of heaven and that the kingdom of God is within man, thus emphasizing the two fundamental facts of life: That what is without leaves its deep impress upon life and conditions it, and, on the other hand, that, even after the kingdom of peace and security has come without, still must man seek and find the peace of the kingdom of heaven within his own soul. Thus the two chief teachings of Jesus were the immanence of God and the imminence of the kingdom—God immanent and the kingdom imminent. Yet is it not true in very large part that Christianity in effect denied the one and Christendom in practice thwarted the other? While Jesus taught and lived the immanence of God, Christianity practically denied to man immediacy of access to God the Father, setting up Jesus and Mary, the church and the Bible, the dogmas and the creeds, between God and man, not as steps or doors leading to God from man, but as walls or barriers dividing God from man. While Christendom has lisped the accents of the teaching—the kingdom of heaven is at hand—it has not done enough to advance, withal oft retarded, the coming of the Messianic reign of justice and righteousness in the world.

We accept Jesus for that which he was, not for that which Christianity has mistakenly sought to make of him—a Jewish teacher, a Jewish leader, a prophet in Israel, clear visioned, tenderly loving, selfless, Godlike, though not uniquely Godly. More than that we do not believe Jesus to have been, because we know that more than that no man can be. Nineteen hundred years after his birth we hold, even as did our fathers centuries and centuries before his birth—even as did Jesus—none is good save the Father, none is God save our Lord. Multitudes of Christians join with us to-day in denying the unique divineness of Jesus, and see, as do we, that Jesus was not humanly divine, but divinely human; not divinity humanized, but a Godward bent human soul. It is no mean joy and no ignoble pride in us of the house of Israel to recognize, to honor, and to cherish among our brothers—Jesus the Jew.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALLYARDS.

"How Can Two Walk Together?"

"How can two walk together except they be agreed?" The answer to this question is obviously in the negative. To walk together as friends, companions, mutual helpers, two must be agreed; their aims and purposes in life must be identical.

Applied to matrimony, this truth assumes a most serious aspect, seen often too late by those most concerned. One of the most momentous acts of a lifetime, that of entering into the marriage covenant and relation, is often consummated without due consideration of the question, "Can two walk together except they be agreed?"

Too often marriage follows a courtship which has been largely a round of pleasures without consideration of fundamental principles which either favor or militate against peace and enjoyment in the life of the home established.

In the Prayer Union matter of this issue, there appears a letter from a sister who is sighing because her husband does not see the necessity of obeying the gospel. She feels lonely in her home, and is conscious of not being able alone to conduct her home as she would like to have it.

Upon the subject of marriage, the Doctrine and Covenants question presses heavily, "Can two walk together except they be agreed?"

Marrying Out of the Church.

Upon the subject of marriage, the Doctrine and Covenants says: "We believe that it is not right to prohibit members of this church from marrying out of the church, if it be their determination so to do, but such persons will be considered weak in the faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," (111: 1).

It is true there may be occasional exceptions to the general rule that one who marries out of the church manifests by so doing that he is weak in the faith. There came recently to the writer of this article a pleasant bit of news concerning a young sister who is married to one outside of the church. In answer to the question, "Did she marry in the church?" the reply was, "No; but she married a good man," and the narrator went on to describe his virtues.

The young woman who is now happily married to this good man had before contemplated marriage with one in the church who proved himself to be below the standard of honor to which all men, both within and without the church, should hold themselves true.

It is possible, and in the case of the young sister cited, it is an accomplished possibility, to marry a good man outside of the church. It is possible to marry an inferior man inside of the church.

No girl in the church should consider any man as eligible to her life companionship who is not a true, virtuous, honorable man. If she holds in high regard the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, she should know that she can not find in any man who is not also in the faith, the full sympathy, comfort, and help she will often need.

Marry In the Faith.

The good, honorable, high-minded man may be brought into the church. We concede this. And so we say, Marry in the faith; for there are those not of the church who are in the faith so far as they have acquaintance with it.

The danger is in marrying a man who is not in the faith, whether he be outside of the church or in the church; for it is an undeniable fact that there are some in the church who are but nominal members. An earnest girl who loves the church should not be satisfied with a man who is not in the faith, even though he bear the name of the church. She should marry some one who, like herself, sees life earnestly and holds himself always amenable to the law of right. She will be safe in marrying a man who will accept what reason sustains as the truth. Such a man, if outside of the church at marriage, will receive the gospel when his reason sanctions its reception.

So we should not say that it is always wrong or unwise to marry out of the church. We may say with as much positiveness, however, that it is always dangerous to marry a man even in the church who is lacking in the qualities which make him a man of stable virtue and honor, a man of earnestness and kindness.

It is well to marry in the church. It is highly necessary to the happiness of an earnest Latter Day Saint to marry in the faith. It is best to enter into the marriage covenant with one who is in the church and in the faith, for they are not always identical, though they should be.

"They Shall Teach Their Children to Pray."

One of the duties enjoined upon parents in the law of God to us is that they shall prepare their children by proper teaching for baptism at the age of eight years. Closely following this direction comes the word, "And they shall also teach their children to pray."

The young girl who has been accustomed from childhood to pray to the all-wise Father will not choose a life companion without praying over the matter, even as she will not make so important a choice without consulting her earthly parents.

We would that it might be impressed upon the minds of all young Latter Day Saints that the marriage relation is not one to be lightly assumed; that it is one of the most serious steps in a human life; that it may make or mar all the life that follows.

And because it is so serious a step, a young person does well to counsel with earthly parents and to pray to the heavenly Father who guides with a kind hand those who seek his direction. The foundation is laid for a happy home when God has joined together the husband and wife, when their union is one which he sanctions.

"The Strong Fight."

This is the title of a poem written by an English woman on the campaign for the protection of children. The tenor of the poem, which we have not space to print in full, is as follows:

A strong tower is being built for "the children, the children," who sleep soundly within though foes clang without; a Holy War is being waged for the children, that they may be free; a warm fire is being built and the city streets are being searched, that the children may be gathered in from the dark and the cold. The poem concludes:

"Unless the Lord build it, the house for the children,
Unless he be with me my labor's in vain.
He has thought it and planned it, the fold for the children,
Where the lambs may be folded without fear or stain.

"I fight the holy fight for the children, the children;
The sons of God glorious sit down at my board.
Tho' the foes hem us in, shall I fear for the children,
Fighting the strong fight in the name of the Lord."

Many forces are at work in the interest of the welfare of children. A few days ago the governor of Illinois signed the woman suffrage bill, the passage of which had been opposed strongly by friends of the liquor interests. That element of Illinois foresees, as do the liquor interests of Montana, that the vote of women will be exerted to drive the saloon out of business.

Iowa and other States are passing bills to censor moving pictures for the protection of the children against the lessons unconsciously imbibed from pictures suggestive of immorality. In the Literary Digest of May 24, there is the suggestion of Miss Maud Powell, the distinguished violinist, who would have our "popular songs" censored. It is to be deplored that many of the popular songs of the day are of a tone that borders strongly on the vicious. The Washington Times says of a movement to have the post-office department exercise a more careful censorship over songs sent through the mails: "If the ancient worthy who said, 'Let me write the songs of a nation and I care not who makes its laws' could visit the United States to-day he would hear some things that would cause him to rush to the shadowy ferryman and beg to be taken back at once." Let "the strong fight" for the children strike this evil also, the perversion of the heavenly gift of music. Let us do what we can to watch it in our homes.

We noted in a recent daily an item to the effect that the United States will no longer permit the importation of manufactures made by the labor of children under fourteen years of age. Iowa has recently passed a law raising the age of compulsory attendance at school to sixteen years. Children must have opportunity to receive education.

Mrs. Ruby Zahn, president of the Political and Civic League, of Detroit, is quoted in the Battle Creek Idea as saying: "There are eleven times as many children brought into the Juvenile Court because their mothers are out at work as for all other reasons combined. Not only that, but epilepsy and imbecility are increasing so fast that they are about to become a national calamity. Eighty-five per cent of the feeble-minded are born of overworked mothers, it has been found."

Mrs. Zahn urged this as a strong reason in favor of the passage of mothers' pension bills. At last eleven of our States have passed such bills; others will follow suit, for the movement is a just one, looking to the betterment of the condition of our children.

These are a few of the progressive steps being taken by those who are fighting "The strong fight" for the children; fighting it "in the name of the Lord."

Judge Ben Lindsey, of the Juvenile Court of Denver, giving utterance to a sublime faith in humanity, says: "After thirteen years as magistrate and judge, trying men and boys, I have come to the conclusion that there are no bad people and no good people, but just people. But there are bad things—bad conditions—which make the gang." He expressed the opinion that corrupt political gangs are largely responsible for the existence of corrupt "kids" gangs.

"Children," said Judge Lindsey, "can not be made to do right because they have to, but they will do right when they wish to; and so we have shown them we are not against the children themselves, but against the bad things they do. The juvenile court is not a thing of the statute books; it is a thing of the heart, and the spirit of the movement is the spirit of the Man of Galilee, the spirit of sympathy that helps those who need help."

Every movement toward purer social and national life should have our support. Every home which we purify helps the great and good work onward. We may bear a valiant part in "the strong fight" upward into the great light that is surely coming, whose dawning rays we already see.

The Prayer Union.

Subjects for the third Thursday in July.

For the missions and missionaries among the Lamanites; that the preaching of the gospel to them may be with conviction of truth, and so convert them to the spirit of Christ in their lives, that they shall demonstrate the purifying, uplifting power of the gospel as given by him.

Also for the mission at Jerusalem; that the spirit of conviction may be poured out upon the city where David dwelt; and that the day of knowledge and blessing may follow.

Scripture lesson. Micah 2: 7; Isaiah 52: 1-4.

Memory text. Psalm 51: 10.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

We are in receipt of a letter which says: "I would like the prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of my husband, who is not a Saint, though he understands the work. He does not see the necessity of obeying. We have been married over six years and I feel lonely, and that I can not do my duty under my present conditions."

The writer of the letter states that she read in the HERALD some time ago of a sister whose husband came into the church through the Prayer Union, and she asks that her husband may be prayed for with the hope that he, too, may be moved upon in answer to the united prayers of those who join with her in her petitions for him.

Letter Department

Let Us Be Active.

Owing to a rush of more insistent duties, I have for the last few months received my HERALD and laid the copies on the shelf unopened; but the rush is now over and I have enjoyed them all at once. And such a treat!

First were those splendid articles from the pen of the editors. Again, an article that impressed me greatly was one by E. E. Long in HERALD of February 26, on new openings. I started reading it, liked it, and commenced marking the best points, but soon found it was all being marked. When it was finished I read it again and pronounced it complete. I thought nothing more could be said on the subject.

But I had selected the number at random, and the next I picked up was for February 5, in which was Daniel Macgregor's article on the same subject, and I was surprised and delighted at the deep spiritual grandeur of his views. Saints, read Brother Macgregor's article again. You may not have grasped it all the first time.

Then I noticed an interesting letter (I have forgotten the name of the writer) which presented the condition of several elders in the same branch; while one preached each Sunday, the others sat idly by. We all know of the condition, and no doubt we all deplore it.

We members should also be more active. We, too, have been called as the salt of the earth, and our work should also be a saving power, similar in many ways to that of the elder. We are the light of the world, and are told we should not hide our light under a bushel; yet our light is too many times hidden beneath the dome of our church houses, and the world knows nothing of it.

The scripture is often quoted, "If ye be not one ye are none of mine"; and we are sometimes led to believe that to be one we must congregate together and separate ourselves from the world. This is wrongly dividing the word of God. Christ explains in the prayer for his disciples how we are to be one when he says, "As thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

"That the world may believe." That was the great bond between Father and Son. The great cause that should draw the disciples into a oneness with them. The one reason for drawing us into a church organization now is the same old plan: To save the people from their sins. To do this we can not collect, become inactive, and stagnate; but must scatter our energies over the earth, and exert a saving power. We must go out into the world and shed our light abroad, and try to answer the purpose for which we have been called.

Saints, could not we profit by a slight change in the order of our service to God? Brother Elbert Smith tells us the God we worship is a God of to-day. Can not we be servants of to-day? We have spent years in studying the political conditions existing in the times of the Nephites and Lamanites of ancient America, but we can not help the faults of the moldy past. We have been much distressed over the wicked acts of the judges and kings of ancient eastern Asia, but those terrible deeds are done and the judges all too far gone to recall.

Let us take a study of existing conditions, with a view to benefiting humanity and to saving the people from their sins. If we will study and try to abolish existing evils and better the moral conditions of our own time, we will see good results, I know; for that is the work the Lord wishes us to do—to save the people from their sins.

The Christian workers of California have just completed a mighty victory over vice. We have been working for years to abolish the red light districts of our great metropolis, but until this year we have played a losing game. We have had bills drawn up by the wisest and best men of our State, and have sent delegates to the legislature to work for their interests, only to have them laughed to scorn in the lobbies, and voted down in the chambers.

We then changed our tactics for a time. We devoted all our efforts to the cause of woman suffrage—not as militant suffragists, mind you; we did not demand, we only requested—and we won. Then we started out with renewed courage. We wrote and read, compared, selected, and compiled the best articles on the subject at hand, had them printed in leaflets and sent them out free in great bundles to whoever would use or distribute them.

We sent budgets to all ministers, priests, and rabbi. We deluged with literature all lodges, societies, and clubs, and then drew up more moral measures than the legislators ever dreamed of passing upon. The atmosphere around the capital seemed changed. We had asked in our leaflets that the readers write to their senator and assemblyman, asking them to use their influence and vote for the Red Light Abatement Bill, and the people had complied with this request. The legislators had been deluged with letters. One assemblyman said he had received fifteen hundred.

It was hard for them to shatter the old standard idols that they said had always been, and they thought must always be, but what could they do? If they refused to pass the women's pet measures they would be signing their political death warrants. They laughed at themselves, while pitying themselves and sympathizing with each other. But they came to a sensible conclusion in their separate chambers by remembering that they had been sent there to represent the people, and the letters they had received showed plainly that the people wanted the bills passed.

I was permitted to attend the legislature for a few days in the interests of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the Pacific Humane Society. I had expected to sit in the gallery while listening to the discussion, but instead I was treated royally; on being introduced I was given a comfortable chair in the senate chamber; and in the assembly chamber while visiting that body. Most of the moral measures passed both bodies by a big majority, and the governor has signed them, and the Red Lights in our State will all go out in August.

Truly there is no greater happiness to be found in this world than by engaging in a hard struggle for right against wrong. To work until you are physically and mentally exhausted; to hope and pray and wait and wait for days and weeks and months and years and then to win. Oh, the joy is great and God is very near!

I feel that there is no better field for a working Saint than San Francisco; yet if my Master has a work for me elsewhere I am willing to go. But wherever we are, let us try to abolish conditions that create a demand for the sinner, and let us cultivate a love for him,—look upon him as a brother in need of our help and pity. Think of the words of the Savior, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." And, remembering our loving Savior's words, let us cherish our unredeemed neighbor; while yet we hate the sin that is destroying him.

Yes, hate has a place in the economy of Christ, and it is a passion all too precious to waste in the usual way. Have you never seen hate presented in grandeur and majesty? Listen. I have seen an old, gray-haired man brought to judgment for plotting and effecting the ruin of a very young and helpless girl. I saw the young attorney who had her case to plead clinch his hands and set his teeth in his supreme hatred of the deed; and when he spoke I knew by the tense firmness of his voice that his very blood was on fire, and I bowed my head in reverence to the white hot purity of his hate.

If all Saints could hate like that, how long would it take us to all join hands and go out to battle with the powers of evil and subdue them, taking the Holy Spirit as our shield.

MARY BEEBE HAWLEY.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

HARLAN, IOWA, June 17, 1913.

Editors Herald: Our Gallands Grove district conference at Maillard, Iowa, the 13th to 15th inst., is now a matter of history. Very pleasant memories of this conference will, no doubt, linger indefinitely in the minds of all the Saints and friends present at its sessions.

The Sunday school and Religio joint convention program was well rendered, and a literary as well as a spiritual treat. We were made to realize that the Spirit of our Master was with us.

The conference business sessions were presided over by the district president, C. J. Hunt, associated with James A. Gillen, minister in charge. Order, peace, and the Spirit's presence characterized all the services of the conference.

At the morning prayer meeting James A. Gillen and C. J. Hunt ordained Orman Salisbury, Des Moines, Iowa, and A. R. Crippen; Primghar, Iowa, to the office of high priest. Preaching was by Orman Salisbury, James A. Gillen, J. B. Wildermuth, and D. R. Chambers. We would not forget to mention Sister C. J. Hunt, district secretary, and her work, performed faithfully and well; also Brother and Mrs. Mann, from Primghar, the latter assisting with the music. The local Saints rendered valued assistance with the music, Brother Carmichael having charge and Sister Carmichael, jr., as organist.

The writer trusts he may be pardoned by the local chorister, as well as the brothers and sisters in attendance from the outlying branches, for not mentioning names, as he is a newly appointed missionary to your district, and while he remembers all of you, he has a large forgetter, and would be likely to get names and faces misapplied, hence will not attempt to mention the names of persons present; yet our heavenly Father knows all, and will abide with all if we are faithful.

The kindness of the local Saints in entertaining the conference visitors will not be forgotten.

At the close of the afternoon preaching service Sunday the local branch president, Robert Fish, buried Sister Dorothy Smith, Emmetsburg, Iowa, and Brother William Turner in baptism. May God bless them.

At this writing the writer's heart goes back with kindly remembrances to the Saints of eastern Iowa, with whom we have labored for nine years; and while your conference was the same date as ours, we did not forget repeatedly to mention you in our prayers.

Thanking God for that which is past, and trusting him for all that's to come.

Your servant for Christ's sake,
J. B. WILDERMUTH.

FREESOIL, MICHIGAN, June 20, 1913.

Editors Herald: Seventeen years ago this summer the writer of this little sketch, then little more than a boy, was working on a farm a few miles distant from this place. Just a few weeks prior to this time I had embraced the gospel, and at my confirmation a beautiful gift of prophecy was given in which I was told that if faithful I should help to spread this gospel abroad and bear the glad news of life and peace to the hearts of men.

Viewed from a natural standpoint, this was a very unlikely thing, to say the least. I seemed to have no natural ability, and my opportunities of acquiring an education were quite unfavorable; and, to make matters worse, I had neglected them. But the gospel had entered my life now, and with it an earnest desire for higher and better things. Higher aims and nobler aspirations were awakened within me.

Naturally enough, the theme that was next to my very soul would manifest itself. Consequently I was often found conversing upon gospel topics.

One very pleasant feature of the experiences of this summer was that both the man for whom I was working and his wife were favorable to the gospel. They always respected me in my worship, and though they were not Christians, they were quite willing to converse upon religious themes. This afforded me a very great pleasure indeed.

She appeared to be much nearer the kingdom than he, at the time, and seemed only to be waiting for him. She, however, a few years later, grew tired of waiting for him, and did what every such person ought to do, stepped out and obeyed and left him to come when he would.

Well, to return to my story again, one day as we were talking together, she said to her husband, "Buell is going to be a preacher some day." "Well," said he, "when he gets to be a preacher I will let him baptize me."

"Now you remember that, George," was her prompt reply, "for if you don't I shall remind you of it!"

"All right," said he, laughingly, and nothing more was said at the time.

A few months ago it became quite apparent that the gospel leaven was working with my old-time friend and employer. Last week I received word to come down, that he was ready to make good the promise he had made so many years ago. I went down last Sunday, June 15, and baptized him and two more, making nine baptisms in that locality since December 31. Seven of these are heads of families. Others are very near the kingdom, still others are investigating, and the end is not yet.

In gospel bonds,
BUELL SHELLEY.

FENNELL, OKLAHOMA, June 20, 1913.

Editors Herald: There have been many cloudy days since I embraced the gospel. Yet there have been many days of joy and sunshine, and I am still praising the Lord for the strength to overcome so far. He has been good and true to me. The promise has been verified to me wherein he says if we do his will we shall know of the doctrine.

I feel very thankful for the articles appearing in the Ensign with reference to the doctrines of the Reorganized Church and Christian Science. I have been very closely associated with one of Christian Science faith; and a finer lady is not in this country. She is open-hearted and says she would like very much to hear the elders preach. She has met one of them, but has never heard them preach.

In our talk and reasoning about God and his creation, I told her that according to my understanding of science God did not create this earth only spiritually, but materially also; that the earth was the Lord's and the fullness thereof, and that it was to his honor and glory that man was placed here. I tried to show her that their idea of the resurrection is not in harmony with the Scripture, inasmuch as they do not believe in a resurrection of the body. I read to her from the Bible where it reads that the graves, the sea, death and hell are to deliver up their dead, and asked her if she thought that the spirit was in the grave or the sea, and of course she had to admit that she thought that the spirit returned to God, as the Scripture shows.

I have read Science and Health and do not feel that I am the worse for it, but feel benefited by it, as I have gained knowledge that I would not have had concerning the Lord; and I am sure I can meet them better when I know from their own books what they teach. It is best for one to gather information from the right source. That is why I am a Latter Day Saint; I was not willing to take the word of others, and was honest enough to read and search for myself.

It has been some time since I have had the pleasure of hearing an elder, but hope to have that opportunity again in the near future. We would be glad to entertain an elder. I wish to be administered to; I have been in poor health for some time. I also want my children blessed. We will meet an elder any time. Our railroad station is Fort Towson, Oklahoma. Phone to Chappel residence.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
MRS. M. M. AARONS.

TOLEDO, OHIO, June 24, 1913.

Editors Herald: The work is moving on nicely in this city. Unity prevails. The officers are working unanimously together, and are magnifying their calling. A promising lady was baptized a week ago by Brother Ulrich, a priest, his first baptism. The outlook is good for several more to unite in the future.

Brother Hardin and I leave for Oak Harbor this week, at which place a church was built this winter and spring. The opening was held on the 14th and 15th of this month, Brother S. W. L. Scott and the writer doing the preaching. The attendance was good and orderly. The Spirit was present in the presentation of the word, and it had an effect for good, removing prejudice. While we were building this church a United Brethren minister in one of his sermons called it the heaven temple. Instead of his saying doing us harm it will result in good to us.

So the good work rolls on. I hope to keep pace with its progress. Though not feeling as strong physically as I did thirty years ago, I trust that I may do all my bodily strength will allow.

I am yours in gospel bonds,
SAMUEL BROWN.

DIXONVILLE, ALABAMA.

Editors Herald: It may be strengthening to my old-time friends to know that I am still in the faith, and battling against the evils of this world, trying to gain for myself eternal life.

Reading the letter of Brother G. H. Shell to the HERALD brought to remembrance some things that Brother Shell told me concerning this church work forty years ago. The fulfillment of these words of prophecy to the letter has been one among many testimonies that have held me up in this work.

If it had not been for my early experience in the church I would hardly have continued. I am thankful to my heavenly Father for the knowledge I have of the work.

After refraining from many evils, such as intoxicants of all kinds, coffee and tobacco, used in many forms, I am gaining in knowledge spiritually, and in strength physically. I want to continue to strive against the evils of this world, until this tabernacle will be a fit dwelling place for my own spirit, and then I may be able to enjoy the fruits of the Spirit referred to in Galatians 5. Not until we cleanse ourselves of all these evils will we be able to enjoy the gifts of the Spirit as we should. God's Spirit can not dwell in unclean tabernacles.

We should make every effort to divest ourselves of all earthly cares and strive that we may fill our place and calling in every particular. When I see men who have been called to preach this gospel doing nothing, it causes me to think of the individual who received the one talent. When he did not improve upon it it was taken away, and the poor fellow was left without anything. In that great and notable day when the Savior comes in the clouds to gather his elect from the winds of heaven, how many of us will be able to rejoice in the presence of our Lord and Savior, and say to him that we have gained other talents, and hear the welcome plaudit: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

These are they who keep the whole law. These are they who can say, "I love the Lord," and speak the truth. These are they who look to their own faults before they seek the faults of others. These are they who ask wisdom of the Lord and who find the same. These are they who know to do good, and who do it.

If we have lived in such a way that we bear the fruits of the Spirit, then we are in a condition to receive the gifts of the Spirit. Then we may expect to accomplish good. When we enjoy the fruits and gifts of the Spirit, then have we made ourselves right, and not until then.

We are made to rejoice over the missionary appointments by the General Conference to the Southeastern Mission. One of the missionaries, Brother Swen Swenson, has been doing some able preaching for us, but has been called to eastern Florida to administer to a sister. Brother Swenson is a faithful worker, and is always willing to go wherever called.

Ever praying for the good and welfare of all,

S. DIXON.

OWENDALE, MICHIGAN, June 25, 1913.

Editors Herald: We have a branch of about seventy-five members, with one elder, two priests, and one deacon. We have a small Sunday school, which we hope may be the means of bringing some of the young people here into the church.

My father was killed two years ago the first day of August by runaway horses on a grain reaper. He did not belong to the church. My mother was baptized last summer. My sister and I were baptized June 22, 1913, at the Port Huron reunion.

My earnest desire is to live faithfully and humbly. As a beginner in the great latter day work, I know I have many things to learn, and many trials and temptations to pass through. I hope I may keep out of the ways of the world, as none of the young people around here belong to the church, and all of them are so worldly. I know it will be difficult to keep in the right way. Pray for me that I may follow the straight and narrow path which leads to life eternal.

Your friend and sister in Christ,

VIOLET YOUNG.

MASON TOWN, WEST VIRGINIA, June 25, 1913.

Editors Herald: I am battling for this beautiful truth. It is a hard fight; but if I go on serving my blessed Master the best I know how, I may come out conqueror in the end. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may be strengthened in this glorious gospel. I have not been in the church quite two years. I have had many trials. But it was for my Master's sake that I have borne them. I can testify that I know this work is of God.

I will tell of an experience had in our family. My sister younger than I was very sick. We sent for a doctor and he said she had appendicitis, that her appendix had bursted, and that we would have to take her to the hospital for an operation. She was so bad we had to turn her over in the bed. The doctor had no hopes of her recovery. She said she did not want to go to the hospital, but wanted Brother Ullom to administer to her. We did not have to write to him, for he came that very evening. He said the Lord directed him to come. He administered to her, and that night at midnight she could turn herself over in bed. She continued to improve and was well in a week or so. She is stronger now than she was before she was sick. She has since come into the church.

Brother James McConaughy is here with us at present. He is preaching spiritual sermons. It is strenghtening for the few Saints here when the brethren come and preach for us. We hope others will come into this glorious work soon.

My prayer is for all the Saints.

Your sister in the one faith,
BESSIE RODABAUGH.

GOODWATER, SASKATCHEWAN, June 26, 1913.

Editors Herald: I was down to Goodrich, North Dakota, last winter, to visit my sister. She belongs to the church. One of her neighbors is very much interested in our faith. I sent him the German Book of Mormon. He says it is the nicest book he ever read. He says he would like a German elder to come there. He would take care of him. Most of the people there are German. This man is John Laschkewitsch; address Box 246, Goodrich, North Dakota.

Your sister in the faith,
LOUISE DREHER.

Extracts from Letters.

Edward Rannie, Dunlap, Iowa: "I have been reading Bruce Kinney's work, Islam of America. It is certainly a bad mixture; so many things half told that it makes it worse than a straight out misrepresentation. Our own people can easily discern his misleading statements, but the public can not, not understanding our position. It seems to me that the present effort on the part of Mr. Kinney and others is the most systematic, thorough, and persistent that has ever been attempted. We can not combat such an organized force with ordinary methods. I have often thought that we could and should have a systematic way of reaching the people with our literature. If we had a tract suitable for present conditions and would pursue a systematic course through the HERALD or Ensign, with the amount of money it takes to care for a missionary and his family a great many people could be reached and untold good could be done in counteracting the present campaign against the cause."

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Armstrong, Shelby, Ohio: "We have had sickness in our home for about three years. Sister Armstrong's parents were both sick, and died at our house. They were a great care, but we are very glad that our dear Lord gave us health and strength so that we could care for the dear ones in their last days. We are the only Saints in Shelby. We are still trying to walk in the narrow path, but oftentimes feel our weakness. We need the prayers of God's people. We would be very glad to have an elder stop with us at any time."

Mrs. A. L. Bördick, 1009 Tyson Street, Jackson, Michigan: "Years ago I was a Christian, but lost my way. For six weeks, now, a friend and relative, of this faith, has been in our home, and by his every-day life has turned me around and started me in search of Christ. I am sending for these books, hoping to find what I need. I want to find the true church; this looks to me so far to be the only true church."

George Elson, Wayne, Nebraska: "THE SAINTS' HERALD is the only preacher I hear out here, of the faith of the Saints. I am the only one here that believes in the everlasting gospel, restored by the heavenly messenger. There are many good people here. They are all kind to me, but they don't have any use for my religion. I have to stand entirely alone in my faith, but I am thankful I am treated so kindly. People are becoming considerate of the rights of their neighbors, and everyone is on equal grounds in their rights of faith and worship. This is much encouragement to me, for where such good conditions obtain the true gospel can win its way. I feel sure that out through here and in our neighboring towns would be a good field for our gospel preaching to be extended. There are a few who would be almost sure to obey the gospel."

News from Branches

Los Angeles, California.

May 30 brought Brethren V. M. Goodrich and Roy Slye to Los Angeles. They are enjoying the beauties of California.

At the June business meeting the resignation of our pastor, Fred Adam, was accepted, and Brother Goodrich was elected.

Sunday, June 8, was Children's Day. Instead of the regular service, the hour was used for the children's exercises. The church was beautifully decorated with sweet peas. Four children were baptized, and two babes blessed.

On the evening of June 12, a reception was given in the church for Brother Goodrich. A musical program was arranged, including a violin solo by Brother Adam, and a piano solo by our young brother, Orlo Backer. A very pleasing feature of the evening was a vocal duet by Sister Frieda Kline and Brother Kline, in the Hawaiian language.

Brother Paul Hanson has gone; we hear sorrow expressed by all. Our loss will be somebody's else gain. We learn that Sister Hanson is to leave us shortly, also Sister Leeka. We shall miss Sadie. Independence will have gained an excellent musician, as we understand Sister Hanson intends to make that place her home.

On Sunday, the 15th, Sister Agnes McConnel was baptized at the church. Sunday, the 22d, Brother James E. Kelley preached in the morning, Brother Goodrich in the evening, Albert Knowlton at Long Beach.

We are looking for Brother Sheehy every day, and we understand Brother F. M. Smith and wife are coming. We hope that Sister Smith may regain her health in the sunny southland.

MADGE P. KNOWLTON, Correspondent.

Master of human destinies am I!
Fame, love and fortune on my footsteps wait;
Cities and fields I walk; I penetrate Deserts and seas remote, and, passing by Hovel and mart and palace, soon or late
I knock unbidden once at every gate.
If sleeping, wake; if feasting, rise before
I turn away. It is the hour of fate
And they who follow me reach every state
Mortals desire, and conquer every foe
Save death; but those who doubt or hesitate,
Condemned to failure, penury and woe,
Seek me in vain and uselessly implore.
I answer not and I return no more!

—Senator Ingalls.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Portland, Oregon, District; Greeting: Conditions compel me to send these few lines to you through the HERALD, as Peter says, to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance.

Jesus says: "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock." The Apostle Peter gives the following expression: "Seing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently." True parents will manifest their love toward their children by giving of their substance in times of need. Jesus says: "Who is my father, mother, sisters, and brothers, —he who does the will of my Father in heaven." Now if we have obeyed the truth and love our brethren, will we withhold our substance from them?

But some will say, "I have been helping the brethren when I have found them in need." That is good; it will go down as a charitable act. Now send L. Stover, 406 West Twenty-first Street, Vancouver, Washington, one tenth of what God has blessed you with. You know Jesus commended the scribes for paying their tithes. So will he bless his Saints if they observe this feature of the law.

Some of the Saints in our district are to be commended for their self-sacrificing spirit. Some do even more than the law requires. Others have withheld their means, perhaps for reasons unknown to many of us. We are not acting as judges, to condemn our brethren in these matters. We know times are closing down; but remember, Saints, the elders' families must have something to line on, regardless of how hard the times get; and this is God's plan for his Saints—to pay their tithing.

To systematize the Bishop's work, he places an agent in every district to look after the interests of his department, and assigns them certain elders' families and poor of the district. For this work in the Portland District we need about one hundred and fifty dollars per month. There is nothing to meet this month's allowances with. I hope that all who read this will bear a part of the worry and responsibility it brings to the writer. I believe that you will come to our rescue as you have done in the past. We can not afford to neglect our duties in such a noble work.

I will promptly receipt for any amount sent me, and will forward at once to the needy.

L. STOVER,

VANCOUVER, WASHINGTON, 406 West Twenty-first Street.

Pastoral.

To the Saints and Ministry of Southern Indiana District; Greeting: Having been appointed to labor in your district and having also been elected district president, I take this means of announcing that I am on duty, and ready to serve you as best I can, God being my helper. This being my first time in this field, I am a stranger to most of you, hence I ask for the hearty cooperation of all the local ministry and members. There is a work for us all.

I expect to get around over the district and visit with all the branches as soon as I can. I shall be glad to hear from the local elders and priests, and any others who have an interest in the Lord's work. Tell me your needs.

Names and addresses of isolated Saints, and all who may want preaching, especially in new places, are desired. We will try to reach you in due time.

My home address is Fulton, Kentucky, R. F. D. 3. Field address, 645 West Twenty-ninth Street, Indianapolis, Indiana. Write me.

Your colaborer in the gospel,
F. R. MCCLAIN.

To the Saints of Nova Scotia: At the present time Elder F. J. Ebeling and myself are holding tent meetings at River Philip, Nova Scotia. If there are any Saints or nonmembers who desire meetings kindly state whether we should bring our tent or whether a church, schoolhouse, hall or the like is available. A letter will reach me if addressed to River Philip, Nova Scotia, care of Kenneth Hyatt.

We desire the address of every isolated Saint in Nova Scotia or of any new arrivals or any Saint who for any reason was not notified concerning the district conference just held June 28 and 29.

In gospel bonds,
H. L. RUSHFELT.

Quorum Notices.

FAR WEST ELDERS.

Quorum will meet at the Saints' church during the convention in Cameron, at 8.30 a. m., July 20. Coleman Snider will lead in discussing the following questions: "Should the branch expenses be met by collection or subscription?" S. H. Simmons, president.

ONTARIO PRIESTS.

Quorum will meet at Chatham reunion, at Erie Beach, July 27. Priests of London and Chatham not of the quorum will be welcome. T. B. Richardson, secretary.

Conference Notices.

Northern California District will meet in conference at Irvington, California, August 18, 1913, the fourth day of the reunion, at 10 a. m. The auxiliary conventions will convene on the afternoons of the days following, also the Woman's Auxiliary for Social Service. The reunion begins August 15. Special attention should be given to obtaining certificates from the agent on purchasing tickets, giving you return for one third fare. All branch and ministerial reports should be sent to Elder J. A. Lawn, Hollister, California. Specially prepared blanks may be had from branch presidents or by sending to the writer. It is reasonable to expect a full report. The outlook is encouraging. J. M. Terry, 1202 Fourteenth Street, Oakland, California.

Portland district conference will convene with the Vancouver Branch, at Vancouver, Washington, August 16, at 10 a. m. Bring your tents and stay for the reunion to be held at the same place. Look for reunion notice. N. T. Chapman district president, 789 East Sixty-fifth Street North Portland, Oregon.

Northeastern Missouri District will meet in conference, August 16 and 17 on reunion grounds at Oak Ridge Schoolhouse, eight miles southeast of Macon. Send reports to me by August 5. Address William C. Chapman, Higbee, Missouri, R. F. D. 3.

Convention Notices.

Sunday school and Religio societies of Far West District will meet in joint convention at Cameron, Missouri, July 19, 20. Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, B. J. Scott, E. L. Henson, and other speakers will address the convention. Important business calls for a good attendance. If you desire to receive proper recognition before the convention, send in your reports, those due and those past due. R. L. Henry, 2844 Olive Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri; Paul Pugsley, 1413 North Tenth Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri, secretaries.

The Religio locals of Portland and Vancouver will meet in convention at Vancouver, Washington, at 1.30 p. m., August 15, 1913. Lottie Gage, secretary Vancouver local.

Reunion Notices.

Southern Missouri district conference and reunion will be held with the Ava Branch, at the church five miles east of Ava, August 22 to 31. District tent will also be in use. Bring necessary bedding. Sleeping quarters will be plentiful. Pasture for horses free. Plenty of good spring water for man and beast. We expect the leading quorums of the church to be represented. The Board of Publication have intimated that they would have a representative present. Those contemplating coming will do well to write one of the following named brethren: John A. Miller, Ira Seley, or Glen Seley, all of Ava, Missouri. State how you expect to come and when you expect to arrive. The train to Ava meets the Frisco trains at Mansfield in the morning, arriving at Ava at noon, from which place the trip is made by wagon. Ministry and branch reports sent by mail must be in the hands of the undersigned by August 20, or they may not reach the conference. Benjamin Pearson, district secretary, Tigris, Missouri.

Southeastern Illinois reunion will be held with the Brush Creek Branch, near Xenia, Illinois, August 1-10. Good speakers will be present, among whom we expect William Lewis and J. W. Rushton. Those coming by rail will stop at Xenia or Rinard, Illinois. Please notify secretary of dates of arrival, so arrangements may be made to meet you. Those desiring tents should notify W. E. Presnell as to number and size wanted. Meals will be served at reasonable prices. Let all come who can. R. H. Henson, chairman; W. E. Presnell, secretary.

Northeastern Missouri district reunion convenes at Oak Ridge Schoolhouse, eight miles southeast of Macon, August 9 to 17. Bring tents or order them through William B. Richards, Bevier, Missouri, by July 15. Those coming by rail come to Macon, Missouri. Notify Albert H. Binder, Macon, Missouri, stating time of arrival. Come prepared to care for yourselves as there are but few Saints there. J. A. Tanner is expected, as are our district missionaries, with a good representation of the local ministry. William C. Chapman, secretary.

Addresses.

V. M. Goodrich, 1617 Trinity Street, Los Angeles, California.

J. R. McClain, 645 West Twenty-ninth Street, Indianapolis, Indiana.

J. E. Kelley, 1621 Trinity Street, Los Angeles, California.

Graceland College.

ENDOWMENTS.

Letters were sent June 10 to all those whose names appeared in our endowment ledger except to a few who had canceled. If anyone has failed to receive said letter he will confer a favor by addressing us at once. We write this because a number of these letters have been returned from the addresses given, and we appreciate the help rendered in the past too much not to give an opportunity to all those who desire to help.

Died.

CHICK.—Josephine Chick was born March 6, 1864, at Good Intent, Atchison County, Kansas, died at her home, near Whiting, Kansas, June 30, 1913. She was baptized August 3, 1880, by George Thomas. Was married to Don Carlos Chick, to which union there were born ten children. Husband, six children, aged father and mother, one brother and three sisters survive her. Her humble life consisted of deeds of kindness. She was laid to rest in the Netawaka Cemetery, where she awaits the morn of the first resurrection. Funeral services conducted by Joseph Arber, assisted by Reverend W. E. Jenkins, of the Methodist Church.

New Book Notes.

To meet the demand in Germany for Mr. George J. Kneeland's Commercialized Prostitution in New York City, arrangements have been made for a German translation of the book, and of the three forthcoming publications to be issued by The Century Co. for the Bureau of Social Hygiene. The translator is Frau Adele Schreiber, of Berlin, a prominent worker in the suffrage movement in Germany, and author of two important works on The Child and The Mother.

Are the Planets Inhabited? by E. Walter Maunder, a new edition to Harper's Library of Living Thought, has just been published by Harper & Brothers. The author, who is Superintendent of the Solar Department at the Greenwich Observatory, first states the factors absolutely necessary for organic life, and then reviews the conditions on each planet, stating the pros and cons in regard to its habitability in the future as well as the present. The "canal" theory of Mars is discussed in several chapters.

"Pluck wins. It always wins,
 Though days be slow,
 And nights be dark 'twixt days that Come and go.
 Still pluck will win. Its average is sure.
 He gains the prize who can the most endure,
 Who faces issues, he who never shirks,
 Who waits and watches, and who always works."

The heavens themselves run continually round; and the world is never still; the sun travels to the east and to the west; the moon is ever changing in its course; the stars and planets have their constant motions; the air we breathe is My Mission.

I was longing for a mission—
 Fancy made it something grand—
 Something that would win the praises
 Of the world on every hand.
 So I squandered time in waiting
 For the chance that never came—
 Quite forgot to think of others
 In my longings after fame.

But one day I had a vision
 Of the needy ones near by—
 Of the hearts that starve with hunger
 Till they faint, and fall, and die,
 Starve for little deeds of kindness,
 Or a word of hope and cheer,
 And the smiles that cost so little
 But can make it heaven here.

Then it was I found my mission—
 Knew what work God meant for me,
 And I cried, "Forgive my blindness,
 Now, at last, thank God, I see."
 And my heart, that had been selfish
 In its longing to be great,
 Saw great fields of labor waiting
 For me just outside my gate.

So I seek to scatter sunshine
 In a dark and cheerless place.
 Loving words have given courage;
 Smiles have cheered the tearful face.
 In the joy of helping others
 God's good time I waste no more,
 Since my life has found its mission
 Waiting at the very door.

A New Book of Sermons

The Gospel Messenger

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c.

Order No. 248a.

Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa

A New Edition of the Doctrine and Covenants

By order of General Conference a committee was appointed to correct all typographical errors, also Section 22 of the Doctrine and Covenants. This has been done and the book is now ready. It contains a valuable addition in the form of a new concordance. All the revelations up to date are included. You will need this edition.

HE THAT ENDURETH TO THE END.

(Synopsis of the funeral sermon of Elder Edmund C. Briggs. Delivered at Lamoni, Iowa, July 6, 1913. by Elbert A. Smith.)

He that endureth to the end shall be saved.—Matthew 10: 22.

Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain. And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible.—1 Corinthians 9: 24, 25.

For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.—2 Timothy 4: 6-8.

We have met this afternoon for no ordinary purpose. We are here as representatives of the church, to pay a well-earned tribute to the memory of one whose life was so inextricably interwoven in the early history of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints that his name is a household word among many church members. And so long as time shall last, he who loves to read the history of this church will find recorded there the name of Elder E. C. Briggs.

I think we can truly say of Brother Briggs that he had finished his course. He had lived beyond the allotted age of man. So far as we know he had kept the faith; at least we have never known him to deny his Lord and Master or to repudiate the cause in which he was engaged for so many years; and we can truly say that he fought a good fight, particularly during the early years of his ministry.

IN THE "DARK AND CLOUDY DAY."

Those who knew him only as an aged man must read the early history of the church in order to appreciate that which he did. His work began during that period of the church's history which is properly termed the "dark and cloudy day." The church having lost its leaders at the hands of the mob was driven and scattered and broken into many factions and fragments, and thousands of isolated Saints were scattered throughout the land, holding allegiance to none of these factions. Iniquity had come in like a flood, and men were teaching in the name of God that which was corrupt.

All honor should be given to those men who in that crisis of the history of the church stood against the opposition of the world, refusing to go with the world and renounce their faith, and declining to follow those members of the church who had gone into apostasy, or to adopt those doctrines to which we have had reference.

Prominent among those men was Elder E. C. Briggs. He was baptized during July, 1852, the exact date not appearing upon the church records, and was ordained the day of his baptism, so that for sixty-one years he served his Lord in the Melchisedec priesthood.

His first mission was appointed him by the autumn conference, September 20, 1856, so that with the exception of short intervals he has been in the active missionary work in one capacity or another for about fifty-seven years. For a period of time during those early years he constituted the entire missionary force of the church.

Men go out to-day representing the church, conscious of the fact that hundreds of others are standing by their side in that work. But think what it meant to stand alone in those days. There were no organized quorums to back him up in his work; there was no bishop to call upon for financial aid; there was no publishing house to assist him with literature. Faith and courage were required to uphold him in his mission.

A REMARKABLE PROPHECY.

November 18, 1851, Elder Jason W. Briggs received a revelation having prophetic qualities, by which it may be tested. In that revelation they were told that the Lord would raise up one of the seed of Joseph to preside over the high priesthood, that the quorums of the church should be reassembled; and that Zion should be reinhabited; all these things to be fulfilled after many days.

At a later date the prophecy was made more specific when a revelation was given to Zenos H. Gurley, sr., in which it was stated that the successor to Joseph Smith should be Joseph, his son.

THE PROPHECY FULFILLED.

At the time Elder Jason W. Briggs's revelation was received President Smith was only nineteen years of age, and there was nothing to indicate to human wisdom that he would ever take his father's place or interest himself in the work of the church. Yet these people confidently went forth, announcing that prophecy, and persisted in it, even when they failed to receive encouragement from President Smith himself.

In time the prophecy was fulfilled and this man did take his father's place and has presided over the high priesthood for a period of fifty-three years. The quorums have been reassembled, and though at that time the Reorganization had no organized quorums, and though for many years the leading quorums were only partially filled, after a lapse of many days we have seen all of the quorums filled and set in order.

When the revelation was given, so far as we know, there was not a single Latter Day Saint living in Independence or vicinity, and public sentiment was such that they could not have remained there. But Zion has been reinhabited, and to-day there are probably five thousand Saints living in the Independence Stake, including men of the leading quorums who live there as honored citizens. All can see the fulfillment of the prophecy, but it required a man of the type of Brother E. C. Briggs to go out and proclaim it to the world when there was so little apparent prospect that it would ever come to pass.

Another feature of his work that I wish to mention this afternoon was his mission to Utah. This mission was opened August 7, 1863, and he enjoyed the distinction of being the pioneer missionary to Utah. The Congregational Church opened a mission there one year later, the Methodists seven years later, and the Baptists eighteen years later.

With characteristic promptness he called upon Brigham Young as soon as possible after arriving in Salt Lake City, and stated to him plainly the mission of the Reorganization, which was to preach the gospel, proclaim against polygamy, and invite members of the church back to the old paths. He was warned that so far as the Mormon Church had influence every house in Utah would be closed against him, and was told that he remained at his own risk.

Knowing full well what that threat meant in those days, he remained with unbounded courage, holding his first service in the house of a Gentile, that of the Honorable Judge Waite, and prosecuted his mission with zeal and vigor, securing the conversion of a large number of people.

AN INCIDENT RELATED BY GENERAL CONNOR.

We understand that General Connor, at that time in command of the United States troops stationed at Salt Lake City, in the course of an address delivered at San Diego, California, some years later, declared that Elder Briggs was the bravest man that he had ever met. He related an incident that came under his notice.

Elder Briggs had come into the tabernacle to attend the services upon an occasion when Brigham Young was in the stand. Mr. Young started out to denounce the Reorganization, and with customary brutality referred to him as a "long-legged devil" that had come from the East to teach them heresy. If he thought that he could browbeat and intimidate Elder Briggs simply because he was young, and one against thousands, he was mistaken in his man. Brother Briggs immediately arose and began to defend himself against the onslaught. No one in Utah at that time had dared to do such a thing as that. It was a dramatic moment. It requires courage to enter an assembly and present an unpopular message when one is aware that all present are opposed to him. In this instance this man was a thousand miles from home and friends and surrounded by people whose spirit was well known to him, some of whom, he felt, would not hesitate to take his life.

He was not permitted to proceed very far in his defense until Brigham ordered him to be seated. Upon his refusal to do so a policeman was called in who ordered him to be seated. Turning to him, Elder Briggs said, "Sir, I respect your authority, but I do not respect the authority of that man on the stand." He was right in the position. He respected the authority of the civil officer who represented the community, but did not respect the spiritual authority of Brigham Young, neither his right to attack an individual in public and refuse him the privilege of self-defense.

Elder Briggs was ordained president of Seventy April 6, 1860, and an apostle, October 6 of the same year. The latter office he held until he was ordained an evangelist and patriarch April 20, 1902.

GENERAL APPLICATION OF THE TEXT.

Our scriptural reading has a personal application which we have already considered; it also has a general application inasmuch as it is said: "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Brother Briggs has finished his course. His record is made; nothing that we can do or say will alter it; but with us who are met here this afternoon the situation is different. The questions, Will I endure to the end? and, Will you endure to the end? remain yet to be answered. Will we fight the good fight, finish our course, and keep the faith? These are problems that remain unsolved.

It is our purpose to glean from this occurrence a lesson that may impress our minds with the importance of these questions. Consider the priceless character of this crown.

THE CROWN TO EVERY MAN WHO DOES HIS BEST.

Paul speaks about those who run in a race, borrowing his illustration from the Greek races, where all the contestants ran, but only one could be crowned, and that with a corruptible crown of laurel leaves that was destined very speedily to fade away. We, however, are engaged in a contest in which every contestant may be crowned, and that with a crown that is incorruptible and eternal. It is not the man who excels all others who will be crowned. Every man who does his best will receive the reward. There may be others better, swifter, or more talented and more intellectual than we; but if we do our best we shall receive the reward. That is all that God asks of any man. Others may run far beyond us and climb far above us, but if we do our very best and continue to the end we shall receive that reward that is laid up for the faithful.

One year ago to-day the nations met in the great Olympian games at Stockholm, Sweden. Representatives of all the nations took part in the great Marathon race over a course of about twenty-four miles in length. Scores of men contended for the prize under the intense heat of a July day. They knew that only one man could be crowned, and that with a corruptible crown. Yet men died and men went insane in their struggle for the victory and at last a few tottered over the mark at the end of the course.

If they could put forth such almost superhuman efforts to earn the passing mark of victory, how strenuous should we be in struggling after that crown which is eternal, which is given all who endure to the end.

CAN MEN FALL AND FAIL?

We are sometimes asked the question, Can a man fall away after having embraced the gospel? And some reply, "Once in grace, always in grace," while others assume that men become sanctified so that it is impossible for them to sin. Since the dawn of time man has been seeking some short road to salvation and eternal happiness. He tries to find some mystic rite or ceremony that will take away his sins and insure salvation, without the labor and pains that go with good works and the acquiring of virtue, honor, and integrity, and all that goes to make Christian character.

It seems almost that some Latter Day Saints imagine that they have found such a mysterious rite in the ordinance of baptism. Is it not written that "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved?" Having been baptized they seem to imagine that they are saved for ever, even though they may continue in the world, and of the world, and go with the world in all things.

But there is no promise made without conditions. This promise is qualified by the statement that he that endureth to the end shall be saved, uttered by the same lips that gave the promise of salvation to those who believed and were baptized.

Sometimes we meet those who seem to imagine that in their patriarchal blessing they have found that mysterious power wherein they have been promised or told that they were sealed up unto everlasting life. There is a possibility that such statements may be misunderstood, and that a fatal mistake may result. In order to correct such an error we refer to the fact that at the time of the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, when the ordinance of the washing of feet was observed it was stated that those who took part therein were cleansed from the blood of that generation and sealed up unto life eternal; but the Prophet adds the following significant statement: "But if any of them should sin willfully after they were thus cleansed and sealed up unto life eternal, they should be given over unto the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption."—Church History, vol. 1, p. 278.

The Apostle Paul at one time expressed a fear that, having saved others, he himself might become shipwrecked. If the strong, spiritual apostle who had seen Jesus in vision feared lest he might fall away, it would seem that inferior men should hesitate before announcing that they are so sanctified that it is impossible for them to fall.

In writing to the Galatians, Paul declared that it was a marvel to him that some of them were so soon removed from the gospel. Addressing the Philippian saints he exhorted them to work out their salvation with fear and trembling. Why should they fear and tremble? Evidently not because of any lack of power on the part of God, but because of that human weakness against which man must for ever guard himself.

In the thirteenth chapter of Matthew, Jesus presents the parable of the sower, in which he states that many receive the word gladly and it springs up but does not mature because there is no depth of soil. While others permit brambles and briers, or in other words, the cares and pleasures of this world and the deceitfulness of riches, to choke out the word which they have received.

In the sixth chapter of Hebrews we are told that it is possible for an individual to partake of the good things of the kingdom, to receive the Holy Ghost and have the heavens opened to him, and then to fall away so that he can not again be renewed to repentance.

Some of the disciples at one time, offended at the teachings of Jesus, turned away and refused to follow him further. Jesus turned to the apostles and said, "Will ye also go away?" The impulsive Peter replied, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. And we believe and are sure that thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

That is a question that we should carefully consider if tempted to turn aside. Where shall we go? For in this church we certainly have the words of eternal life. We have all the truth that any other people have and much that no other church has.

WHY DOES GOD PERMIT MEN TO TURN BACK?

We might ask the question, Why does God permit individuals to fall? And to this we reply that God does not want a people who can not sin. He desires a people who are so educated that they will not sin. Jesus declared at one time that he would not call his disciples servants, that he would call them friends. It is impossible to compel a friend, for the moment you compel him he ceases to be a friend and becomes a servant. We do not compel our friends to walk with us. If they do not come of their own free will we do not care to have their company. God compels no man to walk a mile with him. At any time when we choose to do so, we may turn back. And of all those who have turned back and fallen away it is perhaps true that they did so, not because they could not go further, but because they did not care to continue.

God will help the man who desires to go on, no matter how weak he may be. But the sin of humanity is indifference. They do not care. And we are told that the reason that many will not receive the celestial glory is because they do not care to abide by the celestial law. That is one reason why men fall away.

WHY DO MEN TURN BACK?

When we seek for other reasons, or rather for other excuses that are offered, there being in many instances a difference between an excuse and a reason, we find that they are too numerous to catalogue.

Some turn back because they hear some of these old stories that are told against the church. They reason that where there is so much smoke there must be some fire, and where there are so many stories there must be some foundation for them, forgetting that it has been the work of Satan from the beginning of time to make it appear that there is something wrong with the work of God, and that he has spared no effort to pile these stories so high and paint them so black that individuals might conclude that there was indeed something wrong.

Some, like the disciples of old, become dissatisfied with certain doctrines of the church and turn away.

Others, as the Master expressed it in his parable, receive the word gladly but permit the deceitfulness of riches, the cares of life, and the pleasures of this world to occupy their hearts to the exclusion of better things.

Men are too busy with the affairs of this world to serve the Lord; too busy to pray in secret; too busy to attend the house of prayer.

Then there are men who become offended at the faults and failings of others. We will never be crowned because of the faults and failings of other men. We must work out our own salvation, do our own duty and merit the crown, or we shall never receive it.

Others become contaminated with the spirit of habitual faultfinding. Constructive criticism is sometimes beneficial; but that spirit of habitual faultfinding that always sees faults and errors in others and never in one's self soon destroys an individual's spirituality.

HOW SHALL WE STAND?

How, then, shall we stand? We are instructed in the Book of Covenants that we shall both study and pray. We should study church books and publications so that we may be thoroughly grounded in doctrine and in the evidences of the divinity of the work; we should also pray continually that we may receive divine aid from on high. We should receive the assurance that was granted to Peter, who replied to the Master's query, "Whom say ye that I am?" by saying, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Christ replied, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven."

The divinity of Jesus is the great fact underlying the church. We should be assured of that fact; and if we have received the assurance that the gospel is divine, and the work that we represent established by the Lord, we will be enabled to stand and to endure to the end. The world may attack us and persecute us, and misrepresent us in every manner, but thus fortified they can not overthrow us.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

TRouble AMONG THE CHURCH OF CHRIST PEOPLE.—We have received clippings from Kansas City and Independence papers setting forth difficulties that have occurred in the Church of Christ, commonly known as the Hedrickite Church, of Independence, Missouri. It seems that these people have deposed their former president, James A. Hedrick, son of Granville Hedrick, from the leadership of the church, and put in his place George P. Frisbey. We gather from the clippings that Elder Hedrick, anticipating trouble, appealed to the circuit court for an injunction restraining them from this action. It seems that the court declined to restrain the church from electing its own presiding officer, but did restrain them from removing him from his office as one of the trustees of the Temple Lot and excommunicating him from the church, until a further hearing could be had. Whether or not these reports are absolutely correct we are unable to say at this time, but will endeavor to give full and correct details at a later date.

BROTHER GREENE TO SAIL.—We learn that Brother U. W. Greene is to sail from New York City July 23, in company with Brother Koehler, for his mission field in Jerusalem. It is expected that they will visit Egypt and other points of interest en route.

SOME POLEMIC.—Writing in the Octographic Review with reference to the Long-Roberts debate held recently, Elder W. G. Roberts, among other things, says: "From there I went to Burlington, Iowa, where I held a fourteen-session debate, with Elder E. E. Long. He was much weaker in this debate than in either of the other two I held with him. He tried so hard to keep Mormonism in the background so I could not get hold of it and expose it. But the people had to know Joe Smith was a lying sheep-thief, hog-thief, horse-thief, etc., a drunken polygamist, and died a millionaire. He died a murderer, and the Bible says no murderer can enter the kingdom of heaven. Joe was also proven a liar, and the Bible says the Devil is the father of all liars, hence I concluded Joe went to hell to see his old dad, and his father is making him stay home. His father won't let him come back here to be worshiped as 'God' any more." This is a fair sample of Elder Roberts's stock in trade.

ADMITTED TO BAR.—In speaking with reference to law students passing the examination for admission to the Missouri bar, the Jackson County Examiner for June 27, says: "Israel A. Smith of this city was also in the list of new lawyers. He is a son of Joseph Smith, president of the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church, and has been for some time acting as private secretary to his father." Brother Smith was some time ago admitted to the bar in Iowa. He resigned his position as managing editor of the HERALD to serve his father as secretary, and the church in that connection. His law studies have been pursued together with other work, and outside of any law school.

There are latent forces within us, and living, active forces all about us, for the marvelous uplift of each, if we but knew their powers and used them.—H. Everett Chase.

Liberation.

Oh! many mournful days have flown,
Since first amid our family band,
Death came and stole our darling one,
And bore him to the spirit land.

Yet shined with many a sad, sweet thought,
That loved one's memory lingers still;
For oh! he left a void that naught
But mournful thoughts can fill.

Days and months have passed, and yet
It only seems the other day
Since round his bier we met,
With breaking hearts to weep and pray.

And when the funeral rite was said,
They bore him from our darkened home,
And left him with the silent dead,
A pale-faced tenant of the tomb.

And though at times we tried to smile
Serenely for each other's sake,
We wept in secret all the while
As if our hearts would break.

Yet why should death be linked with fear?
A single breath, a low-drawn sigh
Can break the ties that bind us here,
And waft the spirit to the sky.

A sudden end, a quick release,
No clinging to this mortal clod;
His eyes were closed, he stood in peace
Before an all-wise God.

ETTA ALLBRIGHT.

The Prayer.

"He leadeth me, oh blessed thought,
Beside the waters still."
And with the words she bowed her head,
Obedient to his will.

What though the world in strife should knock
Against the lowly door;
His rod, his staff, doth comfort her,
And grief can come no more.

"Through pastures green" that stretch away
Through all eternity,
What matter all the weary strife
To spirits thus set free?

Oh mother, with the folded hands
Upon her tired breast,
The valley and the shadow passed,
In perfect peace find rest.

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM

OR

THE CURRENT REFORMATION IN CONTRAST WITH TRUTH REVEALED.—PART-11.

BY E. E. LONG.

THE CAMPBELLITE CREED.

The devotees of Campbellism deny that they have a "creed" other than the Bible, and they affirm that they are the Church of Christ of the first century, built upon the Bible and the Bible alone. It is true they do not have a "confession of faith" as most other sectarians do; that is, an arrangement of certain articles of belief to which candidates are compelled to subscribe. Yet Mr. Campbell's Christian System, which covers the ground of a creed, is a classical and standard work with both factions; and it sets forth in an orderly manner the entire Christian economy according to his interpretation of the New Testament. What is the essential difference between it and any other creed? The creeds treat on the Godhead, Holy Spirit, church organization, the communion, duties of members, etc., etc., and so does the Christian System. The creeds refer to some one or more passages of scripture to sustain their ideas, and so does the System.

In the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, page 424, we find this:

"Creed; a form of words in which the articles of faith are comprehended." "Church Discipline; the application in a Christian church of those principles and rules derived from divine authority, with regard to the purity, order, peace and useful efficiency of its members."—P. 464.

Chambers says creeds

are nothing else than the varying expressions of the Christian consciousness and reason, in their efforts more completely to realize, comprehend and express the originally simple elements of truth as they are recorded in scripture.

Beginning on page 91 of the Christian System, Mr. Campbell presents fifteen articles under the caption "The Christian Discipline," in which we are told how members are to be received into local congregations; how transgressors are to be dealt with; who may hear the case, and how to proceed, etc. This chapter is only a little part of the "System."

Before me is another production by Daniel Sommer, of the nonprogressive faction, entitled, "Concerning Church Government," in which he defines the church, and treats upon the duties and qualifications of officers, procedure in the selection of officers, church discipline, duties of members, etc., after the manner of any other creed.

Again, I have before me the Christian Minister's Manual for the use of church officers in the various relations of evangelists, pastors, bishops, and deacons, by F. M. Green, published by the Christian Publishing Company, of Saint Louis. A brief glance at the "contents," and we excerpt the following: "How to proceed to 'set in order'"; "The bishop's office," "Duties," "Qualifications"; "Duties of the deacons"; "Official meetings"; "Organization of a church"; "A church covenant"; and all other matters of church policy, including ordination, burial, and other ceremonies, with prayers. If this same book were put out by Methodists or Baptists, the "Campbellites would pounce upon it as a relic of popery.

Lest we be charged with misrepresenting them, we herewith present a few "rules," and "forms," beginning with the Church Covenant.

We, the undersigned, having been immersed upon confession of our faith in Christ, do unite to form a Church of Christ in —; and having already covenanted with God in Christ, do hereby covenant with each other that we will keep all the ordinances and commandments of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, agreeing to be governed in our personal conduct and in our church relations and obligations by the Law of Christ, as taught in the New Testament, and pledging each other to do all in our power to promote the peace, unity and prosperity of this church, and to extend the kingdom of Christ in all the world. In testimony whereof, we affix our respective names, on this, the . . . day . . . , A. D. 188. . . —Christian Minister's Manual, p. 33.

The selection of officers.

1. When the time and the necessity arise for officers, whether elders or deacons, or as in the case of a new organization, both the evangelist or other leader, should call the attention of the congregation to the general and specific qualifications which these officers must possess. 1 Timothy 3: 1-13; Titus 1: 5-16. These passages from the apostolic directions should be carefully and conscientiously studied.

2. The congregation should then select from its membership the persons possessing these qualifications. Acts 6: 3; and 13: 1-11. Their selection may be made by lot or by ballot. Acts 1: 12, 26.—Pp. 33, 34.

The following outline of ordination ceremonies may be used at the ordination of evangelists, elders or deacons:

1. A sermon suitable to the occasion may be preached by some preacher chosen for the purpose.

2. A brief statement by the presiding officer to the church as follows:

We have met to-day to ordain A. B. as a minister of the word (or elder or deacon, as the case may be). I submit to this meeting the following evidence of the fitness of this brother (or these brethren), for the position (or positions) to which he (or they) has been chosen. (Here state the previous action of the church (or churches if an evangelist), in "looking out from among them" this person (or persons) for the special service of the church.) Now if there is a member here, who knows a reason why this ordination should not now take place, let him here and now give such reason or for ever hold his peace.

3. The candidates for ordination are invited to take seats provided for them in front of the congregation.

Do you still desire, and is it your wish that these brethren (name them one by one) shall be ordained as the unanimously chosen officers of this congregation? And do you acknowledge them as having full ecclesiastical authority to officiate for you in the office to which you have chosen them? (The congregation should arise in token of its assent.)

Before ordination, the following questions should be asked of the candidate.

(a) A. B. Is it your desire to preach the word of God? Answer. It is.

Do you promise before God and this congregation, that you will study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth? Answer. I do.

Do you promise that you will exercise the office, with which you are hereby invested in the name of the Lord, according to the true intent and meaning of the new institution as you shall give account to God at his glorious appearing and kingdom, and preach the word, be instant in season, out of season; that you will reprove, rebuke and exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine; that you will not shun to declare the whole counsel of God; and that you will keep yourself pure, watch in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry? Answer. By the grace of God I will so endeavor to live, and to do.

(b) C. D. Do you desire the work of an elder? Answer. I do.

Do you accept it willingly, and will you strive to be blameless, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, hospitable, apt to teach, taking heed to yourself and the flock in which the Holy Spirit hath made you overseer? Answer. By the grace of God I will.

(c) E. F. Is it your desire to accept the work of a deacon? Answer. It is.

Will you assume the duties of this office according to the word of God and strive to live in all gravity and sincerity before God and before men? Answer. I will.

4. Prayer before ordination.

5. The candidates then kneel, and two or three evangelists or elders join in putting hands on the head of the candidate, one of them saying:

(a) A. B. We do hereby ordain you to the solemn and responsible work of the ministry of God's word. At your own request and by the approval of the church, you are hereby set apart to preach the word and to do the work of an evangelist. May God give you wisdom to make "full proof of thy ministry."

(b) C. D. By your own willing conduct and desire, and by the unanimous voice of this church, you are hereby ordained to the office of elder in this church. May God give you wisdom to "rule well" and to "feed the church of God which he purchased with his own blood."

(c) E. F. We do also ordain you to the office and work of deacon in this church. May the Lord give you wisdom to use the office well that you may purchase to yourself a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus. Amen.—Ibid., pp. 35-38.

Say, reader, does not the foregoing sound just a little creedish? Turn and read the ordination ceremonies of most any church discipline and note the similarity. This "Manual" defines the duties of the officers, gives baptismal formulas, prayers to be offered on various occasions, marriage ceremonies, funeral rites, sermon outlines; and, in fact, it resembles a creed all but the name. Yes, it is a real Campbellite creed of the progressive type. Then why should they be everlastingly lambasting somebody else about creeds?

"But," we are told, "nothing of the kind has ever been made binding upon the consciences of the Disciples as a bond of union by action of a church council or convention."

Perhaps not; but every local church which practices the foregoing forms adopts them, and by the law of usage they become the creed of the congregation.

The "progressives" are at least one precedent ahead of the antis, who do not believe in the laying on of hands, as the following seems to indicate:

But since inspired men have ceased to be in the church the only way we can receive the sanction of the Holy Spirit is by becoming such characters as the Holy Spirit requires us to be. Then we have such sanction, and when we have it we do not need the laying on of uninspired hands on our uninspired heads.—Church Government, p. 24.

We are willing to concede, however, that the one has as much authority as the other; neither of them have any more than what emanates from the congregation, and the laying on of their "uninspired hands" adds nothing to the virtue of their call. It is mere mimicry.

Mr. Campbell says of the popular creeds, "No human creed in Protestant Christendom can be found that has not made a division for every generation of its existence."—Christian System, p. 116; and so of Campbellism. They split over the "law of expediency," one of the principal articles of the creed.

He says further:

But the Bible will do no better if men approach it with a set of opinions or a human symbol in their minds. For then it is not the Bible, but the opinions in the mind, that form the bond of union. Men, indeed, had better have a written than an unwritten standard of orthodoxy, if they will not abandon speculation and abstract notions as any part of Christian faith or duty.—Page 117.

Just so. The Disciples approach it with the idea in mind that it is the "Spirit's perfect revelation," and then proceed to form an opinion as to just what portions of it were intended to be perpetual; and that opinion limits some of the most prominent features of the primitive church to the apostolic age. One faction forms the opinion that the laying on of hands is necessary in ordination, the other faction has a different opinion; one faction approaches it and forms the opinion that missionary societies, Sunday schools, ministerial salaries, and the big organ, are all scriptural, the other faction approaches it and they form the opinion that such things are "sectarian innovations," and so on ad infinitum. In the language of Mr. Campbell, "Surely such sectaries and sects are 'the work of the flesh.'"

Mr. Campbell's idea of sectaries and creeds is summed up after this fashion:

So many items of the apostles' doctrine and so many notions of Calvin combined produce the compound called Calvinism. So many items of Luther's opinions, compounded with the apostles' teaching, make Lutheranism. And so many portions of Wesley's speculations, compounded with certain portions of the New Testament, make the compound called Methodism. The Christian ingredients in these compounds, so far as they are not neutralized by the human alloy, make the Christians among them; while the alloy makes the sectary.—Christian System, p. 109.

To the above we would just add: Campbell's "law of expediency," combined with certain portions of the New Testament, produce the compound of Campbellism, the principal part of which is alloy, and along with all other sects and creeds we reject it, because Mr. Campbell says on the same page, "For all sects have been originated by false teachers or by corrupt men."

And again, page 110:

Finally, while endeavoring to abolish the old sects, let us be cautious that we form not a new one. This may be done by either adding to, or subtracting from, the apostolic constitution a single item.

Now let us try them by their own rule. They have subtracted the majority of the New Testament church officers; the baptism of the Holy Spirit, with its various gifts of visions, dreams, prophecy, tongues, healing, etc.; the laying on of hands, and other items too numerous to mention here; while they have added missionary boards, male and female, salaried for the ministry, etc., until we feel justified in quoting Mr. Campbell again and turning his thunder against them:

From the preceding inductions it will appear, we presume, very evident to all, that we need neither telescopes nor microscopes to detect heresies in the New Testament sense of that word. They are neither more nor less than sects—plain, palpable sects and parties.—Christian System, pp. 110, 111.

Such was the teaching of the early pioneers of the movement, but fifty years' experience taught the progressive element that the "anticeed doctrine was a boomerang," so they concluded it would be better to have some kind of a standard of interpretation, and they have begun to reduce their creed to writing.

A more recent writer fittingly describes their efforts under the old regime:

They had been intensely aggressive in their evangelistic and proselyting efforts, though their methods had in them very little of regularity and their organization no compactness or consistency. Their movement seemed to have little or no direction for the first fifty years. Their success seems to have depended upon the potency of the principles they advocated rather than upon any wisdom of management or co-operation. It was a huge locomotive, under full steam, let loose upon the track, without engineer or conductor. It was a great power, but it was largely a power without direction, or any competent generalship to guide it to definite and permanent results.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 263.

The runaway is still at large, "dashing down stream" at break-neck speed, with no signs of abatement in their "atrabilarious" condition.

After a careful "introspection" of discord of almost a century duration, another writer in the same volume says:

Happy church, where sectarianism shall first be swept away in an inundation of love and joy, whose communion shall first break forth into the purest and holiest, and yet most comprehensive, of all communions—the communion of the Holy Ghost! Would to God that church were ours.—P. 374.

No, kind reader, with all their "self-evolved efforts" of more than a hundred years' duration, they have utterly failed to restore the "faith once delivered to the saints." There is a lack which their inventive genius can not supply, and that deficiency is the "Living Water" (John 4: 10, 14), which the world can not receive (14: 17). Without this "unction from on high" there can be no knowledge of God. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost" (1 Corinthians 12: 3); "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17: 3); "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself" (John 7: 17); "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God" (Romans 8: 16); "He shall testify of me" (John 15: 26).

DISTRIBUTING LITERATURE.

No. 12. "Methods and Tactics Series."

It seems that the time has come in many communities when the distribution of literature is the only way of reaching the people with the gospel. What with picture shows, theaters, social fetes, baseball games, etc., to contend with, as well as the want of proper places of worship to which to invite the people, we have simply to carry the gospel to their doors and ask their personal consideration of our claims. This, backed up by the prayer of faith, will accomplish that which in many cases the preaching of the word can not do, because the people will not come out to hear.

At different times and in various places I with others have engaged in the work of distributing our literature among the people. We have not always followed the same methods. At times we have gone from house to house giving our tracts away and engaging the people in gospel conversation as opportunity was afforded. At other times we have loaned small tracts, returning later and collecting them, replacing them with others. Sometimes we have sold our books from door to door, and while really selling only a few, we had the satisfaction of explaining our work and advertising our meetings in our effort to sell a book.

But I believe that this year, in New Westminster, British Columbia, Sister Pope and I engaged in the most successful and systematic work of getting the people to read that it has ever been my privilege to take part in; and that others may receive the benefit of our experience I write this article.

In December, 1912, I reached New Westminster. The Saints there are few and meet in a private house for services. Though preaching is done there every Sunday, and missionary efforts have been made from time to time to reach the people, the results have been poor from the fact that the citizens, with the exception of a very few, failed to attend the meetings.

Sister Pope and I agreed that if the people would not come to us we would go to the people. Brother H. Butterfield bought one hundred and fifty of the Marvelous Work and a Wonder to be given away, loaned, or sold, as we sat fit. The Saints united with us in petitioning the Lord to bless our work, and we started out in a campaign against sin and darkness.

We took with us each day about one dozen copies of the book, and a few of the larger tracts published by the church, particularly The Church of Jesus Christ, and Why I Became a Latter Day Saint. We also carried a pass book and a pencil. We had besought the Almighty for special direction regarding what part of the city to visit, but receiving no intimation of his will, we used our best judgment and commenced work, believing it wise to follow the instruction:

In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they shall be alike good.—Ecclesiastes 11: 6.

When we reached the street on which we had decided to begin operations, we called at each house, and presenting a copy of the Marvelous Work, we explained the nature of the book, and asked them to accept it for a couple of weeks, when we would call again and get it. At each house we made clear the distinction between the Reorganized Church and the church in Utah, and referred them to the last chapter in the book for proof. But we found later that many stopped reading when they came to the chapter on the Book of Mormon, deciding we were Mormons, notwithstanding our statement. We then procured a number of the tract The Church in Court, and with each Marvelous Work we loaned one of these, asking them to read the tract first. This proved very successful, and did away with the misunderstanding which had formerly ensued.

We invariably presented a copy of the Marvelous Work first. If the people excused themselves for want of time, and we could not persuade them to take the larger book, we offered a smaller tract, and told them we would call for it in a couple of weeks.

We made a note on our pass book of the work done or treatment received at each door. This, I believe, has much, very much, to do with successful tracting. To thoroughly understand the ground you are cultivating is half the battle. Upon starting on a street we marked our book thus:

PRINCESS STREET.

No. 1. Mar. Work & Ch. in Court.

No. 3. Mar. Work & Ch. in Court.

No. 5. Out.

No. 7. Refused.

No. 9. Ch. of J. C. (Meaning the tract, Church of Jesus Christ.)

No. 11. Too busy; call again.

The distribution of one dozen books in the time we had to spare in one afternoon was about as much as we could usually accomplish, for the time occupied in talking at each door was considerable, and we thought it better to do well what we did do rather than hurry over a lot of ground and only half do the work. Hence we never hurried away from one house in order to visit another.

In about two weeks we returned to the same street—and this also we found to be important—to return at least near the time we said we would. Promptness on our part saved our books from being lost or burned, and if any degree of interest had been awakened we were there in time to fan the flame, and perchance to keep the birds from taking away the seed that had been sown.

Many read the books. Some only read a part of them, some none, but all heard our statement at the door that the Reorganized Church is different from the Utah Mormons, and nearly all read the tract, The Church in Court.

On our second trip we took with us other books, to follow the Marvelous Work. We usually took a number of the Two-Story Book. This seems to be the most generally accepted book to follow the first, as it is both instructive and entertaining. Not all who had received and read the first book were willing to take the second, but there were invariably from one to three out of every dozen who desired to read more.

When we collected a book we made a note of it in our pass book, and if they accepted another we marked what we had given them, and again we promised to return in a couple of weeks and get our book. As we collected the Marvelous Works from the places we had left them, we called again at the houses marked on our book "Out," "Too busy," etc., and sometimes to those marked "Refused," and frequently were enabled to leave them a Marvelous Work. Whenever we were invited in we gladly accepted the invitation, and usually were enabled to help them to understand our position better.

When we went on our third round, collecting the Two-Story Books, we took with us other books to replace the ones collected. The Old Jerusalem Gospel, or With the Church in an Early Day usually supplied this need. These books were well received and did good work, the former being a book that may be presented at any stage of the reader's advancement, while the latter combines the historical with the doctrinal in such a manner as to enlist the sympathy and enlighten the mind, and proved very helpful at this stage of our work.

We tried The Voice of Warning, but it did not seem to attract the people. For some reason they did not take the interest in this book that they did in the others. Possibly it is not modern enough in style. The Book of Mormon we presented whenever it was asked for. As it is mentioned in all the other books that we gave out, we thought the requests of the people would be our best guide along that line. Several asked for it. Following the above books we used Joseph Smith and His Progenitors. Three families had read this book when we left, and in each case it was well liked.

The good brother who provided us with the Marvelous Works for distribution also offered to send the Ensign to any who would read it. A number are now receiving it. After the first literature was donated by Brother Butterfield the branch took up the matter of providing us with books, and supplied what we needed.

When our list of interested ones became so great that we could not attend to all, we handed the men among them over to Brother Pope, who occupied his spare time on Sunday visiting them. He had happy times among them. We have seen him returning with his face wreathed in smiles after a couple of discussions, from which he bore the trophies of victory.

I am in favor of dealing with good books—I mean books of some value, as they are more likely to be read and preserved; and a few books (a dozen of each kind to follow the first general distribution) will go a long way when loaned and reloaned judiciously, and called for promptly.

In conversation with the people when collecting the books we could often discern their needs, and we did not always follow the general rule. For instance, one lady objected to our work because we did not believe in the sleep of the soul between death and the resurrection. In her case we followed the Marvelous Work with What is Man. Some asked for the Book of Mormon as soon as they had finished the Marvelous Work, and we complied with their request, but the foregoing was the general rule.

We invariably extended the time to the people who had not finished reading a book when we called for it, but calling for it at the proper time acted as a reminder and a prompter. All these things helped to keep their attention on the great truth we were trying to impress upon them.

After about three months' work, going out about two or three afternoons a week, we found we had a list of nineteen or twenty families who had read a number of our books and were continuing to read, besides a host who had read one or two of the books. Some stopped reading, giving as a reason that they did not wish to leave the church with which they were at present associated. But, perchance, they may not find the truths they have learned in what they have read so easily forgotten, and their churchly association may become less sweet as a consequence. We trust the time will come in their lives when they will reconsider their former resolution to read our literature. The seed of truth once planted in the human heart is not easily uprooted, though it will sometimes lie dormant for years.

Some of the people had read The Marvelous Work, The Church in Court, The Two-Story Book, With the Church in an Early Day, Joseph Smith and His Progenitors, and a book of sermons, and still had an appetite for more, which will be supplied them by the Saints there, just as rapidly as they are ready.

A very pleasant feature of our work, (at least very pleasing to us), was the fact that in many cases persons to whom we loaned our books reloaned them to others, and talked with their friends and neighbors about the good things they had learned.

But the work was not nearly all done in handing out literature. We have stated that the Saints unitedly upheld the effort in prayer. Besides this Sister Pope and I had prayer together twice a day for the success of the work, and these seasons of prayer were the power behind the effort. Truly the Lord did mightily pour out his Spirit upon us when we petitioned him for the success of the work. If a public place of preaching could be procured in that city we believe a work of ingathering would soon follow, for certainly much light has been disseminated, and much misunderstanding has been removed.

At different times the Lord manifested to us in dreams and in other ways the condition existing. When we had only a small section of the city covered, we prayed to know what had been accomplished and the following dream was given:

Sister Pope and I stood beside a field which was partly plowed. I was explaining to her how plowing was done.

I said, "First, set a stake at the farther end of the field and then drive straight for that stake. Then let every succeeding furrow correspond with the first."

I said, pointing to the part that was plowed, "That is good plowing. It is perfectly straight and every furrow corresponds with all the rest, and the plowing is deep and the soil is well turned over. But there is much of the field yet to plow, and it will have to be done the same as the first part."

Later on, when we got into the part of the city where they looked with disfavor on our proffered literature and nearly all turned us away from their doors, we besought the Lord for light, and Sister Pope by impression and I in dream were directed alike into another part of the city.

Just before leaving for General Conference we unitedly asked the Lord to let us see what had been accomplished by the distribution of literature in that city. In dream that night we traveled through a forest. Here and there we beheld great clusters of fruit and bunches of flowers. They were beautiful and well developed, still growing on the trees and bushes. As they came to perfection we saw a veil woven around them, inclosing them, but so transparent that we could see the fruit and flowers, spotless and lovely, shining through the gauzelike substance.

Awaking, and not fully understanding the dream, we sought for the interpretation, which was given in another dream in which we were told the fruit and flowers represented the souls being led to the church by our literature, and that as a bee seals over the honeycomb when it is filled with honey to preserve it, so these souls were being preserved for the work of the Lord until the time should come to gather them in. This dream cheered and comforted us. Brother Pope, also, was shown that conditions were not then ripe for gathering them in.

This manner of going over and over the same ground had the advantage of making us acquainted with many of the people, and a number of places became homes for us to visit in. We ever and always took the glorious news of the gospel with us.

One Presbyterian lady, who had read a number of our books and with whom I had become so intimate that I visited her once a week, said with tears in her eyes as I bade her good-bye, "I have many friends who come to see me, but they are not like you, and none of them do me the good you do." Yet this woman knew only of our work through our literature and our visits, resulting from distributing literature; she has never heard a sermon by our ministers, but she requested that I pray for her and write to her.

Some amusing incidents occurred, and some very delightful ones. At one place where we called the lady declared that she belonged to the "Bible Students" and never read any other church literature. We told her that broad-minded people read broadly and accepted truth from any source. She denied being narrow, and to prove that she was not she took a tract. When we called for it, it looked as though it had been read by a dozen people. She returned it very coldly, and when we asked the usual question, "How did you like it?" she replied, "I did not like it at all; it is nothing but trash." We called her attention to the fact that it contained many quotations from the Scriptures, and asked if she considered the Scriptures trash. As the discussion proceeded a lady from within called to us to come in. We needed no second invitation, and as we entered the parlor we found an assembly of "Bible Students" there.

The lady of the house handed each of them a Bible, but to us she gave no Bible. We were Latter Day Saints, however, and we thought we could remember some things we had read in that good book. Well, the battle was on, and we were in it in earnest. There were five against two, and their five all talked; but we chose to let one of our number talk while the other silently but strongly held up her hands in fervent, effectual prayer. Scripture answers to their various questions and objections flowed swiftly through the mind and over the tongue, and for about half an hour there was no time lost; and then, we were left in full possession, for the ladies all with one consent began to make excuses that they must go home.

Our hostess, after they were gone, addressed us kindly, for the first time, and said she was glad she had met us. At a later period we met another of that company and she received us so cordially that it almost took our breath away, for we had gone to her door prepared for trouble.

A peculiar feature of this discussion was that Sister Lillian Pope, who was at home and knew nothing of what was transpiring, was impressed that we needed her prayers, and she arose from the piano and knelt in prayer for us just about the time we were in that meeting. So does the Lord care for his work, and surely the Spirit rested upon us in power while we talked.

In our visitations we found two different parties to whom the Utah Mormons had given literature. Both parties had received their doctrines willingly until they discovered that they still believed in the "grosser crimes" condemned by Jacob of old. This they could not indorse, and there they stopped their investigation. When we came to them with the unadulterated gospel they received our books gladly, and recommenced their investigation of the restored gospel. We asked to see the literature left by the Utah people and found that they also dealt in books of some value; one of them being a nice book on the restoration of the gospel in the latter days, and another, which we found in both homes, a nicely bound volume of the Book of Mormon. We believe this class of literature has something to do with their success as missionaries.

We remembered the children in the homes where we were enabled to arouse an interest in our work in one or both of the parents. In some instances we took them Hopes, but in two instances we gave them a copy of the Gospel Quarterly suited to their ages, and in both cases the children came to Sunday school afterwards.

One Saturday afternoon we went out for a walk and unexpectedly found ourself in front of a store where we had left books with the lady from time to time, but where the gentleman had expressed the desire not to see us. We forgot that it was Saturday, when the men have a half holiday, and as usual we went in to see the lady. Imagine our surprise when we found ourself face to face with the man of the house. We had called on gospel work and as we had no other excuse for being there, we determined to make the best of it. We talked on general lines for a little while, then gradually drifted onto the subject of religion. We discovered that he had soured on all kinds of religion, and as we had lost faith in all except one, we agreed beautifully on the graft and greed practiced in the name of religion. After settling the question of the false to the satisfaction of us both, we drew his attention to the fact that there was one honorable exception—The Church of Jesus Christ, reorganized in latter days.

He listened patiently to our explanations and then remarked: "It is hard to tell who is right when all claim to be right."

We replied, "God has given us two tests by which we may learn the truth about this matter; you can try either, or both, and it will solve the question. One is, 'Search the Scriptures,' and compare that which claims to be the church with the word of God. If it harmonizes in every point you may be sure it is right, but if it does not harmonize you may be just as sure it is wrong."

The lady spoke out and said, "I have done that with your church, and I know that it compares with the word of God."

The man said, "Well, I don't know."

I then gave them the other test. "Ask of God," and declared to them that he is just as approachable as he used to be and just as readily moved by the prayer of faith. Assurance beamed in the gentleman's face as he exclaimed with feeling, "I believe that; I believe that God will reveal himself to any who will seek him, and not get weary asking, until they receive."

I then arose to leave, and, as I did so, I suggested that they send their children to our Sunday school, and come themselves and see what they were being taught, instead of sending them to a Sunday school where they knew they were not going to get the proper kind of food. They did not promise, but next day we had the pleasure of greeting their five happy little ones at our Sunday school and they have been coming ever since.

We can not explain this visit, made unexpectedly as it was, only as the result of the guiding hand of God.

Frequently Sister Irene Pope, a girl of fifteen, accompanied me in our tract work. I soon realized from her such a spirit of help, such an impartation of courage and strength as I had never felt from anyone so young before, though she was always a silent partner when in company. Fear is unknown to her heart, and her perfect confidence in the gospel made itself felt in what I believe to be the gift of helps: A helpful influence infusing strength in others. This sister, the only member of the church in school, raised her voice in defense of the character of Joseph Smith when the teacher was misrepresenting him before the school last winter.

By letter from Sister Pope we learn that the good work still goes on. She and others are keeping up the interest, and some who had refused to read more are again investigating the work.

Let no one think the work is all sunshine. Many homes will be closed against you, and from many doors you will be turned with scorn, but you will soon have no feelings to hurt—a splendid condition to get into when dealing with an opposing world.

PARENTS IN THE LORD.

My soul goes out to the children. We know of no other class of the human family who are more imposed upon, more ridiculed, and, in fact more seriously mistreated than many of the children of to-day.

We have often heard repeated, "Honor thy father and mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee" (Exodus 20: 12). The children have perhaps heard these words many times from their fathers and mothers, when they had just said, "He is a bad boy," or, "She is a bad girl." I am afraid he or she will come to ruin. Fathers and mothers, did your sweet child ever hear you say this? Did he ever see the scorn and hate in your eyes, as he turned away in tears? Oh, how blind we are sometimes, and how far from the path of right. God has made the children this promise, but the promise is not being fulfilled. What is wrong? Who is responsible?

We read:

Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. Honor thy father and mother, which is the first commandment with promise, that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth. (Ephesians 6: 1-3.)

Children, obey your parents in all things; for this is well pleasing unto the Lord. Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged. (Colossians 3: 20, 21.)

It is right that children should obey their parents. It is also true that God's promises are conditional. If children are to realize upon the promises made, their parents must occupy so as to be "in the Lord."

As Saints of God, are we as parents truly in the Lord? Are we living pure and good lives? Are we striving to hold out faithfully? Are we contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints? Do we love our friends and neighbors? Do we pray for our enemies,—pray in our homes and with our children? Do we speak kindly to our children? Do we teach them the gospel? Do we avoid provoking them to wrath? Are we bringing them up in the ways of the Lord? Have we gained their confidence in these matters? If not, we are not in the Lord, therefore we make void the promise of the Lord to our children—that it might be well with them, and that they might live long on the earth.

We hear the sad words, "Father never loved, or taught me"; or, "Mother never told me"; "They always did these things, and I thought it was right." Surely, fathers and mothers who neglect their duty to their families will come into condemnation in the day of final judgment.

How sad when children go out into this sinful world, without the remembrance of a kind and praying father and mother, without the preparation possible only in a home where God reigns supreme. As Saints, let us equip our own, and help other parents to sense their duty to their children. G. N. COX.

The Staff

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Our Work.

It is with delight we note such a widespread awakening interest in our work. We have little cheery notes of hail and greeting from many different quarters, and only hope all may get in line and send in their inspiring calls frequently.

We want to know what you are doing musically. Are you alive? Have you a choir—an orchestra? Are your children singing? Are they studying instrumental music? Remember the command was a positive one to us, "Cultivate the gifts of music and of song." Remember, God does nothing without reason, and if we but look into the future and realize what we are dreaming of as a church, we can see many bands of trained musicians consecrated to his service.

And he recognizes the uplifting, purifying effect music will have upon us also. It promotes self-effacement—one singer or one player must lose himself for the good of the whole. It teaches us humility, and faithfulness, that our service may be truly acceptable.

So let us all try to make this year the beginning of many things musically. Let us organize everywhere and make a start. Great results from small beginnings grow, and we may surprise ourselves.

And don't fail to tell The Staff all about it—your beginnings, your successes, your hopes; and your failures as well, if any there be, for they are often only the stepping stones to real development. Whatever you are doing will be of interest and value—either as incentive or warning.

Notes of the Staff.

The Mount Zion Sunday School Orchestra, under the leadership of Brother Arthur H. Mills, gave their first annual concert on Tuesday evening, June 17. They were assisted by Mr. Claud Rader, concert violinist, of Kansas City, whose wife accompanied him, and the choir, under Mrs. Anderson's direction. The whole concert passed off very creditably, the two numbers in which the choir of fifty voices and the orchestra of twenty pieces combined being especially inspirational and prophetic of what is to come when our musical forces are united.

Sister Pearl Crick gave a song recital at the Stone Church in Independence, Monday, June 29, which attracted a large attendance, and proved very delightful and enjoyable. Sister Pearl has been studying very faithfully for the past year with Miss Edna Forsythe, of Kansas City, and has made very creditable advancement. She is the daughter of Brother and Sister Roderick May, who are laboring as missionaries in England, and the widow of Brother Vernon Crick, son of Brother William Crick, well known to HERALD readers. We congratulate Sister Pearl, and wish for her continued and increasing success in her work.

Brother Norman W. Smith, who has lately passed his eightieth birth anniversary, was one of the pioneers along musical lines in Lamoni. He conducted a series of singing classes, early in the eighties, which were organized by President Joseph Smith, and were very generally attended by both the young and the old of the branch. Later he conducted the choir there for a number of years. He has also added to the musical compositions of our church, many of his songs having been used among the Saints for years. He has always been keenly alive to progress along musical lines and in response to our invitation has contributed the little article, "The best way to teach music to the young," for our encouragement.

The Best Way to Teach Music to the Young.

As I have been requested to write on this subject, I will try as best I can. In the first place, What is music? It is food for the soul. That being the case, all lovers of that kind of food should know how to use it.

My idea is that little children learn best by singing to them. They like to imitate and are greatly benefited in that way, and it is a great help to them when they are old enough to apply the rules used in music.

One thing of great importance is that every character used in teaching music should be thoroughly understood by those learning.

Care should be taken, as many get discouraged by trying to go ahead too fast. Learn what a pupil needs and then supply that need as fast as it can be used understandingly.

Care should also be taken in the use of the voice. Many have injured their voices by the tremulo style of singing. The tremulo may be used to better advantage in instrumental music, but should be shut off the vocal.

The best is what we want. NORMAN W. SMITH.

Omaha and Vicinity.

I am glad to say that Omaha and the districts about, so far as I am acquainted, are joining in the general awakening that seems to be taking place, with reference to the value of music to our lives and to our church services. Cooperation is being urged among branches in districts and at reunions, and the results are going to be big and grand.

The Omaha Branch enjoyed a visit, recently, from our general church chorister. We held a sacred concert the Sunday night he was with us. The audience appreciated the inspiring talk he gave, and also keenly enjoyed his violin numbers. There were twenty in the choir, and they responded very well to Brother Hoxie's directing. He encouraged them greatly by a short address to the choir members after the service.

The Council Bluffs choir has been doing good work, and recently joined with the Omaha choir in giving the cantata

"Daniel." This cantata was to have been given in Omaha the last week in March, but the tornado ruined the church, so we found it necessary to postpone it. It was given in Council Bluffs to a large and appreciative audience. The cantata was finally given in Omaha on Sunday evening of Children's Day, June 8. There were forty singers in the chorus, and they showed splendid ability.

We feel that the possibilities are splendid for a very good future in the choir work in the two branches.

P. N. CRAIG.

An Appreciation.

It is with much pleasure that I note the establishment of a department in the HERALD given over to music. I have long hoped for something of this kind. I can see a wonderful, yes, a glorious future for this work in which we are engaged, and I feel that music will have much to do with it. Therefore, we should qualify ourselves by much study, and by dedicating our musical efforts to God, that thereby we may win many souls to him.

How wonderfully blessed is the one whom God has endowed with good vocal organs, whose voice is well trained, and who sings under the influence of the Spirit. Let us make our watchword, "The winning of souls for Christ," With this ever in mind our efforts in a musical way will be wonderfully blessed. New accessions, as well as much edification to the branches, will follow where we have members who are musically gifted, and truly alive to the needs of good music and its possibilities when properly rendered. What more inspiring sight could one desire to see than an assembly of God's people, properly attuned, raising voice and mind in songs of praise and adoration!

The Nauvoo district conference in June took the necessary steps toward establishing a district choir, under supervision of Brother Hoxie, which no doubt will prove beneficial to both district and general conventions, as well as to the district.

Under the caption, "Singing school," in the HERALD for June 18, we note a query by the editor of this department relative to the merits of the old-fashioned singing school versus public-school music. While there is much that might be said in favor of both, personally, from observation I am inclined to favor the singing school, for the reason that an instructor or leader of a singing class is generally more qualified to teach music than is the average public-school teacher, upon whom most of the musical instruction devolves, the regular public-school musical instructor merely making a weekly and very limited visit to each room, the pupils getting little or no individual instruction. Also from a psychological standpoint the singing school has a decided advantage, by reason of the fact that the minds of all present are fixed upon the subject at hand, while the reverse is true in the public-school room, because of the presence of many who have no gift in a musical way, or because of a lack of proper understanding, which results in a refusal to place the mind in harmony with the subject matter.

I hope, however, that none will construe this to mean that I would abolish public-school music, for such is far from my thoughts. My admonition to our young would be to absorb all that they can, whether it be public school instruction or through the singing school. By all means they should avail themselves of one at least, and both when possible.

In closing, permit me to express my deep appreciation of the work done by the General Conference Choir at the last session. Let the good work roll on.

Yours for the advancement of the kingdom,

JOHN E. BAKER.

Reading Music.

Of all inventions and improvements relating to music, none are of more value than the invention of characters called "notes." By their arrangement upon the degrees of the staff they stand as symbols or signs of tones. Just as truly as written or printed words represent ideas to those who can or will read them, so the arrangement of notes upon the staff represent the tune, or parts accompanying, or both, to all who can or will read them. Thus we may become familiar with the compositions of those whom we have never seen or heard—those in various parts of the world.

This is such a blessing to humanity that everyone who can sing at all should diligently endeavor to acquire ability to read printed music. When this knowledge is once obtained, we are not dependent upon our ears alone in learning new songs, by hearing others sing them. We sing from our own knowledge, and can sing songs we never saw or heard before. In this way we come at once in touch with the tune and harmony as the author designed them, and need not be misled by the mistakes of those who sing by rote only.

Years ago more attention was given to vocal note reading than now. The reason for this decline, we believe, is due to the great increase in the production, and cheapening in prices of musical instruments, chiefly the organ and piano, thereby enabling nearly every home to possess an instrument. With an instrument in the home our children have naturally turned their minds to the cultivation of a knowledge of instrumental music, which is all good enough and proper; but we are neglecting the culture of singing at sight. So many persons readily acquire ability to play the organ and piano, which is by the "letter and finger method," that they soon drift into the habit of singing by following the instrument, without any knowledge of vocal pitch; and if taken away from the instrument very few can tell one note from another. Is it not time that all who desire to sing turn their attention to the study of the rudiments of vocal music? Is there any attainment more to be desired than ability to sing a new song at sight without the aid of an instrument? Anyone with a love for music and song, a capable perception of pitch, and an earnest desire to learn the theory, can learn it just as easily as they learned to read the language of their mother tongue. It only requires determination and persistent continuity. To some it seems a great mystery and beyond their power to comprehend, while the fact is, the theory consists of a great many little things, all essential, and all easily learned, one at a time. Those little things taken together as a whole comprise one of the grandest systems on earth for the joy, comfort, consolation, blessing, and uplifting of humanity.

Latter Day Saints, above all others, should seek to master this system, as song has always occupied a chief place in all our services, and thus make our singing as a people more and more a great power for good. Furthermore, in our endeavor to acquire this knowledge, we are acting in harmony with the instruction given to the church in the revelation of 1887.

We sincerely hope the time is at hand when there shall be a great forward movement in the understanding of this beneficial system, and that we may "sing with the understanding" of the music as well as "with the spirit" of the words.

SUMMER DRINKS.

The particular object of this department is to conserve the welfare of the children. Certain writers are calling attention to the prevalence of nervousness in school children, and are pointing out as causes some things which are not generally regarded as injurious to health. It may be surprising to learn that among these are some of the drinks so popular in the summer months.

The Good Housekeeping Magazine has a department conducted by Doctor Harvey W. Wiley, formerly Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture. In the May issue, Doctor Wiley asks, "What is it that has ruined the children's nerves? In my opinion it does not, as a rule, come from overstudy, though occasionally that might have been the case. The trouble with the children of this country is that, after the manner of their parents, they are subjected to exhilaration by stimulants of various kinds, which have no food value and can work only injury. I refer especially to tea and coffee at home, the acquisition by the young boys of the tobacco habit, and the indulgence by the boys and girls in the so-called soft drinks which contain cocaine or caffeine. Fortunately the effectiveness of the campaign against cocaine has driven most of the beverages containing it from the soda fountains, but this is not true of those containing caffeine."

"The Drug Division of the Department of Agriculture secured the names of over one hundred so-called soft drinks sold at soda fountains which contained either caffeine or cocaine or both. As a rule, no soda fountain sells over two or three of these soft drinks, but they are offered in the large numbers which I have mentioned in the various parts of the country. Inasmuch as every authority has agreed that cocaine is to be kept out of foods, I shall confine my remarks solely to those products containing caffeine.

"The health officers of Washington issued a letter of caution to parents in which it was urged that they should not allow their children to use tea or coffee at home. Nothing was said in the circular, however, about patronizing soda fountains where beverages containing caffeine were sold. In point of fact, it is commonly admitted by experts that caffeine-bearing beverages, taken upon an empty stomach, are more injurious than the same amount of caffeine would be, consumed with meals. . . . The name of one of these beverages most frequently found at soda fountains is Coca-Cola. Indeed, it is somewhat rare at the present time to find a soda fountain that does not sell this beverage. A glass of Coca-Cola contains about the same amount of caffeine as a cup of tea or coffee. . . . The authorities should be as careful to caution against the use of Coca-Cola as against coffee and tea. It is bad enough for grown people to drink these beverages without offering them to children."

CAFFEINE—THEINE.

"Caffeine, found in coffee, is a principle identical with theine, found in tea. Cocoa and chocolate contain substances similar to theine and equally harmful, though present in much less proportion than in tea. Coffee, cocoa, and chocolate rank in the same category with tea, as beverages which are more or less harmful.

"Custom has made the use of these beverages so common that most people seldom stop to inquire into their nature. Doubtless the question arises in many minds, if these beverages contain such poisons, why do they not more commonly produce fatal results? Because a tolerance of the poison is established in the system by use, as in the case of tobacco and other narcotics and stimulants; but that the poisons surely though insidiously are doing their work is attested by the prevalence of numerous disorders of the digestive and nervous systems, directly attributable to the use of these beverages.

"Tea is often spoken of as 'the cup that cheers but not inebriates.' 'The cup that may cheer yet does injury' would be nearer the truth, for there is every evidence to prove that this common beverage is exceedingly harmful, and that the evils of its excessive use are second only to those of tobacco and alcohol. Tea contains two harmful substances, theine and tannin,—from three to six per cent of the former and more than one fourth of its weight of the latter. Theine is a poison belonging to the same class of poisonous alkaloids, and is closely allied to cocaine. Tannin (a substance used in tanning leather) is an astringent exercising a powerful effect in delaying salivary and stomach digestion, thus becoming one of the most common causes of digestive disorder. It is also a matter of frequent observation that sleeplessness, palpitation of the heart, and various disorders of the nervous system frequently follow the prolonged use of tea."—Science in the Kitchen.

STIMULANTS—NOT FOOD.

Doctor Frank Overton, late House Surgeon to the City Hospital, New York, in Applied Physiology, says: "Tea and coffee are often supposed to supply food to the body. They belong to the class of substances which, acting through the nervous system, spur on the work of the cells of the body, especially of the brain. They supply no heat or energy for the extra exertion. Substances which excite the cells to action, without giving them material out of which to develop heat and energy, are stimulants. The active principle of tea and coffee is a stimulating substance called caffeine which spurs the cells of the body to do more work. They enable a person to do a larger amount of work in an emergency, and when the body is tired they rouse the digestive and assimilative organs to renewed activity."

Upon this point Science in the Kitchen says: "The dependence of the habitual tea drinker upon the beverage, and the sense of loss experienced when deprived of it, are among the strongest proofs of its evil effects, and should be warnings against its use. No such physical discomfort is experienced when deprived of any article of ordinary food. The use of tea makes one feel bright and fresh when really exhausted; but, like all other stimulants, it is by exciting vital action above the normal without supplying extra force to support the extra expenditure. The fact that a person feels tired is evidence that the system demands rest, that his body is worn and needs repair; but the relief experienced after a cup of tea is not recuperation. Instead, it indicates that his nerves are so affected that they are insensible to fatigue."

Other reliable authorities tell us that the chief action of coffee is stimulating rather than nourishing, and that it makes us forget we are tired, which may be pleasant even though not desirable; for "if we know we are tired we will rest, and so the material which has been worn out by exercise will have a chance to be removed and replaced by new material. But if we forget we are weary, we, perhaps, will continue and so destroy more tissue than will be rebuilt, and so we shall tend to break down." "Whenever a patient has become addicted to the use of stimulants, anodynes, or coffee, an effort must be made at once, without a compromise, to break up the dependence upon either of these insidious poisons to the nervous system."

A GOOD RULE OF CONDUCT.

"A very good rule of conduct in all cases where there is a doubt, is to give yourself the benefit of the doubt. There is not the least doubt that you can do without either tea or coffee, and not be harmed; therefore, to give yourself the benefit of the doubt, is to stay on the safe side, and not use either. Water will not stimulate you, nor harden the albumen, nor check waste. Three fourths of the body is water, while tea and coffee are not natural constituents of the body. The only good they do in the system is by the water they introduce."

HOT DRINKS—COLD DRINKS.

Soon after the organization of the church, the Lord gave the revelation known among us as The Word of Wisdom, in which he counseled the Saints not to use hot drinks. Tea and coffee were then, as they are now, the principal hot drinks. The main objection to these drinks is in the caffeine (theine), which they contain, which is also present in the cold drinks, iced tea, Coca-Cola, and some other soda fountain drinks, and is equally harmful whether imbibed in hot or cold drinks.

The State University of Iowa, through the Department of Physical Training and Athletics, gives out the following advice: "Coffee and tea are stimulants. They should be discarded. When used in excess they are as harmful as alcoholic and malt liquors. 'The place of cocoa in the diet is really not very different from that of tea and coffee.'—(Hutchinson.) The action of cocoa on the nervous system is less—as it contains less alkaloids. It has some slight nutritive value owing to the presence of the cocoa fat but is a source of irritation and sour stomach to many, owing to the difficulty in the digestion of the fat. . . . Do not drink ice-cold water at any time."

Another authority (Blaisdell) says upon this last point: "The temptation to drink freely of ice-water in hot weather is rarely resisted. It should be sipped slowly and only a small amount taken at a time. It is a dangerous thing to drink ice-water in great gulps when overheated. The proper way is to rinse the mouth and take slowly a few swallows."

"SOAPSUDS AS A BEVERAGE."

An article under the above heading appears in the Literary Digest of May 31. It quotes from the Health Bulletin of New York City the following paragraph: "The average person who drinks soda-water, sarsaparilla, cream soda, root beer, and other so-called 'soft drinks', probably imagines, if he gives any thought to the matter, that the creamy, deep foam which tops his glass results naturally from the liberation of the carbonic-acid gas therein contained. Such, unfortunately, is frequently not the case, the foam, especially when deep, white, and creamy, being sometimes produced artificially by the addition of a substance known as soapbark, various preparations of which are upon the market. 'Soapbark' is poisonous and markedly so, its toxic principle being soaptoxin. On this account the department of health has determined to prohibit its use, and henceforth, if the cheaper grades of soda water, etc., do not present so attractive an appearance as heretofore, they will at least exercise no detrimental effect upon the community."

WHOLESOME DRINKS.

There are wholesome drinks which may be used instead of those harmful ones against which scientists are warning us. "Hot milk, hot water, hot lemonades, the various grain coffees (homemade) are excellent substitutes for tea and coffee, if a warm drink is desired."—Science in the Kitchen.

"The most wholesome drinks are water, kumyss, buttermilk, oatmeal water, and lemonade."—Iowa State University.

Pleasant and refreshing drinks may also be made by combining the juices of other fruits with that of the lemon.

SHALL WE HEED THE WARNING?

The heavenly Father, loving and all-wise, has spoken to us, saying, "I have warned you and forewarn you." There has also come to us a warning from health officers of our land, and that which they say is in harmony with the word of the Lord. Shall we not heed the warning and banish from the menu of the children those things which injure the nerves, excite undue activity, or produce unnatural stimulation; and shall we not substitute in their place a wholesome, nutritious, simple diet, which may enable them to become healthy and valuable members of society and of the church?

The Prayer Union.

Subject for the fourth Thursday of July.

For the Sunday schools, Zion's Religio, and all the auxiliary departments of the church. That each may help to bring about the exalted condition of purity and righteousness that God demands and expects of his people—the oneness in heart and purpose for which Christ prayed.

Scripture lesson: James 1: 19-27.

Memory text: James 1: 26.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Such pitiful letters come to this column from those bowed down under divers afflictions that the sincere desire wells up in our heart that those enrolled in the Prayer Union may be faithful in bearing up in their petitions those who need the sympathy and prayers of the Saints.

From Pine Barren, Florida, comes the plea of Sister Sallie Booker, who is the mother of ten children and who has become blind. The doctors have not, as yet, been able to help her. This sister certainly should have our earnest supplications in her behalf.

We are requested also to pray for Mrs. Martha Murphy, of 1621 Pinkney Street, Omaha, Nebraska. This sister is sick and depressed over the loss of a relative. It may be there are those who have time who could write a few words of cheer to this sad sister. The letter to us suggests this.

Another letter comes to us which requests the union to pray for Sister S. C. Rippe, who has lately united with the church. She is afflicted with lung weakness. Her sister earnestly asks us to pray for her. This letter is very short, not more than a half dozen lines, but it speaks whole volumes of anguish to the heart of one who knows the sad experience of seeing a loved one fade away under the dread power of disease.

From Lower Lake, California, comes the request of a little mother who can not call upon the elders for administration, because there are none within her reach. We are acquainted with this sister, and know her purity of heart and earnestness of desire. We commend her to the love of the Saints, and join our request with hers, that you may remember her when you pray God to bless the suffering ones.

The Veteran Missionary.

A TRIBUTE.

Announcement in the HERALD and other journals of the "passing" of Patriarch Edmund C. Briggs, who died at Independence, Missouri, July 4, was a surprise to us, and was otherwise striking as an event in the Reorganized Church.

I became personally acquainted with him while laboring in the State of Michigan about thirty-six years ago, but have known him by reputation as a missionary of the church since 1855, or thereabouts. I have watched his labors as one of, if not the first, missionary of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He was out in the interests of the cause since 1852, at least, and has been, therefore, a witness of its developments from then to the present, a period of more than sixty years, excepting a few years, during which time he was engaged in secular affairs.

He was all those years an active, wide-awake laborer in the ministry. What higher, nobler calling could he have been engaged in on earth? He was a witness to much, and of the dark, sad results of the apostasy of and under Brigham Young, and those associated with him, in 1845 and on.

Apostle Briggs perhaps did as much to reclaim the captives of Brighamism as any missionary of the church, although we must never forget the great work done by President W. W. Blair; Apostle Alexander H. Smith, David H. Smith, of the First Presidency, and others, including Apostle Joseph Luff, Brethren Briggs and Alexander McCord went on their first mission to Utah in 1863, before any railroad had traversed the western plains, or the Union Pacific Railway had entered Salt Lake City. Elder Briggs was there to emancipate the captives of error and religious darkness about as soon as General Connor entered the Territory of Utah to see that governmental order was preserved there.

Elder Briggs kept in the van in ministerial affairs of the church, and when in the field was always active, and awake to the interests of the work. He was attractive in his work. He was alive, an able defender of the word. He was a very interesting fireside preacher, or religious conversationalist. His was a lengthy ministry; his range of acquaintance with men was large; his friends many.

What could more greatly commend his life than such a lengthy, accepted ministry, his favorable service of God and his fellow men? His example and his faithfulness should be emulated.

May God comfort his widow, and may blessings of righteousness and encouragement attend his children in a life of usefulness.

In bonds,

C. SCOTT.

BARTLETT, IOWA, July 10, 1913.

A WORD OF GRATITUDE.

In the year 1860 a report reached my ears, in the wilds of Nebraska, that Joseph Smith, the eldest son of the martyred President of the Church of Latter Day Saints, had been called of God to fill the place made vacant by the death of his father. Knowing of the craft of Brigham Young, I thought it was a move of his to decoy those who had refused to follow him to Utah, and those who had left Brighamism in disgust to return there. I being one of the latter class, paid no attention to the story.

I knew nothing of any other faction of the church than that in Utah, and I had no use for that. But in the month of February, 1861, I visited my nearest neighbor, and he handed me a paper. It had been sent to me from Elder E. C. Briggs, an entire stranger to me. He was laboring in Iowa in the interest of the Reorganized Church, and some one had told him that I was living in Nebraska and had left Utah.

The paper was a number of THE TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD. Such was its title. I read it aloud to my neighbor, and with the reading there came to me the Spirit of God, bearing testimony of its truth. I returned to my cabin, told my family what I had received, and read to them the good tidings. My family altar had been neglected, because of the wrongdoing of those who claimed to be "The Lord's anointed," but now my cabin was turned into a house of prayer. My wife and children accepted the message as divine.

We concluded that I should go over into Iowa to seek the elders of the Reorganization, and make further investigation. Wife baked me a few cookies, and in the latter part of February I started for Iowa. Arriving at Council Bluffs, I found Elders E. C. Briggs and W. W. Blair preaching on Kegg Creek, ten miles east of Council Bluffs. I made known my mission, and investigated their claim still further. I tarried with them, and from there went with them to Farm Creek. Having become thoroughly satisfied that God was with them, and was renewing his work, and had called the heir to the Presidency to lead his flock, I renewed my covenant with God, being rebaptized at my request, by Elder Blair, in Kegg Creek, on March 3, 1861. I was confirmed by Elders Blair and Briggs.

Both these brethren have gone to their reward, and I thank God for their life and labors, because they have blessed my life, as instruments in God's hands. No braver soldier of the cross have I known than our dear, lamented Brother E. C. Briggs. In his righteous zeal he has blessed thousands of his fellow men. Holding his memory sacred, I remain,

Gratefully,

CHARLES DERRY.

CAMERON, ONTARIO.

Editors Herald: When I read the many letters in the HERALD I think of the great work that is being done; of the many who have received the gospel; and still of the many who have not yet been blessed with this glorious message.

At present our branch is very low. Many seem indifferent and uninterested, and when some shirk it is hard for others to work; at least where they are so few in number. The active ones seem to be getting less instead of more.

Brother Joseph Perrin is at present confined to his bed with a paralytic stroke, which occurred some weeks ago. He is in his eightieth year, and as age is against him, very little hope is held out for his recovery.

On June 21 a very sad event occurred when my young cousin, Maggie Ethel, daughter of Elder Felix Northey, of Fenelon Falls, aged fourteen years, died. She had been really ill only a couple of weeks, although ailing for some time. She seemed to know that her earthly career was nearly ended, and seemed rather prepared to go, although she never once mentioned death. She was baptized June 24, 1910, by Elder John Shields. She leaves to mourn a father, mother, two half-brothers, one half-sister, five sisters, and four brothers. We wonder why one so young, so full of life, and just blooming into womanhood should be called away, but "the Lord knows why, and that's enough." Elder James PycocK preached the funeral sermon, and a large concourse of friends followed the remains to the Fenelon Falls cemetery, where she was interred.

Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may have the Spirit of the heavenly Father to guide me, and that I may be one of the flock who will be gathered to the great Shepherd in Zion.

I remain your sister in the true faith,

FLORENCE BRADEN.

HOLDENVILLE, OKLAHOMA, June 29, 1913.

Editors Herald: One of the greatest pleasures I have in the HERALD is in reading the many letters from the faithful brothers and sisters. They give me new courage to press on.

Our little branch has been enjoying a greater degree of the gentle influence of the Holy Spirit. Last Sunday our heavenly Father through two of his servants gave us words of encouragement.

Oh, dear Saints, if we could or would, only live more humbly, and try to heed the pleadings of our Father in heaven! We are enlisted in the army of the Lord. We have made a covenant with God to serve and obey him. Will we be true to our covenant, or be as Israel of old? Those who live faithful to the end shall receive the crown of eternal life. This does not mean just to believe the work is true, but to live it.

The best investment I ever made was when I enlisted in this work. The Lord is not slack in giving to the faithful and true. When I see Saints dilatory, having the spirit of fault-finding, and throwing down the armor, I am made sad at heart. We can not afford to cease working for the Lord. By faithful service to the Master we may help others as well as ourselves. So let us be faithful, obedient and true.

Your brother for the upbuilding of this great work,

C. T. SHEPPARD.

UTE, IOWA, June 30, 1913.

Editors Herald: This leaves us strong in the faith once delivered to the Saints. Physically we are in better health than we have been for many years. Thanks to God and the faithful Saints who prayed for my recovery.

One year ago doctors and friends had little hope of my living. My condition was such that the doctors said I would have to undergo a series of operations, and then it was doubtful if my life could be saved. I stopped the doctor's treatment and relied on God alone. I began to improve at once. I was administered to several times. Now I am able to do my work and care for my babies. The burden of my prayer was that I might be spared to raise my little boys. I now weigh one hundred and fifty-nine pounds and feel well most of the time. I consider this a very great blessing.

Our town has just gone through its annual siege of measles, and the children were very sick; some of them were given up to die. I dreaded for my babies to get the disease. I watched them closely, and kept their systems in good condition. I prayed continually, not that they might be spared from catching the disease, but that they might not be very sick, and that there would be no bad after effects. I never saw children go through the measles easier, and I believe they are as well now as ever. I praise God for his special care over us.

Temporally we have never been in a place where we could do better. My husband has regular employment. He is also taking a correspondence course in general illustrating, which we hope will better our condition financially.

Dear Saints, we need your prayers, as there has never been a time in our lives when we have been subjected to such severe and unjust persecution as at the present. The people here are very bitter against our church.

I do not know whether any of our people ever preached here or not, but elders of the Utah Church have preached on the streets, and I have found several tracts left by them here. We have distributed our literature quite liberally. For a while we had a box in the depot, but the agent has torn it down, and if we leave papers in the seats he gathers them up and destroys them. He serves the Adventists the same way. Our mayor, and, by the way, city editor, once lived at Pisgah. They ran a paper there, and became acquainted with the Saints. They speak very highly of them. The justice of the peace is a close friend of ours. We have not many friends here, but our friends are among the best people in the town.

I believe an elder would be made welcome here by the officials of the town, and while the weather is so warm we could hold street meetings. I do not think it impossible to get the use of a building to preach in, but I believe more could be accomplished in the open air. We will gladly care for an elder if one should come. There are a few others here who I know would help. If any of the elders can come I believe much good might be done.

Earnestly praying for the triumph of the cause, and the second coming of our Prince of peace,

SADIE BURCH.

LOVELAND, IOWA, July 1, 1913.

Editors Herald: There have been a few Saints at this place for the last twenty years, but no work has been done here for some time, until a year ago last February, when Brother John Lentell, of Independence, Missouri, came and preached thirteen sermons. These efforts were pleasing to the Saints and some of our good neighbors.

Last February Brother H. N. Pierce of Bartlett, Iowa, came and held a series of meetings, which ended with six new members added to our number. On the 26th of April Brother Pierce baptized three more. On the 27th Brethren John Hansen and Sam Harding of Council Bluffs came and helped with the confirming, and we organized a Sunday school, which we hold each Sunday at 2 o'clock. Some of the brethren come and preach for us each Sunday, and Brother Samuel Harding comes the first Sunday of each month and administers the sacrament.

Following up the work, Brother Pierce returned at different times, preaching, visiting among the people, and answering questions. On June 29 he baptized four more. On this day we had an enjoyable time. Brother Pierce preached at ten o'clock, at two we had our Sunday school, and at three Bro. John Lentell preached. Brother Fry, of Missouri Valley, and Brother McDonald, of Magnolia, Iowa, were with us in the afternoon, and helped confirm the four that were baptized, and bless three children. Brother Lentell preached again in the evening.

We hope, the time will come when we may have a branch here, as we are so far from our branch now. There are others here who will be Saints ere long, we think. There are twenty members here now. We have an attendance at Sunday school of about forty.

Pray for me and for the upbuilding of the work in this place.

Your sister in the one gospel,

GRACE HOYT.

Extracts from Letters.

Mary Stein, Geneseo, Illinois: "Elder O. E. Sade is to begin services in the city park here, July 14. We ask the Saints to pray that the Lord may give us souls for hire."

Edwin Kindel Bair, Webb City, Missouri: "At different times during the last year several short articles appeared in the HERALD and in our Sunday school paper, some of said sketches lauding and applauding Robert Burns, and quoting as references, Carlyle, Drummond, Emerson, etc., to show how great a man Burns was. One writer placed Burns on equal footing with our martyred Lincoln. Another writer puts him alongside of such men as Scott and Milton. And still a third calls Burns the first 'gentleman' of Europe; it would be interesting to know who the said writer would nominate as first 'blackguard' of the literary world. Had I not met some European gentlemen I might be induced to believe that the standard of Europe was as low as Burns; but fortunately such is not the truth."

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana.

Perhaps a "wee dotty dimple" from this section of the vineyard will not be uninteresting to your many readers. The torrid condition of the weather seems to have passed along, at least temporarily, and a pleasant, cool wave, preceded by genial showers, has infused enthusiasm into enterprises, and everyone seems to have awakened from a listless, heated, exhausted condition.

The church work hereabout is on the move toward higher ground, the beehive is a hum with industry. Sunday afternoon a large crowd of Saints and friends gathered at the river—Yellow River—and we led five precious souls out into the clear waters, and buried them with Christ by baptism unto death; viz, Brother Charles Prettyman, his wife, Sister Eva, and son, Charles, jr., Sister Carrie Hudson, and daughter Fern. It was a time when the silent tear coursed down the cheek.

This makes seven we have baptized here since we were permitted to give a course of lectures on the subject: "Does Bible prophecy and American Archæology sustain the contention of the Latter Day Saints with reference to the Book of Mormon?" Others are persuaded, and pause at the doorstep of wisdom. Brother and Sister J. B. Prettyman, though aging, are as young in service of church as the "steen year old." The Sunday school and Religio are moving strongly, and gladsomely in the right direction. Outsiders are interested.

June 14 and 15 I stepped over the line into Ohio, by urgent request, and joined Elder Brown, of Canada, in conducting a new church opening at Oak Harbor. The Saints and friends at this point have erected a beautiful edifice at a cost of about $2,500, with a bell in the tower ringing out in harmony with the deed of this lot: "Free to other denominations when not in use by the party who built it."

The religious spirit at that place has been bitter and proscriptive against the Saints, and this moved the better element to espouse the Saints' cause to erect the house of worship. The animus of the opposition may be seen in that they interpreted the letters "L. D. S." in the glass above the entrance to mean a "Lot of Damn Soaks." Please let their light shine, for religion, in some instances, is progressive—like a crawfish.

The opening was well conducted, and largely attended. The preachers enjoyed it, and the Saints are to be commended for their sacrifice and zeal. A nonmember gave the lot for the building, and a great deal of the work was donated. So may the cause grow strong all along the line.

The local work at Coldwater is in good shape. The Sunday school is interesting, under the care of Brother J. Dean Corless, with an efficient corps of teachers. They are now planning Children's Day exercises. Coldwater Saints are blessed in that they are endowed with ability to execute—musically, literarily, and otherwise. The Religio, under the presidency of Sister Clara Kellogg, must move up in the right sphere. Sister Kellogg is one of our popular educators in the city schools, and energy like hers and an understanding of the law of average, things will adjust all right. Brother Starr Corless as president, conducts the affairs of the branch with wisdom and modesty.

We see nothing to hinder the prosperity of righteousness, when a concentrated effort is made along the line. A little more sacrifice and faith on the part of all will accomplish wonderful results. The Savior informed the church at Smyrna that he knew their works and tribulation and poverty, but being in possession of eternal life, they were rich (Revelation 2:9). To be lovers of ease and pleasure more than lovers of God, is to be "dead while we live."

The, recent district conference held at Lansing, June 7 and 8, was a representative one, the junior element of the church in these parts being in evidence. Business passed to the records for action pleasantly. The spirit of fellowship beamed in most all faces, and the fires of hope and good resolution glowed on the altar of hearts. There was a conspicuous absence of the faces of the old veterans, who in days ago were "set for the defense of the gospel." This fact mellowed the feelings into pathetic tenderness. Some have finished their work and passed over to the scenes of the heavenly Eden, to the quiet of the just. Others, disqualified by the infirmities of age, are waiting till the shadows are a little longer grown. Still others who have strength granted to cling to the rod, were present with complacency, encouraging the coming hope of the cause—the young. God grant the brightness of the armor.

More calls than we can fill.

Hopefully yours,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

Western Oklahoma.

We are still trying to establish the work in this part of the vineyard. About June 1 Brother Case and I brought the tent to Eagle City, a new opening made last winter, and began a meeting which lasted three weeks. We had a certain reverend, an obscure preacher, to emphasize the other side by employing the usual method of opposition by false accusation, etc., which only showed the spirit he was of, and made the truth appear better by comparison. We baptized nine during the meeting. The ranters say that they are going to change the name of the town from Eagle City to Salt Lake City. They are determined that we belong there, notwithstanding that they have heard a full explanation of the difference, etc.

Near July 1 I came to Hammon, Oklahoma, to hold a meeting with the Indians. I went about a mile from town to the camp of Chief White Shield, who is the head chief of the whole tribe of Cheyennes. He is a very nice man. He does not speak English. He has two grown boys, and lives in a nice four room cottage. The Indians usually form a permanent camp around their leading men. There is quite a large camp at his place. Upon meeting the chief I stated my business and desires. He invited me to stay all night, and to preach to them at night. I did so, taking supper and breakfast with his family. I gave them a lantern lecture, showing them the ruins of their ancestors, telling them of their identity, and some of the promises to them. They always seem interested in our preaching.

There was a little girl present who was at our meeting at Clinton last February, who was administered to at that time for blindness. She is now all right, except for a weakness of the eyes. They seem to think the administration was effective. A young man who was there at that time says he will be baptized when we have another meeting.

I am of the opinion that we will be able to baptize many of the Lamanites, but where the great task will occur will be in developing them,—inducing them to cease to be idle, and teaching them to be industrious. It seems to me that we can never make any permanent headway so long as they are moving around. A branch might be organized here to-day and to-morrow they would load their tents and scatter to the four winds. Perhaps colonization should be simultaneous with the establishment of the work.

We will work as the way opens up, however. We know that the means has been placed in our hands to reclaim them, and we are sure that it shall be done.

Yours in bonds,
A. H. CHRISTENSEN.

Des Moines, Iowa.

We had the privilege of attending the late General Conference, and upon learning our mission was Des Moines District, Iowa, we began to think about our new field of labor, and what the year might bring forth. Returning home to Omaha, preparations were made to remove our family to Des Moines, Iowa, where we arrived about June 1 and are now located at 811 East Twelfth Street.

We met with the Saints of the district in conference at Des Moines, June 7 and 8, and found them to be nice, hospitable people. We met our colaborer, Elder D. J. Williams, of Hiteman, Iowa, at this conference, and here made arrangements for tent work. We opened with the tent at Boone, Iowa, the following week. We are now entering in upon our fourth week here, with not a break in our meetings. Splendid attendance and splendid interest, as high as two hundred attending on Sunday evenings. We had the honor of conducting three precious souls into the kingdom of God, and several more are near the door, so we feel thankful to our heavenly Father for so abundantly blessing us in our first effort in our new field. I want to say right here that I think much of our success is due largely to the splendid efforts of Brother J. F. Mintun and Brother M. M. Turpen who were here for six weeks last year.

We expect to go to Nevada, Iowa, for a series of meetings before taking the tent to Rhodes, Iowa, for reunion work, about August 15. We trust the Lord will be with us there. This is Brother Williams's first year in the mission field, but he is a fine young man, who makes friends wherever he goes. We are both young in years as well as experience, but we hope to make good, and at the same time remain humble and prayerful.

We would be glad to hear of any isolated Saints of this district, and if possible we will call upon them some time during the year. Trust all who can will attend the district reunion.

Trusting the work is moving onward and upward, in all the vast fields, I am,

Your brother in gospel bonds,
J. L. PARKER.

New York.

Just a word from the New York District. There are some very pleasing features to the work here. Results are being manifest. The untiring efforts of the faithful in Sunday school picnic of the Niagara Falls school, held at Queenstown coming members of the body of Christ.

Sunday, June 29, being Children's Day at Buffalo, the entire day was given over to children's work: Sunday school at 9.45 a. m.; a talk to the children and the duty of parents toward them, at 11 a. m. At 2.30, at Fort Erie, on the Canadian shore of the Niagara River, four children were baptized; in the evening a very pleasing and profitable entertainment was rendered by the little ones.

On July 4, the writer was privileged to attend the Sunday school picnic of the Niagara Falls school, held at Queenstown Heights, Ontario. A very pleasant time was enjoyed. It was not really a celebration of the glorious Fourth. We were on British soil, hence the American enthusiasm was kept in check; but the day was very much enjoyed.

Sunday, the 6th, was a day to be remembered by many as one marked by divine approval. The 11 o'clock service at Niagara Falls was a feast, it being sacrament service. The Holy Spirit was present to encourage and bless the Saints. Eyes were moistened with tears, hearts were made glad. At 12.30 the priesthood entered into a lengthy meeting, called by the district president. There again the good Spirit was manifest. We took our leave for Buffalo, arriving for the evening service, it being sacrament and confirmation meeting. God's Holy Spirit was present from the beginning. All were made glad, all were strengthened; hope was brightened, and I think all went away resolved to meet the demands of life in a manner pleasing to God.

May our heavenly Father be praised for this another marked manifestation of divine favor. Truly God is still God, and is mindful of his creatures when they are striving to do what he requires of them.

Yours for the onward progress of Zion's cause,
A. E. STONE.

News from Branches

Wichita, Kansas.

We are not gathering them in by the hundreds at Wichita, but we are trying to sow the good seed, and reap a little of the fruit from seed sown by others before us.

Last summer the undersigned opened the work on the streets here, with good interest. Large crowds gathered every night to hear the good news of the gospel restored. Brethren Davis and Slye came a week later, and we continued the work for eight weeks. Before closing, the writer baptized one, Brother Samuel Moss, and just before leaving, Brother Slye baptized an aged sister, now in Iowa. Others have been baptized since.

Last December I started meetings at the noon hour at the shops where I am employed, and for seventeen days told the story of the Bible. When it was over I wondered if I had done any good. Shortly after I closed a man came to me, a Mr. Charles E. Truman, and told me he enjoyed the talks, and wanted to know why I closed. He also informed me that he had been blessed when a baby, and that these were the first Latter Day Saint sermons he had heard since he was nine years old. I invited him to our church. He and his wife belonged to the Baptist; his wife had never heard one of our ministers. They came to our Sunday school about four months ago, and under the good teaching of our Sister Bertha Donaldson, and the sermons we were able to offer them, we had the pleasure to baptize them June 22, along with Earl, the oldest son of Brother and Sister H. L. McDivitt.

We now have the tent up in the north end of the city, with a fair interest. We are trying in our weak way to sow the seed for the Master. I wish to say that the Saints are coming to our assistance here in the work with the tent. I am sure that the Rewarder of all will remember their good work when the call home shall come. In bonds, 207 SOUTH MILLWOOD. E. K. BARRACLOUGH.

By motion this amount was appropriated for home department work. Election as follows: J. C. Page, president; Emily Coney, vice president; Bertha Graham, secretary and treasurer; Sister T. H. Hunter, home department superintendent; J. C. Page, member library board. Splendid institute work was conducted by J. A. Gunsolley. Adjourned to meet same date and place as next district conference. Bertha Graham, secretary.

First Presidency.

NOTICE.

Owing to some inadvertent errors in the appointments as published, some misunderstanding has arisen as to the field of labor of Brother Ammon White as evangelical minister. This is to notify those concerned that his field of labor is Missouri and Oklahoma, he to make such division of his time as may be agreed upon between Brethren Rushton and Aylor, the president of the Order of Evangelists, and Brother White.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.
JOHN W. RUSHTON, Secretary Twelve.

Notice to Missionaries.

The following brethren laboring under appointment, and in Mission number 2, embracing Missouri, Kansas, and part of Illinois, have not yet sent in their report for the four months ending June 30, and I will be pleased to have this matter attended to at once: B. J. Scott, F. C. Keck, H. V. Braun, J. F. Cunningham, J. A. Dowker, A. C. Martin, L. C. Moore, F. O. Pritchett, W. P. Pickering, W. E. Reynolds, W. R. Dexter.

We again urge that all will please be prompt in reporting, as each one delaying causes the whole report to be delayed, and entails unnecessary correspondence.

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 9, 1913.

Two-day Meetings.

At Clear Springs Branch on Gilchrist Creek, Northern Michigan District, July 26 and 27. All come and bring well filled baskets. J. C. Goodman, president.

Reunion Notices.

Massachusetts District reunion will convene at Onset, Massachusetts, July 26 to August 10, 1913. Tents with flies, 12 by 15, $4.50; 10 by 12 $4. Meal tickets, adults, 21 meals, $4; children, under twelve years, 21 meals, $2; cots 40 cents. Give orders for tents to those appointed in the different branches as agents; where there are no agents send direct to M. C. Fisher, 7 Miner Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts. W. W. Howlett, secretary, Washington Avenue, Pottersville, Massachusetts.

Spring River reunion will convene in Cunningham Park, Joplin, Missouri, August 8 to 18, close to Saints' chapel. There will be able speakers from home and abroad, and music the finest. Tents: 12 by 12 and 12 by 14 from $2 to $2.50, set up and ready for use. All orders must be sent to S. G. Carrow, Joplin, Missouri Station Number 1. Board on the ground at the dining tent at regular reunion prices, low as the lowest. Brother J. F. Curtis thinks he can give us three days, and in consequence of his debate at Joplin with Reverend Carlin he is a drawing card. We shall try to have a patriarch on the ground to attend to that part of the service. T. W. Chatburn, for committee.

Northwestern Missouri reunion will be held August 15 to 24, 1913, at Stewartsville, Missouri. Tents 3 foot wall, 10 by 12, $2; 12 by 14, $2.50; 6 foot wall, 12 by 14, $4.50, 12 by 20, $6.50. Steel divans for two, 75 cents; spring cots, 40 cents; all delivered on grounds. Straw free. Send all orders to T. H. Hinderks, secretary, Stewartsville, Missouri. Order tents by August 8. Meals 20 cents, 6 for $1. Local and long distance telephone on grounds. Brethren J. W. Rushton, J. A. Tanner, R. M. Elvin, and the missionaries of the district will be with us through the entire ten days. T. H. Hinderks, secretary.

Northeastern and Northwestern Kansas district reunion will convene at Blue Rapids, Kansas, August 29 to September 7. Orders for tents, cots, etc., should be in hands of secretary not later than August 1. Meals at reasonable rates. For further information inquire of Joseph Arber, secretary, Blue Rapids, Kansas.

Died.

SCOTT.—Elder George M. Scott was born October 5, 1835 at Medina, Ohio, died at Little Sioux, Iowa, June 23, 1913. He married Maria Cobb, September 16, 1860. To them were born four children. He was baptized in 1884. In June, 1891, he was ordained a high priest by William W. Blair and David Chambers. Brother Scott was a faithful and wise man of God, and was loyal to the flock over which he presided at Little Sioux for nearly a quarter of a century. Funeral at Saints' church, Little Sioux, the 26th, in charge of Alma Booker, sermon by Joseph Lane. A noble man has gone to his reward.

ISLES.—Rebecca P. Isles was born at Arthur, Ontario, April 26, 1896, died at Valley Center, Michigan, June 24, 1913, of tuberculosis. She was baptized by George Buschlen at Arthur, Ontario, August 28, 1904, and remained a firm member until death. Through faith and confidence in the Lord she received many temporary blessings, and about twelve hours previous to her demise was relieved of all pain. She bade all farewell, stating that her time was short, as she beheld the angels beckoning her home. She leaves father, mother, three sisters, five brothers. Two sisters preceded her. William Grice, of Crosswell, conducted the funeral service.

Gettysburg.

It is appropriate that the labor of years, which Jesse Bowman Young has spent in collecting and analyzing material for his comprehensive narrative, The Battle of Gettysburg, should be crowned by the publication of the book almost upon the anniversary of the battle and at a time when the attention of the whole country is turned toward the former battle field. But the book is far from being of the sort which bases its chief claim to interest upon timeliness. As a fresh survey of the campaign and battle, including every fact of importance, written with the vividness of reminiscence, and characterized by a clearness and definiteness that result from the author's long familiarity with the region in which the battle was fought, The Battle of Gettysburg has a permanent and distinctive value. Mr. Young was an officer in the battle, and his duties as assistant provost marshal assigned to the headquarters of Brigadier General Andrew Humphreys gave him unusual opportunities for observation both on the march and in the thick of the fight. For a dozen years after the war he resided in the Cumberland Valley, and in Adams County, of which Gettysburg is the county seat—for three years of this time in Gettysburg itself. "During these years," he writes, "the different landscapes, along with the incidents and movements of the campaign, wove themselves into panoramic visions in my brain, so vividly that they have become an indelible part of my experience." As a "circuit rider" he journeyed over all the roads traversed by the two armies, and while living in Gettysburg he came to know every foot of the great battle field and the location of every organization which took part in the engagement. Few men, we imagine, have ever attained such a clearly pictured and thoroughly interrelated conception of any great battle. The author has supplemented his personal knowledge by wide reading, and close study of the military problems involved. In addition, the book contains many personal sketches, and a special feature is its compact array of the record of all West Point graduates who served in the campaign and battle on either side. The student of history, the student of warfare, the veteran of the war, will each find The Battle of Gettysburg of peculiar interest from his own point of view. To the general reader it presents a wonderful picture of two great armies in action.

TROUBLE IN THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

The following clippings from the Kansas City Journal and the Examiner will be interesting reading to the patrons of the HERALD, however deeply they may regret the contentions portrayed therein.

How Mr. James Hedrick has kept silent so long in reference to what rights he might have in the Church of Christ as being the son of Granville Hedrick, the putative founder of that church, does not appear to be explained. We are at a little loss to see the propriety of an appeal to the secular courts to restrain the membership of the Church of Christ from discrediting the standing or membership of anyone who might be called to office of a spiritual nature or to force the majority of such church to retain in office one of its members from whom they had withdrawn confidence.

Evidently the judge was right, that the court could not interfere and the matter must be determined by the membership itself. Possibly Mr. Hedrick may have had in his mind the idea (the Church of Christ apparently holding the Temple Lot in possession for the use and behoof of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints organized by Joseph Smith and others on April 6, 1830, as was stated by Elder Richard Hill when on the stand as a witness in the celebrated Temple Lot case) that it may be about time for somebody to rise up and inquire how it comes about that the Church of Christ, which has claimed to be only a branch of the original church, is occupying, and to ask where the other branches of such church are to be found.

Some few years ago a writer in one of the Kansas City papers presumed to state that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints held to the belief that a wonderful creation of combined mineral and metal material should rise in a night on the sacred place where the Temple was to be built, through the extraordinary power of the Lord whom they worshiped. We do not know of any such belief being held at that time or at any other time by the Reorganized Church as a body. The statement was purely a penciled figment of the imagination of a sensational writer of the Kansas City paper in whose columns it was found. We sincerely doubt whether any responsible number of the few composing the Church of Christ hold to any such view. And the statement is of the same imaginary character as it was when it was stated regarding the Reorganized Church.

We are sorry that any serious trouble should occur among our neighbors known as the Church of Christ, though it has been quite easy to foresee that differences of opinion among them were more difficult to reconcile than is consistent with the character of an organization professing to be the custodian of the great work to be accomplished in these latter days.

The question may be asked, What is to be the final result? To this we reply, The Lord will find a way and accomplish his purposes, though he has to make the wrath of man subserve his will. We shall wait and see; the end is not yet.

The HERALD can not, of course, vouch for these newspaper reports as being correct in all details but they are given for what they may be worth, subject to correction if necessary.

Fearing that if he was deposed as president of the Hedrickite church, that the famous Temple Lot, sacred to Mormondom the world over, would fall into the hands of apostates, James Hedrick appealed to the circuit court at Independence yesterday for a restraining order. A meeting had been called for yesterday afternoon by some of the members of the church for the purpose of ousting Hedrick from the church. He is a trustee of the Temple Lot as well as president of the church.

In the prophecies for the church made by Joseph Smith, the founder, it was given out that the Temple Lot was the gathering place of the Saints and that the Lord would in due time raise some man to be the successor of the founder of the church.

The alleged apostasy commenced some time ago in the church when Elder Frisbey, another trustee, interpreted the sayings and prophecy of the church to mean that Christ when he came the second time to earth would put the house in order.

So great was the feeling against Elder Hedrick that a movement was set on foot to oust him from the presidency and the meeting called yesterday was the result. Elder Hedrick appeared with an attorney, asking for a restraining order against the brethren of the church to keep them from putting their action on record and excommunicating him. Judge Stone had the Frisbey faction cited into court and, after hearing brief argument, decided that the court would not in any way attempt to interfere with the congregation choosing any officer it wished, but restrained the congregation from excommunicating Hedrick or any of the other members who had sided with him in the interpretation of the prophet's words. It also restrained the congregation from ousting him as trustee, conveying or transferring the property from trustees or incumbering the property in any way.

Judge Stone held that a majority of the church had a right to elect its officers, but as the trustees of the church were named by law, other action must be taken than by the congregation alone.—Kansas City Journal, July 6.

James A. Hedrick, one of the trustees of the "Hedrickite Church," or the Church of Christ, on the Temple Lot, applied in the circuit court in this city to-day for an injunction against the other two trustees, George P. Frisbey and George D. Cole, to restrain them from excommunicating him. Judge Kimbrough Stone declined to issue the restraining order at the time, owing to the fact that the defendants were not represented in court, and he issued a citation for them to appear at 1.30 this afternoon and show cause why the order should not be made.

Hedrick in his application said a business meeting of the congregation had been called for 2 o'clock this afternoon, and he had been given to understand that one of the purposes was to oust him from office as trustee. He admitted that the other side had a majority of the members, but argued that they were heretics, as they had departed from the true faith, and that therefore they had forfeited their right to hold the offices they now hold. He said that if they excommunicated him, the damage to him would be irreparable, as it would forfeit his rights and interests in the sacred Temple Lot, which was deeded to his father, Granville Hedrick, as trustee for the church by William Eaton and wife in 1877. He declared that he had put more money into the church than any other one man. He lives at Tidswell Station, just west of Independence, but he owns a large farm in Johnson County, Kansas.

Frisbey is a retired merchant living at 721 South Willis Avenue. Cole is a farmer living north of this city. Several other members of the church united with Hedrick as plaintiffs, and several are named as defendants with Frisbey and Cole.—Jackson County Examiner.

The plot thickens at the "Hedrickite" Church. On the Temple Lot, which Mormons generally regard as the most sacred spot on earth.

At a meeting of the congregation held late Saturday afternoon, James A. Hedrick, was removed from office as presiding elder, or president. This position carries with it the spiritual leadership of the church. The presiding elder either does the preaching and other ministrations of the church, or designates who shall do so.

George P. Frisbey was made presiding elder in place of Hedrick. As a result of this action he had charge of the services Sunday and will continue to do so until removed by the congregation. But apparently he has a majority of the members with him.

The business meeting at the church followed soon after an agreement was reached in the circuit court in the injunction proceeding brought by Hedrick against the other two trustees, George P. Frisbey and George D. Cole. In this agreement the way was left open for the defendants, if they saw fit, to remove Hedrick as the spiritual leader of the flock, but it was stipulated by Judge Stone, and agreed to by the factions that Hedrick should continue to hold his office of trustee and his private membership in the congregation pending the hearing of injunction proceeding. This hearing will not be had before September, unless some other judge can be found to conduct it, as Judge Stone will adjourn in a day or two for his summer vacation.—Jackson County Examiner.

MIDSUMMER MAGAZINE NUMBER.

The Editors are arranging a midsummer magazine number of the HERALD to be issued sometime during the month of August. Several very interesting articles have been secured for this number. The following is a tentative outline, subject to changes that may be made necessary by space or other consideration.

EDITORIAL:

1. "Joseph's land, or America in prophecy." This editorial deals with the prophecies found in the Bible concerning the destiny of Joseph's seed and the fulfillment of the prophecies as recorded in the Book of Mormon; also Book of Mormon predictions concerning this land as a choice land of liberty.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

2. "The Kirtland Temple." This is a very interesting article describing the Temple, prepared some years ago by Elder Henry C. Smith, who for some time was stationed at Kirtland in charge of the Kirtland Temple. This article will be illustrated by some very excellent interior views taken by Brother C. Ed Miller, one of which is especially interesting because of the clear way in which it shows the arrangement of the pulpits in the lower auditorium. The cover design of this number will be a picture of the exterior of the Temple, one of the best that we have ever seen.
3. "How can the church keep in touch with Religion and Sunday school work through branch and district officers?" by Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, secretary of Zion's Religio-Literary Society. This subject is dealt with in Sister Etzenhouser's usual spicy and direct manner.
4. "Value and methods of tent work," by Elder N. L. Booker. Brother Booker has had considerable experience in tent work, and his article will be valuable for those who are interested in this class of missionary labor. This is illustrated by pictures taken during a campaign of tent work in southern Ohio, carried on by Brethren Booker and Ebeling.
5. "The Summer Vacation Bible School," by Elder Paul N. Craig. Brother Craig is in charge of the church work in Omaha, Nebraska, and writes in a very interesting way of his experience there in the Summer Vacation Bible School work.
6. "The effect of persecution on religion," by R. J. Farthing. A very interesting article prepared by one of the talented students of Grace-land College.
7. "Book of Mormon prophecy concerning the Indians," by Elder James E. Yates. This article is prepared by one of our well-known missionaries to the Indians, and tells of remarkable predictions found in the Book of Mormon regarding the attitude of the Government toward the Indian. Illustrated with pictures of Indian converts.

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

8. "The President's Message to the Indians." This article sets forth the text of a remarkable message recently dictated by President Wilson, recorded upon wax cylinders, to be heard by way of phonograph in all of the Indian reservations.
9. "An Indian tells about Indian prophets." A statement from the pen of an educated Indian who relates some remarkable predictions made by prophets of his people in years gone by.
10. "The Indians have a knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ." This is an extract from the writings of an Indian agent formerly in charge of the Morongo Agency, who became convinced that the Indians at some earlier period in their history had in some way received a knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The three articles last named will be illustrated. The foregoing outline, as has been stated, may be subject to some slight changes; for instance, in some past numbers one or two articles have been crowded out for lack of space; but so far as possible this outline will be adhered to, and we believe that this number will be of unusual interest to our readers.

ANNOUNCEMENT FROM THE BUREAU OF PUBLICITY.

The Bureau of Publicity desires to announce that the pamphlet entitled, A Plea for the Golden Rule, being a review of certain portions of the book written by Reverend Bruce Kinney, called Mormonism, the Islam of America, will soon be ready for distribution. This is a revised reprint of three editorials appearing in the SAINTS' HERALD. These editorials have been revised and cut down to bring them within the space limitations of a forty-page pamphlet. While some paragraphs have been sacrificed in the interest of brevity, two items not considered in the editorials have been taken up in the pamphlet; one of these being Mr. Kinney's statement that the ancient inhabitants of America were ignorant of the use of iron and similar metals which are mentioned in the Book of Mormon.

Readers of the pamphlet are cited to the statement of Mr. A. J. Conant, A. M., member of the Saint Louis Academy of Science, and of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, who in his book, Footprints of Vanished Races in the Mis- issippi Valley, declares, "To the question whether they possessed knowledge of working iron, the wise man will hesitate a long time before he answers in the negative."

Readers are also referred to the writings of Mr. Cyrus Thomas, for twenty-nine years connected with the Bureau of American Ethnology, Smithsonian Institution, who in his book, American Archæology, reports finding iron implements of undisputed antiquity in both United States and Mexico, also articles of gold, and completely spoils Mr. Kinney's theory by declaring that it must be admitted that these ancient people "had discovered the art of casting metal in molds."

The Bureau of Publicity desires to recommend that the Saints interest themselves in this pamphlet, and so far as possible aid in its distribution among those who have been studying Mr. Kinney's work. Single copies may be secured for five cents; dozen lots, fifty cents. All orders should be addressed to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

BUREAU OF PUBLICITY.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

SOCIAL SERVICE VERSUS RELIGION.—The Reverend Dean Shailer Mathews, president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, sounds a note of warning in which he declares that there is danger that the churches will lose their distinctive position as spiritual agents, and become mere agents of social service. He argues that many people are coming to think that the sole business of the church is to engage in social reform. While he commends social service, he argues that a due balance should be maintained between social service and spiritual and divine service. He laments that many of the ablest and most ardent devotees of social service seldom attend the church services, and especially the communion service, and that when they do they find the service irksome and uninteresting. Presently they discover that they have lost interest in religion and spirituality, and that their lamps are dry. Their time is taken up in fostering antituberculosis societies, and teaching eugenics and other forms of social service, which are good so far as they go, but they have come to neglect prayer, worship, and devotion, and do not wait upon God for direction and blessing.

LAZY MINISTERS.—We have been told for many years by many clergymen that Joseph Smith was a lazy individual. They have practically all of them joined in this chorus. But now comes Reverend Mark Allison Matthews, "pastor of the largest Presbyterian Church in America," that of Seattle, and declares that clergymen of all denominations are as a rule lazy and inefficient. He suggests that they put a little vim and ambition into their work, and also indorses the idea of working "two by two." We quote from his utterances as found in the Literary Digest, June 7, 1913: "A minister must be very much in earnest. He must be intense and filled with zeal and conviction. And the Holy Ghost will help such a man, but the Holy Ghost can't be expected to take any more interest in a mechanical preacher than the mechanical preacher takes in himself. There are 40,000 elders in the Presbyterian Church. Some of them call themselves 'ruling elders.' Well, elders don't do any ruling these days. . . . Mostly they loaf. I believe in team work. If our elders in the United States would get together in twos we should have 20,000 teams. And if each team were to bring one person into the church every week, Presbyterianism would grow at the rate of 80,000 converts a month, or 960,000 a year. In 1912 only 73,000 persons joined the Presbyterian Church. I charge the elders with the loss of nearly 900,000 new members of our denomination."

QUIET ON THE POTOMAC.—HARDLY.—The following, from the Octographic Review for July 1, is suggestive of the beautiful spirit of harmony not existing in the Church of Christ, the nonprogressive faction of what is commonly known as the Christian Church. "In last week's Review Brother S. W. Settle mentioned the controversy among the Disciples about offering thanks before or after pouring out the wine of the communion, about the right hands of fellowship, about giving and receiving letters of commendation, about close communion, about preaching at the hour of communion, about 'first day' and 'Lord's day,' about classifying children and others to teach them, about rebaptism, about monthly preaching, about singing before going out after the communion, about advice not expressed in exact words of scripture, about restricted communion, about taking up a collection, and about baptizing in running water." These people adhere to the slogan of their forbears, "We want no new message from the skies—no ambassadors from Christ." The tumult among them evidences the fact that their wants have been abundantly supplied.

TO RECONCILE SCIENCE AND RELIGION.—The Chicago Record-Herald for July 6, 1913, contains the following interesting news item: "PARIS, July 5.—Among the most interesting events arranged for next month is the International Congress of Philosophers and Churchmen, who will meet in an effort to reconcile science with religion. The French philosopher and academician, Emile Boutroux, who was an intimate friend of the late William James, the pragmatist, will preside over the convention.

Among the more prominent delegates are Professor Broeltsch, of Heidelberg; Rabbi Cesar Seligmann, of Frankfort; Sir Richard Stapley, of London; the Pundit Sivanath Sastri, of Calcutta; Sant Altar Singh, of the Punjab Abdul Beha, the Persian Yogi, and Edouard Schure, the theosophist, author of 'The Great Initiated,' which work has been translated into every European and many Asiatic tongues. Representatives of Buddhists from Ceylon and China and of all sects of Mohammedans will also be present."

BUREAU OF PUBLICITY ORGANIZED.—Recognizing a need that has existed for some time in the church, the First Presidency has taken steps to organize a Bureau of Publicity. This bureau will be managed during the conference year by John F. Garver and Elbert A. Smith. Its object will be to promote a more thorough and effectual distribution of church literature, and to assist the elders when possible in securing publicity through newspapers and other periodicals. District and branch presidents will probably hear from this bureau in the near future regarding plans for special work along this line. It is not likely that the bureau can meet all the demands that may be made upon it during the coming year, or extend its work as widely as might be done with unlimited time and capital at their disposal; but it is hoped that this work will grow into something quite useful and important in the economy of the church.

MAKE WAY FOR THE MAN.

Let us have peace. No craven's peace,
Nor sluggish to gape and dream;
But the strenuous peace of the land's increase,
And the powerful beat of steam.
Let the cannon of commerce roar over the fields,
And the bugles of brotherhood play;—
For the arm of the man, and the brain of the man,
And the grit of the man, make way.

Let us have peace. No timid peace,
That doubtful clings to its place,
But the free brave peace of the old-time Greece,
And the faith of a patriot race.
Let the vision of Virtue enrapture the gaze,
And the bolts of Integrity stay;—
For the arm of the man, and the brain of the man,
And the nerve of the man make way.

Let us have peace. No anchored peace,
That holds its sails in the slips,
But the peace that sweeps all the strange blue deeps
With the keels of its own great ships.
With Honor commanding, and Truth at the helm,
And Beauty to welcome the spray;—
For the nerve and muscle and brawn and brain,
For the soul of the man make way.

Gettysburg Fifty Years After---July 1, 1913.

'Tis fifty years, my Brother, since on that fatal day,
Confronting one another in grim war's dread array,
The Gray and Blue with courage true
Met on this field for deeds of rue,
To slaughter and to slay.

Hate filled our eyes then, Brother, and rage enthralled each heart—
A rage that naught could smother, and drove us mad apart.
Each fought for right as right he knew,
And as we fought our madness grew
And poisoned every dart.

Blood-lust was on us, Brother. We writhed beneath its spell;
And sons of the same mother beneath its madness fell.
We maimed, and lamed, and blindly slew—
Each did the deed he had to do,
Nor knew that it was Hell!

The skies grew lurid overhead as shot and shell with carnage dread
Their sanguinary horrors spread,
And scarlet grew the meadows green,
And great streams babbled o'er the scene,
And every stream was red!

To-day we meet again, Brother, upon that self-same field.
Forgot is every pain, Brother, in new-born Love revealed.
The Blue and Gray in glad array Stand face to face as on that day,
And every wound is healed!

The madness of the fray, Brother, the blindness of the fight,
Like to that dreadful day, Brother, have faded in the night,
And hand in hand the Spirit band,
As well as we together stand.
Together face the light!

E'en as the blood we shed, Brother, the blood of warriors true,
In one stream mingled red, Brother, and sped thence to the blue,
All blent in blessed unity,
So in Union blest run we
To face what we've to do!

Gone is the rage that filled our hearts.
Gone is the hate that dulled our eyes,
And here where flew envenomed darts
The Palm of Peace Fraternal lies.
Where Brother once his Brother slew,
And grim war dimmed the skies above,
Once more they come, the Gray, the Blue,
To hold a festival of Love!

The Beautiful House of To-day.

A pilgrim was passing the wide-open door
Of the house by the side of the way,
As an angel stood waiting and calling to him
From the beautiful house of To-day.
"Oh, enter ye here; 'twas built just for you;
Come dwell in this beautiful place,

For other shall never be open to you
From to-day to the end of the race."

But the pilgrim saw not its glory or worth,
"I see not the beauty you say.
To me 'tis only a bare, lonely place;
'Tis only the house of To-day.

While onward before in my journey I see
A house that is wondrously fair:
'Tis the house of To-morrow that soon I shall see,
That is free from the burdens of care."

And the angel said sadly, "Farewell, farewell,"
As the pilgrim pressed forth on his way
To the house of To-morrow he had seen just ahead,
And lo, 'twas the house of To-day.
Its glory and splendor had seemed to depart;
"Not the house of To-morrow," he cried,
And the angel still stood by the wide-open door
And pleadingly pressed to his side.

How often we all, in the journey of life,
Impatiently press on our way,
Nor see in our haste that beautiful place,
The beautiful house of To-day.
But the house of To-morrow we constantly seek,
And turn from the angel away,
Who lovingly, pleadingly calls us to dwell
In the beautiful house of To-day.

Through the Year.

God be with you in the springtime,
When the violets unfold,
And the buttercups and cowslips
Fill the fields with yellow gold;
In the time of apple blossoms,
When the happy bluebirds sing,
Filling all the world with gladness—
God be with you in the spring.

God be with you in the summer,
When the sweet June roses blow;
When the bobolinks are laughing,
And the brooks with music flow;
When the fields are white with daisies,
And the days are glad and long—
God be with you in the summer,
Filling all your world with song.

God be with you in the autumn,
When the birds and flowers have fled,
And along the woodland pathways
Leaves are falling, gold and red;
When the summer lies behind you,
In the evening of the year—
God be with you in the autumn,
Then to fill your heart with cheer.

God be with you in the winter,
When the snow lies deep and white,
When the sleeping fields are silent,
And the stars gleam cold and bright;
When the hands and heart are tired,
With life's long and weary quest—
God be with you in the winter,
Just to guide you into rest.

THE STANDING MINISTER AND THE MISSIONARY.

A PROFITABLE TALK.

JOHN. Brother Dan, what success have you had this conference year in your field?

DAN. Very good, considering that the field is so large and laborers so few. There are seventeen branches and only four missionaries; we have had more calls than we have been able to fill.

JOHN. That is the case where I have been laboring; before we get through in one place, the call would be, "Come over into Macedonia and help us."

DAN. From what source would the Macedonian call come?

JOHN. Why, from those in charge of the work; sometimes the president or the secretary, by vote of the branch, or some of the brethren. From nearly every conference, Sunday school, and Religio convention or reunion the invitations are pressing and numerous to come and hold a series of meetings in the various branches and missions.

DAN. That is the experience of the majority of the missionaries; I have noticed that the Saints, as well as those in charge of branches, urge the traveling missionaries to visit their respective branches, and we missionaries take it for granted that it is the Macedonian cry, when a very large percentage is only human, and I believe, as a whole, unwise. The Macedonian cry that came to Paul was the word of the Lord in a vision; help was needed, and much good was accomplished; on that mission Paul baptized Lydia and her household, and many others heard the gospel.

JOHN. What is the difference, whether the call comes by dream, vision, or by those in charge of the work, if help is needed and good is accomplished? We read that "he is a slothful servant that waits to be commanded in all things," either by dreams, visions, prophecy, or the visitation of angels. Surely those in charge of the work are good authority, and when they say, "Come, and help us," I shall not wait to be directed by spiritual manifestation, but shall go.

DAN. Yes; I agree with you; if our labor is needed, and we can see that it is in keeping with our calling, I would go; it is not necessary to wait to be directed by dream or vision. But, as I view matters, we, the traveling missionaries, are spending much means and valuable time in going often to the various branches, conferences, conventions and reunions. In my judgment, by so doing we are neglecting our own fields and are not in keeping with the law.

JOHN. Why, I am surprised to hear you speak in that strain. How are we neglecting our own field?

And in what sense are we not in harmony with the law? I think it is a wise arrangement to go into branches, districts, and stakes, and hold series of meetings. By so doing we kill two birds with one stone; first, the Saints are edified, encouraged, and strengthened; second, our friends have the privilege of hearing the gospel. So by our efforts and the assistance of the Saints in extending to their neighbors a kindly invitation to attend the service, much good is done.

DAN. I agree with you that efforts along that line are very beneficial and should be encouraged; but, as I understand, there are men who can carry on that work, whose duty it is; while we, of the traveling ministry, should be preaching the gospel in other fields. To make the matter plain, as I see it, there are two fields; one is known as the organized district, branch, or stake, and the other is the unorganized; much of the latter is found within the jurisdiction of the former, so far as territory that has not heard the gospel is concerned. There are also two classes of ministers, the standing, whose field of labor is in the organized, viz, branches, districts, and stakes, which ministry is composed of the evangelists' order, (patriarchs) high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons; the traveling ministry, whose field of labor is in the unorganized territory, and this ministry is composed of the Twelve, Seventy, together with such high priests and elders as can or will travel. We may add the priest, for the high priest, elder; and priest become traveling ministers by the appointment of General Conference; the Twelve and Seventy are such by virtue of their calling, Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3. In April, 1894, the following was given, Doctrine and Covenants 122: 7, 8: "The work now lying before the missionary quorums of the church is of such increased magnitude and importance—the field so white unto the harvest and the need for laborers so great—that the Twelve and the Seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible; thus freeing these spiritual authorities and leaving them at liberty to push the preaching of the word into the new fields now widening before them; in which work, if they will but now take counsel, saith the Spirit, they shall feel a peace and vigor of mind, surpassing what they have enjoyed in the past. That part of the law which says: 'It is the duty of the Twelve, also, to ordain and set in order all the other officers of the church,' is to be understood by the revelation which went before and in accordance with which it was written; and which follows after it in the book, and when those officers are ordained and set in their order, in the church, they should be left to administer in the things unto which they were ordained, having charge of the affairs over which they are called and set apart to preside; the Twelve and Seventy administering as those prosecuting the work of preaching with the warning voice, baptizing, organizing, and setting in order, then pushing their ministry into other fields until the world is warned. It is the will of God that they do this; yea, verily, thus saith the Spirit, If they will now enter upon this work, leaving the burden of care in organized districts, or conferences, to the standing ministry, under the Presidency of the church; observing the law already given to ordain and set high priests or elders to preside in large branches and in districts, and also evangelical ministers, then will those officers set in the church be useful and he who gave the law be honored; the differences between the quorums be healed, confidence be restored, and good will and peace come to the people as a cherishing fountain." From the above we learn that the need of labor in the unorganized fields was so great that the Twelve and Seventy, together with such high priests and elders as can go as traveling missionaries, shall be free to do so, leaving the branches and districts in care of standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons. It is quite evident that prior to 1894, the date of the revelation above, the traveling ministry spent too much time in branches and districts, hence the admonition to push out into new or other fields. I believe that the needs in the unorganized field are just as great to-day as then. If so, why do we (of the traveling ministry) not devote more of our time in breaking up new ground and less time in the organized territory?

JOHN. I believe we are laboring in harmony with the law; we are sent out to preach the gospel, but not to be in charge of branches, districts, or stakes; we are not burdened with the care and needs of the branches, hence, we are free to wait upon our ministry, preaching the word, wherever we can get an opening, traveling from place to place.

DAN. It is not only contemplated in the law that we should be free from the care of the branches and districts, but to push out into new fields and not labor in one branch and then go to another, and so on, until most of our time is spent in old fields and not in the new as commanded.

JOHN. In my opinion, if we, of the traveling ministry, were to keep out of the branches and districts, say one year, we would find the work in a sad condition. My observation is that even with the presence and assistance of the missionaries the branches and districts are not up to the standard that they should be, and to leave them alone would be a serious mistake. Quite often one of the missionaries is placed in charge of the district, for lack of competent material in the standing ministry.

DAN. It is not contemplated in the law that the extreme view taken by you shall be maintained. The law is, "Leaving them (branches and districts) so far as possible"; there are some districts that have competent material, and if left for a term of years would prosper without a personal visit of any of the missionaries, while there may be some that would need help. Notice Doctrine and Covenants 120: 8: "The twelve and seventy are traveling ministers and preachers of the gospel, to persuade men to obey the truth. The high priests and elders, holding the same priesthood, are standing ministers of the church, having the watchcare of the membership and nurturing and sustaining them under the direction and instruction of the presidency and twelve." You observe that the standing ministry are to move under the direction and instruction of the Presidency and Twelve. It is not necessary that either of the Presidency or Twelve should be on the ground; directions and instructions can be conveyed by correspondence. In Doctrine and Covenants 122: 8. "It is the will of God that they (the twelve and seventy) do this: yea, verily, thus saith the Spirit, if they will now enter upon this work (evidently had not been doing so, and how is it to-day?) leaving the burden of care in organized districts or conferences to the standing ministry, under the presidency of the church." From this we learn that the Twelve and Seventy are not to assume the care of the work in organized districts, but it is left to the standing ministry and Presidency; if advice and counsel is needed, it can be obtained from the Presidency. By so doing, the missionary quorums of the church will be free to push out into new fields, unburdened. Even in cases of difficulty the law is as follows, Doctrine and Covenants 120: 7: "In matters of personal importance and conduct, arising in branches or districts, the authorities of these branches and districts should be authorized and permitted to settle them." From this we learn that the Lord is willing to trust the branches, districts, and stakes to the care of those placed in charge. This thing of saying that the work in branches and districts will die, or not reach the standard of perfection it should unless the traveling missionaries spend the greater part of their time in said organized territory, is a reflection upon the ability of those in charge and upon the law and him who gave it.

JOHN. You believe that as branches, districts, and stakes are established, that the traveling ministry should not labor in their jurisdiction, even with their consent or invitation?

DAN. No; I did not wish to convey that thought, for according to Doctrine and Covenants 120: 4, when the traveling, presiding councils of the church, (Twelve and Seventy, see Doctrine and Covenants 23: 13) are present in either district or branch, they are to be regarded and considered as the leading representative authorities of the church and be respected as such, and their counsel and advice be sought and respected when given.

JOHN. In short, the children (branches, districts, and stakes), should not ignore or disrespect their parents (the Twelve and Seventy)?

DAN. Correct; neither should the parents (Twelve and Seventy), lavish all their love and care upon their children (branches, districts, and stakes), but should push out into other fields, as directed in the law and gather the lost and perishing ones into the fold. It is evident that too much time has been devoted by the traveling ministry in the organized field, or the Lord would not have spoken twice on the subject, as we notice in Doctrine and Covenants sections 120 and 122. My motto shall be, this coming conference year,—not how many branches, conferences, conventions, and reunions have I visited, but how many new openings have I made or assisted in making? It is just as consistent for the standing ministry to move out into unorganized territory, neglecting their duties in branches and districts, as it is for the traveling ministry to spend the greatest part of their time in the branches and districts.

JOHN. But you know that the church is growing; see the number of branches and districts there are, besides two large stakes, and by the time the brethren of the Twelve and submissionary in charge visit the various districts, conferences, conventions, reunions, and some of the large branches, there is but little time, if any, to move out into other fields; besides, I believe that we had better take care of what we have, than lose by reaching out after more.

DAN. It is true that the church is growing, new branches and districts being organized, but do not lose sight of the fact that men are ordained and set in charge of the branches and districts, and when that is done, the command is for those of the traveling ministry to push out into new fields. How long are they to continue doing so? Until the whole world is warned. (120: 8.) The Lord considered the need of prosecuting the work in new fields very essential, but you seem to think if we move out in that direction that we will lose what we have gathered, virtually telling the Lord that he made a mistake in commanding the missionaries to leave the branches and districts and stakes to the care of the standing ministry, under the Presidency. Another thought with reference to the submissionaries in charge: they are not in charge of the unorganized territory and of the work in that field until it is grafted into the organized, and placed in charge of the standing ministry, under the Presidency. I am sure that no objections will be urged by the standing ministry if the brethren of the traveling ministry visit them occasionally at the conferences and reunions and branches, but when we make it a point to attend all the conferences, conventions, and reunions, and not effect one new opening, there is just grounds for reminding us that we are neglecting our own fields; besides, when we do the principal part of the preaching and presiding, the local men do not have the privilege to develop as they should. Let the leading men of the traveling ministry give heed to the command to "push out into new fields," and others will follow; and then, and not until then, will the Lord fulfill his promise, wherein he said: "They shall find a peace and vigor of mind surpassing what they have enjoyed in the past," and again, "peace shall come to the people as a cherishing fountain."

JOHN. I believe as a ministry and church we are enjoying those promises.

DAN. Yes; I believe that in a measure we have enjoyed, but I understand that there is far more in store for us if we comply with the conditions; the Lord has said so. While I have enjoyed laboring in branches and the associations of the Saints at conferences, conventions, and reunions, I can truthfully say that I have been blessed more with the Spirit of the Lord when out in the world preaching the gospel to those that never heard it; and I am convinced that not until we, as the traveling ministry, enter upon our work, as directed, will we receive the fullness of the promises given, and the standing ministry do their work.

PUBLIC DEBATES.

NUMBER 13.—"METHODS AND TACTICS" SERIES.

In his Devil's Dictionary, Ambrose Bierce defines discussion as, "A method of confirming others in their errors." There may be a grain of truth in this definition under certain circumstances, but like most epigrams, it is only partly true and does not have a general application. We are required to meet the enemies of the work and to defend it in both public and private, and many excellent converts have been secured as a result of such public discussion. But we are not required to meet every man who may seek to claim our attention, nor to meet those who may be worthy of our notice under improper conditions, neither to defend unfair and improperly worded propositions. These questions furnish food for thought, and those who have had experience in debates are prepared to present ideas that will be profitable to others. The following article was prepared by Brother P. M. Hanson, at the time of its writing a member of the Quorum of Seventy, now one of the apostles. He has had experience in foreign fields, as well as in America, in defending our position. This article will be followed by articles on the same subject from the pens of Brethren Leonard G. Holloway and S. W. L. Scott.—EDITORS.

From earliest times able debaters, because of their mental gifts and habits being of a high order, have been among the most useful members of society.

Men capable of discerning the truth from error, analyzing keenly, separating essentials from non-essentials, and possessing an accompanying gift of expression, have played an important part in the inception and maintenance of every great movement affecting the world's social, political, or religious thought. It could not be otherwise; for humanity lives in the twilight, waiting to be convinced of the truth or falsity of a disputed matter.

It is a universal practice in conversation to discuss matters from different viewpoints, in an attempt to discover the truth for oneself, or to unfold it to another. In a public debate there are many auditors, and rules govern the speakers in their efforts to alter the views of the public on the questions in discussion. No "tramp" views of a religious character should be entertained by anyone; only what is worth while is entitled to our time, energy, and support. Error sets no one free. Every position in science, art, and religion should in my opinion be open to interrogation. And so I conclude that debate can well be applied to religion.

Unity of religious thought will come more quickly by a full and free discussion of the vital differences that divide tottering Christendom, than through all those who frequent cathedrals and churches imagining with satisfaction that all the conflicting claims have equal fact value. What has no fact value possesses no spiritual value. Jesus said:

Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword. For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household. (Matthew 10: 34-36.)

This is the effect of truth entering and being received in a household by one or more, where carnality does not welcome divinity, where destructive pride regards the gospel of Christ as foolishness, and where the doctrines of men are entertained to the point of the rejection of the commands of God. The truth as a "sword" produces a conflict. It is well to have unity, but there can be no unity without a possession, representation, and defense of the truth.

Debates help to establish the truth; the disputed matter is brought before the public, where both sides can be heard, with their pleadings, evidence, and conclusions. Such procedure can not but result in enlightenment. False processes of reasoning can be exposed, knowledge disseminated, personalities (if there be any) made to appear unlovely by an unsailable dignity of procedure on the part of the messenger of God, and, what is best of all, heavenly truth may be revealed.

Truth does not hesitate to come to the light that its deeds may be made manifest, and is ever triumphant, in public or in private, in grappling with dark error. Debates, therefore, are profitable. It may safely be assumed that there is as much power in the affirmation of truth as in the proclamation of error, so truth is put to no disadvantage. The respective representatives have each an opportunity to be heard in reply to fallacious reasoning, misstatement of facts, and false positions; and to join in eulogy of the truth.

Arranging for a debate is of great importance. Wrangling contests are never in order, and should not be given even embryonic recognition. But where an invitation has been extended to take part in a public discussion of some vital issue, what our church believes should be given proper representation. And where an injurious assault, in ignorance or otherwise, has been publicly made upon the faith of the church, before such an assault no representative of sound philosophy wishes to beat a retreat. Latter Day Saint elders do not know the meaning of retreat—there is absolutely nothing in their religion that defines the word.

In the event of wrangling making its appearance in debate, it need not be permitted to extend to both sides. The side that is affected will suffer; the man in debate and his cause are, in the eyes of the audience, inextricably bound together. A powerful mind, courtesy, poise, learning, and truth will tend to cure the disease on the other side, and there will be an effort made, to pattern after the high example which draws forth silent or open approval from the audience. Where this rule is observed, the persistent unworthiness of a disputant will contribute to the success of his worthy rival.

Nothing in the whole procedure is more important than the writing of the propositions. Subjects for debate should usually be stated affirmatively; and in them fundamental issues should be involved. In arrangement for debates no undue favor should be granted gratuitously, or under pressure, to the other side; truth needs no favor, error should not have it. The propositions to be discussed should be so worded as to clearly express what the church believes; speculative, mooted, or unwise questions should not be affirmed in the name of the church, for obvious reasons.

Questions that would prove a snare should be avoided. Let it be remembered that the questions should be fairly worded, so there can be no advantage to be gained by a disputant. And if the object of the debate is to convince the hearers, sufficient time should be agreed upon to make possible the accomplishment of the object; if not, there may be a rush of objections by an opponent, and if they are answered no time will be left for affirming the proposition. If the proposition is not affirmed, the case is lost. No worthy opponent will object to plenty of time and fairly worded propositions.

An equal number of questions should be affirmed on each side; where this is not done one opponent has the advantage of an undue number of final speeches. Final speeches are a source of delight to debaters—let not the delight be all on one side.

There are some things that belong to the foundation of a house; in the roof they would look ridiculous; and interior furnishings have their proper place. How strong and beautiful and attractive is a building composed of a wealth of materials, and well put together! The same is true of all public speaking, and should not be absent in debating. The following may be mentioned as some of the leading qualifications of a debater:

- 1.—Quick analysis: ability to find where the real issue lies.
- 2.—Ability to outline the argument around that issue; and not be sidetracked.
- 3.—Disposition to investigate, without prejudice, both sides.
- 4.—Ability to turn negative material into constructive arguments.
- 5.—Power of condensation; to state briefly the gist of an argument, and answer accordingly.
- 6.—Ability to make a quick choice in the kind of material, and of the arguments to be answered, so time will be left for the presentation of matter in the affirmative.
- 7.—Adaptation to the audience.
- 8.—All the qualities that go to make a good public speaker: force, directness, and enthusiasm.

Much is to be gained from a debate with a worthy opponent; but all debaters are not of a high order. The church is a representative body, and can afford to meet only representative men in public discussion. Care is necessary in determining as to the advisability of holding a debate; the general circumstances of time, place, and subject should receive due consideration. The demand need not be of an open character, for it may lie slumbering, ready to be turned to good account by a genius aflame with inspiration.

In conclusion, I wish to add that a debater engaged in the great work of defending the truth can not know too much. No man is a great debater who despises scholarship. The most powerful debater is one who, having the gift of expression, fears God, and is thoroughly instructed "in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the law of the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand; of things both in heaven, and in the earth, and under the earth; things which have been; things which are; things which must shortly come to pass; things which are at home; things which are abroad; the wars and the perplexities of the nations; and the judgments which are on the land; and a knowledge also of countries, and of kingdoms" (Doctrine and Covenants 85:21), and who obtains "a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man" (Doctrine and Covenants 90:12).

The church can not get along without men capable of making, when seasonable, in the face of influential opposition, a strong defense, in which, by the presentation of truth, error will be exposed, and men will be set free to see the light of the angelic message of latter days.

PAUL M. HANSON.

THE FAILURES OF CAMPBELLISM

OR

THE CURRENT REFORMATION IN CONTRAST WITH TRUTH REVEALED.—PART 12.

BY E. E. LONG.

SELECTING A NAME.

We have not used the appellation, "Campbellism," as a stigma or term of reproach; far from it. There are several groups of Mr. Campbell's followers, with varying sentiments regarding the name they should wear. The name has been one of the "apples of discord" that divided the "reformation" into groups of wrangling malcontents. And like most of the grave mistakes, Mr. Campbell is held responsible.

Now let us see if, "where the Scriptures are silent," they have been silent on the question of names. The Scriptures know no such thing as "Christian Church," "Disciples Church," or "Church of the Disciples," yet these are the names they have commonly employed. There is neither more reason nor more scripture for using such names than for any other human, party names, the using and wearing of which they so loudly decry. A tablet on an edifice which reads, "Church of Christ (Disciples)" is no more in harmony with the Bible than if the structure were characterized by the use of Corinthian columns, and bore a tablet with the well-known inscription, "Church of Christ (Scientist)." . . . In the East and North, "Disciple" is almost universal, whether reference is being made in an individual or collective way. West and South "Christian" and "Christian Church" are more prevalent. In the East Campbell's influence seems to have been dominant, while in the Southwest Stone's ideas prevailed. Perhaps to Campbell attaches the credit (or blame) for the discovery and adoption of the name "Disciple." . . . According to Campbell and all his followers, there were no Christians prior to the crucifixion and the first Pentecost thereafter—could have been none. Therefore, most of the "Disciples" of whom the Bible speaks were not Christians. Hence, the reformer was most unfortunate in the selection of a designation. In its fairest import, "Disciple" is no more a synonym of "Christian" than is an acorn the equivalent of an oak-tree. In each instance the first may become the second, but it is not the second. "Disciples" have mercilessly giped Baptists for claiming that they antedate Pentecost and Calvary, so keen are they in seeing the mote in another's eye, but it will not require much reflection to perceive that they also fail to "rightly divide," and that they, too, have their taproot in the soil of a dispensation which was nailed to the cross. . . . "Christian Church," "Disciple Church," "Church of the Disciples," "Disciples of Christ," are objectionable, because: 1.

They are not scriptural. 2. They are human formulations. 3. They engender sectarianism. 4. Their use violates the chief motto. 5. They are used as party appellations. 6. The first three accord no ownership to the Lord. 7. Hence they are divisive and can not become universal. 8. It is not expedient to grieve a brother with meat (names). 9. They contradict the Bible in implying a plurality of churches. 10. Many who would walk with those who wear them, repudiate the terms. 11. We can not hope that sects will drop their names to take up other party names. 12. They are the one reef on which there is danger of the Restoration stranding in partyism (if not yet an accomplished fact), as have other movements which set sail under fair skies.—O. E. Payne, in Christian Standard, September 18, 1909.

So we discover another failure in this attempted restoration. The dominant party sees no impropriety in the use of the capitalized "Disciple" as a designation; while the minor element look upon it as a brand of sectarianism. For the present purpose we use the term, Campbellism, in order to include all the followers of Mr. Campbell, and distinguish them from other Christians.

Now so far as the name of the church is concerned, in the very nature of things, one party must be wrong; possibly both. Let us see. Jesus said, "I will build my church" (Matthew 16:18). MY CHURCH. To be HIS church it must bear his name.

Turning to Luke 1:30, 31, we read: "And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary: for thou hast found favor with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS."

That was the name which his Father and mother bestowed upon him. The term Christ simply means anointed, and was no more a part of his name than was Messiah, the Hebrew appellation, or Shiloh. Thou shalt call his NAME Jesus. Jesus was to be his name after the same manner as James, Peter, John, etc.; while "Christ," "Messiah," "Immanuel," and "Shiloh," were metaphorical expressions as "Lamb of God," "Prince of Peace," etc. "Messiah" is the Hebrew, and "Christ" is the Greek for anointed, hence Jesus Messiah, or Jesus Christ. So "Church of Messiah" would be just as scriptural as "Church of Christ," neither of which is correct, strictly speaking. It must bear his name, which is JESUS, of whom the "whole family in heaven and earth is named." (Ephesians 3:15.) "The Church of Jesus Christ." This is one very important truth which Mr. Campbell and his friends failed to "discover."

As touching the name of the individual members of the church the writer quoted above says:

When Smith and Rigdon were ready to name their followers, "Christians," "Disciples," "Friends," "Brethren," and other like words, had been appropriated and capitalized, so they, likewise wrested "Saint" and made it do service. . . . The writer believes that, for no better reason, Campbell likewise appropriated the word "Disciple." Like Smith, he must have a Bible word. "Christian" met all the legitimate needs, but, since all the professed children of God wore that name, it could not be made to serve a party. . . . It seems to be reasonably certain that Isaiah foretold the advent of the Messiah, that he would call both Jew and Gentile, and that when the latter should behold his righteousness, then the mouth of the Lord would call his people by a new name. The Messiah came, the gospel was preached to the Gentiles (in the eleventh chapter), and it was then that inspiration mentioned the giving of the new name, which from that day to this has been above every name, and is familiar all over the world: His followers have worn it proudly, and myriads have suffered martyrdom rather than renounce it. To-day millions feel that they are honored beyond measure if those who know them state that they are Christians. Is there a child of God in all the earth who would disown the name?

The above writer argues at some length to prove that the name "Disciple" became obsolete after the "new name" was given, which he thinks was Christian; because they were called Christians first at Antioch. The name Christian is found only three times in all the New Testament, and only once in the epistles. It seems to have been applied by the enemies of the church as a reproach after the same manner as Mormon and Campbellite. They were called Christians "first in Antioch" (Acts 11:26), just when the church was undergoing a severe persecution (Acts 12:1, 2). If Christian was the "new name," and given by inspiration, why did not the Apostle Paul use the term in his epistles? Notice the manner of address AFTER IT is claimed the "new name" was given: "Unto the Church of God which is at Corinth, with all the saints which are in Achaia" (2 Corinthians 1:1); "To the saints at Ephesus" (Ephesians 1:1); "To all the saints in Christ Jesus at Philippi" (Philippians 1:1); "To all the saints and faithful at Colosse" (Colossians 1:2). Why did not Paul write "Christians" at Ephesus, etc.? The second Corinthian letter was written sixteen years, and the Ephesian, Philippian, and Colossian letters twenty years after, the Antiochan persecution, when they were first called Christians. If it was given by inspiration as averred, it would have gained popular usage with the disciples in that length of time, and the apostle would have used it in addressing his epistles. More than fifty times the members are referred to as saints after they were called Christians at Antioch, and only once is there a semblance of a reference to them as "Christians" on the part of the apostles, and in that instance it is extremely doubtful whether the term was applied as a proper designation.

Now notice the Scripture, with a few words emphasized to call particular attention.

If ye be REPROACHED FOR THE NAME OF CHRIST happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you; on THEIR part HE IS EVIL SPOKEN OF, but on your part he is glorified. But let none of you SUFFER as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil doer, or as a busy-body in other men's matters. Yet if any man SUFFER AS A CHRISTIAN, let him not be ashamed, but let him glorify God on this behalf.—1 Peter 4:14-16.

This plain inference is that the saints were being stigmatized as "Christians," and Peter admonished them to bear it patiently, just as we have to admonish Saints who are new in the faith now when they are called "Mormon." There is no divine warrant for the application of the term Christian as a name for the people of God; but "saint," and "saints" have been God's chosen appellations in all ages, and in the Apocalypse we find these terms used exclusively. Surely the "beloved disciple" knew the proper name of himself and brethren; and the assertion that Smith and Rigdon "wrested saint and made it do service" comes with poor grace, since the preponderance of evidence is in favor of the name SAINT.

On this point the whole coterie of "current reformers" have failed to "rightly divide," and as a result there is disunion and partyism among them, each group stigmatizing the others as "sectarian," "apostate," "digressive," etc.

The following, clipped from the Gospel Missionary, May 19, 1903, and published in Zion's Ensign, June 25, 1903, are fair samples of the manner in which one party gibes the other: Clark Braden, the noted defender of the progressive, digressive, back-slidden Campbellite Christian apostate church, was deserted by his friends and driven from the field of battle by a few Davids and Jonathans. Once he was right, but he ignorantly or willfully apostatized and acknowledged in our Olney debate that they "have apostatized, but I am under no obligation to say wherein we have apostatized."

Here is another severe arraignment from the pen of Elder O. M. Thomason in the same paper.

At the Joplin, (Missouri), debate with the Mormons, in response to an invitation to attend the same, the pastor of the Christian Church said he did not believe in debate. This pastor must be very blind, uninformed or inconsiderate on the matter of debating. If he only knew it every inch of ground that the reformation gained was taken at the point of the sword. No sectarian ever lays down his puny arms of rebellion and comes to the truth. He must be forced to do it. It is a fact that the Christian Church and the sects are closer together now than they were thirty years ago, but it is not because the latter have come nearer to the truth, but because the former has embraced more error. The sects have not come closer to the Christian Church but the church has rushed into the fond embraces of the sects. The Christian Church did not halt at the bounds marked out by religious prudence and decency, but broke all records, smashed down the flood gate and dashed down the stream at a speed never before witnessed by the ominous clouds of the dark age and all the sects stand and "wonder after the Christian Church."

Well, it is true that many of our people have been exceedingly anxious concerning the outcome of the great battle which we have been fighting with the "digressives" for nearly half a century. For many years it seemed, here in the North at least, as if they would accomplish their purpose and utterly destroy apostolic simplicity among the Disciples. But, thank God, men have arisen with hearts to fight sin in all its forms, and the result is that many thousands are still held to the simplicity in Christ. The simple facts in the case are that there are two distinct bodies, and they are regarded as such in the religious census of the Government. The census says that there are 159,000 who are opposed to these innovations, and I have no doubt that there are 50,000, perhaps 100,000 more, for I know that hundreds of churches never made any reports. Nearly everywhere the brethren now are free from traitors in their ranks. . . . Prospects are assuming a new aspect among our "digressive" brethren. Their days of hilarious success are drawing to a close, and their period of "atrabilariousness" is coming fastly on. There is a great war now going on among them over their society, for it has fallen into the hands of a crowd of infidels in their midst, and is fast becoming a lord of the churches.—D. A. Sommer, in the Octographic Review, December 26, 1911.

Perhaps the reader has observed ere this that that strange malady, "atrabilariousness," is an affliction common to Campbellism as a whole. It would be difficult, indeed, to locate the line of demarcation.

Thomas W. Grafton, writing with reference to the name of the church, says of Campbell and Stone:

It was unfortunate that these good men could not have come to an agreement, and saved the interminable confusion that has since resulted from the interchangeable or local use of the names "Disciples of Christ," "Christians," "Churches of Christ," etc.—Life of A. Campbell, page 137.

CONCLUSION.

The failure of this movement is a striking exemplification of the truth announced by the Apostle Paul, "The world by wisdom knew not God." If it were possible to restore primitive Christianity without divine direction, Alexander Campbell was certainly the man to accomplish the work, if we may rely upon his biographers for a correct estimate of his great abilities. Mr. Grafton, quoting Moses E. Lard, says:

His head I think the finest I ever saw. It was simply faultless. After the first look you never criticized it; you only admired it. You dwelt on it only to wonder how magnificently nature sometimes works. His head never disappointed you. No matter with reference to what you studied it, it always complimented your highest expectations. Was it the abode of a mind of extraordinary strength? Every conformation of it answered, Yes. Was it filled with a soul of profound religious devotion? The answer was the same. Did it betoken that its occupant was marred by any dangerous or unlovely eccentricities? Not one. Every point, angle and curve on it revealed that nice adjustment of faculty to faculty which renders greatness safe, and assigns to it its true position in the lead of earth's beneficent changes. On once looking on that large, finely-turned head, you never feared to trust it more.—Life of A. Campbell, pp. 223, 229.

If human intelligence and energetic zeal were sufficient qualifications, the "Current Reformation" should have been a grand success; but God had decreed that the restoration of the gospel was to be inaugurated and perfected under his direction, so that his unchangeable character would be demonstrated, and the selfish efforts of pretentious reformers brought to naught. Mr. Campbell certainly had the advantages of worldly wisdom par excellence, and we do not question his sincerity of purpose so far as a desire to see a united church is concerned; but his failure to produce a church after the apostolic order is so evident, the wonder is that anyone of ordinary intelligence, after a careful investigation from a Bible standpoint, should fail to detect the sham.

It is written with reference to the very work Mr. Campbell sought to accomplish, and the time as well:

Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.—Isaiah 29: 14.

The "everlasting covenant," which was sealed with the blood of Christ on Calvary (Isaiah 55: 3, 4), was "broken" in the great apostasy described by Mr. Campbell (Isaiah 24: 5), and could not be renewed without the consent of both parties to the agreement. Mr. Campbell had no communication from God by which he was authorized to act from the fact that he said, "We want no new message from the skies." He assumed the right to perform the "marvelous work" which God said HE purposed to do, but the history of his effort is a standing advertisement to the honor of the prophet, and the glory of God, that "the wisdom of their wise men shall perish."

The divine method of procedure was beautifully portrayed in the vision of John on the Isle of Patmos: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people" (Revelation 14: 6). This was evidently the same work alluded to by the Lord when he said, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come" (Matthew 24: 14). Not a mere fragment as preached by Campbellism, but the apostolic faith in its original fullness, with its accompanying attestations; and herein would be demonstrated the wisdom of God in contrast with the wisdom of men. God would manifest his unchangeable character by sending an angelic messenger who would commission men of God's choosing to inaugurate the work of restoration. "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you" (John 20: 21); "and how shall they preach, except they be sent?" (Romans 10: 15). "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron" (Hebrews 5: 4). The principle involved in the foregoing scriptures was just as essential in the nineteenth century as it was in the first century, and Mr. Campbell's attempted restoration without divine direction was a preposterous assumption without a parallel.

Here we are content to let the matter rest with a discriminating public. If further information is desired concerning the "Restoration" as represented by the Latter Day Saints, the reader is referred to A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, by Elder Daniel Macgregor; Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, 20 cents, which contains valuable and interesting matter not found elsewhere.

IS ROME LOSING IN NUMBERS?

In many quarters there has been an impression—fostered partly by the claims of the Catholic press and partly by the uninformed discussion of the subject in Protestant publications and the daily newspapers—that the Roman Church in America was gaining numerically by leaps and bounds. For a time "the trend to Rome" was a foremost topic. When the official Catholic Directory was issued several months ago, The Christian Herald directed attention to the fact that it claimed only a net increase of 138,000 adherents during the past year, being a distinct decline in the ratio of previous years. This we regarded as significant, especially in view of the great additions that might naturally have been expected as the result of our steadily rising immigration from southern Europe. As an offset to this disappointing aspect of the situation, the Catholic journals made the most of the occasional defections from other churches.

But investigation made within the last few weeks shows conclusively that "the trend to Rome" is the other way, and that Rome's losses to Protestantism far outweigh its gains from all other faiths. The Boston Transcript publishes a list of leading Presbyterian churches throughout the country, whose records "show an average of five per cent of their entire membership to come from the Roman Catholic Church." Among these churches are the following:

Westminster, Minneapolis; Brick, Rochester; First, Seattle; First, Newark; Covenant, Cincinnati; Tabernacle, Philadelphia; and University Place and West End, New York. For example, the University Place, New York, has in its membership 130 former Roman Catholics; the First Presbyterian, Newark, 150; the First of Seattle, 25.

Commenting on this the Transcript says: "If the same proportion obtains throughout the Presbyterian Church, former Roman Catholics now in its active membership number 70,000."

Zion's Herald, a Methodist publication, which has also taken up the work of investigation, says:

"The records are not confined to the Presbyterian Church. The investigation was carried on also among a number of Protestant Episcopalian Churches, also selected at random, and precisely the same results were obtained. The churches chosen were the famous Church of the Advent, Boston; Holy Trinity, Brooklyn; Saint Thomas', Brooklyn; Saint Peter's, Chicago; and Gethsemane, Minneapolis. For example, Saint Thomas', Brooklyn, has above 100. Reverend Doctor Shaw, of Chicago, says: "Every confirmation class brings some Roman Catholics in Saint Peter's. If the same proportion obtains in all of that communion as in these whose records were examined, there are between 45,000 and 50,000 members of that church who were formerly Roman Catholics."

These represent only two of the great Protestant denominations, and their figures show an increase, straight from Rome, which practically wipes out the entire gain claimed for the Roman Church in its official directory. Other Protestant churches—the Methodist, Baptist, Lutheran, Disciples, Congregationalist, Reformed—have all had proportionate additions from the same source, and these when fully compiled will show that the "trend from Rome" toward Protestantism in America has carried with it more than double the increase claimed by Rome from all sources. This is the true and logical explanation of the Catholic Church's meager gains—the fact that thousands of adherents are forsaking the papacy and coming voluntarily into the larger light and broader freedom of the Protestant faith.

Clearly, here is irrefutable evidence that there is something wrong with Rome—something which may well give it pause in its campaign to "make America Catholic." Gaining in wealth, power and influence, it is losing its ancient hold upon the masses, losing not by tens and hundreds, but by thousands! Its highest hopes are threatened by such a situation, for it is a loss that is irreparable and which seems destined to grow with the spread of education and the love of freedom. These have made shipwreck of Rome in the Old World; they now threaten to overwhelm it in the new.—Christian Herald, June 25, 1913.

UNUSUAL OPERATION.

The following, from the Independence Examiner for June 27, will be of interest to the Saints since it represents the class of work done at our church Sanitarium.

Miss Johanna Knudson, of Weston, Iowa, underwent an unusual operation yesterday at the Independence Sanitarium, where she has been under treatment for a year. She was afflicted with a curvature of the spine with a tubercular tendency. To correct this, and prevent further collapse, she underwent yesterday a bone grafting operation.

The work was done by Doctor Elmer Twyman of this city and Doctor A. E. Hertzler of Kansas City. A strip of bone about three-sixteenths of an inch thick and six inches long was cut from the front of the tibia in one of her legs, and was inserted in an incision that had been made for it in the back, at the rear of the spinal column, between the shoulders.

This operation, it was said, would not have been attempted in the case on an older person; but Miss Knudson is only twenty-four years old, and it is expected that in a few months the surrounding tissues will have attached themselves firmly to the bone borrowed from the leg.

IMPROVED CONDITIONS AMONG THE INDIANS.

In an article written for the HERALD, the body of which will appear later, Elder James E. Yates makes the following very interesting comments on the present conditions among the Indians:

The contrast between their former savage characteristics and some of their present improving tendencies is sharply drawn in photographs recently taken by the writer. One shows a group of Indian men standing beside a "wigwam" or "tepee," which is a sample of what their habitations have been in summer and winter for generations. These men now, however, instead of being clothed with pelts and skins, and girdled with human scalps, as trophies of war, are clothed with the product of the loom and the mill and the factories of industry.

Another picture shows an old oil painting portrait of a noted Iowa chief, White Cloud, by name, tomahawk in hand, bust naked, with bear-claw trimmed collar, profuse ear trinkets, and face painted red in token of bloodthirsty propensities; while beside the picture hangs a representation of the lowly Christ. Chief White Cloud's picture is preserved by his descendants here in the Otoe tribe, and in the same home and upon the same wall hangs this framed likeness of Jesus.

The suggestiveness of contrast between Jesus and an Indian warrior on the walls of the same home nicely connects the thread of facts as to what the Indians once were and what the moving of the Spirit of Christ in their hearts destines them to be. Let me here emphasize the fact that there is not a single home in all the Otoe tribe which we have entered which does not honor the likeness of Jesus by grouping it with their venerables on the walls of every home.

A third picture shows Chief Springer, of the Iowas, seated in front of Brother J. F. Curtis's large Two Way Chart, with the Chief's son standing just back of the decorated drum. Chief Springer has now abandoned the use of the drum, according to their ancient dancing ceremonies, rites, and customs, and merely keeps it as a relic. Nothing less than two hundred dollars would buy it of him.

The long pipe and beaded tobacco pouch which appeared with the chief in the picture were merely taken in hand for the sitting, for he does not use them; and he has a motto on the wall, "Christ is the head of this house," supplemented by a notice of his own design, reading in substance, "From this date (about one year ago now) no person will be permitted to use tobacco in this house." How is that for an example to some of our white brothers?

I believe in the religion of love—love for everybody and everything—the rich and the poor—the well and the afflicted—the weak and the strong—the old and the young—for man and for beast. I believe it were better to praise the honest living than to eulogize the dishonest dead—better to pluck a blossom from the breast of Nature and pin it with affectionate touch to the tattered coat of some forlorn unfortunate than to lay a wealth of hothouse bloom upon some rogue's luxurious casket.—I. ## Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

A Letter of Warning.

WEBB CITY, MISSOURI.

Mothers' Home Column: As I sit here to-night, a neglected and deserted wife with my five little children about me, and listen to their childish talk and play, I feel impressed to add a few lines to your columns, telling of my experience in marrying out of the church. It may be the means of causing some one to stop and think before taking a similar step.

When we started out in life together, I loved him and thought he would never do a wrong, or deceive, or be untruthful to me. I thought him perfect as a man could be here on earth. When our children came, he was proud of them, and anxious and worried when one became ill. When we laid one away in death he tried to comfort me and missed her as much as I.

But as time passed I had to acknowledge that he was not what I had thought he was. He never had been, only he grew bolder. Just to myself, at first, did I confess what I observed, but I thought he would be better when he grew older. Then a great financial trouble arose, and he left us. I soon followed with our four little ones. My eyes were gradually opened a little more. When another baby came, he left us again, and again I followed; for what could I do with five little ones?

He seemed to try to do better for a few months. Then he grew worse and worse. One day he went to work saying he would be back in a few days. He came back, stayed one day, and then left again. He had been gone over a week before I knew he had taken another woman with him,—had cast us aside. It seemed as if my grief was unbearable, but God helped me and strengthened me. Oh, what a relief prayer is! And what a comfort and help is a loving mother!

Two years have passed, and if anyone had told me it was possible for me to be so happy as I am with my little ones, I could not have believed it. Of course, the heartaches return, but they pass away; for I can see how much better it is for my children and myself. The eldest is thirteen, and the baby is three. If I can only hold out till they are old enough to help fight life's battles!

When I return from a hard day's work and they have tried to prepare a meal for me, my heart aches. Then, again, I rejoice in God's goodness to me. Ever remember me in your prayers.

Your sister in Christ,

PEARL.

Will the sister who wrote this letter send her name and address to this column. We desire to communicate with her.

And will Sister Josephine Morgan, recently of Sedalia, Missouri, who left her infant child with the authorities of the Children's Home in May, please answer this request for her address. There is some reason to believe she may be in Kansas City and we ask the cooperation of the Saints in bringing us into communication with her.

A Word to the Young.

There lies before us, handed over from our predecessor in charge of this column, an article of excellent advice, from which we shall quote copiously, though not in full on account of lack of space.

The writer, Mrs. E. D. Briggs, calls our attention to the prophetic words spoken by Paul concerning the time in which we live, those words which warn us that, in the last days, perilous times shall come, in which men shall be lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God.

Mrs. Briggs comments, and with reason, "How many more there are in this world of the pleasure-loving nature than of those who care for the right. Now, if we would be worthy of the name Latter Day Saint, we need to be on the watch-tower lest we fall into temptation; for the adversary is ever on the alert, and he is so glad when he overcomes one who has named the name of Christ. . . .

"If only the young men and maidens already in the church would realize the importance of everyday work for the Master, their companions, and themselves, there would be no time for frivolity. There is so much all around us that might be done, that any of us can do, to visit the sick and needy, to read to those who are too old to see, or who have poor sight, to encourage those who are weak, to help the flowers to go on their mission of love.

"I have in mind now a little bouquet which the writer took to a sister in the church whose sight is too poor to enable her to read. After reading to her an hour or so, the visitor took her leave. Upon returning a week later, the shut-in sister said to her, 'I want to show you something,' and that which she showed her was the flowers, brought on the previous visit, pressed and laid away in a nice little box wrapped in paraffine paper. The small token of love had made an oasis in the desert of her life, and her appreciation of it had made one in the life of the giver.

"What I am trying to impress upon your minds, my dears, is that if you desire lasting pleasure, you will find it in deeds of kindness. On the other hand, you may go to the shows, theaters, ballrooms, or many places called places of pleasure, but tell me what real pleasure there is in any of them? Your writer has been there and has tasted of this also, and she tells you in all kindness that all the pleasures of the world only please for the time being, while the little acts of love which we bestow on others will be pleasure and blessing throughout the endless ages of eternity.

"Let me repeat to you an old quotation, 'Lost—yesterday somewhere between sunrise and sunset—two golden hours, each set with sixty diamond minutes. No reward is offered, for they are gone for ever.' My dear young people, consider this, and ask yourselves whether you are losing golden opportunities, letting time slip away unheeded, reading light and worthless literature, or passing spare time at many worthless pastimes which the writer might name to you.

"Oh, my dears, stop, think, listen to the still, small voice within, which whispers to everyone of us to do better things, to 'come up higher' where we can conscientiously ask God's blessings on what we do!

"We hope the reading of these lines may cause some to consider how rapidly life is passing, and to resolve to make the best use of the fleeting moments. Let us watch, not our brother or our sister, but ourselves, find the place in which the Lord wishes us to labor, and then improve every moment."

"The Price He Paid."

This is the title of a poem sent in for publication by a sister. It is a selected poem written by Ella Wheeler Wilcox. We can not print in full, but will give the gist of the composition. It opens in the words of a young man:

"I said I would have my fling,
And do what a young man may;
And I didn't believe a thing
That the parsons have to say."

The young man had his fling. He went in the way of self-indulgence. He drank the cup of gratification some call pleasure. And when his heart had grown sated and sick with sin, he looked for comfort and true happiness in a home of his own with a young wife of health, and virtue, and spotless fame.

He considered the past as a closed chapter. He looked forward to the simple joys "that belong with a house and a home, and a brood of girls and boys." But the man reaped what he had sowed. He was wounded by the thorns of the tree of his own planting. The child, his wife bore him "was crippled, and weak, and sore." The mother herself "was left a wreck."

This was the price he paid for the dissipation of his youth. "It was so the score was settled."

One of the closing stanzas runs as follows:

"I said I would have my flog,
And they knew the path I would go;
Yet no one told me a thing
Of what I needed to know."

We have given place to this sketch of the poem to call attention to a movement indorsed by many leading people in education, reform, and medical circles, the teaching to the young of the necessity of personal purity. The board of education of the city of Chicago has added to the subjects taught in the public high schools of the city that of sex hygiene. It will be taught under the name of personal purity.

Among those citizens who wrote letters commendatory of the study were President A. W. Harris, of Northwestern University, Miss Jane Addams, Doctor Frank Billings, Judge Merritt W. Pinckney of the Juvenile Court, Professor Charles R. Henderson of the University of Chicago, Professor Oliver F. Ormsby of Rush Medical College, and Miss Clara F. Seippel, assistant city physician.

There is at present much agitation by intelligent men and women who advocate the teaching of the principles of personal purity and the facts of nature which will necessarily be a part of the study. Should such teaching become general, the plea would become obsolete, "No one told me a thing of what I needed to know." Ignorance is responsible for much of the social evil that exists.

The Prayer Union.

SUBJECTS FOR THE FIFTH THURSDAY IN JULY.

Our country, that the gospel may make greater progress in enlightening the people of America. That the gospel of Christ may win its way over all false systems and creeds, to the end that righteousness may fill the land.

Scripture lesson: Psalm 48. Memory Text: 1 Peter 4: 17.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

A brother sends in the following request in behalf of his mother: "Will you kindly print this request for prayers in behalf of my mother, Sister J. R. Tilden, of Saint Joseph, who is and has been sorely afflicted? I have faith in God's unlimited goodness and mercy and believe we will get the longed-for blessing, if we but rely on his strength. To God be praise for any blessing we receive and for the many we have received."

A sister, suffering from the dread affliction, cancer of the breast, writes, asking us to unite our prayers in her behalf, that she may successfully undergo the operation to which she has finally decided to submit. She says she has been relieved many times from other ailments and that she has been administered to twice in the past for the cancer when she has received benefit; but of late it is spreading rapidly and is quite painful. This afflicted sister resides at Goshen, Indiana, but the letter appears to have been written from the hospital in Chicago. The operation will probably be over before this reaches the Saints whose prayers are requested, but the request should, nevertheless, be heeded.

The letter closes, "In the hope of eternal life, your sister, Alice Cannon." With what deep gratitude should we look in our prayers to Him who gives eternal life to the humble and faithful after the trials of life have been passed. May we trust him in life and in death.

CENTERVILLE, IOWA, July 9, 1913.

Editors Herald: We, Brother M. M. Turpen and I, are continuing our services in the courthouse yard, occupying the band stand. Some interest, but we are not swaying the multitudes. Saturday night, after preaching, some of the spirit of opposition was in evidence, some crying "blasphemer" because I advocated that God was just in the judgment of all men, and another, crying, "Mormonism; Joseph Smith; Brigham Young; polygamy," apparently intending, if possible, to destroy our influence.

He inquired how many wives Joseph Smith had, and when answered, "One, and only one"; he then inquired how many wives Brigham Young had, and when answered, "Anywhere from twenty-one to forty-three," he said, "Then Brigham Young is the greatest prophet the Latter Day Saints have ever had." I told him that his estimate of what a great prophet was, based upon the number of wives he had, showed his respect for virtue, and was not in agreement with the views of the Latter Day Saints. He said but little more. Those who listened seemed pleased with our defense of these attacks, and last night there was no opposition.

The mayor, county auditor, and editors of the Daily Citizen, and Semi-weekly Iowegian have all been very friendly. The Citizen published notices of meetings and subjects, and the Iowegian a brief article. The Citizen has a brief article they promised to publish.

Brother and Sister Turpen are doing what they can to promote peace and build up the kingdom of God, and as a part of their work are caring for the writer. There is great need of a spiritual uplift here; the promise of immediate results are not very bright, but I can note some improvement. Brother Turpen seems to be well adapted to the needs existing here.

Hopefully in Christ,

Editors Herald: The Nauvoo district conference held at Ottumwa June 7 was a grand success. While there was not anything special done in the way of business outside of routine work, yet the general tenor of the conference was such that it had a good effect upon all. There were about twenty of the Saints of Hiteman present, mostly young people, and under the able leadership of Brother John Morgan they rendered several appropriate selections, vocal and instrumental. They occupied an hour on Sunday evening. The church building was full. The district officers were elected to succeed themselves. George P. Lambert, W. T. Lambert, James McKiernan, C. C. Joehnk, C. E. Harpe and the writer were present.

We held two preaching services after the close of the conference. Brother Joehnk occupied on Monday evening, and the writer on Tuesday evening. On Thursday Brother Joehnk left for Farmington, and the writer and Brother Harpe for Bear Creek, about five miles southwest of Ottumwa, where we held meetings for two weeks.

We had asked for the use of the schoolhouse, used for religious services by the Presbyterians, who held some sort of a prior claim on the building. The Reverend Throw, of Ottumwa, in command, ordered that under no circumstances were we to be permitted to occupy the building. This action caused quite a murmuring among the people, for they had helped financially to remove and erect the building. However, we were not to be downed. Brother Albert Erskine, with whom we stayed during our sojourn in that place, secured planks and fixed seats on his lawn, under shade trees, and here we occupied for several evenings. Then Mr. John Adey invited us to hold our meetings in his front yard. We accepted the invitation, and thereby were centrally located. We held meetings at Brother and Sister Goodwin's and Sister Jones's. On Sunday, June 22, we had a basket dinner, and a good time. A number of the Ottumwa Saints were with us. Mrs. John Adey and Mr. Emry Goodwin were baptized, Brother Harpe officiating in the sacred rite, during a heavy downpour of rain. Quite a gathering of people witnessed the baptism. Brother and Sister Erskine were especially kind to us, and we are not forgetful of the Goodwins, Joneses, and Adeys. May the Lord reward them for their kindness to the missionaries.

It would not be just to Brother C. C. Joehn were we to neglect to mention that he had been to Bear Creek and held meetings for two weeks before the district conference, and was well received. There are others that attended our meetings who believe and are near the kingdom.

June 27 we left Bear Creek for Foster, Monroe County. (A matter connected with the Nauvoo District made it advisable that Brother Harpe should go there.) We found Brother Jacob Luke and family here, and were blessed with the same liberality and courtesy that has always been characteristic of Jacob and his good wife. We held four meetings in the schoolhouse at (new) Foster, two miles west of (old) Foster, with only fair attendance. From here Brother Harpe went to Ottumwa, and I returned home.

Faithfully,
E. B. MORGAN.

STONINGTON, MAINE, July 10, 1913.

Editors Herald: I expect to sail from New York, July 23, on steamer Mauritania for Liverpool, England. Brother W. H. Greenwood will meet me there. Sisters George Potts, George Box, and Fannie McGuire and daughter will sail on the same steamer. Brother and Sister H. A. Koehler, who have been selected to labor in Jerusalem, expect to sail on the Arabe, July 29, visiting relatives in England, until the last of August, when we will meet at the Mission House in London, and travel together to Palestine. We expect to go overland to Naples, calling at Paris, Lucerne, and Rome, en route, thus avoiding as much as possible the unpleasant ocean experience.

We are looking forward to our work with the assurance that the Lord approves, and if we can only live to be worthy, the Pentecostal endowment will crown our efforts. Brother Jenkins writes that it will be necessary for us to bring sufficient bedding, dishes, cutlery, stove, etc., for housekeeping. I am glad we know how to cook. The important things will be a large supply of Book of Mormon in German and English, Doctrine and Covenants, and tracts. I expect to start school work after the order of our summer schools, and permit this work to grow and broaden out if it will. I trust the time has come for the message of the Book of Mormon to go to Israel, and shall watch the return, or gathering, with great interest, and report to the HERALD matters of general interest from time to time.

We expect it will require time, patience, grit, and much prayer to place our work upon a permanent basis. We hope to have both the spiritual and financial support of the church—spiritual, because nothing of a permanent character can be accomplished without the spirit; financial, because we are going thousands of miles from the church, where there are no Saints to care for us, and where every day will bring its burdens. It would be a blessing if some well-disposed Saints would supply the mission with suitable magazines, thus enabling us to keep in touch with the world.

All correspondents should remember that it costs five cents per ounce letter postage, to Jerusalem. Mail sent there, care of French Post, will be received.

In the conflict,
U. W. GREENE.

GREEN CITY, MISSOURI, July 9, 1913.

Editors Herald: We have managed to keep reasonably busy since General Conference, trying to make new openings, and strengthen the isolated ones. We believe we have been successful to some extent; at least we have made three new openings: at Lucerne, Cora, and Connelville, a mining town. We held meetings in the outskirts of this town; or, rather, between Connelville and Midland, at private houses.

We wrote Sister Blanch Dixon, who lives here, to learn what the prospect was for holding meetings. Not very good, was the reply, as Brethren Kelso and Chapman tried to get the church for services while working here in the mines, but were refused it; and they could only preach one public sermon all the time they were here. Sister Dixon and husband wrote me to come and make them a visit anyway. (He is not a member.)

I had tried at two or three other places to get an opening, but failed; so by the time I reached their house I was quite anxious to get to work. They thought none of their neighbors would come to their home to meetings, and that there was no use to ask them. While we were talking Sister Rhodes dropped in on her way to town, she and Sister Dixon being the only members living here. I asked her how it would do to try meetings at her house. She said we might try it if we thought best. Her house stands off the road some distance, and is a small house. We preached in the yard to three or four, and announced meeting for the next evening, when one or two more were present. We announced meeting again for next evening; but on the way home a man and his wife met us in the road in front of their house and told us we were welcome to preach in their yard, and that when we could not preach in the yard we could preach in the house. This I believe came in answer to prayer. They have a nice little house and a beautiful yard. We notified the people and began meetings in their yard, and held forth till their daughter, near by, wanted us to preach at her house, which we willingly did.

Altogether I preached twenty sermons, getting the work well before the people. As a result several are convinced, and one man and his wife say they expect to unite with the church, but wish to read the Book of Mormon and investigate a little further. The average attendance we would judge to be about twenty, including quite a number of children. We remarked that it would be a good place to organize a Sunday school, and the man who first invited me to preach in his yard has taken it in hand, and is trying to build a little house there for that express purpose. One man has offered to give the land and help in other ways. So we think the prospect is good for a little house there, though it will be small; yet some great things have a very small beginning. I have the promise that if they build I may have the house whenever I want it. We are well pleased with our efforts at this place.

If the isolated Saints, who are scattered here and there over the district would take the interest some have in trying to get the gospel before the people in their respective localities, a greater work could be accomplished. We must first give the people a chance and an opportunity to come before we are justified in saying they will not come. The Lord requires this much of everyone. Let us try. I have baptized and confirmed three.

One night while I was preaching eleven wagons loaded with bottled beer passed by in front on the road, forty-one or forty-two loads altogether while I was preaching at these two places. How is that for beer drinking? And Adair County is a dry county, too. They served an injunction on the railroad company and had the beer stopped at Worthington, in Putnam County. The beer was hauled from there.

Your colaborer,
D. E. TUCKER.

SAINT JOHN, KANSAS, July 9, 1913.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since you have heard from us. We went to McPherson, Kansas, December 19, 1911. There we joined with Brother and Sister T. C. Turpen in their home class Sunday school, and were truly blessed by the Master. Brother Turpen's family are alive in this great work. On July 15, 1912, we moved to Pratt, Kansas. There we organized our school consisting of my wife, our two little boys, and myself. From there we came to Saint John, March 13, 1913, and are still having our school.

One sister joined with us here, and our school has grown to a membership of twelve. One man and his wife are near the kingdom. A baptist lady said, "Wait brother, I want to bear my testimony before the dismissal." She said she felt the Spirit of God in our little school as much as she did in the Baptist Church, and that she wanted to learn all she could of God's ways.

Saints, even if we are away from our own faith, let us devote one hour each week to studying God's word, and instructing our children in the paths of righteousness. I feel there will be a great work done here. Pray that the Lord may send reapers into his harvest.

We would like to have the tent brought here this summer. There is a large branch of the Utah people and branch of the Bickertonites here. Brother Peak held a debate with a Christian minister here about nine years ago, and left a good interest.

We are still in the work, and want to do all we can to advance this glorious cause.

Your brother and sister in the gospel conflict,
MR. AND MRS. S. A. MADDEN.

CALDWELL, TEXAS, Route 3, July 7, 1913.

Editors Herald: I suppose there are some who would like to hear from this part of the vineyard, hence I write a little squib. We are about holding our own as to church work, not making much progress or headway. The district conference meets with Texas Central Branch, on next Saturday; we are expecting to have what we call a good time. The calculation is that the meetings will be held for at least a week.

I am called upon by some of the members of the church in the east part of Robertson County to meet a Freewill Baptist preacher, to preach with him alternately for some time. I don't know the motive of the preacher in proposing the meeting; it may be that he wants to find out the size of my caliber, and if thought advisable, hold a debate with me.

Let his motives be what they may be, I go with the determination to do my very best to convert him to the faith once delivered to the saints, by preaching the oldtime gospel of Jesus-Christ in its fullness. I am expecting a large turnout at the meetings. I think many will attend through curiosity.

I for some cause feel like we are going to have a successful meeting. I never felt more like blowing the old gospel trumpet than I do now. I never met the preacher; I expect that after we meet, and part, he will never need an introduction to me, nor the gospel in its fullness. After the meeting closes, I will let you know the results. I expect to earnestly contend for the faith as long as I live, and am able to do so.

Yours in gospel bonds,
E. W. NUNLEY.

Study to Show Thyself Approved.

In my research for truth in the midst of deception, which is on every side, I realize the Lord has blessed us in granting us various sources of light, to all of which we have access. There are many ways open to us, to enable us to discriminate between truth and error. One who has been called as a servant of God can multiply talents by searching through various fields of learning that will qualify him to substantiate the truth when many claim to be leaders of the children of men, but are unable to hold out to them all truth.

Many are influenced by the power of darkness in endeavoring to present what they believe to be truth, while others know things they advocate are not true. It is amazing, to one who is blessed with discernment, how much deception there is taught in the world. Many intelligent men and women are deceived, and are led astray.

One of the greatest achievements in our work, as the writer views it, is for one to develop his mental forces and stand boldly for truth against the persecutions and criticisms of the world. Paul wrote in beautiful language an expression which is applicable to all: Study to show thyself approved, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

Some one may ask, How am I to know or discriminate between truth and error? All Latter Day Saints ought to know that the word of God is the standard, or measuring rod, as we may term it, with which to measure the truth.

A judge who sits in court can not detect truth, or can not pass correct judgment except he investigate thoroughly that which is before him, by taking under consideration both sides of the situation, using law or standard to establish justice. Neither can we, as the children of God, detect the truth amidst so much deception except we take under consideration both sides in the matter which may be under our observation. We must not forget the divine declaration that the gospel came not in word only, but also in power and the Holy Ghost. The Spirit is one of the Trinity, as the author of this standard which we use to measure the truth.

These few thoughts are inspiring to me as I ponder them, and I have written them for the encouragement of others. I love the service in the vineyard, and am investigating to come to all truth, in order to lead to the light those who yet sit in darkness.

In gospel bonds,

CHARLES NOLAN.

Extracts from Letters.

Writing with reference to the Weiser, Idaho reunion, Brother New Madden says: "The good Spirit that prevailed during the whole reunion made impressions upon those present that will be remembered. Only those who attended can fully realize how good a time was had. The Spirit enjoyed will tend toward binding the Saints in this district more closely together, and toward causing them to live lives more in harmony with the name they bear. The Saints over the district responded nobly to the call for financial aid, and we were able to pay all current expenses and contribute quite liberally to the railroad company through the pockets of the traveling missionaries. This was the first successful reunion ever held in the Idaho District, which is very encouraging to us. The committee is hopeful of doing a great deal more another year."

Brother James C. Page writes regarding the Fargo, North Dakota, reunion: "We have just closed our reunion of the North Dakota and Minnesota districts. The preaching was excellent. Three times we went to the banks of the Red River to perform the rite of baptism; seven in all were baptized. There were two ordinations, Brother Martin, of Frazee, Minnesota, to office of elder, and Brother M. Rasmussen, of Sykeston, North Dakota, to office of priest. Satan manifested his power and tried to hinder, but through fasting and prayer, and the ordinance of the church, was prevented from doing the harm that he otherwise might have done. On account of the extreme distance for some of the Saints in both districts, it was thought not best to hold the reunion jointly next year."

Francis Earl: "In the editorial columns of the HERALD for July 2 there is reference made to Rahab, supposedly the Rahab of ancient fame, that may be found sometime to be not only unkind, but also unjust, and not proper in its application. The statement was, 'Themselves barren of such things, as Rahab of chastity.' I am aware that the estimation of this noted lady is a lewd one, universally so. I have made some study of her history and find her to occupy an honorable place, and to receive honorable mention by able and responsible writers, (Hebrews 11: 31, James 2: 24, 25, Matthew 1: 5 King James, and 1: 2 Inspired.) If I remember rightly, Josephus makes mention of this lady as the wife of Salmon, and the mother of Boaz, the greatgrandfather of King David. Professor Whiston, in his footnotes, conveys the thought that she was an inkeeper. Again, I find in looking up the word 'harlot,' according to Webster, that there are vocations for which this word is used other than that of an unchaste woman, and that, in olden times the term was sometimes applied to both sexes. Following are some of the definitions: A churl; a husbandman; a servant; a rogue; a cheat; a woman who prostitutes her body for hire; a common woman. Then among the definitions of churl, I find these: A rustic; a countryman, or laborer. Thus in life Rahab may have been perfectly chaste and honorable, though the term harlot has so vigorously followed her. Concerning her life we notice first, her great faith, by which she saved herself and family from destruction, and for which faith she was so highly commended by Paul and James; second, she was one of the progenitors, in the mother line, of Christ."

A sister writes from Deloit, Iowa: "July 6, 1913, being the day set apart to partake of the emblems in remembrance of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, in our little branch here in Deloit, the Saints met at the house of prayer and fasting and a goodly amount of the Spirit was enjoyed. The branch officers and eleven others went to Denison in the afternoon, where a service was held and where the sacrament was administered to the few at that place. We enjoyed the services in the open air, and the communion with the Saints of Denison."

Don't whine. Tell people you are a failure and they will believe you. Talk and act like a winner, and in time you will become one.—Stephen Harte.

Eastern Maine.

When last I wrote I was at Portland, Maine. March 23 found me in Brockton, Massachusetts, when I preached for the Saints, and found a home at Brother C. Thayer's. After a few days at home I started for General Conference, in company with Brethren William Bradbury, John F. Sheehy, and William Anderson. We met with the Saints in Brooklyn; Brother Sheehy preached the morning sermon and Brother Arthur Phillips the evening discourse. Monday evening we left New York for the West, arriving at Lamoni on Thursday morning. Our stay in Lamoni was made pleasant by the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Grenawalt, in whose comfortable home we found rest and Christian fellowship. One of the joys of the conference was the renewing of the acquaintances of past years. The conference over, the ministers scattered to the four corners of the earth.

April 27 I preached for the Saints in Providence, and met with them on Wednesday night in prayer service. Friday night we attended a "penny social" at the home of Brother Gates. It cost one penny to get in, and as much as one had to get out—all for the good of the local Religio, however. May 4 I met with the Attleboro Saints, and preached for them at night. The Sunday school convention met in Attleboro on the 10th and 11th; a large delegation was present, and a nice time had. May 13 found me in Portland, where I stopped for a few hours, visiting Sisters Woods, Summerfield, and Woodward, going on to Brunswick, where I found Brother and Sister Young and family well. The writer was remembered financially by Brother Young. The Lord knows our needs, and we don't have to tell the people about them. May 16 found me at Stonington, the conference convening there next day. We had a good delegation and a good conference.

Monday Brother Greene "must go fishing," so we went. Everybody caught fish, especially Sister O. Holman, of Dixfield. Sister Maude Woodward said she would not go in a flying machine but she did, as can testify all who saw her. The day was well spent, and Brother Greene was happy. Next day Brother Lemman Woodward, Brother Sherman Woodward and wife, Brother Ray Clough, Sister Marion Greene and the writer embarked on the good motor boat Imogene for Jonesport. A little rough, of course, but we were all good sailors. We arrived some nine hours later, one of the party, at least, half wet from the spray. The Jonesport people made me welcome, and I found a home with Brother Sherman Woodward—a home indeed.

The former missionaries here have had a gospel boat to visit the near-by islands and other places, but I found that the boat had been somewhat neglected, and was not very nice looking. I put in some three weeks work on her, and spent some money, which the district furnished, and got her ready for sea. I also made a skiff for a "tender." I now am able to visit a number of places that would be difficult to reach if I did not have the boat. We hope to make it so useful that the people of the churches in this district may see the advisability of keeping a larger and better boat.

The district conference at Kennebec was a success. Before going there, we held a series of meetings at Jonesport, Brother U. W. Greene and the writer doing the preaching. After the close of the conference, Brother Arthur Koehler and the writer continued the services for a week at Jonesport. While Arthur was with me we were invited to go on a picnic in Sister Cummings' automobile. We went, that is to say, we went a little way and punctured a tire. We stopped, put on another one, and went about fifty feet, and blew a hole in that one. Then we telephoned for Mr. Cummings. After we got the tire fixed we went some distance toward home and had our lunch. I don't know whether Brother Arthur has gotten over his lunch yet or not. My! how he did eat. They accuse me of being the Jonah. I don't know, perhaps I was.

I visited South Addison and Moose Neck the first week I was in this district, and enjoyed my stay while there. At this writing I am at Jonesboro, preaching in a Union church. We have some ten or more members of the church here. I trust some will be led to obey.

I close with hope for the future, and work for the present.

Yours as ever,
GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

Northern California.

Much has been written concerning the pleasures and joys of the sunny side of life. Right now, we in Northern California are experiencing a superabundance of it—the people's faces are flushed, and many of the Saints are actually driven to drink (lime juice and cold water) because of it. One can just feel it oozing from every pore—even trickling down the lenses of his spectacles. And yet with the thermometer standing 106 in the shade people walk along the streets with elastic step, head erect, and eyes sparkling. Horses do not appear a bit jaded, and business does not seem retarded. Baseball still draws a crowd.

Wish we could say the same of tent meetings. The efforts of about five weeks in two places in Stockton are about drawing to a close. Brethren Stead and Reiste are about to leave us. It was a noble effort, faithfully performed, and well sustained by the branch. The preaching was grand, the song service fine, and all worthy of a far greater hearing and acceptance by the general public. But the people generally are not looking for the best thing in the world. If they are they are looking in the wrong direction.

We wish to say in behalf of Brother Stead, who is becoming well known in these parts, that he is a faithful, untiring, earnest worker in the cause, and fully deserves the confidence that is accorded him. Brother Reiste, a comparative stranger among us, is winning his way, and no doubt the same can be said of him when he is known. They both, with Sister Reiste, have the heart sympathy and well wishes of the Saints of Stockton as they go elsewhere in conducting their self-sacrificing work. Don't let anybody in the district doubt as to the use money will be put to in contributing to this purpose. These men have the cause at heart and are doing their level best for its advancement. And don't think their work is a failure because they could not compete with baseball, or the auto races in drawing a crowd, or because the church is not filled with new-born Saints. Many, or a number have heard the word, the Saints have been educated, and the commission is being carried out.

The branch in Stockton is still moving along harmoniously. Sunday school and Religio are well sustained. Our numbers are swelled of late by the addition of the family of Brother Cornelius of Australia, and Brother Ayler, late of San Diego. These men have both been assigned branch labor, and we welcome them. Furthermore, we would welcome a number more families of the same kind.

Perhaps I should mention the pleasure enjoyed among the Saints at Lamoni, Independence, Holden, and Post Oak, while on my tour east about General Conference time. I had contemplated a long letter of detail, but fear such letters are only welcome when coming from the brilliant.

I wish to say also that notes and names mentioned in northeastern Canada are especially interesting to me because of the pleasant association and the memory of mutual effort and the success of a few years ago.

The East of course, as the scene of all my former experiences of joy and sorrow, success and failure, and the home of my kindred, is never forgotten for a day.

With kindest wishes for all,

H. J. DAIVSON.

News from Branches

Senlac, Saskatchewan.

I thought I would send a few lines to let the Saints know how we are doing in this part of God's vineyard. We have a nice branch here, and all seem to be trying to do God's will.

We built a new church this spring. We do not have it completed yet, but we can use it, and are hoping to finish it in the fall. Elder J. J. Cornish has been preaching from charts. A few outsiders come and seem interested. On June 20 the Religio gave a program, after which we served ice cream and cake. We cleared $19.80, which went to help pay for the church.

Dear Saints, I realize we are living in the last days, and that perilous times are coming upon the earth. It behooves us to stand in holy places, having on the whole armor of God, that the destroying angel may pass us by. Pray for me, that I may live up to the pattern given us.

If Brother and Sister David Dowker see this we would like to have them write us, as we want to hear from them, and do not have their address.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. JAMES CORNISH.

Rhodes, Iowa.

The Saints at Rhodes feel a longing to hear the glorious angel message. We have no place of meeting, only in private homes. For June 29 some of the sisters secured the Methodist church.

We had tried to secure churches here before, but largely through the influence of the pastors had been refused them. The pastor of this particular church had resigned, and no services were being held there except Sunday school. The sisters were courteously received, the Methodists, minus their pastor, graciously granting the request.

The day was perfect. A bright-faced little band assembled for Sunday school a half hour early, so as to be at the church promptly at eleven. Brother O. S. Salisbury, of Des Moines, came to preach for us. The Saints from Clear Creek met with the Rhodes band, also Sister Emma Weeks, her husband and sisters May, Roxie, and Helen, making, with a number of the citizens of Rhodes, an inspiring audience for Brother Salisbury at eleven o'clock.

At noon lunch was served upon the shady lawn. This and the visiting during and after the meal added no little to the enjoyment of the day. Again at 2.30 and at 8 p. m. Brother Salisbury explained the message of life in terms eloquent, yet so simple and plain that it seemed to the children of the kingdom that all must hear and rejoice in its truth. Such days are refreshing to the isolated Saints. Why can not we have more of them?

Sunday, July 6, the Saints at Rhodes met for Sunday school and sacrament and prayer meeting. The burden of the prayers and hopes of the Saints is for the good of the coming reunion here. Much good is expected. Enthusiasm runs high. Workers in the Des Moines District, let us put our shoulders to the wheel and boost for the good of the reunion, and ourselves.

— Hopefully,
BESSIE RICHESON LAUGHLIN.

New Bedford, Massachusetts.

We are still trying to keep to the front. We have Brother Rodgerson for our pastor. He comes from Fall River every Sunday morning, and we appreciate his services very much. We have three priests, one teacher, and one deacon.

We are losing two of our very earnest workers, Brother and Sister Koehler, who are called to work for the Lord in Jerusalem. We shall miss Sister Koehler very much, as she was always with us. But we wish them Godspeed in their work in the Holy Land. They leave New Bedford about July 30.

We hope and pray that some of our younger members will come forward and fill up the line, so that the work will not suffer. We are a small branch, but the Lord has promised to bless us if we are united and faithful.

E. MACFARLANE.

Date of next conference appointed for usual time, last Saturday and Sunday in June, 1914, place left to district president. Kenneth Hyatt elected president, Annie O'Brien, secretary and treasurer. Preaching by H. Rushfelt and F. J. Ebeling. The Saints were gladdened, and encouraged to go on in the great work. Lois G. Johnson, secretary.

First Presidency.

NOTICE OF TRANSFER.

Those interested will please note that the appointment of Elder John R. Lentell has been changed from the New York and Philadelphia District to Gallands Grove, Iowa, District, the transfer being concurred in by the Presidency and ministers in charge of the fields affected.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary First Presidency.
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 18, 1913.

Woman's Auxiliary Notice.

Woman's Auxiliary will be represented at the reunion held at New Philadelphia, Ohio, August 7 to 17. Sister Mary E. George, field worker, will be in charge. Mrs. F. J. Ebeling, secretary, Willoughby, Ohio.

Quorum Notices.

BRITISH ISLES ELDERS.

Seventh Quorum of Elders will meet at British Isles mission conference, Manchester, England, August 2 to 4. We shall be pleased to see as many members present as possible so that we can talk over matters of interest, looking to a forward movement and spiritual development in the British Isles Mission. The president of the mission is interested in the quorum work. John E. Meredith, president, I. A. Judd, secretary.

Pacific Coast Quorum of Elders will meet at Irvington reunion, California, beginning August 15, 1913. Send reports as soon as possible. Those not enrolled are requested to send names with proper recommendations, and to take an active interest in quorum work, which promotes better service to the church. H. A. Hintz, secretary, Chico, California.

Convention Notices.

Central Nebraska district Sunday school convention will meet with the Bonesteel Branch, August 15, 1913. Clyde Patras, secretary.

Northeastern Missouri Sunday school association will convene at Oak Ridge Schoolhouse, at 2 p. m., August 15. Arrangements will be made for Sunday school work during the reunion, which will be held at the same place August 9 to 17. W. B. Richards, superintendent, Vivian Chapman, secretary.

Reunion Notices.

Tents and cots for the reunion to be held at New Philadelphia, Ohio, August 7 to 17, may be had at following prices: Tents, 10 by 12 $2.50, with fly $3.50; 12 by 14 $3.50. Cots 50 cents. To insure accommodations, orders with cash accompanying, if possible, should be sent at once to J. A. Becker, R. F. D. 2, Willoughby, Ohio. Those wishing to purchase tents and cots may do so through the committee at a saving of at least twenty per cent. Myron Thomas, secretary.

Those wishing tents for Clinton district reunion at Rich Hill, commencing August 22, may secure them at $1.75 to $2, by writing to Merle Quick. Get orders in early and state definitely if you wish a tent held for you. Do not depend on getting rooms; they are scarce. Baggage, tents, furniture, etc., delivered on grounds at reasonable prices. Pasture one mile from town, five cents per day. For further information address, Merle M. Quick, Rich Hill, Missouri, secretary.

Orders must reach Jasper O. Dutton, Evansville, Wisconsin, not later than August 15. Reunion August 22 to 31, at Belvidere, Illinois. Wall tents, 10 by 12, $2.25; 12 by 14, $2.50; Cottage tents, 10 by 15, $2.75; 12 by 14, $3; 12 by 19, $3.25. Spring cots 25 cents. Straw for ticks 10 cents. Smith, the other counselor being associated with him in the work. Brother Squires' address is 210 Schenectady Avenue, Brooklyn, New York. The First Presidency concurs.

JULY 16, 1913.

Died.

JOHNSON.—William Wilson Johnson was born March 23, 1865, in Crawford County, Iowa, died at Lamoni, Iowa, July 9, 1913. His father and mother both belonged to the church, but he was not a member, although friendly. He leaves four daughters and one son, three being in the care of the State. He was quiet and inoffensive; never used liquor or tobacco. He had suffered much disappointment in life. Services in charge of John Smith, sermon by G. R. Wells. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery, beside his father.

AGY.—Ida May Agy was born April 21, 1866, at Seneca, Kansas, died at her home near Joy, Illinois, July 11, 1913. She was baptized August 1, 1884. She was married to George A. Agy, April 18, 1886, at Buffalo Prairie church, by E. T. Bryant, to which union were born one son and six daughters. Husband, six daughters, father, mother, six brothers survive her. She was a faithful member of the church. Funeral sermon by E. T. Bryant. Interment in Millersburg Cemetery.

CHAMBERS.—Jennett Chambers, daughter of Andrew and Jennette Young, was born at Stub Hill, Mid-Lothian, Scotland, April 24, 1839. She came to America in 1855, and was married to Thomas Murray in 1857. To them were born two children, Mary and Henry. A second marriage took place in 1866, to Francis Chambers. To them were born four sons and one daughter; Andrew, Francis, George Matilda and Joseph. They for a time lived in the West, then located at Muchakinock in Mahaska County, Iowa, where her husband and sons, Henry, Andrew, Francis, and daughter Matilda preceded her in death. Sister Chambers was baptized into the Reorganization in 1893 by William Waterman, by whom also she was confirmed, to which covenant she remained faithful unto death. She died at the home of her son Joseph, near Given, Iowa, June 19, 1913, aged 74 years, 1 month, and 15 days. The funeral service was held at the home at 12 m., June 21, James McKiernan in charge. The interment was in the Eddyville Cemetery, by the side of her loved ones.

About Golf.

In the August Century Marshall Whitlatch, a noted golfer, will explain why particularly brainy men often make a poor showing at that sport. They think so hard about hitting the ball in just the proper manner, he says, that their muscles are tensed, and the free swing of the stroke is spoiled. His theory, suggested to him by the Montessori system, is that the player should relax his mind as well as his muscles, feel out the correct position and aim in action; in short, that good golf is all a matter of subconscious habit. The soundness of his theory is upheld by his recent scores in the Knickerbocker Club contest at the Oakland course.

THE BODY OF CHRIST.

No man need go to the Bible or back to primitive Christianity for miracles. He can find them ever present in his own being. Animate existence is itself most wonderful to the thoughtful mind.

The human body, with its various organs and functions, is marvelous, even when considered entirely from a materialistic standpoint. Take for example the function of seeing. The processes by which rays of light are gathered up through the eye to form a perfect picture of landscapes and objects is sufficient to inspire one with amazement whenever he may take the time to think upon the subject.

The ability to feel, the process of digestion and assimilation, the beating of the heart, the circulation of the blood, the complex system of nerves, the act of breathing, any one of these is marvelous; taken all together in their regular sequence and cooperation, continuing as they sometimes do for nearly one hundred years in a single individual, the matter becomes even more remarkable. The fact that these things are a part of our being and of everyday occurrence, to which we have become accustomed during gradual growth from childhood, may account for the further fact that we so seldom sense their strangeness. But at times we are able to disassociate ourselves from ourselves in a sense, and observe these things as we might suppose that they would appear to a fully developed intelligence witnessing or experiencing them for the first time.

Was the turning of water into wine more astounding than the everyday miracle of turning bread into blood? Was the calming of the winds and waves more strange than the regular, unceasing pulsation of the human heart, night and day, year after year? Do we understand how the body heals a wound and knits up the torn tissues any better than we understand how Jesus cleansed the lepers? Is anything in the list of orthodox miracles more wonder inspiring than the processes of changing fruit cells into brain cells that think?

Turning from merely animal functions to the higher mental and spiritual processes that distinguish man from the beast, we find fresh food for thought. Consider the emotions and attributes of love, courage, faith, hope, determination, with their various manifestations and far-reaching consequences. Consider the spirit that dominates man, and, resident within him, directs this body, seeing the pictures painted by the eye; feeling the pleasant or painful sensations thrilling in over the nerves; thinking in the brain fed by the red blood pulsed up from the faithful heart; reasoning of things profound and distant; struggling, suffering, achieving.

Surely the Apostle Paul pursued no mean or unworthy analogy when he chose to compare the church of Christ to the human body. (1 Corinthians 12.) He says: "Ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." Again: "God has set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him." Still again he adds: "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets," etc.

God organized the human body; he also organized the church. The same divine wisdom that designed the one designed the other. Man can not improve upon either. Both are marvelously adapted to perform the work designed.

When we consider the perfect organization of the church and its adaptability to general mission work, to local church work, to the regeneration and upbuilding of both individuals and communities, its organization and functions seem no less marvelous to us than those of the human body.

Its functions may be imperfectly performed at times, owing to unworthiness of members, just as bodily functions are hindered by impaired members. But the perfect church, as designed of God, like the perfect and healthy human body, is an incomparable and marvelous product of divine wisdom. No human organization designed by man can compare with the church, more than a machine, however intricate and perfect, can compare with the human body, that does its own thinking, runs under its own power, and has the ability to reproduce itself.

Latter Day Saints are accused of riding the hobby of church organization. But when we compare clumsy human contrivances with the complete and matchless organization set forth in the written work and perfected under the administration of Jesus and the apostles, and contemplate the simple yet splendid adaptation of the latter to all human needs, general and local, individual and community, temporal and spiritual, as revealed in the general body and in the local or branch organization, we feel justified in rejecting substitutes and calling the attention of the whole world to the true body of Christ.

Furthermore, as the spirit of man in the body of man distinguishes it from the body of an animal, so does the Spirit of Christ in the church or body of Christ distinguish it from human organizations, in addition to other distinguishing characteristics of physical form and shape. The members should ever obey this Spirit, even as the human body is subject in all things to the spirit of man that dominates it. Obedience to any other spirit brings confusion and disaster as serious as came to those men of old who were dominated at times by evil spirits that had entered into their bodies and fought for control of them, being determined to rule or ruin, or more properly, rule and ruin.

It is, perhaps, unnecessary also to emphasize the thought that God has set the members in their places as it has pleased him. In the body there must be a perfect cooperation of members and organs or life is threatened or destroyed,—at the very least, efficiency is impaired and functional derangement ensues.

The heart must beat, the lungs breathe, the ears listen, the eyes perceive, the muscles contract, and all parts work together harmoniously, no one of them jealous of the other, or waiting to see if the other will do its part. If the heart stops, or the lungs cease to inhale and exhale oxygen, or the brain refuses to think, or the foot lags upon the pavement there is trouble, perhaps death.

Think then upon the responsibility resting upon members. Who has set you in the church? God set you there. Who expects you to function properly? God expects that of you. You are not working for the branch president, or the chorister, or for the district president, or the minister in charge, or the First Presidency. You are working for that One who is at the head in all things. If for these others, you might refuse to work; but it is for God, and the work must be done until he gives release.

If we refuse to work we become atrophied, and in time will be cast out of the body (church), for that is the law of God and nature. The unused muscle wastes away. The unused organ atrophies. Likewise the individual who is inactive and useless shrivels away spiritually and in time is cast out of the body of Christ. Only thus could the church preserve her life. But those who are active grow strong and happy. Just as there is joy to the muscle tugging at the oar, joy to the eye in viewing the verdant landscape, joy to the nostril that inhales the fresh, morning air, so is there joy to the Saint in service in the place assigned to him in the body of Christ, and fullness of joy in surrender of self that he may minister to the body as a whole.

BAPTIST CONSECRATES INFANTS.

From the Journal and Messenger for July 3, a Baptist periodical, we note that the Reverend Doctor Edward Judson, a pastor of the Memorial Baptist Church of New York, has made a departure from common Baptist usage in the matter of infant consecration. He has adopted a set form, which he applies to parents and children of his congregation. This form is given in the Journal and Messenger as follows:

(Parents standing before the minister holding the child).
 "They brought young children to Christ, that he should touch them; and his disciples rebuked those that brought them. But Jesus saw it, and he was much pleased, and said unto them, 'Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein.' And he took them into his arms, and put his hands upon them and blessed them."

"(Full names of the parents). Do you desire to consecrate this infant to the holy service of our Lord Jesus Christ, and do you solemnly promise in the sight of God and in the face of this company, to bring him (or her) up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, teaching him from his earliest years to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and immediately upon his acceptance of him by faith and love as his Savior and Lord encouraging him to be baptized into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit? (We do.)

"In conformity with your desire and in accordance with the express will of the Memorial Baptist Church of Christ in New York, we do hereby consecrate this infant (giving name) to the holy service of our Lord Jesus Christ in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit.

"Let us pray: (The pastor places his hand on the head of the infant.) Almighty God, our heavenly Father; all things come to Thee, O Lord, and of thine own have we given thee. Be pleased to accept this infant whom we hereby consecrate to thy holy service. Bless these parents; according to the riches of thy grace, enable them faithfully to perform the holy promises they have made to-day in the sight of God and in the face of this company. Grant this infant in health and prosperity long to live and finally after this life to obtain everlasting joy and felicity through Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom with Thee and the Holy Spirit be all honor and glory worlds without end. Amen.

"The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the communion of the Holy Spirit be with us all evermore. Amen."

The Journal and Messenger concedes that the writer might at one time have been persuaded to participate in a service of this kind; condones the practice of Reverend Judson; questions the propriety of such service; and states that there is nothing in the New Testament to justify such a procedure, all at the same time. We quote:

There was a time when the writer of this might have been persuaded to participate in a service for what is called "the consecration of infants." But he thinks now that it would have been a mistake. . . . We are not ready to condemn it outright, but we have misgivings, and are not ready to advise its adoption. . . .

Doctor Judson is a very amiable man. He would not hurt the feelings of parents so bringing their children to him—"not for the world!" He will do what they want him to do every time, if he knows what they want,—except, he might not consent to "baptize" an infant, if requested to do so. . . . We would like to ask Doctor Judson whether he really believes that when he quotes Mark 10: 13, he interprets it fairly when he uses it in such connection? Did Jesus mean, then and there, to approve or institute such a "consecration of infants" as he practices when he quotes the words? . . . We are not condemning Doctor Judson. The writer of this remembers well the days when he led the little boy by the hand and loved him. But we want to suggest some questions about this matter of consecration which we have not yet seen answered. . . . There is nothing in the New Testament to justify such a procedure, and it is liable to be misunderstood.

From the fact as appears that the Reverend Judson has not been alone in the probability of being persuaded to take up some form of infant consecration it would seem that his service might be adopted by certain of his brethren. A disposition to spare "the feelings of parents" may grow into a conviction that the consecration of infants, the blessing of children, is scriptural.

It is a matter of congratulation to the Saints that those who for long time have raved over the instruction claimed to have been received by Joseph Smith, in effect that the churches were wrong and their creeds an abomination, are gradually coming to the teachings of President Smith and the church instituted under him.

J. F. GARVER.

AN OPEN LETTER TO DISTRICT PRESIDENTS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 9, 1913.

To District Presidents: Are you an active or passive president? Do you anticipate the demands your office will make upon your time and energies, or do you wait till the duties force themselves upon your attention?

If after you accepted office as president of your district you did nothing as president until some duty was waiting to be done; if you have made no consistent and systematic effort to acquaint yourself with the condition of the various branches of the district, but have waited till unusual conditions have called your attention to some branch; if you have after each district conference given no thought to the arrangements, needs, and program of the next conference until conference time was upon you again; if you have given no study to the needs of your district in the way of special preaching services until some wide-awake local man has called attention to some locality where such meetings could be of advantage; if you give no thought to the question of how you can cooperate with and assist the missionaries who are in or might come into your district until the missionaries come to you or your assistants; if you have made no effort to be prepared for all these things, then you are a passive president, not an active one.

To be sure, you may say you have given attention to these things as they came up; but that is not enough. We have been admonished to make every effort possible to be prepared "to magnify the calling" whereunto we have been called and "the mission" with which we have been commissioned. This means more than a passive response to the demands of duty; it means that we shall "study to show ourselves approved unto God"; that we shall make an effort to anticipate each duty and be prepared to discharge it to the best possible advantage.

If you have not done so before, begin now. Make a study of your office, the needs of the district, and the probable resulting demands upon you and your time, and be prepared to meet them. Study to make the next conference the best yet. Do the best you can, and then you can the more consistently ask the Lord to assist you. If you have been passive, become active; if active, strive to be more so.

And do not forget that we want regular reports which will give us adequate information as to your real condition.

Your servant,

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

STEPPING STONES.—The new periodical, Stepping Stones, made its fourth appearance last week. This paper, put out by the Board of Publication and edited by Sisters M. Walker and Estella Wight, as has been previously announced in these columns, is intended for boys and girls of teen age. It is being used in Sunday schools all over the church to replace the Hope for children of this age, the latter being reduced in size and adapted to the beginners. Stepping Stones is attractive in design, neat in mechanical workmanship, and in contents is peculiarly adapted to the class of readers for whom it is intended. Isolated Saints will find it especially desirable for the children. Those now taking the Hope may have their names transferred to the Stepping Stones list if desired.

CHURCH MEMBERS IN JAIL.—The following statistics are taken from the World-Herald, Omaha, July 9, 1913. They give the number of members of various churches confined in the state penitentiary. The Latter Day Saints are charged with being a very bad class of citizens, and during recent debates we have been called drunkards, horse thieves and all manner of foul names, particularly by representatives of one of the leading churches that is well represented in this penitentiary. It is a little singular, in view of these charges, that the "Christians," or followers of Alexander Campbell, should outnumber us fifteen to one in this penal institution, if, indeed, the two termed "Mormons" are members of the Reorganized Church. "LINCOLN, NEBRASKA, July 8.—The monthly report from the state penitentiary, received by Governor Morehead to-day, shows that the population of that institution July 1 was three hundred and fifty-seven, a decrease of eight during the month. The total received was twelve, and twenty were discharged during June. In the prison are two hundred and seventy white males, seventy-six negro men and six negro women, three Indians, and two of Asiatic extraction. There are seventy-six Catholics, sixty-five Methodists, fifty-seven Baptists, thirty-one Christians, fifteen Presbyterians, thirteen Lutherans, nine Episcopalians, six United Brethren, four Congregationalists, two Christian Science, and two Mormons, one Hebrew, seventy-five without religious affiliation, according to the religious census taken during the month. Prison Physician Williams had six hundred and sixty-five dispensary calls during the month. The total amount of time lost through sickness of convicts was one hundred and ninety-eight days."

NEWS FROM SAN BERNARDINO.—By letter from San Bernardino, California, we learn that the Saints were well represented there during the Pioneer exercises on July 4. The old pioneers of southern California occupy quite an important place in the community, and justly so, owing to the hardships and trials that they endured in the early days of western pioneer history. Our people may well feel pleased and honored to cooperate with them on occasions of the kind mentioned. We note that on this occasion Elder Roy Slye delivered the leading oration, Brother A. E. Jones offered prayer, Sister Bessie Bemis read the Declaration of Independence, and Brother George Wixom was in charge of the ceremonies. Among other speakers on the occasion we find Judge Bledsoe of the superior court. His oration, as well as that of Elder Slye, was well spoken of in the local papers.

PROHIBITION PROHIBITS.—The Deseret News for March 21, 1913, gives the following interesting statistics regarding the effect of prohibition in Kansas. "According to the report of J. F. Dawson, attorney general, the average individual in Kansas pays 48 cents a year for liquor, while the State of Missouri averages $24, and the average for the United States is about $20. That speaks well for a prohibitory law in Kansas, even though it may not be enforced at all times. Regarding the effect on the schools and state institutions Mr. Dawson says: 'Almost a third of the population is enrolled in private or public schools. The number of illiterates has been reduced from 49 per cent to less than 2 per cent, and that trifling number is among the foreigners. There are 105 counties in the State. Eighty-seven have no insane, 54 have no feeble-minded, 96 have no inebriates, and the few which do have defied the law to the very last. Thirty-eight county poor farms have no inmates. There is only one pauper to every 3,000 population. In July 53 county jails had no inmates, and 65 had no prisoners serving time sentences; Some counties have not called a jury to try a case in ten years, and a grand jury is so uncommon that half our people would not know what it was. In my own county in western Kansas there has been but one grand jury and that was twenty-five years ago.' And yet the liquor interests keep up a howl about prohibition being a failure in Kansas, and demand a resubmission to popular vote a proposition to recall the constitutional inhibition against the manufacture and sale of liquor in that State. The contrast with Missouri alone ought to prove the fallacy of the claims of the liquor interests."

DIVIDED THEY FALL.—On the point of restoration the Church of Christ, nonprogressive Christian, agree, but on the point as to what it is that has been restored, or should have been restored, they disagree. Elder Daniel Sommer, of the Octographic Review, says it was the "faith and practices of the new covenant" that should have been restored; not so, says Elder E. C. Fuqua, of the Word of Truth; no, indeed; it was "the written word." We quote from the Review for July 22: "The reformation of the Sixteenth Century was doctrinal rather than practical; that of the Seventeenth Century was somewhat practical as well as doctrinal; that of the Eighteenth Century was practical rather than doctrinal. But not one of those reformations was an effort to restore the gospel in both doctrine and practice as recorded in the New Testament. Those reformations were the result of efforts on the part of those that wrought them to get away from the corruptions of the Roman Catholic Church, rather than to restore the faith and practice authorized by the new covenant Scriptures. But early in the Nineteenth Century certain men made efforts to restore the faith and practice of the new covenant." And now the Word of Truth, July 9: "In the first place the gospel has never been taken from the earth, only in that the written word was hidden from men during the Dark Ages, and the only 'restoration' of the gospel was when this same written word—the Bible—was again brought forth and printed for the benefit of all nations." In the phrasology of W. G. Roberts, contributing editor of the Review, and frequently used in debate with our brethren, Down goes their Campbellite cob house!

RELIGIOUS DEBATES.

NUMBER 14. "METHODS AND TACTICS" SERIES.

The following, given by the Lord in December, 1831, will serve as a foundation for what we may say:

Now, behold, this is wisdom; whoso readeth let him understand and receive also; for unto him that receiveth it shall be given more abundantly, even power; wherefore, confound your enemies; call upon them to meet you, both in public and in private; and inasmuch as ye are faithful, their shame shall be made manifest. Wherefore let them bring forth their strong reasons against the Lord. Verily thus saith the Lord unto you, There is no weapon that is formed against you shall prosper; and if any man lift his voice against you, he shall be confounded in mine own due time; wherefore, keep my commandments; they are true and faithful. Even so. Amen.

In attempting to present an article on the above-named subject it will be recognized at once that all the different phases of the question can not be discussed in an article of this kind; neither can any specific rule be laid down that must govern under any and all conditions. A few general suggestions will be submitted for the careful consideration of those who are interested in the subject. It is a well-known fact that the Church of Christ has been ready through her representatives to meet men of other faiths in the open arena and there discuss the tenets, faith, and practices of not only our work, but also that which is indorsed by other religious bodies.

The church has always stood for a "free pulpit and an open Bible," and in doing so it has brought them face to face with those who sought to oppose them. In the revelation quoted above, it will be seen that the Lord under certain conditions recognized that it is right to debate. While some might say that this revelation was given to Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon alone, we believe that it has a much wider application than to be confined simply to those two representative men of the church. The Lord here instructs us to call upon our enemies to meet us in debate, not only in private but also in public. The word "enemies" here mentioned refers to those who attack our work, and not necessarily those who may be of a different opinion religiously.

I have always been of the opinion that truth has nothing to fear in a proper examination. It is self-evident that error is made manifest when the searchlight of heaven is thrown upon it. This can be done better in a public debate than in any other way. The opponents of the latter day work have not always manifested a willingness to have their systems of religion examined, because they feared that the errors contained in them would become apparent when placed under this X-ray examination. True, some have done so, but this was largely because of their eagerness to oppose our work rather than present their own claims.

It is better under ordinary conditions to present the gospel affirmatively than to attack some other religious system. When an individual lectures or in some other way makes an attack upon us, then are we perfectly justified in asking them to meet the issue publicly. If the attack be made in public, the challenge to meet us should also be in public, and if possible before the same audience that hears the attack. We should not be the offending parties ourselves, and the church should not encourage those who make unwarranted attacks upon other churches. Always allow them to offer the first offense, and then we have plenty of opportunity to call upon them to defend their statements in a public discussion.

Some Saints are too combative and urge debates simply that they may gratify their ambition to hear a debate. This should be avoided. We lose public favor in making these unwarranted attacks on other churches, and when the discussion is under progress it will have a telling effect against the side of truth, to the detriment of our work. When favorable public sentiment is once lost it is very hard to regain, and for that reason we should be very careful not to provoke unnecessarily the censure of the people. Public opinion has much to do with the success of a debate, and unless we can obtain the good will of a majority of the people who attend the discussion, very little good will come as a result of the debate. We may have an able representative of the church to champion our side, and yet with the ill will of those who hear, he can not make a favorable impression under such conditions. We should keep this in mind when seeking to procure a debate.

ARE DEBATES PROFITABLE?

In answering this question in a general way we would say yes. Paul, as one of the greatest representatives of the gospel plan, at times engaged in public discussions. Evidently, under certain conditions he thought best to defend truth where it was assailed by the enemies of Christ. As a man of wisdom, inspired of the spirit which enlightened his mind, he certainly thought that good would result from a public examination of the cause he represented.

In debates truth and error are presented side by side, and by a critical examination of principles involved, the truth as well as error becomes more apparent. We may look at a piece of cloth and think we know just what kind of material it is; then we may look at another piece and decide that both pieces are exactly alike, but in placing them together, at once discover that there is a wide difference; that one is not nearly as good as the other. When it comes to religion, this also is true. Any religion that is false, when placed in comparison, side by side with the original church of Christ, will at once reveal its spurious characteristics. In this important matter, debates are profitable, in helping people to discover truth and enabling them to reject evil and that which is erroneous.

Publicity is always beneficial in getting truth established in the minds of the people. In debating there is presented an opportunity that can not be had in any other manner. Some people have formed an opinion that the angel's message is of no worth, and that it can not be defended, also that we are a badly deluded people. The above-named class may be honest in these things because of reports that have greeted their ears. They decide that they will not hear a sermon, but nearly always come out to hear a debate, and many times a favorable impression is left that in time will bring them into the church. The debate here is profitable in reaching them when other means have failed.

The object of discussion should be that truth may be vindicated and error exposed. If this is kept in mind it will always prove valuable in helping people understand the message of life.

PROPOSITIONS TO BE DISCUSSED.

The writer of this article believes that the church has been placed at an undue disadvantage at times by the discussion of propositions that were unfair, giving opponents a decided advantage over us. We in our eagerness to debate should never sign propositions that will put us at a disadvantage in the debate. Great care should be exercised in the wording of propositions, as those who are ready to oppose us will take advantage of everything they can, especially in the wording of a proposition. Propositions should give each disputant equal time in attacking his opponent's church.

The following will serve as a general form in the wording of propositions.

1. Resolved, That the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the New Testament Scriptures, in origin, organization, doctrine, and practice.

_____, Affirms.
_____, Denies.

2. Resolved, That the Church of _____ is in harmony with the New Testament Scriptures in origin, organization, doctrine, and practice.

_____, Affirms.
_____, Denies.

The above will give each disputant equal opportunity in discussing the respective claims of the churches involved. They are absolutely fair in every respect, so no opponent should object to debating them.

Sometimes it is thought best to frame a separate proposition for the Book of Mormon. There can be no objection to this if our opponents are willing to affirm, a separate proposition that involves an important doctrinal feature of the churches represented by them. The following could be used if necessary:

1. Resolved, That the Book of Mormon is of divine origin, and is worthy the respect and belief of all Christian people.

_____, Affirms.
_____, Denies.

2. Resolved, That the Bible is the final and complete revelation of God to man.

_____, Affirms.

It will be noticed that in the above the word origin appears. This is very important and should never be omitted, for the following reasons. First, our representatives are always ready and willing to give to the public the facts concerning the rise and coming forth of the church we stand identified with, and this gives them an opportunity to do so. Second, the representatives of other churches in nearly every instance endeavor to conceal the real origin and founders of their church; so by the placing of this word in the proposition, you can demand that they give the desired information. These questions are legitimate ones and have an important bearing on the situation.

We would recommend that if only two propositions are used, that the first two mentioned be the ones. They should be used in the order given. Nearly all those who make it a business to debate with our people want our proposition to come up last; as this gives them the opportunity of throwing "dirt" in the very close of the discussion, producing a bad effect upon the minds of those who hear. They nearly always insist that our propositions come last for no other purpose than to take advantage and thus poison the people against us. That which people hear last seems to remain more firmly in their minds, and the many weak points in an opponent's church are forgotten when the order is reversed in the above.

WHO ARE QUALIFIED TO GO INTO DEBATES?

It is a well-known fact that all men are not debaters. A man may be a gifted orator, and yet make a dismal failure in debate; he may be well versed in scripture and yet not make a successful disputant. He may be an excellent gospel preacher, and yet fail in his efforts in public debate. The successful debater is the man who is quick to perceive a point, and possesses presence of mind to answer when necessary. He should be a man of wide experience and well informed on church history. Too much emphasis can not be placed on the latter part of this qualification.

No one should ever undertake to debate without a splendid knowledge of the early history of the church so that he can successfully meet the many misrepresentations that are brought to bear against him. He should also be acquainted with the most important works written against the church, so that he may have a general knowledge of the objections used by our opponents. Nearly all men think themselves qualified for debating when perhaps not one in ten is really successful along that line. One should be thoroughly acquainted with publications issued by the church he is to oppose, especially those which deal with early history and doctrinal points. In being conversant with these things he can then select the weak places and point them out.

He should be of sober judgment so that when presence of mind is needed he will not make a hasty answer and later discover that he will have to recede from the position taken, and thereby lose the confidence of those who hear. Other suggestions might be made, but those presented here will suffice.

GENERAL SUGGESTIONS.

No representative man of the church should debate with an individual who has not the indorsement of the church he is to represent. It is not personal victory that we seek, and for that reason the church should be held responsible and not individuals, so we should always ask that our opponents furnish the indorsement of the church they are representing.

Experience has taught us that it is better in making quotations to use the original work if possible, as it has a better bearing upon the minds of the people, rather than use extracts that are published in papers. Another point in favor of the above suggestion is that opponents sometimes dispute the correctness of the quotation; and if it is quoted or read from the original this feature is eliminated.

It is better if we can have a copy of the different works used by our opponents ourselves, so that we can follow them in their reading, and if they misread or garble, it can be detected at once.

A few points well emphasized are much better than many things simply hinted at. Four nails, driven in and clinched, will hold more than a dozen partially driven in. We should never theorize, but select those passages of scripture which contain the least amount of danger of having a double meaning, or those which our opponents might turn to their favor by showing that our interpretation is not true.

When you make a point leave it there and do not attempt to exhaust the subject; and if the opponent fails to notice it, keep calling the attention of the audience to the fact that he is silent, and soon it will become apparent to all that he is unable to meet the issue.

We should never resort to personal abuse. It matters not what methods are employed by those who oppose us, never under any condition resort to the same questionable tactics that some use in debate. Be a gentleman under any and all circumstances. If your opponent attacks you personally, don't allow your temper to assert itself. Be a Christian and you will win out in the end. Do not boast if you find public sentiment is in your favor. Let them know that you appreciate their good will, but that is all that is necessary.

Have your books well noted, so that no time will be lost in finding what you want. Be familiar with what they contain.

I trust that some information may be gleaned from this article that may help some of our standard bearers in the future.

IS SUNDAY EVER CALLED THE SABBATH IN THE NEW TESTAMENT?

Some time ago a handbill found its way to this office in which a reward of five hundred pounds was offered by the Seventh Day Adventists to any person who could prove that Sunday, or the first day of the week, is ever called the Sabbath in the Bible. It may be admitted at the start that it would be impossible to prove such from the King James Version of the Bible. But that version is simply a translation from the Greek, and as far as authenticity is concerned must take its place with other translations. It should have no precedence.

Eighty-nine years before the translation of the Authorized Version, Martin Luther made a translation into the German language, and in it referred to the resurrection Sunday as the Sabbath. Seventy years before the advent of the King James Version Luther translated the Bible into the Swedish language. Matthew 28:1, he translated: "Po forsta Sabbaten, kom Marie Magdalena, och den andra Marie till att dese grafwen," or "On the first Sabbath came Mary Magdalena," etc. Mark 16:2, and John 20:19, also give renderings which call Sunday the Sabbath.

But Uriah Smith, one of the foremost Adventist writers and ministers, in Is Sunday Called the Sabbath by any New Testament Writer? page 2, says: "There is nothing of the kind in any English version"; that is, there is no English version that renders Sunday the Sabbath. This is altogether wrong, for at least one English translation does give such a rendition. Furthermore, it is a translation advertised in their Battle Creek, Michigan, catalogue of books as "an invaluable aid." I refer to Young's translation. Robert Young is the author of the celebrated "Young's Analytical Concordance." His concordance is in the libraries of the leading ministers of every denomination. His wonderful scholarship and unsurpassed knowledge of biblical Hebrew and Greek, led to a demand for a word for word translation by him of the Scriptures. "Young's Translation" is the result.

The Reverend S. W. Gamble, the author of Sunday, the True Sabbath of God, wrote to Uriah Smith, asking, "Who is the best literal interpreter of the Hebrew Old Testament and the Greek New Testament into English?" The reply by the assistant editor of the leading Adventist paper was, "Robert Young is what you want." So here we have a translation into English, advertised in their catalogue of books as "an invaluable aid," and admitted by the editorial staff of their leading paper to have been translated by "the best literal interpreter of the Hebrew Old Testament and the Greek New Testament into English." Let us see if he calls Sunday the Sabbath.

Matthew 28: 1, he renders as follows: "And on the eve of the Sabbaths, at the dawn, toward the first of the Sabbaths, came Mary the Magdalene," etc. Mark 16: 1, is rendered: "And the Sabbath being past, Mary the Magdalene, and Mary of James, and Salome, bought spices, that having come, they may anoint him, and early in the morning of the first of the Sabbaths, they come unto the sepulcher, at the rising of the sun," etc. Luke 24: 1, is translated: "And on the first of the Sabbaths, at early dawn, they came to the tomb," etc. John 20: 1, is rendered: "And on the first of the Sabbaths, Mary the Magdalene doth come early (there being yet darkness) to the tomb," etc.

Here we have four quotations from a popular English version in which every reference to the morning of the resurrection is referred to as the "first of the Sabbaths." This is supported by Luther's German and Swedish translations, and is certainly the evidence our Adventist friends have offered the five hundred pounds reward for. It clearly shows the institution of a new Sabbath at the resurrection of Christ. Will those responsible for the publication of the handbill announcing the reward please pass over the cash? ### THE FINISHED COURSE.

From the second letter to Timothy, the fourth chapter, sixth, seventh, and eighth verses: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

I shall not make an attempt this afternoon to preach. My effort shall be simply the uttering of a few words more than due from me to the departed; a testimony, brief, or otherwise, as I may be led, as a tribute of my affection for her and the love that has existed in my heart for her since the time I became acquainted with her.

Fourteen months ago I felt about as I do to-day, when I stood by the casket of my own mother. Sister Clark has been a mother to me, and could I occupy for several hours here in speaking with reference to her, and if dealing in excellent phrases and beautiful testimony all the way through, I should never have paid then the debt that I feel I am under and have been under to her.

In 1879 I was appointed, with five other missionaries, on my first important mission for the Reorganized Church, to Utah. In the assignment of homes and places of appointment there, my billet landed me at the home of Sister Clark; at that time Brother Samuel, Sister Clara, and Sister Vilate were all small children at the home. I was in a poor condition of health, and her motherly instinct led her to sense the situation. I was comparatively young at that time in years and experience, and her action in caring for me betokened the mother spirit throughout. Receiving me as a missionary representing the faith, she also received me as if I had been her own son.

I well remember a circumstance within a few days of my arrival there that impressed me deeply. At the General Conference I had received spiritual assurance of my appointment to that mission, notwithstanding its importance and my youth and inexperience, hence my acceptance. Under the impression, therefore, that the appointment was divinely directed, I had gone without hesitation. After our arrival in Salt Lake City, the old Seventies' Hall was engaged for a couple of nights and the stand was occupied by Elders Charles Derry and W. W. Blair. A council of the missionaries was afterwards held and a decision reached to hold a series of meetings in the Liberal Institute building, during which we were all to participate prior to scattering to the different subdivisions of the Rocky Mountain field. It fell to my lot to occupy on the second evening of the week (the Tuesday evening service, if I remember rightly). Services beginning on Sunday; Elders Blair, Derry, and Anthony had occupied in turn; and when the morning of the day appointed for me arrived I was terribly troubled in spirit. It seemed to me that all that could be said with reference to the subject that we were to handle in that place had been said; that these brethren had covered the ground entirely, and for me, as a young man, there seemed not one single idea left to be put into language, and I wondered, as it was a new field and new experience to me, what I should do. I wondered if I had not been mistaken about being divinely sent there. I fasted during the day, shut myself up in a room assigned me at Sister Clark's house, and prayed most earnestly. The sister was anxious to know what my trouble was, came into the room on several occasions, and when I explained to her the situation, she put her hand upon my head, and as a mother can talk to a boy, she did so encouragingly to me, and told me to have no fear, it would be all right.

Evening came, and together with the children and her husband we started for the new hall that had been leased. Brother Warnock, now present, was there on that evening. Some of the leading ministers of the place at that time were on the platform, and I sat, while the preliminaries were being gone through with, trembling as probably I had never trembled before. The announcement was made and I arose and walked forth to the stand in the center of the platform. Just then there came to my mind the thought of David as he must have appeared and felt when he went to meet Goliath, and as the thought came into my mind, the utterance or the expression of it came upon my tongue, and I told the people that I felt myself to be in that situation, and that anticipating success according to God's idea of success, I expected that, as in the former case, it would be through the use of the weapons that the Goliath had brought into the field with his own sword we would behead him. I stated, that we were there to contest with that which they themselves brought into the field, and picking up the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants, I held them before the audience and said that these constituted the sword to be our weapon of war.

Instantly I became conscious of an investment and an environment that was not my own—as distinctly separate from my individual self as a separate and distinct personality or power can be—that seemed to drop upon me as a mantle, and investing me, as I said, took possession of my tongue, and for an hour and a half I walked the length of that very long platform, back and forth, and quoted from the Bible and especially the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon, with which up to that time I had very little acquaintance, just as though I had been familiar with them for a lifetime; passage after passage seemed to roll out upon my tongue and find expression without any effort of my own.

The result of that effort was so marvelous that I, though a young man, the youngest of all in that mission at that time, was approached at the close by members of the Utah Church who had been members for many years, and told that that was the first occasional in which the real ring of what they understood to be the faith of the Saints had sounded or saluted their ears for over thirty years. A change was made in my appointment (I had been appointed to the southern part of the Territory) so that for the five following months I was kept in Salt Lake City and permitted to conduct services there from week to week regularly, in association with Brother Blair.

My home during that time remained at Sister Clark's, and it was my home to which I could return any time after my visits to other places. It was my first time of long absence from home, and for nine months I remained in that field, under that appointment. My family was left by me here in Independence, only three weeks after moving here, without any except family acquaintanceship, and had it not been for the sweet motherly interest of Sister Clark, I don't know how I could have endured the long absence from home and the experiences that came to me during those nine months in that new and trying field.

Several times after that I was reappointed to that mission, and in 1885, in company with President Joseph Smith, I was again appointed. Together we went and at that time a home was again offered me at Sister Clark's. Brother Joseph and I traveled together for about six months—we were scarcely separated at any time. At the end of that time he had occasion to return on account of the illness of his son David, who shortly afterwards died. Brother Anthony went with him and the mission was left in my hands. I had purchased from Brother Blair the little paper that was being published in the interests of that mission, and was trying to publish that; and owing to the burden of the mission in general, and the effort to get people together from all the Rocky Mountain field for a mission conference in April, and a great many details that were above and beyond the ordinary line of missionary experience which fell upon me, my nerves gave way. I suddenly lost my sight. My nervous system collapsed, and for the first time in my life I became conscious of the fact that I did not dare to tackle any problem that confronted me.

This, however, occurred (the first expression of it) while I was at the home of the mother of Brother Hosea Sterrett, Pleasant Grove, a few miles away from Salt Lake City. I rallied under their kind administration for a few days and then returned to Salt Lake City and was taken down again, and for six weeks I lay upon my back and suffered, bewildered in mind and almost insane,—unable to sleep. I think I say the truth when I state that for four weeks I never knew what it was to become unconscious in real sleep. Sister Clark brought her cot and put it beside my bed, and when the delirium was upon me, she put her hand upon my head and calmed it so that the nervous agitation and distress would pass away, so that I could be at peace for a time. The visions before my eyes were of men carrying me out in my coffin. I saw myself insane in an asylum of maniacs or lunatics, and just such pictures as that by day and by night constantly filled my head, reckless of herself and her loss of sleep while she prayed, this sister soothed my nervousness. I can almost feel that hand now as she placed it upon my head, reckless of herself and her loss of sleep and all.

After six weeks had passed and fear had been entertained as to my ever recovering, distracted myself because of the conditions of affairs at the home I had left, the uncertainty that I was to be spared to get home, I prayed as earnestly as I knew how, and I remember Sister Clara Frick (now) was then little more than a girl; we knelt together in that mother's home, and how earnestly I prayed, commanding what mentality I had, that God would open the way for me to get home and let me die at home if my time had come.

When I began to rally a little, these two girls (Clara and Vilate), as soon as I was ready to climb from my bed, would come to my side and would walk with me the length of the double room a couple of times and then back to bed and then retire and leave me to lie down. This was repeated more times than I can tell you, and at last, doubting whether I should have the strength to take the risk to return to my home, I prayed earnestly about it. My mind was improving slightly. I stood in a room talking with Brother Clark about it one day, desiring that I might start in the morning if it was possible. Sister Clara, with the consent of her mother, volunteered to take the train with me and come home, and we had made an additional arrangement of a section in a Pullman car, and it was brought down from Ogden to Salt Lake City. I prayed as I retired that night for some token by which I might know whether it was safe for me to start to my home or not. I asked that one clear evidence might be granted me, and that was in view of the fact that I had not been able to sleep for so long (only latterly just perhaps an hour or so), that He would grant me a few hours of sound sleep, and that when I woke, I would take that as a testimony that it was all right for me to start for my home. I threw myself upon the bed. I think it was about ten o'clock at night. I knew nothing further until four o'clock in the morning, when I awoke from a pleasant sleep.

After dressing myself I went out into the room and found Sister Clark busying herself to get breakfast ready. Her companion, Brother Joseph Clark, so soon as I greeted him at the table with the usual salutation, said, "Brother Luff, it is all right. You are going to get home safely. Your work is not done. You have years ahead of you yet, and you will do a greater work than you have yet done." He said, "You had not been twenty minutes in the other room from where you left us last night, until I found it all I could do to restrain myself from crying out to you." He said, "Though the wall was between us, I saw you in open vision, lying upon your bed, and I saw the angel of God standing by you. He held one hand over your head in a quieting way, and with the other he kept waving back some thing or person, and he looked with the eye of fierceness. I saw him as though he would smite something and ward it off,—some person that I did not see. I watched that motion several times, and it seemed that, whatever or whoever it was, it was determined to crowd in in upon you and awaken you; but that hand was raised threateningly, and I saw you lying calmly asleep just a few inches below where that first hand was hovering."

He gave me a description of that personage as nearly as he could. He said, "You are going to get safely home and all will be well."

Sister Warnock's carriage was sent for me and I was taken to the depot with Sister Clara, and together we arrived in Independence, at the end of three days in comparative safety. These are but a few of the experiences that tied my heart in deep affection to Sister Clark and her family.

Can you wonder why I should say as I did at the outset that a tribute was due from me? And the best language that my tongue could employ could scarce repay the debt I have owed to her. When I think of this text I have selected, of these words that were used by Paul on one occasion, I say I feel justified in their selection at this time, because of the knowledge I have had of this woman, and her companion who left us some sixteen years ago; that knowledge gives me all the warrant that a man in this world ought to ask for so doing. They knew what this faith was, and few people have had experiences such as they had in making the effort to hold up its banner.

The little record I have read says that in 1856 they moved to Salt Lake City and settled there; but when her companion saw what he did see there, when he heard what he did hear there, his heart, his mind, his soul revolted. It was not what he had learned in England. It was not the gospel message and the Zion they had told him he would find there. It was not that to which he had pledged himself to God to remain true. There were new things there he had never heard before, and he was not slow to let his feelings be known; and you know that away back in the 50's and 60's, for men or women to express themselves adversely to the theories that were being advanced from the stand in that country was a dangerous undertaking; but dangerous or not, though small in physical stature, firm and fixed in his mind, Brother Clark stood true to the message he had before received, and when those Utah Church authorities came to him and said to him, "Brother Clark, you must be rebaptized," he said, "I will never do it." "But you must," they said. He repeated that he would not do it. He was depending upon them for his bread, would not know where the next meal would come from for himself and his children if they should turn against him, but still he stood, and when they insisted on it, he told them that the covenant he had made with God in the waters of baptism was the one and only covenant necessary, and no other one should be accepted by him at their hands. They told him it would be better for him if he would change his mind, but he said, "I have no reason to make any change." They tore the house down from over his head and left him and his family without shelter; took every particle of goods and provisions he had in his house and carted them away, and left them without a thing, and still he stood his ground, and true to his former faith.

Sister Clark, like Brother Clark, had seen and learned, but she had never yet felt like expressing herself in the way he had done, as openly, because in her heart she knew she had obeyed the gospel. She was satisfied; she had received the Spirit in certificate of the divinity of that message. She knew the people had gone wrong out there. She knew the doctrines they were teaching were wrong. She had set in her heart to preserve her children and her family from the evils taught, but she tried to draw the line between the gospel and the men and say, "I will live by the gospel; I am not following these men," and when they came and took all they had away and destroyed the house over their heads and left them in that desolate condition, she said, like Job of old, "I will trust the Lord. I will stay by the truth."

They would have liked to have had her separate from her husband; but no, her covenant with her husband was as divine as her covenant with her God. She saw no distinction between them. The same message that said, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart and shall cleave unto her and none else," said, "Thou shalt love thy God with all thy heart," and that was also required of her, as a wife to her husband, and she stood by her husband though she was not as outspoken as he was in some things in that line; she was more discreet. Thus they were kept under espionage and in trouble; still they trusted and hoped, and God made provision for them. He directed them.

Sometime later, when the sound of the Reorganization saluted their ears, the husband became interested, and she also. As usual, he expressed himself more openly, and finally took hold of the work. She hesitated, feeling that perhaps he might have done a wrong thing, because the gospel she had obeyed was true and he might be making a mistake in changing. She was afraid she might offend God if she left the "Old Church." One day when she was walking in her little garden in Salt Lake City and thinking over these matters, she gave utterance to an expression that was rather uncomplimentary, in a certain way—though not vicious—regarding Joseph Smith, our present President of the Reorganization, and she has told me at different times that instantly as she did so, she heard a voice as distinctly as she ever heard a voice in her life, saying, "Speak not against the Lord's anointed." Whereupon she fell upon her knees, acknowledging the divinity of that message, sought further light, and soon became one in fellowship and affiliation, together with her husband, in the Reorganization.

In that fellowship she remained; she continued, and let me tell you that though she lived to be nearly eighty-seven years of age, she carried with her to the moment of her death, the youthfulness of heart of a girl of ten or a dozen years. Her heart never grew old. She was as gladsome and joyous and happy all through her years as she had been as a child out upon the playground; and nowhere, at any time, could you meet her and find her disposed to complain. Poverty, distress of body or mind, pain, weariness, whatever the outlook might happen to be, the trust that she had been led through her covenant in the gospel to repose in God, remained absolutely unshaken and immovable. By that she stood; and when I visited her recently in her home and mentioned, though briefly, the prospect of a change, she said, "It can not come too soon, if I can be spared those terrible feelings that sometimes attend this kind of sickness." She mentioned to me the name of her daughter Julia, who died in 1878 or 1879, and spoke of her husband Joseph, and together we talked of the happy prospect of a change from this condition into that where reunion with them would be possible.

I have seen them when poverty was their portion. When her husband was refused or could not get work, the burden of family support was upon her. She was always busy—with her needle or otherwise, at home or in other people's homes. It was her delight to be doing for others, and no service was too menial if it conveyed good to another. Amidst all her privations she had a little to give the missionary to help along the gospel work. I remember on a couple of occasions her quietly dropping a five dollar gold piece into my hand, when I was in extreme need, and how she insisted that I should take it, winding up with a "God bless you, my son. Use it as you may have need. God will provide for us all right, as he always has done. Have no fear for us."

When in later years she came to visit me at my office in Independence, or at my house, it was the instinct of my heart, the same as if she was my mother in the flesh—as she did with me whenever we met together—to place a kiss upon her lips. I felt it a very happy privilege and honor to do this. Let me tell you that when the time shall come, and the summons shall be issued to bid me from this life, if I can carry with me, in my heart, as much of restfulness and as sweet an assurance with regard to myself and my title, as I carry in my heart with reference to her to-day, it will be the sweetest message that God can ever send from the heavens to me. There is no joy in this world that he has ever permitted me to have that would be fraught with such sweetness to me, can I but carry in my mind the assurance that I have with reference to her.

I might call up instance after instance in the life of herself and husband as recited to me by her husband and others, would time permit or the conditions justify, but they do not. One single instance was a prayer meeting at the time my first missionary service was to close for me. I was about to return home. I believe that Brother Joseph Clark was never known to stand up and speak in a prayer meeting. He absolutely could not do it; and he used to say if his salvation depended upon his being able to get up and talk in a meeting, he could not do it. I never knew him to do it, and he told me he could not. I remember on the last evening of my first mission there—at the house of a Sister Payne,—prayer meeting was held and I was telling them I expected to start on the morrow for the East. I noticed something unusual giving expression to his face—could not tell what it was. After meeting was over and I came to converse with him in private, he told me he saw an angel standing by my side, and it was told him that that messenger should guard me through the long journey till I reached my home. He told me of it afterwards, and yet he could not get up and speak of it in the meeting. He had not power to do it.

I have thought of him quite often and I could mention the case of one or two others like him in this respect; and when I have heard people get up and say in a prayer meeting that we must get up and bear oral testimony in the meeting or God would be displeased if we did not, I never believed a word of it. For those who have the capacity and are so endowed and can, by the making of a reasonable sacrifice, perform the service, it is well; but there are those who can not, and the testimony that they bear or that they are left to bear is somewhat different in its character, but not less fruitful in results! and I am of opinion that when we stand at last to converse together, if we be so permitted in the time of sweet deliverance, that we will look back with different eyes upon the conditions here, and we will see that it was not only what we said in prayer meeting, but it was what we did when the right hand did not know what the left hand did, by which we gained in spiritual fatness, that did the most in aiding those around us to celestial good.

My testimony is that we have lost a good woman, a Saint, of whom it may be said, in the application of the language employed by the Apostle Paul, that she fought a good fight. She knew what it was to be in the war. It was not a peaceful or pleasant journey all the way through. There was distress, varied in character; but whenever you put your hand upon Sister Clark you put your hand upon one who was true to this faith and whose testimony never varied in regard to it; no matter how much confidence she lost in men, it never wavered in God.

I think of her, as my vision opens in regard to the good that lies beyond, as to-day she is associated with the companion who preceded her in the transition a number of years ago, with the sweet Julia who passed away some thirty-eight years ago, and with others, with whom sweet fellowship and communion occurred here, towards whom her mother heart yearned with anxiety to be dispensing blessings and good; to be helpful by word and by act, and I rejoice in her promotion and triumph. If you were permitted to enter the homes or talk with the scores and hundreds of people with whom this woman has quietly communed, to whom she has given sweet messages of kindness, and aided out of her penury, her weakness, and her poverty at times, you would rejoice over her transition, with me, to-day. Her strong desire was to occupy in such a way as to leave the impress of the Master upon everything that she touched, not boastfully, not with any desire of ostentation, or anything that gave outward expression in a way to advertise that she was seeking to do, but with a heart prompted to act like her Master.

I glory in the thought of the heritage this sister has left to these girls—pardon my familiar expression—to these sisters, this brother, and to those of the family that are not with us. I feel thankful to God that such a heritage has been made possible through his grace and kindness. May they cherish it well! The impress is upon them all. May the further grace that is essential unto the cultivation, full development, and blessed exhibition of those excellencies that shone out in her life be granted unto them until it shall unfold in that sweetness, that blessedness, that gave character to her life!

God bless you, each of you. May her memory be sanctified! When you see the chair that she occupied that is now vacant, the place at the table no longer to be filled; when you miss the kindly word, the gentle admonition, the loving words of stimulation and encouragement and hope; when you miss them, think that the loss to you is more than made up in the wondrous good which the fulfillment of God's promise has brought to her as she revels in the midst of the felicity that belongs to the diviner estate in the paradise of God. Let this sorrow over your own loss give place to the joy that should come to you in the knowledge of the added good that has reached her.

God bless you, that the memories of your mother may be sanctified to you as God would wish them to be. And, when we,—separately or together,—step up the sacred corridor and the doors are swung open for admission to those who have been faithful, into the celestial city, if I shall be so favored as to be one with you, I shall expect one of the first to greet me in that day will be the good sister whose departure from us we are mourning to-day. For if she, in her life, has not earned it, I could never expect it.

May God help us to be faithful and do our best, as she did, and be companions with God and Christ at last. Amen.

Of General Interest

THE REAL ISSUE IN THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The question of a change of name is being hotly debated in Episcopal circles. It will probably be the liveliest topic for discussion in the General Convention to be held next autumn. The present is "The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America." To this the agitators for a change present three principal objections:

It is too long and complex.

It is misleading: the term Protestant suggests that the Episcopal Church was born in the Reformation and was organized and is maintained to protest against the Roman Catholic Church.

It is sectarian: Protestant Episcopal suggests a church characterized by a peculiar form of doctrine and a peculiar form of church government, and a church so characterized is necessarily a sectarian church.

Four names have been proposed as substitutes for the present name.

The American Church.

The American Catholic Church.

The Holy Catholic Church.

The Episcopal Church.

To each of these names there are serious objections.

The first name is not true. The Episcopal Church is not "The American Church." To be entitled to that name it should either be the oldest church in America, or the most democratic church in America, or the largest church in America. And it is neither the oldest, nor the most democratic, nor the largest. The assumption of that name would be resented by every other church in the land, and would effectually block the way to church union.

"The American Catholic Church" and "The Holy Catholic Church" are objectionable because they both assume a name by which another branch of the Christian Church is universally known. It would serve equally as an obstacle to union with other Protestant churches, who would object to the doctrinal implications of the term Catholic, and to union with the Roman Catholic Church, which does not concede that the Episcopal Church is a branch of the Holy Catholic Church.

It is also objectionable because it assumes that one ecclesiastical organization can be the Holy Catholic Church to which all Christians owe allegiance. No church can make itself the Catholic Church by simply calling itself Catholic.

To the title "The Episcopal Church" there is less objection. This is the name by which it is popularly known. Its adoption would involve a real change of official title, but not a real change in popular title. Three years ago it came very near adoption by the Episcopal General Convention. The chief objection to it is that it would be generally regarded as a public disavowal of Protestant principles and Protestant sympathies.

These objections, pro and con, appear to us to be mainly a veil to cover the real issue. Names are symbols. And the real issue which the Episcopal Church confronts to-day is older than Christianity. It is the issue between those who hold the regal and others who hold the paternal conception of the Deity. There are two conceptions of the church which correspond to the conceptions of the Deity.

According to the first conception, God is a king. He can be approached only by the method and through the ministers he has appointed. His Son, Jesus Christ, constituted apostles, to whom he gave power to forgive sins. He authorized them to confer in turn that power on their successors. Thus a patent of spiritual nobility has been conferred on a long line of divinely appointed priests. They are the true mediators between God and men. In the mass they offer a perpetually recurring sacrifice for sins. Only as one avails himself of this sacrifice offered for him by the priest, and receives from God through the priest the absolution and remission of his sins, has he any assurance of divine forgiveness. Only these priests and those authorized by them have any right to proclaim the truths of divine life to ignorant and sinful men. Not to accept the provision thus offered is to be without the grace of God; not to belong to the church thus constituted is to be a schismatic and disloyal to the King and to his Son, the Master and Founder of the church.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

Erring Children.

One of the touching pleas that comes to us in this column is from a mother who asks that the Prayer Union will join her in praying for her children, "for an erring daughter and bad sons."

How the heart of this mother has suffered before she sent in this request. He alone knows fully whose own great heart suffers over the sins of his children, upon whose face Enoch saw the tears run down as the rain upon the mountains.

To see the children who are bone of her bone and flesh of her flesh going astray, to see them losing that innocence they had when she held them close in her arms in their babyhood, this, to a mother who loves God and the purity of his gospel, is the depth of suffering. Such a mother as this asks for our support in her prayers for her children.

Yesterday, the writer sat in a meeting and heard an aged sister tell how she had prayed for years for a son who had grown indifferent to the gospel. She told how, at last, her reward came and the son responded to the good influences that reclaimed him. She exhorted parents to continue to pray for their children and not to fail through discouragement. We pass the word on to all others who are anxious for the welfare of children who are not walking in the ways of the Lord.

"Pray in faith and pray unceasing." Heaven is on the side of those who are praying and working for the salvation of the erring.

Locating a Home.

The mother whose request for her children has come to us desires that they shall be led to turn from worldly associates. We do not know under what conditions these children have come up. If they have always been surrounded by worldly influences, it may not be surprising that they have succumbed to their environments.

We feel that we may suggest to parents the necessity of considering well the locality in which they make their home when the children are growing up. The influence of association is very great upon most of us and especially upon the young. Lot made his home in Sodom and amassed riches there, but he lost the greater part of his family in the destruction of the iniquitous city, and those who escaped gave evidence afterwards of having suffered morally from the pernicious influences that had surrounded them in childhood.

Think of the children when you locate your home.

Home Influence.

There is a young man who, though he grew up in a community where profanity was common, is never heard to swear. One day, when a child, he stood with his smaller brother on a street corner answering the taunting words of another boy with whom he was having a child's quarrel. When the insulting epithets hurled at him became almost unbearable, he said to the little brother beside him, "I wish I could swear; I'd call him something."

One to whom this incident was repeated afterwards asked, "What did he mean? Didn't he know what to say?"

"Oh, yes," answered the small boy, "but he couldn't swear because mother wouldn't let him."

Think of the influence of a mother whose will could restrain her boy from swearing even in her absence! And that boy was not a puny child who could not have defended himself in an encounter, such as boys of his age sometimes get into. He

According to the other conception, God is the All-Father; all men are his offspring; no mediator between him and his children and no special method of approach are required. The way is open for any child. Jesus Christ did not constitute any organization, or give to his apostles any peculiar power to forgive sins, or confer on them any authority to appoint successors. Moses, on Mount Sinai, told the children of Israel that if they would accept Jehovah as their God and keep his commandments, they should themselves be priests. It is still true that whoever seeks the companionship of God by obedience to his will becomes by that obedience a friend and needs no other mediator. Jesus told his disciples that whoever entered into the fold by the door becomes a shepherd of the sheep, and John declared that whoever heareth the gospel invitation may repeat it to others. No other appointment to preach the gospel than this is required. Paul received no apostolic ordination, and Paul was an apostle. Dwight L. Moody was never ordained, and Dwight L. Moody's success as a preacher was the all-sufficient certificate of his divine appointment to the ministry. The Lord's Supper is a memorial supper, not a sacrifice. The gospel knows no other sacrifice than self-sacrifice in love and for love's sake.

The first of these conceptions is popularly known by the name Catholic; the second of these conceptions is popularly known by the name Protestant. At present both conceptions live together in the Episcopal Church. The abolition of the word Protestant and the substitution of the word Catholic in the title of that church would mean, and by the world would be taken to mean, that the church has rejected the paternal conception of God and substituted the regal conception of God; that it ceases to stand for the Protestant doctrine of man's direct and immediate approach to his Father, and has put in its place the doctrine of separation between man and his King, which necessitates the mediation of a specially authorized priesthood, a specially constituted church, and a continuously repeated sacrifice for sin.

This is the real issue in the Episcopal Church as we think it will generally be understood by the great body of thoughtful readers outside that communion. The position of The Outlook on that issue needs no defining here.—The Outlook, June 21, 1913.

Half of the joy of life is in little things taken on the run. Let us run if we must—even the sands do that—but let us keep our hearts young and our eyes open that nothing worth our while shall escape us. And everything is worth its while if we only grasp it and its significance.—Victor Cherbuliez.

was strong, sturdy, and fearless. It was the impressive teaching of a mother with a strong nature of her own. She impressed her boys with the idea that they must not swear and they do not swear.

Mothers and fathers have need to be persons of strength. We do not say of violence, or harshness, but we say there must be positiveness in their teaching and discipline. Young children should not grow up with the idea that the wishes of father and mother are of no more weight than their own. It is possible to be firm and positive for the right and yet to be kind.

In being kind to children, it is not necessary that we should permit them to do as they please. To do so is often dangerous, because childish judgment is faulty.

Teach Them Early.

Is our influence with the children that which will help to fortify them against the evils that will assail them when they go out of the home? For surely they will be assaulted!

Luther Burbank, who has accomplished such wonders in the training of plants, is the author of a little book entitled, The Training of the Human Plant. In this book, he places great stress upon the first ten years of a child's life, the habit-forming period.

What habits are we permitting the children of our homes to form? Those habits will have much to do in the shaping of their lives.

A little child who needed correction was caught up by his young mother with the apologetic cry, "Oh, he is so little." Her love pleaded for him and she kissed him without a word of reproof for what she recognized to be wrong. She permitted his bad habit to grow because he was little.

But when he was little would have been the easiest time, if ever there is an easy time, to root out a bad habit and plant a right one in its place. Little children may be taught in the little incidents of their small doings. They need to be taught gently and patiently and sometimes with great firmness the principles of rightdoing which are involved in their small affairs as in our larger ones.

The Empty Nest.

"To-day, young mothers, you are living in a busy world, the sort of world in which the robins lived when the nestlings were clamoring for food and for brooding mother wings. But as surely as empty nests will sway on leafless boughs, so surely—and swiftly—will you come to the time of empty arms, for baby will be trudging bravely away to school on his own two sturdy feet. . . ."

"Take the first empty nest you find. Put it where you can see it every day. Let it remind you of the brevity of babyhood years."

Let it remind you that your children will soon go out from your protecting care, out among the dangerous things that confront so many before they have been prepared. Let it remind you to sow the right seed and to cultivate the right habits in the little ones while you have them hourly with you.

Let home influence be strong for that which is pure and true.

Talk with the Children.

Talk with them of the small things of their play and work, and talk with them of great things. Our children love to reach up with their minds and hearts to great things, and the great things of the Lord are so simple that even children can understand, if told aright out of a parent's heart which understands.

I was going down the street one evening in the early dusk when a young voice called out to me familiarly, "Going to the picture show?"

Slackening my pace, I looked about to see the small boy who had accosted me. Then I said, "No, I am going to Religio. I do not often go to picture shows." (I might almost have said, never instead of not often, but I put it mildly to him.)

"I go sometimes," he said, "but I believe I'll go to Religio to-night."

"It is election night," I said, and that seemed to settle the matter, for later I saw him come into the church and join his class.

But, before we parted, as we stood in the gathering night, I asked the boy if he had been told that the Lord had spoken to us during the conference that had just closed, and if he knew the nature of the message to us. He said he had not, and I told him briefly what the Lord had said to us in the revelation concerning the manner in which we should use our money. I told him just a little, for the opportunity was not mine to tell him more, but I went my way thinking how necessary it is that we should talk with the children of the things of the Lord's work.

They are a part of the church and we should treat them as if they were. We should not permit them to grow away from it by failing to interest them in its affairs. We should talk to them as naturally as we talk to our grown-up friends.

How can we expect the church to be in the thoughts of our children, if we do not interest them in it?

We Are too Busy.

Many of us are busy, indeed, busy just in making ends meet, in doing work that seems highly necessary, the work of houses and gardens, of digging and planting and weeding and hoeing, of washing and scrubbing and baking and sewing. We begin in the morning and continue until night. It is "work, work, work, while the cock is crowing aloof, and work, work, work, till the stars shine through the roof." It is "work, work, work in the dull December light, and work, work, work when the weather is warm and bright."

And this is the work that procures for us the transient things of life. It is included in "the care of this world" of which the great Teacher spoke to his disciples in warning, saying that it chokes the good seed out of human hearts.

We should take to ourselves his warning and be careful, for our own sake and for the sake of our children, to devote a part of our time to the all-important work of soul culture.

It is so easy to let our temporal affairs crowd out the better and more important things. It is so easy to spend so much of our energy in our daily work that the few hasty moments given to the worship of God and the care of our children are when we are weary. Have any of us ever had the experience of the tired mother who went to sleep at prayer time and woke up just in time to hear her husband say amen?

The children are entitled to a proper share of the time of their parents. If parents can not give it, the conditions should be remedied by the church. The law of equality, when practically applied, will provide the remedy.

The Cry of a Mother.

There comes to us the cry of a mother for her children. Her letter gives evidence of culture of mind and heart. She says in part:

"We mothers, most of us, dearly love our work of motherhood, but it is overburdened in a way never meant by Him who planned it. Man's inhumanity to man (fathers and mothers alike) is making countless thousands mourn, now, this hour.

"As life becomes more and more complex and its burdens for so many almost more than flesh and blood can bear, I am lost in wonder and worship of the great Mind which could devise and give the children of men so all-reaching, so wonderful, so perfect a plan of escape from these terrible and undeserved ills which have come upon the poor, by which Satan intends to drive those whom he may not allure to his army of evil.

"The wonderful generosity and love of the All-Father and the genius and industry of men make possible a life of just enough work to form a balance with the hours which ought to be devoted to the development and use of the many capacities with which the Creator has endowed his children. Such a life would release fathers from drudgery to spend a portion of each day to the enriching and ennobling companionship of their children, and so, by taking a portion of their care, to give the exhausted spirits of the mothers a chance for renewal."

The letter continues: "I comfort my heart in the midst of this terrible struggle for food and raiment into which life has descended by the assurance that God has provided an escape and that, while I am teaching my children to understand, other mothers may be doing so also, making it possible in time, through the application of God's laws, to establish a real Zion and not a dream city.

"My heart is wrung, wrung to see my children, bright and brainy, with little education, enter the money struggle, without opportunity to develop those talents which are theirs, and I cry with an intensity which must reach the mercy-seat for them and all others who have not a chance, that God may hasten the day when the terrible hand of oppression will be lifted."

There is no doubt that the cry of this mother reaches the mercy-seat and touches the heart of God. Is he waiting for this cry of the oppressed poor to reach us and to touch our hearts? Can he work through us to establish his Zion before our hearts have been touched by such cries from those who, with us, are numbered as his children and his heirs?

The Prayer Union.

Dear Sister: Some one wrote asking whether requests for prayers should be sent in once a month or every week. Answer: Only when there is necessity, where the means appointed in the gospel are not at hand. We wish it understood that the Prayer Union is not intended to take the place of the ordinances of anointing and prayer by the elders. Indeed, the prayers for the sick are not the first consideration or the highest good that is expected of this work. That will be attained only by careful study and observance of the programs.

ELEANOR.

SUBJECT FOR THE FIRST THURSDAY OF AUGUST.

The church, its priesthood and members, that all may earnestly and actively engage in the building up of Zion to the ideal condition of oneness and equality revealed in the revelations to the church. That each member of the church be clothed with that charity which will lead us to speak evil of no one, but regard the reputation and good name of a brother or sister as we regard our own.

Book of Alma 22: 21-24, authorized edition. Memory verse, Moroni 7: 51.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

A sister sends in the request that we pray with her for an erring daughter and bad sons, that they may turn from worldly associates and take more interest in the church.

Prayers are asked in the interest of Brother E. J. Clark, of Colorado Springs, Colorado. The letter says his case is serious and that it is feared he will not long be with the Saints of that place if the dear Master does not intervene. He is president of the branch and the Saints feel that they can not spare him from that place of labor. We are asked to pray that, if it be the Lord's will, he may speedily be restored to health and strength.

Letter Department

OTTAWA, KENTUCKY, July 14, 1913.

Editors Herald: On coming here February 10 we found considerable religious excitement in connection with a meeting being conducted by the Holy Rollers. We thought it a good time to make an effort, and on being refused the use of the schoolhouse, began meetings in a private house, at the invitation of the family. We conducted services here for sometime, and until the schoolhouse was opened for us. We have been preaching in this schoolhouse to a good crowd. Brother Charles Oliver has done most of the preaching. We have conducted meetings each night for a short time with good success. There is a good opening here now for some of the traveling elders. We would be glad to have any of them come.

I rejoice in the opportunity to tell the people of this glorious gospel. Last summer I lived three miles from New Albany, Indiana. I opened my house for preaching and five were baptized. They were Catholics, father, mother, and three children. This is a marvelous work and a wonder, as the prophet said should go forth. My husband was stricken with appendicitis June 26. He was at Downingsville. I went by train to join him, reaching there June 29. I found him ready to go to church. He had been administered to by Brethren J. R. McClain and J. W. Metcalf. Thanks be to the dear Lord.

May the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with all is my prayer.

Your sister in the faith,

WHITTEMORE, MICHIGAN, July 18, 1913.

Editors Herald: The work is progressing here. We had grand meetings during our three-day meetings. God was with us to own and bless. Three precious souls were added to our number, for which we thank God. I have been engaged in this church for nearly thirty-six years, and with God's help my determination is to strive to do everything for the advancing of this glorious gospel in which we have enlisted. We know the prize is at the end.

Your sister in bonds,

J. P. WHITTEMORE.

IPSWICH, QUEENSLAND, June 26, 1913.

Editors Herald: I appreciate the valuable pages of the HERALD, which are read as eagerly as they are looked for. I am glad to say I am still in the faith, and wherever opportunity affords I am earnestly contending for the same. I was the only Saint here for a long time and felt my loneliness very much.

I, with a few others, earnestly prayed month after month that God would prepare the heart of some one to receive his gospel, that I might have a spiritual companion. Our prayers have been answered, and on Saturday, May 31, I took a man down to Brother J. W. Barkus, president of the South Brisbane Branch, about thirty-one miles distant, to be baptized. The ordinance was performed on Sunday morning, June 1, in a beautiful, quiet dell. As we knelt down on the ground in prayer, I could not help thinking of the Master when he came to John and in the River Jordan received baptism at his hands. The candidate was prepared for the ordinance, having previously witnessed to the Saints assembled at the home of Brother Barkus that he had repented of his sins. The confirmation took place in the Saints' church, at the sacrament meeting, in the afternoon. The Spirit of God was present with us, and in the confirmation the Spirit of prophecy was given and the brother was told that his sins were forgiven him and that if faithful the Lord would use him, and he would be the means of taking the gospel to others, etc. He has proved himself a real, earnest Saint.

We are now earnestly praying that God will bless us and so use us that we may have the joy of having a branch established here. A family of Saints moved here lately. I visited them once, but as they seemed to have no inclination toward spiritual development, we do not have much in common. What a pity it is that there are those bearing the name of Saint who are so taken up with the things of the world that we question whether they ever have truly been born again. It will be so to the end, for the gospel net gathers of every kind; but there is a time of separation coming, when the unfaithful will be thrown away.

My prayer, dear Saints, is that we may be able to endure to the end—spend and be spent in building up the Master's kingdom, and in the day of separation be retained among the good and the faithful. I am determined, wherever I am, to do all I can for the spread of the truth. Hoping to meet you some day in Zion, I still remain,

Your loving brother in Christ,

T. EDGEWORTH.

SHELL BROOK, SASKATCHEWAN, July 13, 1913.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a welcome visitor at our home. We feel somewhat isolated. We miss the dear brothers and sisters in the good old Port Elgin Branch, but we are thankful for the privileges we enjoy. There is a branch of Saints here, twelve in number. We meet Sunday for Religion and Sunday school, also once a month to partake of the sacrament, and some enjoyable times are had. The Master gives us his Spirit to encourage us in the glorious work.

We have had Elder Mortimer with us. We all felt blessed and encouraged in hearing the good message, and the counsel he gave us. The Lord blessed the dear brother with the gift of prophecy, through which he was instrumental in blessing others. I believe everyone is feeling more like pressing on and doing his duty.

Pray for us that we may prove faithful and be able to stand when the testing time comes.

Your sister,

MRS. OSWALD SCHRANK.

LAMONI, IOWA; July 21, 1913.

Editors Herald: I want to find a location for myself and family in a small branch of the church in some city of not less than about two thousand population, where spiritual conditions are good. If any of the Saints are interested in my case, I shall be glad to receive an inquiry. For further particulars address,

WILLIAM EARNEST.

Australia to America.

Several months ago the writer began to contemplate his return to America. Sister Barmore heartily joined me in this contemplation. Finally the preparations for our trip were completed, and the money for our fares was in hand. My wife having been reared in Australia was parting from relatives, schoolmates, and old friends, as well as Saints, and I was separating from people I had known and loved for eleven says: "Their soul abhorreth all manner of meat; and they years. That acquaintance enables me to say: Somewhere on earth there may be warmer hearted, more generous people than the Australians, but I have not found them. We have many valuable presents which are pleasant reminders of our sojourn in the land of the southern cross.

At length the final messages were exchanged and the farewell sermon preached. A public farewell was tendered us in Newcastle, and later one in Sydney. Both of these functions were highly successful. Brother and Sister Cornelius and family of the former place joined us and came to America in our company. Finally we found ourselves on the wharf at Circular Quay, Sydney, surrounded by a large concourse of relatives, friends, and Saints.

We left Saturday, April 19, per R. M. S. Tahiti, at 3 p. m. A number of colored paper streamers were passed to us from our friends on shore. These were firmly held at each end until the motion of the departing ship swinging out into the harbor broke them in two. Short, terse messages followed, such as, "When are you coming back?" "Remember Australia," "Please write," etc. Then came the waving of handkerchiefs until retreating forms were lost in the dim distance.

Our ship was now threading her way amidst the numerous small craft which thronged the harbor. One of these chased us and whistled a farewell salute. It was a ferryboat of which our old friend, Mr. Arthur Dohrn, was captain. He had promised to do this. Not long afterward we passed between the rocky headlands which mark the entrance to beautiful Sydney harbor, and were on the bosom of the mighty deep. About this time we went below and began to compose ourselves for the trip.

Sister Barmore has usually been a good sailor, but this time she failed. But in reality it was not the sea which caused her sickness; it was the separation before referred to. Her nerves had been in a state of tension for several days. Now the reaction came. This, and going below so soon to dispose of our baggage about the cabin produced mal de mer. With reference to the sea, I am "the same old Roman." Some of the reaction came. This, and going below so soon to dispose went to Australia I was not sick but "physically indisposed." It was the same this trip. My indisposition, however, was less than then. I feared it would be worse, for my physical condition was not suited to a sea trip. I had been under too much strain in preparing for our departure. However, I always fare better on a deep sea boat. The little coastal steamers with their mixture of passengers, horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, poultry, and timber, and their inevitable odors are far worse for me. They also pitch and roll more than ocean liners. This time, as before, I did not miss nor lose a single meal.

It was otherwise in my Australian local and interstate trips. Then I was emphatically, unmistakably sick, every time. I know seasickness from A to Z; can spell it both forwards and backwards, and yet I can not describe it, for, like the rest of my fellow creatures, when I feel the most I am the least capable of expression. Nature in all her moods has been described. She has been depicted in both her gay and grim humors. She has been represented as radiant with light and as enthroned in gloom. Bursts of sunshine and bursts of storm have been painted both by tongue and pen, but no one has told us all about seasickness. Mark Twain says that nobody can. He claims that two words with expression and gestures to suit tell the whole story. They are, "Oh, my!" uttered by the pale-faced victim at the saloon door as he strikes a beeline for the nearest railing. Beyond that, words are empty and without meaning.

However, let us borrow a few expressions concerning it. In referring to those who "go down to the sea in ships" David draw near unto the gates of death," (Psalm 107: 18.) Shakespeare says: "God, 'tis a fearsome thing to see that pale, wan man's mute agony." Bishop Evans says that Robert Burns never was seasick or he could not have described toothache as the "hell of diseases." His toothache was no doubt very severe. His own words indicate as much: "Around the room the giglets cackle to see me loupe." In plain English, "Around the room the children laugh to see me jump." It is not probable, however, that Burns never felt the sensations of mal de mer. A man of his habits who lived so near the Irish Sea, the English Channel, and the Bay of Biscay could not have spent his life without being seasick. Evidently the bishop is not well versed in Scottish traditions. Burns had a turn at seasickness and he describes it. I know what he said, but his language is not for publication.

The roughest weather we encountered was just out from Sydney. This and the fact that our passengers were not yet accustomed to the motion of the ship coupled with the excitement of separation from the people on shore made it rather hard for some of us. But like the apostle, "none of these things moved me." I went to the table with the regularity of a clock, and, in harmony with the instructions of an ancient writer, ate what was set before me. The Union Steamship Company found me an expensive boarder. By Tuesday all of us found our "sea legs," and were beginning to know each other, but the weather was too chilly for much social life. The first Sunday passed without any sacred service. In fact there was "nothing doing." The day was extremely monotonous.

We arrived at Wellington, New Zealand, early Thursday morning. Brother Leberz, whom we had known in Brisbane, Australia, knew of our coming and was at the wharf to meet us. He was on his way to work, and could not return with us to his home, but gave me directions by which we reached his house without difficulty. As we approached the gate the front door flew open and the smiling face of Sister Leberz greeted us as of yore. Our ship remained two days in port, which gave us an excellent opportunity for visiting and sight-seeing. Soon after our arrival, Sister Whaler came in, too. She formerly resided in Newcastle, New South Wales. She now lives at Dannevirke, about one hundred miles inland from Wellington. She was in the latter place visiting her daughter Rose. We knew Rose as a Sunday-school girl. She is now a woman, and is known as Mrs. Paton. She lives at Lower Hut, a suburb of Wellington. It is about ten miles out. We went to see her that afternoon, took tea with her, and had the pleasure of meeting her husband. We returned to the city early in the evening. The next day we visited Florrie Leberz, that was; now Mrs. Toomer. She lives at Kilbourne, another suburb. We enjoyed our stay in Wellington immensely. It recalled "the days of auld lang syne," and renewed the "tie that binds our hearts in Christian love."

Brother and Sister Leberz had altered but little with the lapse of time. What change was discernible appeared to be for the better. Both had improved since they came to New Zealand. The same is true of Sister Whaler and Sister Leberz's son, George W. Wilson, who has grown from a boy to a man. We were pleased to meet both him and his girl friend. Apparently George is beginning to think "it is not good for man to be alone."

The surface at Wellington is uneven. There is some level land near the quay, but in the main, the city is built on elevations. The residences are erected on terraces in the hills, which surround the business part of the place. The main streets are level but not long. The distance from the wharves to the base of the hills is short. But this in reality is an advantage, for the rolling, mountainous setting improves the appearance of the city. The highest houses are the finest and best. The altitude of these places would appear to be a handicap. It would certainly be a hindrance in the delivery of heavy furniture, fuel, or even groceries. The steps, too, are difficult of ascent, for a pedestrian. But pure air and outlook evidently compensate for inconvenience, for this elevated property appears to be valuable. How true it is that human nature likes to be above the rest of the people, and to look down on its fellow creatures below.

We left the above city at 5 p. m., Friday, April 25. About this time we began to speculate as to what day would be double, for we were approaching the international date line. The reader will doubtless remember the days of the week are counted from the 18th meridian. In traveling west we lose a day at this point, and in traveling east we gain a day. In going to Australia in 1902 we lost a Sunday, that is, we retired Saturday night, slept but one night, and yet arose Monday morning. I hoped to recover this Sunday, this trip, but failed, so if I am not as good hereafter, or was not as good while in Australia, as other people of my age, there is a good reason for it. I did not recover my piety because we gained a Saturday instead of a Sunday. The registered Saturday was May 26, but the next day was Saturday, too. We ate three more meals, spent one more day, and slept an extra night, and yet that day, as a whole, is not indicated on the schedule of the ship. According to the time-table we spent twenty-six days in traveling from Sydney to San Francisco, yet in reality we were twenty-seven days at sea. These facts are difficult of comprehension for some people, but after all, it is the same old story, the minority ruled by the majority. People who travel are in the minority and have to accommodate themselves to those who stay at home. In other words, progressive people, those who move, have to come down to the level of those who still stick in the rut. Otherwise there would have to be calendars made for the especial benefit of travelers. In traveling northward we drop a day for the purpose of falling in with the slower time on the western side of the line referred to. We gain a day in traveling eastward for the purpose of coming up to the faster time on the eastern side of said line.

Just after quitting Wellington, we held our first service, Sunday, April 27. I preached at 11 a. m. in the first saloon. All classes of passengers were invited to come and quite a number were present. I did this in response to a request from the captain, and in harmony with his suggestion used a part of the Church of England service, which had been adopted by the company for use at sea. About this time, too, we began to provide regular entertainment for our companions in travel. A committee was chosen consisting of seven persons. They were Mr. Harmer, Mr. Austin, Mr. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Rhodes, Miss Penner, and the writer. Mr. Harmer and I were chosen secretary and chairman respectively. Mr. Harmer proved a splendid worker. In fact, the success of our program was due chiefly to his efforts. We had our initial concert Monday, April 28, but it was not a part of our published program. The latter did not begin until after we left Papeete. This first concert passed off pleasantly and was a forerunner of the rest of our amusements. Some little dissatisfaction was manifest but no serious trouble arose. Things do not always work so smoothly. I heard of one voyage on which three committees broke up in contention. At last the purser took charge and managed all the amusements.

One thing that displeased us, though it did not spoil our pleasure, was the apparent disinclination of the first-class passengers to mingle with the second. We held one concert with them and meant to hold another, also a cricket match, but their haughty demeanor spoiled our plans. They may not have meant to do so, but they seemed to avoid cooperation. Again: "How true it is that human nature likes to be above the rest of the people and to look down on its fellow creatures below."

Wednesday, April 30, we arrived at Rarotonga, Cook Island. We arrived early and remained practically all day. The water is shallow next to the wharf, so the ship anchored in the harbor. Most of the passengers landed. Sister Barmore remained on board, but Brother and Sister Cornelius and I went ashore. We went and returned by a small boat drawn by a tug. It was rather dangerous getting on board again. The waves were rolling rather high, and the women found it very difficult to pass from the boat to the gangway and thence on board. When the sea fell it would be impossible to grasp the gangway. When it rose again one had to be very quick, for the sea soon fell and the chance was lost. Sometimes when the sea rose it dashed against the ship with great violence. In such cases there was a loud clash between the boat and gangway. Some of the ladies nearly fell overboard. Several of them were shaken up considerably.

We arrived at Papeete at 5 p. m., Friday, May 2. Although a large crowd was on the wharf, we easily picked out Brother and Sister Pitt. When we landed we found Brother May with them. Brethren Lake and Savage were absent in the other islands, so we did not see them. Soon after we came we repaired to the mission house where Brother May resides. We partook of supper prepared by Sister May, and went to the church, where a prayer meeting was in progress. Brother Cornelius, Sister Barmore, and I responded to the speeches of welcome delivered by the native brethren and also bore testimony to the truth of the gospel. Brother May was our interpreter. The next day at 10.30 a. m. I preached from Psalm 66: 16. The subject was my own personal spiritual experiences. In the afternoon we gave our farewell speeches. Brother and Sister Pitt were also present and participated. Brother May acted as interpreter on both these occasions. The natives gave us many presents, and were sorry to see us leave. One of the brethren delivered a very feeling address in which he expressed gratitude for our visit. He said that Brethren W. J. Haworth, J. D. White, Brother and Sister Pitt, and our company were indeed welcome visitors; he believed God had sent us there; realizing their isolation from the rest of the church it was a way he had of giving them encouragement. These people give more evidence of a sincere interest in the service of God than do many white people.

Our ship's departure was advertised for 5 p. m., May 3, but it did not leave until 10 p. m. This gave us an opportunity of prolonging our conversation with the missionary and his wife. Both Brother and Sister May were at the wharf to see us away. When we got well out to sea our sports committee began to carry out its program. There was no preaching Sunday, May 4, but we had a couple of song services. The next Sunday, however, Brother Pitt preached in our saloon. There were not many religious people on board, but everyone took part, more or less, in the amusements. These began in earnest, Monday, May 5. From that time until we arrived in San Francisco, the 15th, things were very lively. We had two concerts, at which a number of excellent items were given. Sister Pitt played the piano, Brother Pitt sang, and I gave several recitations. One evening I was appointed to give a lecture. The secretary suggested my own travels as a subject. I accepted the suggestion and spent about forty minutes in describing my movements in the United States, Canada, and Australia, dwelling especially on my California experiences. The talk appeared to interest, but most interest was taken in the races and contests. These were too numerous and various to mention. Some of them were peculiar to the sea. They included deck billiards, quoits, potato race, pillow fight, etc. Most of them requires prizes for the winners. We spent £7, ($35), on prizes, etc. The first class spent £24 ($120), in the same manner. Our purchases were made in Papeete. Our program included dances, and whist parties. These were objectionable to many of the church people, but since the other members of the committee were in favor they were allowed to pass by a majority vote.

One of the peculiar features of the trip was the number of showmen on board. There were two wild west shows and one vaudeville. They were all American companies. Among them were a number of Indians. One, Skyeagle, commonly called "Sky," was a lively contestant in our amusements. He is of the Chippewa tribe and one of the most intelligent Indians I have met. One amusing feature was the "tug o' war" between the ladies. An Indian squaw participated. She formed a noose in one end of the rope and put it around her body. She was a strong woman and her side pulled hard enough to win. It was afterwards learned that an Indian formed a similar noose in the other end of the rope and put it around an iron pillar. One of the Indians said: "Ugh! Old Squaw couldn't pull out iron post." Sister Barmore helped the Indian woman for all she was worth and did not take the iron pillar as a joke. On the average, however, that side won.

Among the show people there were a number of careless characters. These and a few others spent most of their time drinking and gambling. In fact, I never saw aboard ship so much intoxication and gaming.

Despite all the objectionable features of modern sea travel, it has many charms. The danger to life, contrary to common supposition, is not greater than on land, and when it is, death may be avoided by pluck. There is no use giving in and considering oneself doomed because something has gone wrong. It is true on the sea, as on the land, "The brave never taste of death but once." It is foolish to submit to death when it can be avoided, and, on the other hand, useless to continue to battle against a death which God is willing for us to die. It is better to resign ourselves to our fate. It was thus with the Titanic passengers. One of the worst things, however, in shipwreck, is to give way to religious emotions and take to prayer. Those who do so are useless for everything else. It is better under such conditions to think our prayers and show our faith by our works. Heaven knows our peril without the telling, and the God who made us understands all languages; that of the heart as well as of the tongue. It is better, on the average, to be cheerful, whether on sea or land.

"Then top and maintop crowd the sails
Heave Care overside.
And large before enjoyment's gales,
Let's take the tide."

One of the blessings of the sea is the acquaintances which a long voyage lead to; so we may be subjects of divine guidance and be helpful to others then as well as at other times. Any man we meet may be in himself an audience. We made several true friends and have reason to believe we were a blessing to each other. In this connection we remember, Mr., Mrs., and Miss Hilliard, Mr. and Mrs. Hampshire, Mr. and Mrs. Davis, Mr. McKinney, and others whose names we do not now recollect.

We saw very little sea life. Porpoises we beheld only once. We also saw a few flying fish. Some flew on deck. These were the first I had seen at close range. We saw more of ocean life when I went to Australia. To give, however, a general impression of the sensations and sights of a voyage, I offer the following description from Irving:

"The vast space of waters that separate the hemispheres is like a blank page in existence. There is no gradual transition by which, as in Europe, the features and population of one country blend almost imperceptibly with those of another. From the moment you lose sight of the land you have left, all is vacancy, until you step on the opposite shore, and are launched at once into the bustle and novelties of another world. In traveling by land there is a continuity of scene and a connected succession of persons and incidents, that carry on the story of life, and lessen the effect of absence and separation. But a wide sea voyage severs us at once. It makes us conscious of being cast loose from the secure anchorage of settled life, and sent adrift upon a doubtful world. It interposes a gulf, not merely imaginary, but real between us and our homes—a gulf subject to tempest, and fear, and uncertainty, that makes distance palpable and return precarious. Such at least was the case with myself.

"There was a delicious sensation of mingled security and awe with which I looked down, from my giddy height, on the monsters of the deep at their uncouth gambols: Shoals of porpoises tumbling about the bow of the ship; the grampus slowly heaving his huge form above the surface; or the ravenous shark darting like a specter through the blue waters. My imagination would conjure up all that I had heard or read of the watery worlds beneath me; of the finny herds that roam its fathomless valleys; of the shapeless monsters that lurk among the very foundations of the earth, and of those wild phantasms which swell the tales of fishermen and sailors."

Northeastern Kansas.

It has been some little time since anything from my pen has found its way into your valuable columns, although I have constantly taken a keen interest in its contents from week to week. The editorials, with so many good articles, and letters, have been food worthy of our best assimilation.

Since we left home and loved ones, the early part of May, our first place to visit was Council Bluffs, Iowa. The main reason for going there, instead of going directly to our field of appointment, was to answer some urgent requests from a number of dear friends in that locality, and that after receiving the willing consent of the two general ministers in charge. While there a call came to go fill an appointment at Loveland. It was really Brother Samuel Harding's appointment, but he believes so much in the doctrine of preferring your brother, that in spite of my requesting to hold his hat, I had to preach. We enjoyed the effort, as we always do when the Spirit of the Master accompanies the word. Brother Sam did his full duty, however, upon our return to the home of Brother and Sister Currie, in disposing of the lemon pie; to which Brother Currie will testify.

At Crescent City, where we preached three times, we were very kindly cared for at the homes of Brethren James Lapworth, John Adams, Dan Butler, and others; from here we were taken to the home of H. N. Hansen, also to that of his son, John A. Hansen, whose kind hospitality is elastic in its nature. Sunday evening we preached for the Saints of Hazel Dell. It surely did our souls good to be again in the midst of old acquaintances, whose kindness and loving remembrances will linger long in our memory. We returned to Council Bluffs, where, at the request of those in charge, we ordained Brother George Beatty to the office of priest, Brethren J. A. Hansen, A. J. Davidson, district and branch presidents, respectively, assisting in the ordination. Brother George will be of great help to the work there, if he continues humble and faithful.

Leaving my many friends, whose invitations I could not begin to fill, I came by way of Imogene, and called to see our old-time friends, Brother and Sister Hillyer, who are isolated from church privileges, but who are still strong in the faith. My stay was all too short; I had but a few hours, as I wanted to reach Shenandoah that evening, to get my train out of there the next morning. It was prayer meeting night. The faithful few were there, and we had a real good time. I stayed over night at the home of Sisters Mary and Mamie Pace, where resides our old friend, the Colonel, who, although he is not a member of the church, has always been a good friend to the cause,—one of those honorable men of the earth, who will in due time receive their reward.

Reaching Riverton, I was met at the depot by our congenial fellow laborer, Brother James Comstock. Arriving at his hospitable home, to my joy and delight, I met Brother W. E. Haden, one of my late associates in that mission. A very pleasant visit was enjoyed by us, notwithstanding I was a little under the weather; but even that appeared to be little or no excuse for my occupying that evening, as Brother Haden had an appointment at the schoolhouse. We felt blessed in our effort. Bidding adieu to the few Saints of the Riverton Branch, I was soon speeding away to the State of Kansas, to which I had been appointed this year.

I arrived in Atchison on May 24, the day before the Saints were to dedicate the new church home. Ere I reached the home of Doctor and Sister McNichols a surprise was sprung upon me, arranged by the sisters. They had arranged for Sister Arber to come to attend the dedication, which was a very satisfactory affair. Brother Rushton preached the dedicatory sermon, and Brother Chatburn offered a splendid prayer. Of the active ministry there were present Brethren Rushton, Chatburn, Bullard, Walters, Gowell, and the writer, besides a number of visitors from several other parts.

My labors have been confined mostly to Blue Rapids, an objective point, since June 6, when Brethren Rushton and Hedrick came and the branch was once more reorganized. The writer was placed in charge. We are happy to report that there has been some little improvement made, but we long to see still much more done along the line of character building. There are some noble people here, and thus far I have been treated kindly. I go to Atchison once a month; besides I have preached in Oketo, Fanning and Netawaka, where I have just closed a series of meetings, which we held in the city park.

I wish to take this means of communicating to my many friends in the State of Illinois that I shall long remember the kindness shown me during my sojourn of three years in their midst. I would like so much to write each one who has made such request of me, but that is almost impossible.

I am pleased to say the change has to some degree helped my health. The gospel truth is very dear to me—for its final triumph I want to live. May hope and cheer gladden the hearts of God's Israel everywhere. My home address is still Independence, Missouri. Mission address, Blue Rapids, Kansas.

Your humble servant and colaborer,
JOSEPH ARBER.

Western Oklahoma.

The work is onward in Oklahoma. The Indian mission work is a live issue, though we have not given much time to it this conference year. Brethren Reuben Taylor and Philip Cook are doing some good work. I baptized six more of our leading Indians at Kingfisher last Sunday, and four names were given for baptism that owing to sickness could not be attended to. We also baptized one at Seiling and one at Eagle City.

Our reunion at Woodward was not largely attended, owing to the very busy time and poor crops. But Brethren Aylor, Baker, and the writer did some effective preaching, and a goodly number from the town heard the word. We made our home with H. R. Kent while there. Sister Kent belongs to the church, and they are noble people. We are in hopes H. R. will obey ere long, as he is a man of good ability, and just the kind we need to move the work along. He is a son of old Brother Alma Kent, of note in the church work.

Your coworker,

HUBERT CASE.

Utah.

Since last writing we have tried to keep busy and push forward the gospel work as much as possible. At Ogden our work is of a peculiar nature, since we virtually have no men to help us along with the work. We are fortunate, however, in having an exceptionally good class of women, and I think others will agree with us when we say there is no discount on the sisters of Ogden; they are ambitious, industrious, frugal, self-sacrificing, charitable, and always ready to lend a helping hand. If we only had as many good men our work here would be an ultimate success.

We have two aged brethren here, however, whom we can tie to, viz, "Grandpa" Chase, who is now past eighty-three, and Brother J. E. Hedlund, commonly known as "Uncle John." These men are always ready and willing to do their part, and more too; but our young men and warriors are found wanting. Where shall we find them?

On July 3, accompanied by wife and children, I went to Malad, Idaho, where we spent a week visiting with mother, brothers, and sisters. While there I preached a number of times, and baptized my own baby sister, who is now a young lady of nineteen summers, and her girl associate two years younger, who is the eldest daughter of the late John R. Price, who was an elder in the church and quite well known to the missionaries who in the past labored in this western field.

I also preached the funeral sermon of little William Williams, the five-year old son of Brother Morgan and Sister Alice Williams, who met death by falling from a load of hay, being run over by the loaded wagon. The funeral was held in the Malad opera house, and was the largest attended of any funeral ever known for a child in that place. The writer counted thirty-seven teams in the funeral procession. A number of very favorable comments were heard on the manner in which the services were conducted, in charge of Brother E. E. Richards, who is president of the branch; a favorable impression was also made by the sermon. It is a sad loss to Brother and Sister Williams, but there is consolation in the fact that Jesus says such are perfect, and that for this lad salvation is sure.

We are hopeful in the gospel, feeling assured that truth will ultimately triumph.

Hopefully,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Of toil's long stress or battle scars
Sends something out into the dark
As lasting as the time-old stars.

News from Branches

Saint Louis, Missouri.

Many instructive thoughts have been received the past month through the sermons delivered by Brethren Elliott, S. A. Burgess, Dowker, Reeves, Trowbridge, Archibald, and Bell. Our sacrament service was a fasting and prayer service, and many sincere prayers were offered in behalf of our Sister Billinsky, who has been afflicted for so long. We are pleased to note that she felt greatly encouraged and strengthened as a result of the meeting.

At our last Children's Day program Brother Reeves officiated in the baptism of four of our young children, the confirmation following at the prayer service, at which time two little babes were blessed.

Our missionaries have been busy in Belleville, Illinois, Brentwood, and Maryland Heights, Missouri. Reports of their work are encouraging. The priesthood meetings have been held regularly since last report.

Conference Minutes.

SHEFFIELD.—District met in conference at Priestley Road Council Schools Sutton in Ashfield, July 12 and 13, W. H. Greenwood, Charles Cousins, and John Holmes presiding. Visiting Saints were accorded voice and vote. Minutes of former conference approved. Officers' reports read. Report of Bishop May approved as audited. On recommendation of the Bishop, Joseph Holmes was appointed as agent of Sheffield District, John Austin being released, and sustained as Sheffield Branch solicitor. By motion October reunion was ordered held at Sheffield, and the January conference at Clay Cross. General and local authorities were sustained. Expense of Bishop May and W. H. Greenwood incurred by coming to conference were ordered paid from district fund. At the morning service Sunday several of the young brethren occupied, W. H. Greenwood in charge. The elders quorum held a meeting. At the social service Sunday two children were blessed and two confirmations occurred. At the evening hour Sunday the speakers were W. H. Greenwood and Bishop May. Joseph Holmes, secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Southern Indiana District; Greeting: It has pleased our heavenly Father and his servants in the church to send me back to you. I rejoice in the fact of my return. Twenty-two years ago I began my work as a preacher, and two years later left my home in the vicinity of Birdseye to become a missionary. Many experiences and numerous journeys have been my portion. Only three years of the twenty were spent in my home district.

While it is necessary to preserve the spirit of the latter day work, yet we need to be modern or up to date in our methods. I at least will endeavor to be so. Let us, therefore, utilize the very best in modern thought, speech, and work. Let us imitate the great fountain head of life and light and always keep our faces to the sun.

I have been late in reaching you because of my recent return from Australia. I left there April 19, and have spent a few weeks visiting my relatives in Kansas. I intend to be present at the Derby reunion, July 26 to August 3. I hope to meet some of you there. I shall do my best in responding to the calls for preaching. Any who wish to write may address me at Derby, Indiana, care D. H. Baggerly.

In gospel bonds,

A. C. BARMORE.

HUGOTON, KANSAS, July 15, 1913.

The Bishopric.

To the Saints of the Spring River, Central, and Eastern Oklahoma Districts: I desire to call your special attention to the very important matter: The "Call" of the Presiding Bishopric as set forth in the HERALD and Ensign of July 9, and 10, respectively, relating to the securing of funds for the purpose of meeting the urgent demands of the indebtedness of the church now upon us. We solicit your hasty and hearty cooperation, thus giving the greatly needed relief to this arm of our work and service.

This is a small matter if we will lay hold of it with commendable faith, zeal, and courage; and, ere long, moneys that have gone out to interest account, will be going to the families of our missionaries, who often have been compelled to patiently wait, the father and husband in the field being left to wonder and hesitate.

Let us move forward, though for the present moment it may seem a sacrifice,—but are we not living in a day of sacrifice?

The amount to be raised by the above-named districts are as follows: Spring River, $2,400; Central Oklahoma, $850; Eastern Oklahoma, $800. These amounts should not seem burdensome. Inasmuch as there are children, and doubtless some others who will not be able to assist, let your donations be liberal, so that the amount apportioned may be reached early.

All who can and will assist should pay in your donation to your branch agent, who will receipt you as special donation; however, when not convenient, remittance can be made direct to me, stating "special donation." All agents in remitting should be careful to give full name of donor and purpose for which donation is made.

Should any desire to assist and can not do so until September or October, let me have your name and amount; but we trust that all who can possibly do so will send in their money at once.

Your brother and collaborer,

ELLIS SHORT,

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT.

The Saints and Friends of the Eastern Maine District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints: Please take notice that upon the removal of Brother J. A. Koehler from the district and action of the district conference of the Eastern Maine District recommending for bishop's agent Brother Newman M. Wilson, of Jonesport, Maine, that Brother Wilson has been duly appointed bishop's agent in and for said district.

We take pleasure in presenting the name of Brother Wilson for the work of agent in the Eastern Maine District, and hope that the Saints and friends throughout the district may earnestly assist him in his work. Also special thanks of the Bishopric is tendered to Brother Cushman, who has been acting as the agent since the departure from the district of Brother J. A. Koehler; and the Bishopric is also pleased to be able to tender its thanks to Brother J. A. Koehler for his good work while in the district. For the help received from each of these parties we trust the Lord may bless and help each one so they may be the better able to overcome.

Trusting that from the earnest efforts of each member and friend of the district to help along Brother Wilson in his financial work great good may accrue to the Lord's work in spreading the truth among the people of the district, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric,

Very truly and respectfully,

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 25, 1913.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of South Dakota: Notice from Bishop Kelley advises us that a sum of money is to be raised to cancel the indebtedness of the church, and to place the church in a position to be better able to advance the cause we love. The amount for the Saints of this territory is very small, only fifty dollars. Can we not meet this at once? As bishop's agent, I will promptly receipt for all moneys sent me, either as tithes, offerings, or consecrations.

Surely out of the harvest of golden grain, we can easily and promptly send Brother Kelley the amount required of us, and I am very sure he would appreciate it if we sent even more. Let us do our duty.

Conference Notices.

Western Maine District will meet in conference August 30 and 31 with the Little Deer Isle Branch. A large attendance is desired. An enjoyable time is anticipated. For information address, F. J. Ebeling, president, Stonington, Maine.

Reunion Notices.

Eastern Colorado Saints will hold a reunion in George Bullard's grove, eight miles southeast of Wray, Colorado, commencing, August 27, to close with the Eastern Colorado district conference, which convenes September 6. Free transportation from Wray to grounds. See D. N. Danielson, at meat market, when you get to Wray. Free pasturage for horses. Free straw. Board reasonable. Missionaries cared for. Those wanting to rent tents notify committee by August 10. Tents, 10 by 12, $2. A. E. Tabor, secretary.

Two-day Meetings.

At Beaverton, Michigan, August 16 and 17; at Bay City, Michigan, August 30 and 31. Good speakers will be in attendance. George W. Burt, president.

Quorum Notices.

TEACHERS OF SOUTHEASTERN MISSION.

Southeastern Mission Quorum of Teachers will meet at the reunion of the Alabama District, held at Pleasant Hill Branch on August 8, 1913. Let all teachers in the mission make a special effort to be there. We hope to make our work a success. T. J. Booker, president.

Died.

FRENCH.—Charles M. French was born June 25, 1843, in Connecticut, died July 3, 1913. Wife and six children survive to mourn. He was baptized by Frederick Adam last August. He received comfort and blessing through administration, and was firm in the faith to the last. Many relatives, Saints, and friends attended the funeral services. Sermon by Vinton M. Goodrich.

McKIM.—Tuesday morning, July 8, 1913, at 7 o'clock occurred the death of Uncle David McKim, at the home of Mrs. George Winans, in Deloit. The funeral was held Thursday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock at the Saints' church in Deloit, Elder James Baker officiating, and he was laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery on the hill. David McKim was born May 21, 1822, at Pottsville, Pennsylvania. He was the son of James and Elizabeth McKim, and was one of a family of ten children. One brother is living at Lawton, Oklahoma. The subject of our sketch was married to Miss Matilda Phillips, March 9, 1848. To this union were born 7 children, 4 daughters and 3 sons. Six of the children were present at the funeral; they are Mrs. J. L. Miller, Mrs. Anna Winans, Mrs. George Winans, all of Deloit, William of Independence, Missouri; Scott and Raub, of Des Moines, Iowa; Mrs. Witmer Fritz preceded him some years. He had twenty-five grandchildren, sixteen great-grandchildren, and one great-great-grandchild. His wife died July 13, 1866, in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. Three years later he came with his little family to Deloit, Iowa. He was married a second time to Mrs. Elizabeth Finch. She died fifteen years ago last February. He then came to live with his oldest daughter, Mrs. G. L. Miller, where he has made his home ever since, making visits to this daughter the last few summers. It was on one of these visits that he fell asleep. He was a kind and loving father, always interested in his children. He united with the church in 1886, and was always in attendance, when able to go. He loved to talk about the gospel. All was done for him that loving hands could do. At the age of 91 years, 1 month, and 16 days, he fell asleep in Jesus, and is resting in the paradise of God to await the resurrection morn.

SHIRK.—Daniel W. Shirk was born at Lincoln, Pennsylvania, April 20, 1851; died at Independence, Missouri, of acute indigestion, July 15, 1913. He married Otilia C. R. Diehl at Panora, Iowa, May 3, 1879. To them were born four daughters and seven sons, who with the wife survive him. Brother Shirk was formerly a minister of the Dunkard Church. He was baptized at Gallands Grove, Iowa, by J. S. Roth, was ordained an elder in the same month by President Joseph Smith. He was an earnest and diligent Saint, a considerate husband and father. Funeral from Second Independence Church, sermon by W. H. Garrett, interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

MARTIN.—Sabra A. Martin was born September 8, 1841, at Chautauqua, New York, died at Saint Anthony Hospital, Bemidji, Minnesota, June 30, 1913, of cancer of the stomach. She was baptized June 11, 1890, at Cormorant, Minnesota, by I. N. Roberts, confirmed by I. N. Roberts and J. Arthur Davis. She married T. J. Martin, September 28, 1907. Funeral from the Presbyterian church at Bemidji, July 2. The building was crowded with mourning friends, and the casket was covered with flowers brought by these loving associates. The last sad rites were performed by the ladies of the G. A. R., of which circle she was a prominent member. Sister Martin, formerly Nye, was one of the pioneers of Bemidji. The missionaries always found a home with her. She made the name of Latter Day Saint honorable. She is survived by a son, F. W. Nye, and her companion.

Prescription Wanted.

I am wanting a cure for cancer that was in the SAINTS' HERALD ten or fifteen years ago. Would some one who has saved the receipt sent it to me, and oblige me greatly. Mrs. F. A. Ingalls, 516 South Prairie, Miles City, Montana.

New Book Notes.

Jack London's "John Barleycorn," telling the adventures of his own life from his first recollections, all through his wandering years and struggles to his present high title of fame and position, will be published by The Century Company, in August. Its serial publication in the Saturday Evening Post brought the author a surprisingly large number of letters from men and women all over the country, expressing, in many curious ways, gratitude for his vivid portrayal of "John Barleycorn's" constant, insistent appeal to men and boys everywhere.

Mr. Robert Hichens and Mr. Jules Guérin traveled through the Balkan Peninsula to gather material for the articles which have been running through The Century Magazine this year, and for the elaborate book which The Century Company will publish in the late fall. The text and pictures—twelve in the colors of Mr. Guérin's canvases—will cover the natural scenic glories of Dalmatia, the classic ruins of Greece, and the wonderful mosques of old Constantinople.

The Around-the-World Cook Book is the name given to a new cook book made by Mrs. Mary Louise Barroll, wife of a navy officer. Mrs. Barroll has traveled in every quarter of the globe for many years, and everywhere gathered recipes of the dishes that she found of special excellence. The result is the Around-the-World Cook Book to be issued by The Century Company this fall.

James D. Whelpley, who has traveled and studied widely, has made a book of his findings, dealing authoritatively with many phases of international trade and the part it plays in world progress. The Century Company will issue Mr. Whelpley's book in the fall with many illustrations from photographs.

The Century Company has imported the illustrations for Kipling's Jungle Book made by the English artists, Maurice and Edward Detmold, and will issue a new illustrated edition of this classic in the fall.

"The Century."

Theodore Dreiser, the frank and unconventional author of "Sister Carrie" and "Jennie Gerhardt," made his first tour of Europe at the age of forty, visiting England, France, Italy, and Holland, and jotting down his impressions as he went. As viewed through his naively sophisticated personality, London, Paris and Monte Carlo appear in a new light; odd types of people are sketched from life, and adventures at different levels of society are described in realistic detail. Some of Mr. Dreiser's experiences and impressions will be published in early issues of The Century, the installment in the August number dealing with "The First Voyage Over."

Children and the Burros in Glorious Colorado

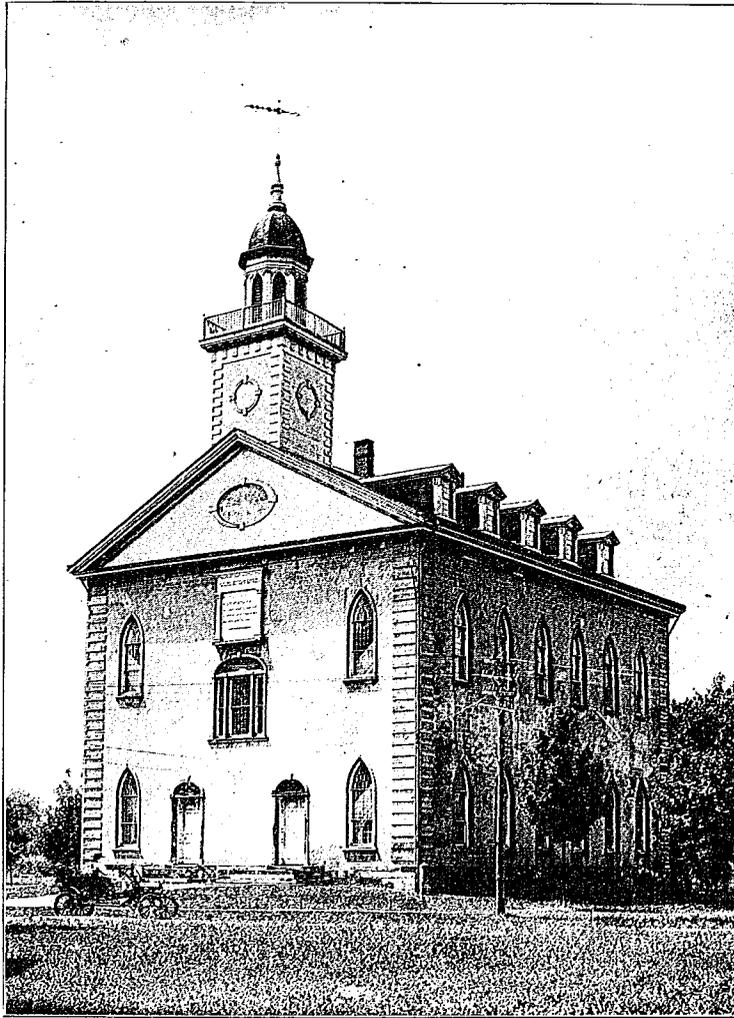

"One of the happiest remembrances of my youth," wrote a well known man, "is the month I spent in Colorado as a youngster with my burro. Many a joyful jaunt I had with that shaggy, little, wise eyed fellow. Since then it has always seemed to me that nothing more delightful can happen to a boy or girl than to be turned out-of-doors in Colorado with a burro."

It's a fact that nothing can be more beneficial to your children than the out-of-doors life in Colorado. The climate is so splendid and health-giving, and nowhere can you spend a few weeks more comfortably and at more reasonable cost than in Colorado. I'd like to help you decide when and where and how to go. I have all the information here in my office to help you—Hotel and boarding house rates—and a mighty readable folder on Colorado with maps and pictures and full details. Call or write for this folder and let me tell you about the new low price excursion tickets to Colorado.

Behind him lay the gray Azores,
Behind the Gates of Hercules;
Before him not the ghost of shores;
Before him only shoreless seas.
The good mate said: "Now must we pray,
For lo! the very stars are gone,
Brave Admiral speak; what shall I say?"
"Why, say: 'Sail on! sail on! and on!'"

"My men grow mutinous day by day;
My men grow ghastly wan and weak."
The stout mate thought of home; a spray
Of salt wave washed his swarthy cheek.
"What shall I say, brave Admiral, say,
If we sight naught but seas at dawn?"
"Why, you shall say at break of day;
'Sail on! sail on! sail on! and on!'"

They sailed and sailed, as winds might blow,
Until at last the blanched mate said:
"Why, now not even God would know
Should I and all my men fall dead.
These very winds forget their way,
For God from these dread seas is gone.
Now speak, brave Admiral, speak and say---"
He said: "Sail on! sail on! and on!"

They sailed. They sailed. Then spake the mate:
"This mad sea shows his teeth to-night.
He curls his lip, he lies in wait,
He lifts his teeth, as if to bite!
Brave Admiral, say but one good word:
What shall we do when hope is gone?"
The words leapt like a leaping sword:
"Sail on! sail on! sail on! and on!"

Then pale and worn, he paced his deck,
And peered through darkness. Ah, that night
Of all dark nights! And then a speck---
A light! A light! At last a light!
It grew, a starlit flag unfurled!
It grew to be Time's burst of dawn.
He gained a world; he gave that world
Its grandest lesson: "On! sail on!"

JOSEPH'S LAND; OR, AMERICA IN PROPHECY.

Ingersoll at one time said that the Christian God did not know of the existence of America until Columbus told him of it. Christianity, as represented by the old-line orthodox churches, has never satisfactorily answered that charge. It can not be fully answered without recourse to the Book of Mormon.

JOSEPH'S DREAMS AND JUDAH'S BARGAIN.

Many centuries ago, and in a distant land, there lived a man named Jacob. This man had twelve sons. It was considered a blessing in those days to have twelve sons. To-day it would probably be considered a calamity. Economic causes are partly responsible for the changed sentiment. A man of average income to-day could hardly feed, clothe, and educate twelve growing boys. But in those days clothing was not an item of great consequence. The boys got their education in the "university of outdoors." By tending the flocks and herds of their father they produced their own food.

One of these boys was named Joseph. He was the child of his father's old age, and his favorite. This boy was destined to fill an important place in the history of his family and of the world. This he learned from inspired dreams, which he was so unwise, if we may put it in that way, as to tell to his family. (Nor was he the last boy or man to suffer because God gave him dreams and visions.)

To his brethren he said: "We were binding sheaves in the field, and, lo, my sheaf arose, and also stood upright; and, behold, your sheaves stood round about, and made obeisance to my sheaf."—Genesis 37:7.

His brethren were angry in a moment. And they were more angry later when he dreamed another dream and told it to them: "Behold, the sun and the moon and the eleven stars made obeisance to me."

This dream even vexed his father, who said: "Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren indeed come to bow down ourselves to the earth?" The time came when they did.

Joseph's brethren hated him because of all this, and on a certain occasion, when they saw him coming across the fields to them, they conspired to kill him; and they exulted, "We shall see what will become to his dreams."

They were not the last men to say of a dreamer named Joseph: "If we can not get rid of him by lawful means we will kill him. And then we shall see what will become of his dreams."

But it is said that a Jew can always see a bargain. Judah, the great ancestor of the Jews, saw a bargain. He said, "Why kill our brother when we can sell him?" So they sold him to a passing caravan for twenty pieces of silver; and Joseph had free but involuntary transportation down into Egypt.

In some ways Joseph was like Jesus. Judah sold Joseph for twenty pieces of silver; Judas (which is the Greek version of Judah) sold Jesus for thirty pieces of silver. Joseph became the savior of his brethren. Jesus became the Savior of the world.

JOSEPH SOLD BY HIS BRETHREN.

JOSEPH'S BLESSING.

All are familiar with the history of Joseph. By and by, after Jacob and his sons had sought refuge in Egypt and had been saved from famine by the betrayed and abused Joseph, now become a great politician and statesman, Jacob becoming very old and nearing the end of the journey, called his sons about him and blessed them. The blessings were in fact prophecies. Of Joseph he said:

Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall: the archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him: but his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; (from thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel:) even by the God of thy father, who shall help thee; and by the Almighty, who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts, and of the womb: the blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills: they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren.—Genesis 49: 22-26.

Many years later, after God had delivered the children of Israel from Egyptian bondage, Moses blessed the twelve tribes. As in the former instance, a special blessing was given to Joseph:

And of Joseph he said, Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and fullness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush; let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren.—Deuteronomy 33: 13-16.

OVER THE WALL TO STRANGE LANDS.

Let us notice particular points in the two blessings that were given to Joseph.

First, his blessing was to "prevail" above the "blessing of my progenitors." His progenitor, Abraham, had been blessed with the "promised land" of Canaan—now called the Holy Land. This land was a remarkable land, but small, in area much smaller than any one of many single States in the United States. Joseph's blessing was to prevail over this.

Second, he was to have a land of his own, "Blessed of the Lord be his land." The land given to his progenitors was bounded by the Mediterranean Sea and certain natural boundaries and circumscribed to a very small area; but his inheritance was to extend to the "uttermost bound of the everlasting hills." It was to be blessed with wonderful fruitfulness and with great wealth of minerals and metals to exceed anything ever granted to the Holy Land.

Third, he was to be as a fruitful bough planted by a well that should run over the wall. In other words, his people were to increase and become very numerous. They were to break over the natural barriers into new fields not known to their brethren. These blessings it was twice stated were to be upon the head of him who was "separate from his brethren." Joseph as a boy and man, was separate from, and in many things superior to his brethren; and in his greatest development as a people he was to continue separate from them, and in some things superior to them.

THE FULFILLMENT.

The denouement of these wonderful prophecies is wrapped in mystery until we turn to the Book of Mormon for enlightenment. There we learn that during the reign of King Zedekiah (about 600 years before Christ) there came many prophets to Jerusalem warning the people of the impending destruction of Jerusalem and the subsequent captivity of the Jews. Among those who heeded these warnings was one Lehi, who himself became a prophet. With his family, including his sons Laman, Lemuel, Nephi, and Sam, and their families, he fled from Jerusalem to the sea, where ships were constructed and their journey continued, under God's direction, to America.

These men were direct descendants of Joseph. Thus did his branches run over the wall into new fields. Thus did they pass to an inheritance superior to that given to "their progenitors" and reaching to "the uttermost bounds of the everlasting hills." They became the founders of a great civilization, and when faithful enjoyed all of the material and spiritual blessings that had been promised.

The many ruined cities discovered by archæologists in Mexico and Central America, as well as in North and South America, indicating a vast population and a high intellectual development, are the mute reminders of their existence. These cities are conclusive proof that long before Columbus discovered America the land was populated, and had been so for many centuries.

Strange as it may seem, during all that time this old world was practically cut in two in the middle. The eastern half, including Europe, Asia, and Africa, knew nothing of the existence of the western half, which included North and South America. But God knew of the existence of both. During all that time he was sending his natural blessings, the rain and the sun and the dew, upon both alike. He was sending his spiritual blessings to the Eastern World. He was sending them prophets, and endeavoring to save them from their sins. Some of the inspired books written by these prophets are found to-day in the Bible. Was he withholding his spiritual blessings from the Western World? We are told that he is no respecter of persons. So we are not surprised to learn that he was sending his prophets to the people in the Western Hemisphere. Their inspired writings are found in the Book of Mormon.

No wonder the Spaniards observed that the natives of South America when first discovered revered the cross and seemed to have a knowledge of some parts of the Christian religion. These natives were the degraded remnants (as are other American Indians) of a great people who had reached the climax of their development, declined because of iniquity, and all but perished from the earth. But the story of "America in Prophecy" did not close with the close of the Nephite civilization, as we shall see.

THE PRECIOUS THINGS OF THE LASTING HILLS.

We pass now to an examination of certain statements found in the blessing pronounced upon Joseph, and note how they apply to the land of America. These blessings were to be both material and spiritual.

It will be understood that Joseph's land includes both North and South America. In the old days the centers of development, population, riches, and power, were in Mexico, Central America, South America, and parts of North America. To-day those centers are located almost exclusively in the United States and Canada. The resources of South America and Mexico are not developed; but will probably be developed to a very remarkable degree in the near future. The statistics that we have collected refer almost exclusively to the United States, as others are not immediately at our hand.

During the year 1908 the United States produced in gold $94,560,000; and in silver $28,050,600. This enormous production of the "precious things of the everlasting hills," typical of "Joseph's Land," goes on year after year in a manner to exceed anything ever dreamed of by golden Babylon. The yield between the years 1792 and 1908 was, gold, $3,063,787,000; silver, $1,539,724,497.

CHIEF THINGS OF THE ANCIENT MOUNTAINS.

The Lord also said that Joseph's Land should be blessed with the chief things of the ancient mountains. The yield of copper in the United States in 1908 was 430,099 tons, or over half the yield of the entire world. The yield of coal in 1907 was 430,430,183 tons, or nearly twice as much as any other country produced. The yield of iron in 1908 was 16,190,994 tons, and of steel, 14,247,619 tons, about one third of the yield of iron and steel of the entire world.

THE FRUITS OF THE SOIL.

It was also said that Joseph's land should be remarkable for the precious fruits put forth by the sun and the moon, and for the precious things of the earth and the fullness thereof.

The United States and Canada are pretty nearly prepared to feed the world with the fruits and grains produced by the soil.

The yield of wheat in the United States in 1907 was 664,602,000 bushels; that of corn in 1908 was 2,668,651,000 bushels.

Jacob heard that there was "much corn in Egypt." Had he heard of a land producing 2,668,651,000 bushels of corn yearly, enough to bury old Pharaoh and his army, he would certainly have realized that Joseph's Land was to be a remarkable land.

A LAND OF MILK AND HONEY.

Moses was told that he should lead the children of Israel to a land flowing with milk and honey. The language was figurative. To-day we may almost say that it is literal. The yield of milk in the United States in 1900 was 7,728,583,350 gallons; enough to flood old Jordan from bank to bank. The annual yield of honey is said to be about one hundred and seventy-five million pounds, or enough to load a solid freight train fifty miles long.

THE DEEP THAT COUCHETH BENEATH.

Joseph's land was to be blessed with the fruits of the deep couching beneath. This may be significant only to those who dwell along the ocean shore and know of the greatness of the cod fisheries of New Foundland, the whale fisheries of New Bedford, the salmon fisheries of the Columbia River, or the seal industries of Alaska. In 1908 the products of the United States fisheries were valued at $63,022,917, or nearly twice as much as that produced by the fisheries of any other country.

"THE GOOD WILL OF HIM THAT DWELT IN THE BUSH."

Most important of all are the spiritual blessings indicated by the terms "the blessings of heaven above," and "the good will of him that dwelt in the bush." In the blessing pronounced by Moses the words last quoted were applied to the land; and Book of Mormon prophecy carries out the idea that the blessing was to be permanent, applying to all people who should inhabit the land, so long as they should be worthy of the good will of God, who dwelt in the burning bush on Mount Horeb.

In later times we need not go far to observe wonderful instances of God's blessing, particularly with the people of North America, manifested most strikingly in the development of political, religious, and intellectual liberty; in a later promise of industrial liberty and coming equality; and in the development of popular institutions of learning. Citizens of the United States reading the history of their country in war must feel the emotion that moved Benjamin Franklin to declare that during the darkest period in the history of his country prayer was offered every day in the halls of Congress for divine blessing and aid, and that God had "answered on a hundred battle fields." Napoleon used to say that God was with the man "who had the most soldiers and the heaviest cannon." This has been disproved many times in the history of the United States. God is with those whose cause is just. This we must not forget; forgetting it we shall suffer. The ultimate safety of a country is not in its army and navy, but in the character of its people.

But glorious though the triumphs of war may seem to be, the triumphs and blessings of peace are more glorious. Our periods of war in both the United States and Canada have been short. Our periods of peace have been long, with corresponding opportunity to develop, materially and intellectually. This is the greatest evidence of God's favor. War is a scourge; peace is a blessing. Whereas we used to felicitate ourselves each recurring Fourth of July that we had won certain victories over other people, now we congratulate ourselves that we are at peace with other nations, and especially that there is a growing sentiment of fellowship among all English-speaking nations.

Most important of all the things indicating the favor of God are those of a religious nature. Jesus came to this New World to the children of Joseph and established his church. His church was developed here and for a long period of time enjoyed that condition of equality and spiritual power that was granted to the church in Jerusalem for a period of years. And in these later times the gospel has been restored and Zion has been located in this choice land of liberty.

A LAND OF LIBERTY UNTO ALL PEOPLE.

We now pass from Bible prophecy to Book of Mormon prophecy, and present the following quotations to show God's will regarding the Americas:

Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it, shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ who hath been manifested by the things which we have written.—Book of Mormon, Ether 1: 35.

Wherefore, I, Lehi, prophesy according to the workings of the Spirit which is in me, that there shall none come into this land, save they shall be brought by the hand of the Lord. Wherefore, this land is consecrated unto him whom he shall bring. And if it so be that they shall serve him according to the commandments which he hath given, it shall be the land of liberty unto them; wherefore, they shall never be brought down into captivity: if so, it shall be because of iniquity.—2 Nephi 1: 10-13.

COLUMBUS DIVINELY LED.

The following quotation is from the prophecy of Nephi, and refers to Columbus, and those who came to this land after its discovery by Columbus:

And I looked and beheld a man among the Gentiles, who was separated from the seed of my brethren by the many waters, and I beheld the Spirit of God, that it came down and wrought upon the man; and he went forth upon the many waters, even unto the seed of my brethren, who were in the promised land. And it came to pass that I beheld the Spirit of God, that it wrought upon other Gentiles; and they went forth out of captivity, upon the many waters.—1 Nephi 3: 107, 108.

From this we learn that instead of Columbus telling God about the existence of America, as Ingersoll irreverently declared, it was God who told Columbus, and led him to this land. It were strange, indeed, to suppose that God had no hand in such a stupendous event; yet for the record of the affair we must turn to the Book of Mormon as a confirmation of the very well-known fact that Columbus believed himself to be divinely directed.

We learn further that God led those who followed Columbus. Or as Longfellow expressed it: "He sifted three kingdoms to get seed for that planting." The best people from England, Germany, and France came here. They were men who were moved by religious conviction, and were willing to brave the terrors of an unknown land in their search for a place where they might worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences. They sought the liberty that God had promised to this land.

These were the men who "made the sounding aisles of the dim woods ring with the anthem of the free." In their character was laid the foundation of all greatness that may have come to the United States and Canada.

LAND SHADOWING WITH WINGS.

Isaiah said:

Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia: that sendeth ambassadors by the sea, even in vessels of bulrushes upon the waters, saying, Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden down, whose land the rivers have spoiled! All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye.—Isaiah 18: 1-3.

"THE LAND SHADOWING WITH WINGS."—Cover design National Magazine.

This has been held to apply to America; Jewish and Christian writers, as well as secular writers, have so applied it, blindly reaching after an answer to the riddle propounded by Ingersoll.

The likeness of North and South America to the outspread wings of a great bird is so apparent that during the Spanish-American War the National Magazine, published at Washington, District of Columbia, appeared one month with a cover design representing North and South America as the wings of an eagle—the head and beak near Cuba.

Here, also, are some significant comments:

This passage, instead of "Woe to," etc., should read, "Ho! the land of overshadowing wings," etc. This prophecy refers to that nation which shall hold a maritime preeminence over all others, and which can refer to none other so emphatically as to the United States of America.—The Second Coming of Christ, by Reverend R. C. Shineall, p. 305.

Rabbi Isaac Leeser, of Philadelphia, the translator of the Hebrew Bible, says that the prophecy in the eighteenth chapter of the prophet Isaiah, "Ho! to the land with spreading wings, which is beyond the rivers of Cush, that sendeth on the sea ambassadors, and in vessels of gomeh messengers over the face of the waters," is a prophecy relating to America. Standing where the prophet stood, and looking "beyond the rivers of Cush," or Ethiopia, the first land we strike is the Western World. And this land,—the very name of which was then unknown,—with its emblem, the eagle with "spreading wings," whose ambassadors are all sent by sea, in the swiftest ships, has opened to the sons of Israel such a refuge as no other land afforded for 1700 years.—The Armory, August, 1897, quoted from Israel's Messiah.

But the prophecy concerning the lifting up of an ensign and the blowing of a trumpet on this land is not understood excepting as we have a knowledge of the restoration of the gospel and the establishing of the church in the latter times in America under the direction of God and by the hands of men raised up for that purpose. The land "shadowing with wings" was the appointed place for the restoration of the gospel, following the apostasy of the Dark Ages, and just "afore the harvest," as Isaiah expressed it.

KIRTLAND TEMPLE.

BY HENRY C. SMITH.

(For some time stationed in Kirtland in charge of the Temple.)

The "House of the Lord" (called the Temple) at Kirtland, Lake County, Ohio, was built by command of God to Joseph Smith; the corner stone being laid July 23, 1833, and the building completed March 27, 1836.

BEAUTIFUL SURROUNDINGS.

It is situated on a beautiful tableland, on the south bank of the Chagrin River, elevated about one hun-

Painesville, nine miles to the northeast; Chardon, the business center of the temple builders, nine miles to the southeast; and Little Mountain (as it is called) five miles east, said to be the highest point of land in the State of Ohio; forming a nucleus which for beauty and enterprise would be hard to duplicate on American soil.

THE BUILDING COMMITTEE.

A building committee, designated by revelation, was chosen to superintend the building of the house. It was composed of Hyrum Smith, Reynolds Cahoon, and Jared Carter. (See Doctrine and Covenants 91: 4.)

dred feet above its bed and about nine hundred feet above sea level.

The view of its surroundings from the cupola of the building is most beautiful. The blue waters of Lake Erie, six miles to the north, dotted with her shipping, form a picture of rare beauty and grandeur. The region round about, so far as the eye can reach, seems ruffled with columns of smoke from the iron horse and the many manufacturing plants; attesting the enterprise of the occupants of this most lovely of regions, blessed indeed by the hand of its Creator as a resting place for the sons of men. The city of Cleveland, with about four hundred thousand souls, lies about twenty miles to the southwest;

It is said that the character of the building, its size and architecture throughout, was stamped (as it were) on the minds of those in charge through divine favor, with one exception, which we will notice later on.

MATERIAL.

The walls are plastered on the outside, and striped in imitation of blocked stone, and covered with a skim coat of cement filled with powdered glass, which serves to give solidity as well as a sparkling appearance in the sunlight, thought by some to be difficult to duplicate even in our advanced age of discoveries.

The corners of the house are laid up with nicely dressed block stone, six inches thick, nine inches wide, and four feet long, laid at right angles and projecting out from the wall one and a half inches.

There are twelve windows in each of the side walls, of seventy-five lights of glass each; size of glass being seven by nine, with some exceptions.

The windows are Gothic in style and are twelve feet high, the upper one third being circular. The jambs are of finely dressed stone five inches thick, eight and four feet long respectively. There are four windows on each end of the house, similar to those on the sides, with an additional one in the center of the four, with one hundred sixteen lights of glass in each.

There is also a window in the east gable, oblong in shape, and used as an observation point, about four feet wide by six feet long, with glass cut to accommodate the circle, making three thousand five hundred lights of glass in the building.

DIMENSIONS.

The size of the house from outside measurement is fifty-nine feet wide, by seventy-nine feet long. The height of the walls is sixty feet, including the basement. The walls are two feet thick, and are composed of a good class of sandstone quarried about two miles south of the site, and are nicely laid up with a strong mortar.

There are two doors of suitable size in the front end, finished with heavy stone jambs and thresholds, with circular glass fittings over the top.

On the front, or east end of the house, there is a finely finished tablet, with stone base, jambs, and cap, about four feet wide by seven feet high, with a cement finish, and painted on which, in letters of gilt, is the inscription appearing at the close of this article.

The roof is made of shingles, with a heavy cornice suited to the size of the building.

The cupola and belfry compare favorably with the size of the building and are neatly and tastefully finished. There was no bell placed in position by the builders, that we can learn of; but a fine one is now in place, weighing one thousand and one pounds, placed by the Reorganized Church.

From the ground to top of spire is one hundred and twenty feet.

of Latter Day Saints.—1834.

THE DIVISION OF ROOMS AND METHOD OF HEATING.

The house is divided into four parts: basement, auditorium, schoolroom of the apostles, and school and quorum rooms subdivided to suit convenience. The basement is about six feet six inches in the clear, with ground floor.

The house was warmed by large box stoves situated in the several corners of the basement, pipes conveying the heat to the several rooms above, with drums, we are told, in each room. It is now warmed by furnace.

The first floor is divided into four rooms, auditorium, vestibule, and two vestry rooms, one at each end of the vestibule. The auditorium is fifty-five feet wide by sixty-five feet long. The ceiling is about eighteen feet high, with an arched center five feet high over the main center of the floor, making the height from floor to ceiling twenty-three feet.

The base of the arch is suitably ornamented to give symmetrical order and taste to the general finish of the room.

There are eight pillars in the room, with timbers extending from heavy stone pillars in the basement to the third floor; thus supporting the floors and the roof. These pillars are finished with heavily fluted casings, leaving sufficient room inside for pulleys to adjust the veils or curtains used to divide the room into four parts; which was done by the use of a crank inserted in the several pillars. The curtains were hung on adjustable rollers just above the ceiling, the whole order of adjustment being very ingeniously contrived.

The door and window casing are also heavily fluted, said to have been done by using oxen as a motive power. Certainly it is too heavy for hand-work, and there was no machinery to accomplish the task in 1834.

ARRANGEMENTS OF PULPITS AND SEATS.

The house was evidently intended as a stake house; but is arranged to represent the church in her general assemblings, as we shall see by the following divisions.

There are two pulpits; one in the west end of the room, representing the Melchisedec order of priesthood; and one in the east end representing the Aaronic line of priesthood.

These pulpits represent four grades of presiding officers in the Melchisedec line—elder, high priest, presiding high priest, and presidency of stake council.

Each breastwork is lettered in gilt as follows: "P. E. M.," signifying "Presiding Elder, Melchisedec"; "M. H. P.," or "Melchisedec High Priest," representing the order without regard to number; "P. M. H.," or "Presiding Melchisedec High Priest," or Presidency of the Church; "M. P. C.," or "Melchisedec Presiding Council," or presidency of the stake. The above interpretation of the lettering is correct, as near as we can learn.

These breastworks rise one above another to a height of eight feet above the floor, and are nicely arranged to accommodate a presiding officer and two counselors.

At either end of the pulpits are raised seats for twelve men arranged to face the congregation. They are to be occupied, as we learn, by the twelve apostles on the right, and the twelve stake councilors (or high priests) on the left.

In the corner of the building to the right are raised seats facing the pulpits, providing for a quorum, or part of a quorum of seventy, and in the opposite corner are seats for a quorum of elders; so that the traveling presiding councils of the church are seated at the right of the Presidency, and the local presiding authorities of the church are seated at the left.

The Aaronic line of priesthood is represented in a similar order in the east end of the room, only differing in the lettering of the several breastworks.

The lettering is as follows: "P. D. A.," "Presiding Deacon, Aaronic"; "P. T. A.," "Presiding Teacher, Aaronic"; "P. A. P.," "Presiding Aaronic Priest"; "B. P. A.," "Bishop Presiding, Aaronic."

The seats for the congregation are movable, to face either pulpit, and are severally inclosed in boxed pews with doors. These are antique in style, and said to be the only exception to divine dictation.

The pulpits are finely ornamented with circular cuttings, fitted to cylinder-shaped drums, representing pillars, three in each breastwork. The entire mechanism, with its symmetrical neatness and order is said, by those making and selling architectural designs in our Eastern cities, to equal if not surpass anything of the kind at the present day.

The vestibule is about ten feet wide by thirty-five feet long; in either end of which is a flight of winding stairs to reach the second floor. The vestry rooms are used, one as a registry and church literary salesroom, and the other as a storeroom.

The second floor is nearly six feet above the main ceiling of the auditorium; leaving a dead-air chamber for the purpose of deadening sound, and to provide for the arch below.

This floor is divided into rooms, the same as the floor below, with the exception of the vestry rooms, and with the same dimensions.

The pulpits and side steps are arranged in the same order and lettered the same, but are not elevated as high or so elaborately finished; yet the finish is noted for its simplicity and neatness and calls forth many remarks of praise from the numerous visitors.

It is remarkable that one never tires viewing the structure from within or without. This room also has the facilities for using veils (or curtains); but we are told that they were never mounted.

The third floor is in the attic. Five rooms are partitioned off, about ten feet wide by thirty-five feet long, with dormer windows in each end of the several rooms. The finish in these rooms is plain throughout.

OBJECT OF THE BUILDING.

The object of this building was foreshadowed in a revelation given as nearly as 1830: that those who are appointed to preach the gospel in this age should be endowed with power from on high, as were the apostles of old. (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 7; 43: 4.) A house to be built. (Doctrine and Covenants 92: 1, 2, 3.) To be a house of learning. (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.) Preparation for this endowment necessary. (Doctrine and Covenants 85:18-23, 36-46.)

The lower floor or auditorium was specially prepared for "Your sacrament offering, and for your preaching, and your fasting, and your praying, and

HOW CAN THE CHURCH THROUGH BRANCH AND DISTRICT OFFICERS KEEP IN TOUCH WITH RELIGIO AND SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK SO AS TO SECURE THE BEST RESULTS FOR THE WORK?

BY MRS. M. A. ETZENHOUSER, SECRETARY OF ZION'S RELIGIO-LITERARY SOCIETY.

The church's greatest asset is its boys and girls. The first General Conference I ever attended was in 1905. During that conference Bishop E. L. Kelley, speaking of the Reorganization, made a statement the gist of which was, "If during all these years we had saved to the church the children of the Saints, and had not baptized one outside of our own families, the membership of the church would be greater than it is now." Being a Sunday school and Religio worker, this statement of Bishop Kelley's struck home, and caused me to think and wonder, Why do we lose our boys and girls?

A wise man once said, "Men prosper best by attending to their own business." And the Scriptures tell us, "He that provideth not for his own family is worse than an infidel." Having these two quotations in mind I can but come to the conclusion: If we as a church wish to prosper, we must "attend to our own business" in the shape of our boys and girls. If we do not wish to be counted "worse than an infidel" we must provide spiritual food for the household of faith (the children).

Let us save the children to the church, instead of spending money for missionaries to get them after they have been lost.

A good sister and I once visited the family of one of our missionaries. During our visit he asked us questions relative to our work with the auxiliaries; and we, being interested, talked quite freely along those lines. After politely listening to what we had to say, he stretched his limbs, crossed his feet, pompously stuck his thumbs in his vest and remarked, "When I am out in my field, I am often asked to accept some office in the Sunday school or Religio, or do some work for them, but I have no time for such tupenny jobs. I am too busy preaching."

After we left the house we just looked at each other and then enjoyed a good, hearty laugh.

For one thing I am thankful, and that is, there are no "twopenny jobs" in church work, whether preaching or teaching. No matter how big the man, the message that he bears is so much bigger that there never yet has been found a man or woman big enough to entirely fill his office, whether it is in the church, Sunday school, or Religio. No matter how hard we work in that office, there is always something else that might be done. In fact, the harder we work the greater the possibilities that are opened up before our mental vision. I am glad that the Great Teacher, our example, the Christ, was not above receiving and blessing little children (Mark 10:13-16); and that after his resurrection he charged Peter to feed the lambs as well as the sheep of the fold.

The preservation of the child is better than the reformation of the man.

The Religio and Sunday school are the workshop of the church; there the plastic clay is being molded and shaped for future usefulness in the church. I know of no other place that offers such grand opportunities for skilled workmen. No one can measure the good that could be done if we had only efficient, trained, Christian workmen as teachers. But so often we have to fall back upon unskilled workmen: and who can say what blunders have been made and what harm done because of this, for we remember the words of the poet:

I took a piece of living clay,
And gently formed it day by day,
And molded with my power and art,
A young child's soft and yielding heart.

I came again when days were gone,
It was a man I looked upon;
He still that early impress bore,
And I could change him nevermore.

And so through life we carry the impress of our early training. Therefore the proper religious education of the youth of the church is one of the vital problems of the day. No man or woman should look upon it as unessential or unprofitable service.

The question has been asked, "How can the branch and district officers keep in touch with this work?"

First, get thoroughly converted to it; believe in its possibilities; "get the want to," and then it is easy to do the rest"; and instead of "getting in touch," look upon it as one of the best opportunities to add to the church; then grasp, not touch the plow handles, and wade right through this most fertile of all the world's harvest fields. Don't you know that between the ages of eight and twenty years there are more people added to the church than at any other age. Here are some figures that I received from the Independence Stake secretary:

Baptisms for six months of the year 1912, 126; of this number one hundred were under the age of twenty years. In Independence alone there were thirty-six baptisms; of this number only six were over twenty years of age, and the secretary informs me that the greater number were under sixteen years of age.

At the Missouri State Sunday school convention held at Sedalia last year, it was stated by one of their international workers, that statistics show ninety per cent of those joining the churches to be children; and the question was asked, "If this be true, why is ninety-five per cent of the preaching for adults?"

What we need in organized branches is PASTORS instead of preachers. I like the word pastor when I think of the one in charge of branch work. In working with the auxiliaries I would first suggest that you forget you are the president of the branch, and just think of yourself as being "our pastor," the loving shepherd who would give his life for the sheep; the one that goes out from the fold, leaving the ninety and nine that are safe therein and searches for the lamb that has gone astray, and when it is found carries it in his bosom. If you are not sure as to your possibilities as a pastor, just read the twenty-third psalm, and be to the men, women, and children, that which the great Shepherd was to David.

Get and keep a hold on the young people. No pastor who wishes to heed the admonition given to Peter, "Feed my lambs," can afford to neglect the Sunday school and the Religio. The pastor is the living link between the church and the auxiliary, and he can not afford to be a stranger in the workshop of the church, if he wishes to keep his hands on the steering wheel.

Then by all means attend the meetings of the auxiliaries when possible. Be there early! Shake hands! Sit on the platform occasionally! Speak often to the children! Share official burdens, and school the teachers in their art. To do this you must attend teachers' meetings so that you may suggest ways and means, and infuse into the dead letter of the law the vital, living, burning truths of the gospel, that the "sincere milk of the word" may be fed to the babes, and "strong meat" to those older. Act as substitute teacher, so that you may come into intimate contact at one time or another with every class of the school and with every member in it.

"The pastor should hold himself ready to do whatever he can do best that needs doing worst."

Hold a children's service about once every month; encourage the chorister of the auxiliaries to train the children for a special song service, and let them sit in the front seats or on the platform. Talk to them fifteen or twenty minutes, and remember, "The great man is the one that can understand big words and put them into language we all can understand."

Do not make this an opportunity to tell the children of their mistakes. "You can't convert a boy or girl by hitting him between the eyes," especially in a public place. But give them the simple gospel truths. Make them feel they are a part of the church, instead of apart from the church, when in Sunday school and Religio. Hold these special services on Sunday morning, so as to give them the proper dignity.

Do you say you are too busy? That you are not interested in the work of the Sunday school and Religio? That the directing of that work is merely a woman's job? I say, "It is a man's job and we want men in it."

Let us just take a glance into this workshop. The General Secretary of the Sunday school tells me that we have twenty-nine thousand, four hundred and fifty-seven members. The general record of the Religio shows a membership of thirteen thousand and sixty-one members. Just think of it—the magnitude of this workshop! Then dream of its possibilities, if we only had men of God at the helm; dare we call the directing of such a work a "two-penny job"?

It has been estimated by some that we lose forty per cent of our boys and girls in the 'teen age. I do not know how nearly correct that estimate is; but of one thing I am sure, and that is, if district and branch officers of the church, and Religio and Sunday school officers and teachers would stand "shoulder to shoulder" as true warriors for Christ in this matter of proper religious training for the youth of the church, this leakage in a great measure could be stopped.

Now we will pass on to the other branch officers: priests, teachers, and deacons. Their duties as outlined in the Doctrine and Covenants are to watch over and strengthen the church, exhorting all to Christian duty. I have been reading the booklet, The Song of Our Syrian Guest, which is an exposition of the twenty-third Psalm. The writer explains to us the customs of the shepherd in the land made famous by Bible history, and I quote from it as follows:

"He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake." Often have I roamed through the shepherd country in my youth and seen how hard it is to choose the right path for the sheep; one leads to a precipice, another to a place where the sheep can not find the way back; and the shepherd was always going ahead, "leading" them in the right paths, proud of his good name as a shepherd.

I was pleased when I read that. "Always going ahead 'leading'"; and so these officers whom God set in the church must go before and lead us, not drive. Jesus, in speaking to Peter said, "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren"; and so before they in making their visits can encourage others to attend the services of the church and its auxiliaries they must be "converted" and to show their conversion they must attend when possible. "Actions speak louder than words." If these officers in making their visits admonish us to attend Sunday school and Religio, and we go there and find these officers conspicuous by their absence, of what effect are their words? Though of course we should always understand that the duties of the office of their priesthood should by all means come first.

the work of the auxiliaries?" I know of no better way than by encouraging this work, and giving it your fostering care. If you are going to hold a reunion in the district, see that this feature of church work is presented. Give a certain portion of each day over to your district Sunday school and Religio officers for that work, and see to it that the time is profitably spent. Give the ones who will have charge of this work plenty of time to work up a good program, and ask them how they are getting along with their preparations, so that you may keep in touch and know to some extent what will be presented.

When their services are being held, be sure and attend. Sit in the front row; look interested; engage in the discussion of questions; throw in a word now and again to help keep things moving. When asked a question answer positively. My! but don't I know just how inspiring that is! Can I not look back through the few years I have been doing field work and see the influence this has over others! When those at the head of the work were in their places, so were the membership. When the apostles, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons took an interest in the discussion of questions, so did the membership, and much good was accomplished, not only by the example set in their being there, but by the words of wisdom that were spoken, and the right direction given to the discussions, and the feeling of good fellowship that pervaded all.

In this great latter day work, there should be no wasted energy, no overlapping, no tearing down of another's work; but we should always be builders of that which "moth and rust can not corrupt." Our every effort put forth should be freighted with good to others, that we may be workers together with God for mankind.

When the final reckoning is in, and the balance cast, may we hear that said of ourselves, which our loving Shepherd said of another, "She hath done what she could."

VALUE AND METHODS OF TENT WORK.

BY N. L. BOOKER.

This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations: and then shall the end come.—Matthew 24: 14.

The great problem confronting the Church of Jesus Christ to-day is how to reach the people with the angel's message—the restored gospel which is committed to the children of men in these the latter days?

The opening up of the work in new places has been intrusted to the traveling ministry of the church, and to this class of workers this article is especially directed. We are laborers, employees in the harvest field of the Lord, and when the evening time comes the Lord of the harvest will call the laborers together and ask, "What sheaves have ye garnered?" and "Where have you been gleaning to-day?"

Any firm on earth expects its employees to render value received, or the positions are given to others. The salesman who demands the best pay is the one who opens up new territory and obtains new customers. Different methods are studied and tried from time to time, and the ones proving the most successful are the ones adopted and used by the firm.

The employee who conserves the interests of the employer to the best advantage is the one commended.

We as a people are laboring for the greatest firm ever organized in heaven or on the earth; one that is carried on in a businesslike way; one that expects results from the traveling force, as also the conservation of the interests of the church in the opening up of new territory and gathering new customers (members).

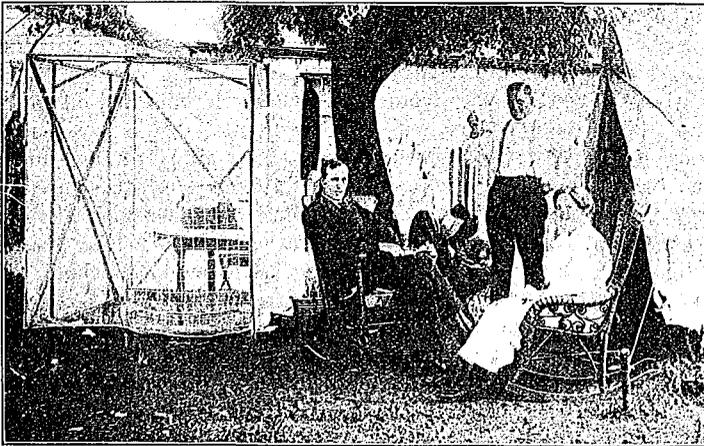

We must admit that (with very few exceptions) outside of our own buildings the doors are nailed, locked, and barred against us. And why is this? Because so-called Christianity has the keys; the religious trusts are opposed to competition, especially to those with a far superior quality of goods. The firms with a poor grade of goods will hardly allow a firm with a superior grade of goods and much cheaper in price to enter its building and show the difference in the goods to its own customers. The contrast would be too great and the result would be disastrous to the vender of the "racket store" goods. But the firm with the best grade of goods at a cheaper price has nothing to fear.

So it is with the venders of "religion," and their greatest competitors, the servants of Jesus Christ. We have the truth, the gospel of Jesus Christ restored by the divine messenger from heaven. We can hardly expect to be permitted to enter their "religion shops" and open up the gospel of Christ and advocate it before their congregations, for the contrast would be so great that it would result in disaster for the preacher and break up their trust. And then their congregations are so delicate that they must have a "doctor of divinity" in close attendance all the time to examine everything under his theological microscope and measure and mix the dose to suit their demands.

Seeing these conditions prevalent everywhere, we must prepare to meet them. The best plan ever tried yet has been proved and found to meet and solve the problem in almost every instance, and that is, tent work. There is not one place out of a hundred, city, town, or country, where a place can not be secured to put a tent, and if such a place is on the map, the Lord says what we should do,— Shake the very dust off our feet as a testimony against them.

A good tent about twenty-four by thirty-six is the best investment a district can make. In the summer months it is almost impossible to get people into a hot school-house, hall, or building of any kind; but a nice, cool, attractive tent will draw a crowd any time, day or night.

THE TENT WORKERS: ELDERS BOOKER AND EBELING, AND SISTER BOOKER.

The writer suggests that the missionaries take special note of the dining tent; perhaps that suggestion is unnecessary.

The methods of tent work as represented in this article have been tried very successfully by the writer, and to his mind are the best.

Now, let us reason together for a while. Tent work is time saving in many respects. We too often have paths beaten down over the district and expect to make the circuit triennially, staying at each branch from one to three weeks, or just long enough to get a few interested; and then we write a letter to HERALD or Ensign telling how the Lord has blessed us in breaking down prejudice, and urging some one else to hurry along and follow up the interest and baptize those who are interested, before they get out of the notion. Thus we move on in our eternal round. Some get almost dizzy-headed running around the district so much. Why not stay and follow up our own work if it takes six months to do it?

Now the best way to break such an one is to put him with a tent. Rather than pull tent stakes, move camp, and drive stakes again when the thermometer stands about ninety-five in the shade, he will stay where he is and do his work well, and thus save the Saints' hard-earned cash which they would spend in paying railroad fare and freight. With any interest at all, the tent should not be moved from any place under five weeks, and if the interest grows, leave it longer.

During the summer of 1912 two elders and the wife of one of them spent in all thirteen weeks in one place,—the result being a good live branch, an excellent Religio, and a flourishing Sunday school.

What are the necessary equipments for a successful camp? By all means there should be one experienced tent worker, who can and will work. Then he should have a good, willing helper,—a worker and not a shirker. If there is any one thing disgusting, as well as discouraging, it is a person in camp who is afraid to pick up a sixteen-pound sledge hammer and drive a stake for fear he will soil his clothes or blister his hands.

Another important character in a camp is a woman. Don't ever think that a woman is detrimental to a camp until you have demonstrated the fact to your entire satisfaction. By all means take your wife along, and then at the close of the season see if you can decide who has done the greater work.

A tent twenty-four by thirty-six feet is the best size to use; one larger than that is burdensome to handle, and more than two men can handle easily.

One smaller will prove detrimental in many ways. If no other way the looks will go against it. It will look too cheap and as if it were intended for only a few. Then, to fully enjoy tent life, one should have a tent ten by twelve, with "fly," for sleeping and living purposes. This tent should have not less than five-foot wall. Then have another tent ten by twelve for a cook tent. If you dislike to fight flies while you eat, study, or write, try this plan: Get some strips of light material about one by two inches; with these build a portable frame about six by eight feet (or according to number in camp), cover it over with mosquito netting, which will cost about seventy-five cents. With this one can enjoy eating, studying, or writing,—safe from the flies.

Equip the camp with a folding organ, two dozen song books, gasoline or oil stove, tin dishes, camp chairs, and some furniture of your own manufacture, according to your own taste, and start out in a new field and note the results.

The saddest thought for a tent worker is that the season is so short in some parts of the country that by the time one gets well started and is enjoying the work the cold weather drives him in. Yet there is a plan by which the tent season may be lengthened at least two months. The tent should be at least ten ounce army duck, top and sides, and be fastened down at the bottom by means of a base board, banked around with a little dirt to keep the wind out. Place in the tent one or two small sheet iron or oil heaters which will keep the tent perfectly comfortable in any ordinary weather of October or November. Some will say, "Oh, that is too much trouble!" Yes, that is the principal reason there are no more new openings made than there are. We are too fearful of a little trouble and work. It is work and outdoor exercise that the ministry need. Too many of us sit around all summer and winter with headaches, backaches, bilious attacks, colds, and a thousand other ailments; so delicate and finical that we can not eat anything for breakfast but milk toast, poached eggs, tea and crackers or something of that kind, constantly taking pills, bromo quinine, etc., when there is nothing needed except a little out-door exercise and physical labor; with that we are ready for corn bread, beans, cabbage, and potatoes, or anything that is set before us, and we will not need any drugs from the apothecary shop to assist nature in digesting them either. Now, if you don't believe it, try it once, at your own expense.

There is one more feature of tent work to be considered, which, with the proper efforts, will bring surprising results. That is summer school work. We read of the success some are having in this work in other places and we think that if we had the opportunity we would like to try our hand at the business. If there is anything that will attract the attention of children it is a tent, and if there is a place on earth suitable for summer school work it is a tent. Children love to go to a tent, and can be kept there as long as practicable. It is a pleasant place to work, study, or play, and how could we spend three or four hours of time more profitably than teaching children to work, sew, paint, telling them Bible stories, teaching them music and songs? Then, occasionally announce that the children will compose the choir on certain evenings, and it is sure that the parents will be present to hear them, and of course will hear the sermon, too.

There is one thing noticeable wherever we go—any person who has the good will of the children and young people will invariably have the good will of the parents.

Some will, perhaps, think they are not sufficiently qualified to conduct a summer school for the children. That may be true, but there are none of us who can not by study and a little work make ourselves capable of teaching the children many good things, and keeping them interested, too. Surely the Lord will bless us in this work as in any other worthy effort.

Of course it takes work and some expense to make tent work a success, but the missionary who will not work when the opportunity is given is not worthy of the title, and the district that will not furnish the necessary funds to carry on tent work is certainly not up to the standard that it should be, and has not the proper love for the gospel.

We can not begin to estimate the value of tent work if it is conducted in the proper way. So let us work, work, WORK, and leave the result in the hands of God.

THE SUMMER VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

BY PAUL N. CRAIG.

Our first summer-school experience in Omaha last year made us realize the wonderful possibilities of such a movement.

We were made conscious of the big field of opportunity before us by the extent to which prejudice to our belief prevailed in the vicinity of the church. This attitude of our neighbors was discovered in our visitations while advertising the school. The sentiment was sometimes rather vehemently expressed to our publisher of the glad summer-school tidings with a hiss of—"Mormons! Mormons!" accompanied with a swish-bang! of a closed door. (You see there still clings to the atmosphere of Omaha the old taint left by the Mormons as they passed through to Utah in the early days of their apostasy, and by those who settled there on their return after discovering the atrocities of the apostate Latter Day Saints.) Others insisted, "Oh, I see! You get our children in your school and then you pump them full of your doctrine. No, thank you; I have very good success in taking care of my children at home."

After many repetitions of this style of salutation the brilliant horizon so illumined by our hopes and anticipations became somewhat clouded, but there crept into our hearts a steady resolution to make the school go, and to show these people that the true spirit of Christ does not become discouraged. (It is not strange, however, that in this day of social hypocrisy and brotherly unkindness that men should look with suspicion upon a kindness freely offered, since it is a means used to-day as an entering wedge for the augmenting of selfish interests.)

We have not received any ingathering of converts as a result of our first summer-school effort, but the good effects of such work are not always immediately evident; but time and repeated efforts we are sure will bring the hoped-for results. The most we could expect to accomplish in this year's work toward the building up of the church was the creation of a better feeling toward it among the nonmembers. If we could succeed in breaking down some of the prejudice we would feel happy indeed.

Our whole aim, however, was to do good. That is the spirit of the summer-school work: to inspire a love for good things in the children's hearts, to make them feel that we are interested in them personally; and even though we may not hope that they will ever become members of the church, yet to take the same interest in them and do and say something that will make them better equipped for life. (It is easy to lose the spirit of the gospel in thinking mainly of how many converts we are going to win from a project.) The gospel is intended to draw all men to God, and love is the only motive power that counts in the process. There is an irresistible drawing influence in the sincere application of true love and kindness.

This is the age of demonstrations, and people want more than the mere description of a thing—they want to see it work before accepting it. This principle, so valuable to the business world, composes the truest method of advertising our religion. "A sermon may be answered; the arguments presented in a speech may be disputed; but no one can answer a Christian life—it is the unanswerable argument in favor of our religion."

The summer school is a demonstration of true Christian love and attracts because it accomplishes good. It reaches the young life at a time when it learns most readily and by its religious tendency points out pure and wholesome ideals to the child and acquaints him with good things, infusing spirituality into his budding life. Through the school we demonstrate our love for our neighbor, and there is no honest-hearted person who is impervious to the appeals of such manifestations. The school has already won the child; and when the child is gained, almost half the battle is fought in winning the parents. The school has been the means of introducing us to the homes. The child's love for the school work has led him to constantly talk of it at home, and the parents become eager to know more about the school and the church supporting it. They have expressed their gratitude for the work done for their children in more than words. The school has shown the grown-ups that those who were back of it had only one object in its establishment, and that to do good; to teach the young minds good things; to interest them at the pliable age in things that are worth while and train their desires along right lines and keep them from absorbing the evils of the streets.

The school demonstrates an interest in humanity; and this fact has been recognized by those who permit their children to attend, for there is no remuneration materially from it, and as it is sustained entirely by donations it shows clearly an unselfish purpose behind it. The consideration of the object of the school has won many to its support and we are confident that many who have been prejudiced before have had their hearts softened toward our belief and have been forced to concede that we have labored to do good no matter what the doctrines of our church may be. This naturally leads to an investigation. Some parents have sent their children to our Sunday school because they find that we have manifested real personal interest in them. One lad, who had been the ringleader in most of the mischief campaigns in the summer school, started to Sunday school, and when asked if he would attend regularly, answered with much gusto, "Yes! I'm comin' for ever and ever!"

Some have asked, "Why do you go to all this trouble and expense for a lot of noisy children?" When we explained the object they commended it highly and they were surprised and pleased that we would have such an interest in children.

It is a fact that the summer school is a valuable means of advertising our gospel because it is not all talk. It is the spirit of the gospel in operation, and that is what the world needs to-day; a living, operating religion; one that makes sacrifices for humanity without grumbling at the cost, and one that is not so absorbed in its own services and members that it will not endeavor to reach out in the spirit of true love and lift and inspire those who are not in touch with spiritual things.

BOOK OF MORMON PROPHECY CONCERNING THE INDIANS.

BY JAMES E. YATES.

The time cometh that after all the house of Israel have been scattered and confounded, that the Lord God will raise up a mighty nation among the Gentiles, yea, even upon the face of this land; and by them shall our seed be scattered.—First Book of Nephi, 7: 15, Authorized Version.

This word of the Lord by the Prophet Nephi was given about 600 B. C., and foretold the establishing of the American Nation as it stands in our own time. It is now an historical fact that the people who discovered the wild Indian nations did drive and scatter them and take possession of their inheritance as the above prophecy had foretold. But the most striking feature of the prophecy follows in the next paragraph following the above quotation, which we will notice after a passing thought upon preceding features of the same prophecy.

The prophecy states in substance that the Spirit of the Lord was to come down upon a certain man in the Old World and cause him to go forth upon the many waters and lead the way to the discovery of this great country of America, with its then degenerate inhabitants. This was fulfilled in the remarkable voyage of Christopher Columbus.

The prophecy states further that the Spirit

Marvelous? Yes, marvelous in prediction, for it predicts the exact contrary to the usual course of conquering nations over the conquered.

All history shows that conquering nations oppress and enslave their captives. The prophecy unfalteringly states that this was to be an exception to the rule—the Indians were to be driven and their country overrun by the whites, and then when they were completely subjugated this Nation was to be a "Father unto them."

wrought upon others from the Old World to go forth upon the many waters unto the seed of Nephi's brethren, the Lamanites.

This was a forecast of the pioneer planting of the "Pilgrim Fathers," and the prophecy further states that they were "a fair people" and that they would "prosper and obtain the land for their inheritance." Have they done it? Think of it—this Nation less than one hundred years old, and a world power!

Then the prophecy goes on to say that the people who were to be discovered here as a wicked and degenerate remnant of a once great and civilized race, would be a "dark and loathsome, and filthy people, full of all manner of idleness and abominations." This also has proven too true to need comment.

Now for the most striking feature of the prophecy:

And after our seed is scattered, the Lord will proceed to do a marvelous work among the Gentiles, which shall be of great worth unto our seed; wherefore, it is likened unto their being nourished by the Gentiles, and being carried in their arms, and upon their shoulders.—First Book of Nephi, 7: 17, 18.

Marvelous in prediction! Marvelous in fulfillment! Predicted before prehistoric cities whose ruins now lie buried deep in American wilds were builded, and before the men were born who built them. Published in America at a time when all human foresight predicted the total annihilation and complete extinction of the Indian peoples, and fulfilled before our very eyes this day.

But the Book of Mormon prophesies in flat contradiction to popular opinion at the date of its publication faithfully declaring:

I, the Lord, will afflict thy seed (Lamanites) by the hand of the Gentiles, nevertheless, I will soften the hearts of the Gentiles that they may be like a father unto them.<sup>1</sup> them, is too prominent a feature in our national affairs to need much comment.

It fulfills the prophecy to the letter. The further prophecies contained in the Book of Mormon concerning the Indian, and which are even now in the course of fulfillment, were that their moral and spiritual condition would improve and that from the wild state of savagery they would rise to be a more delightful people.

The famous DeWitt, one of the greatest statesmen of the age in which he lived, being asked by a friend how he was able to dispatch that multitude of affairs in which he was engaged, replied that his whole art consisted in doing one thing at a time.—Backbone.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE TO THE INDIANS.

In another part of this issue there appears an article from the pen of Elder James E. Yates in which is set forth the remarkable fulfillment of the no less remarkable prophecy made in the Book of Mormon to the effect that in due time the United States Government would become to the Indians a great protector and father.

In connection with that article our readers will peruse with interest an address from the lips of President Wilson, which was recorded upon phonographic records, and is to be heard in the homes and assemblies of the Indian in all the reservations.

An interesting little incident occurred in connection with this address. This was shortly after the visit of Chief Plenty Coups to President Wilson and Secretary of the Interior, Franklin K. Lane. Mr. Wilson had just finished his address when Miss Nancy Lane, daughter of the Secretary, stepped up to the machine and on her own volition added these words:

My friends the Indians have not been well treated. Now, under the Secretary of the Interior, Franklin K. Lane, you shall be treated as well as the white men. NANCY LANE.

This became a part of the record and will be heard by the Indians in connection with the speech by President Wilson, which is as follows:

My Brothers: A hundred years ago President Jefferson, one of the greatest of my predecessors, said to the chiefs of the upper Cherokees:

"My children, I shall rejoice to see the day when the red men, our neighbors, become truly one people with us, enjoying all the rights and privileges we do, and living in peace and plenty as we do, without anyone to make them afraid, to injure their persons, or take their property without being punished for it according to fixed laws."

This I say to you again to-day, but a hundred years have gone by, and we are nearer these great things then hoped for, much nearer than we were then. Education, agriculture, the trades, are the red man's road to the white man's civilization to-day, as they were in the day of Jefferson, and happily you have gone a long way on that road.

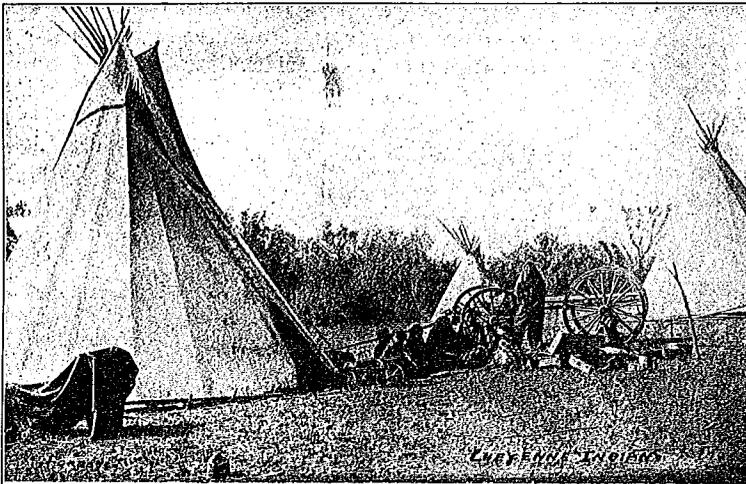

There are some dark pages in the history of the white man's dealing with the Indian, and many parts of the record are stained with the greed and avarice of those who have thought only of their own profit, but it is also true that the purposes and motives of their great Government and of our Nation as a whole toward the red man have been wise, just, and beneficent. The remarkable progress of our Indian brothers toward civilization is proof of it, and open to all to see.

During the last half century you have seen the schoolhouse take the place of the military post on your reservations. The administration of Indian affairs has been transferred from the military to the civil arm of the Government. The education and industrial training the Government has given you has enabled thousands of Indian men and women to take their places in civilization alongside their white neighbors.

Thousands are living in substantial farmhouses on their own separate allotments of land. Hundreds of others have won places of prominence in the professions, and some have worked their way into the halls of Congress and into places of responsibility in our State and National Governments. Thirty thousand Indian children are enrolled in government, state, and mission schools.

The great white father now calls you his "brothers," not his "children." Because you have shown in your education and in your settled ways of life stanch, manly, worthy qualities of sound character, the Nation is about to give you distinguished recognition through the erection of a monument in honor of the Indian people, in the harbor of New York. The erection of that monument will usher in that day which Thomas Jefferson said he would rejoice to see, "When the red men become truly one people with us, enjoying all the rights and privileges we do and living in peace and plenty." I rejoice to foresee the day.

AN INDIAN TELLS ABOUT INDIAN PROPHETS.

The Soul of the Indian<sup>1</sup> is the title of an interesting book by Charles Alexander Eastman, an educated Indian lecturer, his Indian name we understand being "Ohiyesa."

In this book he endeavors to lay bare the Indian character and religious belief prior to contact with white men. He tells of those things that not often have been rightly told, for the reason that as a rule an Indian who still believes them will not talk of them, while one who has lost faith in them is inclined to treat them contemptuously.

We herewith reproduce an interesting extract from his chapter on the "Border land of spirits."

We have noted in many books on Indian life well-authenticated instances of spiritual manifestation of various kinds, giving warnings to Indians of impending events, some of which were very remarkable, and quite in line with the things set forth in this extract:

It is well known that the American Indian had somehow developed occult power, and although in the latter days there have been many impostors, and, allowing for the vanity and weakness of human nature, it is fair to assume that there must have been some even in the old days, yet there are well-attested instances of remarkable prophecies and other mystic practice.

A Sioux prophet predicted the coming of the white man fully fifty years before the event, and even described accurately his garments and weapons. Before the steamboat was invented, another prophet of our race described the "fire boat" that would swim upon their mighty river, the Mississippi, and the date of this prophecy is attested by the term used, which is long since obsolete. No doubt, many predictions have been colored to suit the new age, and unquestionably false prophets, fakirs, and conjurers have become the pest of the tribes during the transition period. Nevertheless, even during this period there was here and there a man of the old type who was implicitly believed in to the last.

Notable among these was Ta-chank-pee Ho-tank-a, or His War Club Speaks Loud, who foretold a year in advance the details of a great war party against the Ojibways. There were to be seven battles, all successful except the last, in which the Sioux were to be taken at a disadvantage and suffer crushing defeat. This was carried out to the letter. Our people surprised and slew many of the Ojibways in their villages, but in turn were followed and cunningly led into an ambush whence but few came out alive. This was only one of his remarkable prophecies.

Another famous "medicine man" was born on the Rum River about one hundred and fifty years ago, and lived to be over a century old. He was born during a desperate battle with the Ojibways, at a moment when, as it seemed, the band of Sioux engaged were to be annihilated. Therefore the child's grandmother exclaimed: "Since we are all to perish, let him die a warrior's death in the field!" and she placed his cradle under fire, near the spot where his uncle and grandfathers were fighting, for he had no father. But when an old man discovered the new-born child, he commanded the women to take care of him, "for," said he, "we know not how precious the strength of even one warrior may some day become to his nation!"

This child lived to become great among us, as was intimated to the superstitious by the circumstances of his birth. At the age of about seventy-five years, he saved his band from utter destruction at the hands of their ancestral enemies, by suddenly giving warning received in a dream of the approach of a large war-party. The men immediately sent out scouts, and felled trees for a stockade, barely in time to meet and repel the predicted attack. Five years later, he repeated the service, and again saved his people from awful slaughter. There was no confusion of figures or omens, as with lesser medicine men, but in every incident that is told of him his interpretation of the sign, whatever it was, proved singularly correct.

The father of Little Crow, the chief who led the "Minnesota massacre" of 1862, was another prophet of some note. One of his characteristic prophecies was made only a few tional knowledge of religious doctrines quite similar to those taught by our Savior.

Strikingly in harmony with this is the following statement by Clara D. True, Indian agent at Morongo Agency, in southern California.

The Indians have a religious life all their own, of which few white people are aware. I think the majority of Indians have not departed very far from the old beliefs, even though most of the people are members of Christian churches. There is much that is beautiful in the so-called pagan religion. In fact, among some of the more highly developed tribes there appears to be little difference between the teachings of the Indian divinity and those of Christ. One is tempted, upon intimate knowledge of some of the old people, to wonder whether the Son of Man appeared to the Indian also, or whether the gospel preached to them by some unrecorded Paul generations ago was forgotten. The more one knows of the Indian as he really is, not as he appears to the tourist, the teacher, or the preacher, the more one wonders. The remnant of knowledge that the red brother has is an inheritance from a people of higher thought than we have usually based our speculation upon.—Outlook, June 5, 1909.

years before he died, when he had declared that, although already an old man, he would go once more upon the war-path. At the final war feast, he declared that three of the enemy would be slain, but he showed great distress and reluctance in foretelling that he would lose two of his own men. Three of the Ojibways were indeed slain as he had said, but in the battle the old war prophet lost both of his sons.

There are many trustworthy men, and men of Christian faith to vouch for these and similar events occurring as foretold. I can not pretend to explain them, but I know that our people possessed remarkable powers of concentration and abstraction, and I sometimes fancy that such nearness to nature as I have described keeps the spirit sensitive to impressions not commonly felt, and in touch with the unseen powers.—The Soul of the Indian, by Eastman, pp. 157-163.

THE INDIANS HAVE A KNOWLEDGE OF THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

The Book of Mormon plainly sets forth the fact that Jesus visited the Western World after his crucifixion and taught the people who lived here, and that the knowledge of his teachings was handed down to the American Indians, whose ancestors at that time were known as "Lamanites," in contradistinction to the "Nephites," who were a white people.

Many explorers, missionaries, and others who have come in contact with the Indians, have been impressed by the fact that they seem to have a tradi-

The Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR SECOND THURSDAY IN AUGUST.

Parents' Day.—For our own families and the families of each other; for greater growth in spirituality and a greater sense of individual responsibility in the family, the church, and the world. For all the sick and afflicted.

Book of Alma 17: 48-60, large edition. Memory Verse, Moroni 7: 30.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Dear Sister Salyards: A short time ago I wrote to the Prayer Union in behalf of Mrs. Nellie Brannon, that she might be healed of a lump on her throat, and God in his mercy heard and answered their prayers, for the lump has been removed.

A friend of hers has requested that prayers may be offered for her, that, if it is the Lord's will, she may be healed of a thick neck that troubles her. Her name is Mrs. Gertie Morrison.

I also ask that prayers may be offered for a young girl who is surrounded by evil influences, that she may be given courage and strength to resist the enticements of those who are working for her downfall.

Praying that God's blessing may rest on the Prayer Union,

I remain your sister in Christ,
MRS. ALEX. MELLON.

Sister Carinda Cowdrey writes from Albany, Oregon, asking the prayers of the Saints for herself. She is in a critical condition, suffering from dropsy. There are no elders within reach, of whom she knows, the doctors have given up hope of relieving her, and there seems to be no help for her, except the Lord shall extend his healing hand to her. For this, our sorely afflicted sister desires us to pray. Let us remember her.

Reunion Notices.

New Philadelphia, Ohio, where the Kirtland, Pittsburg and Ohio reunion is to be held, can be reached as follows: Pennsylvania Lines, Cleveland and Pittsburg Division, changing at Bayard, Ohio. Baltimore and Ohio, C. L. & W. Division. Northern Ohio Traction and Light Company (electric). Those using the P. C. C. & Saint Louis should check their baggage to Uhrichsville, Ohio, where it can be transferred to the B. & O., which will forward to New Philadelphia. In the past some inconvenience has been encountered because of the failure of trunks to arrive promptly. They should be sent ahead one or two days to allow for what are sometimes serious delays. This is important. L. F. P. Curry, for committee.

Convention Notices.

The district Sunday school superintendent requests me to state that Religio will have the forenoon and the Sunday school the afternoon at the convention at Vancouver, August 15, 1913. Lottie Gage.

Two-Day Meetings.

At California, Michigan, August 9 and 10. At Sparta, Michigan, August 23 and 24. G. A. Smith and C. F. Ellis expect to be in attendance, with others. Let all come who can. W. P. Buckley, secretary.

At Wilmot Township in Northern Michigan District, August 30 and 31, 1913, five miles north of Vanderbilt. Those coming will be met Friday at Wolverine or Vanderbilt. Bring baskets well filled and everybody come. C. N. Burtch, secretary.

Correction.

In the article, "The standing minister and the missionary," in the HERALD for July 23, there is a mistake. In fourth line from the bottom of page 716, first column, the word not should have been omitted. WILLIAM LEWIS.

Notice of Release.

Elder Everett Hughes, who was appointed to labor in the Western Oklahoma District, has been released from the missionary field for the balance of the conference year, by his request.

We regret to see this done, as we need more laborers, especially young men like Brother Hughes. May the Lord send more laborers into his vineyard.

AUGUST 1, 1913.

W. M. AYLER.

Reunion Tents.

Des Moines district reunion will convene at Rhodes, Iowa, August 15 to 24. Orders for tents must be in the hands of the undersigned not later than August 9. Prices as follows: Tents, 10 by 12, $2; 12 by 14, $2.50; 14 by 16, $4. Tents erected by committee, 25 cents extra. Cots, canvas, 35 cents; wire, single, 45 cents, double 60 cents. Pillows 15 cents. Chairs 12 cents. Tables 40 cents. Pillow slips 5 cents. Comforts 30 cents. Gasoline stoves, two burner, 70 cents. Prices include freight both ways. Address all orders to E. O. ### SACRED AND SOLEMN CHARACTER OF THE ORDINANCES AND CEREMONIES.

The various ordinances, rites, and ceremonies of the church are God-ordained and sacred. They should be observed with dignity and fitting solemnity. Those who witness them or have part in them should not do so lightly or thoughtlessly, or without an effort to apprehend their true significance. Nor should levity or frivolity accompany, precede or follow in such a way as to mar the observance of the ordinance or ceremony, of whatever nature.

In all of these ordinances the priesthood is involved. The authority, dignity, and power of the priesthood should be respected by those concerned, whether as administrators, beneficiaries, or witnesses. This does not mean that the priest should be exalted above his fellows,—he should be humble, as becomes a follower of Jesus. But the priesthood which he holds comes from God. It is a sacred and holy investure and should be respected as such. In this some have come short of meriting divine approval, and have permitted personal antipathy toward the officiating individual to serve as a pretext for dishonoring acts and rulings of an official nature that by reason of conferred authority represented both God and the church.

In this matter the ministry themselves should set an example in at least two particulars. First, they should be very careful how they attempt without good cause to undo the official work of associates or predecessors, or undermine their usefulness and efficiency by slighting remarks.

Second, they should honor the priesthood which they bear by conducting themselves as becomes representatives of God and bearers of great and important tidings. Touching this matter we have often been admonished.

The minister who permits himself to become boisterous and clownish in the presence of the young and thoughtless or the old and foolish may win a passing handclap of approval as a "jolly good fellow"; but deep in their hearts the Saints accept him with reservation, and their sincere tribute of abiding respect, confidence, and love is reserved for the minister who preserves his dignity and regards the sanctity of his office. This does not by any means intimate that one should be stiff or unapproachable. Dead men are cold and stiff, but not dignified. We need live men in the ministry; men with hearts, and warm, human sympathies. All men could approach Jesus; but who dare question his simple dignity? He mingled freely with all, yet never condescended to act the part of the buffoon. Nor was he little, or mean, or spiteful, or hypercritical, or anything that might detract from his high and holy calling.

Ministers should first of all be gentlemen, and as such, aided by the Holy Spirit, should ever be able to mark the line beyond which lies impropriety. On this side of that line they will find plenty of wholesome humor, comradeship, and all that can reasonably be asked for.

But we are in danger perhaps of forgetting our subject. Taking for an example the ordinance of baptism and the subsequent laying on of the hands of the priesthood in confirmation and for the conferring of the Holy Ghost. How reverently we should observe these ordinances. They are God-ordained. The immersion in pure water is symbolical of the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus and the corresponding death of the old personality of the one baptized and his resurrection to a new and better life and personality. It typifies the washing away of his sins.

Then under the hands of the elders he is given membership in the church, and receives the gift of the Holy Spirit, which is to guide him into all truth. Those who officiate in these ordinances represent God. They exercise in this way according to legal and scriptural procedure their priestly authority to officiate on earth in that way which shall have binding force in heaven. They are men set apart unto a holy calling for that work. God is represented here and enters into these transactions. The hearts of men should be sobered at such times.

Administration to the sick is another ceremony that should not be observed thoughtlessly. Those receiving administration should not call for it upon a mere passing whim, or because some one else present in the meeting is to receive administration, or for a trifling or fancied ailment. The need should be real, and the spiritual attitude serious and accompanied by due reflection and prayer. The elders officiating should avoid formality and mere lip devotion. There is no room here for routine or perfunctory service. And those who sit by should join in prayer in behalf of the afflicted one, that thereby our hard and unsympathetic hearts may be moved and God be delighted to come in and bless, not only the afflicted one, but all present.

Perhaps there is no ordinance more deeply touching and solemn than the sacrament of the Lord's supper. It should be unnecessary to admonish the Saints to observe this ordinance with deep reverence and humility, seeking to perceive its true significance and sense the sacrifice of Jesus thus represented. The prayer used in blessing the emblems is in effect a covenant to do the will of God and keep all of his commandments, that we may have his Spirit to be with us. Probably you have noticed its wording; if not, take particular notice at the first opportunity. Those who officiate in the blessing of the emblems and passing them to others should be clean in person and in mind, and pure in spirit, fully appreciating the solemn and holy nature of the duty that they should perform with joyful yet chastened hearts.

The blessing of the bread and wine should be done by those who have committed the prayer of blessing to memory, so that the beautiful and deeply significant prayer given us in the books for this purpose may not be mutilated and distorted. In our opinion if one is unable to commit the prayer to mind thoroughly, it is far better for him to read it at the service rather than to use some garbled rendition, partly of his own construction, that is certain to detract from the dignity of the service and perhaps embarrasses all concerned.

The subject treated upon is by no means exhausted. That which has been written may stir the minds of our readers to profitable thoughts along this line. Often while returning from administering to the sick or carrying the emblems to those who were unable to attend the regular church service, we have felt illuminated in mind and have realized that we have been near the gates of heaven. To officiate in the name of God to needy and suffering humanity—surely life holds nothing more ennobling and sacred.

Again, when others have visited our home in a similar capacity, for identical or similar purposes, we have felt after their departure the sweet influence of the Spirit and have known that men of God have been there engaged in his work and that his blessing and his peace have remained.

Brethren, in all things let us guard jealously the sacredness of our calling, and by placing a proper valuation upon the solemnity of the ordinances and ceremonies of the church honor him who has placed them in the church.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

RETURNING ISRAEL AND LATTER DAY VINDICATION.

The following, from the Minneapolis Journal, July 20, is interesting as indicating the growing sentiment among the Jews for a reestablished nation in Palestine, their former inheritance. Commenting on the Zionistic movement and the occasion which brought forth the remarks of Judge Bregstone, the Journal says:

Quietly but steadily the Zionist movement, for the reestablishment of a Jewish nation in Palestine, is making tremendous strides, according to Judge Philip P. Bregstone, of Chicago, who reached Minneapolis yesterday to address Minneapolis Zionists this evening at new Scharer Zedek synagogue, Briant Avenue North and Eighth Avenue, where memorial services in honor of Doctor Theodore Herzl, founder of Zionism, will be conducted.

Judge Bregstone was introduced by Rabbi C. David Mott of the Abath Yesburun synagogue, and is reported by the Journal as saying:

"There are 10,000 agricultural colonists alone who have gone to Palestine," said Judge Bregstone. "It is difficult to tell how many have gone to the cities, for we did not know the population before the movement started. The movement has lost its shallow enthusiasm, and its work is now more honest and sincere and is being done quietly.

"The present problem is how best to handle the increasing immigration to Palestine, which will be discussed at the meeting. The best class of Americans are helping the movement, who feel that their less fortunate brethren ought not be neglected. The movement is only for those who want to go and its purpose is not to force any Jew to leave his home and migrate to Palestine.

CENTER OF JEWISH CULTURE.

"A feature of the new Palestine is the Jewish cultural center that is being built up there. Jews are going to the schools in Jerusalem from all over the world, in preference to American and particularly European schools. A fine system of schools is being maintained for the children: a modern gymnasium (high school) was built in Jerusalem. There were also built a polytechnical school and an arts and crafts school, and now plans are ripe for the building of a university.

"The idea of Zionism is not new, it dates back to the time when Israel lost its independence. It was natural that the longing to return into Palestine was created in the hearts of the Jews simultaneously with their heroic defeats on the mountains of Judea.

THE IDEA SPREADS.

"During the last part of the nineteenth century when the idea of renationalization began to change the map of Europe and insignificant countries which have long been swallowed up by powerful empires have again fought for and won independence, and the unbearable condition of the Jews in Europe, the programs of Russia, the cruel laws of Roumania, the starvation of the Jews in Galicia, the Dreyfus affair in France, all had a tendency to reawaken and rekindle the old longings of the Jew again to find a refuge on his own soil in Palestine.

"It was then that Doctor Theodore Herzl appeared before the world with his 'Jewish State,' wherein he submitted a practical solution to the Jewish problem by establishing a Jewish state in Palestine. It was received with favor by Jews in every part of the world.

INTERNATIONAL BODY FORMED.

"An international organization was formed, and with it the congress and all its institutions, including the Jewish Colonial Trust Company, the Anglo-Palestine Trust Company and the Jewish National Fund. A large number of pioneers of various parts of the civilized world flocked to the promised land. To do this many of them have abandoned the universities where they were preparing for life's struggle and they have engaged in agriculture.

"We believe that the Jew's genius to produce the indestructible is not extinct in him, and if he failed to do so during these many centuries it was because he was deprived of an opportunity, and furthermore all that Jewish genius produced during the diaspora was to enrich the treasures of others. When he shall again become a national entity, the Spinozas, Heines, Auerbachs, Mendelssohns, Rubensteins, and Antokolskys will contribute to Jewish art, Jewish literature, Jewish music, Jewish philosophy—in a word, they will create a Jewish culture. And Zion will again be the place whence wisdom and learning will issue forth."

LATTER DAY VINDICATION.

From our beginning as a church the elders have understood and taught that the prophecies relating to the final restoration of Israel were to be interpreted literally; that, in fact, this,—Israel restored,—was to be one of the strong evidences of the dispensation of the fullness of times,—going hand in hand with the rebuilding of Jerusalem, the restoration of the land of Palestine to its former fertility, the restoration of the Nephite record, and the restoration of the gospel. For many years there was no movement among the Jews to indicate the activities expected of them; but more recently they have come to look, many of them, longingly toward a national existence again in the land of promise; they have organized in efforts to secure a foothold there. Thousands have already returned. That their inclination and the opportunity to return are brought about under the same divine movings that have ordered the great work of restoration in our day we have no doubt.

With regard to the promises the Lord has made touching not only the restoration of Israel, but all the work of the restoration of latter days, with the accompanying triumph of God's people, the Saints need have no doubt. We have seen the gospel restored, the hidden record brought forth, Jerusalem rebuilt, the land of Palestine increased in fertility, the Jews returning; we have sensed in a measure the power of God; we shall in time see the gathering of the Saints and the triumph of Zion redeemed. We rejoice in the return of Israel, and are confirmed in the surety of Zion's cause. J. F. GARVER.

OPEN LETTER TO QUORUM PRESIDENTS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 10, 1913.

To Quorum Presidents: For a president of a quorum to be in position to discharge to the fullest extent the duties of his office, he should know intimately the nature and character of every member of his quorum. Do you possess this knowledge?

Many a president has been given credit for having "natural presiding ability" because he appears to be equal to any emergency, when as a matter of fact the credit should be given to his disposition to anticipate situations and complications, and an inclination to study out courses of procedure for all kinds of emergencies. Such a president is seldom caught unawares. A climax, apparently reached suddenly and unexpectedly, is met promptly and wisely because it had long been anticipated.

What is your method? To wait, or to plan? Is the next meeting of your quorum being thought of by you, and plans made to meet every complication which might arise? Are the details being worked out in your mind now?

Unless the work of your quorum is systematic and consistent, the meetings are likely to prove of little benefit. The bulk of the work of systematizing will fall on you and your secretary. If the meetings are uninteresting and a failure the blame is very likely to be yours. Study your men and their needs; your organization, its needs and purposes. Make your office one of work, not a sinecure.

And do not forget to keep in touch by reports with the First Presidency; and let your reports show your real condition and work.

Yours fraternally,

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

NONMEMBER DEFENDS CHURCH.—Over the signature, "Nonmember of the Latter Day Saint Church," appears a half-column article in the Omaha World-Herald, July 12, bearing title, "Untrue and unfair." This is a reply to a statement, alleged to have been made by one Mrs. G. W. Coleman during a lecture in Omaha, to the effect that members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints sometimes practice polygamy. The article clearly sets forth the distinction between the Reorganization and the Utah Church, and gives the teaching of the Reorganization on the marriage question as well as our record on the subject. Mrs. Coleman is notified that there will be a reunion of the church at Magnolia, Iowa, August 15 to 24, representing the Little Sioux District, and another at Missouri Valley, August 22 to September 2, both of which will be largely attended by church members, and that at the same time the district court of Har-risson County will be in session. She is invited to be present and avail herself of the opportunity to present evidence in support of her charges. The communication is dated Logan, Iowa, July 10. Our unknown defender has our sincere thanks for his courage and friendliness in coming to our support at a time when we were so unfairly and grossly slandered.

WORTHY EXAMPLE.—Sister C. B. Edson, of Shaler, Iowa, sends in five dollars, one dollar of which is to be expended in providing her with copies of the tract, A Plea for the Golden Rule, in reply to Mr. Kinney. The balance is a donation to be used in helping to distribute these tracts. The Bureau of Publicity wishes to call the attention of the Saints to this worthy example. We trust that many others will secure these tracts and distribute them among their neighbors, particularly those who have been studying Mr. Kinney's work.

PRIMARY CHILDREN PAY TITHING.—Sister Anna Salyards reports that she has just delivered receipts from Bishop Roberts to forty-four members of the primary class in the Lamoni Sunday School. These are receipts for tithing paid by these children into the hands of Sister Salyards and by her delivered to the stake bishop. The sum total of their contributions amounted to about seven dollars. The principle involved is of much more importance than the amount of money collected. It is a fine thing for these little ones, thus early in life, to be taught to honor all of the laws of God, both temporally and spiritually, and it augurs well for the church of tomorrow. Those who affect to believe that the Saints are interested or ever have been interested in defrauding their neighbors and "spoiling" the Gentiles might well consider this event. Instead of wishing to defraud others, our people are interested in making sacrifices themselves and teaching their children to sacrifice that the kingdom of heaven may be built up and the righteousness of God be established.

SAINT IS CORRECT.—First among those who have ridiculed the Saints of latter days for adhering to the name by which the followers of Christ were formerly recognized, and by which the people of God were in every dispensation known to him, have been the followers of Alexander Campbell. Now comes one Oscar Smith, in the Word of Truth, a representative sheet of the Church of Christ, commonly known as the Non-progressive Campbellite Church, who concedes that Saint is correct. He writes: "Let us now sum up. First, we have, 'friends' in the Lord; second, 'brethren'; third, 'saints.' (See John 15: 14, 15: 4-8; Hebrews 2: 11; Romans 1: 7; 1 Corinthians 1: 2.) . . . The names, 'believer,' 'disciple,' 'saint,' 'brother,' and 'Christian'—these, we say, and these alone, belong to every child of God alike. . . . The apostles always wrote to the 'churches of God' and 'to the saints and faithful brethren in Christ.' (2 Corinthians 1: 1; Colossians 1: 1, 2.)"

ELDER HULL AND THE CHILDREN.—Speaking with reference to the activities of Elder E. B. Hull and the church at Brooklyn, New York, especially among the children, the Weekly Chat of that city says: "There is a body of worshipers bearing this name [Saint] situated at Schenectady Avenue and Park Place, in this borough. An observer presents some interesting and suggestive statements along the lines of the foregoing thoughts, and brings to the front a company of excellent people who are evidently of a Pauline spirit, but who avoid any excesses, while they seek, like Paul, by all rational means, to win hearts and save souls. From closer observation, further details of this useful body of devout people will be given at an early day in the columns of this paper. . . . The influence of Pastor E. B. Hull among the very young, will be felt when they shall have arrived at the estate of manhood and womanhood. The sermons to those immature minds are conversational, and abound in apt illustration, and are as attractive to those of more mature comprehension, as to those for whom they are specially designed. . . . These services embody marches, all tending to stimulate the spiritual emotions, drills, stories from nature, from the Bible, from the sublimities of astronomy, which teach that 'The heavens declare the glory of God,' from geology, so that the inquiring young mind when it looks upon a rock, or even a pebble on the street or on the beach, at once wishes to know all about it, how it was made and who made it, and so with all such analogous things. A delightful feature of these Sabbath evening exercises is the time devoted to 'good habit talks,' which are illustrated by 'magical, mythical, chemical, and many other devices.' All these involve the use of blackboard or prepared paper crayons, which fix the eye, and engross the heart."

EN ROUTE.—By card we learn that Brother U. W. Greene, en route for Palestine, reached Fishguard, England, July 28. Under favor of the Lord Brother Greene, who heretofore has been very seasick, has made this journey without sickness. He writes, "Arrived safely thus far. Beautiful and fast boat. Not an hour of sickness, health perfect, appetite immense. Am thankful to God for his mercy in blessing this day."

Every normal man has that reserve power within him, a mighty coil of force and purpose which would enable him to make his life strong and complete were he free to express the best and the strongest things in him, were he not fettered by some bond, physical or moral.—O. S. Marden.

RELIGIOUS DEBATES.

NUMBER 15. "METHODS AND TACTICS" SERIES.

Debate is defined as follows:

Contention in words or arguments; discussion for elucidating truth; strife in argument or reasoning, between persons of different opinions, each endeavoring to prove his own opinion right, and that of his opposer wrong; dispute; controversy, etc.

The profitableness of debate, in view of the definition that it is "discussion for elucidating truth," can not be questioned when the development of the ages is appealed to as proof. Religious controversy began near six thousand years ago. The first contention arising in the human family was about religion; and since the announcement, "I will put enmity between thy seed and her seed," it has been conducted by different agencies with varied success.

The duty of the saint ever has been, is now, and ever will be, so long as good and evil, truth and error are in the world, to contend for the truth revealed, in opposition to error. From the days when Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, down through the ages, the distinguished representatives of God's truth have championed the cause in controversy with opposing forces.

The recorded life of the Savior, after the twelfth anniversary of his birth found him in the temple disputing with wise doctors, was one of continual stormy debate, with scribe, elder, Pharisee, Sadducee, and the established priesthood of his day. The apostles were noted debaters; and Paul was more famous in this department than was Hannibal hurling defiance at the gates of Rome. In every encounter, he came off victorious, whether with stoic, epicurean philosopher, Roman orator, Jewish high priest, or Sadduceean teacher. Never was he foiled in battle, never did he give back; the sword which he wielded, and the power which directed it, proved resistless in the conflict. When, therefore, his puissant arm waved the "sword of the Lord and of Gideon" before the tribunals of the Roman Empire, he struck a blow which vibrated through all the nerves of the vast body politic.

The salutary effects of apostolic debate was the triumph of the church, marching from conquest to conquest until the land of Judæa was smitten by the sword of the Spirit, Jerusalem falls, Samaria is taken, the coasts of Asia, maritime cities, islands, provinces, "sit up" and take notice, and Cæsar's household in imperial Rome becomes obedient to the faith.

The brilliant epochs of buried nations were attained by the clash of intellectual swords primarily, and sustained by martial hosts upon the field of fatal strife. History now reverses her verdict that golden domes of civilization, moral, intellectual, and material prosperity are attained by the austerities of war, but rather by the peaceful agencies of education.

Debate on the platform, in which the opposites are parried in argument, and merits contrasted, when the sky of reason is unobscured, and the passions of men are not aroused by an appeal to brute force, is a primary fulcrum lifting a people into sunshine above the fogs. To maintain such an enviable height, the call "to arms" has been resorted to. Great deeds and great men make a great people. The Greece of to-day has the same hills and the same valleys that it had two thousand years ago—the same sky bends over it now that canopied it then; but Pericles, Phidias, Plato, Demosthenes, and the great men who made Corinth and Athens the seats of culture and philosophy are no more, and Greece—the Greece—lives no longer.

The Dark Ages entombed learning and intellectual development. Debate was dead until the dawn of the Reformation, when the earth throbbed with the demand for both civil and religious liberty, and God moved in the valley among the "dry bones," when the cities of the Orient blossomed with the flower of free debate. The era of the reformation presented a fitness, and the intellectual storms of debate sent us fruitage of religious toleration. Witness the famous debates at Leipsic between Eckius, Luther, and Carolostadius, June 27, 1519. On the fourth of July, 1519, Eckius maintains the pope's supreme authority, Luther denies it. The same took place at Baden May, 1526, between Oecolampadius and Eckius. Again witness the conflict between Luther and Oecolampadius when the issue was "the real presence." Some of these discussions involved twenty-six propositions.

The original thirteen colonies were released from the swaddling bands of colonial dependence by the fiery eloquence of the patriots' discussion. They were educated to their natural heritage of freedom, and, determined to apply that heritage, they moved upon the high ground, and they resorted to revolutionary arms for the purpose of holding the high ground previously attained.

The Civil War was a contest between opposing ideas, and long before they flamed out into war they had been brooded over by the thinker, urged upon the platform, proclaimed through the press, declaimed upon the stage and stump, debated in Congress, and argued in the courts, until the Nation arose to the sublime heights that "it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom

I raised up for this purpose," and planting its feet upon this eternal rock, the inevitable came, and the Nation defended the constitutional proposition previously gained.

Webster and Hayne, Lincoln and Douglas, the Senate and House of Representatives, stand out witnessing the good results of debate in modern times. Every reform movement logically calls for orderly investigation, whether religious, political, social, scientific, or economic, and the character, or impress will be marked and decided upon our literature and habits. Such discussions tear up old formulas by the roots, and scatter to the winds the fetters which have bound the human mind in special ruts and channels. They break down old barriers and summon from the deepest recesses of the heart its deepest emotions and feelings, giving them an intensity and vigor of expression like the glow of autumn.

The latter day work has lost no power or prestige by virtue of the hammer's beat, but has rather gained in potentiality, facing the results of its own logic, as courageously as the young David of old faced the great Goliath. It knew in its early days—and it knows to-day—"neither variableness nor shadow of turning." As it is the aggregate of light and truth, "no weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper, and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn" (Isaiah 54: 17); therefore, "Debate thy cause with thy neighbor himself" (Proverbs 25: 9); meet him "face to face."

WHEN SHOULD WE ENCOURAGE DEBATE?

We should consider the ripeness of preparation, "the fitness of things," in encouraging discussion; and these should always be stock in trade. As the Apostle Peter properly admonishes: "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear."—1 Peter 3: 15. Not only so, but with the same meekness and reverence, "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."—Jude 3.

All things being equal, the arena of debate should be courted to convince the auditor, to allay prejudice, to win friends to the cause, to warn our neighbor, and correct erroneous opinions, as "there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision"; "teaching things which they ought not for filthy lucre's sake"; "whose mouths must be stopped." (Titus 1: 10, 11.)

Truth should be the object of all debate, and Hedge incorporates a rule at once impartial and grand, as follows:

Each disputant should consider his opponent of equal standing in respect to the subject in debate, each should regard the other as possessing equal talents, knowledge and desire for truth with himself, and that it is possible therefore, that he may be in the wrong, and his adversary in the right.

Truth is somewhat aggressive, and he who is panoplied in her shining robes moves out with faith in God, believing that his goodness is stronger than the dexterity of the arch enemy, resting in the assurance that no expediency can finally prevail or succeed which has not justice for its foundation. The exigencies of the restored gospel favor the encouraging of conflict between right and wrong, truth and error, in an aggressive way, wisely conducted, in the following language:

Call upon the inhabitants of the earth, and bear record, and prepare the way for the commandments and revelations which are to come. Now, behold, this is wisdom; whose readeth let him understand and receive also; for unto him that receiveth it shall be given more abundantly, even power; wherefore, confound your enemies; call upon them to meet you, both in public and in private; and inasmuch as ye are faithful, their shame shall be made manifest. Wherefore, let them bring forth their strong reasons against the Lord. Verily thus saith the Lord unto you, There is no weapon that is formed against you shall prosper; and if any man lift his voice against you, he shall be confounded in mine own due time.—Doctrine and Covenants 71: 2.

Here is a restatement of the Almighty's challenge through his people, uttered seven hundred and twelve years before Christ, by Isaiah's hallowed lips: "Let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified: or let them hear, and say, It is truth."—Isaiah 43: 9.

"Call upon them to meet you," is the divine mandate. Challenge them, is the thought. Strike while the iron is hot, and see the sparks fly. Let the evidences of the system of redemption run through the sieve of investigation; nothing but the erroneous will be lost. "Dig deep," and "lay the foundation of the house upon a rock." Dissect, disentangle, submit to analysis every proposition. Hew, chisel, and polish with all the tender care of a sculptor; adjust, arrange, and adapt the gems of truth, and incorporate them in the great temple where they shine forth resplendently.

WHAT FORM OF PROPOSITION SHOULD BE DRAFTED?

The second part of logic treats of propositions under the phrase "Judgment expressed in words." A proposition is defended logically, "A sentence indicative,"—asserting,—i. e., that which affirms, or denies. It is this that distinguishes a proposition from a question or command. Propositions should not be ambiguous; inasmuch as that which has more than one meaning is in reality not one, but several propositions. Propositions should not be imperfect or ungrammatical; which is only saying that any combination of words that does not really form a "sentence" can not be a proposition; though one may perhaps conjecture from it what it was the speaker had in mind and meant to assert.

Propositions considered as sentences are distinguished into "categorical" and "hypothetical." The categorical asserts simply that the predicate does or does not apply to the subject, as: "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has inspired founders." The "hypothetical," called by some writers, "compound," makes its assertion under a condition or with an "alternative," as: "If the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ is not the work of man's wisdom, it must have had inspired founders." This latter proposition is a conditional one, denoted by "if," or some such word. The division of propositions into categorical and hypothetical, is called "a division of them according to their substance." The characteristic quality, [called differentia] of a proposition being its asserting, i. e., affirming or denying something, divides according to their QUALITY, into affirmative and negative; then again into true or false, according to the quality of the matter, while the other form,—affirmative and negative,—is the quality of expression.

We have used principal and subordinate propositions in debate when our opponent was perfectly "at sea,"—floundering,—with no ability to grapple them. The major proposition, i. e., the principal one, sometimes conceded to be true, no minor, or subordinate should contradict, and vice versa. No proposition should be drawn, or formulated, or accepted, which will even technically commit or compromise the defender.

The writer remembers a bit of experience he once profited by. He was to conduct our side in a "tilt" on the subject of "spirit consciousness," with a skillful debater of the Adventist society. He had walked off with the palms of twenty-eight battles with the "orthodox." He presented his form of the proposition as follows: "The spirit of man is conscious from death until the resurrection"; I to affirm, he to deny. After studying the probable analysis he would give, I returned it unsigned, but gave him another one signed, which read as follows: "Resolved, that the spirits of all men are conscious from death throughout endless duration." The sequel justified my suspicions of the former proposition. I remembered that he advocated the theory of God raising the billions of wicked from the dead, to annihilate them,—just to blot them out of existence, and the little adverb "until," used by him, if I accepted the affirmative, would logically compel me to limit consciousness at, and with the resurrection, just the thing he wished me to do. Thus, if Jesus says: "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles UNTIL the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," the logical result is, after the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled, Jerusalem ceases to be trodden down. So, if "the spirit of man is conscious from death until the resurrection," it logically signifies that after the resurrection it will go into unconsciousness, and thus I should have been compelled to admit his annihilation theory! He told me afterward that I robbed him of strength, by changing the proposition slightly.

So propositions should be drawn with reference to correct premises, avoiding what is called the material, or nonlogical fallacies. A nonlogical fallacy may be encountered in incorrect premises, or when the conclusion is not the one required, but irrelevant, because the argument is not proof of the contradictory, or of an opponent's assertion which it should be; but proves, instead, some other proposition resembling it. Propositions, such as are debatable should be drawn logically, grammatically, and plainly, involving leading tenets, which will admit of logical detail. Formulate with a view to correct premises, calculating the remote consequences, and form a system of dependencies intimately linked. Word the proposition in terms you, yourself, can define, and as it is a rule of logical interpretation that all words are to be received and understood according to their most usual and known signification, and you are logically required to define your proposition, it is wise to study the verbiage. A debate will not be the means of developing truth logically, without precision, and cointelligence in the use of terms.

WHO ARE QUALIFIED TO GO INTO A DEBATE?

It is not merely required that one shall know how to string words gracefully together, learn exordiums, and perorations by rote. The arts and tricks of an opponent may capture the plum and array opinion against you while you occupy a meaningless platitude. A debater will feel the public pulse, and form a diagnosis of the popular fever. He will command his own enthusiasm, or passion, the better to arouse those of his hearers. The people must be acted upon, and debaters must act upon the people.

The public mind is not always influenced by straightforward appeals to reason, or explanations of the desired object. Prejudices have to be worked upon, or, as the case may be, avoided. A roundabout course in some cases must be resorted to. A plain, blunt enthusiast, or honest thinker, above guile or reserve of his opinions might sometimes mar the best-laid scheme of a debate by launching the real objects too soon.

A debate is not a mere battle field for gladiatorial combats, the aim of which is personal distinction, and public honor alone; but is an assembly in which the doctrines, opinions, and interests of rival classes are set forth to be judged by the master spirits of the times, to become the rule of conduct, the mentor of society, the eternal salvation of the world. Therefore, for this purpose it is necessary that those who do this most pointedly, clearly, and effectually are entitled to the burden.

Again, the country, during the three quarters of the last century, has been undergoing a revolution in religious, political, social, and economic affairs,—silent, slow, gradual, but still emphatically a revolution. It has been an age of compromises, and the greatest still in progress. To speak in the language of popular philosophy, we are in a state of transition—a condition of things favorable to the development of wisdom. The Latter Day Saint minister must face an educated public, a criticizing public, and the arguments of twenty-five years ago are not the arguments of to-day. The truth is the same now and for ever, but the interpretations, the scientific javelins, are more numerous, and sharper. While the growing needs of society, which is not stationary, but dynamic, demand an interpretation of laws to meet the growing condition, it is no less true in religion. It does not argue the changing of law, but the growth of that which is under the dominion of law. To illustrate, look at the sweeping evidences of archaeology, ethnology, and topography hurled against our proposition on the "record of Joseph." Such evidences were not very strongly used thirty years ago. As a rule the opposition has been driven from the position occupied by it twenty-five and thirty years ago.

The opposition has evolved some distinguished controversialists, and the church of the restoration has done the same, and in deciding who are qualified to enter the arena, I would take as a guide the sentiment expressed in "Secure a foeman worthy of my steel." Ridicule is a poor weapon of honor, inasmuch as the most sacred truth can be ridiculed out of court. Sarcasm, in some cases, is not so bad, since Jesus used it frequently, and columns, or hours of speeches would not prove half so effective as a quiet rebuke in a short sentence of sarcasm.

We remember an instance to illustrate. One day at a Catholic association a volunteer came forward and made a very strong speech, more remarkable for enthusiasm than prudence, in which he offered, if necessary, to lay down his head on the block, in the cause. His speech was inflammatory, not to say dangerous, even to those he professed to serve, as the lawyers were on the alert. One of them desired publicly to counteract the possible mischief. He arose, and with peculiar sarcasm observed: "The honorable gentleman has just made us an oblation of his head; he has accompanied his offer with abundant evidence of the value of the sacrifice."

SUGGESTIONS.

It is obvious that a debater who depends so much upon the most slight and evanescent touches, the nicest discrimination of language, the artful collation of words and sentences, so as to make emphasis supply in many cases the thought which custom will not permit to be expressed in words, must suffer damage if in the process the aroma is lost, or the tints and shades confounded in a general flatness and tameness of coloring. To meet the erroneous in debate, to adopt none but honorable artifices, according to the greater or lesser degree of pliability there is in the assembly. Concede nothing. Have no double sets of opinions—one for the initiated and another for the public. Too often, while the opposition is laying down that which he thinks is principle, he is counting so much per cent deposit for every share in the joint stock of modern wisdom.

Look seriously at every position assumed by the opponent and examine them, however shallow, with earnestness and patience. Joseph Cooke suffered loss of appreciation and prestige, when sitting in the World's Parliament of Religions, at Chicago, 1893. As pagan priests read or spoke, Mr. Cooke smiled, turned in his chair, shook his head, frowned, and in other ways disclosed his disapproval. How much light did he shed on the idolatrous land of the Hindoo by such an attitude? What Christian influence did he exert on the representatives of heathenism who sat with uncovered heads, listening with respect, acting with decorum and soberness, and weighing the evidence of the religion adopted in civilized, Christian America, and Europe? Fairness, candor, and appreciation are heavy weights in debate.

We do not mean simply to assume an attitude wherein we seem great because we look great. A man bought a parrot from a sailor with the understanding that it could talk. He soon discovered it could not utter a single word. He complained to the sailor.

"Can't talk?" said the sailor; "no, perhaps not—but look at him—he's a desperate one to think."

Some would-be-great men are like this parrot. They can't talk, or at least, if they do talk no one can make out what they mean. But they look as if they could think unutterable things. Shakespeare understood this class of persons:

There are a sort of men whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;
And do a willful stillness entertain,
With purpose to be dressed in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit;
As who should say, I am Sir Oracle,
And when I ope my lips let no dog bark.

Consistency suggests an attitude in debate which comports with the system defended or opposed, observing gospel proprieties, and courtesies. In the warmth of debate "keep cool." Recognize the Spirit of God, and its necessity in fighting the battles of right. Permit it to impart the solace of results, and help to keep in memory that the warmth of conflict will pass away, and only its facts remain.

But we will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you.—2 Corinthians 10: 13.

For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places.—Ephesians 6: 12.

Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the enemy.—Ephesians 6: 11.

Prove all things, hold fast to that which is good.—1 Thessalonians 5: 21.

SIXTEEN DAYS IN THE INDEPENDENCE SANITARIUM.

The writer was a patient for sixteen days in the Independence Sanitarium; and it is my purpose to tell what I saw of its work for the sick and afflicted; with the hope that it might help others, and also give our people a better understanding of the good it is doing and of its present and future needs.

WHAT I BELIEVED.

I believed I was in an institution that was built by commandment of God (see Doctrine and Covenants 127: 1, 2), to be "a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted." It was made sacred by the prayers and sacrifices of the Saints in this and foreign lands. The money came from the poor, as well as from those who have an abundance, and to spare, of this world's wealth. It came from those whose hearts' desire was to do good and be in harmony with our blessed Master, who went about doing good. I realized that our heavenly Father's statement was true, wherein he said, "where they may be removed from the influences and environments unfavorable to the exercise of proper faith unto the healing of the sick." This is one of the very important things not overlooked concerning the sick. The elders have access day or night to administer to the sick at their request; and due regard is paid to that part of God's holy law. Nonmembers often avail themselves of the privilege, and know of its beneficial results.

In the nurses, we believe we saw the highest type of pure young womanhood; no holier service could be rendered if done by angels than they were doing for the care of the sick and afflicted ones. All classes of labor in and about the institution is rendered by those who are seeking to be the friends of God by making their lives conform to his holy law. The physician in charge meets in the chapel with those who gather to make the day's labor holy by commencing it with song and prayer. I felt that I was in an environment that was conducive to faith and a spirituality that would bring physical blessings and spiritual joy.

There are those who believe they see an irreconcilable conflict between the scriptural teaching in regard to the healing of the sick and the maintaining of a sanitarium. In the New Testament, Christ and the apostles taught the law, and observed it, and many were healed, but not all. In these latter days, with the coming of the angel message, the same promised blessings were announced, and from 1830 to the present time have been enjoyed. Many hearts have been made glad because a loving Father has heard the prayers of the humble, faithful souls, and healed them of their bodily afflictions; but not all have been healed who have asked. In these latter times, as well as in former times, all have not faith to be healed. Under those conditions, the Lord has provided that they should be cared for by kind and sympathetic friends and whether they lived or died they would still belong to God (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12). In view of these facts, what should be our attitude toward the sick whom the Lord does not heal? To neglect them would be wicked, cruel, and conduct unworthy anyone claiming to be a child of God. The only procedure worthy of anyone claiming fellowship with our Lord would be to give them the best care possible within our power to give. The Sanitarium opens its doors to the afflicted ones, and they can have the service of honorable and skilled physicians and surgeons, and be cared for by nurses whose special training eminently qualifies them for the work they have to do.

OUR PREJUDICES.

It often occurs that because of our prejudices against hospitals and surgical operations that we undergo years of suffering. One of our brethren who quite recently was a patient at the Sanitarium suffered for eighteen years. At times it was with the greatest difficulty that he could make a public address. A simple operation without the use of ether removed the difficulty, and he is now well and strong. The writer was afflicted for six months, and during that time my suffering was so great that I could do but very little public preaching. The operation caused me no special suffering, and I am now on the way to complete recovery.

I thought of the statement of Christ, when talking to the Jews who claimed to be the Lord's special people, "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." While some of our people seem to shun the Sanitarium as they would a pest house, those not of our faith realize its value and the excellent service that it is rendering the sick and afflicted ones, and avail themselves of the good to be received within its walls in time of need. The use of medicine seems to be a small factor in the care of the sick. The excellent care the patients receive, the food provided for them, is more nearly in harmony with God's instructions to us as found in the word of wisdom (Doctrine and Covenants 86), than we usually find in our homes; and this coupled with the spiritual opportunities and benefits through administration, makes our Sanitarium truly a place of refuge for the sick.

OUR YOUNG WOMEN.

A three years' course at the Sanitarium to become a graduate nurse, affords the young women of the church an excellent opportunity to prepare themselves for a life of useful service. Viewed from a financial standpoint this is much better than most occupations in the industrial world, and in a social way removes the individual from among the frivolous and thoughtless of the world and brings her in contact with people who look on life as a serious thing. The great number of our young women will some day be queens in their own homes, and this special training will be of great value to them. It will save them much worry, anxious care, and doctor bills. I will venture this suggestion, that unless the person loves to care for the sick, she better not enter the profession, because the chances of success will be greatly diminished. Those interested in this kind of service should correspond with the Sanitarium authorities and learn the conditions under which they can enter.

PRESENT AND FUTURE NEEDS.

While a patient, and on other occasions, in conversation with the house physician, I learned of some of the present and future needs of the Sanitarium. It is nearly four years since it was opened to the public, and during that time the linen has been constantly depreciating, until now they find themselves put to great inconvenience in caring for the sick. Various societies throughout the church that once furnished these supplies, should correspond with the management with a view to replacing those worn out with new ones, and others who have not in the past assisted, can do so now. Much could be done to help in the food supplies, by sending canned fruit; and this is especially true of those living within a radius of one hundred miles, where fruit is in abundance.

Saints should remember that the Sanitarium is not a local institution, but belongs to the entire church, and its patients come from remote parts of our country. Last year the Bishop of the church paid about two thousand dollars for the care of missionaries, and members of their families, and others who needed assistance. Anything in the way of supplies and donations of money helps the church, the Sanitarium, and the afflicted ones. We should never look for a stopping place in doing good. Opportunities will be before us while life lasts, and as the Lord's work grows, greater demands will be made and greater sacrifices will be required at our hands. Such work is necessary in order that we might develop the Christ character within us, and partake of his divine nature as stated by Peter (2 Peter 1:4), for without attaining to that condition, we will not be fit to enjoy his companionship in the world to come, when he lives and reigns with his people.

While we are doing good in other ways, let us not forget the Sanitarium.

EDWARD RANNIE.

'ANOTHER'S EXPERIENCE IN DISTRIBUTING THE PRINTED WORD.

After reading the very interesting and instructive experience of Sister Macgregor in the distribution of gospel literature, I thought it might interest some if I gave my experience in that line of duty performed many years ago. I think it was in the early part of the year 1849; I was appointed to minister in the town of Dudley, in Worcestershire, England. I was a stranger there, and inexperienced. There was a branch of the church there of about eighty members, but they were spiritually dead, at least they seemed so to me, with some honorable exceptions. They had a good house of worship, called a chapel, but it was poorly attended. My duty, according to my appointment, was to occupy the pulpit during the preaching services of the week and on the Sabbaths, and distribute the printed word in the daytime, from house to house, throughout the town of several thousand inhabitants and many different churches.

I made it a practice to distribute one kind of tract from house to house one week, and on the next week call for it, and ask their opinions on the subject matter. Sometimes I would be rudely repulsed. I would kindly ask for their objections. Some in a boastful manner would tell what their objections were, feeling sure they could easily silence me and refute the doctrine set forth in the tract; and when they found the word of God was too plain for them, they would get mad and order me off their premises. Others in pity for my youth, and looking kindly upon me, believing that I was deceived, would invite me into their house, lay the big family Bible on the table and proceed to point out what they thought were errors in the tract. I would listen patiently to them and then show them the beautiful harmony there was between the doctrine taught in that tract and the Bible. Some admitted the truth, but many rejected it.

I made no exceptions; I visited rich and poor, clergy and laity, during my six months of labor in that town. I preached in the open air at night during the week and in the Saints' chapel on Sunday. The task was not an easy one. The receptions I met with were various, but to me it was profitable, not in pounds, shillings, and pence, but in the education I received in coming in contact with all classes of men and women; enabling me to learn human nature, human creeds, and the power of God's word over all. I learned also to know my own nature, the necessity of curbing it, and the absolute necessity of relying on God for help, that God who never failed me in the hour of need.

I will relate one experience out of many. In one street I left a tract on the subject of baptism, in which tract the new birth was compared to the natural birth. A number of women having read it declared it blasphemous, and undertook to drive me out of town. On their failure to do so a Methodist minister took up their cause, challenging me to discuss the question there and then. I picked up the gauntlet, a mob gathered around, and when they witnessed the defeat of their minister, they got mad; but a friend was raised up, a man I had never known, and addressing the mob, he said, "Let that man alone; I heard him preach last night, and he preached the best sermon I ever heard in my life."

The mob ceased their rage, their preacher was silenced, and in a few days I buried my stranger friend in the waters of baptism. In after years he immigrated to this land and was favorably known in the branch of the church at Kewanee, Illinois, as Brother Joseph Whitehouse. I understand he has passed to his rest, as a faithful child of God. He will not be forgotten by me.

I will not weary you with more experiences, though I had many during my labors there. I rejoice to say that God used me as an instrument in reviving the work there, and when I was appointed to another field the branch at Dudley numbered one hundred and twenty Saints. Some of them have united with the Reorganized Church, among whom I recall the names of George Hicklin, Thomas Dugel, George Mantle, and Joseph Boswell. These I think were among the steadfast members of the church when I went there, and aided in the good work. I thank God that he never left the boy preacher to be alone.

May success from on high attend the distribution of the word, both orally and in printed form.

THE EFFECT OF PERSECUTION ON RELIGION.

In discussing this question we find three principal phases that must be noticed. We shall name and consider them in their natural order. These three phases are: First, religion; second, persecution; and last, its effect.

The question, What is religion? is a broad one, and susceptible of a great variety of answers. Without divine guidance no two minds are likely to come to exactly the same conclusion as to what constitutes true religion. The Apostle James gives us a clew as to what religion really is. He says: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." In this we find that pure religion is evidenced in two ways. By sympathy and assistance for others, as the unfortunate, needy, and afflicted; and by keeping one's self holy and pure, and untainted by the vices and follies of the world. Where you find these two evidences of religion in their perfection, there you find the religion of Jesus Christ in its purity.

Persecution may be regarded as the antithesis of religion. Instead of the helpfulness and holiness of religion, we have in persecution a seeking to afflict and harm, not because of crime or misdemeanor, but because of difference arising on account of religious belief or moral action. Persecution never comes from those who are the true followers of Christ. There is no room for the spirit of persecution in that heart wherein is enthroned true religion. Persecution has its root in division. So long as the primitive church remained an undivided body, persecution was from without; but when the church became divided, these conflicting parties persecuted each other.

Persecution is a result of believing that heresy or false teaching may be overcome and eradicated from among the people by subjecting the believer to physical or mental suffering. It may be that some persecutors have thought it an effective means of overthrowing the truth. But whether used against truth or error persecution is a poor weapon, as it harms the user more than it does him upon whom it is used. Used against what is assumed to be error, it shows nothing more clearly than the want of a better argument. It is not needed to defend the truth. Reason and argument will be a sufficient defense. As an early English writer has said, "Who ever saw the truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter?"

It may be a thought new to some that persecution has its effect on both the persecutor and the persecuted: the one, the persecutor, for evil; the other, the persecuted, for good. It is true that persecution can have no effect upon religion as we have described it, considered in the abstract; but the effect is upon the professor of that religion, and that is the light in which we shall consider it.

Professors of religion may be of two classes, the genuine, sincere, honest religionist, and the other, whose profession is an empty one and leavened with hypocrisy. One of the chief results of persecution through all the ages of the past has been to weed out the unstable or hypocritical. Only the thoroughly converted and firm believer will endure disgrace and suffering for the sake of a principle. The other class, when put to the test will deny their faith; none will die for the establishment of a lie when to speak the truth will save them. But those having an unshaken faith in Him who said, "Break not my commandments, even to save your lives," have endured all things.

Jesus has said, "Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted?" Another has said, "They that live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." So from that time till now the fires of persecution have been burning. They blazed out fiercely and widely in the days of the Roman emperors, when in the ten great persecutions millions of Christians attained the crown of martyrdom; and later when apostate Christianity sought to promulgate the gospel of peace and good will to men by the destroying sword and excruciating tortures.

"Some suffered the violence of fire, some were tortured not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain the better resurrection, others had cruel mockings and scourgings, bonds and imprisonment, they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins, and goatskins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented."

We thank God that we live in a time and country where we are not called upon to pass through such scenes of affliction and suffering; but when we consider all the ways in which persecution has brought blessing we wonder if we will be as well off in the end as they whose voices ascend to the King upon heaven's throne, crying, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not avenge our blood upon them that dwell on the earth?"

In many an instance since the time that the early Christians were scattered from Jerusalem, persecution has caused the spread of the gospel. To escape the bitterness and wrath of their enemies many have fled to other parts where their glorious hopes and doctrines were not before known, and there they have spread abroad the reviving news of salvation. Persecution even in its most hideous form can not overthrow the church of God. "Nothing shall overthrow it, save it be the transgression of my people," is the oracle of God as found in the Book of Mormon.

In the same book we read a prophecy of events in the establishment of the Nation wherein we live. The Nation is founded by Gentiles who have gone forth out of captivity. It is true they had to come to America to escape the thralldom of priestcraft and the powers that would bind the conscience of man. That conscience which refused to be bound had to endure persecution, and deprivation of even the most obvious rights. And so we find that the principal settlements on the Atlantic coast in those early days were made by those who sought freedom to worship God. The Pilgrims come to Massachusetts, as well as the Puritans; the Quakers find peace in Pennsylvania and New Jersey; the Catholics seek freedom in Maryland; the haven of rest for the Huguenots is found in Carolina; Georgia becomes a refuge for many persecuted German Protestants; and Roger Williams finds "soul liberty," in Rhode Island, a colony of his own founding. Thus, as another of the results of persecution, we write, The founding of a great, liberty-loving nation.

Why should persecution be permitted by a just and merciful God? is a question often asked. It is answered by Alma. He says, "The Lord doth suffer that the people may do this thing unto them according to the hardness of their hearts, that the judgments which he shall exercise upon them in his wrath may be just."

With so many good effects coming from persecution it might be that we would come to think it a virtue were it not that there is the other side. There is the effect upon the persecutors, those inhuman monsters and human devils who have gloried in cruelty and excruciating tortures. Therein results the hardening of their hearts, and their ripening in iniquity preparatory to a harvest of damnation in contrast with the glowing brilliancy of the glorious virtues that have ennobled the lives and deaths of the faithful martyrs. So, in a word, we may say that persecution both justifies and condemns.

R. J. FARTHING.

ZION CITY CHURCH ACTIVITY.

The following, from the Chicago Record-Herald, for July 21, is an indication of the activity of the church at Zion City, Illinois. The Record-Herald is considered reasonably reliable, and this report is in all probability correct especially in the main facts as presented.

Yesterday was Wilbur Glenn Voliva's busy day. Among other things the overseer of Zion kissed sixty-six babies and kept his eye on a barrel while 4,250 persons marched by and tossed in their sacrificial offering.

Voliva announced he receives more money than any other minister in the world. If he personally counted all he received yesterday he hasn't been to bed. The barrel was almost half full when the procession was over, and it was estimated that it contained several thousand dollars.

But kissing the babies, thereby consecrating them in the faith of the Christian Catholic Apostolic Church in Zion, and counting money were not the only achievements of the overseer. He also ordained two apostles, twenty-six deacons, thirty-four deaconesses, and received ninety-two persons into membership.

Eustace L. Carey and Francis M. Royall are the two apostles, the first ever created in the organization. Overseer Voliva announced that as soon as divine direction points out the men he will ordain ten other apostles. Then, he said, the restoration of the church will have been accomplished.

The occasion for all this activity at Zion City was the closing of the annual feast of the tabernacle. The faithful formed in line in a grove at the edge of the city and marched to Shiloh Tabernacle. In the procession were two Zion bands, the Zion Guards, the Restoration Host, the Zion trained nurses, and about one hundred robed officials.

Voliva announced the church soon would have a fleet of steamers engaged in world commerce and a flock of gospel trains running all over the United States carrying preachers and converting multitudes.

Yesterday probably was the busiest day Zion City ever knew. In number of kisses and coins Voliva is said to have broken every record of his predecessor, the founder of the church, John Alexander Dowie.

SECTARIAN EVANGELISM AND INEFFICIENCY.

The following, written by Reverend W. E. Biderwolf, and appearing in the Christian Herald for July 9, sets forth vividly not only the evangelistic problems but also the inefficiency of modern sectarianism.

The discussion of the subject of evangelism is far more important at this particular time than even the majority of the most ardent churchmen may perhaps be inclined to think. What is meant by evangelism? What phase of evangelistic work is uppermost in the minds of those asking and those attempting to answer this question? I warrant it is not individual evangelism. There is no problem here. Individual evangelism is not a thing to talk about; it is a thing to do. The pity is that more of us are not doing it.

I warrant it is not pastoral evangelism. There is little if any problem here except what to do with the pastor who is not evangelistic. Neither is there any serious problem connected with evangelistic work done by the denominational evangelist working within the lines of his own church; no problems at least but what are comparatively easy of solution. While it is true that many of the weaker evangelists are doing or are attempting to do union evangelistic work, it is also true that most of the stronger evangelists are not for various reasons doing denominational work. And there are reasons, many of them, though not pertinent to the present discussion, why union work far more than denominational work is calculated to meet the present-day demands of the kingdom. And I warrant it is to this kind of evangelistic work more particularly that men's minds are reverting, when they think of the discussion now under way. It is well to understand clearly the main issue.

Now, there are two things to be said just here:

First. In the writer's mind much of the hope for the coming kingdom lies in the combined effort of the pastors grouped in the various towns and cities in a heroic, earnest and sometimes oft-repeated campaign of sane and thorough evangelism. Some may take exception to this, but the limits of this discussion will not permit us to argue it. My belief is based on the record of the past. That record, so far as numerical increase is concerned, is humiliating enough as it is, but what would it have been apart from such work as we are discussing? Let the minister who harps so continually against evangelism face that question squarely and answer it fairly.

In connection with the Men and Religion Forward Movement, in which the writer had the privilege to serve as dean of the Evangelistic Message, a survey of church life and activities was taken in nearly three score of the largest cities of the land, and the charts, made up from the figures presented by the pastors themselves, revealed the fact that by far the largest additions to church membership on confession of faith and otherwise have come about as the result of public evangelistic services; and in every case, without one single exception, the year or two following such effort was characterized by larger accessions and keener activities and heavier benevolences than had been the case for many years prior to the series of successful union evangelistic services. These facts speak for themselves.

Second. It is, however, exactly in regard to this kind of evangelism that the most serious problems present themselves. There must be a greater harmony between the pastors and the evangelists. There is at least one crying need of the times. What could speed the kingdom more? But this harmony is lacking. There is prejudice, jealousy, suspicion and antagonism. Why? Because the ministry is wrong? No. Evangelism is at fault. And certain aspects of evangelism must be altered, certain features must be eliminated, certain faults must be remedied before confidence on the part of the pastors can ever be secured, or the desired cooperation attained. The trouble is just there.

Now, what is the remedy for all this? We answer emphatically: Federated church control! This and this only will relieve the situation. Evangelism has always suffered through its own mistakes, and it always will, until it is brought within proper ecclesiastical direction. Doctor Torrey says: "We have too many organizations now." Then let us get rid of some of them, or all of them, and get together in some way and do business. Mr. Mahood says, "The probability is that men who are abusing this holy office would be the first to thrust themselves into such an organization, and the purpose of the organization would be at once frustrated." Not if it were rightly officered by pastors and evangelists with proper ideals. Mr. Bromley says: "It would merely shift the problem." Well, it's time to shift it somewhere; we can not let the situation cure itself. It has had time to do this and it has failed, and, some want us to believe, miserably so. I believe God is calling to the church to-day to take charge of evangelism and the work of the evangelist, just as she has always taken charge of the pastor and his work. The modus operandi we can consider later. Not a few men in the pastorate and the evangelistic field have fairly well defined ideas in regard to this. But it is as certain as the rising and setting of the sun, that we shall never get very far out of the present discouraging situation until we make some thorough, carefully thought-out effort to do it. I trust the discussion will be continued.

INDEPENDENCE VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

Referring to the Vacation Bible School conducted in the Saints' church at Independence, Missouri, and under the direction of Brother W. E. LaRue, the Jackson Examiner for July 18 says:

The Vacation Bible School in the Stone Church, which opened Monday morning for six weeks' term, closed its first week yesterday under very auspicious conditions. The enrollment, which was 250 on the opening day, had grown to 320 on the last school day of the week.

Naturally this is very gratifying to W. E. LaRue, the principal, and all who take part as teachers or as pupils. The kindergarten department numbers 101. These are from four to six years old. The children in the other departments are from six to sixteen years old. There is about an equal number of girls and boys.

One of the departments is the making of hammocks. This is in charge of Principal LaRue. He said last night that 57 boys were taking this course. Mr. LaRue has had much experience in New York City in this kind of school work.

"I want you to make plain to the public," he said, "that this is not a sectarian school. We are affiliated with the general movement known as the National Vacation Bible School work, which is conducting such schools all over the country, several being in Kansas City. All are invited to attend, and there is no charge for the tuition."

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALLYARDS.

One of Life's Problems.

"Can two walk together, except they be agreed?"

"To walk together as friends, companions, mutual helpers, two must be agreed; their aims and purposes in life must be identical. Applied to matrimony, this truth assumes a most serious aspect, seen often too late by those most concerned."

"We believe that it is not right to prohibit members of this church from marrying out of the church, if it be their determination so to do, but such persons will be considered weak in the faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."—Doctrines and Covenants 111:1.

"No girl in the church should consider any man eligible to her life companionship who is not a true, virtuous, honorable man. If she holds in high regard the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, she should know that she can not find in any man who is not also in the faith the full sympathy, comfort, and help she will often need."

The above extracts have been culled from an article recently published in the Mothers' Home Column. The questions asked and the application made are worthy of serious consideration. The problem is nearly as old as the human race. The question as applied to matrimony truly "assumes a most serious aspect," and it is equally true that this is "seen often too late by those most concerned."

The ideal condition is that young men and maidens of like faith should wed and bring forth children strong in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ. Every intelligent Latter Day Saint sees the ideal, but unfortunately few attain it.

The church is in a fragmentary condition. In many districts there are but few branches, and among those members it sometimes happens that not all measure up to the standard of manhood and womanhood required by those of opposite sex. We are all creatures of association, and we find it necessary to mingle and mix with people of every shade of religious faith and with some of no faith at all. By our nature and constitution it is ordained that human beings should marry; it therefore follows that if the ideal man or woman fails to appear, the one approximating to the ideal is likely to be chosen.

The lesson taught by this is that of carefulness. We can not all have the best of which we have conception. There are prizes in the world, but the competitors are many and it is the masses that are to be served. People of our own faith are in the minority, and we have not gathered in all the good people, or succeeded in making all of those who have entered into the fold spiritually wise.

It is very true that those who marry out of the church are "considered weak in the faith"; but this alone does not prove it, although some may think it does. The writer had the good fortune about thirty years ago to marry a sister in the faith, while as yet he was an outsider and by some considered an opposer. I am certain this sister was not weak in the faith, although, I presume, she was considered so.

How true it is that "no girl in the church should consider any man as eligible to her life companionship who is not a true, virtuous, honorable man." It is a great pity that all young men and maidens in the church do not measure up to the true standard of manhood and womanhood in Christ Jesus, but if they did it is possible that even then some would find it necessary either to resign themselves to the single state or else take the alternative of marrying out of the church.

One who marries out of the church should count the cost, and having done so should patiently endure the result of that difference which necessarily exists between those of opposite faiths; but it is well to remember that one who truly accepts Christ as the true standard of manhood, although not in the faith with us in the strictest sense, is nevertheless a good man and can not be other than true, virtuous, and honorable, and for this we may be truly thankful.

Yours in the faith,

X. Y. Z.

In the Faith.

What is it to be in the faith? It is to be a follower of that which is true.

There are those who are in the faith who are not identified with us in the latter day work. They are in the faith in their acceptance of the fundamental principles of righteousness, in their ideals and standards of morality. They do not know the latter day work.

We say again that it is well to marry in the church; it is highly necessary to the happiness of an earnest Latter Day Saint to marry one who is in the faith, in the sense that he is a follower of that which is true. Such a one will accept our latter day message when he understands it and perceives the truth that is in it.

This accounts for the happy results that so often follow marriages contracted between those of the church with those not of it. It is marriage between those who are both in the faith in the sense that both are seeking to follow that which is true.

Marrying Out of the Church.

A young man who was of the church married a young woman who was not of the church. He did so after he had prayed for direction in the matter and had received that which encouraged him to take the step he did. The maiden of his choice was of a gentle, true, earnest spirit, whose only thought was to do what she perceived to be right. The young man married in the faith, and his wife came into the church.

A young girl of the church married a man not of the church, a man who proved to be of worldly disposition. He rejected the light, which presented itself for his acceptance; his influence and example prevented his children's receiving their mother's teaching; he finally deserted home, wife, and children for the companionship of one not his wife. In this instance, the marriage was between one of the church and one not of the faith. It was a wedding of the righteous with the unrighteous.

Marry in the faith. Marry one who is trying to be a follower of Jesus Christ, one who is willing to accept as true that which his reason sanctions. If in the church, he will grow in it and will develop in righteousness; if outside of the church, he will come in, for he is in the faith, a follower of that Spirit which leadeth and enticeth to do good.

He is in the faith who is following Jesus Christ; it may be near, it may be farther off. One who loves Jesus Christ and enjoys his service can not find the deepest happiness with one who denies him and turns his attention and affection to the passing things which pertain to the present.

A Friendly Letter.

Though not of the juvenile class, I wish to express appreciation of the new paper, Stepping Stones, which has recently come to us as a new member of our household,—silent, and yet bringing with it a sweet breeziness of a May morning, so that the aged and those nearing that stage may not forget their youthful days.

Do we not all rejoice that the editor who has led the children for so many years has seemed to have forgotten those accumulated years and takes her place in the new paper displaying the same mental talent and beautiful adaptability of much younger days! How sweet to her will be the "Well done, thou good and faithful," when she passes to the other stage of action.

I have often thought of an item she wrote me years ago. In a dream one who has passed into the beyond appeared to her and said, with sincere approval in his voice, "You are giving your best blood to the children." She wrote me that she felt greatly encouraged on hearing those words. May the relinquishing of one branch of her work give rest and strength to remain with the children longer than she otherwise would have been able to do.

We welcome Stepping Stones, and though attention has been given this new child of the church, the little tots have not been neglected. Their little paper, all their own now, seems more sweet and childlike than before, and this childless, companionless home welcomes the little tots as well as the older children. They all have their place in my solitary life. I could not hear the cute sayings of little ones, but I can read them from their paper, and in this way I keep the little ones with me and hope not to forget their innocence and joy.

The work of the tots, the juvenile department, the Prayer Union, the Woman's Auxiliary, and on up all through the department are stepping stones, as I see them, given of the loving Father for his children by which they may climb up and up, according to their need, until they attain a thorough knowledge of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God on earth; and that knowledge will be stepping stones in the life to come.

We know our Father will give here in this life as much as we his children have desire and ability to receive and retain.
E. B. BURTON.

"When Your Hair Is White as Snow."

Before me lies the Zion's Hope for August 3, and in it there is a little story simply told, which leaves in a reader's mind the beautiful picture of a little white-haired minister of the gospel, memory of whom is associated with things kind and pleasant and cheery.

And the story leaves also in the mind an opposite picture, that of another white-haired man, but one rude and unlovely, a man unfortunate in having lost his right arm, more unfortunate in being stained with tobacco, most unfortunate in not having inherited or acquired that gentleness and courtesy which would have made his presence pleasant despite his maimed condition.

At the close of the story the question is propounded, "Now, children, when your hair is white as snow, which man do you wish to be like, the gruff old peddler, or the kind-hearted preacher?"

What are we helping the children to be "when their hair is white as snow"? What are we doing to help them? Are we teaching them to be clean, pleasant, and kind? Are we pointing out to them the beautiful things in life? For life holds much beauty and gladness for those who have eyes trained to see and hearts taught to respond.

To look for things beautiful, to be beautiful in heart is the great mission of life. "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report . . . think on these things."

Are these the things of which we think and of which we talk with our children, or with our neighbors in our children's presence? These are the things that build up. They are better for our children to hear from our lips than gossip, harsh criticism, fault-finding, cruel jest, or mocking ridicule.

Toward what are we tending? What will we be when our hair is white as snow? What are our children learning from us? What will they be? The time is now to think of these things.

The Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE THIRD THURSDAY IN AUGUST.

Our missions and missionaries in all places. Especially remembering the Lamanites; for the fulfillment of the prayers and prophecies of their forefathers. For the Jews in Palestine and for scattered Israel, that the glad tidings of the gospel may reach them all.

Book of Nephi 9: 77-83, large edition. Memory verse, Nephi 5: 49.

NOTICE.

Dear Sisters, I repeat the request that you mail your requests for prayers directly to Sister Salyards. When sent to me, they must be remailed, which is needless expense to me. Your name on a card sent to Mrs. Eleanor Kearney, 926 South Main Street, Clinton, Missouri, is enough for recording.
ELEANOR.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Sister Martha Schofield, of Manchester, England, asks the sisters of the Prayer Union to pray for her son, William Schofield, who is in South Africa, belonging to the Royal Engineers. She has not heard from him for three months or more, but heard through a lady that he had been taken to a hospital, suffering from a serious nervous breakdown.

Sister M. A. Evans, of Schell City, Missouri, requests prayers. She does not state her trouble, but the Lord knows it and may he give grace in her time of need. Sister Belle Wright, of the same city, asks us to pray that she may be given health and strength for her duties.

A sister who withholds her name desires our prayers that she may be relieved from present conditions which are contrary to the word of God, and that her afflictions may be removed in the Lord's own time and way. May God bless this tried sister who may not openly speak to us of her sorrows.

A sister sends in a request for a dear friend who is not of the church, but who is a conscientious, praying woman. The afflicted woman is troubled at times with insanity. The request is sent in with her sanction. May God grant the blessing of an unclouded mind to this suffering child of his.

From Battle Creek, Michigan, comes a request from a sister who is paralyzed. She has been an invalid for twenty years, has been a member of the church for six years. There is no branch of the church where she lives, and she can not go to other places where there are branches where she might receive administration. So she appeals to the Prayer Union, and may her appeal meet with sympathetic response. Her physical condition at times affects her mind.

Brother and Sister Prettyman, of Knox, Indiana, ask the prayers of the Saints in behalf of their son, Charles Alma Prettyman, that, if it be God's will, he may be restored to health and enabled to do his duties in the church and in his business. His wife also is in need of our prayers, her health having suffered from her efforts to carry on the business which devolves upon her in consequence of her husband's sickness.

Curtis--Elmore Debate.

On June 8 Brother J. F. Curtis and the writer arrived at Lucerne, Kansas, to meet Elder Elmore, of the Church of Christ, in debate, on the usual church propositions, each disputant affirming the scriptural identity of his respective church. The debate commenced on the ninth, in a school-house south of the little town, as there was no other building in the village suitable. Very little of our preaching had been done in the neighborhood, so our views were new to most all in attendance. Not so with the church represented by Mr. Elmore, as they have been preaching in that part for some years. The people were very fair-minded, however. Elder Elmore is much more of a gentleman in debate than is Elder Roberts, of the same church.

Brother Curtis affirmed our proposition first. In defining his proposition he presented it clear to the understanding of all, keeping nothing in the background. Elder Elmore made no attempt to answer Brother Curtis, only on a few points, and even these efforts were fruitless, as Brother Curtis is a strong man in answering his opponent.

Elder Elmore made the statement that he could prove that Joseph Smith was the author of polygamy, but he would not unless some one asked him to do so. Brother Curtis asked him to do so if he could, so he tried, one evening being devoted to the undertaking. But he failed, and was answered completely. He made no reference to the matter again, so we suppose he realized the failure.

Reference was made to D. H. Bays's book, Brother Curtis handled it as if it were a primer, showing that Bays was on record as saying that the Latter Day Saints were true. The way Brother Curtis handled the matter made Bays a very poor witness for Elder Elmore.

The healing of the blind sister, Fannie Earnest, was brought up, with the statement claimed to have been made by D. H. Bays to the effect that he talked with Sister Earnest's husband about her having been given her sight when she was baptized, and that the husband had said she never was blind. Brother Curtis gave Elder Elmore the names of people who would testify that she was blind, and was healed. Brother Boyd, formerly of Creston, Iowa, now living near Lucerne, Kansas, arose and said he was there at the time of the baptism of Sister Earnest, and knew she was blind, and was healed. This unlooked for statement of Brother Boyd made a deep impression on all the people, and we thanked God that all the Saints were not gathered, at present, at least, to Independence and Lamoni. I find, as a rule, that scattered Saints are workers, and the good they do never will be known till the roll is called up yonder, or wherever it is called.

Elder Elmore on his proposition said as little about his church organization, doctrines, and spiritual blessings as possible. He followed the course pursued by his brethren of the same faith. I presume he would be counted sound in the faith of the Church of Christ, so called. He certainly is not sound in the faith of the church of the Bible. He would not stand by Campbell or any of their books. Brother Curtis brought their books to bear in deciding their standing as a church. He brought out their organization, doctrine, etc., in a way that everybody could see what they were teaching as a plan of salvation.

When the Christian System was read to show that they had a discipline and when it was urged that they should not make fun of other churches for having disciplines, Elder Elmore said he did not teach these books, and their membership did not know they had them. Brother Curtis came back hard and heavy by saying, "Why don't you teach them? You sell them and publish them!" At the close of the debate some of the members of the Church of Christ came to Brother Curtis and asked to see the Christian System, making the statement that it was a book their enemies had written against them.

God was surely with us in this debate. The Spirit was in evidence as a witness that Brother Curtis was standing for the truth. He was wonderfully blessed. The people were all with us, except a few of the Church of Christ people.

Brother Curtis and the writer were cared for splendidly by Mr. Shoemaker and family while engaged in this contest. He has been state senator in Kansas two terms. He is a splendid man. May God lead him to the light.

Truly in bonds,

J. ARTHUR DAVIS.

MISSOURI VALLEY, IOWA, July 18, 1913.

Editors Herald: We have a branch of about one hundred and thirty-five members, and are striving to do the best we can. We have no church building here yet, but have bought a lot and have it paid for, and hope to build in the near future, if the Saints will do their part, as we believe they will. We have some good, faithful members here, who desire to do all they can, while others are slow and indifferent. It is our desire to see the work prosper here as well as in other places, for it is the power of God unto salvation, and the reward is at the end of the race. So it is our duty to labor in the way our Lord would have us do.

There is room for all to labor in this work, and if we do this and improve the talents God has given us he will give us other talents. But if we do not, he will take away that which he has given us and give to another. We can not stand still in this work; we will go backward or forward; so let us labor together, all of us, for the advancement of this great work.

The Sunday school needs your assistance. While we are not disappointed in the Sunday school and Religio, yet we feel we should have the support of every member along that line. So let us labor together all over this broad land, for the advancement of the cause; for it will be the means of bringing souls into the church and kingdom of God. That is what we all want to see, more members, better members, better officers, and better Sunday-school teachers. We know that the time will come when the same Jesus who came to save the world, whose lifework here was for the betterment of mankind, will return again to reward his people.

We are all free to sing that old song, "We will follow none but Jesus," so let us follow all the way and try and save souls by living the lives we should live, as well as by preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ.

We have been laboring and praying for many years that a reunion might be located here, and it was with joy that we read the announcement of the reunion to be held here August 22 to 31. We believe there will be much good done by this reunion. We hope that everyone who can will attend the full time. We hope and pray that the Lord will be with us and bless us while we are assembled together, and that the Saints here may be united and labor in the one cause, for it is well said, United we stand, divided we fall; and again, If we love the brethren we are in the narrow way.

Let us keep our lights trimmed and burning, so when Jesus comes we will be prepared to meet him, and live and reign with him a thousand years here on earth.

Your brother in Christ,

MYRON HIRST.

KEOKUK, IOWA, July 24, 1913.

Editors Herald: I wish to call attention of the Saints in Eastern Iowa, Kewanee, and Nauvoo districts, that we hope all will make an effort to be at the joint reunion beginning August 22, at Montrose, Iowa, just across the Father of Waters from that noted and historic spot, Nauvoo. Order tents of C. J. Dykes, Muscatine, Iowa. Send in order early. Good train and boat service.

We hope to see as many of the Saints present from each district as can possibly come. May the Saints all strive to make this a spiritual feast.

In gospel bonds,

CHARLES E. HARPE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 29, 1913.

Editors Herald: I leave to-day for my far-away mission, and it is with a very sad heart that I part with loved ones to go so far and to be gone for so long a time from them. It will take about five weeks to get a letter from home and many things happen during that time, hence it is that it requires great confidence in God to leave your loved ones entirely to his care.

Brother C. Edward Miller and I will sail on August 20 on the Royal Steamer Tahiti from San Francisco, California. Will stop off at Papeete, Tahiti, and spend about a month with the brethren there; thence, to Wellington, New Zealand, on the next large steamer that comes along for Australia. Expect to arrive in Sydney about the last of October, or the first of November. My post-office address in Australia until further notice will be in care of William Ellis, Cathrine Street, Draper Forest Lodge, Sydney, New South Wales, Australia.

I was called to Middletown to preach the funeral sermon of our worthy brother, Thomas R. Wren, who died on the evening of the sixth day of July, just forty-seven years to the day that he landed in New York. He was born in Maidstone, England, April 18, 1840. He and his loving companion with their two daughters, Edith and Mrs. Coddington, always kept an open door to the servants of God, and that for many years. Many of the traveling ministry of by gone years will remember Brother Wren.

With best wishes to all of the Lord's people

I am your brother in Christ,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

MONTROSE, IOWA, July 28, 1913.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since Montrose has been heard from through the columns of the HERALD. It may be possible some would be interested in what is going on down here in the corner of the grand old State opposite the old historic town of Nauvoo.

The writer was ordained a priest last October, and as there had been no priest in our branch for several years, I was at once put in charge of the work here.

I am truly thankful for the gospel and for the little ray of light which I enjoy. There are but few active workers here, but I have been trying to do all I can to keep the Saints together, and to arouse an interest in those who have become careless and unconcerned.

There is a thought along the line of "social purity" which I have often expressed to our people, and it may be a help to some who may chance to read these lines: If everyone of our young men and women would band themselves together in the bonds of Christian fellowship, and always do that which is right, always be found in their places at church whenever service of any kind is being held, and take some active part whenever the opportunity affords, instead of being seen at the Sunday baseball game, the moving picture show, the public dance, and many other questionable places of amusement, then they would enjoy the sweet influence of the Holy Spirit and they would be so happy in the service of the Master that they would have no desire to partake of the pleasures of the world, seeing there is no comparison between the two. This would work such an influence over those with whom they come in contact that it would be hard to estimate the good that might be done.

We are looking forward to the reunion to be held here by the tri-districts, viz, Nauvoo, Eastern Iowa, and Kewanee, which begins August 22, and continues ten days. It is expected that a number of strong men of the ministry will be present.

It is doubtful if any other place possesses as much historical advantage and scenic beauty. From the Iowa shore of the great "Father of Waters" we have a panoramic view of the old historic town of Nauvoo, which all Latter Day Saints love to visit. The lake, created by the erection of the great dam at Keokuk, extends to Montrose and gives advantages for boating, bathing, sight-seeing, etc. The formal celebration of this great water power dam, one of the largest in the world, will take place during the reunion. These opportunities, together with the benefits derived from the church services and the association of Saints, should be an inducement for many to come at this time and enjoy an outing. Remember, some of the opportunities will never occur again. Cancel other dates and come to Montrose.

In conclusion will say, I love this latter day work, and am striving to let my little light shine, as we are commanded in Matthew 5: 16.

I want to ask the Saints, especially those who know me best, to pray for me that I may be more enlightened, and receive wisdom and knowledge in this great latter day work.

Yours faithfully,

JOSEPH H. REED.

Extracts from Letters.

Mrs. G. A. Price, Shedd, Oregon: "I enjoy reading the letters from the Saints in the HERALD. We are isolated here, our nearest branch being in Portland, I believe. I know of no Saints near except my own family. I have been a member of the church for about twenty-two years, and have had several experiences during that time the world could not believe or understand."

F. M. Arnold, Mapleton, Kansas: "We have been enjoying the privileges of a branch this summer. It is the first time I ever had such an experience. The branch is large, and, like our people in other places, the Saints are friendly and of humble deportment. If there are any Saints living in the rice country of Arkansas I would be pleased to hear from them."

E. Beam, Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania: "The reunion held by the Toronto Saints at Low Banks, Ontario, was one not soon be forgotten. The Lord's presence was manifest on several occasions, with the gift of tongues and interpretations. The association of the Saints in prayer meetings and other services were marked by devotion, helpful and inspiring to anyone desiring to be built up in this great work."

A. H. Christensen: "The reunion and conference of the Western Oklahoma District convened at Lander's Grove, south of Calumet, July 18. A larger attendance than last year was had. About one hundred fifty Saints camped on the grounds. What we call 'good meetings' were the rule. Some of the Lamanites were with us. The work is growing in Oklahoma."

E. W. Nunley, Caldwell, Texas: "Not long since I notified the people through the HERALD that I had an engagement to meet a Free-Will Baptist to hold a series of meetings with him, at his suggestion. I promised to give the people the result after the meetings were over. I went to the place appointed, but the Baptist preacher did not materialize. I commenced meetings and continued them for nine days. Before the meetings closed, I learned that the preacher had joined the Missionary Baptist Church. I heard that one of them said that it would not do to attend our services, that if they did, we would be sure to get them, consequently they stayed away. I preached eleven sermons at that place, had large attendance and interest from start to finish. At the close of the meeting the people urged us to return and preach again for them."

Leroy Colbert, Chetek, Wisconsin: "The largest reunion ever held in the State was the one just closed at Chetek. About one hundred and thirty people camped on the grounds. The sermons were very good, and much prejudice has been overcome. The new dining hall twenty-four by fifty-four feet and the auditorium forty by sixty feet were taxed to the limit. A refreshment stand will be constructed before next season. The buildings are all of the best material, dressed on all sides, insured for one thousand two hundred dollars. Buildings and grounds are electric lighted. We expect in two years to be free of debt. We own the full equipment for dining hall, own beds, cots, and hope if it be God's will next year to own our tents. At the conference the following officers were elected: President, B. C. Flint; vice president, A. L. Whiteaker; secretary, Sister Fisher; member standing auxiliary committee, Sister Isabell Richardson. Thirteen were baptized."

Australia.

In the town of West Maitland, New South Wales, a great flood has wrought much destruction. Many people lost their homes; houses, furniture, farm implements and railway lines being washed away.

Brethren Davis and Robertson, before they left, Western Australia for America, via the Holy Land, managed, with the help of several other brethren, to complete a small church in Subiaco, which the Saints there were in great need of.

Since we lost Brethren Pitt, Davis, and Robertson, we have also lost Brethren Barmore and Cornelius, who sailed for America, via the South Sea Islands, in April. At the Islands they were to be joined by Brother and Sister Pitt.

Brother Barmore was born in America, coming to Australia in 1902. After spending eleven years in missionary work he has returned to his native country. Brother Cornelius was born in Australia, and was an elder in Hamilton West Branch, New South Wales. Both these men were faithful workers and were well liked by all who knew them. They will be greatly missed by all their friends.

Debates between our elders and representatives of other religious movements are of frequent occurrence in Australia, with the former always victorious. Many people who were strongly against the church are taking interest in it now. Several have been added to our number lately, and it can be seen that the work is progressing surely, if slowly.

In South Australia the Mormon elders have been hard at work, but the authorities have prohibited their street preaching. Several times they have been escorted to safety by police. Our elders are taking advantage of conditions there to show the difference between the two churches. It is to be hoped that they will prosper in their work among the people, who are giving them a good hearing.

JAMES R. BECKENSTEIN.

News from Branches

East Saint Louis, Illinois.

Inclosed you will find a copy of the Evening Sun, announcing the Latter Day Saints winners of the first prize in a contest of churches, lodges, and individuals in this city, a $650 Nelson player piano or a $750 Baby Grand piano. The branch is elated over the victory. The writer being very pessimistic in the start, must confess that the honors belong to others. Charlie Carl, eleven years old, and Olive Carl, nine years old, nominated the Latter Day Saints. Charlie worked about a month with little or no help. Then Frances Carl, his mother, Willis F. Carl, his father, and Elsie M. Barraclough took up the work. These four took in over 350,000 votes by getting paid up subscriptions to The Evening Sun. There were a few other Saints who offered some highly appreciated assistance: Sisters Richard Avery, Sarah Dickens, Anna Cozby, Flora Smith, Ruby Graham, and Alice Dickens.

I have often said every child has his influence, and every act or effort its effect. But little did I think that there was a possibility of getting anyone of the five pianos, with a branch of 170 Saints in a city of 80,000. And then to carry off first with a lead of over 120,000 votes! We marvel at the result of the children's "faith."

We feel that it is also a tribute to the standing of the Saints in the city. Among those who contributed to our list through Sister Barracrough's solicitations were the mayor, the recorder, and a number of the principal business men of the city. Brother and Sister Carl also solicited the best business men of the city, men with whom we are acquainted and doing business.

Now, to the condition of our branch. Things are moving along very nicely, generally. We have a live and wide-awake set of officers. The little boy of Mr. and Sister Coonce, of Tunnell Hill, Illinois, Aaron Bernard, was blessed Sunday, the thirteenth, by the writer and W. C. Carl.

Since writing last we have been favored by the visits of Elders-J. W. Rushton, Albert Carmichael, Dowker, Sparling, and Hale W. Smith. The latter stayed over a week, during which time we enjoyed the privilege of his services.

A dream of his childhood was literally fulfilled in our presence. When sixteen years of age, sixteen years ago, he dreamed that George M. Vandel (then a boy at school) introduced him to an audience as the speaker of the hour. Brother Vandel, now an elder, was in charge when Brother Hale came, and introduced him to the Saints, fulfilling the dream. Another testimony was borne by Brother Smith. Before going on a mission to the West, after prayer, his father (our esteemed Prophet) warned him of danger ahead, and admonished him to heed the impressions of the Spirit. Before reaching his destination he was impressed to get off the train, which he did. The train was wrecked, and a number killed in the car which he with others, had occupied.

We enjoy the visits of our passing brethren.

In bonds,
G. F. BARRACROUGH.

Chicago, Illinois.

CENTRAL BRANCH.

There have been many pleasant happenings and many good times with us that might have been reported during the past few months. One of the sisters in Oklahoma wanted to know if the people of Chicago had gone to sleep. No; just the opposite; they are wider awake than ever, but the correspondent has just got out of bed.

Two children were baptized a couple of weeks ago by Brother H. P. W. Kier and confirmed by Brethren J. C. Foss and Kier. The confirmations were wonderful. It was said by many that they were the grandest confirmations that they had ever witnessed. Mrs. A. L. Crippen was baptized on Sunday, July 13, by Brother D. E. Dowker, and confirmed by Brethren McGahan and H. P. W. Kier. On Sunday, July 20, Brother Smith, of Hammond, was ordained an elder.

Our Wednesday evening prayer services have been a grand success lately, the young participating as well as the old. These meetings, as well as the Sunday morning young people's prayer meetings, have been a source of inspiration to many of the young.

The speakers of the day, Sunday, July 27, were Brethren H. P. W. Kier and D. E. Dowker.

Yours in gospel truth,
CLARENCE L. WAINWRIGHT.

Bay Minette, Alabama.

We have a good Sunday school, prayer meeting on Wednesday night and Religion Friday night. We have preaching every first and third Sundays.

Our membership is growing. There have been a good many baptized this year. F. M. Slover preached Saturday night of the 5th, and Sunday morning and evening of the 6th of this month. A. E. Warr preached at the Red Hill Schoolhouse the first Thursday and Friday nights of this month.

I was baptized June 18, the last day of conference, by A. G. Miller and was confirmed by W. L. Booker. I enjoy this great latter day work. I am only fourteen years of age. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may overcome.

Your sister in Christ.

ALLIE WIGGINS.

Wilmington, Illinois.

The writer is not connected with the Wilmington Branch, but has come in touch with them quite frequently of late, and believes that the activity manifested in that part of the country merits mention.

A few weeks ago Elder Jott Bronson, who is commander in chief of the missionary work there, called upon us to assist him. Elder James Kier accompanied the writer, and delivered a forceful sermon on the apostasy and the restoration. The following evening we delivered a lecture on the Book of Mormon, illustrated by quite a number of beautiful views through the stereopticon machine, showing the ancient American ruins. A tent had been ordered, but did not arrive, consequently our services were held in a lodge hall. The meetings were very well attended.

Last Saturday and Sunday the writer was again on the ground, this time on request of Elder F. G. Pitt, who had planned to deliver an illustrated lecture on Jerusalem. On arriving on the scene of action a tent of goodly dimensions was found already pitched, and everything arranged that was needed to carry on an effective service. That evening (Saturday) Brother Pitt delivered his lecture on Jerusalem to an interested and appreciative audience. The stereopticon machine was again pressed into service, and the lantern slides Brother Pitt had made from original photographs taken during his travels were very descriptive and intensely interesting. The lecture was very well received. During the lecture our brother sang "The old, old path," illustrated by two very appropriate views.

Three services were held the day following. The writer spoke in the morning, Brother Pitt in the afternoon, and Brother Bronson in the evening. An unusually large crowd turned out for the final service. The tent was filled to its capacity, and all around the outside were interested listeners occupying convenient places in automobiles and buggies, as well as on the sod. This outpouring of people was certainly gratifying to us, for it enabled us to get in touch with and make the acquaintance of many.

A good work has been done here, and should be followed up later. The Saints of the Wilmington Branch appear to be keenly alive to the situation, and are working together quite well. All who sacrificed time and labor to make the work there a success, expressed themselves very favorably on the kind hospitality of the Saints, and felt amply repaid for their services.

The harvest is certainly white, but how few are the laborers!

Respectfully submitted,

FRANK F. WIPPER.

Scranton, Pennsylvania.

Since we last wrote to your valuable paper we have had the pleasure of seeing a few more added to our numbers by baptism. On Sunday, June 8, Children's Day exercises were observed for the first time at the church; the building was beautifully decorated for the occasion, and at the morning service two of our Sunday-school scholars were baptized.

Our daily vacation Bible school is again in full swing, with an enrollment already of about three hundred, and with its staff of faithful and energetic workers who are seeking earnestly to benefit the children of the neighborhood. May their noble efforts be crowned with abundant success.

The branch choir is getting busy also; they are practicing another cantata—Daniel.

On the 24th inst., the Saints and friends of the Scranton Branch met in the basement of the church for a social time that had been duly prepared in honor of our estimable young brother, E. Walter Lewis, the event being his departure for the West. During the course of the evening the brother was presented with a beautifully bound Bible as a token of respect from those who had gathered. The presentation was made by the pastor, Brother T. U. Thomas. May our gracious God and Father ever guide and direct his pathway is the earnest desire of our souls.

The work of the Lord here in this place is apparently steadily and surely wending its way onward. The Sunday school has increased considerably in numbers since we have our church building; but the Religio, as is usual during the summer months, drops somewhat in attendance.

CORRESPONDENT.

Fourth Kansas City, Missouri.

Considering the very hot weather during the month of July, the attendance at the different services has been commendable. A number of outsiders, and members of other branches have worshiped with us of late.

In partial fulfillment of prophecy given a few years ago, saying that numbers would be added to the branch, coming into the church by the ones, the twos, and the threes, four noble souls have been baptized by our pastor, L. A. Fowler. On July 9, Sister George Johnson and young daughter were baptized, and on the twenty-third her husband followed. On the thirtieth Mrs. Harriet Barron was baptized.

Sister Hazel Fisher has been appointed branch historian at the suggestion of the stake secretary. Patriarch Ammon White was with us on the twentieth, and gave us a good discourse. Several of the Saints improved the opportunity to get their blessings.

A young Brother and Sister C. N. Hughes have moved close to the church. Sister Hughes is a daughter of Brother and Sister Blyle.

The Saints are making an extra effort to meet the indebtedness on the church lot. Some are responding nobly to both the branch needs and to the call the Bishopric has sent out to the church in general.

The Religio is under the direction of Brethren C. L. Munroe, and Frank Brånham, and we hope for interest and larger numbers in the near future. The Religio will give an ice cream social on the lawn on the evening of August 14, the proceeds to apply to the church lot fund.

The branch has been blessed spiritually, and may the Lord continue to bless us, to help us keep humble and faithful.

MRS. ALICE ARMSTRONG.

Auditor's report accepted and committee discharged. Baptismal certificates of Brother and Sister Hopson were referred to officers of Artland Branch. Collection of $16.15 was taken up. Preaching by Nelson Wilson, J. J. Cornish, J. A. Gillen, J. W. Peterson, and Frederick Gregory. Grace Baughman, secretary.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Spokane District; Greeting: We are truly appreciative of the support the Saints in this district have rendered in times past and gone; surely God will reward for the same. But at the present this department of the work is in need of help. The burden of the missionary is sufficient, without the care and worry of their families' support. So, Saints of God, whatever you have in tithes and offerings send to the undersigned soon; don't wait until you have a large account. If you send now we will be able to meet the obligations each month. Let us not be forgetful of our duties, but remember the needs of the Lord's work. This is a day of sacrifice; times are hard, but hungry people can not wait, so let us comply with all the commandments he has given us and then God is bound to bless us according to his promises. I anxiously await your reply with a substantial inclosure for the needy.

Yours for the Master's cause,
W. W. FORDHAM, Bishop's Agent.
SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, South 238 Haven Street.

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT; SASKATCHEWAN DISTRICT.

To Saints and Friends of the Saskatchewan District: Please take notice that upon the recommendation of the conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints of the district of Saskatchewan, Canada, Brother J. Dobson, of Disley, Saskatchewan, has been duly appointed bishop's agent of the Presiding Bishopric of said church in place of Brother J. A. Beckman, deceased.

We hope and trust that the Saints and friends of Saskatchewan may be earnest in their help of Brother Dobson in his work, and that the Lord may bless each of the helpers in said district in order that his work may move forward and the poor be helped and the gospel preached to all who desire to hear.

The Bishopric regrets to have to announce the decease of former agent, Brother Beckman, who was faithful in his work and an excellent helper in the same. Brother Beckman was faithful unto the end and will have his reward. Our loss in the help of Brother Beckman was a severe one, but the gain to Brother Beckman is such that each one may feel that the brother has gone to his reward. The Bishopric also desires to thank Sister Etta Beckman for the faithful work she has given in the office from the departure of Brother Beckman until August 1. Her work has been appreciated. We trust the Lord will bless and help her to overcome in all her undertakings.

Desiring that peace and good will may attend each of the helping Saints and friends in the Saskatchewan District, in order that God's will may be performed and his law kept, I am in behalf of the Bishopric,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 6, 1913.

SHEFFIELD DISTRICT.

To the Saints and Friends in the District of Sheffield, England: Please take notice that at the district conference of the Sheffield District held at Claycross, recommendation was made for the appointment of Brother Joseph Holmes, of Claycross, in and for the district of Sheffield in place of Brother John Austin, former agent of said district, and who does not continue the work on account of increasing age and inability to travel as heretofore over the district. Brother Joseph Holmes enters upon his work also with the special recommendation of Bishop R. May, who is at the present time in charge of the financial work in the British Isles Mission.

We take pleasure in commending Brother Joseph Holmes to the Saints and friends of the Sheffield District and bespeak for him the hearty cooperation of each one who is interested in the work of the Lord in that field. Also the Bishopric respectfully tenders its special thanks to Brother John Austin for his faithful service as agent in the Sheffield District in the past number of years, and trusts that he will be a good help in his part of the district to the new agent still, and that the Lord may bless and direct him in the work that he may be called upon to perform.

It is sincerely hoped that every member of the household of faith in the Sheffield District may soon get in communication either personally or by letter with Brother Joseph Holmes of Claycross and that they may take pleasure and interest in helping the financial work along, of which he has charge. To this end may the Lord bless each of the helpers in their efforts.

In behalf of the Bishopric, I am,

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 29, 1913.

First Presidency.

NOTICE OF TRANSFER AND RELEASE.

Notice is hereby given of change in appointment of J. W. McKnight, from Minnesota to Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana; and R. D. Davis from Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana to Minnesota.

Upon his own request Brother H. E. C. Muir has been released from his appointment.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 7, 1913.

Conference Notices.

West Virginia district conference will convene with the Mount Zion Branch, August 30 and 31, 1913. District Sunday school association will meet on Friday, the day before. All are urged to come in time for the convention. Notify B. Beall, at Goose Creek, and buy tickets for Cairo, where conveyances will meet trains. Francis L. Shinn, secretary.

Utah district conference will convene August 23, 1913, at 10 a. m., in Ogden, Utah. We are anxious to see a large delegation from every part of the district, as matters of vital importance will come before us. Reports and petitions should be in the hands of the secretary, G. J. S. Ables, 420 Twenty-fourth Street, Ogden, Utah, by August 15. Our missionary in charge has agreed to be in attendance. J. C. Chrestensen, Malad City, Idaho, Lock box 12.

Eastern Colorado District will meet at Wray, Colorado, September 6, 1913, immediately following the reunion at that place, which begins August 27. Special attention is called to the resolution passed by the last district conference, as follows: "That it is the judgment of this conference that the proper construction to be placed upon sections 4 and 5 of the by-laws of the district is that all members of the priesthood residing in the district shall report to the district secretary as provided." Also the following resolution: "That the reports of the different members of the district priesthood shall be reported to the district conference only in the secretary's tabulated report." Please get your reports in as early as possible, at least one week before the convening of conference. E. J. Williams, secretary, 1210 South High Street, Denver, Colorado.

Convention Notices.

West Virginia district Sunday school will meet August 29, 1913, at 2 p. m., with the Mount Zion Branch. Blanks for reporting, with any other assistance we can render, will be cheerfully furnished by the undersigned. We desire, if possible, to secure some one of the general Sunday school authorities to be with us. Joseph Briggs, superintendent, 404 Stealy Avenue, Clarksburg, West Virginia; Miss Katie Ross, secretary, Cairo, Ritchie County, West Virginia.

Northern California district Sunday school association will convene August 20, at 2 p. m., at Irvington reunion grounds. An interesting program will be arranged for Friday evening, the 22d. Home department workers please report to superintendent, Mrs. George Sykes, 2326 San Jose Avenue, San Francisco. Send reports and credentials early to secretary, Mrs. L. Day, 4096 Eighteenth Street, San Francisco.

Eastern Kansas district Sunday school will convene at Blue Rapids, Kansas, September 5, 1913, the last Friday of the district reunion. There will be institute work every afternoon during the reunion. We are expecting efficient workers, and hope everyone in the district will feel it their duty to attend. Be sure to send credentials to the convention. Mrs. Martha Cool, secretary.

Reunion Notices.

Southwestern Oregon reunion at Myrtle Point, Oregon, meets August 29 to September 7. Beautiful grove for camping. Large crowd expected. F. M. Sheehy and perhaps others are expected. Bring tents and equipment. Tents are scarce here. Conference September 6 and 7. Sunday school convention during reunion. Send branch reports to district secretary, Mrs. Maude McCracken, Myrtle Point, Oregon: Sunday school reports to Sunday school secretary, Mrs. Pearl Goodman, same address; official communications to F. J. Chatburn, district president, Bandon, Oregon. I write by request of these officers. Charles E. Crumley, Myrtle Point, Oregon.

Central Oklahoma District will meet in reunion at Terlton, Oklahoma, on the Frisco Road, September 5. Order tents and make all inquiries of J. W. Parshall, Terlton, Oklahoma. Is there a good reason why you should not come? Remember there is a vast difference between a reason and an excuse. Come to Terlton. J. E. Yates.

Addresses.

John W. Tayler, Marys Road, Monston, Manchester, England.

Notice--High Priests.

To the High Priests, Greeting: This is to give official notice that in the near future we expect to mail each member of the quorum a copy of our 1913 High Priests' Annual, to the last known address; should it fail to reach you within a reasonable time after this notice shall appear please write for copy, furnishing your present address, and another copy will be mailed to you. ROBT M. ELVIN, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, July 28, 1913.

Correction.

I wish to direct attention to the following errors in my letter in the HERALD of July 30. The first line at the top of page 749, second column, is out of its place; it should be the second line of page 750. The word sermon in the second paragraph should be sermons. I preached more than one farewell sermon. In the fifth paragraph a whole line is repeated. In the place of the repetition the following line should occur: the readers of the HERALD will remember that when I, in paragraph six enthroned should be enshrouded. Again, the initial W in the name of George Wilson was not in my manuscript. Northward in the second column of page 750 should be westward, and Mr. Austin should be Mr. Anstee. Please correct and oblige. Yours in bonds,

DERBY, INDIANA, August 5.

A. C. BARMORE.

Died.

THOMAS.—James Thomas was born at Herfordshire, England, February, 1845, died at his home near Deerfield, Missouri, June 22, 1913, of paralysis. He was baptized in 1868, ordained an elder in 1869, in Montana. He married Miss Mary Jane Powell, November, 1870. Eleven children were born to them, seven of whom with the companion survive him. He was active in the work, serving as a missionary for a number of years, and was an able defender of the faith. A large attendance at the funeral evidenced the respect in which he was held. Funeral services conducted from the home, sermon by W. S. Macrae.

MCDANIEL.—Benjamin Franklin McDaniel was born January 15, 1845, in Walnut Township, Gallia County, Ohio, died July 25, 1913, at his home three miles south of Davis City, Iowa. Married Cynthe J. Patterson September 18, 1864; to them were born, two daughters and nine sons; the daughters and two sons went on before; his faithful wife, seven sons, grown to manhood, six grandchildren, two brothers and one sister remain. He was baptized by Robert M. Elvin, December 27, 1896, who also preached the funeral sermon, in the Saints' church at Davis City, July 27, 1913, assisted by George W. Blair. There was a large, attentive audience present.

MCQUEEN.—John S. McQueen, son of Webster and Victoria McQueen, was born at Hazelton, Iowa, March 15, 1883, died at Oelwein, Iowa, July 2, 1913. He was baptized in 1896 by J. R. Sutton. In 1911 he was ordained a priest; he has been a faithful member and an earnest worker for the Master. He leaves a father, mother, three sisters and one brother. Funeral sermon by W. Weston, of Lamont, interment in Oakdale Cemetery.

WREN.—Thomas Richard Wren was born April 18, 1840, at Maidstone, Kent, England, died July 6, 1913, at Middletown, Ohio. He married Elizabeth Smith at Maidstone, England, by whom he is survived. Nine children were born to them, two of them are still living. Deceased emigrated to America in 1866, landing at New York July 6, just 47 years prior to his death. He was a devout member of the church, and faithfully served therein as an elder. Funeral sermon by G. T. Griffiths.

MCALLISTER.—Sister V. A. McAllister died July 13, after being confined to her bed for about one year. She was firm in the faith. Through her saintly life she brought the work of the gospel to her entire family. She enjoyed the gift of prophecy, and many things given through her have been literally fulfilled. She was ready to do anything she could for the advancement of the grand cause in which she was enlisted.

WILLIAMS.—Mary J. Williams was born September 27, 1830, at Leroy, Bradford County, Pennsylvania, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Martha L. Van Order, Minneapolis, Minnesota, July 28, 1913. She was baptized August 11, 1863, at Plano, Illinois, by John Shippy, and for fifty years lived a radiant Christian life. Two daughters and one son survive her. Her husband, Evan E. Williams preceded her several years. Funeral services were held at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Owen, in Minneapolis, previous to bringing the remains to Plano for interment; and a burial service was held in the Stone Church at Plano, C. H. Burr delivering the address.

WOODWARD.—Joseph Woodward was born May 27, 1822, at Burlington, New Jersey, died July 18, 1913, at the home of his granddaughter, Sister May Vredenburg, Pisgah, Iowa. He married Margaret Hankens in 1843. She died in April, 1876. To them were born ten children, six of whom survive him. He also leaves 24 grandchildren, 23 great-grandchildren, many other relatives and friends. He was baptized by R. M. Elvin, October 1, 1890, and was ever faithful and a great lover of the work. Funeral at the Latter Day Saint church in Pisgah, in charge of Joseph Lane, sermon by Sidney Pitt, interment at Little Sioux, Iowa.

SMITH.—William Teddy, infant son of Brother and Sister L. W. Smith, was born March 27, 1912, at Butler, Missouri, died July 31, 1913. Thus a "bud of promise" has been plucked from among us. While it seems hard to give him up, yet we bow in submission to God's will, realizing that the Lord knows why; his will be done. Funeral sermon by Amos T. Higdon, assisted by W. A. Searfus.

FISHER.—Henry Fisher was born July 28, 1843, at Sheffield, England. He was baptized February 20, 1870, at Sheffield, England. He came to America the same year and finally located at Sandwich, Illinois, where he resided until the time of his death, August 2, 1913. He was married twice, his first wife departing this life June 15, 1877. June 11, 1879, he married Emma Bennett, who remains with his five sons and three daughters, one daughter having died in infancy. He was a faithful witness for the gospel. Funeral sermon at the house by C. H. Burr, E. M. Wildermuth in charge. Burial at Pine Mound Cemetery.

ANDERSON.—Adith A. Burley was born December 27, 1881, at Thedford, Ontario, died at Wiarton, Ontario, July 22, 1913. She married Allen Anderson, December 28, 1898. To this union eight children were born. She was baptized September 1, 1904, and from that time until death was faithful to her covenant. Funeral services were held at the residence of Brother McFarlan, interment in Wiarton cemetery. She leaves to mourn, husband, eight children, father, mother, six brothers and one sister. Sermon by W. D. Ellis, assisted by James Phillips.

HOLMES.—Hattie E. Holmes was born at Salem, Washington County, Indiana, April 2, 1858; died July 19, 1913. Deceased was married to Thomas S. Holmes November 26, 1885. She was the mother of five children, all of whom survive her. She also leaves husband, three brothers, two sisters, father and mother and many friends to mourn her departure. She was a faithful and devoted wife and a kind and loving mother. The funeral services were in charge of T. C. Kelley, sermon by William Johnson, of Seattle.

CARLILE.—Alta Carlile was born February 9, 1852, at Tippecanoe, Indiana, died at North Platte, Nebraska, July 4, 1913. She was baptized April 13, 1881, at Blue Rapids, Kansas; August 8, 1873, she married John I. Adams. To this union were born three children, two of whom survive. Her husband died in 1881. September 13, 1885, she married James N. Carlile. To them were born five children, four of whom survive her.

HALL.—Winifred Clara Newlen was born at Des Moines, Iowa, May 22, 1880. She was married to Brother Earl F. Hall November 27, 1902, who remains to mourn her apparently untimely death. Three children were born of this union, two of whom have died, one remaining. She died at Des Moines, Iowa, July 24, 1913. Her mother, four sisters, and two brothers are living. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, June 28, 1903, and ever continued as a consistent and faithful member. Those who knew her best spoke most highly of her. The funeral was held at Lamoni, Iowa, July 29, the sermon being preached by Elbert A. Smith. An unusually large concourse of sympathetic people attended this funeral service.

BOOKER.—Joseph R., son of Elder W. L. Booker, died at Bay Minette, Alabama, July 8, 1913, aged 12 years and 17 days. He was baptized June 15, 1913, by A. G. Miller, confirmed by A. E. Warr and W. J. Booker. He leaves father, stepmother, one brother, and three sisters. Funeral sermon at his father's residence by F. M. Slover, July 9, 1913.

CALHOUN.—Georgia Calhoun was born October 16, 1883, at Bess, Montgomery County, Alabama, died August 3, 1913. She was baptized and confirmed by D. E. Tucker, May 9, 1897, in Santa Rosa County, Florida. She leaves husband, seven children and many friends. Funeral sermon in Saints' church at Dixonville, Alabama, by F. M. Slover, in presence of a large number of relatives and friends, August 4, 1913.

WILLIS.—Robert L. Willis was born April 4, 1872. He was married to Annie Needham sixteen years ago. To them were born six children, two boys and four girls; wife and children remain to mourn the loss of a kind husband and a loving father. He was baptized by J. W. Metcalf March 23, 1902. He died in the faith, August 5. Funeral sermon by J. W. Metcalf, interment in the Saint Louis cemetery.

NICHOLS.—Charles W. Nichols was born July 3, 1874, in Livingston County, Illinois. He was baptized and confirmed at Eustis, Nebraska, by G. W. Johnson, June 12, 1898. He was ordained a deacon October 10, 1909, by C. H. Porter. He died at the Lincoln Sanitarium, August 2, 1913. He served as a deacon in the Eustis Branch until death claimed him. He was an active officer and a faithful member. He leaves a wife, two children, a mother, brothers, sisters, and many relatives and friends who regret his sudden removal from this life. Funeral at Eustis, Nebraska, August 4, conducted by C. H. Porter.

ARRESTED DEVELOPMENT VERSUS PERVERTED DEVELOPMENT.

The old Scotch poet prayed for humanity the gift to see themselves as others see them. This gift might be valuable to us as a church sometimes, not by way of showing us what we really are, but to give us an understanding of the opinions that others hold regarding us, for it must be confessed that many people, like the Apostle Paul, "see through a glass darkly," but unlike him, are deficient in charity. The following extract is from a pamphlet entitled, Present Day Mormonism and Its Remedy, by the Reverend John D. Nutting, secretary of the Utah Gospel Mission, Cleveland, Ohio:

The writer is requested to explain the different sects of Mormonism, and show their essential unity, in an article supplementary to this series. . . .

The technical name "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" is the original name, and thus belongs to one as much as another, each body in its own esteem being the only one entitled to it. The name "Mormon," likewise belongs to all, being a nickname derived from their first book of so-called "revelation," though disowned largely by even the Utah Branch. For either side to disown it seems very much like a son refusing his father's name while claiming his fame and parentage. It is really a proper name for all.

Between Josephite Mormon and Brighamite Mormon the difference is this: The Josephite is a case of arrested development, the Brighamite one of unrestricted evolution. In Josephitism are the seeds of everything found in Utah, polygamy included; not one new principle or doctrine has been "revealed" (invented) since the days of Joseph and his helpers in Nauvoo. Josephitism has been restrained from logical development by the fact that it has been constantly surrounded by Christian civilization; Brighamitism went west expressly to be free from restraint and "persecution," and quickly developed into the open paganism of doctrine and practice which it had been largely in secret before, and which it still for the most part retains. We might defy anybody to plant Josephitism free from constraint without reaping Brighamitism in due time. The latter is far the worst now, but the former is the responsible and causative system, of which the latter is the effect.

The chief present differences of doctrine between these two sects of Mormonism are as follows:

Josephitism repudiates polygamy; Brighamitism adheres to it.

Josephitism disavows the Adam-god doctrine; Brighamitism holds to it.

Josephitism holds to a less evil doctrine of the "priesthood"; Brighamitism teaches that men holding the "priesthood" are "a part of God." . . .

And Josephitism may be even the more dangerous because of the less open quality of its paganism.

It seems so strange to us that Mr. Nutting should think that our development has been arrested because we do not accept polygamy. His conception of development must be quite the reverse of that entertained by the Apostle Peter, who exhorted the saints of old to add to their faith virtue. We are quite sure that the Devil and Mr. Nutting would be in full accord in their ideas of "development."

Our development has not been arrested in any way. It has merely progressed along other quite different and more wholesome lines, as is inevitable with those who truly accept the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants as divine guides. Before those people mentioned by Mr. Nutting could indorse polygamy, Adam-god worship, and plurality of gods, they found it necessary largely to abandon these three books and declare that compared with the "living oracles" they were of no more value than the "ashes of a rye straw."

We very much fear that Mr. Nutting is sorry that we do not practice polygamy. Many others seem to find it hard to forgive us that such is the case. It would be so much easier to meet us if some foul blot were to be found upon our record or in our teaching. After exhausting every resource to fasten it upon us and failing, not having the manhood and good grace to grasp our hand in congratulation, they sullenly draw away, declaring that it is merely a case of "arrested development," or that "they would practice some such thing if they dared."

It is as though a prosecuting attorney should endeavor in every way to convict a neighbor of some heinous crime, and utterly failing to do so, the jury having acquitted the man and the court discharged him with congratulations, should declare, "Well, if he is not guilty he ought to be."

An elder put this pertinent query to a mission society, "Which would you prefer to discover, that the Latter Day Saints are good citizens or bad citizens?" Obviously many prefer to discover that we are bad. So obviously, that when it is discovered that we are irreproachable as neighbors, the affirmation is made, "Oh well, it is a case of arrested development. Had they developed as we would have wished them to do, they would be quite as bad as we have represented them as being."

Mr. A has a malignant cancer. Mr. B has none, is in good general health, and has no taint in his blood. Mr. C poses as a public benefactor and argues that Mr. B should be committed to a hospital. When it is pointed out that Mr. B has no cancer, he avers that Mr. A has one, and if Mr. B has none it is merely a case of arrested development. Sure, the case is clear, both men have two legs and two eyes, and in other general ways have some features in common, though quite different in point of health and morals.

Utah Mormonism has polygamy, regarded by most people as a cancer upon the body politic. The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has nothing of the kind, and is in good moral condition, without constitutional taint of that kind. Both believe, or profess to believe, in the Book of Mormon and in continued revelation, though differing widely in other particulars, so Mr. Nutting professes to regard the Reorganization as a menace. True, it has no cancer; but then it is a case of "arrested development." Such reasoning indicates arrested development of the brain.

Polygamy is clearly and expressly forbidden in the standard textbooks of the church, the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, particularly in the two last named.

If adopted by any body of professed believers in these books it indicates perverted development and not normal and logical growth. Those professed believers in the books in which our faith is set forth who continue monogamic, as the Reorganized Church has done, do not present a case of "arrested development," but a case of normal and natural growth along lines marked out in the constitutional law of the church. This is so obvious and clear that anyone not blinded by religious intolerance can see it at once, and the unreasonable, unfair, and unchristian position assumed by Mr. Nutting becomes no less obvious. Exactly the same line of argument holds good regarding other objectionable doctrines mentioned, such as the Adam-god doctrine and plurality of gods. These ideas are not an outgrowth of the doctrines set forth in the books of the church that expressly define our doctrines. They are opposed to the ideas presented in those books. They are not a logical development; they are a perverted growth and mark a departure and an apostasy.

Mr. Nutting declares that the members of the Reorganized Church who are moral and do not practice or preach polygamy may be even worse than the Utah people who practice that doctrine. Why worse? Because, as pointed out in the beginning of this editorial, they are harder for Mr. Nutting to meet.

He challenges anyone to place the Reorganized Church in some isolated region free from restraining influences and not reap as a result a second Utah.

It is easy to make these challenges, but they prove nothing. We might retaliate by challenging anyone to sequester Mr. Nutting on a desert island far from civilization in company with a beautiful, unmarried woman, and then hazard a guess as to the state of his morals ten years from now. Such a course, however, we would not pursue, because it would be on a plane with Mr. Nutting's low, vicious, and unchristian insinuation that members of the Reorganized Church would lapse into debauchery of the most debasing kind if for a little while they were withdrawn from the sweet and benign "Christian influences" of holy men like himself.

Arrested development appears here somewhere, but it is in the character of these divines who have stopped too soon in their progress along the more excellent way that leads up to God via the mile post of Charity.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

OPEN LETTER TO DISTRICT AND QUORUM SECRETARIES.

To District and Quorum Secretaries: Those who have had much experience with organizations have learned that it is seldom that an organization has a full corps of active officers; that frequently there are only two active ones,—the president and the secretary; and that not infrequently the only active one is the secretary. We have frequently noticed that one of the great essentials for a properly functioning organization of men is a live, active, thoughtful secretary, who will familiarize himself with the details of the organization and systematize the work of his office. A president is greatly assisted and his work greatly expedited by a good secretary. On the other hand, a slow, inactive secretary is usually a great drawback to a president.

We trust your organization has an active secretary. If not, whose fault is it? Do not let the fault rest with you. Acquaint yourself with the demands and details of your office and organization. Increase your efficiency by studying the methods and systems of secretaries who have made a reputation as successful officers. Study how you can be of assistance to every officer in your organization, especially the president, and be prepared to give that assistance when needed, without waiting to be asked.

We would especially emphasize the importance of keeping your records and minutes up-to-date. Know that they are correct by availing yourself of every opportunity to check them with other records where such exist. There are many sources from which information can be secured. Above all, keep in touch with the general church authorities and always be prepared to make full and accurate reports which will convey an accurate account of your organization.

Yours fraternally,
FREDERICK M. SMITH.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

TUBERCULOSIS TREATED.—At the last session of the Iowa State Legislature provision was made for the treatment of all cases of tuberculosis in the State. Those unable to pay for sanatorium treatment may be provided for by county supervisors to the amount of $15 per week for any length of time necessary. The supervisors may provide facilities within the county itself, or arrange with institutions already in operation.

CRITICISMS.—A number in writing the HERALD editors have passed criticism on the new periodical, Stepping Stones. Some of these comments have been unfavorable, but by far the greater majority have been complimentary, indeed. One brother regrets the passing of the Hope, from its original form, with its original editor, and its letters. Those who have a fondness for old friends are sometimes not at first ready to take up with new ones, but once they do they are as devoted to them as they have ever been to the old. We feel reasonably certain that Stepping Stones will make its way into the hearts of all, especially among those for whom it has been particularly intended.

FAIR PLAY.—The Chariton (Iowa) Leader for July 31, under the caption, "An age of toleration," in commenting on an announcement appearing in the same issue, in the interests of fair play, says:

It is noticed in another column that Reverend H. J. Bryce is soon to preach a sermon against the "menace of Mormonism." Ordinarily the Leader does not allude to these announcements, but as it is not in the sphere of a newspaper to take any hand in theological discussions it may be well to state that the notice appears merely through the right of publicity. Reverend Bryce objected, a short time since, to the Leader's publishing the announcements of the Russell cult, of this city, in the Leader. However, it is to be hoped no Mormon will object to this announcement by Reverend Bryce. Of course he refers to the Utah Church. Did he allude to the Reorganized Church, with headquarters at Lamoni, represented by quite a membership of good men and women in Lucas County, we certainly would take issue on the menace proposition. We ought to thank God that we live in a more tolerant age and recognize that virtue really exists sometimes where we are not looking for it. Instruments which organize great charities and keep men and women employed and happy contain more of good than bad in spite of faults—and in spite of what we would have them believe, because belief is hard to analyze anyhow, and a big part of it is theory. There was a time in the history of this fair land when the prevailing religionists of New England had but little respect for the Baptists, great and good church that it is, as old Roger Williams might explain, were he walking upon the earth to-day. Hence a Baptist, above all others, should be tolerant. There is yet too much of this stalking about with doctrinal chips upon one's shoulder to incite controversy, which results in no good and sometimes has been known to end in street brawls. Preach something to make men and the world better. Let those who disagree go to hell—still they may not be headed that way any more than we are; and maybe we haven't learned even the a b c of their Christian charity.

CORRECT AND INCRIMINATING.—In commenting on the eugenic laws recently passed in Wisconsin and Pennsylvania, requiring in the former State a medical certificate, in the latter an affidavit by the contracting parties to insure freedom from communicable diseases in those securing license to marry; the Deseret Evening News for August 4 says:

As a rule the value of any law depends less on the law itself than on the wisdom and honesty of those whose duty it is to apply it, and on the public sentiment behind it. Unless that sentiment supports it and the public servants are faithful, any law will become a dead letter.

That the News is correct, while at the same time it incriminates its constituency, is emphatically demonstrated by the fact that unlawful cohabitation continues in Utah in defiance of legislative enactment.

"CAMPBELLISM, MORMONISM, AND SPIRITUALISM."—We are in receipt of a forty-eight page pamphlet by Reverend W. A. Stanton, D. D., published by the American Baptist Publishing Society of Philadelphia, entitled, Three Important Movements, Campbellism, Mormonism, and Spiritualism. This connection of Mormonism with Campbellism by the Reverend Mr. Stanton is only another evidence of the determination of these writers to ruin our reputation. An amusing feature of this pamphlet is the statement made in the introduction that though the pamphlet is headed the Three Important Movements, Campbellism, Mormonism, and Spiritualism, with the last of these the paper "has nothing to do." Why Spiritualism is included in the title when no attention is given to it in the pamphlet is a conundrum worthy of the attention of a Philadelphia Baptist. After reviewing the pamphlet we are convinced that had the author also omitted all reference to "Mormonism" in similar manner the world's fund of reliable information would not have suffered in the slightest.

Remember that when you're in the right you can afford to keep your temper, and when you're in the wrong you can't afford to lose it.—Selected.

The Good Word of God.

How good is the word of the Lord;
How sacred that promise to me,
That all who've obeyed his blest word
In Zion his presence shall see.

Though tempests and torrents arise
To cast down their souls in despair,
There is One still whispers of hope,
For he all our sorrows did bear.

How good is the word of the Lord,
How sacred the sound of his name;
What else can such blessings afford,
Can riches, or honors, or fame?

Though sins and temptations abound
To dissever our souls from his love,
In Jesus redemption is found,
And there is forgiveness above.

How good is the word of the Lord,
How sweet its remembrance to me;
What else can such comfort afford,
To what other hope can I flee?

When he was despised of men,
Rejected and slandered and slain,
How can I who, though weak, love his word,
Expect the world's praise or acclaim?

No, let me with meekness endure
Whatever my burden, my cross;
The love of those friends I hold dear,
To be counted but refuse and dross.

All, all for His sake, I will try
Still meekly, still humbly to bear,
That when I behold him on high,
His smile shall dispel every tear.

F. R. TUBB.

Waiting.

Serene, I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind, or tide, or sea;
I rave no more 'gainst Time or Fate,
For lo! my own shall come to me.

I stay my haste. I make delays,
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid the eternal ways,
And what is mine shall know my face.

Asleep, awake, by night or day,
The friends I seek are seeking me;
No wind can drive my bark astray
Nor change the tide of destiny.

What matter if I stand alone?
I wait with joy the coming years;
My heart shall reap where it hath sown,
And garner up its fruit of tears.

The waters know their own, and draw
The brook that springs in yonder height;
So flows the good with equal law
Unto the soul of pure delight.

The stars come nightly to the sky;
The tidal wave unto the sea;
Nor time, nor space, nor deep, nor high
Can keep my own away from me.

—John Burroughs, in Des Moines Capital, June 7, 1913.

Over the Hills.

Over the hills and far away,
A little boy steals from his morning play,
And under the blossoming apple tree
He lies and dreams of the things to be;
Of battles fought and of victories won,
Of wrongs o'erthrown and of great deeds done—
Of the valor that he shall prove some day,
Over the hills and far away!

Over the hills and far away,
It's O for the toil the livelong day!
But it mattered not to the soul aflame
With a love for riches and power and fame!
On, O man! while the sun is high—
On to the yonder joys that lie
Yonder where blazeth the noon of day!
Over the hills and far away—
Over the hills and far away!

Over the hills and far away,
An old man lingers at close of day;
Now that his journey is almost done,
His battles fought and his victories won—
The old-time honesty and truth,
The trustfulness and the friends of youth,
Home and mother—where are they?
Over the hills and far away?
Over the hills and far away!

—Eugene Field.

The Old Mill.

Here from the brow of the hill look,
Through a lattice of boughs and leaves,
On the old gray mill with its gambrel roof,
And the moss on its rotting eaves.
I hear the clatter that jars its walls,
And the rushing water's sound,
And I see the black floats rise and fall
As the wheel goes slowly round.

I rode there often when I was young,
With my grist on the horse before,
And talked with Nelly, the miller's girl,
As I waited my turn at the door;
And while she tossed her ringlets brown,
And flirted and chatted so free,
The wheel might stop or the wheel might go,
It was all the same to me.

'Tis twenty years since last I stood
On the spot where I stand to-day.
And Nelly is wed, and the miller is dead,
And the mill and I are gray.
But both till we fall into ruin and wreck,
To our fortune of toil are bound;
And the man goes and the stream flows,
And the wheel moves slowly round.

—Thomas Dunn English.

THE INDIAN SITUATION, PAST AND PRESENT.

The recent conversion of quite a number of Indians in Oklahoma to the gospel of Christ, and their baptism by Brethren Hubert Case and J. E. Yates, and probably some by other elders of the church, has been and is continuing to be a subject of much interest to the members and ministry of the Reorganized Church; and particularly so because we have for many years been expecting that the words of prophecy in the Book of Mormon on this point would be clearly and abundantly fulfilled. That is, as to the enlightenment and ultimate conversion of many Lamanites to the truth of Christ's gospel, and also their becoming informed about their ancestry, namely that their progenitors were Hebrews who came to America centuries before Christ was born; also that they should learn of the bright future which is certain to come to all of them who will obey the gospel and who will make themselves worthy of again receiving the blessings of heaven.

The few of us who remain and who were present at the General Conference of April, 1868, will remember the attendance there (at Plano, Illinois,) of Daniel Covert and Moses James and their wives, four Indians of the Chippewa tribe who had been baptized the previous winter by Brother Morril E. Campbell, near Port Sarnia, Canada. One day during the conference, when there was a gathering of elders in the Herald Office, Brother John H. Lake talked with the Indians about their origin and the promises of God to their race, as given in the Book of Mormon. While doing this Brother Lake suddenly sprang to his feet and began speaking in a very forceful manner, in what to us was an unknown tongue. Those present could see that the Indians wept, and that they were much moved upon by the power of the Holy Spirit which was upon Brother Lake. After his speech was over we learned that he had spoken in their language, and had explained about their ancestors and how God designed that the Indian tribes should come to the knowledge of their Creator and of his work, and that they should be restored to far better things than they then had part in, or could ever have under the governments of men.

This incident, so unexpected and yet so fully by God's power, gave great satisfaction to our people at that time. But no other special experiences were had for many years, chiefly, I believe, because of the debasing influence used by the white traders among the poor aborigines. These evils caused drunkenness and other kinds of vice, and with many of them almost the entire extinction of every mental faculty, every moral quality, and of every physical power, so that such were unable to rise above the dreadful tide of trouble which the whites let loose upon the Indians in their efforts to thrust this "remnant" down to hell. Every sacred claim of justice and humanity was trampled upon, and men and women were defiled and degraded until its awfulness was as a funeral pyre that smoked to heaven. But, notwithstanding that all this evil was so universal, and that it gave promise of no end but annihilation, yet the Saints did not lose hope nor faith that sometime there would come a change for the better, and that gradually good things would arise by God's blessing for the permanent improvement of the red man, in usefulness, in education, and in happiness.

I remember that a common saying in the world was that "the only good Indian is the dead Indian," and the common idea was that they all should be "driven into the Pacific," or otherwise exterminated. Because the American people did not realize that the cruelties practiced by the Indians upon the whites were only in retaliation; that they were caused solely by the great wrongs which had been put upon the red men by the whites repeatedly breaking their most solemn pledges, by their unlimited lying and swindling, by their continued taking of valuable furs and royal robes and giving in exchange cheap baubles of glass, and bright tin cups which were represented as being made of silver. Thus, after vain promises and supposed fair dealing, the Indians found themselves left destitute, starving, suffering in every way, and their youth of both sexes debauched by drink and other vices.

Of the prophecies referred to, the following are cited:

In Nephi 9: 65, 66, Christ told the Nephites of his time (A. D. 34) that the Gentiles would come and be "a scourge unto the people of this land," but that he, the Lord, would restore to the Nephite posterity "the fullness of my gospel," and with the happy result, he declared, that they would believe him as the Savior, the Son of God.

Then in 2 Nephi 12: 80-84 that prophet foretold that some of the Gentiles in this land who accepted the restored gospel would carry the words of truth "unto the remnant of our seed," and that then these would learn about their ancestors, "that they are descendants of the Jews," even the ones who came out from Jerusalem so long ago. And he declared that when this is fulfilled "many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a white and a delightful people."

Also in Jacob 2: 56 it was written that "one day they shall become a blessed people" on this land. Again in 1 Nephi 7: 24, 25 is a prophecy that Nephi's posterity will be of those who "shall be brought out of obscurity and out of darkness, and they shall know that the Lord is their Savior and their Redeemer, the mighty one of Israel."

This proves that we need not expect great things immediately, but rather that these will only come as the results of their turning to cleanliness, diligence, honesty, virtue, and the ways of peace and righteousness, and more and more do this as time goes on.

Speaking of prophecy already fulfilled and others anticipated, there was one prediction in connection with the centuries of Lamanite debasement, through transgression and disobedience, which is remarkable in having its exact fulfillment, though it is an item very different from any other on record, either in the Bible or the Book of Mormon. The ancient people were then in South America when Abinadi declared that the Lord revealed to him the following words:

Yea, and I will cause that they shall have burdens lashed upon their backs, and they shall be driven before, like a dumb ass.—Mosiah 7: 52.

I well remember in the past the pictures contained in histories and books of travel showing the natives of South America under a system of peonage, by which they were compelled to carry burdens strapped on their backs, a manner of transportation not found in any other part of America, unless it extended in some degree to Mexico. But they were the same people; of the same origin. Also, a gentleman who had traveled in South America and seen this custom, told me about it some years ago. Thus in the very region, northwestern South America, where the prophecy was uttered, it came to pass many centuries later.

About forty years ago, during the almost exterminating wars by the United States' troops under Generals Crook, Merritt, and Custer, against the Cheyennes, the Utes, the Sioux, and other Indian tribes of the West, there appeared to be a general belief in the Nation, shared in by all excepting a few humane and hopeful people, that the complete "wiping out" of the Indians would have to come, and that it was the only way to settle the differences and difficulties which were continually rising between them and the whites, for the weaker must give way to the stronger, inevitably. I have quite a package of clippings that I saved at the time, and they show the widespread interest that was felt at that time among the people of America, especially by many eminent men, leading generals and statesmen, eminent writers and speakers, over what was called "The Indian question," and the treatment the tribes had received and were receiving from the Government by its officers, the Indian commissioners, and agents, and what the white traders were permitted to do among the Indians to make themselves rich and the Indians poor. Not only so, but also to make them destitute, debased, and depraved until there seemed no salvation for them and no one who cared how quickly they were annihilated.

But among the few voices lifted for them was that of Wendell Phillips, the celebrated advocate of the rights of the oppressed, whether black man or red man. On July 17, 1876, he wrote and published in the leading newspapers of the cities an "open letter" to General W. T. Sherman, then in command of the armies of the United States. It should be interesting to all the Saints to read the chief facts cited by him. I quote a part of the things he wrote. He said to General Sherman:

You were, in 1867, the head of an Indian commission, and its report, signed by yourself and printed by the Government, is one of the most terrific pictures ever drawn of the wrongs the Indian has suffered from this Nation. This investigation and your general experience showed you how cruel and unjust had been our treatment of the Indian for the last one hundred years. You know that we have surrounded him with every demoralizing influence, steeped him in intemperance, incited him to licentiousness by the example of those set over him, and tempted him to every vice. You have yourself spread on the public records the evidence that the Government has robbed him of his land, cheated him of his dues, and uniformly broken faith with him. If any of the tribes are to-day liars, thieves, and butchers, they may rightfully claim to have only copied the example we have set him.

You are not ignorant that the Indian has been outraged and plundered by the frontiersmen without stint or redress, and butchered by our soldiers, under the American Flag, with brutal and detestable cruelty, the description of which in plain terms the press would not admit to its columns. You know, no one better, that the worst brutality which prurient malice ever falsely charged the Indian with is but weak imitation of what the white man has often inflicted on the Indian men, women, and children. You know that on the plains we have violated every rule of civilized war, massacring women and children with worse than savage brutality. Your career has not shown you an instance where the Indian has lifted his hand against us until provoked to it by misconduct on our part, compared with which any misconduct of his is but dust in the balance.

Your experience will fully indorse what President Harrison, when governor of Indiana, said to the legislature in 1807, "that the utmost efforts to induce the Indians to take up arms would be unavailing if one only of the many persons who have committed murder upon their people could be brought to punishment."

You will not in the slightest degree doubt or deny the grave charge which Major General Harney, after fifty years' service on the plains, made to a congressional committee, "that he had never known an Indian tribe to break its word to our Government, and he had never known the Government to keep its faith with an Indian tribe." You are too much of a soldier not to confess that had you been placed in the Indians' circumstances you would have been ashamed not to have acted as he has done.

You would accept, as every honest man does, the statement of Major General Pope, in 1875, that the army officer can not prevent wrongs which drive the Indian to war. On the contrary, at the demand of every agent, whose unfair dealing with the Indians has brought on a difficulty, he is obliged to pursue and force back to the same deplorable state and place Indians whom he knows to have been wronged, and who have only done substantially what he would have done himself under like provocation." You must be keenly sensible what a reproach it is to religion and culture that our multiplying millions, with all the resources of civilization and Christianity in their hands, have lived for two hundred years close to this small and capable race and been able to give it only their vices—that all of good the Indian has is his own; most of his vices he can rightfully charge to the white man. Except the negro, no race will lift up at the judgment seat such accusing hands against this Nation as the Indian will.

In 1875 General Vandever, a United States Indian inspector, published a letter in which was this paragraph:

Give these Indians fair play, treat them with the same degree of justice that we would treat civilized beings, and they will be our friends. But if provocation after provocation is heaped upon them they will be compelled to fight.

In June, 1876, after the killing of General Custer and his soldiers by Sitting Bull and his braves, The Irish World was indignant that all the blame for the war was put upon the Sioux, and this paper called it "cant" to do so. The editor said that both Custer and Sitting Bull were soldiers, and that Custer hoped to be able to kill, wound, or capture not only Sitting Bull, but all his tribe.

Had Sitting Bull been killed it would have been a "brilliant victory," and bulletins would have carried the joyful news to all civilized readers. But Sitting Bull's unpardonable crime was in not letting himself be killed. He stood between his people and extermination. The cry of extermination is a most ruffianly and unchristian one.

Turning now to the brighter side of the "Indian Question" we find that fair progress is being made in the United States for the uplifting of the race, notwithstanding the old-time prejudices, the hindrances, and the long-continued unrighteous dealings of men,

In the first place, the lessening evils and the increasing deeds of justice and mercy by the Government, and by the people in general, have helped to increase the number of the red race, as is found in the census returns for 1910, as remarked in a Washington City dispatch dated May 15, 1912. It said that besides those in Alaska there were in the United States at the last census 265,683 Indians, whereas in 1880 there were only 244,000, being an increase over deaths of nearly 22,000. In 1910 there were in Alaska 25,331 Indians, or a total of 291,014 on American soil, United States territory.

The census report shows that there are Indians in every State and Territory, though in some States there are less than fifty. In Oklahoma there are 74,825; in Arizona, 29,201; in New Mexico, 20,573; in South Dakota, 19,137; in California, 16,371; and in Washington, Montana, and Wisconsin over ten thousand each. In fourteen other States there are over one thousand each.

More than one half in the United States proper are known to be full-blood, numbering 150,053, while the mixed-blood are 93,423, leaving 22,207 not reported; total 265,683. Of these 135,113 are males and 130,570 are females. In Alaska 85 per cent are full-blood.

One curious item brought out by the census is stated to be that the proportion of living children is higher among mixed-blood women, and higher as the result of marriage with whites than in case of marriage with mixed-blood or with full-blood Indians. I quote the following from a published digest of the report:

The number of Indian tribes in continental United States is large, but the number of members in some is very small; thus there are six tribes represented by a single member each, and thirty with a membership under ten. The chief tribes numerically are the Cherokees, of whom there are 31,489; the Navaho, with 32,455 members; the Chippewa, with 20,214; the Choctaw, with 15,917; and the Teton Sioux, with 14,284. Of the remaining tribes none has as many as seven thousand members, but there are seventy-four tribes represented by not less than five hundred individuals. In Alaska, the most numerous tribes are the Kusvogmiut with 1,480 and the Aleut with 1,451 members. None of the other tribes in Alaska has as many as one thousand members.

Concerning the process of civilizing and educating the Indians through the efforts of our National Government, it can be said in truth that the present situation is certainly encouraging, and the outlook for the future is fully as hopeful as is the present. Consider the work that is being done at the school in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, and see how great have been the results. During the year 1912 over eleven hundred boys and girls of the various tribes in America attended the school. So great has been the growth of this school in efficiency and popularity with the Indians that more and more of them have been pressing forward to obtain its advantages, so that seventy-five teachers are now employed in training the Indian boys and girls at that school.

Not only do they study books and the knowledge to be found in books, but they are also being taught the practical, everyday affairs and business of the white race and which are becoming so necessary now for all people, those of every land and every nation. The boys are learning the important industry of farming, in its various departments, also blacksmithing, bricklaying, carpentering, and other trades and occupations, such as stenography, telegraphy, teaching, and business methods in commercial life, etc., etc. The girls are learning cooking, laundrying, sewing, housekeeping, and some of the business occupations in which they can make a success and a living.

Thus, as farmers, mechanics, artisans, and home makers, they are being fitted for service in the work to be accomplished among their tribes, as also in the world at large in competition with white men. And some have made remarkable progress in what are called the professions. For instance, one or more of them have risen to eminence as physicians through their energetic application to study, and by their determination to be proficient. Very many of them have superior ability, considering their ancestry and their lack in youth of the ordinary advantages usually had by white children.

During his visit at Carlisle in the summer of 1912, Brother Charles Fry, editor of Zion's Ensign, was informed that the Indian children who came to school "learned even more readily than white children." Perhaps this is caused, in a measure, by the fact that the minds and memories of the Indian children have not been taken up with the multitude of things which engross the attention of white children from their infancy, such as a succession of plays and pleasures, also by the variety of associations and changes of scene, in travel and otherwise, all of which in civilization attend the lives of the white race from their birth, taking their time and attention from their studies and from more rapid advancement.

Current Events for April 11, 1913, stated that fifteen Indian young men had just graduated from the Carlisle school, in the scientific farming department, having learned practically how to use all kinds of agricultural machinery, such as "gang plows, disk harrows, weeders, horsehoes and rakes, mowing machines, and hay loaders," and some of them gave good talks on the subject of farming and its details.

In his annual report of December, 1912, Mr. Robert G. Valentine, Indian Commissioner, spoke of the progress that had been made "in teaching the Indian to be sober and industrious, in educating him to be a farmer and mechanic, and in imparting health principles, both as they apply individually and in the home," this last because over three times as many Indians have died of tuberculosis as have white people. He states that the war against the sale of liquor to Indians and against gambling is "waged with continuous vigor and with successful results." He mentions the thirty-five thousand Indian youths who have returned from the government schools to live at or near their home reservations, and he believes that they should be seen to by the Government, because he holds that these returned students are the hope of the Indian problem.

From other sources I gather that nearly one hundred thousand Indians both speak and read the English language, and about one hundred and thirty thousand of them wear the clothing of civilization, or about one half of all in the United States, and over forty thousand are members of the various churches.

Mr. W. E. Curtis, the popular writer for the Chicago Record-Herald, visited the Salem Indian School at Chemawa, Oregon, in September, 1909, and he told about the excellent conditions existing there for the good of the seven hundred and seventy-six students who were then enrolled. Their ages were from ten to twenty-one years, and the daily average attendance had been six hundred and fifteen during that year. Younger pupils are admitted there than at Carlisle, and all were being taught faithfully in book education and in the various industries. There were buildings for mechanical training, and Mr. Curtis stated that "the shops, the chemical laboratories, the granaries, stables, dairy, and other agricultural features are models both in equipment and appearance," and that the Indian boys make "excellent carpenters, shoemakers, tailors, wagon makers, and harness makers," as well as proficient workers at steam and electrical engineering. About one third of the pupils were girls, and he wrote that they "are taught everything that relates to housekeeping, dressmaking, and nursing." He said that they "are bright looking and attractive in appearance, and manners," and that their rooms are fitted up with taste and good order.

The superintendent, Mr. Chalcraft, told Mr. Curtis that the Indians in that country were "just as competent, just as popular, and just as trustworthy as the whites," and that employment was readily found by every Indian who was competent to do good work.

Since the most of the foregoing pages were written, our General Annual Conference for 1913 has been held, and one event was similar to that previously mentioned about the conference of 1868, forty-five years ago, namely, in the attendance of four Indians, two men and two women, and there was a very large satisfaction felt among the white Saints over this event. And still more that the prospects are so certain now that the work among the Lamanites has such a sure hold. Indeed, it has already made such progress that much good is likely to be realized in the immediate future, pertaining to the redemption of this long-suffering race, and to the enlightenment of the long-time benighted ones whose fathers the Lord loved and guided in his ways so long as they were willing to walk therein.

Much more of interesting detail could be compiled from the material I have in hand, but lest some readers be wearied, I forbear. However, I will mention that what are called "shameless land frauds" against the Indians were brought to light before the United States Senate last winter, according to a dispatch sent December 17, 1912, to the daily papers. Senators Teller, Curtis, and LaFollette were the senatorial committee which reported finding that "the names of Indians were willfully and deliberately forged to the deeds claimed to have been made," by which lands were wrested from them. But it was believed by them that the wrongs would be corrected and the right prevail even toward the Indians. This is what must be in order to reach the divine mind and purpose. It will surely come, and justice and mercy will prevail.

And, certainly, we are warranted in fully believing that God has charge over all nations and races, that he "ruleth in the kingdoms of men," that he will cause justice to be done, and that he will fulfill the promises made by him. He said that sometime the posterity of Lehi "shall become a blessed people" in the continents which modern people call America but which the Lord by Moses designated as "Joseph's land."

REVIVAL MEETINGS.

NUMBER 15. METHODS AND TACTICS SERIES.

The members of the Evangelical Order are designated in the law as revivalists, those who are to hold religious services and revive the people. Revival meetings have come into disrepute in some sections, owing to the sensational and unreasonable, in some instances, almost insane methods, of certain revivalists of various denominations. But it must not be forgotten that religious revivals are legitimate when properly conducted, and that they have a place in our work, the importance of which will probably be recognized to a greater extent as time goes by. To arrive at an understanding of the true nature of God-ordained religious revivals and the proper and legitimate methods by which they may be carried on, should be an object of careful thought and prayer, and we are pleased in this connection to present the following article from the pen of Brother Ammon White, member of the Evangelical Order.—EDITORS.

On account of the fact that some of the most absurd and ridiculous things, incidents, and scenes have occurred under the head and name of "revival meetings," this style of meetings has almost become, to the Saints, a thing disgusting to think about. But since it has been the special design of Satan, from the time he was driven from the presence of the Father, to heap odium upon the ordinances and forms of worship designed by the Master to accelerate his work, by mock forms and deceptions, we dare not throw overboard any of the essential features of his great work which have been prepared for the perfecting of his Saints and the establishing and bringing about of Zion.

We accept, in a great measure, the common reason given for the holding of revival services. The religious world, and the Saints are no exception, are all alike in the fact that religious fidelity and they are warm friends so long as a wave of enthusiasm turns the tide of humanity in one way. Many are the children of Israel, and it seems that the same laxness, in spiritual things, is still the rule; and where constancy and fidelity is found, it is the exception. Therefore, there is still need for the work of the revivalist or for the work of the ministry who are especially called, as Paul speaks to Timothy in his second epistle, 4: 2-5, Inspired Translation, wherein he tells him to "Preach the word; be instant in season, who are out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry."

Here the work of the evangelist seems to have been to stir up the Saints. (Also read Doctrine and Covenants 125: 3. Also Ephesians 4: 11, 12, where together with the other officers, the evangelist is sent, "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ.")

While these men may preach to the world, their special work is to look after the Saints as a "father." It therefore seems that the first and central effort in all revivals, which they hold, should be with the purpose of enlivening the fold of Christ.

We do not hold that no one else except the evangelist may hold revival meetings; but when it is done, it is to be an exception to the rule, because of there being no available evangelist to do the work. The very nature of their calling makes it so that they should be sought for and requested to come here and there, except wherein by the direction of the spirit of wisdom they discern a necessity for their labors, where those in charge have, through negligence, failed to call them. For some reason, I have been to the necessity of proffering my services in nearly all of my labors, so far, to the churches or branches. There are a few exceptions, nevertheless. But we believe it is because of a lack of understanding on the part of the pastors as to their privileges under the law, and also because that for so many years there was no one of that ministry to serve them. There are too few yet. We pray for more.

Every branch should have at least one good revival meeting each year, and more, if necessary. They seem to be a necessity to the life of the Saints. There are times in the life of all societies and business concerns when some way must be devised to awaken new life. The how shall it be accomplished, is the live question. We live and learn, and experience has taught us much,—whether personal, or through others, it is good not to forget.

Are you talking about holding a revival meeting in your city, village, or country? The first question is, Can we get the people to come? Yes, if they are properly invited, and if they think there is something worth hearing after they get there. Most people are sociable and like to be entertained. Now this meeting, remember, is first to the body of Christ, the Saints. How shall we get the news to them?

I suggest, arrange for your preacher, get up a neat invitation card and schedule of meetings, ready to place in every hand. Get your priests and teachers to form a visiting committee to visit every Saint or home, leaving cards and a warm invitation to the first Sunday's service, which is to be made a special rally day, in which you want every man, woman, and child belonging to the church to turn out and get acquainted once more. Get your music committee to work and get all to sing, who will and can, and practice them on some of the good, old, familiar songs that the wayfaring ones will remember; and sing them during parts of the services that day, together with any special features in music that you may be able to secure.

Have plenty of Zion's Praises and Hymnals on hand for all.

Get a list from the branch clerk of those members who are away from the branch, and send to them, at an early day, an invitation and one of your rally day souvenirs, which you should provide for all.

Have your deacon or usher meet everyone who comes in, and hand each a little badge or tag-card to hang from a button or to pin on them, with the words, "Rally Day, I was there," with date on it. Also you might send to the ones who are away, a tag with this on it, and ask them to wear it on that day and think of you at home,—“They are thinking of me at home, to-day.” You will often hear from the scattered ones, and a word dropped may be a wedge to open their hearts to a more active part in the great work of the Lord. These little souvenirs will not cost much, but will mean much.

Do not let your entertainment committee forget that there may be some present who need to be coached to get acquainted, and also some from a few miles away who should not have to return for lunch, so far.

Make the order of the meetings as convenient as possible to accommodate the locality in which they are held. All branches do not have the same conditions to battle with. As a general rule, the forenoon and afternoon Sunday meetings in the country are the best attended by the Saints. Make good use of the hours allotted. Now a good day of meetings will give you a good chance to advertise the revival that follows.

Prayer meetings, in connection with a revival, are an absolute necessity. If they are poorly attended, just get to work fasting and praying for the Spirit's power, and when a few of the good things of the Spirit are had, then will the good news scatter and others will join your ranks till your hours for meeting will be much too short. An hour before the evening preaching is generally the best time, if there is not too much interruption. If in towns that are small, and people can come out, the afternoons will do. An occasional prayer meeting at the homes of invalids and shut-ins will not be forgotten by those suffering friends.

A song service, for all, each evening for fifteen minutes before the preaching, will aid much in the spirit of the audience, in preparing them for the sermon. The first few sermons of a revival, we have experienced, will carry the burden of instruction to the lives of the Saints, and will make for their spiritual uplifting: then as the influx of non-members appears, the topics of the gospel in all its parts will be good food, and is oftentimes as good to the Saints, in strengthening their faith in that which they have believed, and causing them to feel secure in their positions taken before the world in accepting the true religion of the Christ.

The true servant has the promise of the help of the Spirit and I have found help the closer I follow the exhortation found in the Bible and the Doctrine and Covenants in section 83: 14, to study and treasure up in my mind the words of life, and not to try too much to outline certain sermons for each night, but that in “the very hour that portion shall be meted out to every man,” in harmony with his words; this has been found to be true to the letter each time, and I fear not to trust it still.

There is power in fasting and prayer. Forget it never, in the revival meetings. Special themes for fasting and prayer are profitable, such as:

For humility and repentance of all.

For the spiritual gifts and the power of the gospel.

For the Saints who are indifferent and cold.

For the sick in body.

For the conversion of friends and neighbors.

Have a definite purpose and then work to reach the end in view. Haphazard work never brings about the work that system will.

Nearly everywhere there are found many who attend the prayer meetings but who never speak. Backwardness and a lack of control of one's self in public must be overcome by some method that will develop this class. One method we suggest: Prepare cards with subjects and easy questions on them and hand them to some before each service of prayer and ask that they prepare a few words to speak on each. Such subjects as the following may be used:

“Give one experience, your own or another's, in which you can discern the hand of God.”

“Give a reason why you believe Joseph Smith to be a true prophet.”

“Relate a latter day miracle.”

Many such live topics can be touched upon with interest to all. Just have a few to start the meeting at each gathering. Try these at some of the meetings of your branch.

Many failures are made in the holding of series and revival meetings, because of the half-hearted zeal displayed by officers and membership in their personal support of the same, showing by their actions that they would rather the preacher had stayed away and not interrupted their quiet sleep. A live pastor will find plenty to do in cooperation with the evangelist in the revival meetings. Also, if the stake officer or district president can be present to aid, we believe it would be more in harmony with the recommendation in the law as found in Doctrine and Covenants 125: 4, "He is to labor in connection with the branch and district officers." So, brethren, please do not think that you are to take the back seat, or be put on the shelf when the revivalist comes to town; you are to work with him.

If the meetings do not meet with success at first, and there are Saints and friends who can come and do not come, for the sake of their souls and your own reward, do not stop there; double your efforts of persistency, and stick to it! Two or more weeks is not too long, if good can be possible, and hoped for. Too often an interest is just awakening, when some of the workers get weary and weak-kneed and want to quit. Let us stop running from ripe fields till the harvest is completed. True, this is not a day of many words, but neither is it the day for the "sealing up of the law or the binding up of the testimony," unless we seek diligently to find all who wish to be saved.

A successful revival of the Saints means also a revival of interest in the conversion of the world, for the true spirit of the work makes missionaries of nearly all. They will love to tell of the story that has been so sweet to their ears.

I have tried the plan of having those who wish to accept the gospel to come forward and give their hand to the pastor, while the singing is in progress, and I find that the way is a good one, for those who are ashamed to own Christ before men will be likely to be ashamed to own him at all. When one starts it often gives courage to others to come with him. In one place a good sister came up to accompany a timid one. May God bless any good way to awaken the sinner to receive the proffered hand to save.

All questions asked in sincerity should be plainly answered, and in a kindly spirit. This church has many things that seem strange to the man of the world, he must understand the why of them all.

A revival means, at all times, to keep things stirring and moving, for it is only still water that becomes stagnant. We feel that the branches everywhere are in need of revival work.

It is your privilege, dear Brother Pastor, to "invite or request" your evangelist to come and help you hold such a meeting in your branch; and if you do, put forth a special effort to make it a thorough campaign for the salvation of the souls of men. It is not a big time that we want, especially, but a spiritual time,—this is what does the good. A revival means a help to the old, the young, the Sunday school and the Religio, hence all may heartily join in the fight against sin, and for the coming of the Messiah, whose right it is to reign.

Realizing that some of these suggestions will sound strange to some, we only ask a fair trial, and then you can pass your verdict.

Ever trusting to be with the onward work of the Master for good we remain,

A servant for Christ,

AMMON WHITE.

HUMAN DISCOURAGEMENTS.

It is human nature to become discouraged. We sometimes look back over our past lives and seemingly see very little good.

Jacob stood before Pharaoh at the ripe old age of one hundred and thirty years, and said that his days had been "few and evil."

Moses became discouraged when leading the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt. He cried unto the Lord, "I am not able to bear all this people alone; if thou deal thus with me, kill me, I pray thee, out of hand, and let me not see my wretchedness."

Gideon was a man of faith, usually, but he was discouraged one day, and said the Lord had forsaken him, because he was delivered into the hands of the Midianites.

Job was a patient man, but he cried out, "My soul is weary of my life, I will utter, freely, my complaint upon myself."

Jeremiah, who made kings tremble, said, "Cursed be the day wherein I was born, for my days are consumed with shame."

Solomon was a wise man and he sounded the whole gamut of human experience, but he cried at the last that it was all vanity and vexation of spirit.

Discouragement and discontentment are two of the worst elements of human nature. Shakespeare has this to say:

Tired with all these,
For restful death, I pray.

Cooper longs for a lodge in some vast wilderness, where rumor of oppression and deceit could never reach him more, and then uses this language:

I could lie down like a tired child,
And weep away this life of care.

These great men became discouraged and weary and faint by the way. The fact is that sages, kings, and prophets were very much like the rest of us. The best of men at times grow weary and discouraged; like them, the most of us see times when we are tired of life's struggle; our defeats are so many and our victories so few that we are seldom prepared for the battle.

Our condition may seem wretched, indeed; but, as Saints, we should not allow ourselves to become discouraged beyond measure. God tells us he will not permit us to be burdened above that which we are able to bear. Brooding over the past only weakens us for the future. Paul tells us not to look back. We can not better our past lives, but we can look forward to the mark of our high calling which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Let us bear in mind the words of the poet:

Let us not be weary comrades,
Let us faint not by the way,
Though the night be long and dreary
Soon will dawn Millennium's day.
Let us keep the camp fires blazing
Let us sound abroad his word,
There are glorious victories coming
For the army of the Lord.

So, dear Saints, let us hold fast to the rod of iron until we reach the other shore. Let us be thankful that when we become discouraged we can go to our heavenly Teacher and he will lighten all our burdens. Let us not plunge into darkness and think to rid ourselves of our troubles by rushing into the presence of God unbidden and unprepared.

Of General Interest

THE PRESENT HELL.

There is a great deal of flippant talk about the abolition of hell. It seems to be the impression of many people that the possibility of suffering, symbolized by a material place of torment, has been eliminated from human life. As a matter of fact, hell, in the sense of inevitable and unmistakable punishment, is to-day far more a reality than it has ever been before. Whatever may be the sufferings through which men must go in the future in order to be purged of impurity, there is no question about the sufferings which they undergo in this present life. The answer of the man who asked if he believed in hell, "I do not believe in it; I know it, because I am in it," is a terse statement of what may be called the modern view of punishment for sin. It is not a punishment which is relegated to the future; it begins the moment the sin is committed. It is not a punishment which is local and exterior; it is a punishment which is wrought out in a man's nature. It is a thousandfold more terrible than the conception of hell as a place of external torment; for the hell of to-day gets its more tragic aspect from the fact that the men who are in it are often unconscious that they are in a place of torment. It is unspeakably pathetic to see a human being go down the hill of life physically from higher to lower levels, becoming less and less pure and more and more a slave; but the most terrible tragedy lies in the fact that the victim is often unconscious of the increasing degradation. It is the deadening of moral sensibilities, the blinding of the moral sight, the decay of the moral faculties, the dullness of vision, that constitute the real moral tragedy of living men and women voluntarily submitting without struggle to temptation; gradually, and often unconsciously, losing the power of seeing the difference between health and disease. They cut themselves off from the spiritual world, and are made skeptical by their blindness of vision. They can not see the mountains nor the stars which to people who have not injured their power of sight are always visible. They are like men and women in a great library who have misused their opportunities, mutilated the books, broken the rules, and, because the doors are not locked against them, think they have escaped punishment; while, as a matter of fact, there has come upon them day by day the awful tragedy of blindness; and, sitting in the midst of the treasures of the world, they are losing their power of seeing them.

The most terrible aspect of the modern conception of hell is that a man creates it for himself; it is a consequence of his own life. In "Man and Superman" Satan suggests to a woman who to her great surprise has found herself in hell that she ought to go to heaven for a while so that she might find out how uncomfortable she would be; and, in response to her question whether she would be allowed to make the experiment, she is informed that people stay in hell because it is the one place in which they find themselves at home!

People go to hell, not because they are sent there by a divine decree, but because they belong there. They go, as certainly as the harvest follows the sowing, by a law written in their natures. They can no more escape hell if they invite it than they can escape the succession of the seasons. There is nothing arbitrary or abnormal about it: God does not send men to places of torment; they go of their own volition. He does not impose it upon them by the use of arbitrary power; they elect to go, and they leave hope behind simply because they have thrown hope away. It makes very little difference what the theological conception of hell is, it remains and always will remain an appalling fact in the experience of humanity. It does not lie beyond the visible boundaries of the world; it does not wait to open its doors until death comes; the world is full of people who are already in hell whether they know it or not. And they are there because they have chosen to go. The pages of the newspapers furnish indisputable evidence that hell is a reality in this life, whatever it may be in the next stage of life, and that lost souls are going about in darkness in the everyday world.

So long as the human spirit gives itself to evil there is no place for it but hell. To such a one heaven would be just as much a place of torment as hell; while to a good man hell in any world would be a mere name. It has no more personal relation to him than the police courts have to the man who never breaks the law. Hell is a torment which comes to us because we invite it, as most things come to us; not suddenly nor tragically, but gradually and slowly as the ripening of our own thoughts and deeds.—Outlook, July 12, 1913.

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Our Possibilities.

We have been pleased to receive many letters of inquiry and encouragement. They come from the far West, the South, the Middle States, and the Eastern ones, and everywhere we are finding that there seems to be some one rising up to whom this music movement appeals very strongly.

Sisters in Denver and Los Angeles are preparing to organize children's choruses. Sisters in East Saint Louis and Kirtland are struggling with the young people's choir ideas. A brother in Iowa has had a distinct choir organization in active operation for some time.

Sister Martin, of Perry, Iowa, sends us an appeal for better and more comprehensive work for the children beginning to study music. This letter will appear shortly, and personally we are anxious to impress the importance of her suggestions upon every teacher of music. We should interest and instruct the children more as to the why of music. They have been struggling long and aimlessly with the how!

If we teach every child in the church from now on, the rules and principles of composition and harmony, and if we also develop them spiritually may we not reasonably hope that those of the rising generation of Latter Day Saint musicians will take their places as composers of music as well as performers? We have been sleeping on our rights in this regard. Let us awake, and, looking to Zion and its redemption, to the beautiful temple of our dreams and its glorious choir, with its inspired music, let us teach and study, that from our own ranks may come those who shall write the wonderful and soul-satisfying songs of Zion.

Music an International Language.

A leaflet has come to our hands, written by Daniel Gregory Mason, assistant professor of music in Columbia University. This pamphlet is called, Music As an International Language, and is published by the American Association for International Conciliation. This little leaflet is very much worth reading, and we would that we might reproduce it entire. We offer one extract, at least, which follows the subject of, Folk Music, in which the writer pointed out that the charm of folk music was that of "local color"—some quaintness or peculiarity interesting to that particular locality, or nation.

"Music does much, then, to interpret nations to each other, by seizing upon, and presenting persuasively the salient, individualizing traits of each. But perhaps it does even more by giving noble and universally intelligible expression to the human qualities common to all. Was not Tschaikowsky right when, instead of joining the Nationalists, Balakirev, Cui, and the rest, who were exploiting the Russian folk-music to the exclusion of all else, he set himself to study the best music of the world, and to acquire an eclectic and cosmopolitan style? Is there not something inspiring in the breadth of view suggested by his answer to a lady who asked him what was his ideal?—'My ideal,' he replied, 'is to write beautiful music.'

"Beauty in music, he doubtless realized, was something far wider than this or that piquant cadence or turn of melody; it was the result of a divination that plumbed deeper than the national peculiarities; it was not Russian, but human. Had he not thus felt that what we may call the international sense of music was even more precious than it, national interpretation, he could hardly have stirred, as he has done, music-lovers all over the world.

"It has often been pointed out that the greatest poets speak to the widest audience, that Shakespeare, Goethe, Dante are understood in some measure by all men, and that what they say is so universal that we are apt to forget which is English, which German, and which Italian. The same thing is true, I think, of the greatest composers: Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Wagner, Brahms, happen all to be German, it is true; but that seems rather accidental than essential to their quality. And in our own day, when intercommunication has so reduced the insulating power of space it is surely a world-language that is spoken (with varying accents, of course) by such men as Strauss in Germany, d'Indy in France, Elgar in England, Rachmaninoff in Russia, and that is understood by music-lovers the world over."

Notes of the Staff.

The hot weather seems to have put an effectual quietus upon musical activity among us,—at least if the dearth of notes sent in to the Staff editor may be taken as an indication of conditions.

Some weeks ago, Sister Marguerite Wickes, and Sister Edna Fike, both pianists of ability, connected with the Chicago Musical College, assisted by Sister Minna Mae Lewis and Sister Aura Fike, readers, and Brother Hoxie, violinist, gave a concert in Chicago, which was largely attended and gave enthusiastic pleasures. Sisters Wickes and Lewis, since returning to their home in Lamoni, have given several concerts there, and in nearby towns, invariably pleasing their hearers.

Brother Charles Eaton is conducting the large Sunday school orchestra at the Stone Church, Independence, since the departure of Brother Arthur Mills. Independence Saints are anticipating with pleasure the next concert to be given by this live group of musicians.

"Atheism Has No Music."

Dear Sister Anderson: The promise you exacted for a contribution for the musical column has caused me much mental stress with almost no appreciable result, except an effort to keep my promise.

As to music, what would the world do without it? Shakespeare said:

"The man who hath not music in himself, and is not moved with concord of sweet sounds, is fit for treason, stratagems, and spoils; let no man trust him."

I heard this quoted when a boy, quite a good many years ago, and some years of mature experience have convinced me that Shakespeare wrote from wide experience among mankind, and that his observation, instead of being made at random, was not so very wide of the mark.

As your invitation for a contribution included local choir experiences, it may be permissible to tell a little circumstance that brought this old saying to my mind with some force.

About a year ago, our minister in charge, Brother F. M. Sheehy, while here, was invited by the local president of a society which claims the mission of bringing to pass and establishing universal peace and benefit to mankind independently of the gospel of Jesus Christ, to speak in their "Open-Forum" on Sunday afternoon. He was to be the principal speaker for twenty or thirty minutes, to be followed by five-minute speeches from their own reviewers, or "sharpshooters"; Brother Sheehy to have the closing talk. Brother Sheehy demurred, saying his talk would be opposed to their theories, but yielded to the renewed invitation on that understanding.

Brother Sheehy's address covered some of the fundamental principles of the gospel, as we understand them, including the fatherhood of God as an essential with the brotherhood of man, and presented the financial plan of the gospel and the United Order of Enoch as measures for the solution of the economic troubles of the times. There may have been, and I think probably were, a few in the audience who were willing to consider the gospel plan, but the leaven of the society as indicated by their own speakers was decidedly against anything of even God's planning to meet the necessities of humanity.

The same evening their president, who was one time a minister of the gospel, accepted Brother Sheehy's invitation to speak in our church. Some of our usual hymns were sung, and an anthem was rendered by the choir with good spirit, which must have been the right source, for he openly acknowledged the uplifting power of good music. He preached a pretty good sermon, mostly on gospel lines, and urgently invited the choir to come and sing our same songs for them, that their people might hear and feel the effects of religious music as he had felt it, for, he said, "Religion is the only thing that produces music."

I am not sure of his exact words, but that was the thought conveyed. That remark seemed very peculiar and almost startling to us, and in connection with his other remarks induced the singers, even in the face of some adverse views, to accept the invitation, on the condition, however, that we should be clearly announced as the choir of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This was done in their advertising, and also by announcement from the platform on the following Sunday, when the choir responded with a couple of their best anthems, extolling the "great and marvelous" works of God, and rejoicing that the "Lord is King." That remark about music and religion at first seemed without foundation, but now with the lapse of time it seems to draw nearer and nearer to the truth.

After all, evil does not employ music in the execution of its work, it frequently is used to entice and lure, especially into saloons and such places, but that would properly be a perversion of music, which would be fatal to the safe blower, or the art of the man who makes his livelihood by stealth.

Handel frankly acknowledges the inspiration of a heavenly vision in writing "The Messiah."

The old farm saying that the man who goes whistling to his work is the one who brings in the hat full of eggs, is indicative of a truth.

A child singing about its work or play, involuntarily stops singing when it senses a consciousness of wrong, or that which prompts secrecy.

A man guilty, in his heart, of a crime, may sing to try and maintain an innocent appearance, but not to strengthen himself in the execution of an unholy plot; crime enjoins secrecy and silence, and seals the lips as well as the heart.

Righteousness unseals the lips, produces an open countenance, a frank heart that bubbles over with joyousness and good-natured song, and the addition of religion directs the music towards devotion to the Supreme Being. The righteous man will sing praises to God even in a dungeon.

All the turkey buzzards in the world can not equal the music of one little canary; and a flock of chicken hawks could not produce the music of one nightingale.

A concord of sounds might express and convey the gamut of feelings of the human soul, but not all would be music. The Lord says, "But song with grievous sadness in them that sing and bitterness of spirit in them that hear is not pleasing to God." So even an accurate technical rendition of a correct composition is not, of itself, music, while tender songs from a heart full of love and sympathy, carrying words of trust and faith in an all-wise Father, in spite of a technical error, may bring relief of mind, relax the tension, beget reconciliation, produce peace, and trust and hope in a heart that is bowed down with "grievous sadness," providing it is not prevented by "bitterness of spirit." (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6.)

What would the human heart do without music?

I think the most desolate sadness I ever witnessed was a mother's sorrow at her child's funeral,—without music.

I can not close without adding my appreciation of the general choir movement and the splendid results already achieved. Remember the watchword, "All in favor; hurry up!"

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

Children's Amusements.

When one speaks of amusements, the mind receives an impression of pleasure. This is primarily the natural result, but many valuable points in the formation of character may be impressed upon the child in pursuit of pleasure. The most prominent of these are self-reliance, perseverance, and generosity.

Self-reliance is quickly developed if the child be taught to seek his own amusements about the house or yard. He will soon learn that he can find many interesting things. His inventive brain and fingers will fashion many toys. Hours will be happily spent which would otherwise be a bore to the child and a source of annoyance to the mother. Self-reliance in his amusements will grow into his character, and, when older, it will be a rock of defense when he must face the world as a carver of his own fortunes.

Perseverance can be taught by encouraging the child to play with one toy a long time, instead of changing every few minutes. One game begun should be followed to the end; instead of tiring of it when partly finished and abandoning it.

These are apparently insignificant things, but they are very powerful in the formation of a child's character. Perseverance was one of the prominent traits which made Lincoln a great man. He thought nothing of walking miles every day to obtain his limited education. He walked twenty miles to borrow the first grammar he ever saw.

Generosity. Where there is only one child in a family it is hard to prevent its being selfish; but, where there are more than one, the mother should see that none harbor a selfish spirit. If near the same age, they may many times want the same thing, and then the beauty of unselfishness must be taught.

Children like to be reasoned with and shown why certain things should not be done, but sometimes the mother is too busy or too tired to do this, and finds it so much easier to order one child to give up to another; but this procedure may make one child selfish and the other sullen. It is better to lead a child to give up cheerfully and to accept favors with courtesy.

Children may be trained to enjoy things in simplicity. The first thing to attract an infant is the light. If laid down, it will gradually turn its head until the eyes meet the light; then it will lie in perfect contentment, if the eyes are not too weak to stand the glare. It is a needless waste of money to buy expensive toys for a child. He will devote his affections to some homemade object which he can handle roughly, without breaking it or being warned to be careful.

Lives there a child with soul so dead that it does not love a rag doll? No beauty in dolls will hold the dearest affections of a little girl's heart as does the rag doll. The lesson taught is that of simplicity. Unspoiled, we naturally love those things which are least elaborate. Children like a slate, a pencil, and a bit of paper or blackboard, which may afford much amusement during rainy days when they must stay indoors. One mother bought copies of famous paintings which she mounted on a strip of cloth and fastened them around the nursery walls just high enough for the children to reach. With some instruction from her they colored these pictures with their water colors, the result of the work being a source of pride to them and an ornament to the room. At the same time, the children became acquainted with good pictures.

A pair of blunt scissors afford a child interesting occupation in cutting bright-colored papers into many wonderful things which may not be recognized until we are told their names. A lump of putty affords him that which he may fashion into many objects. A scrapbook is of lasting interest to a child. A discarded book in which he may paste pictures he especially likes may become one of his dearest treasures.

The delight of every child is a sand pile. With buckets, shovels, old spoons, and the sand pile, many happy hours may be spent. Outdoor sports should be encouraged, that the fresh air and exercise may build up a sound constitution, that fundamental physical blessing which every child should have.

Children are not naturally idle, and work appeals to even the smallest of them. Let them help you plant the seeds and watch them grow. Give them indoors tasks also, talking to them pleasantly and encouraging them to do those things to give help and pleasure to father or mother. By nature children love to please, if not made to feel that their work is drudgery or that they must do it by compulsion.

Doing for Himself.

Miss Carolyn Sherwin Bailey, who is now in Rome studying the educational system developed by Doctor Maria Montessori, emphasizes as one of the first things noted, that the children are trained to do things for themselves. Her very interesting description of a morning spent with the children of a certain school, pictures a little child of four years as coming eagerly to the room, the first baby to arrive, as finding her own little apron on its hook within her reach, putting it on, and buttoning it in the back. At the luncheon time this same little child of four placed on the little tables with dainty precision the plates, knives, forks, and spoons needed. She brought with carefulness a tray bearing five tumblers, and performed happily other preparation for the approaching meal.

The happiest, most contented children are those trained early to do things for themselves and others, and to find their own amusements, as suggested in the article above.

Few Toys.

We gather from certain printed articles that have come under our notice that Queen Wilhelmina of Holland has been somewhat criticized because she allows her little daughter so few toys. "The little girl," says one, "has been known to play with the same doll for three months!"

In reply to this criticism a defender of the queen writes: "Suppose the little princess does play with one doll for three months: suppose she only owns one doll: what of that? She is certainly a contented child, as the writer happens to know: healthy, happy, and unspoiled. What we should comment on rather is the fact that the Kingdom of the Netherlands is fortunate to have a queen who is so sensible a mother as to let her child have only one doll at a time. We forget that when amusements are few the childish imagination will supply them, but that when they are too many the childish mind is overburdened and the mental effect is not unlike what the physical effect would be if the stomach were overloaded.

"One of the most potent causes of restlessness in American children is the abundance of toys and other amusements lavished upon them by thoughtless friends and relatives. One toy is thrown aside for another before its possibilities are half realized. The result is nervousness and stunted mental development for the child. It is a simple case of overfeeding causing undernourishing.

"And the root is selfishness. Toys are easier to give than ideas, and the average American mother would rather stifle her child's restlessness with new diversions than give time and effort necessary to help him work out his own entertainment with what he has.

"Let us see good in Queen Wilhelmina's excellent example with her little child. If the little princess can now control herself as a child with her toys, she will be better able to control her kingdom when she is a queen. If we taught our children a little more control with their toys, perhaps in later life they might be better able to control their children: a particular job of which the American mother is to-day making such a lamentable failure."

Simplicity in Desires.

The following scene is described to us in a reliable journal and should be a vivid warning to us to guard our children against extravagant desires and indulgence:

A mother and her little son were seated at the table in a hotel where you pay a dollar for a meal and order what you wish. The mother read to her child the list of dishes on the card and told him he might have anything he wished. He ordered freely and wastefully, only tasting of the dishes he ordered in such profusion. When the waiter remarked that he did not eat much, the mother answered that she would have had to pay as much for a simple dish of oatmeal as for what he had ordered. We quote the following comment on her action:

"To satisfy her own desire not to be defrauded in quantity she had given her son an object-lesson in food waste—the waste that is an immense factor in the cost of living in this country. Would it not have been better if that mother had paid one dollar for a single dish of oatmeal, from which her little son might have made a meal, than to have inculcated into his mind the idea that waste is ever defensible?"

She indulged her child, not thinking of the effect upon him.

The Little Girl's Doll.

They tell me that when I was a little girl, too young to remember it, my grandmother once bought me a doll, and that when she gave it to me, I clasped it to my breast and danced about the room exclaiming, "Oh, how I love it! Oh, how I love it!"

So frequently of late, I have noticed little girls with their dolls. One day, as I walked along a business street of our town, I met two little girls, about seven years of age, each with her doll in her arms. I saw another little girl one evening on the reunion grounds. She had come down from town with her father and mother, and, while older ones sat listening to the sermon, she nursed her doll on the outskirts of the tent.

One of the speakers of the reunion said, in one of his talks, that it always pleased him to see a little girl nursing her doll. I think he had the same thought many of us have, that the little girl loves her doll out of the abundance of the motherly instinct that is in every normal little girl's heart, and which should be fostered by those who have her training.

I saw another little girl on the reunion grounds. She was not nursing a doll, but a live baby. She called my attention to its charms and, when I asked if she liked to take care of the baby, she answered heartily and brightly. And this reminds me that recently I saw an article in a daily paper, entitled, "Little mothers." Its tenor was encouragement of that which we have often heard deplored, the nursing of the baby by its older sister.

The article I refer to suggested that it is well to foster in the older child the mothering instinct. Recently I heard a young girl spoken of with sympathy because she had always had the care of babies in the home, but that young girl is making one of the nicest little primary teachers in Sunday school, as she will some day make one of the best of mothers. She is perfectly at home in the best of spheres for a young girl, in the company of children.

This leads off to a great subject, for which there is not time or space here. Returning to the little girl's doll, we suggest that the rag doll so often held up to us as the object of high esteem in a child's affections need not be that old, dirty, besmirched object the rag doll so often is. My own little rag dolls are still in my memory as objects of beauty, because every time I played, they were made up new from the prettiest pieces of my mother's scraps. She kept them in a large basket which corresponds to the ragbag of some other mothers.

That basket of new scraps gave me unlimited enjoyment. It gave opportunity to exercise my own inventiveness in making and dressing my doll. She was always new and clean, pretty and bright. I had a large doll, given me by a lady who won it at a fair. It was so large that its dress, jacket, and shoes might have been worn by a small baby, but this big, clumsy, staring creature never gave me a tithe of the pleasure I had in my bright little rag babies.

The opening article of the Column is right in presenting the thought that our children should be encouraged to find enjoyment in simple things.

The Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE FOURTH THURSDAY IN AUGUST.

Sunday Schools, Religio, and auxiliary departments of church work. That they may fulfill their purpose and help on in spiritual life and enlightenment.

Book of Alma 16: 139-143, large edition. Memory verse, Alma 16: 101.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

To the Prayer Union: On the ninth day of July, my husband, T. J. Lawn, fell from a building on which he was working and broke his right ankle in several places. He also broke and badly dislocated his left elbow, his left wrist was badly sprained, and there were several other bruises. He is in the hospital and doing as well as can be expected, but he requests special prayers of the Saints for complete recovery.

Yours in Christ,

Mrs. T. J. LAWN.

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, 2710 D Street.

Dear Herald: I am writing to ask the Saints to pray for my niece, Mrs. Martha Murphy, 1621 Pinkney Street, Omaha, Nebraska. She is sick and depressed over the loss of a relative. It may be that if some of those who have time would write a few cheering words to this sad and afflicted one, it would mean much to her.

From your sister in Christ,

MRS. FRANK KEARNES.

Letter Department

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK, July 27, 1913.

Editors Herald: We eagerly await the weekly visit of the SAINTS' HERALD. With interest we scan its pages. How our hearts throb with joy when we read of the advance of the work in other parts of the world! We accept regularly this blessing and as regularly do we fail to acknowledge the benefit we have thus received, as did all but one of the lepers that were healed by our Savior. I trust my fault in this regard in the past may be forgiven. Doubtless I experience the same timidity about seeing my name subscribed to a letter in the HERALD as do many of my brethren and sisters. Is this as it should be? No such thought enters our minds when we write to our immediate family; on the contrary, we expect they will at least tell about, if not show our letter to all our relatives and friends in the locality where they reside. Why, then, should we be fearful lest others of the household of faith should know of our trials and temptations, our hopes and successes? Does not the wealth of light and love that enriches our souls, brought to us through the columns of the HERALD and other church papers, claim occasionally a hearty response from our pens?

Last Wednesday morning at one o'clock the Cunard Line steamship Mauretania moved out majestically from her pier into the harbor. By the railing could be seen the commanding figure of our brother, U. W. Greene, towering above those beside him. He would now and again wave his handkerchief to those on the pier, and then rest his chin upon his hand with his elbow upon the rail. As we observed the expression of his countenance, amid the din of the blowing whistles and shoutings of fond good-byes and bon voyage, there was brought to us a realization of the meaning of the scriptural statement, "He steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem."

A singular coincidence happened the day before Brother Greene sailed. He had been at the steamship pier completing the necessary arrangements for the voyage, and returning was walking up Fourteenth Street, when who should he meet but Father Newton, who had also taken passage, as it was afterward learned, upon the Mauretania.

They were, of course, glad to greet each other, and the Brooklyn Saints were made happy by meeting our aged brother once more. May his presence bring strength and joy to those among whom he labors.

A short time ago we were favored with a visit from our missionary in charge, Brother Paul Hanson. I trust when opportunity permits he will call again. The work in Brooklyn is progressing. Brother E. B. Hull, our pastor, and his faithful companion are welcomed as earnest workers in our midst. May we all be as sincere and active.

The gospel of Jesus Christ! 'Tis wonderful! 'Tis marvelous,—the force, the power that ministers to our every need; the sympathy, the light, the love, the truth it brings as we endeavor to adapt our conduct to its standard. What a breadth of vision; what a depth of understanding; what fellowship of noble souls; and what sweet communion of the Holy Spirit! With feelings of intense solicitude for the proclamation of the gospel and the bearer of its glad tidings, I hope ever to be worthy to be considered,

Your fellow servant,

B. R. MCGUIRE.

BOLCKOW, MISSOURI, July 23, 1913.

Editors Herald: This has been a very busy season for the farmers in this part of the country. Corn looks fine, and at present promises good results, nothing unusual preventing from now on. Small grain is all harvested in fair shape. Wheat was down and tangled very much, but the major part was gathered into bundles; and now the hum of the thrasher is heard. There are four machines within a radius of three miles. One man near here had one hundred and thirty acres that averaged thirty bushels per acre. By the time this is read the majority of the small grain in this country will be thrashed and in the granary or on the market. Much of it goes direct from the machine to the car, and is marketed in Saint Joseph, Saint Louis, or Chicago. Brother T. A. Ivie, president of this district, is in the wheat pit now, receiving wheat from four or five machines at the same time. Wheat is selling at seventy-four to seventy-eight cents.

Our district missionary, Brother J. W. A. Bailey, came into the district on May 21. Landing at Guilford he met with the Saints in prayer meeting that evening, and the following evening preached his first sermon in the district, which was the beginning of a meeting of seventeen days in the town. He succeeded in arousing quite an interest, so we had large crowds. The music and singing under the leadership of W. T. Ross was a feature of the meetings. The district tent was pitched on the church lawn. The crowds ranged from one hundred and fifty to three hundred.

On the evening of June 5, the Ladies' Aid Society gave an ice cream and cake social which netted them eighteen dollars. All join in to say that it was the best social that was ever put on in Guilford. On June 8, a basket dinner was enjoyed by a large crowd, Saints from the Bedison and Sweet Home branches being present. Brother Bailey went from here to the Bedison Branch and labored there till the district conference held at Sweet Home Branch, June 21 and 22. On June 15, the Guilford Sunday school observed Children's Day, rendering a program before a large crowd. The

Guilford Times says of it, "We voice the sentiment of everyone that it was the best yet."

The financial department of this work must be sustained. It is one of the things that will assist in the redemption of Zion. As a body, a church, we should work as a well-regulated family, each and all working for the good and welfare of the whole,—spiritually, morally, financially. Let us all, therefore, put our shoulders to the wheel, financially, and move this great work forward and onward. Let us all respond doubly to the call of our worthy bishop, and place the financial arm of the church in shape to carry on the work as it should be done.

On June 21 and 22, the district conference met and transacted the business necessary. One young brother, Rosco P. Ross, was ordained to the office of priest. There were quite a number of young people at the conference, who if they at all times kept their minds on the work of the Lord, would develop into influential workers in the army of the Lord. Our next conference will convene in Guilford; Brother J. W. Rush-ton will be in attendance, and we hope to have a good, spiritual feast. The Spirit was enjoyed at our last conference.

The writer spoke on the temporal law to the few Saints who were present at Guilford last Sunday. We will visit the Bedison Branch next Sunday, and the other branches so soon as convenient, and will endeavor, in our weak way, trusting in the Lord, to present the temporal needs of the work.

I was glad to have the privilege of attending the last General Conference. I saw and heard things that strengthened me in the divine part of this work. Humanity is weak. Very often we encounter mistakes made by man that try the faith of some. The mistakes of man should not affect our faith if we have evidence of the divinity of the work. I met much opposition when I came into the work. God stood by me and whispered peace to my spiritual understanding. I would not turn back from this work over the frivolous weaknesses manifested upon the part of man. Yet, I must say, the trials from without do not have the weight that those within have. Let us, however, as Saints, be determined to conquer self and every evil that is brought to bear upon us, from whatever source it may come.

May the good Lord bless and prosper his Saints is the hope of your brother,

W. B. TORRANCE.

COLON, NEBRASKA, July 24, 1913.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the Reorganized Church since the spring of 1865, being at the time nearly twenty years old. I have had my ups and downs, and have known for a good while that mankind is very weak. I might have fallen had it not been for the truth of the gospel of the Son of God. He that doeth the will of the Father shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God I speak, or of myself,—I know these words are true.

I have labored in this the Northwestern Nebraska District since the spring of 1911. The Lord has been very kind to me in making known his great will to man. I have not lacked for anything that was promised by the Master; according to my faith I have received.

Last winter, while going from house to house preaching the gospel and leaving tracts, a lady told me that her husband's family were nearly all Latter Day Saints, and that they live five miles northwest of Walthill. When I reached that place I got off the train, and stayed all night with an old friend I had known in Iowa. The next morning, early, I began to look for a ride out to the Saints I had heard of. I found an opportunity just before dark. The man I rode with directed me to the place to which I wanted to go. I found the house, knocked at the door, was admitted, and inroduced myself. The lady said they were not Latter Day Saints, that they were Seventh Day Adventists; but she assured me that I was as welcome as though they had been Saints. I thanked her, and did not forget to thank the Lord for his loving care. A blizzard came on that night, but I was well cared for till the storm was over. For two days we laid our faiths side by side. This woman agreed with our faith except on two points; she stayed with her seventh day Sabbath, and the unconscious state of the dead. She is a Christian in a moral way, also in the matter of charity.

I have labored in the Winnebago Indian Reservation, preaching in their houses and in a tent during the spring and part of the summer. They listen well, and keep good order. Since I became acquainted with so many they like to ask questions about our faith. The Utah people have given them many Books of Mormon. They tell me they like the Book of Mormon, that it teaches them about God.

I think this is a hard district to labor in, because it is large, and the Saints are widely scattered, making it necessary to travel considerably.

I am thankful for the gospel, and desire to set forth the love of God contained therein.

Your brother in the one faith,

R. O. MANN.

ODELL, TEXAS, July 27, 1913.

Editors Herald: I came here nearly five years ago and introduced our work. Brethren B. F. Renfro, S. W. Simmons, and W. M. Aylor have been here and have done good work. Our crowds were all that could be expected, and interest was good. Our success stirred up the adversary, through one of his agents, which resulted in a debate. We had large crowds, and I am glad to say it was Brother S. W. Simmons' conflict, under God, from the very beginning. At the close Brother Simmons baptized thirteen, and the opponent none.

Prejudice continued and finally resulted in the closing of the schoolhouse. This was the only effectual way they had of attacking the gospel. So we began preaching in another schoolhouse in Odell. Finally they began to charge a dollar a day for this one. And, to cap the climax, they are now trying the home rule—they stay away. Brother Simmons followed them, and preached on the street. It is difficult to find anyone who will talk religion; they are afraid to do so. So far as honesty is concerned, the Saints are held in high esteem by them; but they do not want our religion.

I asked the editor of our paper, some four months ago, to announce preaching services; he replied that prejudice was so great that he could not, unless I would insert the announcement as an advertisement. I have taken it kindly, and have been trying to do as a Saint should. I wrote an article the other day and sent it to him to publish, which he did, and I feel somewhat encouraged, as the bitterness of prejudice, at least, seems banished.

May the Lord help the Saints throughout the country to have the things so much needed both spiritually and temporarily is my prayer.

M. CROWNOVER.

MACHIAS, MAINE, July 22, 1913.

Editors Herald: I left my home in Independence, Missouri, June 27, for the rockbound coast of Maine, where I was born over sixty-nine years ago.

I found the church here at a low ebb. But many remarked that our social meeting last Sunday was the most spiritual they had enjoyed for some time, many feeling it high time to renew their covenant with God, and try to live better.

My first Sunday out, I stopped at Chicago; I met with the good Spirit, and we had a lovely time. I spoke several times, and confirmed two that Henry Keir had baptized that day.

Sister Sloan was guide for me from one branch to the other. I was kindly entertained by Brother and Sister James F. Keir.

I left their home on the elevated car for the Wabash station. I told the conductor where I wanted to get off, and after he had carried me three stations too far he said to me, "You ought to have gotten off when I called out Wabash station." I replied, "My dear man, I could not understand a word you said; I thought you were practicing ventriloquism. I can understand a little Greek and Latin, but I don't understand 'Garlic'."

I arrived in Boston the next evening at eight o'clock, one hour late. Found "Old Fatty" there to escort me to his home. I met the branch on Wednesday night, and enjoyed their meeting. I visited my niece and the Fisher College. I found perfect order in this building; each one was paying strict attention to his or her own business. I thought of my church,—each member should do the same. I stayed there two days, leaving on the steamboat for Rockland, Maine.

I was there with Brother and Sister Henry Huntly two days. Going by boat to Vinal Haven, I stayed over Sunday and spoke three times and administered the sacrament. I left here for Stonington, where I stayed one night with Brother and Sister Henry Robins, and called on Uncle Asa O. Candage, whom I found very poorly and failing fast from the effects of a paralytic stroke. I next called at Bar Harbor, the great summer resort, and preached three times to the few who came out.

There I met a Baptist minister, a Mr. Sampson. I felt by his talk that he was a very poor Sampson. He had the old, old Solomon Spalding story to tell. He said there were seventy people of New York who testified on oath that the Smiths were the worst people they had among them, and that Old Joe was the worst of all. I said that the seventy people belonged to Old Joe's church, and so they knew what they said was true. Well, no, he said, they did not belong to Joe's church. I said I thought so, and asked if he did not know that the Bible says that Jesus was a winebibber, and cast out devils by the power of Beelzebub. I asked if he believed that these statements concerning Christ were true. He replied that the enemies of Christ said that about him. I then urged that these seventy people whom he had mentioned were Joseph Smith's enemies, and that they lied about the man of God.

I arrived here July 11, and to date have preached seven sermons and attended several meetings. Next Sunday I expect to be at Dennisport. I will visit Head Harbor, Beals Island, Indian River, and Addison, and then return here after haying is over.

Along this coast of Maine is where I labored hard for twelve years before I went West. During those twelve years we raised up eight branches and helped raise up several others. Many that I led into the light of the gospel have passed to the great beyond. It makes me feel sad to see such a falling away since I left here in 1882.

I am yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

EVERETT, WASHINGTON, July 18, 1913.

Editors Herald: I was very much interested in the article, "An easy lesson in hygiene," in the HERALD for June 25. At the time of obeying the gospel two years ago I heard the sisters speak of the Word of Wisdom. I supposed from the conversations that it was something new which accounted for the differences of opinion concerning it. To my surprise I found, some time later, that this revelation had been given near the beginning of the church, in these last days. Before the truthfulness of this gospel was made known to me, I had read a book which treated on proper foods and the changes which foods undergo in mixing them together, and it seemed reasonable to me. After obeying the gospel and learning of the Word of Wisdom (the word of God revealed to us) it seemed reasonable to me that the statements made there were for our best good.

I tried with the Lord's help to obey and observe the things mentioned in choosing the food which I should eat. I knew I was benefited spiritually and physically. But the thought would creep in, maybe it does not mean hot drinks; maybe it means something else when it says fruits in season; maybe it does not mean, eat meat only in times of cold, etc. I have tested and failed; tested, and faltered again, until it is beyond the testing point now in my mind. I am convinced that it is best for me to heed and obey the Word of Wisdom. The all-important result is the abiding presence of the Spirit and the manifestations of the same. When I try some other way, thinking it does not mean what it says, it is very noticeable that the Spirit is withdrawn from me. This wonderful gift of God is worth striving for.

Among the prophetic statements made under the hands of Brother J. C. Foss in my confirmation was this one, As heretofore you have had but just a little ray of light; we promise you upon obedience you shall rejoice in God your Savior as you have never done before. At the time these words were spoken I could not understand how it could be possible that I had had only a little ray of light, for I had received much comfort in striving to live a Christian life as I understood it. But it was only a very short time until I began to realize the truthfulness of the statement, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." I am rejoicing in the precious angel message.

Let us as Saints of the living God strive to keep the words of God, whether he says, "It is pleasing unto me," or whether he gives direct command.

The evil power is ever cunning in its devices to weaken the nations. Is it not weakening the race, and that means body, mind, and soul, when we eat as sustenance for our bodies those combinations which we call food which scientists unite in denouncing? As Saints of God, with his direct revelation on this very matter, are we not sleeping, are we not letting the oil in our lamps become low by not heeding the instructions given in the Word of Wisdom? Did not the Hebrew boys hold fast to their teaching, eating plain food; and did not the God who gave the commandment preserve them by his power in the day of need? His arm is not shortened, neither has he become slack in his ways.

I thank God that the gospel message was told to me. It was a number of years after first hearing of it before it was made known to me that it was the true gospel of Christ. I rejected it because in my heart I thought it was wrong, and I hardened my heart against listening to it. I knew the Saints understood what the others did not, but I shut my heart against the message. But the Lord drew me. I came through many afflictions. The seed took root. I sought here and there to find the Bible taught as it reads. I found some imitations which interested me and I investigated them, but they did not answer the yearning of my soul. I became anxious to know more about even the Latter Day Saints,—just a desire to be informed of their position, I thought. It was while in the Sanitarium that the truth came to me that this work is of God. And I then wished to become a member of this church. I might add that the evil power then tried to cause me to procrastinate; but it did not prevail, and I soon entered the waters of baptism.

Last October I saw in a dream, or vision (which blessing was promised me at confirmation), a gold block or cube which was about four feet long, and a foot each way in thickness. This was suspended by a gold bar from above, and underneath this floated a personage. I seemed to know that the personage was one of the apostles in the time of Christ. From the other scenes of the dream and the interpretation which was given me I understood that the gold bar was the time the gospel was first explained to me. The features of the apostle are not so clear in my memory, but I wonder if I am faithful to the end if I will not know then which one it was. In another vision received in February, 1912, I saw our Savior. A wonderful degree of the Spirit accompanied this visitation. I feel sure if I am faithful to the end that I will know him.

I humbly ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may become more like him, our great example, that I may profit by my mistakes, that each to-day may be better than yesterday.

Your sister in the gospel,
DAISY LYDIA OLIVER.

GRIDLEY, CALIFORNIA, July 22, 1913.

Editors Herald: I came here from Michigan, April 21. I came via El Paso, Texas, Tucson, Arizona, and Los Angeles, so had a chance to see considerable country. I had the pleasure of meeting a few times with the Saints at Chico, which I enjoyed very much. I have found no Saints in or around Gridley; if this should reach any I would be glad to hear from them.

There are 670 Utah Mormons here. While walking down the street with some gentlemen one day, one of them asked a man who lives here what church was represented by a certain building, and he was told that it was the Latter Day Saints. The other man said to me, "Frank, that's your church." I told him that it was not. I have had the pleasure of explaining to a good many the difference between the two churches. I would like to have some elder come here; I believe that a good work could be done. I miss the good meetings and Saints that had been dear to me; but I believe there was a purpose in my coming here.

For a man of small means there is probably no better place in California than this section of the Sacramento Valley. The climate is fine here; it gets quite warm during the day, but the nights are cool. The water is good. Land can be bought for from seventy-five dollars per acre up, according to location and improvements. Ten acres of alfalfa will keep ten cows, a few hogs, and enough chickens for a family. Alfalfa land seeded is about two hundred dollars per acre. Common labor is $2.50 a day; carpenter work is $3.50 for eight hours. There are some things that are a little higher than in the East, but clothing, flour, and sugar are as cheap here as there. We would be glad to have some families of Saints move here if they are coming this way.

I have attended the Mormon Church since I came here, and must say that I do not see how they could drift any farther away. When they have their sacrament meeting those who come late can not come in until they are through, and they do not get their portion, either. They have four officers to bless the bread and wine, or water, and there are four boys about ten years old who pass the emblems around. They administer to everybody large enough to eat and drink. I do not know of a church more worldly in their practices. They have a large hall out in their colony where they have their dances, card parties, wine drinking, etc.

I hope the time will come when we can have a branch organized here, so we can hold the true gospel banner high above the false one. Now, Brother Missionary, when you are going this way do not forget to stop at Gridley. If you can, bring the gospel tent.

With best wishes for the accomplishment of God's work,
I remain,

Your brother and colaborer in the gospel work,

G. F. ALBERTSON.

Clinton, Missouri.

I realize that the Saints in the different parts of the world like to learn of the success of the work. So far this conference year the writer has had the privilege of leading sixteen precious souls into the waters of baptism and many others are almost persuaded. This is one field of which it can truly be said, The harvest is great but the laborers are few. May the time speedily come when we will have a large army to answer the many calls for preaching.

At present I am with the tent. My wife is with me, and assist in the meeting, also does the cooking for the camp. Brethren Macrae and Shirk have been with me, but the first named brother was called home to work on the new church at Knobnoster, and the second was called home on account of the death of his father. Brother Roy S. Budd, of Eldorado Springs, came and assisted me about ten days, but he had made arrangements so he could not stay any longer. His help was very much appreciated.

We are having quite an interesting meeting here. There are no Saints in the immediate vicinity, but the Saints of the Butler Branch, about seven miles away, come and assist us. They are making quite an effort to warn their neighbors.

Our reunion begins August 22 at Rich Hill, and we are expecting a spiritual feast.

Ever working and praying for the redemption of Zion, I am

Your brother in Christ,

AMOS T. HIGDON.

Ohio.

Brother J. W. Hardin and I are engaged in tent work in Youngstown, Ohio, a city of one hundred thousand inhabitants, composed of Jews, Greeks, Italians, Negroes, and Americans, about twenty-five thousand of each. Our tent is located on a lot of Sister D. M. Stracham's. Her husband was an active worker in the church, being an elder; he departed this life about six years ago. His labors are frequently made mention of by the Saints. Through the kindness of the Sharon Saints we are granted the use of their tent, and have been holding the fort for over a week, with fair interest, receiving some assistance from the Warren and Sharon Saints, for which we are grateful.

The Saints here are doing nobly, attending the meetings and rendering whatever assistance is necessary. They seem to be the kind who have a good report from their fellow citizens. They are honorable and upright in their dealings. Their word is considered of as much value as their bond.

There are several whom we expect to baptize on Sunday; not altogether the fruit of our own labors, for others have labored here. It is just that I mention the earnest labors of Brother David Jones, of Sharon, who has come Sundays and assisted in Sunday school and held meetings, which have resulted in good. We hope Brother David will keep on and that others will follow in his footsteps.

My attention has been called to Stepping Stones. I think it is well named, and that is about all you can say of it.

The Zion's Hope has been a welcome visitor to the homes of many, with letters from different parts of the world, and these have been dispensed with, and another paper has been provided to take its place, which is causing dissatisfaction among former readers of the Hope. The cry is, Give us back our Hope in its former attire, as it was with its letters, etc. I have been a reader of the Hope for about thirty-five years, and I am very much disappointed in the change, and for one, with many others, we want the Hope as it was. If some other kind of literature is needed, it could be provided without putting the Hope to one side. The picture on the first page is attractive and shows the inspiration possessed by the one who designed it. One has given me her subscription for the Ensign, and is going to discontinue the Stepping Stones, as she does not approve of the change made.

This is as it confronts me. Trusting that no offense will be taken at what is written, I am,

A well wisher and a colaborer for the welfare of Zion's cause.

SAMUEL BROWN.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana.

We came to this place, Battle Creek, Michigan, from Knox, Indiana, and opened up in a tent pitched on Liberty Street, by Brother and Sister Lybarger. Have preached four sermons to date. Audiences fair; large Sunday evening. If we can depend on the manifestation of the evil spirit as evidence, good is waiting on our banners.

Sunday night some time, every rope on the west side of the tent was cut in twain, and the tent careened to the east. Have no idea who performed such a despicable deed, but 'twas done. We have the cotton church righted now, and will continue the work.

About one dozen of the Reorganized members reside here, but are widely scattered. The Utah Church has a local branch organization here in Battle Creek, and I believe two of the Reorganized Church who united with them are now leaning the right way. Another one of their converts attended our services all day Sunday, and expressed himself as dissatisfied with their teaching. A good work seems immanent in Battle Creek, and of course the battle will be waged, both in the Creek and out of it.

The Knox Saints are struggling along in commendable effort, and zeal. Sister Bertha Lohse and Eura Fout are pushing Sunday school and Religio to an ideal plane. Worthy of faith and prayers are those two sisters. So spicy a program was rendered July 27, by the Sunday school, as one would wish, an uplifting, spiritual entertainment by the children at Knox.

Brother Roy Young, of Lamoni, who has been an invalid guest at the Sanitarium here, has so improved that he returned home this morning. All were loath to see him go, as he was a help to the Saints here. Sunday school is on, and Religio strongly talked. All eyes turn to Battle Creek please.

Hastily,

AUGUST 5, 1913.

News from Branches

Des Moines, Iowa.

Your columns of late do not seem to have been burdened with news from Des Moines, but our branch is still in existence, having neither been disorganized, nor as yet reached that exalted condition spiritually that God has seen fit to treat us as he did Enoch's city of old.

On Monday evening, August 4, our regular quarterly business meeting was held, the principal feature of which was the election of branch officials. Some changes of import in our former methods were made, which we trust will work out to the good of our branch and the advancement of the Saints as anticipated.

Heretofore our branch officials have been elected for a term of six months, but at this meeting a motion prevailed that the present term expire the first Monday in June, 1914, and that hereafter the officials be elected annually. The object in having the future elections on the above date is that this is about the time the missionaries usually get settled in their fields of labor, and in case high priests are sent to the city they would be available for the presiding officer if so desired by the branch:

It has also been the custom heretofore to elect a president and one presiding priest, one presiding teacher, and one presiding deacon, the presiding priest, teacher, and deacon being empowered to choose their own assistants, with the exception of the term just ending, during which time there was a presiding priest, teacher, and deacon, and all others of the branch holding the priesthood were used by the president as he saw fit, all reporting to him the labors performed. At this meeting the motion prevailed that now and hereafter such priests, teachers, and deacons be selected and elected by the branch as the body desired to act in these several capacities.

By unanimous vote Brother J. M. Baker, our new city missionary, was elected president; H. T. McCaig, W. D. Hall, J. G. Carpenter, Willis Bowlby and J. R. Epperson priests; G. E. Davis, E. O. Clark, Ray Chandler, and T. P. Cook, teachers; Fred Chandler, deacon, with power to choose a financial assistant; Orpha Emslie, clerk; J. R. Epperson, correspondent; J. G. Carpenter, librarian; J. M. Baker, book agent. The selection of organist and chorister was left with the organized choral society, as heretofore. We hope these officials will be able to do a good work the coming ten months. Five new members were added to our branch by letters of removal.

Our retiring president, Brother O. Salisbury, who has been our presiding officer the past two years, expressed his appreciation of the support of the Saints, also of being released from the branch work, as it would now enable him to give more of his time and attention to his work as district president. We appreciate his labors of love among us and wish him Godspeed.

We have a good, wide-awake Sunday school of eleven classes—one history, one normal, one senior, two intermediate, two junior, two primary, and two beginner. Also a good Religious-Literary Society of six classes. Both societies have a home class department. We also have the Woman's Auxiliary, Ladies' Aid, and a fully organized choir, all doing good work and affording ample opportunity for all to render service who will or can be induced so to do. The Woman's Auxiliary is just at this time arranging for a special visiting campaign in an endeavor to make their work better known and to increase the interest therein. Midweek prayer services are held each Wednesday evening, and, although the attendance is not as large as it should be, some very encouraging and profitable seasons are enjoyed.

Provision was also made for holding another "Home Coming Day" the second Sunday in October, and that hereafter it be made an annual affair. We expect to begin early and arrange for a pleasant and profitable day, and will perhaps continue special services the week following. We know that all who have had the pleasure of attending our "Home Coming Day" services the past three years will anxiously look forward to the fourth one, and we trust that many who have not been attending in the past will be able and have a desire to be with us this year. Let all the Saints of the Des Moines District especially bear the date in mind and begin laying their plans early to be in attendance.

J. R. EPPERSON.

Chicago, Illinois.

CENTRAL BRANCH.

Our Wednesday evening prayer meeting was well attended, twenty-five being present. The Saints here realize the good which is to be derived from these meetings, and seem to put forth every effort to be on hand. All apparently enjoyed the Spirit, of which we had a goodly portion.

Brother Tonks is organizing a choir, and expects good results, both in the choir work and in the creating of a stronger desire in the hearts of the young to serve their Lord and Master. Brethren H. P. W. Keir and D. E. Dowker were the speakers of the day, August 10. Several strangers were present in the evening.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes.

KEWANEE.—District conference met with the newly organized branch at Mathersville, Illinois, June 7 and 8, 1913. O. E. Sade and Charles L. Holmes presided. Statistical reports: Kewanee 134, loss 5; Millersburg 94, loss 31; Buffalo Prairie 70, gain 1; Dahinda 68, gain 5; Joy 95, loss 2; Twin City 104, gain 10; Peoria 51, gain 4; Mathersville 42, organized by F. A. Smith and O. E. Sade, September 29, 1912. Bishop's agent reported total receipts for eight months, $1,767.29; expenditures, $1,339.95. Requests from Twin City Branch that Alfred C. Needham be ordained an elder, and from Dahinda Branch that James Dawson be ordained to same office were approved, and referred to district presidency. Officers elected: O. E. Sade, president with privilege of choosing associate; M. E. Gillin, secretary; Charles L. Holmes, treasurer; Mira Cady, librarian. Charles L. Holmes was unanimously sustained as bishop's agent, and M. E. Gillin as local historian. O. E. Sade named Charles L. Holmes as his associate, conference ratifying the choice. A spirit of unity and peace prevailed for the most part throughout the sessions. The business was transacted with but little difference of opinion shown, and that little did not seem to cause any serious contention. The Sunday morning prayer meeting was blessed to a marked degree by the Spirit's presence, and when Brother Sade arose and voiced the message from on high, hearts were thrilled and eyes moistened by the tender emotions that were stirred. The Saints rejoiced and were strengthened by the message and by the meeting. Conference adjourned to meet at Kewanee the first Saturday and Sunday in November. M. E. Gillin, secretary.

MINNESOTA.—District conference met with the Union Branch at Citherall, Minnesota, May 24, 1913, district presidency associated with B. S. Lambkin presiding. The sessions were harmonious and peaceful, the Spirit of the Lord being present throughout. One young brother was called by the Spirit to the office of elder, and one to the office of priest. Much encouragement as well as instruction was given the Saints. Statistical reports: Audubon, Bemidji, and Union. D. A. Whiting was ordained to office of elder. Officers elected: B. S. Lambkin, president; L. A. Gould, vice president; Lester Whiting, secretary and treasurer; Bertha Hunter, member library board. Adjourned to meet with Minneapolis Branch the second Saturday and Sunday in November. Lester Whiting, secretary, Henning, Minnesota.

ALBERTA.—District met in conventions and conference at the church at Ribstone, July 16 to 20. The conventions were very satisfactory, business being transacted with a liberality of spirit. The auxiliaries completed their respective division of district as per previous announcement and officers were elected. The day prior to the opening of Saskatchewan district conference was allowed the Alberta Saints for the organization of the Alberta District. The preaching services were of an inspiring order. The missionary force of the two provinces were on the ground under the leadership of Apostle J. A. Gillen, which brother has endeared himself to the Saints of this western land. The good Spirit prevailed at all the sessions; the happy, saintly feeling made all to rejoice and be glad. W. Osler.

Convention Minutes.

PAPEETE, TAHITI.—Convention convened at Island of Hao, April 5, 1913, J. Charles May and Wiriamu Teihoarii presiding. Locals reported: Tiputa and Avatoru in Rairoa, Hereheretue, Amanu, Manihi, Tarona, Hao, Tahuacia and Mataura in Tubuai Takaraoa and Tarona. Treasurer's report read, audited, and approved. Organization of children's classes was ordered, presidency to arrange appropriate lessons for same, it being requested that all answers to questions be printed, following the questions. Officers elected: J. Charles May, president; Wiriamu Teihoarii, vice president; Pinga, second vice president, and Roo a Taura, secretary. Adjourned to meet April 5, 1914, at the Island of Kaugura, where conference is to be held. J. Charles May.

First Presidency.

TRANSFER AND RELEASE.

Inasmuch as arrangements have been made whereby Elder Gomer R. Wells will take up field work for the Herald Publishing House, he has been transferred to that department of church work and is hereby released from his appointment in Mission Number 1.

ELBERT A. SMITH, for First Presidency.
JAS. A. GILLEN, Missionary in Charge.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Kentucky and Tennessee District; Greeting: As you know, I have been appointed to labor in the Southern Indiana District this conference year. At the June conference of the Kentucky and Tennessee District it was the expression of the body that I should continue to act as bishop's agent for the district. After consulting the Bishop it was thought best under existing circumstances to continue to act.

Since I will not be able to see the Saints in person, I take this means of communicating with you. I have appointed W. L. McClain, of Paris, Tennessee, to act as subagent in the Foundry Hill Branch, who will receipt for tithing, consecration, etc., also S. E. Dickson, of Paris, Tennessee, who will labor in the district, and will receipt for tithes, consecration, etc. Those who may desire, can send to me at Fulton, Kentucky, and I will send receipts.

Dear Saints, I hope you will not be negligent of your duties along this line. Remember, we are asked to provide for only two families this year, which would be a small task if all would cooperate. If you do as well this year as in the last three years, we will be more than self-sustaining.

And remember, too, Saints, we have been asked to help liquidate the church debt, of which our apportionment is five hundred dollars, a little less than one dollar each. Now we can meet this obligation and hardly miss it. Are you willing to make the sacrifice? Remember, the Lord has said he will have a sacrificing people. And only those who have made covenant with him by sacrifice will be gathered (Psalm 50: 5). Do not put it off until next fall. It is needed right now. So send it along at your earliest convenience, and get your receipt.

May God bless you all is the prayer of,
Your brother and colaborer for Christ,
DERBY, INDIANA, August 9, 1913. J. R. McCLAIN.

Conference Notices.

Independence stake conference will convene at Independence, Missouri, at the First Church, September 13 and 14, commencing at 10 a. m. We desire a good representation of the stake membership. Priesthood reports should be sent to quorum secretaries not later than September 3; those not belonging to quorums should report to stake secretary. Reports coming in later than September 3 will not be entered. G. E. Harrington, president; L. H. Haas, secretary.

Convention Notices.

Mobile district Sunday school and Religio convention will convene at Theodore, Alabama, Friday, September 12, 1913, at 3 p. m. A. E. Warr, superintendent.

The Utah district Sunday school and Religio conventions will convene at Ogden, Utah, at 10 a. m., August 22, 1913. Keith H. Rogers, secretary.

New York and Philadelphia district Sunday school and Religio joint convention and institute will be held at Elk Mills, Maryland, August 31 to September 1, inclusive. Preaching Sunday at 11 a. m. and at 7.45 p. m. John Zimmermann, jr., secretary Sunday school, Herman N. Schwartz, secretary Religio.

Eastern Colorado Sunday school will meet at 2 p. m., September 5, with the Wray Branch. Instruction and entertainment will be featured. Secretaries will kindly see that credentials are mailed to the district secretary not later than August 25. Mae E. Everett, secretary, 129 South Logan Street, Denver, Colorado.

Reunion Notice.

Those expecting to attend the Clinton district reunion, August 22 to 31, will have to prepare to feed horses, as the pastures are burnt up from dry weather. Our last rain was on May 19. Merle Quick, secretary.

Correction.

Those attending the West Virginia conference should purchase tickets for Cornwallis instead of Cairo. Francis L. Shinn, secretary.

Two-Day Meetings.

At Dahinda, Illinois, September 6 and 7. At Twin City Branch, East Moline, September 13 and 14. Let all attend who can. O. E. Sade, district president.

Change of Date.

Because of unavoidable circumstances, the committee has changed the date of the Northeastern and Northwestern Kansas districts reunion, which will be held in the city park, Blue Rapids, Kansas, September 13 to 21, instead of date before announced. F. G. Hedrick, chairman; Joseph Arber, secretary.

Cook Wanted.

A cook is wanted at the Graceland College dormitory. One of experience needed to take responsibility as head cook, and to direct student help. For particulars write J. F. Garver, secretary of board, Lamoni, Iowa.

Died.

WINKWORTH.—William E. Winkworth was born near Winchester, England, November 8, 1842, died at his home in Salt Lake City, Utah, July 14, 1913. He was baptized July 9, 1911, at Salt Lake City, by A. M. Chase, and was ordained an elder the same day. He was ordained a high priest July 7, 1912. He leaves wife, one son, one daughter, and one stepson. Brother Winkworth was a man loved by all who knew him. Funeral sermon by Peter Anderson, interment in the city cemetery.

MARSHALL.—At Lamoni, Iowa, August 8, 1913, Sister Matilda Marshall, aged 77 years, 1 month and 2 days. She was born in Perry County, Indiana, in 1836; married Benjamin Marshall in 1854; came to the Lamoni region in 1881, and was baptized by C. H. Jones in 1883. Four sons and one daughter survive her. Otis and Edward live near Lamoni, other sons in Kentucky and daughter in Illinois. Funeral in charge of John Smith; sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

BURROUGHS.—Mahulda J., daughter of Brother Mason and Sister Matilda Burgess, was born September 11, 1837, died August 7, 1913, near Xenia, Illinois. She married Robert M. Burroughs, February 5, 1905. She was baptized by S. S. Smith, July 14, 1912. She leaves husband, two little boys, father, mother, two sisters, and eight brothers to mourn her departure. A large number of relatives and friends attended the funeral, in the Mount Pleasant Baptist Church, in charge of John W. Rushton. Sermon by S. S. Smith, interment in Mount Pleasant Cemetery.

IS UTAH CONVERTED OR INCONSISTENT?

Know ye not that there are more nations than one? Know ye not that I, the Lord your God, have created all men, and that I remember those who are upon the isles of the sea; and that I rule in the heavens above, and in the earth beneath; and I bring forth my word unto the children of men, yea, even upon all the nations of the earth? Wherefore murmur ye, because that ye shall receive more of my word? Know ye not that the testimony of two nations is a witness unto you that I am God, that I remember one nation like unto another? Wherefore, I speak the same words unto one nation like unto another. And when the two nations shall run together, the testimony of the two nations shall run together also. And I do this that I may prove unto many, that I am the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever; and that I speak forth my words according to mine own pleasure. And because that I have spoken one word, ye need not suppose that I can not speak another; for my work is not yet finished; neither shall it be, until the end of man; neither from that time henceforth and for ever.—2 Nephi 12: 55-63.

The language quoted sets forth the fundamental attributes of the great God of all the universe. Upon these fundamentals and these alone are we permitted to build in the work of the kingdom of God. Anything outside or contrary to this declaration of deity is without foundation, not grounded in truth.

Summarizing these eternal verities we have the following basis for discussion: God has created all men; he remembers all, even those on the islands of the sea; he rules in the heavens and the earth; he brings forth his word to all nations; the testimony of two or more nations is to witness that each is remembered; the same words, or principles, are to be declared unto one nation, like unto the other, or others; when the nations run together their testimony concerning that which God has declared unto each is to run together also, or in every essential point is to be in agreement; and all this has God done that for all time it may be set forth that he is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

All believers in the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith will undoubtedly agree with us in these conclusions: The Bible contains, in so far as we have the record, the revealments of God to the nations of the Eastern Hemisphere; the Book of Mormon brings to us the revelation of God to those of the Western Hemisphere; the revelations of latter days contain the especial revealments of God to this dispensation; all these believers should agree, if they do not, that, together with the stick of Judah and the stick of Joseph, these latter day revealments become our monitor in this dispensation of the fullness of times.

Now these records are to be in agreement; because, "I speak the same words unto one nation like unto another." Once we set aside any teaching of either former record or of both for some new or strange teaching of latter days, we are occupying upon ground questionable and dangerous. That God will not bring to us anything contrary is sure and certain beyond the remotest question; did he do so his very purpose would at once be defeated, which purpose is harmony in revealments to all nations, proving "unto many that I am the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

LIVING ORACLES.

For many years the Reorganization has sought to demonstrate to the Utah Church the fallacy of their position, and to show that they have left the eternal verities as set forth by God in the scripture already quoted. One of the early developments in the valleys of the mountains was the principle of "living oracles" and "obey counsel." The departure into which this contention led, or perhaps, more correctly speaking, the departure which brought forth this contention—the infallibility of the priesthood—found expression in the following words:

I am the controler and master of affairs here, under Heaven's direction; though there are those who do not believe this.—Brigham Young, in Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 48.

Who gives me power, that "at the pointing of my finger," the hosts of Israel move, and at my request the inhabitants of this great Territory are displaced; at my command they are here? Who gives me that power? Let the world inquire. It is the God of heaven; it is the Spirit of the Holy Gospel; it is not of myself; it is the Lord Jesus Christ, trying to save the inhabitants of the earth.—Brigham Young, in Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 145.

If Brother Brigham tells me to do a thing, it is the same as though the Lord told me to do it. This is the course for you and every other Saint to take, and by your taking this course, I will tell you brethren, you are on the top of the heap.—Heber C. Kimball, in Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, p. 161.

The ends to which this teaching has carried this people, and the force with which it has held them, is indicated by the following:

I feel that I have spoken the truth to you, I ask you to receive it in good and honest hearts. It is found in the books; but the books are the dead letter. It is the Spirit that giveth life. It is the living oracles that have the right to organize and direct, to counsel and exhort, admonish and reprove.—Joseph F. Smith, in a sermon November 11, 1895, as reported in Deseret News for January 18, 1896.

Whenever Deity sees fit to give new commandments to his people, he does so through those whom he has appointed his oracles. In some instances these commandments supersede commandments found in the written word, not because of conflict, but of changing conditions.—Manual 1902-03, pp. 64, 65.

It is not for man to sit in judgment upon the decrees of the Almighty. It is his duty to obey. . . . "My word is my law, saith the Lord." He has a right to require one thing to-day and another thing to-morrow, and the latest word that comes from him is the word that his people must obey. This is what it means to "live by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God."—From Apostle Orson F. Whitney's sermon as reported in conference minutes, October 6, 7, 9, 1910, pp. 50-53.

Acting upon the position taken, that the "living oracles" are the last and final authority regardless of what had gone before, this Utah Church reached early the conclusion that "The books are not worth the ashes of a rye straw." That they have, until recently, at least, held to this view is evidenced by the statements already quoted, and by the further statement of Apostle Whitney as we shall presently see.

A SAFE RULE.

Now comes the First Presidency of the Utah Church with a statement appearing in the Deseret Evening News for August 2 and repeated in the issue of August 16, over their official signature, discouraging members of the Utah Church touching the matter of investing in mining stock on the strength of revelations, so-called, and, among other things, proclaiming:

When visions, dreams, tongues, prophecy, impressions or any extraordinary gift or inspiration conveys something out of harmony, with the accepted revelations to the church or contrary to the decisions of its constituted authorities, Latter Day Saints may know that it is not of God, no matter how plausible it may appear. Also they should understand that directions for the guidance of the church will come, by revelation, through the head. All faithful members are entitled to the inspiration of the Holy Spirit for themselves, their families, and for those over whom they are appointed and ordained to preside. But anything at discord with that which comes from God through the head of the church is not to be received as authoritative or reliable. . . .

Be not led by any spirit or influence that discredits established authority, contradicts true scientific principles and discoveries, or leads away from the direct revelations of God for the government of the church. The Holy Ghost does not contradict its own revealings. Truth is always harmonious with itself. Piety is often the cloak of error. The counsels of the Lord through the channel he has appointed will be followed with safety. Therefore, O! ye Latter Day Saints, profit by these words of warning.

The principle as set forth in this proclamation we accept as sound. Let it be understood, therefore, that any pretended revelation out of harmony with acceptable revelations, or contrary to the decisions of the constituted authorities of the church, is to be held as not of God; for no influence from God will lead "from the direct revelations of God for the government of the church"; because "The Holy Ghost does not contradict its own revealings"—"truth is always harmonious with itself."

It will not do, now, for anyone to attempt to place upon this official statement an interpretation that would admit of the "living oracles" setting forth that which is "out of harmony with the accepted revelations to the church or contrary to the decisions of its constituted authorities," because "any extraordinary gift or inspiration," from any source whatsoever, not in agreement with the previously revealed will of God, as accepted by the constituted authorities, may at once be stamped as not of God. If the principle is held to be true in the one instance, it must be held to be true in the other. We shall, therefore, hold the "living oracles" as well as all others to this statement of rule.

A few comparisons will suffice to demonstrate the unenviable position in which the Utah Church appears in the light of this latest official utterance.

SHALL WE DISCARD THE BOOKS?

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

We do not take our commands from the Bible. We are not governed by the gospel as revealed to the Nephites. We are living in the dispensation of the fullness of times, and have a right to receive divine revelation, here and now, and this is our guide, our law, and we must be governed thereby. No man can stand up to-day in this church and justify himself in any course by pleading what the Nephites did, or what the Jews did or did not do. The vital question with us is: What does God require of the Latter Day Saints? We have as much right to the word of the Lord as had the Nephites, the Jews, or the early Christians. If this is not true, Mormonism is a sham and is not what it claims to be.—From Apostle Orson F. Whitney's sermon as reported in conference minutes, October 6, 7, 9, 1910, pp. 50-53:

The revealed will of God, accepted by the constituted authorities of the church—the only authority that can make a revelation binding upon the church—the quorums and general church—revealed in 1831, accepted in 1835, required that the church teach, and certainly that it live in agreement with that teaching, the principles of the gospel as contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the covenants and church articles, as they may have been or might be revealed. These later revelations must be in harmony with what had gone before, according to our rule. This same rule now adopted in Utah tells us that it was not God who prompted Apostle Whitney to set aside the teachings of the Bible and the Book of Mormon as a law of Latter Day Saint life. The same principle applies to all others who have undertaken to discard the standard books of the church for the utterances of the priesthood.

ADAM GOD.

By these things we know that there is a God in heaven who is infinite and eternal, from everlasting to everlasting the same unchangeable God, the framer of heaven and earth and all things which are in them, and that he created man, male and female; after his own image and in his own likeness created he them, and gave unto them commandments that they should love and serve him, the only living and true God, and that he should be the only being whom they should worship.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 4.

Now hear it, O inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, Saint and sinner! When our father Adam came into the Garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives, with him. He helped to make and organize this world. He is MICHAEL, the Archangel, the ANCIENT OF DAYS! about whom holy men have written and spoken—He is our FATHER and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do.—Brigham Young, in Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, pp. 50, 51.

In the light of the revelations of God, the church from the beginning understood that it was the one and only true God who had created man, male and female, and that he was the only being whom mankind should worship. This being accepted by the constituted authorities in the light of the revelations received, we leave every man to judge as to the inspiration which persuaded Brigham Young to say: Adam "is our father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do."

PATERNITY OF CHRIST.

And behold, he shall be born of Mary at Jerusalem, which is the land of our forefathers, she being a virgin, a precious and chosen vessel, who shall be overshadowed, and conceive by power of the Holy Ghost, and bring forth a son, yea, even the Son of God.—Alma 5: 19.

When the Virgin Mary conceived the child Jesus, the Father had begotten him in his own likeness. He was not begotten by the Holy Ghost. And who is the Father? He is the first of the human family [Adam] . . . Now, remember from this time forth, and for ever, that Jesus Christ was not begotten by the Holy Ghost.—Brigham Young, in Journal of Discourses, vol. 1, pp. 50, 51.

Alma says with reference to his testimony concerning the birth of Christ, "The Spirit hath said this much unto me." If "the Holy Ghost does not contradict its own revealings," from whence came this statement in denial? We only venture that it did not come from God.

POLYGAMY.

When thou art come unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, and shalt possess it; and shalt dwell therein, and shalt say, I will set a king over me, like as all the nations that are about me. . . . Neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away.—Deuteronomy 17: 14-17.

Let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband.—1 Corinthians 7: 2.

And now it came to pass that the people of Nephi, under the reign of the second king, began to grow hard in their hearts, and indulge themselves somewhat in wicked practices, such as like unto David of old, desiring many wives and concubines, and also Solomon, his son.—Jacob 1: 15.

But the word of God burthens me because of your grosser crimes. For behold, thus saith the Lord, This people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the scriptures: for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredoms, because of the things which were written concerning David, and Solomon his son. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord. Wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts.—Jacob 2: 31-37.

And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.—Doctrine and Covenants 49: 3.

Inasmuch as this Church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication, and polygamy: we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in the case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again.—Doctrine and Covenants 111: 4.

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, my servant Joseph, that inasmuch as you have inquired of my hand, to know and understand wherein I, the Lord, justified my servants, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; as also Moses, David and Solomon, my servants, as touching the principle and doctrine of their having many wives and concubines: Behold! and lo, I am the Lord thy God, and will answer thee as touching this matter: Therefore, prepare thy heart to receive and obey the instructions which I am about to give unto you; for all those who have this law revealed unto them must obey the same; for behold! I reveal unto you a new and an everlasting covenant; and if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant, and be permitted to enter into my glory.—Utah Doctrine and Covenants 132: 1-4.

We have already noted that in the running together of the nations that had received the revelations of God their testimony would be in agreement,—that is, each would be found to have recorded the same fundamental teachings and revelations, and this fact would set forth that God was indeed the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, in all dispensations and in every nation. Now, there is something decidedly wrong in connection with the citations just given, if it be true, and it is true, that “The Holy Ghost does not contradict its own revealings.”

Israel was instructed from the beginning that they should not multiply wives unto themselves; Paul, an inspired apostle, and in the terms of Utah a “living oracle,” directed that every man should have his own wife; the Nephites were informed that the polygamy and concubinage of David and Solomon “was abominable before me”; and we read that their own like practices were “wicked”; the Lord spoke to the church in 1831 saying, “It is lawful that he should have one wife”; the church by action of its constituted authorities in 1835 declared it to be their belief and understanding that one man should have one wife, and one woman one husband, except in case of death, when and only when either would be at liberty to marry again, or another; this action last mentioned was had at the adoption of the Doctrine and Covenants and appears as section 101 in the edition of 1835.

We find nothing inconsistent, therefore, until we come to the revelation, so-called, on celestial marriage, not appearing in any form in the publications of the original church or in either record of previous dispensations, and brought forth for the first time in Utah in 1852. This document represents Joseph Smith, after all that had gone before,—that which we have cited and much more,—after the declarations of God to Israel through Moses, to the church through Paul, to the Nephites through Jacob, to the present dispensation through himself,—after all this Joseph is represented as inquiring “wherein I, the Lord, justify my servants,” etc. After God had plainly and unmistakably indicated: First, that Israel should not multiply wives; second, that the same was an abomination of wickedness; and last of all having instructed the church as instituted under Joseph Smith that each man was to have only one wife, Joseph is represented as having developed such a consuming curiosity as to be found asking wherein God justified that which the church plainly understood that he had condemned; and God is represented as having made the monumental blunder of disagreeing with himself as to every word previously uttered on the question of marriage.

That the trouble develops here we may be absolutely certain from the fact that the inspiration of God indited the former citations. Through Moses, the prophet, Israel had been instructed in the one wife doctrine; what we have quoted from Jacob, we note, is prefaced with a “thus saith the Lord”; it was God who said to the church in 1831 “it is lawful that he should have one wife”; the justification of “my servants” that God is represented as presenting in the Utah Doctrine and Covenants is once and for all time put to silence by these revealments and by the word of God through Jacob: “Thus saith the Lord, this people,” excusing themselves “in committing whoredoms,” because of that which had been written “concerning David and Solomon,” “understand not the Scriptures,”—for the Scriptures of God did not so teach—God would not in one dispensation condemn and in another justify the same iniquity.

We here recall the statement with reference to the Book of Mormon, “in the which is the fullness of the gospel.” Of this order of celestial marriage the people were then ignorant; monogamy was required by divine command, yet to them had come the “fullness of the gospel.” It therefore follows that the gospel economy in its fullness makes no provision for any such order, and man may receive a fullness of joy and exaltation therein independently of the “new and an everlasting covenant” declared for the first time in Utah. This “covenant,” therefore, is found outside and in defiance of the gospel law.

Frankly, we do not believe that Joseph Smith ever had anything to do with this document. If it were clearly shown that he did we would reject it as contrary to all revelations previously given. Our neighbors of the West, under the rule they have recently established, must reject it also, whatever may be their convictions as to its origin. That God never inspired it we are firmly convinced.

BLOOD ATONEMENT.

But men drink damnation to their souls, except they humble themselves, and become as little children, and believe that salvation was, and is, and is to come, in and through the atonement blood of Christ, the Lord Omnipotent.—Mosiah 1: 118.

But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.—1 John 1: 7.

There is not a man or woman, who violates the covenant made with their God, that will not be required to pay the debt. The blood of Christ will never wipe that out, your own blood must atone for it; and the judgments of the Almighty will come, sooner or later, and every man and woman will have to atone for breaking their covenants.—Brigham Young, in Journal of Discourses, vol. 3, p. 247.

Comment is unnecessary to show that: First, this last statement is not in agreement with the two just preceding it; and, second, that it was not indited by the inspiration of God.

IN CONCLUSION.

We welcome this recent proclamation of the "living oracles" of the Utah Church. We accept it as sound, and as the only safe rule of reasoning. We rejoice that at last the Utah people themselves have risen up to our vindication. We regret that for so long they have been found outside the law—the harmonious revealments of deity. We would to God that they might be persuaded to follow the proclamation of their First Presidency to its logical conclusion.

GRACELAND COLLEGE OPENING.

The formal opening of Graceland College for the fall semester will occur on Thursday, September 11. Wednesday, September 10, will be devoted to enrollment, registration and all necessary entrance examinations. New students and those whose work is not fully decided upon should arrive in Lamoni on Wednesday, September 10. Regular classes will meet on Thursday, the opening exercises occurring in the college chapel at 10.30 a. m., on Friday, September 12. Serious work will be taken up at once. Those coming late will be under a handicap. Let us start on time and make good.

S. A. BURGESS.

LAMONI, IOWA, August 18, 1913.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

TOBACCO BARRED FROM SCHOOLS.—The Iowa State Legislature at its last session passed a law prohibiting the use of tobacco by school children in the State. Commenting on this action the Des Moines Capital says:

In the past the boys have been wont to indulge in tobacco immediately after they retired a respectful distance from school. This was done with comparatively little danger. But the new law makes smoking at any time by any school-boy punishable by suspension or expulsion. . . . The law went into effect on July 4, and it is believed by local school authorities will have the effect of reducing the consumption of tobacco by school children.

BALKAN WAR COSTLY.—The Balkan war has been costly. The cost in killed and wounded is said to have been 348,000; the cost in money about $1,000,000,000. Besides this enormous expenditure in money and life, homes have been bereft of fathers and sons; nations have been stripped of the flower of their manhood; race hatred has been fanned to a consuming fever; the jealousies of a Continent have been stirred to desperation; the cause of human brotherhood has been set back decades. General Sherman spoke truly when he said, "War is hell"—bringing about scourgings severe and remorse bitter. Yet if from-out this terrible crucible men and nations can come to see more clearly, the suffering will not have been altogether in vain.

FAVORABLE MENTION.—The reunion of the Southern Nebraska and Fremont, Iowa, districts, held at Nebraska City, and closing August 17, received favorable mention in the Nebraska Daily Press of that date. A half tone of Brother Frederick A. Smith appears with the write up. His work received special notice, as also did that of Brother James A. Gillen.

COMMENDATION AND APPRECIATION.—Commenting on the southern California reunion the Hermosa Beach Review for August 8 commends the Saints of that district and speaks in appreciation of their work as follows:

There are about nine hundred members in Southern California District and wherever they are located will be found an industrious, frugal, peaceable, and law-abiding people. . . . During the three years they have occupied in Hermosa they have steadily risen in the estimation of the community and will continue to do so in exact proportion as the community in which they may locate are themselves in favor with or opposed to the objectionable things practiced under the name of religion in Utah; for of all denominations these people are able to cope with and defeat the claims of the Utah Church in all things commonly considered contrary to the code of good morals and good citizenship; not only are they able, but their ability is exercised in a dignified manner all the time in a way intended not to provoke unnecessary antagonism or give vent to personal dislike.

SAINT STILL CORRECT.—We called attention in the HERALD of August 13 to an expression in the Word of Truth, as made by one Oscar Smith, in which, among other names, he said the name "saint" belonged to "every child of God alike." Now comes Daniel Sommer, senior editor of the Octographic Review, and leading elder of the Church of Christ, Non-progressive Christian, who in answer to the question, "What is the proper name of the people of God in our dispensation?" in the Review for August 12, says: "The disciples were called Christians first at Antioch.' 'Saints,' 'brethren,' and several other expressions are used with reference to the children of God." Just for the sake of making it unanimous comes also Frederick D. Kershmer, president of Texas Christian University, Fort Worth, Texas, in the Christian Standard for August 16, representing the Christian Church, progressive, and says: "All Christians who love their Master and do his will, at the same time serving their fellow men, are saints."

SOME THOUGHTS RELATING TO MISSIONARY WORK.

NUMBER 17. "METHODS AND TACTICS" SERIES.

Topics:

1. New openings; their value.
2. In making them, should we present the Book of Mormon at the beginning?
3. Should we deny polygamy before we are accused of it?
4. Are we pushing the work of making new openings as vigorously as possible?

NEW OPENINGS.

New openings: given localities where the ministry have just begun to labor, preaching the gospel as restored—1823 to 1830, A. D.—and where it has not been proclaimed before. Sometimes circumstances may have been such that an invitation is extended for preaching, but more often not. Generally, new localities must be sought, and permission obtained to present the claims of the work in new appointments. Wisdom and great care should be exercised in effecting an opening, if it is to be effectual and permanent. They may be slow to effect, or the mind of the public may be so ready to hear and learn of the work that an open door to the gospel may be entered at once. In either case, care should be exercised not to travel more rapidly than hearers are able to go. Light can be too strong for the understanding and might render the sight obscure, rather than clear. Patience must be exercised in making new openings, also in presenting the truth after the opening is made.

The guidance of the Spirit's light should be sought. Truth must be preached by the constraint of the Spirit. God chooses to work through the agency of man, and man in God's work must seek to do the work in God's way. Man's understanding must be reached before he can be converted. The rule is that this takes time. God wants intelligent conversion. The Bible is not studied by people generally, as at former times and the people must be taught. "Go teach all nations" are the words of the Master Sower of the word of God.

Direction must be earnestly sought, for guidance in this most important work. The times when men should seek after God are determined, and once man's opportunity is presented he is responsible to the Judge of all for his approval or disapproval of the opportunity.

New openings must be sought. It may take time to get them; persevere, concentrate the energy and efforts used so far as can be.

THEIR VALUE.

What is the value of new openings? That is a very peculiar question, an important thought; but I fear there is too much infinity connected with it for us to attempt to grapple with it. Jacob wrestled with an angel, but no doubt the angel encouraged him. He came to bless Jacob. Who can estimate the worth of redemption to one soul? Or tell us the value of a soul to be saved? Or, multiply this by souls enough to form a branch, a large branch of the church? Tell us the influence of that branch of the church in the salvation of others? They are the salt of the earth to all around them. Here, "The pebble has dropped in the water, and the waves circle round with the shock." And, then, the branch, raised up in a new opening, whether small, intermediate in numbers, or large, conforming to the whole law of the gospel, living daily righteous, holy lives, becomes "the light of the world," "the salt of the earth," the moral preservation of the world.

Stop, Saints, and get this idea; study your example in deed, speech, and daily actions before your fellow men,—your influence. Does the life of a good man or woman influence your life? That branch of good Saints, raised up by the preaching of the gospel in a new opening, pays the Lord his tithe, a tenth, and their consecrations into his storehouse, and this is used to make another new opening, possibly more; it is loaned to the Lord,—loaned to God,—mind you (and he is good pay), by giving with the heart and a willing mind. Oh, who can tell the value of a new opening, but the infinite God?

Have we presumed too much? Branches are raised up in new openings. Branches do grow holy in life by living the gospel. Their members do give alms to the poor; they do pay the Lord his money; they do send the missionaries out to make other new openings, and other souls are brought into God's kingdom. And thus these Saints do lay up treasures in heaven! Treasures! Who can tell, then, the value of treasured, saved souls, or the value of a new opening, or openings? Who? The elders? Bishops? Patriarchs? Prophets? Saints, are you wide awake to the interests of our work? I beg to retire from the attempt to answer: What is the value of a new opening, as related to the missionary work?

IN MAKING NEW OPENINGS, SHOULD WE PRESENT THE BOOK OF MORMON AT THE BEGINNING?

To the untaught regarding the great restoration (Joel 2: 23-25), the dispensation of the fullness of times (Ephesians 1: 8, 9), the bringing again of Zion (Isaiah 2: 1-5; 52: 7-12; Psalm 102: 14-16), the gospel restored (Isaiah 40: 9, 10; Matthew 24: 3-14; Zechariah 2: 1-5; Revelation 14: 7), this is a problem to think about, but one that is indeed of great interest, when interest is aroused, and this especially is the case when the foregoing texts carry within them and their associated texts the evidence of being associated with, and actually set forth God's great latter day work, preparatory to, and including that unparalleled event, the second and glorious coming of Christ to judge and reign in glory with his saints, the redeemed of the ages.

During the discussion of these wonderful questions, and the investigation of the marvelous work and a wonder (see Isaiah, chapter twenty-nine), the revelation of the sealed book, as a subject, an all-important part of the work, the Book of Mormon will legitimately take its place as a revelation of God to the descendants of Joseph of Egypt,—their exodus to America anciently, and that they were the forefathers of the American Indians—Lamanites. This will lead up to the development of the antiquities, and archæological evidence of ancient American civilization, and the purpose in the preservation of the remnants of Joseph on this continent.

In setting forth the doctrinal basis of the work in new openings, the principles of the gospel, we may argue the character and attributes of our Father, who in character is unchangeable and impartial, and that it would be contrary to his infinite love, mercy, justice and truth to reveal himself to the peoples of the Eastern Continent only, while the untold millions of his creations, on the Western, remain in ignorance of his existence, and the "glad tidings of great joy" which shall be to all people, being left to die in their ignorance, and go to the under world because he gave them no opportunity to go to the glory world!

All these subjects so necessary to be set forth in new openings can not be presented at the beginning, but must take their place, in time, and in relation to their associated subjects. The Holy Spirit might direct the preacher to give a historical outline of the coming forth of the work in the introduction to a new opening, also of its rise and progress, thus incidentally introducing the Book of Mormon. But when the Lord of the harvest directs, his will is being done and we are content. When his Spirit directs the presentation of the Book of Mormon at the beginning of new openings the cause, if faithfully prosecuted, will be a success.

SHOULD WE DENY POLYGAMY BEFORE BEING ACCUSED OF IT?

If we take special occasion to deny polygamy in effecting new openings, it might be thought, "A guilty conscience needs no accuser!"

If presenting historically the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Brighamite Church and their false doctrines, their unlawful practices, and how they took their rise, in 1845 and on, and how polygamy was introduced by Brigham Young and coadjutors in 1852, with the evidence to sustain it usually settles the question with fair-minded people. A direct accusation would merit a direct denial. But the fact is, the accusation is an old and a general one, and in new places should be set aside in a general way so soon as the progress of the investigation will permit. Of course, the sooner all clouds are swept away, and the sun shines unobscured, the grander for the work.

From the nature of the case, the sooner such objections are consistently answered and settled the better for the cause. Sometimes the raising of objections by opposers affords opportunity for a broad presentation of related subjects, including a presentation of the apostasy under Brigham Young, and its immediate results during and since 1845.

But no two of the missionaries pursue the same way in the occupancy of new territory. Each can only succeed in moving out as they may be able to see. Here we can make no set, arbitrary suggestions, save to get objections out of the way as rapidly as can be. Of course this is only one of many objections usually raised against the work in new openings.

I have found in my experience that New Testament church organizations and the perpetuity of spiritual gifts, are among the strongest objections to the gospel, and make the basis for the "tug of war."

ARE WE PUSHING THE WORK OF MAKING NEW OPENINGS AS VIGOROUSLY AS POSSIBLE?

This may be a relative question; it is surely a conditional one. Unless we know the conditions existing in every mission where the church is represented, it is difficult to answer. A negative answer, however, may be more probable. Furthermore, we must consider the number of men engaged in making new openings. Some of the organized districts are old fields, also parts of some missions. In some districts and regions it is easier to effect new openings than in others. The burden of this work rests mainly with the missionaries, no doubt. However, some openings for the preaching of the word are effected by the membership, as they settle in new localities. Under existing conditions it is easier for the missionaries of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to make new openings in the States of Michigan and Iowa than in parts of the State of Utah. The opposition of the Brighamite Church is more bitter toward our ministry than that of any other church, so far as we know.

New openings are usually easier effected where old and long-established religious institutions are not so universal. New openings are more readily found in the country than in the city, where the missionary has no associates, unless he is able to hire buildings in which to preach.

In some districts of New York City there are fifty thousand people living without a church building in their midst. No doubt the same is true in other cities in proportion to population. I read a statement not long since to the effect that there are ten thousand church buildings in the United States that have neither congregation nor minister. The statement had behind it the veracity of thirty ministers. I have seen a number of these deserted churches in my travels in Indiana, Michigan, Iowa, and New York.

We must, therefore, in answer to this question, consider seriously the quite universal religious indifference that has, during the last twenty years, gradually taken the world in its deadly grasp.

Should we not take into consideration the answers of the missionaries personally, while studying the answer to question four of these remarks? Each one knows how vigorously he is prosecuting the work of making new openings.

We are not able to speak advisedly as to the new openings effected ultimately by preaching on streets of cities. Much labor is done thus by many, and in many places effectual work is done. This we must recognize.

The missionary force is under obligation by divine injunction to Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the man of business and work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

The qualifications of the ministry may, yes, will have largely to do with their success in evangelizing the world. Consider the following passage on this question.

There is a great work to be done by mine elders, and that they may be fitted to do this work and the accomplishment thereof be not prevented, it is enjoined upon them that they shall not only be kind of heart and of a lowly spirit, that their wisdom may be the wisdom of the Lord, and their strength the strength of the Spirit; but they shall lay aside lightness of speech and lightness of manner when standing to declare the word, and shall study to approve their ministrations to the people by candor in speech and courtesy in demeanor, that as ministers of the gospel they may win souls unto Christ.

The elders and men of the church should be of cheerful heart and countenance among themselves and in their intercourse with their neighbors and men of the world, yet they must be without blame in word and deed. It is therefore not seemly that they indulge in loud and boisterous speech, or in the relating of coarse and vulgar stories, or those in which the names of their God and their Redeemer are blasphemed. Men of God, who bear the vessels of the Lord, be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing; let your garments be of a sober character and free from excess of ornamentation. Avoid the use of tobacco, and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 2, 3.

These statements of holy writ surely indicate that the qualifications of the ministry are essential to their success in missionary work. Without these their labors will not be effectual.

In 1832 the church, for reasons, was unable to "prosecute missions in many foreign lands" (Doctrine and Covenants 118: 1); but later, 1892, when the quorums of the church were more nearly filled, and the missionary force increased, the Lord counseled the church that

The work now lying before the missionary quorums of the church is of such increased magnitude and importance—the field so white with the harvest, and the need for laborers so great—that the twelve and the seventy under their direction, together with such high priests and elders as can travel and preach as missionaries, shall be free to wait upon their ministry in gospel work, leaving the branches and districts where organization is effected to the care and administration of the standing ministers, high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, so far as possible; thus freeing these spiritual authorities and leaving them at liberty to push the preaching of the word into the new fields now widening before them; in which work, if they will now take counsel, saith the Spirit, they shall feel a peace and vigor of mind surpassing what they have enjoyed in the past.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 7.

The citations given in this article set forth the will of the Lord so plainly on this subject that comment is unnecessary. We have italicized some of the words to invite special attention to them.

We may not be able to say whether the ministry are pushing into new fields as vigorously as they can; but there is one thing that we can safely conclude, it is God's will that we should push the preaching into new fields with all the vigor at our command.

Are the membership of the church in general and individually willing to supplement the effort to fulfill the will of the Lord in this regard? Are all, including "him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work," willing to "labor together with God" and his ministry to which work "all are called"? Are they willing to fulfill the responsibilities of their divine call? Who will answer? Men of business and the temporal laborer, or the laborer in business and the ministry are called of God to cooperate in the evangelizing of the world.

Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, he that learns not his duty and shows himself approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand. Even so, amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 44.

Saints, ministry, and membership, what are we doing? Where are we in our relation to our calling, and its duties? Can we make or find justifiable excuses for not performing the duties of our high calling? Can God say to us at the great day, Well done; good and faithful servants? C. SCOTT.

BEATING THE AIR.

In the present active movement of our opponents we have an application of the peculiar caption of this article. Doubtless David was surrounded by the same conditions when he declared, "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?" (Psalm 2:1.)

It has always been the rule of the people in antagonizing God's work to imagine a vain thing. Pharaoh imagined that the Israelites would eventually multiply so strongly they would overthrow his government, and he consequently tried to prevent it by working them to death. Herod imagined that the child Jesus would become so popular among the people that they would try to make him king in his stead, and consequently he had all the babies put to death. The people imagined that through the preaching of the apostles all the world would believe, and as a result had them imprisoned and put to death. It has been so in all ages past, and so it is to-day. The opponents of God's work have simply been fighting an imaginary foe—"beating the air."

Those men who are trying to prevent the spread of the work instituted by Joseph Smith, by the hand of God, have worked themselves up to a frenzy fit in order to believe that the teachings of this man would ruin the world; and they set themselves up as guardians of the people's interest. But instead of going to the teachings of the people whom they are so anxious to overthrow, they resort to the lying testimony of their avowed enemies, testimony that would be immediately rejected in any court of justice. And not satisfied with such unreliable testimony, they invariably resort to garbling and twisting the language of our textbooks, trying to make them mean the very opposite to what they do mean, as is witnessed on page eighteen of Mr. Kinney's book. Either willfully or ignorantly (either must reflect upon the integrity and intelligence of the reverend gentleman) he makes the Doctrine and Covenants read, "I will consecrate the riches of the Gentiles unto my people." Thus he is trying to poison the minds of the people, whom he well knows will only read his statement of it, against an innocent people. When honestly quoted the language is, "I will consecrate of the riches of those who embrace my gospel among the Gentiles, unto the poor of my people who are of the house of Israel." When properly read it shows God's tender care in providing for the poor of earth, the prime mission of Christ; but Mr. Kinney would have the world believe we are engaged in the confiscating business.

One of the grandest evidences of the strength of this latter day work, and of the glaring weakness of our opponents is the fact that few, if any, have had the manhood to meet the issue by honorable methods; but on the contrary have stooped to ridicule, misrepresentation, misapplication, and garbling.

It would be much more easy and honorable for these men to down Utah Mormonism (which seems to be their direct object of attack) by sticking to the truth, not trying to implicate innocent men who have been in their graves for years. How much more fair and honorable it would be to attack Utahism from their own records, of which there is an abundance. Why not show to the world that their doctrine is subversive of good morals and government, and that in this they are out of harmony with their own books? The most powerful weapons one can use against others are their own textbooks. They can not then plead persecution, and find sympathizers who will repudiate the usual method of resorting to their enemies for the stock in trade.

Why not take the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Inspired Translation of the Bible, the lectures and sermons, or anything that Joseph Smith has ever had anything to do with, and prove by those official works that the people of Utah are living contrary to them? By this method the opposition would not only be using an unanswerable argument against Utah Mormonism, but would also be in accord with several noted court decisions of the United States, one in Canada, and in accord with some of the leading senators of the United States, who carefully investigated the Smoot case, and all fair and honorable historians and lecturers who have studied the rise and development of Mormonism from an unprejudiced viewpoint. There is an abundance of evidence that Utah Mormonism is a product of evil apostates, whose teaching and practices are demoralizing, and wholly outside the laws of original "Mormonism." To use any other methods than the standard books against them is only helping spread their cause, as bad as it may be, among people who demand a "square deal," or fair play.

If our opponents will adopt this method they will find about seventy thousand true and honestly devoted people who have ever repudiated and have done more than any people on earth to prevent the spread of the evil that our opponents are trying to down, working hand and heart with them, and amply able to furnish them with the most conclusive evidence of Utah deflection, duplicity, and degeneracy, and that not from the enemy, but from the authorized works of original "Mormonism."

We have heard it stated that some years ago Schuyler Colfax, while making a speech against the evils of Utah Mormonism, made this cogent and truthful remark: "The surest way to destroy the evil works of Utah Mormonism is to compel them to live up to their own books." Whether the above statement was ever made by this distinguished gentleman or not, it is, nevertheless, true. And we say the best, most effectual, and most honorable way to prevent the spread of the evil our opponents are laboring to down is to show to the people that the evils of Utahism are no part of true Latter Day Saintism. Any other method will be simply beating the air, and helping to extend the very thing they are trying to prevent.

The opposition should not blame the sons and grandsons for taking up the fight in defense of their father and grandfather, who, according to the standard books of the church, died to promulgate and establish the purest, the holiest, and the most soul-reviving doctrine this side of Christ and the apostles. They would be very ungrateful if they did not do so.

The grand logic of the noble son of this noble sire, ever since he assumed the leadership of the true Latter Day Saint Church, in 1860, is this:

"There is no evidence in existence that my father ever taught or practiced the doctrine of polygamy, but if there should be, it would only go to prove that he taught and practiced contrary to the law he himself established."

A more logical, fair, sensible, and honorable position could not be announced. All his life he has been willing to receive and examine the evidence.

The only proof that has ever been thus far submitted to sustain the contention that Joseph Smith introduced polygamy is that premature, padlocked, and lying document in the Utah Doctrine and Covenants. Every argument of our enemies rests upon it. And these enemies, while they eloquently declare to their people that the Utah Mormons are not reliable, that the Utah people do not hesitate to prepare themselves to advance their doctrines in everything else, yet when it comes to this polygamous revelation, the genuineness of which rests upon the testimony of Brigham Young, these same enemies accept the testimony of Brigham Young, setting aside all the standard books of the church, court decisions, honest historians, and the testimony of thousands to the contrary.

Now, Messrs. Kinney, Spalding, and others, if you want to engage in a warfare with us in an effort of fairness, honesty, and consistency, that will as far outshine your present methods as does the sun the dimmest star, we stand ready to furnish the evidence. By such method you would appeal to the truth-loving, and not so much to the unthinking and unreasoning bigot.

WHAT IS WRONG WITH THE CHURCHES?

There has been a certain tacit acknowledgment for many years upon the part of churchmen throughout the world that something was wrong with the churches, in that they are not holding their grip upon the hearty patronage of the people which they once held.

Church folk are of course slow to admit that the very structure of their various creeds and doctrines are faulty, and that this in itself is one reason for their unsuccessful efforts to gain and hold the faith of the people; but the hollow pretense of modern "churchianity" is becoming more and more apparent.

Fine appearing church buildings throughout the land present a pleasing exterior, strained reports of successful gospel work, being done at various remote points in missions, contribute to appearances; neatly frocked pastors, wearing a bland, facial mask to hide their heart sickness, help some; but when those pastors look down from their Sunday morning pulpit to see a little knot of women and children, and many empty pews, with here and there a man accidentally thrown in; they know that the only way to fill those pews even temporarily is to concoct some church performance or sensation which will compete with the powerful attractions of the world.

They also know that behind the banners which flaunt "gospel success" is written the word bogus. The mask can not be kept on for ever. The winds of facts and figures are already tearing the false float.

Statistics are reported in a recent number of the Literary Digest, showing a vast amount more monthly being spent to advance the various religions than was spent for the same purpose in former years, and still an "alarming" decrease in conversions. "What is the matter with our churches?" is the question arising from every quarter.

Reverend Mark Allison Matthews, of Seattle, who is pastor of the largest Presbyterian church in America, and as the Literary Digest gives it, "Moderator of the General Assembly," admits that something is wrong and attempts to answer the question by imputing laziness to the pastors of all denominations.

We fancy this charge of indolence against the pastors will not be a convincing answer as to what is wrong with the churches, especially to those who have unceasingly worked their tired wits until they lag like the limbs of a weary beast in trying to devise means to keep their charges up to a respectable average. No, Brother Matthews, the trouble with the church lies deeper than mere indolence. If that were all her ailments a thorough revival of the entire religious world would be a comparatively easy task.

The pastor of the Christian or Disciple church in the city of Shawnee, Oklahoma, a city of some fifteen or eighteen thousand inhabitants, in making the statement recently that there were the "alarming" number of three hundred and fifty less young men entering the ministry in their church this year than last, accounted for the "alarming decline" by saying that "There is a lack of sympathy between the pulpit and the pew."

We concur in the thought that there is such a lack, quite generally noticeable in the irregular pulse of churchism, but having discovered a lack of true sympathy between the pulpit and the pew we are still grappling with results and not with causes.

The real cause is that the churches are not churches at all, but merely fragmentary imitations put together in piecemeal fashion according to the caprice of men, and not according to the divine pattern; nor are they organized by any command or sanction of the Almighty.

To hold that the so-called churches received the sanction, authority, and support of the Lord in their various misrepresentations of Christ and his gospel word would make God a party to the promulgation of contradictory doctrines and downright falsehood.

But God is not the author of confusion. Certain organic construction of the church and regulation of its worship was taught by Paul as necessary that the members might be edified. Without the proper edification of the body of Christ the question may continually arise, "What is wrong with our churches?"

To-day men are "tossed to and fro" and carried about by every cunning and crafty foible with which some "lie in wait to deceive." Christ, through his minister, Paul, taught that the safeguard against this being "tossed to and fro," their "lack of sympathy between the pulpit and the pew," was to have living apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, deacons, spiritual helps, manifestations of the spiritual gifts in tongues, etc., and all these for the edifying of the body.

Worldliness is not a part of the true church, and the true church is not a part of worldliness; and so long as worldly churches continue to eliminate the very means which God has appointed for edification they may continue to feed upon spiritual husks, and though they may serve their husks with sugar, or with salt and pepper, it is all the same, for the people will discover that they are husks still; and the question will not down, "What is wrong with our churches?"

The word of the Lord is to the people to-day the same as formerly: "Ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls."

But of the majority of the people in the present time it must be said as it was of those of old, "But they said, 'We will not walk therein.'"

PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS.

SHOULD IT BE UNDERSTOOD THAT ALL PERSONAL PROMISES FOUND IN A PATRIARCHAL BLESSING ARE BASED ON CONDITIONS? IF SO, SHOULD THE CONDITIONS BE EXPRESSED?

After the following article had been read and spoken to before the High Priests Quorum last April, it was resolved, That the paper be published by the consent of Brother Lewis and the Presiding Patriarch. The one who was presiding over the Order of Evangelists, at that time, believes the paper to be a good one, as a whole, and fully indorses the leading position and argument, made by the writer, all the way through. But he also believes, that if the words "as a rule," and "but there may be exceptions," were stricken from paragraph 1, the article would be safer and better. He believes the rule is an invariable one, and hence there can be no exceptions. In his way of thinking, it should be so understood by the Saints.

Brother Lewis is not willing to have the statements stricken out; hence it is published as written by him, and commended to the Saints for a careful reading.

J. R. LAMBERT.

LAMONI, IOWA, July 30, 1913.

In answer to the first question: Yes, as a rule, for in the dealings of God with man in all ages, so far as we have a history of the blessings promised, either spiritual, physical, or temporal, they are conditional; but there may be exceptions. The promises made to man in the Garden of Eden were conditional; we understand that man's days are numbered, but he can shorten them by transgressing or breaking the laws of nature, which are God's laws. A man may be promised to live to a good old age, but it stands to reason that it is with the understanding that he be wise and not overtax his strength or unnecessarily expose himself. He has his agency and he can commit suicide if he chooses, thus shortening his days one third or one half of the allotted time.

I know of a case: Some years ago a brother was promised in his patriarchal blessing that he should live to see the temple built; nothing was said about the conditions. This brother later was taken seriously ill; his affliction was brought upon him by unnecessary exposure and, when he was unable to work, he exposed himself by going outdoors in cold winter days; often he was seen on the streets, when in justice to himself he should have been indoors by the side of a warm stove. He was a young married man, anxious to make life pleasant for his wife, and he often insisted that they go visiting friends that had invited them, when he really should have been at home. In company with Brother G. W. Best, I assisted in administering to him. While Brother Best anointed, I saw in a vision a beautiful cluster of bouquet of flowers, several varieties, and all were in bloom and full of life; they were moved into other quarters that were not suitable to them, the atmosphere was too cold, and I saw them fade, wither, and decay. I was given to understand that as it was with the flowers, so it was with the sick brother; had he used wisdom, not exposed himself, he could have had claim upon the promise to live to see the temple built.

"But," says one, "if the promise was made by the Spirit of the Lord, did not the Lord know that the brother would act unwisely and shorten his days and not live to see the promise fulfilled?"

"Yes."

"Why, then, say he should live to see the temple built?" Upon the condition that he (the brother) do his part to preserve his health, so that he might live his allotted time. The Lord might say, "Thou shalt not perish by water nor fire." Still, if man willfully and knowingly jumps into the water or fire, he can not consistently have claim on the promise, and if he perishes, the fault is his own. Jesus said, "These signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them." The promises of the Lord can be relied upon, but the conditions must be complied with. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover."

All of the above promises are conditional. In the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy, which is quite lengthy (has sixty-eight verses), we have two pictures presented to Israel; the blessings and the curses, which promises are all conditional. By obedience and faithful service, the blessings promised are to be obtained; upon the other hand, disobedience would deprive Israel or others from receiving. Notice Jonah's message to Nineveh: "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown."

Still it was not.

"Why?"

"Because the people repented in sackcloth and ashes."

"Did not the Lord know they would repent?"

"Yes."

"Why then was Jonah commanded to say, 'In forty days the city shall fall'?"

With the understanding if they did not repent it would fall. The fact that forty days warning was given was evidence that if within that period they repented, the city would not fall. I presume if many who are living now had lived in the days of Jonah, when he delivered the message to the people of Nineveh, seeing that the city did not fall, they would cry, "False prophets." Even Jonah was disappointed and offended, because the city did not fall.

He preferred that the people perish and the city fall than that his prediction fail; whereas, if he had been clothed with charity, as was Abraham when told of the calamity that would befall Sodom, he would have rejoiced in the salvation of the people, and the city.

SECOND QUESTION, SHOULD THE CONDITIONS BE EXPRESSED?

It would be wise and a safeguard to do so, but whether they are or are not, all to whom the promises are made ought to understand that unless they do their duty the Lord is under no obligation to comply with the promises, and it is not consistent or just to expect it. The Lord has spoken to us in this age, saying, "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say; but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise." Not only in the patriarchal channel, but in baptisms, confirmations, ordinations, and administering to the sick, are the promises of God given on conditions, and also in the partaking of the sacrament. John 6: 54, 56: "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him." I do not understand that all who partake of the bread and wine shall receive the above promise; while conditions are not mentioned, just the same there are conditions, and only those who comply with the same can have claim upon the promises.

In Doctrine and Covenants 92: 1, we have the following: "But, behold, verily I say unto you, There are many who have been ordained among you, whom I have called, but few of them are chosen: they who are not chosen, have sinned a very grievous sin, in that they are walking in darkness at noonday," etc. In some ordinations remarkable promises have been made, which were not only encouraging to the ones ordained, but of cheer and strength to the flock. But some of those called and ordained, to whom the encouraging promises were made, became careless and unfaithful, consequently did not receive that which was promised, and were not chosen. Judas was called and ordained, but not chosen. We read of precious promises made to the members of the first quorum of apostles in the years 1835 to 1844, that did not materialize, which caused Joseph much grief and sorrow, for he, like Jonah, knew that the Lord had spoken; and not until he (Joseph) saw in a vision the members of the quorum in a very unclean condition, not worthy to receive, did he understand why the promises were not fulfilled. In Doctrine and Covenants 105: 5, the Twelve are rebuked through their president, Thomas B. Marsh, because of their sins. I refer to the above in support of the statement that "many are called, but few are chosen."

Blessings promised, as a rule, are conditional,— not only spiritual, but temporal blessings. A brother living on a farm was notified that the place was sold and that he would have to give possession the first of March. Four months had passed and the time to vacate had come; he was asked if he had rented another farm; he said, "Not yet."

"Is it not getting late? The best farms are about all disposed of."

He answered, "I am not worrying; the Lord has always provided."

This brother devoted much of his time in fall and winter in preaching in various parts of the district and had good opportunity of knowing where the best farms were. He could have secured one, but was waiting, as he expressed himself, for the way to open, when, in fact, it had been opened for several months and was now closing up. The best farms were gone and he had to take one of the poorest in the district. Still he believed the Lord would bless the labors of his hands and that even the wornout, thin soil would bring forth a hundred fold. The harvest came, but it was not even thirty fold. It is a true saying that the Lord will help those who try to help themselves, and will always fulfill his promises when man complies with the conditions in good faith.

WHAT MUST I DO TO BE SAVED?

In answering this question we read Hebrews 5:9: "And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." From these words we find there is something for us to do that we may be saved. We read further, James 1:25: "But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deeds."

We find, then, that there is a law, and that if we are doers of the same we will be saved. Jesus came to the earth to set up the kingdom of God, and it is within this kingdom that the law finds operation. There are four essentials to a kingdom: First, territory; second, subjects; third, law; fourth, officers to enforce the law. Jesus said in Matthew 6:33: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." So by obedience to the law we are saved; and are rewarded according to our obedience.

The jailer asked Paul and Silas, (Acts 16), who were ministers for Christ, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" They answered, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." Now for these to believe only was not sufficient. They had a work to do. Peter, on the day of Pentecost, when the question was asked the apostles, "What shall we do?" answered, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." (Acts 2:37, 38.) This was a part of the law of the kingdom with which they had to comply, though they had already believed. Not that the water washed the sins away, but that through obedience to the law they might secure the remission of sins. Paul and Silas taught the jailer and his family these same principles, for we find that they were baptized; (Acts 16:32, 33).

Jesus answers this question also in conversation with one of the rulers of the Jews, as we read in John 3. Notwithstanding this man was counted by some as one already saved, as some of our friends count themselves, from the question he asked Jesus he knew there was something yet lacking upon his part. He desired Jesus to tell him what he must do to be saved. Jesus answered, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God" (fifth verse). So it is impossible for us to be saved except we have been born of the water and of the Spirit. Now Paul and Silas, Peter, James, and Jesus, all harmonize in their teachings of salvation, teaching according as God, through Christ, gave the law by which all mankind might be saved.

Jesus says in bringing the gospel to man, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself" (John 7:16, 17). We find in 2 John 9, this language, "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." Except we are doers of his word, according to the law, we are not his children, for Christ said, "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven" (Matthew 7:21). We learn therefore that we must be doers of the word as well as hearers.

Paul tells us what the gate of entrance is (Hebrews 6:1-3). He enumerates the principles of doctrine as follows: Faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, eternal judgment. Now these are the steps of law we have to comply with before we can be saved. We can not leave one of them off and be the child of the "bride," which is the church, for this is the law by which the church gives life to its children. Christ makes it plain in his commission to the apostles after he arose from the dead: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." From this statement, unless we have faith, repent of our sins, are baptized by one who has been called of God by revelation, and ordained as was Aaron (Hebrews 5:4), and have hands laid upon us for the gift of the Holy Ghost, we are not saved.

Christ said, "I am the vine, ye are the branches: he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit" (John 15:5). We may know that Jesus is the Christ by the Holy Ghost (1 Corinthians 12:3). If Christ be the vine, then we, the branches, must know him. Except we are of the one vine (Christ), we can not bear fruit as the natural vine. For instance, an apple tree can not bear grapes. Just so, except we have been planted in Christ we can not be saved. We must be doers of his word, if we are to be of the one vine.

In Ecclesiastes 12:13, 14, we find the conclusion of the whole matter, which is as follows: "Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil." If our friends tell us we are saved without baptism or the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, they are hearers only, and are not obedient unto the law. We are not a branch of the vine unless we have been planted in the vine. If we bear the natural fruit we must be of the natural vine.

James, in his letter (James 2:17-26) says,

"Faith if it hath not works is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say thou hast faith and I have works: show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works. Thou believest that there is one God, thou doest well. The devils also believe and tremble. For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also."

This shows that faith alone will not save us. We find also, in James 1:22-25, that obedience is necessary. Christ emphasizes the need of compliance with law in his teachings, (Matthew 7:24-27); also, (John 14:23, 24). No wonder, then, that Paul said, (Hebrews 5:9) he, Christ, was the author of eternal salvation. Paul, in writing to the Galatian saints, said,

But though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you let him be accursed. As we said before so say we now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you other than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

Unto whom, then, shall we hearken; unto Jesus, or unto man? May we all learn to do the right, and all be saved in the celestial kingdom of God, is my prayer.

"LIVING ORACLES" GIVE WARNING.

Under the caption, "A warning voice," there appears in the Deseret Evening News of August 2 and August 16, from and over the signature of the First Presidency of the dominant church in Utah, the following statement, alike in each instance except for a few minor changes in the latter issue, such as appear to be corrections of typographical errors, occurring in the former. We quote from the issue of the sixteenth. This statement will be of interest to our people in that the First Presidency of the Utah Church call attention to the need of being governed by former revelations, as found in the constitutional law of the church, in matters of pretended, divine direction, in direct opposition to previous proclamations from the "Oracles" of Utah, which proclamations are gathered up in the statement of Orson T. Whitney, one of the twelve apostles of the Utah Church, in a sermon delivered at the 1910 October conference of the church, which statement appears in the editorial columns of this issue of the HERALD in connection with a discussion of the proclamation of the First Presidency of the Utah Church. We give this proclamation in full:

To the Officers and Members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints:

From the days of Hiram Page (Doctrine and Covenants, section 28), at different periods there have been manifestations from delusive spirits to members of the church. Sometimes these have come to men and women who because of transgression became easy prey to the Arch Deceiver. At other times people who pride themselves on their strict observance of the rules and ordinances and ceremonies of the church are led astray by false spirits, who exercise an influence so imitative of that which proceeds from a divine source that even these persons, who think they are "the very elect," find it difficult to discern the essential difference. Satan himself has transformed himself to be apparently "an angel of light."

When visions, dreams, tongues, prophecy, impressions or any extraordinary gift or inspiration conveys something out of harmony with the accepted revelations of the church or contrary to the decisions of its constituted authorities, Latter Day Saints may know that it is not of God, no matter how plausible it may appear. Also they should understand that directions for the guidance of the church will come, by revelation, through the head. All faithful members are entitled to the inspiration of the Holy Spirit for themselves, their families, and for those over whom they are appointed and ordained to preside. But anything at discord with that which comes from God through the head of the church is not to be received as authoritative or reliable. In secular as well as spiritual affairs, Saints may receive divine guidance and revelation affecting themselves, but this does not convey authority to direct others, and is not to be accepted when contrary to church covenants, doctrine or discipline, or to known facts, demonstrated truths, or good common sense. No person has the right to induce his fellow members of the church to engage in speculations or take stock in ventures of any kind on the specious claim of divine revelation or vision or dream, especially when it is in opposition to the voice of recognized authority, local or general. The Lord's church "is a house of order." It is not governed by individual gifts or manifestations, but by the order and power of the holy priesthood as sustained by the voice and vote of the church in its appointed conferences.

The history of the church records many pretended revelations claimed by impostors or zealots who believed in the manifestations they sought to lead other persons to accept, and in every instance, disappointment, sorrow and disaster have resulted therefrom. Financial loss and sometimes utter ruin have followed. We feel it our duty to warn the Latter Day Saints against fake mining schemes which have no warrant for success beyond the professed spiritual manifestations of their projectors and the influence gained over the excited minds of their victims. We caution the Saints against investing money or property in shares of stock which bring no profit to anyone but those who issue and trade in them. Fanciful schemes to make money for the alleged purpose of "redeeming Zion," or providing means for "the salvation of the dead" or other seemingly worthy objects, should not deceive anyone acquainted with the order of the church, and will result only in waste of time and labor, which might be devoted now to doing something tangible and worthy of record on earth and in heaven.

Be not led by any spirit or influence that discredits established authority, contradicts true scientific principles and discoveries, or leads away from the direct revelations of God for the government of the church. The Holy Ghost does not contradict its own revealings. Truth is always harmonious with itself. Piety is often the cloak of error. The counsels of the Lord through the channel he has appointed will be followed with safety. Therefore, O ye Latter Day Saints, profit by these words of warning.

PREPARING FOR THEIR LAST JOURNEY.

The modern Protestant says, "Live well; use your wealth with a sense of responsibility to God; be sober, be just to your neighbor, be temperate in your passions." The Russian says, "All that is minor matter; it is chiefly necessary to die well." Breaking the commandments means for the Protestant breaking with God until repentance; but for the Russian peasant there is no such feeling of breaking with God. The drunkard, the thief, and the murderer are as intimate with God as the just man, and perhaps even more intimate. Life doesn't matter very much; what matters is the everyday ties between man and God, that for which the ikon stands and the great rites by which man enters into communion with his higher destiny. All the rites of the Russian Church are very solemn, and they are invested with great importance. Certainly the funeral, the laying out of the dead body for its long rest, and the hymns and prayers sung over it, are felt to be not only impressive to the living, but good for the one who is dead.

It was amazing to me to see the extent to which the pilgrims sought in Jerusalem tokens for the clothing of their dead bodies, and how much their thoughts were centered on death and the final resurrection morning. They sanctified crosses at the grave; little ones to wear round their necks, and larger ones to lie on their breasts; they brought their death shrouds and cross-embroidered caps to dip them in Jordan; they took Jerusalem earth to put in their coffins, and even had their arms tattooed with the word Jerusalem and with pictures of the Virgin, so that they might lie so marked in the grave, and, indeed, that they might rise again so marked and show it in heaven. By these things they felt they obtained a sort of sanctity.

The going to Jordan was essentially something done against the last day. It was very touching that on the day before the caravan set out, the peasants cut linen to the shape of the Stone of the Anointing which stands outside the sepulcher, and placed that linen with their death shrouds on that stone for blessing, feeling that they were doing for their dead bodies just what Mary and Saint Joseph of Arimathea did for the body of Jesus, and upon the same stone. They felt it would be particularly good to rise from death in shrouds thus sanctified.—Stephen Graham, in Harper's for August.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH ARRAIGNED.

The Reverend Charles Steele Davidson, former pastor of Saint Mark's, Cleveland, Ohio; Holy Apostle, Brooklyn; Epiphany, Atlanta; and assistant rector of Christ Church, Charlottesville, Virginia, on July 28, at the gates of Monticello, home of Thomas Jefferson, severed his connection with the Episcopal Church by burning his vestments and prayer books. Later, in a written statement, he severely arraigned the Episcopal Church in the following language, taken from the semi-weekly Saint Louis Republic:

I charge that the Episcopal Church is the gentleman's church in general and in Virginia in particular. It is powerful financially and socially; stupid intellectually, and spiritually dead; that it needs a change of heart, repentance or utter obliteration.

It favors the rich and the cultured and has no vital interest in the poor and the common. It either segregates the poor in missions on the back streets or relegates them in churches to the back pews.

In Virginia the Episcopal Church is a mere relic of the old social feudalism and stands for a dry rotted conservatism that bars the progress of the kingdom. Virginia, after her long depression, is aroused and is marching on, but the church is retreating slowly to the citadel of tradition and materialism.

LEAVES VILE INNER MAN.

It is taking up the matter of physical uncleanness and is leaving vile the inner man. It is wasting time on eugenics and putting no time on eupsychics. It is contending with the ritualist about purity of worship when it has lost the spirit of worship.

The Episcopal Church everywhere is shot through with materialism. Its overtures in the matter of unity are insidious and hypocritical. Behind closed doors it claims superiority to all. The leaders are misleading. The church is not divine on the side of its human imperfections. To-day in its conventional aspect, it does not know God.

Here, therefore, on this Friday, the twenty-fifth day of July, 1913, at the gate of Monticello, at the home of the Apostle of the People's Political Freedom I burn the vestments of an important priesthood—the empty emblems of ecclesiasticism—the mockeries of a royal priesthood.

CALLS PRAYER BOOK FETISH.

Here I burn the prayer book—the fetish of a false worship—the idol of the diluted word of God.

Here I renounce and repudiate the ministry of the Episcopal Church which I received from Bishop Randolph—and all digital succession—and I retain the ministry which I received of the Lord Jesus and which the church never gave and can not take away.

Here, too, I proclaim the Bible as the sufficient rule of faith and order—as the sufficient guide book and prayer book for everyone that is born of the Spirit. And here, at the shrine of political and social freedom, I assert the religious identity of the American people—a spiritual democracy against a religious aristocracy.

Here I proclaim the day of the spiritual poor and here I call upon Virginia, the Mother of Presidents and the Mother of Democracy, to take the lead in replacing the special privilege of a part of the church with the right of all the church.

Woman's Auxiliary.

(Home and Child Welfare Department.)

September Reading; Woman and Child Welfare.

"We must all live for and with the children. Indeed, what else is there in all the world worth living, working, dying for? We adults pass on after we have transmitted the sacred torch of life; and the only test of state, home, church, school, or civilization is whether or not it brings childhood and youth to the fullest possible maturity."

G. Stanley Hall, President of Clark University and Professor of Psychology and Pedagogy, deduces these great thoughts from the philosophy of Froebel. Upon the subject of motherhood, this writer says: "Only the complete mother is the complete woman and the complete father the complete man. . . . The soul of woman is restless till it finds the fulfillment of its deepest desires in motherhood. Is there anywhere a normal woman of thirty-five or forty, famous though she be, who would not in her heart prefer home, husband, and children above all things the world has offered? The wife enters, but only the mother graduates from the great college of life. Nature has no more magnificent processional than the gradual blossoming of wifely into motherly love. Without this, womanhood is unfinished."

WOMAN'S VOCATION.

"Wifehood is the vocation of ninety-three out of every hundred women in the land and motherhood of the great majority of these," says Doctor Hall. "Women are to-day taught least of all the things they most need to know, viz, home-making and child-rearing. In these matters to-day the average American woman is ignorant and incompetent, and the school is doing little to improve her in these most vital of all respects. She is growing independent of and indifferent, if not averse, to wedlock, more unwilling to have children, less able to nurse or even to keep them alive the first year, if not during the first five years of life, as our sad and well-known statistics show. . . . Schools for the care of babies, now successful in various parts of Europe, the American girl would avoid, and to study children, even in college classes of psychology, seems to her almost like 'casting her sex in her teeth.' She too often prefers to forget she is a woman and to exult in the glorious liberty of the sons of men rather than in that of the daughters of women."

Miss Ida M. Tarbell is the author of a book entitled, The Business of Being a Woman. In this book she says, "The central fact of the woman's life—Nature's reason for her—is the child, his bearing and rearing. There is no escape from the divine order that her life must be built around this constraint, duty, or privilege, as she may please to consider it."

The German definition of a woman's vocation is given as the four k's—Kuche, Kleider, Kinder, and Kirche (kitchen, clothes, children, and church). This may seem to be a narrow sphere for women. But the kitchen or hearth stands for nutrition, and there is much truth in the saying, "One is what he eats." The kitchen has to do with the welfare of the race. Clothes involve ethics and hygiene. "That woman never lived who did all she might have done to open the mind of her child for its great adventure. It is an exhaustless task." Realizing this, Chesterton said, "I will pity Mrs. Jones for the hugeness of her task; I will never pity her for its smallness." When women devote themselves to the welfare of children in general, and to those departments of service which are open to them in the work of the church, their sphere is so widened as to admit of the use of all powers with which they are endowed.

THE INNER CIRCLE AND THE OUTER.

From The Business of Being a Woman we quote again: "Human society may be likened to two great circles, one revolving within the other. In the inner circle rules the woman. Here she breeds and trains the material for the outer circle. . . . That accident may throw her into this outer circle is, of course, true, but it is not her natural habitat, nor is she fitted by nature to live and circulate freely there. The labor of the world is naturally divided between the two different beings that people the world. It is unfair to the woman that she be asked to do the work of the outer circle. The man can do that satisfactorily if she does her part; that is, if she prepares him the material. Certainly he can never come into the inner circle and do her work."

Miss Tarbell states here that the idea that there is a kind of inequality for a woman in minding her own business and letting man do the same comes from our confused and rather stupid notion of the meaning of equality. She points out the mistake of thinking that to be alike and to do the same things is to be equal. She calls attention to the difference between men and women in functions and possibilities, and asserts that they can not be made alike by exterior devices; that is, to assume a masculine style of dress, to pursue the same studies, and participate in politics will not make woman the equal of man. Doctor Hall says on this subject, "Woman is man's superior in her own sphere, but is not his equal in his." We may make a similar assertion of man and his work. Man and woman are equal, though different, each one excellent in his or her own sphere of action.

WOMAN'S PREPARATION FOR HER WORK.

In the industrial world there is a field of labor occupied by those who are unskilled where the compensation is low. The woman who enters the work of motherhood unprepared is an unskilled laborer. She can not herself receive, neither can she give to the world, the results that would follow were she a skilled laborer in her field.

In what should she be skilled? Not alone in those things which pertain to household management, but in those things which will develop her children mentally and spiritually. To feed and clothe them, to keep them clean and in health are essential, but they are not the full duty of a mother. To open their minds to understand and their hearts to feel--these duties must not be neglected. She must be teacher and spiritual guide to them.

Skill in these things does not come without preparation. "The study of the child is in our day the subject to which the greatest teachers and the greatest teachers of teachers are devoting their best energies." "The child is the focus of interest for every kind of social and humanistic study." He is studied by those who would build up the church, the state, the race. "Child-study, once ridiculed and despised, has spread to every highly civilized land and is represented by academic chairs and journals galore and has become the chief stone of the corner." (Hall.) Shall we ignore this study which the best educators of the day are urging, not only upon teachers but upon mothers as well? The home is charged with abandoning its functions to the school, "which latter excuses itself by charging its own defects and shortcomings back upon the home."

Our public schools are properly recognizing the need of the understanding of domestic science by girls, and mothers should eagerly cooperate in this effort to prepare their daughters for home keeping. Doctor Hall earnestly urges that young girls, in choosing their vocation, select one that will develop the maternal qualities. Above all others, he recommends the kindergarten. He says, "If society makes ladies, the college, scholars, the industries, managers or hired servants, the kindergarten makes women and gives those who would and should become mothers one of the very best substitutes for this function and preserves the best there is in young or even aging maidenhood."

WOMEN IN PUBLIC LIFE.

In eleven of our States women now have the right of suffrage. Delegates from these States recently assembled in Washington, District of Columbia, their object being to work for the national enfranchisement of women. From present indications it appears that the responsibility of the suffrage by women may soon be general in our land.

In those States which already have it, many women are occupying places of public office. In Wyoming twenty out of twenty-one county superintendents of schools are women. In Idaho all but three holding this office are women, and the rural schools are reported as being in excellent condition, sewing, domestic science, and agriculture being taught even in the mountain districts. In Colorado and Idaho the office of State Superintendent of Schools is held by women. In Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, and Washington, women have been elected representatives and senators. They have championed bills to prevent traffic in women, to compel the reporting of venereal diseases, to provide for the medical examination of school children, to compel wife deserters to support their families, to enforce pure food regulations, to establish public libraries, and many other progressive measures. It is to be observed, however, that in many States where women have not the suffrage, laws are being passed to accomplish this same work of progress.

Among offices filled by women we find that of justice of the peace, county treasurer, county clerk, state librarian, member of school board, treasurer of school board, city nurse, juror, police matrons, policewomen, inspector appointed by labor commission, inspector of markets, deputy health officer.

These are exceptional tasks for women. Many of those performing them are commanding respect and a high degree of appreciation. A leading journal in recent issue remarks that we are now observing a great historic change in the public life of our country and also in the actual character of women themselves. What would be the effect if women, in reaching out for the tasks that men can perform, should neglect those tasks men can not do, and should lose the characteristics of motherhood?

Clearly, the work of the home must not be neglected. To do so is to send into the world a stream of the unprepared, the ignorant and immoral. It is the presence of these in society that makes necessary the work of reform. A vast army of women is now at work in various child welfare agencies. There are children's aid societies (the placing out system), industrial schools and homes, help for girls who have gone wrong, playground associations, purity associations, child labor committees, juvenile protective associations, children's libraries, fresh air and convalescent homes, open air schools, kindergartens, societies for the prevention of diseases, children's hospitals, women's clubs, mothers' associations, and many others. According to statistics, there are more than ninety species of such organizations.

WOMAN, THE MOTHER.

More vast than this army is that of the mothers at home. Who can estimate what might be accomplished, were each of these mothers a skilled laborer, competent for her work in the development of her children, able to help them to grow to the complete stature of noble manhood and womanhood?

But the mother can not do her work without the help of her husband. He has equal interest with her in the home and the children, and the center of her circle is the center of his wider circle also. His wise and faithful cooperation is needed both in the inner circle of the home and in the outer circle of business, politics, etc. If, in exceptional cases, women enter into the work of the outer circle should it not be to carry to it the mother spirit, to work there in the interest of childhood and youth? Policewomen of large cities, who are practically chaperones of girls in public places, perform the work of mothers. So also do the women who act as assistant judges in the juvenile court and those who act as matrons in police and railway stations. So do many other women in public service who are actuated by the true mother spirit.

Woman and mother—the words are synonymous. The little girl holding her doll or her baby brother or sister, or mothering her playmates; the maid in her teens learning of the mysteries of life and of her part in the plan of creation; the college girl studying domestic science and child-culture; the woman rearing her own brood to contribute to the sum of good in the world, regarding at the same time the welfare of other children and, later, as her hands are freed, extending her influence in the interests of childhood—always and everywhere she is the mother, the conservator of child welfare.

Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE FIRST THURSDAY IN SEPTEMBER.

The church, its priesthood and members, that all may earnestly engage in the building up of Zion to the ideal condition of oneness and equality revealed in the revelations of the church. Pray that each member of the church may be clothed with that charity which will lead him to speak evil of no one but may regard the reputation of our brother or sister as we regard our own. That greater power may be had in the healing of the sick.

Doctrine and Covenants 56: 5, 6. Memory verse, 1 Corinthians 1: 10.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

PRESCOTT, ARIZONA, August 14, 1913.

Dear Sisters: I would be very thankful if the sisters of the Prayer Union would remember me in their prayers, asking that God would direct and heal (if it be his will) a young man, not a member of the church, but a good Christian of wonderfully pure character, and having faith in God. Tuberculosis has a firm hold on him. He has been anxious to have our elders administer to him but there has been no opportunity. He expressed his willingness to accept this gospel could he surely know of its truthfulness, but is not in condition to study for himself. I have every reason to think he would be of much value in God's work and exert a large influence, should God see fit to spare his life and lead him into the truth.

In gospel bonds,

MRS. C. E. STURGES.

A sister, known unto the Lord whom she seeks to serve, but unknown to us and compelled even to reserve her name in making this request, earnestly solicits the prayers of the members of this union, that she may be strengthened spiritually to guide and influence her children in the gospel way which she dearly loves, but in which she is radically opposed by her husband who does not approve of the church and discourages every effort she tries to make.

There comes also a request from Brother Robert Campbell who has been physically afflicted since last spring and does not improve much, though he has had the attention of two doctors. His wife was once healed of an affliction through prayer, and this encourages him to ask for the prayers of the Union in his interest. Prayers are also asked for his brother, Lee Campbell, who has stomach trouble.

It is sincerely hoped that there is a large number of devout Saints who observe this period of secret prayer in behalf of the distressed ones who appeal to us for our sympathetic support. There can be no doubt that blessings will come to us from the Lord, if this united effort be made by us. Let us take a little time from our busy distractions of worldly care to pray to our Father who hears in secret and ask him to regard the needs and the supplications of his suffering children.

The Temple of God.

We read in the sacred word, of a house that was built by King Solomon for the service of God, he having been chosen by Jehovah to do this work. This structure was built of costly materials, some of them being brought from Tyre, a city of the Phœnicians, whose king was in alliance with the king of Israel to whom he was joined by the closest bonds of friendship. This temple was built of cedar; the inside, of carved woodwork, was overlaid with gold.

The candlesticks were of gold. The candles burning within them at the evening hour lighted up the interior, presenting a scene of unrivaled splendor. Seven years this temple was in building, and when finished a beautiful, bright cloud filled it, giving evidence of divine acceptance.

When King Solomon dedicated this temple to Jehovah his dedicatory prayer was a continued prophecy of the things that would befall the Israelites in after years.

The temple that existed in the days of Christ was built of stone and was of larger dimensions. It was not finished in the days of the Savior. Men were still working on the outer buildings. Sacred memories are associated with this temple, within whose hallowed walls was heard the voice of Him "who spake as never man spake."

The aged Simeon being in the temple when the infant Savior was carried there, knew by the Spirit that he was the expected Messiah, and taking the holy child in his arms blessed him and said, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

Travelers tell us that seen from a distance this temple appeared like a vast mountain of snow, and when the sun shone upon it, it shone with such brilliancy as to dazzle the eyes of the beholder. Shortly before leaving the world the Savior said to his disciples: "Behold ye these stones of the temple and all this great work and buildings of the temple? Verily I say unto you they shall be thrown down and left unto the Jews desolate."—Mark 13: 2, 3, I. T.

The Roman army under Titus was the instrument used in bringing to pass the fulfillment of this prophecy, A. D. 97; and with the destruction of the holy city and temple came the downfall of the kingdom of Israel. A just retribution for the rejection of the Messiah and their unholiness utterance, "His blood be upon us and upon our children."

The temple of the last days which is yet to be built will be of a different pattern from any of preceding ages. That this temple will be built on the spot pointed out by the finger of God there can be no doubt whatever.

It was shown one who doubted the building of a temple and even the gathering of the Saints. He saw the work of building after it was started. He saw men and women working on it, and even children bringing little baskets of material to aid in the work. He was shown the building when completed, and walking up the steps he entered and saw men seated who said they were waiting for the coming of Christ.

He saw folding doors, one of which stood ajar, and passing through saw a congregation of Saints, the Savior standing in front talking to them. He saw the elders, he with others, pass under his hands in the order of their priesthood. Having passed thus he saw them straighten up as if infused with new life. He saw a baptismal font made of silver which appeared as large as a small chapel. "And the Lord whom ye seek will suddenly come to his temple."—Malachi 3: 2.

E. B. FARRAR.

CORONA, CALIFORNIA.

DERBY, INDIANA, August 6, 1913.

Editors Herald: R. B. Neal, of Grayson, Kentucky, has the following item in the Christian Evangelist of June 26, 1913: "Regret to hear of the declining health of Brother C. A. Shook, Eddyville, Nebraska. He at one time was a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He had opportunity to understand the teachings and claims of Mormonism. After a thorough investigation, he not only renounced the system; he became a fearless opponent of it. His two books, Cumoram Revisited, and Origin of Mormon Polygamy, are surely in the van as authority on the issues discussed. As these issues are live ones and must be met by our pastors and evangelists everywhere, I suggest that it would be the thing to do to order these books from him. You need the books and he needs the income they ought to bring."

The writer knew Mr. Shook a number of years ago at Buchanan, Michigan. Am sorry he renounced the "one faith" and regret to learn of his ill health. As to his books: I trust he is not like the rest of the writers on Mormonism (so-called), that is, wrote his books to meet "a long felt want" and has "felt the want" himself more than anyone else.

A. C. BARMORE.

MCCRACKEN, KANSAS, August 8, 1913.

Editors Herald: Have just returned from Atchison, where I had been engaged in teaching school; am spending summer with parents. Having heard of Brother Alvin Knisley's success at Modoc and Leoti, where he baptized a number, and being informed that he was to hold meetings at Alexander (a branch about fifteen miles from my home), I accordingly attended some of the time and noted a good attendance and interest. Rejoiced to see the baptism of four promising young ladies and one young man. There are others there who have given their names for baptism when he returns.

At my request Brother Knisley agreed to hold meetings in my near vicinity. A very dear teacher of mine, H. R. Barnard, who has a college modernly equipped, very kindly offered us the use of the building as long as we wanted it. We very gratefully accepted. The meetings started with rather small audiences, but the interest and crowds grew. The minister gave such powerful and convincing sermons that I believe the old regime is just about broken down.

Although people are busy in fields, they attended with marked regularity—could not miss a sermon; every one is busy reading pamphlets and referring to their Bibles. The result is marvelous—never have I seen people so interested in religion as at this time; many I believe are near the water. But unfortunately Brother Knisley was called away on account of the death of his uncle in Saskatchewan, Canada.

Brother John Teeters will take charge of appointments already made, and by the help of the divine Master we hope to accomplish a great work in this part. As the seed has been sown, we are prayerful that we shall get good results. Although there is some opposition, we are praying that it will only increase our humility and integrity.

Your sister in the work,

LILLIAN CURTIS.

COLUMBUS, KANSAS, August 7, 1913.

Editors Herald: We wish to express our appreciation of the benefits received and enjoyed by an earnest and prayerful perusal of your pages, so richly laden with our heavenly Father's message to the children of earth in these latter days. How truly does it bring cheer, comfort, and consolation when we move out and do those things he has required of us.

We attended the district conference at Weir, where we first met our inimitable Brother J. W. Rushton, and heard him preach there and at Scammon, Kansas.

I wish to mention the Bishop's appeal for financial assistance. I felt led to move right out and do our duty, which we have tried to do. We are confident and even sure that God's arm will not be short in blessing all who will cheerfully, willingly, and faithfully comply to relieve the present need. This is the experience of the writer in the past.

We were at Weir, Kansas, last Sunday; attended all services of the day; prayer meeting was especially good, God's Spirit being enjoyed to a great degree, by some at least. How truly is he so patient, kind, and merciful to us all, and especially those who keep his laws and commandments.

He who would be up and doing, must first go down in humility before God, in faith believing that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek. Otherwise how shall we be able to learn our duty to him from whose loving hand all our blessings are received? Greater unity and oneness will bring us greater blessings, spiritual and temporal. Except ye are one, ye are none of mine, is in striking contrast with the prevailing spirit of the age, or rather spirits, for they are legion, from among which we will mention a few: Distrust, deceit, discord, division, hate, unforgiveness, pride, revenge, doubt, jealousy,—all enemies of that spirit we so much need and must have if we successfully overcome the evils around us every day.

Among the modern books we find those which are most dangerous, deceptive, and destructive. I have just been reading one of this class, entitled, The Call of the Carpenter. How truly necessary it is to have this Spirit which is able to make us wise unto salvation, that we may be able to discern between the true and the false.

Dear Saints, let us seek daily for this guidance, that we may be able to stand and withstand the tide of infidelity that is at present sweeping the earth.

Your brother in Christ,

C. C. RANDALL.

OTWAY, OHIO, August 7, 1913.

Editors Herald: Our branch is known as the Pleasant Valley Branch. It is situated seven miles from Otway, with a membership of about ninety, scattered over a large part of the country. We have one elder, one priest, two teachers, and one deacon. During the last two months we have had Elder John Davis and Elder N. L. Booker with us, who have done some able preaching.

The writer was with the branch Saturday night, August 2. We met in regular business meeting; we had a fine meeting; everything was in complete harmony. The good Spirit was present. On Sunday morning we had Sunday school, and at eleven o'clock our branch elder S. W. Henry, preached to a good audience, after which we had a nice dinner at the church. We had an enjoyable time together. At 2:30 a sacrament service was conducted. A goodly number of the Saints were present and enjoyed the Spirit.

We are taught that the sacrament is for life of the body—the church. John tells us that if we eat not his flesh and drink not his blood we have no life in us. The emblems are needful to us in the church. Dear Saints, let us not neglect this all-important matter. Some will say, I am not worthy. Let us live in harmony with the requirements of the gospel and desire to be worthy and God will accept our efforts and desires. It is the doer of the law who is justified. Now may we all give the more earnest heed to the things that we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip.

I am your brother in the one faith of the restored gospel,
G. T. MITCHELL.

PERRY, IOWA, August 13, 1913.

Editors Herald: While reading over a back number of the HERALD, I came upon these lines, written by I. B. Smith.

"I believe in the religion of love—love for everybody and everything, the rich and the poor, the well and the afflicted, the weak and the strong, the old and the young, for man and for beast. I believe it were better to praise the honest living than to eulogize the dishonest dead; better to pluck a blossom from the breast of nature and pin it with affectionate touch to the tattered coat of some forlorn unfortunate, than to lay a wreath of hothouse bloom upon some rogue's luxurious casket."

And what a world of meaning there is in these words. It is my earnest prayer that everyone who reads them will strive with all strength and will power to gain that blessed, true religion of love; and that by gaining it, we may be able to stay the ravages of sin from little folks. A religion without love to our brothers and sisters availeth nothing.

My prayers are for all. Thanking all for their prayers in my behalf, for God has surely answered them.

Yours, hoping always to remain worthy of prayers,
MRS. FRED PEASLEY.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, August 15, 1913.

Editors Herald: The Southern California reunion closed Sunday, August 11, with great rejoicing over the spirit of love made manifest among the Saints of God. How glorious when we see the the Spirit of God made manifest among the Saints of God. What encouragement to the anxious soul that is seeking and hungering and thirsting after righteousness.

Concerning our president, Brother V. M. Goodrich, whom our Father in heaven has sent to encourage and strengthen the Saints with his gentle words of love, and kindness, and to gather the harvest in that is ripening surely if slowly, may the Lord bless every effort he may put forth in the name of the Master in this land of sunshine, that the harvest may be great, the reapers plentiful, and the gathering in of the sheaves abundant, is the prayer of a meek and humble follower of the cause of Christ.

We enjoyed a visit of an hour at the church Wednesday evening with our brother, Gomer T. Griffiths, who is on his way to Australia, his mission field. And what a spiritual feast we enjoyed! How it makes our hearts rejoice in the great latter day gospel, and that we are striving to reach the goal. How we long for the time when this earth will be purified, and the Lord will appear, and we shall be gathered together to dwell with him and shall receive eternal life. Brother Griffiths' lessons presented were a feast of faith and love, and we could not help but think how glorious to walk in the steps of the Master. These words came to me:

Faith shows the precious promise sealed with the Redeemer's blood;

And helps our feeble hope to rest upon a faithful God.

Wide it unveils celestial worlds where deathless pleasures reign;

And bids us seek our portion there, and bids us not in vain.

There—there unshaken would we rest till our frail bodies die,

And then on faith's triumphant wings to endless glory rise.

Saints, we can all reach this endless glory if we walk in the steps of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Is it worth the struggles of life? To me it is worth all this world could give us and more.

Other brethren were here also with good things.

Lord hasten the time of thy coming is my prayer in Jesus name.

Your sister in the faith of this glorious gospel of latter days,
MINNIE ROCKHOLD.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, August 2, 1913.

Editors Herald: I enjoy reading the HERALD, and receive much good from it. When I last wrote I was at Wabash, Ontario; I have been among the Saints in a number of places since then.

About three weeks ago I came from Brodhead, Kentucky, where I had listened to a few good, edifying sermons by Brother Charles Oliver and Brother Provett. The meetings were held about three miles from Brodhead, near Ottawa, Kentucky. There was a good attendance, the people seeming to be interested. The Saints there are ambitious for the cause. They would work all day in the hot sun, then walk about two miles to preach and hear the gospel.

When I came to Louisville I found a nice little church and a few earnest workers, and I enjoyed the Sunday school, preaching, prayer meeting, and Religio with them.

As I have been reading the requests for prayer my desire is to ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be healed of my deafness, which has been my affliction for years. I have prayed about it, have been administered to and get relief, but have never been entirely healed. I feel that if the Lord could heal the deaf in olden times he can heal me now.

May the Lord bless this work, that we may live so we may teach others and show them the plan of salvation is my prayer.

Your sister in Christ,

435 WEST LEE.

MINNIE DUNLOP.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, July 28, 1913.

Editors Herald: I have just come from the home of our noble standbys Brother Nelson and Sister Abigail VanFleet. They have sounded no uncertain note. Their testimony has weeks.

Though suffering and weak they are still the personification of hope, and running over with optimism. They are ready for the change. They have been inseparable in life, and it is quite evident that one will not long survive the other. These two stalwarts have stood like oaks amid storm and tempest. They have sounded no uncertain note. Their testimony has been unwavering and their purpose steady.

They came to California in the spring of 1883 and went to Santa Ana, remaining there for a few months and finally located at Downey where they made their permanent home until coming to Los Angeles a couple of years ago.

Their home was always open to the elders and members of the church and for many years Downey was the gathering place of the faithful. A number of reunions were held at this place, and, while there was no branch there, still the Saints felt they could not get along without the supervising care of Sister VanFleet. Joseph and Alexander Smith, W. W. Blair, Heman C. Smith, D. S. Mills, James Gillen, Joseph Luff, David Harris, Hiram Holt, Joseph Burton, R. R. Dana, and a host of others have had occasion to appreciate their hospitality and service.

They have led clean, upright lives. They have steadied the feet of the faltering and supported the hands of the weak. They have been a father and mother to the people of Southern California.

Brother VanFleet was ordained a number of years ago to the office of patriarch and, while he never exercised his function of giving patriarchal blessings, yet his personality and life, his inspiring example, his stirring testimonials and unflinching purpose have fallen as a blessing on every member of the entire district.

Their work will continue. They will live in the chastened hearts of the true and faithful both without and within the church. They will live in the hearts of their children and children's children for many generations yet to come.

But few of the old California pioneers remain. A few years at most and the generation which planted the banner in this southland will all have gone to their reward and another generation will take up the work and carry it to its consummation.

Brother Goodrich is making good and I am glad. He is now happy in the companionship of wife and babies, thanks to the generous impulse of the Los Angeles membership. My wife and I knew Sister Goodrich as a slip of a girl in New Philadelphia some twenty-five years ago. It is a pleasure to meet again.

The sisters of the Ladies Aid gave an entertainment and ice cream social at the church last Thursday night, which netted them a goodly sum to apply on the expense of bringing Brother Goodrich's family west.

Brother James E. Kelley is busy throughout the district, although his health remains somewhat precarious.

Prospects are encouraging for a good reunion. From indications the attendance will be equal to former years.

Yours as ever,
THOS. W. WILLIAMS.

WINTER HILL, MASSACHUSETTS, July 30, 1913.

Editors Herald: In a recent issue of the Herald is an article of generous length setting forth the view that the local officers of branches and district can get along without the "traveling presiding councils of the church" in their midst. Such a view, if believed by the readers of our church paper, can not but seriously interfere with the influence and work of these "leading representative authorities of the church."

A charge that the traveling councils of the church are wasting their time in branches and districts can do no good by appearing through the church press; no quorum in the church is performing its work more faithfully or under greater sacrifice, nor is any one doing more for the church in extending its interests, nor has any one the interests of the church more at heart than those of the traveling ministry. If one who criticizes knows best how to carry on missionary work, why was he not ordained to that work?

It would be most interesting if some one, holding the view that the Twelve should confine their efforts to unorganized districts and have no rights in organized districts or in branches, would contribute an article dealing with the validity or otherwise of the Apostle Paul's work in regulating and setting in order the "churches of Galatia," the church at Corinth, Ephesus, and at Rome. This would reveal the false character of the interpretation of partial texts taken from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants used to sustain the view that the standing ministry should have complete and exclusive control of branches and districts.

I suppose if some now living had lived in the days of the New Testament church they would have told the Twelve of that day to keep out of the branches, the local officers could regulate and set in order—but living to-day the corrective apostolic epistles written to the Galatians, Thessalonians, and Corinthians are regarded as scripture!

Sincerely,

PAUL M. HANSON.

MALAD CITY, IDAHO, August 2, 1913.

Editors Herald: I left my field of labor the latter part of March, attended General Conference (one of the best in the history of the church), visited relatives in Independence and Joplin, Missouri, thence home, to Tigris, Missouri, May 9, where I remained till the 17th; then off to my field again.

I stopped at Springfield; was headed off there by a letter from Brother Marion Hollandsworth, of Eldridge, Missouri, requesting me to be there on the 23d. (The authorities of the Southern Missouri District will please pardon me for complying with the above request.)

I also stopped off at Independence and Saint Joseph. At the latter place I preached a few sermons to a noble band of Saints, presided over by Elder J. L. Bear, a wise laborer, in whom they have full confidence. They kindly remember the needs of a missionary.

On June 2 I left Saint Joseph for Idaho, arriving in Malad City on the 6th, since which time I have labored here and in Bannock Valley. I have baptized four; others are seemingly near the kingdom.

Yours in gospel bonds,
J. C. CHRESTENSEN.

Extracts from Letters.

Columbus Scott, Nebraska City, Nebraska: "Southern Nebraska and Fremont, Iowa, reunion has been a success. Three were baptized by Brother Walter M. Self, one a former woman preacher with Salvation Army and Holiness people. Brother E. F. Robertson and I are preaching alternately evenings on the church lawn, Brethren Self and Higgins in charge."

William Spargo, Wigan, England: "I have just returned from the Manchester conference. The good spirit of love, joy, and peace was manifested among the Saints. The preaching on the restoration of the gospel by Brethren R. May and U. W. Greene was good, indeed, to hear. Surely the gospel is not in word only, but also in power, in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

R. T. Cooper, 5117 Wall Street, Los Angeles, California: "Southern California district reunion convened August 1, and closed August 10. In the words of one of the presidency, 'O. K.' may be written at the close. In point of attendance it was the best success ever had in this district, being an increase of about fifty per cent over last year. The interest was excellent, preaching all characterized by a more than usual degree of inspiration, educational and dealing with the pertinent and vital issues of the day. The principal item of interest in the conference was the report of the reunion grounds committee showing a net asset of the reunion grounds project of $19,569.99 over and above liabilities, which total only $2,450, which is covered by contracts for lots sold; an effort is being made now to sell the remaining lots and realize the assets in order to erect the auditorium for next year if possible. Officers elected: President, Nathaniel Carmichael; associate, Frank W. Burton; secretary, R. T. Cooper; on the auditing committee, A. H. Knowlton. The next semiannual conference is to be held at Los Angeles in February, and efforts will be made with the cooperation of the missionaries in charge to arrange dates for next

Notice of Appointment.

To Whom It May Concern: This is to certify that M. F. Gowell, whose appointment at the late conference was referred to the minister in charge and the Bishop, has been appointed to labor in the Far West District. This is to commend our brother to the confidence and support of the Saints and friends among whom he shall labor.

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

Conference Notices.

Saint Louis district conference will convene at Belleville, Illinois, September 27 and 28. A special invitation is extended to the priesthood and membership of the Central and Southeastern Illinois districts to meet with us on this occasion. Apostle J. W. Rushton will be present, at which time he will undertake the work of organizing into quorums the priesthood of the three districts named, and for this reason a full attendance of all the members of the priesthood is particularly urged. Joint session of Religio and Sunday school will convene at 2.30 p. m. the 27th, conference business session at 6 p. m. Let all attend and come to enjoy a spiritual feast. Don't forget to bring your lunch baskets. R. Archibald, president, Charles J. Remington, secretary Saint Louis District.

Mobile district conference will convene with the Theodore Branch September 13 and 14, at 10 a. m. Let all branches and members of the priesthood report. Oscar Tillman, president.

Reunion Notice.

Western Nebraska reunion will be held at Pleasant View Branch, near Tryon, Nebraska, September 5 to 15. Those coming by rail will be met at North Platte and conveyed to the grounds free. It is necessary that orders for tents be sent in by August 20. All expenses will be met by collection. Speakers will be provided for. All are cordially invited to attend. The free conveyances will leave North Platte at nine o'clock on September 4, for the reunion grounds. William F. Godfrey, secretary, Tryon, Nebraska.

Died.

SHIPPY.—Algia C. Shippy was born September 28, 1817, at Grove Hill, Iowa, was instantly killed by lightning near Keensburgh, Colorado, July 15, 1913. Five brothers, three sisters, and a host of friends were left to mourn. The body, accompanied by W. T. and L. L. Shippy was taken to Fairbanks, Iowa, for burial. Funeral sermon from the home of E. E. Shippy at Oran, Iowa. In the absence of a Latter Day Saint minister, Reverend Madison Reynolds conducted the funeral, the Woodman lodge having a part in the services. A life spent helping others was thus brought to an untimely close. Many beautiful flowers helped to express the esteem in which he was held.

WELCH.—Sister Elizabeth Welch was born February 22, 1888. She married Albert Welch January 2, 1904. They were baptized August 25, 1906. She died at Junction City, Iowa, August 11, 1913, from an oil explosion which occurred while starting a fire. Sister Welch was faithful to her covenant. She leaves husband, father, mother, brother, sisters, and other relatives and friends. Funeral services at Nashville, Iowa, sermon by Edwin Lowe, jr.

KNIGHT.—Geneva Alice, infant daughter of George and Veda Knight, was born March 20, 1913, at Flint, Michigan; blessed April 20, by John R. Grice and William H. Collins; passed away Monday, August 18. A youthful father, mother, and baby brother of twenty months are left to mourn. The family were passing this way to South Dakota when the baby became ill Friday or Saturday and died Monday. Strangers in a strange land, their sorrow was increased. But they soon found friends, in and out of the church, who extended loving service. Sermon at the Latter Day Saints' church, Burlington, Iowa, by O. R. Miller.

BROOKS.—Gertie May, daughter of William and Agnes Brooks, was born August 10, 1885, at the home where she died, seven miles south of Centralia, Kansas, July 15, 1913. She has been an invalid for ten or twelve years, yet bore her affliction with patience and saint-like fortitude. The funeral was from the Eureka Methodist Church, the Methodist choir furnishing the music. Sermon by Frank G. Hedrick.

If anything is sacred, the human body is sacred. And in man or woman a clean, strong, firm-fibred body is more beautiful than the most fascinating face.—Elbert Hubbard.

THE CHURCH AND DRINK.

A word of wisdom for the benefit of the council of high priests, assembled in Kirtland, and church; and also, the Saints in Zion: to be sent greeting: not by commandment, or constraint: but by revelation and the word of wisdom: showing forth the order and will of God in the temporal salvation of all Saints in the last days. Given for a principle with promise, adapted to the capacity of the weak, and the weakest of all Saints, who are or can be called Saints.

Inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father, only in assembling yourselves together, to offer up your sacraments before him. And behold, this should be wine, yea, pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make. And again, strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies.

The language above is the introduction to section eighty of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and a portion of verse one of the same section, as appearing in the edition of 1835. To be exact we have followed the punctuation of this first edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. This communication appears in the Lamoni Edition as section eighty-six.

The introduction sets out both the understanding and position of the church with reference to this revelation at the time of its acceptance and adoption. It was "for the benefit of . . . the church." "Sent . . . by revelation . . . showing forth the order and will of God." It was "adapted to the capacity of the weak, and the weakest of all Saints," and was intended for "the temporal salvation" of all "who are or can be called Saints."

• THE WILL OF GOD.

The position has been taken by some that inasmuch as this communication was "not by commandment, or constraint" that the Saints were free to choose. Wherein this reasoning affords justification in the minds of those who disregard "the order and will of God" is not made plain.

It is a higher type of obedience that follows not a command, but expressed desire, will, or order ordained. Jesus said to his disciples: "Henceforth I call you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I call you friends." As friends of God, understanding his order and will, we need not a command, but move forward in an intelligent compliance with his revelations, sustaining between him and us the relations brought about in the day he called us to be his friends.

This, then, was the will of God to the church of latter days: "It is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father," that "any man" "among you" drink "wine or strong drink" "only in assembling yourselves together, to offer up your sacraments before him. And behold, this should be wine, yea, pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make."

EARLY SAINTS ABSTEMIOUS.

That the early church not only understood this instruction to prohibit the use of alcoholic drinks in any form, but that the Saints also endeavored to carry into effect the spirit of the communication in their community life is evidenced by the records they have left us.

The city council of Nauvoo, Illinois, the city of the Saints, in advance of the custom of the times, on February 15, 1841, passed the following ordinance for the regulation of the sale of intoxicants in the city of Nauvoo:

Section 1. Be it ordained by the City Council of the City of Nauvoo, that all persons and establishments whatever, in this city, are prohibited from vending whisky in a less quantity than a gallon, or other spirituous liquors in less quantity than a quart, to any person whatever, excepting on the recommendation of a physician duly accredited, in writing, by the "Chancellor and Regents of the University of the City of Nauvoo," and any person guilty of any act contrary to the prohibition contained in this ordinance, shall, on conviction thereof before the Mayor, or Municipal Court, be fined in any sum not exceeding twenty-five dollars, at the discretion of said Mayor, or court; and any person or persons who shall attempt to evade this ordinance by giving away liquor, or by any other means, shall be considered alike amenable, and fined as aforesaid.

Section 2. This ordinance to take effect, and be in force, from and after its passage.

Passed February 15, A. D. 1841.

JOHN C. BENNETT, Mayor.

JAMES SLOAN, Recorder.

—Times and Seasons, vol. 2, p. 321.

Joseph Smith was active in the passing of this ordinance. He is represented, in his history, as saying:

In the discussion of the foregoing bill, I spoke at great length on the use of liquors, and showed that it was unnecessary, and operates as a poison in the stomach, and that roots and herbs can be found to effect all necessary purposes.

Section nine of the articles of incorporation of the Nauvoo House—built by divine command—controlled and operated under the auspices of the church—which articles were approved by the Illinois State Legislature, February 23, 1841, reads as follows:

It is moreover established as a perpetual rule of said house, to be observed by all persons who may keep or occupy the same, that spirituous liquors of every description are prohibited, and that such liquor shall never be vended as a beverage, or introduced into common use, in said house.

It was in keeping with the instruction of the revelation, which instruction we have already noted, and with the purpose of the Nauvoo House, set forth in the language directing its building, that for all time alcoholic beverages of every kind should be excluded from said house. God ordained that the "weary traveler" to Nauvoo in contemplating "the glory of Zion" should not have his view of those glories obscured by the effects of intemperance—in Zion glorified there was to be no place for alcoholic drinks. With reference to the management of the Nauvoo House the Lord said:

Let it be a delightful habitation for man, and a resting place for the weary traveler, that he may contemplate the glory of Zion, and the glory of this the corner stone thereof; that he may receive also the counsel from those whom I have set to be as plants of renown, and as watchmen upon her walls.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 18.

That the ordinance of the city and the rules of the Nauvoo House were carried out in spirit as well as in letter is evidenced by the testimony of Josiah Quincy in his Figures of the Past, published in 1884. Writing of his visit to Nauvoo and to the Nauvoo House, he says:

On the right hand, as we entered the house, was a small and very comfortable looking bar-room; all the more comfortable, perchance, from its being a dry bar-room, as no spirituous liquors were permitted at Nauvoo.

REORGANIZED CHURCH HONORS REVELATION.

The Reorganized Church has in its teaching and practices honored this will of God from the beginning. In a communication received April 11, 1887, and adopted as a revelation from God, the following appears (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3):

Men of God, who bear the vessels of the Lord, be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing; let your garments be of a sober character and free from excess of ornamentation. Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.

We understand temperance to be this: To abstain from that which is not good for man, and to use judiciously that which is good. The Reorganized Church and its elders have ever counseled total abstinence from alcoholic drinks and tobacco. The church appoints no man to represent it who uses either or both in any form. In many of the leading districts, by district enactment, men and not ordained who continue in the use of tobacco or liquor or both. Nor are ordained men who use either or both permitted to represent the church in any official capacity. Thus the church seeks men, and only men, whose "counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by . . . example."

No Reorganized Church institution, nor no leading church official, so far as we know, has ever, either directly or indirectly, engaged in the sale of intoxicants. No member of the church could indulge in these drinks, or any of them, or sell them, and retain his standing in the church. Wherever the Reorganized Saints are found in sufficient numbers to make their influence felt, as a people they are known to be temperate, and are depended upon to cast their ballots in favor of temperance measures.

UTAH CHURCH DISREGARDS REVELATION.

That the dominant church in Utah has departed from the faith in this connection (as well as others) is evidenced by their commercial activities and by the expressions of the Deseret Evening News, owned and published by the Utah Church.

In the Provo Herald for November 23, 1909, we find the advertisements herewith appearing. Let it be remembered that Reed Smoot, senator from Utah, and an apostle in the Utah Church, is the Smoot of these advertisements.

Don't miss getting a bottle of wine for Thanksgiving. Smoot Drug Company.

Do you think Thanksgiving will be complete without a bottle of our famous wine? Smoot Drug Company.

Thanksgiving wines and liquors at Smoot Drug Company.

Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution, Joseph F. Smith, president, owned and controlled by the Utah Church has in past years, we understand, done a wholesale and retail liquor business. With reference to this matter President Joseph F. Smith is reported as having said, in a sermon in the Salt Lake City Tabernacle, April 6, 1898:

Have I made myself a sot because liquor was kept for sale by Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution? I am not the worse for it, thank the Lord. And who else is? No one, except the pious Mormons who in open day or under the cover of night would go into the drug store and buy liquor to drink. . . . If he could not get it there, he would not patronize Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution at all but would go somewhere else to deal.

If we grasp the intent of these words it is this: Because Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution deals in liquor no one need be made the worse for it; no one is the worse for it unless it be those "pious Mormons" who, contending that this church institution should not engage in the liquor business, themselves, brazenly, in the light of day, enter the drug store, or slip in under cover of darkness, unseen, there to buy that which they themselves urge that the church should not sell; then, anyway, if men could not secure liquor at the Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution they would go elsewhere and would not only buy their liquor there, but would do all their other trading there also.

It is true that no one need be injured from the fact that intoxicants are placed on sale by this institution of the Utah Church, or by any other business concern; but the only condition we can imagine under which men might go uninjured would be for them to leave unpurchased and untouched that which God has said "is not good . . . in the sight of your Father"—save it be for the one purpose, "the washing of your bodies." That it can be urged that an institution may deal in that which God has condemned, be it alcoholic drinks, or any other commodity, on the basis that it will be purchased elsewhere, anyway, we do not understand to be consistent with the spirit of the gospel restored; such a reasoning followed to its logical conclusion would admit of any questionable business activity, or any traffic in vice.

Men would hardly undertake to maintain that they were justified in handling that which had been placed under the ban, in order to secure or retain certain customers, thus conserving the financial interests of their business; against any such contention it could be soundly urged that if there be justification it inheres not from the fact that men wish to buy, nor yet from the fact that they, themselves, stand ready, self-justified, to sell, but from the fact that the transaction is legitimate and consistent with the God-given rules of life. To deal in that which God has said is not good for man, thus becoming the agent to his injury, is, in our judgment, not in keeping with the spirit of the rules governing—hence is without justification.

In the editorial columns of the Deseret Evening News for June 26, 1913, under the caption, Another Saloon Tragedy, is discussed the murder in Salt Lake City of a policeman by a drunken desperado. Among other things the News says:

Men under the influence of intoxicants lose their reason and self-control in different ways. Some become worse than beasts—bloodthirsty, cruel, destructive. Others become congenial idiots, talkative, generous, ready to give away all they have. Others are affected in different ways. This fellow seems to have gathered inspiration and courage in the saloons to commit crimes. And so we have another awful illustration of the influence of the saloon in a community. Have we not too many of those institutions in Salt Lake City? Are not too many of them kept by foreigners, whose moral standards are too low to be intrusted with the management of so dangerous a business? These are serious questions for our city government to consider. We believe if the commissioners will reduce the number of saloons and close the low dives they will be supported by the general sentiment, for most of the crimes of the nature that has now shocked the community can be traced not to drink merely but to the saloon.

UTAH CHURCH IMPOTENCY.

With what a short and puny arm the News strikes at the seat of this crime and its like! "Men under the influence of intoxicants lose their reason and self-control." Therefore, we have "too many" saloons; "too many . . . kept by foreigners," with low "moral standards." The "number of saloons" should be reduced, the "low dives" should be closed. "For most of the crimes of the nature that has now shocked the community can be traced not to drink merely but to the saloon."

We are reminded of the remark made by the good old Irish lady whose brother tended bar in Mr. William Prather's saloon: "Yis sor, Billy Prather runs a firrst-class rrespectable saloon."

The evil as seen by the News in this "so dangerous a business" lies not so much in the drink as in the place where it is imbibed. Not in drinking in one of a limited number of saloons, but in one of many. Not in resorts conducted by men of "moral standards," such as the Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution, Joseph F. Smith president, or the Smoot Drug Company, Apostle Smoot proprietor, but in "low dives," conducted by foreigners of loose morals.

It may be conceded, if comparisons are to be drawn, that the "dives" are seemingly more pernicious, in that they are frequented by men grown desperate by long and continued drink. But it should be remembered that these dives are filled from the institutions for the "more elite," which refuse to harbor the customers once welcomed but finally thoroughly debauched.

The "low dives" are not only a by-product but an absolute necessity to the successful prosecution of the saloon business. If comparisons are to be admitted, they show the saloon to be the more pernicious, since the real and final end of intemperance is by the saloon management excluded, and driven to cover in the dive.

The root of the entire evil, therefore, lies in the drink. The weakness of the News and of the Utah Church lies in the aim taken. They strike not at drink so much as at the saloon, and not at the saloon so much as at the number of saloons, and the kind. Even these feeble efforts are disarmed from the fact that the church and its leading officials have been actively engaged in the liquor traffic. The policy of the Utah Church and its officials makes it impracticable for the News to do otherwise than strike feebly and wide of the mark.

The real impotency of the church in Utah is indicated by the following, taken from an editorial in the Deseret Evening News for March 8, 1909:

Mr. Fred B. Smith, in his Sunday address in the Colonial, said, among other things: "I have seen more drunkenness in this town during the past four days than I have seen in any other place during the past ten years." That is a terrible indictment of this community. . . . We fear Mr. Smith did not exaggerate.

THE OLD PATHS.

Disarmed by its own connection with the liquor traffic, this backslidden institution can only "fear Mr. Smith did not exaggerate," and work to close up the so-called surplus saloons and the low dives. How appropriate to the conditions are the words:

Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein.—Jeremiah 6: 16.

Thank God for that integrity in the Reorganized Church which has from the beginning kept our feet to the old paths. J. F. GARVER.

GRACELAND'S INDUSTRIAL SHOP.

Since the gift of a manual training equipment for the college by the General Sunday School Association in 1907, the idea of developing a constructive industry in which the training gained by the students should be put to a practical and immediate use and through which many needy students might find remunerative employment has been cherished by those in charge of this work at the college. Each year an effort has been made in this direction, and from one to three or four young men have been employed. In 1900, friends in Michigan and Illinois responded to a call and three much-needed, large machines were added to the equipment, greatly increasing the possibilities of our output. At the present time we realize the need of a few modern machines which would decrease the necessity for hand labor and largely increase the range of our product. While we could use a cash donation to most excellent advantage for this purpose, we plan, rather, to let the shop earn its own way if we can find sale for our product.

We are in a position to make to order any article of furniture in the mission line; such as chairs, tables, bookcases, wardrobes, taborets, typewriter desks, paper racks, folding screens, footstools, hat racks, umbrella racks, settees, and the like. We can not compete with the cheap, mail order houses, for our product is not of that grade. But we can give a good, substantial, artistic product, at a reasonable price; an article that will please a careful buyer and yet be within the price asked by local dealers. Just send in a description or a picture of the article like the one desired and we will promptly quote price and state fully the particulars of the construction.

We wish, also, to get in touch with those of our church people who are in a mercantile business that will admit of our placing our products on sale in their places of business. Let us know what will sell in a particular community, and we will make up a sample article and send on to convince you that our products have merit. As our output increases we shall issue a larger folder, fully illustrating articles of our manufacture. When we find a staple line of salable articles within our possibilities, we can assist many more young men in their earnest endeavor to secure an education and to qualify for the greatest usefulness in life.

We welcome suggestions from those in a position to judge wisely in these matters. If Zion is to be built upon a cooperative basis, let us begin to cooperate. We give you a desired product at a bare margin above cost of production in our shop. The margin reverts to the maintenance and development of the shop. The wage of the student employed—the one thing for which the shop is maintained—assists a needy student in a noble and worthy effort to be independent and to become an efficient producer among the Lord's people. Is our appeal not consistent when we ask the church people to consider our product, even when the price is a few cents or dollars above the advertised price of a "cheap" article made in the shops of the world?

Our folder and further particulars upon application. Address all communications to the sales manager, C. B. Woodstock, Lamoni, Iowa.

C. B. WOODSTOCK.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

OUR SANITARIUM.—All Saints should be and no doubt are intensely interested in the work of our Sanitarium at Independence, Missouri. The good work of this institution continues unabated. We quote from Zion's Ensign for August 21:

The Independence Sanitarium has for some time been filled to its normal capacity, more patients having been received up to the present time this year than were received during 1912; and the business of the institution during the seven and one half months of this year being twenty per cent greater than that of last year. Special opportunities are offered in the nurses training course for a number of our young women to become graduate nurses, and Doctor Messenger informs us that there are yet several vacancies to be filled. The Sanitarium offers a course with the practical training had by the actual experience of caring for the sick—a course equal to that found in other institutions, and superior in its religious influence. The help furnished by the Sanitarium to the sick and distressed is fulfilling in a high degree the original purposes of the institution.

Remember that to change thy mind and to follow him that sets thee right is to be none the less the free agent that thou wast before.—Marcus Aurelius.

We can only be valued as we make ourselves valuable.—Emerson.

Hope and Consecration.

Arise, arise, ye Saints arise,
See, in the east the reddening skies
Betoken soon the blaze of day;
Let each one, be he weak or strong,
The gospel armor buckle on,
And on to the affray.

Go forth and fight, not as the world,
Led on with drums and flags unfurled,
Who bathes its hands in blood;
But in the strength of Him who died—
The Christ of God, the crucified,
Slay Satan with the word.

Both day and night we're in the field,
To ever conquer, ne'er to yield,
And thus we onward press.
By Spirit's power our eyes behold
The pearly gates, the streets of gold,
While love and joy reigns in our breast.

It is ourselves we conquer must,
By strength of Him in whom we trust,
If glory we would win;
Let each one, then, of heart be pure,
In loving faith all things endure,
Then Christ will save from sin.

Oh for the long, long promised day,
When Christ o'er all the earth bears sway,
And righteousness shall reign;
Then peace and love shall fill each heart,
And tears and sorrows have no part
In all of God's domain.

But, till that day, I want to be
Engage in works of charity,
And ever pressing on;
And pray the prayer that Jesus taught,
With holy wisdom and power fraught.
Oh God, thy Kingdom come.

PHILEMON PEMENT.

Youth.

What do they know of youth, who still are young?
They but the singers of a golden song,
Who may not guess its worth or wonder—flung
Like largesse to the throng.
We only—young no longer, old so long—
Before its harmonies stand marveling—
Oh! we who listen—never they never who sing.

Not for itself is beauty, but for us
Who gaze upon it with all reverent eyes;
And youth, which leads its glory luminous,
Gives ever in this wise:
Itself the joy it may not realize.
Only we know, who linger overlong,
Youth that is made of beauty and of song.

—Theodosia Garrison, in Everybody's, June, 1913.

The White Man's Burden.

Take up the White Man's burden—
Send forth the best ye breed—
Go, bind your sons to exile
To serve your captives' need;
To wait in heavy harness,
On fluttered folk and wild—
Your new-caught sullen peoples,
Half devil and half child.

Take up the White Man's burden—
In patience to abide—
To veil the threat of terror
And check the show of pride;
By open speech and simple,
An hundred times made plain,
To seek another's profit
And work another's gain.

Take up the White Man's burden—
The savage wars of peace—
Fill full the mouth of Famine
And bid the sickness cease;
And when your goal is nearest
(The end for others sought)
Watch sloth and heathen folly
Bring all your hopes to naught.

Take up the White Man's burden—
No iron rule of kings—
But toil of serf and sweeper,
The tale of common things.
The ports ye shall not enter,
The roads ye shall not tread,
Go, make them with your living
And mark them with your dead.

Take up the White Man's burden—
And reap his old reward—
The blame of those ye better
The hate of those ye guard—
The cry of hosts ye humor
(Ah, slowly) towards the light—
"Why brought ye us from bondage,
Our loved Egyptian night?"

Take up the White Man's burden—
Ye dare not stoop to less—
Nor call too loud on Freedom
To cloak your weariness.
By all ye will or whisper,
By all ye leave or do,
The silent sullen peoples
Shall weigh your God and you.

Take up the White Man's burden—
Have done with childish days—
The lightly proffered laurel,
The easy ungrudged praise;
Comes now, to search your manhood
Through all the thankless years,
Cold, edged with dear bought wisdom,
The judgment of your peers.

—Rudyard Kipling.

"DID JOSEPH SMITH WALK ON WATER?"

The above is the title of R. B. Neal's latest discovery (?) as appears in Sword of Laban Leaflets, Number 17.

Some time ago he advertised for evidence to prove that Joseph Smith made such an attempt. And now he submits what he seems to have taken from Doctor Wyl, that A. B. Deming, of Painesville, Ohio, was prepared to prove the old story of Joseph Smith having attempted to walk on the water at Kirtland. Mr. Neal says "the proof is conclusive." It may be interesting to the readers of the HERALD to see what this anti-"Mormon" regards as conclusive proof. Here it is:

AFFIDAVIT OF J. HARVEY AND S. ROGERS.

We, the undersigned, Joseph Harvey and Samuel Rogers, attended a Mormon meeting in what was district number 5, and heard the preacher say in his sermon that Prophet Joseph Smith does perform miracles. He saw him WALK ON THE WATER in Kirtland, and many others heard read, distinctly, in the air, a chapter from Isaiah.

Mr. Huntoon, who lived near the schoolhouse, said it was not done, that no man could walk on the water. The preacher said: "I claim to be a man of truth, I saw him walk on the water with my own eyes, before many people."

(Signed)

JOSEPH HARVEY.
SAMUEL ROGERS.

(Witnessed by)

A. B. DEMING.

Sworn to and subscribed before me, the undersigned, by Samuel Rogers and Joseph Harvey, this the 6th day of May, A. D., 1885.

D. CLINTON HALL,

Justice of the Peace for Painesville, Lake County, Ohio.

1. We are not told where this meeting was held—only that it was in "District number 5." It may have been in Ohio, or in California.

2. The date of the meeting is not given. It might have been in 1885, or some other year.

3. The name of the preacher is not given.

Thus it bears the marks of perjured testimony. It is rather strange that two men, so anxious to testify against the "Mormons," can remember so well what the preacher said, and yet forget the preacher's name, and fail to give the name of the State and even the year in which this occurred. This is a sample of what our opponent regards as conclusive proof. It is also a fair specimen of what he has resorted to in all his unholy and unsuccessful fight during the past.

He next submits the affidavit of J. M. Granger, sworn to before A. P. Barber, justice of the peace, Willoughby, Ohio, April 10, 1885, who says he remembers going to see the "Mormon" prophet, "Joe" Smith, walk on the water. That "there was a large crowd on both banks of the river below the bridge east of the flats"; that Joseph suddenly went down, etc. He says, "I was seventy-five to a hundred feet from him."

The following is a part of the affidavit of F. J. Goldsmith:

John A. Eddy learned the carpenter trade with my father, and married my sister. He told me (italics mine, H. E. M.) that Jo. Smith announced in a Mormon meeting at such a time he would walk on the water.

That Grandison Newell and my father paid him one dollar a night to watch and see what the Mormons did.

The night before the walking was to be Jo. Smith, Brigham Young, Sidney Rigdon and William Aldrich worked half the night and drove stakes in the river in the shape of a horseshoe, the ends being on one bank and in deep water. They placed green sycamore slabs, which would sink in the water, on the croched stakes, which were eight or more inches under the water, altogether between two and three hundred feet long. After they left I removed one of the slabs near the center.

According to appointment Prophet Joseph Smith came with several hundred Mormons and Jo. addressed them. He said they could walk on the water if they only had faith.

Jo., arrayed in a long, white robe, walked some distance, turned and walked backward, and where the slab had been removed, went in all over. He got to shore by the aid of a limb of a tree.

Jo. said at once to the audience, "Oh ye of little faith, if you had faith as large as a grain of mustard, I could remove mountains."

F. J. GOLDSMITH.

ABEGAL J. GOLDSMITH (daughter).

Sworn to and subscribed before me, the undersigned, Justice of Peace, by F. J. Goldsmith, this 8th day of May, A. D., 1885. D. Clinton Hill, Justice of the Peace for Painesville, Lake County, Ohio.

I have italicized some of the above statements to call especial attention to the same. First, we notice that Mr. Goldsmith swears to something that he says somebody else told him. Very "conclusive" isn't it? Then he proceeds to tell a tale so unreasonable and ridiculous that no one, unless it be somebody that has become blinded by willful prejudice, would accept as true for even a moment.

Mr. Granger and a Joel Miller both testify that this scene occurred in the river below the bridge. Anyone that is acquainted with the Chagrin River below the bridge will smile at the idea of those four men driving forked stakes in deep water into that rocky bottom. We suggest to Mr. Neal that before publishing such a story he would do well to make some inquiry about the bottom of that river below the bridge, and thus avoid such humiliation in the minds of those who know something of the location.

We are informed that this horseshoe of green sycamore slabs was from two hundred to three hundred feet in length, with the ends on one bank. This would make it at least one hundred feet to the outer curve of the horseshoe, where the slab was taken out, and Joseph "went in all over, and reached the shore by the "aid of the limb of a tree." That limb must have been one hundred feet long, even if the tree stood at the very water's edge. Rather a long limb.

But here Mr. Neal's witnesses clash, for Joel Miller in his affidavit says: "I saw several men step into the water and reach for Jo. to help him out." It was deep water, deep enough for Joseph to go in all over, yet "several men step into the water"—at least one hundred feet from shore—and help him out. Wonderfully "conclusive proof," this! In his comment, Mr. Neal tries to fix it up for his witness, and says: "With the aid of a limb of a tree in outstretched hands of help he was rescued from a watery grave." (All seem to presume that Joseph could not swim.) But Mr. Neal did not help the matter in the least. Imagine "outstretched hands" handling a limb of a tree one hundred feet long, extending it out across the water!

Then again, the ends of the slabs came to the shore—or to the "bank." Strange that Joseph, standing on the shore could see the slabs sufficiently well to step on them, and yet those standing on the shore with him could not detect the deception till he had reached the center and went down.

We are told that the sycamore slabs would sink in water, yet Mr. Neal in his comments says that "John A. Eddy, who has been spying on their movements, quietly swims to the center of the horseshoe and removes a slab—starts it down stream. Rah! for John." Why certainly, "Rah for John"; a man who could take out a green sycamore slab that would sink in the water on the forks of the stakes, and send it floating down stream is a wonder.

Now, we have it: Four men in half a night bring stakes and green sycamore slabs enough to form a horseshoe path between two and three hundred feet in length; drive those stakes down in deep water—so deep that John A. Eddy had to swim out to remove a slab,—drive them down through a rocky bottom, and nobody but this dollar-a-night Eddy finds out anything about the deception until the "stunt is pulled off." Anyone publishing such a story certainly presumes upon the intelligence and credulity of the people.

One thing that this story clearly indicates is this: Mr. Neal certainly has about run out of anti-"Mormon" dope. There is absolutely nothing to fear as a result of the publication of such silly, unreasonable stories. I believe Mr. Neal is the first to put this tale into print. But he must do something to keep up his income from Sword of Laban subscribers and the sale of leaflets. He tells us that Leaflet Number 17 will form a chapter in his forthcoming "Handbook for Anti-Mormon Polemics,"—one dollar each, please!

H. E. MOLER.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

Dealing with human beings, and being able to reach the best in them, and draw it out so as to develop their faculties in the best possible way, requires patience, skill, tact, and a goodly supply of charity. Superstition, prejudice, and ignorance have in the past hedged up the way and clogged the wheels of progress, and it is for the removing of these things and the creating of a system of ethics that will develop the better faculties of men, draw out the hidden virtues, and perfect the very best within them that we should fervently and ceaselessly labor. To become effectual in a movement of this kind it becomes necessary that we first acquaint ourselves with ourselves, and if possible ascertain our possibilities and limitations, and becoming conversant or familiar with our own strength or weakness, as the case may be, that we may be able to build our character, and build wisely.

If we desire to assist in the uplift of others we must first develop ourselves, and that development becomes most effective when our desires are governed by righteousness, when our hearts are purified and our thoughts are high and ennobling. It should ever be remembered that one can not give that which he does not possess; therefore, if we would assist others to the heights of virtue and wisdom we ourselves must become conversant with the higher laws of life. We should learn at the beginning that patience should characterize our efforts along this line, knowing well that it requires time to develop anything that is of strength or durability; and that if our brother fails to reach at once the height of our aspirations we should not condemn him. If he fails to see our point of view we should not charge him with ignorance and dishonesty, but patiently await the time when the truth already grasped by him will so illuminate his mind that he will not only reach our ideal but far transcend it in wisdom and virtue.

We should not conclude that another is willfully mean because he can not see as we see, and he should never be charged with insincerity because he fails to revere the idols we have set up in our own imaginations; but we should patiently bear with (what we call) his peculiarities, and in meekness and love seek to give him a better and more complete conception of life and liberty. We should remember always, that the "golden rule" holds good in all our dealings with humanity, and that we should never ask of another that which we would not be willing to grant under like conditions and circumstances; and before we pass judgment upon another we should first place ourselves, as nearly as possible, in his position, then place him in ours, then ask ourselves the question, If I were in his shoes and he in mine, how would I desire him to act towards me? Determining that matter to our own satisfaction, we should do to, or act towards him as nearly as possible as we would have him do unto us; this would be Christlike, and anything short of this would neither be just nor right.

As workmen in the cause of truth, and professors of virtue and knowledge, we should become skilled in our profession, become "doers of the word"; not only professing and proclaiming truth, but living it; not merely advocating virtue, but becoming virtuous; not only teaching in theory the beauties of knowledge, but becoming possessors thereof, governing our very being by its laws. To become skilled then in the laws of a higher life is to live a life that is superb in all its parts; to cease complaining about the failures of others, and develop within our own hearts and lives that which is superlatively great and noble, exhibiting our skill in applying to our own lives the things we hold as paramount.

We should remember that it is quite impossible to make a blanket rule that will cover every case. Realizing the great differences in men, their capabilities, their manner of life, their early training, their environment, hereditary influences, their intellectual development and moral powers, and the diversity of opinions held by them, we at once see the need of tact in our dealing with mankind. That which becomes effectual for good in one case may become a hindrance in another case, hence our need of being discreet and employing only such means and methods as are fitting to the case in point, and will best conserve the interests of all concerned, and enlighten, uplift, and develop the godlike faculties within the individual. We should never unnecessarily antagonize anyone, but should be able to use means and methods that will be effectual as a moving cause and yet be inoffensive. If it becomes necessary for us to remind another of his faults, we should seek to do so in as gentle a manner as possible, and use only words of kindness and love in so doing, remembering that harsh words stir up anger, while a "soft answer turneth away wrath."

We should never be so unwise and self-centered as to blame others for our own errors; for example, the writer is acquainted with a certain person who is so self-centered that he is in constant fear of losing something he never possessed; he is so extremely apprehensive of what he calls his rights and prerogatives that he is in boiling water, so to speak, all the time, fearing he will lose a part of his honor. He is always complaining of being ignored by others, and at the same time he is ignoring everyone. He has failed to find that proper poise of life, and is laboring under a delusion of mind, condemning in others that which he justifies in himself; he actually believes that all other men are in gross error and that he alone is right wherein they differ from him; and if others do not see as he sees they are either willingly ignorant or willfully mean. This, of course, is a condition and disposition to be avoided, and one who is suffering with such a malady is to be pitied.

On the other hand, the writer is acquainted with another individual whose entire aim in life is to bless others, whose love for humanity is so great that she sees nothing but good in others; she is always conscious of a possibility of being selfish, guarding herself continually lest she should think too much of self and too little of others. While she is ready to make any sacrifice for the comfort and blessing of others, she thinks she is doing too little for their good; she feels that the only real blessing and joy she has is in making others happy. This life is to be admired, and this disposition should be encouraged, as it is certainly commendable.

The former character is too self-centered to enjoy life; he is continually seeking pleasure and comfort in life, yet finding none, simply because the things that make life joyous and pleasant are found wanting in his makeup. He thinks everyone is his enemy, when in reality he is his own worst enemy; he is constantly blaming external things for his unpleasant and unhappy condition in life, knowing not that the entire cause rests with him. If such an one would have joy in life, he must crucify self and learn to give good, and he will receive good in return. He must learn that while he is a slave to self and selfish desires, happiness will be far removed from him, but when he has subdued self and has taken hold of truth he shall be emancipated, freed, and unfettered.

The unselfish character is always cheerful, always happy, because her aim in life is to make others happy. This Saint at one time said to the writer: "I am never so happy as when I am making others happy." She knows nothing but joy in life because her life is centered in good deeds; the only regret she has is in the fact that she is unable to do more for the blessing of humanity. To her everyone is good; because her heart is pure she is able to discern the good in all and can appeal to that good by her kind and pleasant demeanor, and thus uplift and bless others. In such an one the Christ life is very apparent; such a character is admirable.

These characters represent the extremely selfish and the extremely altruistic. Between them we find many shades of character and temperament. To be able to deal with all so as not only to conserve, but also develop the best in them, requires a goodly degree of the grace of charity. "Charity suffereth long and is kind." One must be very patient and considerate, then, in dealing with humanity. "Charity thinketh no evil." One must be free from evil thoughts if he would bless others and uplift himself. "Charity doth not behave itself unseemly, is not puffed up." Love and humility are factors, then, in preparing us for service among our fellow men. "Charity seeketh not her own." Here we have the test, it may be an easy matter for us to do the other things, but when it comes to giving up that which is really our own, that is, when we are required to part company with our most cherished treasure or be compelled to forsake the truth, we are put to the test, but charity does not even claim its own; so if we are charitable we will deny ourselves all things, if necessary, to enable us to serve, uplift, and bless others. To make the thought clear, we will sacrifice our own pleasures and comforts rather than to offend our fellow men or injure them; and with love that is impartial we will mete out to everyone the very best we have in store, and thus develop the very best in life.

In a word, a charitable person can not be selfish. The thought of lavishing upon self that which is unnecessary, and which may be used for the good of another is so repulsive that it never enters the mind; but a selfish person has little or no charity. So the wise will subdue and conquer self, for it is only the foolish who take up arms against others and hope to thus produce peace.

Christ is called the Prince of Peace, therefore the one who is wise will be found doing the things that make for peace, for in the language of Paul: "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." Therefore, we are brought face to face with the rule laid down by the great Teacher: "By their fruits ye shall know them."

It is not what we claim to be that counts in the Christian life, but what we really are: "He that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he (God) is righteous." So if we bear in our lives the fruits that Christ bore in his we truly can be said to be Christian; but if the fruits are found wanting we are Christians in name only, if it so be that we profess to follow the Lowly One.

THE VALUE OF NEW OPENINGS.

NUMBER 18. "METHODS AND TACTICS" SERIES.

The progress of the Church of God is unthinkable without new openings. The work of Christ is aggressive as well as defensive. Hence, he not only said, "Feed my sheep," but also; "Preach the gospel to every creature," which latter commandment will be obligatory so long as there is one unto whom the gospel has not been preached. Had our fathers not had respect to this command we would be men and women of altogether different relationships to-day, possibly heathenish.

God made a new opening when he revealed himself to Joseph Smith, and Joseph Smith made a new opening when he declared it to others, who made new openings when they handed the glad tidings on to others still. "Let every man who has been warned warn his neighbor," is the imperative word of God to-day.

We are not merely to hold forts, but to take forts; we are to break down the strongholds of Satan, which injunction has been carried out at the cost of blood and human life.

Every old opening was one time a new one. Such is true of the oldest branches in the church. Men at whose silence the very stones would have cried out went forth to tell their fellows what they knew, what they had felt, heard, and seen. They went largely as their circumstances permitted. God was with them and blessed their labors. Paul did not want to build on another man's foundation. He preferred new work.

I blame no man for turning his attention to the ripest fruit. I blame no man for picking where he can fill his pail in the least time. Accordingly when we go out as ambassadors of Christ we exhaust first the opportunities which promise the greatest returns, the nearest harvest, the most facile process of attaining the end. Hence openings are generally effected at points where some Saint or family of Saints has or have moved and settled. Under these conditions the missionary has in his favor the preparatory work such members have already done, and he receives also of their hospitality. If these members have lived their religion it is a very important factor to the success of the opening. Still, it is very apparent that an opening should not be made to depend on the presence of resident members. I have gone into many places where there were no members, both in town and country, sometimes paying my way.

My present system of propoganda, where we have members resident, is to seek their assistance in an organized or orderly manner to get our great facts before the people. It is noteworthy that some of the most fruitful campaigns of to-day were where some sister went from house to house in the distribution of sermon-pamphlets, and talked with the people. Notable instances are before us in Kansas City, Kansas; Boise, Idaho, and elsewhere where the most telling results have followed the personal canvass by these Priscillas of the latter days. They can not baptize, but they can get people ready. With one or two such helpers it is believable that a breach can be made in any city on the continent; yes, in the world. Men are away to toil in the daytime, women are alone; for that reason women will be more readily admitted than men, in most houses.

In one case, I call to mind a good sister who in past years had spent part of her fortune in fruitless surgery and doctoring. She was weak and in poor health. Finally she was told by the Lord to trust in him as her physician and he would take her case. She complied and promised God her time and talent. She let the surgical and medical quacks go, and today is doing noble work for him who saved her. Part of the branch where she lives were converted through her untiring efforts in going from house to house with the Ensign pamphlets. It is true that in visiting her home one readily observes the very natural consequences of her much absence. Some of the hypercritical who are unworthy to unloose her shoes have made her domestic conditions a target of fault. But who will be ahead in the day of judgment, this woman alongside the precious souls she has saved, or these critics alongside their monumental parlors, kitchens, and diners?

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

Should we present the Book of Mormon at the beginning? I answer, yes and no; for sometimes it is yes, and sometimes no. Suppose some enemy on the alert were to lecture against us where we had declared our intentions to make an opening; in doing which he sets up as his chief punching-bag the Book of Mormon. No one will question but what in a case like that the Book of Mormon is the very thing to begin with when our man opens fire in reply. And it may be the case in preaching to the Indians, and under other circumstances when the very proper thing is to hold up the Nephite record.

Personally, I have long been of the opinion that it is not the best thing to let the masses learn of the Book of Mormon first, and derive their first impressions from the enemy. For my part, I will not advance very far into a series of meetings before an audience unto whom our message is new, without telling them what the Book of Mormon is and why we have it. For if you wait, they soon know we have such a book, for their preacher tells them so, and then they listen to you with a mind warped and perverted, if they listen at all.

It is a mistake to hold the Book of Mormon back till we are forced to bring it to the front.

In determining our course in all things, as to when we will go and as to where we will go, God has long ago given us to understand in unmistakable terms that we shall reach our decisions by the power of the Spirit. God said: I will show you where to go. He who walks without guidance walks outside the path of duty. No one needs to walk in doubt or uncertainty. It is not right. God wants us all to stand in that relationship to him that we will pursue no other course than he would have us pursue when contact with him will preserve us in his wanted channel.

There is a question whether we are making new openings as rapidly as we should. We should be watchful lest the several brief visits we pay to the branches to get acquainted as we approach a new field monopolize all our time.

It is not a question as to whether we can do good in one or any of those branches, but where can we do the most good? Ought we not be somewhere else, away from where there are local men to look after things? The fact that we enjoy the Spirit while there; the fact that we preach a powerful succession of sermons; or the further fact that we baptize a dozen or two after our series is over, is not by any means an infallible testimony that we were answering God's purposes, or on the spot of ground where he would have had us at that particular time. Had we clung to him with that tenacity that would enable us to peep through the shadows on the other side we might have applied our energies differently.

God commands some things which he desires. God desires some things which he does not command. God consents to some things which he does not desire. God consented for Saul to be king and at the same time he made it known to Israel that it was the very opposite of his desire. Now, when we have a ministry who are acting in accordance with the desires of God in their ministrations, when we have a people who are living according to God's desires, and their pleasure is one with his, then we will be in the hastening time, then Zion will be pure in heart. A single and true yearning for God to rule, to dictate, to direct us, individually and collectively, is a positive need of this evening hour, whether we see it or not.

DENYING POLYGAMY.

To persistently deny your guilt of theft in the absence of an accusation is liable to engender suspicion. Of course we are not in a new community very long ere certain members of our audience know not only that we have the Book of Mormon and believe Joseph Smith to have been a true prophet, but that, whether guilty or not, we are, or have been, suspected of polygamous complications. It is proper enough, therefore, to indulge a suitable explanation the same as we do with reference to every other subject; but to repudiate and repeatedly disclaim that which has not been urged will abate our prestige and cheapen us before a body of hearers who need the best we have.

TRACTS.

Finally, let me say that in new places I have always helped myself a great deal with literature. And foremost among everything, I found it advantageous to summon to my service the Ensign pamphlets. They are neatly bound with colored covers. I think, however, that we would be a little behind, as to tracts, if we had none but these.

God is always right. Give him the right kind of a man with the right kind of equipment, in the right place, and success is certain. ALVIN KNISLEY.

THE REFORMATION.

UNDER HENRY VIII AND EDWARD VI.

What is the Reformation? Chambers tells us: The act of reforming, amendment, improvement, the great religious change of the sixteenth century when the Protestants separated from the Roman Catholic Church. It is then an "amendment," an "improvement" of what was already in existence, the papacy. It is at best an improved papacy.

An ordination, to be valid, must come from some one vested with authority, and there is not a reformer but who either directly or indirectly quenched his authoritative thirst out of the stagnant pool of the papacy. It is a matter of record that Henry VIII was directly ordained under the hands of the Mother Church.

The revolt of England from the medieval church was very gradual and halting. There were changes taking place in England before the revolt similar to those which prepared the way in Germany for Luther's success. It was almost commonplace that faith need not be kept with heretics, and that killing was no murder when it served a political or ecclesiastical end. The bulls of excommunication against Henry VIII were licenses and exhortations to kill in open or in secret. Acts of attainder were simply solemn and national assertions that were to make the people the accomplices of the king. In the parliament of 1515 ominous complaints were brought in against the exactions and privileges of the church. Most dangerous quarrels had broken out between the laity and the clergy. Although the English clergy were very popular, the pope had been openly denounced. Heresy was spreading. Under Wolsey's regime the chief ministers were ecclesiastical, much to the disgust of the secular nobility, who soon began to seek means to ruin Wolsey and destroy the political predominance of the church.

Now all this was independent of the question of divorce, which was merely the occasion of the Reformation and which would certainly have come without it. England, like all Teutonic nations, must break away. The importance of the divorce lies in the fact that it alienated from the papal cause the monarchy which might for a time have postponed the rupture. Henry VIII would never have been able to repudiate the Roman jurisdiction, had it not been for the popular dislike of clerical privilege and papal control. He was able to turn the balance, and it was the pope's refusal to grant him a divorce from Catherine of Aragon which first inclined Henry against the jurisdiction which he had defended with so much zeal against Luther.

The real question was that Henry VIII had no surviving brothers and no legitimate sons, and the succession of females was not recognized. England wanted an English king and Henry a legitimate heir. Neither wish would be accomplished so long as he remained married to Catherine. Clement VII frankly said that he could not and would not grant the divorce because the church was completely in the power of Charles, Catherine's nephew.

The English bishops had favored the reform so long as it meant only an attack upon their superior, the pope, or abstract doctrines, but finally opposed reform, fearing lest it should end episcopal jurisdiction. They began to feel that their interests were bound up with the maintenance of the old ecclesiastical system till the time came when reform had to be forced upon them by Parliament in the teeth of their unanimous opposition.

After the king had appealed to Parliament, a working alliance was formed between himself and Parliament against pope and church. Parliament wanted the restriction of clerical privilege, powers, and jurisdiction. Henry wanted the abolition of papal control and the legislative independence of the church. The Government was filled with laymen. One after another the outworks of the papal system fell. First-fruits and tenths were not abolished; they were transferred from pope to king, and so was the power of appointing bishops. Episcopal chapters were granted license to elect but they were liable to "præmunire" if they did not elect the king's nominee, and no chapter has yet braved that penalty. Supremacy was simply taken from the pope and given to the king. It was not practical politics to liberate the Church of England and let her work out her own salvation.

All ecclesiastical powers were derived from the papacy. The archbishops exercised jurisdiction only as "legatus natus" of the pope, and, as agents were bound by their master's will. The papacy had refused to reform. General councils had failed in the fifteenth century, so the work was left to the national state, which could act on its own authority. Hence Parliament and not Convocation is the instrument of reform. The measures of reformation are not canon laws, but parliamentary statutes. The Book of Common Prayer itself is an act of Parliament. It can not be altered by Convocation; it can be by the Houses of Parliament. The Reformation in its external and constitutional aspects is simply the last and greatest conquest of the state, the assertion of its authority over the church, and its absolute, undisputed supremacy within the national frontiers.

The result was to nationalize the church, to transform it from the Church in England into the Church of England; to make its services, ritual, and articles of faith national, rather than Catholic. When the breach was once accomplished with Rome, differentiation set in by a law of nature. The Bible was made English. An English litany was compiled; then an English Order of Communion, and then an English Book of Common Prayer, enforced by an English Act of Uniformity. Finally an English definition of the faith in the shape of the Thirty-Nine Articles was evolved. All these things were intensely national, for the spirit which produced them was that of national revolt.

Henry boasted that so far as England was concerned he was king, emperor, and pope all in one. He was willing to leave to the clergy the control of men's souls, provided the State had control of their bodies. But within the sphere of ecclesiastical jurisdiction and legislation he was supreme; he was absolute monarch in the church and could modify it by injunctions. He could in person condemn for heresy when he could not for murder or treason.

A government has to consider not merely what is truth, but whether truth can be translated into action and imposed on a people. This restrained theological debate, and England came through the Reformation without a religious civil war. It also came without a clear-cut system of theology. The formularies of the English Church are composite in origin, and represent the working of various minds; they are full of compromise not entirely satisfactory to anyone, but tolerable to many. A government always tries to strike an average.

Erasmus was read and approved. The edition of the Greek Testament on which he had been engaged at Cambridge, the reformation center, was almost wholly due to the assistance he received from English scholars. In itself the book was a bold defiance of theological tradition. The interpretation was based on the literal meaning of the text. The introduction (about 1538) of the English Bible into churches gave a new opening for the zeal of the Protestants. In spite of royal injunctions that it should be read without comment, the reading was accompanied by violent expositions.

Egotism was the mainspring of Henry's action; the basis of his character; and the root of his vices. He led the people in the way they wanted to go. He upheld Catholic doctrine as a whole, because he saw that the mass of the people were not prepared for theological change. Popular passions were strong in the sixteenth century, but as the papal system of jurisdiction had few adherents, the wealth of the monasteries was an irresistible temptation to Henry. The spoils were held out as a bait to the nobles to confirm their zeal in the Reformation principles. Moreover, monastic life had lost its savor and widespread abuses existed in them. Along with the destruction of the monasteries went an attack upon the shrines and images in the churches which were adorned with gold and jewels.

By the Act of Appeals Parliament forbade by statute any further appeals to the papal court. All judicial and financial connection with the papacy was thus broken. The Act of Supremacy (1534) ordered that the king "shall be taken, accepted, and reputed the only supreme head on earth of the Church of England, with full power to visit, repress, redress, reform, and amend all such errors, heresies, and abuses that may lawfully be reformed." The clergy only recognized the king as "Head of the Church and Clergy so far as the law of Christ would allow." They did not abjure the headship of the pope over the whole church.

Cromwell's measure reduced the English bishops to absolute dependence on the crown. The church was gagged, and its pulpits were turned into mere echoes of Henry's will. He claimed for the crown the right of dictating at its pleasure the form of faith and doctrine to be held and taught throughout the land. The Articles of Religion, which Convocation received and adopted without venturing on a protest, were drawn up by the hand of Henry himself. There were to be three sacraments, penance, baptism, and the Lord's Supper. The doctrines of transubstantiation and confession were still maintained.

In 1539 Parliament passed a statute called the "Six Articles." These declared, first, that the body and blood of Christ were actually present in the bread and wine of the Lord's Supper; whoever ventured publicly to question this was to be burned. Five other articles sanctioned communion in one kind, the celibacy of the clergy, monastic vows, private masses, and auricular confession. For speaking against these the offender was to be hanged on second offense. Cranmer attempted an accommodation between the Lutheran and the Angelican churches, but Henry refused, and these "Articles" reaffirmed England's allegiance to Catholicism. Leo had rewarded Henry for combating Luther with the title "Defender of the Faith."

But when, towards the end of his reign, he saw that in spite of the "Six Articles" and other methods of coercion reformed opinions were making way, he prepared himself to make further alterations, and the Protector, Somerset, only carried out the changes which were being secretly elaborated during the last few months of Henry's life. On Henry's death, his nine-year-old son, Edward, became king (1547). Somerset seized the whole royal power, however, with the title of Protector.

A contemporary says: "The Archbishop of Canterbury did eat meat openly in Lent." This significant act was followed by a rapid succession of sweeping changes. The legal prohibitions of Lollardy were removed; the Six Articles were repealed; a royal injunction removed all pictures and images from the churches; priests were permitted to marry; the new communion which had taken the place of the mass was ordered to be administered in both kinds and in the English tongue; an English Book of Common Prayer, the Liturgy, which with slight alterations is still used, replaced the missal and Breviary, from which its contents are mainly drawn. The prayer book of 1549 was on the whole Catholic, and marks perhaps no further advance than Henry was prepared to make in 1546. All limitations on printing the Scriptures in English and reading and expounding the same were swept away. These measures gave a great impetus to religious discussion and local innovations. Representatives of all the new creeds flocked in from the Continent. There was, however, no sudden break with the traditions of the past, but just a continuation of changes laid down by Henry VIII.

A crowd of Protestant pamphleteers flooded the country with vehement invectives against mass and its superstitious accompaniments. The communion was no longer regarded as a sacrifice, and was given the name "Lord's Supper" instead of mass. There was a real presence "in the godly using" of the elements. Mass was finally defied by replacing the stone altars by wooden tables.

A Book of Homilies, which enforced the chief Protestant tenets, was appointed to be read in churches. Forty-two Articles of religion were introduced in 1552, and though since reduced by omissions to thirty-nine these have remained to this day the formal standard of doctrine in the Church of England. A new code of ecclesiastical law was substituted for the canon law. The use of the new Liturgy and attendance at the new service was enforced by imprisonment. The subscription to the Articles of Faith was demanded by royal authority from all the clergymen, churchwardens, and school masters; and heretics were without mercy sent to the stake. Many places protested for the old order of things. Revolts were stamped out with blood. Many bishops met their fate on conscientious grounds, as one, Heath, who could not accept the book "Ordinal." The sees made vacant were filled in accordance with Protestant views now officially adopted. It was with the good wish of the Government that Cranmer in 1550 set to work to prove the Protestant gloss upon the prayer book was the true one. In the same year a general removal of altars throughout the country was proclaimed.

As many people did not attend their parish churches and as the council believed that no state could be in safety where there was toleration of two religions, more radical measures and increased coercion were resolved upon. The Second Act of Uniformity in 1552 sanctioned ecclesiastical censure and excommunication of laymen who neglected to attend common prayer on Sundays and holy days, and threatened those who attended any other than the authorized forms of worship with life-long imprisonment for the third offense. The prayer book thus enforced is substantially the Prayer Book of today, without the Articles. Heresies, etc., were to remain within the competence of clerical judges, and the heretic in the last resort was handed over to the secular arm for punishment as in the dark, Middle Ages.

Although the intellectual impulse of the new learning had died away, the real value of the religious revolution lay in the new spirit of inquiry, thought, and discussion, which was awakened during the change.

THE CAMPAIGN AGAINST THE SALOON.

The following interesting facts with reference to the campaign against the liquor traffic in the United States are taken from an article written by Ferdinand Cowle Iglehart, and appearing in the American Review of Reviews for July:

It is generally thought that Germany drinks more beer than any other nation in the world. This is a mistake. Germany comes second. The United States consumes 1,851,000,000 gallons of beer each year, which is a hundred million gallons more than Germany's consumption. Russia leads the world in its use of distilled liquors, and the United States comes second, with its consumption of 133,000,000 gallons. although the United States is first as a beer-drinking nation and second as a consumer of distilled spirits among the nations of the world, the liquor dealers of America are having a desperate fight for the life of their traffic.

The saloon has been expelled from one half of the population and from two thirds of the geographical area of the country. In 1868 there were 3,500,000 people living in territory where the drink traffic had been outlawed; in 1900 the number had increased to 18,000,000; in 1908, or only eight years after, the number had doubled to 36,000,000, and to-day there are 46,029,750 persons, or a fraction over one-half of the population of the country, living in no-license territory. In the last five years the no-license population has increased a little over 10,000,000, which is more than 10 per cent of the total population of the nation and 30 per cent increase in the number living in "dry" districts. Since 1868 the population of the country has doubled while the number of inhabitants of "dry" territory has increased over thirteenfold.

The significant fact is that the people of the Southland should be in the forefront of the battle for the abolition of the individual and political domination and demoralization of the rum traffic. In 1907, Georgia took her place at the head of the battle line for prohibition in the South. Next to her, within a year, came Oklahoma, admitted to the Union with a constitutional prohibitory provision, which was later ratified by another vote, and then Alabama and Mississippi with statutory prohibition. On May 6, 1908, by a majority of 42,000, prohibition was voted into the constitution of North Carolina. In 1909, the legislature of Tennessee, over the governor's veto, passed a State-wide prohibition law. Alabama, the only one of the Southern States to drop out of the prohibition line, did so in 1911, by a repeal of the prohibitory law and adoption of a local-option measure, under whose provision sixteen counties have voted, eight of them "dry" and eight for the dispensary or open saloons. Ninety per cent of the population lives under no-license. . . .

The fight for State-wide prohibition has met with a number of reverses. It was lost in Florida, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, Colorado, and Oregon. The contests in Missouri and Colorado were ill-advised and waged against the judgment of the wisest temperance leaders. The measure was lost in Oregon by a small majority. The temperance people charge that the small majority against them in Florida was secured by the payment of the poll tax of the colored people by the liquor dealers, who voted them in droves at the polls. The defeat in Texas was believed to have been caused by the "raw" Mexicans and by the 80 per cent of the 125,000 colored voters, and by frauds at the polls. There are, however, only 355 saloons in Florida, and in Texas the saloon has been driven from more than 80 per cent of the territory and from 85 per cent of the population by local option. Ex-Congressman Morris Sheppard, the champion of temperance legislation in the Congress of 1912, was sent to the United States Senate to take the place of Joseph W. Bailey. Arkansas, angered at the defeat of prohibition by the colored voters, recently passed a law making it necessary to have a majority vote of white people, men and women, of a certain precinct, before a liquor license can be issued, and it is said that the provisions will make it impossible to open a single drinking place in the State. There have been some reactions in favor of the saloon in Indiana, Ohio, and some other States, while in others there has been advanced temperance legislation and a wider territory made "dry." . . .

It will be seen that no-license prevails generally in the States that have the largest proportion of native-born population. North Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, and Tennessee have less than 1 per cent foreign-born population, West Virginia has 2.3 per cent, Oklahoma 3.9 per cent, and the pioneer prohibitory States, Maine, Kansas, and North Dakota have 13.4 per cent, 8.6 per cent, and 35.4 per cent, respectively. Of the seventeen States 50 per cent or more "dry," Virginia, South Carolina, and Alabama have less than 1 per cent of foreign-born population, while Arkansas has 1.1 per cent, Kentucky 2.3 per cent, Louisiana 3.8 per cent, Texas 5.9 per cent, and Indiana 5.6 per cent. The reason why the Dakotas and Minnesota have so much prohibition territory with so large a proportion of foreigners is that their inhabitants are Scandinavians, who come to our shores without much friendliness to the liquor traffic. Aside from the nine prohibition States, all the rest in the Union are under some form of local option or other, except Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Nevada, with 15, 22, and 23 per cent foreign-born population, respectively. . . .

The liquor dealers have an enormously powerful machine whose jurisdiction embraces every State, city, and village in the country, including the capital at Washington. They have more saloons than there are churches, more bartenders than ministers of the gospel and have a yearly business of a billion and a half dollars against the few millions devoted to religious purposes. Despite the defeats they have suffered in the last fifteen years, they are still tremendously strong. The Government statistics show that while there were 1,108,218 barrels less of fermented liquors used in 1912 than 1911 there was actually an increase in the consumption of distilled liquors in the same year of 1,226,596 gallons over that of the year 1911, which figures, discouraging as they are, would be much more so to temperance people if it were not for the fact that the Government statistics show that the increase of consumption is in the license territory only, especially in the large cities, and that there is in the white districts always a reduction, and that the brewers who, it is thought, own 80 per cent of all the saloons, have multiplied the drinking places abnormally and have made the question of self-government in the largest cities of the country a serious problem.

METHODISM AND HIGHER CRITICISM.

In almost every religious denomination of this country are smoldering fires ready, at a moment's notice, to break into flame. At different periods during the last two or three years controversies have raged within Methodism, Presbyterianism, Congregationalism and Protestant Episcopalianism. Even the house of Judah has been troubled. The debate in each instance has centered in the encroachments of the modernist spirit and, in particular, in the growing acceptance of the results of the "higher criticism."

At the present time the Methodist Church finds itself once more divided by fierce and acrimonious discussions over biblical problems. Charges and countercharges are being hurled hither and yon. At a meeting of Methodist preachers held recently in New York headquarters, a speaker demanded that certain statements made in the heat of discussion be retracted as unfair. A clergyman who left the meeting before it was over declared that if he were not a Christian, a meeting like that would not make him one.

The cause of all the trouble is to be found in the Reverend Doctor George P. Mains, of New York, one of the publishing agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His offense consists in having written and published, two years ago, a book entitled, Modern Thought and Traditional Faith. At the time of its publication, it was reviewed at length by the New York Christian Advocate, the leading organ of Methodism in this country. The Advocate treated it, on the whole, sympathetically, but reserved the right to dissent from some of its conclusions. Later, extracts from the book were printed in Sunday school publications of the Methodist Church. This led to the introduction in the New Jersey conference in its last annual session at Atlantic City of a resolution charging the Methodist Book Concern with "publishing and distributing literature of a liberalistic and rationalistic kind."

The leader of the attack on Doctor Mains is the Reverend Doctor Jay Benson Hamilton, pastor of Trinity Methodist Church, New York. He is greatly perturbed over recent developments. "With our religion mutilated as it is by these 'higher critics,'" he exclaimed at the stormy meeting to which reference has been made, "Bob Ingersoll, were he alive to-day would be admitted to any Christian church with open arms." Doctor Hamilton is also quoted in the newspapers as saying:

"Moses has been done away with by these 'higher critics.' They have wiped out Daniel, and now are trying to do away with Jesus. They haven't gone quite so far as to print this in our Sunday school papers or in our books, but some would like to if they dared. They have questioned, however, the authorship of Genesis, Exodus, and the other three books of the Pentateuch, declaring that Moses did not write this part of the Bible; and some of them even go so far as to say there was no Moses at all.

From time to time writings of this sort have appeared in our Sunday school papers, and it surely will poison the minds of the little ones who read them.

The Bible is built on the five pillars of the Pentateuch. Attack any one of these pillars, and the book will fall.

The Methodist faith is the largest of the Protestant denominations in the United States. Methodism is the backbone of our Nation, and the faith is founded on the book that has stood the test for more than 2,000 years. What right has any human mind to criticize a superhuman work?

Any minister of the Methodist faith who does not believe every syllable in the Bible is false to his ordination vows. Before being admitted to the ministry he was asked this question: "Do you unfeignedly believe all the canonical Scriptures of the Old and New Testament?" He believed them then; and if he doubts them now he is not a Methodist; and any person, layman or of the clergy, who does not believe all the teachings of Christ is not a Christian.

Doctor Mains does not deny that he is a believer in the higher criticism, but his position, on the whole, would seem to be moderate rather than radical. He upholds the so-called "documentary character" of the Hexateuch; he believes, that is to say, in the first six books of the Old Testament as a compilation of documents edited and written in large part by authors unknown. He is inclined to reject the idea that any original revelation was given by God to the first parents of the race. He feels that "many of the traditional views of inspiration and of inerrancy of statement have utterly broken down under investigation." On the other hand, he believes in revelation in rare instances, and in miracles. "That Christ actually did perform miracles," he declares, "would appear to be a fact as well authenticated as any historical statement which has come to us from so ancient a period. . . . Disprove the resurrection of Christ and the origin of the church is the most anomalous and the most inexplicable event in human history."

"The supreme battle of Christian biblical criticism," Doctor Mains told a New York Sun reporter

the other day, "has already been fought and decisively won. It is only those who have deliberately obscured themselves behind prison walls, or who in this field, are intellectual Rip Van Winkles, that will have the hardihood to deny the facts." To the question, What is the value of it all? Doctor Mains replies:

If to have the most luminous and accurate knowledge possible of the historic foundations of our faith; if to have a Bible purged of priestly fables, from mystifying allegorical interpretations, from false traditions and from unscientific constructions; if so to clear the entire field of traditional false conceptions as to permit the Scriptures to speak directly to us from the background of their own grammatical and historical settings; if to have accessible to every Bible reader the most correct text which human study can gain, and the most perfect historical environment possible of reproduction; if to hear and to know the words of Christ; if to see his historic image more perfectly than has ever been permitted to any generation of his followers; if to walk in vivid historic companionship with his apostles; if to have at our command a more rational and defensible view of the Bible as a record of God's dealings with, of his purposes toward mankind—if there be high value in all these things, then the biblical critical movement will take its permanent place in history as one of the most significant and beneficent in the providential scheme of the world.

Doctor John T. Macfarland, editor of the Sunday school publications of the Methodist Church, and Doctor David Downey, who passes on all books published by the Methodists, have expressed themselves as in substantial agreement with Doctor Mains' position. Zion's Herald, the organ of the Methodist Church in Boston, comments:

We hold no brief for Doctor Mains. But this we would say, that after a thorough and careful rereading of the volume we lay it down with the distinct impression that it is a scholarly and much-needed array of the results of biblical investigation.—Current Opinion, May, 1913.

MOSAIC AND MODERN LAW.

A collection of facts have been gathered by a writer in Harper's Weekly going to prove that the sanitary laws of Moses were not only on a line with the modern rules of hygiene, but in some cases in advance of them. The Jew, thousands of years before Christ, settling in a semi-tropical country, was forbidden to eat pork or shell-fish, and milk was designated as a source of contagion. In the Talmud a method of slaughtering animals was prescribed which is acknowledged to-day in our markets as the most sanitary. Five thousand years before Koch gave to the world the results of his researches in bacteriology the Mosaic law pointed out the danger to man from tuberculosis in cattle, but did not forbid infected poultry as food. It was only a few years ago that German specialists discovered that fowl tuberculosis was harmless to man. The Mosaic law also enforced the isolation of patients with contagious diseases and the burial of the dead outside all cities. These hints the Gentile world did not fully accept until a century or two ago. The wise law-giver prescribed not only fasting at certain periods of the year, but the removal of whole families in summer out to camps, where for a time they could live close to nature. Many of the laws of Moses were prescriptions intended for the health of both mind and body.—Commoner, July 11, 1913.

INGERSOLL ON ALCOHOL.

In a speech before a grand jury on a liquor case the late Robert G. Ingersoll is reported as having said:

I am aware that there is a prejudice against any man who manufactures alcohol. I believe that from the time it issues from the coiled and poisonous worms in the distillery until it empties into the jaws of death, dishonor and crime, it demoralizes everybody that touches it, from its source to where it ends. I do not believe anybody can contemplate the object without being prejudiced against the liquor crime.

All we have to do, gentlemen, is to think of the wrecks on either bank of the stream of death, of the suicides, of the insanity, of the ignorance, of the destitution, of the little children tugging at the faded and withered breasts of weeping and despairing mothers, of wives asking for bread, of the men of genius it has wrecked, the men struggling with imaginary serpents, produced by this devilish thing; and when you think of the jails, of the almshouses, of the asylums, of the prisons, of the scaffolds upon either bank, I do not wonder that every thoughtful man is prejudiced against this damned stuff called alcohol. Intemperance cuts down youth in its vigor, manhood in its strength, old age in its weakness. It breaks the father's heart, bereaves the doting mother, extinguishes natural affection, erases conjugal love, blots out filial attachment, blights parental hopes, brings down mourning age in sorrow to the grave. It produces weakness, not life. It makes wives widows; children orphans; fathers fiends, and all of them paupers and beggars. It feeds rheumatism, invites cholera, imports pestilence and embraces consumption. It covers the land with idleness, misery, crime. It fills your jails, supplies your almshouses, and demands your asylums. It engenders controversies, fosters quarrels, and cherishes riots.

It crowds your penitentiaries and furnishes victims for your scaffold. It is the lifeblood of the gambler, the element of the burglar, the prop of the highwayman and support of the midnight incendiary. It countenances the liar, respects the thief, esteems the blasphemer. It violates obligation, reverences fraud, and honors infamy. It defames benevolence, hates love, scorns virtue, and slanders innocence. It incites the father to butcher his helpless offspring, helps the husband to massacre his wife, and the child to grind the patricidal ax. It burns up men, consumes women, detests life, curses God, despises heaven. It suborns witnesses, nurses perjury, defiles the jury box, and stains judicial ermine. It degrades the citizen, debases the legislator, dishonors the statesman and disarms the patriot. It brings shame, not honor; misery, not safety; despair, not hope; misery, not happiness, and with the malevolence of a fiend it calmly surveys its frightful desolation and unsatiated havoc. It poisons felicity, kills peace, ruins morals, blights confidence, slays reputations, and wipes out national honor, then curses the world and laughs at its ruin. It does all that and more. It murders the soul. It is the sum of all villainies, the father of all crimes, the mother of all abominations, the Devil's best friend and God's worst enemy.

Character Poisoning.

There are many good thoughts in the following article from one of our daily newspapers. The clipping was sent us by an interested contributor who appreciates the suggestions and wishes to pass them on to others for the good they may do.

"I wish to call attention to one form of character poisoning of which parents are frequently guilty.

"Perhaps the worst misfortune that can happen to a person is to be infected with the germs of fear, to lack decision and self-confidence, to be a prey to the terrors of the mortal pain, shame and self-torture of the innumerable victims of chronic fear.

"Frequently parents are responsible for this. A boy, for instance, develops some inborn trait of waywardness; he is untruthful, will not apply himself, is careless, disobedient, or persists in keeping bad company; the parent naturally tells him of his fault and, as it seems to do no good, drops into a constant practice of scolding. Over and over the boy is reminded that he is 'bad,' that he will never amount to anything, and so on. This finally filters into the child's subconsciousness, and then the irretrievable damage; for when he comes to believe in his submind that he is bad he is bad.

"Why not try to find the cause of your child's defects and remove it? When you know that blame and reproof do no good, why go on?

"We do not realize that it is a crime to say to any child under any circumstances, that he is bad, weak, or vicious. When you do that you are planting a seed of damage in his mind.

"Many a woman has been wrecked because her life was poisoned when she was a child by unceasing mental suggestions from her mother that she was naughty, wicked, unreliable or untruthful.

"Many a man is a weak failure in the struggle of mature life simply because the cult of failure was carefully instilled into him by his parents.

"Dwell upon and encourage the good that is in your child. Ignore his defects as far as possible. Learn how to shut your eyes. Above all, do not tell him he is wicked. Show him his faults never in public, but in sacred intimacy. Show him the consequences of wrongdoing, but enlist his aid in opposing his bad traits. Persistently suggest to him that he is good, brave, strong, and truthful.

"In after life this belief of yours in him will tone up his self-respect and give him strength in his hours of crisis."

A Child's Ideal.

The parents and older persons who surround a child have much to do with his early ideals toward which he conforms his conduct. The conduct and conversation which the child hears often unconsciously mold his ideals and guide his actions.

Miss Harrison asks pertinently: "With this thought in mind, what think you of the mother who tells in her child's presence, with evident amusement, of the naughty tricks performed by him? Or of the father who pours into the ears of the admiring little listener tales and anecdotes of what a bad boy he was, and the trouble and mischief he caused; or of the friend who places in the hands of the growing boy such ideals as those portrayed with sprightliness in Peck's Bad Boy?"

We older ones have much need to keep proper control over ourselves, that we may not be instrumental in "poisoning the characters" of the young with whom we are in contact, or in lowering their ideals of good character. We shall not be likely to do this, if there be in us the constant desire to keep our own ideals high and noble, if there be in us a reaching out after that perfection which is in our Lord Jesus Christ, the perfect example of goodness.

Commending Goodness.

In her book, entitled, A Study of Child Nature, Miss Harrison describes a certain game, the intent of which was to commend good children and to emphasize the characteristics of activity, perseverance, love, gratitude, and reverence. She tells of a child who attended the kindergarten and played this game, who, in after years, stated that her most distinct memory of the kindergarten was the great waves of joy which used to pass over her as they played the part of holding out the good child for the knights in the game to see.

We call attention to the teaching of the game that activity, perseverance, love, gratitude, reverence, and the like are expressions of goodness. We older ones have need to practice these things, to set before the children practical examples of them, to study to train the children in them with kindness and wisdom.

Doctor Bolton, in his Principles of Education, says: "One attempt at forming habits of good-nature is worth ten efforts at reforming habits of ill-nature. Good health, proper hygiene, and sunny-tempered parents, teachers, and companions go far toward insuring even-tempered children; while a child who is forced to live with crochety, moody, and cranky parents and associates easily becomes inoculated with touchiness, irritability, and flightiness."

"Provoke not your children to wrath," is the admonition of Paul to parents. On the contrary, we should pursue the policy of the wise kindergartner who leads the child to enjoy goodness,—that goodness expressed in activity, perseverance, love, gratitude, and reverence.

"Look for goodness, look for gladness;
You will meet them all the while;
If you bring a smiling visage to the glass,
You meet a smile."

How often the children reflect to us that which they see in us. Parents who are habitually sunny-tempered, wise, and kind may reasonably expect the reflection of these qualities in their children.

Self-Respect.

It is necessary to our success in life that we maintain our self-respect. The child who believes himself to be bad does not respect himself. It is highly indiscreet in us to tell children they are bad. We may point out that certain things they do are not right, but we should be very careful how we brand a child in his own estimation as being bad.

A few weeks ago this column published the opinion of Judge Ben Lindsey of the Juvenile Court of Denver. After years of experience in trying the cases of men and boys, this student of human nature gives it as his conclusion that there are wrong conditions and wrong deeds, but no innately bad people. We understand him to mean that there is a time when those who do wrong in after life might be led in better paths, that wrong conditions about them, coupled with lack of training, result in misdirected lives.

It is the part of parents and teachers to open up the avenues of goodness and to lead the young feet to walk therein. One of the things a child should have inculcated into his thoughts is the sense of self-respect, that feeling which makes boys manly and girls womanly, that which lifts us above doing wrong in secret.

There is a story of a little boy who was once asked why he did not take certain fruit when he could have done so without the theft being known. "There was no one there to see you," he was reminded. His reply was, "Yes, there was. I was there to see myself."

That child had self-respect. It led him to pass judgment upon his own acts and to hold himself true. Not one of us, old or young, can afford to let himself see himself do what he would be unwilling to have others see him do. The approval or disapproval of our own conscience is of more worth than the approval or disapproval of other people.

Build up in the child a sense of self-respect, not of pride or egotism, but that noble self-respect which is the theme of the poem to the laborer, which says to him, "Stand up erect; thou hast the form and likeness of thy God."

We are made in the likeness of God. We have intelligence that is godlike. Of man, as distinguished from the lower animals, it is said that he is "a thinker of God's thoughts after him."

We have reason to respect ourselves and the possibilities that are within us. This noble self-respect will lift us up, prompting us to do the things that will raise us to the plane of perfection where God lives. We are encouraged by the Son of God who came as our great teacher, for he says, Be ye perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect.

Cleanliness and Self-Respect.

Cleanliness has to do with self-respect. The command from the Lord is, "Be ye clean in your bodies and in your clothing." We can not be unclean, if we have proper self-respect.

In a recent issue of the Literary Digest, we noted the statement that social settlement workers and others interested in the uplifting of the tenement districts in the cities all acknowledge that the opportunity to bathe daily has had a very beneficial effect upon the foreign element, including all nationalities.

The article says, "It has tended to make them more cleanly in their homes, also in the shops and factories, and has undoubtedly made them more self-respecting. . . . It is noticeable that when they appear on the streets they are neater in attire, and the women take more pride in the appearance of their homes, both inside and outside. One of the most significant factors is that women do not neglect their children so much, and on the streets the boys and girls seen playing do not have the dirty faces, the unkempt hair, and the tattered and soiled clothing formerly a common sight."

Children should live in clean houses, sleep in clean beds, eat at clean tables, wear clean clothes. They should belong to the famous Smiley Glad family and learn from the example of those who rear them to give "the glad hand" as they go through life. All these things belong in the same atmosphere with self-respect.

The Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE SECOND THURSDAY IN SEPTEMBER.

Parents' Day. For our families and the families of each other. For greater growth in spirituality, and a greater sense of parental responsibility. For the conversion of kindred outside of the church. Prayers for the sick and afflicted. Scripture lesson, Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4. Memory verse; Galatians 4: 19.

AN EXPLANATION.

I am requested to write something explanatory of the Prayer Union, its objects, aims, and working. What is necessary for membership?

Its object, other than that which appears in the published subjects for prayer, as has been stated, is for spiritual growth in faith, love, and fellowship, and all good gifts. Its aim, that we may become one, as Jesus and the Father are one.

What is necessary for membership? Membership in the church and a sincere desire for and interest in the objects and aims of the Union, and an earnest effort to keep the time for prayer.

Any member of the church, old or young, brother or sister, may be a member.

There is no initiatory fee. Our idea is that it shall be as free to those who wish to pray as the throne of God is to those who seek him.

Recording the names is for the purpose of knowing its growth. The names will not be published. Once a year I will report the number recorded; therefore, as complete a record as possible is desired.

It is not necessary to memorize the texts in order to be a member, but it is desirable for those who can to do so as a help to spiritual growth and knowledge, to have the mind stored with God's word, "given by inspiration for our learning."

In writing to me, if a personal answer is needed please inclose stamp; otherwise, I can only answer inquiries through the Home Column.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

We are in receipt of a letter that tells in detail of the sad circumstances under which a young girl, just merging into womanhood, was taken from her home several years ago. Her sister writes in deep sorrow of heart, asking prayers for her. The young girl is in a hospital for the insane. Your prayers in her behalf are earnestly solicited by those who long with great desire for her restoration to the home where an aged mother needs loving ministrations at her hands. May God look in mercy upon us in our sorrows and help us to trust him still when the clouds hang heavy above us. Beyond the clouds, the sun of his everlasting love shines always.

When you get into a tight place and everything goes against you, till it seems you could not hold on a minute longer, never give up then, for that's just the place and time that the tide'll turn.—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

"In General Hartwell breathed the same high and lofty patriotism that inspired the gallant Shaw, when

Right in the van,

On the red ramparts slippery swell,

With heart that beat a charge, he fell

Foremost, as fits a man."

Do not loiter nor shirk,

Do not falter nor shrink;

But just think out your work,

And then work out your "think."

At the Chautauqua.

The Blue Rapids Chautauqua opened Wednesday afternoon, August 13, with the thermometer ranging between 105 and 110°. There was a very good attendance, notwithstanding the heat. In fact, we are getting so accustomed to this hot and dry State of Kansas that the thought has occurred to our mind that we will soon be ready for a mission to South Africa, or some other tropical clime. It has fallen to my lot to be fortunate enough to attend the Chautauqua for the first time since coming to this country. It was not that I had no disposition to attend in previous years, but rather from lack of the wherewithal. But this year, having charge of the work in this city, I was presented with a complimentary season ticket, by the superintendent of the Chautauqua company, which courtesy was extended to all the ministers of the city. I certainly appreciated this opportunity of hearing some of the best talent of the country.

Amongst the prominent participants was to have been William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State, but owing to the Mexican situation he could not leave Washington, which disappointment was shared by all. Gifford Pinchot, former Chief Forester of the United States, Ex-senator Frank J. Cannon, late editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, now of Denver, Colorado, and many others of note, in education, science, art, and music, were with us.

Mr. Cannon lectured on Thursday evening, August 14, and as he was one of the principal speakers an immense audience greeted him. I had previously written to Mr. Cannon, calling his attention to the printed program, which had been circulated by the thousands, in which there was contained a most wicked misrepresentation of the Prophet Joseph Smith. The exposé read in part like this: As editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, he (Mr. Cannon) had exposed the practice of polygamy which Joseph Smith had secretly authorized and encouraged. I pointed out in my letter that while I did not hold him in any way responsible for this, as I recognized the getting out of the program was the work of others, yet I did earnestly desire him to set right this glaring and erroneous blunder. I cited him to facts, as stated in the late Smoot case, and the different court decisions, and in the Chambers Encyclopedia, showing that the blame for the doctrine of polygamy must be placed upon others, and not upon Joseph Smith.

His subject was, The Mormon Kingdom. He commenced with his favorite question, "What are you going to do about it, anyway?" which was repeated many times, to the seeming amusement of his hearers. After about a half hour he asked if there were any in the audience who wished to ask questions; he said that there were usually a number of Utah elders at his lectures. If there were any present upon this occasion they were very conspicuous by their silence.

I was sitting near the center of the large tent. I arose and said that I was by no means a Utah elder, but if it were permissible I would like to ask a question or two. Mr. Cannon replied, saying that I might proceed. I then asked if it were not a well-established fact that there was a material difference between the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, and the Mormons. He asked if I were the gentleman who wrote him. I said I was. He replied, "Then I have this to say to you, Mr. Arber, and to this people, that there is a difference."

He then and there paid us a very high compliment. He said the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints never had believed or practiced polygamy, but had fought it hard; that as a people they were thrifty and righteous; that their Joseph Smith lives in Independence, Missouri; that there was no more reason for classing them as Mormons than for classing the Methodists as Mormons. He said he was not making a fight on our people, it was the Utah Church he was fighting. Having committed himself that far, in fact, too far, he now said, pointing his finger in my direction, "Now do not misunderstand me; I do not believe as you do. The idea," said he, "these people claim that they are the only true church on earth, and all you Christian people are wrong; and, further, they hold to the erroneous idea that Joseph Smith should take the place of Jesus Christ."

I again arose and kindly asked Mr. Cannon, when, where, and under what circumstances the followers of Joseph Smith had ever been required to substitute anyone, including Joseph Smith, for Christ, our blessed Savior. I asked if Mr. Cannon did not well know that the Prophet Joseph Smith, and his venerable son, Joseph Smith, now residing at Independence, Missouri, had always admonished those bearing the name of Latter Day Saints to follow them only so far as they followed Jesus Christ. This was a little surprising to Mr. Cannon, who from the first had been taken off his guard. He stood a few seconds, then asked, "What shall I do, continue to answer this gentleman's questions, or proceed with my lecture?" He was completely embarrassed, and said in appealing to his sympathetic audience, "We will put it to a vote." But it never was put to the vote; he proceeded with his lecture.

A large percentage of our people were present and heard the lecture, and I was so glad that it all transpired in the way it did. Previous to taking up this matter at all, I had made it a subject of prayer, as had also a number of the Saints in this place, though that was all unknown to me at the time. It may seem to some to be a trivial thing to pray over, but I have often found a great source of strength in pursuing a like course. The sublime expression of the poet has often found a place under like circumstances, wherein he well said:

"Still their onward course pursuing,
God speed the right;
Every foe at length subduing,
God speed the right;
Truth, thy cause, what e'er delay it,
There's no power on earth can stay it;
God speed the right."

Never once did Mr. Cannon mention Joseph Smith as having had anything to do with polygamy; but he did refer to Brigham Young, and others, including Joseph F. Smith. I believe the faith of the Saints has been strengthened by this little tilt with the big Cannon from Utah.

There are some visible signs of improvement along the line of spiritual progression. We are to baptize a young man to-morrow night from Manhattan. Slowly, but we trust surely, the work of the Master moves on.

Yours in bonds,

BLUE RAPIDS, KANSAS.

JOSEPH ARBER.

Warlick-Case Debate.

Please permit me to say to your readers that the Warlick-Case debate just closed at Wawaka, Texas, on the plains in the Texas Panhandle. S. W. Simmons and the writer went there to defend the work, as we have been assailed by insults and challenges for the last six years.

We were called by wire to come at once and meet the famous Joseph S. Warlick, of the non-progressive wing of the Christian Church. He is the same man Brother Curtis met three years ago, at Arapaho, Oklahoma. Mr. Ed Greever met us at Glazier in his Ford car, and we soon covered the fifty-two miles across that beautiful prairie of large cattle ranches.

The debate was called for August 10, at 10 o'clock a. m., in a large tent. A crowd of about four hundred, coming a distance of forty to fifty miles, were in attendance. We held two sessions per day.

From the first session we had the crowd in our favor. Warlick was profuse in slang, vulgarity, and bitter speeches against Joseph Smith, and the Book of Mormon. Our good, intelligent listeners refused to believe him sincere, and repudiated his unchristianlike conduct. We had all the outsiders with us and even a part of Warlick's own members, some of them complimenting us highly at the close of the debate, and also buying some of our books.

I was shown by a dream before we began the debate the best course to pursue, and the Lord was with us by his Spirit in power. Warlick is a man of good ability, but the wisdom of man can not overthrow the truth.

Sister Simmons and her noble family, also Mr. Greever's folks are excellent people, and they spared neither means nor effort to make the debate a success. May the Lord abundantly bless them. One was baptized by Brother Simmons at the close. Mr. Greever brought us to the train in his car.

We did much good and many heard who perhaps never would have heard in this life. But I very seriously question the wisdom of furnishing unscrupulous men one hundred dollar jobs, for that is all they care for. We are busy men and the people are hungering for the bread of life. The writer has now baptized over forty since General Conference, and the good work is moving on.

Your coworker,

HUBERT CASE.

ENID, OKLAHOMA, August 19, 1913.

OUTLOOK, MONTANA, August 17, 1913.

Editors Herald: We had never had the opportunity of having a Latter Day Saint minister preach in this section of Montana until Brother William Sparling, of Minot, North Dakota, arrived. He held meetings in our little district schoolhouse in Sheridan County.

These meetings were well attended and the public were greatly pleased with the sermons delivered. Elder Sparling was blessed with the Spirit of God in each and every effort. He was with us nine days, and his departure was greatly regretted both by we few Saints (numbering six), and by the people of other denominations.

Six were converted, among whom were my two brothers, a nephew, and my brother-in-law. The baptisms took place in a pretty little lake on the prairies. The day was most wonderful and glorious. The confirmations were attended to at the water's edge. In some of the confirmations Brother Sparling prophesied. I had never had the privilege of hearing anything like this before. Many wanted to attend the baptisms, but no outsiders were present. It seemed to be a spiritual feast meant only for those who belong to the church and those who were willing to obey the true gospel.

We think there is a great work to be done here and are anxious to have another elder so that the people, many of whom are interested in this wonderful work, may have the opportunity of hearing and receiving God's own gospel.

Your sister in the faith,

MONTROSE SHALLBETTER.

COOTER, MISSOURI, August 18, 1913.

Editors Herald: I wish to tell of the wonderful work that has been accomplished in extreme southeastern Missouri. I came to this place about two years and eight months ago. The people had never heard the gospel as restored in latter days, so I began to tell it to them, in their homes and also from the pulpit. I have had Brethren C. L. Snow and Fred Moser here preaching. There seemed to be a splendid interest all the way. So last, but not least, I wrote for Elder J. T. Davis, of West Plains, Missouri.

He came in answer to the call for help, and began preaching Saturday, August 9, and held over till the seventeenth. He preached with the power of the Spirit. There has never been such a turnout at this place. It was declared on every side by the best people of the community to be the best preaching they had ever heard. The house seemed to be filled with the Holy Ghost. Tears were seen to flow down the cheeks of some who before had opposed us. With all the people who attended the meeting we have not heard one word against the preaching.

Twenty were baptized; fully that many more seem almost ready and the whole community is aroused to its uttermost. In the confirmations there were three or four pointed out by the Spirit who would be called to the ministry if they were faithful. We saw the aged and the youth go into the watery grave together, and come out with tears of joy flowing down their cheeks.

We have petitioned the district to organize a branch here, and Brethren Davis and Cunningham are expected back in about a month to attend to the work. So we need and earnestly desire the prayers of the Saints everywhere that those who are almost persuaded may accept also; and that those who have accepted may have courage.

May the Lord bless his people everywhere.

Your brother in Christ,
N. S. GOWER.

ALBIA, IOWA, August 20, 1913.

Editors Herald: Since I wrote for your perusal I have visited scattered Saints at Albia, Exline, and Mystic, finding pressing invitations to hold tent meetings at each place. I also made a short visit to Hiteman Branch, where I found a band of very active Saints, and where I enjoyed excellent liberty in presenting the word. They have outgrown their church building, have torn it down, and have a larger one in progress of erection, now nearly ready for occupancy.

From Albia I went to Lamoni, to assist in preparing for and to be present at the stake reunion. While the weather was hot and very dry, yet there was very little sickness on the grounds, and the services represented sociability, intellectuality, and spirituality. The effect has proven very beneficial and can not but bring about a purification that will cause the people and place to represent more of a Zionite state.

I was engaged for several days following the reunion in work pertaining to the history of the Presidents of the Seventy.

On Monday the eleventh I was present at Chariton to attend a lecture by a Reverend Silvara on the subject, "Mormonism as a menace." He said that technically speaking there were no such terms as Mormons or Mormonism, but that he would use the term Mormons as applying to all who believe the Book of Mormon, of which there were two specific classes, "or main bodies"; one organized at the death of Joseph Smith by Brigham Young, the other, the Reorganized Church. The latter, he said, "is as bitterly opposed to that phase of the subject upon which I wish to treat, polygamy, and its kindred evils, as any people can be."

While he made this clear distinction, he began to trace what he called "Mormonism" from Joseph Smith to Utah, calling Joseph Smith licentious, and saying that since "Smith violated his marriage vow at Palmyra," "polygamy had flourished," and many equally absurd and false statements, not even representing conditions in Utah correctly. There were in attendance at the lecture, which had been largely advertized, about thirty-five, ten of whom were Latter Day Saints. The lecture did much more harm to the church in which it was held than it did to us.

While the pastor of the Baptist Church, in which church the lecture was held, declined to permit a reply in the church, yet he cheerfully granted the privilege of distributing tracts, which largely offset the lecturer's misrepresentations, and all but two, who were not of the church, received the tracts with apparent thankfulness.

From there I returned home, and ordered a tent for missionary purposes for the stake, at the request of the stake bishop, and came here yesterday, awaiting its arrival and preparing for service to be held here, assisted by Brother R. S. Salyards and the local Saints.

While here we are domiciled at the hospitable home of Brother Joseph Williams.

Hopefully,
J. F. MINTUN.

News from Branches

Bemidji, Minnesota.

I must write of the feast that we have had in this little branch. Of course we have our ups and downs, and it seems that it is mostly down. But we are up again so soon that it is forgotten in enjoying the blessings our heavenly Father sends.

Elder Lambkin of Minneapolis spent two weeks here preaching. The sermons were thoroughly enjoyed by every member of the branch, and by some outsiders. Elder Lambkin is our district president, and he certainly is in the right place. He is thoroughly interested in God's work, and is so full of love and enthusiasm that he imparts these needful graces to all who are interested. He had the pleasure of baptizing a promising young man by the name of Robinson, his brother, sister, and brother-in-law having accepted the truth just a few weeks before. We are very glad to welcome these brothers and sister to our little branch.

We have some very soul-cheering prayer meetings. God is giving us all the help we are in condition to receive. He has spoken to us in prophecy many times by way of admonition and has given us hope and courage. He has given us to know very plainly that he is keeping watch over the people of this little branch. We are blessed most wonderfully through administrations, and the gift of healing is surely given to Elders Delbert Whiting and F. E. Anderson. Delbert Whiting was ordained an elder at the conference at Clitheral this summer, and was also made branch president. He is surely the right man in the right place.

We are trying to appreciate God's goodness to us; but can we fully sense and realize what we owe him? I sometimes think it is impossible for the human mind to grasp the immensity of such love and mercy, and that we can not hope to repay the least little bit of what we owe in this life.

We are prone to wander and forget our duty, and it seems that the Evil One is working harder and harder to destroy us. We had a very narrow escape just last week from the "Prince of the air" in the form of a cyclone. The storm cloud parted and we were safe. The Evil One seems to concentrate his forces more when we try hardest to overcome. He even attempts to bring the elements to his help. He gathers all his forces at one point, realizing that in union there is strength. He knows his time is drawing to a close, and he is working with all the energy he can control to overthrow even small branches of the kingdom. But if we can keep guard over our own selves and combine our love and prayers, we will find that God will be our helper and we will finally come off conquerors.

I ask the prayers of the Saints for this branch and for myself and family. We would enjoy meeting the Oregon Saints in reunion at Myrtle Point this year. I ask them to remember us.

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. LUCY WILLIAMS.

Los Angeles, California.

Our reunion, which convened at Convention Park, Hermosa Beach, August 1 to 10, was enjoyed by all who were privileged to attend. A feeling of sadness came over us on the last Sunday afternoon when the train pulled out taking those who had to leave early. We thought of the time when there shall be no parting.

We had with us Brethren F. M. Sheehy, James E. Kelley, V. M. Goodrich, Roy Slye, and Brother Brooner of the missionary staff, besides many of our local brethren. A day and a half was devoted to Religio work. Many good thoughts and plans were discussed. Another day was given to the Sunday school workers, and we have some very live ones here.

One very pleasing feature of the reunion was that so many of our young people were with us—our future workers. Brother Slye baptized three children just before the close.

Wednesday, the thirteenth, as we were gathered at the church for prayer meeting, Brother Gomer T. Griffiths walked in. Needless to say, we were all glad to see him. Instead of regular prayer meeting Brother Goodrich requested Brother Griffiths to talk to us. That talk will long be remembered, as he was greatly blessed in the effort.

We hear that Brethren Slye and Brooner are going to take the tent and do missionary work around San Diego.

Los Angeles Branch surely has much to be thankful for. The words of counsel, advice and comfort we have received this summer will long be remembered.

MADGE P. KNOWLTON.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

The Saint Louis work is still alive and our pastor and his assistants are doing all they can for its advancement. The word as delivered by the ministry has been edifying and encouraging.

We understand that Brother Rushton paid a visit to the Religio recently and delivered a very interesting talk on the social and marriage question.

Our evening prayer services are not as well attended as they should be, but the sacrament service the first Sunday of the month usually has a good attendance. The meetings are always enjoyed because of the peaceful influence of the Spirit's presence.

Sister H. Roberts, of Independence, has been visiting home folks and friends in the regions of Lansdowne, Caseyville, and Saint Louis the past month. The Saint Louis Mite Society, of which Sister Roberts formerly was an untiring worker, tendered her a very pleasant surprise in honor of her birthday at the home of Sister W. Weidman, August 25.

A very pleasing feature of the morning of August 24, was the graduation exercises of our normal class. Brother T. J. Elliott delivered the baccalaureate address; a solo was rendered by Brother R. Lloyd; and the diplomas were presented by the normal superintendent, Brother G. S. Trowbridge. The graduates were Sisters Frank Mowry, Anna Mowry, Alice Bourgeret, Hazel Parrish, Maude Parrish, and Brother Frank Mowry. The class average was very high, part of the class passing the examinations of both Sunday school and Book of Mormon, and the international normal work.

Your sister in Christ,
ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

Died.

CHISNALL.—Thomas F. Chisnall was born at Omaha, Nebraska, January 19, 1859, died at Kewanee, Illinois, August 16, 1913, from paralysis. He united with the church in early years. He married Anne Boswell in 1880. One child, a daughter, was born to them. Sister Chisnall died four years later, the daughter following her six years thereafter. Brother Chisnall married Rosa Miller in 1892. Two children were born to them, who with the companion remain. He is also survived by his father, John Chisnall, sr., and other relatives. Funeral at the home conducted by Elder J. R. Grice, of Flint, Michigan; interment in Pleasant View Cemetery.

BUTTERFIELD.—Sister Lillie Butterfield was born August 8, 1874, at Flushing, New York, died August 17, 1913, at the hospital in New Westminster, British Columbia. She was baptized September 19, 1896, at Santa Cruz, California, by Elder J. F. Burton. Husband, seven children, mother and brother survive her. Funeral from the home at New Westminster in charge of Elders McMullen and Pope. The house was crowded with mourning friends.

DOSS.—William J. Doss, at Perry, Iowa, August 1, as the result of a complication of diseases, which he bore patiently till the last. He left a wife, two sons and three daughters. He was baptized in Perry, Iowa, by Elder William Johnson. The funeral services were held at the Saints' chapel at Perry, Iowa, sermon by James M. Baker.

DOSS.—Lewis Franklin Doss, son of William J. and Lucy C. Doss, of heart failure, at Des Moines, Iowa, Monday, August 25, while trying to board a train for his home at Perry, Iowa. He was a boy of noble character, and was trying to do his part in caring for the family so lately bereft of a father and husband. Funeral at the home, August 28, sermon by J. F. Mintun.

HEPBURN.—James Hepburn, jr., was born March 8, 1882, in Albemarle Township, Bruce Creek, Ontario. He was married July 12, 1909; died August 10, 1913, at Colpay's Bay. He was not a member of the church, but expressed a desire to obey, had he been given sufficient strength after he was smitten down with disease. Funeral services at the house, August 11, interment in Colpay's Bay Cemetery, sermon by W. D. Ellis, assisted by Franklin Smith.

COOPER.—Matilda Cooper was born March 25, 1841, in Georgia, died August 25, 1913, at Century, Florida. She was baptized and confirmed by John Givens in Baldwin County, Alabama, in 1878. She married W. A. Cooper November 24, 1877. Funeral at Century, sermon by F. M. Slover, assisted by W. J. Booker.

Book Notes.

The second of the volumes being published by The Century Company for the Bureau of Social Hygiene will be Abraham Flexner's, Prostitution in Europe, which will be issued this fall. It is based upon a year's careful study of conditions abroad.

The first of the series, George J. Kneeland's, Commercialized Prostitution in New York City, is in its second printing.

Social Evolution, by Doctor T. S. Chapin, of Smith College, will be issued by The Century Company, in September. It will present an elementary and readable, but scientific survey of the important facts and principles involved in the evolution of human nature from lower forms of life, and will have over eighty illustrations from diagrams, maps, and photographs.

The September number of The North American Review presents a timely table of contents. The former Assistant to the Attorney General, James A. Fowler, writes on the "Reorganization of the Republican Party," and Anglo-American, a distinguished journalist and student of foreign affairs, contributes an interesting paper on "American ambassadors abroad." Ex-Senator Jonathan Bourne, jr., outlines an admirable and exhaustive plan for "National aid to good roads"; and the eminent Unitarian divine, Doctor Francis G. Peabody, has a notable paper on "Nagging the Japanese." An important contribution is made by Hammond V. Hayes on "The public's financial interest in public utilities," which presents a novel point of view of that situation. The issue has a number of articles of exceptional literary interest. George E. Woodberry has a poem "E. A. P." (On the flyleaf of Whitty's fall); there is a discriminating study of O. F. Theis on "Emile Verhaeren," and R. A. Scott-James presents some debatable views on "Living English poets." O. W. Firkins writes of "The better part in conversation," and a most refreshing essay in contributed by Norman Douglas, the sub-editor of The English Review, on "The mad Englishman." The last article is a valuable discussion of the subject of social hygiene, which the writer, Lewis M. Terman, the assistant professor of education at Stanford University, believes to be the real conservation problem. The number concludes with the department Letters to the Editor, and the customary important criticism of new books.

There is no sphere where exercise of carefulness is unfelt. There is nothing more indicative of the genuine worth of a man to himself and to society than the habit of carefulness in all things.—Backbone.

BE YE RECONCILED TO GOD.

(Extracts from a sermon delivered by Elder Elbert A. Smith at the late reunion of the Lamoni Stake.)

They have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenant; they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall.—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 3.

Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.—2 Corinthians 5: 20.

In effect our text says, We as ambassadors of Christ, plead with you, be ye reconciled to God. What a wonderful commission! Yet that is our work in the midst of this generation.

In the creed of one of the popular churches it is written that Christ was manifest in the flesh that he might "reconcile God to man."

That statement was in that creed in 1820 when God said the creeds were wrong; it is there yet. It was wrong then; it is wrong now. It is just as wrong as any statement can be that is the exact opposite of truth.

Jesus was manifested that he might reconcile man to God, not that he should reconcile God to man.

Over three thousand years ago God said, through Moses, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." To-day, if we are to trust the revelation quoted from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, men everywhere are following after strange gods which are in essence neither more nor less than idols that shall wax old and perish in spiritual Babylon.

Idolatry is just as bad as it was three thousand years ago. It is true that idols of wood and stone have been discarded, but other idols and false gods have taken their places. Under these conditions it is our mission to plead with the world as ambassadors of Christ, "Be ye reconciled to God."

THE UNKNOWN GOD.

During the period of Grecian greatness an old Grecian cynic said, "It is easier to find a god in Athens than it is to find a man." Gods were everywhere. When Paul visited Mars Hill he found tablets erected to gods at every turn, and even one dedicated to the "Unknown God." Paul declared, "whom ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." He plead with them to be reconciled to God.

History repeats itself. To multitudes to-day Jehovah is the "unknown" God. Other gods have taken his place. What are these gods? Paul mentioned some who made gods of their bellies. Those we have to-day, and others who make gods of their brains.

In a pamphlet issued by the anarchist press of New York City I find this "keynote":

"Glory to man in the highest,
For he is master of things."

This may be termed the confession of faith of modern materialism. Unfortunately, many who are considered more respectable than anarchists subscribe to this creed, either openly or secretly, perhaps unconsciously in some instances.

Infidels and atheists, and multitudes of materialists, including business men and laborers who do not care enough about religion to define their own position, recognize no power higher than man. Man is to them the supreme intelligence of the universe. His laws alone concern them. "Glory to man in the highest."

Many "intellectuals" are apparently of the same school. Professor Eliot, of Harvard College, while defining the religion of the future, some years ago, declared that whatever else it might be, it would not be a religion of "authority." That is, it would not rest on any revelation, or any thus saith the Lord, but would be such a religion as might appeal to the consciences of men everywhere and originate in their brains.

The power that exercises the right to make our religion and formulate our doctrines becomes our god. If we ascribe to man that prerogative we may as well join the chorus, "Glory to man in the highest."

MAMMON.

What are some of those other gods to which reference is made? They are too numerous for us to attempt to name them all. We can only notice three, and that briefly.

When Jesus was here there were two powers contending for man's allegiance. On the one hand was the great Jehovah, and on the other Mammon. Jesus drew a line between the two and declared that no man could serve both. If he loved the one he would hate the other.

Since that day Mammon has increased his hold upon the hearts of men. Thousands serve him to-day with unremitting zeal. Men give their lives for him and die in their prime, worn out in his service. What more could a man do than to give his life?

Note how the service of these modern idols brutalizes humanity. In this struggle for the dollar mercy and justice are too often forgotten. The strong ruthlessly destroy the weak. The tears of the widow and the orphan have no meaning when they come between a man and his desire for gain.

PLEASURE.

Next we might notice the god of pleasure. Paul predicted that in the last days men should be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. We have walked down brilliantly lighted Broadway in one of our great modern cities on Sunday night and seen the thousands and tens of thousands crowding into the theater. We have gone on a little further and seen the tens and scores seeking the churches. It is that way in every large city.

Contrast the attendance at the Sunday afternoon ball game with the attendance at the Wednesday evening prayer meeting.

Devotion is measured by service. Jesus himself recognized that rule: "If you love me you will keep my commandments." Judged by service, Christian America loves the God that she professes to serve less than the heathen nations of old loved their idols, or Rome her pagan deities.

Legitimate pleasure is right and proper. It is a means to an end. But pleasure as an end in itself is degrading. Those who make pleasure their pursuit in life seek ever lower and lower levels. The logical tendency is toward the saloon, the dance hall, the brothel, the houses where men gorge themselves with food to surfeiting, places where pleasure ever appeals to one or more of the senses; for this service is sensual, and the reverse of spiritual.

If we have loved pleasure too much, let us get a divorce from her. Let God come into our lives. When pleasure flies out of the window to make way for God, God will come in and bring happiness with him to take the place of pleasure,—happiness and joy and peace everlasting.

FASHION.

Then there is the god of fashion. (Dare we mention it?) Thousands of women serve this god with might, mind, and strength. They listen with attentive ears for the very latest edict of their deity, and not the least whim dare they refuse to obey.

Walk along the streets of any large modern city and note some of the extreme costumes. Then tell us if it is not true that many women are sacrificing their modesty upon the altar of fashion. What greater sacrifice could a woman make than her modesty!

This service also is brutalizing. The modern dress in too many instances emphasizes the animal rather than the spiritual. When a man looks into the face of a pure and noble woman, and her soul looks out of her eyes, which are said to be the windows of the soul, he is ennobled. Her beauty has made a better man of him. But if her dress attracts attention from her countenance, and emphasizes the animal, it appeals to the animal in him and he is made worse, for Tennyson says:

Who is there, that born of woman, altogether can escape
From the lower world within him, mood of tiger or of ape?

"THE MARGIN OF SAFETY."

There are many other idols that come between men and God to-day. To all the world our message is, "Be ye reconciled to God?" If any of the Saints have given service to these false deities that are destined to perish by and by, we say to them, "Be ye reconciled to God." From this time on let us give him our service and our devotion.

When engineers construct a bridge they allow that which is termed a "margin of safety." They make it strong enough to bear a load many tons heavier than any it is expected that it will ever be required to bear.

In our service let us allow an ample margin of safety. Here is a principle that may be applied to other matters, but as an illustration we apply it to the observance of Sunday.

If we are at all strict in our observance of Sunday, and refuse to do certain things that others do, we may be called Puritanical and straight-laced. But instead of figuring how much we can do on the Sabbath day and remain "Christians," for a while figure how much we can avoid doing, in the way of secular labor, and yet keep within the requirements of health and reasonable comfort. Instead of calculating just how far we can go and escape divine condemnation, let us calculate just how many objectionable things we can avoid.

Reversing the matter, instead of trying to see how little we can do and finally get into heaven by the closest possible margin, let us try to see how much we can do to merit divine favor—not how little tithing we can pay, but how much; not how few meetings attend, but how many; not how few deeds of charity and visits of pity bestow, but how many. This will conserve the margin of safety, and guarantee that "abundant entrance into the kingdom" that Peter writes about.

AN ABUNDANT ENTRANCE.

What a significant expression that is—"an abundant entrance." When the doors are closed and bolted at night, and the wind-driven rain beats upon the window panes, if there comes a knock at the door we open it with care. When we see a stranger standing without we challenge him, and if he can give an account of himself he is admitted, though perhaps with reluctance.

But if we see our own son standing there upon the threshold asking entrance, the door is flung wide open. An abundant entrance is administered to him because he is one of the family. He is coming into his father's home. Thus, in a figurative sense, when we come knocking at the gates of celestial glory, may the doors be opened wide to us and our entrance be abundant, not grudging, because we are sons of God and members of the great family of God.

Now is the time to prepare for and earn such a welcome. Then it will be too late to alter our record. Now is the time to get right, and so we plead with you, "Be ye reconciled to God." An abundant entrance must follow a complete reconciliation.

GRACELAND COLLEGE DAY.

October 5 will soon be here, and that is the day, the first Sunday in October, which has been duly set apart by the General Conference as Graceland College Day.

In undertaking the work of Graceland College we are going through each department as critically as possible to enforce every possible economy. The farm, the hotel, including board and room rent, and the various industrial departments should be made to pay and carry their own burdens. We believe that the studio departments, piano, vocal, and oratory, should, both collectively and separately, be placed on a self-sustaining basis. Also, we believe the Commercial Department and the shop work should be able at least to come out even. But when it comes to academic work, we know of no institution in which tuition and incidental charges meet all of the necessary expenses. To place the tuition at such a figure would make it prohibitive. But this deficit can and should be kept as small as possible, and that we propose to do.

Graceland is of special value in the help it renders to worthy young men and women of the church who desire an education. On this feature alone, it should appeal to all of us, and should receive our support. In this sense it is not local, nor should it be made to depend too much on local support.

We are asked often, "Of what value is it to me?" In the first place, this work can never succeed on the basis of selfishness. The church needs trained men for the future work rising before it. In the second place, the benefit will eventually be felt in every branch and district of the church, for young men now being prepared will be among our future missionaries. In the third place, we hope the time is not far distant when a successful department of extension work may be added to the educational work and carried by the church to every branch, and to every person desiring help in self-improvement, whether they desire help as far as a college degree, or special preparation for some particular line of work.

These features are in addition to the ones usually urged: that it is a standing advertisement that the church does not believe in ignorance, but in wisdom and knowledge, and that we fear no test of truth, however critical. Also it is an advertisement within the church that the position of the church in all ages has been for enlightenment. Graceland looks to the necessary care of the young men and women, and especially of the sons and daughters of our missionaries. It promises the advantage of a school of our own, as pointed out in the resolution of the conference of 1869. (Church History, volume 3, page 520.) Within the limits of this sketch we can only touch in part upon these features of the value of the college to us.

At present the college has a larger debt than at any time in the past, but it has also very much greater assets. This increase of assets is shown despite the fact that we have made a depreciation of about one thousand dollars a year, in accordance with good business practice. In other words, about that amount should be spent each year for the repair of the buildings and upkeep of equipment, and so is charged as depreciation. The net assets over the whole of this present indebtedness is greater than were the total assets nine or ten years ago, which simply means that the cause of the present indebtedness is the securing of greater equipment, more buildings and land. However, this policy should not be followed, but the debt should both be reduced and finally paid off, and then kept paid off. The trustees should then be expected and required to work within the limits determined by the body.

Some of you have paid your endowment. Many others have not. This feature of the work has not been dropped, but we have not pushed it this year, at the request of the Presiding Bishopric, so as not to interfere with their efforts to raise the special fund needed. Part of this money asked for by the Presiding Bishopric—as requested by the joint council—will be used for the reduction of the college debt, and we urge that the college be remembered as well as other institutions in this connection.

But if only this special fund is raised, we would not be any better off than we were a year ago, as there are the regular tithes and offerings and the regular expenses to be met as in the past, and this special fund is an extra for the immediate reduction of the church debts.

So now comes the College Day collection. This collection is primarily for meeting the running expenses of the college. This year the present indications are that we will have a large enrollment, which will mean additional funds for the running of the college. The year 1911-1912 the deficiency was only $5,200, and this was more than met by the offerings and endowments. We hope to make it as low or even lower this year, regardless of the size of the College Day collection. So if this is generous, as it should be and we hope for, we shall have from that source additional means to apply on the college debt. Let us make our help liberal, as the money will be strictly applied as stated to the necessary expenses of the college and to the reduction of the debt. This money is immediately needed, because if we can pay off our running accounts for last year, we shall then be able to deal for cash in the running expenses this year and so make better terms and run the college more economically. Can we make good? Will we?

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

DOCTOR RUSSELL H. CONWELL AT LAMONI.—The summer Chautauqua furnishes people with an innocent and uplifting form of entertainment and instruction. It is true that a large part of the average Chautauqua program is entertainment, but entertainment of an innocent nature relaxes the tired mind and brings rest and new vigor. And on many of the programs will be found the names of prominent men from various parts of the land. This list usually includes preachers, educators, and statesmen, so that the people of small towns and country neighborhoods are brought in touch with men of strong character and wide reputation in a way that they could never hope to enjoy without the aid of the Chautauqua. Among the leading men appearing at Lamoni this season was Doctor Russell H. Conwell, head of Temple University of Philadelphia, and pastor of the Temple Church of the same place. Doctor Conwell has spent fifty-two years on the lecture platform, being seventy-two years of age. Considering his age, he presents a remarkably youthful appearance, and displays force and vigor of body and mind. The proceeds of his lecture, entitled, "Acres of diamonds," goes to help educate young men who can not pay their own way through college. In this way it is said that something over sixteen hundred young men have been educated. His lecture was greatly appreciated by the Lamoni people, although it is probable that they did not agree with some of the positions that were taken. The main theme, however, was quite in line with our belief, and when he admonished us that it was not wrong for people to seek for riches, but that they should seek for them earnestly with the desire to do good with that which is obtained, we were reminded of a similar thought set forth in the Book of Mormon in a passage that might very well have furnished the doctor with his text:

But before ye seek for riches, seek ye for the kingdom of God. And after ye have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good; to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick, and the afflicted.—Jacob 2: 23, 24.

The worthy doctor put his finger on one of our present needs when he told us that we should develop manufacturing interests in Lamoni, and that if we would fully enter upon our mission of seeking riches for the purpose of doing good we might soon be financially far ahead of our present standing.

ELDER CHARLES H. LAKE PASSES TO HIS REST.—Under date of August 22, Elder J. Charles May writes from Papeete, Tahiti, announcing the death of Elder Charles H. Lake, president of the Island Mission. Brother Lake, as is well known to our readers, has been in failing health for a number of years, and returned to his work in the mission field on his own volition, expressing the desire that he might be privileged to die in the harness, and wishing to be active while life remained. Brother Lake has been a wise and faithful laborer in the Island Mission, and his loss will be keenly felt by the native members as well as by his associates in that field. Further items will follow next week.

REPLY TO REVEREND SILVARA.—The Chariton Leader, August 21, contains a column article from the pen of Elder E. B. Morgan, in reply to one Reverend Perry O. Silvara, who recently lectured in Chariton, Iowa, on the subject of Mormonism. It seems that the lecture was very poorly attended and attracted little attention.

REMINISCENCES OF JOSEPH SMITH.—Under the above title, the Lutheran Woman's Work, for July, published an interesting article from the pen of Brother Herbert S. Salisbury. This article was later reproduced in the Carthage, Illinois, Republican, of Brother Salisbury's home town, August 22. We will probably reproduce the article in the SAINTS' HERALD for the benefit of those who may desire to read it.

THE CHURCH AND SCHOLARSHIP.

To those who accept the Book of Doctrine and Covenants the word of the Lord has come in the way of an admonition, iterated and reiterated, to "study all good books" and to gain a knowledge of countries, languages, history, nations, peoples, laws of God, laws of man, etc. Those who are familiar with the Book of Covenants can readily turn to the various passages wherein the instructions referred to are found. The attempt to gain knowledge of the character indicated, and to carry out the further instruction to gain a knowledge of things on the earth, and under the earth, in the heavens, etc., will carry us into researches into nearly every known study or science, together with philosophy and the allied subjects.

Perhaps not all the reason for giving these instructions will appear in the messages we have received. Sufficient reason, however, is found in language accompanying the instruction, that we might be the better prepared to magnify the calling whereunto we have been called and to discharge or accomplish the mission with which we have been commissioned. And not until our mission shall have been fully accomplished and the work we are to do is fully magnified, are we exempt from the necessity of making every consistent effort to gain for the benefit of the church body knowledge on the subjects mentioned. That we are still far short of the mark will be accepted without argument.

Besides the reason above stated, one other may safely be assumed as applying to the object of the instructions; and that is, the wider our knowledge the broader our conception of the work of God, its purposes, and manner of accomplishment. If the philosophy we accept as giving the best answer to the question of what is the universe and man's attitude toward it and its toward man be correct, then one great and perhaps the ultimate object of our existence and the prime purpose of our religion is to acquire a near perfect knowledge of God, as only then can his purposes and plans be adequately perceived and understood. To know God to the fullest extent possible means to possess all knowledge; so as our knowledge of things in general assumes wider proportions, our knowledge of God approximates more closely the exact. That is to say, our idea of God depends upon our knowledge, and our idea of him must change as our understanding of his spiritual and natural laws widens. "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee."

Here we might be met by this from those who would confine our study to the church books: "The Bible as the word of God contains an adequate knowledge of God, and to study the Bible would serve to secure the needed knowledge of him." Were we to admit this, the necessity for outside study still exists, because in order to comprehend the Bible, it is necessary to acquire much extraneous knowledge from a study of things not found in the Bible itself. The Bible is in the language of men, some of it retranslated several or many times. The language of any man is properly understood only when we know something of what he knew and the conditions surrounding him, something of his methods of thought, which are so largely determined by the thinker's environments. Take Paul's figurative language, for instance, or even his commonplace writings. They are not fully comprehensible unless we know something of the methods of thought of his day and time, the condition of sciences then, and something of the general and specific knowledge which was the intellectual heritage his generation left to the next. A philosophical thought expressed by an astronomer in terms of his training would be unintelligible to one whose vocation made him familiar only with the nomenclature of one of the mechanical sciences, though the man at the lathe may have reached the same philosophical conclusions as his astronomically inclined brother, and could agree with him when the thought had been reinterpreted according to his concept of thought; or into language with which he was familiar, though not in a different tongue.

The language of the Bible is no exception; hence the great value of the study of history, sacred and profane, bearing on the Bible and the facts therein set out; also the study of the history of the sciences, and philosophy, of poetry, ethics, etc., etc., all bearing on the Bible as a sacred history, are bound to affect our understanding of its ethical, religious, spiritual and philosophical truths.

The Bible is supposed to contain the Christian theology. Theology is, as has been expressed by one writer, "the correlation of facts of religion with other things they (men) know."—The Church and the Changing Order, Shailer Mathews, p. 12. The eternal spiritual verities, like the physical truths of science, are not new. Religion no less than science deals with old facts; and religion, like science, needs constant reinterpretation, that it might keep pace with changing methods of thought and be properly coordinated with the growing fund of knowledge each generation acquires as heritage from the labors and researches of the preceding one. But the eternal verities of religion are known to us only as they are interpreted by present conditions and through them we are made familiar with the conditions under which those verities were presented in former days. While the truths of religion have always existed, yet they can be concealed by the language designed to make them clear to others; and this concealment can be existent as much in dogmatic tradition as in the theories of intolerant evolutionists.

God was "manifest in the flesh"; but to appreciate or comprehend the manifestation we must of necessity understand the things of the flesh through which he was made manifest. To properly know the Christ, as he labored and taught, we must know the age in which he labored, and the customs, manners, habits, and philosophy of the people he taught; for he reached them through their language and methods of thought. Had he when in Jerusalem used the language or even the concept of thought, or the philosophical terminology of the Egyptians, the Jews, his own followers, would have understood him as little as do many so-called Christians to-day. But, great teacher as he was, every word he uttered, each sentence he constructed was alive with the thought of his day, enhanced and glorified by his own higher ideals and conceptions.

The worldly learning of Paul tintured his own teachings. However much his mind may have been illuminated by the spirit of revelation, his vehicle of thought transmission was a language given him by the learning of his time, and in the concept of thought common to his day he presented to his fellow men the truths and beauties of the religion he received from divine sources through revelation. Every religion has been affected from divine sources through revelation. Every religion has been affected by current philosophy and thought. It filters into it through the vehicle of thought transmission. No language so far invented is a perfect instrument of transmission, so error will creep in. Perhaps no stronger reason exists for continued revelation from God than this,—the necessity of eliminating errors which have crept into the teachings of the church through the infiltration of false theories and doctrine due to the inadequacy of language, to say nothing of the design of those who intentionally might desire to superimpose their own philosophical deductions upon the pure religion of God. As our language itself is affected by current philosophy and thought, it follows that any statement by any writer on or defender of the faith in the past or present can only be properly understood by either intuitively or objectively knowing the true historical setting of the time and the thought concept of the writer or defender. And in saying this I do not wish to be understood as underestimating the value or to ignore the place of revelation general and individual in the church; nor is it intended to ignore or to expatiate upon the function of the "Comforter" as a guide into all truth or a teacher of all things. We are told in later revelation that within man is the power to accomplish much of his own power, and it is with a view to stimulate my readers to develop this latent power that this is written. The more we as individuals accomplish the greater is the possibility of the Lord using us; while the greater the degree of refinement accomplished by our own efforts the greater the opportunity for the Spirit of God to qualify us for still higher things, if our development and refinement of powers have been accomplished with an eye single to the glory of God.

Let us, then, in our efforts to qualify ourselves for a greater magnifying of our calling, bring to our aid the scholars of the world and appropriate to our own improvement and the good of the work as much of the results of their efforts for good as the limits of our abilities will permit. It is not unlikely that this statement will be adversely received at first by many in the church who see so much of skepticism in the world. Evolution is a word to frighten many religionists of the emotional type. Higher criticism is something feared by many who know nothing more of it than the belief that it is an instrument formed to destroy the church, as well as dogmatism. Yet wholesome skepticism, evolution properly understood, and higher criticism properly used, not only have a place in the thought of the people of the church, but may indeed have place in the activities of the church to its ultimate good. It is a day of great intellectual evolution and development. On every hand the students in our public schools and colleges are having their minds molded by the processes of modern thought and modified by the precepts of modern philosophy. It is folly for us to ignore this truth. It must be fairly faced. "The Christian teacher may disapprove and therefore combat the intellectual environment in which his fellows live; he may approve it and exploit it; but in the very nature of things he can not ignore it."—Mathews, in The Church and the Changing Order, p. 13. To compel our religious teachers to ignore present conditions of intellectual development in considering religious matters and presenting the eternal verities of ethics and soul culture is to put them in unnatural relation to those they are striving to teach. There must be some point of contact; and where is the point of contact between the dogmatic adherence to priestly ipse dixit and the spirit of investigation permeating everywhere to-day our educational institutions? One who would draw the young student of to-day immediately into the philosophy of the Hebrews or Greeks would but bring him into a strange element to flounder. And yet that is exactly what some of our religious teachers attempt to do; and perhaps it is not too much to say that in many such cases it is only traditional superstition which prevents the hold on such young persons being completely lost. To properly teach the student of to-day the principles and beauties and broad significance of the Christian religion there must first be a recognition of present day learning. And the teacher who fails in this is likely to fail as a religious preceptor. No institution for good can be successful and disregard present conditions, and the church to-day and its teachers must recognize the unquestioned attainments of present scholarship.

Upon the religious teachers in our church to-day rests the task of interpreting the "gospel" into the language of to-day, and to do so needs a subjective or objective knowledge of the historic settings of scriptural teaching. And why not avail ourselves of the fruits of scholarship in its work in this field? Into the atmosphere of modern scholarship our young people go as scholars in the public schools and colleges. The gospel of Jesus Christ is "the power of God unto salvation," but to have its perfect work must be adapted to the understanding of those upon whom it is expected to work. Are not scholars as worthy of being saved as are those not scholars? Is the gospel for the ignorant alone? Before the church to-day lies the task of working out our social as well as spiritual salvation, and all classes are greatly concerned in social affairs and reforms. Upon the preachers of the church rests the duty of doing more than presenting as abstract truths the "principles of the gospel"; their application as a social power calculated to eradicate many of our social evils must be taught to all classes of minds, the trained as well as the untrained. As before said, our young people go in their classrooms into an atmosphere determined by the scholarship of the day and saturated by the influences of modern thought and philosophy, and our religious teachers, in order to reach those young people, must know and understand both the strength and weaknesses, the safeties (the eternal verities) and the dangers (the pitfalls of materialism) of modern philosophy, and lead our young people to spiritual safety and happiness, by constantly nurturing the spark of faith in every heart.

It is a saying somewhat common among us that an education, especially in the institutions of higher learning, leads away from the church. Inquiry in a denomination of fifty thousand members in Chicago a few years ago showed that one in fifty of the members was college bred. The same ratio maintained among us would mean that there were about fourteen or fifteen hundred college bred men and women. The figures for the Chicago denomination would be two per cent. The showing is not bad when we remember that about one per cent of the population of the United States acquire a university education or the equivalent. But if it be admitted that the saying is true that a college education leads away from the church, where does the fault lie? Is it with the present status of scholarship, or with the attitude of the church? Between many of the facts of science and the demonstrations of scholarship and some of the dogmatic teachings of the church there is apparent conflict. If the young student who is growing in learning is peremptorily told that the apparent conflict is not adjustable, and that between facts and priestly ipse dixit he must take his choice, what course is he likely to pursue? But if, while still nurturing the faith within him, which he is loath to relinquish, he is permitted to follow facts with the firm belief that fact and faith are not irreconcilable, then he will not be lost to the church. But on the other hand, to be told that he must deny facts because of churchly tradition, he is then likely to relinquish dogmatism for science. It will not be necessary to here give illustrations, for they abound. Suffice it here to say that my firm belief is that between true science and true religion there is no conflict, however bitter may rage the battle between scholarship and dogmatism. Recognizing the limitations of finite wisdom but alive to the fact that the fund of human knowledge is growing apace, nurturing our faith in God and finding comfort in the blessings of religion, let us appropriate fact and cling to religion, and patiently abide the time when apparent conflicts are harmonized by added knowledge revealed by human research or divine power, and abide firm in the belief that our idea of God's character and attributes becomes more brilliantly grand and imposing as our knowledge of all things becomes enlarged. Thus our comprehension of God's work will widen, our activities broaden, while our usefulness to mankind grows grandly apace.

HOW TO TO CONDUCT A PRAYER MEETING.

NUMBER 17. "METHODS AND TACTICS" SERIES.

The Lord has commanded that "the elders are to conduct the meetings as they are led by the Holy Ghost, according to the commandments and revelations of God." This should ever be borne in mind by the one in charge of a prayer meeting, and if observed it will prevent him from falling into a rut or habit of always conducting a meeting in the same form.

To secure the leadings of the Holy Spirit, a proper attitude is necessary. This can be acquired by entering the meeting place early, in order to give time for a few minutes of prayerful meditation before opening the meeting; also to commune with the Lord and question, mentally, how best to conduct the meeting; what hymns would be most appropriate? if a Scripture reading, which should it be? what should be the burden of the opening prayer? Quite often the prayer and Scripture reading, as well as other suggestions, will be indicated by the Spirit, if the Spirit is given an opportunity to operate. When the leader arrives late and out of breath, exhausted by hurry, or, if his mind be full of worldly matters, or when he enters the pulpit immediately after laughing or jesting or conversing in a frivolous or worldly manner, he may find difficulty in receiving from the good Spirit. The spirit of the meeting is liable to partake largely of the spirit of the one in charge. Hence the necessity for his mind to be in a spiritual state in order to insure a good meeting.

From the above it will be seen that one can not lay down any hard and fast rule as to how a meeting shall be conducted in every detail. Methods need to vary to suit conditions. Hence the necessity for the leadings of the Spirit. There are some general rules, however, which should be borne in mind. One Brother Joseph has frequently recommended is that the leader should spend little time in the opening services. As it is a Saints' meeting they should be given the opportunity to take part as soon as possible. It is not always necessary to read a whole chapter, if it is a long one, nor yet to sing all the verses of a lengthy hymn. It is important that the leader should set an example in brevity; especially in the prayer, and in his opening address.

A mistake is sometimes made by the leader giving the meeting over to the Saints, he closing his eyes, and permitting the meeting to run without his leadership. The result is generally the same as that which usually attends anything allowed to run without a head,—failure. The leader should always keep the reins in his hands, as he is largely responsible for the character of the meeting; and while he should be free from anything like a "domineering" spirit, yet he should keep the meeting under proper control. He needs to be wide awake,—his eyes and ears open. A brief suggestion, now and then, often proves of great benefit. To illustrate: We were present in a prayer meeting when a brother told how he was saved from the use of tobacco; another followed in the same theme, and still another, and it began to appear as though that filthy weed would be used as a topic to kill the meeting. The leader became worried, and began to ask himself what he could do to save the meeting, when some one started the hymn, "Sweet the time, exceeding sweet." That hymn gave the brother his opportunity, and he embraced it immediately by stating that it was indeed sweet to meet with Saints, "when the Savior is the theme," but when tobacco became the theme, it being such a filthy weed, there was no sweetness in it, and he hoped the theme would be changed,—and it was.

A prayer meeting is generally understood to include testimonies as well as prayer. It would seem appropriate, however, that prayer should be given first place. We have seen good results follow when the first part of the meeting was devoted to prayer, and the after part to testimony. Serious hindrances to a good prayer meeting are long, spiritless prayers and testimonies. It frequently happens, sometimes in large gatherings, that three or four people, if permitted, will in this way, spoil what would otherwise have been a good prayer meeting; and it often becomes a serious question, how to correct this evil. In meetings of other denominations, we have sometimes heard a long prayer brought abruptly to a close by the leader starting a hymn. This was called singing him down. We have hesitated trying this method, though sometimes strongly tempted to do so.

In correcting an evil, care needs to be exercised not to disturb the spirit of the meeting more than is absolutely necessary. Even the remark, "Be brief, brother," to one who is occupying too much time in testimony is liable to disturb the spirituality of the meeting, and should not be employed when a more quiet method will suffice. When it is seen that there will not be sufficient time for all who may wish to take part to do so, just a word or two from the leader, urging brevity, either at the opening or during the meeting when no one is occupying, will sometimes be sufficient. Should this prove unsuccessful, if the leader will rise and look toward the trespassing member, thus reminding him that he is occupying too long a time, he may be caused to cease. But when every other effort fails, the offending party should be called to order, and others urged not to repeat the offense. Members who have acquired the habit of thus offending should be labored with privately by the branch officers, and their error pointed out to them, and they be urged to reform. It devolves upon the leader to see that the rights of the body are preserved, and it is better that one member should suffer, if necessary, by being corrected, than that the whole body should be made to suffer as a result of another's offense or indiscretion.

The choice of suitable hymns is another important matter in conducting a meeting. I remember, upon one occasion, going to church one beautiful, bright Sunday morning; the flowers were in bloom, scenting the air with their sweet perfume; the birds were singing in the trees, and all nature seemed to me to be praising God. As I entered the church, I felt the sweet, melting influence of the good Spirit, and I thought to myself how appropriate it would be if the whole congregation would arise and sing, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," or, "Praise ye the Lord, 'tis good to raise your hearts and voices in his praise"; when to my great disappointment, the leader gave out the hymn, "Ah, this heart is void and chill, mid earth's noisy throngings." I could not sing it, without singing a falsehood, and I believe many felt the same as myself. If there was any Spirit in that song that morning, I failed to realize it. There may be times when that hymn would be appropriate, but upon this occasion scarcely any hymn could be more out of place; so it seemed to me, at least.

I have also experienced an unpleasant sensation upon one or two occasions, when, during a good, spiritual meeting, some one started the hymn, "Let us pray for one another, for the day is fading fast, and the night is growing darker, while the scourge goes flaming past," etc. I could not join in singing the hymn, because it was not true. At that time we were rejoicing in the light, which was growing brighter to me all the while, since I had found the gospel, and there was no scourge flaming past. Then why should we say there is? There have been times, and there may yet be, when this hymn will be appropriate, but it is not always so, any more than was the song, "My country, 'tis of thee," sung as a closing hymn upon one occasion, after a good, spiritual sermon. Usually, hymns of praise and prayer, breathing a sentiment of comfort, hope, and cheerfulness, prove to be most edifying. Care should be exercised to sing in proper time. Singing too slowly is apt to produce a careless and sleepy feeling. Sometimes, when a drowsy feeling is taking possession of a meeting, the situation may be relieved by requesting the audience to stand and sing a spirited hymn of praise.

Care, too, should be exercised by the leader when it becomes apparent that a number wish to speak or pray, not to permit too much singing. Prayer and testimony should have first place, interspersed with singing as opportunity offers, usually one verse of a hymn, not more, lest by so doing those who desire to speak be deprived, owing to the lack of time.

The length of a prayer meeting should be limited according to the interest and the occasion. During a conference, or an extra occasion when more than the usual number are present, it is generally expected more time will be given, but upon ordinary occasions from one hour to one hour and a half will generally be found long enough to secure the best results, and not even that long unless the time is being properly occupied. It is a mistake to allow the meeting to drag along waiting for the time of closing. Far better close when it becomes evident that all have taken part who desire to do so, even though the meeting be but half an hour long. It is also a mistake to prolong a meeting because there is a good Spirit present, until many become weary. The very best time to close a meeting is when all are feeling well; they will then feel inclined to come again. Some good members have given as a reason why they did not attend the weekly prayer meeting, that the meetings were continued so long that they became tired and weary and therefore failed to receive the benefits needed. We need to remember that all are not constituted alike. That while a few may enjoy a lengthy prayer meeting, others may not, and we should try to consider the interests of all.

At times, meetings are prolonged by a number being administered to about the time the meeting should close. This is generally unwise. Better dismiss the congregation and attend to the administration after; better, still, if the sick can be administered to in a private room, where there can be perfect quietness, without having to call for order after a meeting is closed.

When the gifts of tongues and prophecy are manifested in a meeting care should be used by the leader in the exercise of the gift of discernment on his part, lest the Saints be imposed upon by false spirits. He should be permitted to decide as to the truth or falsity of the gift, rather than that the members should testify in the matter, as sometimes is done. When the gift of tongues is manifested and the leader is satisfied as to its genuineness, he should seek for the interpretation before permitting an interruption by others taking part. After the interpretation has been given, or it becomes apparent that no interpretation is forthcoming, the meeting should then be permitted to proceed as before.

In some places we have found the Saints discouraged in attending the weekly prayer meeting, because the officers fail to be on time, causing the members to stand outside, sometimes in the cold and wet, waiting for the church to be opened. In cases where the officers can not be present on time, because of their daily labor, we have advised that the key of the church be left where those who arrive on time may secure it, and open the doors; and if there are no officers present, that those who are present, choose one of their number to preside and proceed with the meeting until the officer arrives. When this course is the best that can be pursued, it should be followed.

In conclusion, prayer meeting should be conducted in the spirit of wisdom and revelation, according to the gifts of God in the one presiding. I trust that these few suggestions may prove of benefit.

OUR DUTY TO OUR CHILDREN.

Many times we may ask ourselves the question: Are we honest with ourselves, with our children, with our fellow men, and with our God? Many times we make mistakes, and we promise ourselves that we will never do the like again; and perhaps it is not long until we repeat the same mistake. We may continue to repeat it until we begin to think it is impossible to overcome the fault when perhaps we have never fasted or prayed, asking for strength to prevail.

We are sometimes inclined to try to justify ourselves in doing something that the Spirit has indicated to us to be wrong; we do so enjoy doing it that we try to make ourselves think it is right. Perhaps we love to attend shows. How often have we heard this remark, "Oh, well; if I never do anything worse than that, I guess I will be all right."

It seems to me there is much wrong in so doing. First, we spend our money for something that is no benefit to us; then we spend time that could be used in much better ways—by calling on the sick, or reading good books; studying, that we may comprehend the work of God.

If we, as parents, could always realize that our children are imitators of our words and actions we would be more careful. How often do we hear children refer to something "mamma" said, or did, believing it must be right. Again, we see parents extravagant in the home in their way of living and dress, the child imitating both mistakes.

I believe that one of the greatest mistakes to-day in the home is in buying on credit. Many families buy more on account of getting it charged than they need, or can afford to pay for; so when pay day comes they have to leave a balance—perhaps the next pay day it is the same—until the balance gets so large that they can not catch up at all, and sometimes the bill is left unpaid.

The children are growing up, they know those bills are not paid, and many times are led to be dishonest when the parents have not realized that they were breeding dishonesty.

I am personally acquainted with a number of families who have owed for groceries and clothing for years, but who never offer to pay; and when they are asked to settle the accounts they relate some hard luck story.

I often think of a motto I saw in a home, "Is it needful? Is it kind? Is it right?" I believe in many cases it is not needful; and is it not unkind to those who have been kind to us to withhold from them that which is justly theirs? Is it right in the sight of God? While this condition is so prevalent among those of the world, I believe that we as Saints should take the lead in trying to overcome this evil. There is no better way than to teach it in our homes. With many others I believe that for us as members of the church to live up to our obligations with the world or each other is one good way in which we can assist in advancing the work.

The minister in going to different places, and by inquiring for certain members that he has heard of, finds what kind of people they are; and how much easier it is for the minister, whoever he may be, if he finds them honest and upright. Then why would not good lives have weight in places where there are Saints?

How often do we hear people say, "If I had my life to live over, knowing what I know now, how much better I could live." But while this is impossible, perhaps we can help our children to overcome many mistakes that we ourselves have made.

Ever hoping to overcome all evil, and always trying to help others so to do. I am

A SISTER.

DUTIES OF BRANCH PRESIDENTS.

(Read at Sheffield district conference, Sutton-in-Ashfield.)

In dealing with the subject before us, we will have to take into consideration who may become the president of a branch.

In chapter 1, paragraph 4 of the Rules of Order and Debate, we find: "Branches . . . may be formed whenever six or more members in good standing may be resident in any one neighborhood, one of whom must be an elder, a priest, a teacher, or a deacon." (See also Doctrine and Covenants 120:2.)

This settles the question; either an elder, a priest, a teacher, or a deacon can be made the president of a branch. But we believe that it is much better if an elder be elected, as he can officiate in some of the ordinances of the gospel in which neither priest, teacher, nor deacon has authority to administer. But in some cases it is wise that some other than an elder should be appointed president of a branch.

But whether he be elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, he should be a humble, godly man, full of the Holy Ghost; for in Doctrine and Covenants 17:12 we find that every elder, priest, teacher, or deacon is to be ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto him; and he is to be ordained by the power of the Holy Ghost that is in the one who ordains him.

The Holy Ghost would neither appoint nor confirm in ordination an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, except he was humble and had the same Spirit. This confirms our statement, that he must be a godly man and full of the Holy Ghost.

When a man becomes president of a branch, he is much like a father that has a number of children. If the father is a man who is idle, or slothful, or a meddler in other people's affairs, or careless in his language, it is usual that the children, generally speaking, will follow in the same line. Hence he must be a diligent man, not idle in seeking the Lord, in fasting and prayer, that he may receive power to guide the branch aright.

He must be clean in his person and habits; not going about in a slovenly, careless manner; but he should be discreet in his manners, and as tidy as possible in his dress, so he can attract others toward him.

To illustrate; last Sunday morning I saw a man, young in years, come down the street. He had on a good suit of clothes, and good boots, but he was unwashed, his boots unlaced, with his trousers bottoms inside his boots, his hat not set right on his head, and his coat and vest unbuttoned. To me he looked a picture of slothfulness. This was a man of the world.

Now just suppose a woman who was discreet in her person and habits came up to see the president of a branch and found him in such a condition, would it not make her feel against rather than in favor of the work that he was representing?

If he be a man that meddles in other people's business, or careless in the language he uses, he will misrepresent the church. Hence he must seek to mind his own affairs, and if he be coarse in language, seek to become refined. For he must remember that he is a representative of the branch, and is the one that should help to bring the branch to a higher condition, spiritually and temporally.

He is to preside over the branch meetings, either personally or through the other officers. He is to direct the affairs of the branch according to the law which says:

And again, the elders, priests and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

This is also confirmed by the revelation of 1901, Doctrine and Covenants 125: 14, which says:

Branches and districts are to be conducted according to the rules given in the law as directed in a former revelation: They shall take the things which have been given unto them as my law to the church to be my law to govern my church. And these affairs are not to be conducted by manifestations of the Spirit, unless these directions come through the regularly authorized officers of branch or district.

This shows us that when the Lord wants to reveal anything to direct the affairs of the branch, it must come through the president, and no notice whatever is to be taken of manifestations coming through others of the branch seeking to direct the affairs of the branch. Hence the president needs to be a man who is firm, who will stand and uphold the gospel, the covenants and the church articles.

He should see that the officers under him do their duties, and sit in council with them and help direct them in these duties. He is to see that the place of meeting is in order for the hour appointed for meeting. He is to be in his place when it is time that the meeting should commence. He is to see that a reasonable time be given the Saints and friends to get seated before service should commence. He is to see that order obtains throughout the service. He has the right to appoint elders' courts (Rules of Order, page 90) or he can invite the branch to do so. He should seek the counsel and advice of the president of the district and missionary in charge when necessity requires.

He should protect the branch against any unjust action, either by the Saints or the world. If married he should be a kind husband; and if he have children, a kind father. He should not take intoxicants. He should not be a smoker. He should authenticate all the acts of the branch by his signatures.

He should try to spread the work in the locality or town where the meetings are held. To do this, it would be well for him to get the branch to provide suitable literature, and get the membership to help to distribute it from house to house and talk to the people. This, together with outdoor services, will help to spread the work.

He should encourage his brother officers by asking them to take charge of the meetings, and by asking them to preach.

He should see that all those desiring to be baptized into the church are truly repentant, and have a knowledge of what they are doing before baptism is performed.

When any of the Saints who are sick call for the elders to administer to them, he should see that provision is made for it and that it is attended to.

He should be kind in all his labors in the church, and especially try to encourage and educate the young so that they will be able to take up the work when he lays it down. He must always remember that the work is not his, but God's, and he is only a servant. Therefore he should study to show himself approved before God; and to do this he must learn his duty well and do it.

In conclusion, he must be a gentleman; a humble man, full of love, fearing God rather than man.

CHARLES COUSINS.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CONTROVERSY.

The proposal to change the present title of the Protestant Episcopal Church to the Holy Catholic Church of America has brought about a sharp controversy among church leaders. The diversity of opinion and the nature of the recent discussion over the attempted change promises something lively at the General Convention of the church to be held in New York City next October.

Doctor William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, New York, in a recent sermon in said church, defined his position, as well as the position of many of his fellow churchmen. He is quoted as saying:

This cumbersome and legal title ought to be changed, because it is a modern innovation, because it misrepresents the church and misleads people as to her true character, because it puts the church in the light of a modern denomination instead of in its true light as a part of the ancient, historic Catholic Church, and because so narrow and limited a title is out of harmony with the great name of the church as given in the creed, is a hindrance to our work among the multitudes of many races who are now coming to our country, and as is well known is a most serious barrier to progress in some of our mission fields. Why should anyone to-day want to fight for the word Protestant? It reflects the controversial spirit of a bygone age. We have progressed beyond it. . . . Progress may be resisted for a time, but not permanently. It may not be done in the coming convention. That is a small matter. Most of those who desire to see the change have no wish to see it carried by a small majority. I certainly have no such wish. But I want to see the church advance toward it and the church is advancing toward it. It is certain to come because the truth will have its way.

Reverend G. Monroe Royce, an Episcopal clergyman, represents another class of churchmen. Writing for The Independent he says:

Ninety-nine out of every hundred Americans understand the word Catholic to apply to one great division of the Christian world, and the word Protestant to include others. And therefore, for a small body, an almost insignificant body of clerics in the Episcopal Church, to disregard this universally accepted fact, and insist upon using these words in a different sense, is to cause confusion, create irritation, and hinder the good feeling which has heretofore existed as regards these matters. . . .

Let these hypercritical, fidgety clerics remember, or let some one who knows the history of the Protestant Episcopal Church tell them, of the schism that rent this church asunder in 1873 over questions that never should have been urged. It is really difficult to speak with patience of such a partisan agitation at the very time when the Episcopal Church is asking the whole Christian world, Catholic and Protestant, to cast aside their differences and unite as one brotherhood in presenting the message of the crucified Christ to all mankind. At such a time can Christian ministers or priests—which ever they prefer—find nothing better to do than to throw this apple of discord into the councils of their church?

Professor Bacon is not so sure as is Reverend Royce that American Episcopalians will repudiate the efforts of certain of the clergy to fasten on the church the new title; but he condemns the movement as detrimental to the cause of the Episcopal Church, and as an attempt to return to the despotism of Romanism. We quote:

Unfortunately American democracy and the vaunted American sense of humor have not availed to protect us against a great deal of this in the social world. In fact, both have been notoriously conspicuous by their absence. It remains to be seen whether they will suffice to protect the large majority of self-respecting American Episcopalians from a humiliation which Philips Brooks was wont to declare would compel him to renounce his connection with that body. . . .

It can not be monopolized by any one body of Christians without very grave and very just affront. Multitudes of evangelical Christians, from Sunday to Sunday, make it part of their worship to repeat the ancient creed, older than any of our miserable divisions, whose confession is: "I believe in the Holy Catholic Church, the communion of saints." All of them hope and pray for the day when this ideal will be a reality. Catholicity at the cost of freedom their fathers felt to be bought at too dear a price; but the progressive Protestantism of to-day, especially democratic American Protestantism, looks forward to the time when we shall have Catholicity with freedom, an organization of "the body of Christ" not copied after the despotism of imperial Rome but rather after the diversity in unity of our own great Republic. It hopes and prays for, it heartily believes in and is consecrated to a "Holy Catholic Church of America"; and its faith is the substance of the thing hoped for, the proof of its reality, though not yet seen. These members of the "church invisible" are the living American churchmen of to-day, they who cherish both the continuity and the catholicity of the Christian commonwealth. . . .

The present recrudescence of sectarian zeal covets for itself the title Catholic (?) not in the interest of "catholicity," but that it may shut all others out and then be paid zealous court to by them. It seeks to monopolize the common heritage to its own narrowly exclusive use, and in designating itself "The Holy Catholic Church" would implicitly and explicitly deny the sacred name to that "mystical body" of Christ "which is the blessed company of all faithful people."

Thomas Nelson Page, the novelist, agreeing with Professor Bacon that the proposed change would mean the Romanization of the American Episcopal Church, urges that representative government and Protestantism—the Protestant principles of the Episcopal Church—have gone hand in hand. In the columns of The Churchman he says:

Representative government is the fruit of Protestantism—of Protestantism English and American. Our forefathers gave their lives to both, and at a time when a considerable element of the clergy were against at least the former. I would no more think of permitting a change of name of the church, if I could prevent it, than of the country. Those who advocate changing the name of the church should be warned that they are on more dangerous ground than they are aware of. Their churches are half empty now. They may find them more empty yet before they get through with tinkering. What we request with great firmness is that they keep their hands off the Protestant principle of this church. When the people get ready to change, it will be done, and only then. Meantime they are unsettling their affection not for the church's name but for the church's principles.

The controversy has become much more than a matter of individual opinion. At least four prominent church leaders, one from the High, three from the Low church parties, are said to have suggested a "split" as a possible result of the coming struggle in the General Convention. Copies of resolutions passed by the Christ Episcopal Church, Low, of Poughkeepsie, New York, are being sent to other churches of the same type with the request that they be concurred in. These resolutions read:

Whereas, The movement to change the historic and long-honored name of the Protestant Episcopal Church seems to be assuming menacing proportions;

Resolved, That the rector, wardens, and vestrymen of — Parish unanimously and earnestly protest. We believe that such name as the "American Catholic Church" would subvert the character and integrity of the Protestant Episcopal Church;

That it would unsettle and separate from us many who are earnest and loyal members of the church of our fathers;

That it would disturb with distrust the sympathy that now binds us to other Protestant churches, and which gives promise of at least a spiritual unity of purpose and toleration.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL WORK.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

The close of the six weeks' session of the Daily Vacation Bible School, at the Stone Church, Thursday night, was an occasion of much interest to pupils and teachers, parents, and other friends.

The products of many busy little hands during the past six weeks were put on display and were greatly admired by a throng of visitors. The display was in the building at the rear of the church. It was so crowded that it was difficult to enter.

In the main auditorium, which was also crowded, a program was rendered, a feature of which was a talk to the pupils by George S. Bryant, principal of the Independence High School.

W. E. LaRue was principal of the school, and he had an able corps of assistants in the various departments.

This is the first school of its kind ever held in this city. It was considered quite a success. The total enrollment was three hundred and seventy, and, although the weather has been exceedingly warm all the session, the daily attendance was considerably more than three hundred.—Independence Examiner.

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA.

Over on Luzerne Street, near Twelfth Street, is a vacation school that in attendance surpasses any other in the city. Three hundred children of all ages are enrolled, and the voluntary work of the instructors is sufficiently attractive to draw thither every forenoon these boys and girls who otherwise would probably seek the streets for their playground.

Last summer the same instructors with a few exceptions conducted a similar vacation school in a tent. This year the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has opened its edifice for the school.

A visit to the school found the work being conducted by Mr. and Mrs. T. U. Thomas and a corps of teachers, several of whom were mothers from the neighborhood. The sessions have been conducted for the last six weeks, and will close with exercises open to the public this evening.

Other teachers were Mrs. Ettie Coates, Mrs. Mattie Griffiths, Mrs. W. J. Lewis, Mrs. George Jones, Mrs. Ellis Lewis, Mrs. Alice Morris, Mrs. Lizzie Lewis, Miss Anna Lewis, Miss Margaret S. Lewis, Mrs. J. A. Seward.

The youngest children present were babies in the arms of their little sisters, who thus were making of the school a sort of day nursery while they themselves were able to enjoy the privileges afforded.

There were girls and boys of fourteen and even older. The boys of all ages make hammocks, baskets, inats and balls, while the girls learn to sew and embroider and also make baskets. They were a happy, merry, busy aggregation of little people, who at recreation time played baseball and other games, and during the remainder of the time made of their work, their songs, the story telling and reading, a joyous kind of game.

There were many nationalities represented and a variety of sects. No denominational teaching is given, and the school apparently meets the needs of the community in the vicinity of number 14 school and gives to the restless youngsters wholesome, pleasant interests during their summer holidays.—Tribune-Republican, August 15.

SOCIAL HYGIENE.

In countless other ways also the public school offers the richest possible field for the application of preventive medicine. For illustration, we know that a perfect condition of physical nutrition is of basal importance for a healthy development, but investigations reveal the fact that in the cities of England and America from five to fifteen per cent of the children in the schools are suffering from malnutrition. By "malnutrition" is not meant "starvation" in the ordinary sense of that term. It must be remembered that the child thrives not on what it eats, but on what it can digest. Thousands of children of the economically well-to-do are ill-nourished, because of improperly chosen food, impaired digestive processes, or dental disabilities. So remote a matter as eye-strain is known to cause disturbances of digestion and assimilation. From whatever cause it originates, the existence of a state of malnutrition in a considerable body of our school-children should be a matter of deep national concern. Such children are the fruitful soil where disease, social misery, and crime take root and grow. . . .

We have nearly a million ill-nourished children in the public schools. We can not expect of these children normal progress. If the school does not adapt itself to minister to their special needs it is likely to serve only to speed them on their way to premature death or a life of physical, mental, or moral invalidism. . . .

The difficult problem, however, of securing for every defective child the medical or surgical treatment that his case demands, remains unsolved. The subject may be left with the query whether it is logical to stop with compulsory school attendance and compulsory vaccination. If the child has an inalienable right to an education, does he not also have an equal right to such hygienic, medical, or even surgical attention as will render him most capable of receiving the maximum benefits of the educational treatment? . . . The teaching of personal hygiene will have to be revolutionized. More time should be given to the subject; it should be freed from some of the unscientific vagaries into which it has fallen, and above all it must be made more concrete and practical.—Lewis M. Terman, in the September number of The North American Review.

GOVERNMENT PROTECTS MIGRATORY BIRDS.

The Department of Agriculture announces the selection of fifteen experts to advise the Secretary in framing regulations to make the new Federal protection of migratory birds effective. To these men, who will serve without remuneration, will be referred certain questions arising in connection with the tentative regulations recently published by the Department in connection with the act of March 4, which gives the Federal Government jurisdiction over the migratory birds of the United States. . . .

The proposed regulations, in the final adoption of which and in the hearings on which these gentlemen will act in an advisory capacity to the Department, and which do not go into effect before October 1, 1913, are designed to secure the following results:

1. Uniformity in protection of migratory game and insectivorous birds in the several States.
2. Protection of birds in spring while en route to their nesting grounds and while mating.
3. Uniformity in protection of migratory birds at night.
4. Establishment of protected migration routes along three great rivers in the central United States.
5. Complete protection for five years for the smaller shore birds and other species which have become greatly reduced in numbers.
6. Reduction of the open season on migratory game birds, but in most cases not more than twenty-five to fifty per cent.—Scientific American, July 26, 1913.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

"Is Not the Life More Than Meat."

Miss Harrison, in her excellent Study of Child Nature, asks, "As we look abroad over the world, what do we perceive to be the chief cause of the wrecks and ruins, of the wretchedness and misery which lie about us? Why have we on every hand such dwarfed and stunted characters? For what reason do crimes, too polluting to be mentioned save where remedy is sought, poison our moral atmosphere until our great cities become fatal to half the young men and women who come to them? Why do our clergy and other reformers have to labor so hard to attract the hearts of men to what is in itself glorious and beautiful?"

She suggests the answer to her question thus: "Is it not, in a majority of cases, because mankind has not learned to subordinate the gratification of physical appetites to rational ends?" The italics are hers and serve to show us what stress this student of human nature places upon the error of self-gratification in matters of appetite.

This gifted writer asserts that it is the testimony of history that when a nation begins to send far and wide for delicacies and condiments for its markets and tables it begins to become voluptuous and sensual. She associates with "the degenerate days of Rome" their overloaded tables. She suggests that the exercise of the moral will power over bodily appetite is man's greatest safeguard in the hour of temptation.

The Simplicity of Nature.

Miss Harrison quotes Horace Bushnell as uttering the warning to those having the nurture of children, that they let no stimulation of excess or delicacy disturb the simplicity of nature; that they permit no artificial appetites to be fostered. Her quotation includes his assertion that much of the intemperance in drink has its origin in wrong habits of eating.

She quotes also from that great teacher, Froebel, who says on this subject: "In the early years the child's food is a matter of very great importance. . . . Parents and nurses should ever remember, as underlying every precept in this direction, the following general principle: that simplicity and frugality in food and in other physical needs during the years of childhood enhance man's power of attaining happiness and vigor—true creativeness in every respect. . . . Let the food of the little child be as simple as the circumstances in which the child lives can afford, and let it be given in proportion to his bodily and mental activity."

A Food Highly Recommended.

The following comes to us recommended by H. W. Wiley, M. D., former head of the United States' Bureau of Chemistry:

"Down on my Virginia farm, where I can get wheat direct from the granary, I prepare it in either of the following ways and find that it provides a breakfast food superior in quality, taste, and nutrition to any other. Two cents' worth will serve a family of six, and a little girl who sits at my table, upon tasting it for the first time, waved her spoon in the air and ecstatically exclaimed, 'Uncle Doc, this is the best breakfast food I ever ate!' An unsolicited testimonial this, from one unspoiled.

"This is the way to make it: Grind a pint of wheat in an ordinary coffee mill, making whole-wheat meal. Mix with four volumes of water and half a teaspoonful of salt and cook as follows: Place the water, boiling hot, in the aluminum bucket of a fireless cooker and stir in the coarsely ground meal slowly, so as to avoid forming lumps. Stir the mass until perfectly smooth, then clamp on the top of the cooking vessel, place the bucket on the stove, and boil for five minutes under the slight pressure that the tight cover affords. Meanwhile heat the two circular stones, which fit into the compartment of the fireless cooker, until water sizzles when dropped upon them. Place one stone at the bottom of the cooker, under the aluminum vessel, and the other on the top. Close the cooker and let the vessel remain over night. The whole-wheat mush is ready for breakfast.

"Another pint of wheat is prepared in much the same way except that it is not ground at all and slightly less water is used. After cooking over night, pour off the water, dry slightly over the fire, and eat with cream and sugar. Prepared in this way the wheat has all the delicacy and tenderness of cooked rice, while the whole wheat meal makes a mush unsurpassed in flavor, quality, and wholesomeness."

One who has not a fireless cooker can cook the whole wheat in a double boiler, as rice is cooked, allowing it four or five hours to cook.

As stated in the beginning, this simple food comes to us with the recommendation of a man who was formerly at the head of the United States' Bureau of Chemistry. His testimony is certainly good, and worthy of our acceptance.

Higher authority than this is the Word of Wisdom, given us by the Lord, not as a command but as his counsel. He who created our bodies and knows perfectly their needs, tells us, in kindness, that he intended the various grains as food for man, but he makes especial mention of wheat as being good for us.

Other foods also are named in the Word of Wisdom, and we are admonished to use them with prudence and thanksgiving. If we use them prudently, we shall never use them to excess, or in unwholesome forms.

"With Thanksgiving."

"Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?" These were questions asked by the greatest Teacher as he walked among men. We have need to consider his words to-day, for we are living in the time prophesied of by the inspired apostle who predicted that, in the days before the second coming of the Lord from heaven, men should become lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, etc.

Life is more than the food we eat or the raiment we wear. It has higher purposes and possibilities than merely to pander to the enjoyment of the body. He who thinks chiefly of getting "pleasant bread" to eat, goodly raiment to wear, tinkling sounds to please his ear, objects of beauty to please his eye, is frittering away his life; he is missing the best things life has to give.

Life is given us for the development of the soul. It is given us in which to prepare for a higher life to follow this. "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly," said Christ. This life is intended to be a preparation for the higher and better life; better in the sense that it will be "more abundant."

There is a class of men and women in the world, both in the church and without, who are growing into the more abundant life. They are the wheat in the world's great field. There is a larger class, in both the church and the world, whose thoughts and efforts are mainly given to pleasure seeking. These need to consider the words of the Lord, spoken long ago to the people of Enoch, "If you will that I give you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and require of you."

This world will fade away. All its beauty and glory are ephemeral and will vanish. In their place there will come the glory that never yet has been "on land or sea." For there shall be a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness; and the celestial kingdom, whose glory surpasses anything that man's mind can conceive, will come. Where shall place be found for us who have not prepared ourselves for that kingdom, for us who are not congenial there, for us who robe ourselves with fastidious care to enter the parlors of the elite of social life—how shall we present ourselves in that company whom the great God shall gather, if we have not robed ourselves with the things that make for spiritual beauty?

"Unthankful, unholy"—this was part of the prediction of the apostle who described the conditions of the latter days. The Lord tells us he is displeased with those who enjoy his bounty and return him no thanks. The heart that daily offers its sincere thanks to Him who gives the good gifts of life is not a selfish heart. If it be, it can not long remain so, if daily it continues to talk with God and to express its thankfulness. For there will come to it an influence from God that will make it more akin to him, and it will soften and become like his own great heart which is filled with love for all his creatures.

And so the home should not neglect to teach the children to return daily thanks to God, to look to him with reverent and thankful love. "They shall teach their children to pray."

The blessing asked at table with thanks for the daily bread is a prayer that should never be withheld. Every child of the streets knows he ought to thank the person who gives him a trifling thing, a nickel, an apple, or the like. How many children are taught to thank the great Giver of life and all its bounty for his rich benefits?

We can teach children no better thing than to be thankful—thankful to those about them in daily life, and thankful to God who is in heaven now, but who will come to our earth in his own due time to receive to himself those who are like him.

We who would not receive a glass of water at the hands of a friend without thanking him should never sit at our tables and eat or drink without returning our thanks to God.

Teaching the Children to Return Thanks.

We glean the following suggestions from The Golden Now, a paper devoted largely to suggestions concerning the teaching and training of children in their earliest years:

The first lesson of a mother to her infant child, leading up to the returning of thanks at table, was to teach it to be quiet at the time when the brief prayer of thanksgiving was being offered.

A visitor in a certain home was seated at the dining table. The father glanced down the table and then spoke the name of his young son, who immediately asked the blessing in simple, sincere, natural sentences. The next morning, a little daughter of four was called upon and she responded with a little verse of thanksgiving that had been taught her. A few days later, only the visitor, the mother, and baby were present. The baby folded his little hands, the mother murmured the words of thanks, and baby said, "Amen."

In answer to the visitor's inquiry how these results had been accomplished, the mother answered that each of the children had passed through the stages of keeping quiet when the blessing was asked, of adding "Amen" to the petition, of saying a little verse of thanks, the meaning of which had been carefully explained, and lastly of expressing thanks and asking blessing in his own words.

Who can estimate the influence of this habit of expressing gratitude daily to the heavenly Father; this habit of looking to him daily in thanksgiving and love, this habit inculcated so early in life that the children in later life could not remember when it began and would return thanks as naturally as they partook of food and drink?

The habit of being thankful to God! Think what it means!

Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE THIRD THURSDAY IN SEPTEMBER.

Our missionaries and missionaries in all places, especially remembering the work among the Lamanites and the mission in Palestine. Also for scattered Israel, that the glad tidings of the gospel may find them all.

Doctrine and Covenants 2: 6. Memory verse 2 Chronicles 7: 14.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Brother George Elson, of Wayne, Nebraska, asks to be remembered in prayer. He is physically afflicted, and, while he desires relief, he submissively expresses his willingness to yield to God's will; but he seeks comfort, if he may not have healing.

Sister Cassie Sivits, of North Platte, Nebraska, asks prayers for her dear mother, that she may be healed if it be the Lord's will. She is suffering from gall stones and paralysis. Her condition is pitiable and her daughter asks our prayers, as they are shut off from the opportunity of administration.

Sister Morris, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, desires prayers, that she may be relieved of an affliction that is upon her. Her request is sent in by a friend. Let us remember her.

Brother George Davis, of Fitzgerald, Georgia, requests the prayers of the Union in behalf of his wife, who is suffering from an affliction of long standing. The doctors advise an operation, but the results are feared by both husband and wife, and they do not consent. Our prayers are besought for this sister, and Brother Davis asks also that he may be given the health and strength he needs.

And we have a sad letter from one whose name we withhold. She needs physical healing; but, more deeply, she feels the need of the forgiveness of God for wrongdoing. She asks us to pray with all our heart and to have great charity for her, remembering that all are weak. So should we do, for, truly, all are weak and fall short of doing as we should. While those who are suffering physically need and should have our prayers, those who are suffering distress of spirit because of sin have much more the need of our prayers of sympathy and love. That measure of charity which we deal to those who thus suffer will be measured to us again. Let us therefore pray for this sister from our hearts, that peace and the sense of forgiveness may come to her troubled spirit.

Passing of a Pioneer.

Elder Thomas S. Brown was a "landmark" of Hemet, California. He attended the reunion with his family and apparently enjoyed his wonted good health, and was staying in his summer cottage in Convention Park for a vacation after reunion. Reunion closed August 10, and on the 16th while at home with his family he was suddenly stricken by heart failure. The funeral was held at the home, Hemet, August 19, and the sermon was preached by Brother Roy F. Slye.

In death his life achieved the accomplishment of his life's effort, which was to bring the gospel before the people of his home town. Brother Brown owned and had frequently given the free use of the city hall for holding meetings. Year after year efforts had been made by him and Brother William Schade, who formerly lived there, to reach the people, but with extremely indifferent results, and it seemed that an audience could not be assembled. But at the death of Brother Brown the Baptists voluntarily gave the use of their fine auditorium, and a congregation of over five hundred of his neighbors and acquaintances from all walks of life, attended the funeral. His word had been the synonym for veracity and dependableness all over that vicinity.

Sister Brown gave Brother Slye only one instruction for the funeral, that was, "Preach the gospel, that is what he would have you do if he could speak," and the gospel is what was preached. The congregation itself was sufficient eulogy of the man. Rapt attention was accorded the young missionary, and after the close the remark was freely dropped by staid citizens, "How could such a young man know so much Bible?" but the young man said, "They don't know the source of inspiration of our elders."

United Order of Enoch.

What is the United Order of Enoch doing? is the question so often asked by many who seemingly are interested in its welfare. Briefly stating some things it has done will suffice for the present.

Of the land purchased south of the courthouse and set out as Summit Addition to the city of Independence, there have been eighty lots fifty by one hundred thirty-eight feet transferred to Saints who desire to make a home in Independence. Fourteen one acre lots have also been sold, which makes a fair showing when we take under consideration the opposition that has been met.

Besides this class of work, a number who were about to lose their investments in other property have been assisted by the order stepping in and helping them to bridge over and get where they could take care of themselves. Is this not helpful and one of the duties of said order? Many worthy people sometimes get into deep water, not intentionally, but when circumstances gather around and close in upon them and they are not able to extricate themselves.

The membership is gradually increasing. This will be helpful in time, though we may not have much to contribute besides our influence for the betterment of our social and financial conditions only thus assisting to create better opportunities for service.

Confidence must be established before we can anticipate doing much in the Lord's way of cooperation. Men in the world and of the world have made a success in cooperating together in their way. Why can not we in the Lord's way? Let us try it and see! We may anticipate failure as long as we go in our own way in trying to cooperate; let us quit it and try the Lord's method.

A. H. PARSONS, Secretary.

HAMBURG, IOWA, August 27, 1913.

Editors Herald: The late reunion of the Southern Nebraska, and Fremont, Iowa, districts held at Morton's Park, Nebraska City, August 8 to 17, was a success, notwithstanding the excessively dry, hot weather. The preaching and other services were good, not an appointment was a failure. Social services were earnest and spiritual.

Evangalists Frederick A. Smith, of Lamoni, and Charles E. Butterworth, of Dow City, Iowa, were present, and their sermons along the line of the development of saintly character were along the lead, and calculated in their character to enable us to get nearer to God and Zion. The reunion was the more enjoyable because many of those present were living in isolated places, and the religious associations were of the encouraging and uplifting character in the gospel work. Elder W. E. Haden was there part of the time, being engaged elsewhere in his field of labor.

One session was given to the consideration of Graceland College, under the charge of Elder Thomas A. Hougas, one of the trustees of the college. He did the work well. I have met several young people of Western Iowa and some of Nebraska who contemplate attending our college, where they never after have to regret going.

Brother Self baptized three persons during the reunion, one a sister from the Holiness people who had been quite active among them as an advocate of what she understood, but who was willing to accept additional light.

Elder Haden and I did some labor in June and July at Bartlett. Here, Brother Haden baptized two. We do not think the work is done there. Brethren John Huston and William Eyler and others are looking after the interests of the work there. An interesting Sunday school is maintained at Bartlett. We used the tent there for a season.

We are at present four miles west of Hamburg, Iowa, where Brethren W. E. Haden and C. Constance effected an opening last year, and where a favorable impression toward the work exists. We are having good hearings. We think some here may see the truth and perhaps obey sometime.

Brethren Frank Becksted, Nathan Mortimore, William Gard and others are still holding the fort at Hamburg; and the camp fire still blazes there. Brother Floyd E. Robertson is pushing the work as best he can in Southern Nebraska, and courage is not lacking; Brother Self as president of the district is standing by him. Brother Norman A. Higgins has charge of the work in Nebraska City, and sees that everyone about him does what they may for the cause.

Brother and Sister J. W. Waldsmith still stand gallantly by the banner of Christ, though growing aged; and, though unable to be in the active ministry, they watch with keen interest to aid the work in every way possible to them.

As everybody who knows Brother Haden likes him, we are hoping for further good results in our field of labor, the Fremont District. We hope to be able to report good for other parts of the district as we may be able to visit them. We surely appreciate the kindness of all, so far as we have met them.

The drouth is more severe in this part of the State than two years ago, yet the courage of the people does not wane, and this helps much.

Trusting that Zion prospers, and that the faith of the Saints grows, I am

Hopefully, in bonds,
C. SCOTT.

LEOMINSTER, MASSACHUSETTS.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I have heard from any of the sisters; I should like to hear from old friends. The days are long and weary.

It has been twenty-eight years since I went out into the beautiful world. Many changes have taken place; we lost our home over a year ago. Life has been a hard struggle. Husband has very poor health, and I sit in my wheel chair by the window waiting for night and for husband; I have no little one to cheer me.

Will some of the sisters give me orders for babies' jackets or booties? I make them when able; am often dependent on what they bring for food. I had to give up my prison work, as my eyes were too weak to do much.

Wishing to be remembered in the prayers of all the sisters and brothers, I am lovingly, your sister, Mrs. Roy Cowles.

343 LANCASTER STREET.

COLTON, CALIFORNIA, August 19, 1913.

Editors Herald: I am just home from the Hermosa reunion, where a very pleasant and profitable time was enjoyed. The Saints were made glad, and were cheered and encouraged in the opening prayer meeting Saturday morning because of a communication from our heavenly Father, given through Brother Goodrich, who was in charge of the meeting.

The Lord assured the Saints of his presence with us; and renewed the promise of blessings according to their faithfulness and efforts to come up higher by their deportment and their conversation. I did not hear the words when given by the speaker, but I felt the influence of the good Spirit by which they were spoken. A solemn hush fell upon the congregation, and every eye was riveted upon the man of God as he stood with outstretched hand delivering the heavenly message.

In almost every reunion of the Saints there is similar instruction given by the Spirit. But this coming as it did, at the very opening, gave to me, at least, a different impression. Yet I can not clearly explain all that it conveyed to my mind, something like notifying the Saints not to forget that God was a feature of the organization; a bringing of the Saints nearer to him, and he, himself, coming nearer to them, while he plead with them to seek in those gatherings to be godly.

Was it because of that prophetic admonition, or was it because the Saints had made progress in the past year, that there was not so much time given to sea bathing and recreation this year as last? The pervading spirit was of a more quiet and stay-at-home nature. As one elder said, The deportment of the Saints on the grounds was excellent; and he allowed that he was pretty critical.

Three afternoons were given to the auxiliaries, debating on questions of propriety. These were interesting and educational questions, to which each Saint should give sufficient thought to measure them up to the word of God, and the spirit of the gospel, and see where the right is, and then act upon it and trust God for results.

One of these questions was, "Bazaars; are they necessary?" Another was concerning church members going to public dances. And still another was, "Should there be entertainments in the church edifices?" The trend was towards higher ground, and yet there is room for improvement.

I hope next year will develop some such questions as, Is it consistent with the keeping of the Lord's day, and the spirit of the gathering to go in bathing on Sunday, whether morning or afternoon?—that the question may be considered from the point of example. And again, Whereas, it is adverse to the spirit of the occasion, and also shocking to many when assembled at the water's edge to witness the solemn rite of baptism, for brethren to mingle with, or stand in view of the congregation with no other covering than their short bathing suits; therefore, be it resolved that all who are present upon those occasions, should be properly clothed.

Should not Saints have the same regard for modesty and propriety at the ocean as elsewhere? And be a little in advance of the world's people at the beach, as elsewhere? Until these things are observed, the Saints are paying too dear a price for the refreshing sea breeze at our reunions.

Among the good things enjoyed was the spirit of union and harmony manifest. The preaching was said to have been excellent. The cooks performed their part well, for the food was good and there was plenty of it.

Hopefully,

SISTER E. BURTON.

NORTH END, SASKATCHEWAN, August 24, 1913.

Editors Herald: We wish you to know that the HERALD is appreciated, and to thank you for the assistance you are to us. Many times when we are puzzled over something we turn to your pages for comfort, and seldom fail to find an explanation of those things which have troubled us. This is more especially true since we are called upon to fill the office of teacher. We are trying in our weak way to do our part, both financially and spiritually, but are finding it hard. We believe that if we are faithful all will come right in the end.

Our little branch is surely coming up higher. Of course, as usual, there are some stragglers. We hope some of our friends will make note of our address and write to us.

We came here from Michigan nearly two years ago, and we are well satisfied with the change. We believe that many poor Saints have by coming here not only bettered themselves financially, but have put themselves in a position to assist in spreading the gospel.

When we were at conference, Brother Gillen told us that there was a great work to be done in the Canadian northwest; and truly we can see the time not far away when others will join this little branch, both by letter and by baptism.

Hoping all our friends and brothers will pray for us, we remain, as ever,

Your brother in the one true faith,

J. H. ROCKWOOD.

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA, August 27, 1913.

Editors Herald: We take pleasure in writing to the columns of the HERALD again. It is with joy that we take it up, week after week, and find that the work of the Lord has such a warm place in the hearts of people in the different nations of the earth. We have great cause to be thankful to our heavenly Father for the many blessings received from his hand, and feel to say like Job, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

When we think how the few Saints here have struggled to uphold the work in this place for a number of years past, and then compare the privileges we enjoy at this time, we feel to say that the Lord is caring for his work in this place. The past year has been filled with strenuous efforts for the advancement of the work here. We are well favored with our present pastor. It seems that the whole ambition of his soul is to pilot the work along.

We have been holding street meetings all through the summer, with good interest manifested. Our brother has stood before the people in the power of the Spirit. We hope to see results which will cause added joy to the Saints.

May the time never come when we will be ashamed of Jesus. He endured much for our sakes, and finally gave his life for us. May we so live that when he comes with his people, those who have loved righteousness and truth, we shall be able to unite with them in that happy gathering. I count it joy to be numbered among those who have embraced this latter day work.

We wish to express our gratitude in that we have a little church in which we can worship God. We have felt his hallowed influence many times when we have met together, comforting and strengthening us for future service. May the time soon come, as we have often prayed, when the Lord's will shall be done on earth, as it is done in heaven.

Your brother in the gospel,

WILLIAM DAVIES.

DES MOINES, IOWA, August 29, 1913.

Editors Herald: I was called to Perry, Iowa, to preach the funeral sermon of Lewis Franklin Doss, who died very suddenly while trying to board a passenger train to his home from Des Moines last Monday evening. It has been concluded that he died of heart failure on account of hurrying to catch the train, he not having been well for some time previous. It was not thought by anyone, not even by his mother, who was with him that day in the city, that he was so badly afflicted. He was an exemplary young man in many respects, and a believer in the gospel, but had never obeyed it. The large gathering at the home yesterday, to sympathize with the family and listen to the words spoken as a means of giving comfort to the severely bereaved ones, shows the estimation in which he was held by those among whom he was born and with whom he had associated all his life.

Just three weeks ago last Sunday, the father, William J. Doss, was taken from the embrace of the family, and this young man had stepped into his father's place, and the sudden death has stricken the family a severe blow. But the mother and wife told me last night, "I feel like taking up the work of life anew; but before you came this morning, I thought I never could. God has given me strength to renew the conflict."

At the grave, after I had offered the closing prayer, Sister Doss, with the strength of the Father, knelt at the grave of her son and prayed for the young associates of her son there present, and for herself that she might be fully qualified to be a mother to every boy in need of a mother's advice, and that she might so deport herself that no boy thus in need of a mother's advice should fear to approach her and confide in her. At first her voice was broken, but it was only momentary; it cleared, and without an apparent tremor, she prayed fervently. She arose, took a step to the south where she had so lately laid her husband to rest, and offered a brief prayer that touched the hearts of all present.

The little branch at Perry, Iowa, presided over by Elder Henry H. Hand, is increasing in spirituality, and although the Saints there have passed through very severe trials, they are most of them cheerfully continuing the conflict against Satan and sin.

Brother R. S. Salyards and I began tent meetings at Albia, Iowa, last Sunday, and there is some interest manifest already. The Saints at Hiteman are rendering us considerable help, and the few Saints at Albia are assisting us well. Prejudice exists, but it is kept quite well subdued on account of the upright living of nearly all the Saints there and near there. We have heard nothing but that which is commendatory of the faith from those who have been in attendance at the services.

I am here to assist in arranging for the wife while I am engaged in missionary work; the children are all teaching, which leaves us as we began our married life; hence the necessity of an adjustment accordingly.

Tent meetings begin here to-night in charge of Brethren J. L. Parker and David J. Williams, to continue indefinitely. It is good to see the young men assuming the responsibilities of missionary life. Lord send forth more laborers into the vineyard, but first prepare for the care of those whom thou hast called. I am looking forward for the time to come when every seventy will be actively engaged in the field of missionary work.

In Christ,

J. F. MINTUN.

Extracts from Letters.

Rose Davis, Jamestown, Indiana: "The Southern Indiana and Louisville districts reunion held with the Hope Branch near Derby, Indiana, was a decided success, and we feel that much good was accomplished. The prayer meetings were an important feature, the Spirit being felt to a marked degree by all present. Many who could not attend sent in requests for prayers. One dear old brother has since passed over on the other side. Our missionary staff is unusually strong this year. They gave us many fine sermons—food for thought for many days to come. Eleven noble souls were buried with Christ in baptism. Seven children were blessed, and three afflicted ones were administered to. One local Religio was organized, with a charter membership of thirty-three. One of the most pleasing incidents of the reunion was the presentation of the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures by Elder H. E. Moler, in behalf of the Saints, to Elder J. A. McClain, who accepted with appropriate words and deep feeling."

H. J. Davison, Stockton, California: "The Northern California reunion, with the district conference, Sunday school and Religio conventions, terminated last evening with a fine sermon by associate minister in charge, James E. Kelley. The reunion from beginning to end was exceptionally good. All seemed to depart with the good thought of making the next one still better. The Spirit said in a communication to the Saints that God was pleased with them, and that their growth in spiritual things was more than they themselves realized. The preaching was very fine—spiritual and instructive. Prayer meetings were comforting and edifying. The interest in auxiliary work of all kinds was commendable. There is no dearth of musical talent and ability in this district and some fine numbers were rendered. The joint entertainment program was of a high and refined order. The large tent was beautifully decorated and well filled."

F. Edgworth, Ipswich, Queensland, Australia: "Brother J. W. Baker, president of Brisbane Branch, was with us Sunday, June 22, and sacrament meeting was held at which he blessed one of our little ones. The occasion of his coming was looked forward to with anticipation and was thoroughly enjoyed by all. It seemed that the Evil One had determined that this meeting should not be held, but we finally prevailed. The Spirit of God was in our midst and even the children were subdued by its softening and quieting influence. Not one single disturbing element was permitted to hinder. The ordinance of blessing and the administering of the sacrament were explained by Brother Baker to the nonmembers present. The meeting was enjoyable indeed. We trust that this may be a good beginning of many profitable meetings to be held in this city."

A. E. Warr, McKenzie, Alabama; "The Alabama district reunion was held at Pleasant Hill, near McKenzie, August 8 to 18. During this reunion we have been strengthened. The grand sermons preached, the fervent prayers offered, and the abiding testimonies borne bid us onward, ever onward. Of the missionary force F. M. Slover, I. M. Smith, Swen Swenson, Hale W. Smith, A. G. Miller, and the writer were present. One Woman's Auxiliary meeting, one elders' quorum meeting, and the district conference were held. Eight were baptized, and eight children were blessed."

Thomas W. Williams, Los Angeles, California: "Everybody seemed to think the reunion was the best ever held in the district. In the point of numbers it was up to the standard. The sermons which I heard were excellent. Many thought that Brother James Kelley carried off the honors in this direction. Be that as it may, it is clearly evident that "Jim," as we are wont to call him, won his way into the hearts and affections of nearly everybody. His unassuming simplicity, the entire absence of austerity or superiority, will give him prestige and power among men. Brother F. M. Sheehy delivered an excellent sermon the last Sunday of the reunion. Brethren Slye, Goodrich, Wixom and many others did yeoman service in the exercises of the reunion."

W. R. Armstrong, Manchester, England: "Our conference passed off well. The Sunday gatherings were well attended and we have reason to believe that much good was done. The ministrations of our brother, U. W. Greene, were greatly appreciated, and regrets were expressed that his stay was so short. When will he come again? I heard some ask. That is the sort of teaching we want, another would say; and, We would have liked a week's services in our branch, came from another. This in no way reflects upon the splendid work of our good Bishop May, nor on that of our little mission president, the worker. Brother Greene was in our home eleven days, and I can truly say that Sister Armstrong and I have missed his manly, godly presence since his departure. Our prayer is that our heavenly Father will bless him and our Brother Koehler and wife who accompany him, along with Brother Rees, who is patiently awaiting their arrival."

Wisconsin.

I am still in the army of the Lord and serving duty on the picket line part of the time. And while not really tired of duty, yet I would be glad to see the war close and the great millennium begin.

This year finds me in mission work in Wisconsin, the State where my boyhood days were spent, and where my early experiences in the church and in mission work began. And I am glad to note that the gospel seed, whether sown here in the hills of Western Wisconsin, or in the beautiful prairies of other States, bears equally as good harvest. In fact, we often find the best of souls in places where we had not thought to find them.

It has been a very warm summer here, and we shall be glad to welcome autumn days, with their mellow, golden sunshine; cool, refreshing breezes, and leaves of many delicate colors.

Which is more pleasant, springtime with its balmy sunshine and opening leaves and flowers, or autumn with its golden harvest? Which is more pleasant, youth with its buoyant, cheerful spirit, or the declining years of life, with their harvest of mature experience? If we think carefully we should find that in nature as in life all seasons have their ripened fruit as well as missions to perform.

My home is still at Clitherall, Minnesota, where my wife and three small boys look after our affairs. We have lived there for the past seven years, since moving from North Dakota, where we had lived the most of six years on one of Uncle Sam's government homesteads. My wife, though a very good Canadian, stood well by her post in holding down an American homestead, while I was away most of the time in mission work.

I have labored most of the year thus far in Wisconsin, visiting Chetek, Spring Valley, Rock Elm and Porcupine. I am now at the latter place, expecting to depart next week for other fields.

I will be sorry to depart from such a pleasant branch of Saints. Though the ways here are not always smooth (the roads from place to place), as many of the missionaries who have labored here in the past may testify, yet one seldom labors where he feels that his efforts are more appreciated. On visiting here again this year after thirteen years of absence, I was sorry to notice that many earnest ones have been taken from the ranks. Some have moved to other fields of labor, and some have been taken by the Great Master to the beautiful scenes of paradise, to carry on missions for him there. However, we are glad to see that the little vine planted here many years ago by Brethren H. P. Curtis and C. H. Burr has continued to grow, and is still bearing fruit to the Master's praise.

During the latter part of June I worked on the Saints' reunion buildings at Chetek, and later remained through the reunion held there. The new auditorium building and dining hall located in the pine grove on the shore of Lake Chetek, and at the edge of the city, makes a fine place to hold re-reunions. There is probably no better location in the missions of the church. The efforts of some in securing such a pleasant place are commendable. We hope the Lord may bless its use to the good of his Saints.

In passing through Minneapolis not long ago I enjoyed a short stay there. Brother Charles Lundeen, who has long been a faithful worker there, is still helping to keep the campfire burning, and the good work seems to be moving on in that city. The Saints will soon have their church there paid for, and ready to be dedicated. Some of the families of the Saints are locating nearer the church, so as to be better able to attend the services—a splendid plan.

I have been greatly blessed of the Master most of the time the past few months in presenting the gospel story. I have enjoyed the efforts, though I find that my nervous system will not stand what it has in former years. I have a kindly remembrance of the Saints of my former fields of labor and will long remember their kindness to me.

Ever hoping the Master may hasten his work, and help us all in his service, I am,

Your brother in Christ,
L. HOUGHTON.

Idaho.

After reading the church papers, and seeing letters from others of the missionary force, I thought that perhaps some would like to know how we are getting along out in this part of the world. Up to the present writing missionaries are very scarce, as Brother Madden and myself are the only ones in the State that I know of. I am by myself, and have been ever since I came here.

I left home, the 6th of June, stopping off on my way in Eastern Colorado for a couple of days, visiting some Saints whom I labored among last year. After taking train there, the first stop of import was at Salt Lake City, Utah. Missing one train there, I stopped over about ten hours. Of course I was curious to see the sights of that wonderful city. The first place I went to see was the temple and tabernacle.

While looking at the buildings, the guide handed me a card, on the back of which I noticed, Articles of Faith. Glancing over these articles I noticed right at the bottom of the card the following: "We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous," etc. While walking along I asked our guide if there was any difference between the Mormon Church and the church back East, calling themselves the Reorganized Church. He answered that there was all the difference in the world. I was made to wonder why it was that their missionaries tell the people, back East, that we are all the same. And as their men sent from Salt Lake and one in Salt Lake (the guide) did not tell the same story, I was made to realize that some one was not living up to the articles of faith, as quoted above. I was also made to understand how Elder Woodruff came to say: "We have more stealing, more lying, more swearing in one year than there should have been in a thousand." (Journal of Discourses, vol. 4, p. 97.) Although having to work among the Mormons, we are trying to sound the Old Jerusalem gospel the best we know how.

From Salt Lake, we wended our way to Weiser, Idaho. We reached there just in time to hear Brother Madden dispensing the truth to a nice audience, who had gathered to the district tent, brought there for the reunion, which had started on the 10th of June. Brother Anderson arrived the next day, and for over a week we enjoyed ourselves together the best way. The reunion was a success from start to finish. I think that everybody left with a determination to meet again next year. There are only four branches in the State at the present time. But there are quite a number of scattered members.

It is a hard matter to get these Mormons out to hear you, because they expect an exposure of Mormonism from our men. I think that we ought to try and show them that we have something better than they have, and not be continually digging at them. I don't believe that does a great deal of good. The gospel of Jesus Christ is enough if only used in the right way. We have found some honest-hearted souls since we have been here, and have felt well in teaching them the angel's message. I expect to go from here to Pocatello to meet my collaborer, Brother Fike.

My field address is Minidoka, Idaho; box 58.

In closing I will say that I feel well in the work, and hope to keep on doing all the good I can. I am, your brother in Christ,
H. E. WINEGAR.

Seattle and British Columbia.

We have just closed the semiannual conference and joint reunion of the Seattle and British Columbia and Portland districts. We had a normal conference; and when I say it was a quiet and spiritual one you will conclude that all of our conferences are quiet and spiritual, which is correct.

A prominent feature of the conference was the dedication of the church at Centralia, Washington. When we consider that only two years ago the branch was organized (by the writer and Brother George W. Thorburn) with thirty-five members, and now there are over sixty enrolled, with a church clear of debt, it speaks volumes for the efforts there. We might specialize on some names but it would involve most all of the branch, for the Saints at Centralia are indeed a working unit. But we will say that in this case as in many others, the sisters were the ones to take the initial step.

I only hope that as a church we may be able to trust in God more than we have; then we will succeed in every undertaking for good. But how prone we are to overlook the fact that this is a day of sacrifice. Do not let your minds be directed to your finances only, for this is not the only connection in which we are called upon to sacrifice. We must abandon everything that minimizes our service to God.

I wish to appeal especially to the Saints of the Seattle and British Columbia District. How many read the article of the Presiding Bishop relative to the indebtedness of the church? Let us make a special sacrifice of something that would require one dollar if we purchased it, and by denying ourselves send the amount to either the Bishop, or to the undersigned as his agent. Do not read this and think that you are not responsible for your portion of this debt, for you are responsible, morally.

Now another thought. The question has been asked of me, in paying off a contract, paying for a home, for instance, do I owe tithing on a thing that is not mine? If you have made a ten dollar payment on it you owe the Lord one dollar; and so on with each successive payment until the whole is paid; and when you have made the last payment after this manner you will have observed the commandment, Owe no man anything.

To those who have the responsibilities of presiding over Sunday school or Religio, let prayer be the factor of your success, for it is the fulcrum that lifts the load of doubt or fear. Let us remember that this work demands our best effort and ability. Remember that there are those with five talents, others with three, and still others with one. We are expected to use what we have been intrusted with, and Jesus says, To him who continues to receive I will continue to give.

WILLIAM JOHNSON.

FREDERICK ADAM.

Notice of Silence.

To All Whom It May Concern: W. J. Robinson, of the Lowell Branch, Arkansas, has this day been silenced, for apostasy, also preaching false doctrine, speaking disrespectfully of the leading men of the church, and denying the Book of Covenants.

T. W. CHATBURN,
President Spring River District.

AUGUST, 30, 1913.

Notice to High Priests.

To the Quorum of High Priests; Greeting: After unavoidable hindrances, the 1913 High Priests' Annual has been mailed to the latest post-office address of each member. If any have failed to receive his copy and will inform me, another will be sent.

CORRECTIONS.

Page 20, line nineteen, add the letter "s" to the word "remark."

Page 23, line seven, the word "thinks" should read "thanks."

In the roster, page thirty-five, the name, Frederick B. Blair, number 6, should follow the name of Amos Berve.

Your fellow servant,

ROBT. M. ELVIN, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, September 3, 1913.

Notice to Subscribers.

The publishing of the Religio Quarterly has been transferred from the Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa. All business pertaining to this publication after the appearance of this notice should be addressed to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, President,
For Executive Committee.

Notice to Saskatchewan Saints.

To the Scattered Saints of Saskatchewan District; Greeting: Having been elected superintendent of Home Class Department of Religio, I take this means of reaching you, and ask you to send me your name and address if you wish to take up this work. I will then send you instructions and supplies. Let us all arouse ourselves; improve our opportunities, and work while it is yet day.

Let us be found among the "wise virgins." One way to do this is by studying the Religio lessons, even though we do live miles and miles from any other Saint. God will be near to bless if we but put forth an effort.

Hoping to hear from everyone, I remain,

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. S. W. NELSON.

HILL HALL, SASKATCHEWAN, August 25, 1913.

Notice of Appointment.

With the consent of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric, Elder Charles N. Burtch has been appointed to labor in the Northern Michigan District for the remainder of the conference year.

J. F. CURRIS,
Minister in General Charge.

Died.

FUQUA.—Robert Franklin Fuqua was born at Grenola, Kansas, July 25, 1879; died at Weatherford, Oklahoma, August 24, 1913, of typhoid fever. Deceased, with his parents, moved to Oklahoma in 1895. He joined the Congregational Church at Alpha, Oklahoma, in 1897, and in October, 1911, united with the Reorganized Latter Day Saint Church at Seiling, Oklahoma, baptized by Hubert Case. He married Olive Janet Dertrick at Hobart, Oklahoma, March 8, 1903. A son was born to them, who, with his companion, father, two brothers, sister, and other relatives survive him. He was valiant in testimony and faithful in service. Funeral at Weatherford, sermon by H. F. Durfey.

WALTON.—Charles Walton was born at Long Compton, County of Warwick, England, March 23, 1848; died June 6, 1913, of cancer. He was baptized September 2, 1883, at Birmingham, by Thomas Taylor. Funeral in Saints' chapel, Priestley Road, June 11, conducted by W. H. Greenwood, J. E. Meredith in charge. Interment in Brandwood cemetery.

MCINTYRE.—Lewis Elmer McIntyre was born at Moorhead, Iowa, August 8, 1889, died at Omaha, Nebraska, July 2, 1913. He was baptized September 8, 1906, at Moorhead, Iowa, by G. H. Shere. Lewis was reared and educated in Moorhead. The past four years he had worked in Kansas City and Omaha, being at the time of his death employed in the latter city. He was injured while riding his motorcycle, colliding with a motor truck. He passed away that evening, not regaining consciousness. He leaves mother, four brothers, a host of other relatives and friends. Funeral sermon by J. M. Baker, of Des Moines, interment in Moorhead cemetery.

INSLEE.—Earl William Inslee was born at South Boardman, Michigan, March 17, 1896, died August 11, 1913, at Seattle, Washington. Brother Earl's death came as a great shock to his parents and friends. He was only confined to his bed about one week. He died of acute Bright's disease. Earl was a bright young man, always cheerful, and capable of doing his part toward making life a success. He was baptized at the age of twelve years. It is another one of the great mysteries of this life, one coming into the period of promise to be cut off with so little warning. Sermon by William Johnson.

HOLMES.—Sister Hattie E. Holmes, wife of Brother Thomas Holmes, of Roslyn, Washington, had been a sufferer for some time, but not so that it caused alarm until a short time before her death. Sister Holmes was a woman of few words, but a Saint indeed, bearing with wonderful fortitude her trials in life. She was born at Salem, Indiana. She married Thomas S. Holmes November 26, 1887. She was baptized June 2, 1895; died July 19, 1913, leaving husband and five children. Sermon by William Johnson, T. C. Kelley assisting.

WILLEY.—Louise, daughter of Roscoe and Lily Willey, was born at Lamoni, Iowa, November 23, 1910, and died August 16, 1913. The funeral was held from the home in Lamoni, John Smith in charge, sermon by Elbert A. Smith. The most profound sympathy of the entire community of the Saints is felt for Brother and Sister Willey in the severe loss of their dearly beloved child.

HAYER.—Charles Hayer was born July 20, 1861, at Mission, LaSalle County, Illinois, passed from this life September 1, 1913, at Holden, Missouri, of cancer. Deceased was baptized at Eagle Grove, Iowa, October 20, 1890, by J. S. Roth; was ordained a deacon at Holden, Missouri, February 9, 1913.

He lived in harmony with the moral precepts of the restored gospel. He was survived by his companion, three brothers, two sisters. Services were held at Holden, Missouri, conducted by Richard Bullard. The body was brought to Lamoni, Iowa, where services were conducted; sermon by J. F. Garver, John Smith in charge. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

Gospel Messenger

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c. Order No. 248a.

There Is a Chance for the Renter in the Big Horn Basin

You can prove it to your own satisfaction by going with me on the next excursion to the Big Horn Basin, where you can rent improved farms for a share of the crop. No cash rents are required, but it is possible for you to now secure a good farm for next year and move out in the spring.

And You Don't Have to Wait for Rain

You simply turn the water on when your crops need it. A destructive hail or wind storm has never been known to visit the farming regions of the Basin Country. If you prefer, you can take up a Government irrigated homestead or file on land under the Carey Act. ### A HERO.

A SOLDIER FALLEN AT HIS POST.

By letter from the islands of the sea we learn that another hero in the gospel warfare, a soldier of the cross, Elder Charles H. Lake, has fallen in the field at his post. When Brother Lake bade the Senior Editor good-bye it was with the understanding, expressed by himself, that he probably should not live long and that he might as well employ the life remaining in performing duties imposed upon him by the call of the Master. We coincided with his expression and bade him good-bye, fully believing that his anticipations might be realized. That there is heroism, and that of the noblest kind, shown in the example of Brother Lake is clear. He went to his post of duty without hesitation, with a full knowledge of his infirmities of body and his liability to fall at his post.

He was uncomplaining, so far as we have heard, and not only willing but anxious to do what he could, and did it with cheerfulness. We can very certainly accord to Brother Lake the meed of a soldier's praise and cherish his memory as we do that of those who have gone before under similar conditions. His death leaves but one representative of his family, his father, John H. Lake, who is passing the closing days of his life at Kirtland, Ohio.

Of such material are the soldiers of the cross.

A VISIT TO NAUVOO AND THE REUNION AT MONTROSE.

It was the privilege of the Junior Editor to attend the reunion held at Montrose, Iowa, a reunion which is interesting to our people, owing to its close proximity to the old city of Nauvoo, which lies directly across the Mississippi River from Montrose. We reached the camp ground in the evening of the opening day, stopping en route at Burlington, the scene of a former pastorate of about three and one half years, where we occupied the pulpit Thursday evening, on the kind invitation of Brother O. R. Miller, pastor of the branch at that place.

The reunion at Montrose was quite educational and spiritual, though owing to some features not necessary to mention here, the meetings did not develop the full spiritual power that we thought might otherwise have been enjoyed. Still we have no complaint to make, and feel that considerable good was done, both to Saints and nonmembers who were in attendance. The people of Montrose seemed very favorably impressed by the conduct of the Saints, and some of them were heard to say that our people were the most orderly and circumspect in language and conduct of any people that had ever met in the city. They paid a particularly high compliment to our young people, which we feel was merited.

The writer was associated with Brother J. F. Curtis, Brethren C. G. Dykes, Charles E. Harpe, and Joseph Reed, in the presidency of the reunion. Our association in that regard was very pleasant and congenial. Never in our experience thus far in attending church reunions or gatherings has the question of precedence and superior authority obtruded itself in any disagreeable way. Everywhere we have found the brethren willing to observe the old injunction and prefer one another in righteousness and have joined with them in that spirit.

Probably the general reader, especially if he has visited Nauvoo, will be interested in conditions in the city of Nauvoo, particularly as they effect the historic church buildings located at that place. The three buildings still standing of greatest interest to us are the Old Homestead, first used, we understand, as a blockhouse and a station for an Indian agency, and later purchased and occupied by the Prophet Joseph and his wife Emma, as their first home in the city of Nauvoo. This old building still stands, but is in a poor state of preservation, and is not occupied. It stands upon the lot occupied by the graves of Emma Smith and the two Martyrs, fronting the Mississippi River. Just across the street from this building is the Nauvoo House, which was in course of construction at the time of the martyrdom. At a later date a part of it was finished and is in a pretty good state of preservation. The old lines of the foundation wall indicate the size that the structure was originally intended to be. The lot on which this building stands also runs down to the water front. Directly back of the Nauvoo House from the river stands the old Mansion House, which was occupied by Joseph Smith and his family at the time of his death. This building was later occupied by the families of Alexander and David H. Smith, and to the writer has the peculiar interest that attaches to one's birthplace.

We improved the opportunity to visit Nauvoo on several different occasions. About eighty-two went over in one party which was "personally conducted" by Brother Heman C. Smith, who delivered interesting lectures at the various places of historical interest. The monument committee also met in Nauvoo, the writer acting in the stead of Brother Frederick M. Smith, as a member of the committee, and being chosen temporary chairman. This is the committee on the erection of a monument to the Martyrs. The members present were E. L. Kelley, Heman C. Smith, F. A. Smith, and George P. Lambert.

The building of the Keokuk dam has raised the water at Nauvoo about six feet, and when their full power is developed it will probably be raised another five or six feet. A part of our business was to consider methods of protecting church property against the encroachments of the water. When we were there the water stood about one half way up the bank between the old water line and the corner of the basement of the Nauvoo House. The old stone wall that ran down from the Nauvoo House to the foot of Main Street, some portions of which were still standing at our last visit there, is quite a distance out in the water and submerged several feet. The big elm trees that formerly stood along the bank below the Old Homestead are now standing in four or five feet of water and the most of them have died as a result. The water line at present comes up just about to the foot of the fine old oak tree just below the Nauvoo House. If the stage of water is raised another five or six feet it will bring it up about to the foot of the basement wall of the Nauvoo House. So it was decided to put in a concrete wall fronting this property and also the property of the Old Homestead, these walls to be about ten feet high and to be graded in behind with dirt so as to form a level lawn in front of the buildings or sufficiently high to be above the high water mark.

It is said that the stage of water can be kept about uniform the year round, as they are prepared to handle any flood that may come and still keep the water line about uniform. If necessary, gates can be opened to get rid of the surplus water.

The water will not come up on the Old Homestead property enough to injure the graves, even if no wall is constructed. We estimated that the graves stand about six or eight feet above the highest water mark to which there is any danger of the river coming.

The timber has been cleared away on all of the islands between Montrose and Nauvoo and they are practically submerged. There is just a little fringe of undergrowth projecting above the water, indicating where they were located, and when the water is raised still higher this will be entirely obliterated. There is no current left in the stream at Nauvoo, and in fact very little as far up even as Burlington. The result is a wide and long body of water without current which has been named Lake Cooper, in honor of the engineer in charge of the construction of the dam. This sheet of water is very beautiful, especially for some miles just above Keokuk. But to our mind the changes have not improved the appearance of things at Bluff Park and Nauvoo. The islands were formerly a very beautiful feature of the landscape; and again, the raise of water gives the appearance of reducing the elevation of the city of Nauvoo and also Bluff Park, so that they do not appear to such advantage as formerly.

Montrose itself has been somewhat improved in appearance, as it was necessary to tear down the row of brick buildings, including store buildings, and the old hotel which formerly stood along the river bank. The point where they stood is now well out in the river. The railroad and the depot were moved quite a distance back on the bank. The river front was covered with crushed rock, making a fine, wide landing place or beach about a block in length and fifty feet or more in width, so the little town presents a very tidy appearance at present. With the old hotel went the old, disreputable saloons, and though others have taken their place, they are said to be more "respectable," if indeed it is possible for a saloon to in any sense claim the term of respectability.

On former occasions we have been made very melancholy when visiting Nauvoo, and have thought a great deal about the scenes of the past, the experiences and sufferings of our fathers and mothers in Israel in that strange city, and have suffered a great deal in spirit as a consequence. But we have reached the conclusion that this is useless; and now when we visit the city we do so with a determination to exclude the past to an extent and look forward to that which the future may hold, trying to acquire, or at least to pretend to acquire a callousness of feeling that will make such a visit bearable, if not enjoyable.

Numbers of the ministry were present at this reunion and did excellent service; but as their names will probably appear in the regular report we will not attempt to make a list of them here. This reunion represents three districts, Nauvoo, Kewanee, and Eastern Iowa. It is proposed to hold the next meeting in the city of Nauvoo, providing the committee can make suitable arrangements and shall so decide.

THE ONE THING NEEDFUL.

The following, taken from the Outlook for August 9, appears in the editorial columns of said issue under the above caption. We reproduce it here as an expression of this leading magazine with reference to the first duty or calling of every man and of the certain and overruling providence of God. The sentiment is strikingly in accord with one of the basic principles upon which our church superstructure is reared, which principle we find expressed in the language of the great Master, "Not my will, but thine, be done,"—the losing of self in the expression of God's purposes through service.

The perversity of our human ways is beyond comprehension. We certainly often seem to act as if we liked to be troubled, as if we enjoyed harassing our spirits with problems and difficulties. For we need almost never do so. There is one sure and simple, immediate way out of all questions that ever arise; there is one answer that might anticipate all questions; there is one absolute standard for the testing and governing of every life; and that is—the will of God. But we, for the most part, will have none of it. We have deliberately invented artificial standards of our own, and have set a variety of small ends up over against the one sufficient end, and have thereby brought dire confusion and pain upon ourselves.

No one can ever fulfill an artificial end. The true end—patient, long-suffering, absolutely inflexible—turns and over-turns, until, out of a thousand mischances, it at last sees its way clear to a consummation which was inevitable from the beginning. We can not avoid it, but we can delay it—pitifully for ourselves.

The chief trouble seems to be that we have deluded ourselves with the notion that the will of God is hostile to our happiness. "Thy will be done" is seldom spoken with joyful expectation, but is breathed low in resignation. God must have need of all his patience when he hears us pray.

As if God's will could ever be to work anything but the fullest development, and therefore the fullest blessedness, of his creation! Why did he make us at all? To accomplish some beautiful cosmic purpose. Each little part was perfectly planned to complete the whole, and every atom might know universal beatitude if it were obedient. Not a human soul of us but understands that particular personal happiness hurts more than it soothes. When great joy comes our way, our finiteness oppresses us, we fret against the barriers of our so circumscribed capacity; and all too often we greet the fulfillment of our dreams with tears instead of songs.

Nor is the universal happiness all there is to the matter—though that is enough. Each individual finds his own immediate, temporal gratification only in the will of God. He may think that this can not be so, he may strive feverishly to attain some end that he has devised for himself; his efforts will result in restless misery. Whereas, if he listens, watches, and obeys, he will from minute to minute take the sure path to his own in the world, and only his own can ever receive him or mean anything to him.

Yet it is not always a simple matter—this reading of the will of God. With the best intentions in the world, the most sincere people are often perplexed to understand what they should do next. Perhaps we have all blunted our perceptions by long disobedience; or perhaps heaven thinks that a certain amount of perplexity is good for us. At any rate, we are sometimes put to it to take our bearings; we have to plead and agonize for a beacon light. When God withholds himself, there is nothing to do but wait.

But there are certain indications in our own hearts which may convict us of sin or of righteousness. Great restlessness generally means that something is wrong, that we are pulling against God, resisting his touch. "In his will is our peace"; never spoke poet more truly and profoundly than Dante in those quiet words, "Be still, and know that I am God"—there again is an absolute, eternal and comprehensive admonition. Be still! For this purpose the churches wait, with their open doors and their dim and holy silence. One has but to enter and kneel and wait, giving himself over, letting himself go, resigning his own conscious and unconscious will, utterly abandoning it; and by and by he will see again the "quiet face of God" looking down upon him, and he will be safe once more.

It has been truly said somewhere that a man never really possesses anything until he has abandoned it to heaven, honestly letting it go, and heaven has then surprised him by giving it back to him. With only a few treasures among the many which we clutch and relinquish will heaven ever reward us thus; but they are the only things worth having, they are the inalienable possessions of our souls.

It is strange that we do not realize this. A good for which we must scheme and strive, over the precariousness of which we must hold our breath, is not solidly good at all; it is a transient vexation. The real goods of life are as surely ours as the dawn; there is no escaping them.

Therefore, from all this, it follows that the one thing needful for any human being to know is the will of God. There lies our duty and our deep content. There lies our only chance of making our existence at all worth while; there lies the significance and salvation of the universe. The kingdom will come as soon as the will is done. Let us not thwart it.

It should be remembered that while our unreserved service is required, yet in this self-losing we are not to surrender our individuality. Rather is our individuality dignified—wholly in rapport with the great purposes of God, we are enlarged and ennobled until finally we stand in the presence of the Father and as companions of deity. J. F. GARVER.

OPEN LETTER TO BRANCH PRESIDENTS.

To Branch Presidents: The office of branch president will be found by one who fills it properly to be something more than a sinecure. There is much hard work connected with it. If this were generally understood we would see less of that which should not exist among us, viz, office seeking for what honor there may be attached thereto.

To be a good branch president means more than attending to duties when they come up for attention, such as administering to the sick on call or sending others when you can not go, preaching Sunday morning or appointing some one else, presiding over prayer meetings, etc., when held. These duties must be attended to, of course, when they come up for attention; but they should be anticipated. Besides these there are many other things which must receive your careful and prayerful thought and attention.

Let us indicate some of these things by asking some questions: What is the spiritual condition of your branch? How do you know? Are all the members of your branch attending meetings regularly? If not, why not? Do you know? Are all the members in good spiritual condition? If not, why? Are there those who are bowed down with grief? If so, have you as president of the flock tried to comfort and console? Are there any backsliders? If so, are you helping them? Are all those holding the priesthood active? If not, why not? Do you know? Have you planned work for them? Do they need your help to plan? Are there unwisely zealous ones who need holding in check? Are you tactful enough to utilize such zeal?

And so we might go on. But let me emphasize one point: Are you holding regular and frequent priesthood meetings? If not, do so. And if you are at a loss to know how, consult the missionary in charge at once, and get his help; or the district president; or better still, both of them. By all means, develop some good, lively, priesthood meetings, and get all those holding the priesthood to work. Then note the improved condition of the branch.

Then tell us about it.

Yours fraternally,
FREDERICK M. SMITH.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

IMPROVEMENTS AT NAUVOO.—In the Nauvoo Rustler for September 2 we find a communication from Elder Heman C. Smith with reference to the proposed improvement of the church property at Nauvoo, Illinois, known to our people as the Homestead, and the Nauvoo House. Brother Smith says:

Your readers may be interested to know that the committee on erection of a monument to Joseph and Hyrum Smith met at the foot of Main Street in Nauvoo, on Tuesday, August 29, and resolved to clean up the grounds and put in retaining walls along the water line on the east half of the old homestead property and the west half of the river-side Mansion property, and to place a strong iron fence around the east half of the block where the graves are located; this work to be done preparatory to the erection of the monument. Elder George P. Lambert was placed in charge of these improvements.

LITTLE SIOUX SAINTS GENEROUS.—The Harrison County News for August 27 in making reference to the Little Sioux district reunion, held at Magnolia,

Iowa, and having on the closing day, August 24, according to the News, an attendance of four thousand, says:

Toward the close of the Latter Day Saints' reunion, Bishop E. L. Kelley, of Independence, Missouri, in charge of the finances of the church, asked the Little Sioux District to pay $2,460 of a $75,000 general church indebtedness. S. M. Van Eaton, of Pisgah, a non church man, told the committee that he would give one hundred dollars if nine members of the church could be found that would give one hundred dollars each. The subscription paper was circulated and nine hundred dollars was signed in a brief time by S. B. Kibler, Cal Osler, and H. C. Oviatt, of Woodbine; A. F. Harper, of Bigler's Grove; Donald Maul and J. S. McDonald, of Magnolia; R. Valentine, of Moorhead; Nels Peterson, of Canada. The spirit of generous giving prevailed and five hundred dollars was raised by others, making fifteen hundred dollars on the $2,460 to be raised by the Little Sioux District.

MISSOURI VALLEY REUNION SUCCESS.—The Gal-lands Grove, Pottawattamie, and Northeastern Nebraska districts reunion held at Missouri Valley, Iowa, August 22 to 31, is reported as a success. This reunion and the Saints received kindly consideration from the community and the local papers. The Harrison County News for August 27 contained a brief history of the church written by Elder Edward Rannie. An interesting feature of this reunion was the presence and activity of Elder Reuben Taylor, our Lamanite brother of the Cheyennes of Oklahoma, whose addresses and activity were educational and inspirational. The reunion management are to be congratulated on the spirit of cooperation brought about between the city authorities and the reunion people. The mayor of the city, on the evening of the 23d, visited the camp and delivered an address of welcome, which was responded to by C. J. Hunt. Our reunions should thus be made occasions not only for the spiritual upbuilding of the Saints but also for the cultivation of that social spirit which draws to us men of the world, and thus opens up to us the opportunity of delivering to such the gospel message.

GRACELAND OPENING DAY.—On Friday morning, September 12, in the college chapel, occurred the formal opening exercises of Graceland College for the year 1913-1914. A pleasing and significant feature of the day was the presentation of a sundial by the class of 1898, Frederick M. Smith being the only member of the class. The presentation speech was by F. B. Blair. The new president, S. A. Burgess, in his opening address made a strong plea for education, and for the support of former students and all our church people in behalf of the college. Friday was a beautiful day, a large assembly gathered, the attendance of students seemed very promising, an excellent spirit prevailed, and all seemed to augur a profitable year.

THE RIGHT WAY.

If we were wishing to go to Chicago, we could have our choice of many ways. The Baltimore and Ohio gives us one, the Grand Trunk another, the Pennsylvania lines another, etc. There are as many different ways to go as there are points on the compass. If A should start from Pittsburg he would choose one way, while B starting from Saint Louis would choose another, and C from Portland, still another. But all would reach Chicago. It is convenient to have several ways so that passengers wishing to start from different points may be accommodated.

After the places of interest here on earth have been visited, after their sights have become common and their attractions uninteresting, we expect to journey to a distant city, the final abode of the righteous, the new Jerusalem—the wonder of which never ceases and the glory of which shall never fade. We all want to get there. We look out upon the space that divides between here and there, and behold many ways open before us, with guides at the entrance to each, announcing the attractions of the different routes. What way shall we take?

These guides all tell us, or nearly all tell us, that any one of these different routes will bring us to the city, and that if we become tired traveling in one path they will give us passports (letters of removal) to another as often as we wish to change. Our experience in earthly travels has impressed us with the need of many ways to reach any given point, and it is natural for us to reason concerning the heavenly journey after the same manner; and to conclude that the reason for the many ways to heaven is found in the convenience it affords to the several passengers who shall start from the several places or conditions of mind and morals.

So we read the literature of each company, and, not being able to see much difference in any of the several ways that are most advertised and patronized, we look about to see which route our friends are in, our father and mother and other kinsfolk, and usually adopt the same way.

We begin the journey. The guide pays us his compliments and presents us with the Book of Rules (Bible) by which his company pretends to do business, and we are off with a happy party that seeks the great city. Everything that happens encourages us,—friends are more friendly, and brethren more brotherly. It was not nearly so smooth a road when it was first built, for many, in trying to pass over it, lost their lives. The builder of the road was himself killed in making the trial trip, and many of his brethren after him suffered like fate. But it is a smooth road now, said to be more perfect than when finished; it is so much easier riding that you would hardly think it to be the same one on which the ancients were killed. Everything goes well till some day when we wish to give our hopes a greater emphasis; we take up the Book of Rules and read: "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."—Proverbs 14: 12.

What! A thing seem right, and not be right? Why the guides never told us anything about this! They told us we could scarcely go amiss if we took any one of the several broad ways that were so well advertised; and everyone of these big companies had many good people traveling with them. It does not seem that all these good people who are on the same road I am, could be misled, surely the Lord would not permit it!

It would not be a bad idea to pause here long enough to inquire: First, Were Adam and Eve, in the Garden of Eden, good people? Second, were they misled? Third, did the Lord permit it? Fourth, are the good people in our day likely to be misled? "Take heed that no man deceive you, for many shall come in my name, saying I (Jesus) am Christ, and shall deceive many."—Matthew 24: 4, 5.

Many deceived by many who shall come in Jesus' name, and who shall say he is Christ! You would hardly expect men to confess that Jesus was the Christ if they were to deceive you, yet this is what Jesus foretells. He says they were to come in his name, but yet to deceive. Did these deceivers come as the Lord prophesied they would? Yes, they came as early as Paul's day, for we find him saying: "There are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers . . . teaching things which they ought not for filthy lucre's sake."—Titus 1: 10, 11.

We may expect, then, to find deceivers among those who "teach things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake." It is possible that some will stand in the office of guide and mislead us, deceive us? Who else could mislead—who could mislead but a leader?

It is scarcely in our power to understand how a man could fall so low as to come among men in Jesus' name and willfully mislead them for "filthy lucre's sake," as above indicated. But the Book of Rules affirms it, and as all the prominent companies do business by this one book, it must be reliable. We believe, therefore, that some mortals are so low as to do the very thing the book says, for the reason it assigns. But as to the guide of the way we are in, we know him. We know he is interested in the welfare of the race; that his life is full of good deeds; and that there is nothing but honor and uprightness in his character. We know he is no deceiver, that he tells us what he honestly and truly believes about the way of salvation; and if he knows,—if he knows,—if he knows,——

Is it possible for anyone to stand in the office of guide and not know the way himself? We read of some, "Desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say nor whereof they affirm."—1 Timothy 1:5. How shall we know the way?

This is the same question that Thomas once asked of a guide. Not as the guides of to-day answer did he answer, telling Thomas any one of the several prominent ways were sure, so long as he honestly believed it to be right, and leaving him to journey as he pleased. This was the true guide; and the duty of a guide is not to leave you to go as you please, but to designate the way for you, so that you may travel with assurance. Therefore, in unmistakable words he answered: "I am the way and the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father (any other way) but by me."—John 14:6. Who is this that supposes that he has the only thing—the one road leading to this great city? "There is none other name (way) under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4:12.

Of course there was only one way, at first, and it was built by the Master Builder. He made the first trial passage over the road. Among the incidents of his journey are recorded his poverty, cases of betrayal by his brethren, suffering and death. He marked the path he took by his blood, and signaled us to follow him. His blood did not stain any other track than the one he made, and he said there was no other way given us; none other could be made, not even the foundation of another: "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."—1 Corinthians 3:11.

It seems rather narrow-minded to some for a band of mortals to stand off by themselves and say they are the only ones who are right. These critics urge that the eminent divines of to-day have a broader way of looking at things. We have heard this suggestion before: "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction."—Matthew 7:13. Yet these good people contend that the man who thinks every other church is wrong except the one he is identified with must be badly pinched in his conception of right,—that this is a very narrow way of looking at the matter. We have heard, however, that the narrow way is right. "Straight is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life."—Matthew 7:14.

It should not be difficult to determine which is the broad way,—that way which has the wide gate, easily entered. A great evangelist comes to a city, gathers many converts, and gives them tickets to any one of perhaps a dozen different ways. One goes through the ordinance of baptism by the way of sprinkling, another by the way of pouring, and another by the way of immersion. But Christ went through this ordinance only the one way. If there is no other way through this ordinance than the one way which Christ traveled, then at least about eleven out of every twelve have not yet entered the true way; one out of every thirteen, we should say, for none but a false guide would ever allow eleven to go astray.

It is not the object of this paper to designate the true way so much as to show that there is only one way, and thereby to suggest the importance of the greatest care in selecting the way we shall take. When man fell by transgression there was no way whereby he could reach to heaven; but in due time Christ Jesus built one, and one only, and that a very narrow one, with one gate leading into it. He never made any competing lines,—but built one way, the first, and the last, and the only way. It is important, therefore, that we seek after that way.

It should not be supposed that because of the narrowness of this way it will not accommodate whosoever will come, of all the human race. Nor is it needful in this journey for people to start from different points, or attitudes of mind and morals; for by the rules given all passengers are required to repent, that is, to come back from the places or conditions of mind and morals in which they are found, and to stand in the station (condition of mind) of a little child. "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 18:3. We must all get on at the same station, or state of mind, therefore, and this station is humility, such as is found in children.

When we shall have considered the next thought that comes into the mind, the welfare of our dear ones, there will be no occasion for sorrowing beyond measure, for we shall find that even though some of our friends may have gone the wrong way, there is yet hope for them. Even though some may have gone to hell, yet there is hope, for one to whom Jesus Christ gave revelations foresaw that, "Death and hell delivered up the dead that were in them."—Revelation 20:13.

Let us repeat the words of one who was instrumental in helping us in our acquaintance with this truth, one who rejoiced when he saw there was a way provided for the release of the prisoners:

Let your hearts rejoice and be exceeding glad. Let the earth break forth into singing. Let the dead speak forth anthems of eternal praise to the King Immanuel, who hath ordained before the world was that which would enable us to redeem them out of their prisons; for the prisoners shall go free.—Doctrine and Covenants 110:22.

There is, then a way to escape even for our dead who may be in the prison house. Paul informs us that this way leads also through baptism, and that, under proper conditions, we may be baptized for our dead; Peter adds that the gospel is to be preached to the dead:

Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?—1 Corinthians 15: 29, 30.

For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might . . . live according to God in the spirit.—1 Peter 4: 6.

We hope that the light of truth will shine brighter as time goes by, and that men may be brought by its influence to the perfection which will entitle them to admission to the holy city. We believe there can be but the one way.

E. G. HAMMOND.

GATHER TO, AND BUILD UP ZION.

The following counsel should have an important bearing upon all saints: "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled."—Doctrine and Covenants 1: 7. It is evident that the Lord wished to impress all his people with a desire to know what the book containing his word and law had for them as light and information, and that they should become conversant with what it taught, so that all might profit thereby.

To the Jews the Lord used language very much like what we have here quoted; "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." And again, "Not one jot or tittle of my word shall fail." The first impulse this command should arouse should be that of reading, and the study of the word of the Lord, with the purpose of obeying the same; not to look for an excuse to evade what is enjoined upon us, but with a willingness to comply with all we are asked to do.

The Lord has made this dispensation the most notable, we think, of all that have ever been, not excepting the wonderful dispensation of Enoch; or the work intrusted to him, as this is to be the time of the welding together of all the dispensations of the past, drawing from every nation and people as promised, for the bringing about of the redemption of Zion and of God's people.

"The Zion of latter days"—what a thrill of delight should surge through the soul of every child of God at the very mention of the place and people whom the Lord has chosen for his habitation and companionship;—the hope of God's children since the translation of this people from Enoch's city. It was the inspiration of David's life, and of all Israel in their times of faithfulness. Are we to realize the long-cherished hope of the faithful, or will others occupy and inherit what through faithfulness we may secure if true and loyal to our Lord? Are we sufficiently earnest in our work to make the advancement necessary to pass muster when the Lord shall pass upon our worthiness?

In this article we will try to cull from the many revelations we as God's people have pledged our loyalty to, such as impress us with grave importance and responsibility; and if in the light of what has been given we are encouraged to make a greater effort than in the past to harmonize our lives with the commands of God, blessing will attend our effort and then work intrusted to us will be accomplished; for Zion must be redeemed and God's people gathered together.

GATHER FROM THE EASTERN LANDS.

At the time the Saints were busy building up the work of God in Kirtland there were many revelations given, and lest there might be a mistake made as to where the center of the work was to be established, and the most important work done, such as the purchasing of lands for future inheritances, for the greater gathering together of the hosts of the Israel, of God, the following was given, March 7, 1831, Doctrine and Covenants 45: 12:

Gather out from the eastern lands, assemble ye yourselves together, ye elders of the church; go ye forth into the western countries, call upon the inhabitants to repent, and inasmuch as they do repent, build up churches unto me; and with one heart and with one mind, gather up your riches that ye may purchase an inheritance which shall hereafter be appointed unto you, and it shall be called the New Jerusalem, a land of peace, a city of refuge, a place of safety for the Saints of the most high God; and the glory of the Lord shall be there, and the terror of the Lord shall also be there, insomuch that the wicked shall not come unto it; and it shall be called Zion.

This follows the revelation of the month previous which contains the revelation on church government (see section 42,) which gave to the elders who should take the gospel to Missouri an important message.

LANDS TO BE PURCHASED.

And I give unto my servant Sidney Rigdon a commandment that he shall write a description of the land of Zion, and a statement of the will of God, as it shall be known by the Spirit, unto him; and an epistle and subscription, to be presented unto all the churches, to obtain moneys, to be put into the hands of the Bishop, to purchase lands for an inheritance for the children of God, of himself or the agent, as seemeth him good, or as he shall direct. For, behold, verily I say unto you, the Lord willeth that the disciples, and the children of men, should open their hearts even to purchase this whole region of country, as soon as time will permit. Behold, here is wisdom; let them do this lest they receive none inheritance, save it be by the shedding of blood.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 11.

Here is revealed the purpose of the Lord in colonizing his people, first in the purchasing of land by the sacrifice of his people, from those who had been organized in the eastern country, that they might look forward to the time when there would be a general gathering together of the Saints, as was the purpose of the Lord since the world began, nevermore to be scattered. Those of the Saints who were willing to thus carry out the purposes of the Lord in sending money for the purchase of land would later be entitled to an inheritance in Zion, if they continued faithful to the laws given to be a guide to their life and conduct.

Again in Doctrine and Covenants 98:10:

Now, verily I say unto you, Let all the churches gather together all their moneys; let these things be done in their time, be not in haste; and observe to have all things prepared before you. And let honorable men be appointed, even wise men, and send them to purchase these lands; and every church in the eastern countries when they are built up, if they will hearken unto this counsel, they may buy lands and gather together upon them, and in this way they may establish Zion. There is even now already in store a sufficient, yea, even abundance to redeem Zion, and establish her waste places, no more to be thrown down, were the churches, who call themselves after my name, willing to hearken to my voice.

And again in Doctrine and Covenants 100:5:

Gather yourselves together unto the land of Zion, upon the land which I have bought with moneys that have been consecrated unto me; and let all the churches send up wise men, with their moneys, and purchase lands even as I have commanded them.

There are other references made to this important work, which have not yet received the attention which should be given to this command of the Lord to us his children.

WORKMEN OF ALL KINDS TO GO TO ZION.

"And again, inasmuch as there is land obtained, let there be workmen of all kinds, sent forth, unto this land, to labor for the Saints of God."—Doctrine and Covenants 58:12. The intent of the Lord was to have all things prepared beforehand so that a city might be built, and workmen were to be there to carry out the purposes in view,—that of employment for those who should gather, so that confusion should not ensue, but that all might go to with all their powers to carry out the work of building up a city as designed. In a city where thousands of people were to gather, there would be the need of providing every industry; hence the counsel, Send up workmen of all kinds, so that the work may be put into effect. Had the people of God listened to what the Lord imparted to them through revelation, the results would doubtless have been very different from that which history records; how will we treat this counsel?

LET ALL THINGS BE PREPARED BEFORE YOU.

In the way of preparation for the gathering, according to the plan of the Father, there must be a decided victory over selfishness, as outlined in the revelations placing so prominently before us the need of equality being established among the church as represented by Saints; each was to esteem his brother as himself; for Where this spirit does not exist there can be no Zion. Without this principle in the lives of God's people, the preparation asked of us by the Master is not attended to. There can be no real purity of life and heart without it. If the love of Christ is in us it will manifest itself in love to our neighbor, and if we love him we will do to him as we would that he should do to us. There can be no advantage taken of our brother in our dealings with him, if we love him as ourself; we will not try to make merchandise of him when coming among us to take up his abode with the Saints in Zion. There must be a different spirit than that of graft or selfishness or Christ can not dwell with us by his Spirit. There will be a hearty response to the demands made upon us by the Lord if our heart is right,—if we are working on the natural or selfish inclinations of our lives to bring them into harmony with the blessed Master, the rest will then be easy.

With the Spirit of Christ well established in the heart our tithing and consecration will become a delight, we will place before the bishop an inventory of our possessions, and with joy we will say, "All that I have is thine, Lord; I only give to thee what is thine." Our time, our talent, our heart service, we will hand over to him, as well as that we may have accumulated, financially, through his blessing upon our labor.

The spirit of faultfinding and backbiting will find no place among us if we are prepared to dwell in Zion. Our time will be better employed, and our desires will be to love and to help rather than to divide and cause a feeling of estrangement; this must be part of the "all things prepared" before us, and the quicker this is faithfully attended to, the quicker will the gathering together of God's people be an established fact.

When all cooperate under the laws given to us as a people, working in the interest of the church and each other, we will then be able to make the necessary preparations in the building of factories and mills to meet the requirements of the "workmen of all kinds" who are to be sent up to the land of Zion, that those who have made proper preparation as above outlined may find all things prepared for their reception when they appear in a lawful way among us; anything less than this will cause confusion and disappointment to all concerned.

In Doctrine and Covenants 100:5 we have the following:

Therefore, let my servant Baurak Ale, (I am not going to say who that is, for I have no way of finding out) say unto the strength of my house, my young men and the middle-aged, gather yourselves together unto the land of Zion, upon the land which I have bought with moneys that have been consecrated unto me; and let all the churches send up wise men with their moneys, and purchase lands even as I have commanded them.

In Doctrine and Covenants 108:2 we read: "Wherefore prepare, prepare ye, O my people; sanctify yourselves; gather ye together, O ye people of my church, upon the land of Zion, all you that have not been commanded to tarry." Sanctification of life is here called for from those who gather with the Lord's people.

In Doctrine and Covenants 98:5, we read:

Behold, it is my will, that all they who call on my name, and worship me according to mine everlasting gospel, should gather together and stand in holy places, and prepare for the revelation which is to come when the veil of the covering of my temple, in my tabernacle, which hideth the earth, shall be taken off, and all flesh shall see me together.

Preparation, then, needs to be made, so that we may see God without being consumed, for the veil which now intervenes between us and his majesty is to be removed, and those who are pure in heart shall see God.

Care should be taken by those who desire to move to Zion or the regions round about that they may have all things prepared before them, in their temporal affairs as well as in their spiritual. They should consult with the bishopric who know better the conditions prevailing at the center, and are always willing and better able to advise than those whose duties and occupation tend in other directions. The law of God should be honored in this as well as in the way before mentioned.

To further and hasten the work of God in its wonderful mission to the world, everyone is expected to make sacrifice; but what do we see here in our midst? Are all so doing? Some are; others are not. In some directions there is a lamentable lack in this line; and we see instead of sacrifice extravagance, which is becoming more noticeable among our people.

The purchase of the automobile more for pleasure than for service is too much in evidence. If this did not militate against the attendance at service in the house of God, it would not call for the criticism it does; but in too many instances it means "joy riding" in the place of duty, and the Lord's treasury suffers seriously through these heavy expenditures. The seat at church gets more uncomfortable, and the sermons are so pointed and tiresome that the easy seat of the auto becomes preferable, and the family "take a spin" and enjoy the cool air rather than the service which the Lord has ordained for his people on his day. The prayer service which has been so great a blessing to the people of God is almost entirely neglected,—the car must be used, as "the children like it, and we need it." And so the unwary are caught in the whirl of pleasure, which is most surely seizing many of the Saints in its most dangerous current of destroying power. And all this in the light of what we are most earnestly admonished to do in the way of upholding and helping to carry on the work of God.

We have most certainly reached the danger mark, in this regard, and there will most assuredly come a day when the hand of affliction and judgment will be felt, for these serious conditions prevailing among us. While I am confident many of those to whom this part of my article has application will not read it,—for those who can not find time to attend the regular meetings at the house of God have not the interest in the church publications they should have, for in proportion to the growth of the love of pleasure and self-gratification among the Saints, will come a less desire to read our church papers, and the law of God as found in the standard works of the church,—yet we place our views and criticism where they may be found, without apologies.

There is a most serious lack of spiritual life among our young people here as well as other places where we have labored. With all the efforts put forth through the auxiliaries of the church, as well as the regular counsel through the preaching of the word and exhortation, there seems to be no perceptible difference in the attitude of the majority of our young people toward spirituality, unless it is in the fact that it grows less as the advantages increase. Here in Independence, as in other places, you can get the crowd through a dish of ice cream, through the concert, social, or a mild vaudeville, (all this, of course, for some good cause); but the faithful few, in proportion to the membership, are of course found in the places for something better when the Lord provides the feast. We have nothing to say against the social gatherings of our people if it does not take the place of something more profitable, and where it is the only thing to get them together, and where interest can only be aroused under such conditions, the outlook is anything but promising for the building up of Zion and its redemption. The song, "All is well in Zion; Zion prospers, all is well," does not exactly fit at present; but we must do the best possible to bring about the conditions favorable for our work.

There are here many of the best Saints to be found anywhere in the church, and of the kind who are trying to sanctify their lives and live so that the Spirit of Christ is visible in what they do. They are not only anxious to build up Zion, but are in reality doing it; these are not all the old residents of Independence, or of Jackson County; many of them have come from a "Zion" hundreds of miles from here; yea, some have come from foreign shores, but have come from the "Zion" of a spiritual household, and from a well conducted and spiritual branch where geographically it would not be considered Zion. It is not location which will bring about character and spiritual preparation for the Master's coming; this will only be beneficial and helpful to anyone as they take hold of the opportunities afforded and make their service for the Master one of the heart, and fully in harmony with the celestial law. Thus self-abnegation, sacrifice, the purifying of the soul in humility of spirit, and intercourse with the Father in prayer and secret meditation, the visitation to the sick chamber, and to the widow, excluding from the life selfishness, self-indulgence, and worldly pleasure,—the life where these characteristics prevail will constitute the "Zion" of God wherever found.

DO NOT EXPECT PERFECTION.

Those coming to make this part of the Lord's vineyard their home should not expect perfection, or a different kind of humanity to what is found in other towns or cities, only as the grace of God has been at work and taken off the rough edges in proportion to the willingness of each to submit to the processes put into operation for this purpose. Humanity is weak wherever you may find men, and will be until perfection is reached.

The attractions and allurements for pleasure and wickedness are here at the center stake as elsewhere, and human nature is just as weak. The picture shows, theaters, and pleasure parks are patronized by many, and much of the money which might go toward the support of church work goes toward supporting the destructive elements of Babylon; there is danger ahead—serious danger for the young of the church, and for some not so young. We will all have to do some house cleaning before the glory promised can rest upon Zion and her claims be established as "the light of the world." But the work can be done if we will.

Eternity alone will reveal to us the soul travail of those prominent among the servants of God who have occupied positions of responsibility in the important work of building up Zion,—the almost crushing disappointments confronting them in their work, when trying to teach and cultivate the principles of righteousness in the lives of men and women, many of them but half-converted to Christ and his eternal principles of holiness, opposed to proper discipline, and the laws which should be honored by all who constitute any part of Zion. The successes and failures, making up the long history of a people with so exalted an ideal before them, with the enemy of righteousness ever busy to sow the seeds of discord among them, make for those servants of God a gigantic task, so much so that many have failed to perform what they undertook as leaders, and the rank and file fell far short of the prize held out for faithful service, and altogether failed to reach the ideal placed before them. How will it be with us?

THE LATE REVELATION.

In the late revelation we are admonished as follows:

As members and as the body at large, to avoid the unnecessary building of houses of worship or places of entertainment or otherwise expending the tithes and offerings of the church in that which may not be essential unto the continued onward progress of the general work; and both in private and in public expenditure carry into active exercise the principle of sacrifice and repression of unnecessary wants; and thus permit the accumulation of tithes and offerings in such amounts as may be needful to properly discharge the existing indebtedness of the church as a body.

In the light of this which has become a law unto the church, and to which as Saints we have pledged our loyalty and obedience, we go ahead with what we may have determined to do, and plunge into debt to carry out the desire of a few to appear as smart as their neighbors, and build expensive church buildings, purchase grounds for reunion purposes which can only be used for about ten days in the year (two weeks at the most), with places of entertainment, and some of these remote from where the Lord has said his people shall gather and assemble, while the church languishes for the means to carry out its important work; while the great work of translating into other languages, tracts, etc., with other important features of our work are neglected. Can this end in anything but disaster while the appeals and entreaties which are so frequently placed before us are ignored?

The part of the work assigned to us as individuals, is all we can do, nothing less than that, in service, in loyalty, in money, in righteousness of life, in sacrifice; to thus respond to the voice of the Lord we must get busy if the work committed to us is ever accomplished.

There is no better place than right here to carry out the purposes of God as revealed in his law. The willing, loyal soul, who has the fear of God in his heart has a splendid opportunity to put into effect all the graces accumulated by gospel discipline, such as patience, faith, forbearance, brotherly kindness, and charity; and has advantages for efficient service found in few places.

GOD'S PURPOSE IN GATHERING TOGETHER HIS PEOPLE.

"In union there is strength," and when the forces ordained of God to carry out his purposes in the building up of his Zion are brought together and are more thoroughly organized, then a greater work can be accomplished.

The gathering together of the people of God is a necessity, as there is to be a city builded, the capitol of the church of Jesus Christ and his kingdom upon the earth—a city of righteousness, a city of refuge and of safety for the Saints,—for the perils will gather more thickly around us than ever before, and there must needs be a provision made for those who are worthy of protection, when the destructive elements are no longer kept in abeyance by the mighty hand of God, and the sea shall roll beyond its natural limits, and the flames of devouring fire shall belch forth in fury as predicted by the mouth of many of the holy prophets since the world began; when the earth shall tremble and hurl the mountains from their bases, and the earth shall be deluged in blood. Christ said unless these days are shortened there shall be no flesh saved; hence the need of a place where the hand of God's protection can be over his children.

"The law of the Lord shall go forth from Zion" representing the intelligence of God; and the city bearing his name must be a city of holiness, purity of heart and of life, or it can not answer the demand of its author. Then the law of equality must become a reality and every worthy Saint shall receive what is just and right under the law "according to his needs and wants inasmuch as his wants are just."

There shall be no place for the idler, so that the excuse often used now, "I am not going to support this brother or that sister in their idleness and unworthiness" will have no place among God's people. For we are informed there will be a gathering out, as well as a gathering to and in the Zion of latter days. "The idlers" I am persuaded has reference not only to the individual who refuses to provide bread and necessary clothing for his family, but also to the idle servant of God who has been ordained to work in spiritual things, to build up the kingdom of God, and who refuses to perform his part—the man who has neglected the necessary preparation to perform acceptable service for the Lord, and becomes an idler in the ranks of those bearing the ensign of the Master.

Zion when receiving the indorsement of God will be a busy city; the provision so necessary for the Saint must soon be attended to, and industries be provided for our people; then will the law which provides stewardships for those who have place in Zion be more fully put into effect; and each will be assigned his place and duty to carry out the great design of God in his wise purposes for his people. We wait the day when equality, stewardships, and the promised inheritances shall be established as provided in the law.

The plain statement of facts in this article relating to some of the conditions existing here, should not convey the thought that there is no progress being made toward the great work in hand, for this is not the case; we see through the clouds that gather around us the bow of promise, and there will be a fulfillment of what the Lord has promised relating to the redemption of Zion, that she shall not be moved out of her place, and the faithful ones will do their part toward the bringing about of God's purposes, and though the work has been retarded, the final outcome will be as the Lord has said; but we feel sad for the apparent indifference among so many who could do so much better than they are doing. May a day of awakening soon be with us.

We close with the inspired utterance of the Psalmist, Psalm 132: 13.

For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest for ever: here will I dwell; for I have desired it. I will abundantly bless her provision; I will satisfy her poor with bread. I will also clothe her priests with salvation; and her saints shall shout aloud with joy. There will I make the horn of David to bud; I have ordained a lamp for mine anointed. His enemies will I clothe with shame; but upon himself shall his crown flourish.

ANNIVERSARIES AND SPECIAL DAYS IN GALLANDS GROVE DISTRICT.

NUMBER 20. "METHODS AND TACTICS" SERIES.

The living, active spirit in man is ever busy recalling the eventful days of sacred memory, as well as planning good for the present and the future. Of the value of memory's hallowed trust being refreshed, its treasure retold, the venerable Saint Peter gave the church membership the following counsel: "I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance. . . . For we have not followed cunningly devised fables. . . ." —2 Peter 1: 13-16.

The value of gathering the former day saints together, the stirring them up by putting them in remembrance of the fact that they had not followed "cunningly devised fables," was very necessary for their (as well as our) spiritual development and continual growth.

At an earlier date the Master gave the New Testament church the proof (Luke 7: 22) of what would result from a careful reciting of past evidences and blessings, when the imprisoned, discouraged, disheartened, John the Baptist sent a delegation of his brethren to Jesus with this important question, "Art thou the Christ, or look we for another?" He answered them, "Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard," and the recounting of the blessings bestowed was to John, as well as to his brethren, a real anniversary service, which revived them in gospel work.

The means so successfully made use of at that time has been fruitful in his church in this last gospel dispensation. Note the following to Oliver Cowdery:

If you desire a further witness, cast your mind upon the night that you cried unto me in your heart, that you might know concerning the truth of these things; did I not speak peace to your mind concerning the matter? What greater witness can you have than from God?—Doctrine and Covenants 6: 11.

We believe the desire for "further witness" is natural for nearly all Latter Day Saints, hence the pleasant and profitable benefits to be realized from branch and district anniversary services, or special days, set apart, at which time there can be a narrating of the blessings received, as well as trials endured and victories won by the help of the Holy Spirit, the sustaining grace of God.

At such meetings there will be the ever-encouraging presence and assuring words of the young (who may be termed the assets of the church) foreshadowing the splendid prospects and grand possibilities of this great latter-day work.

The Gallands Grove District, (Iowa), and some of its historic branches have held a few helpful anniversaries, and we believe every branch would have been benefited by them,—the reviving Spirit being alike beneficial and encouraging to the Sunday-school and Religios, which have their part in the special services,—however the latter organizations could more profitably hold their "rally days" at different times.

In arranging for such anniversary services a vote is first taken at the district conference, (should the district desire such a special meeting) or if a branch, the vote could be had at a branch business meeting and a committee on general arrangements appointed. This committee should provide a short historical write up, neatly printed, containing program, picture of place where meeting is to be held, also picture of place or places where the worshipping congregation formerly met, which may be distributed as a souvenir. The secular newspapers should be provided with a proper write up of the organization and notice of the proposed celebration.

It is well to provide for special historical sermons on the church, and the district or branch, as the occasion requires. The social services should be made a special feature, and the older members instructed to come prepared to give soul-cheering historical narratives and spiritual reminiscences; the younger members may speak appreciatively of the labors of the older ones, giving evidence of present growth in church work and of possibilities with increased faith and activity. "Absence makes the heart grow fonder," hence it is well to mail invitations to former members of the district, or branch, as the case may be, who could not attend, urging them to send short letters of gratitude, as well as words of testimony and exhortation to be read at the anniversary service.

In arranging the program do not overlook your district or branch poet, who will, doubtless, furnish an interesting poem containing much to inspire and encourage that would otherwise be omitted from the historical narratives.

Such gatherings are not complete, the sociability fully renewed and perpetuated, without a picnic dinner, at which time the aged and the afflicted should receive special attention. Good music is an essential part of the program.

It is very noticeable that the charter members of the Reorganization are intensely interested in reading the biographies and autobiographies of such veteran gospel standard bearers as Elders W. W. Blair, Alexander H. Smith, Charles Derry, and others, for an evening spent with such literature in hand, is, to many, much like attending an anniversary service,—living the life over and over again. Such experiences so carefully narrated are also encouraging and inspiring to the younger Saints.

"All those who do the best their circumstances allow, do well, act nobly—angels could do no more."

Saints, you should hold more anniversaries and special days, giving more time and opportunities for counting your blessings; for "the half has never yet been told."

The Staff

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

Forward.

With the passing of the extremely warm weather which has oppressed us these past six or eight weeks, we are expecting to see renewed interest and enthusiasm along musical lines. Our new anthems for use next General Conference will soon be in our hands, and we can just feel in advance the keen appreciation and pleasure with which the choirs all over the church will take them up, all the time keeping in mind the big result of united effort next spring!

Then, too, as Brother Hoxie is announcing, there will be the practicing and learning of Gaul's "Holy City" to interest, entertain, and enthuse us. Let us "get into the game" early, and stay with it!—to a revivifying result next April!

This month, in spite of warm weather we have received letters of encouragement and suggestion in gratifying numbers. A general wave-thought seems to have passed over the church people to the effect that we should write our own music! This thought has been the burden of several letters and articles, some of which will soon be published. This is as it should be. Thoughts develop into action and action, rightly directed, will bring wonderful results. By all means, let us give more attention to composition and the construction of music; let us see to it that our children are being trained along this line. We hope for great things from our children.

We have had, in our possession for years, the poem entitled "A song of gladness," believing it to have come from the pen of President Joseph Smith. Submitting it to him to-day, however, for confirmation of this belief, he could only say that if he wrote it, it was so long ago he has forgotten it! We give it anyway, because its message is inspiring and encouraging to a marked degree.

A Song of Gladness.

(Tune: "Rescue the Perishing.")

Hark! from celestial spheres
Comes a glad message,
Filling our hearts with a heavenly flame;
It is the voice of God,
For the blest Spirit
Bears solemn witness in Christ's holy name.

Chorus:

Hail to the truth divine—
Praise to its Author—
Glory to God on high! loudly proclaim.

Darkness no longer reigns—
Doubt has departed—
Light! Glorious light! shines in splendor around;
Now let all fear depart,
Dread apprehension
End, and the notes of our triumph resound.

Chorus:

Swell now the anthem loud—
Sing hallelujah!
God and his people in union are found.

Behold the quorums now
Stand in their places
Filled with the men whom our Lord doth approve;
Ready to bear abroad
Salvation's tidings—
Glorious message and mission of love.

Chorus:

Angels before them go!
God be their rearward!
Jesus upon them pour life from above!

See now the spacious field,
"White unto harvest,"
Waits for the sickles now glistening here.
Thrust in with might and main,
Reap while the day lasts,
Gather the sheaves ere the night doth appear.

Chorus:

Forward! for hast'ning time—
Swift day of warning,
Tells that the coming of Jesus is near!

Church of the living God,
Rise now in grandeur—
Welcome the signal that waves from the skies;
Prophet and Patriarch—
Quorums and councils
Answer the summons: Arise! Saints arise!

Chorus:

Israel, thy light behold
God gives thee glory
Rise in thy majesty—Zion arise!

Musical Notes.

It was stated by Mr. John C. Freund, who is publisher and editor of two musical journals, before the Music Teachers' Convention held in Saratoga a short time ago that $600,000,000 is annually expended on music in the United States. He substantiated this statement later in an article published in the New York Sun, in which he estimates that of this vast sum, $220,000,000 goes for teachers, private and otherwise; $135,000,000 for pianos; about $95,000,000 for other instruments and musical merchandise, $80,000,000 for bands, orchestras and concerts; and $40,000,000 for church music.

Comparing the United States with Germany, which is considered musically to be the foremost European nation, Mr. Freund claims that whereas the latter spends ten times as much on its army and navy as it does on music, the United States spends three times as much on music as it does on the army and navy.

For our musical education it is estimated that we have about one regular music teacher for each five thousand of population in the United States; while there is an annual output of four hundred thousand pianos, or more than all European countries combined. This great industry has grown to these proportions practically within the last forty years.

That there may be a favorable change in the attitude of the Roman Catholic Church toward this country may be inferred from the fact that at their convention held in Milwaukee recently, at which many thousands, including Cardinal Gibbons and other noted dignitaries, were present, the Catholic choirs of Milwaukee gave a sacred concert of which the opening number on their program was "America," which a previous Catholic convention at Buffalo voted "un-American." In this instance, however, their former action did not prevent them from giving the famous song a hearty reception.

Helen Keller has at last heard the strains of music. Although she is absolutely deaf the sounds were communicated to her brain by firmly holding her teeth against the bridge of Mr. Franz Kohler's violin while the celebrated player produced the music, which she declared was "like the voices of angels."

Experiments made some time ago by a French medical expert have shown that the use of alcoholic beverages lessen the singer's vocal range, and in time may even ruin the voice. The use of the milder wines are not as harmful as are the stronger drinks, but some of them produce very disastrous effects; from which it is scientifically concluded that intoxicants should be excluded from the successful vocalist's gustatorial program.

That even birds have their favorite keys in which they give forth their little songs is indicated in the report that in a certain part of England it has been discovered that all the common owls there hoot in the key of B flat, while the cuckoos present their strains in the key of D.

Simple Construction.

The thought appeals to me that a series of brief and simple lessons in musical construction, beginning with the rudiments, might prove very beneficial to the future of the music department of the church. If some of the young of each of the districts of the church could have an organizer who would work for the purpose of enlisting as many as possible as students of orchestral instruments, it would not be many years ere our church would be splendidly equipped. I hope to see this accomplished in the near future.

Wishing your department every success, I am,

Sincerely yours,

A. B. PHILLIPS.

Why Not Our Own Music?

Has it occurred to our musicians that we are very indolent in the matter of music composition? And why? The reason usually given is that the composers of the world produce music so much superior to our own, that it is better to use a high or meritorious class of music produced by others, rather than use an inferior grade of our own production.

This superiority may be all duly conceded. But should this hinder our making the effort to produce our own music? The inferiority of our own will be continued so long as we are willing to have it so. I fear that we are not making the effort in this direction we should be making. But if we used more of our own productions than we do, might it not encourage greater efforts and therefore better results than hitherto?

As long as we depend entirely upon the world for our music, we will not develop much composition talent among ourselves.

Words and music used by others are seldom adapted to our faith. We are peculiarly different—separated in faith—from the rest of the world. We need more of both words and music such as will distinctively set forth the gospel and the true faith to the world. Let those who have a knowledge of composition and harmony unite with those possessing poetical talent to give to the church and to the world that which will truly and correctly represent our faith in song.

There is no more effectual way of creating an impression upon the mind than by singing the truth in words set to appropriate and appealing music. Is it not possible for us as a church to arouse to a realization of our duty and occupy a more advanced position than hitherto?

Perhaps it is you, brother, or you, sister, upon whom devolves the responsibility of greatly aiding, if not taking the lead, in the forward movement of this great cause.

One great desire of the writer is to live to see the time when, as a church, we shall exclusively produce both our own music and words for the song service. May the day hasten.

Teaching Children Musical Composition.

Having many times thought I would write an article on music, for the benefit of "my people," I renew my determination since reading the good articles on the subject in the HERALD.

I would like to see each branch have its regular, well-educated music teacher for the children, and as many more as would be instructed; for the instruction should be the year round. The subject of music is so great and its harmonies so intricate, that a thousand years' course would be small enough. It has no end; it is like trying to dip the sea dry with a small glass.

Some have said, "Practice makes perfect." No; not in this life. It may lead on towards perfection.

Children should, in their first year's work, be taught the foundations of composition. For example, after learning to read the notes, they should write out the scale of C, and from it be taught how to build the simple major chords. No other more complicated chords should be introduced for a while, for fear the children can not keep them in their proper relations. They will be quick to recognize the beautiful harmonies in these plain chords, and will be able to write out, in note form, simple exercises. Thus they may be led, by easy steps, to enlarge upon the foundation so firmly laid.

Introducing the minor chords, later, we tell them that Mr. C. Major married Miss A. Minor, and that she lived three doors below his house. This impresses the close relation between the major and minor chords. By this time we have material enough for the composition of hymns, marches, operettas, and hundreds of beautiful things.

Children must always be coached, of course. I had a little pupil, nine years old, who said, "Oh, Mrs. Martin, I can not get that lesson in a week, if it is short!"

I knew she couldn't, but I asked, "Why?"

The reply was, "Oh, look! there are two minor seventh chords made into runs, and two diminished chords, and a chord of the tenth!"

"Well, what of it?"

"Why, the minor runs throw my hands all out of fix!"

And so they would throw the little hand out of fix, indeed! It would need ten times the practice a major run would need; and yet we have teachers who tell children one is as easy as the other. This child knew better;—she knew what it meant. And this is true education.

Three years ago, my old German master said to me, "You teachers will be nottings until you teach de shillern how to build!"

How true were his words! I can not forget them! Why not teach our children to make cake as well as to eat it? If they were taught to build and write, the ground could be covered in a third of the time it takes under the present system; they would then be ready to go on, and "Come up higher," in the work. But alas! how many pupils do we know who practice year in and year out, and if asked to play a selection, will reply, "Oh, I can't without my music." This ought not to be. Here is the substance of the thought. A student has a piece of music set before him. He looks it over. "Ha! I can do the first O. K., because it is the key of C, and I don't have to go outside the regular family for embellishments, and I believe I have written up, ten or fifteen times, every sentence in that place when I was doing my exercises."

Many people have wondered how it is that a man like Rubenstein, or Strauss, and others, can sit down to a composition he has never seen before, and play it readily, when it takes so many years to learn to play well. Here is the secret. Their knowledge of harmony and composition is great, and all they have to do is to watch the tune, for they know the manipulation of every combination of the selection, had it all as written exercises years and years before. They may not play it just exactly as it is written,—sometimes they may put a chord in another position, but the letters are the same.

Now, can not our people be up-to-date, and do all these valuable things as well as others? If the branch president appoints a teacher for the children, drive out all prejudice from your hearts! Don't give heed to slanderous statements made by some one who may pretend to know. If the teacher, so chosen is well educated, she can't be very bad, because it takes too much valuable time to learn these great things.

"But," says one, "you can't do these things amongst our people; some will withdraw; some will be offended, and your branch class will dwindle to one or two."

Well, let the teacher be faithful to one or two, and teach as much as though she had fifty.

It is also the privilege of the branch president and people to see that their teacher studies just as hard as the children. You can tell by the number of manuscripts she holds in her hand, whether she has been laboring or not. As one sister here says, "I have never studied music myself, but I can tell exactly what my children are doing in their lessons, as I always read the instructions in their canvas-backed books, where the teacher has indicated their work for them; and I shall, from now on, insist that every teacher follow this plan."

This, you see, is business. Now then, let us all begin, in the "soft September time," to practice our Christmas music. Let us learn the best. Satan will be present to get in his work if he can; he always has his own compositions to palm off on the unsuspecting. He has so many cake-walks and other compositions built on a few major chords. He doesn't like to have us learn music made up of major, minor, diminished, augmented, sevenths, and hundreds of other beautiful combinations. It takes too much of our time from his interests, and is altogether too grand and ennobling for him and his kind to admire.

Do not be afraid the children will not grasp these harmonies; they will, and much younger than you may have imagined. The Spirit will assist us in this good work. It is so intricate that none but the Great Helper can thoroughly cover the ground.

NELLIE M. MARTIN.

FERRY, IOWA, July 18, 1913.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, August 30, 1913.

Dear Sister Anderson: I cut the inclosed from the editorial page of our Globe Democrat, because it seems particularly good to me. I thought you might insert it in your column in the HERALD.

I know from experience that singing church hymns is a sure cure for the blues, and it is a fact that worries and depression of spirit can be relieved in the same way. I have told people when very angry to sing a good rousing hymn, for anger and song can not long live in peace in the same body.

Singing and cheerfulness cause a physical uplift of the diaphragm and relieve weakness and heaviness of the bodily parts.

In gospel love,

MRS. S. R. BURGESS.

A PRESCRIPTION.

For a short breath and an irregular and weak heart, go to a church service, where they have congregational singing, and join in the songs with spirit and vigor. It is a fine exercise and brings the heart and the lungs into tune with a wholesome melody. That is what health is—harmony. And if these organs can be put into tune with some grand and hopeful hymn, they will insure strength and joy. This intangible and invisible medicine is the best there is. Even when the doctor comes you depend upon it more than on his pills. See how the short breath stretches and the heart beats strong when you hold your head high and sing with your might, old "Coronation" or "Nearer, my God," or "Onward, Christian soldier." Why, those old tunes will cure almost anything if a man pitches in and sings them with a vim. We are not talking whims. This is plain science.

Lamoni.

Don't think because you haven't heard from us that we are dead, or even sleeping soldiers. We have been very busy of late, on duty night and day. Have you?

Somewhere we are not told to let our left hand know what our right hand doeth, but seeing it is you, we will tell you a few things. Perhaps you all know about the work accomplished during General Conference with which Brother Hoxie was well pleased. Not only was Brother Hoxie pleased, but also our heavenly Father, as is shown in the word given us through Brother Griffiths. God also recognizes the effort and work of our accomplished and worthy chorister, Sister May Skinner, and sent words of encouragement to both herself and her choir. The members all like her and it only seems a pleasure for each one to put forth his best effort to make our devotions to the Lord the more harmonious.

Besides a men's chorus, we have a fine, large, ladies chorus, over which we are quite enthusiastic. New music is continually being added to our already large possessions, so we have no chance to ring in the "sing song effect" to our anthems. Neither would we overlook the Juvenile Chorus of about fifty voices, also under the direction of Sister Skinner. They are doing splendid work and promise much for the future.

We have an organized body called the Lamoni Saints' Choir, a full code of laws and a complete staff of active officers. Our motto is, "With my song will I praise him."—Psalm 28: 7. We are trying to improve our talents and every effort is being greatly blessed. Now that we have confided in you, we will just take time to write to you again. While at present haste compels us to bid you adieu, yet our prayers will ascend for you and we would request an interest in your earnest petitions in our behalf.

October Reading--The First Ten Years.

"The total assets of a country are always chiefly in the men, women, and children in that country, and you can reckon out in dollars and cents to a certain extent what men, women, and children are worth in their producing power as earning machines. What is it worth to this country to have efficient workers in our mills, to have efficient brain workers in our banks and counting houses, to have efficient men in public life, to have an efficient president of the United States who does not get sick? What is it worth to a country? Why, it is worth untold millions, untold billions, and any estimate of the worth must be a minimum estimate."

This extract is from an address by Irving Fisher, Ph. D., professor of political economy in Yale University, an economist of international reputation. He stands at the head of "The committee of one hundred," organized to secure a national department of health, which, it is predicted, will be in existence within a few years. The address referred to was upon the conservation of human health, and in it the speaker asserted that "in this country there is not very much interest in public health, due to the fact that there is too much interest in public wealth."

Narrowing the consideration of the subject of public health to the welfare of children, statistics show that the interests of the latter have been neglected in the acquisition of public wealth. G. Stanley Hall protests that we record every trifling business transaction, keep pedigrees of blooded stock, and know what the wheat produce of the country is almost to a bushel, but are ignorant of the children of the country.

It is coming to be recognized that the basis of human progress is good health. "Above all else," says Luther Burbank, "the child must be a healthy animal."

THE PERIOD OF PREPARATION.

Mr. Burbank, the renowned student of plant-life and demonstrator of its wonderful possibilities, has also been a student of child-life. He is the author of a little book entitled The Training of the Human Plant, the reading of which we highly recommend to parents.

This writer lays great stress on the physical development of a child in the first ten years of his life. He says the injury wrought to the race by keeping too young children indoors at school is beyond the power of anyone to estimate, and that no boy or girl should see the inside of a schoolroom until at least ten years old. He reasons that the first ten years of a child's life should be given to the development of strong, sturdy bodies, with normal nerves, splendid digestion, and unimpaired lungs. This physical preparation they should have before taking up the heavier burdens of study. He asks, "What is life worth, with the nervous system shattered?" and urges upon parents that they preserve to the child as his priceless portion the integrity of the nervous system.

He supposes a case in which a child is placed in kindergarten at the age of three or four, enters the primary school at five, and is pushed to his utmost until he is ten. He asserts that the integrity of the nervous system is thus impaired, no matter what any so-called educator may say, and that the child can never again be what he would have been, had he been taken as the plant cultivator takes a plant and been fitted for his future in "the first ten precious years of his life."

"Nothing else," says Mr. Burbank, "is doing so much to break down the nervous systems of Americans, not even the insane rushing of mature years, as this overcrowding and cramming of child-life before the age of ten. And the mad haste of maturer years is the legitimate result of the earlier strain."

NOURISHMENT.

Human life, as plant-life, must have proper nourishment to maintain bodily health. The child must not be underfed, neither should he be overfed, and his food should be properly balanced. "Upon the food the child is fed in the first ten years largely depends its moral future," says Burbank, and with him agrees Froebel who says, "Not only may the child by this means be made indolent or active, sluggish or mobile, dull or bright, inert or vigorous, but, indeed, for his entire life, impressions, inclinations, appetites, which the child may have derived from his food, the turn it may have given his senses and even his life as a whole, can only with difficulty be set aside, even when the age of self-dependence has been reached."

"Upon good food for the child, well-balanced food, depends good digestion; upon good digestion, with pure air to keep the blood pure, depends the nervous system." (Burbank.)

CLOSE TO NATURE.

Mr. Burbank would have the child for the first ten years of his life reared in the open, close to nature. He says every child should have mud pies, grasshoppers, water bugs, tadpoles, frogs, mud turtles, elder berries, wild strawberries, acorns, chestnuts, trees to climb, brooks to wade in, water lilies, woodchucks, bats, bees, butterflies, animals to pet, hay-fields, pine cones, rocks to roll, sand to play in, etc. By acquaintance with these things they come into intimate harmony with nature, whose lessons are natural and wholesome.

We find Doctor Hall in agreement with Mr. Burbank in this teaching. Sanctioning the earlier teaching of Froebel, he says, "The child is a plant, a vegetable, and must, as I have said, live out of doors, or in as nearly out-of-door conditions as possible." He approves the European kindergartens over the American, because they bring the child into closer touch with nature. In many of the former there are ample tree-planted playgrounds and covered spaces, also playrooms besides the gardens. There are often pet animals, both caged and free, which the children may care for or feed. In some of those foreign kindergartens, there are tanks, aquaria, and even small ponds with fish, turtles, ducks, frogs, toads, etc., sometimes dogs, cats, and even kids and goats, with their harnesses and wagons. "Perhaps the finest kindergarten installation in the world to-day is the magnificent newly built Pestalozzi-Froebel House, in the outskirts of Berlin, with its ample grounds, individual flower beds, fishponds, wildwood for birds, and its well equipped building for a cooking school."

Writing of those agencies which send city children to the country during the heated periods, Doctor Hall suggests that the day may come sooner than we expect when our schools may be ruralized, and, instead of some older children coming to the cities daily for school, more and younger children may go out to schools in the country. He ventures the opinion that children would profit by thus coming into contact with nature and that the public can well afford the expense in consideration of the good that would accrue from such provision.

Under the ideal school program of the future, as Doctor Hall conceives it, there will be very little confinement and sedentary work for children under the age of eight.

REARED IN LOVE.

Mr. Burbank says: "Not only would I have the child reared for the first ten years of his life in the open, in close touch with nature, but I would have him reared in love. You can never bring up a child to its best estate without love. . . . Love must be at the basis of all our work for the race. . . . Surround the children with every possible cheer. I do not mean to pamper them, to make them weak; they need the winds, just as plants do, to strengthen them and make them self-reliant. If you want your child to grow up into a sane, normal man, a good citizen, a support to the state, you must keep him in the sunshine, keep him happy. You can not do this if you have a sour face yourself. Smiles and laughter cost nothing. . . . Do not be cross with the child; you can not afford it. If you are cultivating a plant, developing it into something finer and nobler, you must love it, not hate it; be gentle with it, not abusive; be firm, never harsh. . . . Let the children have music, let them have pictures, let them have laughter, let them have a good time; not an idle time, but one full of cheerful occupation. Surround them with all the beautiful things you can. Plants should be given sun and air and blue sky; give them to your boys and girls. I do not mean for a day or a month, but for all the years."

EARLY BEGINNINGS.

Mr. Burbank has discovered that desirable attributes which are lacking in a plant may be bred into it. He says: "Choose what improvement you wish in a flower, a fruit, or a tree, and by crossing, selection, cultivation, and persistence you can fix this desirable trait irrevocably. Pick out any trait you want in your child, granted that he is a normal child, . . . be it honesty, fairness, purity, loveliness, industry, thrift, what not. By surrounding this child with sunshine from the sky and from your own heart, by giving him the closest communion with nature, by feeding this child well-balanced, nutritious food, by giving it all that is implied in healthful environmental influences, and by doing all in love, you can thus cultivate in the child and fix there for all its life all those traits. . . . But remember that just as there must be in plant cultivation great patience, unswerving devotion to the truth, the highest motive, absolute honesty, unchanging love, so must it be in the cultivation of a child. If it be worth while to spend ten years upon the ennoblement of a plant, be it fruit, tree, or flower, is it not worth while to spend ten years upon a child in this precious formative period, fitting it for the place it is to occupy in the world?"

The writer of these truths so beautifully expressed suggests to us that of all living things the child is the most susceptible to influence, and that, before the age of ten, we have an unparalleled opportunity to work; "for nowhere else is there material so plastic." He urges that the best should be put into a child by bringing him in contact with the best things, that the people about him be those from whom he may learn to be honest, self-respecting, industrious, kind, and true. He admonishes us that as "keeping everlastingly at it" is what fixes a trait in a plant, so it is by constant, patient repetition of good influence that desirable traits are fixed in a child.

COMPULSORY SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.

The ideal condition suggested by both Mr. Burbank and Doctor Hall contemplates the first eight or ten years of a child's life free from confining school work. It is to be noted, however, that neither of these earnest students of nature advocates that period as one of idleness, but rather as one spent under wise and loving guidance.

In this land and in various foreign lands there are compulsory school laws, intended to protect young children from being put to work in shops, factories, mines, etc., and to secure to them the opportunities of education. This law which sends many children to school before the time advocated by those whose writings we have quoted is a beneficent one for many children who are not properly cared for in their homes and who are not wisely directed in the occupation of their time.

Having adopted the principle of compulsory school attendance, the state must also assume responsibility for the health of the children "whom we keep in schools during the most tender and sensitive years of their existence." Realizing this, the state is beginning to provide for the medical inspection of schools, which has already shown that many children are seriously handicapped in the race of life by defects in teeth, vision, hearing, or breathing, and by other physical conditions which lessen vitality and predispose to disease. Doctor Osler, esteemed the highest medical authority in the world, says defective teeth are working more havoc to-day than alcohol.

The effort of the state to do its duty toward school children has resulted in the formation of the International Congress on School Hygiene, which held its session this year in August, in Buffalo, New York. This congress will work for the betterment of the conditions of school children. Through this medical supervision of schools, connected with which there is "the follow-up system," much certainly may be expected by way of physical and mental improvement in the coming generation.

The follow-up system provides for the employment of school nurses whose work is to secure the cooperation of parents by visiting homes, explaining the condition of defective children, giving advice concerning personal and home hygiene and, if necessary, accompanying the child to a physician.

Child-life and human life in general are far below the ideal condition toward which men are striving, but progress is being made toward it. Each community, each family, in its limited sphere, should reach out after that which is perfect even in the present life, that efficiency and happiness may be attained, for "men are that they might have joy," and joy comes through the development of human powers, physical, mental, and spiritual. It is the design of Him who created us, fashioning us after his own image and giving us of his intelligence.

From a monetary standpoint, it is worth untold millions, untold billions to our country to have men, women, and children made efficient for the toil of life by conserving their physical health. Beyond our power to estimate is the priceless value of the human soul which is affected by material surroundings. What care, then, should be given to the physical welfare of the race, beginning with the children.

The Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE FOURTH THURSDAY IN SEPTEMBER.

For the Sunday schools, Zion's Religio, and all the auxiliary departments of the church; that each may help to bring about the exalted condition of purity and righteousness God demands and expects of his people—the oneness in heart and purpose for which Christ prayed.

John 17: 1-26. Memory Verse, John 17: 21.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Prayers are asked in behalf of David Thomas, who is so sick that hope is not entertained for his recovery except by his brother who sends in this request. He is not of the church and his brother who makes the request hopes he may be spared through God's mercy and that he may be led to obey the gospel.

A sister writes asking the Prayer Union to intercede for her daughter, that the Lord may guide her at the critical time when she is disposed to marry one not of the church. The mother does not wish to interfere unwisely and yet is exceedingly anxious that her daughter shall not make a mistake in so serious a matter. She, therefore, desires us to pray that the Lord may overrule for good in this matter.

The sister who makes this request is an isolated Saint and desires the Saints also to pray that she may be brought into association with the church, that her children may have the benefit of such association.

Every man's task is his life-preserver. The conviction that his work is dear to God, and can not be spared, defends him.—Emerson.

Passing of Elder C. H. Lake.

We are sorry to inform you that the Island mission is mourning the loss of our beloved brother and president of the mission, Charles H. Lake, son of J. H. Lake. I send a few items, written by Sister Lake, which you will desire, perhaps, in making the announcement to the readers of the HERALD.

Elder C. H. Lake was born September 30, 1868, at Sand Prairie, Iowa; died at the Island of Amanu in the Tuamotuan Islands, June 15, 1913. He was overcome with a hemorrhage of the lungs, growing weaker until death, which occurred about two weeks later.

He was baptized in 1877 by his father, John H. Lake. He was first ordained to the office of priest, and later, on August 21, 1898, was ordained an elder by A. H. Smith and E. L. Kelley, at Boston, Massachusetts. He was ordained to the office of high priest April 30, 1901, at Lamoni, Iowa, by Joseph Luff and R. M. Elvin, and on the same day, by the same parties, was ordained a member of the high council of the Stake of Lamoni. For several years he labored in a local way in the Massachusetts District, for a time holding the office of district president.

In 1905 he was appointed to labor as a missionary in Deer Isle, Maine, and the year following was appointed to the South Sea Island Mission, where he labored for four years, when, owing to failing health he returned to America, where he remained for two years, and upon reappointment to the South Sea Island Mission, returned there in the year 1912, where he labored as president of the mission until his demise.

Thus one of our earnest and diligent workers in the service of the Master has passed away. The funeral was held in a little church in a cocoonut grove on the Island of Amanu. A large assembly of natives met to pay a fitting tribute to the memory of Elder Lake.

Your brother in Christ,

J. CHARLES MAY.

PAPEETE, TAHITI, August 22, 1913.

Independence Vacation Bible School.

At a business meeting of the branch held last June, the feasibility of instituting a summer vacation school was discussed, the decision being that the effort might be made, provided the branch should not be required to finance the venture, it being already overburdened. A board was appointed, consisting of Brethren G. E. Harrington, Ellis Short, O. K. Fry, W. H. Garrett, and D. J. Krahl; subsequently, Brother Short advised that he could not serve, and Brother M. A. Etzenhouser, who received the next highest vote, at the business meeting, was added to the board to fill the vacancy.

Shortly after their selection, a meeting of the board was held, at which it was definitely decided to proceed with the work, and the preliminaries were arranged. There was some division of opinion among the branch members, though not shared by the board, as to the necessity and advisability of holding such a school in Independence, where conditions such as exist in crowded cities, do not prevail; but the board deemed it of sufficient importance to at least give the matter a fair trial, and having the advice and support of President F. M. Smith and others in doing so, they proceeded energetically to set it in motion.

The president of the board, Brother G. E. Harrington, secured the financial aid of quite a number of the brethren and sisters to enable him to secure the necessary material for a beginning, and also engaged the valuable services of Brother

W. E. LaRue, as superintendent. Monday, July 7, was designated as the opening date. Appointments were made from among the volunteer assistants, thus arranging for the following departments: Hammock, willow baskets, Indian basketry, raffia and miscellaneous, sewing, embroidery, crocheting, kindergarten, calisthenics, music.

It was surprising as well as encouraging to see the enthusiasm with which the children entered into the work. The first period, from 9.30 to 10.25 a. m., was occupied with songs, Bible stories, habit talks, and addresses from visitors, and others. Among the visitors were Mr. Christian Ott, mayor of the city, Professor George S. Bryant, principal of the high school of the city, and Reverend L. E. Floyd, pastor of the Baptist church, of Independence, all of whom expressed themselves in complimentary and appreciative terms regarding the work being done.

There was an enrollment of 371 and an average daily attendance of about 305, (the six schools in Kansas City, Missouri, during the same period with an enrollment of over 800, had an average attendance of 385). The work period was about fifty minutes each day, five days each week, the term being six weeks. In this time the following pieces were made: 86 hammocks, 17 towels, 16 dresses, (some of them by little eight-year-old girls); 36 pieces embroidery (an average of two to each worker); 30 pieces crocheting, 24 willow baskets, 30 pieces Navaho baskets and other raffia work. In the raffia and miscellaneous department there were 272 pieces finished and 10 unfinished.

The kindergarten was one of the most interesting departments, and attracted a great deal of attention from visitors. They had six tables at which the little tots made doll hammocks, paper rings, or ropes, picture books and sand forms. Their play periods, under the direction of the instructor, were very much enjoyed by them.

A Donation Day was observed the last Wednesday morning of the school, and the superintendent and others were well pleased when the announcement was made that one hundred dollars and one cent had been contributed. Besides this donation, a collection had been taken the previous Wednesday for the General Association, 40 Bible House, New York City, to aid in the establishing of new schools next year, which amounted to seven dollars. There were other contributions amounting to $151.27. Schweers Brothers contributing $3.20, in ice cream and cones for treats to the children, and the Central Lumber Company, $3.00, in lumber to make shuttles and boards for the hammock workers. The total receipts were $266.27, and the expenses for supplies and services were $231.26, besides the $7.00 for the General Association, making $238.26, leaving a balance of $28.01.

The closing exercises were held Thursday evening, August 14, and consisted of songs, kindergarten work, calisthenics, addresses and reports, the main auditorium of the church being well filled. At the conclusion the work was exhibited in the dining hall to an admiring and appreciative inspection, universal expressions of approval and delighted surprise being manifested. Friday morning the school assembled as usual, and after short exercises, the pupils were marched into the dining hall where the work was distributed to the workers, and the first Daily Vacation Bible School of Independence was ended, with results most gratifying to all engaged in it.

The assistance cheerfully, and even enthusiastically given by some of other faiths was very much appreciated; we had one little Hebrew boy among the hammock makers. We were also pleased to have a visit from the superintendent of the work in Kansas City, in company with a settlement worker of the city, who expressed much pleasure in what they saw and heard. The unusually hot, dry weather prevailing this summer made the work trying and wearying at times, but none failed on that account. It was encouraging to see the unity and diligence shown to make the school a success, and the results were worthy of the efforts made. The telling of the Bible stories commanded the most earnest and absorbed attention from the children, and the "tellers," Sister M. A. Etzenhouser, and Brother LaRue, were most heartily applauded, as were Sisters E. L. Kelley, D. J. Krahl, J. A. Gardner, Professor Bryant, Reverend Floyd, and others who occupied.

We believe it will well repay the efforts of the Saints in every average sized branch to take up this work for the sake of the good they may do among the children, both of our own number and others who are willing to attend; the good to be accomplished is incalculable, if faithful, earnest, and persistent efforts are put into it. We feel assured that so far as possible those engaged in the work here will gladly render any assistance they can in its promotion.

Jots by the Wayside.

We are at the Pine Creek Branch, amid the Ozarks, in Arkansas, the land of "Red Apples" and "Clear seed peaches"—free stones. Coming from almost burnt up Kansas and Oklahoma, it is a pleasant surprise to find in these hills such fine crops of corn and cereals of all kinds. The seed that fell upon stony ground this year is an exception to the ancient rule.

We found this little branch in turmoil and distress, caused by a brother in the last stage of apostasy—a law unto himself, regardless of church authority. He will continue his objectionable preaching no doubt, notwithstanding the silence imposed. "The church did not give me a ministry, neither can the church take it from me," etc., is the ground he is standing upon.

A priesthood meeting was called to investigate the brother's position, and we heard from him a tirade of abuse against the Book of Covenants and the leading men of the church. We protested, calling him to order, whereupon he rushed at us like a demon. Fortunately the blow was warded off, except for a glancing effect upon the shoulder. Better judgment took possession of us, while we calmly endured. He had his aids with him, who instantly placed their hands on their hip pockets, and were ready for a gun play if we should have retaliated. Holding our ground calmly and firmly, the bad spirit quickly quieted and he took his seat—having earned well the disgust of every Saint present.

The Devil hardly gives up the conflict without a struggle. We were called to administer to an aged sister, who was entirely bedfast. Her daughter objected, declaring we should not administer, ordering us from the house. We quickly discovered the evil spirit and stood our ground, making the necessary preparation for the administration. She ran into the kitchen and reappeared with the butcher knife. We tried to reason with her by saying that to pray for her poor sick mother could do no harm, etc. She finally rushed from the house, down through the corn field, seeking her brother-in-law. We quietly attended to prayer, and left the house before her return.

On the way home we heard of a Jersey male who had killed a neighbor as he was crossing the inclosure. This poor man will be buried to-morrow.

We are not very timid, but we are thinking of places outside of Arkansas where the evil spirit is not so plainly mani-festated in man, woman, and beast. Anyway we can truly say, "yours in the conflict."

Brothers James Smith and Walter Christensen are in these parts. The late excitement is filling the houses with hearers, and the outlook is victory for the Saints.

T. W. CHATBURN.

LEWISTON, NEW YORK, September 5, 1913.

Editors Herald: We, Brother B.-L. McKim, my wife and daughter and self, are with the gospel tent on the Tuscaroras Indian Reservation, about four miles south of Lewiston, New York. Held our first service last night and had a good sized and attentive audience. Of course we have opposition here, but there seems to be a desire upon the part of the Indians to listen to our message. We find them fairly intelligent and prosperous, wearing the garb, and with most of the ways of their white brothers, differing in this, that, so far, they have been uniformly kind to us.

The teacher of the Government school here, a Baptist minister, tried to keep us from putting up the tent. Also a gentleman (save the mark) who with an auto load of ladies was passing through and who announced himself as "a physician of Niagara Falls for the last twenty years," informed us that we "ought to be horsewhipped," but refused to state for what offense.

Well, by invitation of five of the chiefs we are located on the grounds of the council house, in the center of the reservation, which is about three by four miles, and contains about three hundred and sixty souls. How many of these we will be able to win for Christ I know not, but we are all trying to carefully sow the seed and are hopeful.

Sincerely yours,

A. M. CHASE.

SAINT CLAIR, MICHIGAN.

Editors Herald: We are living in momentous times. The rapid changes taking place indicate that a crisis is at hand, and that the curtain will soon be rung down on the last dispensation of times. To the superficial observer these everyday occurrences are no indication of anything out of the ordinary; but their significance lies in the fact that what appears as an ordinary event of little or no consequence is often a literal fulfillment of prophecy.

Satan, knowing his time is limited, is redoubling his forces for evil, and is growing fiercer, and more determined to accomplish his purposes. Peace is leaving the earth. Hearts are crushed, and homes are made desolate. The masses and classes are growing farther and farther apart.

Strikes are seen on every hand. Nations keep sleepless watch, hand on hilt, while they cry, "Peace, peace." Thousands are being drawn into the world's whirlpool of gayety; the people are going pleasure mad. Vice has a thousand alluring forms and is growing bolder every day, flaunting itself on every corner. No retreat is safe from its unholy intrusion, and seclusion is no longer free from its invasion. Seventy-eight thousand children are victims of that terrible scourge called hookworm. Infantile paralysis is baffling the physicians and claiming its share of victims. God has warned his people to "stand in holy places" and come out of the world in order to escape the terrible judgments thereof.

The "hastening time" is here, as well as the "perilous times" of which we have been told. It is by faithfulness and diligence that we secure protection from the scourges and calamities that are to come. "What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness."—2 Peter 3: 11.

MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

Extracts from Letters.

Writing with reference to the Missouri Valley reunion, Brother Edward Rannie says: "The preaching was of a high order, very spiritual; it was meat in due season, encouraging our own people and giving the many visitors from the city an opportunity to do some thinking. Elder Reuben Taylor and wife, and a friend, Miss Lulu Bear Shield, Lamanites, of Oklahoma, accompanying Elder Hubert Case, attracted considerable attention. Brother Taylor spoke about fifteen minutes each day, telling something of interest concerning the religious life of the Indians. They have a tradition of a severe famine among them, which lasted four years, brought on them by the Great Spirit because of their wickedness. They promised their great prophet that if he would ask the Great Spirit to stop the famine they would repent and do wickedly no more. In Helaman 4: 1-25, Book of Mormon, we have an account of a very similar occurrence. Another tradition recites that a Messiah came among them and gathered the little children and their parents together and told them they must not scold or whip their children. He said the Indians never whip or scold their children. One hundred dollars was raised for the Scandinavian mission. The spiritual gifts were manifest at a number of meetings in prophecy and tongues. Fifteen entered into covenant with their Lord by baptism. The public treated us nicely and the sentiment was unanimous to have the reunion there in 1914. The matter is in the hands of a committee to fix time and place. We will close by adding a good word for Missouri Valley; it has no licensed saloon."

Elder M. A. McConley writes from Honolulu stating that one Hiotaro Tsuji, a young Japanese, is on his way to Lamoni to attend Graceland College. This young brother has been active in the Sunday school for years, and has practically grown up in the work. It is stated that in his confirmation he was promised that, if faithful, he would be among the first to preach the gospel to his own people. With reference to the work in Honolulu, Brother McConley says: "Our work this year has been hindered somewhat by having to confine ourselves to Honolulu, when we just had things going nicely on one of the other islands. But we are hoping that the time of our release from this place draweth nigh. For about five months now we have been burdened with caring for this branch, and of necessity it curtails our outside work. Have had our gospel tent going three nights a week, though, for some time, and as a result baptized four last Saturday, and more to follow. Last night we started in a new location with a good attendance and we are hoping that some will have receptive hearts."

Mattie Hughes, Rhodes, Iowa: "The reunion held here August 15 to 24 was considered by many to be the best ever held in the Des Moines District. Not the largest in attendance, perhaps, but the best in that sweet peace and joy of the Spirit which only Saints of God can understand and appreciate. The prayer meetings were especially uplifting and inspiring. The auxiliary work, under the direction of J. A. Gunsolley, inspired the workers with greater zeal and a determination for better efforts. The preaching was of the highest order, being so plain that a child might understand, yet accompanied by a power that carried conviction to the thoughtful mind, being devoid of any criticism upon the faith of others, yet standing out in bold relief as the one great unchangeable plan of salvation and redemption. It was decided by a majority vote to hold the reunion here again next year, to begin August 29. C. J. Parker, one of our district missionaries, organized the young people into a society to be known as the Des Moines District Doers. One feature of their work will be to boost for the next reunion and district convention. The Lord was pleased to speak to us one morning in prayer service, through J. W. Wight, by the gift of tongues in admonition and warning. Among other things he said he was pleased with the gathering together of his people. There were only two baptized, but we think there were a number who believed the angel's message, and whose hearts were touched; but like Felix of old they are saying, Go thy way for this time, when I have a more convenient season I will call for thee."

John Harris, Chicago, Illinois: "The note in the HERALD of August 27 calling attention to the expressions of various individuals in Christian publications with regard to the name saint, is of interest. Along with the progressive minds of writers and editors, we began to enroll the presidents of the universities, all saying that the name saint for God's people is correct. Some years ago, my child said that the teacher in the public school in Chicago told the children there were no saints in the world. It was a blow at our children, they being the only ones at the school called Saints. We told the child to go and tell the teacher that if there were no saints in the world, then they were all sinners. We can safely say, brethren, stand to your guns. These men or others will next be admitting the proper name of the church."

Edward F. Adamson, Lower Lake, California: "Our Irvington, California, reunion was one of the most spiritual meetings I ever had the pleasure of attending. One new and very nice feature connected with the reunion was the kindergarten tent for the purpose of amusing and instructing the many dear little 'blossoms of the church.' I will say here that it was a decided success, and is to be a permanent adjunct of future reunions. It has been suggested that swings and hammocks be added to this new feature. Our heavenly Father recognized his people though his handmaidens, Sisters Weldon and Terry. Peace and harmony prevailed during the reunion."

Toronto, Canada.

During the past nine years, events have been following each other in rapid succession in our branch, each one eclipsing all former efforts. Almost yearly the Saints have taken pleasure in recognizing the splendid leadership of Bishop Evans, by tendering banquets and presents, but the growth of good will and the stress of the work here inspired bigger ideas of recognition.

In response to this feeling, the Saints assembled at the church and, after bringing Brother and Sister Evans to the meeting, the doors were thrown open, planks laid, and Brother Harry Young drove a brand new touring car into the vestibule of the church. After a few moments of inspection the Saints were seated in the basement, while Brother and Sister Evans were called to the platform, where the branch president made the presentation speech, Brother Evans replying in his usual, brilliant style. Sister Evans made no reply. She is not a speech-maker, except at a bazaar, social, or sewing bee, and when she gets through we usually have to hang around to help count the proceeds. She is a money maker. After the presentation, a number of speeches were made by the brethren and sisters present, also by several warm friends of the bishop, who are not members.

Several thought the gift was made too soon after the big expense of the reunion, but Brother Alexander Gray and Charles Dudley, who were in charge of raising the money, had gone to only a part of the members, and a few not of the church, when the full amount to pay for the car was raised, many of the Saints not being reached at all. The car being paid for, the branch obligated itself to build a garage and bear the cost of the upkeep of the car.

The immense growth of our branch through the Theater services has so increased the demands made on Brother Evans that the Saints felt something must be done to make it possible for him to answer the many calls. The urgent need of a car was apparent. While it will afford him and Sister Evans a great deal of pleasure, it will enable them to accomplish more than they otherwise could do.

As the hot weather is passing, the Saints are beginning to look forward to the theater services, and we hope for a big season.

Your brother,

A. F. McLEAN.

Died.

SCHRUNK.—Thomas F. Schrunk, husband of the late sister Lucy Schrunk, who died October 24, 1911, was born at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, August 14, 1840; died August 26, 1913, at Colfax Sanitarium. He was married to Lucy Hammond in 1869. There survive him two sons, John, of Atkinson, Nebraska; Francis, of Osterdock, Iowa; and five daughters, Mrs. Mary Mosier, Mrs. Ella Mosier, Mrs. Dora Wildermuth, Miss Inez Schrunk, all of Osterdock, Iowa, Mrs. Pauline Elledge, of Colesburg, Iowa, and eighteen grandchildren. During the Civil War he served in the Fifteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, marched with Sherman to the sea, was in grand parade at Washington, District of Columbia, at close of the war. He was favorable to the church and made the elders welcome at his home, and assisted them financially. The deserving needy found in him a helpful friend, he assisting them in a way that they could help themselves—the most consistent form of charity. He added an honorable family to the community, noted for integrity and virtue. The funeral services were held at Bethel chapel (between Osterdock and Colesburg, Iowa,) Sunday, August 31, at 2 p. m., Elder James McKiernan, of Farmington, Iowa, in charge. The interment was in the cemetery near the chapel.

DAWSON.—Lew Wallace, only child of Charles W. and Adeane Dawson, passed away, sweetly and peacefully, at Dahinda, Illinois, September 5, 1913, after a week's illness, of cholera infantum, aged 10 months, 7 days. Funeral services were held at Saints' church in Dahinda, Sunday morning, September 7, in charge of O. E. Sade, of Joy, Illinois, assisted by Charles Holmes.

FRANKLIN.—At Lamoni, Iowa, September 1, 1913, Brother William Franklin, on his eighty-first birthday. He was born in Madrid, New York, in 1832, was baptized in 1841, removed to Michigan same year. In 1860 he married Margaret Farel, in Wisconsin. She died in 1873 and he lived with his daughters until 1902, when he came to the Saints' Home, Lamoni. One son, Edwin, lives at Green Bay. Brother Franklin joined the Reorganized Church in 1862 and was steadfast. Funeral in charge of John Smith, sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

NUCKLES.—George J. Nuckles was born near Kingston, Missouri, July 12, 1884, died by drowning at Radcliffe, Alberta, July 20, 1913. He was baptized at Martins Creek, Arkansas, September 20, 1896. He leaves mother, four brothers, one sister, and a host of friends, his father, two sisters, and one brother having preceded him.

SUPERSTITION.

WERE EARLY LATTER DAY SAINTS MORE SUPERSTITIOUS THAN OTHER PEOPLE?

A great many writers have charged that early members of the Latter Day Saint Church were superstitious. This criticism has been directed particularly against the leading men and their associates and ancestors. The stories of their superstition remain unproven and we believe them to be grossly exaggerated. But granting, for the passing moment, for argument's sake, that they were to a slight degree superstitious in some matters, certain inquiries naturally arise: Were they any different in that particular from the common mass of humanity at that time? Could the Lord have found men to do his work who were entirely free from superstition? Is the work of religious leaders and reformers generally rejected because the element of superstition may have had a place in their ancestry or even in their personal make up?

Some time ago we reviewed in the SAINTS' HERALD the peculiar case of the family of John Wesley, and showed, by reference to Southey's History, how Wesley's parents and brothers and sisters were believers in evil spirits and on occasions sat up nights watching for them and were rewarded by hearing remarkable noises and seeing manifestations of evil spirits that resembled rabbits and other animals. (HERALD, January 29, 1913.) Yet that fact is not generally set forth as an argument against the excellent work done by John Wesley.

In The Life and Letters of Luther, by Preserved Smith, Ph. D., we find the following interesting statement concerning Luther:

As he was coming back to the university on July 2, he was overtaken at Stottenheim, near Erfurt, by a terrible thunderstorm, and, in a fright, vowed to Saint Anna to be a monk. If it may seem strange that a young man of twenty-two should be panic-stricken by a clap of thunder, it should be remembered that the miner's son regarded such phenomena as frequently occasioned by the direct interposition of the Devil.

If it were a matter of history that the prime mover in the organization of the Latter Day Saint Church had been frightened into "getting religion," as the term goes, in such a way, because of a superstitious fear of thunder, a shout of derision would go up, the echoes of which would never die away. In the history from which we have just quoted, it is set forth that Martin Luther's parents were extremely superstitious and that he himself believed in all kinds of supernatural beings that inhabited the hills and valleys surrounding the scenes of his boyhood. Yet these things are not generally cited against the work done by Martin Luther.

It is probable that in those days it would have been exceedingly difficult to have secured men and women enough to organize a church who were entirely free from some forms of superstition.

Dare we flatter ourselves that it is very much better to-day?

The following is taken from an article by H. Ad-dington Bruce, in the Outlook of August 26, 1911.

Three or four years ago—to be exact, on July 15, 1907—there was issued by the University of California a document which, it is to be feared, has not enjoyed a wide circulation, but which makes exceedingly interesting and not unimportant reading. It is a report by Mr. Fletcher B. Dresslar detailing the results of what may be called a census of superstitions.

On the attitude described above helpful light is thrown by Mr. Dresslar's census of superstitions. His object was to gain an idea of how far education has really succeeded in stamping out superstitious beliefs and practices, and for this reason he limited his investigation to normal school students, as persons subjected to strong educational influences. Nearly nine hundred young men and women were examined by him, his plan being to ask them, when in the classroom, and without previous notification, to write on separate slips of paper all the superstitions they knew, and to indicate on the margin their belief or disbelief in each. They were told that, if they could not honestly deny belief in any given superstition, yet would be overstating the case if they declared full belief in it, they might indicate their position by the words "partial belief." In order to eliminate the influence of "suggestion," they were allowed no communication with one another while filling out the slips.

According to Mr. Dresslar, the students entered earnestly into the spirit of his inquiry, and tried to make their responses as truthful as possible. Altogether they handed to him 7,176 slips, each inscribed with a superstition and an opinion regarding it. Of these, 3,951 were expressions of disbelief, 2,132 of partial belief, and 1,093 of full belief. Now, as Mr.

Dresslar points out in his report, "partial belief" means belief. "It is an indefinite and conditional belief, to be sure, but it may be as persistent and as thoroughly superstitious as 'full belief.'" Accordingly, out of the 7,176 expressions of opinion, 3,215, or 44.9 per cent, were expressions of belief in some superstition. These figures, of course, do not give the exact proportion of superstitious persons among the students interrogated. But, to quote Mr. Dresslar's conclusion, with which as a result of personal investigation I wholly agree, "because of the almost universal tendency of the human mind to sparingly acknowledge its own weaknesses and shortcomings, it is safe to say that we have here an underestimation, rather than an exaggeration, of belief in superstition."

If it be true that forty-four per cent and possibly fifty per cent, or more, of normal-school students are superstitious to-day, it is perhaps asking too much to ask us to believe that the "general run" of people were free from such things one hundred years ago. So why seize upon one or two unsupported stories of superstition connected with names of early Latter Day Saints and exaggerate mole hills until they become mountains?

But Mr. Bruce's article becomes more interesting as it proceeds. We quote further:

There is, however, this possible objection to the validity of his findings; that, although the men and women he examined were people of education, they were still too young to be taken as proper standards for estimating education's corrective influence on superstitions. For, while many of them were twenty-six, twenty-seven and twenty-eight years old, the average age was but nineteen.

To settle this point, I undertook a census of my own not long ago, limiting it strictly to a group of men of maturity and the highest education. In fact, I confined it to members of the teaching staff of Harvard University—professors, instructors, and assistants. Here, if anywhere, I felt that trustworthy data could be obtained, for the atmosphere of Harvard is admittedly not favorable to the maintenance of superstition. If, I theorized, any appreciable degree of superstitious belief is to be found among these university educators—men rigorously trained in the use of their reasoning powers—no doubt can remain as to the universality of superstition in all ranks of society.

The result surprised, even startled me, and was abundantly confirmatory of Mr. Dresslar's census. I had expected to find perhaps ten or fifteen per cent of the men whom I questioned—mostly connected with the departments of history, philosophy, and psychology—acknowledging some measure of superstitious faith. Actually, only 26.6 per cent, after earnest introspection, could truthfully profess that, so far as they were aware, they were absolutely free from superstition. The remaining 73.4 per cent, while in no case admitting "full belief," confessed that in their daily life they had little habits and customs indicating that, whether consciously or subconsciously, they were under superstition's influence. Nor is it without significance that, of this 73.4 per cent, a large proportion at first denied, sometimes with indignation, that they were in the slightest degree superstitious; their denials weakening only after close questioning had led them to look into the matter more carefully. One is reminded of Mr. Dresslar's remark about the tendency of the human mind to conceal its weaknesses and shortcomings.

It must come to our readers as a matter of some surprise that only about twenty-six per cent of the professors in Harvard University should be found free from superstition. And if a possible seventy-four per cent of the professors and instructors and assistants in that renowned university of higher education are still to a degree under the thralldom of superstition, what may we assume to be the general condition among the mass of the people to-day? Or looking backward, what may we assume the condition to have been one hundred years ago? Why a few members of the Latter Day Saint Church of that period should be selected to be held up as a horrible example of superstition under the condition suggested passes our comprehension.

And again, the thought comes to us, Are these numerous clergymen and others who have written books against the church superior in this particular to the professors, instructors, and assistants in Harvard University? When they accuse early Latter Day Saints of being superstitious it is probably simply another instance of the pot calling the kettle black. It would be extremely interesting to know how many of these men, in the long list from Howe and Braden, to Kinny and Shook, hide in their inmost souls superstitious fears which they would not dare to confess to the public. We say it would be interesting, but probably it will never be known. But unless we are to assume they are much superior to the professors in Harvard University, we may assume that at least seventy-five per cent of them are quite as bad as the individuals whom they have so glibly branded in their books as being superstitious. It is probably another instance where they might well remove the beam from their own eyes before attempting to extract the mote from the eye of another.

A WORD OF CAUTION TO THE MINISTRY.

The Presidency have become aware of instances where the usefulness of a minister has been greatly lessened and in some instances almost destroyed by indiscretions, one of which we feel disposed to caution the ministry against. It is not, we all know, the most serious of the many indiscretions we might name, but it is one which far too often gives offense and offers opportunity to retard the progress of the work. We refer to indiscretion of language, and more particularly the telling of stories of doubtful propriety. No one will for an instant claim the right of a minister to tell either in private or public, an obscene story, especially where both sexes are present; in fact, a minister should never tell an obscene story or listen to one when he can help it. Yet some indulge occasionally in telling so-called humorous stories which, while not obscene in themselves, have the suggestion of obscenity in them, the obscenity sometimes being very thinly veiled, and the humor consisting of this suggestive element. This is wrong, and does much harm. It is, as a matter of fact, wrong for anyone to tell such stories, all Saints should be above it, but it is far more serious for one holding the priesthood to be guilty of such indiscretion.

"Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord," applies to language as well as deeds and person. Ministers and church officers should be especially careful to give no offense in language by violating any of the proprieties of decency, even in a suggestive way. The Saints have a right to expect that men of the priesthood shall be exemplary; and where indiscretions in language are urged against any of the ministry it can not well be argued in extenuation by the offending officer that others do so, or that some of the Saints among whom he has labored are careless as to the demands of cleanliness.

Therefore let all the priesthood be once more admonished, "Be ye clean," in language as well as person. And furthermore, as a suggestion: Never try to be "funny." Let your humor bubble up spontaneously when proper, but avoid humor which is strained or forced, or at the expense of others; and above all, shun levity.

Yours fraternally,
FREDERICK M. SMITH.

CUTS FOR PUBLICITY WORK.

Elders and others who have an opportunity to get into newspapers or magazines with articles on the history and doctrine of the church may now secure some excellent cuts from the Bureau of Publicity to assist them in this work.

One or more of these cuts may be secured without charge on condition that the cost of mailing both ways be paid, and the cuts be returned in good condition at the earliest possible moment after they have been used. Our supply of cuts is limited and they should not be kept out of the office longer than is absolutely necessary.

We have the following: 1. Joseph Smith, the Martyr. 2. President Joseph Smith. 3. President Frederick M. Smith. 4. The Hill Cumorah; place of finding plates indicated by an arrow. 5. Home of Joseph Smith; room where the second vision was received indicated by cross. 6. Kirtland Temple. 7. Carthage Jail, where Joseph Smith was assassinated.

All requests for these cuts should be addressed to the Bureau of Publicity, Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

You can never really pray God to save the world without getting busy at the work yourself.—Selected.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE ONE WHO CAME OUT.—It will be remembered that some time ago, in an editorial, we mentioned the fact that Brother S. W. L. Scott had replied to Bruce Kinney's work, Mormonism, the Islam of America, in Coldwater, Michigan. It was stated at the time that only one member of the church society that was engaged in the study of Mr. Kinney's work braved the opposition and attended Brother Scott's reply. We are now in receipt of a letter from Brother Scott stating that this lady and her husband and two boys are now members of the church. This news should certainly encourage our people in their efforts to reply to misrepresentation. Even though our efforts may be defeated along many lines, and the opposition may hedge itself about and deny us a hearing, if we are persistent, even though we gain the ears of only a few, our success will be greater than we imagine. The experience of this one sister who dared to come out and hear, should be a solemn warning to all those who prefer to remain in their present state of ignorance. Brother Scott's letter follows:

Twelve members have been recently added to the Coldwater Branch by baptism. Brother Starr Corless baptized four in July and your correspondent has baptized eight in the last two weeks. One of the number, Mr. Editor, risked the opposition of the missionary society when we replied to Bruce Kinney's work, and was referred to in your editorial, as the only one who believed there were two sides to every question, the only one of the society who attended. The result is, she, her husband and two boys, twelve and fourteen years, are members of the church, being baptized August 31, September 7. The Methodist Episcopal people are angry. The pastor characterized the Saints as "Mormons," "deceivers," "frauds," "hypocrites," "impostors," last Sunday, we learn. "Why do the heathen (Gentiles) rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?" All goes well.

THE MODERN THEATER.—The General Conference on April 9, 1912, after full discussion, passed the following resolution relative to theater attendance by the Saints:

Resolved, That the practice of theater going should be discouraged and that members of the church should be urged to avoid the practice as detrimental to spirituality.

The church is not alone in its estimate of the influence of the theater, as is evidenced by the following paragraphs, the first from the Outlook for September 13, the second from Collier's for September 20.

For a long time many of the plays put on the stage in some of the leading theaters approached, step by step, the line of indecency, and have now boldly crossed it, until the contemporary play has made the early ballet plays of a generation ago seem the divisions of a rustic community.

Inexpressiveness is the cardinal fault of our theater. The typical "popular" play of to-day not only fails to represent American life, but does not even mimic it successfully. At most it offers a patchy travesty of the paltriest phases of our national character; a sort of hodgepodge of incoherent Cohanism shot through with the strains of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Collier's further characterizes the American theater as, "a dollar-in-the-slot machine without conscience or real intelligence." That the leading theaters of the country should be thus discussed by these influential magazines is significant, not only of the tendency toward sensationalism and immorality among these leading theaters, but also of the utter depravity of many of the cheaper institutions and the unclean and undesirable tendencies of others. The Saints will do well to consider the counsel of the church in the matter of theater going.

GRACELAND WELL KNOWN.—On the occasion of the opening of Graceland College for the present year the Decatur County (Iowa) Journal for September 11, says:

Graceland College at Lamoni will open for the fall term to-day. Graceland is adopting the plan of other institutions of learning in opening the school year on Thursday. This makes it possible to get all preliminary work over and have regular work and studies started on the next Monday. S. A. Burgess, of Saint Louis, has been elected president of the Lamoni college and is now at the head of that well known school. Former acting president, J. A. Gunsolley, will have charge of the commercial department. The teachers are most capable. The enrollment will be good.

EVEN SO.—Commenting on Acts 23, the Word of Truth, representing the Church of Christ, commonly known as non-progressive Christian, says:

The apostles were rapidly teaching and convincing the people, and many of even the Sadducees were embracing the gospel; hence it was to save the "sect" that this action against the apostles was taken. Even to-day, to save some "sect" men will do all in their power to prevent the preaching of the true gospel of Christ, and when they find that they can not prevent the preaching, they will do what they can to keep the people from hearing the preaching.

Judging from the activity and success of the latter-day evangel, and from the actions of the Church of Christ people, and others of like disposition, one should not find it difficult to determine who in our day represent "sect" and who the "true gospel."

OLDER ONES, TOO.—Commenting on a recent law in Connecticut providing that no marriage shall take place in the State until after notice of five days has been given, the Deseret Evening News for August 9 says:

This seems a sound and sensible provision. Had it been in force here a number of years back, it might have saved some very rash and foolish young persons from steps they afterwards regretted, to say nothing of sparing the feelings of humiliated, oftentimes heartbroken parents.

It might have saved some "very rash and foolish" older ones, too.

PASSING OF C. H. JONES.—Elder Charles H. Jones passed away at his home in Harrison County, Missouri, about fourteen miles southwest of Lamoni, the night of September 19. Brother Jones had been in failing health for some time, though had grown stronger again. His late illness was of only a few days' duration. He was ordained a seventy at Amboy, Illinois, in April, 1863. Elder Jones was a man of activity and was known throughout the church as a man of great faith, untiring zeal, and unusual fervency of spirit. He came to the vicinity of Lamoni in the first days of the settlement of the Saints there. His passing hushes a voice heard long and often, both in defense of the truth and in testimony of its divinity.

Auld Lang Syne.

It singeth low in every heart,
We hear it each and all—
A song of those who answer not,
For ever we may call;
They throng the silence of the breast,
We see them as of yore—
The kind, the brave, the true, the sweet,
Who walk with us no more.

'Tis hard to take the burden up,
When these have laid it down;
They brightened all the joys of life,
They softened every frown;
But, oh, 'tis good to think of them,
When we are troubled sore!
Thanks be to God that such have been,
Although they are no more!

More homelike seems the vast unknown,
Since they have entered there;
To follow them were not so hard,
Wherever they may fare;
They can not be where God is not,
On any sea or shore;
Whate'er betides, thy love abides,
Our God, for evermore.

BY CHARLOTTE BECKER.

You say he understands men's hearts,
Sees past each mask of pride or scorn
Into the need for sympathy—
Know you of what his sight was born?

Of days so filled with sacrifice,
So dowered with grief and pain and care,—
His eyes must read in other eyes
The fellow-knowledge written there.

Nobody knows what he can do until he tries.—Backbone.

BAPTISM.

SOME BAPTISMS FROM HEAVEN; OTHERS OF MEN.

"The baptism of John, was it from heaven or of men?"—Mark 11: 30.

The above question was asked by the Savior. The language indicates that there are two distinct kinds of baptism; one from heaven, the other from men.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE TWO.

The answer is simple: A baptism "from heaven" is a baptism which God has authorized, and of which he approves. A baptism "from men" has neither the authority nor approbation of the Lord.

A baptism which is "from heaven" will remit sins. Peter said: "Repent and be baptized, everyone of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins."—Acts 2: 38.

A baptism which is "from heaven" inducts us into the kingdom of God, the true church of Christ on earth: "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."—Galatians 3: 27.

A baptism which is "from men" will not remit sins, nor induct us into the church of Christ.

A baptism which is "from heaven" is of more value to us than silver or gold; a baptism which is "from men" is of no value to anyone.

IS YOUR OWN BAPTISM "FROM HEAVEN" OR "OF MEN"?

Reader, which of these two baptisms do you prefer? Without careful thought, this question appears absurd and useless. But is it? If we answer according to the manner in which multitudes of people treat the subject of baptism, candor compels us to reply: "No, indeed; the question is not only important, but necessary."

Let us see. How many persons take time to ask themselves the following questions: "What signs of distinction has a baptism which is 'from heaven'?" "Do these signs enable us to distinguish a baptism which has the approbation of God from one which has not?" "Has my own baptism the approbation of the Lord?" "Is it 'from heaven,' or 'of men'?"

HOW TO ANSWER TO YOUR OWN SATISFACTION.

Beloved, we are prepared to help you answer each of these questions for yourselves, and to your own satisfaction. God has given us a definition of baptism in the Holy Scriptures. No baptism has either the authority or approbation of the Lord, unless it fulfills all the conditions mentioned in the New Testament. To the Scriptures, then, let us appeal, and we shall learn that it is necessary for us to observe the following conditions, if we wish a baptism which is "from heaven," viz:

1. The only mode of baptism taught in the Scriptures is immersion.

2. Baptism should be administered for remission of sins.

3. The only subjects of baptism are persons who are old enough to hear, believe, and obey the principles of the gospel of Christ.

4. Baptism should be administered by a man who has authority from God.

Let us examine these four propositions in their order: First, then,

WITH RESPECT TO MODE OF BAPTISM.

The Catholic Church, and most of the Protestant churches, make a practice of sprinkling for baptism. Of whom did they obtain authority for this practice? Certainly not from the Holy Scriptures. Sprinkling, therefore, has neither the authority of Christ, nor of his inspired apostles and prophets. On the contrary, the teaching and practice of Jesus Christ and his apostles clearly indicate that immersion, and immersion only, has the approbation of God.

In order to prove this, it is only necessary to inquire, (1) "Where did Jesus and his apostles administer the ordinance of baptism?" (2) "What is the meaning of the words and expressions which Christ and his apostles used to define baptism?"

WHERE BAPTISM WAS ADMINISTERED.

And there went out to him all the land of Judea, and all they of Jerusalem, and were baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins.—Mark 1: 5.

And it came to pass in those days that Jesus came from Nazareth, of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan.—Mark 1: 9.

And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptized him.—Acts 8: 38.

And John also was baptizing in Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water there; and they came and were baptized.—John 3: 23.

And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea.—1 Corinthians 10: 2.

From the above accounts, we learn that the inspired apostles and prophets administered baptism "in the River Jordan," "in the sea," and where there was "much water."

It is worth while to notice also, in this connection, that the apostles never administered baptism in a house, not even when the baptism occurred at midnight!

The proof: "And he took them the same hour of the night (midnight, verse 25) and washed their stripes, and was baptized, he and all his, straightway. And when he had brought them into his own house," etc. (Acts 16: 33, 34.) In order to baptize the jailer and his friends, it was necessary for Paul to take them out of the house; for we are told, after the baptism, "he brought them into his own house."

If Paul had practiced sprinkling for baptism, as all Catholic priests and the larger number of Protestant ministers do to-day, he certainly would not have taken the jailer and his family out of their comfortable home at midnight in order to baptize them!

If Philip had practiced sprinkling for baptism, would he have required the eunuch, an eminent official of Queen Candace, of the Ethiopians, to leave his fine chariot and descend with him into the water?

MODE OF BAPTISM DEFINED.

The words used by our Savior and his apostles, both in the English translation and in the original Greek, to define "baptism" mean "to immerse."

In the English translation we read:

Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection.—Romans 6: 3, 5.

Buried with him in baptism.—Colossians 2: 12.

Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3: 5.

Baptism a "birth," a "burial," a "planting" in water; but it would be improper to speak of the sprinkling of a small quantity of water on the head of an individual, as a "birth" of water; a "burial," a "planting" in water; therefore, when Jesus and his apostles used these expressions to define baptism, they meant immersion.

FALSE CHARGES AGAINST THE SAVIOR.

Please compare the teachings of the word of God above cited with the assertion of James Cardinal Gibbons, in his work, Faith of Our Fathers, page 317, as follows: "As our Savior nowhere gives any special form of administering the sacrament (baptism), the church exercises her discretion in adopting the mode most convenient."

Our Lord nowhere gives any special form of administering the sacrament (baptism). What a charge to prefer against our Savior! He commanded his apostles to baptize, but neglected to tell them how! Reader, could you believe such a charge as this, against the wisest teacher the world ever had, even without investigation?

GREEK WORD "BAPTIZO" MEANS "IMMERSE."

The Greek word which has been translated baptize, and which the Savior used when he commanded his apostles to baptize, and which his apostles used in speaking of baptism, is baptizo. Baptizo means to immerse, as the following quotations prove:

He that dippeth (baptizo) his hand with me in the dish.—Matthew 26: 23.

It is one of the twelve that dippeth (baptizo) with me in the dish.—Mark 14: 20.

He it is to whom I shall give a sop when I have dipped (baptizo) it. And when he had dipped (baptizo) the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot.—John 13: 26.

The Greek word which means to sprinkle is rhan. The Savior and his apostles never used this word in speaking of baptism.

The use of the word rhan is shown in the following quotations:

He sprinkled (rhan) with blood both the tabernacle, . . . —Hebrews 9: 21.

He took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled (rhan) both the book and all the people.—Hebrews 9: 19.

There is the same difference in meaning, as the Scriptures above cited indicate, between the Greek words baptizo and rhan, that there is between the Spanish words sumergir and rociar.

Neither baptizo in Greek, nor sumergir in Spanish means to sprinkle; neither rhan in Greek, nor rociar in Spanish means to immerse. Therefore, Jesus and his apostles never used the word rhan with respect to baptism, but always baptizo. This proves that baptism is immersion.

MODE OF BAPTISM CHANGED.

The Monks of Cressey, A. D. 754, inquired:

"Is it lawful, in case of necessity occasioned by sickness, to baptize an infant by pouring water on its head, from a cup or the hands?" To which Pope Stephen Third replied: "Such a baptism, performed in such a case, shall be accounted valid." —Apud. Labbei Concilia, Tom. 6, p. 650.

In speaking of the foregoing Basnage says:

This is accounted the first law against immersion. The pontiff, however, did not dispense with immersion, except in case of extreme necessity. This law, therefore, did not change the mode of dipping, in public baptism; and it was not until the legislature in a council at Ravenna, in the year 1311, declared immersion and pouring indifferent.—Monumenta, vol. 1, Robinson's History of Baptism, chapter 33.

ABOVE HISTORY CONFIRMED BY CARDINAL GIBBONS.

The history of the change of the mode of baptism from immersion to sprinkling, above cited, is confirmed by James Cardinal Gibbons as follows:

For several centuries after the establishment of Christianity, baptism was usually conferred by immersion. But since the twelfth century, the practice of baptizing by sprinkling has prevailed in the Catholic Church, because this mode is attended with less inconvenience than baptism by immersion.—Faith of Our Fathers, p. 317.

Thus the Catholic Church changed the mode of baptism established by Jesus Christ and his inspired apostles and prophets, in order to serve the convenience of men! Then was fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah: "The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant" (Isaiah 24: 5). See also Acts 20: 28, 30; 2 Timothy 4: 3, 4.

AUTHORITY OF SERVANTS TO PARDON SINS.

"Whosoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them: and whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained."—John 20: 23. Marvelous power conferred by the Savior on his apostles! Gracious promise made to mankind! But how is this power exercised? And how is the promise realized?

PROTESTANTISM CONFESSES IGNORANCE; CATHOLICISM ERRS.

To the above questions, Protestantism has no answer. Protestant ministers do not pretend to possess power or authority to forgive sins. To them this great and last commission of Christ, making it possible that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations (Luke 24: 47), has no meaning.

Catholicism misunderstands the authority and misuses the power which this commission conferred on the apostles of Christ, as we shall prove.

TO WHOM SHALL THE SINNER CONFESS?

James Cardinal Gibbons says:

The power of forgiving sins, on the part of God's minister, involves the obligation of confessing them on the part of the sinner. And how will the priest know his sins unless they are confessed?—Faith of Our Fathers, p. 394.

According to the teachings of Catholicism, there is no pardon of sins without confession to a priest. But the Bible teaches that we should confess all our sins to God, and such sins to men as have injured or concerned them. "As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God."—Romans 14: 11.

If we sin against a brother or a sister, we should confess to him or her, and not to the priest:

Confess your faults one to another.—James 3: 16.

Therefore, if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.—Matthew 5: 23, 24.

No intervention of a priest here; neither is there a commandment in the New Testament to confess to a priest!

CARDINAL GIBBONS ANSWERED.

James Cardinal Gibbons asks: "Was Jesus Christ to appear in person to every sinful soul, . . . and say, Thy sins are forgiven thee?—Faith of Our Fathers, p. 389.

No, indeed; neither do the Scriptures teach that any man has authority to say: "Thy sins are forgiven thee." To convey this information to the pardoned sinner is not the privilege of the true servant of Christ, nor the duty of the Savior. This work devolves upon the Holy Spirit:

Nevertheless I tell you the truth; it is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you.—John 16: 7.

But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him.—1 John 2: 27.

After obeying the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, thus becoming members of the true church of God, all persons are entitled to receive and enjoy the Holy Spirit. (See John 3: 5; Acts 2: 38, 39; Romans 8: 16, etc.)

This Spirit teaches us "all things." How much better to obtain knowledge for ourselves by the gift and power of God's Spirit that our sins are pardoned, than to depend upon the word of some man!

MANNER BY WHICH SERVANTS PARDON SINS.

The only way by which the servants of God can pardon sin is by executing the law of pardon faithfully.

And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself; . . . and hath committed to us the word of reconciliation.—2 Corinthians 5: 18, 19.

The servant of God having fully executed the "word of reconciliation," the sinner obtains pardon from God; and, further, knowledge that his sins are pardoned, not from man, but by the testimony of the Holy Spirit to him, as already shown.

JESUS CHRIST OUR ONLY MEDIATOR.

The attempt of Catholic priests to act as mediators "between God and man" was foreseen and prohibited by the Apostle Paul in the following language: "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus."—1 Timothy 2: 5.

Then, can not the servants of God pardon sins? Yes; but only by executing the law of pardon.

LAW OF PARDON.

How did John the Baptist pardon sins? "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for remission of sins."—Mark 1: 4.

How did the Apostle Peter pardon sins? "Repent and be baptized everyone of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."—Acts 2: 38.

How did Ananias pardon sins? "And now why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins."—Acts 22: 16.

For this reason Jesus said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."—Mark 16: 16.

Again: "Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5.

On the contrary: "But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him."—Luke 7: 30. That is, their sins were not pardoned, but "retained," because they refused to believe in Christ, repent of their sins, and be baptized by John, "a man sent of God." (John 1: 6.)

MUST ADMINISTER BAPTISM.

From the scriptures above cited, it is clear that the apostles of Christ did not attempt to remit sins, except by administering the ordinance of baptism. The Bible nowhere mentions any other method by which one man has power or authority to pardon the sins of others!

ERROR OF THE CONFSSIONAL.

A failure to recognize this important fact has plunged the Catholic Church into the error and darkness of the confessional. She has thus caused thousands of her priests to nullify the blood of Christ, by substituting the work of the confessional for the precious blood shed on Calvary!

IMPORTANT FACT FORGOTTEN.

All this has she done by forgetting that baptism is the way which leads to the cross; the ordinance which brings the blood of Christ within the reach of every sinner, and enables him to apply it for himself, both with respect to sins he has committed in the past, and those which he may commit in the future, without farther aid from a servant of God.

You do not believe this? Then it is only necessary to remember that the word of God does not contradict itself, and the truth of the proposition will manifest itself at once.

Under the caption, "What is the law of pardon," we proved that baptism is "for remission of sins." But the Scriptures teach also that the blood of Christ "cleanseth us from all sin," (1 John 1: 7; Ephesians 1: 7.)

Is there a contradiction here? Not if we remember that the blood of Christ only applies to those who "walk in the light," and who, therefore, "have fellowship one with another." (1 John 1: 7.)

Jesus explains the meaning of the expression, "walk in the light," as follows: "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." (John 8: 12.) To "walk in the light," we must keep Christ's commandments. He commanded baptism, and said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16: 16). But we can not "be saved" without the application of the blood of Christ. So belief and baptism must apply the cleansing blood of the Savior.

The blood of a man only circulates through his own body. It never flows through the veins and arteries of the body of some other man. So with the blood of Christ; it only flows through his own body, the church (Ephesians 1: 23; Colossians 1: 18, 24). It only affects the members of that body, who "have fellowship one with another" (1 John 1: 7).

Until we become members of Christ's body, his blood can not reach us. We are inducted into the Church of Christ and become a part of his body by baptism: "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ" (Galatians 3: 27).

SUBJECTS TO HEAR, BELIEVE, AND REPENT.

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them.—Matthew 28: 19.

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.—Mark 16: 16.

Then they that gladly received his word were baptized.—Acts 2: 41.

But when they believed Philip, preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women.—Acts 8: 12.

And the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest.—Acts 8: 36, 37.

And many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized.—Acts 18: 8.

Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you.—Acts 2: 38.

The Scriptures above quoted clearly teach that it is necessary for all persons to hear and believe the gospel, and repent of their sins, before baptism.

Infants are not capable of hearing and believing the gospel, and they have no need of repentance.

The Bible nowhere mentions the baptism of an infant; on the contrary, baptism is "for remission of sins," as already shown; and as "sin is transgression of the law," (1 John 3: 4), it is not possible for infants to sin. Therefore, they are not subjects of baptism.

CATECHISMS VERSUS CHRIST.

But the Roman Catholic Church baptizes infants to wash away "original sin." I quote from Roman Catholic Catechism, pages 37, 69, by Doctor James Butler, as follows:

What is original sin?

A. The sin which we inherit from our forefathers; and in which we were conceived and born children of wrath. What is baptism? A. A sacrament which cleanses from original sin, makes us Christians, and children of God, and heirs to the kingdom of heaven.

Many of the Protestant churches teach the same error. See Articles of Religion of the Church of England, article 9; also Presbyterian Confession of Faith, chapter 6, articles 1, 3; Methodist Discipline, article 532, etc.

According to the teachings of the catechisms and disciplines above cited, infants are "children of wrath"; according to the teachings of Christ, they are children of "the kingdom of heaven." Reader, which do you prefer to believe?

Here are some of the teachings of Christ with respect to the purity of infants, and the position which they hold in the kingdom of heaven:

Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.—Matthew 18:3.

But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven.—Matthew 19:14.

LITTLE CHILDREN REDEEMED.

Modern revelation, given through the Prophet Joseph Smith, agrees with the teachings of the Savior above cited, as follows:

Behold, I say unto you, that little children are redeemed from the foundation of the world, through mine Only Begotten.—Doctrine and Covenants 28:13.

But little children are holy, being sanctified through the atonement of Jesus Christ.—Doctrine and Covenants 74:3.

Behold, I say unto you, that this thing shall ye teach, repentance and baptism unto those who are accountable and capable of committing sins; yea, teach parents that they must repent and be baptized . . . and they shall be saved with their little children, and their little children need no repentance, neither baptism.—Moroni 8:11.

REPENTANCE.

The necessity of personal repentance, and the character of it is sufficiently explained by the following scriptures:

Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.—Luke 13:3.
I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.—Matthew 9:13.

But I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance.—Luke 15:7.

But showed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance.—Acts 26:20.

Again, when I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; if he turn from his sin, and do that which is lawful and right; if the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statutes of life without committing iniquity; he shall surely live, he shall not die. None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him: he hath done that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live.—Ezekiel 33:14-16.

SHORTEST AND BEST DEFINITION.

The shortest and best definition of repentance was given by the Lord through the Prophet Joseph Smith as follows: "By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins. Behold, he will confess them and forsake them."—Doctrine and Covenants 58:9.

AUTHORITY FROM GOD.

Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.—Matthew 28:19.

And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.—Acts 10:48.

When they heard this they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.—Acts 19:5.

What does it mean to baptize IN THE NAME OF THE LORD JESUS? What did Jesus mean when he commanded his apostles to baptize IN THE NAME of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost?

What do we mean when we speak of a certain man acting in the name of another? Do we not mean that the former acts by the authority of the latter?

Then to baptize in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, must mean to baptize by the authority of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

But the investigator asks: "Do not the ministers of all the churches baptize in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost?"

FORMULA OF WORDS.

They all repeat this formula of words in baptizing. But the recital of this formula does not prove that God has really authorized them to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances of his church.

CONTRADICTORY DOCTRINES—NOT AUTHORIZED.

On the contrary, the teachings and practice of the various churches are contradictory. Is it possible that God has authorized men to teach doctrines and practice ordinances which contradict each other?

To illustrate: The Catholic Church sprinkles water on the heads of infants and adults for baptism; the Church of England, and many other Protestant churches do the same thing. The Christian Church, established by Alexander Campbell, immerses adults, only; for the remission of sins; the Baptist Church immerses adults because their sins have already been remitted; the German Baptist Brethren immerse in water three times; and they all profess to administer the ordinance of baptism "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

A DIVINE RULE.

But who can believe that God is the author of all this contradiction in teaching and practice?

To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.—Isaiah 8:20.

For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God.—John 3:34.

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.—Matthew 28:20.

If the teaching and practice of a minister do not agree with the teachings of the Holy Scriptures, God has not authorized him to preach the gospel or administer the ordinances thereof.

MINISTERS LACKING AUTHORITY CONDEMNED.

In the day of judgment, many ministers will try to justify themselves by saying: "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? And in thy name cast out devils? And in thy name done many wonderful works?" (Matthew 7:22.)

Who were these ministers? They claimed to have authority to represent Christ, for they pretended to act "in the name of the Lord." But had God called them to preach the gospel of his Son, and administer the ordinances of his church? Certainly not; for the Lord said to them: "I never knew you: Depart from me, ye that work iniquity" (Matthew 7: 23).

Before accepting the teachings, or receiving the ordinances of the house of God at the hands of any minister, we ought to satisfy ourselves that he has been properly authorized, according to the Scriptures, to preach the gospel of Christ, and administer the ordinances thereof.

CHOSEN BY REVELATION.

All true ministers of Jesus Christ must be chosen by revelation, through a prophet of God, as the following scriptures teach:

Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest.—Matthew 9: 38.

But as God hath distributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk. And so ordain I in all churches.—1 Corinthians 7: 17.

And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron.—Hebrews 5: 4.

What honor? The honor of the priesthood in the church. Men must receive the priesthood to-day in the same manner that Aaron received it. There has been no change. There never will be.

Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and for ever.—Hebrews 13: 8.

For I am the Lord, I change not.—Malachi 3: 6.

Every good and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.—James 1: 17.

The priesthood was conferred on Aaron by revelation from God. "And take thou unto thee Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him, from among the children of Israel, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office. (Exodus 28: 1.)

This account, together with the statement of the Apostle Paul, in Hebrews 5: 4, fixes the manner by which all men must receive the priesthood to-day, viz, by revelation through a prophet of God.

This mode of selecting men to represent Christ, and preach the gospel, was the common practice in the primitive church.

Now there were in the church that was at Antioch, certain prophets and teachers. . . . As they ministered to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Ghost said: Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.—Acts 13: 1, 2.

PROTESTANTISM HAS NO PROPHETS.

"Now there were in the church which was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers." But where are, the "prophets" to-day? Protestantism is founded "On the Bible and the Bible alone." Protestants do not profess to be directed in their work by a prophet of God.

POPE NOT INSPIRED.

Cardinal Gibbons does not pretend that the Catholic Church has access to God by revelation. He says: The apostles were endowed with the gift of inspiration, and we accept their writings as the revealed word of God. No Catholic, on the contrary, claims that the pope is inspired, or endowed with divine revelation, properly so called.—Faith of Our Fathers, p. 146.

Not a single official of the Catholic Church, from the pope to the most obscure priest, has been appointed to represent Christ and preach the gospel according to the divine rule, viz; "No man taketh this honor unto himself but he that is called of God as was Aaron." (Hebrews 5: 4.)

WHERE SHALL WE LOOK?

Where shall we look to find the true ministry of Jesus Christ to-day; men who are "called of God as was Aaron"? We must seek for the true church of Christ, a church that has inspired apostles and prophets, as the Scriptures teach:

And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets.—1 Corinthians 12: 28.

And he gave some apostles; and some prophets; and some evangelists; and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.—Ephesians 4: 11, 13.

BAPTISM FROM HEAVEN.

Reader, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has all the officers that the New Testament mentions, including inspired apostles and prophets. Its ministry are appointed by revelation. It teaches the doctrine that Christ and his first apostles taught, and it practices the same ordinances. People who "obey from the heart that form of doctrine," (Romans 6: 17), receive the Holy Spirit and its "manifestations" as the Scriptures teach (see 1 Corinthians 12: 1-13; John 14: 21; John 16: 13, 15, etc.).

In this church:

Baptism is to be administered in the following manner unto all those who repent: The person who is called of God and has authority from Jesus Christ to baptize, shall go down into the water with the person who has presented him or herself for baptism, and shall say, calling him or her by name: Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, Amen. Then shall he immerse him or her in the water, and come forth again out of the water.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 21.

THE VIRTUES OF PRINTER'S INK.

NUMBER XXI.—"METHODS AND TACTICS" SERIES.

We wish to lay down a few rules to govern those who have an opportunity to use the columns of a friendly newspaper, or who would otherwise blossom into print. In doing so, however, we first call attention to the fact that, to warrant success, we must have a thoroughgoing faith and confidence in the cause or object we advocate; our claims will be mere boasting unless we can show forth the merits of that which we proclaim.

A certain ingenuous character has said, "I love a rooster for two things: For the crow that is in him; and for the spurs to back up his crow with!" Therefore, when you start out to flash the torchlight of publicity in the eyes of your townsmen, be sure it will also reveal to them whatsoever you lack of those attributes that are to characterize the true children of God. Having cleaned your individual doorsteps you are ready to rally around the one, whoever he may be, who is to represent you ministerially in this campaign.

You are thinking of getting out some handbills and obtaining a "little write up" in the local news sheet. Here there is a wide difference of procedure between the city paper and the country paper; the same rules will not apply to both, although we may learn valuable points from each.

The editor of the large city daily is often more liberal, more approachable, than his country cousin, who depends on the advertisements of his local merchants to keep him in bread and meat, and who must therefore be cautious in religion and politics. The country editor will often strain a point, however, when matter is offered him that will help fill his columns and lessen his make up cost. He will condescend to insert a cut of the right kind and will add a few lines of print to it. If presented properly, he will display the matter to some advantage, if you contract to take a certain number of copies (which you should mark strongly with red or blue crayon and distribute in the neighborhood where you will campaign, or send to parties who will be interested); placing the order for handbills with him, under the same plan, is economical and advantageous to both parties.

On the other hand, the city editors are not in the least susceptible to such overtures. They desire information regarding your special efforts and speakers, and will send reporter and camera man to pick up anything that will really interest their readers, as you see by Elder Richard Baldwin's picture from Cleveland's best daily, The Plain Dealer. They prefer pictures to cuts, and snappy items, notes, or facts, rather than write ups; they prefer to wield the blue pencil themselves. This reminds me of a time when I bought a boy a sandwich. He surprised me by picking out the wedge of ham and throwing away the biscuit in which it came. I would have thrown out the pork and eaten the biscuit. So bear this in mind when taking up your lines to the "city ed," that just the part you think of such importance he is likely to slur over, and something you never dreamed of will stare you in the face the next morning when you scan the news.

I remember a case in point where our men were in debate with some of the Utah elders; our report went into such detail that the only mention we got from the weary editor was a few lines headed in black type: "Rival Mormons continue their wrangle," which would not invite anyone to investigate. This teaches the value of brevity and pointedness, both of which are impossible without a central object.

In thanking an editor one time for his valuable mention, and expressing the hope that we might enjoy the same privilege again, he answered, "Do something to deserve it, and you shall." That's the point; do something to deserve it! It is not sufficient to claim (as I did quickly) that that was the mission of our work, but it must be something more than ordinary; if you ask him what he means he will say, "Some new stunt," and let you figure it out yourself.

That is why at some of these big revival meetings the interested pastors don overalls and get their pictures taken building the great three-ring tabernacle, and how the picture somehow gets into print! I have seen the same kind of advertising done by a ladies' aid—carrying bricks and mortar for their husbands when building a church!

Now a word or two about handbills; these should never contain everything you know about the work, so that the essential features of the announcement are minimized, nor should it be too curt and abrupt. If possible, use a good, attractive cut, and a strong line or two of the subject, the place, the time. If these are right the public may be depended upon to scratch for the rest, as chickens do for small grain. Use a fair quality of paper, for you would be surprised to know the influence the grade of paper and the ink upon it exerts on the mind of the one who reads and weighs your plea.

Whatever kind of literature you use, do not throw it around promiscuously. Let it be gotten up worthily enough to be handed in personally to the householder, asking permission to leave it, and extending the invitation; here is the greatest field of usefulness to Sunday school and Religion workers, for many a chat occurs that opens up into an acquaintance and eventually brings pupils to your departments.

About "cuts" a general term intended to cover all classes of commonly used illustrations in print: You may obtain them made from your photographs for from a dollar upward. The most familiar style is the reproduction from the family album and means nothing to the stranger you are after, for it might be either Doctor Bunyan or the originator of Sliver's Shivver Pills for Shivvery People or even somebody running for sheriff (or running away from him). Take your people out to some pretty place and hold service, get a good snapshot of the event, or of a rally or picnic crowd, then get a cut made from your print and it will teach people to know you. Even our elders can increase their "ad-tract-iveness" by getting a few characteristic poses snapped off at a postcard photographer's (these are often more effective than the higher priced work) and have a cut made from the best of them. You will find them better than the usual solitary picture.

One thing that I count of prime importance is the sinking of personal identity and personal views to the enhancement of the great cause or object which our aim should be to prosper; then we will endeavor to simplify rather than attempt a display of over-much learning. Boil down the message, fan out the chaff, offer the meat of the kernel only—such is the secret of true advertising. Just as children dislike long lessons, so the children of the world abhor the tangle and complications involved in the study of the names and cognomen of such a work as that which claims us. We sometimes read a notice of this kind:

"Mr. Jack Robinson wishes to state that the Jack Robinson who was fined for chicken stealing was not Jack Robinson of this city, but another gentleman of the same name"—which doesn't clear the matter to us, however much it may comfort the wounded pride of J. Robinson.

I believe a great deal of our energy is being mis-directed in trying to straighten out these tangles of church names and polity when we would be doing greater service in presenting the plan of salvation in all its primal importance,—all else must be secondary. I am persuaded that when we eventually win our way through, it will be under the more comprehensive term of The Reorganized Church, rather than the unwieldy title we now carry, a mark to draw the rancor of every prejudiced or ignorant mind, however much we reverence the name ourselves.

The publicity we need is to let intelligent people know that the purpose of God's revelation of himself to mankind through the Christ, and the work of redemption he instituted then is reorganized in this day; we shall present the needs of the church and every man worthy the name will press into it; we can prove the facts of its progress and the beautiful plans of Zion now under way—for that is what Christ taught, to heal, to comfort, to instruct, to bless, to sacrifice, to help the other, with compassion and meekness, but with strength. This the church will be doing—is doing—without it, all your publicity is wasted energy, but every good deed, every action taken as a branch where you stand together for the good of mankind, for principle, for love of country, or for the benefit of your race, will go forth as a sweet savor of your name; and then when you do use a little printer's ink folks will rise up and say, "I guess I'll go because I know it'll be good."

LITTLE THINGS THAT COUNT.

To-day we are facing a condition that perhaps has never before confronted the church. It is true we have many advantages, and of course it is to be understood that we have opportunities that have never before been granted mankind; but the matter that is especially worthy our attention at this time concerns some of the little things that are so frequently overlooked.

Cicero pointed out two errors that were prevalent in his time: One was that people jumped too readily at conclusions, the other that many wasted time over obscure and trifling subjects. What was true of his time is also quite true to-day.

Now, while we are opposed to squandering useful and profitable time over trifling things, we do not wish to convey the idea that we would have you pass lightly over the little things, because in reality the little things in life are the ones that count. We would recommend, however, that the Christ precept and example be observed, and that all examine carefully his teaching and life to see how marvelously the little, commonplace things went to make up his character and the framing of his ethics.

The writer was once asked by a certain brother, "When are the leaders of the church going to do something for the redeeming of Zion?"

We made reply by asking, "What are you doing, brother, to hasten the day of the redemption of Zion?"

There are two things to be noticed here: First, this brother had been jumping at conclusions, in that he supposed that all that was necessary was to have the Presidency and Bishopric issue an edict in the matter and that this would set the machinery in motion, and that automatically Zion would be cleansed, purified, and redeemed; second, he wasted altogether too much time contemplating trifling things, and by so doing forgot that "I" have a part to act in this great drama; that "I" have a service to render; and that after all is said and done, the redemption of Zion depends upon "me" as much as it does on the President or Bishop of the church.

But I hear some one say, "The little I am able to do will not help to any extent, therefore I may as well fold my hands and await the action of others. I am willing to live in Zion, but the church must redeem it; I can not."

Then we would say, Such an one can not live in Zion. Remember the little things are the things that count, and if we all do the little we are able to do, it would be a matter of but a short time until Zion in all her splendor and beauty would arise and shine.

Some one says, "I would pay tithes if I had anything to tithe, but I can only care for myself, therefore it is quite impossible for me to pay tithes."

It was the voice of inspiration that said, Gather my Saints together unto me, that have made covenant with me by sacrifice. Have you made sacrifice to aid the Lord in his work? Have you denied yourself, that you might the better serve the church? Have you crucified yourself, that you might live wholly unto God? If you have not done all this you are not prepared to dwell in Zion.

Now permit me to give you a few simple figures. The church has an indebtedness, and it must be met. I am a part of the church and so are you. Are we going to do our duty and meet our just and honorable obligations?

"Yes," says one, "but I'm too poor to assist in this matter."

Let us see. I want to assist the church, but I have no income; how shall I do it? I will make a sacrifice to do so, and that sacrifice will be to deny myself one meal each week. We will estimate the cost of that meal at fifteen cents, and that ought to be small enough. There are fifty-two weeks in the year, therefore if I lay by each week fifteen cents at the end of the year I will have saved for the church fund seven dollars and eighty cents.

Now, suppose each member of the church would do this. Have you stopped to think what it would mean? If you have not, just remember that there are about sixty-eight thousand members in the church, so we must multiply seven dollars and eighty cents by 68,000 and it will give us a total of $484,400. This in itself would be quite a lift to the church, in addition to the other funds. Now another example: Let those who are accustomed to eating meat just go without meat one meal in each week and they can save equally as much and the sacrifice will be so small it is not worth mentioning.

A sister well known to the writer decided to save her pennies for a Christmas offering after the year was partly gone, so she dropped them in a little bank, sitting on the pantry shelf. The result was one dollar and thirty cents for a Christmas offering. Suppose now each member of the church would do this; it would mean a total of $88,400, towards the church fund in one year.

Now, if after all had paid their tithes and offerings, these simple methods of saving or sacrifice, as the case may be, were observed, it would not be long until the church would be out of debt, the land of Zion would be redeemed by purchase; and by this process the heart would also be purified, that we might become Zion in very deed, the pure in heart, the redeemed of the Lord.

OUR SPIRITUAL BODIES.

At times there come to our minds subjects which puzzle us, and give us much food for thought and study. The one which has caused me to write this little article is: "What will our bodies be like when we are raised from the dead?"

I have been looking up references, and found many which have given me considerable light on the resurrection. First, I find in 1 Corinthians 15: 50, where flesh and blood can not inherit the kingdom of heaven. Yet in Job we find him saying: "In my flesh shall I see God." Again in Leviticus 17: 14, we see where blood is the life of all flesh. Then we will say we are to have our bodies and the life-giving power will be the Spirit of God, which quickeneth the body, (John 6: 63).

The condition of our bodies, then, will be according to how much of God's Spirit we are worthy of. If we have been slow to respond, have neglected to avail ourselves of the fullness of the Spirit, and to keep it in working order, then the highest of heavenly glories, celestial, will not shine forth in our bodies; they will have to take on a lesser glory.

Take, for instance, our earthly bodies; if we neglect to keep the blood (life) in order, and have a free circulation, how soon the body becomes dull and sickly, and the mind not capable of the duties demanded of it. On the other hand, when our blood is healthy, and courses through our veins freely, how beautiful our bodies are, and how bright our minds. So it will be (to my mind) with our spiritual bodies. With God's Spirit as the life-giving power, God is able to raise up our bones, bone to bone (Ezekiel 37: 7), and to cause his Spirit to enter the bodies he has raised, just as he was able to create a body for our spirit in the beginning.

We are placed here like an unhatched egg. God has given us these earthly bodies to cover the life within. He has placed in the body a mind which compels us to grow; also a conscience to direct us between right and wrong, if we will listen to it. Then when we come to the point in life where we are not satisfied and want to become a child of God, we thus become impregnated with the Spirit of God, which will grow within us if we live for it. As the egg, before it is hatched, must be kept at certain temperature and mothered a certain length of time to come forth in the life for which it has been in preparation; even so we, to come to the perfection of our Lord and shine in the glory of God, must be carefully watched over and fathered by God, living in a nearness with him. If we are obedient until such time as he has set to bring us forth out of our earthly shells, he will give us a body fitted to the spirit we have striven to attain. Let us all strive to share the celestial glory. HAZEL M. PAAR.

IMPORTANT ARCHÆOLOGICAL DISCOVERIES.

Under the caption, "The most sensational archæological discovery since the excavation of Pompeii," Current Opinion for June discusses recent finds in the ancient Babylonian country. These discoveries are of interest to Bible students, since they seem to be confirmatory of the ancient Hebrew record. We quote:

All over the world archæologists have been amazed by the report laid before the French Academy of Inscriptions last month to the effect that the original Biblical Tower of Babel has at last been unearthed. The Abbe Henri de Genouillac, sent out by French scientists to examine the Babylonian excavations now uncovering the secrets of Nebuchadnezzar and his court, laid bare the remains of the primeval city of Kiss, one of the earliest capitals of Babylonia, much more ancient than Babylon itself. In the middle of the great courtyard of the palace were the ruins of an immensely high tower named "The Temple of the Foundation of Heaven and Earth and sacred to the National god Zamama." Statues and vases in the ruins go back as far as twenty-one hundred years before Christ.

This sensation caps the climax of the series of excavations among the Babylonian ruins which have proceeded, mainly under German auspices, for some years—hitherto with indifferent results. At last the untiring industry and patience of the archæologists on the ground are well rewarded. For example, the excavations at Assur, halfway between Nineveh and Bagdad, are bringing to light the completeness of an ancient civilization which must modify all notions of the Assyrian people. . . .

One of the most important discoveries arising from the explorations that have been organized was that of an extensive library. This was unearthed in the palace of Assur-bani-pal at Nineveh, and it contains thousands of tablets. The name of Assur-bani-pal is inscribed upon most of them, though it is probable that, directly, the presence of such a fine collection is due to the foresight of Esar-haddon. References to old copies have led to the truth that these tablets bear inscriptions taken from former and older specimens, and duplicate copies have been discovered in Babylonia. It is apparent that the object of the library was to act as a preventive to the custom of sending their youth to be educated at Babylonia, where a risk was certain of their imbibing prejudices and assimilating dangerous political ideas. Tablets containing learning on the subjects of old languages such as the Akkadian and Sumirian, textbooks on mathematics, tablets of square and cube roots, lists of birds, plants, and animals, and geographical works point to the educative influence for which the collection was intended. But in richer and far more numerous quantities were the tablets of poetic and mythological literature.

Among these discoveries was that of a number of poetic legends relating to the career of the great Chaldean hero, Gizdhubar. The eleventh tablet of this series contains an account of the deluge, and striking similarities to the Hebrew version occur. Here the flood is ordained as a punishment for evil-doing, while the name of the builder of the ark is Samas-Napisti (interpreted "the living sun"). The mountain of Nizir is the landingplace, while the duration of the rain is seven days. The differences which occur point to the fact that the different versions were taken from one older and common legend and colored with local facts and landmarks. . . .

From the standpoint of archæology proper, the great discoveries of the Germans are the fruits of their labor among the ruins of Babylon, on the left bank of the Euphrates, seventy miles south of Bagdad. Nebuchadnezzar's palace in the Kasr or fortress—so named by the local Arabs because of the massive walls which have always projected well on the surface—have yielded the most amazing evidence of the high state of the building arts in that remote age. The entire foundations of the palace were brought to light by Doctor Koldewey's staff. These foundations are made of square burned bricks, each of which bears on its surface or lower face the name and title of the great king. The several hundred chambers of the palace are small, but one of them, much larger than the rest, had on one of its sides a low platform of bricks. This is supposed to have been the throne room. Upon the platform the throne of the king may have stood. So thorough was Doctor Koldewey in his excavations that he removed the bricks of the walls and the paving of the throne room. . . .

Although the world has been taught that the arch was of Roman origin, the excavations here bring to light evidence that the architectural device was familiar to the Babylonians nearly five thousand years before Christ. A striking instance in point was the discovery of a great arch sewer beneath the city called Fara. The arch of this sewer was perfect and symmetrical. The bricks used in its construction were plano-convex, resembling in shape and size a small loaf of bread. They were burned to a dark red. The plano-convex bricks appear to have been the first employed. The labors at this place were temporarily suspended because of the eagerness of the German archæologists to get to work upon the site of Babylon proper. Here the number of bricks is so extraordinarily large that a city of ten thousand people has been built out of material baked in kilns thousands of years before our era began. The courtyards of the houses of an Aryan population of large size and even an irrigating dam across the Euphrates have been reared out of the bricks baked for Nebuchadnezzar, and still the supply seems inexhaustible. The general appearance of the site of the ancient city is thus described:

"The ruins of Babylon consist of three large and several small mounds. Surrounding them is a ridge of dirt, reaching in places to a considerable height, and representing the city walls. Herodotus says the walls were 335 feet high and 85 feet wide. Other writers claim that they were from 42 to 56 miles in circuit; that they were surrounded with 250 towers, and pierced with 100 gateways with gates of bronze. Though the Germans have attempted to trace the walls throughout their extent, they have but partly succeeded, yet it seems that the ancient writers were fairly accurate in their descriptions.

"Of the three larger mounds, Babil, the one to the north, still retains its ancient name. Square in shape it rises to a height of over 100 feet. Specially here have the Arabs long been digging for bricks. The Germans have paid little attention to this mound, except to examine the walls which the Arabs have uncovered. Doctor Koldewey believes that an ancient structure, which gave rise to the Biblical story of the Tower of Babel, stood there. At the base the Arab diggers have revealed the huge arches of passageways leading through the mound, and they have led some scholars to believe that they supported the famous hanging gardens of Babylon. It is supposed that the overhanging foliage of the several terraces had the appearance of being suspended in the air."

The Blessing of Sleep.

"God bless the man who first invented sleep!
So Sancho Panza said, and so say I."

Thus runs an old poem in merry vein, while one in more reverent strain receives the blessing of sleep as one of the provisions of God which reveal his surpassing kindness and wisdom:

"His dew drops mutely on the hill,
His cloud above it saileth still,
Though on the slope men sow and reap,
More softly than the dew is shed,
Or cloud is floated overhead,
'He giveth his beloved sleep.'

"Of all the thoughts of God that are Borne inward into souls afar,
Along the Psalmist's music deep,
Now tell me if that any is,
For gift or grace, surpassing this—
'He giveth his beloved sleep?'"

Night, dark and quiet, except where man alters conditions, is given of the Lord for rest and recuperation of the physical powers. The day for busy labors; the night for rest and physical repair; this is the order of nature for all animals having a well-developed nervous system. Not only must the brain have this rest, but the whole body must also have a share in it.

One who has watched beside a sick bed with intense anxiety knows the sense of relief that comes when it is perceived that the ministrations of health-giving sleep are at work. How often the direction of the physician is, "If he sleeps, do not awaken him for food or medicine; sleep will do more to build him up."

And one who has lost sleep for a long period knows the sick sensation of the body's longing for sleep, the boon we so often fail to appreciate and to use to the upbuilding of our physical strength.

"Tired Nature's Sweet Restorer."

An accepted author on hygiene says: "The loss of sleep is one of the most common causes of ill health. The muscles, the nerves, the brain in particular, are all in full activity when we are awake. Repair goes on every moment, whether we are awake or asleep. During the waking hours, however, the waste of the tissues exceeds the repair, while during sleep the repair exceeds the waste. . . . During sleep the vital organs rest because they are worked at their lowest rate. The eye, the ear, the brain, and the nerves are rested by darkness, silence, and unconsciousness. The tired muscles thus regain their vigor and the exhausted brain is refreshed."

The Hours Set Apart for Sleep.

"Take sleep in the hours set apart by God for the rebuilding and strengthening of the body and mind; for even now there are some, even among the elders, who are suffering in mind and body, who have disregarded the advice of the Spirit to retire early and to rise early that vigor of mind and body should be retained."

In connection with this counsel of the Lord we give that of a man of the medical profession: "The midnight lamp of the student should be thrown out of the window. Better work can be done in one hour in the morning than in two late at night. Students need much sleep. They do not need the morning nap, however, as much as they need the sleep that comes before midnight. 'Early to bed and early to rise' is a good motto for the student as well as for the farmer. Plenty of sleep is one of nature's laws that must not be broken. The night should not be turned into day, nor day into night, in order to please our fancy. He who persists in breaking nature's laws will pay a severe penalty; he will lose that which is more precious than gold,—a healthy body.

"Lay aside your books, go to bed early, have fresh air in the room, and lie down to quiet and restful sleep. Awake with the rising sun, and while the brain is refreshed, impress it with the teachings of the books."

How Long Shall We Sleep?

"The amount of sleep necessary depends upon our occupation and temperament. . . . Eight hours of sound sleep for a grown man or woman, and more for children, is about the average amount required. Children naturally need more sleep because their bodies need more rest during the period of growth. Hence the infant sleeps most of the time, if well and properly cared for.

"Little children should always be put to bed early and allowed to sleep in the morning until they awake of themselves. During hot weather the active child should be undressed, bathed, and put to bed in the middle of the day for a good nap."

To use Burbank's expression, the integrity of the nervous system, which he regards as one of the child's priceless treasures, is thus preserved.

The sleepy child, who ought to be in bed or who has been awakened before he has finished his sleep, is cross because his nerves have not been sufficiently rested; and yet it is sometimes remarked, as if a matter of slight importance, "Oh, there is nothing the matter; he is only cross because he is sleepy."

In our modern life, where so many things are askew, one of the wrong conditions prevalent is the neglect to take sleep in the hours set apart by our Maker for the resting of our bodies. One of the worst forms of robbery is the shortening of the hours of sleep in childhood and youth.

Nervous Breakdowns.

Doctor Bolton says: "In the average home little attention is given to the amount of sleep of the children and the conditions under which it is taken. Without doubt a large percentage of the cases of nervous breakdowns reported among high-school pupils can be traced to irregular, inadequate, and unrefreshing sleep."

This author furnishes a table showing the desirable number of hours of sleep suited to the different ages of childhood and youth. This table is approved by a noted authority on child study and on nervous diseases.

Age	Hours of sleep per night
5—6	13½
6—7	13
7—8	12½
8—9	12
9—10	11½
11—12	11
13—14	10
14—15	9½
15—17	9
17—19	8½

The infant in arms is quite likely to get its proper amount of sleep. Much as the little being is loved, the average family is pleased to have him sleep much of the time during that period when he is still wholly dependent upon others. The danger of his sleeping hours being cut short begins when he begins to take care of himself. Perhaps his sleeping hours are most seriously encroached upon after he has reached school age, when he becomes old enough to be considered eligible to the various forms of entertainment given at night.

Should those having children compare the table given above with the hours of sleep had by their children, it will probably reveal the fact that, in the majority of cases, far less sleep is had than is required for the preservation of health.

Where Are the Children?

A man there was in the years long gone by, whose first question as he crossed the threshold of his home often was, "Where are the children?" It is a question on the lips of many a father and mother whose children engage their most earnest thought.

It is a serious question in these times when so many attractions surround the young, attractions which are often questionable in the results they leave. Where are the children at night, in those hours when they should be preparing for restful sleep?

In your appreciation of the benefits to be derived from the freedom of play, do you let the children run free in the hours of darkness? Can it not be arranged that they may have sufficient recreation in the hours of day? Are your growing boys and girls often out late at night at the picture shows? Do the things they see there do them enough good to atone for the loss of the sleep nature, if heeded, demands for them?

Would not much of the evil, known especially in the cities, disappear, were it possible to induce humanity to use rightfully the hours set apart for sleep? Night is being turned into most hideous day by the multitudes who pervert the ways of nature and nature's God.

As your children grow up, why permit them to acquire the habit of going out at night? Taking all things into consideration, is there a better place for the average child in the evening hours than his home? Two young burglars, one sixteen, the other eighteen, were seized a few nights since in a private residence. How early did those boys begin to spend their evenings away from home? It has been observed of late that many of the criminals of the large cities are young men, little more than boys. Why do parents permit their children to acquire the habit of running at large amid the dangers of city attractions and temptations? They may not be able to control the youth of sixteen, but can they not guide him in the formation of his habits when he is six?

One of the best habits for little children is that of spending the evening at home and of retiring early. This habit will cling long to the one who forms it, for nature will assist by dictating to him when he needs sleep.

Joy Riding at Night.

One of our large western cities has found it necessary to pass an ordinance designed to do away with joy riding by boys and girls under twenty-one years of age. One of the daily papers of that city says: "If parents of girls and boys under twenty-one years old do not safeguard them by prohibiting them from participation in wild joy rides, the city will."

The ordinance introduced into the council of this city to prohibit joy riding by boys and girls at night comes as the result of several motor car episodes which have ended in sorrow to young women. One of these, a young girl of sixteen, sustained a fractured skull by jumping from a speeding car to avoid the insults of a youth of twenty. The girl was one of a party whose ages ranged from fifteen to twenty-one.

This was an innocent young girl who had never before known the experience of being out on the city streets at night in such company. She deceived her parents and went to a dance hall, afterwards accepting the invitation of young acquaintances to ride home in the car. Though admitting the mistake of their daughter, her parents are thankful that she prized her honor above her physical safety when she leaped, it might have been, to her death.

But this was a girl who had been reared a home girl. There are multitudes of pure little girls growing up to go in ways of shame because they are not kept from the contamination of the city streets at night. There are multitudes of good little boys who are growing into hardened, immoral men from the same cause.

Commenting upon the experience of the girl injured in her night joy ride, one of the city papers asks: "In view of these incidents, isn't it the duty of parents to ask themselves some questions, to put themselves through a searching examination? Are they giving the attention to their boys and girls that they should? Are they seeing that their children are being fitted to meet the experiences and temptations of the world? Are they providing the proper instruction to their growing sons and daughters? And are they maintaining the comradeship and bringing the unconscious influence to bear that do so much toward establishing ideals of duty for young men and women?"

We add the question, Are they keeping their children from the streets at night and forming in them the habit of taking rest in the hours set apart for sleep, in the early hours of night?

Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE FIRST THURSDAY IN OCTOBER.

The church, its priesthood and members, that all may earnestly engage in the building up of Zion to the ideal condition of oneness and equality revealed in the revelations to the church. Pray that each member may be clothed with that charity which will lead him to speak evil of no one, but to regard the reputation of a brother or sister as his own. Also that greater power may be had in the healing of the sick.

Lesson, Moroni 7: 29. Memory Verse, James 4: 11.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Mrs. George H. Spurling, of Islesford, Maine, has a bad trouble in her head and asks for our prayers in her behalf. She also asks prayers for her sister, Mrs. Frances E. Spurling, who is suffering with cancer of the lung. These afflicted sisters desire the restoration of their health, but ask it in submission to God's will.

The pathway to success is in serving humanity. By no other means is it possible, and this truth is so plain and patent that even very simple folk recognize it.—The Fra.

"Jots by the Wayside."

Since writing you we have been climbing the Ozarks. Emerging in a measure from their fastnesses, we are now in Barry County, Missouri, domiciled with our worthy brother, W. S. Hankins, president of the Travers Branch.

This county is the almost extreme southwest corner of the Zion State. It would seem from the topography of the country that this county, embracing eight hundred and ten square miles, sits nearly astride the Ozark Range. There is a great diversity in its surface; rolling prairie, with fields of grain and a fairly good corn crop, considering the drouthy season, then the "flat woods," with narrow valleys, hedged in with somber, oak clad hills, severed by silvery streams, small farms dotting the whole, which are as fruitful as they are picturesque.

Those who may have in their mind's eye towering peaks and frightful chasms because of the name "Ozark Mountains," would be disappointed when searching for such. Yet there are some scenic wonders in the Ozarks. There are no wet marshes or lagoons to poison the air; but free, open, fresh, running streams, cool and refreshing, fed by everlasting springs, furnish the best of water in abundance the year around.

However, it is not our desire so much to describe these mighty hills, so green and refreshing and in striking contrast to the almost burnt up fields of Kansas and Oklahoma, as it is to give a word of counsel and advice to our brethren in this district. In the light of the experience of the last few weeks, we wish to sound a note of warning to all whom it may concern. As your district president, I would be derelict in duty should I be blind to the abuses or deaf to the necessities of the district.

There are ministers preaching in the district of whom we know but little or nothing, who may or may not be members of the district, who, from their activities, are not, nor do they seem to care, to be amenable to branch or district authority, and who are preaching in a haphazard, slipshod manner that is very undesirable indeed. We greatly desire and expect that brethren so preaching shall be in harmony with branch and district authority; otherwise they have no right to preach or officiate within the district.

The admonition given from time to time for all ministers to labor as much as possible in the district does not mean that there should not be order and system in their work. There must be consultation with the branch presidents, and harmony with such authority; also with district authority; that we may be in touch and receive promptly your reports, that we may report promptly to the minister in charge and the First Presidency all labor done in the field.

Again, the church does not send men out to preach politics, or their opinions from any political viewpoint, but to preach the gospel; yet there are a few men who seemingly are relying upon the ballot box to bring in the great millennial reign. This course, in our opinion, will lead many into the swamps of ruin and despair. Politics is not a factor in the angel's message; neither indeed can be. In the great magna charta,—the Sermon on the Mount,—there is not a word indicating that the function of the state is to support the church; but, to the contrary, the function of the church is to support the state.

Another source of unrest to the Saints are the unwise statements reflecting upon the Bishop in handling tithes and offerings; thus restricting, in a measure, the tithes and offerings that should and would otherwise be gathered. From this same source, also, we have a deploring of the church debt in pessimistic language that is very discouraging.

We hope all such unwise statements will cease. The Lord has said such statements in the fields are displeasing to him. At the General Conference and before the general authorities is the proper place to present such things, and especially so in the light of the revelation that the Bishop's rendering of the law should be acceded to, unless there is flagrant wrong.

We are pleased to know that the effort is being made to liquidate the church debt. We hope every branch in our district will heartily respond. We are making the effort to have our quota assessed proportionately among the branches, and we believe our members will gladly comply.

What are the debts resting on our institutions to-day compared to the worth of souls and to the great good that has been accomplished? Again, are these debts anything compared to the resources of the church as a whole? By hearty cooperation they can and will be paid, and no burden need be imposed on anyone. Think of it, Saints, five cents per capita per week in one year would wipe out our entire debt. One picture show sacrificed per week, or some other thing as frivolous—any eliminating from the lusts of the eye, ear, or appetite, and the five cents would be saved and the church be put out of debt and souls made happy.

The plan of paying the debt was adopted by the committee appointed at the late General Conference after careful and mature deliberation, and we believe it must commend itself to all the Saints. And although the drouth is on, the barrel of meal will not give out nor the cruse of oil grow less.

Editors Herald: If there be any Latter Day Saint brother of the Reorganization who is lonely and without a fixed home, my invitation is, Come, share with me. I have a homestead here which is of the finest soil; plenty of wood, and pure, sparkling water. I have a neat little cabin.

All openings in the timber are full of wild berries; there is game just at my door, and fish for the catching, near by. The meadows are hard to beat. There are some few good government quarters vacant yet, but they will not last long. The influx here is great.

I am situated five miles from Deerfield, on the railroad, to the east, but only three miles to a new railroad on the north, with a prospective town, and within the one hundred mile rate to Winnipeg to the south.

My intention is, when I have gained title to the above mentioned holdings, should God in his goodness spare me, to transfer same to the Lord's service, feeling that I am unable to serve him in any other way.

Your brother,
W. M. YOUNG.

BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND, September 5, 1913.

Editors Herald: Inclosed please find copy of letter written by one of the members of the Seventh Quorum of Elders. If you can give it place in the pages of the HERALD I feel sure it will be read with interest, not only in this land, but on your side of the "deep pond." The brother is known in the States, also in Canada, and I feel sure some would like to hear of his activity, and a little of what is being done here.

Thanking you kindly for past consideration and kindness in publishing articles which have been sent from this mission, I am,

Yours in bonds and for progress,
J. E. MEREDITH.

CORBALS, GLASGOW, July 31, 1913.

J. E. MEREDITH, President Seventh Quorum of Elders.

Dear Brother; Greeting: Your circular letter reached me here in Glasgow 29th inst. You will realize from reading of letter, I am away from home. Just to inform you why I am in this city: I am sent here by my employer to do work for the firm from Wales.

Your letter I read with deep interest. Such a spirit of love and comfort seems to uplift the soul. You ask, Are we using our talents well and wisely to forward the Lord's work? In answer to that, dear brother, I can truly say yes, to the best of my ability. I am using that talent which the Lord has seen fit to bestow upon such a weak instrument as I, your humble brother.

I herewith feel it my bounden duty to inform you, dear brother, of the labor I am performing while being in this city. I could not hold my peace or the very stones would cry out against me, it is such a glorious work. I am preaching every Sunday evening in Cathedral Square. I assure you this is a battle ground; this is the place to try one, of what he is made.

I meet with much opposition. I really have to defend the church from all sides. Our beloved Martyr's character was attacked, so I soon defended it and put the enemy to flight. After finishing my discourse the enemy attacked me from all sides, but with the help of the Spirit their fortress falls to the ground. Baptism is a very stiff pill for them to get past their throat. But I am making friends. After I had addressed them on baptism they seemed to get quite in a rage; the best weapon, I find, is a calm spirit; they really can not understand me keeping so calm. But let me say, dear brother, it requires great faith and courage. But it is doing more to win the people over to my side. After they had tried to hound me down a young man stepped up to defend me. This young man had been one of my strong opponents on the Glasgow Green. He said, "Friends, it is no use you trying to hound him down; his proof is too strong for you to overthrow." He said, "I tried, but failed. His scripture proof is too powerful, you can not overthrow him." Thanks for his appearing, he did me a deal of good. There was one lady asked me for a Book of Mormon last Sunday evening, so I am loaning her mine.

This is just a brief outline of what I am doing. You see, brother, I am not sleeping—can't sleep in this work. If they knock me down, why, I will just rise again, just as fresh. I may be here till the end of August. This is my third visit to this city. When I am at home, why the people are just glad to see me return. I am willing to sow, brother; they who come after may reap.

Just a word in reference to conference. I must admit that it is a disappointment to me not to be present with you in quorum meeting. I really have been isolated from you for a long time. My faith and prayers are with you, dear brother, and the quorum assembled. May peace and love be your portion. Greet all the quorum for me. I need all their faith and prayers to help me fight the battle in this city.

May the dear Lord impart unto you wisdom and light and understanding to feed and direct the quorum.

Your brother in the gospel love,

J. T. NORTON.

LUTHER, MONTANA, September 5, 1913.

Editors Herald: I feel my weakness very much, being in an isolated condition, but am hoping if it be the Lord's will that it will not be so always. How I long to meet with the Saints and hear the gospel preached again.

The Lord has prospered us in this part of the country by giving us good crops.

My husband has been suffering for quite a while with some kind of breaking-out on his hands. We thought at one time that it was going into blood poison, which is very bad in this country.

My husband is not a member of the church, but I am hoping and praying that he will be some day. How lonely it is to be in an isolated condition and not even your husband a member.

I close with good wishes for all of the Saints,
As ever in gospel bonds,

ROSE WILSON.

MANSFIELD, WASHINGTON, September 5, 1913.

Editors Herald: On reading in the Ensign of the efforts made by some and letters written to encourage others to help cancel the church debt, I decided to fall in line also. So I request just a little room in company with those who are willing to do their part in this work, so necessary to be done and yet so easy to accomplish if all who can will lend a helping hand.

At present I am many miles away from my home branch, and will send my offering direct to Bishop Kelley, hoping that many others who are absent from branches will do likewise. Our heavenly Father gives to or makes it possible for us to obtain all that we have. How easily he could withhold some of those blessings; and we could live on just the same.

The Lord has said this is a day of sacrifice. I often think that we as Saints care too much for those things that please the eye and gratify the palate, and we purchase many things that we could as well do without. Soon they have gone to decay, and we are no richer, no happier, no better for having had them. I feel that we must learn to care less for worldly things and more for the things of God, else we may fall by the way as did many of the Nephites of old. Which will it be? May the Lord help us to think seriously and act wisely.

I feel glad in my heart that the move has been made by some to get our church out of debt. Let us push to keep the ball rolling, until from the Bishop comes the welcome news, Out of debt. My home address is Joy, Illinois.

Eastern Oklahoma.

A few happenings in this mission field may be of interest. The first thing of note this year was a debate between Brother Willie Peacock and W. C. Austin of the Free Will Baptist faith. The debate began on July 13, continuing four days. W. C. Austin affirmed that the Bible taught that all the wicked who went to hell would for ever remain there. Brother Peacock affirmed that the Book of Mormon was of divine origin, and worthy the respect of all Christian people.

W. C. Austin, in his first affirmative speech, began with the Greek word gehenna, and tried to interpret it to mean hell, a lake of fire and eternal punishment, and then referred to Matthew 5: 22, 29; 10: 28, 29; 25: 41.

In answer Brother Peacock showed that the wrong application had been made; that the word gehenna, translated hell, was rendered from the Hebrew which is translated the Valley of Hinnon, situated southwest of Jerusalem. In this place were cast all manner of filth, carcasses of dead beasts, and the unburied bodies of criminals, and a continual fire was kept up to consume the filth, etc. Brother Peacock further showed that hell spoken of in the New Testament symbolizes death and utter destruction, but in no place signifies a place of eternal torment.

This evidence was taken from Wilson's Emphatic Diaglott, page 18, alphabetical appendix. When W. C. Austin saw that this argument so completely refuted his claims he arose to a point of order and asked to have the Diaglott ruled out of the debate. What telling effect it has to capture a man's own weapon and turn it on him!

W. C. Austin referred to Revelation 14:10, 11 to show the final destiny of the wicked, and that hell constituted a lake of fire and brimstone. Brother Peacock showed that these scriptural citations referred to God's disapproval of the wicked, bringing forth the evidence from 2 Thessalonians 1:9 that this destruction is from the presence of God and the glory of his power, etc.

Brother Peacock set forth in his evidences with reference to the divine origin of the Book of Mormon the testimony of the eleven witnesses; that the Book of Mormon was a record of God's dealings with the people of the Western Hemisphere, and was hence in agreement with the Bible fact that God had made of one blood all nations, and that he was no respecter of persons; that the book came forth in fulfillment of the Scriptures, both Old and New Testament; that the book was connected with and a part of the marvelous work which was to come forth in the last days.

W. C. Austin in reply only offered a small amount of criticism to the effect that the Book of Mormon came from the Solomon Spalding Romance, and that it taught that Jesus Christ was born at Jerusalem, while the Bible showed that he was born at Bethlehem. Brother Peacock showed that the word at was a preposition, meaning near by, as at the sea, not in the sea, at the grave, not in the grave. He showed further that the same statement is made in 2 Kings 14:20, where we read that a certain king was buried at Jerusalem in the city of David, which city was Bethlehem, Luke 2:4.

This debate was a grand victory for the truth, and much good was done. Willie Peacock is a young man, was only ordained about three years ago. He will make an able defender of the gospel if he will live a faithful life and search the Scriptures and all good books.

We have had several profitable meetings this year. I will mention one particularly, which was held at Fanshaw. We had a very busy day: Sunday school at 10 a. m., preaching at 11, baptizing at 2 p. m., sacrament and prayer meeting at 3, and preaching again at 8. When the day's work was over I retired to rest feeling almost worn out. As I was breathing a prayer a beautiful light appeared in the room and I heard a voice say, "Lift up your head, for your redemption draweth nigh." I can not express my joy at that moment. My weariness all vanished and I felt repaid a thousand times for all the labor I had done in the gospel work.

May the Lord bless us all, enabling us to soon build up Zion and make ready for our Savior to come, and then peace, happiness and eternal life will be ours to enjoy.

Your brother in the gospel work,
E. A. ERWIN.

Hawaii.

We write to inform your readers of the progress of the work in these islands, for we are really progressing, even though it is slowly.

In the absence of Elder Waller, Elder Barrett and I have been compelled to confine our labors to Honolulu for some months past, taking care of the Honolulu Branch and doing what additional missionary work we could. Since the early part of July we have been holding tent meetings, and have generally had fair crowds and a good interest. On August 23, four people were baptized. Others from that neighborhood are very much interested and we believe will follow soon. We are having good help from our two young brothers, James Puuohau and Charles Lee, (priests), and also from the Sunday-school workers under the leadership of Brother Isaac Harbottle, district superintendent.

On September 21 we are going to hold a Sunday school convention. We plan to have a big time, of which we will probably write later. On August 31 a new Sunday school was organized in Palama, which promises to be a good one. The work among the Chinese children and the Japanese is being kept up and we hope the seed that is being sown will eventually take root.

On August 23 Hiataro Tsuji, one of our Japanese brothers, left on the S. S. Sierra, en route for Graceland College. This will be the first pupil from here, and we hope his stay in Lamoni will be for his good and a boost to the work here, especially among his own nationality.

On July 12 we had our annual Sunday school picnic at Kapiolani Park, five schools taking part. We had a special car for the children. After dinner we served ice cream of our own make, in cornucopias, disposing of two hundred and fifty. There was more harmony between the different schools than at our previous picnics, and all entered into the sports of the day in the proper spirit.

On July 24 the Honolulu Religio gave a farewell social for Sister Barrett, who was leaving on the 26th for Denver. A large crowd attended and the spirit of fellowship was manifest. The Saints gave the departing sister several gifts as tokens of their appreciation of her work during the two years she has been here. On the 26th a large crowd of Saints were at the wharf and Sister Barrett was loaded down with "leis" (flower wreaths). As the boat swung out into the channel we wondered when our time would come to return to the home land. We are now on our fourth year here, and are living in hopes. But be the time near or distant, we hope to leave behind a record of duty faithfully performed, and some fruits to show for our labors.

Sister McConley has but recently returned from a short vacation to the Island of Hawaii, where she visited the Volcano Kiluea. We like "batching," but were glad to have her back.

With best wishes to all the Saints everywhere, and with faith strong in the final triumph of this work,

In gospel bonds,

M. A. McCONLEY.

Nova Scotia.

On June 5, in company with my next door neighbor and fellow missionary, Brother E. A. Stone, I started for this mission field to begin the year's work among strange faces and in strange places. The good Saints at Kirtland gave us a happy surprise and a little purse ere leaving them for the year.

I stopped off at Niagara Falls and attended the conference; an excellent conference, too. We performed our part of the work with pleasure. Brother Stone spared no pains to show us the many places and sights of interest, and made my all too short stay very pleasant. We were very pleasantly and cheerfully domiciled with Brother and Sister Spriggle.

By the big-heartedness of Brother A. P. Crooker, a traveling salesman from Toledo, Ohio, we were proffered and accepted the rare privilege of a Pullman sleeper from Buffalo to Boston, which we very much enjoyed, it being our first ride in such quarters, and perhaps the last unless like fortune smiles on us again.

At Boston I was prevailed upon to remain over Sunday and deliver the Children's Day address. Some of the brethren ren in attendance from Attleboro insisted that I go there and preach in the evening, which I did, with pleasure. The Saints at Boston and Attleboro, also at Niagara and Buffalo, gave evidence of their true discipleship by aiding the missionary in a more substantial way than with the empty phrase, "Success to you."

From Boston we went by steamer to Stonington, Maine, where I met Brother Greene and family, who were reviewing the old home scenes prior to his long trip to Jerusalem. On Sunday evening we were greeted with a large congregation of Saints and friends, with whom we had labored so pleasantly the previous year. It is good to meet kindred spirits in the gospel.

June 27 found me in King George's land, at River Philip. The conference of the district convened June 28. This conference was said by some to be the best they ever attended. Here I met Brother H. L. Rushfelt, of Independence, Missouri, eager and anxious to get to work. This is Brother Rushfelt's first year in the mission field. He is earnest and industrious, not letting many moments go idly by. With these characteristics, seasoned with wisdom, which time and experience will bring, we see no reason why he should not make good.

We held about two weeks' tent meetings at River Philip, and at times had good crowds and attention; but the nights were so cold that people would not attend. We kept the tent up while we went to Williamsdale and held some very successful meetings, hoping all the time the weather would warm up so we could take the tent into some new fields, but up to September we have had very little summer temperature. It seemed strange to get news from the States of how people were suffering from the heat while we were sleeping comfortably under three comforters.

While at Williamsdale we baptized Mr. and Mrs. Clark, excellent people, and who we feel certain will be a credit to the church. Although seventy-five years of age, Mr. Clark's mind is as clear and he is as physically active as one at half that age. We found some good Saints there. We were kindly cared for by Brother and Sister Leander Johnson, with pleasant visits and other considerations and from Brother and Sister Hazen Johnson, John Johnson, Sister Taylor, and Brother and Sister Clark. We held some good meetings in a union church five miles from Williamsdale, with favorable comments on our efforts. I am of the opinion good can be done there.

We held some street meetings in Amherst, but cool and damp nights, city band, Salvation Army, and a drunken constable stood in the way of making the effort all we wished for. Brother and Sister Boyd Johnson are the only Saints there, and the enjoyment we lacked in street meetings was supplied in a week's visit with these good people. They are calculated to make the name Latter Day Saint honorable in Amherst.

From Amherst we went to River Herbert, a new opening, and held forth in a schoolhouse so small, but interested congregations. Mr. and Sister Pushton live there, and did all they could to make our stay pleasant. We hope to see Mr. Pushton in the church ere long.

I did not get to attend a reunion this year, feeling that my work was more needed here than at a reunion. To me this was quite a sacrifice, but I felt better in making the sacrifice rather than having the hungry Saints sacrifice the spiritual food I might be able to give them. For the Lord has blessed me abundantly with light and liberty in all my work here.

At present we are holding some excellent meetings in the church here, and the Saints are supporting us royally. This is the place of many happy experiences in bygone days. Brother and Sister Burton opened the work here thirty years ago. They freely secured the home of Mr. and Mrs. Halley, who made them and all the elders a good home ever afterwards. Mrs. Halley still lives; she is ninety-four years old, and nearly all her talk is of those days when Brother and Sister Burton made their home with them. Whenever she mentions this name tears flow down her aged face. The old picture she holds of Brother Burton is as dear to her, she says, as a real brother. Strange to say, notwithstanding the love she has for those early elders and for the church, she has never obeyed the gospel. But surely her reward will be great.

Old Brother Dimick is very low, and his passing is looked for any time. He has been a faithful soldier for many years. He is tenderly cared for by his two daughters. What few words he is able to mutter are about the church and his happy experiences of past years in the service of the Lord. Holmes J. Davison, A. H. Parsons, and Frank Sheehy are mentioned among the early elders here.

To-morrow I take my leave of Nova Scotia. I will take boat at Yarmouth for Boston, and on to Western Maine to labor the remainder of the conference year among the ever enchanting views of the rock-bound coast. As the time nears, those clams, scallops, fish, and lobsters seem to loom up before me in epicurean ferocity.

As I find myself to-day in the extreme East, laboring in the vineyard of the Lord, I can not help but take a retrospect and note the many changes this life brings to us, and how a few years will put land, seas, and continents between us. I look back a few years to dear old Ohio, where I found myself laboring with Brethren Griffiths and Miller, now in Australia, with Brethren Greene, Koehler and Jenkins, now in Jerusalem, V. M. Goodrich, now in California, E. E. Long, now in Alberta, Canada. The many changes that may take place in our lives before we shall all meet again are wisely kept from our vision. May God abundantly bless all his servants in whatever nation or clime they may be.

In closing, I wish to say that I have been busy while in Nova Scotia, and can see where some good has been done, and I leave with a degree of satisfaction. I found the same opportunity for work here as elsewhere, and enjoyed it.

Peace be with all Israel.

F. J. EBELING.

SOUTH RAWDON, NOVA SCOTIA, September 2, 1913.

Southern Missouri.

I wish to again tell of the ups and downs of our work here in southern Missouri. To date, this conference year has been fraught with good works for us. I have baptized thirty-five and still have calls to come and preach.

Our little reunion at Ava, Missouri, was a builder to the Saints. Those who missed this gathering have missed a good feast of that manna that cometh from above. This was not a feast of the rich and grand, but a feast on the rich and grand blessings that our Master has promised to his Saints in latter days, that refreshing from the presence of the Lord. It was good to be there, and mingle with those whose hearts and pocketbooks are in this work. Brother Ammon White was with us in conference and reunion. We were made glad through his association.

Some people would much rather have their heart in the work than their pocketbook. That kind of a man generally says, "Let the good work go on." And so he does just "let the good work go on," without any effort on his part.

I suppose one reason I have written these last few lines is because I have been selected to collect tithing in this distract. Brother G. A. Davis of Thayer, Missouri, will be our new agent, with Brother J. F. Cunningham and myself as collectors. If we do not hear from you it will not be our fault. Brother "Johnny" is a preacher and Brother George is another preacher; you will know who I am without any "red tape" here.

This has been a great year for this district in the way of gathering dear souls into the kingdom, and still the way is bright before us. We had the bad fortune to have our tent burned a short time ago, in Sister Pout's barn. Lightning struck the barn.

A good rain fell here last night, and the "big red apple" looks "fine and dandy." Peaches and apples are going to waste all over this country. Light corn and hay crops for this year.

May Zion arise and shine.

Yours in bonds,

WEST PLAINS, MISSOURI, Route 1.

AGENTS' NOTICE.

To the Saints of Saskatchewan District; Greeting: I desire to stir up this district, by way of remembrance, if to the discharge of their duty along the lines of what some term the temporal law. There is an old saying that a word to the wise is sufficient. I hope that in this case I may write the word that will strike the right key. I have been appointed bishop's agent for this district, and feel it my duty to address you in that connection.

That the law of tithing is a part of God's law I do not hesitate to testify, and can further say I know that it is a part of God's law. We can not keep the whole of God's law without keeping the law of tithing.

Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5 says he that is tithed shall not be burned; and while this does not necessarily mean that if you pay one-tenth you shall escape the judgments of God, it does mean that you will suffer loss if you do not observe this law. For instance, we read that he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. Would baptism save without belief? No. Neither would the paying of tithing save if one did not do it in the right spirit; or with a desire to humbly keep the law of God.

God says this is a day of sacrifice and a day of the tithing of his people. What sacrifice are we making for the advancement of truth?

I expect if I can to visit every branch in the district some time before spring, and have a talk with the Saints as to the observance of this very important part of God's law. But in the meantime I would like to be kept busy writing receipts for tithing.

I have perhaps said enough for this time. I trust that these suggestions may help bring to us blessings from God through obedience to his law. Praying and working for the advancement of God's kingdom on earth, I am

Your coworker,

DISLEY, SASKATCHEWAN.

J. DOBSON.

To the Saints of the Portland District: No doubt you all heard of the commendable act had at last General Conference to raise money to pay off the church debt. Our apportionment is $450, which is about $2 per member. In addition to this we have about $150 each month to raise to supply the elders' families. Saints, let us rally to the front and meet our share of the burden by October 5.

In sending your money, give full name and amount, and state whether you give it as tithing or offering.

Yours in bonds,

L. STOVER, Bishop's Agent.

Died.

THOMAS.—Nancy Green was born March 18, 1842, died September 5, 1913. She married Harrison Thomas December 25, 1859. To them were born four children, a son and three daughters. One daughter, Sister Lizzie Walters, of Eldorado Springs, Missouri, survives her. Funeral sermon by George Jenkins, interment in Vergil City, (Missouri,) Cemetery.

BARNETT.—Gladys Bernice Barnett was born at Hamilton, Iowa, September 19, 1905; passed away at Independence Sanitarium, September 8, 1913. She leaves father, mother, seven sisters and five brothers. She bore patiently her illness of three weeks. Services at the home near Blythedale, Missouri, conducted by J. F. Garver. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery, Lamoni, Iowa.

CARTER.—John Carter died May 12, 1913, aged 68 years, 2 months and 3 days. He was born at Athens, Ohio. He married Almira R. Clark, April 18, 1867. He is survived by two sisters, one brother, companion, two sons, and one daughter. Funeral services in charge of J. F. Mintun, prayer by Reverend W. E. Wolfington, G. A. R. in charge at grave.

ROWAN.—Harriet Tyson was born July 10, 1825, in Ontario, died September 1, near Cook, Nebraska. She married James Rowan near Nauvoo, Illinois, in November, 1845. She was baptized by C. H. Porter, October 25, 1890, at Elmwood, Nebraska. Of nine children, three daughters and one son survive her, also has one sister. Burial at Elmwood, Nebraska; funeral from the Christian church; sermon by James Huff, assisted by the Christian and Methodist ministers.

CRANDALL.—Charlie M., beloved son of Brother and Sister A. B. Crandall, was born April 24, 1876, at Panama, Iowa, died in the Ockner Hospital, at Durango, Colo., August 13, 1913. He was baptized by H. O. Smith, at Gallands Grove, Iowa, June 14, 1891, confirmed by W. A. Carroll, H. O. Smith, and E. Salsbury. The remains were taken to Flora Vista, New Mexico, the home of his parents, for burial. A large attendance at the funeral evidenced the respect in which he was held. Father, mother, four brothers and a host of relatives and friends mourn his departure. Sermon by Reverend Box, assisted by Reverend Bundy, of the Methodist church, closing remarks by Peter Adamson, of Fruitland, New Mexico.

PETT.—At his home in Crawford County, Iowa, September 11, 1913, Elder John Pett. He was born in Eddington, England, September 27, 1824. Was a member of Reorganized Church for fifty years. His dying words were: "The Lord is my shepherd." He ever maintained his faith in the gospel, doing all he could for the cause he loved. A good man has fallen "asleep in Jesus" to await the morn of the first resurrection. He leaves six sons, four daughters, and several grandchildren. The funeral service at Gallands Grove church was largely attended. Sermon by J. F. McDowell, assisted by Charles Derry.

BRANTWAIT.—William Brantwait, son of Edward and Frances Brantwait, was born July 26, 1871, in Jones County, Iowa, departed this life August 19, 1913, at his home near Vinton, Ohio, after an illness of about three weeks of malaria and typhoid fever. He married Mary V. Wood, May, 24, 1898, at Lamoni, Iowa. He united with the Reorganized Church at the age of fourteen years. He was a consistent believer in the faith, and died firm in the hope of a glorious resurrection. Besides his grief-stricken companion he leaves an aged father and seven sisters to mourn, and wait for the great reunion that will come in a world where parting is unknown and sorrow never comes. He will be sadly missed. He was an honest, industrious man, a good neighbor, a kind and loving husband. He met life's trials and joys fairly and unflinchingly. He often remarked that if his work on earth was done, that the Lord would take him; if not he would leave him here. He is at rest with the pure in heart. The last sad rites were held August 21, near his home, in the Latter Day Saint church, conducted by A. B. Kirkendall; interment in Mount Tabor Cemetery.

SEELEY.—Andrew J. Seeley was born March 10, 1835, at Rockland, New York, died September 16, 1913, at Kingston, Missouri. He was baptized September 2, 1871, at Mirable, Missouri, by Ruel Frost, ordained an elder, November 20, 1874. He leaves wife, two sons, and two grandchildren. Funeral sermon by E. L. Henson. A good man has gone to his rest.

BEALL.—Mary Jane Fox was born May 2, 1852, at Mount Morris, Pennsylvania, died August 20, 1913. She married Barnett Beall, December 11, 1873. She was baptized March 11, 1895, by Gomer T. Griffiths. She has lived an exemplary life, always bearing a faithful testimony of the restored gospel. She leaves husband, two sons, Charles M. and Raymond E., and one daughter, Lura M. Rinehart. Interment in Mount Carmel Cemetery; F. L. Shinn in charge; sermon by Joseph Biggs.

KELLEY.—At the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. E. Benson, Davenport, Iowa, September 12, 1913, of cancer, Thomas curred July 27, 1913, while returning from church. He was baptized by James Caffall, March 20, 1892, at Meadow Grove, Nebraska. He was ordained a deacon in August, 1898. He was faithful to duty. He leaves a wife and six children. He moved west in 1909. In 1904 and 1905 he was a drayman at Lamoni, Iowa.

BARKER.—At Rolfe, Iowa, September 13, 1913, Delphine Barker, wife of Alexander Barker, died of dropsy. She was born near South Bend, Indiana, March 11, 1849; was baptized and confirmed by J. W. Wight, January 21, 1881. Her life was such as to win the confidence and love of all who knew her. A husband and daughter are left to feel the loss of one dearly loved. Funeral service at the home, September 16, conducted by Robert Fish and Edward Rannje.

A New Book of Sermons

The Gospel Messenger

BY ELDER J. S. ROTH

Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—know that he is a very successful missionary and an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-five of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor.

Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet doesn't tire the reader with too much monotony. Quotations and citations have been verified.

The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book.

Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c.

Advice to Farmers of Moderate Means

If you have not enough money to buy and stock a farm in the prosperous Western country; or if you want to get some experience in irrigation farming before buying you should take a "cheap ticket" trip out to the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming, and look that wonderful country over well.

The Big Horn Basin is filled with rich, irrigated farms, and you can rent one of them on shares—fair terms and no cash payment. Then you will quickly get the experience that will teach you just what to do afterwards.

You should also look into the value of the "Carey Act" farms. Fifty cents an acre to the state, and a sum yearly to the irrigation company for water rights until fully paid. You do not have to live on the land to acquire title.

The very best markets are close at hand, so you can sell at top prices all the alfalfa, potatoes, wheat, oats, dairy products, and fruit that you can raise. It is true therefore, that these farm lands to-day priced at a low figure, will in a few years' time be worth big money. That's always the history when such lands are open to extensive markets.

Write me at once and I will tell you everything about it. I am paid by the C. B. & Q. Railroad to do this, and to help you in every way possible to find just what suits you.

A special cheap Home Seekers' Excursion will leave on October 7. Plan to go with me. It will be the trip of your life and will lead to your good. There is no greater opportunity in America today, and the man who neglects it will have cause for regret.

Write me today for full particulars.

THE "MORMON MENACE."

In public lectures by the clergy and in newspaper and magazine articles occasional reference is made to the "Mormon Menace."

If the grave reverend gentlemen and the industrious quill drivers who use this startling phrase were content to apply it to that segment of the Latter Day Saint Church which has come to be best known by the title "Mormon," and by whom the title is tacitly accepted, the matter would be no concern of ours, more than of other good citizens.

But the note of warning is sounded in reference to that which we term the "great latter-day work" from its very inception, first taking organic form in April, 1830, and is made to apply to and include all that the latter-day restoration stands for, not excepting the Reorganized Church, which Reverend Nutting strangely enough thinks worse in some ways than Utah Mormonism.

We may as well confess at the very beginning that the work which we represent is and ever has been a menace, as we shall presently show. But it is a menace of quite a different nature from that which it is represented to be by these agitated clergymen and verbose space fillers.

What are the institutions, principles, or men that are menaced (i. e., threatened with harm,) by that which is termed "Mormonism," as it is correctly represented in the Reorganized Church, and in the doctrinal and ethical teaching of the Latter Day Saint Church from 1830 to 1844?

The work which we represent is identical with that work which in the days of the apostles was nicknamed "Christianity," at that time a term of reproach, just as "Mormonism" is to-day.

"Mormonism," so-called, is considered a menace to-day, and is a menace; Christianity was considered a menace then, and justly so. But again the query suggests itself, A menace to what?

When Paul came to Ephesus all those who worshiped false gods were filled with consternation. "There arose no small stir about that way." Demetrius, a silversmith, who made silver shrines for Diana, called all his fellow craftsmen together, and fluently and with vehemence pointed out the character of this great "menace" that hung over them, saying:

Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth. Moreover ye see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus, but also throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying that there be no gods, which are made with hands.

The uproar spread throughout the entire city, and when one of the disciples would have made a defense the people shouted with one voice for two hours, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," and sought to do violence to the advocates of this new "menace."

The great latter-day message, like that of old, is a menace to false gods, false doctrines, and abominable creeds. And those who feel that their craft, by which they gain their livelihood, is in danger, are most loud in its denunciation, and by their perpetual racket confuse the minds of the people, and even on occasion, like those of old, attempt violence.

The statement made early in the history of this work, and based on divine inspiration, that the creeds of the day were wrong and abominable in the sight of God raised a storm of protest that has not subsided. The clergy shout, "Great is Diana," or sentiments of similar import.

That charge against the creeds no doubt seemed severe, and still seems severe, but was it not true? That is a question that our opponents usually evade, as did those who met Paul's attack upon false gods.

In those early days predestination, infant damnation, and similar doctrines were dominant in the creeds. To say that they were wrong is to state the matter mildly. Even yet the blighting effect of such teachings is apparent.

In her book, Half a Man, Mary White Ovington says: "A theological library connected with a Calvinistic church, when recently catalogued, disclosed two long shelves of books upon hell and two slim volumes upon heaven."

"Mormonism," so-called, is a menace to all false conceptions of God, the eternal judgment, the future of man, and the justice of Jehovah, and to all faulty creeds. It menaces all human institutions that pose as divine. This menace may not manifest itself in direct or ill-natured attack, but comes by way of comparison.

An affirmative presentation of truth is the most deadly menace to error, even though the error may not be mentioned.

"Mormonism," so-called, is a menace to the saloon.

Our largest church following is found in the Independence Stake. A certain Kansas City paper some years ago remarked that if all people were like the Latter Day Saints of Independence the saloon keepers would starve to death. Let us hope, however, that they would seek some legitimate employment in preference to death by starvation.

During the Missouri election of 1910 on the liquor question Independence was one of the few towns of equal size that went dry. The Kansas City Times, November 17, declared:

Independence went "dry" by a vote of 207. That vote is explained by the stand taken by the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, whose members, including five hundred voters, declared for the abolition of the saloon.

Other large communities composed in great part of members of various other denominations, some of whom talk a great deal about the "Mormon Menace," went wet. The contrast shows what institutions need to fear the Latter Day Saint Church whenever and wherever its members are present in sufficient numbers to be able to deliver a telling blow through their right of franchise.

When the church was in power in Kirtland, in 1837, the High Council adopted a resolution discountenancing the sale of liquors in Kirtland.

When the church was in power in Far West, Missouri in 1838, the First Presidency, High Council, and Bishopric passed a resolution declaring that a stop should be put to the sale of liquors in Far West. At the same time the church in general assembly unanimously voted to not support stores that handled spirituous liquors.

When Josiah Quincy visited Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1844, he reported his observations in his book, Figures of the Past, and among other things noteworthy he declared that no spirituous liquors were tolerated in Nauvoo.

This consistent action of the church is based on the divine law given to the church:

Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3.

Inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold, it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father.—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1.

Mormonism, so-called, is a menace to the brothel, the house of assignation, and all shameless traffic in sex, under whatever disguise presented.

The standard books of the church say:

There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none.—Book of Mormon.

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repent not, he shall be cast out.—Doctrine and Covenants.

Declarations found in the Bible are of similar import, and the three books thus agreeing morally constitute a three-fold cord that is not easily broken, to borrow an expression from our reverend Senior Editor.

Such teaching plainly set forth in the books, taught by the general ministry, and carried by the visiting officers into the homes of Latter Day Saints everywhere, tend to render these homes proof against encroachments of the emissaries of vice, so far as admonition, education, and instruction can accomplish such a work. The ounce of prevention thus administered is of proverbial value.

Nor are our people individually slow to attack organized evil in its present terrible forms. A Latter Day Saint woman was perhaps as influential as any living private citizen in forcing the legislature of the great State of California to take a positive stand for the suppression of the social evil.

"Mormonism," so-called (as to-day represented in the Reorganized Church, and formerly in the church from 1830 to 1844) is a menace to all forms of evil. It is a menace to ignorance and superstition. It is a menace to false doctrines and faulty creeds. It is a menace to man made churches.

It is not a menace to any revealed truth. It is not a menace to the home. It is not a menace to the school. It is not a menace to the state. It is not a menace to virtue, honesty, industry. It is not a menace to any good principle, institution, or person.

GRACELAND COLLEGE DAY.

OCTOBER 5 IS THE TIME FOR THIS SPECIAL BENEVOLENT EDUCATIONAL WORK.

Next in importance to the missionary work of the church stands the proper education and training of the youth of the church. The one can not be successful without the other in building up and establishing Christ's work. Already we have a school which is inferior to none in advanced instruction with high moral culture. It is also upon commendable lines of approved criticism; free toleration of thought and speech and good spiritual stimulus to the student under nonsectarian influences. This is Graceland College, located at Lamoni, Iowa, in the interest of which the College Day has been set apart.

This institution, although of but few years' growth, and without the help of special endowment, is already recognized in many parts of the country through the good accomplished by its graduate workers reflecting its educational, moral, and uplifting influences. All friends of advanced education and true development of the young will certainly be pleased with the excellent work of Graceland, and since its special and important helps are largely to the burdened, toiling, and laboring classes, everyone should at once feel it a special duty to arrange to give the struggling institution a good, material uplift.

Graceland College Day, directed, fixed, and established by resolution and action of the annual conference of the church, and by this direction held out by its officers everywhere as a special benevolent work of the highest good to the body, through the education and training of the young who so much need its work, should not fail to receive the hearty approval and liberal help of every friend and member of the body. This is the only day in the year given to the gathering in of a fund to help our educational work, and all should feel a pride in making the day a success. The college is just now entering upon the work of this year and needs every cent that can be gathered upon this day to help meet the demands of the college upkeep and general running expenses for the year. We should have thirty thousand helpers upon this special day. Will the reader of this be one of them and also awaken an interest in his neighbors and friends, so they may also prove helpers in the good work?

We trust that the presidents of branches everywhere will take special interest in this work; it is a part of the Lord's work, and his servants should be upon the watch tower and call the attention of his people to the needs of his work. Also every bishop and bishop's agent in all the world should be a ready helper and promoter in this work, both before and upon the day of gathering.

We are aware of the claim made by some that this fund should be paid from the church treasury, the tithes and offering fund, and to this we have never offered objection; but the body in General Conference a few years ago decided that the fund for running expenses be raised by special offerings for that purpose, and it is not in the interest of the work nor wisdom that we refuse to abide by the majority decision. Let us abide the rules until they are changed. This is in harmony with faith, wisdom, and true discipleship.

What is needed in every department of the Lord's work are officers, stewards in charge who will steadfastly push forward his cause,—give their first and best efforts to advancing the cause of Christ. "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God." Doing this we have his promise that "all these things shall be added."

With men and women of faith leading, and pressing forward in every department of the work, the establishment of the cause of truth will soon be accomplished; the young of the church will be saved and made helpful workers with him. But we are in the midst of a great conflict and must bravely battle for the victory. Be forward in every good work, as the apostle urged.

In such a struggle it absolutely requires that we properly train and direct the young soldiers, so they may occupy as the aged heroes pass, and so work with the Lord, in the preparation of the church, the Bride, for his coming. How many can we depend upon in these emergencies when help is needed?

The answer we shall receive, or should, by the first Sabbath in November; and as in the past, with the Lord's help, we feel that the good of the college may be safely trusted in the hands of the Saints.

In making your reports, please do so addressing the President of the College, S. A. Burgess, Lamoni, Iowa, or the undersigned, Box 125, Independence, Missouri.

Trusting that we may acquit ourselves as laborers in the interest of the Master's house, and that his blessing may follow, I am,

Hopefully in the truth,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 22, 1913.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

HEBREW INSTITUTION.—Students of the Zionistic movement will be interested in the following from The Truth for August 26, published in Jerusalem:

The Hebrew Gymnasium of Jaffa has this year borne its first fruits. Nineteen boys and five young girls have finished the course at this unique institution—the only one in the entire world where all the lessons, from the four rules of arithmetic up to physics and chemistry,—from the first idea of things up to psychology, every subject is taught in Hebrew. We understand that these young people, having gained their baccalaureate, will go to Constantinople to continue their studies at the Ottoman Faculties.

RETURN OF JEWS.—From the organization of the church in 1830 it has been the understanding and teaching of the latter-day movement that the scriptural prophecies relative to the return of the Jews to Palestine were to be interpreted literally; in fact this—Israel restored—was to be one of the evidences of the genuineness of our claim of direct divine authority. The church has never ceased, in the face of opposition indifferent to bitter, to hold to this conviction. Even yet it is urged by some that the Jews are not returning, that they will never return, that they do not care to return. The following from The Christian Herald for September 17, is only one of the many instances daily occurring, to the strength of our interpretation and to the vindication of our testimony with reference to present-day revelation and the direct divine call.

One can not read even the meager cabled outlines of the proceedings of the Zionist Congress at Vienna without being impressed with the conviction that we are living in history-making times. Seven thousand delegates from almost every country, including America, and representing one hundred and twenty thousand members of the widespread Zionist organization, give a measurable idea of the growth of a movement which, a few years ago, was derived even by the Jews themselves. Although the Zionists have a full treasury, they are willing to make progress slowly along conservative lines, trusting to future developments to open the way to more ambitious projects. Indeed, Max Nordau, who has been regarded as one of the leaders of Zionism, has accused the present chiefs of the movement of abandoning the policy of Doctor Herzl, the founder, who proclaimed the one great aim and object to be the reestablishment of the Jews in their ancient home land. That this is the hope and prayer of every true member of the race we can readily believe, but it may still be far from realization. Meanwhile, such projects as the establishment of a Jewish university in Palestine and the promotion of colonization there on a large scale are to be pushed vigorously.

THE COUNTRY CHURCH.—The present state of efficiency of the country church has been a matter of considerable discussion of late, in religious circles. Two men especially interested in this question, Reverend Charles Otis Gill, and Ex-Forester Gifford Pinchot, have taken up its study, beginning with two typical rural counties, one in Vermont and one in New York State. In their investigations they acquired information regarding the church-going habits of the people of these two counties at the beginning and end, respectively, of a twenty-year period, together with comparative statements of income and expenditures, the educational equipment of ministers, the relation of existing churches to density of population, and other data relating to the general problem. They found that while in the twenty years

Church expenditures in the two counties, expressed in dollars, indicated a gain, when expressed in purchasing power they showed a loss. While membership was making a trifling gain, church attendance was suffering an alarming reduction. In a word, the vitality and power of the country church in these two counties is in decline.

These gentlemen are of the opinion that the situation calls for the adoption of a new program of social service.

KAISER ABSTAINER.—In 1835 the church adopted formally what had previously been accepted as a revelation, "showing forth the order and will of God" to be that "inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold it is not good." Public opinion at the time was not in harmony with the sentiment of this "word of wisdom." Since then the medical fraternity and many others have learned that spirituous liquors are harmful.

In this connection the following, from the Kansas City Times for August 25, will be read with interest:

The German Emperor, one of the world's leading advocates of efficiency, has become a total abstainer. He has given up drinking because medical data and his own experience convinced him that even moderate drinking impaired efficiency. That is the modern trend. Athletes aren't allowed to drink while they are in training. It puts them out of condition. Big corporations are beginning to insist that their employees leave liquor alone. Everywhere the weight of opinion is against drinking—moderate drinking—on the ground that it makes the drinker less efficient mentally and is apt to undermine his health. How strong this opinion is becoming is indicated by its latest distinguished convert in Germany, the land of moderate drinking.

KEEP IT BEFORE THE PEOPLE.

Keep it before the people—

That the earth was made for man!
That flowers were strown,
And fruits were grown,
To bless and never to ban;
That sun and rain,
And corn and grain,
Are yours and mine, my brother!—
Free gifts from heaven,
And freely given,
To one as well as another!

Keep it before the people—

That man is the image of God!
His limbs or soul
Ye may never control
With shackle, or shame or rod!
We may not be sold,
For silver or gold:
Neither you nor I, my brother!
For Freedom was given,
By God from heaven,
To one as well as another!

Keep it before the people—

That famine, and crime, and woe,
For ever abide
Still side by side,
With luxury's dazzling show;
That Lazarus crawls
From Dives' halls,
And starves at his gate, my brother!—
Yet life was given
By God from heaven,
To one as well as another!

Keep it before the people—

That the laborer claims his meed:
The right of soil,
And the right to toil,
From spur and bridle freed;
The right to bear,
And the right to share,
With you and me, my brother!
Whatever is given
By God from heaven,
To one as well as another!

Original Articles

OUR PRESENT CONDITION.

This article was written some time ago to be read at a convention held in Evergreen Chapel, near Lamoni, Iowa. In a somewhat revised form it is presented here for the benefit of HERALD readers.—EDITORS.

Awake! ye Saints of God, awake!
 Call on the Lord in mighty prayer,
 That he will Zion's bondage break,
 And bring to naught the fowler's snare.
 —Saints' Harp, Number 713.

Knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light.—Romans 13: 11, 12.

In order to properly comprehend our present conditions as a people, it will be necessary to take a brief review of the history of the church from the beginning, noting the circumstances under which its rise took place, and some of the influences that have been operating to hinder its progress in spirituality, and, if possible, to prevent its full development. These influences have been operating all along the line, to a certain extent, and are now strenuously working to circumvent the purpose of God in establishing the latter-day work. It is therefore our duty to look the fact squarely in the face, that we may be able, wisely and intelligently, to meet the exigencies and emergencies springing out of the conditions that have hitherto attended the development of the work in which we are engaged.

According to the revelations, the commandments of the latter days were given in order that the servants of the Lord "might have power to lay the foundation of this church, and bring it forth out of obscurity, and out of darkness." The Scriptures make it very clear that at the time this great event took place, namely, the coming forth and restoration of the gospel, the people, as a whole, were in a condition of deep sleep, of darkness, and spiritual obscurity. This is fully and conclusively shown by the statements which follow, and which are understood to have direct reference to that event.

In Isaiah 29: 9, 10 Inspired Translation, we read:

For, behold, all ye that do iniquity, stay yourselves, and wonder; for ye shall cry out, and cry; yea, ye shall be drunken, but not with wine; ye shall stagger, but not with strong drink. For, behold, the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep. For, behold, ye have closed your eyes, and ye have rejected the prophets and your rulers; and the seers hath he covered because of your iniquities.

SAINTS SLUMBER.

Let us not flatter ourselves, however, that this sleepy, slumbering condition is to be referred entirely to the people of the world. According to the teachings of the Savior, the people of the kingdom are to be found in a condition of somnolence in the days just prior to the coming of the Son of Man. Listen to what he says on the subject:

And then, at that day, before the Son of Man comes, the kingdom of heaven [yes, the kingdom of heaven, not the kingdoms of the world] shall be likened unto ten virgins, who took their lamps, and went forth to meet the Bridegroom. And five of them were wise and five of them were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps and took no oil with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. While the Bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. —Matthew 25: 1-4, Inspired Translation.

Now notice carefully this last expression, for it does not say, While the Bridegroom tarried, the foolish virgins slumbered and slept, but the language is, "While the Bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept," both the foolish and the wise. We claim that the kingdom has been given to us, that we are the church and the kingdom of God, and that we are living in the times referred to in the text just quoted. Therefore, if the claim be a valid one, these words of the Savior must apply to us.

And why should we expect it to be otherwise? Does not history continually repeat itself? If the church established by Christ and the apostles nineteen centuries ago was for years in a condition of sleep and needed to be awakened, it is not probable that we, too, shall pass through a like experience? That the church in the days of the apostles was in a condition of sleep is clearly indicated in the language quoted from Romans 13 at the beginning of this paper. The apostle says: "Knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep." It would be highly improper to use such language with reference to a people who were already wide awake. We speak of awakening those who are asleep but not those who are already awake; hence the apostle must have considered the church to have been asleep at the time in which he wrote the foregoing words.

Again, we not only admit, but we fully imply that we are not altogether awake, when we sing, as we often do, the hymn beginning, "Awake! ye Saints of God, awake!" Do we mean what we say when we sing these words? If not, we do what is manifestly improper. It is just as bad to sing a falsehood as to speak a falsehood. A stranger listening to such a song could not in reason think anything else but that those engaged in the singing considered the Saints of God to be asleep and that they needed to be awakened.

Oh, what inconsistent creatures we are! For is it not quite within the bounds of probability that the one singing these words most loudly would be the first to resent the implied imputation, were the sentiment expressed to be taken seriously? But in my judgment the hymn is a most beautiful one, and it is as true as it is beautiful. It ought to be sung often, and sung with the Spirit and the understanding also; and if it were so sung it would have a strong tendency to fulfill its own exhortation. It would then have a tendency to rouse the Saints from the sleepy condition in which they are vegetating and to inspire them with a truer sense of what the gospel demands of them.

A DEGREE OF LIGHT.

It is not to be said that the Saints have not, to any degree, been aroused to a sense of the blindness and darkness that prevails in the religious world. Were it not for the degree of light that many of them have received they would not have been moved upon to accept the gospel at the great cost and worldly disadvantage that it has been to them. Compared with the rest of the religious world, the degree of light they have received is very great; but compared with the dazzling brightness that lies beyond and still before us, it is very small indeed.

It is to be regretted that we too often find a disposition to rest satisfied with the general degree of light already received by the church; and so, in such quarters, when there is an attempt made to rouse the Saints to the possibilities of the greater light, there is manifest an irritation at being disturbed from moving quietly and reposefully along in the time sanctified groove. These, after having been partly awakened, have begun to doze again and the effort to fully arouse them is met with disfavor and resistance, and make one think of the paraphrase found in some of the old school readers, upon the words of Solomon concerning the condition of the slothful man.

"Tis the voice of the sluggard, I hear him complain, You've waked me too soon, I must slumber again."

Or in the wise man's own words, "Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep."

It would suit such people amazingly well if all agitation for advancement along the line could be at once and for ever put down, for they dislike exceedingly anything that disturbs the even flow of the old traditions. They love their own repose and slumberous conditions so well that they make haste to shift all responsibility for the on-carrying of the various departments of the work upon the shoulders of others.

OPPOSING POWER.

It is now time to inquire into the producing cause of the torpor and drowsiness that is to prevail in the kingdom before the time of the end, and to ascertain whether the lethargy and insensibility is natural or has been induced by artificial means. We have already read from Isaiah that the Lord had for certain reasons poured out the spirit of deep sleep upon the people addressed. But the Lord usually works by means and even employs his enemies, or rather permits them, to bring about the results that flow from resistance to the truth.

On the temporal and physical plane the weary body under normal conditions is refreshed, rested, and recuperated by natural sleep taken during the proper hours. But in the time of sickness and disease artificial means are often resorted to in order to induce the needed quiet and repose. Surgeons frequently administer anæsthetics, and in later years practice hypnotism in order to produce insensibility to pain during serious and difficult surgical operations. The light-fingered fraternity also employ these agencies to make the robbing of their proposed victims more feasible by the loss of consciousness.

There is in the world a power opposed to God and his truth, a power that is seeking to rob mankind of its dearest and most precious possession, namely, its liberty and free agency, and responsibility for its own actions. This power has composed a sleeping draught and placed it in the hands of an institution after his own heart, and of which he is the foundation. The power referred to is the Devil, and the institution is the mother of abominations. The institution is spoken of in the Scriptures under the figure of a woman in whose hand is a golden cup, the contents of which have been administered to all the nations of the earth, with the effect of making them drunk and insensible to the higher and better wisdom. According to the Scriptures this drunken sleep is universal, and it is plain that even the Saints of God have not escaped its soporific influence.

DECEITFULNESS OF RICHES.

It is quite a common peculiarity of the effect of intoxication by spirituous liquors that a man is made to feel himself immensely rich while under its influence, no matter how poverty-stricken he may be in reality. So, too, in a spiritual sense, is the effect when the church partakes of the wine of the cup in the hand of the mother of abominations. It was so in the case of the church at Laodicea, of whom it is said:

Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked; I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see.
—Revelation 3: 17, 18.

The Adversary of the truth would, if possible, keep the church of to-day in the same condition in which he succeeded in placing the Laodicean church. He would persuade the Saints that material gain is god-liness, that evidences of outward prosperity are to be received as proofs of the favor of God. We are especially warned against this in the Book of Mormon. Speaking of the day in which we live, it is said:

For behold, at that day shall he rage in the hearts of the children of men, and stir them up to anger against that which is good. And others will he pacify, and lull them away into carnal security, that they will say, All is well in Zion; yea, Zion prospereth, all is well; and thus the Devil cheateth their souls, and leadeth them away carefully down to hell.—2 Nephi 12: 18.

"Woe be unto him that crieth, All is well."—2 Nephi 12: 21, 22.

The people of this day are carried away with the love of gain, and are drunken with the spirit of money getting. It is the day of great combinations to get gain and power in the religious, political, social, and business world. The air is rife with this spirit, the atmosphere is saturated with it. It is in accordance with the course of this world, it follows the leading of the prince of the power of the air, and is the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. It is the spirit of the god of this world, which blinds the minds of men, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ should shine into them. It is the spirit of mammon, it is a spirit that is indirectly opposed to the Spirit of God, and to its manner of working. It is the spirit that in days past prevented the Saints from attaining to the greater light, and it is successfully getting in its work among them now, because it induces them to have more faith in money and in the possession of earthly riches than they have in God and in his truth.

It affected Edward Partridge, the first Bishop of the church, with "unbelief and blindness of heart." It rendered the Saints disobedient to the celestial law which requires that they should "impart of their substance as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them," and it made them say, "We will not go up unto Zion, and we will keep our moneys." The minds of the Saints were darkened because of their unbelief, and because they treated these things lightly; and this vanity and unbelief brought the whole church under condemnation. Men keep their moneys and riches, because they trust in them; because they trust in them more than they do in the truth of God. If they did not trust in them they would not keep them, but would do with them as the law of the Lord requires. The result of trying to serve God and mammon at one and the same time is always darkness and blindness of mind. It is impossible to receive the knowledge of God under such conditions. James says that the double-minded man is unstable in all his ways, and that such a man need not think that he shall receive anything from the Lord.

PREPARATION AND TRANSITION.

Speaking for myself, I would say that our present condition as a people is one of transition, or more properly, that of preparation for transition. All progress is really but transition, a passing over to new and higher phases of action, life and experience. The kingdom of God is ordained to be an institution of progress, of growth, of development. From the teachings of Jesus we would gather that there are certain well defined stages in the development of the kingdom and in the experiences of his disciples. Speaking of the necessity of making advancement and continuing to receive, he says:

So is the kingdom of God; as if a man should cast seed into the ground; and should sleep and rise, night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how; for the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself, first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come.—Mark 4: 21-23, Inspired Translation.

The Apostle Paul seems to have had a similar idea, but with a wider application, when he wrote to the Galatian church the words:

Now I say, that the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be Lord of all; but is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father.—Galatians 4: 1, 2.

And again in the Hebrew letter he taxes them with failure to make the necessary growth, to pass one of the stages in their development.

For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. For everyone that useth milk is unskillful in the word of righteousness; for he is a babe. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.—Hebrews 5: 12-14.

It seems to me that we as a church have now reached, or else must sometime in the future reach such a condition as is foreshadowed in these texts. When we need no longer to be under tutors and governors, but having become of full age, by reason of use have our spiritual senses developed so that we may be able, for ourselves, to discern both good and evil without having to run to inquire of others before we make up our minds whether a matter be right or wrong. I very much fear, though, that we are yet too much like the Hebrews in this regard.

One of the most important periods of a young man's or young woman's history is when having graduated from the high school or the college it becomes his or her duty to take up the serious responsibilities of life, and put into actual practice the theories acquired during school days. It is a great and a wonderful transition from the schoolroom to go out and face the hard and stern realities of life. Heretofore the final responsibilities of judgment rested upon the parents and teachers, but now the day of their own judgment has come, when their own judgment must be the court of last resort in deciding what to do, and what not to do; while though taking counsel of their elders, they must themselves decide the proper course to be pursued and thus act upon their own responsibility in the exercise of their agency.

It would seem that something analogous to this must some time occur in the history of the church. A time will surely come when it will have to act upon its own responsibility, because of having reached that stage when the Saints are able to discern both good and evil, and realize the fulfillment of the promise made in olden time: "Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not."—Malachi 3: 18.

Until we have reached that stage in our experience we will not as a body be able to practice our religion. As individuals we may try to do the best we can, but as a body we will have to continue very much as we are now. It will be a very glad time, though, when we will not only preach repentance, but when by our actions as a body we can prove to the world that we actually practice it in the keeping of the commandments of God, relating to everyday life. We should not be in bondage under the elements of the world, dwelling among them, and mixed up in all their affairs, partakers of their sins, and receiving of their plagues.

The development of true discernment is a matter of such surpassing importance that it ought to receive particular attention at our hands. Discernment is the power to see and distinguish differences, the ability to see things as they really are. It is the first and chief element in every act of spiritual judgment. It was the power by which Peter was able to detect the sin of Ananias and Sapphira, passing a righteous judgment upon them when they attempted to serve the Devil in the livery of heaven. It is the development of this quality that will enable the saints to judge the world, as the apostle says in the first Corinthian letter, and as in Revelation so John reports that he saw in a vision the fulfillment of Malachi 3: 18, where those who sat upon thrones were given judgment.

It will be because of this that "the inhabitants of Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion; and liars, and hypocrites, shall be proved by them, and they who are not apostles and prophets shall be known" (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7).

PRESENT TRUTH.

To make the power of discernment effective there must be a general awakening to a knowledge of the law of truth, of present truth. To study the history of ancient peoples, such as the Israelites and Christians, is a help; but it alone can not put us in possession of present truth. The framers of the American Constitution had the history and constitutions of the ancient republics of Greece and Rome before them who engaged in the work of forming a government for the land of America and its people, and these ancient constitutions were highly suggestive and helpful; but they were not sufficient for the new time and the new Nation of the West. The making of the new constitution required the agency of men thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the new age; men who looked at things as they were in the land of America, and not as they were in southern Europe; men whose eyes were fixed upon the conditions that prevailed in the American Colonies in the last quarter of the eighteenth century, and not upon the conditions that obtained in Greece and Rome thousands of years before; men, who, possessing the inspiration of the times in which they lived, were able to meet the demands upon them; men who produced an instrument of fundamental law which has ever since challenged the admiration of the greatest, the wisest, the best statesmen of the world.

The Master said most truly: "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." Let us, however, try to act as wisely as we may. Let us take a leaf out of the book of the fathers of the American Commonwealth. Let us follow the example of Peter, who was not negligent in putting the saints always in remembrance of the exceeding great and precious promises given them, together with the attaching conditions in order that they might be established in the present truth. The present truth is that which is of prime importance to us now. The things which the Lord has spoken to this generation, should receive the first attention of this generation. The revelations of to-day are for to-day, and should be observed to-day. The Lord said to the Seer of the nineteenth century: "This generation shall have my word through you" (Doctrine and Covenants 4: 3). Yes, this generation; but what about the church? Listen, then, ye members of the church:

Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his words, and commandments, which he shall give unto you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; for his word ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith; for by doing these things, the gates of hell shall not prevail against you; yea, and the Lord God will disperse the powers of darkness from before you, and cause the heavens to shake for your good, and his name's glory. For thus saith the Lord God, him have I inspired to move the cause of Zion in mighty power for good.—Doctrine and Covenants 19: 2.

And again he says: "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled." —Doctrine and Covenants 1: 7.

STUDY PRESENT-DAY REVELATIONS.

And now, in view of these things, what should we do if we were as wise as the children of this world, the authors of the fundamental law of this country? Would we not search these commandments? Would we not teach one another the words of wisdom that are in them, that the powers of darkness might be dispersed before us, by giving heed to them?

What would you think of the young man who desires to make of himself a useful public servant of this country, and, in order to qualify himself for it, would enter earnestly upon the study of law, but instead of taking up the laws and the statutes of this Government would give all, or nearly all, of his time to the study of the laws of England and of ancient Rome, paying little or no attention to the laws of his own nation and time? It is true that a knowledge of the laws of the peoples mentioned should be had because of their relationship to the laws of our own land, but if that were all the knowledge of law he possessed, what kind of success would he obtain in the practice of law in this country? The wiser course to pursue would be to give his first and chief attention to the laws of his own country, using his knowledge of the institutions of these older nations as sidelights to explain the origin and source of many of the general principles that underlie American law.

The foregoing illustrates what seems to me the wiser course to pursue in the study of divine law. It indicates that we should give first place to the study of the revelations of our own time, calling upon the holy prophets of old to prove the words given to the Prophet of the latter days, as Sidney Rigdon was instructed to do (Doctrine and Covenants 34: 5).

The revelations in the Book of Covenants should be the base and foundation of our study, and the Bible and Book of Mormon used as collateral evidences and proofs in their support. As a result of the course we have pursued we are still moving in the twilight. We are so fearful of the teachings of the revelations of the latter days that the Doctrine and Covenants is virtually a sealed book to many of our people. We are so fearful and unbelieving as to be in danger of suffering the fate of such people disclosed in the Bible.

These are some of the evidences that indicate that we need a good shaking up to awaken us out of our sleep, and we will get it, too, some of these days, unless we waken up soon. It would be well for us if we had sufficient discernment to say as the apostle said of his day:

Knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light.

One great reason why the study of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is of leading importance is that by it we learn how to organize for practical righteousness. Neither the Bible nor the Book of Mormon tell us how this may be done. They tell us of the theory and principles of righteousness, but the machinery by which it is to be put into actual operation is not described. We may study these books, the Bible and Book of Mormon, until doomsday, but unless we have something more, we shall never be able to give the world a practical exemplification of a saved people. We have this "something more" in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. It is true, however, that the Bible and Book of Mormon tell us how the Holy Spirit may be received, by which we may be able to receive instruction as to how we may put the religion of Jesus Christ into actual practice as the business of our lives, but the instruction of the Holy Spirit on this head is not given in those books. It is given, however, in the Doctrine and Covenants. How long are we going to rest satisfied in being Christians in theory merely? Yet, that is all we will ever be until we take up the study and put in practice the things set forth in the revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants.

We seem to be very much in the condition of the Israelites when they reached the borders of the promised land. Having sent a body of twelve spies to explore the land, ten of them returned with the disheartening report that there were giants in the way. We, like them, have come to the borderland of a grand inheritance, and like them we hesitate to enter in and occupy. Theirs was a material inheritance, ours is a spiritual inheritance, consisting of great treasures of wisdom and knowledge, to which the necessary material things are to be added.

NECESSITY OF DOCTRINE.

In Second John we find the statement that "Who-soever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." So we understand that we must abide in the doctrine of Christ.

The statement of Christ was positive and conclusive when he said, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." If any way would do, as we find taught in religious circles to-day, God would not have sent his Son to mankind to teach and preach doctrine. Matthew tells us that the people were astonished at his doctrine, for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes. As laws govern our earthly kingdoms, so doctrine—law—governs the spiritual kingdom. The kingdom is likened to a sheepfold (John 10). Jesus said, "He that . . . climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."

If we examine all the different theories of the various sects that promise entrance into the sheepfold, we will find many doctrines, but not the doctrine of Christ. Too much emphasis can not be placed on this statement, "The doctrine of Christ," for upon it hinges the true salvation of man, according to the plan of the ages instituted by God. Jesus truly said, "Whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3: 16).

If you believe in a man, especially one like the Christ, who taught doctrine as a means of salvation, you will of necessity have to believe in his teaching, and this is what he meant. Not only must men believe that he is the Messiah, but they must obey his doctrine as well. When Jesus sent his disciples out to preach, he told them to teach men "to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world" (Matthew 28: 20). What were his disciples to teach, if not doctrine?

John tells us (2 John), "If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him Godspeed." Paul, in writing to Titus, tells us to speak the things which "become sound doctrine." In 2 Timothy we read that the time will come, when they will not "endure sound doctrine." That this scripture is being fulfilled in our day is evidenced by various ministers who make the statement that they dare not preach what they believe; and by the fact that it is a common thing to read of leading ministers being tried for heresy because they refuse to be tied down by creedism.

Doctrine is the fundamental principle of religion, and if we partake of sound doctrine we are building on the solid rock, the sure foundation, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone. If we work on a farm, in order to secure results we must work in harmony with the laws of nature, observing seedtime and harvest; sowing in proper season, and harvesting in proper season. We can not sow in harvest time, nor expect a harvest in seedtime. Everything must be done in harmony with God's immutable laws, to obtain results. So it is with the spiritual kingdom, we must subscribe to the doctrine of Christ, which fact we find to be in harmony with all law.

Christ was a living example of obedience to the law. When he came to John for baptism, John did not feel worthy to perform this doctrinal ordinance for one so exalted as the Christ; but Jesus said, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." What do these words mean, "to fulfill all righteousness"? Do they mean to go ahead and do what we think is right? Or to do what Christ taught us, and to abide by his doctrine? Why did Christ make the sacrifice that he did, and teach the principles of religion that he did, if it is not necessary to subscribe to these things today?

In conclusion, we will state the words of Jesus, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you" (John 15: 14).

FAITH.

(Paper read by Brother A. E. Jackson at the Mutual Improvement Class, Priestley Road, Birmingham, England.)

Faith is defined:

Trust or confidence in any person; belief in the statement of another; belief in the truth of revealed religion; confidence and trust in God, the living reception by the heart of the truth as it is in Christ; that which is believed; any system of religious belief, especially the religion one considers true, —the faith:—fidelity to promises; honesty; word of honor pledged.

The definition with which we, as a people, are most concerned is "the system of religious belief, especially the religion one considers true," that is, "the faith." We do not need any argument to convince us that our religion is "the faith," and it is this knowledge of the truth that makes us so confident in asserting it, and so ready to "take up the cudgels," so to speak, on its behalf.

Evidences are not wanting to show that by faith many things can be accomplished; but I submit that with most of us it is necessary for works and deeds to be continually accomplished for faith to be maintained. How many are there of us, who would blindly go on trusting and believing implicitly and in perfect faith without some evidence that the subject of our faithfulness was not a myth, and was, in reality, something more than a common, everyday belief?

We know, do we not, that our "faith" is the one and only faith? We have proven it in a variety of ways, some, of course, to a much greater extent than others; but one need not be a member of the church very long before evidences of the truth and genuineness of the work become apparent.

First of all, then, we are faithful to the work because we are convinced that it is true, and we continue so far as we possibly can to push forward because we have the knowledge that our efforts are appreciated, and that if we persevere and have faith in God we shall eventually reap our reward, which is eternal life.

Faith in God's work, too, is another essential. I must confess that at one time I was rather skeptical as to many of the miracles performed by Christ; but since I have been one among you and have had opportunities of study and discussion, I am convinced that these things are possible and are really everyday occurrences. I contend, however, that without faith in God and his works, no amount of anointing with oil, and no amount of prayer would relieve one's pain and heal any sick person.

In James 5: 14, 15 we find this language:

Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.

Now we have in our midst a splendid example of faith in the president of this branch, our Brother Walton, who, as all present are aware, has just risen from a bed of sickness and pain. Faith in God, faith in his work, and his power to do what he has promised to do has brought him through a trying ordeal; one that at the thought of which many a younger man would shudder; and we all hope, I am sure, that by a continuation of that faith and by obedience to the teachings and doctrines of Jesus Christ, he will be brought to a certain measure of his usual health and strength.

It is also necessary to have faith in one another. What is more displeasing in the sight of God than to find his disciples losing confidence or faith one with another, especially in those whom he has called to act as guides up the rocky and narrow way?

Let us all, then, by our actions, and especially in our everyday life, set an example to those by whom we are surrounded, and by this means sow in their hearts the seed which can develop and bear abundant fruit.

I often think of that beautiful hymn, "Oh, for a faith that will not shrink," etc., and if I am not encroaching too much on the time of the class, I ask your permission to read it:

Oh, for a faith that will not shrink,
Though pressed by many a foe;
That will not tremble on the brink
Of poverty and woe.

That will not murmur nor complain
Beneath the chastening rod;
But in the hour of grief and pain
Can lean upon its God;

A faith that shines more bright and clear
When tempests rage without;
That when in danger knows no fear,
In darkness feels no doubt.

A faith that keeps the narrow way
Till life's last spark is fled;
And with a pure and heavenly ray
Lights up the dying bed.

Lord give me such a faith as this,
And then, whate'er may come,
I taste e'en now the hallow'd bliss
Of an eternal home.

Do you know, I think that hymn is simply grand; the sentiment running all through is beautiful, and I have had it humming in my head all the week. I should just like to ask, in closing, who on hearing such things read or sung can doubt, or be unfaithful to their God, or intolant of their fellow creatures.

CHARITY AND JEALOUSY.

In the twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians the Apostle Paul addresses the Corinthian brethren, and speaks to them concerning spiritual gifts. The whole chapter is devoted to those things that are necessary to make up the body of Christ (or the church). In the last verse he says, "Covet earnestly the best gifts and yet show I unto you a more excellent way."

We find in the next chapter the more excellent way, and he goes on to say, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels and have not charity, I become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. Though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mystery and all knowledge, and though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains and have not charity I am nothing; and though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor and give my body to be burned and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing."

Then he tells us what charity is, and what it will and will not do. But I think this is often misunderstood, or the wrong meaning is put to it. How often we hear it said that charity is the pure love of God, shed abroad in an individual's heart; and, as such is the case, when I see my brother or sister doing that which is wrong, or has a tendency to lead to wrong; if I have charity, I will go to that brother or sister and tell him or her of it in a brotherly way. If he or she confess and repent of the wrong I should not boast of having told them of it.

I believe that charity will not covet anything that another man has or do anything to take away that which belongs to another, in any shape or form, for Paul says, charity seeketh not her own (or that which does not belong to her).

Charity is not easily provoked. But in no place does he say that charity can not be provoked. If we have charity we will bear probably for a long while and try in every way to overcome, and endure for a time. We must understand that we are human, and because a brother or a sister may become provoked at the actions of some others, or his own actions, does not always prove that he or she has not charity.

Again, charity thinketh no evil. How often we hear this quoted in this way. When a brother may see that which tends to evil in another and goes to him in a kind way to tell him of it, how often the reply is, Charity thinketh no evil. Can we say, and say it honestly, that if we have charity we will not be able to see evil, or evil influences at work? No, if that were true, we would have to charge the Christ with not having charity, for we remember how he spoke to a class of people and told them that they were of their father, the Devil, and that they did the works of the Devil. Also God himself said upon at least one occasion in regard to the children of Israel, that their hearts were evil continually.

Now I think charity can see evil, but it will not contrive evil against a brother or sister or anyone. Charity will never fail to strive to do that which is right at all times and in all circumstances.

Again, how often it is said that jealousy is of the Devil? Now is all jealousy of him? I think not. In the first place, there is never an effect without a cause; and, if right, though he may have his weaknesses, one becomes jealous, as some may term it, of his brother when he sees him doing wrong; and he has love for that brother and he may see the affection that he once had for the work and for him being quietly but surely drawn away.

Does it show the jealousy that is within him to be of Satan, or does it show that it is a godly jealousy when he goes in a quiet, kind way and tells him of it? In the eleventh chapter of 2 Corinthians and second verse, Paul told the saints he was jealous of them with godly jealousy. Why? Because they had been espoused to one husband, that he might be able to present them a chaste virgin to Christ; but he feared lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, they might become corrupted from the simplicity of Christ.

Again, in Exodus, twentieth chapter and fifth verse, the Lord says, For I the Lord thy God am a jealous God. Did not the children of Israel do wrong when they made a golden calf and said, This be the God that brought us out of the land of Egypt, and worshiped it? Was God not in the right, or did he not have a right to be jealous when he saw those whom he loved and for whom he did such great things, doing wrong?

Then let us strive to do that which is right at all times, and seek for wisdom and understanding that we may be able to understand each other. By so doing we will draw nearer to God, and he will draw near unto us, and we will be able to enjoy more of his Spirit, which will help us to follow after charity.

Of General Interest

THE ZIONISTIC MOVEMENT.

The following, from the pen of Doctor Max Nordau, author, and a recognized leader of the Zionistic movement, is interesting as an authoritative brief history of Zionism, and as a recital of the present sufferings of the Jews in Europe. It also brings to our attention anew the fact of an organized effort to restore scattered Israel to their native land. We quote from the Boston American for August 31.

VIENNA, August 30.—In a few days now the Eleventh Congress of Zionists will take place here. For internal and external reasons the gathering may claim particular interest. At this time of day it is no longer necessary, I imagine, to explain to newspaper readers what Zionism is and at what it aims.

It is now generally known that Zionism is the latter-day form of the old Jewish yearning for Palestine, which has never ceased burning in the hearts of Jews since their expulsion from the country of their fathers.

Former generations of the Jewish people trusted for their return to the lost ancient home to the strength of the promises of their prophets, and they hoped at the hour to be fixed by the Almighty the Messiah would appear, and by a miracle would restore the dispersed people to the Holy Land.

The Jews of to-day envisage the problem differently. They desire to return to Palestine, not because of the promises of the prophets, but because they realize that in this return is their sole means of overcoming the persecution to which they are everywhere liable, and to preserve the Judaism which they are determined not to relinquish.

Nor do they any longer rely upon the Messiah to guide them back to the land of their fathers. They strive to reach this goal by their own efforts: By emigrating to Palestine, by purchasing there as much land as they can obtain, by founding colonies, by tilling the soil, by planting woods, by building towns or town quarters, by setting up there banks, schools and scientific laboratories—in short, by creating all those works of culture which any civilized immigrant needs if he is to feel in comfort in his new surroundings.

RETAIN CULTURE OF OCCIDENT.

For it has to be borne in mind that the Jews who migrate to Palestine are not wishful of transforming themselves there into Asiatics. They desire to remain a people of Occidental culture. They do not intend to descend to a lower level of civilization.

I may also take it as understood that Zionism is not the ideal of all Jews. It is the ideal only of those Jews who feel themselves to be a distinct people, who are proud of their nationality, and desire to maintain it—who wish to continue its three thousand years' history and to accomplish its earthly destiny.

Other Jews, to whom Judaism does not connote nationality, but only a religion, hold aloof from Zionism. They do not desire a return to Palestine. They desire to stay in the countries of which they are citizens, and to assimilate themselves to the peoples in the midst of whom they are living. They have coined the sentence, "Our Zion is Washington."

ORGANIZATION ENCIRCLES GLOBE.

The Zionist movement has created for itself an organization which actually encircles the whole globe. At its head is placed a committee of five members, the seat of which is at present in Berlin. The congress is the parliamentary representation of the Zionist Jews.

The voters comprise every adherent of the Zionist movement who for at least two consecutive years—the year of the congress and the preceding one—has paid to the executive committee the annual party contribution called the shekel, which in America is twenty-five cents. Each two hundred shekel payers elect one delegate. The delegates to the congress this year will represent about one hundred thousand voters and will comprise some five hundred members.

The first Zionist congress was conceived by the creator of the modern Zionist movement, Doctor Theodor Herzl, who was born in 1860 and passed away in 1904.

TWO TENDENCIES IN ZIONISM.

Let me explain in a few words the meaning of the party contest at the tenth congress, which resulted in the election of the present executive committee. From the beginning of the movement there have been noticeable two tendencies in Zionism. One, of which Herzl was the embodiment, aimed at obtaining from the Ottoman Government political rights in Palestine by means of a formal treaty in order to organize an immigration en masse of Jews into Palestine, who, on their arrival in the country, should become at once the dominant race, should form the majority of the inhabitants and enjoy an administrative autonomy guaranteed by law. This tendency came to be known as "political Zionism." It may be described also as "the Zionism of all or nothing."

The partisans of the other tendency looked for nothing from the Turkish Government, and desired to engage without delay in the colonization by Jews of the country, even without having first obtained any special political rights for the colonizers. This tendency in Zionism claims for itself the name of "practical Zionism."

"Political" and "practical" Zionists waged an internecine contest which at times developed into a fierce struggle.

The "practical" Zionists retorted upon the "political" fellows that the world wanted to see facts and was not concerned in hearing words. One single Jew, they declared, successfully tilling the soil in Palestine, had more real value than a hundred fine speeches delivered in Europe and America.

RUPTURE NARROWLY AVOIDED.

The Zionists of western Europe were for the most part "political." The "practical" Zionists were recruited for the greater part from Russia and North America, where the vast majority of the Zionists are of Russian origin. Up to his last moment Herzl would not hear of so-called "practical" Zionism.

But he by no means neglected for this sort of work the larger interests of the movement. Following in Herzl's footsteps, he endeavored to establish relations with the Turkish Government and with other cabinets in Europe. The "practical" Zionists did not judge Mr. Wolffsohn's semi-advances as satisfactory, while for his political endeavors they had nothing but sneers.

The Turkish Revolution of 1908 was wind for the sails of "practical" Zionism. The congress of 1909 expressly abandoned Herzl's charter ideas. It decided to relinquish all appeals to foreign powers for help in the present and guarantee of protection in the future.

But, as events turned out, the new conditions which arose in Turkey proved, in fact, little favorable to Zionism. The government exhibited toward it a by no means kindly disposition, and, indeed, placed many obstacles in the way of Jewish immigration and of land purchased by Jews. For this the "practical" Zionists, with scant justice, made the leader of the movement responsible.

Mr. Wolffsohn, weary of the exhausting struggle, resigned his office at congress of 1911, and the majority of "political" Zionists who supported him permitted the minority of "practical" Zionists to undertake the leadership of the movement.

But yet there remain some opponents, although very small in number, who propose to ask Professor Warburg and his colleagues on the executive committee to explain what they have achieved since 1911, and in what measure Zionism has become, under their control, more prosperous than under the leadership of Mr. Wolffsohn.

The report of the executive committee upon their two years' activity, and the criticism to which it will be subjected on the part of their opponents will form the most important subject which will occupy the congress.

EUROPE NO EAR FOR SUFFERINGS.

There is little doubt that the leaders will also have to meet a further question. In what measure, they will be asked, have they brought the Jewish people nearer to its national resurrection in Palestine? It is not easy to see how they will be able to answer satisfactorily the criticism implied in this question.

Many delegates to the congress will certainly feel a burning desire to raise the question of the diabolical persecutions under which six millions of our people groan in Russia, and by which they are slowly perishing, to brand the infamous violation of law committed by so-called Russian justice against Beilis—that unhappy Kief Jew whom the Russian authorities, in spite of their being convicted of his absolute innocence, have kept in prison for the last two years, because they are determined to impute to Beilis at all costs his having committed a murder for ritual purposes, and thus stigmatize the whole of the Jewish people with a charge that would be intolerable if it were not unutterably stupid.

The congress, too, will doubtless wish to protest against the outlawing of two hundred and fifty thousand Jews by the Roumanians, who themselves at present appeal to the sympathies of Europe in behalf of their own national rights. It is probable, however, that the Congress will resist the natural desire to vent these Jewish grievances and will stifle complaint concerning the torments inflicted on Israel.

For what would be the use of talking about these matters? The congress has no power to compel Russia and Rumania to humanity and justice, and Europe to-day is utterly callous, turning a deaf ear to every invocation of her conscience. She has looked on with indifference at the blood-curdling atrocities in the Balkans. She will assuredly feel no more interest for the less dramatic and less acute though no less real sufferings of the Jews.

EDUCATIONAL SOURCES CLOSED.

One of the most important subjects on the agenda of the congress has reference to one phase of Jewish persecution. The Russian Government systematically pursues the plan of shutting out Jews from all instruction and means of culture, doing its best to push them down into the night of darkest ignorance.

To its grammar schools and universities it admits Jews only in such small numbers and on such humiliating conditions as amount practically to their total exclusion from these institutions. Jewish youths and maidens, thirsting for knowledge, are forced to study abroad. But now anti-Semitism is at work in Germany to close the German universities, too, to the Jews.

This is effected in a particularly hypocritical manner. The German authorities refrain from declaring with a brutal frankness which would still have some manliness about it: "We do not admit Russian Jews to our universities." Instead, they pharisaically declare: "Russians are accepted by us only if they have been inscribed already for two half-year terms at a Russian university." Jews, of course, can not comply with this condition. For it is just because they are not permitted to be registered at any university in their own country that they migrate to foreign lands and are compelled to knock at the doors of German universities. If they could be registered at home they would stay at home.

The Swiss faculties, next to the German, are the ones that are most frequented by Russian Jews, are preparing to imitate the noble German example. Jewish youths from Russia thus see themselves driven back from all sources of higher study accessible to them.

Yet, they will not perish with thirst. The idea has been advanced of founding a Jewish university in Palestine. The project is assuredly inspiring. It will be discussed at the congress and presumably adopted in principle. But there seems little probability of its realization in a near future. The establishing of a Jewish university, which can adequately meet the requirements for which it is to be founded, will need an endowment of millions of dollars. Zionism does not possess them.

To be sure, there are not lacking Jewish millionaires who could, if they chose, subscribe the necessary money. Perhaps the national conscience of these wealthy men, which has been so still until now, will be aroused by the present emergency.

So far as practical work is concerned, it is possible that the Vienna Congress will not accomplish much. But it will present a survey of the actual position of the Zionist movement. It will show to the world how the Zionistic idea, the idea of a regeneration of the Jewish people under national conditions and of the creation on a ground of cultural values in Palestine, is a living force in that portion of the Jewish people which is its healthiest and its noblest.

THINKS COLUMBUS WAS A JEW.

Declaring his conclusions to be the result of his latest researches among original documents, the Spanish historian, Enrique Arribas y Turull, has in Paris a brochure intended to prove that Christopher Columbus was a Jew.

Arribas says that Columbus was born at Pontevedra, and not in any of the eighteen Italian towns formerly disputing the honor of being his birthplace. Eighteen documents dated 1413 to 1528 establish Columbus as a native of Pontevedra, and the great discoverer merely posed as a Genoese from policy. In his mother's family, the Fronteresas, the men's names are Abraham, Eleazar, Jacob, and Benjamin. His mother's first name was Suzanne, then only used by the Hebrews.

Columbus was intimate with Doctor Levy, the benefactor of Luis Santanges, and other well-known Jews. His literary style is extremely Jewish, constantly citing the Old Testament. Arribas contends that if Columbus had been known as a Jew the church would have opposed him and prevented his discoveries. The historian believes that perhaps the great sailor was prompted by religious motives, his incentive toward discovery being the desire to find the promised land for which his race have been waiting.—Christian Word and Evangelist.

THE MYSTERY OF HEAVEN.

The imagination can not go far ahead of experience; it can travel simply along routes only faintly marked by adventurous explorers, but it always needs a starting point, and it can not project paths into wholly unknown regions. The word unimaginable suggests the limitation of the creative, pictorial faculty which has made progress possible and is the open door through which, as Doctor Bushnell said, God finds access to men. It is significant that all attempts to describe heaven end in a luminous vagueness, while hell and purgatory have been not only suggested but pictured with terrifying and convincing power. Dante walks the awful paths of hell with commanding authority; he not only sees and understands, but he describes and interprets, the world of punishment with compelling power. And in the world of purification, though less dramatic and realistic, he is not less at home; he knows whence flow the tears of purgatory. But when the gates of paradise open to his unaccustomed feet, the sight is too dazzling; he can not see for the unfamiliar brightness; he speaks as one in a half-remembered dream. His vision has traveled far beyond his experience. Sin he knows, and remorse and pain and tears he understands, but he can not grasp the bliss of heaven; he walks with faltering step in "worlds not realized."

The Milton of Paradise Lost is a greater poet than the Milton of Paradise Regained; and the Bible, the most concrete and definite of books in dealing with the deep things of God and with the mysteries of man's life, in the infrequent references to heaven takes refuge in a symbolism which the western reader often mistakes for pictorial imagery, and is rather hindered than helped by what he reads. In literature the great sinner is far more powerfully drawn than the great saint, and the most pathetic and appealing figures in the drama and in fiction are the men and women who, by breaking the law, have set in motion the tremendous tragic forces. The great artist finds his imagination reinforced and energized by experience when he deals with Satan, with Agamemnon, with Faust, with Richard III; but his skill falters when he tries to paint a Saint John or a Galahad. Sin we know, and all the tragic consequences that follow it in inevitable companionship; but the peace which flows from perfect purity, the radiance that shines, as the old painters saw, from the faces of the sinless, the bliss that waits for those who stand at home in the presence of God like happy children, lie beyond our experience; and, try as we may, we can not give them form or body. When we try, we become irreverent and take refuge in a kind of sentimental materialism, or the heaven we picture is a golden cloud on the edge of the horizon or a shining dome hanging unsupported in midair.

The world of punishment and of purification we know, but the world of bliss we not only do not know, but it can not be revealed to us; that is the reason why the longings of the heart are not met, and the cry of the soul for power to realize the surroundings of those who have gone on into the next stage of life is not answered: we are not told because we could not understand. A description of the heavenly life by one who was in the heart of it would come to us in an unknown tongue; nothing in our experience would interpret it to us. It does not lie even in the power of the heavenly Father to make these mysteries plain to us, as it does not lie in our power to make clear to the little children we love the principles of philosophy, the more abstract truths of science, the revelations of ripe Christian experience.

We can know the direction of the paths which lead us to that highest plane of living which we call heaven, but we can not see the paths; we can know elements out of which the heavenly happiness is compounded, but we can not visualize the conditions in which that happiness is shared; we can neither give power and shape to the spirits of those who have departed, nor dimensions and body to the things which surround them. All the reports of these things which credulous people are asked to believe are crude, materialistic, or so vague that they have only the substance of a dream.

Heaven is beyond our power of imagination, not because it is unreal, but because it is a higher reality not yet grasped by the mind. All life predicts it; punishment and purification foretell and affirm it; but it waits on our fuller experience to reveal it. Mr. Beecher has somewhere said that knowledge is given us in this life, not to satisfy intellectual curiosity, but to aid in the development of character; and heaven, which rests immovable on character both divine and human, comes at the end of a process not of thinking, but of living; that is what makes it more real than the things we know, more substantial and enduring than the things we paint and carve and describe. When the scientist begins to experiment with a short circuit of wire, he may dream of the time when messages will travel under great seas along thousands of miles of cable; he can not foresee the hour when they will fly through the air itself. That vision will come only when he has mastered the resources of the wire and his experience has given his imagination a new vantage ground for further flight.—Outlook, July 26, 1913.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

The Folly of Barbara.

Barbara was the last person you would have expected to fail, had you known her. Bright-eyed, merry-hearted, strong and quick, she flitted about from morning till night in the little house that was home to her husband and three babies, for whom she would cheerfully have laid down her life at a moment's notice.

She rose one morning with the dawn, for it was her wash day. By nine o'clock her clothes, snowy white, must be on the line. By ten her kitchen, her porches, and even the little board walk that led to the garden must be freshly scrubbed with brush and soap and generously applied energy. The day would be hot; the clothes would dry quickly; before dinner they must be dampened. Dinner must be on time, for she must not keep Nick waiting when he came in from the factory. She would iron in the afternoon, and supper would be waiting again when the little family group gathered at the close of the day.

The program was carried out. Barbara began her day's work with snatches of song upon her lips, with cheery words of greeting to Nick as he came and went about his work; but one might have observed, had he been thoughtful for Barbara, that as the day wore on she worked for long periods in silence. She was growing tired, and Barbara, noted in her circle of acquaintance for her vivacity, was tired, indeed, when she was not ready with song, with laughter, or innocent jest.

But, as I said in the beginning, Barbara was the last one they expected to fail. So no one noticed that she was tired, not even her sister who visited her in the evening and with whom Barbara strolled a block or so when she went home.

When she went back to the house, the tired mother sat down to wait for the coming of her husband. The children were in bed. When she undressed the baby she had noticed a loose button on his shoe. She fastened it while she sat waiting. Then she heard a step that sounded like the familiar one for which she waited. The merry impulse to make Nick laugh, to which she so often yielded, came over her and she sat up primly with a pair of spectacles adjusted to her eyes; as if she were an old lady reading her paper. Barbara's bright eyes had given no sign of needing artificial aid for some time to come, and the little act was only one of the many innocently funny things with which she often surprised those who knew her.

When Nick came in a little later, Barbara sat in the rocking-chair with her back to him, demurely quiet it seemed. When he passed to the front where he could look into her face, she was gazing at the paper through the glasses, roguishly donned, but with eyes that nevermore would look either in love or in mischief upon him. Beside her on the table was the shoe of the child for whom her busy hands would never again do service.

The kind neighbors came in to do what was needed. "There was not a spoonful of dirt in the house," one of them said. No, but there was a child refusing to be comforted because his mother was not, and a husband groaning out the desolation of his heart because she was gone from his home.

Was it not folly in Barbara to do in one day the work of two? In memory, she is always associated with a scrupulously clean home, with merry good nature, and with voluntary overwork. Long ago she went away, and I wonder if she might not have been many years with those she left, had she used discretion in her work; had she worked in moderation and not to excess.

Another Woman's Mistake.

Another woman, whose work was sedentary, found herself with a half holiday on her hands. Her husband had gone on a journey and had taken with him one of the children. She was left with the other two and with a small intermission from her usual work.

It was in the days of rag carpets, and this particular woman had been looking at one of her carpets and thinking it needed washing. When she found herself with a half day at her disposal and with her family diminished in size, which would somewhat lessen the ordinary work of the household, she determined to wash the carpet herself.

We pass over the details of the task. Those who have had the experience know what it means. It is sufficient to say that when the struggle was over, and she climbed the stairs to change her dress, she was alarmed by the sensation she experienced. It seemed that her tired heart must stop beating, and, frightened with the thought of what the results would be to those who needed her care, she resolved to conserve her strength more wisely in the future, should she escape this time.

She did not entirely escape, for her weakened system rendered her susceptible to cold, and a week's sickness from tonsillitis and the payment of a doctor's bill for attendance followed in the wake of her mistake. It would have been less expensive to hire help in the work she had undertaken alone.

It does not pay to work beyond our strength.

A Piece of Good Advice.

An elderly woman was once visiting in a home where she observed a younger woman preparing to iron on the afternoon of the day on which she had washed.

"Do you make a practice of washing and ironing on the same day?" she asked.

"Not always, but quite frequently we do," was the younger woman's reply. And she added, "It does not hurt me."

"You may not feel it now," said the older woman, "but you may feel the effects in later years. One piece of heavy work is sufficient for one day."

The advice is good now, as it was when spoken. One piece of heavy work is enough for one day in addition to the lighter tasks of the household that must be done daily.

Whose Work Is It?

There was once a poor young doctor. He had made the mistake that others have often made of getting married before he had an established practice. He had a delicate wife, a pale, gentle woman, and a little child under two years of age.

The doctor sought out a little village where no physician was established. He put out his shingle there, and there he also put out his wife's washing; that is, he put it out on the line, not being financially able to put it out to be washed.

And this man, who knew his delicate wife ought not to be exposed to the cold of winter in putting out the family washing, took it upon himself to do that task, which is trying even to the strong and robust. He brought upon himself the ridicule of ignorant men who considered washing as peculiarly the work of women, a burden not so much as to be touched by the fingers of men. Well-to-do men who hired their household washing done ridiculed, and men who loafed all day in saloons while their wives washed alone at home ridiculed.

In better communities, we have seen men of higher type helping their wives with the heavy part of the washing and have felt to respect them for their willingness to assume that part of the household work which taxes the muscular strength of some woman too heavily.

No man should be ashamed to assist in the work of the household when necessary and when his circumstances permit. He should be ashamed to permit his wife to work beyond her strength, if it is in his power to relieve her.

A Picture.

It is night. The kitchen is brightly lighted and the window shade is lowered. One has but to turn his head to see a man who stands high in the ranks of this church, with tea towel in hand, wiping the supper dishes for his tired wife.

And this man "who stands high" rises several degrees higher in the esteem of the one who sees the suggestive picture.

The Washwoman's Dinner.

"We are going to have a good dinner to-day, son," said the man of the house as he bent to kiss his child's forehead before leaving for the office. When the child looked up smiling, but inquiringly, the father explained, "I see the washwoman coming up the walk, and your mother always has a good dinner on washday."

The mother in the pantry smiled to herself as she thought she would rather have it said of her that she prepared a good dinner for the washwoman who did her work than to have it said that she gave elaborate entertainment in social affairs to those who could give again in return.

It is pleasant and proper to entertain friends in a social way if we can; it is only fair and square treatment to give the washwoman a good, substantial meal on the day when she serves in the kitchen.

The Baby on Washday.

The Ladies' Home Journal for October has a suggestive picture lesson for young mothers. It shows the Wrong Baby creeping about on the dusty floor, picking up buttons and other small objects which he may find lying about, pulling over furniture, burning himself, eating from the same dish with the cat, and in danger from drafts of cold as doors are opened and closed.

It also shows the Right Baby in his clean baby-pen, out of all harm and learning to walk by taking hold of the railing that incloses him. The pen is elevated on legs or wheels, so that no drafts from a cold floor may be felt, and, in summer, it may be taken to the lawn without danger from the dampness of the ground.

The baby-pen can be folded when not in use, and so does not need to occupy room when the baby is not in it.

Once in our experience, we knew a baby who swallowed a small open safety-pin which lodged in his throat and was there for weeks. It occasionally turned in such a position as to prick the baby's throat and, on such occasions, threw him into spasms. Then a doctor was sent for who had to come several miles. The pin was finally discovered and dislodged, and the baby is a man grown tall.

The doctor's bill would have paid for a baby-pen, but such an invention had not then been thought of. Now they are in use and are very helpful in keeping the baby from harm when the mother is so busy that she can not watch him.

The Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE SECOND THURSDAY IN OCTOBER.

Parents' Day. For the families of each other. For growth in spirituality and a greater sense of parental responsibility. For the conversion of kindred outside of the church. Prayers for the sick and afflicted.

Lesson, Galatians 6: 7-10. Memory Verse, Hebrews 12: 9.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

Sister Blanch A. Campbell, of Mount Vernon, Washington, writes:

"Dear Brothers and Sisters: I want to ask an interest in your prayers that, if it is God's will, he will heal me. Please remember me in your prayers. I hope all the Saints will live up to God's word. Please remember my husband also in your prayers. I surely shall remember the Saints in my prayers. May God bless them one and all."

This sister has recently undergone an operation from which she desires complete recovery.

Editors Herald: I desire an interest in the prayers of God's children in behalf of Mrs. Alice Brannon, who is afflicted with cataracts on both of her eyes. I met her a week ago and she asked me to write for her; so let all who desire set apart the first Sunday of October and fast at the morning meal and pray that, if it is the Lord's will, her eyesight may be fully restored.

She took comfort in reading the Bible, but it has been a long time since she has been able to read any. If Brother George Robley sees this, he will remember Sister Brannon. She lived at Excelsior, but now resides in Titusville.

MRS. ALEX MELLON. —

The day named by this sister, who asks that it be observed with fasting and prayer for the afflicted one, will have passed before this appears, but any who feel disposed to respond may do so at some other time of their own choosing, feeling assured that the Lord will be pleased with the sympathy and love which prompt them to uphold the afflicted who call upon him for relief.

Dear Saints: I ask the prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of Mrs. M. E. Pearson, that she may be healed of a lump on her throat. If it be God's will, may she be healed. She is not one of our faith, but a devout Christian and a dear friend of mine. We are all God's children, so let us pray for one another.

If some who are able will send her some tracts and letters they would greatly comfort her. She has lost her husband and lives alone. Her days and hours are very lonely for her.

Your sister in Christ,

ONAWA, IOWA.

MRS. FRANK KEARNES.

The Hurry of the times affects us so

In this swift-rushing hour, we crowd, and press,
And thrust each other backward as we go,

And do not pause to lay sufficient stress
Upon that good, strong, true word, "earnestness."

In our impetuous haste, could we but know

Its full, deep meaning, its vast import, oh!

Then might we grasp the secret of success.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Small kindnesses, small courtesies, small considerations, habitually practiced in our social intercourse, give a greater charm to the character than the display of great talents and accomplishments.—M. A. Kelley.

Letter Department

SCHOOLCRAFT, MICHIGAN, September 9, 1913.

Editors Herald: I have been thinking for some time past of a dear sister (the only one of the church I ever met) who came to my home about eight years ago when we lived in Kalamazoo. Her husband, Brother Granger, and she were going to some point west of Kalamazoo (I do not remember the name of the place), and were obliged to stay in Kalamazoo until morning to get a train west, so they came and stayed with us. They were living in Coldwater, Michigan, at that time, and I have thought of writing there, but do not know their address, and, too, they may have gone from there.

Can you give me the address of this sister? I feel it would be such a comfort to hear from her, as I am one of the isolated—not one of our faith near and my husband not a believer in the restored gospel, but a good man. I am praying that God may show him the truth as he has so many, in his own good time. I know by my own experience that God does work in a mysterious way his wonders to perform and I try to be patient, waiting for this to be done.

I ask an interest in your prayers for us as a family and especially for my dear husband that the light may come to him in a way that he can not but believe.

Praying that the true faith may continue to spread and make honest hearts rejoice, I am,

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. LIBBIE CHIDESTER JOHNSON.

Route 40.

MARION, MICHIGAN, September 6, 1913.

Editors Herald: I can not express the love and joy and peace that come to the Saints after they embrace the true gospel of Christ. It grows brighter, sweeter, and grander every day. If it were not for the shepherd of this branch I would not have been in this glorious gospel cause.

We have been having good and grand meetings the last few months. It makes my heart rejoice to see the love that is manifested by different ones who are enlisted in this work.

I would that I had always been faithful, but Satan overpowered my mind and I was an exile, wandering alone, fighting the best I could. I believed the gospel faith and never could deny it. Sin was on every hand, and Satan was trying to ruin the young Saints. Pray that I may come up higher in grace and the knowledge of the truth. I would to God that I could do or say something helpful to those who may be cast down, or who are undergoing trials.

When husband and I were undergoing a severe trial the good shepherd came to our rescue, and with love and kindness won our confidence. It seemed as though we were lost and forgotten, and without hope in God, but things came about in God's own time. I was in darkness almost eighteen years, and tempted of Satan.

There were times through these years when God came with words of comfort and cheer. We are rejoicing in the goodness of the Lord. I feel that I could lay down my life if need be for this work of Christ and the Saints, especially for the sisters who have the care of their little ones and who endure many of the trials of life.

With love to all, I am your sister,

MRS. MYRTA B. WALTER.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, September 8, 1913.

Editors Herald: We are thankful that so many of the Saints who in the past were negligent in their duties to Christ are coming to a full realization of the fact that they must not stand still in this great work, but must move on and put forth every possible effort to do the Lord's will, if they would be brought to the judgment bar of Christ in a condition that is pleasing to him who created all.

A greater interest has been shown in all branches of the work recently than for some time past, especially in prayer services. It is certainly a pleasing sight to those in charge here, and to those few who were in the past regular in attendance, to see the Saints coming to prayer meeting by threes and fours, and each and everyone apparently with a good desire in his heart.

Sunday night Brother Curtis was the speaker, and the people outside the building seemed to be just as interested as those inside. The sermon was just the style for an outsider, especially one seeking the true church of God.

Extracts from Letters.

Writing with reference to the Stewartville, Missouri, reunion, Robert M. Elvin, of the press committee, says: "The prayer services were earnest and peaceful, uplifting in their manifestations, confirming the promises of the past and directing in the duties and responsibilities of the membership. The voice of the Spirit unto the Saints was that in seeking physical blessings they had not displeased the Lord, but that the present necessity is a revival, a spiritual revival, and a faithful discharge of every obligation and duty, and that none should fear under existing conditions to freely and liberally sustain the church, that the truth of the gospel might go to many who are now in the bondage of darkness. A motion was adopted that the committee be authorized to pay tithing on the money in the hands of the reunion treasurer. The afternoons of the 1914 reunion were granted the auxiliaries of the church, with the exception of Sundays and children's day."

From a letter signed "Reporter," written from Wray, Colorado, we quote: "The reunion and conference of the Eastern Colorado District closed last evening. Saints and friends are breaking camp and separating, with a feeling of profit for time well spent. The attendance was up to expectation, there being in addition to Saints many neighbors and friends present. Walter Curtis was ordained a priest and Frank M. Burreis a deacon, both residing near Holyoke, Colorado. The matter of organizing a branch near that place was left to the missionary in charge and district president. Conference adjourned to meet in Denver the first Saturday in March, 1914."

President Joseph Smith sends from Independence, Missouri, a personal letter from Sister M. A. Cooper, Ashmoor, Montana, from which we quote: "We think of you very often along with other home folks, for of course we can't get over thinking of Independence as home, though we are making homes here. We are seventy miles south of the Canada line, in direct view of the Sweet Grass Hills. West of us sixty miles are the Rockies, and about one hundred and fifty miles southeast are the High Wood Mountains. The old Fort Benton Trail crosses the country about a mile south of our claims; Brother Clapp has told us many times of his travels over this old road; it is already a thing of the past, fences and plowing, and golden grain obliterating it. John Erickson, a son of Brother Olaf Erickson, of Independence, and a Mr. Rhoades have opened a very nice store on the claim joining mine, which makes it very convenient for us; it is our post office also. Altogether we are enjoying our life on the Montana prairie very much; we feel that the Lord has blessed us greatly, and we are looking forward with pleasure to the time when we will be able to help some with his work. For the present we are trying to live as becometh his Saints. Brother Price is working at his trade in Great Falls; his wife is staying on the claim. Ruth and I take turns staying with her at night; she is brave enough, but her health is quite poor. We enjoy and appreciate the church papers more than ever. We wish many times on Sundays that we could hear the choir sing our beautiful hymns and listen to some brother giving us God's message; but we feel God's Spirit is near us, though we are far away from loved ones. I have not seen any of Brother M. B. Williams's family since June; we are not many miles apart, but we have no horses except a pony Ruth rides."

Writing of the Western Oklahoma reunion, Delsie Bly says: "The excellent sermons were enjoyed by all. The prayer meetings were characterized by a goodly degree of the Spirit and were a source of spiritual strength to all. The gift of prophecy was manifested a number of times. Eighteen were baptized, the most of them being adults. One session was devoted to Sunday school work and one to a literary entertainment. About one hundred and fifty were camped on the grounds during the meetings and we think the general verdict was that this reunion was as good, or even better than the one held last year. It was decided to hold a reunion next year, the time and place to be left to the district officers."

Independence Stake.

The annual summer reunions of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints of the Independence Stake, or district, are to be resumed. The stake conference in session at the Stone Church Saturday afternoon so decided and appointed a committee of seven members to arrange the time, the place, and other details.

Such annual reunions were held many years ago at Washington Park, before it was converted into a cemetery. Later they were held at Hawthorne Station in the grove now occupied by the residence of Doctor Philip Kanoky and others, and later still on the Blue Ridge near Saint Clair Park. It has been several years since a stake reunion was held.

A report of the statistical secretary showed that the Saints have a membership of 5,000 in the stake, of whom 2,500 are in Independence. The stake includes the churches of that faith in Kansas City. Nineteen congregations were represented in the reports.

It was the sense of the stake conference that the Independence Branch be placed under a presidency of its own, instead of being simply under the presidency of the stake. A petition to that effect will be presented to the General Conference at its session in that city next April.—Jackson Examiner.

AMANU, TUAMOTU.

PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH,
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Dear Brother Smith: I write to inform the Presidency of the death of my husband. Two weeks ago yesterday we laid his body away to rest beneath the coconut palms on this far-away island of Amanu.

We came to Hao, an island a short distance from here, to attend the April conference. Charles seemed in his usual health during the conference, but right after he contracted a dry, hacking cough, during a long rainy spell, which, though troublesome, we little thought would cause his death. We remained in Hao a month, coming here the last of May.

Though we tried with all the remedies at our disposal to break up his cough, it still remained with him. June 1, though feeble, he attended church and preached his last sermon; he sat down while preaching, and because of his hoarseness one of the native elders repeated the sermon after him in a louder voice. The next day he began spitting blood, which he kept up at intervals of three or four hours until Wednesday evening when the hemorrhages stopped; but he continued to grow weaker and weaker, until just two weeks from the time he preached his last sermon, when he died, June 15.

We were the only white people upon the island, and though the native Saints were kind and did all they could, it was terrible. We were over five hundred miles from medical assistance of any kind, except for the homeopathic remedies we had with us. Whether or not the results would have been different had we been in Tahiti, will never be known. Doctors' skill availed nothing in Turatahi's illness.

During his illness, after the delirium of the fever that accompanied the hemorrhages passed off, he talked but very little, and the last few days could only say yes or no. He was not at all alarmed at the thought of dying. He said he was not afraid to die. When I asked him if he cared because he was away off here on this distant island, he replied, "It makes no difference to me." One morning he awoke and said, "Why don't you go to sleep, too?" I replied that I wanted to take care of my husband. After an interval he again spoke up, saying, "If I should die, tell father I have been thinking of him. I have been thinking about him and my work altogether, and more about him lately. Tell Myron (Fisher) I remember him, too. Tell Brother May that I am thankful to him for all his favors in keeping me informed about everything. Tell him I don't expect to die, but if I should—" He talked but very little afterwards. He said once while we were in Hao, "I think, sometimes, that I will never live to go back to America."

With anguish of heart, but outwardly hopeful, have I watched the inroads of that dreadful paralysis, realizing that the time was very near when he would be entirely helpless. And for that reason I can not but feel that in spite of the loneliness of separation, that the Lord has dealt in mercy with us. He spared him just as long as he could be of use to his fellow men, and then that he might not feel the burden of uselessness, the Lord took him. In all his affliction, and even during this last sickness, he suffered no pain, for which I feel very thankful.

He never regretted coming back to the mission. Many times he said, "I am glad we were sent back here, for I can do a little good here, but in America I could do nothing." Though physically unfit to endure the hardships of these islands, going about from island to island, yet he insisted on going.

The last long trip from Niau to Hao was exceptionally severe; we were thirteen days with strong head winds and rain most of the time, with the sea washing over the ship. The exposure, seasickness, and irregular food were enough for a well man to endure. He never complained, but it was always, "Cheer up, wife; we will get there sometime." Surely his zeal in endeavoring to work under affliction will be accounted unto him for righteousness by the Lord. The natives often marveled at him, saying, "If our bodies were afflicted like yours, we would stay in bed all the time; we would not try to do anything. How energetic are the foreigners!" But it is all over; he has gone to meet our little Turatahi, and I alone am left.

I know not how long it will be before I can communicate with the other missionaries, or send word to America. I shall have to await a vessel. Brother Smith, would it be too much to ask you to write a short letter to be published in the Oremetua expressive of appreciation for the kindness shown us by the Amanu Branch during Charles's illness, death, and burial, making special mention of the four brethren (not by name) who left their work and burned coral rock and made lime with which they made a cement case for the casket, and a cement wall around the grave, and a cement top? It took them several days to do it, and it was all freely donated. I have expressed to them my gratitude, but I know a word of acknowledgment from the Presidency would greatly please them, and I would appreciate it too as a favor.

I shall feel better satisfied when I have to leave this island to know that his grave is fixed so that it may be identified for years to come, and it may be that it will withstand a tidal wave.

I have still with me a young native elder and his wife, who have been with us since the April conference. They will stay with me until I have an opportunity to get to Tahiti. From there I will write to Charlie's father. If he wants me to go to Kirtland and take care of them I will do so; if not, I would like to remain here in the mission for a time at least, and continue in the work. I could not, of course, go around from island to island, but I would like to stay at the mission house in Tahiti and work until some work we have under consideration is completed, ready to be printed. But when I shall have an opportunity to advise with the other missionaries, whatever seems best for me to do I will do.

I trust that your father is able to enjoy the beautiful June season in America. Remember me to them and also to your wife.

ALBERTA M. LAKE.

TAHITI, August 23, 1913.

Dear Brother Smith: Since writing this letter I have been waiting for an opportunity to come to Tahiti; arrived here two days ago.

While waiting upon the island of Takume I received the American mail, among which was your letter of inquiry to Charles concerning the ordination of Brother May to the office of seventy. Will say in reply that the letter empowering him to thus ordain was received and the matter submitted to Brother May, but Brother May desires to wait for evidence to himself of the divinity of the call, and thus the matter is pending.

You also ask if he had any suggestions to make relative to getting some one in line to take Brother May's place when the time should come for him to return to America. I think he made his suggestions in his report to the Presidency; at any rate it was his thought that a man and wife should be appointed at the conference just passed. But now, it would greatly embarrass the work here to have Brother May leave next year, even should a new one be sent right away. Who would attend to the printing? Brother Hinman [Savage] speaks the language readily, but is not so capable as Brother May in writing. And yet Brother May has worked hard and really needs a rest; his wife, too, would be greatly disappointed not to return to America next conference year. Since returning to Tahiti we have talked the matter over. He (Brother May) seems to think Brother Barmore and wife are just the ones to be sent here. He also said he would be willing to stay another year if required, although he would like a rest.

Do not think I am making the suggestions you asked of Charles. When you read of Charles's death, the needs of the mission as they now appear will of course receive your consideration. We are all interested in the best good of the work here in this mission, and it is because of that that I have ventured to say anything at all in regard to the missionaries to be sent or retained.

Hoping that you may be directed in all your church duties,
I remain,
Yours truly,

ALBERTA LAKE.

News from Branches

Boise, Idaho.

It has seemed to be the prevailing idea with us all in the past, that the branch could do very little without the assistance of a missionary. If this were true (which we have reason now to know is not) we seemed doomed to do little indeed.

Ever since General Conference we have looked daily, almost, for some one of the missionary force, and even longer ago than that. We have been unfortunate in that respect.

It has been about a year now since we hoped so much from the coming of Elder Alvin Knisley, knowing something of his ability; but it was not to be, as only a few days after their arrival his companion was taken ill, and after standing faithfully at her bedside for almost four months, doing all that mortal could do, he took her dead body home to Independence for burial.

How pitiful the spectacle, and how the hearts of the Saints bled to see this young father, husband, and friend, with his little boy, have to leave under such circumstances, when we had just learned to feel safe in his counsel and admire his discourses. Whether he ever returns to us or not, he still lives in the hearts of the best people here who learned to know him. Moreover, let me add, that we hardly thought it within a human being—the patient care, the loving, ungrudging service he rendered his wife in his fight with sickness and finally death.

Our branch is not very large, but it is very much alive; and if present efforts continue it will be larger before long. There has never been so great a missionary spirit manifested among the members, as well as the officers, as at the present time; and consequently there are many more who are investigating.

With a very few exceptions, all are at work. So great has been the demand for the Book of Mormon that besides taking orders for two or three, nearly all the Saints have their loans out. The branch decided to send for a dozen to put in the library, as branch property, to loan to investigators.

We have recently substituted a round table for the usual Sunday evening sermon, and find it a great success, as the people, who are proving good workers, and two children), and our last meeting there were more nonmembers than members present, and after a two-hour session all seemed loath to dismiss.

A very bright young couple from the Utah Church were present and presented the question as to what is the difference between the "Mormon" and "Reorganized" churches. Needless to say, we were very glad to answer their query. We have a hard time here to convince people that we are "not just the same" as the Utah Church, and this incident afforded us a splendid opportunity for enlightening some of our neighbors along that line.

Five have been baptized the past summer (three grown people, who are making good workers, and two children), and several more have intimated that they are almost ready. One lady requested baptism last Sunday, but it was thought best that she first inform herself a little more on some points of doctrine. As she expects soon to go to Portland, Oregon, that branch will probably enjoy performing the ordinance for her.

Another hopeful sign we note is that some who have seemingly not given much thought to the law of tithing are waking up to their duty in a financial way. It certainly seems a shame that our church should be burdened with such a heavy debt, because the Saints, many of them, will not do their duty. But don't you think the priesthood is somewhat to blame for this? It seems to me they overestimate the tenderness of the feeling of the Saints for their pocketbooks. Of course we should not want them to beg, as some of the churches do; but while some go to the extreme one way, don't we go just as far the other? At any rate, the law of tithing should be taught, just the same as any other of God's laws. Perhaps other branches have heard more of it than we have. If I remember correctly, we have had one sermon on tithing since the work began here, about six or seven years ago.

The one dollar a month suggestion is certainly a good one, and we intend to advocate it in our branch. Poor, indeed, must be the Saint who could not help in that way—poor in money or poor in the spirit of sacrifice. If every Saint in the church would do what is simply their duty in a financial way, what a blessing the Lord would pour out upon the church, as well as each individual.

Box 412.

LULA M. JACKSON.

Los Angeles, California.

Much of an encouraging nature is noted in general conditions. The work is moving steadily on, with a good, fair attendance; the house is frequently full. One of the best indexes is supposed to be the prayer meetings, and our attendance at these meetings has increased by gradual, steady growth to about fifty. Preaching services are well attended. The spiritual power is increasing in a very gratifying manner, corresponding to the better observance of the financial laws under the administration of Brother Frederick Adam, who is now able to give greater attention to that arm of the work since Brother Goodrich came and relieved him from the duties of presiding over the branch.

The mission at Long Beach is progressing; six children were blessed last Sunday, their parents being nonmembers, but looking toward the kingdom. The attendance at Sunday school is about twenty, and at preaching services twenty-two to twenty-five, due largely to the untiring efforts of Sister Packard, at whose home the services are held.

Some very remarkable results have attended the ministrations to the sick; in the case of Sister Howland, who is now attending church again after a siege of several months during which time she was unable to leave the house or even come downstairs; also in the case of the infant daughter of Sister Addie McWhorter, thirteen months old, who was taken with whooping cough; not yielding to administration and home remedies or to the care of physicians, this malady developed into dropsy, and was declared by three doctors to be beyond their skill. They refused to come any more, saying it was a useless expense to the family. After a night in prayer Brother Goodrich was sent for, under whose administration the power of the diseases was broken and the child went to sleep, and recovery began. The husband said, "God sent Brother Goodrich as a special messenger to heal the baby." The facts are covered by the written testimony of Sister McWhorter.

Ringling's great circus has come and gone. As a result of the teaching of Brother and Sister Clark, valued professionals with the circus for a good many years, a new member of the church was added while here, Charles McKinney, who was baptized and confirmed at the church Sunday afternoon, the good influence being enjoyed by all present.

Some interesting Lamanite developments are expected in the near future.

First Presidency.

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT.

By mutual agreement between the First Presidency, the Presiding Bishop, and the minister in charge, Brother Earl F. Hall is appointed to labor in the Des Moines District during the balance of the conference year.

ELBERT A. SMITH,

For the First Presidency.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT.

Saints and Friends of the District of Eastern Colorado: Please take notice that upon the recommendation of the district conference at Wray, Colorado, September 6 and 7, Arthur H. Mills, 358 Emerson Street, Denver, Colorado, has been duly appointed bishop's agent in and for said district, in place of C. E. Everett, resigned, and also acting agent, Sister C. E. Everett, duly resigned.

We take pleasure in appointing Brother Mills to this office, according to the recommendation of the district. Brother Mills is a good accountant, and strictly businesslike in his methods, and will make a good and safe agent. We specially recommend him to the Saints and friends of the Colorado District, and trust that all will be ready to help him along with his work.

We also tender the special thanks of the Bishopric to Brother and Sister Everett for their continuous and faithful work in the office of agent for the past number of years. Hope and trust the Lord will bless them in their efforts in other lines of his work.

Please remember the address of Brother Arthur H. Mills, 358 Emerson Street, Denver, Colorado, and each and every one resolve to perform his or her faithful labors in connection with the agent, so that there may be plenty and to spare in the district after its legitimate work has been fully performed.

Trusting that the Lord will remember and bless his own workers everywhere, I am in behalf of the Bishopric,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 25, 1913.

AGENTS' NOTICE.

Did you know the church wants to pay off indebtedness to the amount of $75,000, and that each district is requested to pay its portion? We have $350 to remit before the holidays. I have checked the books and find we have $1.50 a member to pay; you can double this amount if it pleases yourself. If you will send your remittance to the undersigned, as has been requested, when practicable, it will greatly relieve the work of the Bishop; otherwise send direct and the amount will be credited to the district. Tithing may be sent at the same time.

The summer is ended, the reckoning time is now, and the storehouse needs your help. Let each make a good effort to be square with his Creator and Benefactor.

W. W. FORDHAM, Bishop's Agent.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, 5238 Haven Street.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Far West District: Having been appointed to labor among you, I take this means of communicating with you, that we may cooperate in reaching the people, laboring together with God according to the will and appointment of God and the church. I shall not, therefore, attempt to labor nor feel independent of you in my labors. I acknowledge my dependence, not only on the Lord but on you for your faith, prayers, and some financial and personal assistance in prosecuting the work.

I shall be among you at times. I can not depend wholly and entirely on the strangers and foreigners. We need to bear one another's burdens, who are "members one of another," and so fulfill the law of Christ. If we do not fulfill the law of Christ among ourselves, we can not demonstrate it to others, or extend it among others.

The speed of the work depends on the speed of the body. The entire organization should act upon its environment. We must think together and act together, keeping step, keeping time, keeping tune; be of one heart and one mind in executing all the provisions and specifications of the law. We are, or should be, all equally interested in prosecuting the work. "Let him that is warned, warn his neighbor," or see that his neighbor is warned.

If I can cooperate with you or you with me in your locality to reach the people, it will be pleasing to the Lord. If nothing can be done in your immediate vicinity, or if you are sufficient without me there, any assistance that you can render, it may be by team or auto or otherwise, to extend the work beyond your immediate neighborhood will be of avail. Sometimes little things near at hand, rather than great things afar off, are the needs. God only asks and I only ask of you to do what you can; you expect this of me, I expect it of you. You naturally make a demand upon me to do something. I make it upon you.

When the year closes, what shall be your report of what you have done? What shall mine be? If the missionaries give you no chance to assist in missionary work by their inaction or staying at home, your report written or unwritten, will be small. If they receive no assistance, and have no cooperation from you in any way, theirs will be small. There is an interdependence of all departments and workers in this work. God says, If you are not one you are not mine. Our success will be in proportion to our coordination, or unity of effort and action.

I shall endeavor to not find fault with you whether you give or withhold your assistance. Be your own judges of what you can do or are willing to do. I am giving you a chance to participate in the work as the law gives it to you, and to sacrifice for it, that laboring together, we may accomplish good; that participating in the sacrifices we may share the reward. We may have the joy of work and the joy of rest when the work is done.

Especially do we ask the priesthood to cooperate with us at such time and in such ways as they may devise and be able. We will meet the demands as we are able, if communicated personally or by letter to "ye missionary."

Hoping that we may become better acquainted in the gospel and that our association together may be pleasant and profitable, and that patience and forbearance in the trial and difficulty that is inevitably a part of the conflict may characterize us to the approval of our heavenly Father, I am,

Your brother and fellow servant,

M. F. GOWELL.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, 726 South Grand Avenue.

To Spring River District Branch Presidents; Dear Brethren: The time has fully come for us to move up higher in having our work more completely systematized and more in order. Who knows how soon the Master may come, and how happy for us if he finds us intelligently working.

The First Presidency has urged and is still urging better reports from district presidents. It is possible for these officers to report properly only with the cooperation and promptness of branch presidents in reporting at the several conferences of said district. Our quarterly conference will convene at Vera, Oklahoma, October 11.

We earnestly desire to be able to send to the First Presidency from this conference a full report, and the real condition of the district. Will you please help us with a prompt report of your branch? A cold statistical report is not sufficient; with that we want to know the spiritual condition, that we may be able, if necessary, to assist you with missionary or local help.

Are all your members attending services? If not, give the cause, if you know it. Are all your members in good spiritual condition? If not, why? Are the lesser officers of the branch aiding you as the law provides? If not, give cause, if you know. Are all holding priesthood active, or are they inclined to shirk their duty, and responsibility imposed? Are your meetings regular? Do you have priesthood and council meetings? How often? Are your officers in harmony with you in branch work? Finally, what is your greatest need to aid you to success? Do you need help?

Will you kindly aid us in this matter? Advise with your secretary to-day. Get up your report, have it approved, and sent to me at once at Vera, Oklahoma, or to Mollie Davis, Pittsburg, Kansas, 115 West Jefferson, and thus assist us in keeping the First Presidency in good humor.

Yours in bonds,

T. W. CHATBURN, District President.

Florida district reunion will convene at Alafloa, near Dixonville, Alabama, nine miles south of Brewton, Alabama, October 13, at 10 a. m., to close the 19th. We expect of the missionary force, William M. Aylor, F. M. Slover, I. M. Smith, Swen Swenson, H. W. Smith, A. E. Warr, C. L. Snow, and A. Miller, with a number of the local brethren. There will be several tents on the ground to rent. These will be furnished with bed, wash stand, mirror, etc. It will be necessary for those expecting to tent to bring bed clothing. Price of tent thus furnished will be $2. We wish to encourage the plan of each caring for himself, but for the benefit of those who can not conveniently do so will conduct a dining hall, meals fifteen cents. For further information write or wire the undersigned at Dixonville, Alabama, via Brewton, Alabama. Those coming by rail to Milton, Florida, will be met by James Barnes, Botts, Florida; at Pollard, Alabama, by John McArthur, Palmore, Florida; at Brewton, Alabama, by T. J. Barnes, Dixonville, Alabama. Kindly write these brethren in time, stating what train to meet. We trust and pray that we may have a good reunion, and that the real reunion spirit will become more firmly fixed in our midst, and that we in the South may be so encouraged that we will keep at it until our reunion is a real success. E. N. McCall, Dixonville, Alabama, secretary.

Notice to Isolated Saints.

I have been receiving many letters from home department members bearing testimony of the benefit the writers are receiving through this department. These letters have been a source of great encouragement to me. I know there are a great number of Saints who are isolated or who are unable to attend the Religio locals who might be receiving and enjoying the same benefit that many others are to-day.
 The Religio is studying the Doctrine and Covenants, a book given to the church through the kindness of our heavenly Father. We would like to have the name of every Saint enrolled with some Religio society or with the home department. If space would permit I would give you more information regarding the department and its work.
 I would appreciate it so much if every Saint (nonmembers are also welcomed), who is not attending the regular meetings of the Religio in the locality in which they reside would send me their names and addresses and name of district in which they live. I will write and give you detailed information. I realize that this means a great amount of tiresome work on the typewriter, but when I know that in this way I may be able to do some little good for the advancement of the work of God I feel fully repaid for the time and energy devoted to the work.

 I trust that many may feel an interest in the work and send me their names. I am desirous of doing all in my power that each one may receive and enjoy the assistance that many to-day are obtaining through the home department of the Religio.

INSPIRED VERSION CRITICIZED.

From persons of sound biblical learning and candor, we have nothing to fear; but from all bigots and illiberal critics we expect the same coarse treatment which has fallen to the lot of every translator from Jerome's time till the present day.—Alexander Campbell.

It is to be deplored that so many, many men and institutions can not lay aside the bitterness of their prejudice when dealing with the teachings of the latter-day evangel and approach them in a fair-minded, Christian spirit. The golden rule seems to have been struck out of the Testament by a large proportion of the opposition to give place for a revised version of the old adage, to read, All is fair in love and war—on "Mormonism."

In writing with reference to the Inspired Version, one of the corresponding editors of the Octographic Review, for September 23, a leading representative sheet of the Church of Christ—non-progressive Christian—repeatedly applies the term infidel to the Saints. None know better than does this corresponding editor and his brotherhood, the tenacity with which our elders hold to the Bible as a sacred record. The brand infidel is sought to be stamped upon us, not because this editor does not know that we hold the King James Translation as sacred and as authoritative, so far as correctly translated, but because he wishes to play upon the prejudices of his constituency and others, and thus to detract from the strength of our position with regard to the Holy Scriptures and our interpretation thereof.

CRITICISM IN ILL GRACE.

A criticism of this kind, especially in this spirit, comes with ill grace from this source. We remember that the Christian people, both factions, publish and market the Living Oracles. This is a translation of the New Testament "from the original Greek by Doctors George Campbell, James McKnight, and Philip Doddridge, with preface, various emendations, and an appendix by Alexander Campbell." The brethren of Mr. Campbell, therefore, are committed to this translation and to the preface, emendations, and appendix.

It is interesting to note a few things said by Mr. Campbell in this preface and appendix. Before doing so, however, we quote the introductory paragraphs from the Review:

One of the objections which the enemies of the Bible have against it is what they call the "contradictions" in it. The Mormons are chief among those who try to show that there are contradictions in the Bible. They say these contradictions show that the book has not been properly translated, and that God favored the world by giving to Joseph Smith a better translation.

Many of these so-called "contradictions" are not contradictions in any sense. Others are founded on discrepancies in figures, chiefly in the books of Chronicles and Kings. A brother who has recently had a discussion with a Mormon has sent us a few of these so-called "contradictions," wishing our explanation of them. Let us notice them and see what there is in them.

CAMPBELL ON KING JAMES.

We note that the Saints are taken to task because they have held that there are errors in the King James Translation. For this, together with the fact that they testify that God favored the world by giving a better translation, they are classed as enemies of the Bible. We shall have occasion to revert to this criticism. Alexander Campbell in his preface says:

Although the English tongue may have changed less during the last two hundred years than it ever did in the same lapse of time before, yet the changes which have taken place since the reign of James I do now render a new translation necessary. . . .

In the preceding remarks it has been taken for granted that the common version was an exact representation of the meaning of the original at the time in which it was made. This, however, is not admitted by any sect in Christendom. All parties are occasionally finding fault. None are willing to abide by it in every sentence. . . .

It is, however, true that the common version was made at a time when religious controversy was at its zenith; and that the tenets of the translators, whether designedly or undesignedly, did, on many occasions, give a wrong turn to words and sentences bearing upon their favorite dogmas. . . .

The most distinguished critics of the Calvinistic school of the last century have concurred in regretting the influence which Beza, and others of the same school, had upon the popular version. . . . Doctor Campbell, though a dignitary in that side of the house, has not spared Junius and Tremellius, nor the great Beza, in his Preliminary Dissertations and Notes, for their boldness with the original text. He has not only insinuated that these fathers of the Calvinistic Israel did, willfully, and knowingly, interpolate the Scriptures, and torture many passages to favor their system, but he has unequivocally accused and convicted them of the crime. . . .

Beza, and others of the same school, have written and translated as though they considered themselves correctors of the too unguarded style of the apostles and evangelists. . . .

The King's translators have frequently erred in attempting to be, what some would call, literally correct. They have not given the meaning in some passages where they have given a literal translation. . . .

LIVING ORACLES SUPERIOR.

The edification and comfort of the Christian may be greatly promoted by a minute examination of this version, and a diligent comparison of it with the common one. But some are so wedded to the common version, that the very defects in it have become sacred; and an effort, however well intended, to put them in possession of one incomparably superior in propriety, perspicuity, and elegance, is viewed very much in the light of making "a new Bible," or of "altering and amending the very word of God."

In the appendix by Mr. Campbell we read:

This edition being the ultimatum of our critical labors, in comparing, reviewing, and reconsidering our own disquisitions, as well as those of many others, living and dead; after a full review of the third edition, or Family Testament, while the whole subject was fresh in our recollections, with all the analogies, parallelisms, and peculiarities of the eight authors of the New Testament in full view, exhibits, as we humbly conceive, a correct and perspicuous translation of the Sacred Writings of the New Institution, in a style so modernized, and yet so simple, exact, and faithful to the original, as to render it more intelligible than any version in our language. . . . To vindicate and sustain the fidelity of this version to the original now in its most improved form, and its superior accuracy, we feel ourselves fully competent.

STARTLING FACTS.

Reviewing these citations we have the following facts before us. "King James' translators," in giving a literal rendering, failed to give the meaning in some passages. But worse than this, "designedly or undesignedly," they "turn" the Scriptures; they did not hesitate "willfully and knowingly" to "interpolate" even to the point of "torture"; and thus do they vindicate their "favorite dogmas" and bolster up "their systems"; they seem to think themselves "correctors" of the apostles rather than translators of their writings; and, finally, contemporaries of Elder Campbell and, of course, men since, that is, men setting aside the living oracles, are "so wedded" to the King James Version—despite the fact that they are all "occasionally finding fault" with it, not being willing to "abide by it"—that its "very defects" have become sacred to them. In their blind loyalty to this unreliable King James Version they decline to accept the "perspicuity and elegance" of the Living Oracles—that "correct" translation of "superior accuracy," "more intelligible than any version in our language."

Startling facts these, in connection with the criticism of our friend of the Review, when we remember that they are from the viewpoint of the Campbell brotherhood. We might stop here and cry, Unbelievers! Infidels! Despoilers of the Bible of our fathers—the book that we learned to revere at mother's knee! But we leave that to men unfamiliar with the spirit under which Christ performed his work.

BLEMISHES AND IMPERFECTIONS.

Many men and institutions recognize in the King James Translation errors, yet they hold the book to be sacred, and to contain a record of God's dealings with man. In these positions there is no inconsistency. He who hurls invective against such stand and those who hold to it is either crassly ignorant, bigotedly narrow, maliciously uncharitable, or grossly hypocritical.

The learned company laboring so long, so arduously, and so conscientiously to give to the world the Revised Version of the new Testament, speaking out of the modesty of their superior scholarship, said of their work, on its completion, and of the King James Version:

We know full well that defects must have their place in a work so long and so arduous as this which has now come to an end. Blemishes and imperfections there are in the noble Translation which we have been called upon to revise; blemishes and imperfections will assuredly be found in our own Revision.

INSPIRATION VERSUS SCHOLARSHIP.

Our critics would urge at this juncture that while it may be true that there are errors in the King James and Revised Versions, Joseph Smith claimed to give his rendering by the inspiration of God. And just here is the real cause of attack. Joseph Smith claimed inspiration, and our critics hold that the day of inspiration is past. On the point of inspiration versus scholarship the company on the Revised Version of the New Testament have this to say:

We recognized from the first the responsibility of the undertaking; and through our manifold experience of its abounding difficulties we have felt more and more, as we went onward, that such a work can never be accomplished by organized efforts of scholarship and criticism, unless assisted by divine help.

Out of the ripeness of their learning these gentlemen acknowledge their inability through scholarship, alone, to render a thoroughly correct version. Out of the richness of their experience they recognize in their version as well as in the King James Version, "blemishes and imperfections." In men of such scholarship we have confidence; for men of such humble frankness we have respect. They tower head and shoulders above men satisfied in the completeness of their own work of translation, or men recognizing errors in translation but unwilling to concede the same.

Inspiration, if had, should produce a better version than scholarship. We have never hesitated, we do not now hesitate to place in the hands of any unbiased individual the version given us through Joseph Smith and leave it to stand upon its merits. We can not hope for a favorable verdict from our friend of the Review, because at the outset he is diametrically and bitterly opposed to the idea of an Inspired Version. But from those who will conscientiously and unprejudicially compare we shall expect to hear favorably.

We examine the passages to which our friend takes exception, together with his explanations. For the more part he defeats himself, thereby destroying the purpose of his criticism. He starts out to cause the Inspired Version to appear ridiculous; he succeeds only in making himself appear ridiculous.

CONTRADICTIONS.

The King James Version quotes Christ as saying, "If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true" (John 5:31); while again the same version quotes him, "Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true." (John 8:14.) Our brother can see no contradiction here.

Verse thirteen of John 8 represents the Pharisees as saying, "Thou bearest record of thyself; thy record is not true." In correcting them, Christ makes reply, as set forth in verse fourteen. If the statement of the Pharisees needed correction, the one accredited to Christ, and which evidently he did not make (John 5:31), needed correction also.

It is urged in the Review that when Christ said, as quoted, "If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true," he meant "of my own self, independent of the Father as in the previous verse"; that when he bore witness of himself "it was not him, of himself, but it was the Father through him." This is a quibble over the term of himself. Such interpretation is not correct in the light of the King James, nor is it in harmony with the Living Oracles. We quote from the Oracles:

If I alone testify concerning myself, my testimony is not to be regarded; there is another who testifies concerning me; and I know that his testimony of me ought to be regarded.—John 5:31.

Though I testify concerning myself, my testimony ought to be regarded; because I know whence I came and whither I go.—John 8:14.

It is seen, then, that the passages in the Living Oracles, taken together, permit Christ to testify of himself, in which instance it is not the Father through him, but he, himself, of himself, in connection with the Father.

Christ said, "I can of mine own self do nothing." Independently of communion with the Father, in that order into which all men come in this world, in which "humiliation his judgment was taken away," Christ could not do anything, nor know anything with reference to the divine mission on which he was sent. He needed to know, and was made to know, by the revelation of the Father, that he was the Son of God. In this sense, without this communion, he could not bear witness of himself. But once receiving for himself that testimony, may he not bear witness of himself—that is, testify to the fact that he is the Son of God, knowing "whence I come and whither I go"? (John 8:14.) And when he does so, will not that witness be true? If true in John 8:14 it should be true in John 5:31, and is true when correctly translated. The Inspired Version gives it: "Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true." (John 8:14.) "Therefore if I bear witness of myself, yet my witness is true." (John 5:31.)

In the King James Version we read from the historian, "The men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man." (Acts 9:7.) The same version quotes Paul, "And they that were with me saw indeed a light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice." (Acts 22:9.) The writer in the Review finds no contradiction here; but in order to harmonize these passages he says:

When it is said they heard the voice, it means that they heard some one speaking, though they did not understand the words; and when it says that they heard not the voice, it simply means that they understood not the words.

While our friend does not have the courage of his convictions, and hence does not cite the authority from which he draws this suggestion, it is evident that he has it from the Living Oracles, which renders Acts 9:7, "The men who traveled with him stood astonished; hearing indeed the voice, but seeing no one," and Acts 22:9, "And they that were with me saw the light indeed and were terrified; but they did not distinctly hear the voice." Mr. Campbell and his brethren in this "more intelligible" version recognize the contradiction in the King James, and seek to harmonize the passages under examination. We still think that the Inspired is the better, wherein we read in Acts 9:7 and Acts 22:9 "they heard not the voice."

No man hath seen God at any time.—1 John 4:12.

Then went up Moses, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel; and they saw the God of Israel.—Exodus 24:9, 10.

I have seen God face to face.—Genesis 32:30.

In clearing up this scripture the Review man says:

When the Book says that no one hath seen God it undoubtedly means that no one hath seen him as he is; that is, in all his glory; for the human faculties could not stand it. When it speaks of certain ones as seeing God, it probably means God divested of his great glory. Besides this, it is often said in the Scriptures that a certain thing is done by God when it was done by his agent, "the angel of the Lord." It is said that God created the heavens and the earth, and it is also said that the Word, or Christ, made all things. What one does through an agent he does himself.

So we have it in a nutshell: It undoubtedly means that God when seen was not seen as he is. He was probably disrobed of a part of his glory; if indeed he were ever seen, for God sometimes acts through an agent. It may, therefore, be found finally that a sort of sleight-of-hand performance was worked on Moses and others—they thought they were with God, were so impressed by the agent, God being a party to the deception. If the matter can not be explained in any or all of these ways, one chance in ten it may be explained in some other.

We are not satisfied with the King James, neither do we care to accept the interpretation in the Review, hence shall retain the Inspired, which agrees with the King James in Exodus and Genesis and harmonizes the three passages in rendering 1 John 4: 12, "No man hath seen God at any time, except them who believe."

In attempting to harmonize the King James, Genesis 22: 1, "God did tempt Abraham," and James 1: 13, "God can not be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man," the contributor to the Review says, "The word 'tempt,' means try." The Inspired Version says, "God did try Abraham." Since it is stated that try is what is meant and is the correct rendering, we can not understand why the objection is raised when try is the term used.

Discussing 2 Kings 8: 26, and 2 Chronicles 21 and 22, where Ahaziah is represented in the King James as being two years older than his father, our friend says:

Many of the so-called "contradictions" in figures in the books of Kings and Chronicles can be explained on the ground that the writers were looking at the events from different standpoints. Some of them, however, are no doubt brought about by the carelessness of copyists. Some of the figures in the original Hebrew are very much alike, and it was an easy matter for the copyists to make an error in the transcribing of figures.

This "so-called" contradiction then, according to the admission of our objector, is real. The manner in which it was brought about is not pertinent to the discussion. Reference to the various ways in which such error might occur only tends to draw our attention from the fact that it has occurred. The Inspired Translation makes the necessary correction.

And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. And the Lord said, I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth; both man, and beast, and the creeping thing, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth me that I have made them.—Genesis 6: 6, 7.

God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man that he should repent.—Numbers 23: 19.

Our friend explains these passages thus:

God's blessings and curses promised to man are conditional. If God promises a blessing to man, it is on the condition that he will serve him as he has in the past; and if he pronounces a curse, it is on the condition that he continue in disobedience. If, however, a man turn away from his goodness or wickedness, God will turn, change his sentence, after proper reward or punishment has been given. The word "repent" means "change of mind." In the great principles of God's nature he never changes; but in his attitude toward man, he changes because man changes. In his purpose to reward the righteous and punish the wicked God never changes; but he does change his reward or punishment which he has in his mind toward particular nations and individuals. Thus it is true that God repents and that he does not repent.

According to this explanation God repents and he does not repent. That is, he may have a "change of mind," but does not change in principle or nature; the change is in attitude toward man. The dictionary to which we have access defines repent, when we read it all: "2. To change the mind, or the course of conduct, on account of regret or dissatisfaction." The change, then, is in the mind or conduct of the individual owing to regret or dissatisfaction over that which he, himself, has done. With the statement that God does not change in principle or nature we heartily agree—he always purposes to reward good and punish evil. That he could so have blundered that he regretted having made man, in dissatisfaction of that which he had done, we can by no means conceive. The Inspired rendering is:

And it repented Noah, and his heart was pained, that the Lord made man on the earth, and it grieved him at the heart. And the Lord said, I will destroy man whom I have created, from the face of the earth, both man and beast, and the creeping things, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth Noah that I have created them, and that I have made them; and he hath called upon me, for they have sought his life.—Genesis 8: 13-15.

INCONSISTENCIES.

The brother mentioned in the Review seems to have met difficulties other than contradictions. We do not know how he handled them; but we are inclined to the opinion that if he handled them at all his effort would compare favorably with that which we find in the Review. King James, 2 Kings 19: 35, is cited:

And it came to pass that night, that the angel of the Lord went out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians an hundred fourscore and five thousand; and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

The only thing offered in explanation of this recital is a quotation of the Revised Version, "And when men arose early in the morning, behold they were all dead bodies." This is a covert admission that the King James is incorrect, and only to be understood in the light of some other version. The Inspired we think to be the better:

And it came to pass that night, that the angel of the Lord went out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians a hundred fourscore and five thousand; and when they who were left arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

The debating brother seeks light on Deuteronomy 14: 21:

Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien: for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God.

The explanation we find in the Review is this:

God did not give this command because things which died were necessarily unhealthy. If other nations had no scruples against eating such things they would be glad to get them, and it was all right to sell such to them.

Under the slogan of Alexander Campbell and his brethren, "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent," healthful or unhealthful, the dead carcasses of all animals marketable were to be sold whether other nations had scruples or no scruples about eating them. We are not permitted under this slogan to read into the text. Therefore, if anything died of itself, without regard to what it died of, it might be given to the stranger or sold to the alien; nor does the text require that it be explained that the animal had died.

To make God a party to the transfer of dead carcasses, whether the recipient or purchaser knew or did not know the animal had died of itself, is to have him disregard the common regulations of ordinary decency, to say nothing of the laws of sanitation, which he then knew as thoroughly as science knows them now. Furthermore, the principle, if true, permitting God's people to sell because others had no scruples in purchasing, would admit of a traffic in rum, in woman's virtue, in fact, in anything marketable. We hold the Inspired Version to be more in keeping with the attributes of God and to be the kind of instruction he would be more likely to give on this point:

Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt not give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest not sell it unto an alien; for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God.—Deuteronomy 14: 21.

The brother seeks information with reference to the hardening of Pharaoh's heart: "See that thou do all those wonders before Pharaoh which I have put in thine hand: but I will harden his heart, that he shall not let the people go." (Exodus 4: 21.) In explanation we have:

God has never used a good man to do a bad work. He uses a man who has fitted himself for the work, and he then has the right to do with him as he pleases. Pharaoh was a wicked man in the first place, and God raised him to the throne that he might show his glory. God has a perfect right to harden the hearts of those who harden their own hearts.

We are not informed as to the authority for this explanation. We are inclined to think that the slogan has been changed to read, "Where the Scriptures are silent, we speak." The idea that God uses evil men to do evil work that he may thereby add to his glory is found outside the Scriptures and under the "law of expediency" adopted in the beginning of the movement under Mr. Campbell. The rendering of the Inspired Translation requires no such straining of the Scriptures:

See that thou do all those wonders before Pharaoh, which I have put in thine hand, and I will prosper thee; but Pharaoh will harden his heart, and he will not let the people go.—Exodus 4:21.

The evil spirit that troubled Saul was a puzzle to the brother. Samuel 16: 15 is cited: "And Saul's servants said unto him, Behold now, an evil spirit from God, troubleth thee." In explanation we have: "God controls all the realms of the unseen, and can bid evil spirits do his will the same as good ones."

According to this rendering it must have been God who bade the evil spirit suggest to Saul that he smite David with the javelin. (1 Samuel 19: 9, 10.) In this instance, however, God's purpose to add to his glory miscarried. David was unwilling to cooperate, and slipped away, leaving the javelin to strike into the wall.

To what end must one be driven for an explanation when he permits himself to undertake to place God in league with wicked men and devils! The Inspired Version requires no such association: "And Saul's servants said unto him, Behold, now, an evil spirit which is not of God troubleth thee." (1 Samuel 16: 15.)

IN CONCLUSION.

In closing up his arguments in the Review our friend says:

One would not probably have time to notice all the so-called "contradictions." He can notice a few of them and show that they are samples of these "contradictions." The Bible has stood these many centuries, and no Mormon elder now, nor any other infidel, can overthrow it.

So say we. Though we have noticed all the so-called "explanations" in this article, yet we would hardly have space to devote to all that are offered against renderings of the Inspired Version. These few are "samples" of what may be done, not by the average debater, but by the leading lights of the opposition. The Inspired Translation "has stood" these many years, and no contributing editor nor "any other" disputant will be likely to "overthrow" it, especially with such line of attack.

Let it be understood that we hold the Bible as sacred, the King James Translation with others. In finding errors in the King James Translation we do not attack it. If we indulge in a vein of lightness it is not out of disrespect to the Bible, but is provoked by the folly of men. When we offer the Inspired Translation we are only consistent with the claims of our cause on the point of divine authority restored, and inspiration in latter days. We continue to present the Inspired Translation on its merits. We conclude with the quotation from the appendix of the Living Oracles, already cited:

From persons of sound biblical learning and candor, we have nothing to fear; but from all bigots and illiberal critics we expect the same coarse treatment which has fallen to the lot of every translator from Jerome's time till the present day.—Alexander Campbell.

HISTORY AND DUTIES OF SEVENTIES.

"DUTIES OF OFFICERS" SERIES.

The seventy are also called to preach the gospel, and to be especial witnesses unto the Gentiles and in all the world.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

HISTORY.

There was a body of men in "the church in the wilderness" (see for name Acts 7: 38) called "the seventy elders of Israel (Exodus 24: 9), who held authority among the tribes subordinate in some degree to Moses, Aaron, and Hur, and the "twelve princes of the tribes of their fathers" (Numbers 1: 16; 7: 2; 1 Chronicles 27: 16, 22.) In other places these are called "Nobles."

These under the jurisdiction of Moses, Aaron, and Hur, along with the judges, other elders and priests, exercised the executive authority of the theocratic or churchly form of tribal and national government established by divine direction.

The record of the specific duties of the seventy in those times, like much of the other history of that age, is obscure or incomplete. But it is evident that Israel kept in some degree or in some modified form that organic and tribal condition when they were free from the domination of other nations until Christ came.

The "helps" as published in the International Bible, page 27, say, under the head Sanhedrin: "Seventy.—This was the great council of the Jews." "This national council remained in existence and authority until the Jews ceased to be a nation." "It consisted of seventy persons designated in the New Testament as 'chief priests,' 'elders,' and 'scribes.'"

"While required to be of mature age, it was not necessary that its members should be the eldest of the people."

In an article of the limit to which this must be confined, it is not possible to treat the subject at great length; so, passing directly to the church as established by Christ, we see him adopting the same outline of church organization as the one he used in "the wilderness." Twelve apostles in the stead of "twelve princes" or "nobles"; "seventy" in place of "the seventy elders of Israel."

As to the differing functions of these two classes of ministers (twelve and seventy), wherein they were dissimilar or identical in duties the meager history given to us in the New Testament is not very clear, except that the seventy were secondary and subordinate to the apostles.

In Luke 10: 1 we read:

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also (Revised Version, seventy others) and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place whither he himself would come.

They were to be laborers in the Lord's field and were to pray "the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth laborers into his harvest." Whether the words "other seventy" imply that a number of seventy had previously been called and sent out, as some infer, does not affect the case as we now have it before us. But it is clearly implied as a fact by the instruction to pray for more laborers to be sent into the harvest that others were to be called. We may conclude logically that the additional laborers these seventy were to pray for, when sent, would be of coordinate rank or authority, when the prayer was answered.

For the sake of brevity we pass by the names of those whom tradition says were members of this body ministerial that we call a quorum.

We are confronted with the fact that the early writers of the gospel age made little use of titles of rank in distinguishing between ministerial authorities.

They followed out the injunction of the Master, "Be not called Rabbi." "All ye are brethren," etc., in the literal sense. The terms apostle, evangelist, bishop, seventy, elder, presbyter (equivalent to prester of the old French or Norman from which we derive the word priest), teacher, and deacon have a place in the record; but no clear line of distinction is drawn as to specific functions or duties.

It would seem that the duties of the seventy being in some points identical with those of the apostle, evangelist, and elder, that in speaking of them they are classed in general with evangelists or elders, possibly sometimes bishops, as that term meant overseer of fold or flock.

That the seventy were fully organized in that time in the same sense and to the same extent as now organized is not supposable. Persecution, apostasy, and martyrdom made such havoc in the ranks of the church of that early day that even the twelve apostles, as a quorum, did not long remain intact. So there is no probability that the quorum containing the greater number of men would more successfully withstand the encroachments of the same forces of persecution, and long continue to maintain its identity and complete organization.

There is reference in Acts 6, made to a body of ministers under the special or direct supervision of the apostles. Seven men are chosen by divine direction; probably this is an answer to the prayer enjoined, above referred to.

The translators or publishers call these deacons; but be it remembered that these translators or publishers were not inspired, and the term deacons does not appear in the text; hence it is a clear assumption on their part to read into it the term "deacons" unless there were other scriptures that clearly justified such inference.

In the light of the restored gospel and modern revelation there is but one specific council of seven directly under the supervision of the twelve apostles and that is the seven presidents of seventy. And I believe that the twelve were then "setting the church in order"; and it would seem consistent that the next in order was the seven presidents. Though it is not so stated, it is clearly so implied, by the qualifications and order of their ordination, that they were the seven presidents of that time.

Objection will be urged to this position that a part of their duties were of a temporal nature, to look after the needy.

But when fully considered in the light of the work these men were to do and afterward did perform, and that, too, without any additional ordination, of which we have any record, bold, indeed, would be he who would affirm "they were only deacons." One can readily see that in the partly organized state of the church obtaining at that time it would be necessary for one quorum to perform some of the duties that under a more complete organization would be done by another, or divided among the other quorums.

The church, apostles included, had not at that time awakened to a full realization of the world-wide extent of their mission. Their work as yet was mainly confined to the dwellers in Palestine. Beginning to realize the extent of the work before them by the increasing numbers of disciples, it is no wonder that they sought more laborers and a division of labor.

As the seventy, including these seven, were not yet in the full exercise of their authority, what more natural or wise, for the time being, until a fuller organization was effected and a bishop called and ordained, than for these men as a council to administer for a time in temporal affairs? They were so engaged but for a short time. Stephen surely held authority and performed work that a modern deacon would not assume.

In the case of Philip, another of the seven, who is called "the evangelist," in Acts 21: 8, it is supposable that he held only the authority of deacon. This is answered by the facts that he healed the sick, did many miracles, baptized the converts at Samaria and the eunuch near Gaza (see Acts 8).

The fact that Philip did not lay on hands with Peter and John argues very little, if anything, against this position; no more than if two apostles of our day would confirm a number of baptized believers with a seventy or elder present and not invite him to take part in the ordinance. This omission would not imply that said seventy or elder had no right to lay on hands; but simply that it was not needful or else it was inexpedient at this time. The most forceful thing to be said against it would be that it is unusual in our time so to do.

The increased interest manifested in the church after the ordination of these men and the account so far as we have it indicates that these seven did much more than deacons' duties and looking after temporal affairs.

In the Book of Mormon the seventy are not named as a part of the church among the Nephites. Probably the reader has been led to wonder at this, as the writer has wondered in the past. But on careful study we learn that the church of that time on this continent was not expected to be a world-evangelizing force; it was only continental in its mission, and its "twelve disciples" not having the same world-wide commission in the direction of church affairs were not authorized to direct the seventy in their labors.

When we come to the latter-day dispensation and a demand for a world-wide evangelization is instituted and a world-wide church is established, it ought to be expected that more explicit direction will be given, clearer outlines of duty shown, and more exact distinctions of authority made known; and this is what did happen. Hence we now have the feet of our faith on surer ground and our minds untrammelled of conjecture, not dependent on tradition nor relying on inference or implication.

The seventy are to act in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the Twelve, or the traveling high council, in building up the church, and regulating all the affairs of the same, in all nations.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 13.

From the history of the early days of the restored gospel it appears that though the need was recognized no steps except of a preparatory nature were taken for the organization of a seventies quorum, until February 28, 1835, when forty-five were chosen according to visions and revelations to begin the organization of the First Quorum of Seventies. (Church History, vol. 1, p. 549.)

We are informed they met thereafter from time to time as a council to formulate reports of labor done and transact business relating to them as a quorum. In 1836, January 13, they were recognized as a constituent part of a joint assembly or council composed of the First Presidency, presidents of the High Council in Zion, presidents of the High Council in Kirtland, and the Twelve Apostles, and many of the elders of the church (Church History, vol. 2, p. 6.)

At this time some confusion arose in regard to rank or grade of office by reason of a certain high councilor having been ordained a president of seventy. Other high priests were (had been) also ordained presidents of seventy. This was afterward corrected by having these high priests unite with the High Priests' Quorum and others (elders or seventies) ordained in their place (Church History, vol. 2, p. 99).

Seven presidents are provided in the organic structure of the church and seven seventies (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11, 13, 43).

These seven presidents are to choose other seventy besides the First Seventy, to whom they belong, and are to preside over them; and also other seventy until seven times seventy, if the labor in the vineyard of necessity require it (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 43). And these seventy are to be traveling ministers unto the Gentiles, first, and also unto the Jews (Doctrine and Covenants 104: 43).

It will be seen from the foregoing that a grave responsibility and important duties rest on these seven presidents. In fact, when we consider the nature and scope of their work, it will be noted that there is no other body of men of like number upon whom the missionary arm of the church depends for its strength, more than on these seven. While the church was in its formative stage, only partly organized, it was allowable for the Twelve, conferences and councils to take the initiative and under "the law of necessity," the guidance of the Spirit, or by revelation, select men from among the elders to occupy as seventies. But in so doing, the foregoing quoted history indicates that they bungled the affair. The Lord has placed this duty mainly on the seven presidents, in council with their brethren.

The Reorganized Church in its beginning recognized early the value and necessity of this missionary arm of the church and took measures to develop it as fast as conditions would warrant and the Spirit would indicate. At the General Conference of April 6, 1860, Seven Presidents were chosen; five were ordained at that time, the remaining two were later ordained. Since that time vacancies have been but temporary. The full force and scope of duties and responsibilities seem to have been but imperfectly understood until a later time, when the affairs of the church began to assume a more orderly state and a more stable form.

The duties of the Seven Presidents are first the selection of other seventies "from the several quorums of elders such as are qualified and in a condition to take upon them the office of seventy." "In making these selections the Presidents of Seventy should confer with the several quorums before so selecting, and be guided by wisdom and the Spirit of revelation, choosing none but men of good repute."—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 10.

In their council, while doing this work, the instructions are:

It is according to the vision that the seven presidents of the seventy shall preside over the whole number of the seventy when assembled in council together; the senior or chosen president of the seven presidents, shall preside over the six other presidents in their councils as presidents of seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 124: 6.

In selecting seventies these Seven Presidents have sought in the most conscientious and scrupulous manner to observe all the laws and admonitions enjoined and the closest sifting method has been used to see to it that none but men in condition to go, men qualified, and of good repute, are selected.

The process is: "Only when the Spirit prompts do they engage in that work; then only after many prayers for wisdom and the Spirit of revelation to guide. Each has the privilege of suggesting names for consideration if so impressed. Then a list of all elders in the various quorums is canvassed, and if there is any evidence given as the names are gone over, or if by the Spirit intimation is had, or if by personal knowledge of one or more of the presidents a name is suggested, the fact is noted, careful inquiry is made as to fitness, condition, and qualification of the elder, of quorum officers, ministers in charge of fields, and presidents of districts, where such are accessible.

These inquiries, along with answers, are reported back to the presidents when sitting in council together. When for any good reason it is thought best, further consideration of that name for the time is dropped, or set aside at call, or deferred indefinitely.

If all reports are favorable, after the above inquiry, then the presidents, if unanimous, consult with the quorum of seventy to which the name is to be assigned, and the sanction to the selection and assignment sought. If sanction is refused, further inquiry is made on the part of the presidents, and if the objection is valid and not removed the approval of the name is deferred. In case of sanction by the seventy to whom assignment of name is submitted, the name or names are referred to the Quorum of Twelve for their consideration, and the approval of all such as they can sanction. Such names as they can not sanction are referred back to the Seven Presidents and investigation made by them; if thought advisable consideration is postponed. Names approved are taken by one or more of the Seven Presidents before the quorum of elders, or its officers, to which the men belong, and after consideration there their brethren sanction and recommend. Then the persons named are consulted where practicable and if they consent the names go to the General Conference for its approval and adoption, and on such action, to provide for the ordination.

Some criticism has been made on this method of procedure, on the ground that the persons whose names are under consideration ought to be consulted earlier in the investigation. The Seven Presidents have had this question before them and weighed it carefully, pro and con, and think that they have reason and precedent for thus acting.

Grounds for this criticism disappear when the critic learns that a name is liable to be dropped from consideration at any step of its advancement, for reasons, objections, lack of fitness, debt, lack of condition, not necessarily derogatory to the standing, character, or ability of the individual. Yet, if that person had been consulted and given consent, knew his name was considered and not reported favorably, or dropped from consideration, explanations would be demanded, disappointment felt, discouragement had, hopes blighted, and surmises generated; all of which is avoidable by the method of passing the name up to the last step before consulting the person.

Sometimes the person, for reasons, is not consulted until the recommendation is read before the conference. This is not a new or novel occurrence with other quorums. Nominations by those authorized to nominate are read to conference, and how often the person named has remarked, "I was not consulted," or "this is the first I knew my name was to be presented," etc.

We believe that the few errors recorded and the much success attained in the selecting of seventies by the method pursued proves the wisdom of the plan.

The duties are so important and the responsibilities so great that the presidents have sought to use the utmost care in selecting men for this position. Some idea of the duties of seventies will be gained by a careful reading of the following revelations:

The seventy are to act in the name of the Lord, under the direction [note this word direction] of the twelve, or the traveling high council, in building up the church, and regulating all the affairs of the same in all nations.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 13.

The seventy when traveling by the voice of the church, or sent by the twelve to minister the word where the twelve can not go, are in the powers of their ministration apostles—those sent—and in meetings where no organization exists should preside, if no member of the twelve or presidency be present.—Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3.

Remember, the words direction, and where no organization exists, qualify along with the words, "where the Twelve can not go," as well as the words "sent by the Twelve," and are the conditions under which they become apostolic, and not under the general duties of a seventy.

There is an orderly and consistent gradation of official position in the church and the priesthood, though it happens in some places that the line of demarkation is not clearly drawn; but duties are in some respects similar and jurisdictions overlap or merge into each other. Brotherly humility and charitable construction will prevent any unseemly clash of authority, the lesser giving place to the higher, and the younger to the elder where positions are equal.

The Lord has said,

The quorums in respect to authority are designed to take precedence in office as follows: The presidency, the twelve, the seventy in all meetings and gatherings of the membership, where no previous organization has been effected.—Doctrine and Covenants 122: 9.

The Seventy is also one of the presiding councils:

Resolved that it is the opinion of this joint council, that the words "presiding councils" in the fourth and seventh paragraphs of section 120 [of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants] refer to the traveling ministry—the twelve and seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 123: 13.

In case of emergency they act as regulators:

In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy.—Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.

It is stated that the seventy under certain conditions "form a quorum equal in authority to that of the twelve especial witnesses"; but the idea must not be entertained that each seventy is equal in his individual capacity and office to an apostle. The conditions in which this equality exists are in quorum decisions, mainly as follows:

And every decision made by either of these quorums must be by unanimous voice of the same; that is, every member in each quorum must be agreed to its decision, in order to make their decisions of the same power and validity one with the other.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11.

There are junction points and tangents along these lines of duty and authority that should have notice; so the Spirit has said:

Whereas other officers of the church, who belong not unto the twelve neither to the seventy, are not under the responsibility to travel among all nations, but are to travel as their circumstances shall allow, notwithstanding they may hold as high and responsible office in the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104: 43.

So it appears that one man or office is not himself or itself better or higher than another in the Lord's estimation; but there must be an orderly division of labor as in all large concerns in order that no part of the work be neglected. The value of service and extent of reward depends on faithfulness to duty and not on official position. A faithful deacon is more worthy than a slothful seventy.

The difference between this quorum and the quorum of elders is, that one is to travel continually, and the other is to preside over the churches from time to time; the one has the responsibility of presiding from time to time, and the other has no responsibility of presiding.—Doctrine and Covenants 107: 44.

This has been construed by some to imply that seventies have no right to preside, no ability to preside; but this is a strained interpretation and not justified by the instruction given in other revelations, and the advisements of the First Presidency. It is true that it was not intended that they should ever become permanently a presiding body, but as individuals—holding as elders—when conditions demand and the general line of duty is not infringed upon they may preside.

President Joseph Smith, on May 28, 1866, wrote in defining the duties of the Twelve and Seventy:

The Seventy are a body of elders set apart for the work of the ministry as a traveling quorum, working under the more immediate call of the Twelve, to preach the word, build up churches, officiate in the various directions necessary in the spreading the gospel; and all acts that an elder may do by virtue of his office as such elder, a seventy may do. . . . They are under no responsibility of presiding, but when the Spirit so directs, or exigencies require, they may preside by virtue of their right to officiate as elders in the church.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 9, pp. 129, 130.

An article on the subject by President Smith was published July 15, 1870, in the SAINTS' HERALD, which reads in part as follows:

It is our belief that the Seventy is a quorum in the church second in importance to that of the High Council at home; and abroad to that of the Twelve. In this case, then, the nature of their office is a compromise between that of an apostle and that of a high priest; and any act, therefore, which may be required of them as special witnesses while traveling abroad they may consistently and legitimately do; and while at home any act which is by law made the duty of an high priest they may by privilege perform.—Vol. 17, p. 432.

It must be admitted that where no previous organization exists and no member of the Presidency or Twelve is present, a seventy if present should by right preside (see Doctrine and Covenants 120: 3, last clause).

If Joseph the Martyr is correctly quoted in Milennial Star, volume 15, page 727, he said:

The seventies are not called to serve tables, or preside over churches to settle difficulties; but to preach the gospel and build them up and set others who do not belong to these quorums, to preside over them, who are high priests.

From the very necessities of conditions the Seventy in new or destitute fields in building up churches must preside until organization is effected and others are appointed or set to preside; and it appears that a seventy would, if a high priest were at hand, have the right to set such an one to preside. But when in the formative stage, and until conditions are fully ripe for organization and to "set" a high priest to preside, the seventy would be ex officio president.

Thus it appears clear that when exigencies require, a seventy may and should preside. Lack of responsibility does not imply want of ability nor lack of authority, but that it is not mandatory on them to preside except in conditions named above.

That they are not destitute or lacking of ability is evident when we call to mind the number who have been called by the Lord from the ranks of the Seventy to occupy as counselors to Presidency and Bishopric, to Standing High Council, Quorum of Twelve, and High Priests' Quorum.

It is also a strong evidence that the Lord has set the seal of sanction on the work of the Presidents of Seventy and the quorums up to the present time. May they ever so labor as to merit a continuation of that sanction. And when the Saints pray to the Lord, "Send more laborers into the harvest," let them remember also the men on whom rests much of the responsibility of selecting these laborers, that they may be guided in so doing by the Spirit of wisdom and revelation.

REMINISCENCES OF JOSEPH SMITH.

AS TOLD BY HIS SISTER, CATHERINE SMITH-SALISBURY, TO HER GRANDSON, HERBERT S. SALISBURY.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The following article, written by H. S. Salisbury, of Carthage, Illinois, appeared in the Lutheran Woman's Work for July, 1913. This magazine is published monthly for the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Society, of the Evangelical Lutheran Church General Synod, by the Lutheran Publishing Society, 1424 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The article in question appeared in connection with three others on the subject of Mormonism, one entitled, "Mormons in Hancock County, Illinois," by Ada Hilleman Owen; another, "The Government's attitude toward polygamy," by Hans P. Freece; the third, entitled "Menace of Mormonism," by Reverend Paul T. Brockman. The article by Brother Salisbury was later republished in the leading paper of Carthage, Illinois. It is reproduced here for the benefit of those who may be interested in keeping in touch with such articles appearing in the leading journals of other denominations. It was introduced by the following note from the pen of the editor of Lutheran Woman's Work.

"Mr. Salisbury, the author of this article, is a respected citizen of Carthage, Illinois, and a graduate of Carthage College, class of 1899. He is an antipolygamist, but his facts have a decidedly Mormon tinge, and the reasons for the persecutions of his people are one-sided. If the article leads to a comprehensive study of the Mormon question, it will have served its purpose."

My mother's father, Mathias Weinmann, was born in the Grand Duchy of Württemberg, Germany. He came to Pennsylvania and married Barbara Evitts, daughter of Henry Evitts, of Franklin County, Pennsylvania. All my mother's people were Lutherans. I graduated from Carthage College, class of '99.

My father's people were all New York and New England "Yankees." My father's mother, Catherine Smith-Salisbury, was a sister of Joseph Smith, founder of the "Mormon" Church, which he named "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

My grandmother often spoke of me as her favorite grandson, and on many occasions related to me curious incidents in her brother Joseph's career. As one historian has said,

For a man to claim that he was intrusted with a divine appointment to restore to a Christian nation that which they supposed they already possessed and richly enjoyed, would create bitter antagonism.

The beginning of all religious movements or reformation has been marked by more or less persecution; hence her stories were often of his encounters with mobs or suffering from false arrests or imprisonments.

Joseph Smith was a large man, athletic and fair. His father, Joseph Smith, sr., was six feet two inches, and noted as a wrestler at his home in Topsfield, Massachusetts. Joseph, senior's, father, Captain Asahel Smith, was a captain of Minute Men that marched at the Lexington alarm and helped besiege the British in Boston. Samuel Smith, great-grandfather of Joseph Smith, jr., was a member of the General Court of Massachusetts, and was known as Samuel Smith, Gentleman, before all titles were dropped by the colonies during the Revolution. At that period he was chairman of the Topsfield, Massachusetts, Tea Company, and was representative from Topsfield in the Massachusetts Colonial Congress during the Revolution, and chairman of the Committee of Safety. They were descendants of Robert Smith, English Puritan, who came over with Governor Winthrop in 1630. Samuel Smith's wife was Priscilla Gould.

Joseph Smith's mother was Lucy Mack, daughter of Solomon Mack, who was a member of Captain Israel Putnam's company in the French and Indian War. Solomon Mack was afterwards a soldier in the Revolutionary War, enlisting in 1776, from Gilsun, New Hampshire. He married Lydia Gates, of East Haddam, Connecticut. He was a descendant of John Mack, Scotch Covenanter, who was born in Scotland in 1669, and coming to America to escape religious persecution, founded the noted Connecticut Mack family at Lyme, Connecticut. Several of Joseph Smith's ancestors were soldiers in the Pequot War and King Philip's War. One was burned at the stake at Canterbury, England, in 1556, by the Catholics, for being a heretic, according to the Zurich letters of the Reformation, and one was a Crusader under Richard Coeur de Lion, and one other, Lieutenant John Gould, of Topsfield, Massachusetts, started the rebellion against the tyrant Andras, in 1686, before the rest of New England was ready, and was tried for treason by the minions of that tyrant, and ultimately released on payment of a fine of twenty pounds.

Considering the fact that Joseph Smith's ancestors had been persecuted for being Protestants, and later on had revolted against the Established Church of Scotland and England, and had covered the seas and fought for their religious and civil liberties in America, it is not surprising that he should go a step further and start a reformation himself. The church was organized at Fayette, Seneca County, New York, Tuesday, April 6, 1830. Catherine Smith-Salisbury was one of the first eight members. Joseph Smith's parents, brother and sisters, and his grandfather, Captain Asahel Smith, became members of the new church, which speedily felt the beginnings of the persecutions that always follow a new religious movement or reformation. To quote my grandmother:

My brother Joseph had occasion to cross some woodland on his way to his father's home. As he jumped over a large log, a man sprang up and struck him with a gun. Joseph knocked him down with his fist and ran on at the top of his speed. About half a mile farther on he was attacked again in the same manner and again knocked the man down and ran on, and was assaulted the third time before he reached home. In striking the last man he dislocated his thumb, but did not notice it until he came in sight of the house and threw himself down in the fence corner to recover his breath. As soon as he was able he arose and came to the house. He was altogether speechless from fright and fatigue.

January 27, 1827, my brother married Emma Hale, a school-teacher, daughter of Isaac Hale, who opposed the marriage on account of difference in religious belief. Blackman, in his history of Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania, says: "Their daughter, Emma Hale, was intelligent, and that she should marry Joseph Smith, jr., the Mormon leader, can only be accounted for by supposing 'he had bewitched her,' as he afterwards bewitched the masses." Emma survived him and remained in Nauvoo after the church was scattered, and married Major Bidamon. Brigham Young invented polygamy after my brother's death and then tried to saddle its authority upon my brother.

We emigrated to Kirtland, Ohio, where my grandfather, Captain Asahel Smith, died in October, 1830. I married your grandfather, Wilkins Jenkins Salisbury, January 8th, 1831. His father, Gideon Salisbury, was a New York soldier in the Revolution. The temple was built and dedicated at Kirtland in 1836. In February, 1832, a mob broke into my brother's house and dragged him from his bed into the wintry air, stripped him, and with an accompaniment of coarse and profane language, scratched, choked and beat him, tarred and feathered him, and left him for dead. He quickly recovered and the next day conducted preaching services as usual.

The church members next migrated to Jackson, Clay and Caldwell counties, Missouri. In making this move we "jumped from the frying pan into the fire." Most of us were persons of education and refinement, from the best New York and New England families, and were people of progressive ideas and strong antislavery sentiments, while our Missouri neighbors were low, ignorant and vicious to a degree, and were naturally mortal enemies to all persons endowed with New England ideas in regard to the iniquity of negro slavery. Among the New England abolitionists thus precipitated into this pro-slavery territory were members of such noted families as these: Hancock, Grant, Wilcox, Van Buren, Draper, Granger, Wells, Ives, Aldrich, Cleveland, Gates, Redfield, Lake, Rolfe, Lyon, Putnam, Hill, Cutler, etc.

The Missourians began to raid the "Mormon" settlements and towns, insulting the women, murdering the men, burning houses and carrying off cattle and other property. My brother, with other church officers, was arrested again and again on trumped up charges, and was several times given poison while under arrest in the Missouri jails. The partisan governor of Missouri, Darmed, [Dunklin] by false reports sent some of the state militia against us. In Caldwell County, at a place called Harm's [Haun's] Mills, October 30, 1838, an armed mob of Missourians attacked about twenty defenseless families and murdered several men and children in cold blood. One of the vile mob shot a little boy as he lay trembling with fear, and afterwards boasted as how the little fellow, ten years old, kicked and "squealed" in his dying agonies. They shot another nine-year-old boy with a shotgun. He died about three weeks afterward. They shot a woman in the arm, and wounded a seven-year-old boy, and crippled Thomas McBride, a veteran seventy-eight years old, who had served in the Revolution under Gates and Washington; and, as he lay on the ground, a Missourian came up and shot him in the breast, and after the old veteran was dead hacked and mangled his body with a corn knife. While my brother was detained in jail under false charges, the rest of us were driven in a destitute condition through the winter snows to Quincy, Illinois, many dying of exposure on the way. At Quincy the citizens and the state officers pitied our misfortunes and condemned the Missourians as savages.

We next settled at Nauvoo, where we soon had a city of 30,000 inhabitants, founded a university and started building a temple of white stone, to cost $1,000,000. The city was peculiar for that time, as it was without saloons, my brother having stipulated that it should be a prohibition city. The Nauvoo Legion was organized, and Joseph was commissioned lieutenant-general. My brother, Don C. Smith, was also a high officer of the Legion, and looked very handsome in his blue uniform. It was inspiring to see the Legion in parade with my brothers and the other officers on their charges in command, accompanied by ladies in silks and satins, also mounted. The Legion contained many veterans who had served under the Duke of Wellington at Waterloo.

Joseph visited Governor Carlin at Quincy, and as he started to return was arrested for treason to the State of Missouri under a requisition. He engaged O. H. Browning and Archibald Williams, of Quincy, to defend him, and, after a hearing before Judge Stephen A. Douglas, "the Little Giant," was acquitted and returned to Nauvoo. That afternoon a rumor was circulated that our Missouri enemies had crossed at Warsaw, Illinois, and were coming up the river to attack Nauvoo. The Legion stood guard below the city all night, and our Missouri neighbors would have received the surprise of their life if they had come. My brother, William, was a member of the Illinois Legislature at this time. Your grandfather, W. Jenkins Salisbury, and I removed to Plymouth, on the opposite side of Hancock County from Nauvoo, where he ran a blacksmith shop, and often received "coon" skins and maple sugar in exchange for work at the anvil. We often visited Nauvoo, where my brother, Joseph, entertained us royally and gave me silk dresses and other valuable presents. He was very hospitable, and naturally kind to everyone and loving to his family, and kept open house to friends and strangers alike. Stephen A. Douglas visited Nauvoo and made a speech commending their thrift and order. A noted wrestler came from the East and asked brother Joseph to try a "fall" with him. Joseph threw him on his back in an instant. He asked leave to try again, and was thrown a second time, when he gave it up. Joseph was kind to all and very democratic in his ways, and would stop on the street to talk with anyone he met, or take off his coat and wrestle on the streets if challenged.

The vote at Nauvoo soon became so large that the church held the balance of power in western Illinois, and as that part of the State was mostly pro-slavery, the same acts and scenes of violence were soon enacted as before in Missouri. False accusations were made and false stories circulated, some of which survive yet. Religious differences arose also, and Joseph began to be arrested on false charges again, and, after giving himself up, on promise of Governor Ford that he would be protected, he was slain at Carthage jail in June, 1844.

Brigham Young assumed leadership and took many members to Utah, among them Hyrum Smith's family. Five hundred of the Nauvoo Legion enlisted and served in the Mexican War. Joseph's family and all the rest of us stayed in Illinois, although Brigham tried hard to get us to go with him. We finally started the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, without and opposed to polygamy, and our members are acknowledged everywhere as peaceful, law-abiding citizens. Brigham restored to me $500 of the Smith estate, and begged me again to come to the Utah Church.

The author has the autograph letter from Brigham Young to his grandmother, in which he tells her he is sending $500, and asks her to go to Utah. She refused, and replied to Mr. Young in positive and insulting language, as she was very angry at him for claiming that her brother authorized polygamy.

Of General Interest

SCIENCE AND LIFE.

There is no disposition on the part of the editorial management of the HERALD to speak disparagingly with regard to the work of scientific men. To these men we owe much. Yet there are some things that science, alone, and as now defined, will never be likely to fathom; one of these is the phenomenon of life. Just how far the men of science are from this solution, after all their research, is indicated by the following, taken from the Scientific American for August 2.

The camp of biologists is divided. There are those who hold that the phenomena of life involve a separate principle which does not operate in non-living matter. Another school seeks to interpret all actions or functions of the living organism in terms of the general laws of nature which are known to apply to all matter, living or dead.

To us it appears premature to take any side in this dispute. There is a very wise principle current among scientific men, that the aid of a new hypothesis shall not be invoked, so long as a given set of phenomena can be explained without it. It is therefore clearly the best policy in the investigation of life phenomena, to press forward as far as we can by the application of the methods and principles with which we are familiar in the physical world in general, and to see just how much of the remarkable phenomena presented by living matter we can explain in terms of such general laws, before we attack the question whether, after all has been done in the way indicated, there still remains a certain residuum of facts which can not be accounted for in this way, and for the explanation of which we must postulate some special "vital principle" or whatever we may like to call it. This course is obviously free from any possible objection. It denies nothing. It makes no assertions as to what can or can not be done. It proposes simply to continue work along lines which have proved most fruitful in other directions and which have begun to bear very valuable fruit in the special field of biology also.

The work of Professor Leduc may to some appear to have little bearing upon life phenomena. His adversaries may see in his experiments a mere accidental resemblance to certain appearances observed in the living world. While this criticism may possibly not be altogether unfounded as regards some of his experiments, in the case of others the burden of proof lies heavily upon the critics. And in any case, the work of Leduc will have furnished interesting and important data on physical questions, even if we utterly disregard its possible or probable bearing upon life phenomena.

Upon another page we bring in this issue a review of Professor Leduc's work, Synthetic Biology, and some additional data of his researches will be found in this week's issue of the Scientific American Supplement. The French savant's investigations relate more particularly to effects observed in the purely physical world, resembling and, in Leduc's opinion, identical with the phenomenon which biologists have termed chemotaxis. This term is employed to designate the property possessed by certain organisms of being attracted or repelled by certain chemical substances introduced into the water in which such organisms are floating freely.

To the naive observer these organisms appear to be guided by some sort of intelligence to seek out certain materials and to shun others. To ascribe intelligence to lowly organisms of this character is in itself a very doubtful proceeding. It becomes still more doubtful when it is shown, as brought out most clearly in Professor Leduc's work, that precisely the same kind of behavior is displayed by purely inorganic substances. Particularly instructive is an experiment described by the French biologist, in which a rod which has been dipped in alcohol is brought to within a fraction of an inch from the surface of water containing a drop of India ink. The vapor of the alcohol comes in contact with the water and causes the India ink to turn away from the point affected. To express matters graphically, it might be said that the India ink "smells" the alcohol, and Leduc suggests that our sense of smell may be based on just this kind of action.

The line of experiment followed by Professor Leduc is one which bears great promise of important further disclosures. We have here a young branch of science, and it is the young branches which grow most actively.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS.

A Voice of Warning to the Young.

To the Mothers' Home Column: For some time past I have felt that I would like to give my experience to the readers of the column. Little did I think seven years ago what it meant to be married outside the church. It was only a short time before I was married that I was told there was any danger in marrying out of the church.

I had kept company six months with the man I married, and he seemed about as good as a man could be, looking at him from an outside standpoint. He was a good temperance man, never being known to indulge in strong drink or to frequent dances. He loved his home and was what many would call a Christian, although he made no profession of religion. He seemed to suit me well in so many ways that I married him.

I never knew the Doctrine and Covenants mentioned the subject of marrying out of the church until the elder who was performing the ceremony referred to it. I felt troubled and wondered why he had not told me before; but no one had told me, and my friends thought my marriage was all right.

They sang, "Oh, for a faith that will not shrink, though pressed by every foe," congratulated me, and wished me a happy voyage through life, and my husband took me to his home. I was happy for a time, for my husband made much of me, though he had no use for religion.

When I spoke of getting the church papers, he said he did not see why I wanted to read that stuff, and that it was throwing money away to buy them. I was too far from the church to attend our meetings and felt a great longing for the church literature. Like the Israelites of old, I sat down and wept when I remembered Zion. I felt my condition more keenly than anyone knows. My love for my husband seemed dying. I saved money from my chickens and bought the church papers, and he scolded and said all I thought of was the church and that I had lost all love for him. I loved my religion and felt that it was my only anchor, my only hope.

Brothers and sisters, we can not do our duty to the God we love, and marry a man outside of the church, and who opposes it. He will either draw you from the truth and your usefulness will be lost to the church, or you will love the church and drift apart from your husband. His pleasures will not be yours. You will enjoy the Spirit of the Master and he will not. The things that are meat to your soul will not be to his. These are conditions that often exist in homes where one is a Saint and the other is not.

I was isolated from the church for three years. When the first baby came to our home my heart longed to have him grow up to be a Saint, loyal to God and the cause we love. When he was two years old I began to talk to him of the church, telling him it was the true church which God had built. We moved nearer to the church, within seven miles of it. I often wished to go to meeting; we had three horses and I could easily have gone, but my husband would not let me go. I felt tied down; it seemed that my free agency was taken from me. Sometimes I tried to go by walking part of the way and catching a ride with Saints the remainder, but my health would not permit my doing that. We quarreled, and I insisted upon having my church privileges. Finally my husband consented, though he often says he is sorry he married me at all on account of my devotion to the church.

Don't marry out of the church. I know of four or five persons who have married out of the church who have told me that if free to make the choice they would not do so again.

It may be, in case you marry out of the church, that your partner will come into the church, but, that you may take no risk in this important matter, be sure to seek the divine guidance before taking the step.

Hoping and praying that our young people may be taught the great necessity of treating this question with seriousness,
Yours for the redemption of Zion,

A Voice of Encouragement to the Young.

The following comes to us from one who has given cheerfully her own service and that of her beloved companion to the cause of humanity in the name of Christ. Now, lonely and old, she writes from the seclusion of her home, to express her appreciation of the kind attention of a young girl who has done much to brighten days that otherwise would have been dreary:

"Sitting alone, reading the beautiful thoughts presented in the editorial of Stepping Stones for September 2, I realized the truthfulness of those thoughts because of an experience which covered seven or eight months of last winter. A young schoolgirl, fourteen years of age, ministered to me much of comfort and companionship, which warmed my heart to continue life's struggles and did much to drive away the feeling of utter loneliness that comes over one who feels himself forgotten by the busy world of work and pleasure.

"This young girl, by her thoughtfulness, endeared herself to my heart. Tenderly thoughtful of a lonely widow, she was sowing seed that, in due time, will return to her fourfold, for so the Lord gives to those who do good.

"She passed my house each morning on her way to school. It mattered not who was with her, what the weather was, or whether she was early or late, she never failed to stop and ask how I was. Always she left a kind word and a cheery good-bye as she tripped off to school. When she was hindered in going to school, how I missed the morning greeting and the pleasant smile! I prized her attention the more and her loyalty was the more beautiful in my eyes because she did those things of her own choice. Only one in my condition can fully appreciate such a blessing."

Thus writes our aged sister, Ella R. Devore, who has been a shut-in for more than a year. In a note accompanying this letter of appreciation, she mentions the kind visits of certain of the sisters who brighten her lonely hours with spiritual conversation and prayer.

May God touch the hearts of his Saints, young and old, that they may be kind and tender toward the aged, that they may do those many small acts of love which perhaps none so fully appreciate as the old, who, having passed through the varied experiences of life's journey, know that love is the greatest thing in the world.

The Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE THIRD THURSDAY IN OCTOBER.

Our missions and missionaries in all places, especially remembering the Lamanites, for the fulfillment of the prayers and prophecies of their forefathers. That God will bless the preaching of our missionaries among them. For the Jews in Palestine, and for scattered Israel, that the glad tidings of the gospel may reach them all.

Lesson, 2 Nephi 12: 49-54. Memory verse, Acts 2: 36.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Dear Sisters: I would be very thankful if the sisters of the Prayer Union would remember Mrs. Robert Dorothy. She is in a hospital in Ottumwa with typhoid fever. She is my daughter-in-law. Her home is in Birmingham, Iowa, and I am in Tempe, Arizona. I do so hope the Lord will spare her to her family.

MRS. MARY DOROTHY.

Dear Sisters in Christ: I am sending a request for prayers in behalf of a little niece who is afflicted greatly. She has not walked for four months, except a little on crutches. Her nerves are weak, as she has undergone much suffering. She has had a disease of the foot which has made it necessary to operate three times, taking out some of the bone each time.

She has been with me through most of her affliction, and she is very patient. Her parents do not belong to the church. They are of the Baptist Church. I feel that the Lord will hear our prayers. I feel that he has heard my prayers in her behalf, and I believe he will answer us if we all unite our prayers in her behalf.

I talked to her and she wished me to write and ask the Prayer Union to pray that she may be made well all over and able to walk.
A sister,

MRS. J. T. SKINNER.

Brother Robert C. Conley writes from Clover Bar, Alberta, saying:

"I wish to send in a request for prayer. I am no officer in the church, but the Lord caused me to come up here to do some preparatory work among the people who never heard of the good work. I wish all who read this to pray diligently that I may have success in doing my simple, pure preparatory work. Please pray for a young sister who is having much temptation, that she may be strengthened."

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, September 22, 1913.

Editors Herald: I have a severe trouble in the calf of my leg, a lump, extremely hard has appeared there and gradually grows larger, preventing the use of my limb very much. I have consulted six different doctors. They do not give the ailment a name. The first refused to treat it, saying there was no cure for it. The second felt there was no use in his taking the case, as he did not understand it. A third, who has had much experience as a specialist in blood diseases, treated me for two months, at the end of which time he told me the lump had increased much in size, and advised me to go to a surgeon.

I did so, and the surgeon said all he could do was to operate, so I paid him off. I went to another surgeon who made an X-ray examination and said he could cure the disease without an operation, but he has thus far failed to do so.

I have been administered to several times, and have felt some better since being administered to at our last reunion. For over a month I have noticed a soft, flabby lump forming on the left side of my neck. Thinking it might be caused by a scattering of the accumulation on my leg, I stopped taking the medicine. The doctor insists on my taking it.

I sincerely ask the prayers of all the Saints who read this. Pray that the swelling in my limb may cease and not further inconvenience me in my household duties. Pray also that I may have my hearing restored, as my deafness is a great hindrance to my enjoyment of church privileges. Oh, it would be such a comfort to regain my hearing! Will the different branches please remember me in their prayer services the first Sunday in October?

Amidst my trials I have much to rejoice over, and I know a great many who read this will rejoice with me. My husband was baptized on July 30, in our new font after the prayer meeting. I thank the many Saints who have so earnestly prayed for him. He seems so happy in the gospel. It surely gives me much to rejoice over.

Your sister in this glorious gospel,
910½ TWENTY-SECOND STREET. MRS. PAULINE NAPIER.

This request for prayer reaches us too late to permit the Saints to remember the sister in prayer on the day she names. May they not fail to bear her up in their petitions to the Lord at other times.

As we write, a sad, tear-stained face rises before us, the face of a mother who asked us to request the prayers of the Saints for her. She is alone but for the company of a wayward child who has grown beyond her control. She is an earnest, worthy sister, who has seen much trial, the details of which we shall not state. The Lord knows them all, and we but ask that she may be remembered by those who observe the hour set apart for united prayer in behalf of those who suffer from whatever cause it may be.

Indian Tradition.

About five years ago Brother William Crumley (since deceased) met an Indian in the mountains and talked with him about the Book of Mormon from time to time, without much apparent result.

Last week without any announcement the Indian walked into the house of Brother Goodrich and wanted to know more about the church. As the result of the conversation the Indian was invited to occupy our pulpit Sunday night, September 13. The Indian is Patrick Miguel, of the Yuma tribe, at Yuma, California. There are about one thousand in the tribe. He was called to Washington recently, and is now in Los Angeles in behalf of his people, trying to get legal help in their contention about what is known as the "Pious Fund," amounting, it is said, to about $1,500,000, and originating from a bequeathment by a wealthy family, in the early days of California. The fund has been in the hands of trustees and it is claimed that there has never been an accounting by the trustees, who are said to be prominent authorities of the Catholic Church. Chief Miguel is a highly educated Indian and speaks English fluently. By lineal descent he is chief of the tribe.

According to his statement, the main trouble in reaching the Indians is in securing a competent interpreter. The real good interpreters are engaged at good salaried positions, and will not work for nothing for the missionaries. The common interpreters are ignorant and unreliable, and generally degrade the missionaries into political work.

The Indians have a prophecy as far back as tradition reaches, which was given before any white men came to America. This prophecy is in the original dead language. One of the principal words is "ham-ku-tsan," indicating that a religion is coming to them, the tenets of which are written on "mersqueth," papyrus.

They have a story that Jesus came here and told them of a people across the "pond" (ocean). So they have been looking for the white man with his religion, and to tell the white man their own religion and try to find the missing link.

Indian history is divided into three great periods. The first, in the beginning, when there was only one universal language, which was written, and in the second period the language was developed, changed and become more eloquent, but was still universal. In the third period the Lord came and gave them a new language, and told them they were going to lose their written books. One tribe was so sorry to lose their books that the Lord translated part of one of them into a song, which is still one of their sacred songs. This new language was spoken until the advent of the whites, but there were so many tribes of Indians scattered all over the country that their language became all changed and they had nothing but a spoken language.

Their prophecy and books were written in books of stone, books of wood, books of metal, copper, silver or gold, they do not know which. Their prophecy says this book is to come back again and be translated, but that it would be in such a language that the Indians would not know the book. He made it positive that these opinions are not the result of his readings of white men's history, but were the real prophecies of his people.

The Indians have ways of testing the white missionaries who come there. First, to see if he will get into politics or mix up religion with business, as they believe a missionary should work for God only. Second, they tell long, weird stories to test the patience and see if the missionary is willing to hear and so prove his interest. Sometimes they have told their sacred stories to missionaries and later found the missionaries lecturing in Los Angeles making money from them. Third, they think they can tell when they shake hands with a man whether he is sincere and really wants to do them good or not. Fourth, the Indians believe that every person carries a little "atmosphere" around him which is exactly like the man inside it, and that the Indians will know if this atmosphere be good or bad.

Our friend related some evidences to show that they were not fooled. He sang one of their sacred songs, and though there were not very many words, explained that some of the words of three syllables were from three of their dead languages, and analyzed would comprise whole sentences, or a chapter of the language which the Lord gave them.

He has never worked with his people in the interest of any church, because he did not want to risk using his influence with a religion which might not prove to be right. He wants the religion for his people to stand on its own merits, and has held himself aloof from all denominations. He voluntarily agreed that if some men from our church would go there he would interpret for us if the visit be made at a time when he were there. He promised to write down the sacred prophecy of the tribe for the HERALD.

Last, but not least, he asked to be baptized, and set the time himself for three p. m. next Sunday.

He gets no money from the tribe, and is working at manual labor in the city to make his expenses while pushing the benefits of the tribe. A voluntary offering was taken for his tribal benefit, amounting to $12.18.

British Isles Mission President's Address.

The following is the address of Brother W. H. Greenwood, to the recent British Isles mission conference. We reproduce it here as a clear and comprehensive statement of the conditions of the mission.—EDITORS.

To the Annual Conference of the Ministry and Saints of the British Isles, Held in Manchester, August 2, 3 and 4, 1913: I have labored since our pleasant conference of 1912 with much hope and satisfaction, realizing the degree of unity that has existed in the mission, together with the strength of your united support of the appointment of the General Conference of 1912. During the past year I have received many testimonies of your confidence, and I must confess that these evidences have gone a long way and assisted me to combat the forces that are always opposed to truth and righteousness.

My labors have been received and acknowledged by the general authorities and also by the General Conference of 1913. It therefore becomes my duty to address you once again upon the conditions that obtain in our mission. I am pleased to observe that we shall not require color, either bright or drear, to give tone to the condition of things as they now exist, but in looking over the past year of experience and labor, I see much to commend, much to be thankful for, and very much to look forward to.

Do not let the spirit of fear obtain a place in your mind; if this disposition should find lodgment in your mind it must be overcome. You have the power to overcome all evil.

It is true that the minds of the Saints in this mission have been clouded in times past, and the progress of the great work has in a great measure been hindered. Now this effect is the result of a cause, and one of the causes of our present condition is migration. This disposition is still in the minds of some of the brethren to-day. I wish I could suggest a real remedy for this evil. Yes, evil. I repeat it, for it has robbed us of some of our finest and most effective workers. It has wasted our branches until we have nothing but the bricks and mortar left. Now, my brethren, I wish to advise one and all who may have this thought in mind that if they are doing anything like "well" to let well alone. Be content to do well.

Now I wish to be rightly understood. I do not say that you can not do better, but just consider what your loss means to the work of the Lord here. You may say, as many have said, "Oh, well; you will not miss one." Do not be deceived. The one is missed, and very seriously too. They have been missed, as I have already told you, until nothing but the chapel remained. This, to me, my brethren, is a standing disgrace to both cause and people. They who may leave us to seek a something that is very often never found, on the other hand may lose much that is not possible to regain. You may ask, What about Zion? Yes, yes; I quite understand that Zion is to be built up. And I want us to see that it is built up in the way that the Lord intended.

Now, why not build a city here? Why not have such a spirit of unity and contentment and faith that we could all prepare as Enoch did—then the Lord could come and take everyone of us to the land of Zion if he wished to. The trouble is with our faith. Paul says, "Faith is the substance of things hoped for,"—then let us practice faith with our substance. Faith or substance is the first thing required by the gospel of Jesus. Let us just suppose, or try to suppose, what would happen if each one regarded or considered it his personal duty, first of all, to do his share toward the establishment of Zion; the amount of his confidence or faith would be gauged by the amount of the substance that he would put into the scheme,—why, of course it would. Let us not wait for the Almighty to work the miracle when he has told us time and time again that we could redeem Zion if we would. If you wish to find out how much faith there is in the church, just reckon up the substance; do you wonder why the Savior asked the question, "Shall I find faith on the earth when I come"? Do you think that Bishop Kelley would have to ask for seventy-five thousand dollars to pay our debt if we had the faith that this work demands? I rather think we would find that amount in the hands of the Bishop, ready to send forth the messengers of the gospel world-wide. May the Lord hasten the time of our conversion.

ORGANIZATION.

The following list of names was approved by the General Conference and authorities, as my recommendations for the present conference year. They are thirty in number, twenty-eight of whom are self-sustaining, the only two general appointees in the field (full time) are Bishop R. May and the writer. The following objective points have been allotted to the brethren: R. May, London; J. W. Worth, London; John Judd, Enfield; C. Cousins, Chesterfield; E. Wragg, Clay Cross; John Holmes, Mansfield; Joseph Holmes, Clay Cross; J. W. Leggott, Manchester; H. Greenwood, North Manchester; J. W. Taylor, Wigan; N. J. Weate, Manchester; W. R. Armstrong, Farnworth; S. F. Mather, Stockport; James Schofield, Denton; John Bailey, Eccles; W. H. Chandler, Warrington; J. S. Meredith, Birmingham; A. Kendrick, Birmingham; John Schofield, Birmingham; Joseph Greenwood, Stafford; Thomas Taylor, Leeds; J. Baty, no point; E. J. Trapp, Gloucester; J. G. Jenkins, Porth; T. J. Picton, Neah; John Pughslay, Aberaman; W. Ecclestone, Leicester; T. Adams, Belfast; E. Maloney, Manchester; W. H. Greenwood, British Isles.

These objective points will be maintained throughout the year, or while we have the good weather for our present propaganda in the open air. Personally, I wish all to feel free to write me at any time upon any feature of the work that may interest you, or in which you may require assistance such as I may be able to provide.

PREACHING.

Your special attention is called to the pastoral of the British Isles Mission. We wish you to observe the advice and counsel there given, i. e., the gospel of Jesus Christ must be our theme, the nearer we adhere to the word the greater support we may expect to receive and realize in our ministry. Again, I repeat, the word is our message. Do not allow any power to attract you from your purpose, then the purpose of the Lord must follow, that is, My word shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish all that I have designed. Special care should be given to those who believe our message; none should be received into the church by baptism until they fully understand its object and purpose. (See Doctrine and Covenants 17:7.) This is the commandment to the church, and the word of exhortation is, "Keep my commandments."

REPORTING.

In reporting your labors, brethren, you are exhorted to be prompt. I am pleased to note that you have, generally speaking, observed this condition. Another feature that I would like you to observe is the remarks column. This column is provided for your benefit, so that you may remark briefly upon the special condition of your field, or upon any point that may be of interest to you. We shall be pleased to observe improvement in this regard.

CONFERENCE EXPENSES.

The question of conference expenses is now quite a serious item, and duty demands that some mention be made of the matter. I wish, therefore, to inform you of one very important feature in these annual conferences, that is, that the constitution of our conferences is confined to the ministry, branch, district, and mission.

Whereas the provision for location and board seems to have been provided without distinction, I call your attention to this point in particular, so that in future conference notices we may specify particularly under what conditions visitors will be received and provided for at these conferences. I would advise that visitors other than those provided for by the constitution should come prepared to pay for their board and lodging, unless they are otherwise provided for, such as by special invitation from Saints or friends.

FINANCE.

There has been some misunderstanding regarding the finances of the mission for the past year or two. Your attention is hereby called to the fact that we have no rule or by-law respecting the gathering of moneys. The rules simply provide for the governing of the finance only. The old method of gathering finance was by means of branch collections or subscriptions.

This order was changed by the introduction of the scheme to raise the thousand shillings annually by the late financial secretary, Elder Joseph Dewsnup; but since the retirement of the said brother, this fund has not been as satisfactory as we could wish for. Bishop May has made special appeal during the last few months and you will learn from his report what success has attended his efforts.

I would advise that we consider the matter of finance at the proper time, for the purpose of providing a more reliable income for mission purposes.

EVANGELICAL MINISTERS.

In this department of the work there is much to be set in order; in fact, the work of organization is yet to be accomplished in this particular work and calling of these ministers. There are not only the duties of the evangelical minister to be considered, but there is much to be desired in the work of instructing the Saints to a right understanding of the office work of this order. I have conversed with our minister respecting these matters with a view to assisting him to a full and complete discharging of the duties of his office. We agree that there are many difficulties to be overcome, but I believe that the work will move along more speedily when the Lord's provision is carried out through the anticipated ordination of Henry Greenwood to this order, which will be accomplished during the present conference. Brother T. Baty will then have the benefit of his fellow minister's counsel, and thus they will act and move with greater confidence. Brother Baty will deliver a message respecting this subject on Monday morning.

ELDERS' QUORUM.

The work in this quorum has been carried along during the past year with increased vigor, by the president of the quorum in particular, but we would like to see a still greater interest manifest in these meetings of the quorum. Of course, I know that we can only meet together once a year; that is, at our annual conference. We should, therefore, strive to make the sessions as interesting as possible. Everyone can take part in this regard if only by attendance at the quorum sessions. This should not be from an entertainment point of view, but for instruction also. Subject matter should be considered that will be helpful to all the elders, presiding or otherwise.

I must again commend the efforts of your president in visiting the several districts for the purpose of holding quorum meetings. I believe the results are encouraging and that we shall reap the benefit of such efforts throughout the mission in the near future. We have young men rising up imbued with the spirit of faith, who will by God's blessing carry this work along to greater heights than we have any conception of. Their growth is so marked, their understanding deep and broad. The love, light, and intelligence of the gospel of Jesus Christ is made manifest to a very marked degree. This force will move the church and the world for good, if they continue faithful to their trust. This quorum belongs to you, my brethren. If you do not benefit by your association with it the fault will be your own.

Let me ask the officers of the quorum to organize their efforts in such a way that they will always have a program before the quorum. If you have not already provided your program for the conference of 1914, let me urge you to do so now. Any assistance that you may require, we, the officers of the mission, gladly place at your command. We hope to be able to extend unto you some portion of time during the present conference. May God bless your every effort.

PRIESTS' QUORUM.

The quorum of priests has been very unfortunate of late years in the loss of their officers, presidents, and secretaries through ordination and death. Personally, I am extremely sorry that this order has obtained, more so because I know of the efforts that have been put forth to keep the organization intact from time to time. Why this condition should obtain in such an important quorum is sometimes perplexing to the mind, but if there is any efficiency in spiritual insight, then I foresee a most important reason why this condition of chaos should exist from the opposite standpoint.

In branch organization, as you know, the priest is a most powerful factor for spiritual growth and development, or should be. Therefore, I see why the opposite power should seek to keep you in this discouraged condition, and also seek to make you disgusted with the efforts made to organize. Now, my brother, these conditions demand that you rise to the occasion and organize your forces. What are your forces? Your duty is to visit the Saints, teach (instruct) them to pray. Prayer then is your force. Visitation is your opportunity. Prayer will remove mountains of sin, doubt, and unbelief. Prayer will purge the system from sickness and death. Prayer will give life, hope, and cheer to every creature under the sun. You are the agents of prayer, my brethren. In local work you are one of the most important of the spiritual forces. You are the very power that the Devil will try to keep in a condition of disorganization. Can you wonder at the slow progress that some of our people make along spiritual lines? Awake, my brethren; let no power hinder the effort to reorganize your quorum. But quit you like men. Be strong. We will assist you all we can. May God bless you all for his name's sake.

BISHOPRIC.

Bishop May will be able to give you the result of his efforts in the work of the bishopric for the past year. I wish to commend his work, and especially his effort to organize the work so that he will have his agents in every branch and district throughout the mission. The thousand shillings subscription will also be reported by the bishop.

In the question of finance lies the success of the work throughout the world, and none the less in the British Isles Mission. If everyone in the mission who could pay tithing would pay we could keep half a dozen men in the field all through the year. If you would give in offering (free will), say two pence or three pence per week, we could accomplish just the same as in the case of tithing, i. e., keep more missionaries in the field, and assist those poor who need our assistance very much.

SPIRITUAL CONDITION.

The spiritual condition of the mission is maintained, and in some places there is marked improvement. I have great pleasure to report in this respect that the Stockport Branch is now in a good condition, the trouble having been settled agreeably to all concerned; and I learn further that a few days ago they baptized five souls in that branch. May God bless them and their shepherd, too. Let me ask you to remember our Brother Preston, of the above branch, who is now in the hospital undergoing operations for his head trouble. I visited him on Monday and he desired me to ask for your prayers on his behalf. I can assure you that our Brother Preston needs our prayers.

The Manchester District is in a good spiritual condition; the only things that impede the further progress are the things that are incident to life and its uncertain conditions. The missionary brethren are doing the best they can, as far as they are able, to make known the message and preach the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The Sheffield District is in a fair spiritual condition. The president of the district is much encouraged with the progress made in Sutton-in-Sheffield and Clay Cross, but the Sheffield Branch seems to be at a standstill. The brethren there are doing their best to make headway. I truly believe that they will be successful. Let us pray to that end.

The Birmingham District is only moderate at present. Sickness and death and emigration have invaded their ranks and caused a condition of disorganization to exist; this condition has had a tendency to keep the work at a standstill during the past year. I have an understanding with the president of the district in regard to this condition, and we hope to be able to assist them to a better condition of things ere long.

The London District may be reported as improving. Brother John Judd is responsible for the charge of the Enfield Branch, and I have nothing but commendation for his labors, and also for the spiritual status of the Enfield Branch.

London Branch upon my last visit was accounted as improving. Brother May has the watchcare of this branch; he has plenty to do, and the word watchcare is not out of place. He has watched well indeed. I would like to be able to suggest his release from the presidency of the London Branch, but I can not find a suitable man at the present time. The only reason I have for the suggestion of Bishop May's release is that he might be free to devote the whole of his time to the Bishopric. I believe the work demands it.

The work in Wales is in a low condition, and must so remain until wisdom shall teach those who are in residence there that the mind must be single to the work. There are hopes of revival in some parts, and I am constrained to say that if those who have named the name of the Master would do their duty a much brighter day would dawn for Wales.

In Western Wales District Brother J. G. Jenkins has worked to the best of his ability, with the conditions under which he labors. The cause of the present conditions are traced to the lack of unity and confidence in the body generally, and in the brethren in particular. Some have lost their first love, if they ever had it; others have found any excuse they can and fault with everybody and everything for years past, and upon this food they live and thrive until I believe the very name of the work is hateful to them. Notwithstanding these conditions, we are hopeful of success; we may not gather in great numbers, but we shall gather in the honest-hearted souls who will be eternally saved, we trust.

The Eastern Wales District is in charge of E. J. Trapp. The district is rather scattered; Gloucester, Cardiff, Nantyglo, with missions at Lydney and Caerphilly. We have a lively branch at Gloucester, mainly due to the oversight and management of Elder E. J. Trapp. This branch is bright, young, growing. I believe that a great work will yet be done in the old town of Gloucester. Nantyglo is in charge of Elder Alfred Jones. He is earnest and keeps the Saints together well. The branch is in a fair spiritual condition, so far as I could see and judge. Cardiff is almost dead as a branch, but we hope to make an effort to revive the life before long.

Scotland and the southwest of England I have not yet visited personally. Bishop R. May has paid a visit to Exeter and reported a very fair spiritual condition.

Brother James Bunt, of Plymouth, has been visiting and preaching at Exeter some of the time. I hope to visit both the south of England and also Scotland to see what can be done in these parts.

Brother T. Taylor is in charge of Leeds and Bradford. The Wortley Branch is in a fine spiritual condition, while Bradford is still maintained. I am hoping to supply them with assistance shortly. Brother T. Taylor has done a good work during the past year. He is now president of the Wortley Branch. His officers are active and respond to the call of duty at all times. The work should make headway in this branch, and to this end we pray.

Now, let me conclude, lest I weary you with further details. As a final word let me say that it has been my pleasure to welcome in your name Elder U. W. Greene, who arrived in England on the morning of July 29. We bid him welcome to the British Isles Mission, and trust that our association will be profitable to each other. I have no need to further commend our brother to you, as he is already known by repute to many of you. We pray that God will bless our labors together and that our conference may be enjoyable and prove a blessing to all who take part therein.

May God be pleased to add his blessing is the prayer of your brother and servant for Christ's sake.

President Smith Receives Staff.

The following letter is sent by the authorities of the British Isles Mission, with the request that it be published. We gladly give space for this expression of appreciation from our Senior Editor and President, which is suggestive of the mutual confidence and gospel love between him and the Saints in every land.—ASSISTANT EDITOR.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, January 31, 1913.

ELDER W. H. GREENWOOD,

Manchester, England.

Dear Sir and Brother: I am a little late about writing this letter to you, but conditions over which I had no control have occurred to prevent me from giving it that attention that it deserves.

I write in official acknowledgment of the receipt of a staff selected at the conference and sent to me by the hands of Brethren Joseph Luff and John W. Rushton, Brother Luff the custodian of the staff and Brother Rushton joining in the speechmaking.

I assure you that nothing that has occurred in the last few years of my life has brought with it a more charming sense of my association with the membership of the church than has this present of the staff, in token and recognition of our mutual acknowledgment of service to God and the Master in his church; ordained and instituted by him.

Permit me to write to the officers and members of the British Isles Mission in thoughtful appreciation of the motive which caused them to select so valuable and well-timed and well-appointed a token of our fellowship in Christ Jesus our Lord.

I request that you read this letter to the conference when gathered, that the Saints may understand that I not only appreciated the gift, but that I was willing to acknowledge to you and to the other officers the receipt thereof.

With continued wishes for your success as an officer, and the success of your efforts in the interests of the ministry over which you are called to preside.

Yours in bonds,

JOSEPH SMITH,

President of the Church.

LEBANON, OREGON, September 8, 1913.

Editors Herald: I am much interested in the letter department. I delight to hear from the Saints in different parts of the world.

Lebanon is a nice little town, but we are very unfortunate in not having a branch here. We are about one hundred miles southeast of Portland. We do not get to see an elder very often, and we know how to sympathize with the isolated Saints.

One of our sisters died September 6, and it seemed impossible to get an elder here to take charge of the funeral. She endured her suffering patiently to the end. Smilingly she said to me, "If it is the Lord's will, I am ready." We do not mourn to have her back in this unfriendly world, but we mourn to think we had to lay such a faithful one away with only a few remarks by one of a church other than our own.

There are a few of us here trying to be faithful. I do hope and pray that the Lord may in his own due time send us some one to strengthen us in courage. We feel so blessed in our weak efforts. We kindly ask the Saints to remember us in their prayers, that some one may be sent here.

Your sister in the one true faith,

L. J. DONACA.

Extracts from Letters.

Walter W. Smith, in charge of the work at Philadelphia, writes with reference to the success of the work there as follows: "Things are moving nicely in Philadelphia. We are just now enjoying the most ideal weather offered on the face of the globe. Fine, bright days; not too hot nor yet too cool; perfect, blue skies, just as blue as it is possible for the sky to be. We are also enjoying pretty good health, and have lots to do, and see some results of our labors which make us happy. Spirituality is on the increase here, and unity is growing. We have a large number of very fine young men and women, which gives our work elasticity and movement. We have an excellent corps of fine, steady, older men, which gives dignity and steadiness to the work. We have passed the high water mark set by the old church in Philadelphia Branch in 1844, when they reported three hundred and thirty members. We have now three hundred and forty-one, and some twenty Saints in the city who do not belong to the branch. We had a very stormy day last Sunday, and yet in the face of it we had forty nonmembers out in the evening. We often have seventy-five nonmembers out. The Saints divide between the chapel, about a mile away, and the church. We have from one hundred to two hundred Saints at church and from thirty to fifty at the chapel. So we do not look so crowded as we did before opening the chapel. We are getting more and better service—two Sunday schools and two places from which to let the gospel radiate."

Paul Craig, Omaha, Nebraska: "Our branch priesthood are in good working order, and have fine meetings together in their regular weekly priesthood meetings. They are taking up Kleiser's Public Speaking course, and are quite interested. Yesterday our district officers drove altogether one hundred and twenty-two miles in an auto and visited two branches, attended five services and had a very good, rousing time. We visited the Blair and Decatur branches; left about 7 a. m., and returned to Omaha about 10.30 p. m. We made two similar trips to Blair recently."

C. L. Wainwright, Chicago, Illinois: "There are a few here who are investigating the work and from all appearances are well pleased with the teachings. There is hope of bringing them into the fold in the near future."

Mrs. H. C. Pitsenberger and Fred A. Cool, press committee: "Reunion of the Northeastern and Northwestern Kansas districts convened at Riverside Park, Blue Rapids, Kansas, September 13. A spiritual time was enjoyed, and the sociability of the camp ground added much to the success of the reunion. The rite of baptism was administered to five applicants by the local pastor, Elder Joseph Arber. It was voted to hold the next reunion at Topeka."

Floralice Miller, Toronto, Ontario: "The reunion held at Lowbanks was a great success and was enjoyed by all who were privileged to attend. Bishop Evans had been requested by the Saints and the public to preach the Sunday afternoon and evening sermons and great crowds gathered to hear him; many drove for miles to hear 'The Latter Day Saint orator.' The last Sunday over a thousand were present. The Sunday school and Religio workers had the pleasure and benefit of listening to two fine addresses by Elder S. A. Burgess, president of Graceland. Brother Burgess won the love and esteem of Canadian Saints. Nine were baptized, a quantity of literature was distributed, and many questions were answered and differences of doctrine explained to intelligent investigators. It was not only a time of spiritual blessings and social enjoyment to the Saints, but has also proven to be one of the greatest advertisements of the latter-day work throughout the country. Prejudice has been removed and the Saints have won the confidence and esteem of the people. The Dunville Chronicle gave all the space we wished. The other local papers also published news of the reunion."

J. L. Parker, Des Moines, Iowa: "The Des Moines district reunion convened August 15, at Rhodes, Iowa. Rhodes being small, our attendance during the day was not large, but at night the country people swelled our attendance considerably. Eight auxiliary sessions were held under the direction of Brother J. A. Gunsolley. Eight prayer services, six round table sessions, and eighteen preaching services made the reunion a success from a spiritual standpoint. One session was held in the interest of Graceland College, which was in charge of Professor J. A. Gunsolley, member of Graceland's faculty. One pleasing feature of the reunion was the organization of the young people of the district into a band called the Des Moines District Doers. They all seemed enthused, and at once commenced to boost for the 1914 reunion. They organized a band of about twenty pieces, with D. J. Williams as their leader. We hope they will provide us with plenty of good music next year. All seemed to enjoy themselves and interest was good, notwithstanding the fact that the attendance was only fair. The preaching was of a high order and the prayer meetings spiritual and uplifting. At the business meeting it was decided to come back to Rhodes next year, and the date was set for August 28."

Clinton, Missouri.

So far, this conference year has been varied with joys and sorrows for the writer. Last winter my father met with financial reverses, after which his health failed until July 15, when he passed from this life's changing scenes and uncertainties to a condition wrapped in still more mystery to most of us, but where we hope and have reason to believe he is happier for the change.

Naturally, I felt depressed for a while. I had poor liberty in preaching; but knowing that the best way to overcome sorrow and grief is to displace them with godly activities which bring joy and thus renew hope, I have been busy in my mission field, and feel quite normal again.

I first went to Rich Hill, Missouri, and then to Pleasanton, Kansas, where I met a family of isolated Saints, named McAlister living about three miles from Pleasanton. I obtained use of a schoolhouse about two miles from their place, where I was told the gospel had never been sounded before, and went to work. We had good attendance, considering the heat and drouth. The little prejudice found there was nearly eradicated, as Brother McAlister said his neighbors quit calling him "Mormon."

I was called upon to make a celebration speech in a grove there July 4, which I did. How glad I was that I was not representing a church that ties the tongues of its preachers for fear they will injure the cause! I was glad I was not teaching for filthy lucre, and was not catering to those who will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts heap to themselves teachers having itching ears.

For about three weeks I had the congenial companionship of Brother A. T. Higdon and wife, doing tent work. But I am alone again at another new opening, about six miles north of Rockville. I am preaching in the home of Brother and Sister Samuel Deller. I came here September 2, and preached in the front yard until the rains drove us in. Our attendance has varied between fourteen and seventy-five, averaging about thirty-five, with some interest manifested.

I have quite recovered from the discouragement I received in Nova Scotia last year, it being my first year and a hard mission. My health is also fairly good.

Yours in Christ,

O. D. SHIRK.

News from Branches

Minot, North Dakota.

As clerk of the Minot Branch I am going to take this opportunity to tell you of the success we have been having this summer. It may be the means of encouraging other small branches who are, as it were, struggling for existence while battling against immeasurable opposition.

Minot has always been a very hard field, and the arduous labor of our minister has seemed to be of little avail; but we are beginning to reap a little of the fruit now. Brethren William Sparling and James C. Page recently held a three-week series of tent meetings in Minot and vicinity, and as a result six were added to our numbers. Several others are investigating.

On September 7 a special baptismal service was held near Logan, North Dakota, and the confirmations and sacrament service were held on the bank of the stream. I never was in a meeting where the Spirit was poured out to a greater degree. The spirit of prophecy was manifested twice through Brother Sparling, and a general good feeling prevailed. A number of nonmembers were present.

Our branch is still very small and scattered, but we hold regular Sunday school and sacrament services and hope to be able to accomplish some good.

Your sister,
MRS. C. F. GRAHAM.

Saint Louis, Missouri.

A lady reporter for a Chicago journal has attended a few of our services recently and at our sacrament service stated that she always felt a good spirit when in our midst. Brother Archibald then spoke, under the power of the Spirit; we feel, and related some of the history of our people and how we have been misrepresented. He admonished our friend, for such she said she was, to be truthful and God would bless her in her labors.

Brother Sparling has been holding tent services in East Saint Louis; Brother Archibald occupied there the evening of September 12. Brother Cooke reported having been doing church work in Brentwood, Missouri.

District conference convenes at Belleville, Illinois, September 27 and 28. Two priesthood meetings were held this month.

Your sister in Christ,

2739 GREER AVENUE.

ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

Conference Minutes.

BRITISH ISLES.—Annual conference met in the East Manchester meetinghouse, at 6.30 p. m., August 2, U. W. Greene, W. H. Greenwood, and Bishop R. May presiding. The 1912 conference minutes were read, corrected, and approved. Mission president and secretary reported. The elders reporting according to rule were: John Schofield, John Judd, E. J. Trapp, J. W. Taylor, Charles Cousins, W. H. Chandler, S. F. Mather, J. E. Meredith, W. R. Armstrong; Brother Bunt reported by letter. Eastern Wales reported by E. J. Trapp, Western Wales by J. G. Jenkins, Sheffield by Charles Cousins, Birmingham by William Ecclestone, Manchester by N. J. Weate. Sixth Quorum of Priests and Manchester district Religion reported. Secretary read copy of letter which had been forwarded to the editor of The Daily Dispatch as per order of 1912 conference, stating that there had been no acknowledgment of same. On Sunday at 9 a. m. the Seventh Quorum of Elders held a very profitable meeting. At 10.30 a. m., in Longsight Public Hall, Bishop R. May was the speaker, his theme being the practical teaching of the gospel and its application to our lives. At the 2.30 p. m. prayer service five recently baptized members from Stockport were confirmed. Agreeably to the action of General Conference, Henry Greenwood was approved for ordination to the office of evangelical minister, and W. R. Armstrong for high priest. Nominations by Bishop May of J. W. Taylor and W. R. Armstrong for counselors in the bishopric were approved. These brethren were ordained. At 6.30 p. m. the speaker was U. W. Greene. On August 4 at 9 a. m. the Seventh Quorum of Elders met and transacted important business. At 10.30 a. m. conference resumed its sittings. James Baty addressed the conference in an instructive, interesting, and spiritual talk on the work of the office which he held, showing how it affected him and the people amongst whom he was called to labor. Bishop May addressed the assembly on the work of the bishopric and the duties of the Saints in relation thereto. U. W. Greene addressed the conference, his leading thought being, let every man learn his own duty and act in his own office. Before closing he referred to the anti-Mormon movement in Boston, and how it was effectively met by mailing a personal letter to the clergy of the city. A copy of this letter was read to the conference. Reference was also made to concentration in large cities, the erection of suitable buildings, the college, and summer schools. At the 2.40 p. m. meeting the Bishop's financial report and the auditor's report thereon were approved. Seventh Quorum of Elders reported; to fill the vacancy in the presidency occasioned by the resignation of W. R. Armstrong, J. G. Jenkins was recommended and approved. Bishop May and Thomas Taylor verbally reported missionary labors. Sixth Quorum of Priests reported a reorganization, with Bishop May president, A. T. Trapp and Nephi Dewsnap counselors, H. Sykes secretary and treasurer. Conference sustained W. H. Greenwood, president of the mission; W. R. Armstrong, secretary; J. W. Taylor, assistant secretary; R. May, treasurer; W. R. Armstrong, local historian; the Bishopric; local and general church authorities. Bishopric was requested to furnish all the missionaries through its agent with suitable tracts for private and broadcast distribution. Bishopric was authorized to apply to the late financial secretary for all papers, tracts, documents, and other property belonging to the mission. One thousand shillings fund was informally discussed. Resolutions to provide that British Isles Mission provide a sanatorium for Saints in delicate health was referred to Bishopric. J. A. Judd was reelected auditor for a term of three years. Resolution of appeal to be sent to all branches in the mission, asking that deficiency in conference expenses, if any, be made up was referred to the bishopric. Since the close of conference our bishop informs us that there is a balance on hand of nearly four pounds after paying all expenses. Arrangements for next mission conference, place of assembly, etc., was left with mission authorities and bishopric. Privilege was granted Bishop May to speak on church debt; informal discussion followed, after which it was unanimously resolved that we accede to the request of the Presiding Bishop and assist so far as able to liquidate indebtedness. At 8, 45 p. m. conference adjourned. At this meeting F. G. Jenkins was ordained counselor to the president of the Seventh Quorum of Elders, Nephi Dewnsup counselor to the president of the Sixth Quorum of Priests. U. W. Greene addressed the conference, making special reference to our contest with the religious world, the origin of our work, and the reason why it is opposed. By resolution the conference placed on record their high appreciation of the manner in which U. W. Greene presided over the assembly, and wished him Godspeed in carrying out the work assigned him. This conference was one of the most spiritual, harmonious, and profitable yet held in the British Isles. W. H. Greenwood, president; W. R. Armstrong, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

EASTERN COLORADO.—Sunday school met September 5 in the George Bullard Grove, eight and one half miles southeast of Wray, Colorado, F. A. Russell presiding. Denver, Wray, North Willow, and Delta schools were represented. Eight out of nine schools in the district sent reports, but only four sent delegates. Ten dollars was appropriated for district library work and five dollars to the reunion just previously held. Coral E. Willis, secretary pro tem.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT.

The Saints and Friends of the Southern Missouri District: Please note that upon the recommendation of the district of Southern Missouri, Brother G. A. Davis, Thayer, Missouri, box 262, has been duly appointed bishop's agent in and for said district in place of Brother Benjamin Pearson, resigned. We recommend Brother Davis to the Saints and friends of the Southern Missouri District and trust that he may be blessed in his labors and be able to travel over the district and meet with every branch and member of the society, fulfilling fully the duty of agent, and appointing special solicitors or helpers whenever needed.

The Bishopric extend special thanks to Brother Benjamin Pearson for his faithful and truly worthy work in the Bishop's office in the capacity of agent in the past, and hope that he will continue to labor in the Master's vineyard whenever and wherever opportunity offers.

We especially request the Saints and friends of the Southern Missouri District that all take an interest in helping along the Master's work. Each one should try to move forward the special work that he has in hand in this life, first the Lord's work as stated by Jesus when he was here. This is prominent and we have the promise that if we do this first, that which we are personally interested in outside of this spiritual work shall be successful. If we can all move as children of faith and diligently lend a helping hand, we shall be able to overcome and receive commendation both here and hereafter. I trust that each one may be blessed of the Lord to fulfill his work and remember the agent, Brother G. A. Davis, Thayer, Missouri.

Confident in the triumph of the truth,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 27, 1913.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of the Southern Missouri District: As I have been appointed bishop's agent of this district, I want to reach you with a notice that I am ready to receipt you for your tithes and offerings for the Lord's work. I want to reach all so we can work together for the benefit of the church. I have appointed J. F. Cunningham, J. T. Davis, and J. W. Quinley to assist me in this work, so any who have any tithes can pay to them also, and they will receipt for the same.

Let us as a district put forth greater efforts than we have ever done before. Our missionaries' families are behind with their allowances, and we do not have the money to pay them. So, dear Saints, let us do our duty, and be awake on this line as well as on other lines of church work. Our duty is not altogether in going to Sunday school and church, it is also to bring our strength and support in a financial department so the gospel can be carried to those who are in darkness, so they can enjoy what you and I are enjoying in this glorious work.

Let those who are interested in this work write the following address in their notebooks, so they will always have it when tithes should be sent in. We hear it said many times, I would send in some tithes if I knew where to send, now you know where and to whom to send, and if you will write it down you will always know,

Yours in the one faith,

G. A. DAVIS.

THAYER, MISSOURI, Box 262.

Pastoral.

To the Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons of the Saint Louis, Central and Southeastern Illinois Districts; Dear Brethren: On Sunday, September 28, at Belleville, Illinois, we succeeded in organizing quorums of elders, priests, and teachers. We did not have sufficient time to organize the deacons' quorum, and it is the Presidency's wish that a quorum of deacons shall be organized in the Saint Louis District, and one for the Central and Southeastern Illinois districts, jointly. We shall try to do so as early as practicable; if possible we will attempt it at the next conference; at Saint Louis in December and in the Southeastern Illinois District at the February conference. We should like all the deacons to take notice and make a special effort to be in attendance.

The elders of these three districts will please note that an organization has been effected, and that Brother W. A. Guthrie, of Nebo, Illinois, is president. Granville Trowbridge, Saint Louis, is secretary and treasurer. Brother Trowbridge will publish his address later. But urge all elders in the three districts to send in their names and addresses to either Brother Guthrie or Brother Trowbridge, together with the fee required for registration.

We also shall be pleased to have the priests of these three districts do the same. Brother A. W. Smith is president, his address is, Bank of Commerce Building, Saint Louis, Missouri. The secretary will publish his address later.

The teachers of these three districts are also invited to take note that a quorum organization has been effected and Brother Carlisle is president. The secretary will publish address later.

In a general way we should like to say, the success of the quorum organization depends upon the cooperation of the ministry first, and in the next place upon the energy and ability of the officers.

If possible, periodical meetings should be arranged for by each quorum, at least once a quarter; if practicable every month. If all the quorum can not meet together, then encourage it that each district shall have a meeting, and some good, energetic elder be placed in charge of that section.

Each quorum presidency should arrange a syllabus of subjects for study, consideration, and discussion, and each section of the quorum can study the same matter synchronistically, a brother in each district being selected to introduce the matter in a speech, or essay, or paper.

The annual reunion, to which it is intended all the districts shall be invited, may be used as an opportunity for quorum rally, and special work can be provided.

The main purpose of quorum organization is to provide opportunity for mutual edification and instruction and to produce solidarity in our ministerial work. Matters affecting the polity and legislation of the general church can be initiated and developed in these quorums, and brought before the general body in a way that will be more satisfactory and authoritative than by using the individualistic method.

Through the agency of a lively and up-to-date quorum organization we shall very largely contribute to the expunging of the general reproach we have all more or less had to endure, namely, "We men of the ministry do not agree."

We do hope the brethren of the ministry in these districts will take advantage of the opportunity now opened to them and join the quorums, not only nominally, but get into the spirit of it, and seek to make your quorum an embryo "school of prophets."

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Faithfully,
J. W. RUSHTON.

Quorum Notices.*ONTARIO ELDERS.

Ontario Quorum of Elders will meet at the conference at Stratford, Ontario, October 11 and 12. A program has been arranged. Prominent elders will give addresses; papers will be read and questions discussed. We have selected for open discussion the following subject: What a branch president would do in case of his absence: arrange meetings, or leave it to next officers. Matters of importance will be brought out. By-laws to govern the quorum and the work in general will be reviewed. Frank Gray, secretary.

EASTERN MICHIGAN PRIESTS.

Seventh Quorum of Priests will meet October 26, time to be announced at conference at Detroit, October 2. Important business, including selection of president. Ray D. Bennett, 78 Milwaukee Avenue East, Detroit, Michigan, secretary.

LAMONI STAKE PRIESTS.

Lamoni Stake Quorum of Priests will meet at Oland church, during stake conference October 18 and 19. Subject for discussion: Benefits of quorum membership. J. J. Johnson, secretary.

CORRECTION.

Time of meeting of Twelfth Quorum of Priests should be 7 a. m., instead of 7 p. m. Send reports to Louis A. Serig instead of to J. A. Jaques. Louis A. Serig, secretary.

Conference Notices.

Western Maine District will convene with the Mountainville Branch, November 16 and 17. F. J. Ebeling, president.

Conferences are to convene for educational rather than business purposes at the following times and places, and for which the following program is suggested: New Hamburg, Pennsylvania, October 18 and 19; Wellston, Ohio, November 1 and 2. Saturday, 10 a. m., Organization and minutes. The Branch in relation to church courts. What should those, not concerned, do when trouble arises between members? Who should affix court penalties? Settling difficulties, (Questions and answers). 2 p. m., economy; The Word of Wisdom and the problems of the dining room; Why should I keep the Word of Wisdom? How I keep it. Why I do not keep it. How should branch members treat the deacon and his work? Behavior in the church. Supporting the church by tithes and offerings, (Questions and answers). Is it our duty to help support the Children's Home, the Sanitarium and the College? Vocal and other music will be rendered between subjects. 7.30 p. m. The aim of the Woman's Auxiliary. Social Purity. Music to be used as during the afternoon to lighten the tedium. Sunday, 7 a. m., Priesthood to meet by divisions, elders, priests, teachers and deacons separately instead of in one body, each section to be presided over by a specialist. 9 a. m., additional summer school institute work. 10.45 a. m., preaching. 2 p. m., social and sacrament service. 4.30 p. m., general priesthood meeting. 7.30 p. m., preaching. R. C. Russell, Minister in General Charge.

Kewanee District will convene at Kewanee, Illinois, November 1 and 2. Send statistical reports to district secretary not later than October 28. Delegates will be elected to next General Conference. Mary E. Gillin, secretary, 115 Clarke Avenue, Peoria, Illinois.

Nodaway District will convene at Guilford, Missouri, October 18 and 19, 10 o'clock a. m. J. W. Rushton will be in attendance. W. B. Torrance, secretary.

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District will convene with Clear Lake (Ray, Indiana) Branch, November 1, 10 a. m. Send reports to secretary, R. F. D. 3, Jackson, Michigan, not later than October 27. J. F. Curtis has promised to be present. District officers will be elected. Trains will be met by teams at Ray, Indiana. G. A. Smith, president; W. P. Buckley, secretary.

Southern Indiana District will convene at Saints' church, 973 Twenty-eighth Street, Indianapolis, Indiana, November 8, at 10 a. m. Take Northwestern car and get off at Twenty-seventh Street, walk west to above location. J. R. McClain, president; Edwin Perry, secretary.

Convention Notices.

Kirtland district Religio and Sunday school will meet at New Hamburg, Pennsylvania, October 17, at 10.30 a. m. This is the day preceding conference at same place: Mrs. Hattie R. Griffiths of Columbus, Ohio, will have charge of the institute work. John W. Topping, 957 Waldo Road, Cleveland, Ohio, has charge of the program. Write him your suggestions and state what subjects you want taken up in the institute work. C. B. Keck, secretary.

Central Michigan Religio will convene at Coleman, October 17, at 10 a. m. Elsie Janson, secretary.

Addresses.

Charles E. Crumley, 427 Church Street, San Bernardino, California.

Notice of Appointment.

To Whom it May Concern: Roy S. Budd, priest, has by concurrence of Presidency and minister in charge been appointed to labor in Clinton District. We solicit the sympathy and help which Saints and friends can render to our brother in his work. JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Two-day Meetings.

At Alpena, October 18 and 19. All bring well filled baskets, and a goodly portion of God's Spirit. C. N. Burtch, secretary.

Save Time.

As the Religio Quarterlies are now published at the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, it will save time to send all orders direct to the office of publication. To do so will not only save time in the delivery of orders, but extra trouble and expense in accounting and in the forwarding of orders. J. A. GUNSOLLEY, President.

Notice to Lamoni Stake.

Those not having conveyance from Lamoni to Oland church to attend conventions and conference, October 16 to 19, should notify R. S. Salyards, Lamoni, Iowa. C. I. Carpenter, secretary; John Smith, president.

death. To this union twelve children were born, five of whom have preceded her, seven being left to mourn the loss of a kind and loving mother. There also remain fifteen grandchildren and four great-grandchildren, two brothers and one sister. Sister Phillips was afflicted with paralysis, and had not been able to walk for the past eight years, and the last year and eight months had not been able to speak, yet she remained faithful to the covenant made with her Master when a child. Funeral sermon by J. R. Evans, Lucas, Iowa; interment was in the Fry Hill Cemetery, by the side of her companion.

MCCARTY.—Charles McCarty was born in Estell County, Kentucky, February 14, 1836; died September 26, 1913, at Holden, Missouri. He was baptized by Elder Emsley Curtis, June 2, 1887. He married Sarah Krump, of Boone County, Missouri. To them were born twelve children. Funeral services in Saints' church, in charge of C. E. Hand; sermon by R. O. Self. Brother McCarty has been a resident of Holden about thirty years. A large congregation of friends and neighbors were in attendance. He leaves wife, four sons, four daughters, and several grandchildren; four children had preceded him. Brother McCarty has been a great sufferer for several years.

PARKER.—Warrell Parker was born February 15, 1854, near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, died September 28, 1913, in Tekamah, Nebraska. In 1857 the family moved to Wisconsin. In 1870 he moved to Nebraska. He married Susan West, December 18, 1870. To them were born four children, two sons and two daughters; all died in infancy. He was baptized in June, 1881, by James Caffall. He leaves wife, two brothers and two sisters. Sermon by Joshua Carlile.

IRWIN.—Zada Hope, daughter of Aaron and Emma Irwin, born January 16, 1911, was called to the beautiful beyond September 5, 1913. Funeral services were in charge of R. Griffith, a Presbyterian minister, there being no Latter Day Saint elders within reach. Interment in Kippenville Cemetery, Kippenville, Alberta.

WATKINS.—John Watkins was born near Blackwood, Monmouthshire, South of Wales, England, July 1, 1823; died September 15, 1913, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Thomas H. Lewis, at Panama, Illinois. He married Sarah Jeremiah in 1847, whose death occurred thirteen years ago. To this union were born twelve children, four of whom are now living. Brother Watkins is also survived by twenty-six grandchildren and fourteen great-grandchildren. He united with the church in 1847. He emigrated to the United States in 1869. Sermon by John R. Evans.

CALHOUN.—Mary J. Calhoun was born July 4, 1830, and died August 31, 1913. She was baptized March 6, 1868, by Thomas Waddell, the first missionary to reach Alabama, sent out by the Reorganization. The sister had lived a life in harmony with her covenant. She is survived by a sister, brother, two daughters, many grandchildren. Funeral services by L. F. West.

MCCARTHUR.—Minnie, wife of George McArthur, was born January 9, 1886; died August 26, 1913. She was baptized by I. N. Roberts, July 31, 1902. She was a Saint of whom it has been said universally: "No tale of evil ever passed her lips; and none was said about her." She was beloved by all who knew her and will be sadly missed by all. She is survived by her husband, one child, father, brothers, and sisters. Funeral services by C. J. Clark.

JONES.—In the Lone Rock Branch, Harrison County, Missouri, September 20, 1913, of Bright's disease. Brother Charles E. Jones, aged 80 years, 1 month, and 15 days. In such brief space I can only say that Brother Jones's service for God and his truth among the people is known far and wide among the Saints in the West. He was baptized May 13, 1861, at Marengo, Illinois, by Samuel Powers; was ordained one of the Seventy, April 8, 1863, and preached in many regions. By his devoted life and kindly manner he won many souls for Christ's kingdom. He died lamented by hundreds who gathered at the funeral, not only Saints, but non-members, and by many who could not attend the service. Sister Jones and two sons survive him. He was buried in the cemetery adjoining the Lone Rock Church. Forty Lamoni Saints attended the funeral and the majority of the Evergreen Saints were present. Their choir did the singing. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by D. D. Young; prayer at the grave by J. S. Snively.

PHILLIPS.—Ann Phillips, widow of Isaac Phillips, died at the home of her son, Benjamin Phillips, Lucas, Iowa, September 16, 1913, aged 81 years. She was the mother of three children and six grandchildren, all survive her save one. She was a woman respected by all who knew her. She remained faithful, and devoted to her faith as a Saint of God to the last. Funeral services at the Saints' chapel, Lucas, Iowa, in charge of J. F. Mintun, assisted by John R. Evans.

MAYHEW.—At Lamoni, Iowa, September 12, 1913, Elisha C. Mayhew. He was born in Shelbyville, Indiana, December 25, 1831; heard the gospel and was baptized June 7, 1875, by Columbus Scott; came to Lamoni in 1881. His wife died in 1887. His last illness was brief. He was found by his daughter, Sister Flora Silver, in the sleep of death. A son, three daughters, and six grandchildren survive him. Funeral services in charge of John Smith, assisted by Heman C. Smith; sermon by H. A. Stebbins.

BOSWELL.—At Chariton, Iowa, September 15, 1913, Ruth Maud, daughter of Alma and Daisy Boswell, and grandchild of Brother and Sister Joseph Boswell, aged 4 months and 17 days. Another sweet spirit has entered the paradise of God. The parents brought the mortal form to Lamoni for burial, and a short sermon was preached by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by John Smith.

WILSON.—Mary Lucile, oldest daughter of Brother and Sister J. D. Wilson, died July 22, 1913, at Salt Lake City, Utah, from typhoid fever. She was born in Salt Lake City, April 17, 1896, and grew up to be a noble young woman of kind and lovable disposition. She was baptized by T. W. Chatburn, March 1, 1908. She died as she had lived, firm in the faith. The funeral services were held in the Saints' new church on Fourth East, between Third and Fourth South, July 25, John Hall being in charge; sermon by G. J. S. Abels, of Ogden. Interment in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

THE NEGRO PROBLEM IN AMERICA.

In America we have the negro problem with us constantly. Sometimes it presents itself in mild forms, but again it obtrudes itself upon our notice with horrible details, such as race riots or lynchings and burnings.

Other people come here and are assimilated so that in one or two generations they are practically one with us in speech, sentiment, deportment, and general appearance. Whether or not they are improved in every particular may be a matter worthy of discussion. They at least cease to be foreigners and aliens and become one with us.

The negro, however, is set aside by his color and by the added stigma of recent slavery. He may ardently desire to be "American" in all things, and may be entirely one with us in patriotic sentiment and ambition; his color none the less marks him as different, in a way that, apparently, his white compatriots can not forget or overlook, even if they would.

The negro is the black pearl in the national oyster that can not be assimilated, but must be encysted or it will destroy the oyster. Amalgamation is vehemently rejected, assimilation apparently is impossible, so the negro seems doomed to remain a people within a people; in the Nation, but not of it.

The terrible handicap that this at times puts upon him industrially and intellectually, can probably be fully realized only by those intelligent members of that unfortunate race who have experienced it, though others may to a degree sense it if they approach the subject with a sympathetic and open mind.

Some time ago Mr. William Henry Lewis spoke in Lamoni, and we well remember his dramatic account of the first moment when it dawned upon his mind that he was a negro, a member of a race supposed to be inferior, one that yet bears the apparently ineradicable stamp of servitude. He set himself with fiery zeal to combat with fate, and succeeded so well that in time he became assistant Attorney-

General of the United States, and was even admitted to the National Bar Association; two positions of absolutely unique distinction for one of his race. An effort to oust him from the Bar Association failed, and he declared when in Lamoni that he hoped some day to deliver the annual address before the association, a worthy ambition, truly, but one that would seem destined to remain without consummation.

It was since his appearance in Lamoni on the occasion mentioned that the sweeping order was issued segregating colored clerks and officials in government employ in Washington, District of Columbia, the first instance that we call to mind of Federal approval of race segregation, an order that we will mention a little further on.

The fervent desire of many educated negroes is merely the privilege to go their own way about their own business, unnoticed and unchallenged, common citizens like the rest of us. That would seem to be a simple matter, so common to us that we hardly think of it; but to them it is denied. In the North especially, where he hoped for most opportunity, he is most disappointed in that particular. If he ventures into certain quarters he is an object of staring curiosity; in others he is rudely rebuffed or insulted, perhaps ejected with more or less personal humiliation; while in still others he may be assailed with bricks and stones or even lynched. Even the noted Booker T. Washington was brutally assaulted in New York City by an ignorant butcher some time ago when he came there and was quietly going about matters of his own concern.

In a strange city he may travel a long time before he can find a restaurant where he can appease his hunger; the law may forbid discrimination, the management may admit him, but even then no one may be found who will serve him. Few hotels will provide him with a room when he is weary at night. If he enters a theater, he must seek the gallery. He can not even live where he would, but where he must. He can rent property only in certain districts, or if he rents outside those districts (usually the meanest in the city,) he may be stoned out of the locality. If he is so incredibly fortunate as to secure employment in a really desirable position in some establishment, his fellow workmen will make it intolerable for him, or the walking delegate will appear and demand his union card.

All this may pass unnoticed by ignorant members of the race (and surely no race was ever more fortunately endowed with almost unquenchable cheerful optimism), but to the sensitive, highly developed, and educated members of the race the situation seems almost unbearable,—not so much that they mourn inability to associate with white people on an equal footing, but because they find themselves hampered and circumscribed and their activities curtailed. They are not yet free to exercise that right to "life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness," which we so glibly term an "inalienable right."

However much one may oppose the free intermingling and social equality of the two races, he can but regret that such a condition exists, and that a whole race must suffer the blighting restrictions of caste. We can agree with one authority on this subject, that it would indeed be "a daring person" who would attempt to answer the question, "What will be the outcome of all the racial controversy?"

Mary White Ovington has made a very critical and enlightening study of the negro in New York City, and has embodied her observations in an excellent book, Half a Man.<sup>1</sup> On the question of race segregation she has the following interesting comment:

The majority of white people have heard, in a vague way, that there is a difference of opinion in the negro world; and again, vaguely, that it takes the form of opposition to Doctor Booker T. Washington and industrial training. But the difference of opinion among the negroes is a difference of ideals, and reaches far beyond the controversy of industrial or cultural training, or the question of individual leadership. It is difficult to formulate, inasmuch as few, if any, negroes hold logically to one ideal wholly to the exclusion of the other. They can not be logical and live. But their division into radical and conservative is too important to omit; especially since, as we have seen, there is nothing in their social life to distinguish them from their neighbors; only in their thoughts are they aloof from us—aliens upon whose shoulders is the problem of a race.

How can one explain these two ideals? Roughly, they accept or reject segregation. The first looks upon the black man in America, for many generations at least, as a race apart. Recognizing this, the race must increasingly grow in self-efficiency. It must run its own business, own its banks, its groceries, its restaurants, have its dressmakers, milliners, tailors; it must establish factories where it shall employ only colored men and women; its children shall be brought into the world by colored doctors, taught by colored teachers, buried by colored undertakers. Education, along industrial lines, shall help train the worker to this efficiency, and a proper race pride shall give him the patronage of the negroes about him. When, as will of course happen in the majority of cases, the negro works for the white man, he must consider himself and his race. He must not go out on strike when the white man strives for higher wages; he is justified, if he is willing to risk a broken head, in filling the place of the striking workman, for he has to look after his own concerns.

The second point of view resists segregation. It believes that the negro should never cease to struggle against being treated as a race apart, that he should demand the privileges of a citizen, free access to all public institutions, full civil and political rights. As a workman, he should have the opportunity of other workmen, his training should be the training of his white neighbor, and in business and the professions he should strive to serve white as well as black. And just as in the battle field he fights in a common cause with his white comrade, so in the struggle for better working class conditions he should stand by the side of the laborer, regardless of race. Believing these things and finding that America fails to meet his demands, he thinks it should be his part to struggle for his ideal vigorously, to protest against discrimination, and never, complacent, to submit to the position of inferiority.

As I have said, few men hold logically to either of these ideals, and as that of acquiescence to present conditions is naturally popular with the whites, who are themselves responsible for discrimination, material success sometimes means a departure from the aggressive to the submissive attitude. However, the whole question of the negro as a wage earner is yet scarcely understood by this small professional and business class. They are in turmoil, in a virile struggle, harsh, bewildering, baffling.

Commenting on the subject of racial discrimination the author just quoted says, "Northern negroes believe this discrimination against the black man to be increasing in New York."

Recent development would indicate that sentiment in favor of strict segregation is growing rapidly, not only locally but generally. Press dispatches from Baltimore, Maryland, report the adoption by the city council of an ordinance entitled, "An ordinance to prevent conflict and ill-feeling between the white and colored races in Baltimore City, and to preserve the public peace and promote the general welfare by making reasonable provision requiring the use of separate blocks for residences by white and colored people, respectively."—Kansas City Journal, September 26, 1913.

Commenting on the recent segregation order enforced in the Treasury and Post Office Departments in Washington, District of Columbia, the Congressionalist and Christian World for September 18, has this to say, in an editorial headed, "Turning the Negro Back":

During the last few months orders have been issued in the Treasury and Post Office Departments which require white and colored employees to use separate toilet rooms, to be separated in lunchrooms, and most of the colored clerks in the Post Office Department have been gathered from the various bureaus and assembled in the Dead Letter Office, in a room where they are separated from white clerks by a row of lockers placed across the middle of the room. One important colored clerk, whose location can not be changed conveniently, has been screened off, so as to conceal him from the public view and from his fellow workers. Two or three others have been assigned to messenger service, although having appointments as clerks. Watchmen are stationed at the doors of the toilet rooms to see that colored clerks use the special ones assigned to them on the eighth floor of the Post Office Department Building. In addition to the humiliation involved in segregation, thousands of dollars are being lost in time spent in going to the eighth floor from other floors of a great building occupying a city square, although toilet rooms heretofore used are near to all. In the Treasury Department the toilet rooms assigned to colored clerks are in a corner of the basement, and in this great building similar loss of time occurs.

Soon after the issuance of these orders in the Treasury Department segregation signs were posted. Following a protest the signs were taken down, but verbal warnings affirm that the order is in force. Segregation in work has been begun in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving. Colored clerks who have been reluctant to submit have been admonished sharply, and a state of alarm has spread among the colored employees of all executive departments. The fear that they may lose their positions has led some of those segregated to seek favor from the administration by declaring that they are pleased with the new plan. They dare not protest, but privately they declare their indignation and disapproval. Southern opposition has deprived colored men of some of the few high appointive positions that have been occupied for many years by members of their race. The post of Register of the Treasury and that of minister to the "black republic" of Hayti are the most noteworthy instances.

Meantime Senators Vardaman, Tillman, Hoke Smith, and other southern members of Congress declare their purpose to force race segregation throughout all branches of the Federal Government. Senator Vardaman proposes to introduce a series of bills in December, the ultimate effect of which would be to expel negroes from all government positions. He says the holding of office is the symbol of sovereignty, and negroes must not exercise sovereignty; and then he quotes Alexander Stephens's declaration that slavery was the natural and normal position of the negro. Two bills have been introduced in Congress to require separate street cars for white and colored people in the District of Columbia.

The action referred to, coming so soon after the beginning of a new administration causes some to profess to see in it political significance, just as formerly negro lynchings were supposed to have a purely sectional significance. But back of it all and under it all are deep racial prejudices that must be taken into account, that know no party affiliations and recognize no geographical lines.

These racial prejudices are not likely to diminish, in fact they have grown much stronger in the North since the days of the Civil War, and in view of their actual existence and prospective continuation, race segregation may become more and more imperative.

We know of only one force in the universe powerful enough to wipe away race distinctions of such a pronounced nature, and that is the power mentioned by Paul, that knows neither bond nor free, Jew nor Gentile, and we might add, black nor white.

But this Nation and this age, though nominally Christian, is certainly far removed from that distant, hoped-for millennium when race distinctions shall melt entirely away in Christian love and fellowship.

Segregation may be unavoidable at present, but as now even partially enforced it puts a terrible hardship upon the industrious and ambitious colored man, particularly in the North, that robs him of many creature comforts and even threatens his existence. It cuts him off from most of the gainful occupations, leaving only those most undesirable or those which the negro is able to monopolize (such for instance as the work of porter) thus reducing his wage to a very low scale. As a result his standard of living is kept down, and in most instances his wife is compelled to go out of the home and seek employment. This means that the children are neglected. As a result of enforced maternal neglect, overcrowding, and general insanitary surroundings, due to poverty, and quite unavoidable in many instances, in New York City two colored babies in every seven die during the first year of life, the infant mortality among white people in the same localities being less than half that of the colored. So that to the colored man segregation even as at present partially enforced means more than a mere personal affront. It means more than the dreaded and obnoxious brand of inferiority. It means that the struggle for existence is rendered almost intolerable and in many instances unsuccessful.

If the white race is to insist upon segregation it must take up the very evident responsibility resting upon a superior, stronger, and more intelligent race, to help a weaker people under distressing conditions not self-imposed. The Christian professions of this steeple-dotted Nation make the responsibility more apparent.

While we may not wish our white women to marry negroes, or our daughters to meet them as social equals, or our sons to work at the same bench with them, we surely do not wish the race to be starved and stunted and robbed of the very fruits of liberty apparently secured to them by a long, bloody, and costly war.

If we are to insist upon segregation, both social and industrial, we must help them find ways by which that position may become tolerable. Considerations both selfish and unselfish prompt such a sentiment.

Booker T. Washington once said:

When I was a boy I was the champion fighter of our town. I loved to hold the boys down in the ditch and make them yell. When I grew older I found that I could not hold another boy in the ditch without remaining in the ditch myself. Nor can one race hold another in the ditch without staying in the ditch with it.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

OCTOBER LEAVES.—Industrial Education in the Philippines is the title of a very interesting article by Professor George N. Briggs, appearing in October number of AUTUMN LEAVES. Brother Briggs was formerly engaged in teaching in the Philippines, but at present is connected with the Department of the Interior at Washington, District of Columbia. This article is illustrated with twelve excellent halftones furnished by Brother Briggs. Other interesting articles in this number are a short Graceland College story by Professor R. V. Hopkins, entitled, "He that overcometh"; "Music and its influence in the home," by Mrs. O. H. Riggs; a continuation of the "Tour of England, Ireland, and Europe," by Sister Belle Robinson James (this number describing a visit to Blarney Castle); "The abuse of knowledge," by Elder Robert T. Cooper, of Los Angeles.

READING MATTER AND COOPERATION.—We call attention to an announcement appearing from time to time in the advertising columns of the HERALD, stating that the Herald Publishing House is prepared to receive subscriptions for any and all kinds of periodicals. Any magazine or paper secured through our publishing department will be the same cost to you that you would pay if ordering of any other agency, and will bring a small profit to our office. Books may also be secured under this same arrangement, at the same cost to you, and with a similar profit to the office. Let us cooperate in this matter.

IMPORTANT ARTICLE ON SACRAMENT.—In this issue of the HERALD appears the first installment of a very interesting article on the sacrament from the pen of President Frederick M. Smith. This article is in three parts and deals with three phases of the question. The scriptural statement of the origin and first observance of the Lord's supper is taken up first. This is followed by a treatment of the historical development of the doctrine in the Roman Catholic Church and other denominations, together with a very interesting digest of the theory of transubstantiation, consubstantiation, and insubstantiation. Last of all, the subject is treated analytically.

NEW TRACT.—The article by Elder E. E. Long entitled, "The failures of Campbellism," and appearing in the HERALD during the months of May, June, and July, has been passed upon by the tract committee and will be published in tract form if the demand justifies. This tract would be invaluable in itself as a source of information on the questions involved, and would afford a directory of works of recognized authority published by the Christian people themselves. The citations used have been carefully verified with the original sources from which quoted, and are reliable, barring unavoidable errors, typographical, etc. If published, the tract would be bound with a good grade of paper and would comprise about one hundred and fifty pages, regular tract size. The sale of five hundred copies must be assured before publication. The price would be twenty cents each, six for one dollar, postage prepaid. The response from ministry and members should be immediate and favorable. A limited supply will be printed, so if copies are desired they should be secured now. Notify Herald Publishing House at once, stating how many copies you will want, if it be finally determined to publish the tract.

PROBATION AFTER DEATH.—In the Word of Truth for October 1 we find a discussion of the teachings of Pastor Russell with reference to probation after death. While we do not feel called upon to defend the teaching of Mr. Russell, we do feel that a word touching the general principle under discussion may be permitted. The Word of Truth goes so far as to say that if in this life "we slight the opportunity either from carelessness or from ignorance we lose our only probationary grant," contending that when individuals or institutions undertake to lead people to believe that those who do not have an opportunity in this life will have a chance hereafter they are "teaching something the Bible flatly contradicts." The understanding of the Word of Truth seems to be that when every knee shall bow and every tongue confess to the glory of God, those ignorant of Christ as well as those neglecting preparation will confess because forced to do so; that is, they will bow in recognition of and in submission to the law of Christ "as they are sent away to everlasting punishment." The suggestion that God would or could add to his glory by such a process of forced confession and wholesale torture outrages every conception of the dignity and greatness of Deity. The idea that because one's lines were laid in heathen lands where he had no opportunity to learn of Christ, he, in his ignorance, must, through no neglect of his own, be forced to recognize divine law in being borne to endless torment is repugnant to the most benighted conception of justice. Such an order would damn the infants of Christian as well as of heathen lands. This is the kind of teaching that has made untold numbers of scoffers and crowded the lines of infidelity from the beginning. How much more humanitarian, to say nothing of how much more in keeping with the great attributes of God as revealed in holy writ, is the interpretation which accords to those who could not learn here an opportunity hereafter.

SACRAMENT OF THE LORD'S SUPPER.

---PART I.

BY FREDERICK M. SMITH.

It has been nearly nineteen hundred years since Jesus the Christ called his twelve apostles around him at their last celebration of the Feast of the Passover and officiated in that ordinance which has become known as the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; and in those nineteen hundred years there has been so much discussion and controversy over the rite that it might well be said the controversy over the eucharist has been continuous. It has engendered much bitter theological discussion and created many schisms. It might appear unfortunate that so much contention has occurred over one of the most solemn and sacred rites of the church, were it not that the long and earnest controversy bespeaks the significance and importance of the ceremony as a part of the church's work and ritual. These discussions have tended to bring out and emphasize the spiritual scope as well as intellectual breadth of this sacrament.

It is significant, furthermore, that scriptural bearings of the sacrament of the Lord's supper are few; that is to say, despite the hundreds of volumes written on the subject in the long controversy, yet in the Bible a few verses serve to cover the entire subject. And it may be well within the design of divinity that this ceremony, so far-reaching and spiritually important in the religious life of the Christian communicants, shall still remain one of the mysteries of godliness. We may be unable to trace its details or to explain the means whereby it operates so wonderfully in the souls of the partakers, but of its efficiency and peace-bringing blessings thousands can bear witness.

In another article we have pointed out the trend of modern thought and the relation of the church to scholarship, emphasizing the duty of the religious teacher to restate the dogmas of the church or the truths of the universal religion in terms of modern thought, that those truths might be properly coordinated with the facts of present-day knowledge. And as one of the great rites of the church in which is stored a wealth of spiritual energy and experience, the Lord's supper needs such restatement from age to age. This to an extent accounts for the long controversy. In fact, as one of the important features of Christianity it could not be expected that it would escape controversy and discussion when every other principle and rite of the Christian religion has been passed under the searchlight of criticism and philosophical and theological analysis.

SCRIPTURES BEARING ON THE SUBJECT.

Before proceeding further it is well, in order to have the scriptural bearings of the subject well before us, that we reread the portions of the Scriptures in which the rite is presented to us. Matthew's version of the feast and supper is as follows:

Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover? And he said, Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him, The Master saith, My time is at hand; I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples. And the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them; and they made ready the passover. Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve. And as they did eat, he said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me. And they were exceeding sorrowful and began every one of them to say unto him, Lord, is it I? And he answered and said, He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me. The Son of man goeth as it is written of him: but woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! It had been good for that man if he had not been born. Then Judas, which betrayed him, answered and said, Master, is it I? He said unto him, Thou hast said. And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new testament which is shed for many for the remission of sins. But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom. And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the Mount of Olives.—Matthew 26: 17-30.

We quoted the portion referring to the feast of the passover that we might have the full setting of the incident before us. Mark's version is found in the fourteenth chapter, verses 12 to 26:

And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, his disciples said unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare that thou mayest eat the passover? And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him. And wheresoever he shall go in, say ye to the good man of the house, The Master saith, Where is the guest chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? And he will show you a large upper room furnished and prepared: there make ready for us. And his disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover. And in the evening he cometh with the twelve. And as they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, One of you which eateth with me shall betray me. And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I? And he answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve, that dippeth with me in the dish. The Son of Man indeed goeth, as it is written of him; but woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! Good were it for that man if he had never been born. And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat: this is my body. And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it. And he said unto them, This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many. Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God. And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

Luke tells the story thus:

Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed. And he sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat. And they said unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare? And he said unto them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water, follow him into the house where he entereth in. And ye shall say unto the good man of the house, The Master saith unto thee, Where is the guest chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? And he shall show you a large upper room furnished; there make ready. And they went, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover. And when the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him. And he said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer: For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves: For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come. And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me. Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you.—Luke 22: 7-20.

It has been held by some that the Lord's Supper did not become a sacrament till Paul instituted it as such; but if Paul were the one by whom it was made a sacrament, it is not likely that it would soon enough have so fallen into abuse as to merit the severe reprimand he administered some of the saints for their manner of celebrating it. It may well be assumed that the disciples of Christ, following his implicit command to partake of the sacrament in memory of him (Luke 22: 19), faithfully endeavored to observe the rite regularly. It is not unlikely that the significance of the ceremony and its importance both as a commemorative event and a sacrament were not adequately appreciated by the twelve and their followers because of their proximity to Christ and his times, and as a result the social features of the evening meal may have been then emphasized. The emphasis may have remained upon this part of the ceremony, the spiritual aspects being lost sight of to some extent, until Paul saw the necessity of reinterpreting the ceremony to the saints of his day, emphasizing the spiritual aspects and significance even to the extent of over emphasizing the eschatological bearings. That Paul's teachings and interpretations of the rite had a marked and lasting effect upon the manner of its celebration and the subsequently prevailing opinions as to its meanings and spiritual effect goes almost without saying.

RELATION TO THE PASSOVER.

It is noteworthy that Jesus chose as the occasion of the first Lord's supper the day on which the feast of the passover was held by the Jews, and that he broke the bread and passed the cup to his disciples after they had together celebrated the passover. "With desire," said Jesus, "have I desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer." This desire may have comprised more than the wish to be with them at this feast for the last time. The placing of the old feast in such immediate juxtaposition with the new rite was undoubtedly by design. Did he mean to substitute the one for the other? The connection of the new rite with the old is apparent, and that Paul probably believed it meant a substitution of the new for the old is indicated by his expression, "Christ our Passover." (1 Corinthians 5: 7.)

The chief details of the sacrament as Jesus administered it to his disciples are given in Matthew, Luke, and Mark, and agree on the essentials, but to John the accompanying instructions of the Master on this occasion seemed to be of far greater importance, and the sayings of the Master in the upper room are recorded with faithfulness. And it is noteworthy that immediately Judas had left the room (gone to inform the soldiers) Jesus, having completed the passing of the cup and bread, said significantly: "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13: 34, 35). The new rite, then, is in its significance one of love, fraternal as well as divine.

HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT.

It will be advantageous by helping us the more readily to grasp the significance of the eucharist as a feature of the Christian religion, to trace briefly its historical development. We have already discussed to some extent its development in the apostolic times. In what is termed the subapostolic age the "early fathers" were persistent in urging the celebration of the eucharist. It might be well here to quote from the Didache to show the manner of administering the sacrament in those times:

IX. And concerning the Eucharist, after this manner give thanks. First concerning the cup: We thank thee, our Father, for the holy vine of David thy son, which thou madest known to us through Jesus thy Son: to thee be glory for ever. And concerning the broken bread: We thank thee, our Father, for the life and knowledge which thou madest known to us through Jesus thy Son: to thee be glory for ever. As this broken bread was scattered abroad upon the mountains, and, when gathered together, became one, so let the church be gathered together from the ends of the earth into thy kingdom: for thine is the glory of the power through Jesus Christ for ever. But let no one eat or drink of the Eucharist but those baptized into the name of the Lord: for concerning this the Lord hath said, Give not that which is holy to the dogs.

X. And, after being filled, give thanks after this manner: We thank thee, holy Father, for thy holy name which thou hast made to dwell in our hearts, and for the knowledge and faith and immortality which thou hast made known to us through Jesus thy Son: to thee be glory for ever. Thou, O Almighty Savior, didst create all things for thy name's sake, and thou gavest both food and drink to men for their enjoyment, that they might thank thee; but to us thou freely gavest spiritual food and drink and life everlasting through thy Son. Before all things we thank thee that thou art mighty: thine is the glory for ever. Remember, O Lord, thy church, to deliver her from all evil, and to perfect her in thy love; and gather her together from the four winds, sanctified unto thy kingdom which thou didst prepare for her: for thine is the power and the glory for ever. Let grace come and this world pass away. Hosanna to the God of David. If anyone is holy, let him come; if anyone is not holy, let him repent. Maranatha. Amen. But allow the prophets to give thanks in such terms as they wish.

XIV. On the day of the Lord, being assembled together, break bread and give thanks, after confession of your trespasses, that our sacrifice may be pure, and let no one who has a dispute with his companion come with you till they are reconciled, that our sacrifice may not be defiled. For this is the command given by the Lord: "In every place and time offer unto me a pure sacrifice: for I am a great king, and my name is Wonderful among the Gentiles."

Two things are especially worthy of note in this quotation from the Didache, viz: close communion is taught, and the sacrament was to be administered each Lord's Day. It is interesting to note further that a set form of thanks is prescribed for those other than the prophets, who are to be allowed "to give thanks in such terms as they wish." It will also be observed that confession was a part of the ceremony, or rather preceded it. The confession was for the purpose of keeping the sacrifice pure; and this would indicate that in the minds of the framers of this form or designators of this manner of administering the sacrament the confession was followed by a purification, hence a forgiveness. Of this point more later.

Justin Martyr (120-165 A. D.) representing the first half of the second century may here be quoted as follows:

And after we have thus (in baptism) bathed the person who has become a believer and adherent, we lead him to the brethren, as they are called, where they are assembled to offer up common prayers earnestly on behalf of themselves and the newly enlightened one and all others everywhere, that it may be vouchsafed to us who have learned the truth to be found also in our conduct good members of the society, and keepers of the commandments, that we may be saved with the eternal salvation. Then when we have done our prayers we greet one another with a kiss. Then there is presented to the president of the brethren a loaf and a cup of water and wine; and he, after taking them, offers up praise and glory to the Father of all things, through the name of the Son and the Holy Ghost; and he gives thanks at length for these favors of God to us. And when he has ended the prayers and the thanksgiving (Eucharist) the whole assistant people present assent with an "Amen"—a Hebrew word meaning "so be it"; and when the president has given thanks, and the whole people have assented, those who are called deacons (ministers) among us receive a portion of the loaf and wine and water, over which the thanksgiving has been made, to each of those who are present, and they take it away to those who are not.

And this food is called among us Eucharist; and no one is allowed to partake of it unless he believes that what we teach is true, and has been washed in the laver for the remission of sins, and for regeneration, and is living as Christ enjoined. For we do not receive these things as common bread or common drink, but just as Jesus Christ our Savior, by the Word of God made flesh had both flesh and blood for our salvation, so we have been taught that the food over which thanks have been given by the word of prayer which comes from him—that food from which our blood and our flesh are by assimilation nourished—is both the flesh and the blood of that Jesus Christ who was made flesh. For the Apostles delivered in the memoirs compiled by them, which are called Gospels, that this command was given to them—that Jesus took bread.

It will be observed that here again rigid, close communion is taught, as note the words: "And no one is allowed to partake of it unless he believes that what we teach is true, and has been washed in the laver for the remission of sins." And the solemnity of the partaking in those days, and the care they exercised in administering is indicated further by Martyr's instruction that the partaker must be "living as Christ enjoined": and the task of preventing one not so "living as Christ enjoined" was placed upon those who administered the sacrament, for such should not be "allowed to partake."

Irenæus of Lyons near the close of the second century in his writings accentuated the sacrificial idea of the sacrament, while Tertullian, another writer of those times, indicated the dissociation of the Eucharist from the Agape. About this time began to appear in the discussions of the sacrament the magical theory of the rite which later became so conspicuous in eucharistic literature.

As a digest of the idea of the Lord's supper as it prevailed up to this time, we might here with benefit to the reader quote Harnack:

As regards the Lord's supper, the most important point is that its celebration became more and more the central point, not only for the worship of the church, but for its very life as a church. The form of this celebration, the common meal, made it appear to be a fitting expression of the brotherly unity of the community (on the public confession before the meal, see Didache, 14, and my notes on the passage). The prayers which it included presented themselves as vehicles for bringing before God, in thanksgiving and intercession, everything that affected the community; and the presentation of the elements for the holy ordinance was naturally extended to the offering of gifts for the poor brethren, who in this way received them from the hand of God himself. In all these respects, however, the holy ordinance appeared as a sacrifice of the community, and indeed, as it was also named Eucharistia, a sacrifice of thanksgiving. As an act of sacrifice, all the termini technici which the Old Testament applied to sacrifice could be applied to it, and all the wealth of ideas which the Old Testament connects with sacrifice could be transferred to it. One can not say that anything absolutely foreign was therewith introduced into the ordinance, however doubtful it may be whether in the idea of its founder the meal was thought of as a sacrificial meal. But it must have been of the most wide-reaching significance, that a wealth of ideas was in this way connected with the ordinance, which had nothing whatever in common either with the purpose of the meal as a memorial of Christ's death, or with the mysterious symbols of the body and blood of Christ. The result was that the one transaction obtained a double value. At one time it appeared as the Prospora and Thusia of the church, as the pure sacrifice which is presented to the great king by Christians scattered over the world, as they offer to him their prayers and place before him again what he has bestowed in order to receive it back with thanks and praise. But there is no reference in this to the mysterious words, that the bread and wine are the body of Christ broken and the blood of Christ shed for the forgiveness of sin. These words, in and of themselves, must have challenged a special consideration. They called forth the recognition in the sacramental action, or rather in the consecrated elements, of a mysterious communication of God, a gift of salvation, and this is the second aspect. But on a purely spiritual conception of the divine gift of salvation, the blessings mediated through the Holy Supper could only be thought of as spiritual (faith, knowledge, or eternal life), and the consecrated elements could only be recognized as the mysterious vehicles of these blessings. There was yet no reflection on the distinction between symbol and vehicle; the symbol was rather regarded as the vehicle, and vice versa. We shall search in vain for any special relation of the partaking of the consecrated elements to the forgiveness of sin. That was made impossible by the whole current notions of sin and forgiveness. That on which value was put was the strengthening of faith and knowledge, as well as the guarantee of eternal life; and a meal in which there was appropriated not merely common bread and wine, but a Trophe Pneumatike, seemed to have a bearing upon these. There was as yet little reflection; but there can be no doubt that thought here moved in a region bounded, on the one hand, by the intention of doing justice to the wonderful words of institution which had been handed down, and on the other hand, by the fundamental conviction that spiritual things can only be got by means of the Spirit. There was thus attached to the supper the idea of sacrifice, and of a sacred gift guaranteed by God. The two things were held apart, for there is as yet no trace of that conception according to which the body of Christ represented in the bread is the sacrifice offered by the community. But one feels almost called upon here to construe from the premises the later development of the idea, with due regard to the ancient Hellenic ideas of sacrifice.—History of Dogma, vol. 1, pp. 216-213.

The original conception of the relation of the church to salvation or eternal bliss was altered by this development. According to the older notion the church was the sure communion of salvation and of saints, which rested on the forgiveness of sins mediated by baptism, and excluded everything unholly. . . .

But it also follows that the church must possess a means of repairing any injury upon earth, a means of equal value with baptism, namely, a sacrament of the forgiveness of sins.—History of Dogma, vol. 2, pp. 113, 114.

In the third century religious ceremonial had a rapid development, so rapid and extensive that Harnack found it impossible "within the framework of the History of Dogma" to describe it or "to show what a radical alteration took place in men's conceptions with regard to it" (History of Dogma, vol. 2, p. 138). But in speaking of Cyprian's advance beyond the ideas of the second century he says:

No less significant is Cyprian's advance as regards the idea of the sacrifice in public worship, and that in three respects. To begin with, Cyprian was the first to associate the specific offering, i. e., the Lord's supper with the specific priesthood. Secondly, he was the first to designate the passio dominis, nay, the sanguis Christi and the dominica hostia as the object of the eucharistic offering. Thirdly, he expressly represented the celebration of the Lord's supper as an incorporation of the congregation and its individual members with Christ and was the first to bear clear testimony as to the special importance attributed to commemoration of the celebrators ("vivi et defuncti"), though no other can be ascertained than a specially strong intercession. But this is really the essential effect of the sacrifice of the supper as regards the celebrators; for however much the conceptions about this ceremony might be heightened, and whatever additions might be made to its ritual, forgiveness of sins in the strict sense could not be associated with it. Cyprian's statement that every celebration of the Lord's supper is a repetition or imitation of Christ's sacrifice of himself, and that the ceremony has therefore an expiatory value remains a mere assertion, though the Romish Church still continues to repeat this doctrine to the present day. For the idea that partaking of the Lord's supper cleansed from sin like the mysteries of the Great Mother (Magna mater) and Mithras, though naturally suggested by the ceremonial practice, was counteracted by the church principles of penance and by the doctrine of baptism. As a sacrificial rite the supper never became a ceremony equivalent in effect to baptism. But no doubt, as far as the popular conception was concerned, the solemn ritual copied from the ancient mysteries could not but attain an indescribably important significance.—History of Dogma, vol. 2, p. 136.

Despite the fact that the principle of penance as advocated by the early church would tend to destroy the idea that forgiveness of sins was a part or concomitant of the Lord's supper properly administered, yet in the third century and from then on the belief that the rite of the supper was expiatory gained ground. At each celebration of the supper the sacrifice made by Jesus was repeated or imitated. Harnack holds, as seen above, however, that Cyprian's teachings to this effect were mere assertions. By the time of Gregory the Great (550-604 A. D.) Cyprian's ideas were quite predominant,—the priest constantly repeats the sacrifice of Christ, the oblation of his body.

DOCTRINE OF TRANSUBSTANTIATION.

As might be expected, the history of the Middle Ages shows a marked tendency to emphasize the form of religion, the rites, ceremonies, and institutions, rather than the foundation truths.

The Christ of history receded into the background, the Christ of ecclesiastical dogma was more and more obtruded. The mystery of the incarnation and death was contemplated less ethically and spiritually, and more sacramentally and sensibly. There upon the high altar, the divine Savior might be seen reincarnate and crucified.—Adamson, The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, p. 39.

These views held by the people generally, as taught by the priests, finally received the necessary theological indorsement, in order to become established, by Paschasius Radbertus, who declared "without hesitancy that the sacramental body is that which had been born of Mary, and that this is due to a transformation which only leaves the sensuous appearance unchanged." But for all that Radbertus was so dogmatically positive in his assertions concerning the eucharist, contention and discussion continued.

The doctrine of transubstantiation had its opponents as well as protagonists. The conflicts were particularly marked in the eleventh century; and carried over into the twelfth when the beliefs of the church were somewhat uncertain. But in the beginning of the thirteenth century the Fourth Lateran Council (1215) brought an end to the controversy so far as the church was concerned when "the medieval doctrine of the supper was solemnly framed as dogma in the famous confession of faith, which, previous to the Tridentine confession, was the most influential symbol" (Harnack: History of Dogma, vol. 6, p. 53). By this adoption the doctrine of transubstantiation was substantially determined. The action had been forced upon the council by what Harnack calls the "heretical opposition." "This opposition never became silent," says Harnack; "nay, in the circles of church theology itself, there were set forth in later times views of transubstantiation, that literally speaking, had the effect of cancelling it" (Ibid, vol. 6).

Commenting upon this action of the Lateran Council Harnack says:

What is important here is (1) that the doctrine of the Eucharist is immediately attached to the confession of the trinity and incarnation. In this way it is represented even in the symbol as having a most intimate relation to these doctrines, as, indeed, forming with them a unity; i. e., the state of things was now created that was disastrous even for the history of the Reformation: the real presence obtained the same value as the trinity and the two-nature doctrine, so that every one was regarded as an ecclesiastical anarchist who called it in question. This valuation certainly corresponds with the development of the doctrine of the Eucharist, inasmuch as the Eucharist appears as the continuously present, earthly incorporation of the mysteries of the trinity and incarnation, but it robs the gospel of its spiritual character. (2) Transubstantiation was now expressly taught; the words run; "moreover there is one universal church of the faithful, outside of which no one whatever can be saved, in which Jesus Christ is at once priest and sacrifice, whose body and blood are truly (veraciter) contained in the sacrifice of the altar under the appearances of bread and wine, the bread being transubstantiated into the body, and the wine into the blood by divine power, so that for the effecting of the mystery of unity (ad perficiendum mysterium unitatis) we receive of his what he received of ours (here the conjunction with the Christology is manifest). And this sacrament especially (hoc utique sacramentum) no one can administer but the priest who has been duly ordained according to the church authority (secundum claves ecclesiae) which Jesus Christ himself gave to the apostles and their successors." The symbol then immediately continues: "But the sacrament of baptism, which is consecrated in water on invoking the undivided trinity, avails for salvation both to infants and adults, by whomsoever it is duly administered in the forms of the church (in forma ecclesiae). And if after receiving baptism any one shall have fallen into sin, he can always be restored (reparari) through true penitence."—History of Dogma, vol. 6, pp. 53, 54.

It will be noted that while the action of the council settled the doctrine of transubstantiation, yet the idea of forgiveness of sins as a part of the celebration of the supper was not prominent enough in the minds of the members to take the place of the ordinance of penance, as can be clearly inferred from the closing part of the quotation.

Harnack so succinctly sets out the historical development of the eucharist in the times succeeding the Lateran Council of 1215 that we can not do better than quote here at some length from volume 6, pages 233 to 243, with some ellipses:

In the sacrament of the supper and the doctrine regarding it, the church gave expression to everything that it highly prized—its dogma, its mystical relation to Christ, the fellowship of believers, the priest, the sacrifice, the miraculous power which God had given to his church, the satisfaction of the sensuous impulse in piety, etc., only not the faith which seeks for certainty and to which certainty is given. This appears very plainly from the description of the effects of the Eucharist as a sacrament and as a sacrifice. The sacrament was universally revered as the chiefest sacrament, the sun among the sacraments, etc., because here res and sacramentum coincide (the matter becomes itself Christ), because the incarnation and the death on the cross are represented as operative in it, or are repeated in it, and because it embraces the past, the present, and the future. Yet the effects, which are summed up under the term nourishment of the spiritual life of the soul, and are detailed as incorporation into Christ, incorporation into the church, communion of the members with each other, forgiveness of venial sins, perseverance in faith, strengthening of human weakness, refreshment, foretaste and fore-celebration of the heavenly blessedness, anticipation of eternal fellowship with God, etc., do not attain to the effect of the sacrament of penance. Just as little is specific importance attached to the Eucharist as a sacrifice; under this term, indeed, personal merit rather is strongly asserted. In the sacrifice of the mass one testifies his obedience to God; like every sacrifice it is a performance which can claim a reward. . . .

The materia of the sacrament is wheaten bread and wine. The appropriateness of these, and, in particular, of this double form, is dealt with very minutely. The very ancient symbolic idea of the many grains which become one bread also reappears in the Schoolmen. The forma is the words of consecration, which are spoken in the name of Christ (not in the name of the minister). In connection therewith, Bonaventura explains the "hoc" as denoting the bread, Thomas as denoting the accidents of the bread ("hoc sub his specibus contentum," i. e., that which is here presented is not bread, but my body). But the forma is not only an appeal to God (Bonaventura, Duns) that he will accomplish the transubstantiation, but an effectual power, as soon as the priest has the intention to work the mystery.

But the difficult question was now this, How is the transubstantiation to be thought of? Here there was, first, a rejection already by the Lombard of the idea of a new creation of the body of Christ, for Christ's body already exists; but, second, the opinion was also rejected by him that Christ makes the bread and wine into his body, so that they become the sacrament, whether by assumptio or by consubstantiality; there must be believed in rather a conversio of such a kind that the substances of the elements pass into the substances of the body of Christ, while the accidents remain behind without a subject. What happens to the substance of the elements, whether it breaks up and is destroyed, the Lombard declared that he did not know. Alexander of Hales distinctly rejects consubstantiality and destruction, and speaks of a "passing over." But he at once adds that, after the change, the whole Christ is present, inasmuch as the human soul and the deity of Christ always are concomitantly (per concomitantiam) where his flesh is. The continuance of the accidents without a subject he pronounced a miracle. Bonaventura attached weight to the conversio taking place both as regards the materia and the forma of the bread (it would otherwise be imperfect); yet we must not understand by the former the materia prima (matter as the potency [potentia] of all material substances). With regard to the first Eucharist celebration—the treatment of which is the hardest crux of the whole theory—it was universally held, indeed, that Christ partook of himself in eating (as an example, and with a view to the enjoyment of love, not with a view to being perfected), but while Hales thought that Christ partook then already of his glorified body, Bonaventura taught (Thomas following him) that Christ partook of his mortal body, which, however, as Eucharistic was already present "impassibiliter" (in impassible form). All of them thought of the parallels in creation and incarnation, and sought to explain the mystery from these. Thomas now submitted to a final treatment the accidents, which, as the subject is wanting to them after the conversio, are maintained in existence by God as the first cause (causa prima). But at the same time, following Bonaventura, he laid the foundation for an extremely complicated doctrine of the form of all matter, which was afterwards spun out by Duns and the Nominalists. As the bread, that is to say, is changed as regards the material and the form, both changes must be demonstrated in the transubstantiated result. But as the soul of Christ (form) only appears present concomitantly (per concomitantiam), the body of Christ must have a form for itself. Thus Thomas is led to the idea of a "form of corporeity" (forma corporeitatis), which is identical neither with the soul nor with the outer shape, but appears as the ground of the qualities of the body. Further, in accordance with this, Thomas conceives of the conversio as a passing over in the strict sense of the term (no destruction=annihilatio of the elements). The miracle is identical with a miracle of creation in so far as the case of both the two states are not united by a common subject (substance); for the continued existence of the accidents is no real bond. Duns pursued this line further, and came to the adoption of a plurality of forms in matter. He required this assumption, as he assailed Saint Thomas with reflections arising from the hypothesis, that the Eucharist was conceivably celebrated during the time when Christ lay in the grave. The Thomist doctrine was not framed to meet this case, as it assumed a forma substantialis for the living body. Hence, according to Thomas, only an imperfect transubstantiation would then have taken place—that is, a transubstantiation only into the material of the dead body. Duns himself appealed more confidently to the divine omnipotence, placed in the foreground the general possibility that God can transform everything (even the material into the spiritual, and vice versa), affirmed the existence of a matter without quality which is capable of everything, and came very close to the view, that in transubstantiation one substance is annihilated and another is introduced. Above all, however, his thesis, that God himself, as if on the ground of a contract, always works the conversio, so that the words of consecration only form the occasion, influenced all the Nominalists afterwards. But by a logical process there then followed also upon this view a modification of the way of understanding transubstantiation, in the direction of impanation and consubstantiality. For it became natural to assume, that if the divine working only accompanies the words of the priest (that is, the forma sacramenti), it only accompanies, also, the elements (the materia; a "moral" conjunction by the free will of Christ). This doctrine was first suggested as possible, and then asserted as possible. But when once the idea of the conversio was separated by a logical distinction into two acts—into annihilation, and entrance of the body of Christ into the place of the annihilated subject—the first act could also drop out. The miracle only becomes the greater when substance stands side by side with substance. At the same time the signal was now given for investigations into space in its relation to substance, investigations which, from the time of Scotus onwards, did not continue without fruit for the doctrine of space. Human thought does not advance without receiving a determining impulse from the practical sphere: from the doctrine of God there grew up the doctrines of thought and of will; from the doctrine of the trinity, the doctrine of the kosmos; from the doctrine of the Lord's supper, the doctrine of space. If the question as to the relation of the body of Christ to the elements already led to inquiries into space, still greater was the impulse in that direction as soon as the question arose as to how the eucharistic body is related to the glorified body of Christ in heaven. And again, as the body as a whole appears at the same time in each of the independent particles of the consecrated bread, a space-less presence had necessarily to be taught. This Thomas began to do; but it was only the Nominalists who treated the question as virtuosi (especially Occam), though they did not come definitely to the doctrine of the ubiquity of the body of Christ. On the other hand, it was they, especially John of Paris and Occam, who anticipated the Lutheran doctrine of the real presence in the bread. An energetic opponent of the doctrine of transubstantiation was Wyclif (but even he did not get clearly beyond impanation, and if he was incensed by the idolatry that was practiced with the host, yet it was by the grounds of reason [the absurdity of accidents without substance] that he was moved to opposition). By him not a few (but not Huss) were constrained to renounce the monstrous doctrine, and in the fifteenth century the opposition to it is met with not infrequently. Yet it remained the reigning view; the hostility of declared heretics could only be in its favor.

The consequences of the transubstantiation doctrine were manifold, and of radical importance; the following may be mentioned:

- (1) The discontinuance of child communion.
- (2) The augmentation of the dignity of the priests, by whom daily Christ was magically produced and offered up.
- (3) The withholding of the cup. From the time of the Lombard it was a settled belief that the whole Christ is contained in each species, and that meant, too (according to the doctrine developed especially by Thomas), Christ concomitantly (per concomitantiam) in his body and soul as well as in his divinity. But that being so, it was permissible, safer indeed (that the wine might not be spilt, and the sacrament thereby profaned), and, with a view to increasing the dignity of the priest, "conventiens," that the layman should receive only in the form of the bread (sub specie panis), while the priest drank the cup in the name of all. At Constance this became fixed.

(4) The adoration of the elevated host (elevation is represented as having been already adopted in opposition to Berengar); the procession of the host, and the feast of Corpus Christi (1264. 1311): for the body of Christ is, of course, not present merely at the moment of enjoyment but when once produced by consecration, remains until the accidents are dissolved. Against this idolatry there arose in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries much opposition, which, however, continued to be lacking in vigor.

It was already pointed out above that as regards the idea of the Eucharist as a sacrifice, the Lombard was still influenced by the old ecclesiastical motive of recordatio (remembrance). But from ecclesiastical antiquity there was certainly taken over also the idea of the repetition of the sacrificial death of Christ (Gregory I), and on the basis of the doctrine of transubstantiation this idea now necessarily became firmly established. The Roman Canon of the Mass, which did not originally contain the idea of the bloodless repetition of the death of Christ, and still bears traces to-day of not having contained it, has in its most recent portions the new idea. At the Lateran Council in 1215 the idea is presupposed, and brief note is taken of it, and the Schoolmen, although they do not here give elaborated doctrines, have no other thought than that the priest offers the body of the Lord. The Eucharist as a sacrifice, as it formed the central part of divine service, was for the people much more important than the sacrament. Although, in strict theory, there were connected with it only slender results (see above), yet misdirected piety made this observance entirely its own, and saw in it its real defense in life and in death. The mischief of low masses and masses for souls was as much the consequence of violent importunity on the part of the laity for as many masses as possible, as of priestly self-importance; for in the mass the priest, who is here not a minister but an originator (autor), appears in a very real sense as the mediator between God and men, and as priest of the body of Christ (sacerdos corporis Christi), his dignity comes most distinctly to view. The mass was assailed as unbiblical by Wyclif. On the part of others also opposition arose in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries against the low masses and masses for souls, which, however, was directed, as a rule, only against the abuse (abusus).

We make this lengthy quotation to show what straits the defenders of the doctrine of transubstantiation were put to to defend their ideas, and the degree of refinement to which the arguments were carried. But we wish to present one more quotation from Harnack on the Lateran Council, when we will pass from this phase of the historical development. In volume 7, pages 47, 48, in chapter on Codification of Medieval Doctrines, he says:

In dealing with the Eucharist (Session XIII) the council was not satisfied with canons, but rose to a decree. . . . In defiance of history it is asserted (c. 1.) that it has always been unanimously confessed by all the fathers that the Godman is present "truly, really, and substantially in this sacrament under the form of things sensible." In spite of imposing language about it, the effect of the sacrament is really restricted to deliverance from daily (venial) sins and protection against mortal sins (c.2). Then it is said (c.3) the old definition of the sacrament in its entirety being adopted: "it is indeed common to the most holy Eucharist with the other sacraments that it is the symbol of a sacred thing and the visible form of invisible grace; but there is this point of preeminence and distinctiveness found in it, that the other sacraments only have power to sanctify when some one uses them, while in the Eucharist the sacrament is itself the author of sanctity previous to the use." It had always (it was asserted) been the Catholic faith that the God-man is present immediately after consecration, and wholly present, too, under both forms, in his godhead, body and soul; a more precise definition of this is then given—again as describing the faith that had always prevailed in the church: "that by the consecration of bread and wine a conversion takes place of the entire substance of the bread into the substance of the body of Christ our Lord, and of the entire substance of the wine into the substance of his blood. Which conversion is fittingly and properly designated by the Holy Catholic Church transubstantiation.

MY MODEL PREACHER.

The question of preaching the word of the Lord is one over which there is much controversy at the present time. There are hundreds of Christian organizations claiming that they are preaching his pure word and that they are doing his work. We question them here, and will strive to point out to them the conditions under which they would be enabled to preach the word of God and perform the holy ordinances attached thereto.

In the first place we read: "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron."—Hebrews 5: 4. This verse is short but it goes a very long way. It indicates to us that if God desires us to work in his vineyard we will be called by him in exactly the same way as Aaron was.

"But," we are reminded by these so-called preachers, "we have been called of God and we feel that he does desire us to work in his vineyard." Well, we will put them to the test. In the first place, he that is sent of God will speak the word of God. Are all these so-called preachers of the present time preaching the word of God in fullness? We can say no with emphasis, because there would not be the controversy that there is, if every man were a "model preacher."

God would not send men out into his fields of labor and instruct them to preach one against another. For instance, if I owned a large business concern in Sydney and sent six travelers out to labor for me, do you not think I would be very inconsistent if I were to inculcate in the minds of these men ideas that would induce them to work one against the other? Would I not be a very poor business man if I did? When Jesus Christ was here among men, he called all his disciples together and instructed them, saying: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." I have heard this text many times quoted with the latter part unsaid. Is not this a proof that the men are not preaching the things God would have them preach? They are founded upon the sands of the seashore; when the winds of adversity blow against them, great is their fall.

Now, my "model preacher" is a man who has been called of God as was Aaron, and such being the case, he will speak the words of God with power and much assurance. He will preach precisely only that which was taught by Christ and his apostles when here upon earth. There are many men to-day who are well educated and who are orators in every sense of the term, but what profit is this to them if they are not using their talents in the right direction? My "model preacher" is also a man who is humble, meek, and charitable, not standing before the public gaze for the benefits he is going to receive therefrom, nor for the praise he is undeserving of; but giving God the credit that is due to him, for if we stand up to expound his word and have been called by him, as I have endeavored to show, the Lord will speak through us and in all we will say, "Not my will, but thine be done, O Lord."

To be able to preach the word as God would have us do would necessitate having the gospel plan at our "finger ends," as the saying goes. This requires study, and until we study sufficiently to be able to preach God's word, he will not call us into his vineyard. Hyrum Smith at one time denied that he might be able to preach, but the Lord interceded and informed him of the necessity of study on his part, telling him to investigate into all the truths of the gospel and study to make himself an approved workman. We find that when Hyrum Smith did so, he was soon afterward called to office.

The Lord will bring all things to our remembrance, but this means that we must study and educate ourselves in order to have this pleasing principle brought to bear upon us.

Now I will give a few good qualities that my model preacher would possess: He would be loving, kind, humble in all he says or does, and take as his example the Lord Jesus Christ (for we know that except we be humble it will be impossible for the Lord to speak through us), unprejudiced in his opinions, and always willing to give a man a fair hearing. There are many well-known "popular" ministers of to-day who, when one attempts to show them where they are wrong, will not listen. Now this is wrong, and I feel sure that the Lord is displeased with them, for we notice that when Christ was here among men he was always willing to answer questions that were asked of him. My "model preacher" would also have plenty of backbone, or "grit," as it is commonly called, not afraid of the world and its environments, not afraid of what will be said about him, always ready to speak a word for the Master wherever he may be.

He should be God-fearing and honest, always ready to plant in the minds of the people the desire to love God and serve him continually. He should be prayerful, and being so he will be inspired of God to be a shining light for him, and will be an example to the world as a man who reveres God, a man who trusts God, a man who loves God with all his might, mind, and strength; a man who is always willing to say, Lord I will do what you want me to do. If a man possesses these gifts, he indeed is entitled to be called a "model preacher," because he is a pattern to all the world around him.

Let us each and all strive to possess these qualities, and the Lord will be pleased with us and will in his own due time, if it be his will, call us to labor in his vineyard.

HINTS ON CHURCH BEHAVIOR.

In our zeal to interpret, have we left demonstration in the rear? If so, let us make a halt. Lip service alone is an abomination. Jesus said so. To whom much is given from him much is required. We may have been given the key to the Scriptures in these last days, but God did not expect us to abuse it. I am convinced that we have been intrusted with the fullness of the gospel. Shall we be prepared to make a full report? What lack I yet? If we need development on one thing more than another it is, to my mind, church behavior, reverence.

We visit other churches and all agree that something is sadly lacking in the sermons. What is it? The message and the power! Was there anything about that service that you admired? Be fair, men. If they are preeminent in anything, acknowledge it! In a little church (maybe more than one) the following instructions hang, and they are complied with to the extent that it is very noticeable.

On our way to church: Be thoughtful and talk little. Speak not of others' faults; you have your own, for which you are about to ask forgiveness.

Arriving at church: Go in; do not hang about the outside; the place is holy.

In church: Engage the mind in humble prayer. Fasten yourself firmly on the service and join in all the responses heartily. God hates vain and idle thoughts.

After church: Leave reverently, not lingering to giggle and gossip and visit in the aisles. It is God's house, even after the benediction is pronounced and the service over.

On your way home: Remember where you have been and what you have been doing—and try to be a better man.

O. R. MILLER.

WHO THEN MAY BE SAVED?

Salvation! let the echo fly
The spacious earth around;
While all the armies of our God

Conspire to raise the sound,
Glory, honor, praise, and power,
Be unto the Lamb for ever.
Hallelujah! hallelujah!
Praise ye the Lord.

Salvation is that of which we all stand in need. It is an universal want. It was to make this salvation possible that Christ came to earth. The angel declared, "He shall save his people from their sins," (Matthew 1: 21).

There is no doubt but that it is the will of God that all men should be saved. It remains therefore with man to accept this great salvation (Hebrews 2: 3). "Salvation belongeth unto the Lord" (Psalm 3: 8). He offers it as a gift to man; no man can possibly receive it except as a gift. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Romans 6: 23.

The Psalmist says, "I will rejoice in thy salvation" (Psalm 9: 14). Again, "Show me thy ways, O Lord; teach me thy paths. Lead me in thy truth, and teach me; for thou art the God of my salvation."—Psalm 25: 4, 5.

This teaches us that we are to walk in the ways of the Lord and seek a knowledge of his truth. We are to be taught of him. This shows to us the necessity of a church in which God's people can all hold membership, and receive instruction.

The same author says, "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?"—Psalm 27: 1.

Christ says, "I am come a light unto the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness."—John 12: 46. And again, "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."—John 8: 12.

Isaiah says,

Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust and not be afraid: for the Lord Jehovah is my strength, and my song; he also is become my salvation. Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation.—Isaiah 12: 2, 3.

This "water out of the wells of salvation" is free to all. We are invited to partake freely of it. Hear the invitation:

Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David. Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people.—Isaiah 55: 1-4.

In talking with the woman of Samaria, Jesus said: said:

If thou knewest the gift of God . . . thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water. . . . Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life.—John 4: 10-14.

In Revelation 22: 17 we read:

And the Spirit and the bride (church) say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

A more liberal invitation can not be given. The Spirit and the bride (church) both say, Come. And he that heareth is to say, Come. And he that is athirst is to come. And whosoever will, is to take of the water of life freely. The way of salvation, therefore, is open. The invitation is given. It remains for man to accept, or to neglect this great salvation.

We should mark well the testimony of God's prophets, for they are sent to instruct us in the way of life. The Psalmist says:

Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace. But the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off. But the salvation of the righteous is of the Lord: he is their strength in the time of trouble. And the Lord shall help them, and deliver them: he shall deliver them from the wicked, and save them, because they trust in him.—Psalm 37: 37-40.

Again, he breaks forth into song, and says:

O sing unto the Lord a new song: sing unto the Lord, all the earth. Sing unto the Lord, bless his name; show forth his salvation from day to day. Declare his glory among the heathen, his wonders and beauty among all people. . . . Honor and majesty are before him: strength and beauty are in his sanctuary. Give unto the Lord, O ye kindreds of the people, give unto the Lord glory and strength. Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name: bring an offering, and come into his courts. O worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness: fear before him, all the earth. . . . For he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth: he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth.—Psalm 96.

Again he says, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?" (Psalm 116: 12). He answers his question:

I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.—Psalm 116: 13-15.

The righteous man can say with Isaiah:

I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.—Isaiah 61: 10.

Of General Interest

THE HISTORY WE WANT TO READ.

Peace is the child of war. The present generation is enjoying, throughout the most highly civilized portion of the earth, a period of quiet and peace such as is perhaps unprecedented in the history of the world. Not that all war has ceased—a look at the newspapers is enough to convince us of the contrary—but such wars as have been waged within the last forty years or so have not—in the Western World at least—drawn flame and sword through our very hearths and homes, have not even disturbed industrial and mercantile pursuits in any very distressing measure: The arts of peace have continued comparatively undisturbed.

Thus a generation has sprung up for whom war and military pursuits are of academic rather than of vital interest. But the writing and teaching of history has lagged behind the general spirit of our time. The scholastic historian is often still content to recount for us the catastrophes and intrigues which convulsed the nations in their struggle for light and life. For the truly essential factors of human life—industry, commerce, economic conditions, science and art—these “historians” have at most a passing reference here and there. But, it may be urged, such topics are reserved for specialists, for works on the history of industry, art, science, and so forth. The retort is: Then the history of wars belongs to the specialist in military science. Surely his field is more remote from general interests, at the present day, than that of the manufacturer and merchant. If, therefore, the general history written and taught for the benefit of the general public, is to borrow (as it must) from special fields, surely it is more natural that it should select chapters from the history of science, art, and political economy, than from the records of war.

We may compare the wars through which a nation passes in the course of its evolution, to the sicknesses with which an individual battles on his way through life. What would we say of the author who should write the biography of some great man, and content himself with an account of his struggles with the measles, croup, and other ailments which he successfully encountered, until at last the grim enemy won his accustomed victory? Such an account might indeed be of interest to a specialist—to the medical practitioner. To any other person it would appear nauseating. But this is precisely what the average historian does in relating the life history of nations. One would almost think that war was the chief end of human existence.

And there are so many things which we, the reading public in the twentieth century, would like to know from the historian. When did men begin to mine coal? When and how did money come into general use? How much gold has been in circulation in the several civilized countries of the past, and how have the figures changed, and what are they now? To-day the population of the United States is about ninety-one million souls, that of Germany sixty-five millions, of the British Isles forty-five millions, of France thirty-nine millions. But how did they stand relatively ten, twenty, thirty years ago? Who would say that this is a matter of indifference to the nations concerned?

But above all, let not history be a mere narrative, a collection of pretty stories and romantic adventures—though romance has its place in history—but let us have a sober account of the history of mankind, which is nothing more nor less than a natural phenomenon. Let not history be presented as a series of casually disconnected events, determined by the caprice of favored individuals, but as an orderly sequence of steps in a process of evolution governed by the inexorable laws of nature.—Scientific American, August 16, 1913.

The Staff

EDITED BY AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

New Anthem Publication.

We are pleased to announce that the new anthem publication is now ready for distribution. This edition will contain twenty anthems particularly suited to the peculiarities of our endeavor. This is the selection that will be used at our next General Conference in Independence. Those who make a study of this selection have the privilege of membership in the conference choir. The price of these books this year will be seventy-five cents, and by special arrangement with the publishers, postage on single copies and express on quantity orders will be prepaid at their expense, thus eliminating confusion and establishing a uniform as well as a reasonable price, especially for the amount and character of the music selected. Money order or check should be sent in payment of books as we can not be responsible for money lost in the mails. In anticipation of a large demand we are trying to cover our needs by ordering one large edition this year, which has enabled us to dispose of them at this price.

Surely every choir in the country should respond this year and without urging join the movement that has caused such favorable comment by all who have witnessed the unusual response of the last year. Our concentrated endeavors eventually mean a higher class of music; uniform work; an inspiration to all; a hope of producing composers as well as great performers; a rounding up of musicians into an unbroken body of consecrated workers—music that will startle the world because of its tremendous spiritual force in the rendering.

Do not wait to hear this but work to be a part of it. Let us hear from you now—not to-morrow. Do you know that the Lord is with us?

Address your orders to Albert N. Hoxie, jr., 3119 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Musical Notes.

BY ALBERT N. HOXIE, JR.

"What a few singers this world would have the joy of listening to if God saw fit to deprive them of the talent they naturally possess because sufficient tribute has not been paid to him who bestows all gifts. I know many consecrated souls who would sacrifice much to have the gift of song just for the privilege of rendering this pleasant service unto God. Perhaps in the next era of existence they who have not rendered tribute will find themselves deprived of the privilege of joining with the angelic hosts of singers who continually chant his praises. Use your gifts in the service of God, and you will touch the hidden spring that will usher you into the palace of happiness, within the walls of which the joy of living is found."—Der Spielmann.

One Sunday afternoon in a musical town in the State of Iowa, I listened to a young man sing the solo part of a big oratorio. His splendid efforts thrilled the audience, and he was referred to often as one of the coming singers. I had the pleasure of meeting him some time after the concert, and I was surprised to learn that his original ambition was to become a great pianist. He worked so hard that his fingers became partially paralyzed, and his hopes of attaining to the rank of the artist were despaired of. He started to study vocal, not because he had a good voice, but for the mere sake of having a knowledge of the art of singing in order to teach, music being his one ambition. With study and application his voice developed beyond his fondest expectations, and to-day he has a splendid position in a well-known college and is a soloist of enviable reputation. There are many who surpass us in life who would be virtuosos—great leaders—wonderful performers—if through study and application they would fan the little flame of genius into a living fire. Have you not some talent stored away that you have not dug deep enough to find; and is it not time to look around a bit and get busy in its development? It's hard work, but the recompense is sure.

Announcement of the publication of our yearly outline of study will be found in this issue of the staff. I would appreciate an early response from every choir and chorister in the country. In addition to the book of anthems we are to produce at General Conference the oratorio, "The Holy City," by Gaul, universally known and sung everywhere by choirs and chorus organizations. Choirs of sufficient size to take up the study of this oratorio can obtain copies of same from the writer at fifty cents each, a rate far cheaper than that allowed by any music house in the country, and procurable only at this price because I have contracted for a large quantity, in anticipation of a general demand.

Philadelphia Choir.

The Philadelphia choir claims ownership of the general chorister, and, as is eminently fitting, intends to assume its proper place as the leading local choir of the church. We have been unselfishly sharing our chorister with the rest of the church, but his return to Philadelphia, July 20, marks an era in our choir history; since that time we have been having music that has carried everything before it, and has brought to the choir repeated and well-earned commendation.

All the singers have been interested in the work and have been organized into an earnest, loyal band of tireless workers, always ready to answer to the call of their leaders, and do something for the cause.

At least three definite results are manifested as an outgrowth of this spirit: On the one hand the pastor has repeatedly told us of the inspiration he and many others received from the singing; on the other, it has served to increase the attendance and the interest of the Saints and their neighbors; and, finally, it has brought an inexpressible amount of pleasure and interest to those in the choir. The Lord has been with us in the work here. We thank him for the fruit our effort has borne, and for the opportunity he has given us to make the effort for him.

From Philadelphia the enthusiasm has spread throughout the district, and the general chorister is now contemplating the formation of a district choir. On the Saturday preceding Labor Day, after incessant toil and rehearsal, for the chorister is an insistent taskmaster, the choir, forty strong, traveled to the district convention at Ells Mills, where they were joined by the local singers and those from Brooklyn. Then ensued a three-day song feast that stands vividly forth as the great feature of the convention, and that notwithstanding the splendid convention session of institute work and preaching services.

As a result of the success achieved there, arrangements have been made to rehearse the several local choirs and then to mass them at the different locals for a general musical convention and service of song.

And so, for us here, the last three months have been a round of work and joy—the joy of service, a joy that more than recompenses us for the work incurred. Every rehearsal has brought an added pleasure. The choir still remembers the rehearsal on board the Sunrise, a forty-seven foot auxiliary sloop, and how they steamed down the Delaware through that beautiful, calm, moonlit night, with the message of peace, contentment and joy. The choir still recalls with joy the rehearsal at the newly opened home of the chorister, the most enjoyable, pleasurable rehearsal imaginable. And, best of all, back of it all, the choir remembers the purpose of it all, the good it can accomplish in the work of Christ, the pleasure these songs may bring to others; and they make an extra effort for the cause.

And so we are going to continue our effort, for we claim ownership of the general chorister, and are going to work for our proper place among the choirs of the church.

Our Dress.

VANSCOY, SASKATCHEWAN, August 14, 1913.

Dear Sisters of the Church: I have read with increasing interest the articles on dress, but I feel as if any appeal from the women of our church to any of the societies of the world would not be met with approval, as we are not popular enough for that. I believe our only hope of bettering conditions among our own church members is in calling their attention more and more to the word of God.

If we who "are called to be saints" can not bring ourselves to apply the law of Christ in our manner and method of dress, how can we expect nonmembers to care about it? This is a matter that has been sadly neglected by our people, simply because we dreaded to make ourselves noticeably different from the prevailing styles. Some of us have said, "Oh, the Lord does not care how we dress, if only we are not proud in our hearts." Some say, "Oh, the Lord does not want us to attract attention by dressing differently from others." Or, "We must not dress too plainly. You know we are allowed to adorn our clothing if it is the work of our own hands."

So we appoint experts at embroidery, or lace making, or other forms of ornamentation, to teach our girls, so they may adorn their own clothing by the work of their own hands. All this looks nice, and therein we find plenty of excuses. Then the sister who has no time or inclination for such work says, "I must be in style as well as the rest." So she searches the catalogues or the bargain counters and find such beautiful waists with allover open embroidery work, so reasonable in price, so much open work, too, that it is scarcely a covering but serves well to show the colored ribbon ties underneath.

The searcher finds, too, any amount of beautifully ornamented lingerie, lace, insertion, embroidery, tucks, ruffles, fluting, etc., and all so cheap that it would never pay one to make it with her own hands. Besides, if she works and earns the money to buy it, is not that the work of her own hands? So reasoning, the command, "Let all thy garments be plain," is lost sight of entirely and only the latter clause, "and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands," is remembered.

So we buy or make the nice, beautiful things and learn to love the things of the world so much that we become the slaves of fashion and think we must dress as others do, no matter how absurd the style.

It is my belief that the Woman's Auxiliary should take up this matter, as it applies mostly to women. The men do come nearer the law in plain dressing, for that is the style; and our missionaries usually avoid the subject for fear of offending the sisters or from a feeling that the subject is beneath their notice.

The older women who have made a study of this subject in the past are not so easily influenced by the foolish styles. The girls say, "Oh, they are only old folks. We don't want to dress as they do." But if all of us, in the past, had studied this question from the standpoint of God's word, and had trained our children to care more for his word than for the style, we would not now be so troubled over the influence of the extreme styles of dress now prevalent.

If the Saints are ever to become the salt of the earth or a light to the world, it will be by a strict adherence to the word of God. The Lord has said to this generation: "And again thou shalt not be proud in thy heart; let thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands." He does not say there shall be much beauty, but, "Let the beauty be the beauty of the work of thine own hands," and, "Let all thy garments be plain."

There must be some connection between pride and dress or both would not be included in one sentence. If there be no pride in our hearts we will wish to do as God commands. We all have a love for the beautiful, and I have often wished it were right to adorn our garments; but if clothes that are adorned with unnecessary trimming are plain, then surely garments made without any adornment are plain, too, and I fail to see why God should give a commandment that we could not break.

I heard one sister say, "I don't see anything wrong in trimming our hats with a plain plume, or plain flowers, or a lot of plain ribbon." By the same reasoning there could be nothing wrong in trimming any of our clothes with plain embroidery, or lace, or silk braid, or any other ornamentation.

How is it, sisters? Does the command to dress plainly mean anything at all? If so, what does it mean? Is there any danger of our breaking that command? If so, where is the danger? In what way can we break it? Does it call for a sacrifice on our part, that we may prevent pride from making inroads in our midst? If so, where is the sacrifice?

It looks to me as if teachers should be appointed to teach our girls to do their own sewing, but teach them to "let all their garments be plain." As our advisory board says, "We do not wish to make a sweeping denouncement of the present styles of dress," for many of the styles are plain, neat, economical and commendable; but does our love for God and his requirements lead us to choose these or do we search for the things that are plain but prettier in our eyes?

Where is the sacrifice we are willing to make in accordance with God's word and thus save a little (perhaps much) to help tide over the financial crisis confronting the church, and the whole world for that matter? How many times we are warned in God's word against pride! How many times does the Book of Mormon record that when the people began to depart from the Lord, they were lifted up in the pride of their hearts unto the wearing of silks and fine apparel! Shall it ever be so said of us?

In the second book of Nephi, chapter twelve, speaking of our own day, we read: "Because of pride . . . their churches have become corrupted; and their churches are lifted up; because of pride they are puffed up. They rob the poor, because of their fine sanctuaries; they rob the poor because of their fine clothing;" etc. Shall we rob the poor (it may be the families of missionaries or others) because it takes every cent we can possibly spare to dress ourselves, and then we can not dress as we would wish to, and there is nothing left for the church?

Some will say, "Oh, she is only an old woman. You could not expect anything else of her." But, dear sisters, I am referring you to the word of the Lord, and I can bear my testimony to the truth that a belief in plain dressing has been a blessing to me in my younger days; for it kept me from pride and helped me over many a hard place in life, when, with a large family and all the work to do myself, I was able to do the necessary work and find some time to read the church literature while I rested. Otherwise, all my spare time might have been employed in the work of ornamentation; for I loved that kind of work, but gave it up because the Lord said, "Let all thy garments be plain."

Prayer Union.

SUBJECT FOR THE FOURTH THURSDAY IN OCTOBER.

For our Sunday schools, Zion's Religio, and all the auxiliary departments of the church; also for the Prayer Union, that each may help to bring about the exalted condition of purity and righteousness that God demands and expects of his people—the oneness in heart and purpose for which Christ prayed.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

ERIE BEACH, October 3, 1913.

To the Prayer Union: We are writing to ask all the Saints who will to fast on Sunday, October 12, for my wife, Mrs. Daisy Wood, who is in the hospital for the insane at London. She is out of her mind and needs help.

Your brother,

BENJAMIN H. WOOD.

BLenheim, ONTARIO, R. F. D. 3.

OLTON, TEXAS, September 30, 1913.

Dear Sister in Christ: I ask the Prayer Union to intercede for a very dear friend, that the Lord may heal her of what she fears is a cancer on her back.

She is the mother of eight children, and her desire is that the good Lord may spare her life to raise her children. She is a strong believer in divine healing, although not a member of our church. She has taken up treatment from Brother

Joseph Luff, and also desires the Prayer Union to ask our heavenly Father, in his infinite mercy, to heal her and make her whole. Yet she says, his will and not hers, be done.

Her name is Mertly Daugherty. May God grant this dear woman's prayer is my wish. Yours in the one faith,

EMMA SCHREIER.

SMEED TERRACE, BAYSWATER, WESTERN AUSTRALIA,

August 23, 1913.

Dear Sister Salyards: Reading in the church papers that the Prayer Union has been organized again, we humbly ask that our daughter, aged ten years, who is sorely afflicted with epileptic fits, may be remembered before the throne of grace, that it may be God's will to restore her to health, both of body and mind, as the continued affliction is beginning to affect her mentally.

From time to time the brethren have fasted and prayed in her behalf, but she only received temporary relief. Praying that it may be the Lord's will to grant the blessing,

Yours in bonds,

E. ROBINSON.

HAZAEI, OHIO, September 28, 1913.

Dear Sisters of the Prayer Union: Please unite in prayer for my daughter, Carrie E. Henthorn, of Sistersville, West Virginia, that the Lord may deliver her from her sorely tried and afflicted condition.

Your sister,

MARY ANDERSON.

RUSHVILLE, ILLINOIS.

Will the Prayer Union please remember in prayer Metta Morrell, for she is very sick with fever and rheumatism. There are no elders here whom we can get to administer to her, and it is her request that you remember her.

Pray for us all here; for we feel forsaken.

W. J. CURRY.

CARSON CITY, NEVADA, October 1, 1913.

To the Prayer Union: I write to ask for the prayers of all the Saints in behalf of my dear mother, Sister Annie Ridler, who is suffering with ulceration of the ear. I do pray that it may be the Lord's will to heal her and restore her to health.

This is the earnest prayer of her daughter,

511 MINNESOTA STREET.

LIZZIE TWADDLE.

We are touched by these sad appeals for sympathy and for our united supplication to Him who holds life and health in his hands to bestow as seemeth him good. May those who read be moved to respond to the call of the afflicted, and may our heavenly Father send his blessings gently down upon his needy children.

Letter Department

MOUNTAINVILLE, MAINE, September, 1913.

Editors Herald: We are glad to be able to truthfully say that we are still in the faith; still actively engaged in the grand and glorious gospel work, and intend, with all the power of body and mind, to continue therein until the Father sees fit to call us hence.

To be sure, we meet many discouragements daily, plenty of trials and obstacles, which often seem impossible to overcome; but, as a Saint, we expect and look for such, and rejoice in the strength we gain when we have met and conquered them. I rejoice that there is an evil power or evil environment with which God's people must come in contact, for only in that way can we become strong and encouraged to continue in the warfare.

The branch at this place is still alive, and we are hopeful for better results in the future than in the past. Last Sunday, our regular sacrament service, we noticed a better attendance and a better spirit manifested than for a long time. Every Saint in the house partook of the emblems. May we indeed heed the injunction to "come up higher," thus being in a condition where our dear Father can and will work with and through us for the upbuilding of his work and the accomplishing of his holy purposes in the earth.

Our district conference, held with the Little Deer Isle Saints, August 30 and 31, was a success in every way. There was a fair attendance and a fine spirit throughout the services. We had with us of the missionary force, Elders Paul M. Hanson, J. C. Foss, R. W. Farrell, and J. F. Sheehy. We were pleased to see Brother Foss again, after an absence of several years.

Ever praying for the welfare of God's people and the final triumph of Zion, I remain,

Your brother in the conflict,

WALLACE A. SMALL.

HARMON, OKLAHOMA.

Editors Herald: We have located near Harmon, Ellis County, Oklahoma, and would like to know if there are any Saints around here. We have just moved here and are not much acquainted. If any of the ministers who see this will call on us we would be very much pleased. I do not know whether there would be any opening for them to preach or not.

Your brother,

G. L. SWEET.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: Bishop R. May, of London, England, has submitted for the readers of the HERALD the following letter, showing the disposition of the Saints in that country touching the church debt, and the way they feel toward the work. It is certainly a good reflection of the Spirit of the Master in directing his children of the Manchester Branch.

E. L. KELLEY.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, September 16, 1913.

Dear Brother May: I herewith inclose a money order for thirty-five shillings, my family subscription toward helping clear off general church indebtedness. There are seven of us, myself, wife, and five children, at five shillings each, which of course amounts to thirty-five shillings. There is no collector appointed in our branch up to this time of writing, for the reason that the branch president was away last Sunday fulfilling his plan appointment. But he will be in his place on Sunday next, all being well, and will then appoint some one.

My reason for not waiting till the appointment of a collector was that having that amount by me it would be wise to get it placed in your possession at once; because not being a moneyed man something might happen between now and then (the appointment of a collector) to cause me to lay that money out in something else. A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush; and with me the church has always first turn.

I have always managed throughout my life to owe no man anything, so far as money is concerned. Anything my family or I are in need of, whether it be in the way of clothing or house furniture, or any other thing, has to stand over till I can pay the money down. I don't say this in the way of boasting; but since the appeal has been made from the church, I feel that I am in debt, for the church debt is my debt, and I hurry up to get out.

I have every confidence in the Bishopric and all in authority, when they are doing that which is right, and believe in my heart that the Bishopric have done a wise thing in purchasing land, etc., before it got out of our reach. I am only sorry I can not help further. However, before the end of the year I will try and forward you another ten shillings to help in cases where some of the Saints are unable to pay the five shillings. We have many good people who are not able to pay their share; but God will bless them just the same when he knows how willingly and cheerfully they would subscribe, if able.

Hoping you and Sister May are well, I am,
Yours in gospel bonds,

W. MADDOCK.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, September 15, 1913.

Editors Herald: Reading a HERALD of recent date and seeing so much about the Lord blessing his children, and being reminded how much is in-store for men and women, more especially for those who have entered into covenant relationship with God, I was impressed anew with the fact that all these blessings are promised on conditions.

We find in Doctrine and Covenants 86 that we may receive bodily strength on the conditions laid down therein, and on no other condition is this promise made. Not only are we to receive blessings here, but we will have joy, yes, joy unspeakable, in this life and a far greater hope in the life to come by doing the things our allwise Creator would have us do.

But should we have in view as our prime object the reward at the end of the race? Or, should we not do good and obey because it is just and right that we should do so?

Having had some personal experience along these lines, I can speak from such. How can we as God's children live in violation of his laws and words of wisdom, "seeing he knows best," and then call for his servants, the elders, to lay their hands upon our heads, and ask God to remove what we have brought upon ourselves by not complying with his will and wishes?
Your unworthy brother,

A. A. GAYLORD.

PARIS, TEXAS, September 15, 1913.

Editors Herald: It is with love and best wishes and a hope that all may share in the triumphs of Zion that I write these lines. Though the night is long and dreary and our trials in life are many, we never waver in the hope we have for Zion. The millennial day soon shall dawn, and if faithful to the covenant we have made, our trials and troubles shall be turned into joy and gladness. One sorrow now will be a thousand joys then, and the face now wet with tears and grief, or expressionless in death, shall then bloom with peace and life for ever.

Oh, dear Saints, let each of us prepare for that great day. Let us place ourselves on the altar, that the Lord may use us, that he may hasten the day of our triumph. Let our dress and pride be turned into fasting and prayer. Let us offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Let us send up our petitions, let our voices be heard at our own family altars. Let us be found often in secret chambers. The Lord has said that he could not look on sin with the least degree of allowance; he has also said, Let your garments be plain. How sad, then, if sin and pride are found in our homes.

There is a great work for all. The time is short and the victory not yet won. That we may be glad in that great day when there will be rewards for only the faithful, let us one and all cease not to hold up each other's hands, both day and night, with fasting and prayer, till the battle is fought and the victory won. We have too much invested in this great latter-day work to let it suffer loss. We hope for eternal life, which the wealth of this world can not purchase. Then let us all be valiant soldiers in the army of the Lord.

This is my prayer in Jesus' name.

Your brother,
G. M. COX.

COLDWATER, MICHIGAN, September 16, 1913.

Editors Herald: I wish to state that the Methodist Episcopal pastor preached a special sermon one week ago Sunday (September 7), based on the "Ananias and Sapphira" text in Acts of the Apostles, and in discoursing he followed it out very accurately. We learned he excoriated the church in such endearing terms as "deception," "fraud," "hypocrites," etc., etc., thus partaking freely of the spirit imbibed by the illustrious characters of his text. The Methodist Episcopalists are agitated because of the loss of some members.

Last Sunday, the city paper for Saturday contained announcements from the Presbyterian source. The theme for the men's class in Sunday school was, "The Mormon menace"; special paper by the pastor, Reverend Donald McCluer, "Joseph Smith, and the Book of Mormon." We had appointments at both dates, and failed to learn of the mysteries. This we know, the war is on. Joseph the Martyr, is a much alive man. "The heathen (Gentiles) rage, and the people imagine a vain thing."

Menace? Yes, we told the people so-called "Mormonism" was a "menace" to nothing but sin,—priestcraft, false doctrine, creedology, and superstition, and when Satan's slaves are to be liberated, his kingdom is moved, and he seeks to bind the "veil," which Enoch saw in his Majesty's possession, the closer over the faces of those to be emancipated from his slavery. But the Lord is working and other fish are nibbling at the bait.

Hopefully yours,
S. W. L. SCOTT.

WAYNE, NEBRASKA, September 16, 1913.

Editors Herald: I thank the HERALD for the kindness in publishing my request for prayer. I will say that I am not without blessing. My health is somewhat improved, and I am still receiving much comfort through the good and Holy Spirit. I have seen in a vision that which causes me to rejoice. I still need prayers.

I appreciate what the Saints have always tried to do for me in the way of sympathy and help. I feel that I have always been encouraged much more than I have been of encouragement to others. I am thankful and do hope the time may come when I can help and lend encouragement equal to what I have received. God fully knows my circumstances and conditions. I do not feel that I am or ever have been fully perfect. I pray that of all the blessings our God gives, he will give us wisdom to see and strength to overcome.

Your brother in the one faith,
GEORGE ELSON.

HASTINGS, OKLAHOMA, September 17, 1913.
