon and desired to destroy it. They were plastic witnesses. They were questioned by men who were seeking revenge and were very skillful in directing them in their testimony. This was brought out by an answer given by Mrs. McKinstry in an interview. She was asked:

When did you first think about the names in the Book of Mormon and the manuscript agreeing?

My attention was first called to it by some parties who asked me if I did not remember it, AND THEN I REMEMBERED THAT THEY WERE.—Braden-Kelley Debate, p. 82.

Thus by skillful questioning and careful direction, Hurlbut and Howe were able to get the kind of testimony that they wanted from these people who were trying to remember the contents of a manuscript that they had heard read more than twenty years before. They were obliging but unreliable witnesses. Upon such a flimsy basis does the Spalding romance theory rest.

WHY THE INFIDEL HOWE WROTE HIS BOOK.

Howe, himself, gave his reasons for working out this theory in an interview from which we quote as follows:

Q. What do you know personally about the Book of Mormon and the Spalding story being the same?

A. I don't know anything.

Q. Why did you publish a work claiming that the Book of Mormon was the Spalding Romance?

A. Because I could better believe that Spalding wrote it than that Joe Smith saw an angel.

Q. Are those your grounds?

A. Yes, sir, they are; and I want you to understand that you can't cram the Book of Mormon down me.

Q. Do you swallow the Bible?

A. That is my business.

Q. Have you not published a pamphlet that does not endorse the Bible?

A. Yes, I have.—Braden-Kelley Debate, p. 83.

Mr. Howe deliberately suppressed this manuscript while in his possession, refusing to publish it, and instead published these affidavits they had so carefully arranged. But the truth will out, and many years later in a strange manner it came out through the researches of President Fairchild and Mr. L. L. Rice.

NO MANUSCRIPT BY SPALDING COULD SERVE AS A BASIS FOR BOOK OF MORMON.

One has but to read this manuscript to be convinced that it never served as a basis for the Book of Mormon. Nor will it do to think that any revised copy of that manuscript by the same author might have served for such a basis. The personality of an author appears in every book that he may write. Those who read this Manuscript Found will soon conclude that no book ever written by Reverend Solomon Spalding could possibly have served as a basis for the Book of Mormon.

Anyone with brains enough to work Solomon Spalding's writings over and produce such a book as the Book of Mormon would not have needed any help from Spalding's pen in the first instance.

Mr. Kinney's theory that there were two manuscripts rests upon his own imagination and that of other credulous clergymen. It is gotten up to suit the exigencies of the case and should be quite beneath a Baptist preacher who hopes to go to a good Baptist heaven when he dies. It is a fabrication clear and obvious.

MEN WHO HAVE ABANDONED THE SPALDING THEORY.

Really intelligent and careful students of the question have completely abandoned the Spalding story. David Utter is reported to have said:

No one who has ever carefully read the Book of Mormon could fail to see that it never in any part was written for a romance. . . . Now, at last, the Spalding manuscript has been found, and it rests secure in the library of Oberlin College.—The Latter Day Saints, by Kauffman, p. 29.

D. H. Bays, who studied the question for forty years, and was hailed by our Christian friends as a "child of providence," whose book, they assured us, was absolutely reliable as a textbook, says:

The long-lost Spalding story has at last been unearthed, and is now on deposit in the library of Oberlin College at Oberlin, Ohio, and may be examined by anyone who may take the pains to call on President Fairchild, of that institution. . . .

The Spalding story is a failure. Do not attempt to rely upon it—it will let you down.

The entire theory connecting Sidney Rigdon and the Spalding romance with Joseph Smith in originating the Book of Mormon must be abandoned.—Doctrine and Dogmas of Mormonism, pp. 24, 25.

President Fairchild, of Oberlin College, says:

The theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon in the traditional manuscript of Solomon Spalding, will probably have to be relinquished. . . . Some other explanation of the origin of the Book of Mormon must be found, if any explanation is required.—Manuscript Found, pp. 5, 6.

And last, but not least, comes the new Encyclopedia Britannica (fourteenth edition), in which we read:

It was a contention of the early anti-Mormons, now HOWEVER DISCREDITED, that the Book of Mormon as published by Smith was rewritten with few changes from an unpublished romance, The Manuscript Found, written before 1812 by Solomon Spalding. . . . There is no actual proof that Rigdon lived in Pittsburg, or was employed in a printer's shop there as early as when Spalding's "copy" must have been left with the printer; and there is NO EVIDENCE THAT RIGDON KNEW ANYTHING OF MORMONISM UNTIL AFTER THE PUBLICATION OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.—Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 18, p. 843.

D. H. BAYS ON THE IMAGINARY SECOND MANUSCRIPT.

The new fangled theory that there were two or three manuscripts is perhaps best answered by one of the ablest of our opponents, Mr. D. H. Bays, who in the Christian Evangelist for November 2, 1899, in reply to one A. T. Schroeder, one of his own yoke mates, but an advocate of the "three manuscript" theory, wrote as follows:

I was, at the time my book was written, fully aware that such assertions had repeatedly been made, but as I have never been able to obtain the testimony of a SINGLE WITNESS in support of the claim, I have unhesitatingly dismissed it as an IDLE SPECULATION.

You assure me that the first of these manuscripts "simply outlined the story and is the one now in Oberlin." The second, you assert with equal gravity, "was prepared for the printer," while in the third "the plot of the story changed as to place from which Indians came here and the names changed to suit the change in the plot"; and this, you assure me, "is the one which furnishes the basis for the Book of Mormon." This is a very PRETTY "THEORY," and SOMEWHAT INGENIOUS, but WHERE IS THE EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT IT? . . .

I confess myself not a little surprised that an attorney, trained in a school of justice to weigh and determine the value and admissibility of evidence, should ask a candid public to decide so grave a matter upon the bare assertion of an INTERESTED PARTY, without the SHADOW OF EVIDENCE to support it.

If "three manuscripts" ever existed, why not produce the evidence to prove it? Why not induce that library of "over one thousand books and pamphlets" to yield up some of its hidden treasures of knowledge upon this point, and settle this mooted question once for all? Mormonism for more than half a century has been demanding the production of the Manuscript Found that it might be compared with the Book of Mormon. Since the discovery of that now historic document, and the further unquestionable fact that it bears not the slightest resemblance to the Book of Mormon, the wonderful discovery has been made that Solomon Spalding wrote "three manuscripts!" While you affirm very dogmatically, as others have done before you, that Spalding wrote three manuscripts, yet, like your predecessors, you offer not A SINGLE FACT in support of this claim. In the face of these significant facts, you with characteristic pertinacity assert:

"If you had made any investigation worth mentioning, you would have found that the absolute identity of the very unusual names in the Book of Mormon with the second Spalding Manuscript was originally one of the principal evidences of the connection between the two."

Here we have the assumption that a "second Spalding Manuscript" actually existed, and from this assumed premise you jump to the conclusion that the names were "absolutely identical" with those in the Book of Mormon. My objections to this statement are:

1. The existence of a second manuscript is assumed, not proved.

2. If such manuscript really existed, no proof is offered to show the "absolute identity" of the names with those in the Book of Mormon.

Hence, until you establish the alleged fact that such "second Spalding Manuscript" had a bona fide existence, and that the "very unusual names" found in the Book of Mormon are "absolutely identical" with those found in the so-called "second Spalding Manuscript," a fair-minded, just public will reject this new-fangled "Spalding Manuscript theory" AS THE MEREST VAGARY OF A PREJUDICED MIND, AND WHOLLY WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST FOUNDATION IN FACT. I do not say that the "three manuscripts" had no actual existence; but I do say that if such manuscripts ever had anything more than an imaginary existence somebody knows it; and if somebody knows it, why not have that somebody step upon the witness stand and boldly testify to the fact? But why pursue this question further, since you admit that it is only a "theory"—a theory, too, supported by such a class of evidence which, as a lawyer, you well know would BE REJECTED BY ANY COURT IN THIS BROAD LAND OF OURS. Acknowledging the fact you say:

"I can not establish these facts except by hearsay evidence, which Greenleaf would bar."

In concluding this paragraph you remark that:

"Barring the question of the hearsay character of the evidence, I believe a case can be made out much stronger than the circumstantial evidence upon which many a man has been hung." (Italics mine.)

This may be true, but it must be borne in mind that many an innocent man has been hung upon purely "circumstantial evidence," and it is a principle of law from which there is no deviation that a guilty man may better escape the punishment due to his crimes than that an innocent man should suffer the extreme penalty of the law. Hence, juries are always instructed to give the prisoner the benefit of a doubt. But, of course, I need not remind an experienced attorney that there is a vast difference between "hearsay evidence" and "circumstantial evidence." The former Greenleaf peremptorily excludes.—Journal of History, vol. 2, p. 94.

A SPIDER'S WEB OF SUPPOSITIONS.

Some more Ifists.

The extremely tenuous nature of the Spalding Romance theory in its present form is best shown by permitting it to be stated by its own proponents. Mr. Charles Shook, who was advertised just recently as the man destined to shake our work to its foundation, shall have that honor. He admits the existence of the Spalding manuscript in Oberlin College, but thinks there may have been another one enlarged and "polished" up. Hear him:

It is POSSIBLE that Spalding, in polishing and finishing his story, REWROTE IT, and that it was the story rewritten which was submitted to Patterson and which fell into Rigdon's hands; while the old manuscript MAY have been placed in a trunk, with other papers of Spalding's, which was sent, after his death, to the home of his wife's brother, W. H. Sabine, in Onondaga County, New York. Smith worked as a teamster for Sabine in 1823, and some have CLAIMED that he either copied or stole this manuscript. The first is very unreasonable, the second is POSSIBLE IF SUCH MANUSCRIPT WAS IN SABINE'S POSSESSION.—Cumorah Revisited, by Shook, p. 28.

Grover Cleveland would call these men "ifists." According to him the "ifist," lost in the woods without fire or food, said, "If we had a fire, and if we had some eggs, we would have ham and eggs; if we had the ham."

Mr. Shook argues that IF Spalding ever rewrote his manuscript, and IF he resubmitted it to the publisher, Rigdon MAY have stolen it; and IF this did not happen, Smith MAY have copied it while in the possession of Sabine, and IF he did not copy it, he MAY have stolen it, IF, last of all, SABINE EVER HAD SUCH A MANUSCRIPT.

These men have gone back to the original Christian or Campbellite proposition, "If we have authority to preach we have authority to baptize."

We can not too heartily thank Mr. Shook for his very ingenuous statement of the case.

REQUIESCAT IN PACE.

Mr. Bays very nicely demolished this spider's web of guesses. His was the conclusion of a very close student of the subject, who certainly was not prejudiced in favor of the Book of Mormon; in fact he was eager enough to defeat the Book of Mormon, but in this instance he was more fair, or perhaps less desperate than those grave robbers who would violate the peaceful and well-earned repose of the dead and long-buried Spalding Romance theory of the origin of the Book of Mormon.

Gentlemen, it has been dead too long, and, unlike Lazarus, never having had Jesus for a friend, it can not hope for a successful reincarnation.

AFFIRMATION.

It is a matter of regret that we have been obliged to speak mostly from a negative standpoint in these pages. Our message is affirmative, and we assume the negative only when forced to do so by that which we consider unfair attack.

We hold that all men should obey the laws of the land; and that the church should not attempt to dominate the state.

We believe in the sanctity of the home and that one man should have but one wife. That is the divine plan and it should not be evaded in any way. All good men and women should unite to combat the growing evils of divorce and prostitution.

We affirm that God has spoken and does still speak in this age. We affirm the divine principle of continued revelation.

You may not agree with us on that principle; but is our belief of a nature to subject us justly to ostracism and persecution?

Yet for this "evangelical churches," as they term themselves, in certain places, have refused to affiliate with us in various forms of gospel work, and individuals have slandered, persecuted, and misrepresented us. Consider the proposition: there are thousands of people in the large cities and elsewhere who know not God. We are anxious to tell them about him. But, strange thought, we must be prevented from doing so because we will tell them that God still lives, works, and speaks exactly as he did two thousand years ago, while others insist that we must content ourselves with telling them, in the language of Walter Rauschenbusch, that God "acted long ago and put it down in a book," and that is the end of the story.

We affirm that God heals the sick now, and that all of the gifts of the gospel given to the believer anciently are given now.

We affirm that the gospel has been restored again to earth and that the church has been formed again after the divine plan set forth in the New Testament, with apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and all the officers that God originally set in the church.

We affirm that the great God of heaven is an unchangeable God, and that if he is not blessing the churches now as of old, and if the same power is not with them (concerning which open confession is frequently made) the fault lies with the churches.

We affirm that Jesus lives and that he is the Savior of men, the gospel being the "power of God unto salvation." We hold that the hour of the second advent of Jesus approaches, and that these are the latter days, in which God's power is to be wonderfully displayed as the time draws near for that great, world-changing event.

We believe in the ministrations of the Holy Ghost, and hold that men may be inspired and directed by it as of old, and that the promise is still potent, that whosoever will do the will of God may know of the doctrine.

INVITATION.

No man can get a fair understanding of Christianity by using Ingersoll's writings exclusively as textbooks. The thought is absurd. For precisely similar reasons no one can understand the message of Latter Day Saints by studying only works written by avowed enemies.

We invite you to attend the services of our people. We ask you to talk with our representatives, and ask them questions. We have nothing hidden.

One celebrated lecturer on "Mormonism," having stated his side of the question, advised the people not to listen to anything or read anything on the other side. We assume that you are neither fools nor cowards, and that you will be safe in the enjoyment of your God-given privileges to investigate and "prove all things."

We urge you to read the church books, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants [not the Utah editions]. These books teach the highest and best of morals. Their precepts will make men and women better if they are obeyed. Why, then, condemn us for believing in these books?

ELBERT A. SMITH.

It is as impossible for a human being to be happy who is habitually idle as it is for a fine chronometer to be normal when not running. The highest happiness is the feeling of well-being which comes to one who is actively employed doing what he was made to do, carrying out the great life purpose patterned in his individual bent. The practical fulfilling of the life purpose is to the man what the actual running and keeping time are to the watch. Without action both are meaningless.—Orison Swett Marden.

Old Carthage Jail.

Dedicated to the memory of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, the anniversary of whose death is June 27.

Old Carthage Jail, your brownstone walls
Are but a milestone on the way
Of Liberty; your stony halls
Inform the poet what befalls
The seer, who answers freedom's calls,
And strives for fallen man to win
The fire, the light that frees from sin,
And helps the striving soul within
To gain the bright and perfect day.

The ancient legends tell the same
Old tale of error and of woe;
How heathen gods repressed the flame
Until the great Prometheus came.
How bards and poets sing his fame
How, scaling crags Olympian,
He stole the fire for mortal man,
Then suffered everlasting pain,
That all our race might progress know.

Oh, Joseph; scaling heaven's height
At call divine, to gain the flame
Of God's pure word, the world to light;
On you must fall the old, old spite,
That always hissed at heroes' might;
That serpent hate and venomous fright,
Which Pharisees and bigots show,
Against all prophets here below;
That even our Savior did defame,
And crucify and put to shame.

When thy progenitors I scan,
Thy destiny to me is plain;
No craven clan nor race can claim
The fatherhood of thy fair fame;
For history shows thy true descent,
From gentleman, and baronet,
From Scot who took the covenant,<sup>1</sup>
And stanch old English Puritan.

And once on Canterbury's plain,
One of thy clan at stake was burned,
When Roman Catholic Church he spurned,
Nor from his "heresy" returned,
At "Bloody Mary's" high proclaim:
And one was knight "without a stain,"
Who fought the Moslem to restrain,— Crusader in King Richard's reign.

Then when to free America
They came for love of liberty,
They did their part most honorably
In each colonial victory.
Colonial history tells with pride
How always on fair freedom's side
In the great Revolution's tide,
They risked their lives to set men free.

Thus, always in resistless storm
Of revolution or reform,
Our Joseph's forebears have been found;
And, though we suffer many a wound
From slander, vile, aimed at his fame,
We still maintain there is no shame,
For all his race bore a good name;
And having such a history,
What is more natural than that he Should strike for God's own liberty,
When God commanded to restore
The gospel as it was before?
And, though we suffer many a wound
And will you mock at him, when he Put on the blue of liberty,
And marched his legion up the street
To fifes shrill scream and drum's loud beat;
When all his forebears when alive (in 1775)
Risked all they had to make us free?

Crossing the Bar.

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.

But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark.

For tho' from out our bourne of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face,
When I have crossed the bar.
—Alfred Tennyson.

What Have We Done To-day?

We shall do so much in the years to come,
But what have we done to-day?
We shall give our gold in a princely sum,
But what did we give to-day?
We shall lift the heart and dry the tear,
We shall plant a hope in the place of fear,
We shall speak the words of love and cheer,
But what did we speak to-day?

We shall be so kind in the after awhile,
But what have we been to-day?
We shall bring to each lonely life a smile,
But what have we brought to-day?
We shall give the truth a grander birth,
And the steadfast faith a deeper worth,
We shall feed the hungry souls of earth,
But whom have we fed to-day?

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM

OR

THE CURRENT REFORMATION IN CONTRAST WITH
TRUTH REVEALED.—PART 8.

BY E. E. LONG.

THE LOUISVILLE PLAN.

After twenty years of experimenting and discussing to the point of disruption, they "discover" that their effort to convert the world through the medium of the American Christian Missionary Society is a complete failure. It will, no doubt, be noticed by the reader that a "Thus saith the Lord" and an "approved precedent" has been entirely lost sight of by the progressive party, being superceded by the flexible "law of expediency"; while their inventive genius has been taxed to the limit in an effort to devise some plan which would meet with general approbation. They met in convention in 1867 and revised the constitution of the society, but it failed to palliate the feelings of the antis.

It was earnestly hoped that the recent changes made in the constitution of the American Christian Missionary Society, by removing some objectionable features, would secure the hearty cooperation of all the friends of primitive Christianity. In this the promoters of our missionary cause were mistaken.

It was the society itself, as a human institution, that had given offense to the brethren who would have the Lord's plan or none at all; and no amount of changing or patching, of adding to or taking from its constitution would satisfy its enemies, so long as it was a society.

But aside from its failure to please the brethren whom it had been devised to please, a very few months proved the weakness of the plan as a financial measure. In dispensing with life memberships and life directorships no adequate substitute had been provided for replenishing the missionary treasury, and it was running dry. The work of the society was being crippled for lack of funds, and all missionary effort was at a standstill. To untie the missionary knot was now the problem that baffled the wisest of our leaders.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 296.

At their annual convention of 1868 W. T. Moore offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That a committee of twenty be appointed to take into consideration the whole question of evangelization and report, if possible, a scriptural and practical plan for raising money and spreading the gospel, said committee to report at the Louisville meeting in October next.

The committee appointed was a strong one. It represented not only the stanch friends of the Missionary Society, but also men like Benjamin Franklin, who refused to cooperate on any plan that had hitherto been proposed on the grounds that the methods employed were unscriptural.—Ibid., p. 298.

With Franklin and his friends the "law of expediency" was not a legal substitute for a "Thus saith the Lord." In this they were in advance of their "progressive" brethren, and we certainly admire their courage in standing for their convictions. It will be admitted by the unbiased observer that the "antis" were fundamentally right in their contention; but when the tide of digression and apostasy once gains headway it usually runs its course, and swells as it "progresses." Such was the fate of the "Current Reformation."

The convention which assembled at Louisville in October, 1869, has become a landmark in our history. It was looked forward to as the end of all our unhappy differences over plans, and the beginning of a new era of world-wide evangelization. More than six hundred delegates assembled with this prospect in view.

The committee of twenty met in Louisville a few days before the time appointed for the sitting of the convention, that they might prepare their report with prayerful deliberation. They felt deeply the importance of the tasks in hand, and never did men wrestle more earnestly for wisdom and guidance than they. I will allow W. K. Pendleton, a member of the committee, to describe the struggle of this brave body:

"They were a body of the ablest men among us. I felt strong in the struggle of our chiefs, when I stood among them in council. I think we realized the situation and felt both its responsibility and its difficulty. But we went at the work prayerfully, hopefully and courageously. The whole theory of the plan was clearly grasped, and every detail analyzed, criticized, and adjusted, till the whole stood before us clear, consistent, scripturally, and satisfactory. It was an earnest and a careful work. I shall never forget the labors of the night which Brethren Errett and Moore and Munnell and myself spent upon it. We had talked it over and agreed about the substance of it in committee of the whole, when it was referred to us to put into proper shape and order and expression. We met in an upper room [one scriptural precedent followed, anyway. E. E. L.] of the hospitable home of Winthrop H. Hopson, and there wrestled all night for the inspiration and the wisdom and the wit which we needed. Morning came, and with its light the end of our toil and counsel. We were satisfied and bore our work to the committee, and so it went to that convention, the grandest we have ever heard.—Ibid., pp. 299, 300.

We would like to give the entire text of this important report, but it is too lengthy for insertion here, so we merely present the first two paragraphs comprising its organization.

1. That there be one uniform financial system to secure the means for missions both at home and abroad.
2. That to render this efficient there be: (a) A General Board and corresponding secretary. (b) A board and corresponding secretary for each State to cooperate with the General Board. (c) District Boards in each State, and a secretary in each district, whose duty shall be to visit all the churches in his district and induce them to accept the missionary work as a part of their religious duty.—Ibid., p. 300.

This general financial scheme, since characterized by one of our scribes as "no stronger than a rope of sand," seemed to exactly meet the situation that confronted the Disciples at that time, and after due deliberation it was passed without a dissenting vote. By this act the American Christian Missionary Society ceased to be; and, in its stead, sprang up the General Christian Missionary Convention, gathering about it the hopes of a great brotherhood.—Ibid., pp. 302, 303.

Now, since this new "child of Providence" has required such great labor to bring it forth; and since it has been unanimously adopted by both parties, naturally, we shall look for results. Its composition represents the ne plus ultra of human wisdom, so far as it is resident within this body of people. The historian continues:

The enthusiasm at first manifested gave promise of its triumph over the old spirit of opposition. Benjamin Franklin, though not present at the meeting of the committee of twenty, gave his indorsement of the report and spoke his approval of the plan adopted in the columns of the American Christian Review. He said: "In our estimation it is the most simple, natural and wise arrangement ever made, and that it will commend itself to all who desire to do anything beyond their own immediate vicinities for the spread of the gospel. We have never seen anything proposed that came near meeting with the same approbation in a convention. Nor have we seen anything that we could give such an unequivocal approval."—Ibid., pp. 303, 304.

This man Franklin has been one of the main sprags in the wheels of progress because of his opposition to "human schemes" and the like; but this "report" seems to measure up his idea of a "Thus saith the Lord" for the time being at least, and it receives his hearty approval. By his indorsement of the work of the convention he disclosed his stupidity, along with his progressive brethren, as the sequel shows.

But whatever the merits of the "Louisville Plan," it soon proved a failure in one thing, which, above all others, was in the hearts of its projectors,—it failed to secure the cooperation of those who had opposed all our missionary efforts in the past. "They opposed the old plan because it was not a cooperation of the churches, and they opposed the new plan because it was a cooperation of the churches." Notwithstanding his hearty indorsement in the beginning, Mr. Franklin, in a short time, took up his pen against it, declaring: "We do not go against it merely because it is not a good human scheme, or because it did not succeed; but because it is a human scheme, with the intention to go against all schemes of the kind. We put it and all the conventions and human creeds on the same footing, and go against them because they are human; originated in human wisdom and not in the wisdom of God." . . . A decade of discussion over plans and compromises for the sake of harmony had failed of results. In 1869, we were as far from our rightful position among the missionary forces of the world as in 1849.—Ibid., pp. 304, 305.

The plan was faultless as a theory. As a literary production it reflected credit upon those who drafted it. But when applied to existing conditions it would not work.—Ibid., p. 306.

It was certainly enough to try men's souls to have their arduous labors prove worthless after such a fashion. But why should Mr. Franklin and colleagues go against it on account of its being a "human scheme," when they had no moral right to expect anything else since they did not believe it possible to have a divine scheme? Their contention was that there was nothing in the Christian economy "higher, bigger, or more to be respected than a church, an ecclesia, a congregation," and they already had that.

After sixty years of discussing, devising, and organizing plans, adopting them, abandoning various schemes, the best they have to show in the way of practical results is failure. The Apostle Paul was right when he declared, "The world by wisdom knew not God" (1 Corinthians 1: 21). "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord," (Isaiah 55: 8). "For the wisdom of their wise men shall perish and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid" (Isaiah 29: 14). "The spirit of truth whom the world can not receive." "He will guide you into all truth" (John 14: 17; 16: 13).

They have arrived at a point in their history and experience where they begin to realize that to get back upon an "approved apostolic basis," is easier said than done; but they are not yet convinced that "without me ye can do nothing," and they are determined that something must be done regardless of the modus operandi. The conviction seizes the progressive element and they prepare to move even at the cost of separation. We will let them tell it.

Through the dreary years of hopeless discussion over plans the conviction was deepening and spreading that, whatever the modus operandi, we must be a missionary people or die; that a poor plan was better than no plan at all; that work done after a faulty model was preferable to nothing done on the most approved apostolic basis. This sentiment now began to find men bold enough to become its champions in the face of the brand of unsoundness which was sure to be inflicted upon them.—Ibid., p. 308.

It would seem that after so many years of hopeless discussion over plans they would conclude that it was about time to consult the Divine Architect. But no! One of the planks in the "bottom" on which they had "put to sea" was, "We want no new message from the skies," and now amidst the contending elements of human experience they can not remove it, and must, perforce, adopt something that will give them a working basis, even though it be a "faulty model." Sorry plight, indeed!

THE FINAL SEPARATION.

They continued to argue and discuss plans without doing anything until,

A few Christian women, at a meeting in Indianapolis in the summer of 1874, proposed the organization of a society among the sisterhood of the church, that should take up the neglected work of missions. Quickly responding, the Christian Women's Board of Missions was organized, and by resolution the brotherhood recognized it with an hearty approval and pledged their support.

The climax of our missionary movement was reached the following year, when the organization of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society was effected. The General Convention met at Louisville. . . . An earnest brotherhood represented in the convention responded, and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society was born. It was the beginning of a new era for the Disciples.—Ibid., p. 313.

Did the old-line standpatters fall in at last? Nay, verily. The result was simply the segregation of the contending elements into two distinct factions, each claiming to have the simon-pure apostolic faith. The "progressives," dominated by the antis the "digressives," have two models, male and female, and success is assured though they have no "Thus saith the Lord" or "approved precedent" for either. Faulty models though they are, under the plastic law of expediency, and liberated from the opposing forces, they go on their way rejoicing, and the history of the period is closed with the following paragraph:

Within the brief period embraced by the years 1866 and 1875, they had traveled all the way from "the bitterness and darkness and bondage of a narrow, opinionated legalism, to the sweetness and light of the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free"; and in this new-found liberty were enabled to so crystallize the energies of the church as to launch it upon an era of unprecedented prosperity, and give to a people, who had hitherto urged their plea in comparative obscurity, a recognized place among the religious forces of the century.—Ibid., p. 314.

Passing over another decade of their history we note that they have a "Church Extension Board," "Board of Negro Evangelization," "Board of Education," and "Board of Ministerial Relief." What a fortunate thing it was for them when Mr. Campbell "discovered" the law of expediency. Had it not been for such a lucky find the great "Restoration" would have gone sine die of its own lack of cohesion.

Now that the lines have been drawn the "progressives" push their plans and schemes with renewed energy, while the "antis" set about to marshal their forces for greater concert of action, and the fight is on. All over the country the battle wages sore while "churches long since blest with peace and prosperity have been turned into wrangling and discord." Yet one of the very strongest of the anti leaders wrote of Mr. Campbell:

He has been only the humble instrument in the hands of God in the restoration to the world of the apostolic and primitive Christianity, as it was left uncorrupted by the apostles, and as it came completed and perfected from their hands.—Sketch and Writings of Benjamin Franklin, p. 214.

An enthusiastic progressive writes:

Such have been the trials and triumphs of the Christian Church, which . . . is to-day a monument to the faith and genius of Alexander Campbell, and which assures him an exalted place among the world's religious leaders.—Grafton, p. 17.

This same writer, on pages 9, 10, 13, and 57 of his book, calls Mr. Campbell a "prophet," but both factions brand his restoration a failure. Now listen to Mr. Campbell himself:

It behooves all men . . . to endeavor to destroy those destructive sects that have been a sort of Pandora's box to the human race. . . . Finally, while endeavoring to abolish the old let us be cautious that we form not a new one. This may be done by adding to or subtracting from the apostolic constitution a single item.—Christian System, p. 17.

He succeeded in laying the foundation for two, which developed shortly after his demise.

That Mr. Campbell failed to restore primitive Christianity when measured by his own logic, as given above, we shall now proceed to prove by his own admirers.

We are quite sure that Alexander Campbell made some grievous mistakes in his teachings. . . . Alexander Campbell is the highest authority that can be quoted for the practice of recognizing Baptist baptism as valid and receiving Baptists into the fellowship of the church on such baptism. This practice is out of harmony with that God's inspired instrument revealed. If Alexander Campbell had been a special instrument in the hands of God he would not have taught and practiced things that are not in harmony with what God's other special "instruments" taught.—A. M. Gary, in Gospel Missionary, May 19, 1903.

Both factions recognized the validity of not only Baptist but other sectarian baptisms, and receive them into fellowship. Then why condemn Mr. Campbell? A Baptist baptism was all he ever had, hence he could not very well do otherwise than recognize Baptist baptism.

As to Brother Campbell, he was a great and good man, but he was not inspired, and he made some mistakes, and none worse than failing to adopt the true order of worship, a thing he plainly taught, and establishing thereof this hireling priesthood, which has grown to be the most intolerant, impious and proscriptive religious corporation on earth, not excepting the Roman hierarchy.—A. Ellmore, in Christian Leader, June 1, 1897.

Note that he says that Mr. Campbell failed to adopt the true order of worship. Has the anti faction made any improvement since Mr. Campbell's demise?

When Thomas and Alexander Campbell began the restoration, their design was to restore the church in creed, faith and practice to its native simplicity; but about the time they had restored the law of conversion, lo! the apostasy set in, and diverted them from their work, and the worship in its perfection was never established.—Gospel Echo, August 20, 1896.

Another wailing cry that echoes failure. They did establish a "creed" of considerable length, but as stated above, it is not in harmony with truth revealed. Thus we see the utter futility of man presuming to do what God had reserved to do himself, and the abject failure of such an abortive attempt on the part of those whom God did not call.

It is a well-founded principle in all the affairs of life, in business, in applied mechanics, in common labor, and in our domestic relations, that there must be a governing head, else there is confusion, and the ignoble failure of this effort to restore the apostolic order of things without divine help is an example to the point. We give them all due credit for purity of motive and sincerity of purpose; but when they inscribe "failure" upon the lintels of their theological structure with their own hands, they should not be surprised when we refuse to enter.

Every man's testing time comes in service or emergency, and with it a chance to go up a peg.—Selected.

SOME THINGS WE MAY EXPECT FROM A BISHOP.

NUMBER 12.—"DUTIES OF OFFICERS SERIES."

Our next number in this series will be on the duties of an apostle, by Gomer T. Griffiths, president of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, and missionary to Australia.

The Church of Jesus Christ wherever and whenever found upon the earth must represent in its organization and government the wisdom of God. There can be no need or demand for a reformation, while it holds an authoritative right to the title placed upon it by its founder, Jesus Christ.

The name is a challenge to hundreds of organizations, and were it not truly representing the wisdom and power of God in its equipment for service in its wonderful mission, the wisdom of the age could detect the invalidity of its claims and it would fall before the onslaught of man. So in its equipment there must of necessity be provision for the carrying out of the purposes of its originator, who saw in the beginning the need of a church.

The Apostle Paul made a careful study of the church and gives to us through his writings the benefit of his study; and in his first letter to the Corinthian saints, as also in his letter to the saints at Ephesus, he places most of the officers before us in their respective positions, and intimates that they are there to carry out the purposes of God; that finally through their efficient and faithful service in its interest, there might be presented to the Father a most glorious church, without any imperfection, such that the Father would be pleased to have because of its fitness to his desires. No more wonderful institution can be found than the Church of Jesus Christ; no such wonderful character ever lived, as he who gave his name to the church, and his life that he might redeem and perfect it. The great apostle and masterbuilder of his time calls it the house of God, the pillar and ground of the truth. Every officer placed there by the Master was needed, and the perfection spoken of by him could never be brought about unless the service they were called to render was properly and faithfully carried out.

So the Lord had a place for bishops. Paul's letter to Timothy makes special reference to the qualifications necessary for this office. When we note these necessary qualifications and make a careful inventory of our stock on hand, we feel small and unable to pass muster; but as the Lord has to do as we are forced to do at times, use the best material available, we are here at his call.

A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach; not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre. . . . One that ruleth well his own house . . . not a novice.—1 Timothy 3: 2-6.

In Smith's Bible Dictionary reference is made to the work of a bishop being along the line of hospitality. In volume 1, page 31, we read:

Among other duties outlined is the following: Among other acts of charity, that of receiving strangers occupied a conspicuous place. (1 Timothy 3: 2; Titus 1: 8.) The bishop elder's house was to be the home of the Christian who arrived in a strange city and found himself without a friend. This perhaps explains why Paul in writing to Timothy in his first epistle, chapter 5, verses 17 and 18, injects the idea of bestowing on such double honor, or not stint them in their allowance because of their enlarged duties and responsibilities of feeding and entertaining strangers—men given to hospitality, men of broad minds, comprehending the needs of visiting brethren, ministers in particular.

It is written, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn, and that the laborer is worthy of his hire. It is also written it is more blessed to give than to receive; and if this sweet morsel of joy comes to the Saint who has the means as well as the heart to give, why should the servant of God be denied this blessed experience while giving his life work to church interests?

A bishop should be able to clearly and aptly teach the law relating to temporalities, and plainly set forth the duties of the Saints toward God and the church in such plainness as to leave no doubt in their minds as to what the Lord requires of them. He should through diligent study understand the laws relating to tithing, free-will offerings, consecrations, and almsgiving, as well as that relating to the gathering of the Saints, inheritances, and equality; and should emphasize his teachings by example in all things he teaches. He should be consulted in matters pertaining to locating in the stake or district over which he may have jurisdiction; he should advise and counsel where such is sought, and his counsel and advice should be respected.

A STEWARD.

A bishop being a steward of the Lord, having the care and oversight of the church funds placed in his hands for wise distribution, should be a reliable and honest man of business qualifications, with good, sound judgment in financial affairs. He should keep himself free from financial entanglement, and guard with care the funds intrusted to him; he should see to it that the money is used for the purpose outlined in the law of God. The worthy poor should be ministered to, and their just needs and wants be supplied; the missionary staff should be sustained. No incidental claims upon the finances should frustrate the designs and purposes of God in spreading the gospel, which work is made paramount above all channels of benevolence and helpfulness in the law.

The bishop should be a leader in responding to the requirements of the law in paying his tithing and surplus, and thus be an example to all to whom he ministers the word, for none are exempt from this law, neither the bishop nor his agent. Those who labor in spiritual things should honor the law as well as those who labor in temporal things. The widow with her handful of meal and a little oil was not exempt from sharing her little with the needy servant of God; and she realized the truth of the Savior's words, It is more blessed to give than to receive, for great was the blessing which followed that act. Many others can also thus testify.

Perhaps the relating of an incident which happened more than a quarter of a century ago may illustrate the point I wish to emphasize. There lived at that time at Dennisport, Massachusetts, a servant of Christ, a man whose house was always open to the stranger, especially to the elder who came that way. The brother, whose name was well known through the district, was Elder Nathan C. Eldridge. He with his companion and three other Saints were just sitting down to a meal when they saw approaching the house Elder Thompson, which was the signal for another chair, plate, knife, and fork. He was soon at the table and invited to ask a blessing; if memory serves me correctly there were five fishes cooked for the five who were there before the servant of the Master made his appearance; but while the blessing was being asked one of the sisters whose eyes were not closed saw a beautiful hand pass over the platter which contained the five fishes, and when they were served there were six,—one for the man of God and one each for the host, hostess, and her guests. So the same God who fed Elijah by the ravens, and the widow all through the years of famine, is with his church and his people, and those who are not afraid to trust him and do his commandments can see his power and taste of his bounties.

One of the duties of a bishop is to teach hospitality and kindness to all of God's creatures, especially to the household of faith; and as much as lieth in him to be an example in this beautiful work, and thus help eliminate selfishness from the lives of God's children. God never intended to give to any one man all the intelligence he wished to convey to his church; but he had a message of love and helpfulness for his children which would be given them through all the officers he has placed in his church, not excluding those who are not accounted as officers, but are helps to the body. From the deacon to the high priest there is a special message from each; each message representing the peculiar features of work assigned the officer. The bishop has his message, which in some things differs from all others. In the arrangements made by our heavenly Father for the government of his church he has a place and sphere of labor for all whom he has called, and this wonderful machinery would not be complete without the office of bishop. Since the manna ceased to fall from heaven and the body of man needs sustenance, and while some men are called away from their fishing nets and other departments of industry to become ministers of Christ, and thus devote their time to spiritual work, becoming dependent upon the institution employing them, there must of necessity be those appointed to secure means to sustain them,—these servants of God and his people,—so they can enter upon the work intrusted to their care, and the families thus left provided for. This is the work of the bishop.

BISHOPRIC.

A bishop has the right to choose his two counselors, subject to the ratification of the general stake, or district conference. These three form a bishopric, who compose a court for the hearing of charges brought against members in transgression, or difficulty, their findings to be submitted to the branch where the defendant holds membership. The bishop is designated as judge, and should qualify himself to rightly and wisely fill that office. The bishopric can also act as a board of arbitration, acting as peacemakers in cases where grievances are submitted to them; in such cases each disputant or party offended must sign an agreement that the decision of the board shall be final, and end the dispute.

A bishopric have the right to have printed matter bearing their name as authority for receiving and receipting for tithes, consecrations, offerings, etc., also have the right to make disbursements for the church, general, stake, or district, within the limits of the law which makes bishops equal in their sphere of labor, respecting by counsel the Presiding Bishop of the church, who should also counsel with his fellow bishops, as the Lord has made them his counselors, as in Doctrine and Covenants 128: 3. Where the conferences, either general, stake, or district, order, by vote, expenditures, the bishop should be governed by such vote; but in the general routine of his business, (or their business as a bishopric) or work as the head of the financial department, either general or local, he has the right to attend to such matters, as has the head of any business concern; and if extravagance or an unlawful use of the money intrusted to his care is discovered, he can be called before the proper tribunal to answer for such acts. The proper ones for him to answer to in such case being the presidency of the church. (Doctrine and Covenants 68: 3.)

There should be a storehouse built and carried on after the plan given to Bishop Partridge, found in Doctrine and Covenants 51: 4:

And again, let the bishop appoint a storehouse unto this church, and let all things, both in money and in meat, which is more than is needful for the want of this people, be kept in the hands of the bishop. And let him also reserve unto himself, for his own wants, and for the want of his family, as he shall be employed in doing this business. And thus I grant unto this people a privilege of organizing themselves according to my laws; and I consecrate unto them this land for a little season, until I, the Lord, shall provide for them otherwise, and command them to go hence; and the hour and the day is not given unto them; wherefore let them act upon this land as for years, and this shall turn unto them for their good.

Another duty is to teach every Saint to file his inventory with the bishop, also making an annual statement to be filed, so that the true condition of each member may be known; so that wise and faithful stewards all may render to the Lord that which is due, and the church be able to render to every worthy member what is due him under the law, for from this there are none exempt.

God's purpose in establishing his church was not, then, to be a medium for the promulgation of the gospel among the world, only, but as an institution for the teaching and education of the children of God in ways of right living, as outlined in the church articles and laws given us of the Master. And we say, again, to accomplish this, there have been set in the church by the Lord certain officers who are to see that these laws are kept; and when all are working in harmony with the mind of the Lord as expressed in his laws, each officer learning his duty and faithfully performing the part of the work assigned him, and the Saints sustaining them by obedience to their teachings, the purposes of the Master will be more faithfully carried into effect; the church will grow in power and might, coupled with wisdom.

The Lord has made provision to release bishops from their secular labor where wise so to do, and put their time in the service of the Master; and where this is done there has come to the church remuneration which has shown the wisdom of such provision. There is yet much to do along this line before we can begin to meet the requirements of the work, in carrying it forward to the nations of the earth, and bringing about the redemption of Zion.

A bishop should teach the law of economy,—that Saints should be frugal, industrious, careful in the expenditure of what comes to their hands, as they are stewards over what is intrusted to them, and will have to answer to God as well as the bishop himself as to how the money or talents intrusted to their care are used.

All men should be engaged in a good work, for it is given to man of himself to bring to pass much righteousness. To wait for the Lord to command in all things is to be a slothful servant. There are many ways wherein we can help ourselves and thus help the work of God; but we should be careful to work in harmony with good, sound judgment and business principles. There is much to do, and all should go to with their might to accomplish what is given us to do, and whatsoever our hands find to do.

There are many duties untouched in this article, but if I had used them I should only repeat what has been given to us again and again. The little I have written contains nothing new, but sufficient to help further the cause we have pledged ourselves to uphold; and if we will all arouse ourselves to the need of the hour, we will accomplish a work that angels will applaud, and the Father will place his seal upon; and kings of the earth will eventually acknowledge Zion to be the place of God's habitation, by his Spirit.

Let us have faith in God, and do the works of God, for the time is upon us for test,—the sifting process is on, and those who will not make the Lord their habitation will see enough to discourage them even in the church; for the tests coming from within are the ones which will try what material we are of. So we must have faith in God, for he abideth ever the same, and will steer his church to victory, and the Saints who abide in him will triumph.

The Lord said to his servant Edward Partridge, "Whoso is found a faithful, a just, and a wise steward shall enter into the joy of his Lord, and shall inherit eternal life." May the Lord fulfill this promise to us all, so that after the war is over we may enjoy the rest of the sanctified.

RICHARD BULLARD,
Bishop of Independence Stake.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

The Father and the Home.

This column of the HERALD is devoted to the discussion of the work of mothers in particular, but the mother in the home has, according to the perfect plan, a companion in her home work. We use the word thoughtfully when we say she has a companion, for her husband is not by right a superior officer to give commands to wife and children which they must obey with alacrity or take the consequences. This is not the divine plan.

Neither is the husband merely the provider of the material things needed by wife and children, though there is an occasional mistaken woman who seems to regard him in that light. This is not the divine plan.

The divine plan is that husband and wife are one, that they are companions, comrades, fellow workers, "true yokefellows." The mother has her part of the work to which she is especially fitted, and the father has his, but each must do his duty and both must work together, if the best results are to be had in the home.

A recognition of the importance of the father's work in the home led to the preparation and presentation of a reading on this subject which was discussed in the May meeting of the Home and Child Welfare Department of the Woman's Auxiliary. In Independence, the discussion of the subject was given over to the fathers, and we have received copies of speeches made on that occasion by two young men who are themselves the fathers of young sons, and who realize the thoughts to which they give expression. We give space to the articles.

Training the Boy for Citizenship.

It is a privilege we ought at least to enjoy, and which we ought earnestly to endeavor to appreciate,—the privilege of meeting with those who have formed what they call "The Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service." Not long ago I was trying to analyze that title, and after thinking about it awhile, I began to wonder where the men's auxiliary for social service is. I do not know that we have one in the church, but I consider it a privilege to meet with those who have the interests of our children thoroughly at heart, and those who are particularly interested in their development and growth into manhood and womanhood.

To-day, we are dealing with the boys; to-morrow they are going to be our citizens,—not only the lifeblood of our Nation but of our church,—and what we make them, largely, while we have their characters in molding, will be our Nation and our church.

Mark Twain said one of the first things a boy ought to do in training himself for citizenship was to make a wise selection of his parents. We all appreciate that. We all appreciate the heritage of our parents in giving to us faith, the heritage of the gospel, and we ought to appreciate everything they do for us,—everything they have done for us, and are continuing to do for us, if we still have them with us. If we properly sense and appreciate all our parents have done and are doing for us, we will be better prepared to do for our children, that they may be the right kind of citizens.

Too often, we fathers are willing to turn the training of our children over to their mothers with the idle thought that we have not time to do for them as they deserve. I believe it is an idle thought when we say we have not time to train our boys. We are making the mistake of our lives when we do it. Not but what their mothers are capable of doing their part, but they can not do ours. Any father would consider it an insult if a corporation should offer him half a million dollars for his boy; but we will put all our force into business and forget our boys in order to give them a heritage of dollars, leaving their training to some one else.

One of the things that attracted me to the church (I believe it is the greatest thing in the world,—the gospel of Christ), was that it not only deals with me as a citizen of the United States, but it deals with me as a citizen of the kingdom of God. And when we talk about training a boy for citizenship, that is what we mean.

Perhaps if I were a resident of a foreign land, teaching my boy for citizenship in that nation, it would be different from what it is in the United States; but there are some underlying principles that must govern in the molding of the boy's character to make him a citizen of any earthly kingdom, and, more than that, a citizen of the kingdom of God. That, as I see it, is the important part of our work; because it is broader than the training for citizenship in any empire; it means the training of our boy to dwell in the presence of God. That is what we should have in our hearts.

What is citizenship? Webster says it is the owing allegiance to a government and the being entitled to protection from it. If we owe allegiance to a government, we must consider some authoritative power which is vested in some personality that is going to govern; and, owing allegiance to that authoritative power, we have a right to demand protection from it. When we ask our boys to give allegiance to us as the governors of their characters, they have a right to demand of us a just protection, a just guidance of their characters while we have the training of them. We can not escape this responsibility if we demand the right to guide and govern.

What is the foundation of citizenship? The first thing to learn in studying citizenship is that down at the foundation, at the root of the whole matter, is the home. There is where we have our citizenship trained into us, and citizenship stands in relation to the home as effect does to cause. Citizenship is the result of training, and what our citizens will be depends upon our home training of the future citizens. What we put into the boy will come out of him when he becomes a man.

The first duty of every father is to see that the boy has a strong body. He has the opportunity and privilege of training the boy, not only to be a man who knows how to vote, but to be a man who knows how to use his innate faculties not only for his own development, but with the light of instruction the Master has given us, training him for citizenship in the kingdom of God.

M. H. STEGFRIED.

The Starting Point in a Boy's Character.

This subject is one which, viewed from one aspect, is rather difficult, but from another, it appears less complex. However, we may take it in this one consideration, that we are dealing with the starting of the boy—the boy's character—to-day; and by the term character, we may understand that we are dealing with the inner part of the boy life, the boy himself. If we start his character properly, his friends and those interested will see that his reputation is properly cared for. Otherwise, his enemies and those who dearly love the flavor of gossip will see that his reputation is cared for according to their ideals.

A certain wise man has said that, if we would form the character of a boy, we must start fifty years before he is born. That is a very excellent and, pardon the term, a very altruistic expression. To start fifty years back of the time when the boy is born, it seems to me is only to partly cover the ground; and it is not rash, but consistent, to say that the starting point of a boy's character would be back even farther than fifty years. We should go back to our father Adam and start all over again in order that our boy's character might be properly started; for a human character, to a large extent, outside of its peculiar individualities, is but the sum and substance of all the assets and liabilities of his forebears. But that is totally impracticable, to go back so far as that, or to go back even fifty years, and hence we must come right down to the immediate present.

The starting point of a boy's character is the boy himself. You can not go back of that statement. The present world, in its mad and headlong rush in the acquisition of wealth, or the seeking of honor, or the pursuit of pleasure, forgets the task that lies in the training of children; and it is only when the children come that it realizes the task which is thrust upon it. Human nature is the same at any and all times, and we can not deal with the ideal so long as we have the real. We must lay aside our ideals and in order to realize our ideals, idealize our real; and we must inevitably conclude that the starting point of the boy's character is the boy himself.

Of course, we might state this, that the father, as the first impulse of the boy's character, is the proper point of starting. We might start with him. But the true starting point is the boy himself, and the time is when the boy starts. He who gets in early in the game in this work has a great deal of advantage at the start, of his companions. But let me repeat it once more, that the starting point of a boy's character is the boy himself, the time is the present, and the opportunity is the father.

There are several thoughts which I have found in the most excellent work entitled, Building Your Boy, by Kenneth H. Wayne. In the chapter on "The wrong of inattention," we have the following beautiful and most excellent thought:

"It is the duty of the father to stand by his boy in the closest association, until he is assured that the character of the boy is sufficiently well formed to resist the encroachments of evil. At a very early age the father should impart to his boy that wise instruction which may forestall the enemy of moral cleanliness and purity. To keep the boy clean and pure and wholesome should be the strife of the father. Not to do so is to be criminally negligent."

The next chapter, a short one, is a very excellent one and is entitled, "Be the chum of your boy."

"As a father, chum with your boy. No father should ever grow too old, or too dignified to be the intimate companion, the real chum, of his boy. He makes the mistake of his life when he does not do it.

"Win the confidence of your boy, every whit of it. Win his affection, his highest esteem. It will be a sad, well-nigh tragic break in the life of the boy when, for any reason, the father ceases to be to him the best and finest man in the world. To win and keep the confidence of his boy is the privilege and duty of the father; the earlier in life it comes to the father the better.

"A boy wants company and companionship; he wants a confidant. All human nature is gregarious. The human nature of your boy is no exception. No one is so naturally the companion and confidant of the boy as his father. Be his chum. Do not, as you value his future good and your own peace of conscience, by your being 'too busy' or your indifference in his boyish interests, send him elsewhere for his intimate associations or companionships."

The Prayer Union.

A CORRECTION.

The address of Sister Eleanor Kearney is 926 South Main Street, Clinton, Missouri.

A REQUEST FOR PRAYER.

A pathetic letter comes to us from a sister who feels that in her past life she has been a great sinner, but who pleads that she was ignorant of things which she now understands. She is calling upon God to forgive the past and to grant her a restoration to bodily health, for she is sick, very sick, having undergone eight operations in the past year. She expresses faith in the healing power of the Lord and feels the need of the Prayer Union in her interest. May she have the boon she so humbly and earnestly seeks and God grant peace to her heart.

SUBJECT FOR THE FIRST THURSDAY IN JULY.

For all the auxiliary departments and charitable institutions of the church. In particular, the Sunday schools and Religios, where our young people are being trained for the church work.

1 John 3.

Live for something, have a purpose,
And that purpose keep in view;
Drifting like a helpless vessel,
Thou canst ne'er to life be true;
Half the wrecks that strew life's ocean,
If some star had been their guide,
Might have long been riding safely,—
But they drifted with the tide.

JULIAN, MONTANA, May 31, 1913.

Dear Herald: I send you the inclosed. This lady is an elderly woman, and a near neighbor of mine. I think she is honest and fair-minded, and would welcome a minister of the gospel. I think there are others in the neighborhood who would also like to see an elder or missionary come here. I think we could get a good hearing.

Our nearest railway point at present is Plentywood, Montana, which is about fifty miles from here.

Your brother in the faith,

HENRY WERTZ.

JULIAN, MONTANA, May 31, 1913.

Dear Herald: I have lately met one of the Latter Day Saints, one of the first of that body I have met for many years. Our talks brought back to my memory many conversations I had in my girlhood with a dear old uncle and aunt who joined that body when I was a young girl.

We have no ministry here of any kind; the people are of all classes, countries, and denominations. Now, what we want is a man to preach the gospel as the Bible teaches it. Have the Latter Day Saints such a man to send us? If so, let us hear from him, or better still, see him.

Respectfully,

MRS. MCDUGALL.

RED ROCK, OKLAHOMA, June 16, 1913.

Editors Herald: We report a splendid meeting here with the Otee tribe yesterday. Two were baptized, and three ordained to various ministerial duties.

The old man who, lying at the point of death last winter was administered to and recovered, is one of those baptized yesterday. His life was prolonged for a purpose.

Brethren W. M. Aylor and Earl D. Bailey were with us in this meeting, to direct in the ordinations, and to give counsel to all. It was a busy day, and at evening with tired bodies and peaceful hearts we were happy to commit the proceedings to the Lord, being conscious that an enduring work in the Master's cause had been accomplished.

Sincerely,

J. E. YATES.

LORAIN, OHIO, June 11, 1913.

Editors Herald: My grandmother, Mrs. C. E. Carpender, departed this life March 11, 1913, after an illness of nine months. She was a true Latter Day Saint, and was always ready to bear her testimony. The gospel was her one theme. Although she passed through many trials, and much persecution, she was always ready to stand by the faith. She passed away with a full assurance of a grand, sweet rest. Her patriarchal blessing gave her the promise that if faithful, the closing scene of her life would be as the setting of the sun, and it was so. We are now looking forward to the day when we shall meet her, and our loved ones who have gone on before.

We are isolated from all church privileges, but hope the time will come when the Lord will direct us to a branch of Saints where our hungry souls may be filled with spiritual food from above. My greatest desire is to work for my Master, and I know he will grant me that desire in this world or in the next, if I am faithful. I am very young in this glorious work, and I ask your earnest prayers that I may ever be a willing worker for my Savior.

Your sister in Christ,

LAURA M. MINKLER.

HIGHLAND PARK, LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, June 9, 1913.

Editors Herald: I am very glad to say that I have found the true church. I was a Methodist for thirty-five years, and was an exhorter for a number of years, but I seemed to make very slow progress in the Christian life.

I never was baptized, only by pouring; at the time I thought that was all right, it being the Methodist belief. At one time I enjoyed the blessings of God, but it was only for a very short season. I then found myself a skeptic on baptism, and many other things concerning the Scriptures and church life. I realized that I was in need of something that I did not have; my way was so dark that I felt sure I was not doing the will of God. I was greatly troubled over my condition.

I became ill after many years, and continued so for nearly a year. My sister, Lucy Vance, a true Saint, came to see me. She taught me the right and only true baptism, and told me that my baptism was no good. After she returned home the subject continued on my mind, and made a great impression upon me. At this time I had a spiritual experience which showed me plainly my condition, and outlined to me my course of duty. While visiting my sister at her home I met Brother William Hanner, and he taught me more fully of the true faith. He prayed for me, and I got well enough to be baptized. Brother Hanner baptized me December 21, 1912, and I was confirmed by Elder G. H. Ferguson.

I have not taken a drop of medicine since then, and am getting better all the time. Thank the good Lord for his goodness to me in bringing me out of darkness into the great light of truth.

Yours in the true church,

BENJAMIN H. SMOOT.

NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK, June 13, 1913.

Editors Herald: Thinking perhaps there might be some who are interested in the progress of God's work in this part of the vineyard, I write. I was one of the many to enjoy the blessings of heaven at the late General Conference, and I returned home for a short time to prepare for home-leaving.

Elder F. J. Ebeling and myself started for our missions, going as far as Niagara, New York, together. Upon the eve of our departure we were very happily surprised by being called to the hotel at Kirtland, there to find about forty of the Saints gathered to bid us adieu, and Godspeed. A very pleasant evening was enjoyed, and ye missionaries were made to feel that the Saints certainly had an interest in them.

The Saints not only endeavored to make the evening a pleasant one, but contributed to make it possible for us to reach our fields, by supplying the substantial that help turn the wheels of Nahum's chariots. The presentation speech was by the branch president, L. Curry, replied to briefly by the writer, and at length by Elder Ebeling, with feeling. Truly our hearts were touched as we realized the great importance of the work before us. We sat there surrounded by loving friends, but how soon the scene was to change.

At 8.40 the next morning we were on our way to the field for the year before us. Its labors, its trials, its disappointments, its joys, its pleasures, all presented themselves to us. Shaking the hands of home folks and friends, leaving them to the care of a loving Father, we went on until we reached the city of wonders, where the mighty river of Niagara makes its leap of one hundred and ninety feet over the great wall of rock into the river below.

There on Saturday forenoon at 9.30 we met with the Religians in convention. A good time was enjoyed with them, but altogether too short. At 11 o'clock Sunday school convention went into session; there also the good Spirit was enjoyed; as before, the time was altogether too short. The officers at both conventions did well their part. There were signs of progress. At 2.30 p. m. business session of conference, also at 7.30 p. m. The business was dispatched with promptness and an excellent spirit prevailed. A very peaceful and profitable time was had. Sunday, the 8th, found all astir and at the place of worship at 8 a. m. for prayer and sacrament. The Spirit was present to cheer the hearts of all. Sunday school session at 9.45, preaching at 11 a. m., also 2.30 and 7.45, making a very busy and profitable day. Good attendance and attention characterized every session.

On Monday we were privileged to view the mighty works of nature (or God, as we see it). We began at the mighty falls of Niagara, on the Canadian side; thence down the river to the awful whirlpool from which many a victim of suicide has been taken, after a stay of perhaps seven days in the turbulent waters of the rapids and pool; thence down to Queenstown, ascending the heights overlooking the placid waters of the Niagara River as they wind their way to Lake Ontario. We climbed the two hundred and thirty-six steps in Brock's Monument, one hundred and eighty-five feet above the heights. We viewed the old battle ground, where in the war of 1812 the British general and the American forces met. From here we went along the river on the American side up the rapids, beholding the mighty and turbulent waters as they thundered their way over the rocks to the sea. God's works are truly mighty and wonderful and past finding out. We bade the awful scene of beauty adieu, for further service in educating others in the theme of the gospel.

Wending our way to the little church on Saint Lawrence Avenue, Niagara Falls, Ontario, Brother Ebeling discoursed to the Saints and friends in a pleasing and profitable manner. On Tuesday, the 9th, there came the handshaking after the preaching service held at Buffalo, at which Brother Ebeling again was the speaker. He took his departure for his field in the East, making his first stop at Boston, Massachusetts; thence on to Maine.

So, left to ourself again, we settle down to work, trusting that the pleasant and educational happenings of the past few days may prove an index to the work of the entire conference year; that souls may be saved, the work forwarded, Saints strengthened; that the light and blessings of God may crown our every effort; and that every Saint or friend who has contributed in any way to our support may feel that truly it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

A. E. STONE.

LAMONI, IOWA, June 19, 1913.

Dear Herald Readers: After so long a time I have been privileged to enter upon the mission work appointed me at the last conference, in the Lamoni Stake. I arrived in Lamoni last night, and expect to go to Centerville to-morrow to assist in the work there.

On the evening of the 12th the Saints and friends of my family met at my home in Des Moines, and a pleasant social time was enjoyed as one of the pleasant memories of my life in the ministry. A financial memento was presented to both wife and I in token of the esteem in which we are held by the Saints there, after sojourning and laboring among them for over eleven years.

The labor in the city of Des Moines is in excellent hands in the person of Elder James M. Baker, who has moved his family there, and is now in touch with the work. Brother E. O. Clark has accepted the position of bishop's agent, and I trust that the Saints in that district will give him their undivided support. My work in the district in every position was sustained by the Saints, and my heart is filled with grateful memory of their support and kindness.

I enter upon my work here by faith. At the prayer service on last evening I received the first impress of the Spirit, bearing witness that my offering of faith was accepted in coming to this field of labor. I am expecting to attend the reunion of the Lamoni Stake, beginning July 25.

My mission address will be Lamoni, Iowa, till otherwise informed. My permanent address is 1205 Filmore Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

Any of the isolated Saints who desire labors please write me at Lamoni, Iowa. If any have friends who desire instruction along gospel lines I would be pleased to hear from them.

News from Missions

Society Islands.

It has been some time since I have written to your columns, and as Saints and friends are greatly interested in this mission, I will endeavor to give an account of our trip through-out the islands, to and from conference.

Prior to our trip to the Tuamotuan Islands, I was very busily engaged in the printing work, printing the monthly mission paper and about seven hundred and fifty Religio Quarterlies which had been arranged by Sister Lake. I also bound a great number of year books of the mission paper.

F. G. Pitt and wife arrived in Tahiti on February 7, and remained with us until after the mission conference, starting for America on May 3. Brother Pitt and wife, also Brother Savage and wife left Papeete upon a small sailing schooner the last day of February, and after four weeks of very calm weather arrived at the island of Hao, where the conference convened. The island of Hao is from five to six hundred miles from Papeete, so the Saints see what poor accommodations the American missionaries have here in traveling from island to island. The writer, however, was only about one week on his way to the same island, being fortunate in making connections with a power boat which left after Brethren Savage and Pitt left on the schooner chartered by the brethren of Hao.

It had been a number of years since the district of Hao had had a conference, as that is one of the easterly islands; but we were pleased to find a large assembly house built especially for the conference under the supervision of Brother Savage, who deserves great credit for his work. It was one of the largest and most substantially constructed native assembly houses I have seen since I arrived in the islands.

We had a very good conference, and the natives were especially pleased to meet so many American missionaries, it being several years since so many missionaries attended conference. Brother Pitt and wife, Brother Lake and wife, Brother Savage and wife, and the writer were there; my wife and children remaining in Papeete.

As to the conference, I will leave that for others to write about. I will refer, however, to my voyage back to Papeete, upon the sailing schooner which the church chartered to carry freight and passengers to and from conference, and dried cocoanut back to Tahiti. Brother Lake and wife remained in the easterly islands, Brother Savage and wife in the island of Taega; from there they were to go to the island of Herehetue; Brother Pitt and wife returned to Tahiti, on the power schooner which carried the writer to conference.

We stopped at the island of Takaroa on our return and baptized two. On this island we found the crew of a small shipwrecked schooner waiting for an opportunity to return to Papeete. This schooner was upset by a strong whirlwind. Cargo, schooner and everything sank to the bottom of the sea, about one mile and a half out from the shore. It was a very dark night. Part of the crew swam to the island; others gathered a few boards together; binding them with their clothing, they made a small raft upon which they were carried islandward by the wind and sea. No lives were lost.

From there we went to the island of Manihi, where we arrived near noon Saturday, and unloaded about seventy Saints returning from conference. It was my great desire to leave at once, but after baptizing four, and making all arrangements to leave, to my disappointment the captain told me that we had better not try to leave that evening, but that it would be all right to leave Sunday morning at five o'clock. That night, however, I was asked by the president of the branch if I would not hold the schooner over until about nine o'clock. After consulting with the captain it was agreed upon, and at eight o'clock I led nine, some children and some adults, into the water, which made fifteen baptisms for the return trip from the conference.

We then went to the island of Rairoa, and after loading on several tons of dried cocoanut as freight, to assist in paying for the chartered schooner, we left anchorage, which was about twenty miles inside of the lagoon from the pass. It was about five o'clock in the evening; the wind was very strong, and after we had reached the middle of the lagoon it became exceedingly dark. A storm followed, and we were at its mercy inside of the lagoon, not able to see twenty feet ahead of us. There was a narrow pass before us, many rocks in the lagoon, and the natives were expecting to see the boat crushed almost any moment. But the captain was very courageous, and stood by his post of duty all night long in the rain and wind, tacking back and forth over the course we had traveled until early morning, when we saw that we had been tacking parallel with the land, and but a short distance from the shore, which was lined with rocks. We felt grateful to the Lord of the winds and the waves that he had carried us safely through. There were thirty-six hundred dollars worth of copra on board the schooner.

Our next landing was at Maketea, where I considered it wise to leave the boat in charge of a native missionary bound for Tahiti. I took a small steamer from said island. The wind was very favorable for sailing, but I wanted to be sure to reach Tahiti the next day, as that was the day the steamer was to arrive upon which Brother Pitt and wife were to return to America, and also the one upon which Brother Barmore from Australia was supposed to be. The wind was very favorable all day, and I began to wonder why I had not remained upon the sailing schooner. I did wisely, however, as there was a calm that night and it continued all the next day, but I reached Tahiti upon the small steamer the day Brother Barmore arrived, and was permitted to meet him and his wife; also Brother Cornelius and wife.

Meetings were held in Taronia, at which the different branches of Tahiti gathered, and Brother Barmore preached one sermon to the Saints, which was greatly appreciated; the writer served as interpreter. The meeting held just before the steamer left was one that I shall long remember. Brother Pitt admonished them to be faithful and gave them a farewell address, and the Saints spoke with their hearts full of gratitude because of the patriarch's visit to the islands, and some of them wept because of his departure. The native Saints also appreciated the short visit of our brethren and sisters from Australia, bound for America upon same boat.

We are pleased to state that our charter of the sailing schooner was a success; after all expenses were paid there remained three hundred dollars, which has been set apart for completing the wall which surrounds the church property in Papeete.

There is much more that I could write, but I have now written quite lengthily. I will say, however, in conclusion, that I enjoy the work of the Master, and though we are isolated from those of our race and language, we are pleased to say that the Spirit of the Lord assists us, and we are too busily engaged in his service to feel as lonesome as we would otherwise. That the Lord will abundantly pour out his Spirit upon all laboring in the interest of his kingdom is the prayer of,

Your brother in Christ,

J. CHARLES MAY.

Denmark.

For some time I have felt it my duty to write a few lines from this northern corner of the mission field, but it has been put off. Reading the HERALD to-day I was forcibly reminded of my duty and resolved to wait no longer.

As Brother H. N. Hansen has written from this part from time to time I have no special news to relate; the interest is indifferent and prospects are not very bright for an ingathering in this city. Our members are very few, as some have left us, not having sufficient understanding of the practical or spiritual side of the work, or of the Lord and his dealings with his children. They expected too much from him and too little of themselves; and instead of waiting patiently through the experiences of life to learn to know him and his ways they left, not receiving what they thought they were entitled to and deserving of.

One couple, of whom the wife is the leader, her husband being deaf and dumb, united with the tongue speaking movement, and were baptized a week ago Sunday. Their firm expectation was for him to receive his speech, and both to receive their hearing, but when Brother Strand was over there to say good-bye,—leaving for Norway,—he found them very much disappointed, having felt no power or any change. But these words had come to her: "The gospel that Joseph Smith brought will endure when the elements perish." To any ordinary individual this ought to be a strong testimony of the truthfulness of the work she just left, but to her bewildered mind it did not seem to have that effect. Yet we will live in hopes, and continue praying. One member having left off associating with us on account of the unwise or evil conversation of some has returned. One has left us here for America, and another is to leave this week for the same destination, making our number smaller.

Only very few attend our meetings. Two persons from the Russell movement are interested, one being almost persuaded. But as the summer has come it is almost impossible to get people to a little meeting room. All want to go out in the open air, in the parks and beautiful beach woods surrounding the city. They think when they are in six days in the week the seventh must be spent among the flowers and trees provided by nature and the aid of man.

Copenhagen has more parks, lakes, and beautiful woods than any other city that I have visited in either Europe or America. If there were not so many evil things associated with outdoor life here, it would not be so bad, but drinking and worse things are sure to follow. If the people were as interested in the educational, elevating, and uplifting as they are in sport, pleasure, and frolic, the population of the city might receive much good from its natural and artificial conveniences, its pleasant climate and lovely situation.

The religious condition is much adverse to the progress of our work. In the first place the people are not naturally very religious, being more given to pleasure seeking; they are very sociable and fond of a good time. To be sober and religious seems to be contrary to their nature. Some are religious, but they are bound up either in the state church, (the Lutheran) or in some of the other churches, and as a consequence they are narrow and unwilling to listen to our message. Added to this, the Utah Church has been represented here for over sixty years, so the name Latter Day Saint is better known here than in most places in America; and when it has been made known by that people the reputation is not to be envied.

They make some converts, mainly young women and some young men, few sober-thinking, matured people. The main features of their proselyting are their good singing and music and their tracting; their preaching does not amount to much as it consists mostly in bearing testimony that they know that the gospel is true, and that Joseph Smith and Brigham Young were true prophets. That united testimony seems to affect some people.

We have no music except the organ, and occasionally a violin, and no choir; no young people's meetings nor singing practices to entice anyone. We have very few tracts and a very limited force to distribute them, and only a large dwelling room for meeting purposes. Almost the only means by which we can expect to gain members is our preaching; I think I can truthfully say that all our members in Scandinavia are won through preaching.

Our little mission paper is of much help to the work here, and if our fellow Saints in America would aid us more, both with letters and articles as well as with their money, which they surely are able to do and would do if there were sufficient interest in our efforts here, much more could be done through this paper. To be left in a foreign field, handicapped by lack of means to accomplish that which one so much desires to is not very encouraging to say the least.

But my intention in these lines is not to complain or find fault, for many have been very good to me, and none have treated me really ill, so I feel very thankful to those Saints in America who have so kindly collected means both for the mission and especially the mission paper, for without their aid we could not have kept it up till the present time. I hope that all those who have aided us in our efforts here in donating money to our paper and for mission expenses will accept my heartfelt thanks. I can truthfully say that we have tried to use the means placed in our hands as wisely and economically as we have been able to do. But it ought to be remembered that working as we are so much in the capitals we have to pay our board and our room and for all our clothing and nearly all our traveling expenses, as the members are few, and not so situated that they are able to aid us.

At a few places we always stay with our members, and for their kindness I feel very thankful. The members here have treated us kindly and manifested good will in every respect; the few exceptions we are more than willing to forget and forgive. The good Lord has forgiven us so many, many things that we surely ought to be willing to forgive a few things.

But above all do we feel thankful to our heavenly Father for all his loving-kindness, his protecting care, his spiritual aid, and the joy and peace that have come to us in our humble efforts to serve mankind for him. Many happy experiences have come to us here because of his fatherly love, for which I shall ever try to be thankful. I feel more determined than ever to press onward, and to be as useful in his service as my makeup and condition permit.

It is now twelve years since I was sent to Scandinavia, and we (especially my faithful, patient and loving wife) often long to return to America, and sometimes think we ought to be granted this privilege, but we are trying to hold out, and be faithful until the time of our departure comes.

Please remember us in your prayers, that we may prove true and faithful. And if any have some interest for the work here and are able to help us, send us some aid for our mission paper and mission expenses. The paper must have some aid at once if it is to be continued, which I firmly believe should be done as long as the work is carried on here.

Please accept this as a receipt for the hundred dollars from the Sunday school and Religio each, and the thirteen dollars collected at the Little Sioux district conference this spring, for all of which accept thanks. I will also mention the kindness of Brother H. A. Stebbins in collecting means for our paper. Although an American he has manifested much interest for our paper, for which we feel thankful. There are also a few others who remember our paper with a five dollar bill every year. It would be very gratifying to see such interest manifested by many more who are abundantly able. Let us all try to use our means, our talents and our all for this glorious cause which promises to give such rich returns.

I hope that all our friends in America will accept this letter as a greeting to them. We remember you all and think of you often, and continually long to see your beloved faces illuminated by the indwelling love of him who offered his Only Begotten. May our love to him and to each other increase until we shall meet again, or at the last great gathering, where no good-byes shall be said.

With love and best wishes to all, I remain in the gospel bonds and conflict,
P. MÜCEUS.

COPENHAGEN, DENMARK, LASSOSGADE 3, June 9, 1913.

Australia.

We are anxiously waiting to hear the news of the late conference and see if any help is being sent us, as all the American missionaries have now left these shores, and the work will suffer for want of help soon.

I have been poorly for the last week, but am doing my best to keep things moving along. I am just on my way to an opening where I lately baptized eight, and hope soon to form a branch. I am giving assistance at Geelong and Melbourne on alternate Sundays, to help along.

It is thought out here that J. W. Wight will visit us this year, but we will try and be content whatever may be done for us. The work is in fair condition and moving slowly along. I see the British Isles Mission has a good system of their own for spreading the good news, and keeping all the ministry at work.

With best wishes, I am yours in the faith,
C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

MELBOURNE, VICTORIA, May 12, 1913.

North Dakota.

This finds us out in the mission field, endeavoring to do the work for the Master. As expressed by others, we can truly say we feel strengthened through the experiences and associations of the General Conference. True, we do not expect to be exempt from the losses and crosses of the average representative of the gospel, but we do most sincerely rejoice in the comforting presence of the Spirit of truth, that has been and still is with us.

Being called upon recently to stand before a learned and critical audience, through faith and prayer and a firm reliance upon God and his eternal truth, I was blessed and sustained to a greater degree than perhaps I ever before experienced.

During my residence of three years in Minot I have often been discouraged at the poor success we have achieved in our efforts to enlighten the people, but the opportunity came this time through an organization known as the Minot Union Brotherhood, of which I and some of the brethren here are members. My efforts received favorable notice from the city papers, both dailies and weeklies, and in so many persons' inquiries that I feel much encouraged.

At last that cold, heartless, soul destroying prejudice and intolerance has begun to disappear. May the opposition continue to flee before the invincible rays of truth and love. To this end let the Saints be faithful and wise.

I feel the necessity of more personal, devoted consecration to the eradication of all evil from within ourselves, that we may be pure, and truly worthy to carry the message to others.

Our reunion starts on the 20th. We look for a good attendance at this reunion, comprising as it does the two States: Minnesota and Dakota.

News from Branches

New Liskeard, Ontario.

I am going to try and give a few interesting items in regard to this little branch situated away up here in this north country. Our nearest neighbor, that is, branch, is about three hundred miles distant; but for all that the HERALD keeps us in contact with the remainder of the church. I have called this a little branch, though that is rather misleading; there are about sixty on our record, but many are scattered about the country, leaving us about forty Saints to work with. For all the distance we are from Utah, yet we have to contend with the prejudice of Mormonism.

It will soon be a year since we were organized. The event took place July 21, 1912, under the leadership of F. A. Smith, assisted by S. G. St. John. There were called at that time an elder, priest, and teacher, leaving us with a complete set of officers, there being a deacon with us. Since then there have been a few Saints move here, including an elder, Brother Ribble, who is a great help, as nearly all of the officers are quite new to the work.

Of course, during this time all has not been roses and sunshine; we have had some hard trials; but thank God we are sailing with flying colors just now. Brother Ribble has been attending to a new opening eleven miles from here, where he has some nice gatherings, from twenty-five to thirty-five being present, and he is expecting baptisms.

The work in the branch is, or seems to be, making slow progress, but we believe that brighter times are coming. At present we are busy preparing to commemorate the anniversary of branch organization by the opening of a new church. Our lot is nearly half paid for, but for all that there are quite a lot of other expenses to meet. Bishop R. C. Evans has consented to come and occupy for the occasion, and we are looking forward to his coming. So any Saints who see this letter and feel inclined to pay us a visit remember August 3. You will find a welcome.

Any Saints traveling through New Ontario will find a branch at New Liskeard.

Brothers and sisters, we need your prayers.

I am yours in sincerity and brotherhood,

W. THOMPSON.

NEW LISKEARD, ONTARIO, June 5, 1913.

Burlington, Iowa.

We had not expected to report again quite so promptly, but thought it might be well to do so while our items were fresh.

One of our chief topics of conversation during the past twelve days has been the discussion just closed (Sunday, the 15th), between W. G. Roberts, of the nonprogressive Christian Church, and Brother E. E. Long, representing us. This will be reported in detail by our pastor, Brother O. R. Miller; we simply mention it in passing. The representation of our people was good throughout.

On Sunday, June 1, we had the pleasure of a visit from Brother G. R. Wells, of Lamoni, who was in Burlington to attend the State convention of the International Sunday School Association, held June 3 to 5. June 1 was observed as Children's Day. The morning service was devoted to a program by the children, who performed their part very creditably. At the close of the program Brother Wells gave us a short talk, after which the ordinance of baptism was administered to three of our Sunday school children. In the evening two young men, active auxiliary workers, were baptized.

Friday morning, June 6, Brother Wells accompanied the Burlington representatives to our district convention at Ottumwa, where he helped at every session in putting the time to profitable use. The joint social service from 9.15 to 10 was good, and, we think, enjoyed by all. The Sunday school and Religio conventions each voted an appropriation of five dollars to our tri-district reunion committee, to be accompanied by a request that if at all possible a field worker be secured for the reunion commencing August 21. A discussion on points of mutual interest to Sunday school and Religio workers was provided. We are glad to find a new interest aroused in the library work, and hope it will result in good. The conventions and conference were good throughout. Especially appreciated was a large attendance from Hiteman, and the music rendered by their male chorus and orchestra.

Here at Burlington, Brother C. E. Willey spoke both morning and evening, Sunday, the 15th. He has acted as moderator for Brother Long in the discussion just closed.

CORRESPONDENT.

Los Angeles, California.

It was our pleasure to greet our new missionaries to Southern California at church last Sunday. I refer to Brethren Goodrich and Slye. We have been looking forward to their coming with keen interest ever since we learned of their appointment. There was a fairly large crowd in attendance at the morning sacrament meeting, which was presided over by Brethren Hanson, Goodrich, Adam, and Slye.

I could not help being reminiscent when I recalled that over twenty years ago, while laboring in Southern Ohio, I first met Brother Goodrich. I had been holding a series of meetings in that locality, and, as a result, had baptized several. This raised the ire of the Methodist preacher, and he thereupon announced an exposure of Mormonism. I attended the lecture. Never has it been my fate to listen to a more abusive tirade. At the close of the lecture I attempted to speak to the minister, when I was set upon by some bullies and borne to the floor, falling backward over the mourners' bench. This was the first and last time I was ever down before the "anxious seat."

Brother Goodrich, in connection with several members of his lodge, rushed to my rescue, and it is to him, and a few others, that I am indebted for preventing my being mobbed that night. This was the beginning which eventuated in Brother Goodrich joining the church and finally becoming an active minister in the church.

I suppose I had as much to do with the first ordination of Brother Paul Hanson as any person in the church. At the time he was ordained I had a peculiar conviction as to his work in contrast with the work of another young man who was ordained at the same time. I was given to see that Paul's work would be enlarged and extended. He has made good. Because of the conditions throwing him close to me in the early days of his ministry, I feel a peculiar interest in him. I also ordained Fred Adam to the office of priest, and watched with increasing interest his early struggles and development.

We held a special branch business meeting last Wednesday evening. Brother Adam resigned as branch president, and Brother Goodrich was elected to fill the position. Brother Hanson presided over the meeting. The people were contented with this action and everyone present felt to accord to the appointment of Brother Goodrich by the General Conference and his election was unanimous.

Provisions were also made for the financial support of Brother Goodrich, and a committee composed of Deacon Niels Paulson, Fred Adam, R. T. Cooper, T. W. Williams, Hermina Badham and Annie Jasper were appointed to raise the necessary funds to bring the family of Brother Goodrich to the coast at once. We are determined to afford Brother Goodrich every opportunity to make a success of his mission.

I could not help but think it would be a good thing to make a move to bring Brother Slye's family west, also. I do not doubt, if all goes well, but what such plan will materialize.

Children's Day was observed at the church this morning. The entire morning hour was devoted to children's exercises. The participants did credit to the excellent training which was given them by the vigilant Sunday-school workers.

It was my pleasure to baptize four of the children, and to participate in the blessing of two others. I not only baptized these children, but I had blessed some of them as well, and officiated when their parents were united in wedlock.

A reception is planned for Brother Goodrich next Thursday evening.

It is understood that Brother Slye will make his headquarters at San Bernardino. I am sure the Saints there will appreciate this fact, as they must feel the loss of Brother Elbert Smith and his estimable mother and wife, who have done so much good to the people not only of San Bernardino but all of Southern California as well.

Many of the Saints were disappointed because Brother Evan A. Davis was not returned to Southern California. His modest, unobtrusive manner and unselfish solicitude for everybody won our love and confidence. Brother Davis did extensive missionary work throughout the district.

Brother and Sister Barmore, also Brother and Sister Pitt, sojourn in these parts en route to Zion. We rejoice with them in their return to the promised land.

I recount with joy the years spent in helping others to see the right. I have no regret along this line. Some of the most pleasant memories of my life are associated with my missionary experiences. While conditions have conspired to "lay me on the shelf," hope lingers still. Whatever others may think of me, I still hold in loving confidence and sacred memory the associations formed in my quarter of a century of active missionary and pastoral work.

The inspiring message of Jesus, the carpenter of Nazareth, commands my continued respect and admiration. I want to help in every possible and consistent way to make that message a reality in the lives of men.

Convey to the many, many friends throughout the land my confidence and love. May peace and joy abide with each and all.

THOMAS W. WILLIAMS.

The Bishopric take pleasure in specially commending the work of Sister Johnson for her faithfulness, and correctness in the same for the past number of years, and trust that the Lord will specially remember and bless her in her present situation and labor, and that due health and strength may be returned to her.

We also duly commend Brother Johnson to the Saints and friends of Nova Scotia in his work, and bespeak for him assistance and help from each and every one, so that the work may not suffer, but move forward and accomplish that which the Lord will have him do. Commending him to all with whom he may have occasion to act or deal, and trusting that the Saints in the boundaries of his district may receive impetus and strength and that goodwill may abound therein, we are in behalf of the Bishopric, your servant in bonds,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

GENERAL CONFERENCE MINUTES.

Copy for issue of General Conference Minutes was promptly prepared and placed in the printers' hands, but work in setting up the same is delayed because of excessive demands upon the publishing plant. I am unable to state when the Herald Office will be able to issue the Minutes.

LAMONI, IOWA, June 20, 1913.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Kewanee District; Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in this district, I take this means of informing you that I would be glad to hear from you in regard to new openings, or where preaching services are most needed. Also, having been elected vice president of the Religio in this district, we desire to do all we can to assist in the Master's work.

Mail addressed to my field address, Dahinda, Illinois, care of Jack Lorance, or to my home address, Flint, Michigan, 1447 Detroit Street, will reach me at any time.

A servant for Christ,

DAHINDA, ILLINOIS, June 16, 1913.

J. R. GRICE.

To the Saints and Friends of the Kewanee District; Greeting: Having been chosen assistant minister in charge of this field, I desire to get in touch with you. Anyone wanting preaching or knowing of any place where a new opening can be made, please notify me at once, and we will get to you as soon as we can.

The field is large, and we have only three missionaries. We are desirous of doing what we can for the cause we all love so much. You can help us to keep busy by making known your wants. If any of the branches want two-day meetings write me and we will arrange with you for the dates.

Ever praying that God's Spirit may guide and assist us in our labor of love, I remain,
Your brother,
JOY, ILLINOIS.

O. E. SADE.

To the Saints of Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, and Georgia; Greeting: As I have been chosen assistant minister in charge of this territory, I thought it wise to write a brief address to the Saints and friends.

I have as my coworkers in this large field, Brethren I. M. Smith, Swen Swenson, C. L. Snow, Hale W. Smith, A. G. Miller, and A. E. Warr. Among this body of men I feel safe in saying that we have some as good talent as there is in the church. That the Quorum of Twelve saw the necessity of augmenting our missionary force this year is a strong evidence that this is a very important field, and that the work is growing.

I am happy to state that last year was a prosperous year, as I view it. One reason why it was so is because there are so many of the local workers who are willing to assist the missionary in his efforts to advance the cause. This will be the result in every field where both missionary and local force labor together in the spirit of love, without jealousy and strife.

I can truly say if the missionary force will act wisely and do their best to advance the cause of preaching the gospel, and then live the gospel, the southern people will stand by them and cheerfully assist them in their work, sacrificing to build up the kingdom. So, dear brethren, let us each one of the missionary force be wise servants, and harmless as doves, doing all we can to be without blame in word and deed.

Remember we are on the Lord's errand, and it is our business to be meek, sober, prayerful, and very studious, and to show ourselves approved unto God, workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. The Lord has instructed his servants as follows: "Therefore cease from all your light speeches, from all laughter, from all your lustful desires, from all your pride and light-mindedness." (Doctrine and Covenants 85:37.) Again he says in paragraph 19, same section, "Cast away your idle thoughts and your excess of laughter far from you." We read again in Doctrine and Covenants 59:4, "Not with much laughter, for this is sin." The Apostle Paul speaks against foolish talking and jesting "which are not convenient." (Ephesians 5:4.) I hope and pray that every missionary will make an excellent showing in personal deportment as well as by an excellent report in number of sermons, baptisms, and confirmations. There is a bright future before each of us, both as ministry and members, if we all pull together in love and harmony, with a strong desire to spread the work.

From my viewpoint, I consider the church is standing higher and in better condition than it has ever done since its organization; and that it is rapidly putting on those beautiful adornments which will prepare it for the coming of the Savior. With these thoughts in mind, I feel to advise everyone to be faithful in the line of duty, that God may be with us to help us overcome all evil, and give us the crown of life when the battle is over.

My field address this year will be McKenzie, Alabama. I will be glad to correspond with anyone who may desire to write me in regard to the needs of the work in their locality.

Your coworker in the bonds of love,

F. M. SLOVER.

Summer Board in Colorado Very Moderate Charges

"I'd like to go to Colorado," said a man the other day, "but it costs so much to live there that I'm afraid I—"

"Forget it," said his friend, who had spent a month last summer seeing the show places of the Wonder State. "I had the same idea myself last year until I got that folder the Burlington gets up telling the hotel rates. And I was mightily surprised to find that, besides the hotels, which are as elaborate as you please, there are hundreds of good, cleanly, wholesome ranch houses in Colorado, where the rates are as low as $8.00 a week, and they give you mighty good fare."

That folder is published by the Burlington Railroad to show folks how they can enjoy a vacation in Colorado at a very reasonable expense. And I'd like to mail you a copy of it—free. It tells all about the country, gives a complete list of hotels and boarding houses, addresses, rates, conveniences, elevation and nearby attractions.

Let me send these, and if you wish I can tell you all about the trains and cost of railway tickets to the most wonderfully charming country in America.

THE QUESTION OF PRESENT REVELATION.

The question of present revelation will not down. The denominational world is neither willing to receive it themselves nor to tolerate its acceptance by others, even when those others who accept it are of undeniable sincerity and virtue. In this great controversy Latter Day Saints are practically left alone to support the affirmative.

The majority of religious preceptors flatly deny that God can or will reveal himself to man now. They declare that the Bible is sufficient, and revelation has ceased. Others tentatively admit that God may reveal himself; but when concrete examples of such revelation are produced, they attack them with great vigor and acrimony and invent the most contradictory and absurd stories to account for the origin of the supposed revelations.

In this argument for and against continued revelation the affirmative has the decided advantage from a scriptural standpoint; and perhaps this is no less true from a logical standpoint. To suppose that God communed with man age after age, and then suddenly and entirely ceased such communion, at a time, too, when according to the popular conception man was becoming most worthy of it, is contrary to all reason. Opposed to this idea of a God who WAS we present the idea of the God who IS. It is the old affirmation of the Great "I AM."

The situation is not unique or new in any sense. At different times in the history of the world when God has revealed himself to men, those receiving the revelation have been confronted by people (perhaps a majority of the whole) who professed to believe in the revelations of the past, but were unwilling to receive those of the then present. The Jews in the days of Jesus and the apostles were great sticklers for the revelations that had come through Moses and the prophets. But they received none themselves and absolutely refused to credit Jesus and the apostles with even common honesty, much less with divine favor and inspiration. They even resented as blasphemous their claims to such revelation.

It is not a matter to marvel at that they should do so when we consider their mental and spiritual condition. Not receiving or even desiring to receive light themselves, naturally they were condemned when light came to others; and naturally, again, they resented such condemnation. History repeats itself. When God spoke in this age there were many people who had received nothing themselves and desired nothing from on high. The Lord condemned their saintly lips and worldly hearts, and denounced their faulty creeds and vain professions. Like the powder to the spark, their anger and hatred flamed back upon the ones through whom the revelation was promulgated. The Jews were not more ready to stone Stephen than these were to persecute and murder the messengers of restored revelation.

There is a concert of method in these matters in all ages that argues a common incentive and the denomination of a common spirit, and that not by any means a good spirit.

On the Day of Pentecost, when the flood tide of blessing and inspiration was on, and prophecies and tongues were enjoyed, the Jews, themselves barren of such things as Rahab of chastity, sought to discredit the whole affair and account for it all by saying:

"These men are full of new wine."—Acts 2: 13.

Modern Protestantism prayed for centuries: "Lord, send us another Pentecost!" All have heard it. We hear it yet: "Lord, send us a Pentecostal shower." Men will arise from such a prayer and sign an agreement to debate with Latter Day Saints, denying that such things can be received now,—or, if too timid to argue the matter publicly, they will do so privately.

They pray for a Pentecostal shower; but woe to the man who gets one, for he will speedily be treated to a shower of another kind, as were the apostles. When revelation and Pentecostal blessings came again in this age, a cry was raised so identical in language and import with the one heard from the opposition on Pentecost that men scarcely need the gift of discernment to detect their common origin.

Remember the Pharisaical charge in old Jerusalem, "These men are full of new wine." Listen:

September 21, 1823, Joe is drunk. He claims God sent an angel to him that day, while he was in bed, and the angel makes revelations about the plates.—Peepstone Joe, by Lu B. Cake, p. 15.

And note this about the dedication of the temple at Kirtland, at which time the Lord revealed himself and the gifts were manifested in great power:

For some days wine flowed freely. . . . This with previous fastings, and expectations wrought up to the highest pitch, and other means used to create mental excitement, produced unheard of effects, if we may credit the witnesses of these proceedings.—History of the Mormons, by Gunnison, p. 107.

From start to finish the arguments and methods used against primitive Christianity have been used and are still being used against the great latter day restoration. They had a common origin in infidelity, that infidelity toward the revelations of to-day which has always most successfully masqueraded under a professed belief in the revelations of the past,—that infidelity which in all ages has posed as religious and has professed to venerate the God of yesterday while opposing the God who is ever at work in the world among men who are willing to receive his ministrations. This is its origin, and we hesitate not to say that in both instances that evil power which is the father of lies has been active. No man can commune with God and escape the malignant scrutiny and relentless opposition of this power.

The Saints may expect to be tested even further in this matter. Those who have not the moral courage to resist evil and face misrepresentation and ostracism and contempt, those unfortunate invertebrates who weaken and go down just at the time when most needed in God's great work, can only become dead weights to the church. The church has enough to bear and to contend against without this. Let us be strong and quit ourselves like men, putting on the whole armor of God. Above all, let us so conduct ourselves that it will become absolutely impossible for men to speak evil of us truthfully; and then we may always claim the blessing that is promised to those who are slandered and persecuted for the Master's sake.

Ye that are men, now serve him,
Against unnumbered foes;
Your courage rise with danger,
And strength to strength oppose.

THE SPALDING ROMANCE THEORY HAS RIVAL.

Herewith we reproduce an extract from the Word of Truth, published at Greeley, Colorado, February 12, 1913. It is taken from an article appearing in that issue written by one J. H. D. Thompson, entitled, "Origin, history, and characteristics of the Mormon cult."

We use it simply to illustrate the strange, contradictory, and absurd theories that are advanced to account for the origin of the Book of Mormon. For years we have been told that it was written by one Solomon Spalding, whose manuscript was either stolen or copied by Sidney Rigdon, or else stolen or copied by Joseph Smith, according to the fancy of the one advocating the theory.

But in this extract it is gravely set forth that the Book of Mormon was written by one Spafford, and individuals are named who made affidavit that they heard Spafford read his manuscript and that it was identical in most parts with the Book of Mormon.

When it is remembered that other individuals swore positively that the writings of Solomon Spalding were identical with the Book of Mormon, it is evident at a glance that somebody has lied. Some, perhaps many, have made "lies their refuge." Both of these stories can not be true; and we are thoroughly convinced that both are false, from start to finish. The extract follows:

I conclude this chapter with a clipping from the Richmond (Missouri) Conservator, of October 10, 1901, published in the Denver (Colorado) Times, upon the statement of a Mrs. Diadama Chittenden, of Utica, Missouri:

JOSEPH SMITH STOLE HIS BIBLE.

A Missouri Woman Knew the Man Who Wrote the Mormon Book.

(Denver Times.)

According to Mrs. Diadama Chittenden, of Utica, Missouri, Joseph Smith stole the Mormon "Bible," which he claimed was "revealed" to him.

Mrs. Chittenden is now 87 years old. She was born in Canada and her maiden name was Whitney. In 1852 she was married to R. M. Chittenden, and in 1870 the couple went to Utica, Missouri, where she ever since has resided. Mrs. Chittenden is hale and of sound mind to-day. One of her most vivid memories of the early sixties is of the origin of the Mormon "Bible," which, she declares, was never revealed to Joseph Smith or written by him, but which he stole from a millwright named Spafford, of Salem, (now Conneaut), Ashtabula County, Ohio. Smith was in the employ of Spafford, who was a sort of overseer or superintendent for Squire Wright of Salem. One of Spafford's hobbies was to decant upon the Bible. He contended that he could compose and read them alternately with chapters from the Good Book and that none who heard them could tell the original from the imitation.

On a wager, Spafford, so Mrs. Chittenden says, prepared a number of chapters of his own composition in imitation of the Bible and they were read to a select number of his acquaintances. None of these were able to distinguish the imitation from the real or to tell which had been written by Spafford and which had not. Joseph Smith was among those present at the test, Mrs. Chittenden says, and he was an attentive listener at the reading and others given afterward by Spafford to exercise his hobby.

Spafford preserved the chapters he wrote with the idea of one day publishing a treatise on his hobby. Death prevented the carrying out of this plan, and when his executors came to search for his manuscripts they had each and every one of them disappeared.

It was some years after Spafford's death that the Mormon "Bible," said to have been "revealed" to Joseph Smith, appeared. A copy of this work found its way to Salem and into the possession of Squire Wright, Spafford's employer. Surprised at its contents, he called two other friends of Spafford, a Doctor Hart and Zaph Lake, into consultation on "Smith's Bible," and after a thorough examination they made an affidavit to the effect that the greater part of the Mormon Book was made of chapters written for his own amusement by millwright Spafford. Mrs. Chittenden is of the impression that the affidavit was either published by or offered for publication to the Salem Reporter.

The author of the article in which this extract appears seems to credit this strange tale, and most remarkable of all, in some of his mental ramblings he seems to credit the Spalding Story also. We understand that he is very aged and quite infirm, and perhaps it would be an act of charity to suppose that this condition has affected his mental processes. It is sufficient strain upon the credulity to believe one of these old stories; to accept them both must be an achievement reserved for second childhood.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

CONFERENCE AND DEDICATION.—We are in receipt of a newspaper clipping making favorable mention of the conventions and conference of the Eastern Iowa District, at Clinton, Iowa, and of the dedication of the church there on June 16. The dedicatory sermon was by Elder L. G. Holloway, of Lamoni, and a missionary to the Eastern Iowa District.

CHURCH POSITION LIBERALLY DISCUSSED.—By clippings from the Minot Reporter (North Dakota) we note that our Brother William Sparling, of that city, is active in getting before the Minot Brotherhood, a local organization, just now discussing the religions of the world, the claims of the Reorganization with reference to the restored gospel. He has occupied two sessions with his addresses. A lively discussion is said to have occurred at the conclusion of the second address, when questions were permitted. The Reporter states that Brother Sparling replied with ready answer to each question. The ministers of Minot are more liberal in affiliating with our representatives and in considering our position than are those of some other places.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CHORUS.—As a fitting climax to the Children's Day exercises at Lamoni, Iowa, June 15, the young people's chorus of Lamoni rendered the beautiful and inspiring cantata, Chalices of Perfume. This chorus of sixty voices is under the able direction of Sister Aletha May Skinner. Their work is of the best, and furnishes a suggestion for other communities with talent undeveloped and inactive.

ARGUMENT FROM INFERENCE.—In answer to the question, "Is the name Christian a human name? I don't find any place where they were divinely called Christians," the Christian Standard, for June 28, states: "The disciples were called Christians first at Antioch (Acts 11: 26), and we have no doubt but that they were thus called by Paul and Barnabas, who were divinely inspired." This is argument from inference. It reminds one of the discussion between two laymen, one of infant baptism, the other of non-infant baptism persuasion. Challenged for scriptural evidence the former urged that Paul baptized "the household of Stephanas," the inference being that there were infants in the family. A bystander broke in by suggesting a stronger argument in the scripture "Balaam . . . saddled his ass." When asked what that had to do with infant baptism the ready reply came, "The inference is that he went to baptize some babies somewhere."

TO AUSTRALIA.—By letter from Brother C. Edward Miller we learn that he is to leave Kirtland, Ohio, for Independence, Missouri, about July 6. We understand that Brethren G. T. Griffiths and Miller are to sail for Australia from San Francisco August 20, stopping en route at the Society Islands.

THE FINDING OF THE LYRE.

There lay upon the ocean's shore
 What once a tortoise served to cover.
 A year and more, with rush and roar,
 The surf had rolled it over,
 Had played with it and flung it by,
 As wind and weather might decide it,
 Then tossed it high, where sand-drifts dry
 Cheap burial might provide it.

It rested there to bleach or tan,
 The rains had soaked, the suns had burned it;
 With many a ban the fisherman
 Had stumbled o'er and spurned it;
 And there the fishergirl would stay,
 Conjecturing with her brother,
 How in their play the poor estray
 Might serve some use or other.

So there it lay, through wet and dry,
 As empty as the last new sonnet,
 Till by and by came Mercury,
 And, having mused upon it,
 "Why here," cried he, "the thing of things,
 In shape, material and dimension!
 Give it but strings, and lo, it sings,
 A wonderful invention!"

So said so done; the chords he strained,
 And, as his fingers o'er them hovered,
 The shell disdained a soul had gained,
 The lyre had been discovered.
 O empty world that round us lies,
 Dead shell, of soul and thought forsaken,
 Brought we but eyes like Mercury's
 In thee what songs should waken!

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM

OR

THE CURRENT REFORMATION IN CONTRAST WITH
TRUTH REVEALED.—PART 9.

BY E. E. LONG.

TRUTH "DISCOVERED" BUT NOT APPLIED.

Historically, we have followed them from 1809 to 1875, and we have learned that to date, and subsequently, from both of the rapidly diverging parties, that they have failed in the accomplishment of the purpose designed. The natural tendency to drift with the tide asserted itself, and the "digressive" element soon began to pattern after the sects.

The following from the pen of James W. Zachary is to the point:

The curse of the Church of Christ to-day is a set of preachers with maudlin piety and no backbone, whose highest ambition is to occupy an easy pastorate, draw a big salary and preach to please men rather than God.—Preface to Zachary-Smith Debate.

We will now turn our attention more particularly to some of their teachings, which they never adopted, but which forms a necessary part of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Mr. Campbell wrote: "But the body of Christ, under him as its head, animated and led by his Spirit, is the fountain and spring of all official power and privilege."—Christian System, p. 89.

To that sublime truth we say amen big and loud; but we insist that it must be "under him as its head, animated and led by his Spirit," as was the apostolic church of the first century. Mr. Campbell and company, however, never assuaged their thirst at that fountain if we may judge by their own testimony. "We want no message from the skies," was the self-imposed obstruction that diverted the flow of the stream, and in justification of their absurd position they say it ceased to flow at the end of the "apostolic age"; and yet Mr. Campbell, himself, wrote with reference to the primitive church: "Jesus did breathe into it the Holy Spirit to inhabit and animate it till he came again."—Christian System, p. 189.

Yes, till he comes again, (Ephesians 4: 13, 14). Not merely during the apostolic age, but so long as that body remained loyal to him. Now notice this:

An examination of this first letter to the Corinthians can not fail to be most instructive; for it most clearly and unequivocally teaches us that the visible, audible, sensible demonstration of the Spirit and power was that supernatural attestation of the testimony of Christ which made it credible, so that no man could have acknowledged Jesus of Nazareth to be the Almighty Lord, but by this demonstration of the Holy Spirit. Thus was the testimony confirmed—thus was Jesus demonstrated to be the only-begotten son of God—and thus, and thus only, are men able to believe in him.—Ibid., p. 129.

The supernatural attestations, or "manifestations," of the Spirit, in a diversity of "gifts," was evidence of its personal presence in and animation of the body, and the manifestations continued with the body so far as the New Testament record goes, and for some considerable time thereafter, as the following from Eusebius shows:

Wherefore, also, those that were truly his disciples, receiving grace from him, in his name performed these things for the benefit of the rest of men, as everyone received the free gift from him. Some, indeed, must certainly and truly cast out demons, so that frequently those persons themselves that were cleansed from wicked spirits, believed and were received into the church. Others have a knowledge of things to come, as also visions and prophetic communications; others heal the sick by the imposition of hands, and restore them to health. And, moreover, as we said above, even the dead have been raised and continued with us many years. . . . "As we hear many of the brethren in the church who have prophetic gifts, and who speak in all tongues through the Spirit, and who also bring to light the secret things of men for their benefit, and who expounded the mysteries of God." These gifts of different kinds also continued with those that were worthy until the times mentioned.—Eusebius, book 5, chapter 7, p. 175.

These manifestations, according to the above author, were in the church during the period 161-180, A. D.

But the body "disinterred" by Mr. Campbell from the "theological rubbish" of the Dark Ages is remarkably destitute of these earmarks of identity. It is argued, however, that those gifts—supernatural attestations—were abundantly manifest in the primitive body to "confirm the testimony"; but were to cease when that institution was fully developed, after which the body, under divine grace, would be able to perpetuate itself, without the aid of miracles. But Mr. Campbell spoiled that argument when he wrote that miracles and missionaries were inseparably connected, and "we have no idea of a missionary without miracles," etc.; and both factions of Mr. Campbell's "body" recognized the fact that "we must be a missionary people or die." But suppose it were true that the gifts were to cease as argued above. That "mystical body"—the church—of the first century DIED and was BURIED beneath the theological rubbish of the Dark Ages, and was not in existence at the time this reform movement began. From the Christian Evangelist, March 21, 1895, we make the following excerpt:

That the religious world had so far apostatized from the New Testament ideas of the church as to have been utterly rejected and disowned by Christ, so that he had no church in the world at the time the current reformation was inaugurated and that with the organization of congregations under the teachings of the leader of this movement, he made a new beginning in church building.

In the light of the foregoing we maintain that the "supernatural attestation" of the Spirit would be necessary to establish the divinity of the "new church" and identify it with the "body" of the first century. They have dug up a "body" which they assure us is the identical church of the apostolic age, but it does not look nor act like the first church. Measured by the New Testament body, it is not even a good counterfeit. There are no "signs" of life in it, and we are told that "the body without the spirit is dead" (James 2:26). The only spirit that has manifested itself in this new church is the spirit of confusion and contention, and that spirit, we are informed, is not of God (1 Corinthians 14:33). So we are dubious. If anything further is required to excite suspicion it is easily found in the following:

We plead for the primitive, undiluted, unencumbered gospel. Let us plead likewise for the power of the primitive gospel. We would return to the early teaching in belief, in organization, in method; but unless we have the power of the early teaching, our belief is lifeless, our organization but carnal machinery, and our method but a rope of sand. Christianity is a supernatural religion in its source and in its application. A sleepy church and a dead world await unction from on high; we can have it when we are fit channels for it.—Stephen J. Corey, in Christian Evangelist, April 24, 1902.

You see there is something they do not have, and that something is power. Jesus told the apostles, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you" (Acts 1:8); that power manifested itself in the way of gifts of various kinds, (1 Corinthians 12:1-11); and the promise extends to us (Acts 2:39). The same writer continues:

A thorough knowledge of the letter of the New Testament is not a sufficient equipment for the preaching of the cross. The keenest intellect is unable to understand the mystery of redemption, and therefore unable to explain it to others without the illumination of the Holy Spirit. We are such egotists. We think we can read at a glance, and accept and interpret the great truths of revelation. But back of all our self-evolved efforts must be the Spirit of God, to open the way to unwelcome truth and to bring that which is received to the point of personal conviction. It seems strange that the religion of Jesus Christ which was born of the Spirit, and whose gospel is aflame with the personal and present power of that Spirit from Matthew to Revelation, should be preached to-day with apparently so little recognition of the unction from on high. Why is it that a doctrine so plainly conspicuous is so undiscovered by us? Is it possible that the same blindness which covered up the Old Testament and hid from the Jews the coming of the Messiah, has fallen upon us who study the New Testament, and hidden from us the power of the evangel—the Holy Spirit?

From the above we deduce the following important facts: The religion of Jesus is supernatural in its source and in its application; there belongs to it a power, an unction from on high; the Disciples are not in possession of it; they are egotistical enough to try to read, accept, and understand the truths of revelation, and preach the gospel without it; it is still an "undiscovered" doctrine with them, and there is a possibility of them being blind after the manner of the Jews; the power is hidden from them which, if true, proves beyond all cavil that they have not restored the apostolic order of things; their self-evolved efforts have been a dismal failure. THE BODY WITHOUT THE SPIRIT IS DEAD!

It is a very easy matter for men to organize a church and preach repentance, and baptism in water for the remission of sins; but to have the Holy Spirit attesting divine approval is quite another thing. God has reserved the right to bestow the Spirit upon whomsoever he will (1 Corinthians 12:11). Man can not do it; and herein is revealed the humanity of the institution under consideration. Neither God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, nor angels had anything to do with it; yet Mr. Campbell was egotistical enough to assume that it was the "nucleus . . . around which may one day congregate all the children of God."—Christian System, p. 113.

Now while Mr. Campbell taught that the early church enjoyed the various gifts of the Spirit, he failed to adopt that element of the gospel as a part of his plan to convert the world. On the contrary, he taught, and the great majority of his followers still teach, that the "baptism of the Holy Spirit ceased with the apostolic age by divine appointment," and that the idea of such operation of the Spirit now is a "myth," and a "damnable superstition." Listen to this "progressive"!

The pretension that men of this day, unendued and uninspired, received testimony directly from the Spirit; experience "pentecostal showers"; hear a "still small voice," etc., is a preposterous presumption equaled only by the Pope! When the last inspired man laid down his pen, then revelation ceased. Not another word has man ever heard from the spirit, nor will he till the trumpet sounds: it is not necessary. —Doctor J. C. Holloway, in Our Distinctive Plea, quoted from An Examination of Campbellism by Elder R. C. Evans, p. 22.

We might, with equal propriety, say with reference to such sneering sophistry that it is a "preposterous assumption" equaled only by the other faction of Campbellism.

Here is another sweet morsel from the "digressive" wing:

There is not a church that believes in this direct and immediate influence, that has not had trouble with infamies and pollutions growing out of it. . . . Then we repeat that the most dangerous delusion that has ever cursed the church has been this vagary of a direct and immediate influence of the Spirit. It has been the Pandora's box out of which has come only delusion, fanaticism, and pollution.—Clark Braden, in Braden-Kelley Debate, p. 269.

I have before me another book entitled, The Witness of the Spirits, by James W. Zachary, of the "anti" faction, from which we select a few more choice morsels of Disciple food:

This theory of the direct, abstract, immediate, inconceivable, independent, mysterious, and supernatural influence of the Spirit on the heart of man has been and is to-day the heart, soul, and life of nearly every false religion beneath the blue vaulted sky. It originated in the mist and fog of heathen mythology.—Page 14.

By a parity of reasoning we might say: All the divorce scandals in the world have been the result of unhappiness in the marriage relation, therefore the marriage relation should be avoided. There is as much common sense in one as in the other, and none in either.

From the Spirit's revelation only can we learn our duty, live by its teachings, and reach our heavenly home. This being true, then the doctrine of the abstract and independent operation of the Spirit must crumble and fall to the ground as a myth, a damnable superstition unworthy the belief of intelligent beings.—Ibid., p. 34.

Then in reason's name I ask what need has the world for the abominable and delusive doctrine of the abstract and independent influence of the Holy Spirit? It is as utterly useless and worthless as it is false and absurd.—Ibid., pp. 64, 65.

It would be a waste of time and space to multiply texts of such blasphemous halderdash. Do you wonder, kind reader, that they should spend a whole century trying to restore apostolic Christianity only to crown their efforts with the melancholy epithet, failure?

But, you ask, do you mean to say that they do not believe in the Holy Spirit at all? Well, if language properly expresses their ideas we may easily infer that they do not. But we will let this same man Zachary state their position, as he does it quite nicely.

Since the apostolic age the revelation of God is completed, miracles at the hands of men have ceased, and the baptism of the Holy Spirit is no longer necessary. The Spirit now impresses us through revealed truth.—Ibid., p. 61.

All the evidence of the Holy Spirit necessary to show how to become a Christian, produce joy in a Christian, and show how to live a Christian, is found only in the revelation of the Spirit—the Bible.—Ibid., p. 86.

His entire argument is based upon the proposition: "Reason and the Bible teach that the Holy Spirit wields an influence over the mind of man only through medium, except in some miracles."—Ibid., p. 16.

The above is in harmony with the following from the pen of Mr. Campbell:

The Bible, or the Old and New Testaments, in Hebrew and Greek, contains a full and perfect revelation of God and his will adapted to man as he now is.—Christian System, p. 15.

Every party in Christendom, without respect to any of its tenets, opinions, or practices, is a heresy, a schism—unless there be such a party as stands exactly upon the apostle's ground. Then, in that case, it is a sect just in the sense of the old sect of the Nazarenes, afterwards called Christians, and all others are guilty before the Lord, and must be condemned for their opposition to Christ's own party; whose party we are, provided we hold fast all, and only all, the apostolic traditions, and build upon the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible.—Ibid., p. 111.

If anything further is needed, the following will suffice:

They taught that the baptism of the Holy Spirit was administered on Pentecost, in Jerusalem, and at the house of Cornelius, in Cæsarea, and is not for us.—Concerning the Disciples, p. 70.

THE SPIRIT'S PERFECT REVELATION AT FAULT.

Now I think we have presented, or allowed them to present in their own language, their position so clearly that the most obtuse mind may grasp and comprehend it without difficulty. Their whole movement rests upon the proposition that the Bible is the "perfect revelation" of God's will to man, and contains all that we may ever expect to receive until the Lord comes again. That proposition might be all right if it contained the necessary element—truth—to make it adhesive. But it assumes one of the points at issue, and one of vital importance; viz: Is the Bible, as we now have it, perfect? The "Old and New Testaments, in Hebrew and Greek," is the answer. But how many of the generality of mankind can read the Hebrew and Greek? Of what benefit to the body is a dead language? Take away the "abstract" operation of the Spirit, and confine the "perfect revelation" to the Hebrew and Greek, and the flock would be at the mercy of a horde of contending priests who do not read it alike, and who are continually giving us conflicting interpretations. But shades of Campbell, Scott, and Stone! Listen!

So negligent, too, has the kingdom of Christ been on some of these points, that she has not at this hour a received copy of the Living Oracles. We American and English people have a received version by authority of a king; but we have not a RECEIVED ORIGINAL by the authority of any king or government, civil or ecclesiastic. A startling fact, truly! But who dare to deny it?—Christian System, p. 98.

Now think: He says it is a "startling fact" which no one can deny that we do not have a received original by any authority, civil or ecclesiastic; so at best we must depend upon a mere substitute in the form of a version, which he tells us on page twelve of his preface to the MacKnight-Doddridge version, contains "defects"; and on page seven he informs us that the "fathers of Calvinistic Israel did, willfully, and knowingly, interpolate the Scriptures, and torture many passages to favor their system." Then what becomes of all this jargon about the "Spirit's perfect revelation"? It is mere twaddle. Nothing to it; and Mr. Campbell himself demonstrates it when he says, "There is no law, rule, or precedent, for the manner of eating the Lord's supper," and "very many other such matters" not "enacted, prescribed, or decided by apostolic authority," including the sacred institution of marriage. And to meet the emergency he adopted the law of expediency which apologizes for innovations and hides a multitude of errors.

Now, in all candor, in the absence of any testimony aside from the Bible, how do the Disciples KNOW but what the whole thing, from Genesis to Revelation, may be a "damnable superstition"? Some of the greatest thinkers and best educated men in the world to-day are picking the Bible to pieces and branding it as a "myth." There never was a time when independent testimony was more necessary than now.

The Master taught: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."—John 7: 17; and "Upon this rock I will build my church."—Matthew 16: 18.

But those who share Mr. Campbell's views must be content with the echo of their despairing cry, "We can not by any possibility know . . . when the Scriptures are silent." So, once again, we are compelled, by force of logic and evidence, to inscribe upon the hull of this wandering derelict the familiar sign, FAILURE.

THE DUTIES OF AN APOSTLE.

NUMBER 13.—"DUTIES OF OFFICERS SERIES."

(By Gomer T. Griffiths, President of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, and missionary to Australia.)

"An apostle is one sent forth. In the New Testament, originally the name of those twelve of the disciples whom Jesus chose and sent forth, first, to preach the gospel, and to be with him during his ministry on earth."—Smith and Barnam's Bible Dictionary, p. 51.

It is very apparent to all those who are familiar with the contents of the scriptures,—the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants,—that there are two quorums of apostles in the church; namely, the First Presidency and the Twelve, composed of three and twelve members respectively. The Lord denominates them in a latter day revelation as the first and second presidency: "In the presidency, the president and his two counselors; in the second presidency, the twelve."—Doctrine and Covenants 122:9. There are also other apostles in the church when acting in certain capacity; namely, the Seventy; that is, when delegated with certain authority by the Twelve and the church: "The seventy when traveling by the voice of the church, or sent by the twelve to minister the word where the twelve can not go, are in the power of their ministrations, apostles—those sent."—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3.

The Twelve Apostles and the Presidency are equal in power and authority ("And they form a quorum equal in authority and power to the three presidents previously mentioned."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11), and these two quorums named above constitute the presidency of the whole church in all the world. The Twelve in the performance of their duty under the law labor under the instruction and direction of the three apostles; namely, the First Presidency.

The above statement is supported by the decision of the Joint Council which met in Lamoni, Iowa, April 20, 1894, as per the counsel of the Lord, "to counsel together, and agree upon the things of the law and the general affairs of the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 122: 13), at which time the following was agreed to as in keeping with the law:

As a traveling, presiding council, your quorum has the active supervision and presidency, under the first presidency, over the entire field of ministerial labor, and control over districts, branches, and the ministry as a whole and as church organizations, and not as local presiding officers in these several organizations; holding special local presidency where no organization has been perfected; in a similar way as the first presidency presides over the whole church, differing in this, that the first presidency is necessarily local, while your province is not localized; nor do we mean by this that the word "abroad" is to be construed to mean foreign lands, but in the field of itinerant gospel labor everywhere, as contradistinguished from branch, district, or other local organizations.

The above was the opinion "of the First Presidency, as communicated to the Quorum of Twelve, in 1890, and was adopted as the opinion of this joint council." (See Doctrine and Covenants 123: 23.)

The fact that there are more apostles than those who constitute the Quorum of Twelve will be conceded by all in view of the statement made by Paul that Jesus Christ was an apostle, and a further statement that is made in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were the first apostles in this dispensation; and again, that the Seventy are apostles when officiating in certain capacities, as referred to above. However, none of these were or are members of the Quorum of Twelve. The above order of things is in harmony with the exposition given by Paul in 1 Corinthians 12: 28, also in Ephesians 4: 8-16, which is as follows: "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers"; "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers."

Some of our critics on the outside charge our ministry with reversing the order in which the officers were set in the church, as referred to by Paul. They contend that Paul placed at the head "first apostles," and that we have placed instead, as the first, prophets. However, the reader can readily see that the position we take, namely, that there are two quorums of apostles, which quorums conjointly are the head officers in the church, is strictly in keeping with Paul's explanation of the matter. Doubtless, all will admit that the prophets referred to above have reference to the patriarchs, and in the vision that our present Prophet had some years ago the Lord places these patriarchs or line of prophets with the two quorums of apostles on the same platform; thus associating together as Paul did, "first apostles, secondarily prophets."

Members of the first quorum of twelve in the New Testament church were called and ordained by Jesus personally. (Matthew 10.) When the vacancy caused by the death of Judas the traitor was filled, it was done by casting lots and invoking the divine guidance of the Almighty, and resulted in the election of Matthias. (Acts 1: 15-26.) The first twelve appointed to this office in this last dispensation were also chosen or appointed through a committee appointed by the Lord, namely, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris. All the Apostles of the Reorganization were chosen and appointed in like manner up to the year 1873. Those who have occupied and are now occupying in said office have been called directly by revelation through the President of the church.

Those who are called to the high and holy calling of apostle are placed under great responsibility by reason of the authority vested in them, and the many trying and arduous duties assigned them by our heavenly Father. To them is given the authority and power to hold the keys of the proclamation of the gospel in all the world, and to administer in all the ordinances of the church. We will now endeavor to call the attention of the reader to the duties and prerogatives attached to the office of the Twelve.

Upon them as a quorum devolves the responsibility of prosecuting missionary work among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and peoples. We will here cite a few quotations bearing upon this feature of their work.

Which twelve hold the keys to open up the authority of my kingdom upon the four corners of the earth, and after that to send my word to every creature.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 40.

In a late revelation the Lord reaffirms the above commission and urges the Twelve to attend to this important duty:

The missions abroad other than in the land of Joseph (America) which were open officially during the lifetime of the martyrs shall be considered as having been opened unto us, whether they were at once undertaken and prosecuted during the lifetime of the martyrs, or whether subsequent to their death they were prosecuted in righteousness—wherever they sent. Other missions not thus open, it will be requisite that the twelve shall either go, or in the exercise of their missionary authority send, as provided in the law, of the seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 12.

In the latter clause of the above quotation the Lord makes it very plain that the Twelve are under obligation to recognize the Seventy as the next in authority in missionary work, as he directs that they call upon the Seventy when they need assistance; since these two quorums constitute the missionary quorums proper, as both are special witnesses of Jesus Christ in all the world. To show how closely they are related to each other in gospel work, I cite the following quotation:

It is the duty of the traveling high council to call upon the seventy, when they need assistance, to fill the several calls for preaching and administering the gospel, instead of any others.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 16.

The Twelve may appoint high priests, elders, and priests as missionaries, but only when they volunteer their services in that capacity; however, when acting as missionaries they are under the direction of those at the head of that department, similar to the Seventy, and subject to the same rules and discipline, having been transferred from their own line, namely, the line of standing ministers, to that of the missionary line. But it must be understood that they do not come between the Seventy and the Twelve in their line of work any more than the Seventy comes between the high priests and the Presidency in their line of work. For instance, if a president of a branch or district be needed, we should select a high priest for that work, in preference to a Seventy, as that is their line of work, as outlined in Doctrine and Covenants 122: 7, 8.

It is also the duty of the Twelve Apostles to regulate, and as proof in support of this statement we quote the following:

The twelve are a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the presidency of the church, agreeably to the institutions of heaven, to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations; first unto the Gentiles, secondly unto the Jews.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 12.

In keeping with the commission as contained in the above revelation as given to the Twelve in the incipency of the church, the Lord speaks again in a late revelation, calling the attention of the membership in branches and districts to the authority vested in both the Twelve and Seventy, whose right it is under the law to go into branches and districts with power to regulate, and as spiritual advisers, and to maintain the law and usages of the church when officers or members are going contrary thereto. As a confirmation of which I direct your attention to Doctrine and Covenants 120: 4-7.

In both branches and districts the presiding officers should be considered and respected in their offices; nevertheless, the traveling, presiding councils (the twelve and seventy) of the church being made by the law, their calling and the voice of the church the directing, regulating and advising authorities of the church, and representing it abroad, should when present in either district or branch be regarded and considered as the leading representative authorities of the church, and be respected as such, their counsel and advice be sought and respected when given; and in cases of conflict or extremity, their decision should be listened to and regarded, subject to the appeal and adjudication provided for in the law.—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 4.

The fact is herein quoted that the traveling councils may be present in either districts or branches, and the further fact that the Lord says, that the authorities of these organizations should seek counsel and advice from these officials, and that the same should be respected when given, and in cases of "conflict" or "extremity" their decision should be listened to and regarded subject to the appeal and adjudication provided for in the law. We regret that we are under the necessity of referring to the criticisms that are made by officers and members who contend that these presiding councils have no right to go into either branch or district to interfere with the affairs of the same, and who also contend that the calling and duty of these officers is to preach the gospel and open up new fields and leave the branches and districts entirely to the standing ministers. How any person can take such a view of this question in the face of what is written in the law as quoted above is a mystery to me. And it is further written:

In matters of personal importance and conduct arising in branches or districts, the authorities of those branches and districts should be authorized and permitted to settle them; the traveling councils taking cognizance of those only in which the law and usages of the church are involved, and the general interests of the church are concerned. Where cases of difficulty are of long standing, the council (the twelve) may require local authorities to adjust them; and in case of failure to do so, may regulate them as required by their office and duty; and this that the work and church may not be put to shame and the preaching of the word be hindered.—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 7.

Here it is emphatically stated that the Twelve have the right under the law to require the local authorities to adjust difficulties in branches or districts; however, they are to give said officers ample time to regulate the same, and in case of failure to carry out the instructions given, they can adjust the matters themselves, through the machinery of the law.

An apostle occupies a position in the church similar to that occupied by a locomotive inspector. In every roundhouse the railway companies have such an inspector, whose duty it is to examine the machinery of every engine that is brought into the shops, with a view to ascertaining its condition. If they discover that any part of the machinery is out of order, they call the attention of the master mechanic to it, and he has mechanics under him who do the work. In like manner the apostles are inspectors of the machinery of the church, its laws, and usages. It is their duty to see that the machinery is in perfect working order, with the assistance of the Seventy, whose duty is also to regulate all the affairs of the church in all the world. If either of these officers discover things out of order, that need regulating, they call the attention of the master mechanic, who in turn directs the mechanics under his administration to put the same in order. Now, the master mechanics would be the presidents of stakes, districts, and branches, who would direct the mechanics under them, namely, priests, teachers, and deacons, through whom we adjust these troubles or difficulties, and should those officers fail or refuse to adjust the same after having been required, or requested, and having been given ample time to do so, the Twelve are authorized to adjust them, that the church may not be put to shame and the preaching of the work be hindered.

If an Apostle or Seventy should go into any local organization and undertake to regulate things he thinks to be out of order contrary to the way herein pointed out, or outlined by the Lord, his actions should be reported forthwith to those in authority who have jurisdiction, so that everything may be done with decorum. Again, if these leading officers were to make a decision on any point of law or church usage that is not satisfactory to the local officers, the matter should be appealed to those who have jurisdiction over them. In the meantime all those concerned should be patient and abide by the decision subject to the "adjudication provided for in the law." This would put an end to all contention and confusion, and thus all the officers would be respecting each other in their various callings, thereby preventing jealousies and evil surmisings.

And, again, if those chief inspectors or leading officers whom the Lord has authorized to regulate the affairs of the church should be so indiscreet as to announce in a public Saints' meeting that certain things are out of order in the branch or district, and undertake to adjust these difficulties contrary to the way we have outlined above, said officers should be reported forthwith to their superior officers.

The Apostles conjointly with the First Presidency have jurisdiction and direction of the high priests and elders when laboring in their own line as standing ministers, and acting as pastors, having the watchcare of the membership, in proof of which statement read Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3:

The high priests and elders holding the same priesthood are the standing ministers of the church, having the watchcare of the membership and nurturing and sustaining them, under the direction and instruction of the presidency and the twelve.

Surely the statement just quoted should remove misunderstanding entirely from the minds of all who seem to be under the impression that the Twelve have no jurisdiction, or have no right to direct and instruct the standing ministers only when they are operating in the missionary line. However, the Lord points out, as heretofore proven, that these two quorums of apostles are the Presidency and Twelve, who have direction over the priesthoods and the entire membership throughout all the world.

The Apostle directs the organization of branches and districts:

When branches and districts are organized they should be so organized by direction of the conferences; or by the personal presence and direction of the twelve, or some member of that quorum who may be in charge, if practicable; or, if a branch, by the president of the district, by the consent, knowledge, and direction of the missionary in charge, when circumstances prevent the missionary in charge being present.—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 1.

Evangelical ministers are called and ordained to that office by the Twelve: "It is the duty of the twelve, in all large branches of the church, to ordain evangelical ministers, as they shall be designated to them by revelation."—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 17.

The Apostles are charged with the responsibility of ordaining and setting in order the quorums of the church:

It is the duty of the twelve, also, to ordain and set in order all the officers of the church, agreeably to the revelation which says: To the church of Christ on the land of Zion, in addition to the church laws respecting church business: Verily, I say unto you, says the Lord of hosts, there must needs be presiding elders, to preside over those who are of the office of an elder; and also priests, to preside over those who are of the office of a priest; and also teachers to preside over those who are of the office of a teacher, in like manner; and also the deacons; wherefore from deacon to teacher, and from teacher to priest, and from priest to elder, severally as they are appointed, according to the covenants and commandments of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 30, 31.

The Apostles are also directed "to ordain and set high priests and elders to preside over branches and districts, also evangelical ministers":

That part of the law which says: "It is the duty of the twelve, also, to ordain and set in order all the other officers of the church," is to be understood by the revelation which went before and in accordance with which it was written; and which follows after it in the book; and when those officers are ordained and set in their order, in the church, they should be left to administer in the things unto which they were ordained, having charge of the affairs over which they are called and set apart to preside; the twelve and seventy administering as those prosecuting the work of preaching with the warning voice, baptizing, organizing and setting in order, then pushing their ministry into other fields until the world is warned. It is the will of God that they do this; yea, verily, thus saith the Spirit, If they will now enter upon this work, leaving the burden of care in organized districts, or conferences to the standing ministry, under the presidency of the church; observing the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and in districts, and also evangelical ministers, then will those officers set in the church be useful and he who gave the law be honored; the differences between the quorums be healed, confidence be restored and good will and peace come to the people as a cherishing fountain.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 8.

The Twelve are to ordain priests and teachers:

And now I speak unto the twelve: Behold, my grace is sufficient for you; you must walk uprightly before me and sin not. And, behold, you are they who are ordained of me to ordain priests and teachers to declare my gospel, according to the power of the Holy Ghost which is in you, and according to the gifts and callings of God unto men; and I, Jesus Christ, your Lord and your God, have spoken it.—Doctrine and Covenants 16: 5.

In the year 1873, when William W. Blair and David H. Smith were chosen as counselors to Joseph Smith, the Lord directed that they be ordained and set apart to said office by the officers whose duty it was to ordain and set in order the officers of his church; other officers were commanded to lay hands conjointly with the Apostles, but the Twelve were to be spokesmen:

Let my servants, William W. Blair, and David H. Smith, be chosen and ordained to be counselors to my servant, the presiding elder of my church. Let them be set apart to this office by the laying on of hands by my servants whose duty it is to set in order the officers of my church; and let my servants, the president of the high priests' quorum and the president of the lesser priesthood also lay their hands upon these their brethren who are to be counselors, but let my servants of the twelve be the spokesmen.—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 3.

The Apostles, or the Twelve, have authority to make decisions pertaining to law, doctrine, and church usages, from which there is no appeal, only in case of transgression, and the transgression will have to be proved, or substantiated by the general authorities of the church:

There is a distinction between the high council of traveling high priests abroad, and the traveling high council composed of the twelve apostles, in their decisions. From the decision of the former there can be an appeal; but from the decision of the latter there can not. The latter can only be called in question by the general authorities of the church in case of transgression.—Doctrine and Covenants 99: 13.

It was never contemplated by the Lord, that the Twelve or Seventy should sit on elders' courts or act as counsel thereto, as by virtue of their high calling they are not in the judicial line. Elders, bishops, and high priests are the ones designated by the Lord to occupy in said line: "The traveling presiding councils of the church being made by the law, their calling, and the voice of the church the directing, regulating, and advising authorities of the church."

Hence it is their duty to see that the law and usages of the church are honored and maintained, and to see that every member of the church is equally protected under its provisions. It is unwise for officers whom the Lord has made general advisers to allow themselves to become implicated in local affairs, and thereby have their influence impaired, and their usefulness destroyed. It is contended that they have to act occasionally on elders' courts to save expenses. Query: Which is the most important to the church, the saving of a little money, or the usefulness and influence of the officers in question? We think it wise for "every man to stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling," thereby avoiding many unpleasant experiences, and running up against the breakers.

The Twelve are one of the three quorums to protect the rights of the people:

In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.

It is the duty of the Twelve of to-day, as well as those in Christ's time, to feed the sheep (the Saints):

Now, I say unto you,—and what I say unto you I say unto all the twelve,—arise and gird up your loins, take up your cross, follow me, and feed my sheep.—Doctrine and Covenants 105: 6. [See also Jesus' charge to Peter, Saint John 21: 15-17.]

In case of transgression the Apostle should be tried before the court to which all the general officers of the church are subject, namely, the First Presidency:

In case of transgression in his office the bishop should be called in question before the council which is provided for in the law, to which court all the general officers of the church are to be subject.—Doctrine and Covenants 126: 11.

The court referred to above, and provided for in the law, is as follows:

And again, no bishop, or high priest, who shall be set apart for this ministry, shall be tried or condemned for any crime, save it be before the presidency of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 3.

I presume this article is of sufficient length, hence deem it wise to bring it to a close. Trusting it may accomplish some degree of good, I remain, your co-laborer,

In gospel bonds,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

ASLEEP IN JESUS.

Synopsis of a funeral sermon preached by J. F. Garver, at Lamoni, Iowa, May 29, 1913, over remains of Sister Isabelle Midgorden.

Behold, I show unto you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying which is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord.—1 Corinthians 15: 51-58.

Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep.—John 11: 11.

We stand to-day in the presence of death. While we come together in sorrow and in weeping, we should be thankful in that we do not come in bitterness of spirit, as do those without understanding, and without hope. We are here in sadness, yet in that great peace that attends upon those who understand not only this passing, but also the promises that God has made to the faithful.

We meet this situation to-day in the light of the preparation which we have previously made for it. We recognize, therefore, that this condition into which our sister has passed, is not a natural condition. It is unnatural, abnormal, following men and women in this world as a result of sin. The natural condition of man is a condition of life; and for this purpose came Christ into the world,—“that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.”

The fear and shrinking under which men have met the pale reaper in times past have been due to departure and to darkness. Those who rebel to-day, in this dispensation, against this order, do so largely from the same cause. Men stand in awe of what they do not understand, and in fear of what they can not control. This awe and fear is ever intensified by ignorance and superstition.

So, I say, while in the midst of sorrow and suffering, there should come to us a degree of gladness and a spirit of peace in that we recognize death to be abnormal and fleeting in its character, and that at most it can hold even the body of this, our sister, but for a time. Her spirit, her real self, it holds not at all; but rather this departing is only the opening door to the larger life which has come to her.

The Scriptures plainly indicate this to be the point of view of the faithful and comprehending in olden time. Even before the advent of Christ, men understood through the light of truth that death was not a terror, but rather a liberation,—an occasion of triumph to the one passing over.

Job, in those memorable words, sets out the hope, “I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eye shall behold, and not another.”

In the lesson we have read, the Apostle Paul in quoting from writers of old, Isaiah and Hosea, reminds us that Job in these former days was not alone in understanding with reference to the victory of the righteous. We note again the language, “Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?”

Our Savior in the language of our text presents to us a comforting picture of death, when he says, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth." David, the sweet singer of Israel, with this same understanding, breaks forth in the expression, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake in thy likeness."

The Apostle Paul, under the Christ concept, also speaks of death as a sleeping and an awakening. We have read wherein he has said, "Behold, I show unto you a mystery; we shall not all sleep." In 1 Thessalonians 4: 14, he further states: "Them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." The Revised Version softens even this beautiful expression in the words, "Them also that are fallen asleep."

Let us remember, therefore, in this hour of bereavement, that death is but a sleeping, it is but a lying down for a little season; and as on the morning after a peaceful night of rest we awake, invigorated and strengthened for the duties of a new day, so, in the morning of the first resurrection, the just shall come forth invigorated, spiritualized, made ready for the presence of Christ, the great Master, to be with him during the millennial reign, and afterward to enter even into the presence of God, the Father.

Christ has demonstrated his power over death not only in himself breaking the bonds thereof, but also, and even before his crucifixion, calling back to this earth life one who had fallen asleep. In the language of our text, he said, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may wake him out of sleep." Beside the tomb of the dead man, Lazarus, stood Christ, the great comforter, the one who understands the end from the beginning, and who, knowing the mystery thereof, has the power over death, and in the simple expression, "Lazarus, come forth," he called back to wakefulness in this life one who had been upright and pure.

He who had this power has also the power to call to life this mortal body in that realm of immortality, so beautifully mentioned by Paul in our lesson.

Our sister, in whose memory we have met to-day, had caught this inspiration. She lived and passed away in this hope. I remember well being called the day before her demise, with another brother, to administer to her. As we raised our hands from her head, her lips moved in feeble and humble prayer: "O Lord, let thine handmaiden come home to thee in peace." Our sister had often prayed that when the end came she might be permitted to pass over without a struggle. God was pleased to answer her petition, and she peacefully and quietly fell asleep.

Now, in the same sense that Lazarus was a friend of Jesus, so was our sister a friend. In speaking to his apostles upon one occasion Jesus said, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." We believe that our sister, in so far as she was able to do, kept the commandments of God. She ministered ever to her own. She was always willing, and upon many occasions ministered to others, including the servants of God. She was of a quiet, peaceful, humble disposition. When Christ returns to call back from the sleeping those who in this life have been his friends, we most firmly believe that our sister will be one of that number, and will arise with joy to meet him in the air.

Let us notice now for a few moments the statement of the Apostle Paul in our lesson, and its application to this occasion: "Death is swallowed up in victory." When we think of our departed sister, of her past life and faithfulness and of the spirit of resignation and peace with which she met this great change, without a physical tremor, without a murmur, and in the hope of her reward, we see, at once, that she had already in this life achieved that triumph and that victory spoken of by the man of God. When we think of her we do not think of this cold, inanimate form before us, which we are soon to lay away; but we think rather of her triumphant spirit which has already joined the valiant ones gone on before. If we think of her temporal being at all it is only in connection with the thought that her body shall be given back to her spirit in that day when Christ shall come again, to receive then its immortality, its incorruptible order. So our sister has taken unto herself the triumph that awaits those who are faithful.

Her companion, our brother, who mourns to-day, while weighed down with sorrow, triumphs over this ordeal in that there comes to him not only the promise of victory by and by, at the time of his own passing, but also that sustaining power and that healing balm, even the divine influence of God's Holy Spirit. We are glad in our hearts that we may offer him to-day, the comfort of the words which we have read; we commend him to the grace of our heavenly Father. And these young men, her sons, who are bereft to-day, may also realize with the companion and father the peace and comforting presence of the Spirit of our God. So while we mourn with these, our friends, yet we rejoice in that they already have victory over death, and that by and by, in a grander sense, as a reunited family they may find joy, indeed, in the realms of the eternal home.

It should comfort this companion and these sons to remember that this departed one always and upon every occasion, at times beyond her physical powers, for she was a feeble woman, ministered to their necessities and comforts. If they need further consolation they have it in that they, in turn, always ministered to her, as becometh sons or companion of one feeble and afflicted in body.

With these few faltering words we commend the spirit of our sister to God, her body to the tomb, to await the resurrection morning. We commend this bereaved family to the comfort and communion of the Holy Spirit, assuring them of our sympathy, and grateful for the peace that surpasseth understanding, under which they have hope and triumph this day.

WITH THE RUSSIAN PILGRIMS TO JERUSALEM.

Four hundred were accommodated in the parts of the hold unoccupied by cargo. I went down the dark ladders into the bowels of the ship and saw how they lived there. I had not as yet found a place for myself, and cold nights were in prospect. The hold was something never to be forgotten for the crush there, the darkness, the foulness, and the smell. There was first a wilderness of linen sacks, hand-embroidered with crosses, with the word Jerusalem, with bears clutching sticks, with gray wolves following one another's tails round and round. Among the sacks men and women were lying, combing out their hair or examining their underclothing. As far as eye could see, looking into the dark depths of the hold, were bundles and pilgrims, bundles and pilgrims, to the last rat-gnawed timbers, where were ikons and holy pictures, before which gleamed little candles. Here in the most noisome recesses were the ill, the very feeble, the blind and the maimed, the seasick—all those who had either no power or no wish to get up and feel the air and sunshine above board. I reflected that it would in any case be impossible for me to spend the night there even if I found room.

All night long the pilgrims prayed aloud and sang—they had their watches of prayer as the ship had its nautical watch, and even in the witching hours the ikons in the hold were not without their votive pilgrims prostrating themselves and singing unto God. In the stern about two hundred read and sang with a priest until midnight, and after they had dispersed and each went to his own there was still to be heard the pleasant, deep-bass prayers of "the slaves of God."—Stephen Graham, in Harper's Magazine for July.

EASY LESSON IN HYGIENE.

So much has been published of a more or less technical nature concerning food and health that we are going to try to give something in plain kitchen English. Our information is taken from a talk by A. W. McCann, of New York, who was a collaborer with Doctor Wiley in the pure food crusade.

Statistics show that of twenty million children of school age in this country fifteen millions are defective in eyes, teeth, glands, bony structure or otherwise. This is largely due to their being fed upon substances from which the twelve minerals in the human body and necessary to renew in that body have been removed from food. Chief among these twelve minerals are phosphorus, iron, magnesium, calcium and flourine.

Common flour, rice, corn meal and most breakfast cereals have been robbed of seventy-five per cent of their mineral products, largely by being prepared to look "white and nice." Refined sugar not only is robbed of minerals but it destroys the iron in the blood and as a food sweet can not be compared to honey, the brown sugars, and natural molasses. Fruits and vegetables in their season and eggs and milk should be staples and there should be a demand for whole wheat bread made of whole wheat.

Mr. McCann makes a suggestion that sounds very good. He would have children in school see two sets of chickens fed for a time, one set on natural grains, the other on polished rice, granulated corn meal and other "nice looking" things for which people pay high prices and get bad eyes, bad teeth, bad bones and bad stomachs.—Selected.

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

A Pleasant Picture.

We place before you two pictures from life in its most real aspects.

The first is a morning scene, a happy, joyous company, a family gathering at the bridal service of two who are to pledge themselves to walk together in love to life's close, faithful companions, whate'er betide.

There are soft music, the voice of prayer, low-spoken vows, and the little golden circle is placed upon the slender finger of a girl's white hand; a little white-clad bride stands beside the tall, young lover who has promised to cherish and protect her through whatever of storm may come.

She stands trustingly beside him after the words of ceremony have ended, for a young voice in the room beyond is singing a tender little song. Then her eyes fall upon another man who stands not far away and she goes to him and stands beside him, her father. His arm steals about her and she nestles her hand in his.

For this man who holds her close has been her protector all her life. He has been tried and found faithful. A new love has come into her heart and she is going forth into new scenes and experiences leaning upon another arm, but the new love has not taken the place of that which she has known always. Father will always hold the place his faithful love merits.

A faithful father—this is the central figure I would paint in this bright picture of a bridal morning.

THE OTHER PICTURE.

This also is a beautiful picture. It is an afternoon scene. A company is gathered in spacious rooms, but they are quiet, and a subdued hush pervades the place, for a little white casket is there, covered with flowers.

There is soft music here also, and there is the voice of prayer and of earnest words from the Scriptures. There are tears for the little boy who is dead, for many loved him, and some weep because neither father nor mother is here to weep beside the little form that lies so still.

Somewhere in the world, if still he lives, there is a father, an unfaithful man, false to wife and child. Somewhere there is a mother, separated from the child who nestled in her arms in infancy. Oh, the broken homes, the deserted wives and neglected children—for these our tears should fall rather than for the child whose pure spirit has gone into our heavenly Father's house where love never fails.

An unfaithful father—of him this second picture should remind us—an unfaithful father, untrue to manhood. Pity him, wherever he be, for they most need our pity who are least noble.

THANK GOD FOR THE CHURCH.

After we have looked upon the two pictures, the one in which a faithful father is one of the central figures, the other, in which the unfaithful father does not appear at his post of duty, our hearts should be lifted in gratefulness and appreciation of the church. The happy home which love has kept intact, where faithful parents have reared children until they go forth to new homes—this home is the result of gospel influence. And when that other home was shattered, it was the gospel that moved kind hearts to take in the needy little child and do for him the work of love. In the Children's Home he died, ministered to by loving hands. The church redeemed his life from the havoc sin had wrought.

How we should love the church which, by its benign influence, makes pure and happy homes for those who live according to its precepts, and how generously we should support those institutions through which the church may say to forsaken children, "When thy father and thy mother forsake thee, then the Lord will take thee up!"

If tears fall for the broken homes, for children separated from the mothers who bore them, we should be glad in the realization of what the church is and what it will be when, by our consecration to God, we make it more fully what he designs it to be, a power in the world to accomplish the redemption of humanity from both temporal and spiritual degradation.

"HE THAT IS FAITHFUL."

The highest praise that issues from the lips of God is for the faithful, for those who are true to the duties life imposes upon them. "Thou hast been faithful," if spoken of one whose ability and opportunities are limited is as great proportionately as when spoken of one whose sphere of usefulness has been of wider scope. "Thou hast been faithful!" What more can be said? "He who does his best does well, acts nobly, angels could do no more."

Too many of us are more interested in the pursuit of happiness than we are in discharging our duties. It is a mistake. We are here to do our duty well, and in doing it we find the truest happiness, be that duty what it may.

Looking down upon his children of the earth, God sees many obscure heroes who, in the great day when we answer before him, will be filled with joy unspeakable, for they shall hear his wonderful voice say to them, "Thou hast been faithful." The hope for the hard-pressed father and for the burdened mother is in the fact that we may develop this faithfulness under the most trying conditions. The hard experiences of life hold the opportunity to develop the enduring virtues which God loves best of all in us.

These were manifested in their perfection on the cross of Jesus of Nazareth who was lifted up on Calvary that the world might have before its eyes a great object lesson of patient, suffering, faithful love. "If I be lifted up," said Jesus, "I will draw all men unto me." We draw near to him as we develop those virtues he died to exemplify to the world.

This conception of life's opportunities will help us to bear up under the trying things that come into our lives. It will help us to understand why trials are permitted to come. It will help us to understand the nature of the victory that will be ours, if He who has walked the way of sorrow in advance of us shall finally say to us, "Thou hast been faithful."

Faithfulness to duty is the great lesson God would teach us through the experiences of life. It is what our children should learn from the influence that emanates from us. If they hear words of praise from our lips, it should be for faithfulness to true principles. The things they hear us commend in others should be those that belong to faithful conduct.

The men who are deserting the homes honor would bind them to sustain have not high ideals of manhood. They have not true conceptions of happiness. They have not been trained in youth to regard a promise as sacred or to discharge duties in faithfulness. Some one may have tried to train them, but they have not received the discipline.

And they are losing life's deepest joys; for the human heart is so constructed that its most exquisite happiness results from its own ability to love and serve others. Great love, great sacrifice, great joy—God has joined them together, and they can not be put asunder.

A Letter of Appreciation.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 8, 1918.

Dear Readers of the Home Column: About two weeks ago, while reading the farewell words of Sister Frances, we felt very keenly the sadness of coming to the parting of the ways where we separate from one so beloved by hundreds and thousands of mothers in this church who have been helped along in their home tasks by her wise counsel in the past years.

Memory drifting backward carries my thoughts to a time a little over twenty-seven years ago when we were living in Greenville, Pennsylvania, about one hundred miles from Pittsburg. It was a little town of two or three thousand people, with no church or Sabbath school of our own to attend.

Being isolated, we felt lonely and read with eagerness everything that came out in the HERALD, the only church paper we had at that time. How welcome it was as it came to us every week!

At this time, we had our own dear little children with us and I felt, as other mothers must have felt, the pressing need of some department being started in our church paper which would come in touch with our home life and be a help in training our little ones (the dear souls committed to our care) in such a way that they would want to be baptized into Christ's kingdom even in the very early days of their youth, before false teaching had any chance to take root in their minds.

I thought for a short time that I would write to the editor of the HERALD asking that such a department be opened, but a feeling of timidity hindered me and I felt that others could plead the cause far better than I, so I did not speak of it to any person. In about three months, as nearly as I can remember, I opened the newly arrived HERALD and, to my great joy, read these words: "Mothers' Home Column, edited by Sister Frances."

I shall remember as long as I live the heartfelt joy and thanksgiving that filled my being at that time from the realization that our heavenly Father was working through his servants and handmaidens, that we, his covenant people, might have spiritual food in due season to help us feed the minds of the lambs of the fold of our divine Master, who so graciously blessed little children when he was upon earth.

Oftentimes the editorials by "Frances" were an inspiration and a great help to me in my home life. Well do I remember the saying with which she opened her first article:

"Truth is truth wherever found,
On Christian or on heathen ground."

I would say just here that our family altar has remained for forty-two years, and this season of prayer has been our safeguard through many dark and trying times as well as through sunlit paths. Now we are enjoying the eventide of life in peace and thankfulness for the gift of the gospel, because obedience to its perfect principles has made us better than we could have been in any other way.

My thoughts go back to the time when there was need of literature written by some one imbued with the spirit of the restored gospel and, lo, the Autumn Leaves came out all fresh and glowing with truth and beauty of thought on every page, the same dear, saintly woman being its editor for very many years. We are thankful that one so noble and pure has succeeded her in this important work in behalf of the young of the church.

How eagerly the children used to gather around the table at eventide while one of our number read aloud from the pages of Autumn Leaves the story, "With the church in an early day," by "Frances," or some interesting biography of our early missionaries, Elder Glaud Rodger, Elder Brand, and many others, of whom the Holy Spirit witnessed that they were men of God.

Again we see the dear, familiar name as editor of Zion's Hope, and under her guidance we have seen it thrive and grow. Surely the tired hands are entitled to rest,—sweet, peaceful rest—and such may she enjoy continually until the Father shall say, "It is enough; enter into the rest prepared for those who have walked in righteousness."

And now to close, I gladly and lovingly give my hand in welcome to our sister, Christiana Salyards, editor of the Home Column. She has my full confidence in her ability and also in the consecration of her life to the services of the Master in whichever way he may call her. May the Father be her helper in my prayer.

EMMA GARRETT.

The Prayer Union.

Second Thursday in July. Prayer for the church, its priesthood and members, that all may earnestly engage in the building up of Zion to the ideal condition of oneness and equality revealed in the revelations to the church. Pray that each member of the church may be clothed with that charity which will lead him to speak evil of no one, but regard the reputation of our brother or sister as we regard our own. Pray that greater power may be had for the healing of the sick.

Scripture lesson for the day, Psalm 50: 2-6; 1 Peter 2: 1-12.
Memory text, 3 John 1: 11.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS.

The program for the Prayer Union is for each week. Any one having a request for prayer must send it to Sister Salyards, editor of the Home Column. Otherwise, it may not be published. It is desirable that those taking part should send their names for record to Eleanor Waldorf Kearney, 926 South Main Street, Clinton, Missouri.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Mary Whiteside, of Bourbon, Missouri, a young sister eighteen years of age, asks the prayers of the union that she may be relieved of the affliction caused by a goiter. She asks very humbly that we may join with her in entreating the blessing of heaven in the removal of that which seems to be seriously affecting her general health.

From Chicago there comes a request for prayers in behalf of an aged sister, Christina Johnson, who, being a "shut in" and very deaf, is in a condition of isolation from the society of Saints. She is, however, a zealous reader of the church papers, and one who visited her recently found her reading a small testament and crying over it. May the blessing of peace be within her.

Long--Roberts Debate.

The discussion between Brother E. E. Long of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church, and W. G. Roberts of the Church of Christ closed Sunday afternoon, June 15. This discussion was held in the city of Burlington, Iowa, in a building owned by the brethren and coworkers of W. G. Roberts. It began on the evening of June 3, with Brother Long affirming our church in the usual way.

On this proposition Roberts twisted, turned, lied, and cried: Joseph Smith, miserable old sheep thief; Long, heal my finger; he can't cure a pin scratch; strike me down, elder; which time did you lie? an old sow can beat Long healing the sick. I came here prepared to skin everything from a skunk to an elephant. I'd go home if I couldn't do any better than that. Don't you know anything about the Bible at all? He won't answer my argument. He didn't even give a hint or a squint at it. Why don't you grunt, shake your head, or do something? The Inspired Translation is inspired of the Devil, if inspired at all. Don't you know your a b cs? Now, ain't you sorry you said anything! I'll follow my opponent whithersoever he goeth, and spank him every jump. Joe was a devil, etc., etc.

Such statements as the above were hashed and rehashed, over and over, again and again, night after night through the whole debate. It was really funny, especially to the Disciples, for a few evenings, but soon became stale. Some of Roberts's brethren quit coming, and declared they would never again pay a cent to support such a man. Brother Long's arguments were convincing to the clear thinker.

Near the close of the first proposition Roberts read some wild statements from Bancroft's History of Utah and gave Bancroft credit for it. As soon as he sat down, Brother Long took the history and showed the audience that Roberts had tried to play an underhanded game by giving Bancroft credit for the statements when he (Bancroft) was quoting from our enemies. Then Brother Long turned to Roberts and with power and eloquence he said: "Mr. Roberts, why do you resort to such tricks? An Ingersoll or a Paine would not have stooped to such underhanded trickery in denouncing the Bible!" A complete silence reigned, and the expression on the face of Mr. Roberts spelled shame!

Roberts read from our Church History and tried to make it appear that Joseph Smith had sworn vengeance to be executed by his posterity on the Missourians, and then he (Roberts) went off into a spasm, crying: "All who have dear friends or relatives in Missouri warn them at once, for the Mormons will destroy everyone!" Thus he tried to impress the audience against the Saints.

On the second proposition Roberts was supposed to be in the affirmative, but he did nothing except keep the road hot from Pentecost to Pentecost, and slander Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. When Brother Long saw that he was not going to give the origin of the church he gave it for him. I am sure the Disciples heard something they had never heard before; they were the sickest looking humans I have seen for some time. They had predicted that our church would be so wrecked by Roberts that the Burlington Saints would need neither pastor nor building, but ere this their faith in such wonderful accomplishments had vanished. While they were looking the bluest over their historical record Brother Long said with emphasis: "I know it's a bitter dose, but you are going to get it every thirty minutes."—Roberts called it "old, musty history." Brother Long replied, "It is your history; if it is musty and dirty you had better get busy and clean it up!"

When it came to the Book of Mormon proposition, Brother Long was at his best. He brought forth an abundance of archaeological proof in an interesting manner. The message came with power that was felt by all, especially the first evening. Roberts began to fail until some of his followers were heard to say, "We have 'hired' the wrong man." His criticism on the Book of Mormon was bombast and ridicule. At the close of the first session on the Book of Mormon, the chairman, who is an agnostic, in the presence of Mr. Roberts, said to Brother Long: "Elder, I'm enjoying your speeches; they are educational." I may remark here that the chairman is one of the best surgeons in the city, a bright man and a scholar.

One evening Roberts read from Bancroft something, of course, that was not favorable to the Saints. Brother Long took up the book and showed the audience that Roberts had read just what suited him—even stopping at a comma! He then commenced to read where Roberts quit and behold Bancroft had declared that notwithstanding there was some evil among the Mormons, he was convinced that when taking them as a whole they were a more industrious and better class than their neighbors.

Mr. Roberts then informed us that the marvelous work and a wonder, the eyes seeing out of obscurity, and the deaf hearing the words of the book, spoken of in Isaiah 29 was fulfilled when Jesus returned the sent messengers to John the Baptist with the message: Go tell John the deaf hear, the blind see, and the lame walk, etc.

The chairman was absent two evenings, and then was the time Roberts spread himself. He declared we were all a set of infidels! And if Bishop Kelley said that Oliver Cowdery did not unite with the Methodists and deny the Book of Mormon he lied.

Doctor Magee, the chairman, said that Roberts had broken a number of rules, and one he had broken twenty times or more. When he would turn to Brother Long and charge him with being ignorant, telling him he did not know a Greek letter from a bird track in the ashes, and telling him to Come on, old boy, and answer my argument if you know your a b c's, etc., the chairman was anxious to rule against him, but the brethren thought it best to give him plenty of rope and let him hang himself, which he did—with intelligent people. The chairman said he felt satisfied when ridicule was taken from Roberts he would fall flat, for that was about all he had.

One Mr. Golen (Hebrew and Greek scholar) (?) moderated for Mr. Roberts, and Brother Charles Willey for Brother Long. Brother Willey asked me to report to the papers. That is the reason you find my name signed to this instead of the moderator's.

Mr. Roberts made an attack on some of my efforts through the Burlington Daily Gazette last winter, in which he threw out a challenge which resulted in this debate. Some of the Saints here had heard of Roberts's unfair, dirty methods, and at first opposed the debate. However, one of the five who voted against it came to me and said she was sorry she had done so, for the debate had done her much good, and I judge from the interest shown by others who opposed it that they also feel differently about it now. The first week of the discussion was hindered by the State Sunday School Convention held here, and the second by the Elk's convention; therefore we did not have a very good attendance outside of the two churches. The Disciples dropped off and the Saints increased and became more interested as the debate drew to a close.

We are all happy in a work that has and is standing the test and coming through the furnace of criticism as bright and pure as gold. Brother E. E. Long is an able debater. He advances with the Scriptures, history and argument as well as, when necessary, pays such a man as Roberts back in his own coin. His shoulder blows quite frequently punctured Roberts's ego sack and let him fall flat. We need not fear to meet Babylon nor the beast; for this work is God's work, and he, through man, will defend it, if man is humble and obedient.

I am your brother and colaborer.

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA, June 12, 1913.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have contributed anything to your valuable pages, so thought we would write a few lines and let our many friends know that we arrived safely, after a long though pleasant and enjoyable trip.

We left Saint Joseph, Missouri, May 21, in company with Brother V. M. Goodrich, for California, our field of labor for this year. Arrived in Denver, Colorado, the afternoon of the 22d, and spent the night with Brother and Sister Fishburn. Left next day for Salt Lake City, Utah, where we arrived Saturday about noon. Our worthy and esteemed Brother A. M. Chase met us at the depot with the "missionary auto," and conveyed us over the city where that man who placed such a stigma upon the fair name of the church once held as full sway as any monarch on earth.

Here we found a loyal and faithful little band of Saints, energetically engaged in the gospel work, and trying to purchase a suitable place to which to invite erring Israel to come and partake of the bounties of God's great love, and in which to disabuse the mind of the uninformed concerning the true import of the latter day message.

We attended Sunday school, and Brother Goodrich preached the morning discourse. In the afternoon we attended Tabernacle service, and immediately thereafter went out on the streets and intercepted the crowd, Brother Chase and the writer both preaching. There were many questions asked, which were promptly answered by Brother Chase. The opposition is strong, but there are many honest in heart. The writer preached the evening sermon at the meeting place of the Saints. There was a good spirit in all our meetings, and we enjoyed ourselves very much.

Monday, the 26th, we left for San Francisco. Bishop C. A. Parkin met us at the wharf, and took us home with him. Here we found in Brother and Sister Parkin a servant and an handmaid of the Lord in very deed. Sister Parkin acted as pilot to the different points of interest. We enjoyed a short but pleasant visit to Oakland with Brother and Sister J. M. Terry.

We left San Francisco the 29th for our final destination, Los Angeles. Arriving there the 30th at 2.45 p. m., we found Brethren R. T. Cooper, Fred Adam, and Shade at the depot with an automobile, and were taken, Brother Goodrich to Brother Adams' home, and myself to the home of Brother Cooper, where each received a hearty welcome. The Saints here are noble hearted, and received us with open arms—and purses. We began preparation immediately for the work of the year, feeling much encouraged with the outlook.

Before leaving Saint Joseph the Saints of the first branch sprung a happy surprise on me, by clubbing together and presenting me with a complete new outfit of clothing. I wish to take this opportunity to say to them that I certainly appreciate this kindness, and hope that the confidence they have in me may never be shaken by any act of mine. When I know I have the good will and support of the Saints at home, as expressed in this gift, it gives me new heart and courage to go forth and meet the world. I feel encouraged, and hope I may be able to accomplish a good work for my Master.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints to this end. My address is San Bernardino, California, general delivery.

Your brother in the conflict,

Editors Herald: The Nauvoo district conference met here the 7th and 8th of this month, and thinking some of your many readers might be interested in the news, I write these few lines.

The district auxiliaries met the day before the conference. An enjoyable time was spent in the transaction of business, and in talks on matters of interest.

Brother Gomer R. Wells was here and gave some good thoughts on Sunday school and Religio work, but his stay was altogether too short, he finding it necessary to leave Saturday morning. Friday evening the Sunday school and Religio workers rendered a program which was greatly enjoyed by those present.

The president of the district called a fast for Saturday morning and the young people came together for prayer service at 9 a. m. The manifestations of God were present, and each heart was thrilled by the presence of his Spirit.

Brother Harpe was again chosen president, Brother William Thomas secretary.

One thing I must not forget to mention was the fine music that was rendered by the Hiteman male chorus, orchestra, and double quartet. Hiteman is in the Lamoni Stake, but these people most generously gave their time and talent to entertain the conference, at the invitation of the branch here.

Previous to the conference, Brother C. C. Joehnke labored in the branch and vicinity. He is a very earnest worker for the Master, and leaves the branch respected by the writer and many others.

Ever working and praying for the uplifting of God's people, and the spread of truth, I am,

Your brother in the gospel,

SOUTH BOARDMAN, MICHIGAN, June 14, 1913.

Editors Herald: We yet have pleasant memories of the late General Conference. So far we have found the statement of our worthy President verified in our experience, wherein he said this would be an active year in the field.

May 19, I baptized one at Copemish. From there we were called in haste to Joyfield, as J. B. Brown, of Yale, Michigan, of Christian or Disciple notoriety, had come with the understanding that he could demolish Latter Day Saints with one powerful sweep, which he felt able to give. But we were on the ground to receive the first blow, and followed with a review of eight nights. Where Brown is we know not, but the Latter Day Saints still survive.

We baptized three on the 1st in Crystal Lake, but a few miles from the placé of attack. So the good work goes on; and we are in it, heart and soul.

Ever your brother in the gospel conflict,
F. S. BRACKENBURY.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

Editors Herald: I have been one of your readers for about fifteen years. I have profited by the advice, the sermons and letters that have been prompted by loving hearts. I am a member of the First Saint Joseph Branch, but have been isolated for about six months. If there are any Saints in Dallas, I would be glad for a card, and would call, or be pleased to receive a call.

I love this cause, and I have evidences of its divinity.

In bonds,
904 ALLEN STREET. G. W. SHAY.

WAWAKA, TEXAS, June 20, 1913.

Editors Herald: There were no Saints here besides myself until Brother S. W. Simmons, of Loveland, Oklahoma, and Brother Glauud Kuykendall, of San Antonio, Texas, came and held a meeting here, baptizing our son Hayden, age sixteen years, and a neighbor girl, Miss Jean Denison, age fourteen years. Others seem to be interested. One dear old lady told me if the elders had stayed longer there would have been others who would have obeyed. We had good crowds most every service. Brother S. W. Simmons has made us several visits and preached from five to twenty times a trip. The people have been good to attend our meetings. Some seem to become interested for a while, though most all lose interest before he gets back.

I obeyed the gospel twelve years ago to-day. I have received the knowledge of both the Father and the Son by the Holy Ghost, which bore witness to me that Jesus is the Christ and God is our creator.

I had been afflicted with rheumatism twelve years. At times could hardly walk, at other times could not walk at all. On various occasions I conversed with the Disciples, or Christians here, urging the work of the Spirit and the healing of the sick. I finally had a spiritual experience which caused me to realize that I had been testifying of that which I had not practiced, so at the first opportunity I was administered to by Elder S. W. Simmons, in November, 1911, and was completely healed in less than twenty-four hours, and I am whole to this day.

We should be deeply interested in the gospel of Jesus Christ when we receive such blessings from him. Are we letting our light shine? Are we getting ready for the Bridegroom? How many of us are living as we should: Observing the golden rule; walking not after the flesh, but after the Spirit; presenting our bodies a living sacrifice, holy acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service? Are we paying our tithing as commanded? Do we help the missionaries? Dear Saints, let us keep busy.

My husband is not a member of any church, but he does not oppose the gospel. He is not interested in it as he should be. I intend to do all that is in my power to assist in the glorious work so long as I live. May God help all his Saints to do the same, is the prayer of

A sister in Christ,
LIZZIE SIMMONS.

HENDERSON, IOWA, June 16, 1913.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have communicated to your pages, and a few words might not be amiss. My sentiments relating to the late General Conference have been largely expressed by others, especially as to its great importance, so I need not dwell on that subject.

I have passed through some gloomy days since its sessions, not by reason of anything relating thereto, but from physical disability. But, thanks to our heavenly Father, I am able to be on the move in the missionary work.

I was in attendance at the late conference of the Fremont District, and enjoyed its sessions, and the communion of the Saints. The conference was held at the Henderson Saints' chapel, and was quite well attended, considering the very busy season. Lateness of getting crops in this spring because of early spring rains renders the later season very busy. The conventions of the Religio-Literary Society and the Sunday School Association were held, and were lively and interesting, with Sister Lorena Leeka in charge of the former, and Brother Charles W. Forney, of Sidney, in charge of the latter. Unity and good spirit characterized all the services. The opening session was a union of the two in an entertainment, consisting of vocal and instrumental music, and readings. This program was especially taking and highly entertaining and instructive to all. Eight schools reported.

Changes have occurred in the district by many removals of Saints from its borders of late years, and some deaths, but a determination to move on in the great, good work of the Lord characterizes the Saints, young and old. The Holy Spirit was with the Saints assembled, and no murmurs of discouragement were heard.

Brethren George Kemp, Moses Gaylord, James Comstock, of the older brethren, Brother T. A. Hougas and sons of the younger, Brethren Schenck, McLanahan, and others, as of other days, Brethren Mortimore, Wight, the Leekas, and all left give impetus to the work. Of course we missed some of the elder workers, Bishop William Leeka, William Gaylord, and the Wilcoxes of Shenandoah, A. Badham and others, but the work moves on. Brother Haden, the missionary, was there to lend the "helping hand." Brother Thomas A. Hougas was sustained president of the district; Elder Mortimore as associate; Brother C. W. Forney, secretary.

There is a sacredness, to us, attaching to those places associated with the early history of the Reorganized Church: Gallands Grove, Moorhead, and here at Farm Creek, and other places. Since I was at the reunion here in August, 1903, Brother Daniel Hougas has gone with the good up along "the shining way." He was one of the staunch supporters of the cause here for many years. Will these places where Saints settled in the dark and cloudy days,—when Brigham Young and others with him led some of the Saints astray, and went to the mountains of Utah,—will these places be vacated by and by? Or will they still contribute strength and numbers of the honest to the cause? Who can foretell? We must take conditions as we find them now.

The work is moving and will move and grow as the Saints and ministry labor diligently in the way pointed out in the law of the Lord. We may wonder sometimes that the work does not move as we think it might; but in studying why, does it occur to us to look into the law, and see whether we are conforming to the law in our procedure? Are all the Saints seeking to labor together and "cooperate" in their efforts? Or are we in the world's rush to the extent that we have no time to study the law relating to the building up of Zion? Are we striving "with one heart and one mind" to move the work along to a glorious consummation? Are we all, everywhere, noting the standpoint of the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants, the SAINTS' HERALD, and Zion's Ensign, prophecy of events and their fulfillment? Do we note society's movements and the movements thereof to oppose the work? Are we noting the entrance of the gospel restored to the Lamanites of late, and the prophecies relating thereto in the Book of Mormon and what it portends? (See 2 Nephi 12: 79-84; Nephi, the Disciple, 9: 46-50; also verses 57-59 and verses 85-93, inclusive.)

The things portrayed in these prophecies of Jesus are at hand to be fulfilled. God's part of this work is now going on. Do we see it? Or do we look at the HERALD and Ensign and then cast them aside without further thought? Or do we fail to take the church papers? They are not expensive, comparing their worth with their cost. I appeal to the Saints everywhere to awake and be found on the watch tower. Jesus says, "Watch, and what I say unto one, I say unto all; watch." And it is of these days he is speaking. (See Luke 21: 34-36; Mark 13: 37.) When you have read these citations, ask yourselves the question: Where would we rather go, to the solemn prayer service, or to the banquet? Which would we pay the most for? Let us test ourselves! See where we stand! "The word that I have spoken," says Jesus, "the same shall judge him in the last day." (John 12: 48, 49.)

I did not intend to preach a sermon herein but to stir us up to be faithfully watching, and searching, that we be not overtaken. Can ye discern the signs of the times? Jesus refers to certain latter day events as signs, "A sign." (See 3 Nephi as heretofore cited, also Doctrine and Covenants 1: 2-4.) And in the great revelation wherein is shown forth "how the day of redemption shall come," (section 45: 2-6). The faithful will be on the watch tower. God is moving, let us be up and doing. "Do the things I say."—Jesus.

Hopefully,

C. SCOTT.

VICEROY, SASKATCHEWAN, June 16, 1913.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have seen a letter in the HERALD from this part of the Lord's vineyard, so I take it upon myself to write and let the Saints know what is being done here.

We have a branch of about thirty-five members, with three elders, three priests, and one deacon; hold regular services every Sunday, including Sunday school, Religio, and preaching, with prayer meeting on Wednesday night. We have also been holding one preaching service every Sunday, fifteen miles from the branch meeting place. Beginning with June 29 we will hold an evening as well as an afternoon service in that neighborhood. We are also opening up two new places in the Little Woody District, about twenty-three and thirty-seven miles to the southwest. There seems to be quite good interest shown at all our places of meeting, and we are in hopes there will be some baptisms at each of these places before the summer is over.

The Saints are to hold a reunion in the village of Viceroy July 3 to 6. We are looking for quite a gathering, and hope all who can will avail themselves of the opportunity of meeting with the Saints at this time and place. Arrangements have been made with a restaurant in town to furnish meals at twenty-five cents, and if the visiting Saints will bring some extra bedding we will provide free sleeping apartments. The train leaves Weyburn about 3 o'clock in the afternoon and arrives at Viceroy at 7.05. We expect three or four of the missionary force, and hope to have an enjoyable and profitable time.

I feel to rejoice in this great latter day work. But I realize that perilous times are coming upon us, and that the Saints must stand in holy places if they would escape the evil designs of men; the wars, pestilences, famines, and earthquakes; the terrible storms, the fierce and vivid lightning; and all these terrible destructions that are to come upon the earth in these latter days.

We can discern the signs which point to the nearness of the second coming of Christ; Jacob is beginning to flourish in the wilderness; the Lamanites are beginning to blossom as the rose; the Saints are gathering to Zion; the gospel is being preached in many parts of the world for a witness, and when all things have been fulfilled according to the designs of God, the end will come. Who may abide the day of his coming, and who shall stand when he appeareth, for he is like a refiner's fire and like fullers' soap?

Yours for the spread of the gospel,
E. R. DAVIS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, June 25, 1913.

Editors Herald: We have removed from 1300 West College Street to 1102 West Maple Avenue, closer and more convenient to the stone church.

I am slowly improving under the treatment of my diseased hip. I spent four months in our Sanitarium, but am with my family now. I am wearing a ten-pound brace, and walk with crutches. All this is a severe trial to me, but I am hoping and praying soon to be able to again be in the active missionary work, which is my delight.

I desire the prayers of the Saints that I may soon recover.

Your brother,

BICKNELL, INDIANA, June 24, 1913.

Editors Herald: Please notify the proper officials so that they can notify one of the elders in this district that Sister Semon is very sick with ulcered stomach, and desires to be administered to. We do not know the address of any of the elders. We are located at Bicknell, Knox County, Indiana, in the Southern Indiana District. The sister is very sick and asks the Saints to pray for her and her speedy recovery. May the God of Israel bless his Saints.

News from Missions

Sweden.

I will venture to write a few lines to our much appreciated paper. It was with great delight we read the news from conference, and were made to know anew that the Lord is still at the head of his work. It nearly gave us a longing Zionward; our thoughts are often there.

But as it pleased the powers that be to keep us here, I am trying to be reconciled to the will of the Lord, and be able to say, "I will stay where you want me to stay, dear Lord," although it is quite hard at times, "when the darkening billows round us roll." We have many hard fought battles to meet in a foreign field, such as we are not aware of in other fields; but hope and trust that the one who has called us into his service will help us to continue until he says it is enough.

I can say, I have felt real well of late in presenting the word to the children of men, better than before in my missionary experiences; and I hope that brighter days are coming for this mission, also. About four weeks ago I had the blessed privilege of baptizing two precious souls into the kingdom of God, and our prayer is that they may continue to grow in grace and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ. The Spirit was present in the confirmation, bearing witness of their acceptance with God. Last Saturday the water was again troubled, Brother Johnson baptizing a man who has been a regular attendant at our meetings for a long time. In the confirmation Sunday afternoon the good Spirit was present in a great measure. We all felt to rejoice and praise the Lord that he remembered us in this far-away land. Another man has given his name for baptism for next Sunday. So we hope the honest in heart will come, if not in masses, yet one by one.

I am sorry that Brother Johnson and wife have to leave here in the fall. From all appearances I will be left alone, so far as human help is concerned, but hope the Lord will not forsake me, or leave me alone. Of late, more than before, I have been made to realize that we are dependent on him for the advancement of his work, and the preaching of his word, so that it may go forth in power, and not in empty words alone.

Dear Saints in America, and especially the Swedish Saints, we want to appeal to you, not for our personal help, but for the work in general in this country. For some time in the past we have been compelled to use song books here in our meetings that we have been ashamed of; they are worn out. We have a new edition with the printer, which will be ready the first part of July. We have not been able to convert the printer to do the work for nothing, so we wish you could help us along. You can send to the undersigned, or the bishop's agent, Hanna Lawrence, Bjorneborg, Vermland, stating for what purpose you want funds used, and it will be highly appreciated. The books will pay for themselves in time, but it takes money to get the work done before we can get anything for the books. By helping now it will be help for the future.

I am thankful for the personal help I have received since I came here this time. Some time ago, while at prayer, a certain party was told to send me help, and I can assure you that it was appreciated when it came. God rewards all workers for the cause of the Master, both in this and in other lands.

I could write more, but am afraid the letter is getting lengthy, so will close, with a wish to be remembered in your faith and prayers. I remain,

Your servant for Christ,

OSCAR OKERLIND.

News from Branches

Adelaide, South Australia.

A few lines from this mission at this juncture will no doubt prove of interest to many of your readers, and especially so to missionaries who have labored here.

I left Melbourne, Victoria, five hundred miles away, on April 16, last, arriving here on the 18th, and am now staying at the home of Brother Dyke, president of the Adelaide Branch, who, with Sister Dyke and family, form a strong and consistent part of the work here. Conditions here are peculiar, and the outcome will be interesting to watch. After the departure of Elder J. W. Davis to West Australia, en route for America, this branch was left entirely to the care of the local officers, with results which I will endeavor to tell as truthfully as I can.

Adelaide has always, since the inception of their mission here, been a favorite proselyting ground of the Utah Church, and up to the present time they have had free and full liberty, in common with all other sects, to preach their doctrine (or at least that part which they think will bear public inspection) upon the streets and highways of this "city of churches," as it is called. At the present time they are debarred by the civic authorities from preaching or holding public meetings upon the city highways.

There seems to be just a little difference of opinion as to the why. Some say that some young men whose mother had been induced to join this people came from the country and raised a riotous tumult around their preaching ring, while others say that our brethren caused it by their public denunciation of Mormon secret doctrines, after the Mormon elders had finished speaking. I am inclined to think that the latter was the more potent cause of the two suggested.

Rightly or wrongly (it is not for me to say) our brethren have made terrific attacks upon the doctrines which these people conceal from the general public, and which if not now taught by them are at least indorsed in the acceptance by them of leaders who are now on record as exponents of polygamy, blood atonement, Adam God, celestial marriage, men gods, procreation in the future state, etc., etc. The chief of the attacking party is Brother F. W. Hearne, who is a priest of the Adelaide Branch, and Brother A. Sampson, teacher of the same.

These brethren, taking their example from others and utilizing the information gained from Brother Stead's work on Mormon doctrines, simply raised this city of churches into a pitch of excitement paralleled only by the Dowie invasion some eight years ago. The papers contained columns on the "Mormon riots," and some strong controversies took place through the press from representatives of both sides, and also from the public. The result was the present embargo upon the Mormons, and it is said that some of their elders were rather roughly handled by the crowds that assembled to hear them denounced, which crowds I am told, sometimes ran into thousands.

Personally, I do not feel particularly gratified at this result, seeing that it is a blow at our cherished principle, freedom of speech; but one thing is certain, it has given the public of Adelaide to know more rapidly and effectually than could any other means that might have been employed, the difference between the two churches. Whether this will result in an influx of members to our church the future record only can tell.

Meanwhile it has gained for us a good hearing, for after our meeting in the hall we can go out and address a waiting crowd. I am informed that our last Sunday night audience included the premier of the commonwealth of Australia, and other prominent men of political circles. The future will be watched with interest.

One man made a proposition to the branch asking that they repudiate the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants and unite with him on the Bible alone as a basis. I heard also that he wrote to Joseph F. Smith, advising him to burn these books.

We are still strong in the faith, and desirous of devoting all our time, talents, and powers to the spread of this glorious latter day work.

In gospel bonds, your brother,

MAY 6, 1913.

Toronto, Ontario.

The Toronto Branch held a banquet in their church on Monday evening, June 9, in honor of the thirty-second anniversary of the wedding of Bishop and Sister Evans. It was one of the most successful affairs ever held in connection with the branch. The tables were arranged in five long rows, the entire length of the basement. A special table was arranged across the front for the honored couple and family. The decorations were of the finest, long strings of colored electric lights were strung from the ceiling, making a dazzling display of light, while the flowers on the tables were artistically arranged, blending fragrance and beauty with the scene.

After the Saints and friends to the number of three hundred were seated before tables heavily laden with the bounties of life, an auto was dispatched to bring the bishop and his wife to the scene of festivity. On their arrival they were escorted to the platform, to the strains of a wedding march played by the church orchestra, and the applause of the happy throng present. Here they were welcomed by the branch president, Elder A. F. McLean, on behalf of the Toronto Saints. Brother McLean spoke in glowing terms of the wonderful work performed by the bishop in Toronto, assuring him that it was still the mind and will of the people that he should stay in this city until God should direct in other ways.

Brother Evans was asked to accept a token of remembrance in the form of an elegant traveling bag, the presentation being made by Master Murrell Whitehead, while Sister Evans was remembered by a purse of gold, presented by little Pearlle Gray.

Bishop Evans made an impressive reply on behalf of himself and wife, and thanked the Toronto Saints very much for the way they had supported him in his efforts to present the gospel to the world.

During the evening a program was carried on, consisting of vocal and instrumental music and impromptu speeches. Noticeable among the speakers was Brother Will Evans, who did well. With a few more opportunities along the line we expect to see him following in the footsteps of his father.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Our branch election resulted as follows: President, T. J. Elliott; presiding priest, G. S. Trowbridge; presiding teacher, George Reeves; presiding deacon, R. A. Lloyd; member library board, Anna DeJong; and the undersigned, correspondent.

Brother Archibald, under the inspiration of the Spirit, delivered the message which called five of our estimable young men to various offices of the priesthood. Brother Charles Tanner was ordained to the office of priest; R. Lloyd, teacher; H. C. Burgess, priest; W. R. Cowlshaw, teacher; and F. Smith, deacon. May each live so as to magnify his calling.

The Saint Louis district conference convened at Lansdowne, June 14 and 15; the Sunday school and Religio conventions were also held there, a splendid program being rendered. Two excellent sermons were reported as having been delivered conference Sunday, by Brethren Rushton and Carmichael. Brethren Sparling and S. A. Burgess, also most of the local and district officers, were present. A large attendance was reported.

During the past month we were favored with a discourse by Brother Hale W. Smith, and a call from Brother Hoxie, our general church chorister, the latter rendering several excellent selections on the violin.

Brother Sparling is holding meetings this week in Belleville, Illinois, and Brother Dowker in Brentwood, Missouri. We should remember them in our prayers, that success may attend their efforts.

Sister Holsworth has been critically ill, having passed through a very serious operation. She is still in the hospital, and needs our prayers. She is reported as getting along remarkably well under the circumstances.

The first Sunday of July prayer and fasting is requested of the Saint Louis Branch in behalf of Sister J. J. Billinsky. Others interested in her welfare will do well to join us in our petition.

Your sister in Christ,

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints and Friends in Northwestern Texas; I am still bishop's agent for this part of Texas, and am authorized to solicit, collect, and receipt for tithes and offerings for the support of church work in this especial part of the great mission field.

Dear Saints, as the Bishop urges me, I urge you to rally at once to the needs of God's church and send to my address, Loveland, Oklahoma, that part of your substance which belongs to the Lord, and is so badly needed just now, and thus help us as missionary to you and this part of the State of Texas. This is my third year among you. I am at your service, a willing worker. Will you one and all become coworkers with me and with God in this great cause we all seem to so dearly love?

Dear Saints, hear me. I love this work; I love this church; I love you; I want to see a moving up because of a manifestation of our love for the work. We are only asked by the Bishop to supply one family of two. Can we not do that much? Let us try. Do not delay; this family is in need now. May God's choicest blessings be yours,

S. W. SIMMONS.

LOVELAND, OKLAHOMA, June 23.

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT.

The Saints and Friends of the Fremont District of Iowa: Please take notice that upon the removal from said district of Miss Lorena Leeka, who has so well and faithfully performed the work of bishop's agent for the past number of years, and also now tendered her resignation of the office of agent in and for said district, that Brother C. W. Forney, post office address, Sidney, Fremont County, Iowa, has been duly appointed bishop's agent in and for said territory in the interest of the work of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We take pleasure in commending Brother Forney to the Saints and friends of the Fremont District, and trust that he may receive the hearty support and help of each and every one in the work that he has undertaken.

Sister Leeka, as bishop's agent, has performed her work well, and the Bishopric extend special thanks to her for the correctness and faithfulness with which she has kept the accounts, and trust that she may be blessed and directed of the Lord in her future work.

One of the chief duties of the bishops and agents in all parts of the world is to assist members and friends, who are interested in the Lord's work, to "fulfill his law" realting to temporal things, so that they may be acceptable stewards of him by and by, and we especially urge upon each and every one the great importance of the work which brings peace and good will to those who fulfill the law and help in the benevolent work which the Lord has especially commended, and directed in his instruction to all of his children in this life.

Fully trusting that the Lord may bless the doers of the word, I am,

Hopefully in bonds,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

OUR REGARDS TO "THE WORD OF TRUTH."

Every man and every woman who has endeavored to respect God's authority alone, has been persecuted and made exceedingly uncomfortable, even unto death in many instances.—Word of Truth, June 18, 1913.

In the SAINTS' HERALD for May 7, we publish an editorial entitled, "The line of attack and defense." In this editorial we referred to the conspiracy formed against Jeremiah, concerning which it is written: "Then said they, Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah. . . . Come, and let us smite him with the tongue, and let us not give heed to any of his words." (Jeremiah 18: 18.)

We compared this with the modern conditions, showing how a great many of the clergy and others have formed a conspiracy against the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and against the character of the founders of the church, and how this conspiracy is carried out by telling absurd and evil stories, their policy being, as in the case of the enemies of Jeremiah, to smite with the tongue and refuse to give heed to any words of defense. Our shaft seems to have lodged in the breast of at least one conspirator.

"THE WOUNDED BIRD FLUTTERS."

The Word of Truth in a leading editorial bitterly resents our remarks along this line. Suspecting the Word of Truth of a guilty conscience, we have examined its pages and find that for some time they have been giving place to a continued article entitled, "Origin, history, and characteristics of the Mormon cult," which is filled with stories of the most absurd and unreliable nature, a fair sample of which we will presently give.

The Word of Truth is a little, eight-page periodical, published, we understand, by the so-called "Non-progressive Wing of the Christian or Disciple Church." It avows its intention to flood this generation with light concerning the subject of "Mormonism." Frankly we do not believe that the paper is of sufficiently high candle-power to flood a very large area of country with light; in fact its own editorial sanctum sanctorum seems to be in semidarkness.

The editorial in question presents us with certain interrogations, among which we notice: "Is it not the truth, that there is positive evidence detrimental to the character of Joseph Smith, and that this evidence comes, largely, from persons who knew him? Is it not the truth, that the stories about his money-digging and sheep-stealing come to us from persons who knew him and knew these things to be true?"

STORIES STARTED BY A WOULD-BE MURDERER.

We reply that these stories come from some who professed to know him. Testimony quite the reverse comes from others who knew him well. Many of the *sh*old stories were first collated by E. D. Howe, a rank and rabid hater of the Latter Day Saint Church, who was assisted in his work by Doctor Hurlbut, who had been excommunicated from the church for indecent conduct, and was seeking revenge, said Hurlbut being so extremely vindictive that it was necessary for the civil courts to put him under bonds to prevent him killing or wounding Joseph Smith (see court records of Court of Common Pleas for the County of Geauga, Ohio, March, 1834.)

A murderer at heart, foiled by the law in his purpose to do physical violence, he found no means too foul to use in his effort to assassinate character. Yet the results of his work are accepted without question by many writers to-day.

This choice pair collected these stories and affidavits from other "Mormon" haters, coloring them to suit themselves, and gave them publicity in a book called Mormonism Unveiled, and this book has been the basis for other works of a similar character from that day to this.

There never lived a great religious agitator, whose work was of sufficient importance to stir up the public mind, who did not make bitter enemies, and who might not be condemned if tried solely upon the testimony of those of his old neighbors who hated and opposed his religious views. Everybody knows the nature of neighborhood gossip and scandal, and what wonderful stories grow out of it and how lit-the foundation for them exists in fact when it is possible to sift them to the bottom. Yet in the case of Joseph Smith these old stories, this neighborhood gossip and scandal, prevalent among those who hated him and did not understand him, even though they were his neighbors, is made the basis of the attack upon his work.

Fair-minded men, not members of the church, men of prominence and with far greater breadth of view than the editor of the Word of Truth gives any evidence of having, condemn this sort of evidence and declare it is utterly unreliable.

Right Reverend F. S. Spalding, D. D., says,

Those who attacked the Mormons felt moved to publish everything they could discover or INVENT to the discredit of "Joe Smith" and his parents.

The historian, Hubert H. Bancroft, says,

Most of these were written in a SENSATIONAL style, and for the purpose of deriving profit by pandering to a vitiated public taste, and are WHOLLY UNRELIABLE AS TO FACTS.

The Columbian Encyclopedia frankly confesses:

There is the most satisfactory evidence—THAT OF HIS ENEMIES—to show that from an early period he was regarded as a visionary and a fanatic.

WHO HAS BEEN PERSECUTED? WHO THE PERSECUTORS?

We are indebted to a more recent issue of the Word of Truth for an admission which appears in italics at the beginning of this editorial:

Every man and every woman who has endeavored to respect God's authority alone, has been persecuted and made exceedingly uncomfortable, even unto death in many instances.—Word of Truth, June 18, 1913.

That is a very true statement, the force of which perhaps was not perceived by the editor until too late. We inquire, in this instance, who is it that has been persecuted, even unto death, in some instances? Who has done the persecuting? Have our "Christian" friends lost houses or lands or been driven from city to city by mobs? Have they been tarred and feathered and subjected to unspeakable indignities? Or have they stood with those who were doing the persecuting? Read this from the Columbian Encyclopedia:

1832, March 22d, a mob of Methodists, Baptists, Disciples, and miscellaneous zealots broke into the prophet's house, tore him from his wife's arms, . . . and tarred and feathered him.

While the historian, Hubert H. Bancroft, says:

On the night of the 25th of March, Smith and Rigdon were seized by a mob, composed partly of the Campbellites, Methodists, and Baptists of Hiram. . . . The captives were roughly treated, and expected to be killed; but after they had been stripped, beaten, and well covered with tar and feathers, they were released.—History of Utah, p. 90.

It may not be out of the way also in this connection to note that the commander-in-chief of the armed rabble that finally drove the remnant of the Saints from Nauvoo, amid scenes of violence and suffering, was, according to Governor Ford, of Illinois, "A Campbellite preacher . . . a large, awkward, uncouth, ignorant, semibarbarian" (History of Illinois), so that the record has been fairly consistent. The present persistent attack and vilification of continued may succeed in stirring up a public sentiment that will again tolerate deeds of violence of the kind recorded.

These good "Disciples" (or "Campbellites," as Bancroft calls them, known among themselves as "Christians") were at the wrong end of the tar brush in 1832. Where are they to-day? We might think that they had been misrepresented; but in their own history they tell about the affair with considerable apparent pleasure, affirming that it "had the desired effect," which was to "get rid" of Smith and Rigdon. (See Hayden, p. 221.)

That Smith and Rigdon were not killed as they expected to be may be attributed to the more gentle and pacific spirit of the Methodists and Baptists involved. The spirit of the others found vent later in the vicious favorite slogan of their long-time champion in the war upon Latter Day Saints. We refer to the "Christian" (?) battle cry of Braden, "War to the knife and knife to the hilt!" That this war is not prompted by any righteous indignation and consuming desire to destroy polygamy is shown by the fact that (to the best of our judgment) two dollars have been spent in an effort to destroy the Reorganization, (whose members are known to be honest and moral and whose teachings are pure) to one dollar that has been expended in any effort to overthrow Utah Mormonism and defeat polygamy. And in this attack from time to time things have been used that make the tar that was applied to Smith and Rigdon appear quite clean and wholesome.

PETER INGERSOLL AND THE MONEY CHESTS.

To give point to the statement of Bishop Spalding that the writers to whom we have previously referred are good inventors, and the statement of Historian Bancroft that their works are sensational and unreliable, we have but to turn to the pages of the Word of Truth itself.

On page 151 of their issue for May 21, 1913, one Peter Ingersoll, a supposed-to-be old acquaintance of Joseph Smith, tells a wonderful yarn in which he says that Joseph Smith, sr., said to him:

"You notice," said he, "the large stones on THE TOP OF THE GROUND—we call them ROCKS, and they truly appear so, but they are, in fact, most of them, CHESTS OF MONEY raised by the heat of the sun."

This old story is from Howe and is on par with hundreds of others. It is so absurd that it would seem that no sane man would consider it for a moment. It is of such a character that by using it the Word of Truth is in danger of forfeiting its right to its own title.

One virtue of men like Peter Ingersoll is that they lie so hard they defeat their own object and kill themselves by making their stories ridiculous.

Joseph Smith, sr., and his son, Joseph Smith, jr., are represented by these men as being too indolent to work, yet we are gravely told that they toiled and sweat digging large holes in the ground in search of treasure, while all the time they believed that great chests of it were lying around on top of the ground waiting to be cracked open with a hammer.

It is certain that some one was lying,—though perhaps a charitable view to take would be to consider this Peter Ingersoll, whoever he may have been, as a sort of a humorist, a Mark Twain in the rough, who was trying Howe and Hurlbut to see just how big a story they would publish. An old steamboat hand confessed some years ago that he used to do this while working on a steamboat plying up and down the river past Nauvoo. He and others of his comrades would try to see who could tell the biggest story about the "Mormons," to regale credulous passengers.* Some of their stories found their way into print, and may possibly yet appear in the Word of Truth (?).

We do not propose to pursue this subject at great length at present, but expect to continue it more extensively ere long, and to show up some more of the ridiculous features of the Alpine falsehoods told by "respected old citizens," and so eagerly used by those who have made a covenant and a compact and become a part of this conspiracy to "smite with the tongue." And we propose further to examine some of the attacks that have been made against the church in book form which are constantly brought before the public for their consideration.

WITNESSES WHO IMPEACH ONE ANOTHER.

And we affirm here and now that it will not be necessary for us to refute these attacks ourselves, because of the simple fact that they refute each other.

When we read the works of Messrs. Shook, Kinney, Bays, Howe, Beadle, Braden, Stenhouse, Smucker, Gunnison, Gibbs, et. al., we find that there is scarcely an important position taken by any one of them that is not flatly denied and refuted by others, not excepting their charges against the character of Joseph Smith's parents as regards honesty, industry, and sobriety, neither excepting the old, long-cherished Spalding Romance theory. These writers have contradicted each other at every turn, and though one might be deceived by reading one of them, when he reads a number he soon has his eyes opened to the fact that Bishop Spalding and Historian Bancroft told the truth.

HERE ARE A FEW EXAMPLES.

Clark Braden tells us (in Braden-Kelley Debate, published by the "Christian" people) that Lucy Smith prophesied when Joseph was only seven years old that he would be a prophet, and that from that time on he was impressed by the whole family with that idea; he dare not be like other boys, for he was to be a prophet.

But in the recently issued book, Latter Day Saints, by Reginald and Ruth Kauffman, we are told with equal gravity that Lucy Smith never expected anything from Joseph,—her son "Alvah" was to be the prophet, but he ate too many green turnips and died. (Probably they mean Alvin, who lived until Joseph's prophetic work was well under way.)

Charles Shook (who was to shake the church to its foundation) says in his book that Joseph Smith was a coward, especially shown to be such at the time of his assassination.

Smucker, however, says that Joseph Smith was as brave as a lion; and the Kauffmans affirm that he died bravely, firing four shots and "bringing his man down at each shot."

The situation is further complicated by Lieutenant Gunnison, who says that he only fired two shots, and only wounded one man slightly in the elbow (hitting him in the region of the funny bone, as Peter Ingersoll did his gullible auditors).

Our dearly beloved Christian or Disciple friends have indorsed two men, Clark Braden and D. H. Bays. They sustained both of these men, and their publishing houses affirm that the writings of both are accurate and reliable, they were equally "children of Providence," called to overthrow "Mormonism."

Braden says that Sidney Rigdon was a hypocrite and a scoundrel.

Bays says that Rigdon was an earnest and able Christian minister "contemporaneously with Alexander Campbell."

Braden says that Rigdon assisted Joseph Smith in concocting the Book of Mormon.

Bays says that it is an historical fact that Rigdon never heard of "Mormonism" until after the Book of Mormon was in print.

Braden says that the Book of Mormon was made up from the Spalding Romance.

Bays says the Spalding Romance theory is a failure, and is bound to fail, the chief reason being that it is not true.

It affords us no little pleasure to reflect upon the toil and expense that our friends of the so-called Christian Church have been to in raising up champions Bays and Braden to fight and defeat each other. The good people of that pugnacious denomination having quarreled over almost every other conceivable question, from the Devil in the organ to the proper way to spell their own name, turn to fighting among themselves about "Mormonism."

The Word of Truth should sing low and softly, because to-morrow some good "Anti-Mormon" will arise to refute that which they publish to-day. For such has ever been the way of these men. No sooner does one announce his own great ability and fixed intention to "flood the world with light," than another snuffs his candle out.

DEATH OF ELDER EDMUND C. BRIGGS.

We are required to chronicle the departure from this life of Patriarch Edmund C. Briggs. Brother Briggs's life work has been so interwoven with the history of the Reorganized Church that his name has become a household word among all of the members. For some time he constituted the entire missionary force of the Reorganization.

ELDER E. C. BRIGGS.

From a photograph taken about 1866, shortly after his return from the Utah Mission.

He also enjoyed the distinction of opening the first mission to be conducted in Utah among the Mormons against the doctrine of polygamy and associated doctrines. He opened this mission in Salt Lake City during August, 1863, after a trying and dangerous trip across the plains. This was one year before the Congregational Church opened its mission in Utah, seven years before the Methodists began work there, and eighteen years before the Baptists arrived on the scene, according to the dates given by Reverend Bruce Kinney. He proceeded immediately to interview Brigham Young who was then in supreme control. Mr. Young became very angry and gave him to understand that the influence of the church would be used against him, that church houses would be closed, and that he remained at his own risk. But Brother Briggs was a man of great courage, declared by General Connor to be one of the bravest men that he had ever met. So, despite all threats and opposition, he remained and prosecuted his work, holding his first meeting in the home of Honorable Judge Waite, and securing many converts in course of time.

Many other important missions were filled by Brother Briggs during his long ministry.

He was born February 20, 1835, at Wheeler, Steuben County, New York. He was baptized in July, 1852, at Blanchardville, Wisconsin, by Elder David Powell, being ordained at the same time to the office of elder. According to the records he was appointed a mission by the semiannual conference, November 20, 1856, and from then on he continued in the active service, so that he has completed considerably more than a half century of church work. He was ordained to the office of president of Seventy at the Amboy conference, April 6, 1860; and at the fall conference of that same year was ordained an apostle, being ordained to the latter office on the 6th day of October under the hands of Zenos Gurley, sr., and W. W. Blair, at Sandwich, Illinois. This office he occupied until he was ordained an evangelical minister and patriarch on the 20th day of April, 1902. He left a record of courage, devotion, and sacrifice that younger men may well emulate.

Thus passes the last survivor of those who held the Melchisedec priesthood, April 6, 1860, and were present at the Amboy conference to witness the ordination of President Joseph Smith.

Death occurred on the 4th day of July, 1913, and the funeral was held at Lamoni, Iowa, the funeral sermon being delivered in the brick church by Elder Elbert A. Smith to a large assembly of people who met to pay a fitting tribute to the memory of Elder Briggs. The services were in charge of President John Smith, of the Lamoni Stake, prayer being offered at the home by Elder Robert M. Elvin and at the church by Elder Heman C. Smith. Of the immediate family there remain to mourn his departure, his widow, Sister Emma Briggs, his sons, Damon and Dayton, and his daughter, Mabel. E. A. S.

A REUNITED PEOPLE.

Thousands of Civil War veterans, of both the Blue and the Gray, assembled on the fields of Gettysburg last week in commemoration of the battle of Gettysburg, the occasion being the semicentennial of this, one of the decisive battles of the war. The veterans of both North and South vied with each other in lustily cheering the speakers whenever reference was made to a reunited Nation.

That victory perched on the banners of the North at Gettysburg, to remain until the close of the contest, was not because the men of the South were less courageous than those of the North; neither was it because they fought for a cause they thought less just; but it was because Israel's God, the God of the nations, ordained that it should be so. The perpetuation of this Nation as one people made it mandatory that human slavery be plucked out of the body politic. Other means failing, or not having been adopted, war seemed the only alternative. The outcome was certain from the beginning.

That same God who had "established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood," had ordained that the Nation should continue as one. The Nation having once been "redeemed by the shedding of blood" was now sanctified by a like great baptism.

While we do not suggest that God ordered the Civil War, we do not hesitate to state that, in our opinion, he overruled to the end that that war between a common brotherhood should accomplish his ends in the liberation of a numerous and an oppressed people, and in the clarification of the national atmosphere, that again this great Nation might abide as one.

So, we meet together, the North and the South, not only at Gettysburg, but throughout the entire Nation, in commemoration of the great struggle, and in a testimonial of our reunited patriotism. The bitterness of sectional hatred is forgotten in the reconstruction of our national greatness. A mantle of charity, one half brought from the North, the other half brought from the South, centers at Gettysburg, and is drawn over the entire domain. We remember not the past, but looking into the future we pledge our united loyalty to the perpetuation of that national integrity which has made us a favored people.

J. F. GARVER.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE TABLES TURNED.—In the Octographic Review for June 24, the leading periodical of what is commonly known as the Nonprogressive Christian Church, we note the following: "Scarcely a week passes that I do not learn of some new community in which secret slanderers of the Review have been at work. And they utter their slanders with such boldness that they deceive, if possible, 'the very elect.' I think Napoleon Bonaparte was the one that said, 'There is a calumny so gross that virtue itself will blush in its presence.' To this we may add, There is a slander so bold that innocence itself will be misled by its audacity. But 'all liars shall have their part.' Yet this is poor consolation for Christians when they are slandered. May the Lord have mercy." We express sympathy. Our church literature and the Saints have for many years been grossly slandered. Among the chief of these villifiers have been the brethren of Daniel Sommer, the leading editor of the Review. We join Elder Sommer in the sentiment, "May the Lord have mercy."

ACCEPT'S ASSISTANT PROFESSORSHIP.—By the La Crosse Tribune we note that Elder David A. Anderson is leaving the normal school at La Crosse, where he has been teaching the past year, to go to Washington State University. He accepts a position at Washington as assistant professor of education.

EXPENSIVE INDULGENCE.—Some idea of the enormity of the expenditures in the United States for tobacco and liquors may be gathered from the fact that the Government received in internal revenue from the sale of these commodities for the fiscal year just closed $309,478,000.

SPECIAL WORK FOR EVERYONE.

FINANCIAL WORK OF THE CHURCH.

All who are anxiously waiting and praying for the progress and development of the work of Christ in the world are glad in heart when opportunity comes to them to enlist their powers in helping the same to success. This goodly desire, too, is in harmony with his divine instruction to the people wherein he says: "Wherefore, seek not the things of this world; but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

The work of the church has been hindered for a number of years by reason of the lack of ready means to carry on its business, and provide for and sustain its missionary and benevolent work, in home and foreign fields. To perform this work and secure and hold the necessary lands and buildings for its work in many places the Bishopric have been compelled to borrow means both from banks and individuals, and occasionally to pay out heavy interest which could under proper conditions have been saved to the good of the body. But not to have moved in this way would have been many times more reactionary to the work of the body, and in some instances the losses would have been to a degree irreparable.

During the time of the late General Conference the question was taken up and considered by the First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Presiding Bishopric in joint council, and by other quorums, including the council of bishops, with the result and general agreement that the Bishopric should take measures at the earliest time practicable to raise a special sum of money of at least seventy-five thousand dollars to be used for the cancellation of this indebtedness, and to place the church in circumstances to perform its work without being compelled to borrow means at high interest and loss. The work when accomplished will be to the general and great good of the body, and everyone should be interested in the same, and no one fail to perform his or her part; and all should, with the Lord's help, do this at once.

Under special and separate statement the administration of this work has been submitted to the bishops and bishop's agents throughout the church in every stake and district; and due and just apportionment made of the amount each division should raise to fulfill its work under the call; and we ask for them the ready cooperation and help of every member and friend of the work of the Lord within the respective districts. This work must be in addition to the usual amount raised for carrying on the work in these stakes and districts, and the sending of the gospel into all the world; but if each one will perform his full duty, and contribute of his tithes and offerings, his consecrations and surplus, as provided in the law, there will be "plenty and to spare," and all will be stronger and better for having fulfilled their parts in carrying out the special work.

THE COLLEGE HELP.

The bishops and bishop's agents, in addition to the church indebtedness to be looked after, are also instructed to call attention to the help needed by the college and to take special offerings in the interest of the college work, giving due credit for the same.

To perform all of this work will not require a sum to exceed one dollar and fifty cents, if apportioned among all the members of the church. But many will help in this work who are not members, and many of the membership may and will help liberally in this great work, and we await the action of all, trusting fully that the Lord in his work will by and through his holy and divine Spirit enrich all. The bishops and agents presenting this work in their respective fields have been instructed to make early returns of the same so that the benefits may accrue to the body the present year as well as the following, and due notice will be given as the returns are received.

Commending all to the blessed Lord, who is ever ready to bless and strengthen his children "in every good work," we are hopefully in the truth, yours,

E. L. KELLEY,
E. A. BLAKESLEE,

THE WORK OF THE PATRIARCH AND EVANGELICAL MINISTER.

(By Charles E. Butterworth, formerly secretary of the Order of Evangelists.)

The patriarch's duty requires that he should be an example to the church, in word, in conversation, in humility, in purity, in goodness; and "faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God," qualifies him for the work.

The first patriarch in the dispensation of the fullness of times, Joseph Smith, sr., father of Joseph Smith the Prophet and Hyrum his brother, was the first one to receive the angel's message, was ordained to the office of patriarch, under the hands of Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon, Frederick G. Williams, and Joseph Smith, jr., on the 18th of December, 1833. He became a member of the first high council, blessed his sons Joseph and Samuel H., traveled extensively in Ohio, New York, Pennsylvania, Vermont, and New Hampshire, visiting the branches of the church in those States, and bestowing patriarchal blessings on several hundred persons. He preached the gospel to all who would hear, and baptized many. (Church History, vol. 1, p. 631.)

Joseph Smith, sr., was the head of the chosen family, and was highly honored of God and his Prophet, his own family, and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and his example may be imitated with profit. Much of the duty of the patriarch may be learned from the way he prosecuted his ministerial duties. May his rest be glorious.

Hyrum Smith, the eldest living brother of the Prophet at the time, a man of sterling worth, in whom the Prophet and the church had abiding confidence, and a man who was highly honored of God for his faith and goodness, was by revelation removed from the First Presidency, and ordained to the office of Presiding Patriarch, in harmony with the blessing conferred upon him by his father, which was his right by lineage, and was so recognized and honored of God. (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 29.) True, he was the brother of the Prophet, but in the same revelation from which we have already quoted we find the following:

First, I give unto you Hyrum Smith to be patriarch unto you, to hold the sealing blessings of my church, even the Holy Spirit of promise, whereby ye are sealed up unto the day of redemption, that ye may not fall, notwithstanding the hour of temptation that may come upon you.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 38.

Extraordinary prerogatives or privileges were granted to the patriarch Hyrum Smith, which in brief may be stated as follows:

That my servant Hyrum may take the office of priesthood and patriarch, which was appointed unto him by his father, by blessing and also by right, that from henceforth he shall hold the keys of the patriarchal blessings upon the heads of all my people, that whoever he blesses shall be blessed, and whosoever he curseth shall be cursed; that whatsoever he shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever he shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven; and from this time forth, I appoint unto him that he may be a prophet, and a seer, and a revelator unto my church, as well as my servant Joseph, that he may act in concert also with my servant Joseph, and that he shall receive counsel from my servant Joseph, who shall show unto him the keys whereby he may ask and receive, and be crowned with the same blessing, and glory, and honor, and priesthood, and gifts of the priesthood, that once were put upon him that was my servant Oliver Cowdery; that my servant Hyrum may bear record of the things which I shall show unto him, that his name may be had in honorable remembrance from generation to generation, for ever and ever.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 29.

Hyrum was to act in concert with the Prophet and President of the church; that is, they were "to plan together; take counsel; to act in harmony, from combined plans, take counsel."—Webster. How beautifully this represents the harmony that should exist between the patriarch and the First Presidency, and indeed, among all grades of ministers in the church of Christ, that they may labor together in unison and love for the good and development of the church, the salvation of souls, and to the honor and glory of God.

Notwithstanding these very important duties and privileges assigned to the Patriarch Hyrum Smith, it pleased the Lord to indicate that in a sense, at least, the Prophet was first, and superior to him, which to the writer's mind places the patriarch under the direction of the First Presidency, to some extent at least.

April 7, 1897, by revelation, the Lord set apart Alexander Hale Smith, "to be a counselor to my servant, the president of the church, his brother; and to be patriarch to the church, and an evangelical minister of the whole church."—Doctrine and Covenants 124: 2.

From this last citation we learn two important things relative to the office of patriarch. First: There is nothing in the office itself to prevent the presiding patriarch from acting as one of the First Presidency, at least in the case of emergency, and he is one with whom the president may safely counsel. And second: That he is the patriarch of the whole church, there being no limit to his field of labor. To the writer this seems to indicate that in an advisory way he has an active oversight of patriarchal work everywhere, and may properly advise and counsel with brethren of the same order.

The patriarch is an evangelical minister. The duties of this office are to be an evangelical minister; to preach, teach, expound, exhort; to be a revivalist, and to visit branches and districts as wisdom may direct, invitation, request, or the Spirit of God determine and require; to comfort the Saints; to be a father to the church, to give counsel and advice to individuals who may seek for such; to lay on hands for the conferment of spiritual blessing, and if so led, to point out the lineage of the one who is blessed.

He is to be free from responsibility—ministerial—as a traveling minister, and from the care of the local branch or church and district affairs. When traveling and preaching, holding revival meetings, he is to labor in connection with the branch and district officers, not subject to the ministerial control of the missionary in charge, except he should transcend his bounds and teach false doctrine or be found in transgression. He is not to meddle with branch affairs or district affairs. He is not to listen to complaints made by individuals to him, but if persons insist upon presenting their troubles, he is to request them and require them to make them in writing, sign the name, giving time, place, and character of the trouble, with the witnesses, which it will be his duty to present to the branch or district officers, as the case may require. He is not to be put in charge of either branch or district. These are the privileges which attach to the office of patriarch and evangelical minister.

The presiding patriarch is to be considered the first, and when patriarchs meet in council, is to preside. Besides these duties, the patriarch may meet with quorums in their quorum meetings, where he may be asked for counsel, but will not have either voice or vote, except by courtesy, having no direct control of quorums.—Doctrine and Covenants 125: 3, 4, 5.

From the foregoing revelation we learn some very important things with reference to the duties of the patriarch, which we state as follows: He is a preacher in the church, of the highest grade, who may go from place to place as directed by the Holy Spirit, by wisdom, invitation, or request. When doing so he is to labor in connection with branch and district officers. The object of this work is to advise with such officers and Saints as may desire his counsel; to stimulate so far as possible, a closer walk with Christ; to rescue the perishing, revive and reanimate the dying, and encourage the Saints to a greater zeal, and inspire within them a more earnest desire to be consistent and active laborers with God, in the building up of the church, and in the accomplishment of the righteous purposes of God.

It is wisdom in God that he should be free from the care of either branch or district, though he is to labor in connection with branch and district officers. The Lord has thought best that the patriarch should not be under the direction of the minister in general charge, and surely he did not intend that he should be under the ministerial direction of branch and district officers. He is the father to the church, and it is not meet that the father should be made subject to the children. No one has a deeper interest in the officers and members of the church than he, and it is becoming that the young should honor the aged, or that the children should honor their father, and listen to his counsel. Is not this what was meant by the Apostle Paul when he said: "Children, obey your parents in the Lord; for this is right."—Ephesians 6: 1.

On this point I quote as follows:

Patriarchs. The name Patriarch is applied in the New Testament to Abraham (Hebrews 7: 4), to the sons of Jacob (Acts 7: 8, 9), and to David (Acts 2: 29); and is apparently intended to be equivalent to the phrase, the "head" or "prince of a tribe," so often found in the Old Testament. It is used in this sense by the 70 in Chronicles 24: 31, 27: 22; 2 Chronicles 23: 20; 26: 12.—Smith's Dictionary of the Bible.

Patriarch (Greek patriarch, the head of a tribe), is the name given to the heads of families in early scripture history. In the later history of the Jews, after the destruction of Jerusalem, the Greek name was used to designate the heads of the college which was a continuation of the Sanhedrim; one of whom, the patriarch of the west, resided at Tiberias, in Galilee, and the other, the patriarch of the eastern Jews, at Babylon. The name is given to bishops of certain metropolitan sees, who held rank beyond other metropolitans, and also exercised jurisdiction over all the metropolitans included in their district. In the ancient church there were patriarchs of Rome, Antioch, Alexandria, Jerusalem, and Constantinople.—Funk and Wagnalls' Standard Encyclopedia, vol. 19, p. 206.

The patriarch is a revivalist, so says the Lord; and as such he is expected to hold revival services. These are special services held among the Saints. He is authorized of God and appointed by the church to awaken new life in the members of the church, and to teach them how to walk more closely in touch with God and Christ, that they may be able to drink in more fully of the divine nature, that greater harmony and love may exist everywhere in the church.

Turning to Webster we find the following: "Revivalist, n. One who promotes revivals of religion; an advocate for religious revivals.—Revivify. v. t. To cause to revive, reanimate." In such meetings every follower of Christ should be an active worker, yet perfect harmony should be manifest in the singing, prayers, testimonies, and the preached word. Everyone should know his or her place and the part they are expected to perform, or the work they are to do, that the best possible results may obtain. For this reason, and others that might be given, the writer is of the opinion that when revival services are being held, the revivalist should have the active oversight of all the work required at such times, and yet he would not need to preside over either branch or district; neither would work done in an advisory way interfere with the work or duties of either branch or district officers. To the writer it seems next to impossible for a minister to be a successful revivalist if he is denied the right to direct his own revival services.

As a patriarch he is to confer spiritual blessings on such Saints as may request him to do so; and if so led by the Holy Spirit may point out the lineage of the one blessed. However; a patriarchal blessing may be good and spiritual, and be given under the direction of the Spirit, and yet the lineage not be given; for the Lord has willed it so. This work, though not the most important of the duties of the patriarch is, of necessity, a very important duty. No work done by the writer as a minister of Christ has made him feel so small, or made him realize so fully that he needed the presence and inspiring influence of God's Holy Spirit. Under such circumstances the patriarch feels how necessary it is to keep his heart and mind pure, in faith and by prayer, and to have abiding confidence in the promises of God, and the Father's ability to fulfill every promise he has made to his ministers, and to his people. In this way he can place himself in the hand of God, that he may be directed in his work by the Spirit. If he does his part in faith, and with contrition of heart, he can safely leave the results with God.

For the best possible results to follow, no one should present himself to the patriarch, and before the Lord, for a patriarchal blessing, until after he has placed himself under a careful self examination, made all wrongs right, and has diligently sought the Lord in prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. In this work the patriarch and the Saints should be laborers together with each other and with God.

THE CHARACTER AND PURPOSE OF PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS.

A patriarchal blessing must be divine in its character or it is a fable. A truly patriarchal blessing must be the gift of God; his Holy Spirit must inspire the patriarch. The recipient or seeker for such blessing should be taught to look beyond the creature to the Creator, and here comes the duty of the patriarch to so live that he may be a worthy medium of such divine blessing.

A patriarchal blessing may partake of the nature or character of a warning against evils or obstacles in the path of the recipient of which he may not be aware, or of the magnitude of which he may be ignorant.

It may partake of the nature of a reproof for evils indulged in. It may be an approving message for virtues practiced and duties performed.

It may be a word of encouragement to continue in the path of rectitude, and an assurance of the Father's acceptance of efforts to do good, and that help will be given in every hour of trial, when such divine aid is sought; or it may declare punishment for unfaithfulness, if continued in.

A patriarchal blessing may partake of a prophetic nature, opening up the future life of the recipient to such an extent as divine wisdom deems proper, and declaring blessings to be received, on conditions of faithfulness; or it may declare punishment for unfaithfulness.

If the recipient is of the house of Israel, it may point out the tribe to which he belongs.

The purpose of patriarchal blessings is to be a source, or rather, a means of comfort and strength and encouragement to the faithful children of God, and in a sense a guide, being in harmony with every word of God.

In fine, the grand purpose of God in ordaining patriarchal blessings as a means of grace, is to strengthen the weak, encourage the downcast, comfort the mourner, and cause the strong to rejoice in the God of their salvation.

Patriarchal blessings are not to gratify unholy ambition,—satisfy morbid curiosity, or to lull the recipient into a state of carnal security that the blessings are his to enjoy irrespective of the life he shall lead, whether of righteousness or unholiness. The blessings of God are all on condition of our faithfulness to God and his Christ.

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM

OR

THE CURRENT REFORMATION IN CONTRAST WITH TRUTH REVEALED.—PART 10.

BY E. E. LONG.

A COMPARISON.

But what of that other "movement" to which we have previously alluded? Let us see: Beginning with the first missionaries to England in 1837, every nook and cranny of the civilized world, almost, has been aroused from their lethargic slumber by the reverberating sound of the "everlasting gospel" as announced by the Seer of Palmyra; and that, too, in the face of the most bitter and unrelenting persecution, resulting in the martyrdom of many precious souls, the innocent babe at its mother's breast not escaping the thirst for blood. The machinations of jealous priests without and the wicked duplicity of traitors within had so combined their forces as to well-nigh overthrow the work. Innocent men, women, and children had been driven from place to place, beginning with the tar-bucket party in the Western Reserve and culminating in the bloody drama at Haun's Mill, when seventeen unoffending persons were cruelly butchered; a prelude to the wicked tragedy at Carthage.

Men, called of God as was Paul, have left loved ones behind, and without the aid of a missionary society, gone to the nations of the earth and to the islands of the sea, and delivered the "angel's message" to the joy and consolation of tens of thousands, while the "reformers" of Campbellism were wrangling over "plans" and "schemes" that never saved a soul. And though the "enemy in the secret chambers" succeeded in leading the hearts of many from the paths of virtue, by which the "way of truth" has been and is evil spoken of (2 Peter 2:2); and though the fair name of the church was besmirched by the foul crime of polygamy, the "remnants," who refused to follow the lead of "false shepherds," rallied their forces, and under the benign blessings of heaven survived their "turbulent period"; and ere the "Louisville Plan" was dreamed of, in 1860, again sounded the proclamation of "peace," and men under God's direction were soon on their way to foreign lands. Missionaries, after the apostolic order, without a dollar in their pockets, crossed the mighty deep and lifted up the "ensign" afar off. Thousands rejoiced in the possession of the "Pearl of great price," while the harbingers of Campbellism were stretching their law of expediency out of all proportion to cover a multitude of "plans," "boards," and "societies" ere they could send a single man to "save the world."

The Holy Spirit was given by the laying on of hands, as in days of old, testifying of a surety that the message was of God, and the "manifestations" of the Spirit have been enjoyed by honest-hearted souls of every clime. Multitudes of honest people who were "living in error" recognized the voice of the "Good Shepherd" and obeyed from the heart the "form of doctrine" of the church of the first century, though they suffered persecution for so doing.

But all this was as nothing with those "self-evolved" polemics who strain at a "Mormon" and swallow A. Campbell. Unable to meet the issue upon its merits, they must resort to falsehood, slander, and vituperation.

W. M. Taylor, writing in the Christian Standard, June 2, 1906, says, "Joseph Smith had twenty-seven wives," than which a more glaring falsehood was never put in print. But it served his purpose, which was to make the picture look as dark as possible. We don't have to search very deep into the New Testament Scriptures to learn the future state of those who "love and make a lie." Why should men who profess to be followers of Christ, with the certainty of judgment before them, pen and publish such a malignant falsehood? Do they really expect to convert Latter Day Saints from the error of their way by such despicable methods?

From one of the leading "anti" organs we quote the following paragraph:

It is this, the Church of the New Testament, the Church of which Jesus Christ is the head, the Church he declared he would build, HIS CHURCH (see Matthew 16:18), of which I am a humble member. The Christian church is a defection, or apostasy, from that Church and has largely undone the work of Mr. Campbell by departing from the ancient order of things restored in large measure by Mr. Campbell to the common people. The fact that Mr. Campbell later in life built again the things he once destroyed, renders his work no less valuable. Indeed, his early efforts at a restoration of the ancient order of things contrast so strangely with some of his practices in later life that it serves as an important lesson on the stability of the human mind when it is led or guided by the word of God, and its inconsistent vascillations when cut loose from divine moorings.—A. J. Nance, in Octographic Review, February 27, 1912.

We have emphasized a few words to call your special attention. The principle involved applies to Joseph Smith as well as to Mr. Campbell. Suppose Mr. Smith did in 1843 begin to teach and practice polygamy. Should that be urged as a condemnation of the work he accomplished prior to that date? We have been informed by Mr. Hayden that "Mormonism in Ohio in 1831 was a very different thing from Mormonism in Utah in 1870." The "moral abomination" that characterizes it now was no part of it then. It will be time enough to urge the fact of Joseph Smith's polygamous relations as an argument against his ecclesiastical authority when it can be proved that he was guilty.

If Mormonism is such a pretentious fraud, why can not some of these "polemics" demonstrate it without resorting to misrepresentation?

THE LATEST "INNOVATION."

Years of experience and numerous defeats in hard fought battles on the public platform with representatives of the Latter Day Saints have long since convinced the reformers that it is a losing game. The fact is self-evident from the following "appeal" which appeared in the Christian Evangelist of April 10, 1902:

AN APPEAL FOR AN ANTI-MORMON CRUSADE.

I only wish I were able to sound the alarm as I think it should be sounded. There are 10,000 Mormon elders preaching the doctrine of the Mormonic fraud. Many of the members of the Church of Christ are deceived by their teaching. Within a circuit of ten miles of this place (McArthur, Ohio) I know several, who would be faithful and devoted members of the body of Christ had their minds not been poisoned with this delusion. The insinuating talk, the conciliating argument by which the Mormon elder approaches the weak Disciple is calculated to deceive the elect. Any Disciple who has been associated with these people, will recall the first step the Mormon asks you to take: "You Disciples are all right so far as you go, but you do not go far enough." The Disciple gives his assent, and the seed is sown that has ruined individuals, families, and neighborhoods. I think it frequently occurs that our good, faithful, and efficient ministers, relying upon their ability to stand upon the Bible and the Bible alone engage in debate with Mormons, and after the debate is on find they have not quite surveyed the field and the result is a triumph for Mormonism in that locality. Down comes Christianity and up goes Smithianity. I want to urge upon the brotherhood from the Atlantic to the Pacific, that we put specialists in the field to cope with and vanquish this foe; that there be an organized effort to meet this crying evil in every State and Territory. Let us know, when a Disciple is to meet a Mormon, that it means a victory for the truth, that David has met Goliath, and that the David is the Disciple. I believe this is God's work. The Christian Church has the men and the means. Will a goodly number of us set ourselves apart to the work? We have had here at McArthur, Ohio, a debate between John T. Bridwell, of the Disciples and Elder McDowell, an able Saint, which illustrates what competency, ability, and preparation will do. Brother Bridwell prepared himself, and the result is that Mormonism in this locality has been dealt a deadly blow. Brother Bridwell has no superior in this work. He is a specialist, and should make it his life work. He is a noble man, thoroughly good, never does or says anything that the brotherhood has to apologize for. Now it occurs to me, very strongly, that a number of men of his efficiency, sustained in the field, directed by an anti-Mormon board, whose business it would be to place them where needed, could not only stay the tide of Mormonism and save scattered Disciples, but could plant churches of the primitive order. Along with Brother Bridwell we have R. B. Neal, Clark Braden, D. H. Bays and others who are now able to do this work. Brother Bridwell will go wherever called . . . and is only anxious that he may have calls enough to take him into the very heart of Mormonism—Salt Lake City. Let me make an appeal. Are there one hundred Disciples who will give $10 this year for the support of this work? Let everyone who will, write me pledging that amount. Don't send any money now, just your pledge, which will indicate that you are willing to join in this work. I will write for your pledge later. We will start the work, and at the next General Missionary Convention, which meets at Omaha, Nebraska, we will organize for the work by getting together, selecting an anti-Mormon board with a secretary and treasurer, and by a year from now we can have an organization that will be doing very effective work. Interest will grow as time goes on. For one I agree to be at Omaha and aid in permanently organizing this work, account for what is done between now and then, and continue in the work. . . . Hoping to hear from many, I am, Yours respectfully, J. W. DARBY.

I have italicized some parts of the lengthy "appeal" to call special attention. About the only real merit it contains is the open confession that Campbellite polemics are unable to cope with so-called Mormonism. It is a rare thing for them to admit defeat. Of course it is because the "polemic" is not "equipped"; so it was proposed to put "specialists" in the field who could "vanquish the foe."

But let us go to the convention and watch the big doings. They met October 20, 1902, and proceeded to organize "The National Anti-Mormon Missionary Association of the churches of Christ," a real Campbellite progeny.

During the preliminary remarks we catch the following notes in extenuation of the new "innovation":

We have not been in position to meet the Saints always to the best advantage. They have gone to the rural communities where the churches were weak, and our ministers were not well equipped with the necessary evidence to meet them, but the Latter Day Saint ministers are always fully equipped.

Again:

Now these men are intelligent people. Their men are prepared; when their men are sent out they are indorsed from headquarters.

And this:

They have taken more people from our church than all other religious people. No one can preach faith, repentance, and baptism better than they. The Methodists and Presbyterians; with their Holy Spirit, are not within a thousand miles of them. They are at home anywhere.

And again:

So far as citizenship is concerned, no people stand better in the community than the members of the Reorganization.

Clark Braden, who, though a "specialist," and who started out to make "war to the knife, and knife to the hilt," and who has gone down in defeat in more than one conflict, sounded the "alarm" as follows: "Brethren, what are known as church propositions, are a humbug, and should never be debated."

No, indeed! It is a dangerous experiment to measure Campbellism with Mormonism on fair church propositions. Why is it that the "weak" disciples fall an easy prey to Mormonism? The answer is easy. The wonderful claims of Campbellism to a restored primitive Christianity naturally arouse the humble soul to a state of expectancy. If the individual is thoroughly honest at heart, and really desirous of the truth, the sham is soon detected and the poor deluded soul becomes "weak." He may still continue to feed on the chaff or hope deferred for the want of something better until he comes in contact with a Latter Day Saint, who is able to feed him the "bread of life," and the conquest is easy. See? "They also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine."—Isaiah 29: 24.

"Love" for the "Mormon"—such as it is—and hatred of the "ism," may have been the incentive, but the conviction is supported by surface indications that visions of "filthy lucre" lured the promoters and incited them to action. Numerous demands for lecturers, and calls for "specialists" to engage in discussion, were anticipated. Mr. Darby captured the seat of honor, the presidency, and Mr. Bridwell was elected general secretary. Prospects for an ingathering of Mormon scalps accompanied by "heap much money" were luminous; but in this their hopes were soon blasted.

The following June Mr. Bridwell wrote to the Helper for help as follows:

We have recently purchased a Dane Duplicator which will save us fifty to seventy-five dollars per year printing bill. As our funds were all laid out by the action of the recent board meeting the general secretary will have to borrow the money at his own risk, to pay the bill. Will not some brother who is interested in the work send us five dollars for the purpose?

The visions were beginning to fade away already. Bridwell lost money and withdrew because it "didn't pay."

The Helper was made the official organ of the "Association." It continued to beg for money until it finally died for the want of help. Then the Weakly was born, but it was so weak it never reached maturity and soon "weaked" out entirely. The Sword of Laban was the next weapon introduced to decapitate Mormonism. But, it, too, appears to be very weak, as it is only occasionally flourished in defiance of latter day Israel. Unlike his illustrious predecessors, the modern Goliath refuses to give battle in the open.

Those "antis" started out to do big things; but, like most all of their "plans," this seems to have been a complete failure. Interest failed to "grow" as predicted by Mr. Darby; funds failed to pour in as hoped and begged for; calls for help on the battle field failed to be answered as anticipated; and so the thing failed to live; or if alive it appears to be in a state of coma, and its demise is a certainty.

It will be noticed that Mr. Darby makes no distinction between the two churches of Latter Day Saints. He says: "There are 10,000 Mormon elders preaching the doctrine of the Mormonic fraud," and that within a circuit of ten miles he knew "several, who would be faithful and devoted members of the body of Christ had their minds not been poisoned by this delusion." Bah! The writer lived within that ten-mile circuit for twelve years. We investigated Campbellism and had passed it up as a religious travesty before we knew anything about Mormonism, and there are others who did likewise. Mr. Darby and company may shed big tears over our "delusion," and scour the country from coast to coast in search of "specialists" to administer their antidope, but until they can produce a better quality of religion than we find exhibited in Campbellism, we refuse to dance to their piping.

As to the debate referred to we will just add: Seven years previous Doctor C. B. Taylor in debate with Elder R. Etzenhouser, said: "When this discussion is over Mormonism in McArthur will be too dead to skin." But Mr. Darby found it to be very much alive, and he procured a "specialist" who dealt it a "deadly blow." Now, strange as it may appear, it seems to come to life about every seven years; for we have been credibly informed that it is very much in evidence in that locality now; while at last accounts the "specialist" was hors de combat.

Of General Interest

A JEW'S INTERPRETATION OF JESUS.

The following article by Stephen S. Wise, the eminent Jewish rabbi, appears in the Outlook for June 7. Doctor Wise is the founder of the Free Synagogue in New York, and every Sunday preaches to a large congregation in Carnegie Hall. He is distinctively a leader among his people. His views are significant of the changing Jewish feeling toward Jesus. While not accepting him as the promised Messiah, yet Rabbi Wise and many of his brethren are come to recognize in Jesus a great Jewish teacher—the Jew of the Jews.

It is a sign of the times that it is possible for a Jewish teacher to speak frankly and forthrightly about the life and teachings of Jesus the Jew, and that, save for a handful of bigots within or without Israel, few will take exception to the honest utterance of a Jew respecting Jesus. Through the centuries it has been almost impossible for a Jew to bring himself calmly and judicially to consider anything connected with the life and teachings of Jesus, whose name had been made one of terror to his people because of the cruelly unjust attitude of Christendom towards Israel for nearly nineteen hundred years. Moreover, the Jew almost scrupled to plumb the depths of his own appreciation of Jesus, lest such appreciation token disloyalty to his deeply wronged people. During the centuries that have passed an oftentimes Christless Christendom has made it impossible for the Jew to look upon Jesus as a Jewish teacher or as a Jewish prophet, for to the Jews he could be little more than the founder of a "Jewish heresy," which resulted in infinite disaster to his own people.

Even if Jesus had not been born unto Israel, even if he had borne no relation to the people of Israel, it becomes of importance for Israel to determine for itself what shall be its relation to the man who has touched the world for nearly two thousand years as has no other single figure in history.

What we think of Jesus we must say, not only because of his position in the world of religion, but because he was a Jew, because Christianity is an offshoot of Judaism. The eternal paradox of the Jew, giver of everything, keeper of little or nothing, once the giver of the gift of Jesus' life and teachings to the world, and now under the need of declaring what is his attitude toward him, who was not only flesh of his flesh but very soul of his soul! Neither Christian protest nor Jewish lamentation can annul the fact that Jesus was a Jew, an Hebrew of the Hebrews.

Surely it is not wholly unfit that Jesus be reclaimed by those who have never unitedly or organizedly denied him, though oft denied by his followers; that Jesus should not so much be appropriated by us as assigned to the place in Jewish life and Jewish history which is rightfully his own. Jesus was not only a Jew but he was the Jew, the Jew of Jews, and it is little less than tragic that, with respect to Jesus, the world imagines that his life belongs to Christianity even as his death was due to Israel. That Jesus was a Jew is only half admitted, when not wholly denied; but that Judas was a Jew is always affirmed without doubt or hesitation. Whatever the death of Jesus may have been, we believe that his life was Jewish, and we devoutly affirm that Jewish were his teachings. In that day when history shall be written in the light of truth, the people of Israel will be known not as the Christ-killers, but as the Christ-bearers; not as the God-slayers, but as the God-bringers to the world.

The latest form of the higher anti-Semitism, which at its highest is a very low thing, denies that Jesus was a Semite, holding that Jesus was an Aryan, and perhaps ready to urge in the near future that he was the leader of the social-democratic, anti-Semitic, Aryan political party in the Galilean province of Palestine.

We need not consider in relation to the life of Jesus the Jew certain beliefs and dogmas which have been suffered to become central to the scheme of organized Christianity. For we know that they would be as remote from the mind of Jesus as they are unacceptable to us, his fellow-Jews, after the lapse of nineteen centuries. We may reclaim Jesus as our own and yet reject the dogmatic teachings of Christianity organized by Paul and later developed and elaborated into the Christian scheme, through the abatement of certain teachings of Jesus, which made Christianity tolerable and even acceptable to the pagan world.

The present emphasis of Israel upon the simple, primal teachings of Jesus rather than upon the creeds or beliefs of Christendom may further the profoundly significant return of Christianity in our time to Jesus. Christendom, as perhaps never before in eighteen hundred years, is crying that it must go back to Jesus. Ecco homo. Not only does truth demand that we, his fellow Jews, further this quest for the teachings of Jesus which are unmistakably his and our own, but we have no right to keep aloof from that movement which seeks to resurrect Jesus the man from the tomb of Christian dogma. When the processes of the resurrection of the body of the teachings of Jesus from the tomb of dogmatic Christianity shall have been completed, we of the House of Israel know that a figure will emerge who is our own, long hidden from us rather than by us.

Some gain and advance there were in the teachings of Jesus over the thenceforth recorded teachings of his people, for such gain was not only explicable but inevitable in the religion of Israel. The religion of Israel was never a static quantity, but ever dynamic in its power of unfolding. The important question, after all, is not whether the teachings of Jesus, fructified and illumined by his personality, went beyond that which had gone before, but whether they grew out of that which had gone before. His repeated references to the earlier teachings of the law and the prophets clearly showed that he knew out of what rock he was hewn, that he never imagined himself to be other than a progressive continuator of the teachings that had gone before. However much Christianity may subsequently have been Hellenized and Romanized and paganized—and all these processes had their part in the later development of Christianity—Jesus was not Hellenic, nor Roman nor pagan. His life and teachings were as completely and consciously Jewish as the teachings of Isaiah or Amos or even Moses. In reappropriating their elder brother, Jesus, the Jews of to-day are not urging a single step in the direction of Christianity, but rather the acceptance of that from which organized dogmatic Christianity is itself in largest part of departure—namely, the Jewish, thrice Jewish teachings of Jesus the Jew.

The really significant and abiding thing in the religion of Jesus was not the sermon on the mount which he spoke, but the life upon the mount which he lived. For the sermon on the mount was nothing more than a simple, luminous forth-putting of the teachings of his own time in Judea, based in turn upon the earlier teachings of the Hebrew prophets and lawgivers. If we knew the life of other and earlier teachers in Israel, we might indeed find the same perfect concordance between profession and practice, the same entire realization of the ideals of daily living, the same absolute unity in the theory and the practice of life.

Jesus taught two great truths—the coming of the kingdom
