A flaming Jacqueminot.

I meant to touch and test my fate;
That night I should divine,
The moment I should see my love,
If her true heart were mine.

She'll wear my blushing rose;
If not, she'll wear my cold Lamarque,
As white as winter's snows.

My heart sank when I met her; sure
I had been overbold,
For on her breast my pale rose lay
In virgin whiteness cold.

Yet with low words she greeted me,
With smiles divinely tender;
Upon her cheek the red rose dawned—
The white rose meant surrender.

—John Hay.

Life and Death

To seek thee with a prayer
That binds us soul to soul,
To strive, that thou mayest share
To gain the farthest goal—
Daring the darkest hours,
Pain and the toil of strife,
Fighting for thine and mine—
Ah, sweetheart, that is life.

To suffer hand in hand
Treading the weary years,
To earn and understand
Gladness that grew in tears;
To see beyond the night
The beacon lights above,
Traveling side by side—
Ah, sweetheart, that is Love.

To feel, when sinks the sun
Beyond the farthest crest,
Joy in the task well done,
Rest and the peace of rest;
To fall asleep and dream
That for one fleeting breath
We twain were once apart—
Ah, sweetheart, that is death.

—Thomas Bicket.

Two Riddles

Some one comes in our front door—
Makes things awful glad!
Stamps his feet upon the floor,
Gives a bear hug and a roar.
'Tisn't Santa, yet he brings
Pockets full of pleasant things.
Guess!

Sounds exactly like our dad!
Yes!

There is something very bright
Lights up every place;
Makes you not afraid at night;
Makes you always feel just right.
Not the moon, and not the sun;
Not the lamps when day is done.
Guess!

Can't fool me—that's mother's face!
Yes!

—Helen Coale Crew, in the July St. Nicholas.

Now, the tuning and the tension,
Wailing minors, discords strong;
Afterward, the grand ascension
Of the Alleluia song!

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS,
LAMONI, IOWA

Childhood of Christ

There is one very striking incident about the childhood of our Savior, viz, that this period of life was spent with those who were poor, and under the necessity to labor for bread.

Doubtless the great God could have placed his Son in any environment he pleased to do, and, hence, could have placed him in a family of the rich, where he could have enjoyed all the luxury and ease that the world affords.

When, therefore, he was placed in the family of a carpenter, where it became necessary to labor with his own hands, there must have been a good purpose in it, and some advantage which could not have obtained among the rich. It is related that he worked at the carpenter's trade with his foster father, Joseph, and that after the death of Joseph he supported his mother by the labor of his hands. The last act of his earth life was to make provision for that mother's support.

"When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple standing by, whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, Woman, behold thy son! Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own home." (John 19: 26, 27.)

Had Jesus been born into a rich family, this care and responsibility would have been avoided. Surely the loving Father did not place his beloved Son in a condition of care, and toil unless there was an advantage accruing to him and his mission that would more than compensate for toil and privations endured. What was the advantage? While riches have an advantage, the world then, as now, had placed too great an estimate upon them, and men and women were valued and respected according to the amount they possessed. Thus classes of society were formed, and the rich despised the poor and refused to associate with them.

This distinction was not pleasing in the sight of God, who regards virtue of more importance than money. The poor were not responsible for this false class distinction, and God therefore chose that his Son should cast his lot with those innocent of this wrong policy; and ordained that those who esteemed themselves to be better than their less fortunate brethren should sit at the feet and pay respect to this chosen one born of poor but virtuous parentage, one cradled in a manger and reared in poverty.

This has a tendency to obliterate these false lines of distinction, while had the divine Master been born rich and reared in the lap of luxury, the self-elevated class would have claimed one more mark of distinction or elevation, and the breach been made wider. It was therefore best that Jesus should have his lot cast among the lowly ones.

To have the things of this world is a fortunate condition, if these things be used for good purposes, and the possessor does not estimate himself more highly on account of them. To be poor is unfortunate, but not necessarily sinful, unless it is the result of willful negligence or profligacy.

We again express our gratitude that the unfortunate children who are, or may become, the wards of the Children's Home have their lots cast among a people who respect them as equals, and who do not entertain the false idea of class distinction based upon the things that perish, but upon virtue, goodness, purity, and love the things which are enduring.

Jesus, not only in childhood but in his manhood, received support from those who possessed more of this world than did he.

"And it came to pass afterward, that he went throughout every city and village, preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God: and the twelve were with him, and certain women, which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdalene, out of whom went seven devils, and Joanna the wife of Chuza Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others, which ministered unto him of their substance." (Luke 8: 1-3.)

Yet all the world must bow the knee to the holy child Jesus. He was not, however, a debtor to the world, for he gave more than he received; and so should we all strive to do, whether our lots are cast with the rich or the poor. We should give of what we have and give liberally to those who need, whether it be of money or service.

---

Suggestions

Since our invitation for suggestions of plans to raise means to finance the Children's Home, we have received several letters containing suggestions, many of them worth serious consideration. We have not made special recommendation of any of these plans, but have presented several of them for the consideration of our readers. We are sure that everyone would like to do something, but the question is, How? If any of these plans seem feasible to you, you can adopt the one appealing to you, or adopt some plan of your own choosing.

Here is one from a brother who has given the subject much thought, and has had much experience on the practical side of life:

"There are some 70,000 members in the church, and I believe it is safe to say that 35,000 carry insurance, the premiums ranging from $1 to $6 per month. Let's cut this again, say 17,500 who pay $1 premium per month for policies; suppose these 17,500 would drop their policies, and pay the amount over to the Saints' homes and Children's Home, what would the church gain by such a move?

"But hold, says one, the church is not an insurance company. I beg to differ with such. The church is, or should be the strongest insurance company in existence; it would gain $210,000 per year. Think you not that the church could keep yours after your death, if we each one would put such an action to work?"

---

Debt Decreasing

Since our last statement three other good Saints have placed in the treasury their one hundred dollars, each to apply on debt of Children's Home, and one good sister sends ten dollars, thus placing the debt under the two thousand dollar mark. We need now nineteen more with a hundred dollars each, and nine with ten dollars each, or their equivalent, and we will be clear. Our notes are in such a condition that we can have any amount credited at any time, and the interest stopped. So the quicker the action is taken the more it will be worth to the home. So let us have these as early as possible. They are coming, we are sure of that.

---

Our Treasury Department

Under this heading will appear from time to time statements and suggestions of interest to the many friends of the home, and we shall welcome any suggestions from these friends that might be helpful in financing the institution. The Children's Home belongs to all of us, so come, let us labor together.

There was not enough received during the month of June to settle all the accounts. At the close of each month we will report these matters to you, so that you may better know the needs. We believe that this sort of publicity in frankly setting forth these matters will be of interest, and be appreciated by the Saints, and result in helpful cooperation.

We should like to have you refer to your HERALD of May 26, 1915, and reread the article, "Children's Home funds." In that you will notice a call for means to pay off our twenty-five hundred dollars indebtedness on the land. In response to this call we have received five hundred and ten dollars.

We consider this a commendable start in the right direction. We are aware of auxiliary societies that are working to the end of raising funds to liquidate this indebtedness. They have not yet reached their one hundred dollars, but feel assured that they will do so. We have this to remember, however, if all our effort be in raising funds to pay off the debt, we would not have a sufficient to meet current expenses. However, we will try to be faithful in setting forth the most urgent needs, that your activities may be directed accordingly.

Total receipts for running expenses for the month of June are two hundred and one dollars and fifty-eight cents. The total expense for the running of the home for the month of June amounts to two hundred and seventy-two dollars and twenty-four cents.

When sending in your contributions to the treasury be sure and mention the purpose to which you desire them placed. If they are intended to be applied on indebtedness, please state so, otherwise they will not be so credited.

JOSEPH ROBERTS.

---

Letter Department

ELMFLAT, MICHIGAN, June 13, 1915.

Editors Herald: I was at Remus over Sunday and preached and administered the sacrament. There is a noble band of Saints there. I baptized two heads of families. All are doing a fine work. There are more near the water. I regretted not being able to stay longer, as some had hurried their farm work to attend the meetings, expecting we would stay as long as the interest was good. We have many pleasant memories to cheer us on in the warfare when we think of the Saints at Remus. It was no easy task to leave this place, seeing their needs and knowing the interest outside. No one holds the priesthood here to lead them. We did the best we could to help them on the way. These are good Saints and showed their love for the work by their sacrifices to attend the meetings and help him who came with means on to the next place.

At Elmflat we met the Saints with joy. We had the privilege of preaching here about three years ago a few times in company with Elder E. N. Burt, and spoke here one night last fall. Coming here, we found the Saints very much in need of encouragement. We began to look into the needs of the work, visiting, consoling and cheering the downcast, administering to the sick, preaching at night excepting Wednesday, when we were glad to meet in prayer meeting. Friday night we attended Religio. They have a fine Religio here, organized in the winter by Sister F. S. Brackenbury, who is to be commended for her good work in the district. We administered the sacrament on Sunday, and had excellent meetings.

We have tried to do our part and have been abundantly supported by the Saints and some outsiders. There is need of branch organization in this place. The material is here and has been pointed out, and will perhaps be provided for in the near future. We feel that brighter days await the Saints here if all will try to live for that which has been promised.

As we travel from place to place we feel it our reasonable duty to teach sound doctrine with love and humility, leaving no marks of displeasure behind, no unwise things said about any department of church work or church institution.

A. M. BOOMER.

---

MOUNT CARMEL, ILLINOIS, June 16, 1915.

Editors Herald: I left my home June 4 and attended the conference at the Brush Creek Branch, Zenith, Illinois, where I met many old-time brothers and sisters, including dear old Brother I. M. Smith and wife, S. H. Fields, Brother Newton and others of the ministry.

Having been misrepresented by a Holiness minister at a near-by church, by invitation of the district president and president of the branch, R. H. Henson, I went to this place and preached four nights with a good crowd and good interest. From there I passed the neighborhood of the Brown Church, north of Wayne City, where W. R. Dexter and I had a tent meeting. The Saints remember this meeting and Brother Dexter also, as do our friends, who speak of Brother Dexter and wish to hear him preach again. I preached three nights with good interest. There seems quite an interest at most of the places I visited.

I never forget the Saints of the districts where I have been sent to labor, and remember their kind treatment. I would like to meet all again, but perhaps will never get to meet some again in this life. I live in the hope that in the great and grand reunion when the dead in Christ shall come forth we shall live and reign with him, we will meet all again, where sorrow, sickness and death shall never come.

In this life we have a foretaste of that great reunion day; and when people speak evil of us as they did of Peter of old, we are as witnesses of these things, and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to those who obey him. Having this knowledge, we are made free and have the knowledge of the gospel and the Son of God.

As a result of the famine foretold by Amos, a famine not of bread, but of hearing the words of the Lord, many are still wandering to-day from sea to sea and from the north even to the east, seeking the word of the Lord and finding it not. The promise is given again, being proclaimed that any who will do the will of the Father shall know the doctrine.

I am glad to be free in the gospel, and am trying to continue the work of God. Brother S. S. Smith made many friends at Mount Carmel. May God add his Spirit to all, is my prayer.

Your brother,

LOYD C. MOORE.

---

JOLIET, ILLINOIS, June 18, 1915.

Editors Herald: A series of meetings held in the Saints' church in Detroit closed last week under very pleasing circumstances. The general verdict was that they were a success. A good attendance was maintained, and the best of interest manifested from beginning till the close. A number of strangers attended, several of whom expressed themselves as being delighted with what they heard. And while there was not a great number baptized, yet the Lord certainly blessed the effort in strengthening the Saints, encouraging the officers of the branch, and interesting many who had been strangers to our work. One of the dailies gave us a fairly good write up, in which the distinction between our church and the Utah church was clearly drawn.

I thoroughly enjoyed my visit among the Detroit Saints. I found them a very kind and warm-hearted body, and alive to the interests of the work. The officers were active and up-to-date in their methods. The indications for a good work in the Detroit Branch are certainly encouraging.

Elder Arthur Allen is held in very high esteem here. He evidently has accomplished a work for the branch that will abide the test of time. It is good to follow men who have been diligent in their work and clean in their lives. I am pleased that he is in Columbus now, helping the branch with their new church, and hope the Saints there will give him their undivided support, for if they do, I feel assured success will crown their efforts.

We are now getting ready to leave for our new field, Southern California. All being well, we leave next Friday, going via Chetek, Wisconsin, to assist in the reunion there, thence to Spokane, where we hope to spend Sunday, July 4. Then if we can make it without going out of our way, we hope to attend the Myrtle Point, Oregon, reunion. By this time we hope to learn in what part of Northern California we can be used to the best advantage, and shall hasten on.

I am feeling very well, and very hopeful as to the future.

F. G. PITT.

545 West Marion Street.

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA, June 19, 1915.

Editors Herald: I read the letters in the HERALD from week to week with interest. My heart is made glad when I read of how God blesses his children. I was baptized by Brother Adolphus Edwards in 1894. I have never regretted the step. I knew that God was in the work and that this was the true church. I had prayed for years for the Lord to show me the true church. He spoke to me and told me that the Latter Day Saint Church was the only true one on earth. I was made glad that God answered my prayers. I rejoice that he has not changed, but is still the same. He has heard and answered my prayers many times. When I am heavily-burdened I go to him in faith and prayer and he lightens the burdens.

I was left about eight years ago with seven small children, when Brother David was taken from us. It has been a mystery to me how God could take him away from his family, but I have learned to say "Thy will be done." God has not forsaken us. He has blessed us as a family, and has given me strength to bring my children up in the faith without which I could never have endured the burden which has been placed upon me.

I am pleased to say we have a nice little church in Scranton. On Sunday, June 20, we had an excellent prayer meeting. God spoke, asking us to come up higher. Brother T. U. Thomas, our pastor, is doing a great work here. A week ago last Sunday was our Children's Day, and he baptized seven.

I wish to be remembered to all my brothers and sisters in Wales. I like to hear from them.

May God bless his children everywhere is my prayer.

Your sister,

MRS. E. MORRIS.

421 South Hyde Park Avenue.

LISTOWELL, ONTARIO, June 19, 1915.

Editors Herald: We are still striving to do the Master's will and come up higher that we might be in a fit condition to receive of the fullness of the blessings of God. When we think of how Christ suffered at the hands of his enemies, and how he was slandered, who would not be willing to suffer for his sake? We have the promise that he will never leave nor forsake us if we put our trust in him.

An enjoyable time was had on June 13, when the Saints from Harriston, Mitchell, Drew, Hanover and McKillop met at the home of Brother and Sister Amos Smith for prayer and sacrament meeting at 1.30 p. m. and preaching at 3. Most of those present took part in the prayer service, which was presided over by Elder G. C. Tomlinson, of Saint Marys, assisted by Brethren W. M. Gray and Bell. The Spirit of God was manifested in tongues through Elder Tomlinson, giving counsel and encouragement. It was a time of rejoicing to all present, all feeling blessed and a stronger desire to press on in the warfare, letting their light shine.

Yours in the true faith,

E. A. SMITH.

STONINGTON, MAINE, June 21, 1915.

Editors Herald: After so long a time, I am again in my field of labor, feeling thankful to my heavenly Father that I am still able and still permitted to labor with him in this great latter-day work, even though it is but little I can do. Am feeling hopeful in the work, and shall make a strong effort to labor in harmony with the divine mind, realizing that all labor which is not done in harmony with the divine will can result only in failure. Was pleased to have Brother Greene with us yesterday, and to once more have the pleasure of listening to his voice in behalf of the old Jerusalem gospel.

Prospects for gospel work seem to be good, that is, there seems to be plenty of work to do, and, I am glad to say, there are some willing helpers, too.

My address will be Stonington, Hancock County, Maine, and I shall be glad to receive any suggestions from those who are acquainted with conditions in Maine regarding the work and what is most needed in this part of the mission. Hope to see Brother Griffiths this way soon.

In gospel bonds,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

BLANSETT, ARKANSAS, June 23, 1915.

Editors Herald: Myself and oldest sister, father and mother, are the only Saints living at this place. I have younger brothers and sisters who I pray and think will be Saints some day if they have the opportunity. Myself and oldest sister were baptized at Sperry, Oklahoma, in 1907, by Brother John Harp, on what was known as the Bailey Ranch. We were then eleven and thirteen years of age. We have not been with the church since, but have not forgotten the Lord, and still pray to him. God will answer prayer no matter where we are. I know he has answered my prayers, and he will answer the prayers of others.

I have been afflicted for about seven months with neuralgia and heart trouble. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that if it be God's will I may be healed. I also ask prayers for my mother and sister. Hoping to be remembered, I am,

Your sister,

MISS LOLA FRITZ.

WATERLOO, IOWA, June 25, 1915.

Editors Herald: We are not doing much in the way of holding meetings here; we have no branch as yet and no preaching only at times when some of the elders pass through our vicinity. Brother L. G. Holloway made us some visits last winter and spring, and baptized ten in the Y. M. C. A. swimming pool. We are grateful for this work. We have

Sunday school regularly, with an attendance of about twenty-five.

I noticed a letter in the HERALD from Brother Liston, of Toledo, Ohio, stating that he had visited friends here in Waterloo. I am sorry we did not get to see him. I presume he did not know there were any Saints here. Our address is 1120 West Sixth Street, and I may be found at the Y. M. C. A. building, as I am employed there. We would be glad to have any of the elders or members call on us while passing through Waterloo. Your brother in the faith,

W. S. HINDS.

GRAND JUNCTION, COLORADO, June 28, 1915.

Editors Herald: Permit me to say through the valued pages of the HERALD that I am now in my field, and that I will be glad to hear from any of the isolated Saints of Western Colorado District who think there is an opportunity for preaching in their neighborhood. We want to do our part in warning the people.

The people of this part as a usual thing, do not care very much about religion, yet in most places we find a few who will listen. We do not know what we can do until we make an effort. In this place it seemed as though everything was against us, but we kept staying, working and praying that the way might be opened up so some good could be accomplished. At last some came out and have become very much interested, and say they are willing to help us with a Sunday school. We expect to organize a school with a membership of at least fourteen.

Hoping to hear from some soon, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

AMOS T. HIGDON.

DELTA, COLORADO, 326 Main Street, Field Address.

MOORHEAD, IOWA, June 28, 1915.

Editors Herald: With the legions that are crying to God for wisdom and direction in the great conflict of and for life, as one I rejoice, and praise his name for all that he has made manifest to the sons of men, but more especially to us as latter-day Israel.

Surely the Lord has set his hand to redeem his people, both according to the flesh and spirit, and many are seeking to point their fellow men to "the signs of the times." In this comes the comfort to a true Ephraimite, for, in the last days Ephraim shall stand at the head of the whole house of Israel. Ephraim is the first born in the new and everlasting covenant which God has established for the last time, never more to be taken from among the children of men. They will stand as ministers for God till the King shall come and sit upon the throne of his father David.

The Lord has warned us time and again, but as a body we have been slow. When the rush comes, oh, how many will be found wanting. Remember the parable of the ten virgins. God is chiding, reproving and correcting. Can we see ourselves as God sees us? or do we think that means the other fellow? Truly we can say, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning, the latter-day glory begins to come forth."

At our sacramental meeting yesterday we felt the Spirit and power of this great latter-day work. A song was given in tongues by Brother Nathaniel Mann, to the tune, Redeemer of Israel.

May Israel awake from her long slumber—the hastening time is here. Let us beware lest we be left behind, for it is called to-day from now till the coming of the Son of Man. Shall we stand among the watchmen of Zion?

Brethren of the priesthood, can we discern the signs of the times? We should lead and not be led. The times will be tempestuous from now on. May we seek and find the salvation of latter-day Israel, is the desire of one of many.

F. E. COHRT.

Of Passing Moment

NUMBER 1

This moment is very sacred to me and mine. The merciful deliverance from the perils of the deep, and the dangers of the war zone contrive to make one very thankful indeed.

I have been requested by many of my new friends in America to record my opinion of the United States, together with the reflections, and impressions made upon the mind of the writer by his association with the people of the New World—the sights and wonders, both in the things in general and otherwise more particularly in respect to the church, the Sunday school, Zion's Religio, the leading men of the church, the Saints in Zion, the Order of Enoch, and a host of other subjects that may be touched upon before we get through.

If I shall be a little plain in my statements, it will not be because I desire to cast reflection, but rather to assist to remove that which may hinder the progress of our work; and when I shall commend, it will not be in any sense with a desire to flatter, but to recognize true merit with the justice of its claim, wherever it may be found.

After being delayed for one week, owing to a strike among the coal heavers, I left my home and loved ones in Manchester, and journeyed to Liverpool, where I boarded the good ship Arabic on the afternoon of March 3. The boat was delayed in sailing for over two hours, owing to the heavy mail that she carried, which numbered a little short of nine thousand bags; this mail is said to constitute a record for any one boat to carry across the Atlantic.

The passage through the war zone was one of anxiety; we were through the Channel accompanied by an escort, and for some distance across the ocean. Our minds were somewhat relieved when we passed the Fastnet Lights, into the great Atlantic. The weather proved to be very rough at times, but was not considered bad for March. Accommodations on the vessel were good, and everything in the way of food and comfort satisfactory; but being alone, the passage was not as enjoyable as it would have been if I had been accompanied by one of like faith. True, there were nice people aboard, but they were not interested in the particular way that I could have wished.

But I had a splendid opportunity to study the shades of character represented, and I took full advantage of the same, and I was the means of putting at least some upon their guard; some were wise enough to take the counsel, others had to take the experience, the payment for which was heavy indeed.

I was not seasick, but I felt very queer at times, and it took all my time to overcome. I was always at the table, and partook of such food as agreed with me—a small portion at times, but I was there, and that seemed to comfort me somewhat.

After ten days we sighted the great "Land of Liberty," and after the customs officers had examined, and passed upon us, we came on to the wharf, where crowds of people awaited their friends, waving their hats, sticks, handkerchiefs, etc., while tears of joy streamed down their faces at the thought of meeting loved ones.

Oh, how lonely I felt, as I looked over those faces and could not see one that I knew. I really did not expect anyone to meet me, though I had written that I was coming; being delayed, I thought that it would make it difficult for anyone to meet me. So you can sense my amazement when I beheld the radiant face of Sister George Baty, of Brooklyn (the angel of the wharf), and heard her call out my name. I had tears of joy then, too, (nor am I ashamed to confess it).

As I got ashore with my baggage, the first brother I was introduced to was Elder E. B. Hull, pastor of the Brooklyn Branch. This brother was the first to greet me, and the last to say good-by when I left New York for home, therefore the word that we find written was in this instance fulfilled, "The first shall be last, and the last first."

Sister Baty infused the American spirit into me by teaching me how to get "the hustle on." My baggage was soon examined, and we were with the great crowd. Boarding a street car, and riding for nearly an hour, we arrived at 1364 Park Place, Brooklyn (don't forget the address when you go to New York), and I was very truly thankful, whether I seemed so or not. Many inquiries were made concerning the Saints in England. Then Brother George Baty, (the same genial George of old times) appeared on the scene, and gave me a hearty welcome. "Well, I am right glad to see a face from the old country," said he, and when we had dined, and rested awhile, he gave the signal to prepare for a visit to the city (New York).

So we again took the street car, then the elevated railway, and alighted somewhere about Broadway. I shall not be able to give you the exact order of the sights that were taken in by this visit, but I will mention some of the chief ones that stand out in my memory. The first point of interest is the elevated railway. There are four track lines which run from south to north. The highest point above the street level is seventy-three feet. These railways look very peculiar, and very striking to one who is not accustomed to seeing them; but New York could not get along without them. I have seen these trains so crowded that the people were just hanging on to them, packed within and without. I do not think they would allow such crowding, even in London.

Then we came to the skyscrapers. The first building to receive my notice was the new municipal building, on Park Row. This building is thirty-four stories high, and five hundred and thirty-nine feet above the sidewalk. The foundation is one hundred and thirty feet deep. The floor area is six hundred thousand square feet. The total cost twelve million dollars.

The next sight was the new public library, Fifth Avenue. I had never seen anything like it. It seemed to be a library without books. It is a most lovely building, built of most costly marble, and contains one million five hundred thousand books, with room for another one million. The cost of this building is nine million dollars. I was simply amazed with the beautiful arrangement of this library; it would take almost a volume to describe the beauty of it.

Our attention was next directed to the Grand Central Station, a most remarkable railway station, a station without trains, as it appeared to me. I asked where the trains were. This station is stated to be the most costly in the world. The main hall is very neat and most remarkable in design, the ceiling of which is a wonderful imitation of the sky, with thousands of stars twinkling beautifully when illuminated at night. It is also a unique study in the science of astronomy, which to my mind could not be excelled. Whenever you visit New York do not forget to have a peep at this ceiling; it will be worth your while, and if you are not satisfied just put the blame on me; I'll risk it.

Then I was shown the Singer building, which is a very noble structure. This was the highest building in New York, until the erection of the Woolworth building, which is fifty-five stories high, while the Singer is forty-nine, the interior of which is magnificent; it is really wonderful what a power the human mind is in itself.

These are the things that make us reflect, if we have any reflector at all. One of the principal questions that arose in my mind was this: If men have such wonderful power to design these splendid temples of art, what would be the influence of such power of design if it were engaged in the designing, and building, and widening, and deepening, and beautifying of the human character, which the Apostle Paul describes as "the adornment of the temple"? (the body). What a wonderful world this would be if such were being accomplished. Truly speaking, that is our hope, is it not?

We sing, "This world will be blest by and by." I firmly believe that some of the above, will have portion therein. Who shall say?

I pray that these good things may continue to grow. Yes, let them continue to build up a beautiful material world. There is intelligence there, and it must commend itself to all good men and women everywhere, and beget within them a desire for better things and better conditions. Yes, I believe that is the reason why the people of the world are not content with the miserable conditions of Slumland, their eyes are being opened to better things all the time.

What's that? Too optimistic? What, the above idea? Oh, dear, no! This is the way of salvation, deliverance, life, energy, vitality, and eternal life. Let us take our lesson, and do something.

In the war zone, but living,

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, June 17, 1915.

Extracts from Letters

Henry Ellis writes from Wales: "I regret to note that conditions were such in Jerusalem last year that it was not tolerable for Brother Greene and helpers to continue the good work they were doing there. We anticipate seeing Brother Greene shortly on these shores, and sincerely hope his work and visit here will be a blessing to many. We have an occasional visit from Brother Thomas Jones, missionary, who is doing a good work, and is quite well liked by all our people who have a real interest in assisting in the one true cause."

Edward Rannie, Clinton, Iowa: "At the conference of June 19 I was elected president of Eastern Iowa District. I invite all to write to me of their desires for visits and gospel work in the various communities. I will respond to all calls in person, or advise other missionaries of your needs and desires. Address me Davenport, Iowa, 1225 Nicholas Avenue."

L. F. West, Milton, Florida: "We have had so much affliction in our family of late years that I am sometimes tempted to feel that the Lord has turned his face away from us. However, in the assurance that whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and purgeth every son he receiveth, I take comfort. The assurance also if we endure not chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are we not sons, should stimulate us to courageously endure the chastisement when it comes upon us."

Swen Swenson, Centralia, Washington: "I am in the West, preaching the gospel and doing the best I can. I have baptized one since I left home, and blessed one child. I think I am still in the faith."

News from Missions

Central Illinois

I first landed in my field at Beardstown, and found my associate, Brother R. L. Fulk, confined at home, waiting upon his sick companion, who was down with typhoid fever. On my arrival I found Brother J. T. Curtis, of Independence, Missouri, and we endeavored to make a team, preaching at the church and on the streets from his large two-way chart. I find Brother Curtis very much in earnest. The weather was against us. However, we can not always reckon results "in the present time."

I also made a visit to our "Snicarty" Saints, who are always glad to welcome the missionary. They have a live little Sunday school and branch, presided over by Brother Roy Burton. I must not fail to mention the good work of Brother "Billy" Phillips, the fisherman, the priest of the branch, just lately ordained, and preaching nearly every Sunday. Brother Orland Butler, of this branch, is another coming young man, just lately baptized, and who is destined to shine in this church as a bright light if faithful.

I came on down the line and spent a very pleasant Sunday with the Taylorville Saints. I find our new district Sunday school superintendent, Brother Albert Johnson, and his assistant, Brother Hartzell, doing a good work, visiting the different schools in the district. They have organized two new schools, one at Stonington, and one at Decatur. So the good work goes on, and "we are laborers together with God."

My next point was Stonington. There are two families of Saints living here, the two Brethren Shotton. We appreciate the earnest, sacrificing effort they made in helping to get the work before the people. They rented a hall for two weeks, for ten dollars, published some bills, and helped to tract the town. Our congregations were small. There was interest, however, and on the last Sunday night the hall was nearly full, and had not the weather been against us our closing service would have been quite impressive, as the Taylorville Choir had made all arrangements to come over by "auto." I can testify to the fact that this bunch of people can sing—especially their leader, Brother Richards, who loves to sing. While here I baptized three of the Shotton children, Ralph, Joseph and Louise. I hope they grow up to be good members.

While these brethren had been to quite a heavy expense—they did not fail to remember the missionary with some of the material substance, on my departure for Springfield, where I am engaged at present with the gospel tent, in connection with Brother F. O. Prichett. The work here is in its infant state. There is a possibility of development, depending upon the faithfulness of the Saints.

We meet discouragements at times, but the greatest encouragement is the Holy Spirit which comes and dispels every fear. May we ask a kind remembrance in your prayers.

Yours in the conflict,

A. M. BAKER.

SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, 1614 Loveland Avenue.

---

Australia

Received the conference news a few days since. Appreciated the DAILY HERALD. The appointment of Apostles Paul M. Hanson and C. A. Butterworth for this mission, will give general satisfaction here. Paul's previous labors in this land were so well thought of there was a kind of general demand all over the mission for him. Brother Butterworth's numerous friends will be pleased to know he is returned, and his large experience and knowledge of conditions will be of great assistance to Brother Hanson, so they will make a good team. Brother Butterworth has a fine family, living at Geelong, about forty miles from Melbourne, across the bay. He has four growing boys who are interested in the Lord's work.

Since 1840, when the first elder came here, there have been twenty missionaries assigned to Australia. I think it has been many years since there has only been one here all "on his own" as they say here. That is the way I have been since Brother Griffiths left, so will appreciate the advent of the brethren. Brother Hanson and I have labored together in Ohio, and he is a congenial companion. I helped him make some lantern slides of his trip in Australia, and little did we think at that time we would be associated in that mission some years later! Time brings surprising changes.

I noticed in one of late HERALDS that Brother Barmore, who labored here for something like eleven years, writes that the Australian elders are often not given credit for the work they do, for when the American elders come over, they baptize their converts, and says he baptized twenty-five the first year he was here, but later on, when he worked hard, he had much less to show for his labors. He says there is always a revival takes place when the American missionaries come.

I never was very much of a baptizer, average about five a year, I think. The first year I was here, I baptized five I believe, the second eight. If Brother Alma stole the other fellow's sheep, it is about time he was confessing, and should repent in sackcloth and ashes, but he should not accuse the rest of us of being in the same highway profession! Brother Alma's work is well spoken of here, and he is often referred to as a "grafter." I hope the Saints will not think hard of him for this, as a "grafter" in this country means a "hard worker." It is very embarrassing at times, this colloquialism of Australia, as you are liable to use the wrong word at the wrong time.

As Brother Barmore says, when the American missionaries come over, a revival takes place, it certainly was the case with the advent of Brother Griffiths, and I think as the result of his labors, it will not be necessary to send missionaries from America, with the exception of possibly a minister in charge. Brother Paul will receive a royal welcome from the Saints. When you realize that Australia is nearly as large as the United States, it will be seen there is enough room for two apostles to labor in, so with a local apostle, and a young, aggressive American minister in charge, the work will be served to good advantage.

I would not be surprised if I were the last of the American elders sent here, as there have been quite a number of fine young men ordained by Brother Griffiths, who if faithful, can carry on the work, and supplemented by the labors of our very talented Walter J. Haworth, who ably edits the Standard, and John H. N. Jones, now doing faithful labor away over in Western Australia, and John Jones, laboring in New South Wales, who is to be ordained an evangelical minister, and backed up by our genial brother, Bishop Lewis, I think matters are very favorable for a good work being done here, even if there has been the most severe drought ever known, and the youth of the land engaging in the war at the Dardanelles. Brother Gresty and Barkus are unusually able men, and will be ordained evangelists.

I am the first high priest the church has ever sent to Australia. I have found an abundance of high priest work to do, and there is much more to be done, and although my appointment is not of an arbitrary nature, I have been given to understand, I want to feel that my work is finished before I leave this field, and as long as my wife and daughter keep well and are cared for and I have health, am going to fight off homesickness and try to give the church the worth of its money; but when it is time for me to go, I can tell you HOME will sound good to me.

It pays to advertise! Apparently there was not an American pie to be found in the land. I hungered for just one slice, but I couldn't find it. The sisters here call a crust on the bottom, one on top, filled in with apples, etc., to a height of three to six inches, "pie." There is a good bit in a name, sometimes not so much. I wrote to the HERALD, making a pitiful plea for pie, and—I got it! Several could make them. I found one sister who knew how to make pie, but as there was apparently not a pie pan in the country she used a plate! She learned the art from her mother, who learned it from Sister Burton, so Sister Burton, your works have followed you! The sister I refer to is Sister Grayden, now living at Philip Island. Her talented husband, John Grayden, sr., never tires of referring to the great work done here by Brother Burton, and the nobility of his character, and the help Sister Burton was to him. While we live on this earth, we are making records, either for good or evil.

It is supposed to be winter now, but it is just like spring; the severe drought has been broken, and even during the siege, the weather was grand. Is much like the California climate. The winters are so mild there is no provision made in our churches for heat. The people don't seem to notice the "cold."

The retirement of the Presiding Bishop on account of age, reminds us that we have a limit to human accomplishment. Brother Kelley was certainly the right man in the right place, and has been an able bishop and a hard worker. I hope we have within the ranks a man who will be able to take up the work and carry it on to a triumphant end.

What a great work is before the church! The world demands something better from the churches than it is getting. May the church of the living God arise and meet the emergency. If there was only some great, steady, intelligent move to build up Zion! If we would only be willing to sacrifice what we should, and unselfishly dedicate ourselves and what the Lord demands to his cause, what progress we would make, spiritually and temporally! We are far below where the Lord wants us. May the new leaders be under the inspiration of heaven, to lead the people of God safely to Zion, the pure in heart.

Sincerely,

C. ED. MILLER.

RICHMOND, MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA, 512 Church Street,
June 2, 1915.

---

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

On Sunday, June 27, Brethren H. O. Smith and James Bunt presented at the morning and evening services respectively good, practical, gospel truth in a manner that elicited excellent interest on the part of all present. The theme chosen by both was the power and efficiency of the gospel, and the necessity of preparedness on the part of the Saints, in order to be collaborators with God.

Movements for uplifting are on foot by way of instruction in public speaking, and classes will be in full action under the auspices of the Religio. Another step forward is taken by our faithful young Sister Corinne Haines, who, gifted as she is in vocal music, is consecrating her efforts for the benefit of the young of the church. General Chorister Hoxie, of the musical movement, will soon be here, and the institute and convention for the cultivation of music will be open for the good of all who will embrace the fine opportunities presented.

Aside from the good talks we have enjoyed at the prayer meetings, lectures and church services, we have had wonderful opportunities recently of listening to some of the workers on other church lines. On the 24th were the imposing exercises on the occasion of the graduation of six of our Independence Sanitarium nurses; and the Saints had the pleasure of witnessing this dignified body of workers while they received the high honors bestowed on them for the three long years of faithful Christian service. A large audience greeted the class, the officers and doctors connected with the Sanitarium, as well as Bishop R. Bullard and President E. A. Smith, who in well-chosen words addressed the young ladies. The Patronesses also were present in a body. The event was a very delightful one, made doubly so by the assistance rendered by Sister Blanche Allen in a lovely solo, and Sister Israel A. Smith in the rendition of one of her fine selections as a reader. The orchestra did excellent service.

We extend a full word of praise for the joy the Saints received on the previous Sunday morning when Elder Ward L. Christy preached a sermon on "Jesus Christ, the keeper of the gate," a sermon ever to be remembered as one that bought rejoicing to all present.

In the evening of the same day there was reserved for the great audience present one of the musical treats of the season, one of the best efforts of orchestra and choir. All this was supplemented by one of Elder J. W. Rushton's biographical sketches of great musicians. This time we heard his pleasing, forceful account of the wonderful life and achievements of the composer and musician Beethoven.

The Saints surely have much to be thankful for in the service and opportunities presented by this church.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

---

Saint Louis

Our district conference was reported as being good. The attendance, however, was not as large as it might have been, owing to a very heavy storm which came up just at starting time. A nice program was rendered by district Sunday school and Religio workers. Brother Ward L. Christy preached the morning conference sermon, and the district choir rendered the beautiful cantata, "Daniel" in the evening. Brother F. A. Russell of the missionary force, was in attendance.

Brother Christy has been with his wife at Independence, who has undergone a serious operation.

Brother Russell has preached each Sunday in the Rock Church, Saint Louis, and has been holding tent services for the past two weeks at Oak Hill, or the South Side Branch.

At our branch business meeting Brother Granville Trowbridge was made president. We trust that with his assistant officers he may be fully sustained, that the blessed work may move on.

2739 Greer Avenue.

Your sister in Christ,

ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

---

Los Angeles, California

Conditions remain about as usual. Some progress is being made in some ways, preparations for reunion are well under way, and the Santa Ana sisters have undertaken to do the cooking again, which assures everybody of excellent service at the cafeteria, and incidentally reduces the obligations against the new church in Santa Ana materially.

Brother Alma Barmore passed through here and occupied at the evening service, also gave his illustrated lecture on Australia at the church on Monday evening of last week. Brother Reiste occupied at the church Sunday morning. Both discourses were well appreciated by the Saints.

Brother Goodrich is steadily gaining in health, and bids fair to soon be his old vigorous self again.

Time of reunion has been so arranged that Brother Rush-ton can be here for the entire meeting, for which all are very much pleased. Quite a number are expected here from the East, among them being Brother Albert Carmichael and wife, and Sister Audentia Anderson, with part of her family. The musically inclined are looking forward to Sister Audentia's coming with a great deal of hope.

Brother Slye went north to his new mission last week.

R. T. COOPER.

289 East Forty-eighth Street.

Miscellaneous Department

The Bishopric

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Western Montana; Greeting: In the years past we as a district have done well along the financial line, and I feel thankful to all for the way they have sustained this part of the work. As we have started out on another conference year under renewed responsibilities, let us double our diligence and make the necessary sacrifice that there may be means in the treasury to supply all demands.

I find that our receipts of tithes and offerings have been shrinking considerably of late. During the last month I have not had funds enough on hand to take care of the elders' families. I wish every member of the district would see to his or her tithes and let me have them as soon as possible, so that those who have left their families in our care while away on missionary work may not be caused to worry over the fact that these families are not properly cared for. A little effort on the part of each one will give an abundance to carry this work along.

May God bless you in your endeavor to do your whole duty.

THOMAS REESE, Bishop's Agent.

Conference Minutes

KEWANEE.—Buffalo Prairie, Illinois, June 5 and 6. Reports: Kewanee 119; Joy 98; Twin City 89; Millersburg 88; Dahinda 84; Buffalo Prairie 78; Canton 57; Peoria 54; Matherville 51; Rock Island 28. Bishop's agent, H. C. Ziegenhorn, reported: Receipts $1,612.94; expenditures $1,584.16. Auditors reported books and accounts correct. Secretary reported issuing letters of removal to members of disorganized Media Branch, and to members of Henderson Grove Branch, located. Officers elected: O. E. Sade, president; Mary E. Gillin, secretary; H. C. Ziegenhorn, treasurer; Carrie Holmes, librarian; H. C. Ziegenhorn sustained bishop's agent; Mary E. Gillin, historian. O. E. Sade chose C. E. Holmes associate in district presidency. Recommendation of O. E. Sade for ordination to office of high priest was considered, matter being deferred until next conference. Preaching by O. E. Sade, Arthur Allen, F. A. Russell, C. E. Willey. Conference was best attended for some time, and was blessed by a calm and peaceful spirit. Adjourned to meet at Joy, first Saturday and Sunday in October. Mary E. Gillin, secretary, 115 Clark Avenue, Peoria, Illinois.

Convention Minutes

NODAWAY.—Sunday school with Sweet Home June 12 and 13. Profitable business session, program, Sunday school session, preaching, talks, papers, music, etc. Adjourned to meet at Guilford, Missouri, Saturday before third Sunday in November. Frank Powell, secretary.

Conference Notices

Seattle and British Columbia, August 7, 10 a. m., reunion grounds, Centralia, Washington. Branch clerks will receive blanks from which to make statistical reports for six months ending July 31, which should be mailed to undersigned not later than August 2. Apply and send all contributions for reunion and its accommodations to Leonard S. Rhodes, secretary-treasurer, 1005 South Tower Avenue, Centralia, Washington. Tents and cots, 2 cots to each tent, $5. Frederick W. Holmes, secretary, 4233 Baguley Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

British Isles Mission conference, July 31 and August 1 and 2, 6 p. m., Saints' meetinghouse, James Street, Bradford, Manchester. Sunday services in same hall 10.30 a. m. and 6.30 p. m. preaching, 2.30 p. m. fellowship. On behalf of Bishop May we request collectors in branches to see to our "one thousand shillings fund," that our conference expenses may be defrayed. Visitors write James Schofield, 50 Ellen Street, West Gorton, Manchester, as early as possible. Officers kindly comply with by-law seven. W. R. Armstrong.

Convention Notices

Northern California Religio, Irvington, reunion grounds, August 17, 2 p. m.

Northern California Sunday school August 18, 2 p. m. Irvington reunion grounds. Secretaries who have not reported for quarter ending June 30, please do so at once. Joint entertainment Friday evening, August 20. Talent solicited from Sunday schools and Religios. Mrs. Lizzie Day, secretary, 1066 Twelfth Street, Oakland, California.

Central Nebraska Sunday school, August 6, 10 a. m., Clearwater Branch. Everybody come. Bessie Soderstein, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Southern Kansas, unorganized territory, August 13, to continue 10 days, Wichita, Kansas. Come prepared to bear your own expenses. Wichita Saints will do all they can to help. F. M. Sheehy, J. Arthur Davis, T. C. Kelley, A. C. Martin are expected, possibly missionaries from other fields. W. Vickery, A. Barraclough, committee.

Des Moines and Gallands Grove, jointly, August 13 to 22 inclusive, Nevada, Iowa. We expect Heman C. Smith, C. E. Butterworth, J. M. Baker, C. J. Hunt, E. E. Long, David Chambers, J. L. Parker, J. B. Barrett, D. T. Williams. Tents: 7 by 9 $1.50; 10 by 12 $2; 12 by 14 $2.50; 14 by 16 $3.50; high wall at reasonable prices; tents set up 25 cents extra. Cots, canvas, 25 cents; wire, single, 35 cents, double 50 cents. Mattresses, single 25 cents, double 35 cents. Chairs 10 cents. Tables 25 cents. Bedding, stoves, etc., at reasonable prices. Dining tent on ground, charge of committee. Ten meal ticket $1.75, single meal 20 cents. Nevada is a beautiful town, 3,000 inhabitants, no saloons, main line Chicago & North Western. Camp in city park, fine shade and water. We are expecting one of the best reunions in the history of the districts. Order tents etc., not later than August 8, of J. L. Parker, secretary-treasurer, 1207 Lyon Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

Chatham meets Erie Beach, July 17 to 26, instead of June, as formerly published. John C. Dent, secretary.

Freedom, Oklahoma, reunion is called off on account of lateness of crops due to heavy rains. Hubert Case.

Idaho, August 20 to 30 inclusive, Hagerman. Come prepared to tent on grounds. Those having tents please bring them. Quarters will be provided for those not having tents. Parties met at Bliss and Tuttle by notifying William Glauner, Bliss, Idaho, what train you will arrive on. George W. Winegar, president.

Addresses

Address of John W. Rushton, minister in charge of the Pacific Slope Mission, until further notice, will be 281 Castro Street, San Francisco, California, care of J. A. Anthony.

Addresses Wanted

Charles St. John, formerly of Little Valley, New York, Horatio Bailey, formerly of Maryland, New York; Mrs. M. A. Surdam, formerly of Sunderlanville, Pennsylvania.

A. E. STONE.

BUFFALO NEW YORK, 395 Vermont Street.

Notice of Appointment

To Whom It May Concern: Charles Fry is hereby appointed president of Spring River District with O. P. Sutherland assistant. Late conference of above-named district authorized undersigned to so appoint.

ELBERT A. SMITH, for Presidency.
F. M. SHEEHY, Minister in Charge.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
Pasture for the Soul - - - - -	665
Current Events - - - - -	667
Notes and Comments - - - - -	668
Editorial Selection - - - - -	668
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
Where Do We Stand, by J. August Koehler - - - - -	669
Revival Meetings, by W. A. McDowell - - - - -	671
The Fullness of Life, by William Moore - - - - -	672
Life of John Lewis Morgan, by Mrs. Susie Spencer Williams - - - - -	674
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
New York Prison Reform - - - - -	675
Pope Will Stay in Rome - - - - -	675
HYMNS AND POEMS - - - - - 677
Austin M. Dobson.
THE CHILDREN'S HOME - - - - - 678
Joseph Roberts.
LETTER DEPARTMENT - - - - - 679
A. M. Boomer—Lloyd C. Moore—F. G. Pitt—Mrs. E. Morris—E. A. Smith—Isaac M. Smith—Miss Lola Fritz—W. S. Hinds—Amos T. Higdon—F. E. Cohrt—W. H. Greenwood—Extracts from Letters.
NEWS FROM MISSIONS - - - - - 683
A. M. Baker—C. Ed. Miller.
NEWS FROM BRANCHES - - - - - 684
Abbie A. Horton—Elizabeth Patterson—R. T. Cooper.
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT - - - - - 685

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver, Assistant Editor.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

Notice of Transfer

By agreement between the respective ministers in charge, namely, W. M. Aylor and James E. Kelley, and the First Presidency, J. M. Simmons is transferred from Southwestern Texas to the Southwestern Mission.

Respectfully,

ELBERT A. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.

LAMONI, IOWA, July 10, 1915.

To Whom It May Concern: By concurrence of those in charge, A. M. Chase has been transferred from the Eastern Mission to the Northeastern Missouri District.

Respectfully,

ELBERT A. SMITH, Secretary Presidency.

F. M. SHEEHY, Minister in Charge.

LAMONI, IOWA, July 1, 1915.

To Locate Parties

Brother S. C. Reynolds, Macklin, Saskatchewan, desires the address of the Brother William Carns, mentioned in a letter appearing recently in the HERALD from a sister of Toledo, Ohio.

Sister G. C. Connelly, Wernsburg, Missouri, inquires concerning the whereabouts of her husband, last heard from in Independence about May 19. At that time he was thinking of going to Wyoming. He is forty-one years old, weighs two hundred pounds, was traveling in a covered wagon with extra horses.

Secretaries Notice

Chatham District Sunday school secretaries hereafter please send quarterly reports to G. Orlo Coburn, Blenheim, Ontario, instead of to Robert T. Brown, Stevenson, Ontario.

Requests for Prayers

L. F. West, Milton, Florida, asks prayers for his daughter, Mrs. W. W. Clark, who is severely afflicted. The ministry especially who have labored with and for these people, are asked to unite for the relief of this sister.

A sister of Evergreen, Alabama, who is almost an invalid with stomach trouble and nervousness, asks the Saints to remember her in prayer, that if it be God's will she may be healed.

Died

SWENSON.—George L. Swenson, born June 10, 1878, Rockville, Missouri; died at Centralia, Washington, May 17, 1915. Married Ora M. Houk, December 23, 1900, Eldorado Springs, Missouri. To them were born 4 sons, 4 daughters, who with the wife survive him. Baptized December 19, 1877, near Eldorado Springs, by Emsley Curtis. Ordained deacon January 1, 1904, teacher, December 1, 1907, Far West, Missouri. Besides immediate family, he leaves father, mother, 3 sisters. Funeral by S. P. Cox, interment in Greenwood Cemetery, Centralia, Washington.

RUSSELL.—Bernice Ethel Russell, beloved daughter of Oscar and Minnie Reynolds, wife of Robert Russell, born January 20, 1891; died with her baby, Mildred Louise, June 26, 1915, at the home of her parents near Lebeck, Missouri. Baptized September 5, 1899, by F. C. Keck. Married Robert Russell, June 2, 1912. Deceased leaves husband, father, mother, 2 sisters, 2 brothers, other relatives and a host of friends. Services at the home of her parents, in charge of W. S. Macrae, sermon by F. C. Keck, from Job 14: 1, 2, and the 8th Psalm.

MCGUIRE.—George A. McGuire, born at Windsor, New Jersey, August 29, 1844; died at Long Branch, New Jersey, May 14, 1915. Married Hannah M. Rogers, 1866. To them were born 1 daughter, who died in infancy, Louis S., of Port Arthur, Texas, George A. and Myron E., of Long Branch, New Jersey, John A., of Trenton Falls, New Jersey, Benjamin R., of Brooklyn, New York. Hannah M. McGuire died in 1885, and he subsequently married Josephine Brand, who survives him. He enlisted in Company G 11th New Jersey Volunteers in 1862, and served through the entire Civil War. He was wounded at Gettysburg on the second day of the battle. Baptized by John Stone, Frankford, Pennsylvania, July 31, 1875. Was subsequently ordained a teacher. He remained faithful to his testimony to the restored gospel. Funeral from his late home, Long Branch, by Walter W. Smith, assisted by Ephraim Squire.

EZZELL.—Hannah, wife of L. H. Ezzell, born April 27, 1838, Canada; died June 3, 1915, Independence, Missouri. She was a student and taught school 25 years. Lived with first husband, Mr. Webber, 19 years, caring for him 9 years as an invalid. Lived a widow 4 years. Married L. H. Ezzell, January 13, 1907. Was a faithful companion, consistent and faithful church member, being a great support to her husband in defense of the restored gospel. Leaves sister, niece and friends in Canada, niece and many friends in California and elsewhere.

GRACELAND COLLEGE BONDS

In order to place the finances of Graceland College on a better basis, those having the financial responsibility of the same have thought best to issue bonds to the amount of $35,000.00.

These bonds run from July 1, 1915, to July 1, 1920, and bear 5 per cent interest, payable semi-annually.

They are offered to the Saints and to any investor as a first-class investment.

These bonds are secured by a first mortgage on real estate valued at about $62,000.00.

Each bond is valued at $100.00. We earnestly invite the attention of any having money to invest to investigate this proposition.

You will be not only putting your money in a safe place (as the whole church is back of these bonds as well as secured by mortgage) but you will be helping the work of the church.

Address all communications to

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Lamoni, Iowa

CHURCH BOOKS

CATALOGUE AND PRICE LIST

Sent Free upon request.

*****
A New Book
THE INTERPRETER

By Gomer T. Griffiths

A Revision of the "Exegesis"

containing more charts and information than the former book, also an illustrated chapter on offenses—law governing the same—procedure in church courts, and blank forms suitable to the same. The various quotations from the books have been carefully compiled and arranged, so that the instructions pertaining to each office are classified, to assist the reader in locating the duties of each minister from the president of the church to the deacon, also points out how the different officers are called and the manner of their ordination, thereby securing courtesy to whom courtesy is due.

Price .....50c

LOCATION WANTED for a photographic Studio in a town of $2,000 or more, without a photographer, where there is an L. D. S. branch. Or will buy, rent, or accept good position. Earl F. Hoisington, Harlan, Iowa. 27-2t

Failures of Campbellism

A new tract by Elder E. E. Long. Reprinted from a series of twelve articles in HERALD of 1913. Logically presented and systematically arranged. Quotations verified. 139 pages. Order 217 .....20c

Objections to the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants Answered and Refuted

You can't take the time, neither have you the data at hand to be able to refute many of the so-called arguments against these two books. Brother J. R. Lambert has placed in book form facts and data to refute these so-called arguments. A handy book to have in your library. Order 143 .....40c

Braden-Kelley Debate

This book contains the full report of an eighteen-night debate between the Church of Christ (Campbellite) and the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. The work is a library in itself. Though it has been in print for several years it is still one of the best books published to show the stability of God's truth. Order 125 .....1.50

The Instructor

A book that is one of our very best sellers, and to see the book is enough to explain why it is such a favorite. This work is the result of Brother G. T. Griffiths' efforts and it has been of untold good. To the student, the busy man, and the investigator alike the book is of untold value. Subjects topically arranged.

Order 126 cloth .....75
 127 Leather .....1.00
 128 Flexible .....1.75

What Is Man

Is a book that should receive the careful study of every Saint. It clears away the fog of doubt with reference to the eternal verities of the future state of man. No better book on the subject of immortality. Order 140 .....50c

SADIE AND HER PETS

Another book of the Birth Offering Series, especially written for our young boys and girls. Order number 244, cloth ..... .50

COLORED POST CARDS

Graceland College, Saints' Home, Liberty Home, Independence church, Herald Publishing House, Lamoni church.
 1 of each for 15 cents.
 2 of each for 25 cents.
 Order by number 172.

COMPENDIUM OF FAITH is a work for the student. It is a collection of texts taken from the standard church works on a great many subjects. Also a splendid brief history of the Apostasy.

Order No.
 141 cloth .....75c
 141½ leather .....$1.00
 174 flexible .....$1.50

YOU Can See America Best

on the Burlington's Grand Circle Tour en route to California Expositions. Think of it! Scenic Colorado, Salt Lake City and Great Salt Lake in daylight; glorious California, Los Angeles, both Expositions; a romantic salt-sea trip up the coast to Portland, Tacoma, Seattle, the Puget Sound country and Spokane—then home via either Glacier National Park or Yellowstone Park and the good old-reliable Burlington. The most picturesque sights—most wonderful places in all the West are included in this tour. Honestly, this is THE vacation trip of a lifetime. Ninety golden days in the golden West. Stopovers—as you please. Step in and get your copy of our California Exposition folder, next time you're going by and let's talk it over.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent
 C. B. & Q. R. R.

IF YOU WOULD LIKE TO OWN A FARM, where life is worth living and where you can raise bountiful crops; where the climate is great, markets fine and the price of land right, write to-day for a copy of our "There's a Farm for You in Colorado" folder. S. B. Howard, Immigration Agent, 1004 Farnam St., Omaha, Nebraska.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, JULY 21, 1915

NUMBER 29

Editorial

A STRONG CITY

In the opening verses of Isaiah 26 we read, "We have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks. Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in."

We are all interested in building up Zion and establishing a strong city—the city of God. To our mind the verses quoted reveal the things which shall give the city its real strength.

In the olden times when these words were written the people trusted to the great stone walls of a city to give it strength. Yet in truth no city was strong then in which righteousness did not dwell and around which God did not build walls of salvation.

If iniquity had its home in the city, the walls might be ninety feet thick and three hundred feet high and the gates of brass, yet when God thundered against it, it fell just as surely as Babylon or Jericho or Sodom or Gomorrah fell.

Stone walls were a defense; but only to a righteous city. And only a righteous city was a strong city.

To-day we do not trust to massive walls for the protection of our great cities. Their strength is supposed to lie in their power as commercial or manufacturing centers, in peace, and to these and the army and navy in times of war. Those things are supposed to defend Chicago and New York and London and Edinburgh and Berlin.

It must not be forgotten that just as righteousness was the true defense of the walled city of old, righteousness must be the true defense of the commercial city of to-day.

London or New York or San Francisco or Berlin may be strong commercially and financially and defended by many troops and guns; but if they are corrupt, when God thunders against them, they will fall, as Babylon or Sodom or Pompeii fell. Banks and factories and barricades will not save them.

In our efforts to build up Zion we must lay stress on the need of material development, as we are doing; but we must not forget that if we "have a strong city" it will be because God has appointed salvation for its walls and bulwarks and because a "righteous" people who "keep the truth" have entered it.

Zion is the pure in heart. The first great step in the gathering in each individual case is not the buying of a lot in Independence or Lamoni, or the selling of the old homestead, or the purchasing of a first-class ticket to the land of Zion. The first great step is to become pure. Then you are one of Zion's children wherever you are, and the mere matter of moving to the "center stake" will work out satisfactorily.

When you finally gather there to build up a "strong city," you must not think that your own individual prosperity is all that is at stake. You go as a representative of the whole church. The hopes of thousands who can not yet gather depend to an extent upon your conduct.

We were impressed in reading a Jewish history of the Jews to note that the author in his account of the gathering back to Jerusalem after the Babylonian captivity said that many of those who were comparatively well-to-do gathered to Jerusalem and built fine homes and dressed extravagantly and forgot about their less fortunate brethren who could not come and build homes. They left their brethren in Babylon.

They forgot that they did not gather there for a life of luxury. They should have gone as representatives of the race. Because they forgot their mission the whole people suffered and God was displeased. They did not build a strong city.

It was not Zion to them, and they could not make it Zion for others.

Right in line with this is the charge which God brought against Sodom: "This was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fullness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy."—Ezekiel 16: 49.

The modern large cities, the size of Chicago, London, San Francisco, or Paris, are not fit places for human habitation. This is proved by the fact that they destroy their own citizens. Such cities can not maintain their vitality and reproduce their population from generation to generation. They must constantly drain the surrounding country.

True, they are centers of art and culture, and one would expect that from them would go out a constant stream of strong, intelligent men to leaven the whole world. Yet the reverse is true. In every line of work they must draw upon the country for genius and for strong men. They are the furnaces of the world in which men are burned up.

The poverty and crime of the poorer classes, the luxury and crime of the wealthy, and general indifference and godlessness of the middle classes, drunkenness, drug-taking, gambling, and immorality, extortion, make the modern great cities such a spectacle that one wonders that God has spared them thus far. Unlike the strong city referred to, they break all the laws of health, of man, and of God.

No wonder that Cowley said, "God made the first garden and Cain the first city."

Yet many advantages result from the gathering together of men in cities, such as social intercourse, building of schools, churches, and lecture halls—and it is the dream of men and the will of God that some day these advantages shall be enjoyed and those other awful defects be removed. One of our modern poets takes up the ancient theme thus:

The beautiful city! O mortal, fare hopefully on in thy quest, Pass down through the green grassy portal that leads to the valley of rest,
There first passed the One who, in pity of all thy great yearning, awaits
To point out the beautiful city, and loosen the trump at the gates.

True, the new earth will be crowned with the New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven. Yet Enoch and his people did not wait for that distant day, nor did they wait until the crossing of the vale had been accomplished for them. Nor need we wait.

Men will not be worthy of the beautiful city who have not tried to build it here.

They will not inhabit where there is no sorrow unless they have tried to comfort the sorrowing here.

They will not live where there are no poor and no sick unless they have shared with the poor and cared for the sick here.

We must begin to build our beautiful city here and now and it will be a strong city and a fit dwelling place to the extent that the laws of God and of just men are honored.

If the people of the world ever come up to hear of Zion it will be because they see that the people of Zion have solved the great problem and made their city a purveyor of life instead of death.

In a word, that God hath appointed salvation for her walls and bulwarks. That city instead of draining the country of its best, will radiate life-giving forces in every direction. ELBERT A. SMITH.

PALESTINE FOR THE JEWS

The present European war and conditions incident thereto and affecting the Jews especially, have provoked considerable discussion concerning these downtrodden people and of their future liberation, including the possible return of those who desire to and may return to Palestine.

Zionist workers and organizations are giving the conditions and welfare of these people consideration, and are laboring to the end of their deliverance, following the war. The interest and activity in this matter are indicated by the following from the Chicago Herald of July 2:

BOSTON, July 1.—The Zionist conventions, which have been in session here for a week, closed to-day with the announcement that a national congress of representatives of all Jews in the United States would be held as soon as the European war is over. The purpose of this congress is to take action to obtain for the Jews the same freedom and civil status in all countries as is accorded to other races, and to obtain national individuality by obtaining Palestine from the Turkish Government for Jewish colonization.

Referring to the work of this conference and to present conditions in Palestine (which to us seem in part preparatory to the return of the Jews to their home land) the New York Sun says:

Palestine, it is estimated, can accommodate a population of 6,000,000. With the establishment of new political control of the Holy Land it is intended that Jews shall migrate there from Russia, Germany, Austria, and other European States. Thus, the leaders of the movement say, a solution will have been found for the race-old Jewish problem. Not only will the Jews have their own land, but an end will be brought to the discrimination against them in other countries.

Partly as a result of the Zionist movement, initiated several years ago, many American Jews have already made investments in Palestine. Jews in this city own a large tract of land in the neighborhood of Haifa. Saint Louis Jews bought not long ago 800 acres near the shores of the Sea of Galilee. Chicago Jews control territory near Cana, where the ancient religious feast formerly was held. A vast tract in the vicinity of Joppa is in the hands of Jews living in Winnipeg, while Jews of Pittsburgh and Cleveland own 1,800 acres near Armageddon.

The investment of foreign capital has resulted in a marked improvement in the physical features of Palestine, it is said. Until a few years ago the country was a treeless region, with much desert land. The ground has been rendered productive, with soil formerly considered barren yielding great wheat crops. It is asserted nearly every acre from the sea on the west to the River Euphrates on the east, including the whole of Syria and a part of Mesopotamia, may be made to blossom.

American financial intervention has resulted too in the transformation of some of the cities. Damascus, for instance, now has a street-railway system to serve its 150,000 people, and banks and industrial institutions have been established.

Soon after the war started, Protestants in England made an informal proposition to their coreligionists in the United States to obtain joint control of Palestine. It was suggested that the Holy Land possessed tourist-drawing qualities enjoyed by no other country, and offered extraordinary opportunity for development through the modernizing of intercity transportation facilities.

There were to be rapid transit trunk lines connecting Damascus, Nazareth, and Jerusalem. A branch line was to draw Mount Hermon close to Damascus. Mount Carmel was to be brought within easy distance of Nazareth. Trolleys were to take Jerusalem visitors on excursions to Bethlehem, Bethany, and Jericho.

All of this, the English propagandists said, would prove the greatest missionary movement for the Christian religion conceivable. The success of the project was contingent, of course, on the wresting of Palestine from the domination of the Turks. The present Jewish movement assumes also that a fresh disposition of the Holy Land will be made after the end of the war.

Leaders in the Boston conference assert that the possession of Palestine by the Jews would not prevent Christians from developing the country for show purposes. Rather, they see in such a movement the welding of a close spirit of cooperation between the races. They are ambitious to obtain Palestine for a national home, but, once established there, they would welcome the coming of visitors to the places of peculiar interest to Bible students, it was said.

The interest of the religious press in the Boston congress and the Zionist movement, and the significance thereof, are suggested by the following editorial, headed, "The Jews and Jerusalem," and appearing in the Christian Herald of July 7:

Unusual interest attaches to the Zionist Congress which assembled in Boston on June 27. Within a decade Zionism has taken on new life, and the problem of the future control of the Holy Land is one which attracts increasing attention as the great war progresses. Once a movement which was regarded as largely sentimental, Zionism has now enlisted the practical interest and support of Jews throughout the world, and nowhere more than in the United States. Through all the centuries since the dispersion the Hebrew race has looked forward to the time when they would again become masters of the ancient soil, and create a Jewish state with the city of David as its capital. Now the time has apparently arrived when the dream may take on the form of reality, and when plans may be discussed looking to the establishment of a Jewish political and religious state.

It is significant that the first step toward world organization of the race for this purpose should be taken in America. Indeed, the sinews of the movement are largely American. Many American Jews are already owners of extensive tracts of territory in Palestine, which they have redeemed from aridity, and so developed that what was a few years ago almost a treeless desert is now a region of thrifty orchards and waving grain fields. From the Mediterranean to the Euphrates there has been development in transportation lines, banks and a variety of productive industries and business concerns. American Jews, cooperating with their brethren elsewhere, have carried their enterprises from the shores of the Mediterranean far inland, looking in faith to the coming of a time when the land would be the permanent possession of their race.

Of the more than thirteen million Hebrews now scattered throughout the world, comparatively few are wealthy; yet there is probably no other race in existence that can command such vast resources in the aggregate. Every nation has its wealthy Jews, our own probably most of all. Even should their hopes regarding the Holy Land be realized, there will be no formidable exodus from the United States to Palestine, which is but a small country and one that could not support half of the Jewish race now living. But there are thousands of the race in Russia and scattered throughout Europe and Asia who could be colonized there to advantage, the work being supported by compatriots here and elsewhere until it reached the self-sustaining point.

But the dream of the Jew goes much farther. He looks forward to the time when the ancient glories of Jerusalem are to be restored—when it will become a world-center of religion, statesmanship and influence, enjoying the friendship and cooperation of all the races. To the Jew, therefore, there is a colossal stake at issue. It may mean to him the actual fulfillment of the prophecy for which the race has prayed and which it has never forgotten; the hope that inspired the exiles in Babylon to sing the strain that is on the lips of every Jewish wanderer: "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy."

Latter Day Saints from the beginning have taught the restoration of Palestine to the Jews—not to all the Jews, but to a "remnant," according to prophecy. That others have come to urge a return of Israel to their former home adds nothing to the faith of the Saints in the word and promises of God, though it does lend encouragement, and makes for the vindication of the cause.

Palestine has throughout the ages been preserved for the Jews. Their return may appear to the world to be only a fitting solution of their many years of wandering and oppression, coming as a consequence of the active interest of the Zionist movement. By the Saints this return will be viewed as a fulfillment of prophecy, coming hand in hand with all the work of restoration of latter days, and under the mercy and loving care of Israel's God.

As to whether there will come to the Jews a greater degree of liberty following the present war, is not a matter for our speculation; as to whether the close of this war will open the door of return for these people to Palestine is not for us to say. It is enough for us to know that God's promises are sure, and to trust that out of this great distress he will bring good to the Jews, as to all nations; that in the times and under the conditions known to himself he will finally bring back liberated Israel, is a thing as certain as has been the restoration of the gospel.

It remains for the church to perform her part so that when the times of the Gentiles are fully ripe, we may have taken unto ourselves the divine strength and light which will make for an effectual presentation of the heavenly way to the Jews, in fulfillment of the edict "the first shall be last."

J. F. GARVER.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

FLOODS IN CHINA.—Unprecedented floods are reported to have occurred in China, with great loss of lives.

THAW SANE.—The jury and Judge Hendrickson in the notorious Thaw case have adjudged him sane, and he has been released on thirty-five thousand dollar bail.

DENIED NEW TRIAL.—John R. Lawson, labor leader convicted of murder in connection with recent Colorado strike disorders, and sentenced to prison for life, has been denied a new trial. An appeal will be taken to the Supreme Court.

CHICAGO ARBITRATION.—The arbitration in the case between the street car system of Chicago and the car men has resulted in what is pronounced a decided victory for the men, who received very largely what they had demanded before the strike.

BUREAU OF INVENTION.—A "bureau of invention and development" to act as an advisory board under the naval department of the United States Government, is to be formed of American men of inventive genius. Thomas A. Edison has accepted an appointment as head of the board. It will be the work of this bureau to suggest ways and means to meet various conditions and methods of warfare as shown on land and sea in connection with the present struggle in Europe.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Carranza forces have occupied Mexico City, having defeated the Zapata army after heavy fighting. Relief supplies have been sent into the city to alleviate the suffering of the destitute. Villa forces have taken the offensive in the western states, where they are said to be successful. Villa announces a decisive victory over Obregon south of Aguas Calientes, and says that Obregon has been cut off from his base of supplies at Vera Cruz. Villa states that he is sending a strong expeditionary force against a Carranza army in Mexico City, which force is meeting with success, and has advanced to within eighty miles of the capital. Carranza is preventing the shipment of sisal, used in the manufacture of binding twine, from Yucatan, when purchased from growers and dealers, in an effort to force the purchase of this product from his authorities, that the Carranza government may collect all export duties.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The week covered by this report has been one of comparative quiet along all war lines. Both the Germans and French claim gains in the Argonne. The Germans have again become active in northern Poland. Italy reports minor successes over the Austrians. Reports indicate Russian success over the Turks in Armenia. The allies claim slight gains over the Turks in the campaign against the Dardanelles. The German cruiser Koenigsberg is reported destroyed by British monitors in the Rufiji River, German East Africa, where she took refuge some months ago from the British fleet. Chancellor McKenna announced in the House of Commons on the 13th, that the subscriptions to the new war loan had reached the unprecedented figure of nearly three billion dollars, not including small sums received from the post offices. One hundred and fifty thousand miners in Wales have gone out on strike for higher wages, threatening the coal supply of the British Navy, in defiance of governmental proclamation, under the recent munitions measure, that miners should not strike.

GERMANY REPLIES.—The late German note to the United States declared that to have allowed the passengers of the Lusitania to take to their boats "would have meant the sure destruction" of the submarine; that it was to be expected that the stricken vessel would have remained afloat long enough to permit its passengers to board their boats, and that the presence on board of explosives "defeated this expectation"; and that if the Lusitania had been spared, the munitions aboard would have gone to England. Germany assures free passage of such American passenger vessels as are made recognizable, and when due notice is given of their sailing, the United States Government to certify that no contraband is aboard. The German Government "is unable to admit that American citizens can protect an enemy ship through the mere fact of their presence on board." This note suggests no indemnity for loss of American lives on the Lusitania, and gives no assurance of cessation or change of German submarine warfare on merchant ships. In a separate note, Germany states that upon investigation it is found that the Nebraskan was attacked by a German submarine, and for which Germany expresses regret, explaining that "in the twilight . . . the name of the steamer was not visible from the submarine." Germany declared her readiness to make compensation for damages.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

APOSTLE BUTTERWORTH REACHES AUSTRALIA.—A letter just received from Apostle C. A. Butterworth, not dated, written at Geelong, announces that he has reached home in safety. He says, "I had a very pleasant voyage; but the ending was best of all, for I met my wife and children. All well and glad to greet me home again after an absence of one year and four months."

WIRELESS FROM PAUL HANSON.—The following letter dated July 14 has been received from Apostle Paul M. Hanson en route for his Australian field: "Mr. Elbert A. Smith, Lamoni, Iowa: On board Moana. Due in Papeete in two days. No mail leaves there for a month so am sending this by wireless to boat going to San Francisco. Crossed equator yesterday. Cool and smooth sailing. Both [wife and self] well. Intend to stay a month in Papeete. Due in Australia, August 16.—Paul M. Hanson."

Original Articles

THE CHURCH AS A SOCIAL CENTER

Without question, one of the most important factors in the evolution of society is religion. But religion is a matter of personal concern, and not, primarily, of the community. The church, however, which represents religion institutionalized, is a community affair. It is an organization of religious people for religious ends in religious ways. Hence it influences the rest of society in every way and at all points in proportion to its sincerity, virility, and ability to assist in the community's effort at improvement, or to resist the community's efforts at degeneracy.

Always the church has exerted influences which have been either repressive or stimulating to the will of the community. We do not claim that all which the church has sought to repress was essentially evil or deleterious, any more than all which the church has sought to express was uniformly good or desirable. But when we have made all allowance for the mistakes, follies, and even stupidities, which can be easily found in the history of the influence which she has brought to bear upon humanity's development, it is abundantly clear that the church has been a valuable, faithful and efficient chaperone to society, as she has made her unsteady journey from the low-lying valleys of ignorance and superstition up to the altitudes of present knowledge and power.

Though this is true, it is not all of the truth; for the church is equally the debtor of society, and in her service to man she has drawn her very life and developed her power. A church powerless to appeal to humanity, and divorced from men and women in all the broad and helpful sympathies of life, is a pitiful spectacle of desuetude and ceases to be a praise unto God because no longer of service to man. When the church ceases to walk with God she loses the luster of divine prestige and forfeits his association; but, it is also true that in ceasing to function manward in conveying the heavenly riches to supply humanity's needs, she is outcast from men; and, being outcast from men, she is rejected of God. Next to being God-forsaken, there is nothing so pathetically tragic as a church scorned by earth and man.

LOSING INFLUENCE

There are not wanting evidences to support the fear that the church is in grave danger to-day of losing touch with mankind and rapidly losing her influence in the affairs of men. The outlook is alarming, to say the least, and should arouse us to earnest consideration of the situation from the critic's point of view.

Statistics prove that the church is very largely discredited by university-trained men, and our census shows conclusively that she is forsaken by the toiling masses and regarded by multitudes as a moribund relic of a forgotten past. In so many of the vital and important affairs of everyday concern she is either ignored altogether or tolerated with impatience or phlegm.

The relation of the church to the various intellectual, religious and social phases of the crisis is more than an academic question. It is a matter of life and death for both the church and the new social order. No man who faces it honestly can treat it flippantly.

This is the statement of one of the most popular professors of comparative religion in America to-day.

WHERE DO WE STAND?

While we have referred to the church generally, can we claim to be guiltless ourselves in this great question of social service? Have we not been interested in making the chasm between ourselves institutionally, and all who differ from us in any way wide and deep, to prevent even the possibility of overlapping? Does not our ecclesiastical legislation suggest that time and again we have sought to divorce ourselves from those things which interest other people, and steadfastly (and I fear rather pompously), prided ourselves in the number and greatness of the disparities in ideals, methods and purposes which exist between us and our fellows?

I do not say that there should not be a difference fundamental and profound. The very purpose of the gospel is to cultivate in us a love for what God loves and a hatred for what God hates and the church must stand institutionally for the organizing of men and women into a society living under the intimate and immediate rule of God, in contradistinction to the others who may be organized as a society living apart from God. But has this been as much our concern as the desire to establish differences in beliefs, rites, methods and machineries and even terminologies and phrases? The ideal of "walking not as other Gentiles walk" is superlatively grand; but does not "walking" suggest activities in the commonplaces of life rather than creeds and philosophies and regulations?

While we are punctilious in some matters which belong to the class already named, is there any discernible difference in our tastes, habits and ideals in life. We claim a "knowledge" of the truth which makes us free; but has the knowledge developed culture in our lives in such a way that words mean any more, or possess a different content from the same words as they may be used by others? Do we treat our fellow man as a potential "Son of God and brother of the Lord Jesus"? Have we any deeper and truer reverence for womankind as the mother of a race of those destined to people the world to come as companions of God, without which our prayers are unavailing? Are our domestic, social, political, commercial methods different from our fellows, with all the difference that is between God and mammon? I could answer my own questions if I could see your face and look into your eye as you glance nonchalantly over these words. Yet these are the things that count, and the things which God will judge in eternity.

Is the neighborhood cleaner, saner and holier for our having lived in it? Does the community in politics stand for civic righteousness so determinedly as to silence the threats or flatteries of the sycophants who seek to beguile the unsensitized minds of our neighbors who do not claim the same divine association? Is there a real difference in our conversation, our habits of making and spending, or maybe, using money, of deporting ourselves altogether so that involuntarily people say: "These have been with Jesus and learned of his ways"? Is there this difference?

I will not examine our attitude in general to advanced education, but simply say that while claiming to be quite "unsectarian" we have been very closely identified with sectarianism in this attitude of suspicion and opposition. We will not pause to note the lamentable and at times humiliating zeal with which men have been assailed because they did not think according to chapter — and verse — or section — or resolution number — and have maintained a stolid indifference to the fact that all men are not alike, but when "a man is born of the Spirit," it "bloweth where it listeth" and "thou canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth." We have forgotten that beauty is made up of infinite variety in unity.

In matters of political, social and commercial import, as well as religious, we have been more concerned about the questions: What favors us? What is expedient? How will it affect me or at the most "our people"? Forgetting the question of supreme moment, is it right? Is it just? Is it helpful? To paraphrase Coleridge, we are perilously near to loving Christ better than we love the truth, or loving the church better than we love Christ, or loving ourselves better than we love the church.

For the very life of the church we must get a bigger and broader vision; we must establish real, vital contact with the community; we must reach out and grip the hand of our fellows, and in all the ways of cheerful service must prove our worthiness of heaven by a generous distribution of grace and power and sweetness in the lives of the people among whom we live. One of the joys and most valued possessions of the church is its missionary heritage, but we do not have to send men across seas into dark and heathen lands to make them missionaries.

COOPERATION A SOCIAL CENTER

To be sure the church can not substitute for the home, school and other institutions which the community needs for the culture, amusement and training of its members, but it must cooperate with them in the general work of using what we have to-day to make a better to-morrow. It must fill these institutional means with the light and life of the Lord and Master, so that all of these activities shall make for a better and nobler and a more Christianlike society, and thus encourage "the coming of the day of our Lord."

The diseases of society are painfully in evidence, and if only we will discuss the matter with ordinary common sense, we shall see the futility of dealing with these by the theological niceties, philosophical pedantries, or ecclesiastical routine which have characterized so much of our church endeavor; as Shailer Matthews of Chicago University puts it:

With all the stern realities of uncoordinated social life pressing in upon Christian people, it is suicidal to waste time discussing the calculus of religion. With the sanctity of the home threatened by reckless divorces and even more reckless marriages, with a generation polluted by a mania for gambling, with saloons and brothels at its door, why should the church pause to manicure its theology? Facing a world in the darkness of heathenism, a submerged tenth rotting in our cities, an industrialism that is more murderous than war, why should the church stop to make a belief in the historicity of the great fish of Jonah a test of fitness for cooperation in aggressive evangelization?

The duty of the church as a center of social service is clearly outlined by the same author in the following laconic statement:

Church members may hold different opinions as to socialism, monarchy, trusts, prohibition, evolution, and a thousand other things, but a church as a social institution is concerned with none of them. It must educate its members in the principles governing Christian conduct; it must inspire men to value men as Jesus valued them in the light of an impending eternity; it must teach them to do right by society at any cost; it must bring them into vital relationship with God, that their lives may get something of the divine expansion; and then it must trust them to act freely as their own intelligence and judgment shall dictate.

The effect of the church upon the neighborhood must make that neighborhood better as betterment is understood in the Christian sense. Probably in no way can that influence be employed to better advantage than to seek to win the young people over to the side of Christ in their ordinary interests in life, so that their culture, social functions, and even amusements shall be developed in this atmosphere, in a way that neither schools nor churches are doing, or even able to do, at the present time. On all sides we are being made to realize that much effort is lost and many noble enterprises by way of evangelical efforts are disappointing, which could all be employed in other directions if we had saved our young people before they were victimized by sin and sorrow. In this vast field of opportunity our church has not as yet begun to work seriously, though we have dimly discerned the opening and the possibilities as evidenced by our Religio and Auxiliary for Social Service; but in some way we have missed the proper connection, and have not the results to hand we should like to have.

Everywhere we see concrete evidences of the church's failure to cultivate these provinces, and in which other institutions are bending their energies to these tasks in such a way as to produce results: I refer to the Young Men's Christian Association; Young Women's Christian Association; The Christian Endeavor; the Epworth League; the Boy Scout movement and the Camp Fire Girls, to which may be added our Religio Society. In spite of these well-equipped and popular organizations doing good work, it seems very evident that all of the demands are not being adequately met, for all over the States community institutes are springing up, having definite programs for the purpose of influencing the neighborhoods intellectually, ethically and spiritually. Such institutions are continually widening their fields of operation and accelerating their efforts in these and concomitant avenues.

ADVANCE STEPS

In Independence the urgent need of such a movement was felt, and some time ago an organization of men and women developed in a quite unofficial manner, having the definite purpose in view of winning the confidence and good will of the young people, so as to secure something like comradeship, and through comradeship, supervision over their recreations and pastimes, and seeking to bring them into allegiance with the church and all that the church stands for.

It will also be remembered that two or three years ago the Religio convention appointed a committee, which is still in existence, I believe, to review the situation and bring in suggestions as to ways and means of reaching some of these ends, and attempting to solve some of these very problems. As a direct result of this effort the Religio Society this year is taking advance steps to actualize some of the suggestions advanced at that time, and we here offer an excerpt from the record of the proceedings of the convention:

DEPARTMENTAL SUGGESTIONS

We suggest that each general officer do more active individual work along departmental lines, by correspondence, keeping in touch with all districts, and through the respective district officers reach every local officer in the association, and in this manner more vigorously push the work, especially along the lines of activity suggested by the "Merger Committee": The president as head of the program work, encouraging musical development, debating, expanded literary programs, manual and vocational training, establishment of night schools, etc.

The vice president as head of social work, to encourage amusements and entertainments, athletic activities, improvement of conditions surrounding the young people of rural districts, vacational activities, such as summer camps, etc.

The secretary as head of the Lookout Committee to suggest ways and means of more extensive advertising of our work, the keeping of cleaner records, the conducting of an exchange department wherein district officers may come for suggestions for programs, for reunion and district work.

The treasurer to suggest ways and means whereby the relief committee can do more active work along lines of mutual helpfulness, conducting employment bureaus, training to take care of the sick, teaching sanitation, hygiene, home economics, etc.

The good literature superintendent to work up a connection with the Bureau of Publicity of the church where needed, and in every way operate with the Board of Publication, encouraging the reading of church literature, etc.

The librarian as member of the Library Commission to keep in touch with the district library boards, writing leaflets of instruction to meet changing conditions.

And that definite reports be required.

With a view, therefore, to awakening the church to a sense of widening opportunities which the Religio is affording to all who wish to make the church a factor in communal uplift, we commend these suggestions. Though it is immaterial whether the effort shall be made by the local churches, the Sunday schools or Religios, or even by the people of the community themselves, for in this work it is desired that all shall work together cooperatively, we can not afford to remain aloof. The church through some agencies and avenues must establish comradeship with the social forces, and especially with our young people in their quest for pleasure, amusement and recreation, and so arrest some of the cardinal evils which threaten us alarmingly.

SUGGESTIONS

We call attention to the following tentative program and outline of organization:

Organization: President; vice president; secretary, and treasurer; whose duties shall be the usual ones of such officers.

A board of twelve directors, who shall be men and women interested in the work and capable of discerning the needs, and also have the ability to bring the ones who have what others may need into core-relationship, whether educationally, morally, or along lines of recreation and amusement. This board's greatest work should be to discover leadership.

With this organization and a few by-laws in which the work of the movement is outlined, the work can be commenced. It can not be insisted upon too often that the work to be of value must be directed to the whole life, not overemphasizing some feature and neglecting others. Paul's analysis of man and the list of component parts he supplies will give a working basis for the details of this program—body, mind and spirit. So there must be provision for physical, mental and religious culture, that each one may be better qualified to take his or her place as a citizen, whether in the home life, or business mart; or as a professional man, or in public service.

While we believe that the destiny of the race is to be "Sons of God," we must not overlook the fact that man commences his career as an animal. To succeed in our work we must, therefore, take the community as we find it, and not as we would like it to be. And the secret of success in this community effort is precisely the secret of the atonement, which is the basis of all uplift, viz, in order that man may be elevated to companionship with God, God must condescend to the level of man's capacity; hence all service which is availing must begin with a sympathetic attempt to understand and appreciate the subject of that effort.

It is well to bear in mind also that the success of this work depends upon getting as large a number of people interested as possible, and to do this all must be considered and so far as possible be provided for. A narrowing of the interests will inevitably result in a lessening of influence and a reduction of the number of people reached, thus defeating the very object in view.

The subjects which might be selected will depend upon the neighborhood, and also upon the ability of those who are available for the work, but the following will suggest what can be done.

A forum in which subjects of public interest can be introduced and discussed, by which enthusiasm for self-government could be generated, and an agency thus created for the voicing of public protests, desires and aims.

Classes for the study of grammar, literature, current history in newspapers and magazines, astronomy, elocution, music, art, political and social economy, and any other subject which may be desired.

Groups of young people could be gathered together for the purposes of forming choral unions, philharmonic societies, orchestras and glee clubs, cultivating a taste for both vocal and instrumental music, to the edification and pleasure of the community and also the discovery and development of talent.

Study classes for young girls in domestic science, hygiene, nursing, tatting, crocheting, sewing, embroidery, dressmaking, cooking and housekeeping, etc.

Classes for the study of painting, drawing and ceramics.

For the boys there are many similar studies in technology which could be developed, and through the means of a very inexpensive book, elementary and experimental studies in science could be indulged in.

Classes for the study of history, theology, finance and polity of the church; for the study of civics and other matters of public interest, such as the water supply, the sanitary arrangements of town life, and the various forms of municipal control and government, all of which will have to be studied somehow and sometime; a study of the methods and basis and objects of taxation both for town, country and State; all of which will help to develop a sense of public honor and usefulness, which will be of immense value to society at large.

Clubs for the study and practice of dramatics, others for debate and public speaking.

A lyceum bureau for providing lectures and other public entertainments.

For recreation which both sexes need, athletics, games and sport, could be systematized and arranged by some one qualified for the work: Lawn tennis, croquet, cricket, fives, baseball, etc. Swimming and occasional rambles or hikes for the double purposes of exercise and fresh air; also studying nature, botany, entomology and topography, as well as local history.

In the winter, chess, checkers and other games, of which there are many of a proper and enjoyable character.

This catalogue can be extended and varied ad infinitum; but in addition there are many things which can be done in this community arrangement, such as keeping lawns cleaned and cut, cultivating flower gardens and truck gardens, as well as generating a wholesome rivalry among neighbors on keeping the premises cleaned and freed from garbage and other accumulations of waste, which, besides being unsightly, are dangerous to the health of the community. Boys and girls could be enthused and trained to expend the energy which too frequently is put into mischief and some annoying freaks, in doing helpful work in these ways for those who are too infirm, or in other ways not able to do it for themselves.

A FEW PAMPHLETS

We note a few of the pamphlets which can be had for writing, or the expenditure of but a few cents, and these will give a wonderful variety of ways and means of reaching these ends we have but briefly referred to. We append the bibliography which we recommend to all interested.

Recreation and Culture, by Reverend Peter Jacobs, B. D.

A Year's Experience in Social Center Work, by Clinton S. Childs.

The Recreation Movement, by G. T. Kirby.

Saturday Afternoon Walks, by Dora Allen.

Problems of Dramatic Play, by Mrs. H. S. Braucher.

Seventeenth Annual Report of the People's Institute, New York.

The High School as a Social Center, by C. A. Perry.

A Handbook of Suggestions and Programs for Community Social Gatherings, by M. P. Shawkey.

Then to enlarge one's knowledge of the subject read, Sources of Information on Recreation, by L. F. F. Hanmer and H. R. Knight.

J. W. RUSHTON.

* * * * *

WHERE DO WE STAND?--NUMBER 2

BY J. AUGUST KOEHLER

COMMON CONSENT

All things shall be done by common consent in the church.

Cooperation originates in like-mindedness; it develops into various forms, step by step, as we come to see things alike and feel that we are agreed upon what we shall undertake to do. Reason and experience plainly teach that.

In the church there is no law by which we can compel a man to pay tithes, or preach, or accept any position or responsibility. The service that is rendered is purely voluntary service. Thinking men and women do not give themselves over to any kind of undertaking indefinitely without some assurance that the undertaking is a proper one. Those things which appear of greatest interest and give promise of success are the things that get the first and heartiest support of all men. In these facts we find a sufficient reason for the rule of "common consent."

The work that lies before the church is a cooperative work. It is my business, your business, the business of every man who becomes a part of it. And on these grounds only can it be said that "the work (is) intrusted to all." (Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.)

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God or the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

As already stated, whenever a man sets his hand to do voluntarily he does because he thinks he has a valid reason for doing it. He may be altogether misinformed, yet he acts upon what to him appears to be a sufficient reason for thus acting. The "vision" a man has of anything determines the things which have his mental assent or consent, and the appearance in the mind of several individuals of the same idea at the same time is the basis for the common consent of that group. To this thought we have to add the thought that those things which appear of greatest interest and give promise of success are the things which get the first and heartiest support of all men. Then if we are to get the "common consent" of the church to the things which the church undertakes to do, we must present to the mind of the membership such a "picture" of the thing intended or desired to be done as will enable the mind first to apprehend its true character, and second to see involved in the undertaking a matter of such personal concern as to warrant them in giving it personal support. Then if the interest appears great enough and the hope of success strong enough to warrant action, the support of the individual and the united effort of the group is assured.

We can not divide our membership on an official basis or any other basis, and say that this circle of men is the policy-determining element in the church without disturbing that feeling of equality and sympathy so essential to success in the kind of work that lies before the church. This does not mean that we may pursue with impunity any policy we may determine upon; but we are to work "with God"—that is, we are to work God's way. Each individual is to do that; and each individual can not do that unless he perceives the thing God wants done. And obviously to work together with God, we must see together what God wants done. And before we will work together we must come to understand each other and feel that we are agreed upon what we shall undertake to do.

It would be a really unfortunate thing if one man or a coterie of men made the sad mistake of imagining themselves possessed of the right to think out, determine, and execute the policies of the church without regard to the attitude of the membership toward them, or without taking the membership as a whole into their confidence so that they may feel that the work is their work, and that they understand what is to be done and feel that they are agreed that it shall be done.

Now where do we stand on this matter? I am afraid that some have thought that "silence gives consent"; that the absence of a protest against certain doings is a sign of acquiescence in those doings: a sort of common consent. I am afraid that some have thought that a majority or perhaps unanimous vote to retain them in certain offices was an indorsement of their ideas, and a sign that the people would not think their own thoughts but the thoughts of the one for whom they voted. Voting for a measure is the most insignificant part of the principle of common consent, if indeed it is any part of the fundamental idea at all. What men give their common consent to, they support whether they vote for it or not; and what they do not give their common consent to, they do not support heartily, in spite of the fact that they may have voted for it.

Here I want to confess. I want to confess for others, too. And I am willing to admit that the fault may be ours, but it is nevertheless true that we have had considerable difficulty ascertaining what has been doing in temporal lines in the church, and still more difficulty in finding out what is intended to be done. I have often been asked what progress we are making as a church toward the ideals set for us by the Lord; I confess that I have been unable to give any kind of satisfactory answer. Is it possible for this church to advance toward an ideal that it has fixed as a goal, and be under the necessity at the same time of inquiring what that ideal is? Where is your common consent when the membership at large do not know what we are doing, and find themselves under the necessity of inquiring of the elders as they come among them what the church intends to do? I say the church has not intended when the church does not know.

I have been summarily eliminated from a general discussion on church policies because my ideas were at variance with those of the leaders of the meeting. It is the business of any leader or head of any department of church work to see that those upon whose support the success of the work depends are in sympathy with the thing intended to be done. And yet it appears that those who should have been most active in securing the common consent have in some cases been indifferent to the attitude of the membership at large, or unable to satisfy the inquiring mind. Answers to questions have often been ambiguous, or too obscure to be understood. Now this ought not to be. The bread and butter question lies too close to the human heart, it is too vital to our spiritual interests to be handled indifferently or in any other way without common consent. The experience of the race, and the circumstances in which we find ourselves as a church to-day, demonstrate that God is right: that "all things shall be done by common consent in the church."

Ordination gives no man a mental superiority that he did not before possess. Whenever a man gets into office who thinks it does, of course he is likely to be reluctant to consider the ideas of any who may not belong to his coterie; and such men often dogmatically oppose any public declaration of ideas not in accord with their own. Such men will probably have forgotten (or perhaps they never knew) that there can be no true public opinion where men are not in continual communication and free to express their real minds without restraint or fear.

I submit that we need more public and private discussion of the vital issues before the church. "Public opinion comes into existence only when a sympathetic like-mindedness or an agreement in belief is subjected to criticism, started by some skeptical individual who doubts the truth of the belief or the wisdom of the agreement; and an opinion is then thought out to which many communicating minds can yield (or give) their rational assent." It is true that we are not all equally qualified to think through a proposition, yet any man of ordinary intelligence may share and must share in the creation of critical judgments if we are to have a true public opinion. All that is necessary is that each individual shall have given a matter sufficient thought to feel that he has arrived at a judgment for which he can give a reason. His reason may be a poor one in the mind of another, but yet it satisfies him quite as well as does a better reason satisfy the man who is capable of better judgments. The chief thing is that there shall be such a free and wide discussion of church policies that each member shall feel that he has grounds for supporting them.

I know of no way of getting together so that we can truly be "workers together with God" for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all, except to discuss the issues everywhere, at home, in the pew and in the pulpit, in the district and stake conferences, and through the HERALD too. I am sure that no man need fear that any idea of merit he has to advance will not receive the consideration to which it is entitled unless he uses the prestige of his office to get it before the people.

Now I don't think we have stood just right on this matter of common consent. Our failure to get results in our temporal policies attests that fact. If anyone wishes to say that the effort to get common consent has been all that could be expected, then I say that the policies we have pursued must have been such as could not have secured the common consent of the church. If that is true, then we have done that which is contrary to the law of God—the rule of common consent. I need offer no more in proof (which proof all already have) than our present financial poverty as an institution.

Now, Where do we stand?

(To be continued.)

* * * * *

Far over sea and land,
Go at your Lord's command;
Bear ye his name;
Bear it to every shore,
Regions unknown explore,
Enter at every door;
Silence is shame.

—Thomas Kelley.

SOWING AND REAPING

The entire universe is governed by the laws of cause and effect; and the things we see are only the logical outgrowth of the things that have been, for it is the order of nature that effect should follow cause, just as night follows the day.

Every condition prevailing in the world, among men, is the result of some previous cause, or succession of causes. Until we discover and obey this law our efforts or attempts to regenerate the world will be of but little value, and each one in its turn will meet with defeat. But if this law is understood and utilized it will only be a matter of time until our fondest desires and highest ideals will become realities, the baser elements will be eliminated, and the sublime will be acquired. Upon the wreckage of the past will be reared a moral structure supremely beautiful.

Man must reap the fruits of his labors. It has long since been declared that "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Therefore, so long as we persist in sowing the seeds of thistles, we must continue to root up the thistles. But when we cease scattering the seeds that produce such, we will discover at once that we have less to weed out. Then they will become less numerous until we have the soil entirely free. Whether these seeds be scattered intentionally, or carelessly, the effect is the same; they will have to be rooted up. The task too, in either case, would be equally laborious.

Let it be remembered that each of us has a little "heart garden" to cultivate; and it is for us to decide, individually, what the fruitage shall be. The seeds we plant in this "heart garden" are thoughts; these thoughts take root and produce a plant called "habit," which matures into a tree. This tree we designate as character; and upon this tree hangs the fruitage of life. If the seeds that have been planted are good, then the plant, or tree, will also be good, and the fruit good. If the seeds were bad, then of necessity both the tree and its fruit must be bad. Further, if both good and bad seeds have been planted we might well look for a mixture of good and bad fruit and it may be difficult in some cases to properly separate them.

Thoughts that are pure, true, noble, uplifting, and virtuous will produce actions that correspond with them; those acts repeated will produce habits of sterling quality; and those habits will reveal a God-like character upon which the fruits of righteousness will hang in abundance.

If I think only selfish thoughts, my character will be laden with the fruits of selfishness.

If I think only thoughts of love, the fruits of love will adorn my life.

If I think pure thoughts, purity will be my crowning virtue.

So we can rise to any height, or sink to any depth we may choose; our thoughts determine for us the course we will, and must pursue. By dwelling on the impure in thought we will sink beneath the level of the beast but by clinging to the sublime and pure, the heaven of heavens shall become our blissful, immortal, habitation.

It is well, therefore, to remember that the thing we give, we receive in return; and it comes to us with an increase. If we would reap the best, the best must be planted by us; for we can not sow inferior seed and expect to reap a superior harvest. If we contribute little or nothing for the good of society, little will be returned to us for good; but if we give liberally and sacrifice greatly for the uplift of our fellows, we will find ourselves abundantly supplied with all things needed. Consequently, our life will become a joy unto us, as well as a benediction unto all with whom we come in contact. We will thereby prove to our own satisfaction the truthfulness of the Master's words, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

The man therefore, who makes wise choice of material for thought, who carefully manages and assimilates the same, shall be accounted wise; for he shall have access unto a never-failing fountain of knowledge, he shall pluck the ripened fruit from the immortal tree of wisdom, and by his kind words and gentle spirit shall cheer and gladden the hearts and lives of all about him.

Thus by sincere planting, and persistent cultivating are the fruits of divine goodness, universal knowledge, and perfect patience matured and ripened in the lives and characters of men who have been willing to forego temporary pleasures for the universal good of a perishing people.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

---

Of General Interest

PROHIBITION PROHIBITS

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, July 3.—There is plenty of evidence to show that prohibition actually prohibits. Naturally, the most certain proof of this is the fact that the Government receipts from whisky sources are falling off by leaps and bounds. Even after a big section of the country had adopted prohibition laws, and other and larger sections had voted the saloon out of existence, the supporters of the liquor interests continued to assert that prohibition, the county unit, and other temperance measures were failures. As proof of this they pointed out, among other things, that the internal revenue receipts were as large or practically as large as ever.

TRUTH OUT

But the cat has been let out of the bag. It has developed that the distillers, in an effort to bluff the thing through, got together and decided that they would make whisky in the usual quantities, store it in the bonded warehouses, get certificates in return, and use these certificates as collateral. And, in those days, these certificates were as good collateral as one would want. Then, backed by the money secured on these certificates, the distillers tried to break the backbone of the prohibition fight by assertions that they were making as much whisky as ever, and that, as a natural sequence, they were selling as much as ever.

But it did not take so very long, comparatively, for this specious plea to wear out. The bonded whisky did not sell as fast as the distillers had hoped. Prohibition territory continued to increase, and the whisky certificates began to lose the place they formerly had in the financial world; they weren't just as acceptable as collateral as they had been. The holders of newly issued certificates made a wry face when this fact was impressed upon them, but they continued in their efforts to bluff the thing out.

PRODUCTION IS LESS

There was one thing they did not do, however, and that was to make as much whisky as formerly. It took time for this falling off in the output of liquor to have an effect on internal revenue receipts, but finally it did, and to-day any attaché of the internal revenue office at Washington or elsewhere will bear witness to the fact that the slump in receipts has begun. This means that the turn in the road has come. From now on each succeeding annual report will show a gradually decreasing revenue from liquors of various kinds, and the old bluff, "Just look at the internal revenue receipts," will not go.

Incidentally, the tendency on the part of financial institutions to recognize the depreciation in the value of the whisky collateral will have the effect of weakening to just that extent the other specious plea of the liquor forces that prohibition will mean the dealing of a death blow to great commercial institutions; that banks will suffer, etc. The wise bankers seem to have made up their minds that they will put themselves in a position where they will not be caught, and warehouse receipts will be scanned the more closely in the future, that conditions surrounding the prohibition outlook may be gauged carefully before the acceptance of such receipts at the value put upon them in the past.

When the time does arrive that the opponents of prohibition will be unable to go before the public with the plea that financial institutions, business concerns, etc., will suffer if prohibition prevails, and this time is coming, the way to victory for the prohibition workers will be all the easier. Also, when the future Congress convenes the advocates of the wets will not be able to consistently base their claims on the great amount of revenue which the Government would lose through the advent of prohibition, unless they make such comparisons as will show that this revenue is decreasing year by year.—The New Republic, July 9, 1915.

* * * * *

JEWS AND FUTURE OF PALESTINE

During the week several gatherings have been held in commemoration of the centenary of the formation of the Bristol Auxiliary to the Society for the Promotion of Christianity Among the Jews. Last night a large congregation assembled at the cathedral at a thanksgiving service forming part of the celebration.

Canon E. A. Stuart of Canterbury Cathedral, preached from Deuteronomy 6:4, 5, and prefaced his remarks upon that passage by explaining that they had gathered to offer their thanksgiving for having been permitted to celebrate the centenary of the formation of the Bristol Auxiliary to the London Society for the Promotion of Christianity Among the Jews. Israel, as a nation, not only had a wonderful past, but a wonderful future. Many of them believed that those prophecies which foretold the future of Israel were upon the eve of being marvelously fulfilled.

Any student of what was now taking place in the world must realize events would probably happen within the next few months, or within the next few years, which they could never have dreamed of a few years ago. It was certain that Palestine and the countries bordering upon it would possess—might he not say already possessed?—an importance which they had not a few years ago. The draining of the Euphrates Valley, the building of various railways, and the general trend of affairs seemed to point out that Palestine and the adjoining countries would possess an importance of which they never dreamed. And when they added to that the fact that the Jewish nation had been going back so fast—the numbers who had gone back in the past fifteen years seemed almost incredible; and when they found the faith, even among those nations now at war, that the Jews would return to their old land, one must realize that the Jew once again with the promised land in his possession, would become a power in the future in the world and would have an enormous influence upon the world generally.

How important then, that that people should realize all that God had for them, that they should learn what their Messiah came to bring them, learn all the lessons the Lord Jesus Christ came to teach his own people, and turn to him as their Prince and ruler. It seemed that the society was doing the spade work for this important consummation, and it was their privilege, after a hundred years of steady, quiet, underground work, to see the accomplishment of that for which they had been working so long.—Western Daily Press, June 11, 1915, published at Bristol, England.

* * * * *

CHURCH STATISTICS FOR 1914

The year 1914 is one presenting an encouraging record for the churches. New communicants or members added make good all places made vacant by death, expulsion, or withdrawal, and leave a surplus of nearly three quarters of a million. Such is the general result of Doctor H. K. Carroll's annual compilation of figures forming the statistics of the churches. He finds the total membership to have been 763,078 greater than it was in 1913. This is an average increase of 2 per cent, for all bodies great and small, Christian and non-Christian. The details of the gains and losses of each denomination are given in the elaborate tables issued by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. The grand total of members is put at 38,708,149. All the larger denominations share in the increase. Methodists head the list of Protestant churches with gains of 231,460; following them are Baptists, 122,125; Lutherans, 56,248; Presbyterians, 56,019; Eastern Orthodox Churches, 36,500; German Evangelical Synod, representing the State Church of Prussia, 29,315; Protestant Episcopal, 28,641. The Roman Catholic gains are given as 136,850. Further statements of The Press Service of the Federal Council are:

The Protestant Episcopal Church has crossed the million line, having gained 86,468 since 1910, and over 300,000 since 1900.

The Roman Catholic Church has gained nearly a million and a quarter since 1910 and more than five and a half millions since 1900.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, the second largest denomination, gained 187,487 in 1914, and nearly 700,000 since 1900.

The thirty churches constituting the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America report, as will be seen, nearly 17,500,000 members, somewhat less than half of the aggregate for all denominations, with 103,000 ministers and nearly 139,000 churches. These bodies have a net increase of over 500,000 members, or more than two thirds of the entire increase of all bodies.

There are nine denominations which have a million and upward: the Roman Catholic, 13,794,637; the Methodist Episcopal, 3,603,265; the Southern Baptist, 2,592,217; the National Baptist (Colored), 2,018,868; the Methodist Episcopal, South, 2,005,707; the Presbyterian, Northern, 1,442,498; the Disciples of Christ, 1,363,163; the Northern Baptist Convention, 1,238,323; and the Protestant Episcopal, 1,015,238. These seven denominations aggregate over 29,000,000 members, or more than three fourths of the entire aggregate of the 170 religious bodies.

The effects on church membership of the European war in narrowing the stream of emigration were probably quite small, as only the last five months of the year were involved. The emigration of men to take part in the great conflict would not be a very large factor, for the same reason. The German bodies—Lutheran, Reformed, and the representatives of the Prussian State Church—all show unusual gains for 1914. On the other hand, Roman Catholic gains are quite small. . . .

The total increase of ministers was 3,212, which is unusually large, while the total increase of churches was 1,441, which is unusually small.

When these figures are considered together with the related fact that church expenditures last year were $410,000,000, "the largest amount in the history of American Christianity and larger than the sums given by Christians of any other country," it is evidence to the Brooklyn Eagle of "a healthful and vigorous church life." And it is noted "that this growth takes place alongside of a general decline in the old-fashioned 'revivals.'" For Billy Sunday is given credit for only a small part of the 760,000 net increase.—The Literary Digest, February 27, 1915.

---

The Staff

AUDENTIA ANDERSON, INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI

Musical Convention

"As thy days, so shall thy strength be," is a promise which has been emphasized unto us within the last few weeks. Amidst the tumult and confusion attendant upon the breaking up of our home in one place and preparations for its removal to another, came the "call to arms" for a music convention at Independence, and we wondered how it could all be accomplished in so short a space of time. But the needed help was forthcoming, and the dream became a glorious reality,—one which will leave a lasting influence for good to the cause of music in this locality.

A program committee, a publicity committee, and another on entertainment, where the active principles which, coupled with Brother Hoxie's enthusiastic use of the special deliveries, the telegraph and the telephone, spelled the word success so far as the preliminaries were concerned. Then the hearty support from those invited to participate, and the wonderful interest and enthusiasm with which their efforts were received, all combined to produce a convention which shall long be remembered.

It started off with a gathering at the home of Brother Ralph Smith, on Friday evening, the 2d. Here Brother Hoxie was met with a free and animated exchange of thoughts and ideas upon the subject of the music suitable for the choirs of the church,—small as well as great. A start was made towards the selection of some anthems, and the two meetings on Saturday were marked by even greater enthusiasm on this, and other absorbing topics. The wonderful spirit of mutual helpfulness and consecration which was in evidence gave to all these councils and inspiration and a glory which warmed and encouraged the hearts of these workers in the vineyard,—for workers they are in very deed! In fact, the greatest success goes hand in hand with the hardest work, when it comes to the service of music. Talent and genius along this line, as is true of any other, is only a talent and a capacity for hard work and steady application, and success and perfection lie only along that path.

Saturday evening a choir of a hundred members greeted the general chorister and partook of his boundless enthusiasm in the preparation of the chorus numbers for the next day.

Sunday morning at eleven o'clock an immense crowd listened to the program, which lasted an hour and a half. Addresses and papers were interspersed with musical numbers, all of the utmost interest to lovers of music and the service of song in the gathering of the Saints. Three of the papers read at this session are presented in this number of the Staff, and we hope to be able to give our readers the others at a later date.

In the evening a grand concert rounded out the public sessions of this convention. The local musicians and singers were assisted by the following visitors: A. N. Hoxie, from New York, Paul N. Craig from Omaha, and Mrs. Mary Kinman Sauer and Miss Juanita Bertrand from Saint Joseph, the two latter giving a most wonderful concerto for two pianos, written by Tschaiowsky. The close attention given every number on this program, which lasted two full hours, attests the passionate love our people have for music in any of its forms, and is also an evidence of their taste for the best in that line.

Monday and Tuesday forenoons were held council meetings of the choristers. The outcome of all these consultations may be partially indicated by the important and joy-giving announcements found elsewhere in our columns. The earnest consideration of all subjects which have to do with the progress and development of the various phases of the choir work resulted in a closer union of interests among the choristers, as well as to give them a more definite outline of work for the coming year. The reflection of the spiritual uplift and guidance experienced at this convention will be far-reaching in its scope, and will prove of benefit and encouragement to many. May the movements spread, and let us hear of many more conventions among our people, where the sacred cause of music, and its development in harmony with divine command, may be discussed and illustrated, and its power increasingly recognized as a great and well-appreciated factor for good in the latter-day work.

A. A.

A Great Inspiration

As I return home and am recounting the joys and privileges of these last few days, I begin to realize that these have been the most wonderful experiences I have ever enjoyed in church work; and to those who are interested in the progressive features of the general choir movement this brief sketch of the work accomplished will no doubt prove interesting.

On my way West, I was met by Edward Bell, our newly appointed assistant general chorister, and later was in attendance at a gathering of the Saint Louis District Choir, which has accomplished so much under his direction. The enthusiasm of this occasion, the loyalty to their director, the marked love for their work and earnestness in going about it, form a happy combination which points to the accomplishment of yet bigger things. It was an honor and privilege to conduct, play, and offer a few words of encouragement.

The next day found me in Independence, and a more consecrated, earnest body of workers never met to formulate plans for the general choir movement. Right from the firing line were they, with live-wire, practical suggestions, and the prevailing sentiment and spirit of the occasion was to sense the needs and longings of the masses, and work unceasingly until that longing is satisfied. Then, and not until then, will the choir movement become a great, living, throbbing power in the church.

Our work since the inception of this movement has been to coordinate the musical interests of the church. To a great extent this has been done. The musical fraternity of the church to-day are of one heart and mind, and are working side by side with only one thought in mind—service.

How can we serve you! Are the songs we are singing helping you to bear the heavy load? Do they contain that element of inspiration that lifts you out of self, into beautiful realms of thought, urging you to live better, enabling you to see a broader vision of the gospel and its plan of salvation?

Those who were present that Sunday evening in Independence, participating in that wonderful hymn, "Yes, we trust the day is breaking," felt, no doubt, as I did, that we were living a moment of inspiration that is seldom the lot of mortal man to enjoy. Who could tell what ideals were formed in those few minutes of fleeting time! It seemed to me as that vast congregation lifted up their voices, led by the combined choirs, pipe organ, the two pianos and orchestra, that the Saints were returning thanks to God in song for the thoughts expressed during the day, mainly to the effect that as leaders of the choirs of Zion we would not rest until the music they require and desire is forthcoming.

As that wonderful volume of harmonious sound rolled forth its mighty message, came the thought that if I were a poet I could write a message, a preacher I could deliver it, a musician, the music to his words could set. It should have inspired every soul. It mattered little whether we were physicians or molders, weavers or clerks, housewives or nurses, it made us feel that life was a great, big thing to be made the most of; and it brought home to us that music is not a needless accomplishment in our lives, but a real necessity.

I could dwell at length upon the concert program of the convention, and the splendid institute work that distinguished the morning session, but these two great meetings are reported elsewhere, and the papers are to be published in the Staff for your thoughtful consideration.

The choristers' sessions were undoubtedly the most important we have ever had. Unity and harmony prevailed, and discussions were always with an end in view of solving the perplexing problems. These meetings were characterized by a wonderful degree of the Spirit, and plans were laid that will put the choir movement before the church in a different light.

The graded course of music selected by the choristers will undoubtedly create an international interest, and will form a basis for work that will appeal strongly to the newly organized choir, as well as those who feel they can accomplish bigger things. To suit the needs of all is our aim, engaging as many in the work as can and will respond, and always with an end in view of being what it is designed to be, a loyal, consecrated arm of the church, supplying the need that is felt, and fulfilling the requirement of revelation.

Space will not permit me to outline all that is in my heart and mind, but I want to impress upon you that the call of Christ to-day is for service. Are you ready to occupy?

I wish to thank all my western friends for the loyalty and love expressed in the preparation for this great camp fire, and may the inspiration gleaned be the stepping-stone to our greater choir movement.

ALBERT N. HOXIE.

Oratorios and Their Value in Our Work

(Read by Mrs. W. N. Robinson before the music convention at Independence, Missouri, July 4, 1915.)

In taking up my subject, "Oratorios and their value in our work," I find, of necessity, I must begin with the simpler music of the church—our hymns.

They are the first principles of church and choir music, and since oratorios had their origin in our congregational singing many years ago, I must spend a little time in consideration of the hymns, and will try to reach the value of the oratorios through this channel.

Our hymns, with few exceptions, are sacred poems, expressive of devotion, spiritual experiences, or religious truths, fitted to be sung by an assembly or congregation. They are human in their longings and desires for all creatures, and from these expressions our masters of music and composition caught the desire to express more perfectly in their music, the experiences of the children of God that would be for the edification and inspiration and comfort of all generations then and to come. And when we take up this music, to study it, if seriously, we can not help but see the inspiration in their efforts; and our catching the spirit of it must have the ennobling effect upon our hearers. Then the good intended will be accomplished.

In preparing our part of the church service, we must never lose sight of the fact that we must be in perfect harmony with the preacher. I know it is the desire and aim of our general church chorister, that the musical part of the service should be a living part of it—a real essence of it—not an entertainment. And it is for this reason all these subjects are being taken under consideration. And we want to find out how to perfect our part of the service, so as to be in harmony.

We can not achieve our highest degree of usefulness until we occupy our proper position in relation to the rest of the service. The choir can not successfully assume an independence of the pastor or those in charge. To be independent perhaps satisfies the pride of some, but the spiritual influence and value is lost. Departments that become independent of the church as a whole, cease to be of real benefit. Departments are the instruments for perfecting the whole. Consequently one way to accomplish our aim would be to establish a stronger relationship between our pastor and the choir. Select hymns and anthems as nearly as possible, which have some bearing on the subject of the sermon. We have hymns and anthems that suit nearly all texts, or a great many; and if used in connection with the sermon, we will have performed our part towards the message the pastor delivers.

One handicap we have, I might say, is that sometimes our preachers do not know till they enter the pulpit what they will speak about, or that they are going to be called upon—but I believe this is the exception and not the rule—for we know they usually give much time, thought and prayer to what they have to say: and they do not enter the pulpit unprepared. But do our choir members always feel prepared?

We should know perfectly all hymns, even if we must spend choir rehearsal night to learn them—and perhaps do without the anthem the following Sunday. But it is my belief that the hymns come first. We can not hope to reach oratorios until we have accomplished this grade of our church music.

I have one particular hymn in mind now, beautiful in poetry and sentiment, and musical in construction, "Geneva," or, "I saw a mighty angel fly," which is not often used; but if all the members of the choir were thoroughly familiar with it, they could lead the congregation in singing it, until it would be only a short time when it would be as easily sung as "Nearer, my God, to thee."

Then, too, when our choirs themselves are familiar with the hymns, they, as a whole, with the organist, could be the leaders of the congregational singing; and we could dispense with the distraction of having the director wield the baton for our hymn singing. This is a practice we should eliminate as soon as possible. To my mind, it is wholly out of place; our minds should be on the beautiful thoughts expressed in the words we are singing instead of watching the baton to be sure we are in time. I still maintain if the choir singers knew the hymns well, they could lead the congregation; and if they do not know them, then my talk on oratorio is premature.

Take our prayer meetings, for instance. We do not even have an instrument, and when the hymn is familiar, there is no discord or lack of rhythm—it is one great roll of harmony, bursting forth in such volume that it seems all are in tune with the infinite, and it must reach the very throne of God. Our morning and evening services lack this inspiration. Why? We all feel this and know it to be the condition, and of course it is one of the intentions of this convention to ferret out the failures of the choirs and have their work in the church become more of a spiritual part of it.

I feel we musicians must take the blame. We do not attend rehearsals, prepare our music, or take seriously our duties. And yet we enter the choir loft each service with all the assurance possible, and if we do not know the music, we know a few faithful ones do know it, and we will depend on them helping us wade through our part; never realizing that the music is a part of the worship of God, and yet individuals will come into the service with no thought whatever of the sacredness of the hour, or how negligent they have been of a duty as binding to themselves as every other individual member of the choir.

The word choir means a body of singers selected to lead the congregation; and it is a school where the music of the church develops and grows, for the worship of God and the edification of the people; and by its beauty and grandeur develop nobler thoughts. Then such a choir forms the nucleus and the sympathy for the study of the oratorios, and an appreciation of the inspiration of the writers of both the music and text of the oratorios.

Oratorios are profoundly human in character, and are the perfection of expressing the goodness and the greatness of the divine Being for his creatures. Our hymns are expressions of a personal nature—we, as individuals, make our appeal in our hymns and anthems to the Creator for our daily needs, our desires, our praises, and our thankfulness and gratitude for blessings. Our study of the Bible and its stories of the children of God in all ages is an absolute necessity, and to fill this demand we have our Sunday school. But our great composers endeavored to fulfill this necessity long before Sunday schools were thought of—in bringing these stories to the people, in musical dialogue and choruses. Oratorios have to deal with many people as well as individuals; and they have been the greatest musical means the world has ever known to impress all humanity with the life, suffering and death of Christ, as illustrated in the wonderful "Messiah," by Handel.

Then the life of Elijah, with its dignity and grandeur, the melody and sweetness of Mendelssohn's "Saint Paul," the "Creation," so realistically described in music by Haydn, and there are many, many others time will not permit me to discuss, which are, however, a necessity to our work, and should be taken up in due time. These works, we must concede, were divinely inspired. How then, can we fail to recognize their value in our work? And how can we rest content until they have become a part of our active work?

Are we living up to our privileges when we do not take up melody, has power at times to sway thousands, is because the sentiment of that hymn is absorbing the very soul with the fire of an eternal melody, and transferring that ordinary tune into a symphony of beauty.

A demonstration of that theory was exemplified in this room a year or so ago, one Sabbath morning, and I shall never forget it. I attended services here as a visitor, and was held enthralled by a powerful sermon delivered by Brother Arthur Gillen. The closing portion of his effort was woven and interwoven around the immortalized hymn "Lead, kindly light."

So vividly was the picture drawn that choir and audience alike were inspired with the spirit of it, and a moment later the beautiful strains and tender words of "Lead thou me on" arose from the vast congregation as though propelled by a mighty power. "So long thy power hath blessed me, sure it still will lead me on" was wafted upward on wings of rich harmony, and as I looked about me it became more and more apparent that God's Holy Spirit was here shedding its hallowed influence, heads were bowed and amid blinding tears the voices sang on, "And with the morn those angel faces smile, which I have loved long since and lost awhile." There was the feeble, quavering voice of age, and the richness of youth blending in harmony and over all hovered the divine spirit of song.

There were those in that vast congregation whose hearts were touched, and in the singing of that hymn, a lock was shattered, and the peace that surpasseth understanding penetrated the soul. So the power of music and of song is not limited to the choir, but every heart and soul may be subject to its fascinating inspiration. A singing church is a living church.

There is no limit to the power of music, if rightfully applied. It is like the gospel power, and a part of it, if you please. But definitely it reaches out into unsuspected avenues and utilizes unsuspected values. It educates, physically, mentally and spiritually, body, mind and soul.

By its subtle influence we are unconsciously led to raise our voices in hymns of praise, of prayer and of joyous thanksgiving. We may become so sensitive to the power of music that although its soft, sweet melody may fill us with an indelible loneliness, even in the midst of many, or its minors lead to the brink of the grave, yet under its spiritual spell we are miserably happy, and we had rather be miserably happy than to be happy without being miserable.

But back to choir work. Strangely enough, we occasionally run across an instance where choir organization develops a pernicious influence. It is not the fault of the choir, however. Listen. Did you ever see a person become "heady, high-minded and puffed up" through a misuse of the God-given gift of song? Did you ever see a person who holds himself aloof for special occasions, deeming it undignified that his splendid attainments should be squandered and possibly unnoticed in the choir proper?

We can not afford to stand aside from the struggles and developing forces of choir progression, install ourselves upon a pedestal of seclusion, and hope to be clothed with the mantle of divine guidance and approval. Thankful we should be that we are capable of doing the special work, not forgetting that a selfish building of our own career without the saving grace of service with and unto others drives men eventually into the rut of discontent. The selfishness of it retards their moral growth, and the loving communal service gives way to the hardships of isolation. That is their punishment.

And after all the question is this: Which is the most effective in God's service, my individual career as a secluded specialist? or the career of the choir collectively and the community in general.

Another thought: This great choir movement is developing directors and instilling within them a sense of their stupendous field of opportunity. A director who does not fire his choir to lofty ambition, and inspire them to direct loyal effort for the communal benefit, is hopeless. Talk about an aristocracy in this church: There is an aristocracy, but the credential card does not read moneys, houses, lands, adornment or position, but the password to this aristocratic class is "loyalty." Loyalty unto Christ and his service. And it means that its members are to expend energy and talent in supporting every good work, which includes the musical service of God's house.

An incident took place in our home Sunday school a few weeks ago that will interest every music lover. We have a children's chorus, and among them is a quartet, and although they are all less than ten years of age, they sing the four harmony parts. Well, this particular Sunday we were all more or less gloomy and out of sorts. It had rained all week, interfering with our preparation for Children's Day, and to make matters more disappointing, a missionary who had been laboring in foreign fields failed to appear as per announcement. We had promised the children a treat in that visit. The spirit of depression was plainly felt, so we suggested that we play the Pollyanna glad game, and each one mention something for which to be glad.

The children easily caught the inspiration of the moment, and each one in turn was digging up something for which to be glad. You may imagine the answers, glad for the Sunday school, for baby brothers and sisters, for parents and teachers, and all that sort. Finally we came to the bass singer in the ten-year-old quartet, and scarcely waiting for his turn, he was on his feet like a flash and almost shouted: "I'll tell you what I'm glad about. I'm glad I can sing!"

Oh, what a thought! What an impulse to burst from the heart of that little child. Glad he could sing! How many here are glad you can sing? That's the stuff that makes successful choir members—to eliminate all selfishness and ulterior motives, and with child-like simplicity be able to say, "I'm glad I can sing."

As latter-day revelation counsels cultivating the "gifts of music and of song," let us have faith in this splendid choir movement, faith in our leader, and faith in the God over all. Not that passive, devout sort of faith that narrows the vision, but the forceful, constructive kind that triumphs in human affairs.

Under these conditions we may not only lighten our own burdens, but sing ourselves into other lives, inspiring within them the "Faith that will not shrink."

"Lord give us such a faith as this
And then whate'er may come,
We'll taste e'en here the hallowed bliss
Of an eternal home."

The Spiritual Side of Musical Preparation

(Read by Paul N. Craig, at the music convention, at Independence, Missouri, July 4, 1915.)

To sing with the Spirit and with the understanding should be the ambition of all singers, not only those who are musicians, but all who attempt to sing, or who love this department of music.

In the brief time I have to explicate so complex a subject as the "Spiritual side of musical preparation," I can only touch some of the prominent features that impress me as most vital to a full understanding of the subject. Let us consider something of the need of the spiritual side first.

Music is not, in its purity, an ornament of life tacked on the outside of what is the real person, but is one of the few means which God has given us by which he may reveal himself to us; disclosing thus a true, satisfying glimpse of what is substantial in life. It is a peculiar fact that what in the pure sense is substantial and lasting, and, finally, what alone is worth having, is hidden, covered over by a garment of material fabric. That which really lives and acts is represented in that which appears to the physical senses and reveals itself only to the spirit.

Music parts this veil of materialism for us and reveals to us the treasures of the eternal world of spirit, of intelligence. So I thank God for music, and I must include the other high arts whose mission to humanity is the same as music. We need more of the revelation of spirituality to-day, more of the understanding of life which comes to us through the medium of the arts. "We are immersed in beauty, but our eyes have no clear vision," and the arts give to us a suggestion of this fairer creation than we know.

Music reveals life. It forces one to lay aside the weight of materialism for the time being and listen to the voice of the soul. The spirit thus becomes active and the physical becomes passive.

In his ability to abandon himself to the soul's activity and give it true expression lies the art of music in the performer. Many play and sing, but few approach the mastery of the art.

There is the mechanical side of musical preparation, which is purely physical and to an extent easily acquired; and there is the spiritual side, which is elusive and most difficult to cultivate. I believe it may be cultivated to a high degree.

Music is the voice of the soul. The artist—the real artist—feels a vital contact within him of spirit with spirit, with a perfect understanding, and is able to intelligently communicate his feelings to his audience. The secret of his success is that he loves life; he loves men and is able to interpret their feelings and emotions; he loves nature, he loves God, for all things are God's.

I would say, then, that the spiritual side of musical preparation is, briefly, familiarizing oneself with the feelings and emotions of life, and acquiring the power to express them in terms of music.

Here we must recognize a fundamental fact, which I believe the great Designer of life has made basic to art and to all achievement in the true sense of the word, and in which fact lies our ability to finally master life: It is the eternal principle that spirit, intelligence, is greater than the physical, and may control the elements.

The Doctrine and Covenants tells us "the spirit and body are the soul of man;" that "spirit and element inseparably connected receiveth a fullness of joy," and "when separated man can not receive a fullness of joy." In other words, the physical body is the instrument of the mind, the means by which intelligence expresses itself. It is the tabernacle of the spirit, the tabernacle of God! It is essential, then, that we have dominion over the physical, in order that we may control the avenues of expression. So if we wish to give the pure spiritual expression of ourselves, of life, in our singing, we must learn to discern the spiritual force which actuates all element, and learn to live out sincerely in our singing what is expressed in the music. We must have had somewhat the same experience in our own lives, or be able, through an association of ideas, to create mentally a picture or feeling that will enable us to give a spontaneous expression of the thought set to music.

We ought never to do careless or thoughtless work, but always see that we give our best effort. Let us find the right way. Nothing less than this should satisfy us. I am not talking to people who are recognized musicians only, but to all who attempt to sing and who love music. The way to sing music correctly, outside of the technical rendition, is to be able to create in the imagination the experience pictured in the sentiment of the words and live it—make it so much a part of you that it will be as a spontaneous expression of yourself. To be able to do this successfully you must know yourself, you must be a student of life and must love life. This involves self-control. "It is the object of life to train the will." When we can always keep in the forefront of our consciousness the fact that we are heirs to all knowledge, to all truth, to all power, and experience the joy of life in conforming to the law of life, our singing will be wonderful, indeed!

To be ignorant of the principles that govern our acts in life, in other words, to be ignorant of law, makes us the toy, the plaything, the driftwood of the natural forces. But knowledge of law arms us with the omnipotence of God by so much.

To be able to sing with the spirit and the understanding is the only ideal to work toward in vocal music. It is the work of a lifetime and the process is experience in the great school of life, which is open to all, and all may have the joy of its treasures by mastering its lessons. You must not think that you can master the art until you have mastered life. I am not holding up an ideal that is too high for Latter Day Saints. "A man's reach must exceed his grasp, or what's a heaven for." We must ever hold in mind the great, eternal fact that in reality there is no end; we are living in a phase of eternity now, and what seems to be death and destruction is only transition. We shall again return to this world and complete under more favorable conditions, our imperfect effort started in mortality. On we shall go and larger grow. As in the acorn there is power to become perfect as its parent oak is perfect, so in us lies the power to become perfect as our heavenly Father is perfect.

These facts, then, I would emphasize, as being the essentials in spiritual preparation of music:

1. Love God with all your might, mind and strength. That can only be acquired by seeking him and seeing him manifested through the mighty, creative force of love in all life.

2. This is like unto the first,—love thy neighbor as thyself. This may only be acquired by study of oneself and development of the will to control our lives by the eternal law of life, and by sensing the lives of others, loving them and living with them.

3. The mastery of the medium of expression. This requires a continuous effort; a constant training of the physical medium to obey the will in expressing the feelings and emotions of music.

What I have tried to emphasize particularly is the thought that to express music in its purity one must be in tune with the phase of life that is expressed in the music.

Musical Notes

At a gathering of six thousand German-American singers in New York, a male chorus was formed representing singers from five eastern states, and Mme. Schumann-Heink appeared as soloist before an audience of fifteen thousand besides the singers, and led in singing "America." At this time there was also a singing contest for the Kaiser Prize which was offered by the German Emperor.

In England and Wales are forty-seven thousand one hundred and sixteen musicians depending upon their music for a livelihood, according to census report. Twenty-four thousand, two hundred and seventy-two, or a little more than half of these musicians, are women, of whom about twenty thousand are unmarried, and one thousand, two hundred and sixty-four are widows. Since the war these figures, as to the males, have been considerably changed, it is said, because of enlistments.

A National Choral Peace Jubilee is being organized and songs are being practiced in New York and Chicago public schools, in anticipation of the end of the war. The first peace meeting is contemplated for Saint Louis.

A. B. P.

Announcements

To the many local choristers who have felt that the selections of church anthems made heretofore are too difficult for their use, the announcements in this issue will come with a peculiar message of joy, for at last steps have been taken towards the selection of graded courses of anthems, suitable for the needs of the various choirs as they have been presented to those having the matter in charge. In the next issue of the Staff there will appear the list of music suggested for Grades 1, 2, 3, and 4, also the anthems chosen for use at the next General Conference, as well as the oratorio to be studied for that occasion of rejoicing.

Following the resignation of Sister Anderson as assistant general chorister, Brother Hoxie made choice of our capable and energetic Saint Louis brother, Edward C. Bell. This young man is a most ardent apostle of the cause of good music, and his beautiful spirit of readiness and consecration, manifested at this convention, both by his hearty support of the music, and through the medium of his fine address on the subject of the "District choir," can not fail to mark him as a most successful assistant in the general work. It is planned for him to make regular trips the coming fall and winter throughout the Middle West, rounding up the singers of the various locals and districts, and directing the preparation of the music for next conference. All local choirs should gladly welcome the coming among them of such an efficient, humble and devoted helper, and we are sure the organizing and centralizing of our efforts in this way will insure a greater success next spring than we have yet attained.

Will every district chorister please take the pains to select a few anthems which he considers suitable for the choirs under his direction, and send copies of the same to Brother Hoxie, who wishes to get in touch with the needs in every locality? His address is 179 Madison Square, New York City.

We wish to announce also our change of address, which, after July 25, will be 2009 Locust Street, Omaha, Nebraska. Continuing in the personal strain, we are delighted to tell you of the new title bestowed upon us by the arrival on July 3, of a certain young man who will, through life, bear the name of Alfred Willard Hulmes, jr. Lusty promises of future vocal proficiency have already been volunteered by the young American, and no one is more highly gratified at this indication than your Staff editor.

Independence Notes

The second of the series of evenings with great composers was enjoyed by a very large and attentive audience at the Stone Church, on the evening of Sunday, June 20, Brother Rushton, who presented the life, works and character of Beethoven to the listeners, was at his best, and his intense love for music, and his perception and enjoyment of its higher forms, causes him to be a most enthusiastic and appreciative advocate in the cause of this art. The audience was made acquainted with the inner life and ambitions of the composer, and brought into close and sympathetic touch with the affliction which marked his later years, and which, as Brother Rushton suggested, might have been the means of developing in the man his wonderful ability to get close to the heart of humanity. Choir, organ, piano, violin, voice, orchestra, and, finally, an ensemble number of all combined, served to give rich expression to many of the beautiful offerings this wonderful man has presented to the world, and the people who listened, no less than those who performed, were vastly benefited and uplifted by the portrayal.

It was a pleasure at the recent musical convention to have the support of the live organization of young singers known as the Euterpean Chorus. This chorus is doing splendid work, and will, if kept together in the right spirit, become one of strong combination in the future.

A children's chorus has recently been organized here with Sister Corrinne Haines as director. There is a vast field in this place for work of this kind, as indeed there is wherever there are children at all. It is a well-known fact that we can not begin too early in the task of giving our children an outlet for their God-given desire to sing. Let us have more of these organized efforts. All who desire to get the children together to sing should get into touch with Sister E. S. McNichols, who at Brother Hoxie's request, has consented to take charge of this important branch of the work, and will be pleased to give any interested the benefit of her experience, as well as to suggest songs, materials and methods. Her address after August 1, will be 715 Cypress Street, Kansas City, Missouri.

News from Missions

Western Australia

Brother Argent, my colaborer, and I came from our headquarters in Subraio, near Perth, to this city on April 30, having apparently done all we could to help the branch at that place.

Elder E. H. Davis, wife and family, had previously settled in this place (which is four hundred miles from our former location), and having created an interest and baptized some, we deemed it wise and necessary to visit and lend a helping hand, especially as conditions in Subraio were not conducive to immediate success.

We found a good spirit prevailing here, and interest in meetings good, with prospects of an ingathering in the future. The people here are more friendly and hospitable than in Perth. The meetings are now as well attended as are those in Subraio, though the latter are in a church and the former in a private house, and Perth Branch has been going for years. There have been hindering factors which have crippled the work there, but are nonexistent here, so we are more hopeful of an ingathering here than there.

Seemingly all branches have their "time of trouble"—some worse than others, and some take longer to recover, according to the nature of the trouble met and the material of which they are composed. We have had rather a hard time since coming to Western Australia. Every avenue of profitable work seems to have been barred against us.

Our efforts have been mainly directed towards setting things in working order within. We sincerely hope that now an "open door" is before us.

This state has suffered more as a result of war and drought than any other. We need capital for developmental works, and the war has stopped its inflow from England, and also curtailed our trade with the world, and thus caused much unemployment and consequent poverty and want. While traveling through the country we were struck with the apparent possibilities, especially from a wheat-growing standpoint. All that is now needed is water—rain—and at time of writing we are getting that, and as it is "seedtime" the farmers are jubilant. This season promises to be good, and with what at present prices, much of our distress may disappear with incoming harvest.

If Western Australia is ever formed into a district it will be one of vast distances. If a branch is formed here, for instance, it will be four hundred miles from the only other in the state. Elder E. H. Davis is the first elder to do any work here for the church, and we are the first missionaries of the church who have penetrated so far inland. This city has about five thousand inhabitants, who are maintained entirely by gold mining, there being no other industry in operation.

It is no pastoral country as there are no natural grasses, the rainfall is very sparse, there being consequently very little vegetation of any kind. Foodstuffs are very high in price. Flour is two pounds per two hundredweight bag; butter two shillings and two pence per pound; eggs four shillings per dozen; and beef eight pence to one shilling per pound. Wages are high, but the worker is no better off, owing to the high cost of living. If gold gives out here, this place would be deserted.

The Transcontinental Railway starts from here towards Adelaide. About two hundred and fifty miles are completed. It is the largest of Australian railway projects, connecting east and west. We need more missionaries who would keep pace with progressive settlement, which must receive a great forward impetus after the war. There are vast, unoccupied areas of country awaiting brain, brawn and banking accounts to develop and turn into countless wealth and prepare for the sustenance of tens of millions of people. The overcrowded Old World looks upon these unoccupied spaces with envious eye, and it would not be surprising if the Chinese or Japanese in future would, despite our restrictive legislation, swarm down through the chain of islands north of us and deluge our northern territory. Our position geographically is Asiatic, and our name, Austral Asia, implies that.

We are still desirous of continuing in the good work, and are anxiously awaiting General Conference news, reappointments especially. I expect to be here for a couple of months, and hope in that time to be able to organize a branch here. Brother Argent is with me, but is returning to Perth to assist in the work there. Health is moderate, and spiritual desire still buoyant.

Faithfully yours in gospel bonds,

J. H. N. JONES.

KALGOORLEI, WESTERN AUSTRALIA, 131 Collins Street, May 10, 1915.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri, Second Branch

We are still endeavoring to hold high the banner of King Immanuel. Having been favored with good speakers of the missionary force and others of the local elders, a good attendance is in evidence at the preaching services; those occupying the pulpit for the last two Sundays were Elders Joseph Luff, Wardell Christy, M. H. Siegfried, and Charles Fry.

The second Sunday in June was observed as Children's Day, at which time ten of those attaining the age of eight years or more, were baptized, and confirmed in the afternoon. A splendid program was rendered in the evening to a crowded house.

The Fourth of July was celebrated on Monday at the fair grounds by the Latter Day Saint Sunday schools of Independence and vicinity. Band music was furnished by some of the brethren, which added spice to the occasion. Brother I. A. Smith gave an interesting patriotic speech, also short talks were made by others. The young folks interested themselves in various games and contests.

The Sunday school work here is still progressing. A circulating library of about five hundred volumes is patronized by the members. Many young folks from the outside not members of the church are attending the school regularly.

At the last business session six more members were added to the branch by letter of removal, from three other branches.

Yours for the welfare of Zion,

G. W. TOUSLEY.

Scranton, Pennsylvania

Greetings from Scranton. We are still alive and doing well. From the number of souls who have entered the waters of baptism here so far this year, we look forward to even a better record than last year, when thirty-two were baptized. So far we have added seventeen by baptism and gained six by letters of removal, making our present number one hundred and ninety-two. We all seem to be working together with the Spirit to do all we can, and the results are indeed encouraging.

Our auxiliaries are all alive and doing very well indeed. Our Sunday school has an average attendance of one hundred and four, and is graded as a first-class school. We have changed our time of meeting from afternoon to morning, and the change seems to have been a success. We have two organized classes in the Sunday school and one teacher's training class is doing very well. We find it difficult to obtain competent teachers, and trust that no one will fail to grasp the opportunity of studying so as to be ready when called upon to teach.

The Religio society is doing well, and much is gained by studying and discussing the lessons as outlined in the Quarterlies. We also have good programs. One thing noticeable is the willingness to take part in the program and discussions when asked to do so. Our enrollment in the Religio is about sixty-five, with an average attendance of forty-seven. We trust that the good work may be kept going. The Woman's Auxiliary meets every Wednesday afternoon for prayer, followed by a sewing session. Our thanks are due to this society for the manner in which they labored during the past winter and helped materially to decrease the church debt by their sewing, such as quilts and carpet making. We are indebted to this society for the carpet which adorns the floor of our neat church.

Our brass band is pushing along and we believe that much prejudice is being removed by the efforts put forth on the part of the band. On Memorial Day we played for the exercises in the cemetery, held under the auspices of the G. A. R. The soldiers were warm in their praise for the band. We have also on several occasions played for different churches on the occasion of lawn socials. The treatment and expression of thanks received were very encouraging.

We are looking forward to a trip to Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, where a branch is located. We hope to be of assistance to the Saints there.

Elder Thomas holds open-air preaching services every Saturday night, weather permitting. The band parades upon the principal streets and marches to the meeting place. Large crowds usually attend these meetings, and the Spirit is felt in abundance.

The Greenridge Sunday School is progressing nicely, and we trust that the good work may be kept up and many brought to a knowledge of the kingdom of God.

E. V. WAGNER.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes

EASTERN IOWA.—June 19 and 20, Davenport. Good representation. Officers elected: Edward Rannie, president; C. G. Dykes, vice president; John Heide, treasurer; J. E. Brown, secretary. Other elders of district are L. G. Holloway and E. B. Morgan, who with Edward Rannie will maintain permanent addresses at 1225 Nicholas Avenue, Davenport. District resolutions were adopted, with special mention given the use of tobacco and strong drinks, in which ordination or election to either district or branch offices are to be refused to users of tobacco or strong drink. J. E. Benson, secretary, 1225 Nicholas Avenue, Davenport, Iowa.

SOUTHERN WISCONSIN.—June 19 and 20, Flora Fountain Branch, near Lancaster. Reports: Janesville, East Delavan, Milwaukee, Buckwheat Ridge, Flora Fountain, Beloit, Wheatville. Bishop's agent, C. C. Hoague, reported: Receipts $449.89; expenditures $375. Treasurer reported: Receipts $14.28; expenditures $7.75. Treasurer of reunion fund reported in treasury $40. Time and place of next conference left to presidency. Secretary authorized to collect from branches prior to each conference, funds sufficient to defray expenses of secretary in attending said conferences. Andrew B. Dutton, secretary.

MOBILE.—June 26, Escatawpa, Mississippi. Reports: Three Rivers 185; Theodore 150; Bay Minette 356; Bluff Creek 162; Horse Shoe 14. Reunion committee reported and was discharged. J. C. Yocom, Bluff Creek, was ordained priest, by A. E. Warr, S. Cochran, G. W. Sherman. G. W. Bankster was approved for ordination to office of elder. T. J. Booker was recommended to general chorister for appointment as district chorister. Officers elected: A. E. Warr, president; W. L. Booker, vice president; Edna Cochran, secretary-treasurer; Sister Stiner, member library board. On account of age and disability, district historian was honorably released, and Edna Cochran recommended to general historian for appointment. Adjourned to meet at Vancleave, Mississippi, October 23. Edna Cochran, secretary, Vancleave, Mississippi.

Convention Minutes

MOBILE.—Sunday school and Religio, June 25, Escatawpa, Mississippi. Schools reporting: Bluff Creek, Gulfport, Three Rivers, Escatawpa, Theodore, Shubuta, Bay Minette, Roberts-dale. Treasurer reported $8.54 on hand. North Mobile School declared disorganized. Standard of excellence for Religio adopted. Brother Aebli elected member library board. Adjourned to meet at 9 a. m., Vancleave, Mississippi, October 22.

Conference Notices

Portland conference, Sunday school and Religio convention, and reunion, Portland, Oregon, commencing 9 a. m., July 23. Conventions the 23d. Conference 24th. Joint reunion July 25th to August 1. Efforts will be made to make meetings helpful, instructive and spiritual. Tents $2, and $2.50 for reunion period. Cafetera on grounds. Those renting tents will be expected to furnish most of their own bedding. Address A. E. Lasley, P. G. Hager, or L. D. Shippy, 94 East Eighty-fourth Street North, Portland, Oregon.

Northern California, August 21, 10 a. m., reunion grounds, Irvington.

Convention Notices

Seattle and British Columbia Religio, August 6, 10 a. m., reunion grounds, Centralia, Washington. Secretaries send reports to Morley Williams, 5545 Woodlawn Avenue, Seattle. Southwestern Texas Sunday school, July 22, 3 p. m., Saints' Chapel, South Florence Street. H. H. Davenport, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Northern California, August 13 to 21, Irvington. Tents: 8 by 10 $2.25; 10 by 12 $2.75; 12 by 14 $3.25; 12 by 16 $3.75, larger ones in proportion. Spring mattresses: Double, 75 cents; single 50 cents. Springs: double 50 cents; single 25 cents. Send orders to C. W. Hawkins, 615 Spencer Avenue, San Jose, by August 9, shipment to be made the 10th. Those wishing to rent rooms write J. H. Driver, Irvington. Meals

25 cents. Croquet set and other games, ice water free. Get certificate when purchasing ticket, and one third fare on return fare is promised any time from 10th to 24th. A. C. Hawley, secretary.

Alabama, Pleasant Hill church, two and one half miles west of McKenzie, five miles east of Garland, August 13. Those coming to McKenzie, notify J. R. Harper, J. L. Sellers, or C. B. Vickery, to Garland, J. J. Hawkins, B. B. Sellers, or S. T. Sellers. Meals at dining hall, adults 15 cents, children 1 to 12, 10 cents. Beds and tents on grounds 30 cents per day. F. M. Slover, A. E. Warr, A. G. Miller, E. C. Shelley will be present. Auxiliary work under supervision of A. E. Warr. Prayer meeting 10 a. m. the 13th, organization immediately following. For further information write W. H. Drake, H. H. Wiggins, or J. R. Harper. A. A. Weaver, secretary.

Southwestern Iowa, August 20 to 29, near Thurman, same grounds as last year. Tents: 10 by 12 $2; 12 by 14 $2.50; 14 by 16, 4 foot wall, $3.50. Cots 75 cents, chairs 25 cents. Meals at boarding house 25 cents, ten meal tickets $2. Transportation to and from grounds, for each person one way 25 cents. Each piece of baggage according to size and weight, 10 to 25 cents, receipts to be applied on reunion expenses. Only day trains will be met, and notice must be given A. P. Frederickson in advance to insure prompt service. No special favors to any except regular speakers and missionaries from districts taking active part in reunion. Camp outfits ordered must be paid for, whether used or not. Place orders early. Come prepared to care for selves. We expect Heman C. Smith, J. A. Gillen, W. E. Haden, J. B. Wildermuth and others. Send orders to C. W. Forney, Thurman, Iowa.

Normal Notice

William Anderson, 36 Tremont Street, Buffalo, New York, lately in charge of normal work in Maine, has been appointed superintendent of normal work for New York District, John F. Sheehy, Corea, Maine, succeeding him in Maine. Mrs. Ida E. Jones, Box 254, Condon, Oregon, has been appointed superintendent for Washington, Oregon, and British Columbia, to succeed William S. Rhodes, resigned.

Addresses

J. E. Vanderwood, 1302 West Lexington Street, Independence, Missouri.

Michigan Two-Day Meetings

Farwell, August 14 and 15, Houghton Lake, August 21 and 22, Britman, August 28 and 29. Good speakers. All invited. GEORGE W. BURT, President.

Shall the College Debt Be Paid?

What is the answer from the 80,000 people of the church? The Seventh-day Adventists, with a numerical strength of 122,000, are sustaining over 700 educational institutions, many of them colleges. CAN and WILL we sustain ONE.

The college debt, which should be paid if the college is to be maintained, is FIFTY CENTS each! The church and college debt combined is $3. Either or both of these amounts may be mailed to me, Lamoni, Iowa, as one of the special solicitors. Will branch presidents, or any person desiring a personal visit, write me IMMEDIATELY?

Very sincerely,

J. W. WIGHT.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA, July 14, 1915.

Died

JACOBSON.—Selpha Harding Jacobson, youngest daughter of Samuel A., and Jane Harding, was born December 14, 1885, at Crescent City, Iowa; died at her home, 412 Stutsman Street, Council Bluffs, Iowa, June 23, 1915. When about 5 years old, her parents moved to Council Bluffs, where she has since made her home. Educated in the Council Bluffs public schools, graduating with the class of 1906. Baptized when 9 years old by T. W. Williams, confirmed by President W. W. Blair. She has been an ardent and constant church worker. Married L. G. Jacobson, May 9, 1912, and leaves to mourn, husband, infant son, father, mother. 1 sister, Mrs. John Lentell, of Independence, Missouri, 1 brother, Floyd C. Harding, numerous relatives and a host of friends. She was a talented writer and musician, a great lover of these arts, teaching, studying and directing. Funeral by Elbert A. Smith, June 27, Saints' church, Council Bluffs.

LANE.—Alvan Joseph Lane, born August 29, 1899, Coffeyville, Kansas; died July 2, 1915, Independence, Missouri, by coming in contact with a live wire. Baptized by George Jenkins, December 29, 1912. Funeral by George Jenkins, interment in Mount Grove Cemetery.

WEST.—Norbet, infant son of Robert and Sister Orpha West, born July 21, 1914, Keokuk, Iowa; died of pneumonia following whooping cough, June 12, 1915. His father died April 11, 1915, thus depriving Sister West of husband and only son in two brief months. Services at the home of Sister Emma Brown, a grandmother of deceased, Keokuk, Iowa, by James McKiernan.

ROSS.—Francis Marion Ross, born Dayton, Ohio, April 13, 1845; died in the faith, July 4, 1915, Montrose, Iowa. Served two enlistments in 42d Indiana Regiment until close of Civil War. Married Ellen Snively, August 5, 1866. Baptized by John H. Lake in 1867. Of 7 children, 3 died in childhood. Deceased leaves wife, daughters, Bell Farrar, Lincoln, Nebraska, Hattie Pitt, Adrian, Illinois, sons, Harvey and Charles, somewhere in the West. His home has been in Montrose for 48 years. Funeral at Saints' church, Montrose, by James McKiernan. Tipp Best Post of G. A. R. conducted services at grave, interment in Montrose Cemetery.

PARKER.—Mary E. Parker was born July 6, 1848, Elba, Michigan; died July 1, 1915, while seated beside her husband in a buggy returning home from the wedding of two of their granddaughters. Married B. T. Parker, August 8, 1869. Baptized in 1901, and living a devoted Saint to the day of her death. Leaves husband, 2 sons, 3 daughters, 1 stepdaughter, 23 grandchildren, 4 great-grandchildren, large number of friends. Funeral by A. Leverton.

GIDEON.—Andres J. Gideon, sr., was born in Washington County, Florida, in 1843; died at Robertsdale, Alabama, June 18, 1915. Married Mary A. Adom, November 10, 1865, Milton, Florida. To them were born 10 children. Deceased is survived by wife, 9 children (all except 2 being present at the funeral), 43 grandchildren, 5 great-grandchildren. Baptized May 19, 1868, by T. H. Waddell. Funeral at grave, Gideon Cemetery, near Bay Minette, Alabama, by W. L. Booker assisted by T. J. Booker.

RICHARDS.—Judson E. Richards died at North Platte, Nebraska, July 7, after a lingering illness, aged 46 years, 9 months, 28 days, leaving wife, 6 children, host of relatives and friends. Services by C. W. Prettyman.

HARTWELL.—Lucinda A. Hartwell was born in Boone County, Indiana, November 8, 1838; died at her home near Council Bluffs, Iowa, June 13, 1915, of Bright's disease. In 1846 she moved with her parents to western Iowa, where she grew to womanhood. Baptized in 1859 by E. C. Briggs, remaining faithful to the end, and bearing strong testimony to the truth of the gospel. Married Dexter P. Hartwell, July 28, 1867. To them were born 3 daughters, Clara May, Lily Gertrude, Lydia Jane, the last two dying in infancy. Her husband died October 28, 1878. Clara May, the last of her family, died March 9, 1895. Deceased leaves 2 sisters, Mrs. Mary E. Atkinson, Thurman, Iowa, Mrs. Margaret J. Napier, who with husband and son have been with deceased the last fourteen years. Services from the residence by Robert McHenry, assisted by Joshua Carlile. The Misses Ada Derrington, Eunice Palmer and Stanswick furnished the music. Pallbearers were John Napier, Charles Hartwell, David Taylor, J. N. Campbell, nephews of deceased. Interment with her family in Clark's Cemetery, Council Bluffs.

BAKER.—Wilhelmina Zanow was born March 17, 1833, in Germany; died July 2, 1915. Married John B. Baker, Chicago, Illinois, June 22, 1855, where they resided until 1876, when they removed to Harrison County, Iowa. To them were born 7 children; 4 sons and husband preceding deceased, who leaves two sons, Warren, Sioux City, Arthur, Bridge, Oregon, daughter, Edna Steurude, Council Bluffs, sister, Carrie Lang, Chicago, number of grandchildren, relatives and many friends. Baptized September 22, 1877, Gallands Grove, by James Badham. She was a faithful, devoted Saint until death, a noble mother, friend and neighbor. Services at Saints' church, Logan, in charge of D. R. Chambers, assisted by W. R. Adams. Interment in Logan Cemetery.

Book Reviews

THE JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY READER.—A book of Riley poems selected and graded, with suggestions for the observance of "Riley Day." By Charity Dye, author of the Story Teller's Art. Illustrated by Ethel Franklin Betts. The Bobbs-Merrill Company, publishers, Indianapolis. A book full of the choicest of selections from the good Hoosier child poet, who even in old age dwelt "knee deep in June" and never lost touch with childhood.

"Wasn't it a funny dream!—perfectly bewilderin'!
Last night, and night before, and night before that,
Seemed like I saw the march o' regiments o' children, Marching to the robin's fife and cricket's rat-ta-tat."
—Riley.

WILD KINDRED OF FUR, FEATHER, AND FIN.—A book of wild life. By Jean M. Thompson. Illustrated by Charles Cope-land. Published by W. A. Wilde Company, Boston and Chicago. Price $1.25, cloth. A delightful book of nature stories of the kind that has become so popular of late years. Stories of White Claw, the glutton of the woods; the sugar camp on Lone Mountain; the wit of Clown Face the Badger; the trial of Peter Possum; how Mrs. Green Frog saved her family, etc.

THE VALE OF SHADOWS.—A small book of verse by Clinton Scollard. Forty-one pages, neatly bound. Published by Laurence J. Gomme, New York City. This is a book of war poems, and it is announced that the author and publishers propose to donate the profits accruing from its sale to the Belgian Relief Fund. The following are typical verses taken from the initial poem, "The vale of shadows":

"There is a vale in the Flemish land,
A vale once fair to see,
Where under the sweep of the sky's wide arch,
Though winter freeze or summer parch,
The stately poplars march and march,
Remembering Lombardy.

"Here are men of the Saxon eyes,
Men of the Saxon heart,
Men of the fens and men of the Peak,
Men of the Kentish meadows sleek,
Men of the Cornwall cove and creek,
Men of the Dove and Dart.

"Here are men of the kilted clans
From the heathery slopes that lie
Where the mists hang gray and the mists hang white,
And the deep lochs brood 'neath the craggy height,
And the curlews scream in the moonless night
Over the hills of Skye.

"Here are men of the Celtic breed,
Lads of the smile and tear,
From where the loops of the Shannon flow,
And the crosses gleam in the even-glow,
And the halls of Tara now are low,
And Donegal cliffs are sheer.

"And never a word does one man speak,
Each in his narrow bed,
For this is the Vale of Long Release,
This is the Vale of the Lasting Peace,
Where wars, and the rumors of wars, shall cease,
The valley of the dead."

---

There's a song in my heart like the voice of a bird,
Joy-winged, hope-stirred;
It sings in my heart, yet it comes from above,
Out from the heart of the infinite Love.
Glad as the beating of matinal wings,
Joy incarnate, it leaps and it sings
On through the deafening noise of things,
On 'mid the clamoring voices of strife,
Soundeth the psalm of eternal life.

—Carroll Loupe Fisher.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
 A Strong City - - - - - 689
 Palestine for the Jews - - - - - 690
 Current Events - - - - - 692
 Notes and Comments - - - - - 692

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
 The Church as a Social Center, by J. W. Rushton 693
 Where Do We Stand?—No. 2, by J. August Koehler 697
 Sowing and Reaping, by J. E. Vanderwood - 699

OF GENERAL INTEREST:
 Prohibition Prohibits - - - - - 699
 Jews and Future of Palestine - - - - - 700
 Church Statistics for 1914 - - - - - 701

THE STAFF - - - - - 701
 Albert N. Hoxie—Mrs. W. N. Robinson—Mrs. E. S. McNichols—Paul N. Craig.

NEWS FROM MISSIONS - - - - - 707
 J. H. N. Jones.

NEWS FROM BRANCHES - - - - - 708
 G. W. Tousley—E. V. Wagner.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT - - - - - 709

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver, Assistant Editor.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamon, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamon, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

That man may last, but never lives,
 Who much receives, but nothing gives;
 Whom none can love, whom none can thank—
 Creation's blot, creation's blank.—Selected.

GRACELAND COLLEGE BONDS

In order to place the finances of Graceland College on a better basis, those having the financial responsibility of the same have thought best to issue bonds to the amount of $35,000.00.

These bonds run from July 1, 1915, to July 1, 1920, and bear 5 per cent interest, payable semi-annually.

They are offered to the Saints and to any investor as a first-class investment.

These bonds are secured by a first mortgage on real estate valued at about $62,000.00.

Each bond is valued at $100.00. We earnestly invite the attention of any having money to invest to investigate this proposition.

You will be not only putting your money in a safe place (as the whole church is back of these bonds as well as secured by mortgage) but you will be helping the work of the church.

Address all communications to

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Lamon, Iowa

Objections to the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants Answered and Refuted

You can't take the time, neither have you the data at hand to be able to refute many of the so-called arguments against these two books. Brother J. R. Lambert has placed in book form facts and data to refute these so-called arguments. A handy book to have in your library. Order 143 .....40c

Braden-Kelley Debate

This book contains the full report of an eighteen-night debate between the Church of Christ (Campbellite) and the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. The work is a library in itself. Though it has been in print for several years it is still one of the best books published to show the stability of God's truth. Order 125 .....1.50

The Instructor

A book that is one of our very best sellers, and to see the book is enough to explain why it is such a favorite. This work is the result of Brother G. T. Griffiths' efforts and it has been of untold good. To the student, the busy man, and the investigator alike the book is of untold value. Subjects topically arranged.

Order 126 cloth .....75
127 Leather .....1.00
128 Flexible .....1.75

A New Book
THE INTERPRETER

By Gomer T. Griffiths

A Revision of the "Exegesis"

containing more charts and information than the former book, also an illustrated chapter on offenses—law governing the same—procedure in church courts, and blank forms suitable to the same. The various quotations from the books have been carefully compiled and arranged, so that the instructions pertaining to each office are classified, to assist the reader in locating the duties of each minister from the president of the church to the deacon, also points out how the different officers are called and the manner of their ordination, thereby securing courtesy to whom courtesy is due.

Price .....50c

Failures of Campbellism

A new tract by Elder E. E. Long. Reprinted from a series of twelve articles in HERALD of 1913. Logically presented and systematically arranged. Quotations verified. 139 pages. Order 217 .....20c

Have you heard of the old Spalding story from which the Book of Mormon was said to have been taken? Well, here is the Spalding story. Better get it and know for yourself. Only .....25c
Order 139.

What Is Man

Is a book that should receive the careful study of every Saint. It clears away the fog of doubt with reference to the eternal verities of the future state of man. No better book on the subject of immortality. Order 140 .....50c

SADIE AND HER PETS

Another book of the Birth Offering Series, especially written for our young boys and girls.
Order number 244, cloth ..... .50

COLORED POST CARDS

Graceland College, Saints' Home, Liberty Home, Independence church, Herald Publishing House, Lamoni church.
1 of each for 15 cents.
2 of each for 25 cents.
Order by number 172..

COMPENDIUM OF FAITH is a work for the student. It is a collection of texts taken from the standard church works on a great many subjects. Also a splendid brief history of the Apostasy.

Order No.
141 cloth .....75c
141½ leather .....$1.00
174 flexible .....$1.50

The Moving Picture Route to California Expositions

You don't get half the joy of a trip to the Pacific Coast if you take a route that brings you through Colorado's scenic marvels at night, or dodges them altogether. It's a rare privilege to visit Colorado—to view its rugged grandeur, its almost bottomless canyons. It's a travel-mistake to overlook such scenery as this. You need not. The Burlington has planned your scenic pleasure for you. Its Grand Circle Tour to the Pacific Coast is so arranged that you are wide awake when you go through Denver, Rocky Mountain National Park—Estes Park, Colorado Springs, the Pikes Peak Region, Royal Gorge and Salt Lake; then Los Angeles, both expositions; two days on the ocean (meals and berth included to Burlington passengers) San Francisco to Portland; then you visit Tacoma, Seattle, Spokane; and come back via either Glacier National Park or Yellowstone Park. Positively, no other tour in the world like this—so filled with pleasurable excitement—scenic enjoyment—and satisfaction.

Tickets on sale daily. Let us talk this trip over with you—make suggestions based on your desires. We can plan to meet your perfect satisfaction—will supply you with beautiful, complete descriptive literature, maps, etc. If you are going to the Pacific Coast this year you simply can not afford to overlook the special advantages offered by Burlington Tours. Let us tell you all about them, and arrange reservation for you. Please call to-day or write or phone.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

Got your Burlington Route Poster Stamps yet?
Complete set 10 beautiful stamps 5 cents

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, JULY 28, 1915

NUMBER 30

Editorial

BRAIN PATHS

ONE FUNCTION OF EDUCATION

(An address before the summer school in Graceland College, June, 1915, by Elbert A. Smith.)

It does not seem just right that a novice like myself should be called upon to talk to professional educators on the subject of education. Yet I am aware that the novice may at times suggest a new viewpoint to the specialist; and the same time by the process of exposing his own ignorance obtain some valuable information.

An old gardener was working in his garden. He was skilled in the culture of all plants, from primroses to pumpkins,—a range of knowledge, by the way, that should be very valuable to school-teachers. He was working among rows of plants with tall and slender, green stems or tubes surmounted by globes ranging in color from white to lovely deep purple.

Presently along came an automobile loaded with city people. It stopped, and one of the occupants, a young lady, cried out, "Do tell us, what are those beau-ti-ful plants that you are cultivating?"

The gardener straightened his weary back and replied, "Them there? Them's onions gone to seed."

If he took time to think he acquired a new idea of the beauty of common things,—even such common things as onions gone to seed. Thereafter he would perceive a new beauty if not a new odor in his onion bed. While the city novice at the cost of some humiliation gained certain technical knowledge.

I wish to speak to-night on only one phase of education. I conceive that the chief function of education is to teach men to think along right lines.

It is not the function of education to fill the minds of students with an assortment of preconceived and ready-made ideas. It is the function of education to train men to think for themselves, so that they may be ready for new situations, new themes, new truths, emergencies.

Educators should make their themes attractive; but should not try the vain task of relieving the student of hard, original thinking. I heard Booker

T. Washington tell of a college professor who advised a southern farmer that if he would soak his corn and steam it his hogs could digest it in half the time. The farmer retorted, "Did you ever stop to figure out what a razor-backed hog's time is worth?"

This anecdote has no application to the average student, beyond this: The razor-backed hog would probably lose more in power of digestion by turning to soft foods than he would gain in point of time. And each student must grind and digest for himself the hard, nourishing, grains of original truth, or he will surely lose his powers of digestion and assimilation.

The object of all thinking should be the pursuit of truth. Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

Jesus had the true conception of freedom. We sometimes think of it as something that we can hand down to lesser individuals, or something that one nation can hand down to another. But Jesus saw that freedom must work from the inside out and not from the outside in.

The individual must know the truth. Then aroused to action he stretches his muscles, breaks his bands, and is free.

Without truth it is impossible to be free. Correct thinking leads to truth. It is the function of education to teach men to think correctly.

Truth is with us a fundamental concept. In that we agree on one point at least with Christian Science,—that is in the emphasis upon truth.

It is said that a little Christian Scientist girl fell downstairs with her pet dog in her arms. Her mother, rushing to pick her up, forgot her creed, and asked if she were hurt.

Rubbing her bruises, the little girl answered, "N-o-o, I think not. I remembered what you taught me, and every time I struck a step I said, Truth, truth, truth. But I am afraid the little dog is hurt, for every time he struck a step he said, Error, error, error."

There are two sides to that story. I would rather be a Christian Scientist taking hard knocks and saying truth at every knock, than to be some one's pet poodle and never know anything but error.

It is necessary to know the truth about God and about man. The greatest tragedies of all time have been enacted because men did not know the truth about God. Heathen women threw their babes into the arms of Moloch, thence to roll into the blazing furnace,—because they did not know the truth about God. Pagan women went to the temple of Venus and each offered her virtue to the first stranger who would give her a piece of silver,—because she did not know the truth about God. Protestants have murdered Catholics, and Catholics have murdered Protestants because they did not know the truth about God. Jesus was crucified by men who did not know the truth about God. And just as great tragedies have been enacted and are being enacted because men do not know the truth about themselves. When they know the truth about God and about man the millennium will come.

Religion and education should go hand in hand in the work of teaching men to think along right lines. Education may train us to draw correct conclusions from hard and obvious facts. Religion, through intuition, inspiration, revelation, opens up to us broad fields of truth just beyond our ordinary vision.

So noted an infidel as Thomas Paine declared that he had observed that he had two classes of thought. One class he studied out for himself with care and labor; the other class came into his mind spontaneously, without effort, from some unknown source. He added that the latter class of thoughts were by far the most valuable to him. He was not so great an infidel as some professed Christians of his day. He was in pursuit of truth and may have gleaned much from intuition, even from inspiration.

Jesus said that he would send the Holy Spirit, even the spirit of truth which should guide into all truth. It is a guide, it does not carry us forward. We must exert ourselves, but it will direct to ever richer fields of truth.

The object of correct thinking is to arrive at truth and thereby become free men and women. Man at his best is the greatest revelation of God.

It is the object of correct thinking to bring man up to his best. There is great power in repeated thought. As the old adage has it: "We sow a thought and reap an act; we sow an act and reap a habit; we sow a habit and reap a character; we sow a character and reap a destiny."

A single pair of feet passing over the greensward leaves little impression. But when many feet pass that way a path is made that is hard to break up; crooked or straight, it becomes permanent, and the tendency is for all men who come that way to follow that path.

It is said that the main street of a certain great city was laid out along the line of an old cow path, hence is very crooked. The poet presumes that an erratic calf first blazed the trail, and writes:

But still they follow—do not laugh—
The first migrations of that calf.
That through the winding wood way stalked,
Because he wobbled when he walked.
And men two centuries, and a half
Trode in the footsteps of that calf;
A hundred thousand men were led
By that lone calf three centuries dead.

A single thought passing through the brain leaves little impression. But when the feet of the soul stray often over that thought course, infamous or glorious, as the case may be, a brain path is formed. Brain cells harden like the old Santa Fe Trail that farmers now must break up with dynamite. That is thought habit, and accounts for the habitual drunkard, the religious bigot, for the age-long grip of superstition and error.

It is the province of education to teach the young to mark out straight and true brain paths. Your profession is honorable, and should be consecrated. Both teacher and student should remember that while one brain path may lead to eternal ruin and condemnation, another will just as surely lead to eternal salvation and glory. Choose wisely, and help others to select the straight and narrow path that leads to life.

---

PASSING OF F. C. KECK

By letter from Elder W. S. Macrae, we learn of the demise of Elder F. C. Keck, at his home, Nevada, Missouri, on Wednesday, July 14, at 8 p. m. The letter of Brother Macrae includes the following:

He was feeling better than usual, arose early and was cheerful. Was attacked with heart failure about 8 a. m., from which he rallied only temporarily. He realized the end was approaching, and called the family to the bed, bidding them an affectionate farewell, and admonished his wife to be reconciled, as he was ready and willing to go. He requested administration by his brother, C. W. Keck, and asked that he pray only for his peaceful release. This request was granted, and he passed away at 8 p. m.

He was born at Aurora, Illinois, October 13, 1855. Was married to Miss Emma Shade, October 31, 1876. Four children were born to them; L. A. of Saint Joseph; E. W. of Illinois; Mrs. John Noyes, Nevada, Missouri; and Iva, who passed over in May, 1909. He was baptized in May, 1887, by Brother Emsley Curtis. Was ordained to the office of elder soon after, and labored faithfully as a local preacher till he was appointed by conference, and gave all his time to the ministry.

Brother Keck was a clean man, and faithful in service. He was ordained to the office of seventy in October, 1894, and labored diligently as one of the minute men of the church. A familiar figure at the General Conferences, he will be missed by the members of his quorum and the conference, as well as by those among whom he labored, and by his immediate family.

As one by one those long in service pass over to join the throng of the tried and true, it behooves those who remain to close up the ranks and move on under the great heritage left to the church of latter days.

J. F. G.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

ADVENTIST LEADER DEAD.—Mrs. Ellen G. White, one of the founders of the Seventh Day Adventist faith, died at Saint Helena, California, on the 16th. The press announces that the body was taken to Battle Creek, Michigan, for burial.

STRIKE RIOT.—Rioting is reported as having occurred at Bayonne, New Jersey, in connection with the strike of the Standard Oil Works employees, resulting in friction between the mob and the police. Three have been killed and many injured.

WILSON FOR 1916.—President Wilson has been indorsed by the executive committee of the Democratic Party of Cook County, Illinois, for renomination by the Democratic National Convention of 1916. This is the first official indorsement of Mr. Wilson for nomination and reelection as President.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Accounts of military activities in Mexico are confusing. It seems to be the effort of each faction to issue reports in the hope of influencing the policy of the United States. The Carranza forces occupying Mexico City have left this city, presumably to engage the victorious Villa army, last reported to be pressing on toward the capital, and the city is said to have been reoccupied by Zapata. Carranza troops have occupied the Mexican side of Naco, the scene of trouble some months ago, when American property and lives were destroyed on the Arizona side of the international line. The American Red Cross reports a distressing food shortage in Mexico City. It is announced that attempts to relieve the suffering of noncombatants are hopeless under present conditions.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Stubborn Russian resistance seems to have partially checked the German advance upon Warsaw, after persistent and strategic gains by the latter, following terrific fighting. The Russians are said to be under the disadvantage of a lack of ammunition. The outcome is uncertain. The Russians have conducted a masterly retreat. The Germans have also made gains in the Baltic regions. Slight changes in the western lines, where at some points fierce fighting has occurred, favor the allies.

The Italians continue their aggressive warfare on Austria, with success. The allies report minor gains in Mesopotamia and at the Dardanelles. Report from Rome via London is that a Turko-German expedition has been launched against Tripoli, an Italian possession. The Italian cruiser, Giuseppe Garibaldi, has been sunk by an Austrian submarine. A fleet of fifty-nine Turkish sailing vessels, laden with war materials, has been destroyed on the Black Sea by Russian torpedo-boat destroyers. The Cunard liner Orduna, outward bound from Liverpool with two hundred and twenty-seven passengers, including twenty-two Americans, it was learned on her arrival at New York the 16th, was attacked by a German submarine on the 9th, near where the Lusitania was sunk. A torpedo missed the vessel by a few feet only, and she escaped in flight. The British court of inquiry in the Lusitania case holds that no blame attaches to the captain or the Cunard Line for the loss of this vessel, "due to damage caused by a submarine of German nationality." A settlement of the differences leading to the strike by coal miners in Wales has been effected, and the men are reported at work again.

NOTE TO GERMANY.—Secretary Lansing, for the United States, has replied to the German note of the 8th, stating that said note is very unsatisfactory, because it fails to meet the real difference between the two governments, and indicates no way in which the accepted principles of law and humanity may be applied in the grave matter in controversy, but proposes, on the contrary, arrangements for a partial suspension of those principles which virtually set them aside.

The American note expresses satisfaction in that the German Government recognizes the validity of the principles that the high seas are free, that the character and cargo of a merchantman must first be ascertained before she can lawfully be seized or destroyed, and that the lives of noncombatants may in no case be put in jeopardy unless the vessel resists or seeks to escape after being summoned to submit to examination; for a belligerent act in retaliation is per se an act beyond the law, and the defense of an act as retaliatory is an admission that it is illegal.

The note expresses disappointment in that Germany regards herself largely exempt from observing these principles by what she believes the practice of Great Britain to be in this war, and the United States declines to discuss the policy of Great Britain with regard to neutral trade "except with that government itself." The note recognizes "alterations of circumstances and method of attack" incident to the use of new instrumentality of warfare, but it can not consent to abate any essential or fundamental right of its people because of a mere alteration of circumstances. The rights of neutrals in time of war are based upon principle, not upon expediency, and the principles are immutable. It is the duty and obligation of belligerents to find a way to adapt the new circumstances to them.

Disavowal of the sinking of the Lusitania and reparation for loss of American lives is asked. The United States declines the proposal of Germany to recognize certain vessels "which shall be free on the seas," in an agreement which "would, by implication, subject other vessels to illegal attack," and which would be "a curtailment and therefore an abandonment of the principles for which this Government contends." Of the freedom of the seas, the American note states that "the United States will continue to contend for that freedom, from whatever quarter violated, without compromise and at any cost. Referring to the rights of neutrals, the note concludes with the words:

repetition by the commander of German naval vessels of acts in contravention of those rights must be regarded by the Government of the United States, when they affect American citizens, as deliberately unfriendly.

CHICAGO DISASTER.—A horrifying disaster occurred at Chicago, Illinois, early on the morning of the 24th, when the Eastland, an excursion boat, capsized at the docks in the Chicago River, near Clark Street. The boat carried two thousand, four hundred eight passengers, employees of the Western Electric Company, going on an outing, and a crew of seventy-two. Latest report is that eight hundred thirty-nine persons were known to have been lost. Different theories are advanced as to the cause of the disaster, including the opinion that the ballast ordinarily carried was lightened, the vessel capsizing when the larger part of the passengers surged to the river side of the vessel as it was about to leave the dock. Investigations into the cause of the catastrophe are under way.

---

NOTES AND COMMENTS

HOMEWARD BOUND.—As we go to press we receive word from Elder Peter Muceus, dated New York, July 24, and stating: "The boat Bergensfjord leaves here to-day, and I am billed for passage on it to Bergen, Norway." May our beloved brother have a safe passage and return to his family and the work in Norway.

Mr. Moody, taking in his hand a tumbler, explained that it was full of air, and that it was almost impossible to remove that air. In the same way the human heart is full of sin, and our efforts to remove it are unsuccessful. Seizing a pitcher of water from the table, he filled the tumbler so full of the liquid that it overflowed to the platform. There was no longer any air left in the tumbler. His moral was that when a human heart is filled to overflowing with God's Spirit, there is no room left for sin in that heart.—Tyler E. Gale.

EDITORIAL SELECTION

WORK

Work!

Thank God for the might of it,
The ardor, the urge, the delight of it—
Work that springs from the heart's desire,
Setting the soul and the brain on fire.
Oh, what is so good as the heat of it,
And what is so glad as the best of it,
And what is so kind as the stern command
Challenging brain and heart and hand?

Work!

Thank God for the pride of it,
For the beautiful, conquering tide of it,
Sweeping the life in its furious flood,
Thrilling the arteries, cleansing the blood,
Mastering stupor and dull despair,
Moving the dreamer to do and dare.
Oh, what is so good as the urge of it.
And what is so glad as the surge of it,
And what is so strong as the summons deep
Rousing the torpid soul from sleep?

Work!

Thank God for the pace of it,
For the terrible, keen, swift race of it;
Fiery steeds in full control,
Nostrils aquiver to greet the goal.
Work, the power that drives behind,
Guiding the purposes, taming the mind,
Holding the runaway wishes back,
Reining the will to one steady track,
Speeding the energies faster, faster,
Triumphing over disaster.
Oh, what is so good as the pain of it,
And what is so great as the gain of it,
And what is so kind as the cruel goad,
Forcing us on through the rugged road?

Work!

Thank God for the swing of it,
For the clamoring, hammering ring of it,
Passion of labor daily hurled
On the mighty anvils of the world. . . .
Oh, what is so fierce as the flame of it,
And what is so huge as the aim of it,
Thundering on through dearth and doubt,
Calling the plan of the Maker out;
Work, the Titan; Work, the friend,
Shaping the earth to a glorious end;
Draining the swamps and blasting the hills,
Doing whatever the spirit wills,
Rending a continent apart
To answer the dream of the Master heart. . . .
Thank God for a world where none may shirk,
Thank God for the splendor of work!
—Angela Morgan, in The Outlook, December 2, 1914.

Original Articles

SAFETY IN KNOWLEDGE AND RIGHTEOUSNESS

(Sermon preached by Elder J. R. Lambert, at Lamoni, Iowa, August 23, 1914. Reported by Estella Wight. Elder Lambert supplied some portions of the following sermon with the pen, which had been omitted on account of unexpected throat trouble while preaching.—J. R. L.)

As a starting point for what I may be able to say, your attention is called to John 17:3: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

It is a pleasure, but a great responsibility, to stand before this people as a messenger of the truth. I think I can truly say that from the time that I commenced preaching until now, I never stood before a congregation in the capacity of a minister for Christ but what I felt keenly the responsibility that rested upon me. There is so much at stake.

In my judgment, one of the things that this people greatly need at the present time is an increase in the knowledge of God, of Christ, and of the great gospel plan. It would reflect upon our claim for the goodness and wisdom of God, had he not made provision in the gospel, by virtue of which this knowledge may be conveyed to us; but thanks be to his holy name, the provision has been made, and when we faithfully perform our part we receive such knowledge as we need, here a little and there a little; and thus we make progress in the divine life, and if we continue faithful, will, without doubt, secure the full reward.

THE PROMISE OF KNOWLEDGE

In John 7:16, 17, we have the promise of this knowledge, to which I now call your attention: "Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me."

It was a question of origin that was raised by the people, and, in answering this question, Jesus gave them plainly to understand that the doctrine which he taught originated with God: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak for myself."

Here is a very significant and plain promise, stated in plain language, but like all other gospel promises, it is made upon certain stated conditions. We should be encouraged in an effort to secure the promise, but we should likewise be very careful not to overlook the conditions upon which it is made. "If any man will do his will," that is, the will of the Father, "he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." What is it to do the will of the Father? A kind of formal obedience to some of the first principles of the divine plan poorly represents what is meant by doing the will of the Father. It requires an intelligent and sincere response, upon our part, to every demand of the divine law, every requirement of the gospel plan, and there should be no reservation upon our part.

I have been told by some people that to obey God in an unqualified sense is dangerous. This class of individuals say that it is dangerous to obey anybody, in that sense. I am willing to admit that if God is an imperfect being, it is dangerous; but we understand him to be a perfect character, and the attributes of his character, named so plainly by Jesus Christ and his apostles, and by the prophets more or less, are of such a character that we can not doubt the perfection of God.

They tell us, this class, that to render such an obedience as this will make slaves of us. It will, if our God is a tyrant. But he is not. But he is as perfect and infinite in love as he is in power, and instead of making slaves of us, it will make us free; free men and women in Christ Jesus our Lord. And what does this freedom mean? If I confess that I am so weak that I can not keep this provision of the divine law, or that other provision, I am in bondage just to that extent. I am in bondage if I confess that there are certain evil habits that I can not overcome, certain things which are wrong that I can not help but do, then I am in bondage; and the bondage of sin is the worst kind of bondage that can possibly be. When we are made free, we have the power to do, we have the power to accomplish what God requires at our hands. Do not be discouraged if that power does not come all at once; but if we are faithful and true to God and each other, and fulfill the demands of the divine law, we will have this ability, this power to do right under all circumstances, under all conditions, that is to do that which will be acceptable to God. And when we come to face him in the judgment, we can render our own account, as the word says we will be required to do, without fear.

"The truth shall make you free." Do we know what power there is in truth? Do we know what power there is in the truth of God? In this verse "the truth" is used synonymously with the gospel, and the gospel is "the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." This is frequently quoted, but with the latter part left out. It is necessary that that part should be quoted with it. "It is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth." And sometimes I think it is a question how far, or how much we believe. I presume we believe in part, to a great extent, just as we know in part, and prophesy in part; but we should not stumble at what is plainly revealed as a requirement of the divine law.

I next call your attention to a statement found (or statements) in John 8:31, 32:

Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, if ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

It is necessary that we should be made free, and in order to accomplish this work, it is necessary that we should know the truth, and provision is made in the divine law for securing this knowledge.

The record says that when Jesus talked to the Jews upon this occasion many believed on him. Now he did not ignore their belief, he did not reflect upon it. He accepts it upon its face and says, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Dear brothers and sisters, the operation of the gospel plan, its principles, and the manner of securing its precious promises by the people of God, is the most wonderful system of truth that ever came into this world. And while war, with clash of arms, is in Europe (such as has never been witnessed before), there should be a corresponding effort upon the part of the people of God to rise to the occasion and answer to every demand of the divine law; for if our people can not now read the signs of the times, in view of the things that are transpiring in the world to-day, when will they ever be able to read them?

I would advise all to read carefully again the revelation on the Rebellion, and note this statement after the statements have been made about the Rebellion, beginning at South Carolina: "And thus war shall be poured out upon all nations, beginning at that place." Upon the grounds that the revelation teaches that it should be continuous from that day till this, some have said, it is a failure. I find occasionally one of our own people who has concluded it is a failure, and has begun to teach that it is a failure; but we have insisted that there is no failure, but that the statements thus far have been literally fulfilled. And now comes the evidence before our eyes, more than ever, to confirm our belief in it:

"And thus war shall be poured out upon all nations beginning at that place."

There have been a number of notable wars since the rebellion of South Carolina, since the Civil War, and a whole lot of smaller ones.

In July, 1883, while doing ministerial work in Chicago, Illinois, it was my privilege to listen to a lecture delivered by Reverend Henry Ward Beecher, a noted lecturer and minister. Among many other good things he said the following:

About thirty years ago I delivered a peace address in which I prophesied that there would be no more wars among Christian nations, that the differences between countries would be arbitrated, but since then five of the most terrific wars on record have occurred and I have quit prophesying.

The European nations are armed to the teeth. The spirit of war was never so rife as now!

KNOWLEDGE THROUGH THE SPIRIT

These scripture evidences that we have presented, and many others, show that we are entitled to divine knowledge upon the conditions expressed: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." "If any man will do his will," the Father's will, "he shall know of the doctrine." That this knowledge is communicated to us through the divine Spirit, is important for us to understand. As proof that it is, I call your attention, first, to 1 Corinthians 12: 3.

"Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed; and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, except by the Holy Ghost." That is, he can not knowingly say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. This settles the question. But there are other evidences. In 1 Corinthians 2: 11, 12, we have the following:

For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.

This is a precious privilege, but I am afraid that it is not appreciated as it should be. The things that are freely given to us of God, we may know. This is the way to develop us in the divine life, and we are fighting against our best interests if we leave undone any duty with which we are acquainted.

Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.—1 Corinthians 2: 13, 14.

This shows how we receive the knowledge of God through the divine Spirit. And now there are a few verses in John, fourteenth chapter, to which I call your attention, verses 21 to 24 inclusive:

He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. Judas saith unto him, not Iscariot, Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world? Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.

Isn't that a precious promise? Through the divine Spirit he will come and make his abode with us, as expressed by the Apostle Paul in Corinthians. "He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings: and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me."

Here is the true philosophy of the Christian religion, which is simple but profound and the principle involved is one that is true everywhere and always, that is, if we are going to test any system of truth, and we wish to understand all its merits and secure all the blessings that this system affords us, it can only be done through obedience. By obedience to the demands of that system, we enter into its merits and receive the blessings intended. This is a wise arrangement, for thus we become coworkers with God; we work together with him; we have our part to perform, and little though it be, compared with his, it is especially important that we perform it in order to secure the results. You know Paul said at one time, writing to the Roman saints:

The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.—Romans 8: 16, 17.

Paul was a wise man and an inspired man. First, we have the gospel preached to us, and we receive it by faith. We believe and become obedient to its first requirements, and through this faith and obedience we are entitled to the Holy Spirit of promise, that Spirit which bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God. This involves the necessity of a knowledge of the truth of the gospel being communicated to us. It is our privilege to receive this knowledge.

I wish to present some additional scriptures which throw additional light on the wondrous office work of the Holy Spirit in communicating to us divine knowledge concerning God, Christ, and the gospel:

But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.—John 14: 26.

The Holy Ghost is, therefore, not only a great teacher of truth for God and Christ, but if we make ourselves worthy, exercise true faith, and faithfully perform our part, it will bring to our remembrance from time to time, as we shall need, the things which he has taught us in the word. All this is plainly implied in John 15: 26:

But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me.

No wonder that Jesus would not permit his apostles to begin the prosecution of their great mission in "all the world," until they had received "the promise of the Father." (Acts 1: 4, 8.)

Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come. He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you.—John 16: 13-15.

TESTIMONY AND WORD HARMONIOUS

We see, therefore, that the Spirit of truth, which is the Holy Ghost, is not limited in the scope of its operations, except by God, Christ and the truth. This Spirit takes of the things of God and Christ and the gospel, and shows them unto us. But the testimony of the Spirit will always be in harmony with the testimony of God's word. God, who has given us his word, in former days and in latter days, never has, in the past, and never will, in the future, bestow his Spirit, that they who receive it may contradict his word.

Jesus said, in former days and in latter days, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." He also said, when praying to the Father, "Thy word is truth."

TRY THE SPIRITS

It is important that we should not be deceived. There is a liability of good men being deceived. There are many false spirits which have gone out in the world. Latter Day Saints are free and ready to testify to what they know. It is right that they should be able to testify, but it is necessary that we should be careful. There are two leading kinds of inspiration, one is from above and the other is from beneath; one is of God, and the other is of Satan. They are both supernatural, hence the necessity of our being more careful.

Now God has warned us, in all the records that he has given to us, of these things, and I wish to call your attention to some statements found in the Doctrine and Covenants. You will bear with me while I read at length:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, and give ear to the voice of the living God; and attend to the words of wisdom which shall be given unto you, according as ye have asked and are agreed as touching the church, and the spirits which have gone abroad in the earth. Behold, verily I say unto you, that there are many spirits which are false spirits, which have gone forth in the earth, deceiving the world: and also Satan hath sought to deceive you, that he might overthrow you. Behold, I the Lord have looked upon you, and have seen abominations in the church, that profess my name; but blessed are they who are faithful and endure, whether in life or in death, for they shall inherit eternal life.—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 1, 2.

Thank God for this. I am glad it is so. I am glad that if you are the only ones that are faithful and myself and all others are untrue to our covenants and unfaithful to our God and one another, that you will be blessed and saved. I am glad that it is so. I do not want anybody to be responsible for my weakness, or for my wrongs. It is enough for them to be responsible for their own, and I for my own.

Behold, I the Lord have looked upon you, and have seen abominations in the church, that profess my name; but blessed are they who are faithful and endure, whether in life or in death, for they shall inherit eternal life. But woe unto them that are deceivers, and hypocrites, for thus saith the Lord, I will bring them to judgment. Behold, verily I say unto you, There are hypocrites among you, and have deceived some, which has given the Adversary power, but, behold, such shall be reclaimed; but the hypocrites shall be detected and shall be cut off, either in life or in death, even as I will, and woe unto them who are cut off from my church, for the same are overcome of the world; wherefore, let every man beware lest he do that which is not in truth and righteousness before me.—Ibid., 50: 2, 3.

Now settle it down in your own hearts—and I notice the lesson is for me as well as for you,—that we are to do that which is right and in truth before God, before all men. It is a safeguard, the leading safeguard against these evil influences and evil spirits that are abroad in the world.

And now come, saith the Lord, by the Spirit, unto the elders of his church, and let us reason together, that ye may understand: let us reason even as a man reasoneth one with another face to face: now when a man reasoneth, he is understood of man, because he reasoneth as a man; even so will I, the Lord, reason with you that you may understand: wherefore I, the Lord, asketh you this question, Unto what were ye ordained? To preach my gospel by the Spirit, even the Comforter, which was sent forth to teach the truth: and then received ye spirits which ye could not understand, and received them to be of God, and in this are ye justified? Behold, ye shall answer this question yourselves, nevertheless I will be merciful unto you; he that is weak among you hereafter shall be made strong. Verily I say unto you, He that is ordained of me and sent forth to preach the word of truth by the Comforter, in the Spirit of truth, doth he preach it by the Spirit of truth, or some other way? and if it be some other way, it be not of God.—Ibid., 50: 4, 5.

Now let us not misunderstand this. It would not change the truth at all when it is not told in the spirit of truth, but it would change the character of the preaching. The preaching would not be of God, when it is not done by the Spirit of truth. So we are to study not only to preach the truth as it is laid down in the word; but to preach it in the Spirit of truth.

If it be some other way, it be not of God. And again, he that receiveth the word of truth, doth he receive it by the Spirit of truth, or some other way? if it be some other way it be not of God: therefore, why is it that ye can not understand and know that he that receiveth the word by the Spirit of truth, receiveth it as it is preached by the Spirit of truth?—Ibid., 50: 5.

Now notice how grand this is in its results, when we give heed to the instruction given:

Wherefore, he that preacheth and he that receiveth, understandeth one another, and both are edified and rejoice together; and that which doth not edify, is not of God, and is darkness: that which is of God is light, and he that receiveth light and continueth in God, receiveth more light, and that light groweth brighter and brighter, until the perfect day.—Ibid., 50: 6.

I stop reading in the midst of the sixth paragraph.

It is very plain from this that one of our safeguards is to be able to detect the character of the spirit that is manifested. If we receive a spirit that does not agree with the word, that spirit is not of God. God's Spirit is light. God's Spirit always tells the truth, and the same God that graciously gives us this Spirit has given us his word. We are not justified in claiming that we have received certain information or testimony by the Spirit, when that testimony is in direct opposition to the word; we would in this way, set God against himself, in conflict with himself. God is not in conflict with himself. We can not believe in that kind of a God, hence the testimony of the Spirit must always agree with the word.

If we will just stop and think for a moment, we can hardly fail to see the necessity for some proper and satisfactory test by which we may safely try all things which claim to be divine. The test must necessarily be both competent and authoritative. That is, it must be adequate to the needs of the case, and of divine origin.

God has always refused to be tried by human standards, and he has, therefore, in his wisdom and goodness, furnished us with rules and tests which we may successfully apply to every doctrine and spirit manifestation which claims to be divine. (See Isaiah 8: 20; Galatians 1: 6-12; 2 John verse 9; Deuteronomy 13: 1-4.)

We know that many of these peculiar conditions and spirit manifestations have developed since the gospel was restored, and here is one of the evidences of the divinity of the work we have accepted, in that God has provided means by which we can test the spirits that are abroad in the world, always have been, more or less, but especially so since the restoration of the divine plan.

So we will go directly to section 52, Doctrine and Covenants. We have something here very comprehensive and very plain, paragraph 4:

And, behold, he that is faithful shall be made ruler over many things. And again, I will give unto you a pattern in all things, that ye may not be deceived; for Satan is abroad in the land, and he goeth forth deceiving the nations; wherefore he that prayeth whose spirit is contrite, the same is accepted of me, if he obey mine ordinances.

So we can not only judge by the character of the sentiment, whether it is that which would proceed from the Spirit of God, for we may be deceived by this alone, but herein is added another test, "if he obey mine ordinances."

The word ordinances is used in its broadest sense. Whatever is enjoined, whatever has been commanded of God is an ordinance of God, in this sense.

He that speaketh, whose spirit is contrite, whose language is meek, and edified, the same is of God, if he obey mine ordinances. And again, he that trembleth under my power shall be made strong, and shall bring forth fruits of praise, and wisdom, according to the revelations and truths which I have given you. And again, he that is overcome and bringeth not forth fruits, even according to this pattern, is not of me; wherefore by this pattern ye shall know the spirits in all cases, under the whole heavens.—Ibid., 52: 4, 5.

Here is something of real value. Here is something of importance—something that all of us ought to read carefully, study and pray over, that we may receive light. It will work out its results as designed by God, just as well as any mathematical problem will work out its results. It is correct, and it shows that the young seer was directed by the wisdom and inspiration of God in laying the foundations of this work.

I trust that our faith will increase; that our carefulness will be more than it has been in the past; that our ability to discern between good and evil, between false spirits and the Spirit of God, will be better than it ever has been, because we live nearer to God, and hunger and thirst, day by day, for righteousness, that we may be filled (as the Inspired Version says) “with the Holy Ghost.”

May the Lord bless us and help us to triumph over darkness and evil and wrong; and rest assured, dear Saints, when you are making the effort to secure this triumph, you will discover here and there, and all along, that the gospel is in very deed, “the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes.”

* * * * *

WHERE DO WE STAND?—NUMBER 3

BY J. AUGUST KOEHLER

BUILDING THE KINGDOM

Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you. (I. T.)

No people have been more devoted to the work of teaching the importance of gospel ceremonies or ordinances than the Latter Day Saints. The supreme effort of our work—our intention—has been to “build up the kingdom of God,” and yet we are as far from having “all these things,” i. e., the necessities and conveniences of life “added” unto us as a result of that effort as we can well be. The struggle for existence is with us about as acute as it is elsewhere; on the whole, we are about in the same circumstances in this relation as the rest of the world. Our efforts to build up the kingdom of heaven have not yielded the promised results; all “these things” have not been added unto us any more than they have been added to others who make no pretense of seeking first the kingdom. Personally I don’t think that as a church we have made a proper effort to establish the righteousness of the kingdom. And I betake myself to the task of pointing out in a general way our weakness.

Up to September, 1831, one year and a half from the time of the organization of this church, sixty-four sections of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants had been given. Thirty-two of these were largely personal, that is, they were addresses to individuals and had to do in the main with calling men to offices and instructing them about their particular work; fifteen were of a general character; two related more particularly to the Book of Mormon; five dealt chiefly with ceremonies and sacraments; and ten contained much instruction about temporalities. This is not an exact classification, for some sections treat several questions. However, a careful reading will show that much more instruction has been given to the church concerning Zion’s temporal salvation than concerning sacraments: about nine times as much, as I calculate it. And it is significant that much of this instruction was given to the church in its very infancy.

When we read the first volume of the church history, we are impressed with the zeal that was manifested in matters affecting Zion; and the activities of those days indicate that those matters were held to be of no small importance. Some think that the hope of the Saints in this regard was somewhat responsible for the persecution that was heaped upon them.

What I am particularly interested in, however, is why God gave the church at such an early date so much and such explicit instruction regarding its temporal salvation. I answer, because any proper effort to build up the kingdom of God involves at once the business of establishing relations between men that solve the bread and butter question. Jesus said: “Your father knoweth that ye have need of these things.” Why, certainly! and he knows too, that we need them before we need anything in the nature of ceremonies; and to me no religious program is rational, it does not reflect the divine thought, unless it aims at once to bring about the kind of relations that obviate the necessity of taking thought as we do now of what we shall eat and drink on the morrow. This to me is the significance of the statement, “seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.”

Surely God’s scheme for the salvation of Zion is a rational scheme, and must be based upon the nature of man; man is by nature first an animal; he is so constituted that he can not, much less will not give himself over to cultural pursuits while the bread and butter question is gnawing at his vitals. More than that, even with these wants satisfied thousands still continue the effort to surround themselves with the conveniences of life to the exclusion of what many are pleased to call religion. I submit what most of you must know to be a fact, that it is because many Saints are so heavily weighted down with the cares of life, of what appears to them to be a necessity for giving themselves over to the matter of providing the necessities of life, that they do not have the time nor energy nor inclination to devote to church work that we think they should. How many hands are tied in this church because the mind is weighted down with considerations of "what shall we eat on the morrow, and wherewithal shall we be clothed?" Not a few I know.

Thank God, the latter-day work is right in theory, whether it ever becomes right in practice or not. No theory of the universe is in closer accord with our nature and the idea that man should seek to save his soul than this: "That which cometh of the earth is ordained for the use of man, for food and for raiment, and that he might have in abundance, but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin." Such matters as this, says God, have to do with the salvation of Zion—with the building up of the kingdom of God. (Doctrine and Covenants 77:1.) And in accordance with our nature which demands first of all the satisfaction of primary wants, God spoke to the church in its inception and made it one of the first duties to see that these things were properly provided for.

Now where do we stand on this matter? Well, we have placed these things almost at the bottom of the list of our efforts to build the kingdom. We have kept about as many men out in the field preaching about the ordinances of the gospel and the story of the restoration as our income would permit. We have grown to be giants in this respect, but in the work of redeeming Zion we are mere pygmies. Answer for yourself how much of the following we have accomplished:

1. Organization and coordination of the business interests of the membership (Doctrine and Covenants 101:10-12; 77:1; 81:4).

2. The purchasing of land (Doctrine and Covenants 102:8), some of which is to be public property (Doctrine and Covenants 42:10; 57:2), that is, owned by the church and not by individuals, and upon which

3. Workmen were to be put (Doctrine and Covenants 58:12) to labor for the public welfare.

4. The allotting of stewardships (Doctrine and Covenants 70:3). How many have we?

5. Giving inheritances (Doctrine and Covenants 98:4). Who has them?

6. Establishment of storehouses (Doctrine and Covenants 51:4; 70:2; 82:2). Where are they?

7. The church "independent above all other creatures beneath the celestial world" (Doctrine and Covenants 77:3), as a result of these doings. Is it?

It seems that the church is almost a beggar at the pocketbooks of its constituency. Some of the creatures within the church may be independent of other creatures, but where does the church stand?

Now, we not only do not stand on higher ground than did the early church, but we are actually behind it in these respects. Witness the following:

Doctrine and Covenants 57:4, 5: Sidney Gilbert establishes a store on the stewardship basis, and W. W. Phelps is established as a printer to the church on the same basis. Volume 1 of the Church History refers to the destruction of the store shortly afterward (page 316).

"And thus the sound of the gathering, and of the doctrine, went abroad into the world; and many, we have reason to fear, having a zeal not according to knowledge, . . . have no doubt in the heat of enthusiasm, taught and said many things which were derogatory . . ." (Church History, volume 1, page 289). Our history is not very definite on these points, but we can see written between the lines the efforts of the Saints to purchase the lands, establish stewardships, and allot inheritances in accordance with the revelations to which we have already referred. I grant that we do not want a zeal that is not tempered with knowledge, but I say also that we do not want a knowledge that is not made effective with zeal. My observation tells me that the membership as a whole has neither the zeal nor the knowledge that is necessary to make the work of Zion's redemption a near probability.

I think that in our anxiety to prove our theory of doctrine and organization, and thus get members into the church so that we can preach these things on a larger scale, we have overlooked the importance of equipping ourselves with the only real argument of the value of this work that can be made, viz, the proof of how it works. The world is not much interested in theories in these days of "the strenuous life," but it will welcome the facts that will enable it to see the solution to the problems that so perplex it.

We have rather sought first to establish our theory of the righteousness of the kingdom, rather than the righteousness itself. But establishing a theory is not our business; our business is to establish the righteousness. We would have some difficulty proving the virtue of our economic scheme by what it has done for us; I would not want to attempt such a task. On the other hand, we will not need to waste words arguing when "Zion shall flourish, and the glory of the Lord shall be upon her, and she shall be an ensign unto the people, and there shall come unto her out of every nation under heaven"; the fruits of our faith will be argument enough. In those days we will need to be particular to see that those who apply for membership in the church are truly repentant and understand what baptism into Christ means before we admit them.

I want to say again that temporal righteousness is related to spiritual prosperity. "The kingdom is righteousness, and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." Righteousness is related to peace and joy in the Holy Ghost as cause to effect. "Nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal (this is what the revelations say is right, Doctrine and Covenants 49:3), and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld." (Doctrine and Covenants 70:3.)

In this connection the experience of the primitive Christian church is significant. Read Acts 4:29-35: "The place where they were assembled together was shaken," etc. "Neither said any man that aught of the things he possessed was his own." Precisely what Doctrine and Covenants 101:10 says: "All these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain." The days of the church's temporal righteousness were the days of its spiritual prosperity. It was so with us; it will be again when we begin at the beginning place to build the kingdom.

When our interests are "pooled" in harmony with the law of church, the prosperity that will result will drive away the fear of poverty; each individual will feel that the resources of the group are his resources; the strife and contention that goes along with our present economic relations will give place to "peace and good will"; we will not need to worry about the morrow; all that will be necessary is to see that we continue to seek to keep the righteousness of the kingdom established; then the bread and butter question will be solved automatically, and we will take on a mental state that will permit God to work through us as he would like, and it will be said in fact that with us the "kingdom of heaven is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."

Now I am not so much of a pessimist as some may think. I am really very optimistic. I think we are entering upon a new era of activity, and I expect to help build up the waste places of Zion. Everywhere I go I find harbingers of good things to come. Saints are getting tired of a do-nothing policy, they want to get somewhere. I think we are really standing on pretty high ground; higher perhaps than what we have accomplished indicates. We are getting tired of discussing the question, of "Where did Cain get his wife?" "Will the heathen come forth in the first resurrection?" "What percentage of the cats in the days of Moses had white on the tips of their tails?" etc., and we are getting down to "brass tacks." The "vision" of Zion is clarifying; and if this matter is discussed freely enough the sentiment that will develop in the church will soon bear fruit in activities that will make the church what God intends it really shall be: "Independent of every creature under heaven."

I hope we will all make a long pull and a strong pull and plant our feet on higher ground.

(To be continued.)

---

Department of Education

EDITED BY SAMUEL A. BURGESS, LAMONI, IOWA

MORALITY IN OUR COLLEGES

We are very much interested to notice in Practical Eugenics, of February, 1915, the following statement in regard to morality in our collegiate institutions. Professor T. W. Shannon is the editor of this publication, which is the official organ of the Single Standard Eugenic Movement. We consider this of special interest.

SCIENTIFIC ACCURACY IS NOT A SUFFICIENT SAFEGUARD TO VIRTUE

There is a marked tendency among many medical and biological writers and lecturers on sex hygiene to emphasize unduly the importance of accurate scientific instruction and to largely or entirely overlook the value of moral and religious emphasis in presenting the subject. A strong moral conviction is more potent, as a safeguard to virtue, than the most accurate scientific knowledge. For a number of years, the editor has lectured quite extensively among college young men, and has conducted personal interviews with a large number of students in each college. The statements contained in this article are based upon a fair knowledge of the social and moral conditions which prevail among young men in more than one half of the colleges in this country.

There is a much larger percentage of college young men who have lived virtuous lives than can be found among the young men who do not go to college. Virtue and laudable ambition are usually inseparable. Easily two to three times as many young men in our church colleges have kept their virtue, as compared with a corresponding number of students in our private and State colleges, where little or no responsibility is assumed by the faculty for the moral and religious education of the student. It is also true that the students in our church colleges come from homes of larger moral and religious influence, than do the students of the other colleges. However, in either event, the value of moral conviction is evident. . . .

In the institutions, devoted exclusively, or nearly so, to intellectual training, there are pure young men, but the number who have been free from immorality is proportionally much smaller. With the exception of two or three State colleges, the Y. M. C. A. secretaries have expressed to me their regrets and disappointments shown by the faculty in the moral and religious welfare of the students. . . .

If accurate scientific instruction on this vital subject was alone necessary to virtuous living, we would have a right to expect medical colleges to rank higher than any other class of colleges in virtuous manhood. They, too, have pure young men, but the percentage is much smaller than that found in the religious colleges.

Growing out of the nature of their profession and the moral qualifications required of teachers, the normal colleges rank well as to virtuous manhood.

The object of these comparisons is not to show that one class of colleges is more moral and religious than another class, but to show that moral conviction and moral character, the products of moral and religious education, are absolutely necessary to a virtuous life. Neither is it the purpose of this article to underestimate the value of accurate scientific sex knowledge, but to call attention to the relative value of the two. Both are valuable, neither should be neglected, but the greater emphasis should be placed upon the moral and religious. This should be preeminently true of all books and addresses intended for children and young people, during their formative periods of character building.

Professor Shannon has made this work his special study. He has had better opportunities than almost any man we know for investigation, yet we note his convictions.

1. That moral and religious training are more important than intellectual in combating immorality, and especially the social evil.

2. That college boys and men are cleaner and more moral than other men, on the average.

3. That among colleges the smaller religious college is much better in general morality than is the case with the State university.

Professor Shannon is not alone in these conclusions. Many of the Young Men's Christian Association secretaries deplore the lack of supervision of the students in the large State universities. Yet, on the other hand, we must not exaggerate. These university men are not worse than other men. College men are not more immoral at the State university than are other men, but rather better. Their ambition, their study, tends to make them more moral. Still in this particular they are inferior to those at the small college, where they have a stronger religious atmosphere, and in which the faculty takes a personal interest in the students.

---

Of General Interest

VULGARIZING AMERICAN CHILDREN

An old gentleman once complained to Emerson that he had never received any deference, because in his childhood all honor was paid to age, and in his age all the thought and attention were given to children.

Reverence for age is, like reverence of every kind, the characteristic of highly civilized people; but if it were necessary to sacrifice one of these two kinds of reverence, it would be better for society to give up reverence for the old rather than reverence for childhood. The old have made their lives—have largely made their souls, to recall a French phrase; but the young are still making their lives.

It is almost impossible to exaggerate the care, thought, and intelligence which ought to surround children, and it is one of the hopeful signs of the times that society is more and more guarding their health by supervising the houses in which they live, the milk and the water they drink, the food they eat, their exercise. In many communities the regulation of the physical life of children is becoming both a science and an art.

But in curious contradiction to this care for the body is the extraordinary absence of care for the minds of children. Many influences are at work to vulgarize American children, and little is done by many parents to protect the mental health of their children. Neither time nor money is spared to preserve them in vigor and strength to protect them from contamination; but there are hosts of houses built and conducted with full recognition of all sanitary regulations in which none of the older people pay any attention to the minds of the children. Meanwhile those minds are the prey of a great many influences which, if not actually evil, are vulgarizing. Nothing could be worse, so far as the artistic sense and moral good taste are concerned, than the great majority of the so-called comic supplements published by the newspapers. The Outlook has pointed out more than once the bad taste, lack of artistic feeling, and general stupidity of much of the illustration in these supplements. One has only to make a collection of them to see that the great majority of these supplements published between Boston and San Francisco are mere repetitions of the cheapest and crudest kind of humor. They are devoid of any skill in drawing, in the portraiture of character; but worst of all are the inevitable lessons they teach of lack of respect for the old, lack of reverence for marriage and the family, for other races, and general lawlessness. No child who has the comic supplement put before his eyes Sunday after Sunday during his childhood can fail to be more or less contaminated in taste and morals.

To this must be added a great number of the films on which hundreds of thousands of children are looking throughout the country. The moving picture in some form is part of the recreation of the country. It has great educational possibilities and manifold wholesome uses; but many of the films, although not indecent, are in the last degree vulgar. They cheapen love, marriage, and family life. They lower the respect of boys for women, the respect of girls for themselves. They idealize burglary and crime of many kinds, and they are a menace to the welfare of the country. What is going on is not so much the corruption of young people in America as their vulgarization. Some of the sex plays are too frank; many of them are intended to appeal to instincts which need restraint rather than stimulation, and they express, therefore, the meanest kind of commercialism. But much more dangerous, because more insidious, are many of the musical comedies. Thousands of people who would not go to see "The easiest way" will go to a musical comedy in which all the girls are soubrettes and the relations between men and women are treated as mere material for cheap fun. And these musical comedies are given at amateur performances for the benefit of charities by carefully bred girls who seem entirely oblivious of the low and vulgar tone which runs through them. . . .

Great masses of books put into the hands of American boys simply make them intellectually idle, superficial, and mentally unmanly. Professor Munsterberg says: "There is indeed a difference whether I ask what may best suit the taste and liking of Peter, the darling, or whether I ask what Peter, the man, will need for the battle of life in which nobody asks what he likes, but where the question is how he is liked, and how he suits the taste of his neighbors." For the chief enemy of active virtue, Doctor G. Stanley Hall has written, "is not vice, but laziness, languor, and apathy of will." One page of a real story like Treasure Island is worth a whole library of this milk-and-water prepared food. Indeed, it would be better to starve children, so far as reading is concerned, and let them find all their interests out of themselves, rather than to weaken and debilitate the whole character by this sort of reading. . . .—The Outlook, May 19, 1915.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS, LAMONI, IOWA

The Children's Tent at Reunion

There comes to us from the advisory board of the Woman's Auxiliary a request for a statement of what was done among the children at the reunion of Lamoni Stake last year. The following is an effort to comply with the request.

In the first place a committee of auxiliary workers, appointed the year before, met and assigned various departments of work to the supervision of different workers. For the first time, a tent for meetings of children was provided.

In previous years, the children had enjoyed a long season of play at reunion times, while their elders attended meetings, mornings, afternoons, and evenings; but now a tent was provided, that the children also might have their attention called at times from their free play to exercise under the supervision of leaders. The unabated interest of the children and their deep enjoyment of the work done in their tent called forth the unanimous approval of parents who saw their children happily engaged in those hours when services were had in the main tent for adults. Without hesitation, it was understood that there shall be a children's tent on the grounds of our next reunion. This speaks for itself.

SERVICES IN THE CHILDREN'S TENT

Work opened in the children's tent at half past ten in the morning, the intermediate and junior department Sunday school superintendents being in charge. Following this, the primary and beginner children occupied until noon. After the period of intermission, the home and child welfare superintendent took charge and provided for the young children in the tent, while older classes met with chosen leaders and did raffia work or sewing a part of the time and then separated to engage in the games of supervised play.

At night the little tent was closed, for the children were then tired from a day of activity, and should have been in bed, if they were not.

THE MORNING PROGRAM

That of which we are especially requested to write is the work among the primary and beginner children, as this in particular was related to the work of the Woman's Auxiliary last year.

Those in charge of the morning exercises of the young children planned daily illustrated sermonets which resolved themselves into morning talks with the children; for the little ones responded so freely that they were really conversations, the children talking their full share of the time.

In planning the program work, Bible stories were left for Sunday exercises, for children love variety, and there is an abundance of God's truth in his works of nature, and many valuable lessons may be put before children as the great Teacher gave them, from stories of real life.

So there were planned a measuring day, and bird day, a tree day, a day for stones and shells, and perhaps some others, but these were all the material that could be used in the week days, for the children became so animated at times that they could not be drawn from a subject, and two days had to be given to finish it.

MEASURING DAY

Measuring day was the first Monday of the reunion. It was casually announced to some of the boys that all who presented themselves on that day at the time and place named would be measured. This announcement met a response that might not have been accorded had we announced that we were going to hold Sunday school again on Monday morning, for many a good little boy does not care to go to Sunday school more than once a week.

It was when the work of measuring actually began in the little tent that those in charge became busy, very busy indeed. The height of each child who presented himself was recorded, to be entered in a little book to be his own at the close of reunion. It took two days to measure them all, for they came, little and big, and passed under the measuring rod. Several recorders were kept busy taking down the measurements, and a small army had to work to make the booklets improvised on the grounds. It was laughingly said there was a publishing house on the hill where the little books were folded, cut, tied with baby ribbon, and lettered. In these books the children's names were entered, with height and age, a table of the hours of sleep required at various ages, a statement of some things that hinder bodily growth, and some other things that may be mentioned later.

In the morning talk on measuring days (for it took two days) we talked about the desirability of being large and strong, of the fact that the civil service rejects men who are undersized, of the effect of our habits and food upon our growth. After having talked, not to the children but with them, of these things, the very beautiful and impressive story of the measuring rod was told, to teach the lesson that we must grow in spirit as well as in body.

A tiny little girl listened with intentness to every word of the story. Its meaning sank into her childish heart, and she carried the story home to her mother to whom she confided also the resolution she had made, to be obedient to her mother's teachings, so that she might not fail, as did the little girl in the story, to measure up to the spiritual height which heaven requires. The child did not say it in those words, but that was the meaning in the story, simply told, and she understood it.

It is to be believed that many of the children who listened to the story of the measuring rod had thoughts and made resolutions like those of the little girl mentioned. Perhaps no sermon preached to older ones was more impressive for good than was this story told to the audience of children.

OTHER SPECIAL DAYS

Finding we must cover our ground more briefly in order to mention all things of importance, we will state that, on tree day, the tent was decorated with branches of trees and with drawings of various leaves and plants. These were made for the occasion by a very obliging sister. The morning talk was on the peculiarities of plants, the shapes of their leaves, the effect of leaf shapes on the roots of plants, and so on. The children, during noon intermission, searched for leaves of various shapes, which were pressed and afterwards were mounted in the booklets.

On bird day the tent was made bright with pictures of birds, redbirds, bluebirds, yellowbirds, and one of a beautiful golden pheasant, loaned for the occasion and handled most carefully. This was a very animated morning; for the children had many stories to tell about birds. Interspersed with these stories, much information of a scientific nature and of practical value was given, but so simply that the young auditors could understand it. They were told of the great work birds do, and of the State law for the protection of birds, and its prohibitions. They were taught verses about birds and a bird song, the sentiment of which made it a temperance song.

On the day when stones and shells were the objects of illustration, a bag of ordinary but pretty stones was first used; then two abalone shells, one polished and the other in its rough coating, were shown, and with these as illustration a very good lesson was made on the importance of true culture, that which makes us beautiful in spirit. The details of the lesson can not be gone into.

One morning the program had a touch of the patriotic. Our beautiful national flag was in evidence. The children were led to talk of the first President of our Republic; then they told us the name of our present national head, and we told them of the sorrow that was over his home that day, and all stood while a few words of prayer were offered for him. For the moment the sympathy of those children went out to the man who presides over the affairs of our Nation, affairs of great importance to the children of our land as well as to older ones. Well for the children of our Nation if his heart turns also to them and their needs.

One page of the booklet registered the daily attendance of the children, a little red star being pasted in every day the child was present. This little book, with its red stars, its pressed leaves, its table of hours of sleep, its suggestions touching food and drink, its bird-song, its precepts concerning courtesy, were given to the children on the last day of the reunion to be carried home and prized by many of them, as there is reason to believe.

THE AFTERNOON WORK

In the afternoon, the children came together again. A short period was given to the telling of a story. This differed from the work of the morning in that the afternoon audience sat quiet as at an entertainment and listened to the recital of the story selected.

After the telling of the story, the older ones withdrew to do supervised work, or to games on the hill, while the little children busied themselves with some of the apparatus of the Montessori idea. Each child was free to work with the thing he chose, and as long as he chose. He put it away when he felt disposed.

They built the tower of graduated blocks; they made the long stair; they fitted the graduated cylinders into the block of wood, a device which many children under two years of age find to be of absorbing interest. They learned to use the lacing frame, the buttoning frame, and the tying frame. Even girls in their teens who dropped in to watch the little ones became interested in learning to tie nice little flat bows of ribbon on the tying frame.

These devices have all been described in the Home Column in the articles furnished by the Home and Child Welfare Department; we do not therefore, enter into details of their description here. We feel, however, that they are to be commended to the attention of the mothers of little children as valuable for the help they furnish in the entertainment and development of the little ones.

There was upon the reunion ground a very genial man, the father of a large family, who remains young in heart by his very ready helpfulness in all the work of the children. He might have been seen one morning marshaling every boy large enough to handle a knife, and some not large enough who aspired to that accomplishment. Forty there were, if not more, and they spent an hour of vigorous effort, if not of achievement, in the unspeakable joy of a boy's heart, whittling.

On another afternoon, this brother entertained the children, large and small, in the children's tent. He folded and tore paper, making beautiful and intricate designs. His audience of small folks brought scissors and spent a happy hour in cutting paper after the patterns made for them. This busy work was purely entertaining.

A corps of volunteer policemen, small boys decorated with silver stars, rendered valuable assistance throughout the reunion. They kept the furnishings of the children's tent, in particular the little red chairs, collected at the tent, and did other things of like nature that counted for much.

This account of what transpired in connection with the children's tent has been hastily written as the office waits for copy. It may be that some things have been dwelt upon at length while others have received scant mention or have been forgotten; but it is our effort to respond on the spur of the moment to the request of the Woman's Auxiliary for a statement of the work among the children at Lamoni's reunion last year.

The Measuring Rod Story

(As simplified and told by Sister Callie B. Stebbins, author not known to her.)

My story will be about a measuring rod. It is the story of a dream.

A little girl named Mabel had a dream, and in her dream she was on her way to school. She was wearing a nice, clean dress that her mother had ironed. Her mother did many things for her, but she wasn't very thoughtful about doing things for her mother. When she was asked to help with the dishes or other work about the house, she said sometimes, "I wish I could be like other girls at school. I'm sure they don't have to help with the work!"

And she wasn't very patient with her little sister. She was all the time thinking about what she herself wanted and not very much about what would be pleasant for other people.

But she liked to go to school and this morning she was on her way. As she went along she looked over to a grassy place in the town where there were no houses. She saw gathered there a great many people and she wondered why they were there.

A girl came hurrying along, and Mabel asked, "What are all those people doing over there?"

The girl answered, "Why, don't you know? It's measuring day and the Lord's angel has come to measure our souls, to see how much they have grown since he was here before."

"Measuring day!" Mabel said; "measuring souls! I never heard of such a thing." She began asking questions, but the girl was gone too far to notice them. Other people were going, too, and Mabel followed with them.

In the center of the green stood a great elm tree. In the shade of the tree there was a platform with steps leading up to it. On this platform the angel stood. His clothing was of a strange, soft, shining white, and his face was the kindest Mabel had ever seen, and yet the most serious.

At the side of the platform, fastened upright in the ground, was a golden rod with marks along on it, showing that it was a measuring rod. At the top of the rod there were words that read, "The measure of a perfect man." Perfect, you know, means all good,—without any wrong in one. Jesus was perfect. The angel held a book in his hand, and in it he wrote the measure of each one who came at his call to be measured.

Mabel did not know the first ones who came, but it seemed to her that their measures were either higher or lower than the persons looked to her. And so it was, for the mark on the rod showed only the measure of one's goodness.

When the angel called another name, Mabel saw coming to the platform a large, fine-looking lady. She had heard of this lady for she was one who sometimes made speeches to the people, and she was president of some society.

Mabel thought: "I believe she will have a high mark, for I think she does good things." But oh! this nice-looking lady was not kind to the people who worked for her, and she forgot to pray and to be thankful to God for all the good things he had given her.

And, so, when she stood by the golden measuring rod, her mark was low. The angel looked sad and he said, "This soul should have a high mark; but there are many things for her to learn and to do before her mark will be up where it ought to be."

The next one called was Lillian. Lillian was one of Mabel's schoolmates. She had the most beautiful dresses and hats and hair bows! Mabel was always wishing that she could have such pretty things as Lillian's and that her father had as much money as Lillian's father had.

At school Lillian was always telling about the new things she was going to have, and how her new dresses were to be made. Whatever the children played, she always wanted them to do just as she said. I fear Lillian was selfish.

When she went up to the measuring rod, no one noticed her beautiful dress beside the angel's shining one. She didn't think of it, either. She thought only of her mark, for it was low—oh, so low that her face grew white as she looked at it.

The angel said gently, "My child, think less of the fine things to adorn your body and more about making your spirit beautiful." Then Lillian passed down, and another one was called.

This time it was a man called Jerry. He mended shoes for the people and he always had a good word for everyone. He found time, too, to do a good many kind things. And he loved to read the Bible. This was because he loved the Lord and was trying to serve him. When he read the Bible he tried to remember what it told him to do and that made him always ready to do good to other people.

He came hobbling up the steps in his plain, everyday clothes, and as he came, the angel smiled. He was a short man but his mark was away up. And the angel said, "He that would be the greatest, let him be the least and the servant of all."

Then came Archie. He was a big, pleasant-faced boy—just a common, ordinary boy—and yet not so common as we might wish, for it would be nice to have more boys just like him.

Over by Archie's house there lived a widow. You know a widow is one whose husband is dead. There are so many things a woman can't do, and when there is no man about a house she has to get some one to do them for her. When this widow had to pay every little while five or ten cents or twenty-five cents for work she had to hire, it took just that much that she ought to have had for food or other things she needed. And so, sometimes when Archie got up on a winter morning and saw the snow piled over everything, he would start out to shovel walks, and when he had finished his own he would go on along her walk and right up to the door and even around in the back yard, so she could get out to feed the chickens and get water from the well.

One time he got some boys together and they cut up a lot of wood for her. It didn't take them very long and they had a fine time visiting while they worked.

Boys sometimes wanted Archie to go with them to take other people's peaches or pears or apples, and he would say, "No, sir! I guess I can keep the commandments, 'Thou shalt not steal!' And he wouldn't cheat in games. He said, 'If I win, I win fair.'" The same way at school. He wouldn't look on another boy's paper to get his answers. He said, "If I can't get my answers, I'll wait till I learn them." He was the kind of a boy that could say, "No," if anyone asked him to use tobacco or beer or whisky.

He was just a laughing, playing, working kind of a boy, but he was trying to do right.

And where do you think his mark went? Away up where Jerry's was! Only a boy, but he was doing just as well for a boy as Jerry was for a man. And the angel said, "Well done, my boy. Keep trying for a higher mark."

And then Mabel's name was called. She trembled as she went up the steps and the angel put out his hand and led her to the measuring rod. Down, down went her mark!—clear down to Lillian's, the lowest of all. She hung her head and her face grew red. Then she looked up at the angel and whispered, "Don't put down the mark this time. Give me another chance and I'll try to do better." The angel shook his head. "The mark must go down," he said. "Try to make it higher next time." Then he laid his hand on her head and said, "My dear child, think less of yourself and more about others. Remember, the Lord loves you, and if you really want to grow better, ask him, and he will help you."

And then Mabel burst out crying. All at once she was awake and she found herself crying. It was only a dream, but she will never forget that dream. She was much ashamed of her low mark.

Requests for Prayers

The Saints are requested to pray for Brother Robert Campbell, that if it be God's will he may be fully restored and regain his health. This brother was, some months ago, seriously ill, but was restored to strength through administration. He seems to have overdone himself, and desires that he may again be restored.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS, LAMONI, IOWA
Home

There is perhaps no word in any language more significant than the word home. Poets have sung of it, painters have portrayed its beauties, orators have found it one of the most inspiring themes. There is no person, rich or poor, but what looks backward, through joy or sorrow, through care or comfort, to some spot more sacred than all others, around which clusters the tenderest memories, and which is beloved above all others, called home. Travelers visit spots made sacred by historic events, look upon landscapes beautiful to behold, and inspiring to the senses, but all this is made more beautiful and more sacred by the inspiring thought that when the pilgrimage is over the feet will gladly turn toward the cherished place called home; whether it be graced with a mansion, or adorned with a cot, whether furnished by the munificence of wealth, or provided for by daily toil.

And what is this place called home, or, rather, what renders this place so sacred, so dear to the heart?

Many and varied are the definitions of the word home. The first and leading one given by our lexicographers is "a place of abode"; but if this were all, all persons would abandon one home for another when convinced that the place offered is more comfortable than the other; but such is not the case. True men and women will not abandon the cabin where poverty is their portion, for the palace of luxury, if that cabin is truly a home, and the elements of home must be sacrificed in the change.

How often does a fair young woman of virtue and intelligence leave a home of wealth and luxury, and abandon prospects of social distinction and ease to dwell in a lowly cottage with one who has won her love. Or even though the cottage has not materialized, she goes to help build it, and though adversity is her portion through long years of toil and deprivation, she never murmurs nor complains, but is contentedly happy in her lowly home; nor does she ever envy her fortunate sister who has secured a home of ease and luxury, but each day her heart is filled with gratitude and praise to God for her happy home.

We shall never be able to define home, but we must seek some other definition than "a place of abode." Webster's fourth definition really ought to have the first place, viz, "The abiding place of the affections." So to constitute a real, an ideal home, the affections must be enlisted, aye, more, the affections must not only be enlisted, but must be perpetuated; so conditions should obtain that will feed the affections, and keep the fire of love burning upon the altar.

The home is the mother of the church, and no ideal church can exist without ideal homes. If it does not find them ready at hand it must produce them ere its mission can be accomplished, not alone for part of the people but for all the people. First, by teaching people to make homes for themselves, and second, by supplying homes for those who can not provide for themselves.

The church undertook one of the most important of its duties when it took steps to develop the home as provided for in the revelations, and to apply the principle of home-building both to the homeless children, and to the aged who have been unsuccessful in providing homes for themselves while in manhood and womanhood vigor.

In this work as in our individual homes we must not lose sight of the important principle that home is not simply "a place of abode," but "the abiding place of the affections."

If we are only providing a place of abode, a shelter from the storm, food to eat, and raiment to wear, we are not making homes for our children or our aged people.

If we are surrounding these institutions with conditions that enlist, retain, and develop the affections, then are we doing our duty, not otherwise.

While the inmates of our church homes should have as good quality of food and raiment as we provide for ourselves, or as nearly so as possible, yet this is but a secondary consideration. The love and kindness that surrounds the home with an atmosphere of peace and good will is the main feature that makes these places not merely "places of abode," but "the abiding place of the affections."

The old people will probably pass out of these homes to the better home beyond; but the children will pass out into the world. Oh, may God bless his people, that they may have the ability and the heart to make the Children's Home a place to which fond memory will turn in peace and love through all the vicissitudes of life.

Among the many pictures of home that we have seen, there is nothing more real and expressive of affection and trust than the one of the boy Jesus in the carpenter shop holding a chisel in one hand, the other, one finger streaming with blood, outstretched toward the mother who is just entering the door with bandages of linen in her hand. The artist had certainly succeeded in catching the expression of infinite trust in the face of the child, while the expression of deep and pure affection on the face of the mother was too intense to describe. It was truly expressive of home, "the abiding place of the affections," and could be produced nowhere else.

---

Demonstration

We are not presenting in this issue practical suggestions of how to raise money for the Children's Home, but instead, a practical demonstration.

Two young sisters, Mrs. Bertha Bailey Burgess and Mrs. Avis Hopkins Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, conceived the idea of giving an entertainment for the benefit of the Children's Home. They enlisted others in the effort, and trained children for each of the parts in the beautiful play, "A day in flowerdom." It was delivered with such splendid effect that there was a demand for its repetition. This was cheerfully given and the two entertainments resulted in about one hundred dollars, net.

The children of the home were given places of honor at the entertainment, and thus an impression made upon their young minds never to be effaced, in addition to the splendid material help realized. The memory of this occasion will bring these young minds back to the home in after years, and with other memories will focus around the "abiding place of the affections." All this is accomplished without sacrifice upon the part of the patrons, for each has received full returns for money expended.

---

The Orphan

There's grief upon thy childish brow, and woe upon thy cheek,

Remembrance in that fervid glance, so mild, and fixed, and meek;

And something like a clinging back to many a summer scene, For memory oft will tell her tale of those that once had been.

She has her mother's deep blue eyes, her mother's gentle voice,

Which bade the listener's soul be glad, the mourner's heart rejoice—

Her father's spirit high and pure, with childhood's radiant smile,

That will through mem'ry's tears the heart to hope and joy beguile.

Yet why is care upon that brow, and grief on cheek so fair?
Why is no wreath entwined among the ringlets of her hair?
And where are they who gave to earth this bright and beautiful flower?

The midnight of the heart comes not with childhood's earliest hour.

Oh, they!—they both are gone; the sire, the lov'd and blest,
Deep in the blue Atlantic lies, its wave his place of rest;
And her young heart was all too fond, too dear its favorite dream,

To hear such a tale of woe, and be as she had ever been.

And there she lies, the parent flower, like some departed ray,
Leaving one darling bud to mourn her long though sure decay.
The child—oh, let her gentle thoughts to them in silence rove;
She is their living monument—the offspring of their love.

—Selected.

---

Letter Department

VICKERY, TEXAS, June 29, 1915.

Editors Herald: The HERALD reaches us every week with glad tidings of great joy. I read of many things that remind me of like experiences in this great army of the Lord. Saints, when your faith becomes weak concerning church institutions and departments of church work, go to God who is able to bless. If we continue to complain and murmur, our faith is many times weakened, as well as that of those to whom we complain. Let us rely on the promise of God, believing all things that are written in the law of the prophets, asking ourselves why we are here, and if we are not to sacrifice our bodies and many pleasures? This is a day of sacrifice in every sense of the word.

So, dear Saints, let us take courage. The time of our Lord is drawing nigh, and even the widow's mite is worthy of notice by the Master.

Your sister,
MRS. ADDA STANDEFER.

---

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, April 23, 1915.

Editors Herald: At a very late date the sad news of the demise of our aged and beloved President reached us. We were grieved to learn of his demise, though we realized that he had passed the age allotted to man.

His life was a life of sacrifice, but he endured all bravely for the sake of him whom he had chosen to serve, even Jesus. Truly he could say, "I have finished the work thou didst give me to do." We not only sympathize with his family in their bereavement, but we also with them mourn his loss, for their bereavement is our bereavement also.

And we pray that the blessing and power of that high and holy office may rest upon his son and successor, that the work of God may move on and prosper, and the way be prepared for the second advent of our Lord.

We hope the late conference was attended with an increasing degree of the power and peace of the Holy Spirit, and that the work done has been pleasing unto God, and that he may grant his blessing upon it, is our prayer.

Your brother and sister in Christ,
REES and HANNAH JENKINS.

News from Missions

Arkansas

I started to this field of labor about May 1. My first stop was at Grannis, where I met with our old faithful friend, Ed Clinton, and his noble family. Brother Ed has a nice home, and is doing all he can to promulgate the gospel. I met Brother J. M. Smith at Grannis. He and I went to Cove, where we met with a few faithful Saints. Brethren J. M. Wilson and Tom Dazar are trying to keep the camp fires blazing. We had a good week of meetings, and on Sunday administered the sacrament, and enjoyed a spiritual feast. At Cove we heard our faithful brother and friend, Ellis Short, spoken of often. He used to run a large planing mill at this place.

On leaving this place I met Brother W. W. Chrestensen, missionary to this field. He and I went to Grannis, and from there to the Ozark Schoolhouse, where we held meetings a few days. We were entertained at the home of Brother Puckett. On leaving here, Brother Walter and I started across the pine hills to find a brother's home. After walking a mile or so we discovered that we were lost. We climbed several hills and finally stopped to rest and listen for some human voice. We could only hear the distant sound of the horned owl and the hum of the mosquito. We finally returned to Grannis, where we had a few meetings.

On Sunday we enjoyed the sacrament and a good prayer meeting with the Saints. Saying good-by to them, Brother Walter went south and I came to Euclid, Howard County, where I found Brother J. S. Moore standing faithfully at his post, caring for the Jacksonville Branch. On June 10 we began meeting at the Oak Hill Schoolhouse, with a small crowd. The attendance increased until the house would not seat more than half the people. We held meetings seven days, and then went six miles to the Liberty Schoolhouse and preached four sermons. We had a crowd of about two hundred people at this place. From here we went about four miles to the Utah Schoolhouse and preached several sermons with good crowds and fine interest.

Last Saturday, July 3, I went back to the Oak Hill Schoolhouse, preaching two sermons on Sunday and administering the sacrament to the Saints. At this time we enjoyed as fine a prayer meeting as it was ever my lot to attend. The Saints rejoiced and sinners wept. Many of the Saints confessed their wrongs and promised the Lord they would live better. Brother J. S. Moore has been faithfully caring for the work in this country, and rejoiced to see the prospects for the work. I baptized five noble men and women. One of them was a young school-teacher with quite a bright mind. If he will live meek and humble, he will be useful in the church.

This is where Brother J. D. Erwin was beaten with many stripes in opening up the work in this county. This is the home of Grandpa Jackson, also of J. W. Jackson, who was in the missionary work for several years. The work has passed through many trials, but my prayer is that the darkest day is past and that a brighter time will soon dawn, when the many noble Saints who live here may rejoice in the Spirit of God and come up higher, in a righteous life, being ready to meet our Savior when he comes to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords.

We are going to have a reunion at Grannis, beginning about August 20. Let everyone who can come, bring bed and food, and enjoy a spiritual feast.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your brother,

E. A. ERWIN.

Maine

Am laboring at present in the Eastern Maine District. The district conference at Kennebec was a great success. The church building where the meetings were held was packed on Saturday night and all day Sunday, and over half of the people were outsiders. We were told that over one hundred people could not get into the church on Sunday night. There was not a jar throughout the entire sessions of the conference. And why should there be jars and contentions among the Saints of God, when they meet to transact business for the Lord, in the interest of his great church on earth? In view of the instruction he gave to the elders years ago, "Let contentions and quarrelings among you cease. Sustain each other in peace, and you shall be blessed with my Spirit, in comforting and strengthening you for my work," it must be very displeasing unto our heavenly Father to behold his chosen people condemning and quarreling with each other. Hence it is that the true follower of the meek and loving Jesus will strive to comport himself or herself as a true Saint should, in the business meetings, the same as in a prayer and testimony meeting.

The Saints of Kennebec were ably assisted by the many friends in caring for the visitors. Our old and faithful Brother Emery Foss did all within his power to look after the interests of all and to make the conference a grand success. He is climbing up the ladder of time, only a few more years to live at most, and he says that he is anxious to go to his eternal rest in the paradise of God. He will be greatly missed by both Saint and sinner. We surely enjoyed hearing him relate his wonderful experiences in the work. He was well acquainted with the old war horses, namely, T. W. Smith, Father Ells, Joseph Smith, A. H. Smith, and many others of the old missionary force. "He is a jolly old fellow," applies well to this good brother. God bless him, and may his last days on earth be the most happy and peaceful he has enjoyed in this sinful world.

Mr. and Mrs. Davis and their family entertained a household of the visitors, and if they did not tell you differently, you would not know but what they were real Latter Day Saints.

All they lack to be good Saints is baptism. We live in the hope that when we return to Kennebec, if ever we do, we will find them in the church.

Our next place to visit was South Addison. While there Brother Ebeling and the writer reorganized that branch, and renamed it. Brother David Joy was ordained an elder, and made president of the branch by unanimous vote of the people. This brother is greatly beloved by both the Saints and the outsiders. The name of the branch hereafter will be Addison, as nearly all the members live in said township. It was formerly known as Indian River Branch, and was presided over by our old and faithful Brother Uriah Kelley, who is well known to all the missionaries that have traveled in Maine for many years. He labored as missionary himself, but is now too old and helpless to perform much work for the heavenly Master. He is hard of hearing, and going blind. There is no man in Maine that is more honored and loved by the people than our dear Brother Kelley. His good wife shares in the confidence of the Saints, and is well known to the traveling ministry for her kindness, as she with her excellent husband is given to hospitality." The great majority of the Saints reside in and around South Addison, and that is where they will have their place of meeting. The president of the district, Brother Ebeling, will see that they have a minister to preach for them three Sundays a month. They will now have regular services, Wednesday night and on the Sabbath.

The Saints here in Jonesport are wide awake, and maintaining good works. Brother Rogers and his branch officers are actively engaged, pushing the work of God, not only in the branch, but striving to get the gospel before the people in the adjoining towns. The members are rendering them all the assistance possible. I wish other branch officers and Saints would follow their example. The Saints here took in over two hundred dollars last Monday, feeding the people who came to town to celebrate the Fourth of July. They all worked like bees in a hive. They have a beautiful new church building, which will hold a very large audience. I never was in a branch where the outsiders take such an interest in the preaching of our gospel. The house is full every Sunday night, and we have good crowds throughout the week nights, too.

Our worthy Brother F. J. Ebeling is president of the Eastern Maine District, and Jonesport is his objective point. He is accomplishing a great work in this place, and surrounding country. The Saints and outsiders hold him in high esteem. He is surely making a great record for himself. This brother is getting to be a wonderful preacher of the gospel, and the Lord is blessing his labors with great success. One thing that I admire in our brother is the fact that he does not theorize and philosophize in his preaching, but delivers the gospel truths in much plainness, and in the power of the Spirit that carries conviction to the hearts of those who are honest before the Lord.

If our ministry would confine themselves to preaching the pure and simple gospel of salvation, they would convert a good many more people than they do. Some of our elders seem to think that they must try to tell the people some new thing, forgetting that the gospel is older than the hills, and was preached by old father Adam. And Paul says that this old-time gospel "brings to light, life, and immortality." Therefore, the ministry of Christ should not spend their precious time in preaching vain things, but should fast and pray, and keep themselves in a condition to receive the Spirit, without which they should not make an effort to present Christ and his gospel to the people.

I leave here in the morning for Corea, thence to Stonington, and the Onset reunion, in Massachusetts. The officers and Saints have given me a kind reception in all the places that I have visited. I am stopping with Mr. Cummings and wife. She is one of our active members, and he is very near the kingdom. Both of them take great pleasure in caring for the wants of the missionary. I have enjoyed my sojourn in this place, and the association of the Saints. This town ought to be called Longtown, as it is about three or four miles long, with only one street. The scenery is just grand around here. The tide comes up within a few feet of the kitchen of Sister Cumming's house. This is the place for fine clams and good, wholesome fish, right out of the ocean. We have had much rain and fog since my arrival here.

With best wishes and love to all of God's people, I remain,

Your brother in the one faith,

JONESPORT, MAINE, July 9, 1915. GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

South Sea Islands

I will endeavor to write a few items through the columns of the HERALD, telling of the work in the South Sea Islands Mission, from the woman's standpoint, for we believe that there is an important work to be performed among the natives of these islands by the missionary's wife, as well as by the missionary himself. Service is the keynote of a true Christian character, and if one really desires to serve his fellow man, he can find ample opportunity to do so among this people.

We often think of the statement of Jesus, "Freely ye have received, freely give." We feel that we have been privileged to receive freely of many things never enjoyed by these people, many joys unknown to them, many conditions and experiences foreign to their lives; therefore, we feel that we should assist them in every way possible, that they, too, may experience these greater privileges and blessings.

Brother Ellis and I left our home in Michigan ten months ago to-day, starting upon our wedding trip of over six thousand miles for this mission. These months have been busy ones, studying the native language, and adjusting ourselves to the conditions here, hence we have found no time for loneliness. There is so much to do and so few to do it that we feel that we can ill afford to waste our time upon trifles. Although our acquaintance with our Lamanite brothers and sisters has been a few months only, we have learned to love them as brothers and sisters in the gospel tie. And because of this love, the desire burns strong within us to become instruments in the hands of God to assist them to higher planes of living.

As it is much easier to work with the plastic minds of the young than with those whose habits of character have long ago been established, we began our work with the children as soon as we had sufficient knowledge of the language to attempt it. We find the children very interesting and responsive. There are two things that a native child loves—a song and a picture. So we immediately translated two or three songs into the Tahitian, and with this and the promise of a picture to each one who came to Sunday school, we set the ball rolling.

At first we had only four children, but our class has steadily grown until we now often have over twenty, about all one cares to handle in one class. Every Thursday morning the children come to the house to learn the lesson for the succeeding Sunday. After this the boys go, and the little girls remain while I teach them sewing.

The little girls are much interested in their sewing. The first day that we tried it, I told them to come at nine o'clock, as usual, for the Sunday school lesson and after that we would have sewing. The next morning before I was up, I heard children's voices, and upon examination found two little girls sitting in the door, thread, needle, and cloth in their hands ready for the sewing class. I suggested to them that they had better go home and stay until nine o'clock. They went home, but eight o'clock found them back again. When I would say to them, "We will stop our work for to-day," they would say, "Aita, aita, nida noa; a hamani oe i to oe maa, e e nida noa matou." "No, no, sew on; you get your dinner and we will sew."

There are some very small children in the Sunday school class; their ages range from three to twelve years. Some apparently get very little good from the lesson, but little do we know how much is really planted in their little minds. One little tot of about three years I was never able to draw out. She always came, but never showed any interest in the story. I had taught the children a little prayer in Tahitian to say nights and mornings, and also taught them that they should thank God for their food before eating it. This little girl was visiting away from home in a family outside the church. It came mealtime and the family proceeded to eat without asking the blessing upon the food, so she said to them, "E pure i te Atua no te maa e te ahu." That is, "Pray to God for food and clothes." They only laughed at her, but again she said, "E pure i te Atua no te maa e te ahu." Upon being questioned she told them that she had learned at Sunday school that we ought to thank the Lord for our food.

One afternoon during the sisters' prayer meeting, a tiny little girl of five years arose and said, "E pure i te Atua," "Let us pray to God," and knelt and said the prayer that she had learned. What an example that child set for many who are older! Truly a little child shall lead them. This little girl, by the way, represents three races—white, yellow and red, for she is one half Chinese, one fourth American and one fourth native.

Thus, through such little incidents from time to time, we are made to feel that our work is not altogether in vain. When we hear of a small child who regularly kneels and prays to God, we are made to rejoice. Such an incident in a Saint's home in America would not be considered such a wonderful thing, but here it is different: parents teach their children almost nothing; they simply "come" up. And then the parents wonder why they do not take a greater interest in the church work when they reach young manhood and womanhood.

The mother love is very, very strong among native women for their children; but it is an ignorant, untrained love, and through this great love for the child they often do the very thing which injures the child most. From the time the child is born, in most families, the mother does all she can to please it, so that when it reaches the age of three or four years it has a very strong desire developed to always have its own way. I have seen mothers give up their chairs to little children, while they sat upon the floor. The mothers are unselfish in their relations to the children, and consequently, according to the old saying, "An unselfish mother makes a selfish child," we do not wonder that we often see selfish children.

It is this strange parental love which is so strong that it can not be firm with a wayward child who desires to live in adultery in the father's house, and the same parent's negligence deprives the child of its greatest blessing, the favor of our heavenly Father.

We find here a wide field for work along auxiliary and social purity lines. Social conditions among the young and old are deplorable. We talk in America of the "double standard" of purity for men and women; we can not even boast of a double standard here. Morals along the line of social purity are at a very low ebb. We find one of the greatest difficulties to be the lack of public opinion against immorality. A right and sane public opinion can do much toward correcting many evils. In America the girl who falls is ostracized by the so-called Christian world; here she associates with the same people and is accorded the same treatment as the pure girl, until she sees no reason why she should change her way of living. These are two extremes. Would that we could find a happy medium—produce an environment in which the fallen girl would be helped and strengthened, but in which the sin itself would never be condoned. We intend to do what little we can along these lines, teaching the great need of purity among the Lord's people—we can at least drop a pebble in the great pool.

Sister Chrestensen is upon the lower islands with her husband. She is a brave little woman, and is doing a good work among the women and children wherever she goes. Just at present we are looking forward to the visit of Brother and Sister Hanson to these islands upon their way to Australia. They will arrive here about July 5, and of course we will be more than pleased to meet them.

Trusting in the God of Zion, that we may all be blessed by his Spirit, I am,
June 10, 1915.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
CLARA KELLOGG ELLIS.

West Australia

We are endeavoring to open up the work in this Golden City, which is situated in a great territory hundreds of miles from anywhere. It is a city of fifty thousand inhabitants, entirely sustained by the mining industry. One portion of the "ridge" is called the "golden mile." Upon this huge piles of railings betoken the existence of great underground caverns, where men daily delve and risk their lives laboring for the glittering gold.

The soil is of rich, red volcanic order, but owing to the meager rainfall, little in the way of plant or tree life flourishes. The water supply, without which the city is impossible, is conveyed thither a distance of four hundred miles, through a system of iron pipes and pumping stations. It is an ideal climate in winter, but very hot and dusty in summer. The famous "willy willy," which is a kind of cyclonic storm, is a veritable terror to housewives and shopkeepers during summer, and raises the red dust to a great height, causing a temporary eclipse of the sun, and penetrating every nook of house and shop.

The people here are of the democratic order, the labor party being paramount in politics and local government. We applied to the council to obtain an anteroom at the town hall in which to hold public meetings. We were required to prove that we were not Utah Mormons before we could get our application considered. This evil shadow of Brighamism seems to hover like a bird of ill omen over all our movements, simply because we are Latter Day Saints and believe in the Book of Mormon, and they claim to do the same. One gets tired of dealing in negations instead of being permitted to go on with positive work. This is no doubt why our progress is so slow. It would be a great thing for our work if our name could consistently be abbreviated, and a little adopted disassociating us from the Brighamite abomination. We obtained the hall, however, and are now holding meetings therein, with the consent of the city fathers, which is to my mind a great concession.

Our first meeting therein twenty-five persons assembled, and at our third Sunday meeting over thirty persons attended. We also have a Sunday school of about twenty. Brother E. H. Davies' presence here has made this opening possible, he having opened meetings in his private house and baptized some besides awakening an outside interest. This man is a thorough missionary, a good speaker, and one of the best personal workers I know. If this should meet the eye of the Twelve, I hope they will, as soon as possible, appoint him, as he is quite willing and qualified. To my mind it pays better to appoint qualified men than to send out those who have little qualification for the work.

In my judgment, a missionary should be stationed in Kalgoorlie, for it is a splendid field of labor and it needs the gospel more than any place I know.

Some local clergymen of prominence here lead the people downward instead of upward, taking the friendly glass of intoxicating drink, which is perhaps the greatest sin of this field, and also encouraging football and horse racing, the former on Sunday. When in meeting on Sunday afternoon, one is grieved in spirit to hear the day profaned by the hoarse roar and the tumultuous cheering of the football field, and this at a time when our nation is in death grips fighting for its existence against the greatest military combination of history.

We hear this profane roaring in the afternoon, and in the evening the cheering of the crowd sending away our young stalwarts to the great European slaughter house, in France, or the Dardanelles. God seems to be left entirely out of the question, except that a few enthusiastic evolutions and a few set prayers are invoked to satisfy the easy conscience.

It is now June and we do not yet know the result of General Conference. We are anxiously awaiting it. My health since coming to Western Australia has not been good; though I have kept "on deck," yet I have felt it a very hard year, and sometimes wonder if I shall keep up physically until I get release from the mission.

I am still strong in the faith, and desirous of working on for the Master until he shall say "Enough."

Trusting all is well in Zion, and ever praying for the triumph, I am,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

J. H. N. JONES.

KALGOORLIE, WEST AUSTRALIA, 131 Collins Street, June 9, 1915.

P. S. Since writing the foregoing, conference news comes to hand. I was more than surprised at my name being among the patriarchs. Years ago I had intimation that ultimately I should go to that office, but I did not think the time was yet come. Had thought that I should be a high priest first. I feel greatly the new prospect of responsibility, but trust that God may sustain in any new or difficult sphere of labor.

J. H. N. J.

News from Branches

Burlington, Iowa

Burlington people who attended the General Conference and heard the appointments read, felt a peculiar sinking sensation when they heard none read with "Burlington, objective point"; but our spirits raised somewhat when we were assured from reliable sources, that our needs would be cared for. There was, of course, sincere regret at Brother Well's removal, but we are disposed to feel that the Lord was directing, as we had asked that it should be, and if his work here was done and another field opening for him, we were entirely safe in trusting for the outcome.

We believe now that we have strong reason for gratitude for our good fortune, in the appointment of Brother D. J. Williams to Burlington. Brother Williams and his family have been with us now for a little more than a week, and we feel sure there are good things ahead, especially in the way of musical development and auxiliary work. They stopped for a day in Burlington, returning from the district conference at Fort Madison, and so were here for the farewell social and reception given Brother Wells and his family.

We had a most enjoyable visit from Brother J. A. Gillen, our missionary in charge, May 23 to 26 inclusive, during which time he spoke for us five times. The weather was not so favorable as might have been desired, so there were comparatively few outsiders in attendance, but the interest of our own people kept up throughout. The stay was all too short, and we are hoping he will find it possible to return before "many moons" have passed. Brother Gillen was also present with us at the Fort Madison conference, where he presided, with the district vice president, at the Saturday business sessions, and spoke Sunday morning.

The conference and conventions were well attended, and especially in the convention sessions we felt there was a spirit of progress and activity which promised well for the future. Brother James McKiernan was elected district president to succeed Brother G. R. Wells.

Brother C. E. Willey spent Sunday, June 20, in Burlington, having come to baptize two of his little grandnieces. He spoke for us Sunday evening.

Both Religio and Sunday school are active and progressive. Very little change was made in the Religio executive at the election just passed, and with the practically unanimous support of the membership, we may well expect some strides ahead during the next six months.

In the Sunday school two special days have been observed during the past few months—just a few short numbers during the Sunday school hour, to mark "Mother's Day," and the morning service time of Sunday, June 27, devoted to Children's Day exercises. The program was, in some respects, the best we remember of having been rendered here, two of the numbers being attractive drills. The predominating theme of the program was the service of the flowers, comparing it to the service we may render. Brother Williams gave a short talk, which was just the right thing in the right place, and we felt that the time was surely well spent. We were reminded of the splendid talk given the Sunday school by Brother Gillen on the same theme, and felt that the exercises should impress the lesson the more deeply.

Organized class work is proving an advantage, three of our Religio classes having organized, and an organized Sunday school home class and aid society reporting splendid interest, and some effectual work in the missionary line.

Wednesday evening, June 30, fifty or more surprised Brother and Sister Williams, and after spending a thoroughly enjoyable evening, left a substantial assurance of their welcome among us.

CORRESPONDENT.

Miscellaneous Department

The Bishopric

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Western Colorado: I wish to call attention to the urgent need of the wherewith to carry on the gospel work. Let us prove the Lord by bringing our tithes and offerings to his storehouse, and see if he will not pour out a blessing upon us. If we have paid our tithing, or have none to pay, can we not sacrifice a little of our abundance and give an offering unto God, that there may be enough and to spare?

We should be thankful that we live in Joseph's country and appreciate the gospel, and want to assist in carrying it to others who are seeking after the way of eternal life. We are not asking for large amounts, but of all a little, that each name may be "written there," on the bishop's books.

Trusting I may hear from many soon, so that we will not have to call on the bishop for help, I am,

Your brother and coworker,

M. Y. SCHMID, Bishop's Agent.

DELTA, COLORADO, 326 Maine Street, July 19, 1915.

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT

To the Saints and Friends of the Portland, Oregon, District, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints: Please take notice that upon the resignation of Elder L. Stover, former agent of said district, Elder P. G. Hager, 106 East Eighty-sixth Street North, Portland, Oregon, has been duly appointed bishop's agent and authorized to act in and for said district.

The Presiding Bishopric note in this appointment also the excellent work of Brother L. Stover in the interest of the church as bishop's agent in and for the Portland District, and extend special thanks to him and the Saints and friends of said district for the same.

The Bishopric also take pleasure in recommending to the Saints and friends of the district Elder P. G. Hager as bishop's agent and trust that each and everyone may be ready to assist him in his arduous work, and may the Lord be with and bless each helper, and great good may in the interest of his work be accomplished.

Very respectfully submitted,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 19, 1915.

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT

To the Saints and Friends of the Southern Nebraska District, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints: Please take notice that upon the recommendation of the district conference of the Southern Nebraska District and the resignation of Elder C. H. Porter as bishop's agent, Elder H. A. Higgins, 1207 Third Corso Street, Nebraska City, Nebraska, has been duly appointed bishop's agent in and for said district.

The Presiding Bishopric extend special thanks to the retiring agent, Brother C. H. Porter, who has so long, successfully and satisfactorily filled the position of agent for the Southern Nebraska District. We trust that in his change of location and business the Lord will be with and bless him and his family.

We also bespeak for Brother Higgins the cooperation of the Saints of the Southern Nebraska District and trust the Lord may help each one who shall undertake to help in his work, that the financial work of the district may be performed by proper cooperation of the membership and officers and the Lord's work honored as it should be in each district of the church.

Again commending the agent and his work to the Saints and friends of his district, we are

Hopefully in bonds of peace and good work,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 16, 1915.

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT

To the Saints and Friends of the District of Idaho of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints: Please take notice that upon the recommendation of the conference of the district of Idaho, on May 22, 1915, appointment was duly made of Elder G. W. Winegar, Caldwell, Idaho, R. F. D. 5, as bishop's agent in and for said district. This duly authorizes Brother Winegar to act in and for said district in behalf of the Bishopric.

The Bishopric also extend to Brother M. J. Durfee, former agent of said district, special thanks for his work and interest as bishop's agent in and for said district in the past. Trust he may be blessed and prospered of the Lord in his present labors for good.

The Bishopric especially commend Brother G. W. Winegar to the Saints and friends of said district, and ask for him and in his behalf the assistance and cooperation of those interested in the Lord's work. May each one be ready to show forth in his work the fruits that should ever characterize a child of the Master.

Again commending him to the helpers, and trusting the Lord will bless and direct him in his labor, we are Ever hopefully laboring for the success of the truth,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 16, 1915.

Conference Minutes

CLINTON.—June 26, 10 a. m., Coal Hill, Missouri. Reports: Coal Hill 62; Eldorado Springs 128; Fort Scott 83; Mapleton 175; Veve 98; Walker 19; Rich Hill 150; Taborville 56. Officers elected: W. S. Macrae, president; W. H. Lowe, first vice president; Merle Quick, second vice president; Lyda Budd, secretary and treasurer; Lucy Silvers, member library board, recorder and historian; W. E. Reynolds, bishop's agent. W. S. Macrae was appointed one of a joint committee with one from a Sunday school and one from Religio to raise fund to be loaned to some one who would attend Graceland College. Lyda Budd, secretary, Zora Lowe, secretary pro tem, Eldorado Springs, Missouri.

SPRING RIVER.—June 12 and 13, Webb City, Missouri. Reports: Pittsburg 176; Joplin 320; Purcell 62; Vera 124; Weir 120; Scammon 96; Webb City 251; Pleasant View 106; Fairland 262. Ordination of Benjamin C. Tribble to office of priest ordered. Resolution prevailed asking Presidency and minister in charge to appoint district presidency. Mollie Davis elected secretary and treasurer; F. L. Freeman member auditing committee. Preaching by F. M. Sheehy, Ellis Short, Roy Budd. Adjourned to meet at Pittsburg, Kansas, November 6 and 7. Mollie Davis, secretary, 115 Jefferson Avenue, Pittsburg, Kansas.

Convention Minutes

CLINTON.—Religio, June 25, Coal Hill, Missouri. Reports: Taborville, Nevada, Rich Hill, Eldorado Springs, Coal Hill. Edith Gernhart appointed on committee for fund to loan some one attending Graceland College. Officers elected: T. L. McCormick, president; Hollie Dennis, vice president; Lyda Budd, secretary; Adrian Lowe, treasurer; Ida Noyes, member library board; Dollie Brunson, home department superintendent; Raymond Taggart, superintendent gospel literature.

Lyda Budd, secretary, Zora Lowe, secretary pro tem, Eldorado Springs, Missouri.

CLINTON.—Sunday school, June 26, Coal Hill, Missouri. Reports: Childers, Coal Hill, Nevada, Mapleton, Fort Scott, Lowry City, Lewis Station, Morning Star, Eldorado Springs, Walker, Veve, Rich Hill. Oland Rooks appointed one of committee for fund for some one to attend Graceland College. Zora Lowe, secretary, Eldorado Springs, Missouri.

Conference Notices

Central Oklahoma in connection with reunion, August 20 to 29, Terlton, Oklahoma. C. T. Sheppard, president.

Northeastern Kansas, 10.30 a. m., August 21, Fanning, Kansas. Series of meetings week or ten days following conference. After consulting with Brother F. M. Sheehy over conditions, we concluded it would not be advisable to hold a reunion this year. We hope the Saints of the district will make an effort to attend the conference and meetings. Attention of branch presidents, branch clerks, and ministry of district is called to district rules regarding reporting. Send reports to M. D. Robinson, 835 Kansas Avenue, Topeka, Kansas. Frank G. Hedrick, president, Fanning, Kansas.

Western Maine, August 21 and 22, 2 p. m., Little Deer Isle. Full reports of branches and officers expected. George H. Knowlton, clerk, Stonington, Maine. Send documents care of J. J. Billings, Little Deer Isle, Maine.

Florida, September 18, 10 a. m., Alafloa church, Dixonville, nine miles south of Brewton, Alabama. Prayer service 9 a. m. Reunion to be organized immediately after adjournment of conference. E. N. McCall, secretary, route 5, Brewton, Alabama.

Reunion Notices

Seattle and British Columbia, August 6 and 16, Centralia, Washington, North Park. Rooms: $1.50 per week, four blocks from grounds. Wood, straw and several stoves furnished Saints free. Tents and two cots, each $5. Order at once. Leonard S. Rhodes, 1005 South Tower Avenue, Centralia, Washington.

Eastern Oklahoma reunion and conference, August 20, continuing over two Sundays, conference last Saturday and Sunday, Grannis, Polk County, Arkansas, on Kansas City Southern Railroad, 259 miles south of Joplin, Missouri, 74 miles north of Texarkana, Arkansas. Come prepared to remain, well supplied with eatables and bedding, wagons, tents, etc., able to care for selves and others. W. M. Aylor and other good speakers of missionary force will be present. Good singers. Plenty of water near grounds. Good pasture within half mile. Write at once to W. E. Clinton, Grannis, Arkansas, for tents, cots, chairs, and information. J. C. Chrestensen, W. E. Clinton, J. Hoffman, committee.

Southern Kansas, unorganized territory, August 13, to continue 10 days, Wichita. Come prepared to bear your own expenses. F. M. Sheehy, J. Arthur Davis, T. C. Kelley, A. C. Martin, and we hope one of the patriarchs will be present. A few tents, 8 by 12 and 10 by 12, $2.50 each. Send remittance with order early, to E. L. Barraclough, 240 South Glum Street, Wichita, Kansas. W. Vickery, E. L. Barraclough, committee.

Central Oklahoma, August 6 to 15, Rowlands Grove, five and one half miles northwest of Piedmont. Beautiful walnut grove, plenty of water, pasture for stock. W. M. Aylor, H. O. Smith, Brethren Case and Kuykendall will be present. There will also be a reunion five and one half miles northeast of Terlton, in grove on Ora Carter's lease in the oil field, August 20 to 29. Those coming from east get off at Terlton; those from north and south, Cleveland, and Brother Carter will meet all trains if notified. Those coming to Piedmont will be met by Brother Rowland. Order tents. Write H. K. Rowland, Piedmont, Oklahoma, for that reunion; T. L. McGeorge, Terlton, for other meeting. Hubert Case, C. T. Sheppard.

Rich Hill, August 13 to 22, Clinton, Missouri, in beautiful East Park. Fifteen acres fine shade, blue grass. Two large tents to provide room for variety of meetings. J. A. Tanner will have charge of auxiliary work, assisted by local and visiting Saints. Trained nurse furnished by Sanitarium three days, possibly Wednesday, Thursday and Friday; good lectures on hygiene, sanitation, etc. Sunday, August 15, 3 p. m., Brother Tanner will conduct service of special interest to branch officers. Woman's Auxiliary will furnish special educational features. Other speakers: F. M. Sheehy, F. A. Smith, A. C. Silvers, Lee Quick, R. T. Walters, Roy S.

Budd, W. S. Macrae. For tents notify W. V. Smith, Rich Hill, Missouri, so as to have same on grounds when you come, $2, 2.25, $2.75. Cots, springs, bedsteads reasonable. Straw for bedding, plenty of pasture. W. S. Macrae, Knobnoster, Missouri.

Last year the Idaho Saints held a reunion in Hagerman, the year before, in Weiser. These attempts were largely experimental, the Saints being scattered over the large district. At Weiser the attendance was small,—services good and uplifting. At Hagerman the attendance was larger and the meetings very satisfactory; besides there was considerable interest shown by our friends at that place; so we concluded that an annual gathering of that kind was a good thing for the Saints and the work in the district, hence another has been appointed to be held in Hagerman this year, beginning August 21, and lasting over two Sundays. To the Saints in Idaho I would say, All who possibly can, prepare to come and remain all or part of the time. It will do you good. Come not merely to receive, but also to impart of the good things the Lord has granted you from time to time, so that the work and the attendant blessings may be mutual. Last year we had a spiritual feast, this year we anticipate a still better time, with an increased attendance. And to those who are not able to attend, but desire the success of the reunion, you can help the good work by sending a contribution for that purpose to Brother G. W. Winegar, Hagerman. The General Conference appointees to the district, the minister in charge and several of the local ministry will be there to dispense the Word of Life. Besides the preaching and prayer services, time will be given to round table talks and auxiliary work under competent workers, which will all be instructive, interesting and edifying, and aid in qualifying all for the care of the work locally and generally. Peter Anderson.

Saint Louis, Creve Couer Lake near Saint Louis, beginning August 20 continuing ten days. Arriving at Saint Louis union station walk 3 blocks north, take west-bound car on Olive Street marked "Delmar." Tell conductor you wish to go to Creve Couer Lake and he will tell you where to get the lake car at Delmar Garden. Fare 15 cents from down town. Reunion grounds at end of Creve Couer Lake line. Ice cold spring water, electric lights, children's playground, fishing, boating, bathing. Good speakers, including Elbert A. Smith, F. A. Russell, W. L. Christy, W. A. Smith, J. W. Paxton, etc. Tents: 10 by 12, $2; 12 by 14, $2.50; 14 by 16, $3; larger if you wish. Cots 50 cents; chairs 25 cents; stools 10 cents; clean straw free, bring ticks. Camp high and cool without mosquitoes. Order tents of G. S. Trowbridge, 5032 A. Devonshire Avenue, Saint Louis, not later than August 10. G. S. Trowbridge, chairman.

Addresses

Joseph R. Lambert has removed from Lamoni, Iowa, to Independence, Missouri, and may be addressed at the latter place, 1514 West Short Street.

Two-Day Meetings

Eastern Michigan District will hold the following two-day meetings: Bay Port, July 31 and August 1; church to be dedicated August 1; bring baskets. Snover, August 14 and 15; bring baskets. Shabbona, August 21 and 22. Black River Branch, near Carsonville, August 28 and 29. Caserville Branch, September 4 and 5. Good speakers. Everybody welcome. William M. Grice, president.

Quorum Notices

CALIFORNIA PRIESTS

Meet at Irvington during reunion, beginning August 13. Northern California priests not members of the quorum are requested to communicate with secretary at once and obtain enrollment blanks. It is necessary that all priests in the district become members of the quorum to better carry on the work. L. E. Harris, secretary, 322 East Saint James Street, San Jose, California.

Correction

Brother J. E. Meredith, of England, calls our attention to an error in the HERALD of May 5, page 434: In the paragraph "England Taxes Liqueur," last line, the word gallon should have read barrel.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Brain Paths - - - - - 713

Passing of F. C. Keck - - - - - 714

Current Events - - - - - 715

Notes and Comments - - - - - 716

Editorial Selection - - - - - 716

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

Safety in Knowledge and Righteousness, by J. R. Lambert - - - - - 717

Where Do we Stand, by J. August Koehler - - - - - 721

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION - - - - - 723

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

Vulgarizing American Children - - - - - 724

MOTHERS' HOME COLUMN - - - - - 725

Callie B. Stebbins.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME - - - - - 728

LETTER DEPARTMENT - - - - - 729

Mrs. Adda Standefer—Rees and Hannah Jenkins.

NEWS FROM MISSIONS - - - - - 729

E. A. Erwin—Gomer T. Griffiths—Clara Kellogg Ellis—J. H. N. Jones.

NEWS FROM BRANCHES - - - - - 733

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver, Assistant Editor.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

Died

DIMOCK.—John W. Dimock died at South Rawdon, Nova Scotia, June 17, 1915, after a lingering illness. Deceased was among the first in his section to obey the gospel, under the preaching of Joseph F. Burton. Afterwards ordained a priest by Brother Burton. Traveling ministry and others will gladly testify to his genuine integrity and hospitality, and none more than the undersigned, who knew him better than any others. He was 77 years and 5 months on the day of his death. A good man has passed away.

GOLDSMITH.—Lucinda Goldsmith, born November 25, 1845, Cattaraugus County, New York. Married John Goldsmith, November 29, 1894. Baptized October 30, 1895, by F. G. Pitt, Sandwich, Illinois. There remain: husband, 3 brothers, Louis, William, Levant, Aldrich; 3 sisters, Johanna Farrell, Mary Waterbury, Amelia Swensen. Services July 13, Saints' church, Sandwich, Illinois, by Frank F. Wipper, assisted by Charles Burr. Interment in Oak Ridge Cemetery.

EWING.—Emma Louise Ewing, born at Sycamore, Illinois, July 30, 1857; died at Muir, Michigan, July 10, 1915. Married Lyman O. Ewing, February 28, 1878. She was the mother of 6 boys, 3 girls, all of whom, with the father, attended the funeral. Baptized September 19, 1896. Services from the home. Muir. Reverend M. J. Weaver, of the Presbyterian Church preaching the sermon, efforts to secure an elder of the Reorganized Church having failed. Interment in Muir Cemetery.

CHUTE.—Alice L., wife of Henry Chute, passed peacefully away June 29, 1915, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Oscar Engle, Port Huron, Mich., where she had been seriously ill for a month. Born August 21, 1848, near Saint Clair, where with the exception of about seven years she resided. With her companion she united with the church about forty years ago, and her faith and trust was in her heavenly Father to the last, as she patiently bore her suffering and awaited the summons "Home," where, during her last illness, she expressed she was going. Leaves to mourn their great loss, husband, one son, Wallace, of Saint Clair, one daughter, Sister May (Mrs. Engel). A son, Clarence, answered the summons home April 30, 1887. Two brothers also survive. She will be greatly missed by a large circle of friends, for to know her was to love her, no sacrifice was too great for her to make for the comfort or happiness of her family, or to assist friends. Services in Saints' church, Saint Clair, by J. F. Curtis, assisted by Otto Fetting. Interment in City Cemetery.

MITCHELL.—Anna Barbara Davis, born May 5, 1885, Uby, Michigan; died July 8, 1915. Married Clifford Mitchell, December 29, 1913. Deceased leaves husband, father, mother, 3 brothers, 5 sisters, other relatives and friends. Services by William Grice.

BLAIR.—Eliza Blair, born February 27, 1839, Greenwood, New York; died June 20, 1915, after an illness of months. Baptized October 16, 1901. Services by A. B. Phillips, Saints' chapel, Greenwood. This sister was greatly beloved by all.

Social Purity Literature

Proper instruction and training of the child has come to be an intelligent factor in the creating of a people physically strong and morally clean. To this end the Social Purity Board of the Church recommends the following:

A Pure Life—By C. B. Woodstock, paper, 5 cents each, 50 cents per dozen. An interesting presentation of the purity problem.

Herself—By E. B. Lowry, cloth boards, $1.10. Chaste, matter-of-fact information by a woman physician. Interesting, refined, clear; a book for every family library.

Himself—By E. B. Lowry, cloth boards, $1.10. A companion volume to Herself. Wholesome in tone, refined in character, complete in detail.

Perfect Boyhood—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 20 cents. Just the book for a boy from ten to fifteen years of age. Contains what boys ought to know and no more, all told in a straightforward, wholesome manner.

Perfect Girlhood—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 20 cents. A companion volume to Perfect Boyhood, unexcelled for girls from ten to fifteen years of age.

Perfect Manhood—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 30 cents. A chaste, practical, scientific explanation of man's reproductive nature.

Perfect Womanhood—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 30 cents. Containing vital information, counsel, and inspiration for women. It is sane, safe, practical.

Guide to Sex Instruction—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 50 cents. Vital facts of life for all ages. Five books in one. Essential in many homes.

How to Tell the Story of Life—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 20 cents. A valuable book for parents who desire to properly instruct their children.

Spooning—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 15 cents. A vital social problem intelligently solved. Should be read by all young people.

Send all orders to
HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Lamoni, Iowa.

A New Book
THE INTERPRETER

By Gomer T. Griffiths

A Revision of the "Exegesis"

containing more charts and information than the former book, also an illustrated chapter on offenses—law governing the same—procedure in church courts, and blank forms suitable to the same. The various quotations from the books have been carefully compiled and arranged, so that the instructions pertaining to each office are classified, to assist the reader in locating the duties of each minister from the president of the church to the deacon, also points out how the different officers are called and the manner of their ordination, thereby securing courtesy to whom courtesy is due.

Price .....50c

Have you heard of the old Spalding story from which the Book of Mormon was said to have been taken? Well, here is the Spalding story. Better get it and know for yourself. Only .....25c
 Order 139.

Failures of Campbellism

A new tract by Elder E. E. Long. Reprinted from a series of twelve articles in HERALD of 1913. Logically presented and systematically arranged. Quotations verified. 139 pages. Order 217 .....20c

Objections to the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants Answered and Refuted

You can't take the time, neither have you the data at hand to be able to refute many of the so-called arguments against these two books. Brother J. R. Lambert has placed in book form facts and data to refute these so-called arguments. A handy book to have in your library. Order 143 .....40c

Braden-Kelley Debate

This book contains the full report of an eighteen-night debate between the Church of Christ (Campbellite) and the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. The work is a library in itself. Though it has been in print for several years it is still one of the best books published to show the stability of God's truth. Order 125 .....1.50

The Instructor

A book that is one of our very best sellers, and to see the book is enough to explain why it is such a favorite. This work is the result of Brother G. T. Griffiths' efforts and it has been of untold good. To the student, the busy man, and the investigator alike the book is of untold value. Subjects topically arranged.

Order 126 cloth .....75
 127 Leather .....1.00
 128 Flexible .....1.75

What Is Man

is a book that should receive the careful study of every Saint. It clears away the fog of doubt with reference to the eternal verities of the future state of man. No better book on the subject of immortality. Order 140 .....50c

LOCATION WANTED for a photographic studio in a town of 2,000 or more, without a photographer, where there is an L. D. S. branch. Or will buy, rent, or accept good position. Earl F. Hoisington, Harlan, Iowa. 30-2-t

COLORED POST CARDS

Graceland College, Saints' Home, Liberty Home, Independence church, Herald Publishing House, Lamoni church.
 1 of each for 15 cents.
 2 of each for 25 cents.
 Order by number 172a.

COMPENDIUM OF FAITH is a work for the student. It is a collection of texts taken from the standard church works on a great many subjects. Also a splendid brief history of the Apostasy.

Order No.
 141 cloth .....75c
 141 1/2 leather .....$1.00
 174 flexible .....$1.50

Hello Vacationland!

That's the way tourists greet Glacier National Park when they arrive, happy and refreshed via the Burlington—direct route to the gateway. The first impression is tremendous. And they cheer Glacier Park when they leave—brains stored with memories of the vacation of a lifetime.

Make yours a real vacation this year. Go to Nature's Big Places—breathe the free air of Big Spaces. Glacier National Park is stupendous—wonderful. Your vacation there will be a ceaseless joy. Automobile tours—camping parties—horseback jaunts—mountain hikes—offer pleasure—diversion. Fish in any one of the 250 lakes. Rough it—if you're so disposed. Or, enjoy delightful—restful accommodations at beautiful hotels and Swiss chalets. This vacation tour need not be expensive. Summer excursion tickets are on sale daily to September 30, inclusive. Excellent accommodations at the Park at moderate prices. Plan this summer to see Uncle Sam's newest National playground. Send for Glacier National Park literature or come in and let me help you plan your trip.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

10 of the prettiest travel stamps ever issued—only a nickel

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, AUGUST 4, 1915

NUMBER 31

Editorial

SOMETHING NEW AND FINE

THE "FOLDER SERIES"

We have just prepared and published two very attractive six-page folders. These were originally intended for distribution at our church exhibit in the Panama-Pacific Exposition, at San Francisco, California. (Perhaps you did not know that we have such an exhibition, but we have, with Elder James W. Davis and wife in immediate charge.)

We have decided also, to put the folders on the market for the benefit of Saints who may be glad to secure them. These folders are illustrated, six pages of text and illustrations. When folded they are three and one half by eight and one half inches in size, convenient for the pocket and convenient to mail in a number ten envelope. They are printed in brown and red, on India tint plate paper.

Folder number 1 contains a history of the church covering three pages, with fourth page devoted to an argument in answer to the question, "Are we evangelical and orthodox?" The history of the church and its belief is set forth in a brief and pointed manner. One page is occupied by a splendid picture of the twelve apostles in their session at Independence, Missouri, preceding the late General Conference. This cut will be of special interest to the Saints, and to the outsiders an object lesson, attracting their attention to the peculiar form of our church organization. Another page is occupied by a fine picture taken at the Stone Church in Independence during the General Conference of 1908. This cut attracts attention to the return of the Saints to Independence, in fulfillment of prophecy.

The second folder has three pages devoted to the history of the First Presidency, the presidents in succession in particular, Joseph Smith, the martyr, President Joseph Smith, and President Frederick M. Smith. There are three excellent pictures of these three men, the one of President Joseph Smith being a picture which has never before appeared in the church publications. One page of this folder is devoted to "What we believe."

Both folders plainly state the difference between the Reorganization and the church in Utah. The last named also contains an extract from the Kansas City Journal, appearing on the occasion of the death of President Joseph Smith.

These folders are perhaps the most artistic thing that we have yet gotten out in the way of tracts or literature for distribution. Criticism has been made that some of our tracts are not attractive in appearance. Those who have made these criticisms now have an opportunity to secure something to their taste. We have tried to make them artistic rather than cheap.

You need these folders for your own edification and benefit. You need them to mail to your friends. They may be used to advantage by local branches for distribution in their vicinity among nonmembers, together with literature regarding the local congregation. The elders can use them in their fields to advantage.

This folder series can be elaborated to include other subjects, the Book of Mormon, etc., providing there is response from the Saints indicating a sale for this class of literature. These are offered as an experiment. They may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, at the following prices: Twenty cents per dozen; one dollar per hundred. Special prices may be secured on larger lots.

They may be ordered by number. In ordering the church history folder, order F. S. number 1; in ordering the history of the First Presidency folder, order F. S. number 2. ELBERT A. SMITH.

ORDINATION PRAYER FREDERICK M. SMITH

[The following is a report of the prayer offered by Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths when ordaining President Frederick M. Smith to the office of President of the High Priesthood, at Independence, Missouri, May 5, 1915. We did not have the report of this ordination prayer to use at the time when the meeting was reported, but reproduce it now for the benefit of the many who wish to read it.—EDITORS.]

Almighty God, who dwells in the heavens above, we thy servants entreat thee in the name of thine only begotten Son, to breathe upon us the spirit of our office and calling as we officiate in this holy ordinance of ordination, that we may give utterance to those things that will please thee, O God.

Brother Frederick Madison Smith, the Lord, our God, has designated through the late prophet, thy father, that when he should be overtaken by the hand of death, thou shouldst succeed him in the presidency of the holy priesthood and the church of God here on earth. The late General Conference has approved and indorsed the selection that has been made by our heavenly Father and directed this ordination. Therefore we, thy fellow servants and authorized ministers of Jesus Christ, impose our hands upon thy head and through this holy ordinance of laying on of hands we separate thee and ordain thee president of the high priesthood which is after the order of Melchisedec, and we ordain thee President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. We ask God, our eternal Father, to confer upon thee through this sacred ordinance the special gifts that God bestows upon the one who is president of this Melchisedec priesthood, even that of a translator, revelator, seer, and prophet, and all the gifts, blessings, and powers that God bestows upon the head of the church; because that through this ordination you are now called to be the presiding elder over all the church of God on earth.

And we ask God, the eternal Father, that inasmuch as this responsibility is great that is now placed upon thee, thou mayest have power given unto thee to perform the functions and the duties thereof with an eye single to the glory of the great God, in the interests of the church over which thou art called upon to preside.

It will be thy duty to receive revelations and commandments for the church, for its government on the earth; and it will be thy duty in connection with thy brethren who shall be associated with thee in the First Presidency, to preside over the deliberations of the High Council. And O God, our eternal Father, do thou bless our brother with the spirit of discernment and wisdom that he may become a mighty and a wise counselor in his day; and when called upon to pass upon transgressors to make decisions, that they may be just and inspired of God and rendered in righteousness, to the glory of God and the honor of thy name and the good of those upon whom he shall pass judgment.

And oh, dear brother, it is now thy privilege because of this position unto which thou hast been called and set apart, to commune with God the Father, with Jesus Christ his Son, and with the assembly and church of the Firstborn and with angels; and we feel to say unto thee by constraint of the Spirit: As God has blessed those who have occupied this high and holy calling in ages past, the same God will be with thee, and thou shalt receive revelation upon revelation, and angels shall come and talk with thee as one man talketh with another, if thou wilt place thyself in that condition to receive these communications. The Lord will direct thee in dreams by night, and heavenly visions, and he will make known unto thee his mind and will in relation to the affairs of his church and kingdom, and thou wilt have the watchcare and the jurisdiction of all the ministry of God.

O thou Father above, do thou bless our brother! Make him strong in body; make him strong in mind and in spirit. And I say unto thee in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that the God of thy fathers will be with thee, and he will enlighten thy mind, and will quicken thine understanding and increase and develop thy intellectual powers and forces; and he will give unto thee special gifts, even that of eloquence, and thou shalt be a leader, a mighty leader in Israel; for thou shalt have power in the church with thy brethren.

But remember, brother, thou shalt have trial; thy heart will be made sad and sorrowful because of false brethren; thou wilt have enemies within and foes without, but the God that has watched over those who have occupied in this holy office in ages past, will be with thee. And brother, Be humble in thy heart; be meek and lowly, and put thy trust in God who has called thee to this holy position, because he has watched over thee since thou wast born into this world, and he has raised thee up for a wise purpose, and he will be with thee, and thou shalt feel his power resting upon thee, and he will comfort thy heart in the hour of trouble and the time of distress.

Thy mind will often be perplexed. Many things will arise in days to come that will try thee sorely, but our Father in heaven will be with thee and will strengthen thee in the inner man. And we ask God, the eternal Father, in the name of Jesus Christ, to make thee well, every whit, from the crown of thy head to the soles of thy feet, that thou mayest be made strong and qualified and fitted in every respect for these duties and great obligations that are now placed upon thee.

And I feel to say unto thee, dear brother, that thy companion shall be a comfort to thee, and in the hour of distress and sorrow, she, by the power of God operating upon her mind, will speak words of comfort to thy heart and cheer to thy drooping spirits; and therefore thou shalt give heed to her when she shall come to thee under the power and influence of the Holy Spirit.

Mine angels will be around about thee and they will protect thee, and the hand that is raised against thee shall not prosper. Therefore be of good cheer. Remember that God has now placed upon thee a great honor; but few men in the ages past have been honored as thou art honored to-night, to receive this high and holy office, to be president of the holy priesthood of the church of the Firstborn on the earth. Rejoice exceedingly in thy heart, because God has been mindful of thee.

And thou shalt be great in his sight, a mighty prince in Israel, and thy brethren will have confidence in thee and they will support thee, and those who are called and associated with thee in this great work of redemption, they shall with thee carry on this great work; therefore, when thou art tried and even tempted by the Evil One—for he will seek to mar thy peace and to weaken thy confidence in thy brethren—I say unto thee, In that hour thou shalt go into thy secret chamber and upon thy bended knees thou shalt go to God, unto him who knows thy thoughts and the intents of thy heart, and thou shalt pray for them—thou shalt be as thy Savior was, meek and lowly in heart and spirit. Be humble, my brother, and look with pity upon thy weak and erring brethren. Many of them desire in their hearts to do good, but permit themselves to be overcome in their environments and the evils that are in the world.

Remember, thou art a leader in Israel; thou art a father unto the flock of God; and he who has watched over thee in days past will be with thee in days to come. And I feel to say unto thee in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that as long as thou art humble in thy heart and wilt trust God and seek to do his will, to carry out the trust that is reposed in thee, he will be with thee and stand by thee; and though thou shalt have many trials and shalt wade through deep troubles and afflictions, and he who knows how to try men will try thee to the uttermost—I say unto thee, that in the hour of trial, God will come to thy rescue; he will not permit thee to be overcome. Thou shalt stand as a mighty man in the world, and even those outside of the church will look upon thee as a great man in the world; if thou art humble God will operate upon thy mind and heart, and thou shalt speak as one honored of God. And as the Lord said unto Joshua who succeeded Moses as a leader over Israel, so I say unto thee: Be strong and of good courage; keep thy hand in the hand of God and he will lead thee safely on.

We feel to commend thee to him. We can not leave thee in better hands than in his; in the hands that have been over thee in the past, even in thy late illness; for God watched over thee and heard the prayers of thy brethren and recognized their fasting; and he did bless thee and has brought thee to this place that thou shouldst be set apart and placed in this position, to set the work in order, with those whom God has called to be thy colaborers.

And may the love of God abound in thy heart, and that peace of God that no man can give be with thee, that at last it may be said unto thee, "Come unto me and I will give thee that reward that I give to those who have been faithful to their trust." And thou shalt stand with those who have gone before—the patriarchs, apostles, and prophets who have been faithful in their trust. Thou shalt stand with them in the world to come. Amen.

---

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

RATE INCREASE.—An express rate increase was recently granted the express companies by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which it is estimated will add nearly four per cent to their gross revenues.

BIG PLANT.—What is said to be the largest packing plant in the world, consisting of seventeen steel and concrete buildings, was recently opened at La Plata, Argentine, by the Armour Company of Chicago.

THE "EASTLAND."—The number of dead in the Eastland disaster at Chicago has grown to twelve hundred. The coroner's jury has found that the catastrophe resulted from improper construction, inefficient operation, too lenient inspection, and too lax laws.

DANBURY FORECLOSURES.—Notices of foreclosure have been served on one hundred and sixty-six persons in Danbury, Connecticut, and vicinity, named as defendants in foreclosure proceedings instituted by D. E. Lowe & Company in the Danbury hatters' case.

ALBERTA DRY.—The province of Alberta, Canada, went dry on July 24, by a vote of forty-six thousand, nine hundred and fifty-seven to twenty-seven thousand, seven hundred and fifty-two. This action prohibiting the sale of alcoholics throughout the province becomes operative July 1, 1916.

BAYONNE STRIKE.—On July 25 the superintendent and thirty-two guards of the Standard Oil Company, of Bayonne, New Jersey, were arrested for inciting to riot in connection with the strike at that place. On the 26th a large percentage of the Standard Oil men returned to work, on promise of an increase in pay.

REFUSE TO SELL.—The United States District Court of New York has decided that under the new Clayton law, manufacturers may lawfully refuse to sell to dealers who cut prices of standard-priced articles. In the case before the court the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company attempted to sell at twelve cents products put out by the Cream of Wheat Company to sell for fourteen cents. The manufacturing company had refused to fill further orders, and the vendors brought suit, Judge Hough holding that the refusal was not in restraint of trade.

HAITIAN TROUBLES.—Haitian revolutionists on July 27 took possession of Port au Prince, the capital, and on the following day dragged President Guillaume from the French legation where he had taken refuge and assassinated him. American marines were landed from the Washington on the 28th, and are in control of the city. Two American blue jackets were killed on the 29th in an attack by natives. The battleship Connecticut sailed from Philadelphia the 31st, with five hundred marines for Haiti. French marines have also been landed for the protection of foreigners.

BRITAIN REPLIES.—The reply of Great Britain to the American note of March 30, protesting against the enforcement of orders in council which restrict neutral commerce, was received at Washington, July 26. This note holds that the orders are within international law, though they may involve a new application of principles; and that Great Britain's action is justified by decisions of the United States Supreme Court in cases arising during the Civil War. It is suggested that differences arising from the new application of principles may properly be submitted to judicial settlement.

AMERICAN VESSEL SUNK.—The American steamer Leelanaw, en route from Archangel, Russia, to Belfast, has been sunk by a German submarine. Time was given the crew to escape. The Leelanaw, among other things, carried flax, appearing on Germany's list as absolute contraband. This case is similar to that of the William P. Frye, sunk by a German submarine some months ago, held by the United States to be in violation of treaties between the United States and Germany, which allow the delivering out of contraband, but prohibit the destruction of vessels.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Reports from Mexico indicate skirmishes between Villa and Carranza forces. Some announcements state that Obregon has taken Aguas Calientes. A state of starvation is reported at Mexico City, cut off from supplies and from communication with the outside world. Secretary Lansing is said to have sent notes to Carranza and Zapata, complaining of the conditions in the capital, and demanding that immediate steps be taken to open the railway and send supplies into the city. An effort is being made to bring various leaders together for a conference in the interests of peace, and there is considerable speculation as to the part the United States may play in establishing order in this revolution-torn republic.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Germans continued their advance on Warsaw the early part of the week covered by this report, only to be checked at the end of the week by stubborn Russian resistance. The Russian press, however, is preparing the people for a possible retreat from Warsaw, it being stated that scarcity of ammunition may advise a withdrawal. The war on the western front continues uneventful, save for minor gains on both sides, the struggle here being marked by a perceptible slackening of the deadly fighting reported for the week before. The Italians report further gains after terrific fighting.

The toll of German submarines for the week include one French, one British, one Belgian steamer, four British trawlers, and one Swedish brig. The British admiralty announces that a total of one hundred and eighty-two British merchantmen and one hundred and sixty-eight fishing vessels have been destroyed during the war. Premier Asquith announces that the total naval casualties up to July 20 were nine thousand, one hundred and six; the military casualties to July 18 being three hundred and sixty-one thousand, eight hundred and eighty-nine. French casualties, naval and military, are reported as being three hundred twenty-one thousand, eight hundred and eighty-nine. David Lloyd George stated in the House of Commons the 28th that sixteen national munition factories had been established in England, and that ten more would be provided.

---

NOTES AND COMMENTS

KIRTLAND TEMPLE FOLDER.—We are in receipt of a very artistically gotten up six page folder, intended primarily for distribution to visitors at the Kirtland Temple. There are two illustrations of the temple, a short history of the church and of the temple prepared by Heman C. Smith, a quotation from the findings in the Temple Lot Suit, and a column devoted to welfare work, giving the names of our various church institutions, such as the Sanitarium, college, etc., with a brief description of their work. This folder is printed on India tint plate paper, gotten up we understand by Bishop Becker and Brother Earnest A. Webbe, who were among the promoters of the folder. The Cleveland Saints also intend to make use of it in their branch work, distributing about fifteen hundred copies in the neighborhood of the church, covering as far as they can the families within a radius of one mile of the church. They will distribute these copies by mail, and will accompany each with a personal letter entitled, "Who is my neighbor?" the first page of which is as follows:

Everyone has a right to know—and should want to know who their neighbor may be! We want you to know about us as a people. We have been neighbors of yours a long time,—for twelve years,—owning property on Wade Park Avenue, at Seventy-first Street. Our congregation is composed of people from many beliefs and some from no profession of faith at all, yet they have all found satisfaction here in the pure democracy of the gospel. Our officers are selected from among local men, our ministers are nonsalaried. We all labor together in a common cause, the success of which is solving many problems of these latter days. We are teaching the New Testament pattern of church government—quite a different order from that practiced by any of the churches set up to accommodate human ideas. We believe that the old way is the safe way, and in preaching the kingdom of God as Christ taught it, we believe all true men will press into it to the extent that they are willing to examine and recognize it! If you have had disappointment,—if you have failed to realize the fullness of the gospel, remember "strait is the gate" and "few there be that find it!" Would you know more about the few? Come, meet with us; we have no cold formality, but a friendly welcome for you. Our policy is to court investigation rather than to coax and cajole you into joining with us. We append a list of our departments of service and invite you to any or all of them.

Original Articles

THE SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS--PART 1

BY MARCUS COOK

The peculiar doctrines of the Seventh-day Adventists have been and are being urged upon the people either by books and tracts, house to house Bible readings, or through their regular ministry.

COMMITTING THEMSELVES

There are, I believe, no people who profess to rely more upon the Bible as the final test of truth than the Adventists. I quote from the Great Controversy by Mrs. E. G. White, seventh edition, published 1887, page 411:

"To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." The people of God are directed to the Scriptures as their safeguard against the influence of false teachers and the delusive power of spirits of darkness. Satan employs every possible device to prevent men from obtaining a knowledge of the Bible, for its plain utterances reveal his deceptions. . . . The last great delusion is soon to open before us. Anti-Christ is to perform his marvelous works in our sight. So closely will the counterfeit resemble the true that it will be impossible to distinguish between them except by the Holy Scriptures. By their testimony every statement and every miracle must be tested.

Mrs. E. G. White is committed to the following:

1. That the Holy Scriptures contain the law and testimony.
2. Its utterances are plain.
3. Every statement and miracle is to be tested by it.

This puts the matter fairly before us, so we will proceed.

From the above it will be seen that if the Seventh-day Adventists are in fact the church and people of God, their law would be the Holy Scriptures, and every statement of belief would be supported by plain utterances from the Holy Scriptures. But this is only true to the extent that we accept their peculiar and what often seems to us absurd interpretation. The Bible warns us plainly against unlearned interpretations of the word of God. We read in 2 Peter 3: 15, 16:

Even as our beloved Brother Paul also according to the wisdom given unto him hath written unto you; as also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things: in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction.

INTERPRETING SCRIPTURES

Now if the Adventists are right, those who differ from them are wresting the Scriptures; but if their opposers are right, they are wresting the Scriptures from their proper meaning; and until they can clearly prove that they are the true exponents of the Scriptures no one is under obligation to accept their claims. The Bible in one of its plain utterances says that the church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth. (1 Timothy 3: 15.)

For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.—1 Corinthians 2: 11.

But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.—1 Corinthians 2: 14.

For who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he may instruct him? But we have the mind of Christ.—1 Corinthians 2: 16.

If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not; neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.—John 14: 15-17.

Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come. He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you.—John 16: 13, 14.

Peter says, speaking of Christ:

And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.—Acts 5: 32.

The above proves:

1. That the church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth.
2. Man can not know the things of God, but by the Spirit of God.
3. They are foolishness to him.
4. The apostles and people of the church in Paul's day had the mind of Christ.
5. It was to instruct and guide them into all truth.
6. It was promised to those who obey God.

Now if the Adventists come short in these things or any part of them it would be absurd to admit that their interpretations of the Bible only represent the will of God. We ask, Are they in fact the church of the living God? Are they in harmony with the church as set up in the days of Christ and the apostles in origin, organization, and practice?

A COMPARISON

Let us compare their organization with the church as set up in Bible times. We read in 1 Corinthians 12: 28-30:

And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles? Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?

I also read:

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive.—Ephesians 4: 11-14.

And it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God. And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles.—Luke 6: 12, 13.

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come.—Luke 10: 1.

I also notice that according to Titus 1: 5 that elders should be ordained in every church.

Also 1 Timothy 3: 1, 2 there was an office of bishop in the church, and also in verse eight deacons are mentioned.

Wherefore, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the apostle and high priest of our profession, Christ Jesus.—Hebrews 3: 1.

For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins.—Hebrews 5: 1.

From the above it will be seen:

1. There were apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, bishops, elders, deacons and high priests in the church.
2. God set them there. Christ gave them.
3. All did not hold the same office, i. e., some were not apostles, prophets, etc.
4. That the high priests were ordained men.

Now since God provided for these offices, it is a pertinent question as to how they were called or designated.

Paul in Hebrews 5: 4 says: "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."

Jesus did not begin his public ministry until he was called by the Prophet John:

The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world. This is he of whom I said, After me cometh a man which is preferred before me; for he was before me.—John 1: 29, 30.

The twelve apostles were so chosen by Jesus Christ. (Luke 6: 12, 13.)

Paul and Barnabas were so called. (Acts 13: 1, 2.)

This is the kind of church that is, was, and always will be the pillar and ground of the truth. Do the Adventists measure up to it? Where are their apostles? Oh, they tell us that their traveling representatives are apostles, but if this is true, why do they not call them apostles and claim apostolic power and authority for them then? Christ called twelve, see Luke 6: 12, 13; Revelation 12: 1; Luke 22: 30; John 6: 70; John 20: 24; 1 Corinthians 15: 5. The Adventists have no quorum of twelve apostles who are recognized by that name and claiming to be appointed by Jesus Christ to that definite office. They have no quorum of seventy as Jesus sent out. They have no high priests and even claim that there is no such office in the church,—that high priests belonged to the old ceremonial law. But Paul says: "Every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men."—Hebrews 5: 1.

Here he says is ordained, present time, not was ordained in olden time. The whole text is used speaking of the present and could not properly be applied to the past.

Again, "Consider the apostle and high priest of our profession, Christ Jesus."—Hebrews 3: 1.

Then Christ Jesus was an apostle. He was also a high priest. Paul was of the same profession, so Paul was an apostle and high priest. Jesus says: "Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."—John 20: 21.

He was sent as a great high priest. They were sent as he was sent, therefore they were also high priests. But they tell us that high priests had to offer sacrifices and that since Christ offered himself no more sacrifices are required. But Peter says, speaking of the church:

Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. . . . But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people.—1 Peter 2: 5-9.

Just as the Adventists say, this applies to the whole church as the whole generation is a royal priesthood. But if that is true, Exodus 19: 5, 6, which reads as follows: "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation," would prove that all Israel were to be priests, which we know is not true, for the Levites were set apart in priestly offices under the law.

Numbers 3: 6, 7 tells us:

Bring the tribe of Levi near, and present them before Aaron the priest, that they may minister unto him. And they shall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole congregation before the tabernacle of the congregation, to do the service of the tabernacle.

It brought destruction upon those who sought to assume higher office than God had called them to in the old dispensation, as well as under the gospel. See Numbers 16, also Acts 19: 13-16; 2 Corinthians 11: 13.

I have treated this at some length in order to emphasize the fact that the Adventists here as in other things, are not in harmony with the church as established by Jesus Christ.

TESTING THE PROPHETS

Have they prophets? Yes, one, Mrs. E. G. White, but we will show from her own writings, comparing with the Bible, that her claim of being a representative of God is unfounded. Her call is unscriptural, and the same will apply to their elders, who prepare themselves with a regular course of study for the ministry, not according to Hebrews 5:5.

As to the origin of the Adventist Church, it can not be denied that it began with William Miller, although they deny that he was a member of the Seventh-day Adventists. The leaders of the Seventh-day Adventists were with him in his work, and were in full sympathy with him. They were disappointed by his false teachings, and still quote and indorse his calculations of the prophetic periods.

Now, was William Miller a prophet? If not, God was not working with him, for Amos says: "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." (Amos 3:7.)

The Douay or Catholic version reads: "For the Lord God doeth nothing without revealing his secret to his servants the prophets." (Amos 3:7.)

Now to claim that he was not a prophet would justify us in rejecting him, and to affirm that he was would make it their duty to defend him. The Bible gives us a rule by which to test prophets as follows:

If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee, saying, Let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them; thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams.—Deuteronomy 13:1-3.

When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him.—Deuteronomy 18:22.

By the above we propose to try the work of William Miller and Mrs. E. G. White.

WILLIAM MILLER

That Mrs. White indorsed and does indorse William Miller I quote from the second edition of Early Writings, by Mrs. E. G. White, claiming to be a reproduction of two books published in 1851 and 1858. I quote:

God sent his angels to move upon the heart of a farmer who had not believed the Bible, to lead him to search the prophecies. Angels of God repeatedly visited that chosen one, to guide his mind, and open to his understanding prophecies which had ever been dark to God's people. The commencement of the chain of truth was given to him.

As John the Baptist heralded the first advent of Jesus and prepared the way for his coming, so William Miller and those who joined with him proclaimed the second advent of the Son of God.—Ibid., p. 94.

God directed the mind of William Miller to the prophecies, and gave him great light upon the book of revelations.—Ibid., p. 95.

Angels of God accompanied William Miller in his mission. He was firm and undaunted, fearlessly proclaiming the message committed to his trust. . . . I saw that God was in the proclamation of the time in 1843. It was his design to arouse the people and bring them to a testing point, where they should decide for or against the truth.—Ibid., p. 96.

Thousands were led to embrace the truth preached by William Miller; and servants of God were raised up in the spirit and power of Elijah to proclaim the message.—Ibid., p. 97.

Ministers who would not accept this saving message themselves, hindered those who would have received it. The blood of souls is upon them. Preachers and people joined to oppose this message from heaven, and to persecute William Miller and those who united with him in the work.—Ibid., p. 98.

In the above Mrs. White claims that William Miller was visited by angels, accompanied by angels; that his mind was guided by angels; that God gave him great light; that his message was truth; that it was from heaven; that the blood of souls was upon those who opposed him; that his work was like or as the work of John the Baptist. What more could be claimed for a prophet? But what was his message?

He first declared that Christ would come in the autumn of 1843. When that failed he again set the time in 1844. That also failed, and the thing did not follow nor come to pass, so according to the Bible, we need not fear him. But the Adventists, always resourceful and unwilling to admit being in fault, have shifted the responsibility and charge God, who, according to the Bible, is a God of truth and neither the author of deception nor of confusion, of purposely misleading them in the parts of their message that failed.

Listen to Early Writings, page 99:

I saw the people of God joyful in expectation, looking for their Lord, but God designed to prove them. His hand covered a mistake in the reckoning of the prophetic periods. Those who were looking for their Lord did not discover this mistake, and the most learned men who opposed the time also failed to see it. God designed that his people should meet with a disappointment.

Think of it! A man humbly, courageously and faithfully serving God, directed by him and accompanied by angels sent to declare a message of truth from heaven that would bring the blood of souls upon those who would reject it, and the God of truth designing that his message of truth should be a falsehood, and disappoint those who believed in it. Absurd! Preposterous! and without precedent in the Bible. I do read however, in 2 Thessalonians 2:11, 12, as follows:

And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

Also Jesus says:

Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; inasmuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.—Matthew 24: 23, 24.

Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are raving wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?—Matthew 7: 15, 16.

But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only.—Matthew 24: 36.

For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night.—1 Thessalonians 5: 2.

Now to claim that God sent the delusion that Christ was coming in 1843 or 1844 and deceived the Adventists would class them with those who loved not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

That they were disappointed and deceived is admitted, but Matthew 24: 24 indicates that the elect will not be deceived, so they are or were not of the elect.

That their prophecies concerning the coming of Christ failed is evident, so they were false prophets and Jesus told us to beware of them.

That the angels who attended William Miller were not angels of God is evident, because they professed to tell him things that the angels of heaven do not know. So we reject William Miller and those who worked with him in that deception.

They try, however, to vindicate their position by claiming that the early disciples and apostles were mistaken, not understanding the mission of Christ before the day of Pentecost, that they expected Christ to set up a temporal kingdom. They claim the above as an excuse for their misunderstanding Christ's work in this generation. But it must be remembered that although a prophet may say by inspiration many things that he may not fully understand himself, he will never by inspiration from God utter a definite statement of fact that time will prove untrue.

But as to the mistaken understanding of the apostles: Did angels guide them into the mistakes? Was God in the mistakes? Did he approve of them? Did John the Baptist utter things in his preaching that in after time required patching up? Never. There is no parallel. When Jesus met the two disciples on the way to Emmaus he did not commend them for their mistake nor tell them that God intended that they should understand wrongly. On the contrary, we read: "Then he said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken."—Luke 24: 25.

Quite different from the Adventists again: "Afterward he appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen."—Mark 16: 14.

So this subterfuge fails.

(To be continued.)

* * * * *

WHERE DO WE STAND?--NUMBER 4

BY J. AUGUST KOEHLER

ON AN EDUCATED MINISTRY

In one of our large eastern cities not long ago the ministry of the Latter Day Saints church was characterized as a "bunch of grammar-school boys." Not very complimentary was it? Neither is it true. Not many of our men in the past may have had the opportunities of a college training, and it was not necessary that they should have had; if they used their mental machinery right they might easily have become the peers of some who have had many school advantages that they did not have. It may be true that some of the work of our ministry has been of a grammar school grade, but we have also our accomplished ministers; and I venture the assertion that the percentage of thinkers in the ranks of our ministry compares favorably with that of most bodies of preachers.

However, we are not all converted to the idea that education is essential to the success of the latter-day work. There are still some places to which one may go, feeling assured that there he will find elders who are still spending their time trying to find out how many cats have white on the tips of their tails. For example: On my last visit to the — Branch, an elder who had traveled with such men as Jason W. Briggs, Zenos H. Gurley, and E. C. Briggs, and who seems to think that a man's importance is measured more by the gray on the top of his head than by the gray on the inside, invited me to attend his wonderful Sunday school class. Says he: "And when you come be sure you can tell us where Nephi got his wife." I was not surprised at that request, for I had often seen that man (with others) enjoying the delusion that such matters were of chief concern to us—the vital questions before the church. However, I was digusted.

For some years I was a member of the — Branch. "My soul was athirst for God." And I had the unfortunate experience of looking in vain for some elder, some "shepherd" who would or could satisfy my hungry soul. Of course I looked in the wrong place. That was my mistake, but it was some other person's fault that he was not looking out for young men and women who were in the same condition.

As already implied, I was not alone in my difficulty. A few of us gravitated toward each other and decided to form a study league as a means of satisfying the thirsting of our souls. Believing that "days should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom," we thought it best to invite certain men with gray on the top of their heads to assist us in our effort. They became members of our society. Result: A protracted and somewhat disgusting discussion on the troubles the old folk were having in their sex relations; result further: A disbanded study (?) club; the society "died a borning." Well, I suppose that was the best those men knew.

After I was ordained a priest, I said to our presiding elder: "I wish you would watch my preaching very carefully to-night, and afterward tell me my weak points so that I may improve in method, etc." I had hoped to get some really good advice. This was his masterful criticism: "You pronounced apostles a-post-ls instead of a-pos-ls." Well, I thought: "Great God, put me in touch with some philanthropic soul with a little gray matter on the inside as well as on the outside of his head!"

You say that was years ago. Yes, it was; but not many, for I am only a young man. Besides, I tried a little experiment at the last two General Conferences. As often as I could I conversed with any elder that gave me a chance (and that was not a few), and all with the one purpose of finding out what they were chiefly interested in. I am sorry that if I report at all I must say that no small percentage are still gathering data relating to the percentage of cats that have white on the tips of their tails, so to speak. If you want to find how many hobbyists we have, try some such an experiment.

I said to a seventy: "I would like to learn your method of preparing a discourse"; what sort of notes he made, etc.

"Oh," said he, "I have no particular methods, I can preach without notes without any difficulty whatever."

Great preacher, I thought. I had never heard him preach; as already stated, I was simply trying my experiment. Finally he said, "I have eleven sermons that I preach everywhere I go." Well, I thought, it is no wonder that some men like to jump around the country like jack rabbits, finding new places to preach. I had more than a hundred outlines of thought. I thought I could go eleven sermons myself without even a hymn book in the house; but I never imagined I wanted to be a "frog" of a preacher, and so I tried to classify and organize my mental material, and have found it much to my advantage to do so.

I recite the foregoing simply to emphasize my thought, that there is still room for improvement, and we can well afford to spend some energy to develop more efficiency in our ministerial ranks.

Here is a scene we sometimes witness. You have seen it. It occurs in the Sabbath school sometimes. The lesson text is Doctrine and Covenants 90.

Teacher: "Paragraph four says, 'Ye were in the beginning with the Father.' This is a very interesting theme; what does the class have to say on this question?"

Class: (Here follows a feverish, aimless, useless discussion on the question of the preexistence of the spirits of all men, consuming—which means to destroy, waste, etc.—about three fourths of the hour.)

Teacher: "Verse five says that 'intelligence was not created or made, neither indeed can be.' Any comments?"

Class: (Silence. Nothing doing. Nothing interesting here.)

Teacher: "Well, let's take up paragraph six. It reads, 'The glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth; light and truth forsaketh that Evil One.' Brother A., what is the big thought here?"

Answer: "The Evil One is the Devil." (Lesson ended. Nothing more to be said.)

The teacher was an elder.

It is such profound thinkers as we have just described that go into a community of Campbellites and say to them with all the emphasis at their command that they have carried "that old hump" on their backs long enough, and they had better unload. This is their way of gaining the favor of the people, and getting a hearing for the gospel. You see their letters in the HERALD sometimes. They read somewhat like this as a rule: "Yesterday I visited with Brother A. We had fried onions for dinner. I like onions better raw. By supper time I had reached Brother B's house. I was welcomed, and treated with my favorite dish, baked beans," etc. Of course these are all items of general interest.

I confess this is stretching the matter a little; but some things will stand spreading out, especially that some may enjoy the "spread." But what kind of growth can a branch make when shepherded by such intellectual prodigies?

I had the misfortune of seeing this very thing exemplified a few times. Not many years ago the Twelve decided to send a man to serve as pastor in a certain branch. When advice was received of this action, a movement was on foot at once to oppose it. This movement, like most belligerent movements, was headed by members of the priesthood of the mental type described in our Sabbath school lesson: the kind who want to know where Nephi got his wife; the kind who easily become disgruntled, and interfere with every useful activity. The result of the opposition I will not state; what I want to picture is the splendid care a branch gets under such leadership. One feature will illustrate: I went to the Religio. It was an evening session. Inside the building were a few young people who were "hammered" from start to finish about attendance (not nonattendance, for these people were present) and church decorum, and such as that; while on the outside of the building (the place where you will generally find young people under such circumstances) I saw about twenty young men and a few young women waiting for time to go home. That was all the purpose I could discern in their actions.

Now think of it! A lot of young people—the hope of the church—roaming around aimlessly, uncared for, no educational activities of an interesting sort, and it is doubtful if of any other sort; with leaders who think (?) that what was good enough for their fathers is good enough for them; and still the "old guard" in this branch opposing the action of the Twelve in sending a man to shepherd that flock. Ridiculous! And that is about where we stand in some parts of the church.

It must have been some such point of contact that led some to suppose that our ministry is "a bunch of schoolboys." But we are thankful that these conditions are fast fading away. In Philadelphia last winter we had nearly fifty young men and women doing high school work in the evenings. We had classes in logic, sociology, and other interesting and profitable studies. The choir membership was fifty, most of whom were young men and women who were literally drawn into the service of the Lord through the interest that was manifested in them by such men as Walter W. Smith, Albert N. Hoxie, and John Zimmermann. Choir work led to school work, and school work led to choir work. The music of the Philadelphia Choir, though rendered by singers who for the most part had little or no training before they united with the choir, is probably second to none in the church. All of this goes to show that our ministry is not all "a bunch of schoolboys"; in many instances it has set the pace for the ministry of the neighboring churches.

My next article will discuss this question from the standpoint of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. I propose there to point out what part of the secret of our marvelous success was in the early church; as well as what God expects of the ministry now.

(To be concluded.)

• * * * •

He whose heart goes out in tender love and sympathy to all mankind looks not for its faults and frailties.—Anon.

HOME AND MISSIONARY LABOR

COOPERATIVE CHURCH WORK

With the closing of General Conference and entrance upon the work of the new year, every member of the body should specially feel a measure of responsibility for the full performance of his or her part of the labor essential to success and at once move forward to the accomplishment of the same.

It may just be possible that in the special distribution of labor to be performed and the allotment of time and place for the carrying on of the same we may have been disappointed, not having personal preferences realized, but all should remember that the work is the Lord's and that in the distribution of the labor, his will should be followed, especially since it is possible for us to be mistaken as to what we can best do and where our labor may prove the most efficient.

The disappointments of man are often for his best good; experience and development, correction and elimination of self, are necessary to him; but the work of the Lord must move on divine lines, and the fruits brought forth show the touch of an unselfish and righteous life.

The general officers at home and the missionaries abroad comprise only a small proportion of the effective laborers in the body and should the great army of quiet, yet efficient and devoted workers, both at home and abroad, forget or neglect to perform their respective parts the general officers must return to home labors to the great loss and injury of the entire body. The instruction to the Saints at the April conference, Kirtland, Ohio, April 11, 1837, answers fully the questions arising, in clear and unmistakable language:

Prosecute the missionary work in this land and abroad so far and so widely as you may. All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119:8.

We should not then be negligent nor unfaithful, but each and everyone patiently move forward in the work whatever the discouragements, which the Adversary so often places in the way and be fully prepared each day to receive the commendable answer as just stewards of God: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things." Let us never forget that it is not what we are called to do, but rather in the earnest and faithful labors in the performance of the work, that wins and merits commendation.

With our officers and missionaries at their respective posts of duty and labor, the inquiry comes to us at once, "What of the day?" The work must be sustained, and the Lord has plainly instructed us that if all perform their respective duties, "there shall be plenty and to spare." It then is not a question of loss if we perform our work, but the loss is to be reckoned when we fail of duty. And this failure may consist of neglect and failure as bishops and agents representing the Lord's work in presenting the law and opportunity to fulfill, or in the failure on the part of the people to fulfill although opportunity has been duly given.

Urgent necessity for the success of the work for the present is upon lines as follows:

1. Fulfillment of duty on the part of every member of the law of Christ relating to tithes and offerings. This accomplished with an earnest desire in the heart to fulfill Christ's law will bring righteousness and peace in a spiritual uplift to the body and answer the urgent demand for help to carry on the missionary and home work.

2. Extending our offerings so far as possible so as to be helpers in the pressing demands of the educational work of the church. The importance of this was felt and considered during the session of the last General Conference in connection with the important work to the body of Graceland College. As with the prior conference the work was referred to the Bishopric. It has been found necessary in order to meet the pressing demands to arrange special helpers in the financial work, and traveling and laboring specially in the work of the bishopric during the year are the following officers:

1. Bishop A. Carmichael, who has personally taken up the work in California and the Pacific Slope Mission.

2. Patriarch J. W. Wight, in association with other labor in the mission fields.

3. Elder G. R. Wells, in connection with general Sunday school work.

4. Bishop R. C. Evans, with other financial and gospel work in the States and Canada.

We certainly bespeak for these brethren in their special work the earnest attention and fullest investigation of Saints and friends, knowing that the cause is the Lord's and that those who become satisfied to become helpers will thus aid in the Master's work.

As a body and church we have not always occupied as we might in the past, and in proportion to our forgetting the law have suffered loss; this fact should be more fully realized on the part of everyone. The Lord directs for the good of his children, and the law should be kept fully in order that the good be manifest in the life of the Saints. This applies not only to the work as we endeavor to build, but also to the life of each one. We are not as willing and ready to put away the injurious and foolish habits, which we drop into, even for our own good, as our heavenly Father has patiently asked us to do for our special good. The instruction comes to all:

Be clean, be frugal, cease to complain of pain and sickness and distress of body; take sleep in the hours set apart by God for the rebuilding and strengthening of the body and mind; for even now there are some, even among the elders, who are suffering in mind and body, who have disregarded the advice of the Spirit to retire early and to rise early that vigor of mind and body should be retained. Bear the burdens of the body which the Spirit of healing from the Lord in faith or the use of that which wisdom directs does not relieve or remove, and in cheerfulness do whatever may be permitted you to perform that the blessing of peace may be upon it.

The Saints may overcome and avoid the many evils flooding the world, by faithful obedience to all of our heavenly Father's direction. What a hope and realization before us if everyone shall earnestly move forward, fulfilling the full law of Christ! To do so is to move up higher.

Wishing peace to all,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, July 29, 1915.

Of General Interest

ASYLUM OR HOSPITAL?

Are insane persons patients with diseased brains, to be treated like patients with diseased livers or stomachs; or are they lost souls, under heaven's peculiar displeasure, who need only refuges that may shelter them from the abuse and unfriendliness of their fellows? The latter hypothesis long prevailed. Probably no educated person holds it now. Why, then, are so many of the places where we care for our insane still known as "asylums" or "retreats"—institutions where the unfortunate ones may be secluded until the end of life? Why is there so little study of insanity from the standpoint of those who regard it as a real brain disease, in the same sense as that in which we call pneumonia a disease of the lungs or cataract a disease of the eye? We have our institutes for medical research—our laboratories where we study the curative properties of serums or the reactions of animal or vegetable extracts upon the organism; where is the ten-million-dollar institute that shall isolate the germ or find the toxin that is poisoning the brains of so many of our fellow citizens?

We are making a beginning when we throw over the "retreat" idea and call our institutions for the insane "hospitals"—which is what they should be, in fact as well as in name—places not only for kind and careful treatment, but for minute and painstaking physiological research into causes. This seems to be the keynote of much of the contents of a recent book entitled The Insanity of Youth, and Other Essays, by Doctor Bayard Holmes (Cincinnati, 1915). Doctor Holmes is a firm believer in the toxic origin of insanity, and he incidentally pays his respects to the disciples of Freud and others who would investigate and treat it by purely mental methods. In an interesting chapter which is entitled "The 'business' of keeping the insane," he writes:

If any change is to come over the conduct of the State hospitals it must come from some other source than the boards of control or the present incumbents of the medical berths. We need scientific statesmen and patriotic scientists to solve the threatening problems of insanity. The metaphysical dabblers who psychoanalyze the maniacs and interpret dreams are inefficient fakers in the madhouses of the State and should be smudged out.

The chronic, working, and inactive insane should be in colonies and in household and family care under State medical and administrative supervision. The acute hospital insane should be treated like tubercular, rheumatic, and other sick patients. On them the physicians should work to cure. Everything that science offers should be utilized. Their attendants should be professional; their surroundings rationally curative, and not certainly disease producing. There should be established in every psychiatric hospital or psychopathic institute, vigorous, aggressive, and optimistic research. There must come upon the boards of control a vision of an army of the friends of the insane demanding research and cure. They must see the citizens who pay the taxes exacting research in the early stages of the disease in schools and in courts for juvenile offenders, and demanding the abolition of catechismal psychoanalysis and dream-interpreting clairvoyancy. The research must be scientific, mechanistic, physical, chemical, and biologic. Research into causes, research into pathology, research into prevention, and research into cure—these are the researches to be prosecuted by the boards of control in the psychopathic institute.

Again, we say there is no hope for improvement from within. The boards of control have the power, but not the motive. The friends of the insane are so distracted and paralyzed by the terrible calamity that has beset their families that they turn helplessly from the subject because it causes the healing wounds of their hearts to bleed and ache. The problem is one for the citizen, the statesman, and the legislator. The recent revelations of the Abderhalden reaction in psychiatry put at rest for ever the contention of the psychogonists that the "twisted idea" is the primal cause of the condition which the lawyers call "insanity" and the physician calls "disease."

While our keepers of the insane, as Doctor Holmes points out, "are still maintaining their pessimistic inactivity," a much smaller nation in Europe has gone ahead in the new way. As we read:

Belgium has long demonstrated the way to care for the chronic and some of the acute insane in the colony at Gheel. This ancient community has harbored the insane for six centuries or more. Beginning with a sort of refuge about the church, where the insane found shelter, the custom has grown of entertaining the sick in mind, and miraculous cures have taken place. With a population of 14,000, this commune takes care of something more than 3,000 patients in their homes. Within the district the insane suffer no restrictions, but wander about from place to place and work, and play as they please. They are everywhere "entreated kindly," just as visitors or neighbors are, and where night overtakes them they sleep in the apostles' room.

The central receiving station, long presided over by the celebrated director, Doctor Peeters, has accommodations for only sixty or seventy patients. After the newcomers have been thoroughly studied they are assigned to the care of families accustomed to the treatment of their particular form of the disease and skillful in managing a particular manifestation of conduct-disorder. Some member of each family is an officer of the State and is responsible to the directors, to the inspectors, and to the physicians, all of whom make regular visits and frequent reports. The pay that the family receives is small, and yet it aggregates a sufficient amount to make the commune of Gheel a very prosperous one. About the village there are located many amusement places where the insane go and mingle with the other patrons. Very few disorders are reported. A disturbance or unusual interruption of church service, lectures, music, or dancing is taken care of by the experienced attendants always about.

What has become of this model institution in the storm of destruction that has swept over devoted Belgium we are not told. Is she still trying to cure her old patients, when the minds of sane men are being shocked into insanity by the hundreds? In any case, Doctor Holmes is sure that we in America need to do a few things before our old "asylums" become real modern hospitals. These he sets down in numbered order and we summarize them as follows:

1. It is my claim that the great fault of the present administration of the institutions of the insane lies in a failure to appreciate and provide for research into causes, into prevention, and into the methods of cure of the disease. We spend thousands and millions for custody and practically nothing for research.
2. The board of administration should separate the acute insane from the chronic, and place the latter in colonies.
3. All the insane persons who work continuously should receive pay.
4. The psychopathic institute should be a part of the university of the State.
5. Attendants and nurses should serve only eight hours a day, and should have such professional standards as will forestall the atrocities which are now a routine occurrence. The "beating-up" of insane patients by nurse attendants should be drastically punished.
6. The medical service of the institutions should be adequately paid, and the conditions of life for the families of physicians should be such as to insure protracted service. The superintendents should be independent of politics.
7. The nurse attendants should be for the most part trained female nurses, and adequate provisions should be made for their residence outside the grounds.—Literary Digest.

* * * * *

PROHIBITION IN IOWA

The bootleggers in Iowa had better pack up their stock and move out.

Statutory prohibition will not close the doors of the saloons until January 1, but a bundle of other laws with teeth in them are among those which became effective July 4.

Heretofore, the bootlegger could get off with a fine or jail sentence whenever he was caught. Hereafter, he will get off with the fine or jail sentence just once—the first time he is nabbed. After that he'll go to the penitentiary. Under the new laws, bootlegging is a misdemeanor the first time and a felony thereafter.

LIABLE TO MULCT TAX

But his trouble will not end there. Another new law makes him liable for payment of the mulct tax for selling liquor, even though he has not received the legal consent. If he is enjoined from selling liquor, he can't move out of the judicial district in which he has been operating and go at it again. The injunction becomes effective throughout the State. The second time he violates the injunction he will have the privilege of serving a prison sentence.

Wholesale liquor concerns will take a long risk selling liquor to bootleggers. One of the new laws provides that anyone soliciting for liquor which is to be sold illegally shall be classified as a bootlegger, and another makes it illegal for a person or corporation to collect for the value of liquors sold for illegal uses and an injunction may be issued against such collection.

AUTHORITY EXTENDED

As if it might not be possible for the justice of the peace to issue all the search warrants necessary to hunt for contraband liquor the authority has been extended to the judges of district and superior courts. The intention of the lawmakers, it is understood, was to provide so that where the justice in a given community might be tolerant of violations of the liquor laws, the law-abiding citizens might have relief by appealing to a different judicial source for search warrants.

Railroads, beginning Sunday, must keep a record of all liquor shipments and open it to the inspection of the proper police officers. The man who ships in his liquor can depend upon it the police will know how much he is getting, and if he is getting constantly more than one man and his family can consume he can be fairly sure he's being watched.

As for the enforcement of these laws—if the local officials can not or will not see that they are made to count, look out for the State agents. Two of them began work July 5, and it is an important part of their business to see that the liquor regulations are obeyed. . . .—Register and Leader.

---

A young doctor by the name of Brown, with the brightest prospects for a successful career as a physician, without warning was stricken with blindness. The man rose triumphant from the struggle. "O God," he prayed, "I consecrate my talent of blindness to thee." He, through his limitation of blindness, worked out the alphabet for the blind. How immeasurable has been his gift to suffering mankind, as he allowed God to lead him through his limitation into greater service.—Selected.

Sunday School Department

EDITED BY GOMER R. WELLS, LAMONI, IOWA

Our Work

When we hear the expression in prayer meeting, "I love this work," does it always occur to mind what makes this church dear to us?

Is it not because of the conviction that God is at work in the world and this movement, this work, is an expression of his activity? Yes, he has spoken and he is at work now, which is the best kind of guarantee that he worked, as written of him in the past. Yet he does not do all of the work that is to be done, that is, directly.

We have our part. "Faith without works is dead, being alone," wrote James. God forbid that any of us should settle down to the belief that if we furnish the faith, God will furnish the works. Our faith without our works is dead,—this should be the ever-present thought.

Before going further, may we ask, For what does this association of Sunday school workers exist? Does it not exist for the sake of it units? And what are its units? They are the schools. And for what does the school exist but for its units? What are the units of the school? They are the pupils. Therefore, our work is all for the child.

An association is an organization formed to help the school, while the school is a primary organization of officers and teachers for the betterment of the child. All of our work should be planned with that thought in view. Give us competent officers and teachers and we shall have better children. By the term teacher I do not mean merely one whose function is supposed to be solely to read over the lesson of the Quarterly and ask the set questions therein and perhaps ask how many have memorized the golden text. There is something more than that and that something more is the ingredient that makes it work—a noble work attended with heaven-blessed results.

If a General Convention were to spend one whole evening out of two, or at most, three days at its disposal, in a program mostly of entertainment, composed of musical, literary and historical numbers, everyone seized with the object of a General Association would say the officers were forgetful of the ingredients that should go into the program. We have a number of districts in which this same mistake is being made. It is to be hoped that all will soon realize that in our conventions and reunions, there is the opportunity to help the workers of the schools. Of course, I would lighten the tedium of close attention and concentration with musical and literary items, but never make them the main feature.

THE REAL SCHOOL

Just think of it—the Sunday school teacher has the child in class for only one half hour out of one hundred and sixty-eight hours a week. Should this not urge us to take a firmer stand for better teachers? Does it not spur the individual teacher to greater activity to improve his talents?

The less time we have the pupil in class, the greater must be our preparation, the greater our skill—and skill comes only through study, and that means work—brain work. No place for lazy-brained people in the kingdom of God. God wants kingdom builders. People who will not use their brains never make good kingdom builders.

But let us go back to the class for that half hour. How much of to-day's loss will be remembered to-morrow; and how much a week from to-day? What in twelve months? To be more to the point: If the pupil remembers nothing imparted while in Sunday school (or any other kind of school), then he has learned nothing. Nothing remembered, nothing learned.

If nothing has been learned, nothing has been taught! Now have we the courage to face the last conclusion: That if nothing has been taught (because nothing was remembered), is it consistent to call ours a school?

Let us repeat, while you analyze carefully. Nothing remembered, nothing learned. Nothing learned, nothing taught. Call it not a school. To the extent that we face this proposition, to that extent are we in a proper frame of mind to work for the Master. We would have every Sunday school worker take this to heart and find out to what extent it applies to his school, his class, or his office or department. Then he will not be satisfied to run along in little ruts and make Sunday school work a parody.

It has been said that the Bible is the guidebook to the kingdom of God, but that the Sabbath Day services are only the weekly parade. And this is probably true of the greater part of Christendom. Let us who have the greater light resolve right now that this shall not be said of any of the services or worship of the Sabbath Day among us. But it may be said of us to that extent that we in our teaching and management of Sunday schools do not cause our children to remember something—and that something of such a nature that it will build character for eternity.

OUR AIM

There is no work without an aim. What is our aim in the the Sunday school work? Can you adopt in your own mind the statement passed by the lessons committee at the last meeting in April, 1915, while working up a better course of study. Here it is, as published in SAINTS' HERALD of June 2, 1915, Sunday School Department:

GENERAL AIM OF THE COURSE OF STUDY

"1. To bring souls to a knowledge of God's truth revealed in the gospel of Christ as given anciently and restored in these last days.

"2. To inspire the doing of God's will, thus devolving a perfect character in Christ."

First. Bringing souls to a knowledge of God's truth means to cause them to remember. Second. To inspire them to the doing of God's will is the highest objective—it is the spiritual result of our work. You may get a child to remember and quote all the items of doctrine and history without touching his heart and affecting his will on the side of action that will develop character. Our work is both intellectual and spiritual.

The public schools with trained teachers are reaching and training the intellectual and manual side of the child with no thought for the spiritual development. They leave that to the church. This is one of our distinctly American policies of state that renders Sunday school work all the more necessary.

The Sunday school exists for the sake of imparting truth, which, if remembered inspires obedience towards the building of Christ-like character, and makes our school worth while.

Let us make our school a real school. Let us not be found playing school, with our pupils coming with the notion that they are on the weekly "dress parade" going through a nice routine, marching to classes but not expected to do any mental work because it is a day of rest.

Reports From Superintendents

We have now in operation for the first time a system of reporting from local superintendent to district head, and from that officer to general superintendent. Our first reports were due in July. Words of approval are coming from many district officers. One district superintendent says the reports he has received brought to light information that he never had before. Another says reports reveal conditions that he had no idea existed.

The general superintendent is also getting his eyes opened to conditions that have not hitherto been known to general officers. This is necessary in order to know how to build up the work. We must know the needs before we can plan to supply them. There are two ways to get the information. One is to personally visit every school. As they meet only once a week, we could see but fifty-two schools a year. There would be about six hundred and fifty schools neglected during that period. The other way is to reach them all by mail, first through their district officers and personally wherever it seems most urgent. This can be done simultaneously, all receiving the same treatment,—provided the local and district officers will realize their responsibility and report. After persistently neglecting to report, it will be necessary to advise that officers be chosen who will take an interest in their work.

That which is worth doing is worth doing well, applies in church work more than anywhere else, but it is a fact that the application is often made more carefully to worldly vocations than to the Lord's work. No conscientious church officers would allow that. A few superintendents have been unable to get reports and have so notified us, furnishing names and addresses of delinquent officers. We are grateful to such.

We are making some allowance for first efforts, which as a rule are not as good as later ones when duty becomes more familiar.

Grading

Because of the peculiar shape of notes and their relation to certain sounds, music is regarded by many people as something mysterious and very difficult to acquire. It is hard to convince such that it is not more difficult to learn to read music than it is to read a newspaper. This wrong impression keeps such persons from taking any personal interest in the art of music.

We have here and there Sunday school workers who seem to have a similar impression about grading. Some regard it as an abstruse educational theory which it is useless for their uneducated brains to try to comprehend. We would like all such be assured that this is not the case.

If you had in the orchard a pile of apples containing three sizes and you were told to grade them and box them ready for market, would you understand what was expected of you? Surely you would. It may be a surprise to some to know, that in the intellectual aspect, the grading of a school is not much harder to understand than the above. Grading human beings into classes for the purpose of better imparting God's word requires, of course, more knowledge and keener observation than grading apples. But if men can study stock and become sufficiently experienced to grade cattle in the stock yards, surely we parents and teachers can grade our children into classes.

Grading in Sunday school means grouping the children so that our teaching will be more efficient. There is nothing difficult to understand. We ought not to get down into the rut of inactivity over that. What we like to see is a robust action which says to us, "We're trying; doing the best we can; hoping to improve as we get experience." That is the idea—learn to do by doing.

The constitution and by-laws tell us exactly how to group the children. Anything further, we will try to explain. What we expect you to do is to move out and try. Concentrate and you will get something. Throw yourself at your task, if you think it is a task, and you may be surprised to see how much easier it is than you anticipated.

Constitution and by-laws are on sale at Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, order number 69, ten cents a dozen, postpaid. Will district superintendent see that every officer and teacher in the district is supplied, if need be, at district expense. Please do it now.

When Is a School Fully Graded?

Progressive districts have adopted a local standard of excellence for their schools. One point requires in nearly all that the school be "fully graded." Some new and inexperienced superintendents come to their stewardship ignorant of the standard. When reminded by their district head of this matter, they read the above-mentioned, secretly wish they had not accepted, and then—"lay down." That is not manly—it is not the spirit that builds up countries, cities, or the kingdom of God.

Others who want to know and are determined to do something, write and state their condition, which in quite a number of schools is something like this. They have one senior, one primary and one beginner class; or, they have all except junior or senior. Are such schools fully graded?

If all pupils you have are placed in their proper group or grade your school is certainly fully graded. It may not have all the grades of a large school, where all ages possible are represented, but it is up to the standard in your district.

A school with material for five grades and only part of them properly grouped, is not fully graded. A school with all the material properly grouped, is fully graded, notwithstanding material is lacking for one or more grades. That is not the fault of the officers.

The Secretaries Department

DEPARTMENT ENROLLMENT

Many districts have adopted the suggested standard of excellence for schools which is being printed in the current issues of the Sunday school Quarterlies. One of the points reads: "2. Average attendance of sixty per cent of department enrollment."

If your school has no separate departments with officers elected to have special charge of them, disregard this wording and merely compute the average attendance for the whole school.

If you do have one or more separate departments, let the department be responsible for its own average rather than to have the average of the school to fall back on.

STANDARDIZED SUPPLIES

Since the late General Convention went on record as commending the use of the new standardized supplies to schools and districts, there have been a number of inquiries as to what was implied in the term.

A demonstration tells the story much more effectively than mere description but it might be well to tell something of what may be had in this line.

The word standardized is applied more especially to the reporting system now that all blanks are of the same size and style and the items so worded as to carry out definite plans in reporting, but it might also be applied to the other necessary items for schools, for heretofore some schools found the old system of class books and secretary's record books out of date and not made to fit the needs of the present.

The new class cards and envelopes are highly commended by those who have used them, for they save a great deal of the teacher's time and make the records more accurate. They are so simple that a child can use them correctly.

Of course all schools will want to use the new record books for secretaries of schools, for they have been so changed that systematic records may be kept, from which intelligible reports may be made.

Large schools may secure the same form of record in the loose-leaf form and it will nicely serve their needs.

With the nine blanks of the Sunday school and as many or more that the Religio Society is now working out, the ministerial blank for all orders of the priesthood, reports of branch presidents and several others, we have need for a convenient loose-leaf book which may be secured with the other supplies. By using the same book for filing all reports that is used for keeping the records of the conventions and other meetings, there is a uniformity of effort that is very pleasing.

To be in line with the resolution of the convention favoring the use of the new supplies means to throw away all your old report blanks and use only the new ones that are punched for the standard binder and at least investigate the other supplies that are listed and sold by our own publishing house. Write the Herald Office for their catalogue of Sunday school supplies, read the descriptions, get some samples if no more, and see if they will not help you in your secretarial work.

THE TOTAL ATTENDANCE

Inquiry from a Local Secretary

We don't know what to do about the following: We have a few officers like the assistant superintendent, organist, librarian, and treasurer that do not have much work to do and go to classes, mostly in the senior classes.

On my roll book I have them as officers; now how can I have them as pupils also? If I do, I have more pupils on my report than I have people, that is in counting them officers and pupils.

We are getting the class cards from the Herald Publishing House and want to do the work correctly. I have not counted the officers as pupils, and would like your opinion on this question. I hope this question is clear, as it is something that needs settling all over the district as well as here.

Reply by General Secretary

In reply to your question about duplications in the secretary's record we suggest the following as the solution of the apparent difficulty:

On the list of officers count all who hold office of any kind in the school in the total number of officers.

When any of these officers are also members of classes, count them in the total number of scholars. If they have opportunity to attend the sessions of the classes they should be enrolled as members, and if they are needed as teachers they should be enrolled as teachers with the classes, and thus counted.

When you make up your total of the attendance, add each list as you have them written, and from the total number of officers, teachers, scholars, and visitors, subtract the number of duplicates. By duplicates we mean those whose names appear more than once in the list of names. Count up to get this number occasionally and it need not be done each Sunday. When you fill the total attendance blank in the book, write below it, "Less duplicates," and subtract the number. This will give an accurate record of your attendance and there need be no confusion.

E. D. MOORE.

The Church Members' Duty to the Sunday School

(This paper was written by a young sister not yet out of high school, and one whose opportunities have been few. It was read before a Nebraska convention.)

A great question should be placed before the people of the church; a question of such importance that the Saints should not fail to give it deep consideration. The issue is: Your duty; are you trying your best to execute it? From a religious viewpoint, are the members of the church doing their duty to the Sunday school?

As a child needs the advice, encouragement, support and protection of its parent, so the Sunday school needs the support, advice and encouragement of its parent, the church. If the individual members fail to give the school the support needed, have they not failed to keep their baptismal covenant?

Would any thinking person expect the branches of fruit trees to grow, put forth leaves, blossom and fruit with the trunk of the tree deeply notched here and there so the life-giving elements could not pass from branch to branch?

Why should the Sunday school be expected to grow in numbers and aid in making its pupils better men and women while the church members inflict the notches of neglect—notches which cause the spirit of love, truth and progression to cease flowing from heart to heart? The sacred books say that we are to be judged by our works. The question which rests with the individual is: Will my life's work stand the test?

In general, though very important, it is the duty of church members to give to the Sunday school sympathy or a feeling of loyalty, a disposition to help. If we manifest this interest and recognize the school's needs, good results will follow. There is a demand for workers who will put their best efforts into the work.

First, support of a moral nature should be given, enabling the schools to have in us a confidant. Then the second, that of a financial nature will be properly handled. The church should supply the school with workers, furnish it with men and women who will carry the responsibility.

A responsibility resting on the superintendent and his assistant is that of selecting teachers for the classes; also that of supervising the work of committees and organizations connected with the Sunday school.

More than is often realized is the great responsibility resting upon the teacher. The efforts of a wide-awake, active and progressive teacher will aid in the raising of the standard of the school. In many cases, the noble profession of teaching is too slightly thought of by those who are working as instructors in our public schools. The same is true of some of the instructors in our Sabbath schools.

Would any parent desire to send a child to a school which had for teachers men and women who are not duly qualified? Let us as Saints give encouragement to that department of Sunday school that will aid in the qualification of those who are to teach our boys and girls. Let each of us in every possible way aid the work carried on in the teachers' training classes. Because the parent is more responsible for the child's moral and religious training than the teacher of any class in the Sunday school.

Never send a child to Sunday school. There is perhaps only one time when a parent should send a child to Sunday school. That time is when the parent is sick or when he could give an excuse to the Master that he would not be ashamed of.

In many Sunday schools the words of Ella Wheeler Wilcox express very plainly the conditions that exist when she says:

"There are two kinds of people on earth to-day—
Just two kinds of people, no more, I say.
Not the saint and the sinner for 'tis well understood
The good are half bad and the bad are half good.
Not the rich or the poor; for to count a man's wealth
You must first know the state of his conscience and health.
Not the humble and proud; for in life's little span,
Who puts on vain airs is not counted a man.
Not the happy and sad, for swift-flying years
Bring each man his laughter and each man his tears

"No, the two kinds of people on earth, I mean,
Are the people who lift and the people who lean.
Wherever you go you will find the world's masses
Are always divided into just these two classes.
And oddly enough you will find, too, I ween,
There is only one lifter to twenty who lean.
In which class are you? Are you easing the load
Of overtaxed lifters who toil down the road?
Or are you a leaner who lets others bear
Your portion of labor and worry and care?"

The only way to stop the leaning is for each one to become a lifter by earnest prayer and diligent work. The pupils have a part of the lifting to do as well as the teachers and officers. The pupils that come to class prepared on the lesson and give their time to study and thought a half hour on the Sabbath will gain the approval of the superintendent, teacher, and above all, the heavenly Father.

The harmonious working of parents, pupils, teachers and officers will result in a model Sunday school. The influence of such schools through the manifestation of good, truth and justice will aid in the bringing about of the redemption of Zion.

Let each one make this pledge: "I will be a lifter. As a member of the church, I will do my duty to the Sunday school. I will be present each Sunday, if possible." In two words: Keep tryst. Be true. A motto or pledge which if kept implicitly will merit the approval of our God, and bring us several steps nearer the top of the ladder of life; nearer to perfection.

CARA BALDWIN.

Letter Department

Of Passing Moment

NUMBER 2

In my former reflections, which were contained in part one, we were comparing the beauties of the material with that of the spiritual, and their influence upon the human mind.

Still engaged in our work of sightseeing, we come to the great Equitable Building. If you wish to see the beauty of plain, simple designing you must see that structure. It is thirty-eight stories high, five hundred and thirty-seven feet, six inches above the street level, while the floor area covers nearly forty-five acres. The entire cost of the land and building was $29,000,000. There is room for fifteen thousand people to work therein. It seems almost incredible. You must really see these mighty creations before you can realize that there are such.

While still in Broadway, our attention is called to the tallest office building in the world, namely, the Woolworth Building, which stands seven hundred and ninety-three and a half feet high, consisting of fifty-five stories. On the twenty-fourth floor the executive of F. W. Woolworth and Company, direct the business of the largest five and ten cent syndicate in the world, operating over seven hundred stores.

It is a most handsome sight to look upon. The tower of the building is of magnificent design. It is truly one of the wonders of the world.

It was now supper time, and we were quite ready to dine, as the inner man had begun to call for supplies. My good guides had a very fair knowledge of the surroundings, therefore we were not very long in answering the call. The task seemed very agreeable and pleasant to each of us.

The viands were served in a very nice, clean way, the whole aspect of the cafe being bright and cheering. Supper over, we were ready to resume our trip around the great city. Many other buildings were observed and noted as we passed along the great Broadway of New York, which I was privileged to see by night. It is truly a most interesting sight, and I suppose that we may conclude that in point of illumination this great city thoroughfare has no equal; it is one big show of illuminated advertisement, every shade and color being combined with an electric automatic movement of every conceivable and amazing design, some of which are most amusing indeed, while others are both interesting and instructive, and also very novel.

Another aspect of the great Broadway is its gayety, which fulfills the statement of the Apostle Paul to the very letter. "Let us eat, drink, (and be merry) for to-morrow we die." There is no greater evidence in the world of the spirit of the age than you can see and feel as you pass along in this part of the New World's greatest city. Merriment on every side, the crowd bent on pleasure, chatting, joking, seemingly full of glee, dressed in the very height of fashion, seeking the gayest places of amusement, which abound on every side, vying with each other for the patronage of the crowd as it passes along. Many of these places are filled to overflowing; in fact, I was informed that you could not get a seat if you were so disposed, simply because the people book the seats days beforehand, paying several dollars for the privilege.

Well, I suppose that there is much of a muchness in the life of every great city, but New York really gave a renewed opportunity for the study of human nature, the character of which equals anything that you will find anywhere, aye, the whole world over.

This review of the city life completed our work for the day, so we returned to the comfortable home of our host in Brooklyn, and there we chatted about our experiences of years ago, in "the beautiful Isle of the Sea," dear old England, after which we retired to rest, and thus prepare for our duties on the morrow, which was Sunday, when we hoped to meet with the Saints of the Brooklyn Branch. My rest was somewhat broken. I imagined that I was still on the ocean, rolling and tossing about. This, together with my busy experience in the city the previous afternoon, made sleep well-nigh impossible, so that in the morning I did not feel as bright as I would like to have done.

However, the morning came, and after breakfast I went to the Brooklyn chapel, which was close by, and there I met Elder U. W. Greene, who had come to spend the day with the Saints, he being on the way to Independence to attend the councils with the Quorum of the Twelve.

Our meeting was of a very cordial nature. We each rejoiced to meet, as our experience in relation to the war zone was very similar. Brother Greene introduced me to the Sunday school workers, and also to the Saints of that branch. I took no part in the Sunday school, as I was anxious to observe the method of teaching and the training of the young in the States.

My first observance of this training was in the Brooklyn Sunday School, Brother Greene taking me all through the school. I was much interested first of all with the little ones in the basement, and the most interesting manner in which the sister in charge held the attention of the children. I do not remember the name of the teacher, but I pray that the blessing of God may always be with her.

The importance of this department of our work is not realized by all as it should be. It is indeed the nursery of the church. Now, the purpose of the family nursery is very well understood by all, and especially by the elder ones of the family. But we are now speaking of the church nursery. This has not to provide the comforts of the body altogether, though that should not be overlooked; our especial feature should be to nurse the mind, understanding, and to give the correct ideas, implant purity of thought, strength of character, self-control, courage, love, and goodness, with beauty, and the desire for all things that are real and solid, together with truth as a foundation upon which to build.

Take as an object lesson the garden, the plants, and the work of the nurseryman. Watch this man as he goes through his nursery of plants. He takes them one by one. With the first one he takes hold of it is necessary to loosen the soil and straighten out the plant a little; the next one may require the removing of one or more leaves and the soil enriched; third may require support, and you may see the nurseryman leave everything in order to find the necessary support for the weak plant. And so we might go on in almost an unlimited sense to illustrate.

This to my mind is the work of the Sunday school. And when I looked upon those little ones I just felt that I would like to go to each one and welcome them and give encouragement to their little minds.

Then my guide took me to the upper chamber, where we saw many of the plants that had left the nursery, and were rejoicing in their strength and beauty. Some of the foliage was strong and healthy, while others were budding into the beautiful flowers, the bloom of which gave evidence of spiritual culture and refined disposition.

One other feature that gave me much pleasure was the keen interest with which some of the gardeners (teachers) were tending their work; I am sure that it must bring forth the fruit. There is a difference in fruit it is true, but the fruits that we must cultivate are spiritual and divine in character, such as love for God, for man, for nature, or the works of God, and for honesty of purpose, righteousness, patience, kindness, courtesy, good temper, sincerity, and generosity, with humility.

I was very much taken up with the method that the Brooklyn Sunday School had of encouraging the prompt attendance of the scholars. It consisted of two boats attached to a line that was arranged along the gallery. One boat was supposed to be red, while the other was blue. So many classes in the school belonged to the red, and so many to the blue, and the progress of each boat depended upon the number of the reds or blues that were present. Everyone seemed to be much interested therein, while everyone was anxious to be on the winning side.

These are a few of the impressions that I had in my visit to the Brooklyn Sunday School, but really, to do justice, I should have written of my reflections while they were fresh in the mind. However, I trust that one and all will continue the good work, for I am sure that there is much credit due already to those thus engaged.

The church service commenced at 10.45. The pastor, Elder E. B. Hull being in charge. And he would have the writer occupy the morning hour. I am sure that it could have been more profitably spent, for I felt out of place, what with recent experiences on the ocean, together with my throat trouble. However, the Saints were very patient, and if any word was spoken that did good I shall be satisfied.

I took dinner with my host and hostess, and in the afternoon attended the priesthood meeting of the Brooklyn Branch, which was interesting, after which, in company with my big Brother Greene, we visited some of the beautiful buildings built by Captain George Potts, and fitted with all the latest modern appliances for the comfort of those who were fortunate enough to occupy them.

After this visit we took supper with the family of Brother Potts, which was much enjoyed. The evening found us again in the Saints' chapel, the speaker being Elder U. W. Greene, who gave us a most interesting discourse upon the subject of the Book of Mormon. The attention was good and everyone felt blessed.

Brother Greene was leaving for Independence the following morning, and while I did not intend to go by the way of Independence, but to call at Columbus, Ohio, to visit my son and daughter first, and then go forward. I was persuaded to accompany Brother Greene to Independence for several reasons, the first being that I could get the clergy permit, and secondly, I should have the benefit of the company of Brother Greene all the way, and this was quite a weighty consideration, seeing that we had to travel nearly fifteen hundred miles. So we soon located my baggage, and arranged to start at seven o'clock the next morning, which we did, in company with Brother Hull. And I must thank Brother Hull for his kindness to us, for he came all the way to Jersey City to see us off.

Well, after quite a journey through New York, we crossed the ferry, and then said good-by to Brother Hull, and at nine o'clock we boarded our train and commenced our long railway ride, of two days and two nights.

Brother Greene was kept busy pointing out the places of interest all along the route. As many know, he can make things quite interesting to one who may be taking the first impression of new surroundings, and I can assure you that the writer was more than pleased to have the good fortune to secure such a good interpreter, whose work was accomplished in quite an artistic manner.

Points of interest, together with their history, were altogether too numerous to remember, nevertheless, the experience gave me quite a schooling in the Baltimore and Ohio route. Oh, the mighty tracts of land—never ending land—which when you come in contact with it seems to give you the key to the whole American idea of big things, which is quite in line with their surroundings, and therefore a natural consequence.

The importance of Jersey City, with its surroundings, were duly pointed out to me by my companion, and many other features en route. Then we came to Philadelphia. In this large city my companion had had many happy hours of labor and experience. It is in this city also that our summer school has met with such great success, and where Brother Walter W. Smith is now engaged in such labor, and with a staff of brethren carries on the work of the North Philadelphia Institute. Here those who are desirous of obtaining a commercial or industrial education can be thus provided, whether they belong to the church or not. I was treated to the history of this department of the work by the one who was very largely responsible for its introduction, so I understood.

I must now leave you for the present, but I wish to say in doing so that I deeply regret that by reason of the force of circumstances I was hindered from calling at Philadelphia on my return journey; otherwise I should have been brought in personal contact with the above institute.

My good brother had not only provided for my mental food, but we had not left the city far behind when I was invited to sample some fine American sandwiches, doughnuts, spice cake, etc., so that we were soon busy in the work of pacifying the needs of the inner man. This being mealtime, and our union not allowing us to work in the dinner hour, you will no doubt pardon me, as I anticipate meeting you again in the near future.

En route for Zion,

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, July 1, 1915.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, June 30, 1915.

Editors Herald: We feel grateful for the columns of the HERALD through which we may express our thoughts to others. I have been called to labor in a new district this conference year. We wish to express our thanks to the Saints in the Southern Nebraska District for their kind assistance and association in the past years of our labor with them. We hope that their associations with the ministers appointed to labor with them may be as profitable as their desires may be, as I am confident that Brethren Grimes and Dowker are worthy ministers for Christ.

There is nothing that cheers the minister on his way and comforts him in his labors more than the kind treatment of the Saints, while, on the other hand, harsh treatment is very discouraging to the minister, and I presume there is nothing that meets with the judgment of God quicker than mistreatment of his servants.

The Saints of Fairfield will surely meet with rich blessings of God, as they always give the minister the right hand of fellowship, remembering him when he comes among them, and thinking of him when he is leaving them. The writer will always remember the Saints of Fairfield; they gave him a very kind surprise at the time of his leaving. Fifty or sixty gathered together, serving ice cream and cake, rendering music and singing. A beautiful present was handed the minister, with their best wishes for his future success in his labors.

In gospel bonds,

W. M. SELF.

4 ENERGHLYN CRESCENT, PENYRHEOL, CAERPHELLY,

GLAMORGANSHIRE, WALES, June 29, 1915.

Editors Herald: Having read the request from Sister Violet Thomas, of DeFoe, Michigan, in the HERALD of May 12, I endeavored to get in touch with Mrs. Jennie Thomas and her parents in Carmathenshire, but my letter and the HERALD were returned. Though I corrected in some measure the address given in the HERALD, meaning no reflection upon the compositor, yet my letter failed to reach this sister. If the brother or sister will write me at the above address, we will do our best to make the desired effort.

I think you are getting quite a fair view of the terrible war in our papers, but let me say as one who knows and has taken an interest in these matters, that the American press contains greatly exaggerated reports upon "war babies" and "breed before you die." Commissions have been appointed to investigate these gross reports, and have found them wanting, in proportion to the hue and cry raised. Too true it is that war does not increase virtue. Just as true is this fact, that war never civilized anybody.

Napoleon said that Alexander the Great and himself had sought to build empires by the sword, and at Saint Helena he said, "Where am I?" Jesus Christ, he said, has founded an empire upon love, and thousands upon the same principle have sacrificed their lives for him, and others are yet willing to so sacrifice.

Times are close, and as Brother James. Davis said some years ago about our country, "The pennies are large in this country, but mighty hard to get."

I do not want to grumble, but I will say that I am very sorry that I could not have a companion missionary to be with me this year in Wales. It would be a matter of economy after a little outlay, as two men are needed, to my mind, to do the right kind of labor in Wales. I enjoyed four months of labor with a brother now in America, and I know which system I prefer; two by two, if you please.

We are for the most part here a dying industry. Some are getting aged, others are indifferent, and we want shepherds and hustlers here in one man. Some are striving earnestly to build up the work. Others think if the missionary would go out without purse or scrip, great powers would be displayed. Families of the missionaries have enough trials when all their necessities come in due season.

I well remember saying to a brother who was always advocating the without purse or scrip policy for somebody else, that the Lord's policy was two by two. He agreed and I said, I will come with you, so that we can both experience it in the Lord's way. He said the Lord had not called him. I suggested that I would not wish another brother to do what I was not prepared to do myself. All depends upon the missionary going in a specific manner to bring about the success of the work.

We have a few interested at different points and are hopeful, although clouds darken the vision at times and obscure the way to success. I have sent some of our papers into the scenes of battle in France.

I have often wondered of late about the verses found in Luke 22: 35, 36: "And he said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said, Nothing. Then said he unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one."

We are glad to know that Brother Greenwood had a safe passage home, as it is not safe on land or sea. How unpleasant man can and does make his fellow men feel. Let us pray for one another in these days of peril. Let us get close to each other and to the Lord.

We have had a very dry season for months, which has hindered the early crops, but rain has come to relieve a little.

I am, your brother in Christ,

THOMAS JONES.

News from Missions

Lamoni Stake

After a silence for some time from the columns of the paper prized by me above every other periodical, because of its being the official organ of the church of the living God, and its many excellent features, I ask you to permit me a little of your time and patience.

While I occupied the Lord's days in ministration so far as I was permitted, yet I did not enter upon my appointed mission till June 1, although I spent one Sunday in May at Creston, at which I ordained Brother George B. Hall to the office of priest.

On June 5, Brother Columbus Scott and I began tent meetings at Tingley, Iowa, where we continued till the 11th, with the exception of five nights during the time of the Chautauqua there. On account of the rain and cold we had but small audiences, yet those who came gave us the best of attention, and a few evidenced more than a passing interest. Bernice, the daughter of Brother William Shields, was baptized. Through administration several blessings were enjoyed, and the Saints expressed themselves as much encouraged. They are holding Sunday school and Religio and other church services as they can. Surely the Saints there are, by their consistent living, commending the gospel to the attention of their neighbors. We were treated with kindness by all, and the editor of the local paper was considerate of our needs by way of giving us space for proper notices.

Through the kindness of Brother Shields, we with the tent were brought to Afton, from whence we came to Creston, where we now are. We began our services last Saturday night, the 16th. A few interested listeners have been in attendance when the weather would permit, and the prospects are good to sow the seed of the kingdom.

Here we find a small band of devoted Saints, holding together through their Sunday school for more than a year, and every one, young and old, active in all the services. Since we have begun we have enjoyed excellent liberty in preaching the word, which gives us both to understand that God has a people to be gathered out in time.

On account of the continued rain and cold while at Tingley, we sought the Lord to control the elements more favorable to the service, and from that time for a week we had very good weather, really the only good weather while the meetings were going on there.

Last Sunday it rained very hard, and when we met for the three o'clock service the wind was quite severe, so much so that it was unpleasant in the tent, and when Brother Scott made the opening prayer he was led to breathe a petition to God that the winds might be still. The Spirit of God was present, and immediately there was a change, and in a moment or two there was a perfect calm. The suddenness of the change was spoken of by those who knew nothing of the prayer being offered.

Saints here are doing all they can to get the people out to hear. The two dailies, the Creston Advocate-Gazette, and the Creston Plain Dealer have permitted us considerable space and we are using it.

My hope in the ultimate triumph grows brighter.

Your brother,

CRESTON, IOWA, July 20, 1915.

J. F. MINTUN.

Australia

[The following extracts from a report of the Victoria, Australia, district conference, by Brother A. W. Craig, district secretary, and appearing in the Gospel Standard for May 1, will be of interest to the Saints.—EDITORS.]

The semiannual conference of the above district convened in the Saints' church, Geelong, on Good Friday, April 2; punctually at 3 p. m. . . .

Of all the conferences held in this district, this was the greatest in educational value, and was not one whit behind in spiritual benefit. All hymns were from Zion's Praises. Elder C. Edward Miller was chosen to preside, and Elder F. W. Kippe was associated with him. . . . For the first time speeches were limited and a timekeeper appointed. This was Elder G. T. Rawson, and the gong was always "on time." The brethren good-naturedly gave way when the tinkling sound was heard, and the innovation proved a success. Brethren Gammidge, Ferrett, and Chenoweth were appointed critics of the conference proceedings as a whole.

Satisfactory reports were tendered by the district president and secretary. Statistical reports were read as follows: Adelaide, gain by baptism 5, loss by death 1, present number 82, absent from branch 20; Geelong, gain by letters 2, present number 39; Hastings, loss by letters 7, present number 56, absent from branch 31; Phillip Island, net gain 4, present number 20, absent 1; Queensferry, net loss 2, present number 41, absent 20; Richmond, net gain 14, net loss 3, present number 151. The credential committee reported that these were correct.

The bishop's agent's (Elder H. A. Jenkins) report showed total receipts of seventy-one pounds, nineteen shillings, seven pence, expenditure of eighty pounds, fifteen shillings, ten pence and a credit balance of eleven pounds, three shillings, nine pence.

The district treasurer's (Elder H. A. Jenkins) report included receipts amounting to five pounds, four shillings, two and one half pence, disbursements totaling three pounds, nineteen shillings, six pence, and a credit balance of one pound, four shillings, eight and one half pence.

Elder H. A. Jenkins also reported the collection of four pounds, five shillings for Graceland College, which had been transmitted and receipts returned. . . .

At five p. m. the first convention of the District Sunday school association was convened, in charge of Brother Reginald Walton, district superintendent, who had associated with him Elder C. Edward Miller, assistant superintendent, Brother C. W. Butterworth was the secretary. . . .

The following resolutions from the priesthood were unanimously adopted: As our conferences are becoming an educational feature, requiring considerable planning ahead, and at the present time there is no provision made authorizing anyone to get up the program for the conference, therefore be it resolved, That hereafter the presidency of the district, in connection with the minister in charge, if practicable, and the district heads of the auxiliaries, provide the programs for the conferences; and be it further resolved that the order of services, authority to appoint speakers, etc., be left with the presidency of the conference.

That we encourage the various auxiliaries of the church, and we look with favor upon them having annual rally days, and believe the branches should encourage such efforts.

As there has been much discussion by the ministry and the members of this mission as to the propriety of Latter Day Saints going in bathing at places where there is no separation of the sexes, known here as "mixed bathing," and as considerable feeling has been engendered in the matter from time to time, and as the General Conference has seen fit to take a position on card playing, dancing, secret societies, theater going, etc., therefore, be it resolved that we ask the General Conference of 1916 to take some action in this matter of mixed bathing, with a view of bringing about greater unity.

That we approve of the action of the presidency in restricting the items submitted to a time limit, and that this system be continued during the prayer and sacrament meeting of this conference.

The following also prevailed:

Resolved, That we advise all the schools in the district to set apart the first Sabbath in May as Mother's Day, an appropriate program being prepared for the occasion, and white flower being worn.

Seeing the need of more up-to-date reporting to General Conference, therefore be it resolved that the district president and secretary be empowered to secure reports closing December 31 each year from the several branches, and make report to General Conference, and further, that the appointment of delegates be left with the executive.

A request from the Richmond Religio that a session be set apart for the purpose of forming a district Religio association was granted, and the appointment of the time was left to the presidency.

Elder A. H. Ford was chosen to represent the district on the executive committee of the Victorian Alliance, subject to their acceptance of a representative from our church. . . .

Richmond was selected as the place to hold the next conference, the time being left in the hands of the presidency. . . .

It was decided to discontinue holding conference semiannually, and to hold a reunion in lieu of the second conference. The date of reunion was left in the hands of the district executive.

The gospel wagon accounts were presented, and showed receipts totaling thirty-four pounds, nineteen shillings, six pence, expenditure amounting to thirty-three pounds, seventeen shillings, ten and one half pence, and a credit balance of one pound, one shilling, seven and one half pence. The horse was donated, and also check to purchase the wagon. . . .

At four o'clock the organization of the Religio Association commenced, in charge of Brethren W. Chenoweth and A. W. Craig, chairman and secretary respectively. The name "Zion's Religio-Literary Association" was adopted. Brother Chenoweth was elected president, with power to choose associates, and selected Brother W. Dyke, of Adelaide, and Brother A. W. Craig. Sister Jessie Emmerson was elected secretary and Brother C. Walton treasurer. . . .

It was decided to hold conventions annually, and a reunion in conjunction with the church between conventions.

Six members were appointed a quorum.

New York

My last writing was from Castine, Maine. My efforts there brought forth no apparent results, though for the most of our stay there we had fine attendance. Like many seacoast towns, the people seem to want most everything but religion, and especially the genuine. From Castine I went to Sargentville, where I met Brother John Sheehy. We spent a day or two together, he going to Little Deer Isle and I remaining a few days. From here I went to Stonington, closing up my year's work; and I might say, one of the most pleasant years of my missionary work. I was pleased when I thought I was to be returned. The missionary in charge changed his mind, however, and thought it best to send me to New York.

I left my home on the night of June 10, arriving in Greenwood, New York, on Sunday morning. The last part of my journey had to be made by auto. I had no particular objections to this manner of conveyance excepting the price, but especially since my funds were low. At Greenwood we met a number of the Saints of the district who were assembled in conference, including A. B. Phillips, A. D. Angus, and A. E. Stone. The time spent together was both pleasant and profitable.

In company with Brother Stone we left for Buffalo on the 16th, where we met with the Saints in their midweek prayer meeting. At this time the Saints decided to have the district tent operated in the city. A committee was appointed to hunt up a location. On the 19th the writer journeyed to Niagara Falls, spending Sunday with the Saints there. The tent being stored there, we got it out and shipped it to Buffalo, where, after some hunting, we secured a lot and put up our tent. We had some neat cards printed and distributed in the vicinity of the tent. Brother Phillips then arrived on the scene. I was to labor with him during the tent season. Our attendance has not been so large as Billy Sunday's is reported as being, yet we have a fair attendance each night. One bad feature of it is that we have a new crowd each night. We are not in a position to say at this time how long we will remain here.

The masses are pleasure bent, and we are compelled to admit the truth of Paul's prophecy when he said they would be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.

This is a new mission to the writer, therefore we have to get acquainted with as well as learn the field, so it will necessarily be a feeling of our way. The tent season ends here about the last of August, I am told.

If there are any Saints who are not in branches and would like to have the gospel preached to their neighbors, we will be pleased to hear from them. He that is warned should warn his neighbor.

In bonds,

WILLIAM ANDERSON.

BUFFALO, NEW YORK, 36 Tremont Avenue.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes

SOUTHEASTERN ILLINOIS.—June 5, 10 a. m., Brush Creek Branch. Reports: Brush Creek, Springerton, Bungay, Parrish, Dry Fork, Skillet Fork, Poplar Creek, Kibbie. C. Lowry, E. W. Sutton, Herman Sommers, M. E. Harris, L. M. Edmonds appointed committee to raise money to run district tent. Preaching by P. G. McMahan, I. M. Smith, L. C. Moore. Adjourned to meet with Springerton Branch, first Saturday and Sunday in December. W. E. Presnall, secretary.

FREMONT.—Tabor, Iowa, June 19. Reports: Glenwood 59, Riverton 53, Tabor 64, Thurman 198, Bartlett 42, Henderson 79, Hamburg 60, Shenandoah 114. Officers elected: T. A. Hougas, president, he selecting N. L. Mortimore as counselor, which was ratified; C. W. Forney, secretary; Almon Hougas, member library board. Petition of Henderson for next conference read, time and place for conference being left with presidency. Branches were instructed to take collections for district tent fund. Preaching by W. E. Haden, Bishop Joseph Roberts. C. W. Forney, secretary.

SASKATCHEWAN.—July 9 to 11, Artlund. Reports: Senlac 15, Iowa 82, Artlund, 70, Disley 40, Sunnyvale 75, Weyburn 46, Minnesota 121, Zion's Hill 34. It was decided to purchase a gospel tent for the district, size, price, etc., to be decided by presidency. Officers elected: T. J. Jordan, president; Joshua Dobson, first vice president; W. J. Cornish, second vice president; Bertha Cornish, secretary; Joshua Dobson, treasurer. Horace Darby was ordained elder. Recommendation for ordination of Myron M. Anderson priest approved and referred to Minnesota Branch. Recommendation for ordination of H. M. Jordan and A. N. O'Neil for ordination as priest and teacher respectively, referred to district presidency and Viceroy Branch. Recommendation for ordination of William McIntosh elder, referred to district presidency, missionary in charge, and Viceroy Branch. Albert Kilpatrick was called to the office of elder and referred to minister in charge, Michigan Branch and Alberta District. Preaching by J. W. Peterson, E. R. Davis, Daniel Macgregor, J. A. Gillen, J. Dobson. Sister Macgregor gave two lectures on social purity. Good attendance, the Spirit bringing blessings of peace and joy. Two were baptized. Adjourned to meet at call of missionary in charge and district presidency. Bertha Cornish, secretary, Senlac, Saskatchewan.

Convention Minutes

SASKATCHEWAN.—Religio, June 7, Artlund Branch. Officers elected: A. B. Taylor, Saskatoon, president; C. R. Bowerman, Saskatoon, vice president; Joseph Bates, Senlac, secretary; Sister C. J. Jordan, Viceroy, treasurer; Emma Land, Nutana, librarian; Sister George A. Taylor, Saskatoon, home class superintendent; E. R. Davis, Viceroy, superintendent temperance department; Sister O. L. Newcomb, Rutland, superintendent gospel literature. Adjourned to meet two days prior, same place next conference. Joseph Bates, secretary.

Conference Notices

Idaho, August 28 and 29, Hagerman. Come in time for reunion which begins August 20. Notify William Glauner, Hagerman, you are coming, and send reports to secretary, Mrs. L. B. Jackson, Hagerman.

Convention Notices

Idaho Sunday school, August 27, Hagerman. Mrs. Bertha J. Anderson, Route 4, Boise, secretary.

New York-Philadelphia Sunday school, September 4, 4 p.

m., Brooklyn Church, Park Place and Schenectady Avenue. Election of officers and delegates to General Convention. Joint Sunday school and Religio institute the 5th, with appropriate program. The 7th has been reserved for entertainment. Lot Bishop, superintendent, 303 South Deckers Court, Scranton, Pennsylvania. Herman N. Schwartz, secretary, 1004 Land Title Building, Philadelphia.

New York-Philadelphia Religio, September 4, 8 p. m., Brooklyn Church, Brooklyn, New York. Election of officers and delegates to General Convention. Joint Sunday school and Religio institute the 5th. The 7th reserved for entertainment. Earl W. Wagner, president, 319 Fourteenth Avenue, Scranton. Herman N. Schwartz, secretary, 1004 Land Title Building, Philadelphia.

Reunion Notices

Southeastern Illinois, August 20, continuing ten days, Harmon Summers' Grove, one mile east of Parrish Church. Dining hall on grounds. Prices as reasonable as can be afforded. Plenty of pasture. Come by train to Parrish. Those wishing tents notify W. E. Presnall, secretary, Xenia, Illinois, as soon as possible.

Northwestern Missouri, August 20 to 29. Tents, 3-foot wall, 10 by 12 $2; 12 by 14 $2.50; 6-foot wall, 12 by 14 $3.25. Cots, single 50 cents; divans for two, $1; chairs 10 cents. All delivered on grounds if ordered in advance. Speakers: F. M. Sheehy, J. W. Wight, W. E. Haden, with missionaries of district, and brethren who may visit us. Order tents and supplies not later than August 15, of T. H. Hinderks, secretary.

Kewanee, Eastern Iowa, and Nauvoo, August 13 to 22. We hope to have for speakers, one of the Presidency, W. A. McDowell, O. E. Sade, Arthur Allen, C. E. Willey, Edward Rannie, L. G. Holloway, E. B. Morgan, C. E. Harpe, D. J. Williams, James McKiernan. Order tents of C. J. Dykes, Muscatine, Iowa. Alfred C. Needham, secretary.

Notice of Release

Patriarch J. W. Wight has been released from his general conference appointment at the earnest request of the college board, that he may travel in the interests of Graceland College.

ELBERT A. SMITH, for First Presidency.
FREDERICK A. SMITH, Presiding Patriarch.

Quorum Notices

PACIFIC COAST ELDERS

This quorum meets during the reunion at Irvington, California, August 13 to 23. On August 1 all members of quorum will please report labors to that date to quorum secretary, H. A. Hintz, 1001 Main Street, Chico, California.

The Oriole Girls

We are very much interested in a new movement for the girls in the church similar to the Camp Fire Girls. We are indebted to Sister J. A. Gardner, superintendent of young ladies' department of Woman's Auxiliary for a copy of the manual, The Oriole Girls. A superficial glance suggests that this organization can be adapted in our Sunday schools as organized class work. After a thorough examination we expect to have more to say on this through the Sunday school department.

These pamphlets may be had for fifteen cents from Mrs. J. A. Gardner, Independence, Missouri. Send for one.

G. R. WELLS, Superintendent.

Married

YOUNG-GREEN.—Brother W. M. Young, late of Winnipeg, Manitoba, and Sister L. C. Green, of Sidney, Montana, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony at Wadena, Minnesota, June 23, 1915. This event took place at the beautiful West Hotel, the ladies' reception parlor having been especially decorated for the occasion, Mr. and Mrs. West witnessing for Wadena's honored mayor, who officiated in the capacity of justice. The worthy pair hid themselves to Minnewaukon, North Dakota, where they will reside.

Requests for Prayers

Brother Ephraim W. Grim, of Canton, Illinois, is afflicted with stomach trouble and nervousness, and asks an interest in the prayers of the Saints, that he may be healed.

Died

ANDERSON.—Viola Anderson was born February 18, 1892, in Indiana, died at Biloxi, Mississippi, March 17, 1915. Baptized May 21, 1911, at Biloxi, by A. G. Miller, confirmed at Vancleave, June 9, 1911, by F. M. Slover. Sermon by A. E. Warr. This sister departed firm in the faith and hope of the gospel of Christ. A girl of sweet disposition of whom it had been said, She was foremost in every good word and work.

WILSON.—Maria Wilson was born June 19, 1838, died July 18, 1915, at her home Vosholl, Missouri. Married James F. Wilson, August 30, 1852. There were born to them 13 children, 3 dying in childhood. With the remaining children there are her aged husband, 41 grandchildren, 15 great-grandchildren. She was a faithful wife, loving mother, true Saint, and died in full hope of the first resurrection. Loved by all who knew her. Services at Saints' Church, Vosholl, by Noah Nephi Cooke, of Saint Louis. Deceased was carried to her last resting place by her 5 sons and 1 grandson.

HENSON.—Mahala Henson, born September 30, 1874, Flat Rock, Illinois, died July 13, 1915, near Orchardville, Illinois. Married R. H. Henson, December 22, 1892. Baptized Febru-

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver; Assistant Editor.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

Social Purity Literature

Proper instruction and training of the child has come to be an intelligent factor in the creating of a people physically strong and morally clean. To this end the Social Purity Board of the Church recommends the following:

A Pure Life—By C. B. Woodstock, paper, 5 cents each, 50 cents per dozen. An interesting presentation of the purity problem.

Herself—By E. B. Lowry, cloth boards, $1.10. Chaste, matter-of-fact information by a woman physician. Interesting, refined, clear; a book for every family library.

Himself—By E. B. Lowry, cloth boards, $1.10. A companion volume to Herself. Wholesome in tone, refined in character, complete in detail.

Perfect Boyhood—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 20 cents. Just the book for a boy from ten to fifteen years of age. Contains what boys ought to know and no more, all told in a straightforward, wholesome manner.

Perfect Girlhood—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 20 cents. A companion volume to Perfect Boyhood, unexcelled for girls from ten to fifteen years of age.

Perfect Manhood—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 30 cents. A chaste, practical, scientific explanation of man's reproductive nature.

Perfect Womanhood—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 30 cents. Containing vital information, counsel, and inspiration for women. It is sane, safe, practical.

Guide to Sex Instruction—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 50 cents. Vital facts of life for all ages. Five books in one. Essential in many homes.

How to Tell the Story of Life—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 20 cents. A valuable book for parents who desire to properly instruct their children.

Spooning—By T. W. Shannon, paper, 15 cents. A vital social problem intelligently solved. Should be read by all young people.

Send all orders to
HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 Lamoni, Iowa.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

Something New and Fine	- - - -	737
Ordination Prayer Frederick M. Smith	- - - -	737
Current Events	- - - -	739
Notes and Comments	- - - -	740

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

The Seventh-day Adventists, by Marcus Cook	-	741
Where Do We Stand? by J. August Koehler	-	744
Home and Missionary Labor, by E. L. Kelley	-	746

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

Asylum or Hospital	- - - -	747
Prohibition in Iowa	- - - -	748

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT

E. D. Moore—Cara Baldwin.	- - - -	749
---------------------------	---------	-----

LETTER DEPARTMENT

W. H. Greenwood—W. M. Self—Thomas Jones.	- - - -	752
--	---------	-----

NEWS FROM MISSIONS

J. F. Mintun—A. W. Craig—William Anderson.	- - - -	755
--	---------	-----

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

	- - - -	757
--	---------	-----

ary 1, 1895, by J. F. Henson. Service in charge of S. D. Goosetree, prayer by I. A. Morris, sermon by F. M. Slover, before a large audience. Deceased leaves husband, 6 sons, 1 daughter, 5 brothers, 1 sister, many friends. Truly, a good Latter Day Saint has gone to rest with the just.

Book Reviews

THE TREASURE OF HIDDEN VALLEY.—Willis George Emerson, author of the "Builders," Forbes & Company, Chicago, $1.25. A history of western life, namely in Montana: "The plot starts out with a quest for a lost mine, but this issue before long becomes of subsidiary importance to the intensely human story that gradually unfolds itself and brings into action almost every passion, noble and ignoble, by which mankind is swayed. Among the other characters Buell Hampton again emerges from the author's picture gallery, and by his ennobling philosophy, his broad and generous humanity, both irradiates the story and helps to bring it to a fitting climax."

Tithing Cards---Something New

Cards like these are proving very successful. They encourage thrift and the saving of small amounts for this very essential fund.

1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1
5	$1.00	SUNDAY SCHOOL TITHING CARD																$1.00	5
5		For Use in the Schools of .....																5
5		ISSUED TO .....																5
5		as a temporary receipt for amounts indicated by punch marks. This money is to be credited as TITHING for use and benefit of																5
5		REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS																5
5		..... Agent.																5
5		..... School.																5
	$1.00	(When card is filled the regular Bishopric receipt will be issued.)																$1.00
1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1

Sunday School Cards

This form printed on good, durable cards. Order No. T1. Prices: 10 for 10c, 25 for 15c, 50 for 25c, 100 for 45c.

Branch Tithing Cards

Note that this form of card is for five dollars. Strong card, convenient size. Order No. T2. Prices: 10 for 10c, 25 for 15c, 50 for 25c, 100 for 45c.

5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5
5	$5.00	BRANCH TITHING CARD																$5.00	5
5		For Use in the ..... Branch																5
5		ISSUED TO .....																5
5		as a temporary receipt for amounts indicated by punch marks. This money is to be credited as TITHING for use and benefit of																5
10		REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS																10
10		..... Collector																10
10		..... Branch																10
10	$5.00	(When card is filled the regular Bishopric receipt will be issued.)																$5.00	10
10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10

How to Use the Cards

The bishop or bishop's agent in your district will be glad to authorize some one in your branch or school, or both, to have charge of these cards. The subagent thus appointed will issue cards to anyone requesting them. When a contribution is made, he receives the money, punches the card to correspond with the amount, and the owner retains it until another contribution is made. When one card is filled, another is issued. When the card is filled the subagent remits the amount to the bishop or agent, then a regular tithing receipt is issued from his office direct to the owner of the card and he is credited on the books in the usual way.

Punch for Cards

We sell a neat and serviceable little punch for use with these cards for 30 cents, postpaid.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

*****

A New Book

THE INTERPRETER

By Gomer T. Griffiths

A Revision of the "Exegesis"

containing more charts and information than the former book, also an illustrated chapter on offenses—law governing the same—procedure in church courts, and blank forms suitable to the same. The various quotations from the books have been carefully compiled and arranged, so that the instructions pertaining to each office are classified, to assist the reader in locating the duties of each minister from the president of the church to the deacon, also points out how the different officers are called and the manner of their ordination, thereby securing courtesy to whom courtesy is due.

Price .....50c

Objections to the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants Answered and Refuted

You can't take the time, neither have you the data at hand to be able to refute many of the so-called arguments against these two books. Brother J. R. Lambert has placed in book form facts and data to refute these so-called arguments. A handy book to have in your library. Order 143 .....40c

Braden-Kelley Debate

This book contains the full report of an eighteen-night debate between the Church of Christ (Campbellite) and the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. The work is a library in itself. Though it has been in print for several years it is still one of the best books published to show the stability of God's truth. Order 125 .....150

The Instructor

A book that is one of our very best sellers, and to see the book is enough to explain why it is such a favorite. This work is the result of Brother G. T. Griffiths' efforts and it has been of untold good. To the student, the busy man, and the investigator alike the book is of untold value. Subjects topically arranged.

Order 126 cloth .....75
127 Leather .....1.00
128 Flexible .....1.75

Have you heard of the old Spalding story from which the Book of Mormon was said to have been taken? Well, here is the Spalding story. Better get it and know for yourself. Only .....25c
Order 139.

Failures of Campbellism

A new tract by Elder E. E. Long. Reprinted from a series of twelve articles in HERALD of 1913. Logically presented and systematically arranged. Quotations verified. 139 pages. Order 217 .....20c

What Is Man

Is a book that should receive the careful study of every Saint. It clears away the fog of doubt with reference to the eternal verities of the future state of man. No better book on the subject of immortality. Order 140 .....50c

LOCATION WANTED for a photographic studio in a town of 2,000 or more, without a photographer, where there is an L. D. S. branch. Or will buy, rent, or accept good position. Earl F. Hoisington, Harlan, Iowa. 30-2-t

COLORED POST CARDS

Graceland College, Saints' Home, Liberty Home, Independence church, Herald Publishing House, Lamoni church.
1 of each for 15 cents.
2 of each for 25 cents.
Order by number 172a.

COMPENDIUM OF FAITH is a work for the student. It is a collection of texts taken from the standard church works on a great many subjects. Also a splendid brief history of the Apostasy.

Order No.
141 cloth .....75c
141½ leather .....$1.00
174 flexible .....$1.50

The Route That Offers Most to Exposition Tourists

It's an investment that means a lot—your trip to the California Expositions. You should buy the ticket that will pay the biggest dividends in scenic enjoyment, in attractive and interesting points reached—in luxurious, smoothly-handled train service.

The Burlington is offering a Grand Circle Tour for exposition visitors that comprises the biggest "Seeing America First" value ever offered. If you have made a Pacific Coast tour before you will realize this. If not, ask your friends who are familiar with the West—who know what's what.

Just get the facts about this Grand Circle Tour, then compare it with any other that you know about, and judge for yourself.

Stop-overs allowed at any point. Ninety days to make the trip.

Step in and get your copy of our California Expositions folder, next time you're going by.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

THAT REMINDS ME! If you are going to take advantage of your homestead rights, you have no time to waste. A few years from now the good land will all be gone. Now, you can secure a good 80-acre irrigated or 320-acre Mondell homestead on mighty attractive terms. Let me send you particulars—free. S. B. Howard, Immigration Agent, 1004 Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, AUGUST 11, 1915

NUMBER 32

Editorial

NEW SERIES OF TRACTS

Some months ago at a meeting of the First Presidency with members of the good literature committee of the Independence Stake, the matter of providing suitable tracts on gospel principles for general distribution was discussed.

The tracts that we have had on hand heretofore are not uniform in size, type, or appearance. Some of them were written many years ago and are out of date, though of course there are many excellent numbers that are available.

At this meeting it was determined to begin the work of getting out a new series, uniform in size, type, and general makeup. This work was committed to the undersigned.

Seven tracts of the new series are now ready for publication; three of them written by Elder Paul M. Hanson. They have been read and criticized by three members of the Twelve.

We can think of no name more appropriate than the Angel Message Tracts. The first number is an introduction to the principles of the gospel as Christ taught it. In their order, succeeding numbers take up faith, repentance, baptism in water, baptism of the Spirit, laying on of hands, the resurrection and immortality, and eternal judgment.

Other subjects, including church organization, the gifts, second coming of Christ, etc., may be taken up later, as fast as we can elaborate the series.

These tracts appear in chapters, and are to be paged consecutively, so that they may be gathered up to form a book. They may also be printed in book form directly from the plates when the series is developed. They will have a uniform and attractive cover design.

We begin herewith the publication of the text of these tracts simultaneously in the HERALD and Ensign, and as fast as possible they will be gotten out for sale. Prices will be announced later. Our people should avail themselves of this new aid in proselyting. Good literature committees everywhere take notice.

Helpful criticisms or suggestions on these tracts as they appear are solicited. Such criticisms should be sent in at once so as to be available before the tracts are put in final shape. They should be brief and to the point, plainly written, and preferably typewritten. Address the undersigned.

LAMONI, IOWA.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE GENERAL CHOIR MOVEMENT

It will be remembered that we have been commanded to cultivate the gift of music, both vocal and instrumental. A strong impetus towards better things in vocal music was given by the initiation of what has been termed, "The choir movement," started with the appointment by the Presidency of a general chorister. This movement was motivated by a desire to coordinate the work of the various local choirs so as to make possible better choral and congregational singing at conferences and conventions, district and general; for let it be understood that a chief goal of the choir movement has been the improvement of congregational and choral singing, rather than merely the development of solo and anthem work, though the latter have their proper places. In it all there is had in view the definite purpose of enhancing the æsthetics of our public worship.

The choir movement has progressed well, despite many hindering causes, and has reached a point where at least one of the purposes had in view at its inception has been demonstrated, viz, the feasibility of coordinating work of the local choirs so as to make possible combinations of choirs at conferences, reunions, and conventions. We can not but feel that still greater possibilities of beautiful helpfulness lie before our vocal musicians if they will but work in humility and sincerity of purpose, remembering that their work is essentially an auxiliary one in the activities of public worship.

Our general musical director, Brother A. N. Hoxie, jr., has carried on his work with zeal and sacrificing devotion. The presidency has kept in touch with him in his work, and are pleased with the many evidences of progress in choir work, though we are awake to the greater possibilities still ahead of us. It is now opportune that a second movement in musical circles should be launched under Brother Hoxie's direction. What has been done with the singers can be done with the instrumentalists; and Brother Hoxie desires to start foundations for a general orchestra. Let the various instrument players throughout the church take notice and be prepared to give the general musical director such assistance as they can. We look forward with pleasure towards a closer coordination of the instrument players of the church.

It might be well to say here that there are many other activities which can be coordinated in a similar way, so that others besides musicians may be working together with others for the general good of the church in the auxiliary activities of the work we all love.

With the hope that the new movement will lend added zeal to the cultivation of musical talents in particular, and æsthetics in general, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

July 18, 1915.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

JAPANESE RESIGN.—Following an inquiry into charges of bribery in connection with the parliamentary elections of March last, the Japanese cabinet have tendered their resignations. The Elder Statesmen will meet in council and render their decision, and a new cabinet may result.

THE "DACIA."—A French prize court has confirmed the seizure by France of the Dacia, en route from Galveston to Rotterdam, after having been transferred from German to American registry, following the opening of the present European war. The French have always contended that a vessel must be transferred thirty days before the breaking out of hostilities for the transaction to be recognized as bona fide.

DESTRUCTIVE STORMS.—A cloud-burst on the night of the 3d flooded the business section of Erie, Pennsylvania, resulting in damage to property estimated at seventeen million dollars and in the loss of at least twenty-six lives. Sea wrecks, property damage amounting to five hundred thousand dollars, seven deaths, and many serious injuries is the toll of a serious storm sweeping out over Long Island and adjacent territory on the afternoon of the 4th.

NEW YORK CONVENTION.—Something of the temper of the New York constitutional convention now in session is suggested in the following rebuke by Elihu Root, chairman of the convention:

This convention will have to demonstrate to the people of the State that it is not in sympathy with what is known as invisible government; it will have to get away from the boss system.

Since New York has a wide influence in national politics and in legislative action, the country at large is interested in the work of this convention and in the new constitution it is to propose.

"FRYE" CASE.—In a note made public the 4th, Germany remains unyielding in her refusal to concede that the sinking of the William P. Frye was a violation of American rights, under the Prussian-American treaty or international law. Germany reiterates her willingness to pay for the ship, and accepts a former proposal of the United States that damages be fixed by two experts, one selected by each country; this payment, however, Germany contends, is not to be held as a satisfaction for violation of American rights, but as payment for the vessel lawfully sunk. Should this method be unsatisfactory, Germany suggests arbitration at The Hague.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Carranza forces have again reoccupied Mexico City. Fighting between Villa and Carranza forces at Nogales, Sonora, has necessitated the stationing of United States troops on the United States side of the line under orders to repel any invasion of United States' rights. One United States cavalryman was killed and two wounded in a skirmish between members of the Twelfth Cavalry and a band of Mexican raiders, near Brownsville, Texas, on the 3d. Fifteen Mexicans were killed. The ambassadors of Argentina, Brazil, Chili, and the ministers of Bolivia, Uruguay, and Guatemala, have been invited to confer with Secretary Lansing on the Mexican situation, with a view to plans to bring about order. The conference is sitting at this writing.

THE EUROPEAN WAR.—The Germans occupied Warsaw on the 5th. Meager reports tell of terrific fighting and heavy losses. The Russians in their retreat in recent weeks have devastated the country, destroyed factories, blown up forts, removed supplies, etc., leaving the Germans in many places barren, wasted, and unfortified territory. Violent fighting has occurred at various points in the west, especially in the Argonne and the Vosges, but there have been few changes in the line. Italy continues to gain against the Austrians. It is reported from London that the crest of the ridge in the Gallipoli Peninsula has been gained, and that the position of the allies in the Dardanelles has been strengthened. The week has been one of limited action on the seas. One Turkish and one Swedish and two British steamers are reported sunk by submarines.

BRITISH NOTES.—The latest British notes reject the contention of the United States that the British orders in counsel are illegal, and justify the course of Great Britain as being within international law. In the Naches case, an American steamer seized while en route from Rotterdam to the United States, Great Britain declines to allow free passage of goods of German origin. The blockading of neutral ports

(Continued on page 781.)

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

CHAPTER 1

WHAT DID JESUS PREACH

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.—Luke 4: 18, 19.

A SABBATH DAY IN NAZARETH

Our text takes us back to Nazareth. It is the Sabbath Day. The men and women of Nazareth are wending their way toward the synagogue. Thither also goes Jesus of Nazareth, known to us as the Son of God, known to the Nazarenes only as the son of Joseph the carpenter, and Mary.

His is a familiar form on the streets of Nazareth, for this is his home town, the city where he spent his boyhood days. His face is familiar in the synagogue also, for the record tells us that it was his custom to go to the synagogue on the Sabbath Day. He is a regular churchgoer.

He enters the synagogue. It is much like other Jewish synagogues. The interior is a large, plain, rectangular room. The men sit at one side; the women, heavily veiled, sit at the other side, behind screens.

At one end of the room stands the ark or chest containing the books of the law, and by its side a raised platform with a desk on which the speaker may rest the books or scrolls of the law and the prophets.

JESUS IN THE PULPIT

On this occasion the ruler of the synagogue invites Jesus to read for the people. He comes forward, receives the book, turns to Isaiah, and reads the passage contained in our text.

Having read standing, as the custom is, he seats himself to deliver the discourse, again observing the custom.

His first words are surcharged with meaning: "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears." Thus he announces his Messiahship, explains his mission, outlines his program.

He says in substance:

I am he of whom the prophet spoke when he said, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.

At first the people listen with astonishment, mingled with pleasure; but as the full meaning of his announcement dawns upon them, and particularly as he proceeds to rebuke them for their faults, a change comes over them. They are filled with wrath.

Soon men are fighting in the aisles. They rise up and tear him from the synagogue and thrust him from the town, attempting to fling him down the steep hillside to his death. But his time has not come, and he passes safely through their midst and is gone.

NEVER TO RETURN

Never again, so far as the record shows, did he return to Nazareth. Never again, so far as we know, was his voice heard in that old synagogue. He took up his residence in Capernaum.

It is a dangerous thing to reject the message of Jesus, even when it comes in rebuke. Beware lest you make that mistake now.

WHAT DID JESUS PREACH

Anointed, as he said, by his Father, and ordained from before the foundation of the world for that very work, and filled with the Spirit that he declared rested upon him that day in the old synagogue, Jesus moved out in his great mission: preaching the gospel.

What did he preach? The deeds and declarations of his apostles and ministers ordained and sent out by him are equally binding, so long as they did his will and possessed his Spirit. But for the time being let us confine ourselves to the question: What did Jesus preach?

What are the great fundamental principles of that gospel that is for ever dignified, consecrated, and made binding upon men because Jesus of Nazareth preached it?

"HAVE FAITH IN GOD"

In the open air, under a fig tree, on the road between Bethany and Jerusalem, this man who in the old synagogue at Nazareth announced his mission, delivered one of his wonderful gospel sermons.

He prefaced it with this single, short, but virile and heart-gripping sentence: "Have faith in God." (Mark 11: 22.)

Later in his ministry, in fact just shortly before his death, he delivered himself of another short, concise, yet equally dynamic and significant statement: "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." (John 14:1.)

REPENTANCE

After John the Baptist had done his work of preparing the way of the Lord, he began to "decrease," while Jesus began to "increase," as John had predicted.

The star of John began to decline. The star of Jesus topped the horizon, and its splendid rays began to illuminate the world. So we read:

Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.—Mark 1: 14, 15.

BAPTISM OF WATER AND OF THE SPIRIT

Nicodemus, wealthy, proud, of high station, a ruler, secretly a disciple, yet fearing public confession, came to Jesus by night to learn of him.

Brushing aside all preliminaries, all polite niceties of approach, Jesus declared with solemn directness: "Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God." (John 3: 3.)

In answer to a further question from Nicodemus, he said: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.)

In order to see and enter into the kingdom whose immediate presence he had announced, and to enter which faith and repentance were required, it was necessary also to be born again, to be born of the water and of the Spirit,—to be baptized in water and by the Spirit.

A ruler once came to Jesus by night,
And asked him the way of salvation and light;
The Master made answer in words true and plain,
Ye must be born again.

Ye children of men attend to the word
So solemnly uttered by Jesus, the Lord,
And let not this message to you be in vain,
Ye must be born again.

Baptism is one doctrine that Jesus chose to emphasize in the most commanding manner conceivable by preaching it after his resurrection, and before his ascension into heaven. In his final commission to his apostles he said:

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.—Mark 16: 15, 16.

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28: 19, 20.

Thus at the close of his ministry on earth as well as at the very beginning of his public life he taught this great principle of baptism. We caught our first full glimpse of him as a man when he walked down the banks of Jordan and was baptized by John.

He thus by personal example gave an irrefutable argument for baptism. God concurred, and coming up out of the water from his immersion, Jesus received the baptism of the Spirit.

Born "of the water and of the Spirit," he began his ministry. Closing it, he sent his disciples out to baptize all nations.

THE LAYING ON OF HANDS

It was in this same parting commission (and admonition) that he taught the principle of the laying on of hands. For at that time he said: "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." (Mark 16: 18.)

This principle he had previously taught by example: "Now when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto him; and he laid his hands on every one of them and healed them." (Luke 4: 40.)

These blessings came not to the faithless but to those who believed on him, and were not to gratify idle and curious sign seekers.

After Paul had been stricken blind on the road to Damascus by the miracle that led up to his conversion, Ananias came to him with healing and help:

And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting hands on him, said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost.—Acts 9: 17.

Yes, Jesus, the Lord of glory, sent Ananias to lay hands on Paul that he might be healed and that he might receive the Holy Ghost.

RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD

From the earliest dawn of time the question that perplexed Job, "If a man die, shall he live again?" has been in the hearts and on the lips of men.

As Jesus, with tears standing in his eyes, approached the tomb where his friend Lazarus lay dead, he turned to Martha, the sister of Lazarus, and answered this question of the ages: "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." (John 11: 25.)

At another time he said:

The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. . . . The hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.—John 5: 25-29.

THE JUDGMENT

Reproaching the cities that had rejected him, in the most impressive manner Jesus warned them of an impending day of judgment:

Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works which were done in you had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. But I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you.—Matthew 11: 21, 22.

ABIDING IN THE DOCTRINE OF CHRIST

These, then, were the great fundamental principles of the gospel that Jesus preached. They are just as vital now as then.

If defense be necessary for teaching doctrine in this age, in which doctrinal preaching is heavily discounted in certain circles, our defense is prepared for us in God's word:

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.—2 John 9, 10.

Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: For in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee.—1 Timothy 4: 16.

But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine.—Titus 2: 1.

THE PAULINE CREED

Jesus said of Paul: "He is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel." (Acts 9: 15.)

We have observed that Jesus preached six fundamental doctrinal principles in his presentation of the gospel. The creed makers strangely enough have passed some of them by. But Paul gathers them all up in a single paragraph, in what we might term the "Pauline Confession of Faith."

Paul was especially chosen to bear the gospel of Jesus to Gentiles, kings, and Israelites. We may not be kings, but one thing is certain, we are either Gentiles or Israelites, as the terms were then used.

Paul has a message for us. Hear him:

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead and of eternal judgment.—Hebrews 6: 1, 2.

Paul is writing to those who have already believed, repented, and been baptized. He exhorts them to go on, not laying again that sure foundation, leaving (a better version says, "not leaving") those truths. In doing so he names the principles of the doctrine (gospel) of Christ.

He names the very six principles that we have found Jesus preaching: Faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, the resurrection, and eternal judgment.

OUR EPITOME OF FAITH

In our "epitome of faith" you will find this statement:

We believe that through the atonement of Christ, all men may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel.

We believe that these ordinances are:

(1). Faith in God and in the Lord Jesus Christ. (2). Repentance. (3). Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins. (4). Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. (5). We believe in the resurrection of the body, that the dead in Christ will rise first, and the rest of the dead will not live again until the thousand years are expired. (6). We believe in the doctrine of eternal judgment, which provides that men shall be judged, rewarded, or punished, according to the degree of good, or evil, they shall have done.

THE ANGEL'S MESSAGE TO THIS AGE

This same gospel that Jesus preached and that Paul summed up in his statement of principles again has been discovered to our attention by angelic administration under God's direction.

We affirm its perfection and divine potency to save all men who accept it.

It is being preached again in all the world, for a witness ere the end comes. It is the angel's message to this age.

THE AUTHORITY OF JESUS

By what authority did Jesus preach this gospel. He said: "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me." (John 7: 16.)

Who sent him? He answers:

The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor.—Luke 4: 18.

The Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say.—John 12: 49.

That was his authority. Under it he operated. Take that in connection with Paul's statement (Hebrews 5: 4-6) that Jesus took not his priesthood upon himself, and the statement of the Master to his apostles, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you" (John 15: 16), and we have an unbreakable chain of argument in favor of the fact that men must be chosen and ordained and receive authority ere they represent God as preachers.

How is such authority to be had to-day? It was lost during the great apostasy of the Dark Ages; but again by direction of God and by angelic administration it has been restored to earth.

THE SPIRIT UNDER WHICH JESUS WORKED

In the prosecution of his mission, as outlined that day in Nazareth, Jesus moved out, actuated by the spirit of love.

Those who met him personally felt love in his serene presence. They saw it in his luminous eyes, in his benign countenance, in his gentle ministrations.

We feel it to-day, too, but mostly we must measure his love by his sacrifice, his humiliation, his suffering:

From glory down to Calvary!

'Tis marvelous! How can it be?

We sense his mental agony in Gethsemane. We see him dragged like a thief from the garden by night and taken before the high priest and his council. They spit in his face and slap him on the cheek.

Having been condemned by the council, he is taken before Pilate to be tried. He does not summon witnesses in self-defense, for he knows the court will not bring in the verdict. The mob will render the verdict.

He hears the brutal howlings of the mob, "Crucify him! Crucify him!" Pilate says, "I find no fault in him"; but the mob overrules him and Jesus is condemned to die.

The church, the mob, and the civil authorities having insulted and maltreated him, he is given up to the soldiers, that the military authorities may have their turn.

They clothe him with a scarlet robe and put a crown of thorns on his head. They mock him, to make a carnival of tomfoolery of the event; thinking to make him appear a clown.

At last he is dragged away to be crucified. Thrown upon the cross, great spikes are driven through his hands and feet, through flesh and between bones. The cross is erected, dropping with a jolt into the hole dug to receive it.

The body of Jesus hangs suspended "on four great throbbing wounds," to endure the awful agony of the most terrible death ever devised by men or devils.

WHY DID HE DO IT?

Why did he do it? He did it for you and for me. By that which he suffered we measure his devotion to and love for us.

By thus identifying himself with us in suffering and humiliation he wins our love and confidence, as he could not have done had he passed softly through this life and been borne away to paradise on flowery beds of ease. By his suffering and his teaching and his example we are reconciled to God,—a God who always loved us and sent his Son to win us back to life and love.

THE EXTENT OF HIS MISSION

Jesus himself did not travel over a very extensive area. But his mission was not circumscribed by the extent of his own travels.

He sent his apostles out with this commission: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

Or as Matthew has it:

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

His mission was to all the world. And it was to continue to the very end, even despite the great apostasy that ensued during the Dark Ages. For we read:

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.—Matthew 24: 14.

TO THE REGIONS OF THE DAMNED

Nor was his mission by any means confined to this world. In Ephesians we are told:

Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth?—Ephesians 4: 9.

Again it is written:

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water.—1 Peter 3: 18-20.

A NOTABLE MEETING

That must have been a notable meeting. There is the region of the lost, the dark abode of the damned, presided over by Satan, formerly Lucifer, the bright "son of the morning," associated with angels and God himself, but for his rebellion cast headlong from heaven and now fallen to this low estate.

His visage is dark with every infamy. His soul is embittered by defeated ambition, with that bitterness that comes to every apostate, the very quintessence of wormwood and gall; a thousand times intensified in the case of one who has fallen from such a height to such a depth.

Into this dark region, into this menacing presence, Jesus, the Son of God, comes striding, clothed with light as with a garment, wearing the invincible panoply of righteousness, holding in his hand "all authority in heaven and on earth," having "the keys of hell and of death," with the gospel of salvation to preach to the damned, fulfilling his mission, to "proclaim liberty to the captive, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound."

THE LAMB OF GOD THAT TAKETH AWAY SIN

Briefly we have examined the work of Jesus as a preacher of the gospel, reviewing his authority, the principles of his gospel, the spirit of his work, its object, and the extent of his mission. These subjects and others will be treated in detail in succeeding chapters.

With all solemnity, by direction of the Holy Spirit, in the language of John, we say, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Listen to his gospel and obey it. And again, this time in the language of Paul, his "chosen vessel," we say unto you:

"Now then, we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."

Note.—The next chapter will be devoted to the important subject, "Faith in God." This is a scientific age. Is faith in accord with science? What place has faith in the gospel plan? These questions will be answered.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Original Articles

THE SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS--PART 2

BY MARCUS COOK

MRS. WHITE

Next we will take up the claims for Mrs. E. G. White as being a true prophet.

First, she was among those deceived by William Miller. I quote from Early Writings:

At the age of eleven years I was converted, and when twelve years old was baptized, and joined the Methodist Church. At the age of thirteen I heard William Miller deliver his second course of lectures in Portland, Maine. I then felt that I was not holy, not ready to see Jesus, and when the invitation was given for church members and sinners to come forward for prayers, I embraced the first opportunity, for I knew that I must have a great work done for me to fit me for heaven. My soul was thirsting for full and free salvation, but knew not how to obtain it.

In 1842, I constantly attended the second advent meetings in Portland, Maine, and fully believed that the Lord was coming.—Page 7.

I thought that those who loved Jesus would love his coming, so went to the class meeting and told them what Jesus had done for me, and what a fullness I enjoyed through believing that the Lord was coming. The class leader interrupted me, saying, "Through Methodism"; but I could not give the glory to Methodism, when it was Christ and the hope of his soon coming that had made me free.

My Father's family were most all full believers in the advent, and for bearing testimony to this glorious doctrine, seven of us were at one time cast out of the Methodist Church.—Ibid., p. 9.

So, according to her own statements, although she says she was converted and joined the Methodist Church, she had not obtained and did not know how to obtain full and free salvation.

Her first satisfying experience came through hearing and accepting the teachings of William Miller, that the Lord would soon come, in fact in 1843 or 1844. Jesus says, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." (John 17: 17.)

William Miller's message was not God's word because it failed, therefore was not what God had spoken. It was not the truth, so Mrs. White's first satisfactory experiences came to her by believing a delusion.

Next, her own visions and prophecies will not stand when subjected to scriptural text. We first notice some statements made by her of a vision she claims to have had in 1847. Early Writings, pages 25, 26.

I saw an angel flying swiftly to me. He quickly carried me from the earth to the Holy City. In the city I saw a temple, which I entered. I passed through a door before I came to the first veil. This veil was raised, and I passed into the holy place. Here I saw the altar of incense, the candlestick with seven lamps, and the table on which was the show bread.

After viewing the glory of the holy, Jesus raised the second veil, and I passed into the holy of holies.

In the holiest I saw an ark. . . . In the ark was the golden pot of manna, Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of stone which folded together like a book.

Rather a forceful description, but John says of the Holy City, "And I saw no temple therein for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it."—Revelation 21: 22.

She claims to have gone to the Holy City, visited the temple, described its furniture, etc. How could she do and see all that when there was no temple in the Holy City?

Evidently when she imagined she was in the Holy City she was mistaken in the place. None of the plain utterances of the Bible tell us of these articles of furnishings in the Holy City or temple, so, as the Bible is the test, we can properly reject this as a false vision.

Her description of the tables of stone does not harmonize with the Bible description as found in Exodus 32: 15, 16:

And Moses turned, and went down from the mount, and the two tables of the testimony were in his hand: the tables were written on both their sides; on the one side and on the other were they written.

She must also have seen the wrong tables.

She makes an absurd application of the instruction and promises that John gave the church at Philadelphia, Revelation 3: 7, 8:

And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write; These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth; I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name.

The above was written to the local church at Philadelphia. The open door spoken of there was in the present tense. "I have set before thee an open door," etc. Now listen to Mrs. White's application of it, Early Writings, page 34, copied from a book published in 1851:

I saw that Jesus had shut the door of the holy place, and no man can it open; and that he had opened the door into the most holy, and no man can shut it (Revelation 3: 7, 8); and that since Jesus has opened the door into the most holy place, which contains the ark, the commandments have been shining out of God's people, and they are being tested on the Sabbath question.

This revelation was not received until after the disappointment of 1843 and 1844, and previous to that time they did not observe the seventh day as Sabbath; so when she claims to have seen Jesus shut the door of the holy place and open the door into the most holy place, it was later than 1844. But in the text she refers to, Jesus says that he had then, in 96 A. D., set before the church an open door. Only a mistake of one thousand, seven hundred and sixty years.

The above so-called testimony, or revelation, was given to explain another blunder they had made in believing and teaching for a time that like as when the high priest in the old temple service went once a year into the most holy place to make an atonement for the sins of the people and cleanse the sanctuary, that when he entered the most holy place no further sacrifice would be made for the sins of the year that was past, the door of further opportunity had closed for that year. So when Jesus entered the holy of holies or sanctuary in heaven, no further chance would be given sinners to repent. Early Writings, page 45, reads:

I saw that the mysterious signs and wonders, and false reformations would increase and spread. The reformation that were shown me, were not reformations from error to truth.—My accompanying angel bade me look for the travail of souls for sinners as used to be. I looked, but could not see it; for the time for their salvation is passed.

A footnote is added seeking to patch up the above, but Mr. D. M. Canright in his book Seventh-day Adventism Renounced gives the above as it was originally published, and you will notice that the part which could not be explained away has been omitted. (Notice where I placed the dash above.)

As originally there should be where the dash is:

But from bad to worse for those who professed a change of heart had only wrapped about them a religious garb which covered up the iniquity of a wicked heart, some appeared to have been really converted so as to deceive God's people, but if their hearts could be seen they would appear as black as ever.—Published in Present Truth, page 22, August, 1849. (Canright, page 140.)

The Adventists have never replied to Canright's work, nor shown that his quotations were incorrect.

Again this doctrine is shown to have been accepted, believed and taught by them by the writings of Mrs. E. G. White. In the Great Controversy, seventh edition, published 1887, under the heading of "An open and shut door," she says, page 268:

After the passing of the time of expectation in 1844 Adventists still believed the Savior's coming to be very near. They held that they had reached an important crisis and that the work of Christ as man's intercessor before God had ceased. Having given warning of the judgment near, they felt that their work for the world was done, and they lost their burden of soul for the salvation of sinners, while the bold and blasphemous scoffing of the ungodly seemed to them another evidence that the Spirit of God had been withdrawn from the rejectors of his mercy. All this confirmed them in the belief that probation had ended or as they then expressed it, the door of mercy was shut.

This shows that whatever they may claim now, for a while they, Mrs. White and all, believed and taught this error. But as to Jesus entering the holy of holies in heaven in 1844, as claimed by Mrs. White, we note that the ark and mercy seat in the holy of holies is spoken of as God's throne, or where he sitteth.

Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock; thou that dwellest between the cherubim, shine forth.—Psalm 80: 1.

The Lord reigneth; let the people tremble: he sitteth between the cherubim; let the earth be moved.—Psalm 99: 1.

Now if we should admit, for argument's sake, that somewhere in heaven there is a literal tabernacle, after which the one made under Moses was patterned, since the Psalmist tells us that God dwelleth and sitteth between the cherubim, and they were placed at each end of the mercy seat over the ark, we would be forced to believe that the mercy seat in heaven was God's throne, and John tells us:

To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.—Revelation 3: 21.

Now of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such a high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man.—Hebrews 8: 1, 2.

But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God.—Hebrews 10: 12.

Thus instead of Jesus Christ going into the sanctuary in heaven in 1844, as Adventists claim he did, according to the above it will be seen that he had been sitting there for over eighteen hundred years. Another mistake.

Again in the 9th chapter of Hebrews Paul speaks of the tabernacle service as an allegory or figure of man's redemption through Christ. The 7th verse speaks of the high priest going into the second (or the holy of holies) once a year. But of Christ it says:

Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.—Hebrews 9: 12.

For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us.—Hebrews 9: 24.

Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh.—Hebrews 10: 19, 20.

That these texts could only be applied to the holiest place, or the holy of holies is apparent; therefore, Mrs. White and her followers have made the following mistakes:

1. What Jesus said to the church in Philadelphia, Revelation 3: 7-9, given eighteen hundred years ago, she is applying to a vision she saw in the nineteenth century, thus adding to the things written in the book of Revelation, see Revelation 22: 19-29.

2. That in 1844 Christ began the work in the most holy place in heaven that the Bible teaches was completed in Paul's day.

Now I have answered this upon the supposition that in heaven there is a literal tabernacle or temple and sanctuary, with its holy place and holy of holies after which the tabernacle set up in the time of Moses was patterned, which can not be proven to be true.

The words temple and tabernacle are sometimes applied to the human body:

Jesus answered and said unto them, Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up. . . . But he spake of the temple of his body.—John 2: 19-21.

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God?—1 Corinthians 3: 16.

For we know that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. . . . For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened.—2 Corinthians 5: 1-4.

The word temple sometimes applies to the people of the church:

In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded together.—Ephesians 2: 21, 22.

God and Christ are spoken of as a temple:

And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.—Revelation 21: 22.

From the above it will be seen that to rest an argument upon the figurative language used to prove that there is a literal temple in heaven of material substance, furnished so that every article had in the tabernacle service under the law was fashioned after that in heaven, and that every detail of Israelite temple service has been going on in heaven for the last eighteen hundred years, may interest persons with over-developed imaginations and who love mystery; but for those who are looking for solid demonstrable truth, it is too vague.

I will next notice one of Mrs. White's prophecies that is so clearly false as to facts as to be utterly indefensible. Early Writings, page 54, given June 27, 1850:

Said the angel, Get ready, get ready, get ready. Ye will have to die a greater death to the world than ye have ever yet died. I saw that there was a great work to do for them, and but little time in which to do it.

"Deny self; ye must step fast." Some of us have had time to get the truth, and to advance step by step, and every step we have taken has given us strength to take the next. But now time is almost finished, and what we have been years learning, they will have to learn in a few months.—Ibid., p. 57.

The above was given in 1850 according to her own writings, six years after the beginning of the Seventh-day Advent movement, or 1844, when they claim that Jesus entered the holy of holies in heaven, and here she claims to have it revealed to her that what they had been years (six years) in learning, others must learn in a few months. Nearly sixty-five years, or over ten times as many years as had then passed, and still they have not even learned that she was deceived. Her few months have multiplied into seven hundred and seventy-five months.

She also says, ibid., page 49:

Some are looking too far off for the coming of the Lord. Time has continued a few years longer than they expected, therefore they think it may continue a few years more, and in this way their minds are being led from the present truth, out after the world. In these things I saw great danger; for if the mind is filled with other things, present truth is shut out, and there is no place in our foreheads for the seal of the living God. I saw that the time for Jesus to be in the most holy place was nearly finished, and that time can last but a very little longer. What leisure time we have should be spent in searching the Bible, which is to judge us in the last day. . . . The sealing time is very short, and will soon be over. Now is the time, while the four angels are holding the four winds, to make our calling and election sure.

While in the above quotations she sets no day nor hour, it is stated that the time was nearer than they believed, and they have been looking for the end ever since and it has not come, and in the light of subsequent events her teachings and prophecies are proven false.

We next notice her vision of the judgment, and of the wicked, and salvation of the righteous, Early Writings, page 34:

In the time of trouble, we all fled from the cities and villages, but were pursued by the wicked, who entered the houses of the Saints with a sword. They raised a sword to kill us, but it broke, and fell as powerless as a straw. . . . And as God spake the day and hour of Jesus' coming, and delivered the everlasting covenant to his people, he spoke one sentence, and then paused, while the words were rolling through the earth. The Israel of God stood with their eyes fixed upward, listening to the words as they came from the mouth of Jehovah, and rolled through the earth like peals of loudest thunder. It was awfully solemn. And at the end of every sentence, the Saints shouted, Glory! Alleluia! Their countenances were lighted up with the glory of God; and they shone with the glory, as did the face of Moses when he came down from Sinai. The wicked could not look on them for the glory. And when the never-ending blessing was pronounced on those who had honored God, in keeping his Sabbath holy, there was a mighty shout of victory over the beast and over his image.

With reference to this graphic account of the expected triumph of the Adventists we might ask, How could the wicked enter the houses of the saints and try to kill them with swords after they had fled from the cities and villages?

Paul says:

But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away; how shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious?—2 Corinthians 3: 7, 8.

It is bad enough to try to impose the decalogue, the constitution of the Israelite national law, upon us as God's unchangeable moral law, and try to bring all the teachings of Christ and the gospel under it; but when it is claimed that the glory that will shine from the faces of the redeemed is like the glory that shone upon the face of Moses when he came down from Sinai, which Paul says was to be done away, and then we are told that the Bible is the only guide, it looks as though a darkened mind had blundered into one of those strong delusions of 2 Thessalonians 2: 11, 12.

We might refer to many equally egregious blunders and false prophecies, but believe these sufficient to overthrow Mrs. White's claim to being a prophet of God.

And so their church has no quorum of scripturally constituted apostles; no prophets of God; no seventies; no high priests; no elders called as Aaron was called. It can not be the church of the living God, not the pillar and ground of the truth. Unregenerated man can not receive the things of the Spirit of God, because they are foolish to him. Therefore, these can not have the mind of Christ, so whatever inspiration comes to them must be from some other source.

(To be continued.)

* * * * *

WHERE DO WE STAND?--NUMBER 5

BY J. AUGUST KOEHLER

ON AN EDUCATED MINISTRY

Seek learning even by study, and also by faith.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.

I once heard a member of a certain quorum preach a sermon in which he said he had taught school in his early days. Some of the language he used was about like this: "There ain't no use saying nothing further about this matter." This is not verbatim, for it was years ago that I heard it. But we can excuse some grammatical errors, for few men are careful to act in strict conformity with the rules of grammar; in fact men who are so very precise sometimes give one a "pain" to listen to them. It was not the language so much as some of the thought. He thought that the Lord fixed things for him at school so he could copy the answers from the other boy's examination papers and in that way enable him to get a grade that he had not earned. He was hurrying our brother through school, I suppose, so he could become a preacher. That was a wonderful conception of God, and might have been used to emphasize the necessity of being "honest" in order to please him.

This might have been a case of sending a "boy" out to preach who ought to have been kept in school a little longer. Let us hope that there is no longer a necessity for sending schoolboys out as ministers.

Education has been held by some to be so secondary that if a minister tried to draw on the church for forty dollars for educational purposes he would likely get a "turn down," but a request for forty dollars for car fare—well, that's different, one must really travel around a great deal to serve the church well.

Let us see what the revelations say about such matters.

"I have commanded (the school of the prophets) to be organized, that thereby they might be perfected in their ministry for the salvation of Zion." (Doctrine and Covenants 87: 3.) Here is set forth first a means,—the school, and second an end,—the salvation of Zion. There are other factors entering into the means, of course, still the school is a part, and evidently an important part. Now it seems to me that that which is made possible,—the salvation of Zion,—must be postponed to that which makes it possible,—the school,—or it might be better to say the training of the ministry and the membership for the work to be done. Have we done that? Or have we sought "the flower without the plant"?

Note that this school work was made obligatory:

I gave unto you a commandment, . . . set in order the churches, and study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books, and languages, tongues, and people.—Ibid. 87: 8.

The more we study the sciences the better we understand the purposes of God, and the better fitted are we to accomplish his work. The increased meaning that attaches to the revelations as we acquire learning in other fields is but a suggestion (I think) of the wonderful vision we may behold when we have climbed to intellectual heights that will unfold to us the full significance of what God has said in his word.

A blind faith is not the faith that fits one for the service of God, and is not a faith that is born of reason and experience. That faith which sidetracks reason and experience is not a godly faith, but a mere superstition. A word of advice was given to Oliver Cowdery on this point.

You have not understood; you have supposed that I would give it unto you, when you took no thought, save it was to ask; but, behold, I say unto you, that you must study it out in your mind; then you must ask me if it be right.—Ibid. 9: 3.

An understanding of God is essential to success in this work, as the following may help us to see:

I give unto you a commandment, that you shall teach one another the doctrine of the kingdom; teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in theory, in principle, in doctrine, in the gospel, in all things that pertain unto the kingdom of God, that is expedient for you to understand.—Ibid. 85: 1.

Therefore, tarry ye, and labor diligently, that ye may be perfected in your ministry.—Ibid. 85: 23.

The idea that an ignoramus can serve his fellow man and God as well as a cultured man is diametrically opposed to the idea that "the glory of God is intelligence." God is as big and as great to me as I perceive his works to be, no greater; and though I may have a feeling of devotion of unlimited intensity, if I do not apprehend God, I can do little toward establishing his righteousness in the hearts and lives of men.

Service to God is not alone heart service, but "ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength" (Doctrine and Covenants 4:1). The mind must enter in as well as the heart, otherwise how much better off might we be than ancient Israel?

Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. For I bear them record that they have a zeal toward God, but not according to knowledge. For they, being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God.—Romans 10:1.

The importance of being equipped for the work to be done is further emphasized in Doctrine and Covenants 10:8.

You need not suppose that you are called to preach until you are called: wait a little longer until you shall have my word, my rock, my church, and my gospel, that you may know of a surety my doctrine.

Seek not to declare my word, but seek first to obtain my word, . . . then, . . . you shall have my Spirit, . . . unto the convincing of men; but now hold your peace; study my word.—Ibid., 10:8.

Now I submit what should be known by all students of our church history, that is, that the ministry of the early church went out qualified by training, by school work, to convince men that the message of the church was divine. When you read the writings of those early champions of the latter-day work you must see that they were masters in the art of preaching; they understood the philosophy of the work; and they were a match for any man who cared to challenge the divinity of the message. No wonder, then, that in fourteen years the membership increased from six to one hundred and fifty thousand and upward. That was the natural fruits of skillful ministrations.

From the Church History we get more light on where the early church stood on the question of an educated ministry (vol. 1, p. 524):

It now being the last of the month, and the elders beginning to come in, it was necessary to make preparation for the school of the elders, wherein they might be more perfectly instructed in the great things of God, during the coming winter."

Again (vol. 1, p. 563), the standing of the elders was inquired into, the manner of their teaching, doctrines, etc.: "The faithfulness of all the traveling elders was found to be good."

Again (vol. 2, p. 98):

The Twelve, the High Council, and other quorums, generally, meet each week to transact business, and during the week the "Kirtland high school" is taught in the attic story, by H. M. Hawes, Esq., professor of the Greek and Latin languages.

The school numbers from one hundred and thirty-five to one hundred and forty students, divided into three departments; the classics, where the languages only are taught; the English department, where mathematics, common arithmetic, geography, . . . are taught. . . . The school commenced in November, and on the first Wednesday in January the several classes passed a public examination . . . and their progress in study was found of the highest order.

Events of the last two years indicate a return to the former practice of fitting the ministry for its duties by special educational work. The effort may meet with some opposition, but it is sure to succeed. We are going to have a ministry that can interpret the latter-day message in terms of present-day experience. The "eleven-sermon" idea is on its deathbed. We shall be glad to attend the funeral.

If there are any who would glory in their ignorance and prate their aversion to the idea of a trained ministry because (as they suppose) Joseph Smith was an ignorant and unlettered lad, we would call their attention to the fact that if he ever was as ignorant as they suppose he was he did not long remain in that state of ignorance, neither did he die an uncultured man; but he became a polished shaft in the hands of God, by which many superstitions of his day were wounded unto death.

Hear Joseph Smith on the question of education: Church History, volume 1, page 605:

I therefore availed myself of this favorable opportunity to drop a few words upon this subject, (conduct in public debates,) by way of advice, that they might improve their minds and cultivate their powers of intellect in a proper manner.

Was delighted with it (the debating school), and formed a determination to attend the school, for the purpose of obtaining information, and with the idea of imparting the same, . . . I was pleased with the power of the arguments that were used . . . and felt it was the duty of old men . . . to be grave, at least, as young men, and that is was our duty to smile (not) at solid arguments and sound reasonings.—Ibid., p. 620.

Monday, 21. Spent this day at home, endeavoring to treasure up knowledge for the benefit of my calling. . . . Tuesday, 22. At home. Continued my studies. Oh may God give me learning, even language; and endue me with qualifications to magnify his name while I live. . . . Wednesday, 23. In the forenoon, at home, studying the Greek language.—Ibid., p. 625.

Is that enough? The advice given in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and the conduct of those men to whom the revelations were directly given, and the fruits of labors performed in harmony with that advice, is proof enough that God stands for an educated ministry. The church stands there too, though some within the church have exhibited their folly in opposing the idea, and hindered progress in this direction.

No, our ministry is not a "bunch of grammar-school boys." Those who stand for work on that grade are fast disappearing from the ministerial ranks; and I feel confident that very few men who are mentally too indolent to qualify for the kind of service the church demands, will, in the future, even get a look into the ministerial ranks. Let us hope so, at any rate.

J. AUGUST KOEHLER.

(Concluded.)

* * * * *

SOCIAL PURITY WORK

Not in the clamor of the crowded street,
Not in the shouts and plaudits of the throng,
But in ourselves, are triumph and defeat.

The word social might be changed to personal, were we not dealing with society. In the big sense, man can not live his life to himself; two persons are needed to demonstrate Christianity, for the word is a synonym for service, altruism, helping another. No more can social purity be demonstrated by one alone, for social purity concerns the purity of the society—the church, that part composed of men and women and children. We are fast removing from that delusive swamp where voices whisper that we can get along without one another. It seems that everything worth while is of a cooperative nature. This is true in the vegetable and lower animal world; how much more true in the higher animal world.

“But in ourselves, are triumph and defeat.” Is this wholly true? It might be so were we perfect men and women; or if we were imperfect men and women and would allow the holy power of God to supply all needed strength. But because of human weakness the hands often slip on the rope of life; the weight of sin drags us down even till our heads are under the waters that foam and hiss; and not until we are nearly drowned do we come to our senses and make another effort to keep above and away from the rapids.

Here then, is made potent the office of a friend; perhaps that friend may be our husband or our wife. It matters not who he may be so long as he can help us to live the pure life. The lesson has been learned that purity of living in the domestic circle is made effectual in a complete sense by all parties concerned striving to help one another along the white road. And purity of life does not mean that only fanatical people can live it, or that an attempt is made successful only by men who have no charity or sympathy for his weaker brother man. No, it is not a question of “I am holier than thou”; it is simply an effort to live a life of temperance, a life of moderation, a life of holiness, “without which no man shall see God.” (Hebrews 12: 14.) And as has been written before, cooperation is demanded and needed as much in this line of Christian warfare as in any other.

A friendly heart in the thorn-crowned way,
A tender word and smile of cheer;
It takes so much from the fret of the day
To know that a friendly heart is near.

Over wide spaces amid one's task

It comes sometimes with a beating sweet,
There's a friendly heart 'neath whose glow to bask,
There's a friend somewhere in a little street.
O, gruff, grave world with your gong and steam,
Your thunder of trade and grind of mill;
Thank God for the good of a bright sunbeam
And the thought that a friendly heart beats still.

Doctor Hall, of Clark University, in his Aspects of Child Life, tells us that children commonly begin to ask questions about the origin of life between the ages of three and eight, but that, after that age, the barrier has been raised between them and their parents or teacher. An observing father or mother knows this to be true, and the question must be answered and the matter settled: Shall my children learn of these things from the lips of love, or from the lips of folly and of vice? Shall my children receive a false view or a true view of these matters? Learn of them they will—there is no doubt about that.

If a parent is not able to buy the purity books which the Social Purity Board is offering through the columns of the HERALD, it will be possible to lend you a few of these books, provided the demand is not too great. Remember that the truth poorly told is better than varnished falsehood. It is necessary to study each child and handle his questions according to his ability to understand and appreciate the answers. Remember, also, that once telling the story of life is not sufficient: the growing needs of the boys and girls must be constantly supplied. As they grow in years they demand more details of everything. There is quite a sermon preached in Edgar A. Guest's late poem in the Detroit Free Press:

Whom is your boy going to for advice?

Tough Johnny Jones at the end of the street?
Rough Billy Green or untaught Jimmy Price?

Who is now guiding his innocent feet?
Who takes him walking and swimming to-day?
You, or the stranger just over the way?

Whom is your boy leaning on for a friend?

Whom does he tell all his wee troubles to?
Say, now, with whom does your little one spend
Most of his time: with a stranger or you?
Whose hand is leading him where he should go?
Answer, now, busy man: tell if you know.

Who is the pal that he opens his heart to?

You, or some stranger you never have seen?
Whom does your boy all his secrets impart to?
Maybe to some one whose mind is unclean.
If it isn't to you that he comes, he's in danger.
What do you know of the worth of the stranger?

Oh, be a boy with the boy that is yours;

Play with him, stay with him, show him the way,
Walk with him, talk with him, take him outdoors;
Be his best friend, as you ought to, to-day.
Take him down town so the youngster may see
The right sort of man that you want him to be.

Don't be too busy to hear what he's telling.
 Don't send him off when he comes to your knee;
 This sort of father disaster is spelling—
 He's hungry for you, and his pal you should be.
 Spend all the time that you can with the lad.
 He'll be a good boy if you'll be a good dad.

R. W. FARRELL.

Of General Interest

PATRIOTISM AND CHRISTIANITY

The pseudo-patriotism that takes the form of a noisy and extravagant claim of devotion to the flag, was sharply assailed by the Reverend B. M. Fellman, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church in his sermon Sunday. His subject was "The conflict between Christianity and patriotism." The pastor said:

A FALSE PATRIOTISM

There is a pseudo-patriotism rampant in every land. It consists in national pride and idolatry, in the setting at naught of other nations, in the exaggeration of national greatness, in the perversion of the facts of history, in the incorporation of such ideas in a national way as are clearly unethical in an individual application, in the boast of world dominion and martial impregnability of one's own land, in a noisy and extravagant claim of devotion to the flag, and in a haughty and overbearing nationalism, which scorns the claims of humanity and brotherhood outside of the territorial limits of one's own land.

CHRISTIANITY CONFLICTS WITH IT

With this most frequent type of patriotism Christianity finds itself in essential conflict. The founder of Christianity declared the latter half of the greatest commandment to be, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The marvelous strides in transportation, navigation, communication and aviation have made the entire world one great neighborhood. As a moral fact it has ever been true that every man is neighbor to every other man. To-day it is not only a moral fact, but a physical fact as well.

Christianity assails the so-called patriotism because it perverts the facts of history. Patriotism gloats over a victorious war. Truth declares most of these wars were unnecessary. . . .

CHRISTIANITY NEVER FAILS

Christianity is a greater word than patriotism. Christianity as taught by the Christ bears no sword. Christendom has failed in Europe, as it has failed before—more sorely this time. Christendom has failed but Christianity has never failed. Christianity lives and suffers, but never fails. The principles of Jesus are the only way to safety for men and nations. Let Christianity arbitrate in the home and state and nation, and then truth and justice will abound in a world where Christendom, denying the spirit of Christianity, has signally failed.

Christ is a greater word than patriotism. In national affairs he is also the way, the truth, the life. His principles rule in many individuals. They find some measure of acceptance in church and state. Every man's first duty as a patriot is to put the kingly crown upon the head of Jesus Christ as the Lord of his life.

WHEN WILL WAR CEASE

When will war and violence relinquish their hold upon the earth? I confess I am not among the number who expect to see the emancipation of the race from sin and sorrow by any system of ethics. While we plead for peace and seek to secure in state and nation the largest measure of favor for the principles of Jesus, we are persuaded that war and violence and inequality will not relinquish their iron hold upon the race until he comes again, whom God has appointed to rule upon the earth. Happy day, when he comes to rule the earth with a rod of iron; when from David's throne his voice shakes the earth and declares,

"Be still, and know that I am God:
 I will be exalted on the earth,
 I will be exalted among the nations!"

From the hundred miles of trenches where his saints battle with cold and heat and filth, as they fight the unwilling war of brother against brother; from the millions of homes desolated by this cruel war, where women scarce contain their bursting hearts, and little children weep in the stillness of the night; from the firesides where they gather as night falls and pray that God may keep them from the night raids of the prince of the power of the air—from that great circle of afflicted saints there goes up the prayer that the King may come. Does He not hear? Yea, verily. "A little while and He that cometh will come, and will not tarry." Even so, come, Lord Jesus!—Register and Leader (Des Moines), August 2, 1915.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS, LAMONI, IOWA

ADVISORY BOARD OF WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Mrs. S. R. Burgess, president, 5920 Etzel Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri; Mrs. B. C. Smith, vice president, 214 South Spring Street, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Carrie Maitland, secretary, 1326 Sampson Street, Des Moines, Iowa; Mrs. J. A. Gardner, treasurer, 707 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. A. L. Yingling, West Waldo Street, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Anna DeJong Smith, 2903 Sullivan Street, Saint Louis, Missouri.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF DEPARTMENTS

Home and Child Welfare Department, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, 724 South Crysler Street, Independence, Missouri; Literary and Educational Department, Mrs. Lydia Thomas Wight, Lamoni, Iowa; Eugenics Department, Mrs. Jennie Studley, 17 East Cottage Street, Roxbury, Massachusetts; Domestic Science Department, Vera Goff, Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri; Sewing and Aid Department, Mrs. Edith Cochran, 1107 Powell Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri; Young Woman's Department, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 707 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Home and Child Welfare Department

SEPTEMBER READING.—THE PHYSIOLOGICAL VALUE OF LOVE

"The greatest problem in life is learning how to live, not in the material sense only, but in the widest sense; how to use every faculty to obtain the greatest happiness for ourselves and others."

That happiness is the true object of life is shown in the divine declaration, "Man is that he might have joy." Joy in the present as in the ultimate will result from keeping the law of love. From science we now learn that under the influence of love and its related emotions human faculties are given the best opportunity for development, and that only under such influences can the best work be accomplished. In this we have another evidence of the harmony between science and religion, and another strong incentive to make the gospel law of love our rule of life. Under this rule only can the home be made what it was designed to be, "a place for cheer, for warmth, for comfort, for forbearance, a place for peace, for repose, a place where every soul may extend toward a nobler, fuller life,—a place of joy, of inspiration, of growth in all that is highest and best"; a center, also, "from which good may radiate to the world."

NOT BY BREAD ALONE

"There is a factor that we must take into consideration and that we may call the psychic stimulus of life: we may scientifically affirm the Bible statement that 'man does not live by bread alone'. . . . We may assert that sensations of pleasure stimulate the renewal of bodily tissues and consequently promote health, happiness and strength; while on the contrary painful events produce physiological effects depressing to the tone of the nervous system and to the metabolic activity of the tissues [exchange of matter in the cells]. . . . When we have given food to our children . . . we have not yet completed our task of nourishing these children; for the phenomena of nutrition which take place in the hidden recesses of their tissues are very different from a simple intestinal transformation of aliments, and are influenced by the psychic conditions of the individual child.

"Great workers not only need abundant nutriment, but they require at the same time a series of stimuli 'designed to produce pleasure.' The pleasures of life, necessary to human existence, include more than bread.

"Without stimuli, nutrition would grow less and less till it ended in death. Everyday experience in the punishment of criminals gives us proof of this. 'Confinement to a solitary cell is nothing else than a complete deprivation of psychic stimuli. The prisoner does not lack bread, nor air, nor shelter from the elements, nor sleep; his whole physiological life is provided for, in the strict material sense of the word. But the bare walls, the silence, the isolation from his fellow men in utter solitude, deprive the prisoner of every stimulus, visual and oral and moral.

"The consequences are not merely a state of hopelessness, but a real and actual malnutrition leading to tuberculosis, to anemia, to death from atrophy. We may affirm that such a prisoner dies slowly of hunger due to defective assimilation. . . . Solitary confinement, being incompatible with life, is only of short duration.

"Labor, love, and sensations apt to stimulate ideas, that is, to nourish the intelligence, are necessities of human life.

"These principles must be taken under deep consideration when it comes to a question of directing the physiological growth of children. Fenelon relates a fable about a female bear who, having brought into the world an exceedingly ugly son, took the advice of a crow and licked and smoothed her cub so constantly that he finally became attractive and good looking. This fable embodies the idea that maternal love may modify the body of the child, aiding its evolution toward a harmony of form by means of the first psychic stimuli of caresses and counsel.

"Nature has implanted in the mother not only her milk, the material nourishment of her child, but also that absolutely altruistic love which transforms the soul of a woman, and creates in it moral forces hitherto unknown and unsuspected by the woman herself—just as the sweet and nourishing corpuscles of the milk were unknown to the red corpuscles of her blood. Accordingly, the nature of the human kind protects the species through the mother in two ways, which together form the complete nutrition of man; aliment and love. After a child is weaned, it obtains its aliment from its environment in more varied forms; and it also obtains from its environment a great variety of psychic stimuli, calculated not only to mold its psychic personality, but also to bring its physiological personality to its full development."—Pedagogical Anthropology, by Maria Montessori, M. D.

EFFECT OF UNHAPPY EMOTIONS

"We must learn sooner or later that there is nothing so ruinous to body and mind as giving full play to unchecked emotions, as fear, worry, jealousy, anger, hatred, anxiety, and nervous excitement. Emotional excitement, continued for any length of time, produces a temporary congestion or dilation of the small arterioles of the brain; when the excitement subsides they contract, but rest is required for the recuperation of the wasted nerve force. . . . Apoplexy may result from continued dilation of these blood vessels. . . .

"Those of us who have closely followed the effects of anger can not but note the definite physical conditions that follow the neutral act; the heart and brain are first affected, then all the functions in their train. The blood is withdrawn to the internal organs, producing congestion; a change is affected in the perspiration and destructive changes take place in the blood corpuscles. Anger also interferes with correct respiration. . . .

"Hope and courage increase the action of the heart, while fear slows and depresses it. The play of the emotions mentioned above has more to do with exhausting the system than hard work, either mental or physical. These emotional states act on the nerve centers as a series of shocks, provoking intense discharge of nervous force, partially paralyzing nerve action for the time being. Solomon says, 'Hope deferred maketh the heart sick, but a merry heart doeth good like a medicine.' We must realize that to control our passions and emotions means to strengthen both mind and body."—Good Health and Long Life, by William D. H. Brown, M. D.

"The human system can be just as surely and seriously poisoned by emotions as by physical causes. Fatigue from muscular exertion is due to the presence of poisonous matter left after disintegration of bodily tissue burned up by the exertion. In exactly similar fashion frenzy, jealousy, surrender to fits of temper which drive the blood from the face, the uncontrolled anger which leaves one trembling and weak, exert a bad influence upon the brain arteries. . . . These wrong emotional states create undue pressure in the brain arteries and promote excessive flow of poisonous secretions which affect the brain tissues, and which may even cause illness, death or murderous mania."—William Lee Howard, M. D., in The Mother's Magazine.

"Strong emotions, suddenly induced, are likely to produce injury and should as far as possible be avoided. The child's life should be one of fairly even tenor, at least until character and personality have had time to set."—Terman.

CHILDHOOD SORROWS

"To many people the sorrows of childhood are but foolish tears, their deepest griefs, humiliations, and disappointments seem but transitory affairs. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Children's emotions are more compelling than our own; their sorrows are the most real there are. The child lives in the present and his griefs, unlike those of men and women, are little mitigated by the memory of former joys or by the hope of others yet to come. . . .

"The overwrought, nervous child is ill-nourished. . . . Worry and unhappiness cause malnutrition. . . . Rollicking fun and happiness are essential alike for correct physical and for healthy mental growth."—Terman.

CHEERFULNESS AT MEALTIME

"If there is one time when truce to all strife and contention should be insisted upon, it is at mealtime. . . . Ample time should be allowed and all hurry should be avoided. . . . The dinner hour should be the merriest, happiest time of the day. Children especially should be unembarrassed and free to enjoy themselves. . . . In this way they will not only learn to love their home, but will be able to observe the chief requisite for digestion and eat slowly."—Hopkins.

"Fear, worry, and distress of thought are likely to retard digestion; serenity of mind, orderly attention and association favor it. . . 'Better,' from the point of view of hygiene as well as of morals, 'is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith.'

"However hard one's lot and however many one's woes, for the short space of mealtime one should be cheerful, and disagreeable things should be put aside. Punishment of children, rebukes and even criticisms and everything unpleasant should be postponed if possible; and children should be trained to feel that disagreeable and unkind words or acts at mealtime are especially grievous faults. In short, for the sake of digestion, if for no other reason, the brief hour of the meal should be sacred to good fellowship, social enjoyment, and domestic felicity."—From The Delineator, in Parents' Problems.

LOVE AWAKENS POWERS

"Love is the awakener of all the powers. In the begetting of a child where pure, conjugal love is strong and ardent it marshals all the other forces into action; so that a child of love, other things being equal, is always superior to one begotten where the affections are passive."

The training school at Vineland, New Jersey, for mentally defective children has been wonderfully successful. "The motto of this school, printed large in all its literature, is, 'We believe in happiness first, all else follows,' and here 'happiness' is no mere sentimental abstraction, but an intensely practical working force. . . .

"They are not a bit afraid at Vineland of spoiling children with too much fun. Fun, they say, is a primary condition to effective educational work. What they do fear is unhappiness, depression, boredom. So much do they fear these things, indeed, that to fight them they have organized a secret society—the strangest secret society in the world. It has no officers, holds no meetings, and recognizes only two by-laws. They are these: one member seeing another looking cross or sad must say instantly, 'Do you belong?' and the other member must answer with a smile. . . .

"The children—some four hundred in number—are housed in large family groups, classified according to mental grade. In ten attractive little cottages furnished in as homelike and 'uninstitutional' a manner as the most exacting could ask. Each of these is presided over by a 'house mother' selected not only for her experience, but for her love and sympathetic understanding of the particular class of children with which she has to deal, so that in the home life as well as in the strictly educational activities the children are subjected to only those influences that the Vineland people recognize as most favorable to the development of mind and soul. . . .

"They have abolished the penalty and set up the incentive. . . . Innumerable scientific experiments upon the children have demonstrated beyond all question that more force can be exerted by a person in a happy frame of mind, or under the influence of encouragement or pleasureable excitement than by the same person in a mood of sadness or discouragement."—From The American Review of Reviews.

"Gentleness, praise, caresses, are necessities in the development of the weak. . . . Even in the case of those who are adult and strong, we know that it is necessary to encourage those who have fallen, to comfort those who are discouraged. And if this method serves for the strong, how much more necessary it is for lives in the course of evolution."—Doctor Montessori.

"Parental over-solicitude and excessive affection tend to make the child dependent and to develop a mania for sympathy. . . . The love bonds of infancy should normally dissolve as the child reaches maturity and be replaced by a tie of somewhat different nature. How to free the child from the circle of parental influence, without endangering the mellow filial attachment which should succeed it, is one of the important problems of child-training.—Termaun.

Though wisdom should accompany love, "We can not give children too much heart sunshine, too much love. They thrive on this. It is their normal food, and the home is the place above all others where they should get an abundance of it."

This reading will be followed by a study of the hygienic effect of joy in work.

CALLIE B. STEBBINS.

The Children's Home

Mother

All women are mothers by nature, and she whose life is barren of its joys is indeed unfortunate. She is not only deprived of a large part of the sweetness of existence, but she fails to perform her mission in life, and neglects to use the material which God and nature have provided for her, in erecting to herself an everlasting monument to perpetuate her memory when her presence in the activities of life has been withdrawn. Every true mother, and in fact nearly every mother, lives to be revered and adored in the hearts of those who have called her by that sacred name, even after she has closed her eyes in that sleep from which there is no awakening to mortality.

No man ever rises so high on the ladder of fame and honor; and but few ever sink so low in disgrace and shame, as to forget that his mother is the ideal woman, whose loving hand and tender voice would have placed him in the path of safety and success, had her counsel been heeded. With the criminal the last thought of regret is that he heeded not the guiding hand of that mother; while the honored and renowned is ever breathing a prayer of thankfulness to God for the mother to whom he is largely indebted for his virtue and honor.

This is a monument which every mother may erect, of unperishable material, to her own memory, more beautiful, more enduring, and more expressive than could be erected of marble or granite, and at the same time furnish her children with material with which to erect themselves monuments that will find their counterparts in each succeeding generation, until the waves of peace that are set in motion by each humble mother will break upon the shores of eternity in sweet accord with the influence of divinity. Surely such possibilities and such gifts are not to be despised.

Not to every mother is given the blessed privilege of giving birth to her children, but it is written, "Sing, O barren thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child; for more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife, saith the Lord." It does not read: Sing that thou didst not bear as some have quoted it, but sing thou that didst not bear. Notwithstanding this privilege is denied, you may sing, for you are still a mother, and no accident or misfortune can deprive you of that blessed privilege. Do not despise your powers and gifts, but improve the many opportunities offered you to exercise your motherly yearnings, your motherly care and devotion upon children who need your love and affection. In the same sense that the Master was said to be, "The Everlasting Father" you may be a mother, and you will be responsible for the exercise of that motherhood. None are to be censured but those who suppress the natural feeling of motherhood through lust or selfishness.

In connection with these thoughts we recommend the reading and thoughtful consideration of the prayer appearing in this issue of this department.

A Prayer

FOR ALL MOTHERS

O God, we offer thee praise and benediction for the sweet ministries of motherhood in human life. We bless thee for our own dear mothers who built up our life by theirs; who bore us in travail and loved us the more for the pain we gave; who nourished us at their breast and hushed us to sleep in the warm security of their arms. We thank thee for their tireless love, for their voiceless prayers, for the agony with which they followed us through our sins and won us back, for the Christly power of sacrifice and redemption in mother love. We pray thee to forgive us if in thoughtless selfishness we have taken their love as our due without giving the tenderness which they craved as their soul reward, and if the great treasure of a mother's life is still spared to us, may we do for her feebleness what she did for ours.

We remember before thee all the good women who are now bearing the pain and weariness of maternity. Be with them in their travail, and grant them strength of body and mind for their new tasks. Widen their vision that they may see themselves not as the mothers of one child alone, but as the patriot women of their nation, who alone can build up the better future with fresh and purer life. Put upon the girls of our people the awe of their future calling that they may preserve their bodies and minds in purity and strength for the holy task to which the future may summon them.

Bestow thy special grace, we beseech thee, on all women who have the yearnings of motherhood, but whose lives are barren of its joys. If any form of human sin has robbed them of the prize of life, grant them righteous anger and valiant hearts to fight this sin on behalf of those who come after them. Help them to overcome the bitterness of disappointment, and to find an outlet for their frustrated mother love in the wider ministrations to all the lonely and unmothered hearts in thy great family on earth.—Walter Rauchenbusch.

The Debt

Slowly but surely we are approaching the desirable condition of owing no man anything so far as the Children's Home is concerned.

The debt is now reduced to $1,842 plus the interest accumulated this year. Several persons and societies have written us that they are making especial effort to meet this emergency, and we are thus encouraged to believe that the debt will be wiped out, so that every dollar contributed will be used for the support of the home and not be used for interest. It seems to us a thing unwise that an interest-bearing debt should eat up the children's substance, but we must meet our obligations. The Saints and friends will not suffer this condition to exist very long.

The Home Orphans

He sighed for the sorrow far over the sea,
And publicly gave to relieve it:
Had anyone told him that such things could be
He'd have answered he didn't believe it.
He dwelt on the sadness and grief of it all,
And wept for the dead and the dying;
But he never so much as discovered the small,
Wistful, raggedy girl, window spying.

He thought of the children of Belgium and France,
But the tots of his tenement neighbor
He hurried right by, without even a glance,
For they were not poor by the saber.

His heart had been touched by the cry of the waif
Of a war-stricken land, as he told it.
But from poverty's picture at home he was safe,
With never a thought he'd behold it.

He opened his purse to the distant appeal
That is born of war's grimness and glory;
The wail of a trench-victim's orphan seemed real,
But he heard not the home baby's story,
The eyes that so wistfully gazed at the shop
Where the toys are, his heart didn't soften,
For he hurried right on, without thinking to stop,
Because he had seen them so often.

I am glad that the children of Belgium and France
Have roused in him feelings of pity;
But I wish he'd respond to the sorrowful glance
Of the poor little tots of his city.
I wish he could see the distress that is near,
The need unto which he's a neighbor,
And open his heart to the poverty here,
Though it isn't the work of the saber.

—Edgar A. Guest, in Detroit Free Press.

Letter Department

Of Passing Moment

NUMBER 3

In my last account we were en route for Zion (Independence, Missouri). Many points of interest were pointed out as we passed along the route, but the first stop was made at Washington. We had only about fifteen minutes to stay, so we could not take in any of the sights. Brother Greene took me outside the station, where I saw the capitol building where the Congress of the United States meets, just as our statesmen meet in the houses of Parliament in the city of London. Our time was very short, but from what I could see of Washington it seemed a most beautiful place, clean and very stately. We boarded our train and were soon moving along again. The country was very pretty just about this part, but as the year was young, and the spring very backward, I did not see the country to advantage, though much of the land was in good order. The people seemed to be busy almost everywhere, though according to all accounts trade was not good at that particular time.

We passed through West Virginia, into Ohio, about one hundred and fifty miles south of Columbus. We arrived at Cincinnati and had about forty-five minutes in which to get breakfast. This was on Tuesday morning. We went to a cafe and obtained a good breakfast, when we had to go off again to our train, and on our way once more. It seemed a never-ending journey to me, but there were lots of interesting sights to be seen, one of the most interesting of which was the oil fields. It was really wonderful to see the pumps working automatically over such a great field, which appeared to be many miles in extent, emptying the bowels of the earth of this valuable product. It is no wonder that men become millionaires as there seems to be very little outlay after the plant is secured.

Well, at six o'clock we arrived at Saint Louis, and here we had three hours to wait for our train to take us to Independence, so we looked after our baggage, and then went in search of supper. We looked around this city, composed largely of black folks, and found a very nice place where we appeased the ravages of time by a good supper, and with the energy thus stored we set out to see a little of the city, visiting the post office and a few other places. It was night and we did not feel like going into the city proper, so we just had a look around, and then back to the station. I was getting quite a liking for those trains. It must have been the attraction of my companion, and the suggestion that he had made, i. e., that we should get on board and get to bed. The proposition seemed so very sensible, after being in the train all day, and then seven o'clock in the morning would see us safely deposited at the center stake, Independence.

So we did this good thing very willingly, for no sooner had we got into the train, than we made the acquaintance of our colored attendant, and were soon tucked away in our cozy bed, and rocked to sleep by the motion of the train. I slept very well, and in the morning I was about an hour early, or I should say we were. How this startling event happened is simple enough when you understand it. I had not put my watch ahead, and so I was just one hour too early, for we had to be governed now by Central time, and that is just one hour behind the New York, or Eastern time.

However, we were ready, and at seven in the morning of March 17 we found ourselves at our destination, Independence. Brother Greene led the way to West Short Street. Here we met Brother T. J. Sheldon, who greeted us in a homely fashion, having made acquaintance when in the British Isles Mission. He left by the street car. My guide pointed out West Short Street, and we parted for a short time, he going up into town, while I sought out my good host and hostess, Brother and Sister J. W. Rushton.

I was not long in arriving at 1552. Willie, the eldest son of J. W. Rushton, saw me approaching and gave the signal to the household. My, but it did seem good to be home once more, for indeed it was home to me while I stayed with my friends of years afore. And the greeting that I received! I can hear my brother saying the words now, "Well, it does one good to see you again. So you arrived. Well, and how are all the folks at home. How is brother this and that." Oh, I tell you I had quite a time of it, for a long time, too. And then the good people of Independence soon knew that Brother W. H. Greenwood had arrived to attend the conference, even to the newspaper man.

We had a good long talk together all the morning. In the afternoon I accompanied the scribe of the Quorum of Twelve to the Order of Enoch House for the purpose of making the acquaintance of the members of that quorum, which I did, and they all gave me a very hearty welcome. The president, Apostle G. T. Griffiths, invited me to take a seat and stay with them for the afternoon, but I declined. Many may wonder why. Well, had I stayed it would not have been a quorum of twelve, but of thirteen, and they say that that is an unlucky number, so as I wished them all to get all the luck they could, I took my leave and had half a holiday all to myself in the town of Independence. I reached home in time for supper, and had a right good time with the family of my host and hostess. And it was real old times over again.

March 18 being Thursday, and feeling the need of a little exercise, we took up our position in the garden, with the intent that the weeds should be converted into flowers and fruit. I was very soon raised to the position of head gardener, and feeling the responsibility of the position I set to work in earnest, and after a time we had home-made onions, lettuce, etc. I quite enjoyed the task, and I wish that I could just take a peep at that garden to-night, but I will tell you more about our garden later on.

After this little exercise, my host and hostess took me out to supper, 701 North Cottage Street, and it was quite a treat. I felt that I was getting to be quite an American already. Here I met Brother M. H. Bond and his good wife and Brother Eaton and others, whom I fail to remember by name. We were treated to a musical evening by Brother Eaton and another brother. They played and sang with taste and talent, and I am sure that all were pleased with such a display. I afterwards learned that Brother C. B. Eaton was the director of the Mount Zion Sunday School Orchestra, which I had the pleasure of hearing on several occasions while in Independence. I am delighted to know that we have such accomplished musical talent that is being used to the praise and worship of God in Zion. May God bless them, and spare them long.

The next day there was need for further exercise, so we took ourselves to the garden again, and for a time the weeds had a very hard time of it, I can assure you, for Brother John is a hard man on weeds. If you don't believe it, just invite him into your garden for a short time. All you have to do is to get him in the right humor, and it's a case with your weeds.

We partook of supper at home once more, and in the evening attended the Zion's Religio Society meeting at the Stone Church. This was the first Religio meeting that I had attended in the States, and I was very pleased to witness the order of the same. I was invited to give a short address, which I did, and I hope some word spoken may be fruitful of good.

I am sure that these society meetings can be made very interesting, and be a means not only of keeping the young together, but of finding entertainment in music and song, and also bring them forward to display their ability and usefulness to the work in many ways. I shall profit myself by witnessing the different methods of conducting the societies in the way of entertaining, presenting of lessons, etc.

The next day the cry went forth again, Death to the weeds! So for a few hours we were busy, and the question was often repeated, Whence cometh the tares? Did we not sow good seed? And so we learn our lessons day by day.

The order has just reached me to prepare for a visit to Kansas City, where my host has arranged with Brother Joseph Tanner, the pastor of the First Church in that city to take me round to see the sights of that great city of boulevards, so must leave you again for a short time, while I have a rest.

Still busy with the tares. Your brother,
W. H. GREENWOOD.

GEELONG, AUSTRALIA.

Editors Herald: It seems a short time since I left Independence, and here I am ten thousand miles away, almost on the opposite side of the earth. I am pleased to report a very pleasant voyage from start to finish, but the ending was the best of all, for I met my wife and children, all well and glad to greet me home again after an absence of one year and four months.

I am strongly of the opinion that it is too long for a father to be away from a family of boys when they are in their teens, and need so much help to make a proper start in life, and were it not for special faith in the directing hand where we are unable to see, I would say, "Let those who have no families make the extra sacrifice."

It is not the sacrifice that the elders are making, for theirs is very small compared to that of their wives and children, on whom all the care of the home and the bringing up of the family depends. I have often wondered at the wisdom of letting your own have a chance to run wild while you looked after the interests of others. "He that provideth not for his own is worse than an infidel," means to me a great deal more than food and clothes.

After I met Brother Rushton in Kansas City, and exchanging a few parting words and good wishes for our future welfare, I was soon speeding across that wild, barren waste, which made me long for the restoration of Edenic conditions, and the ushering in of the millennial reign.

I just had time enough to visit the home of Brother and Sister Anthony, which is ever open, extending a welcome to the Lord's servants, where I spent a most enjoyable evening conversing on the future welfare of Zion, and the prospects of her coming redemption. We were agreed that there must be a perceptible difference between the manner of living among the Saints and the world, to carry any weight with thinking people, and only by faith, prayer, consecration and sacrifice can the glory of God shine out through Zion.

There was five dollars war tax to pay to get out of the country, which didn't agree with my theory of "crying for peace," and then paying money to prepare for war, but it had to be done, and I tried to forget it. Three Utah elders were on board; one a boy of seventeen years, for Honolulu, and two for Pagopago. They were off on a mission of some kind, but had not learned what it was, for they were neither acquainted with the Bible nor their own church books, and spent their time smoking and gambling. Their bad example was unfavorably commented upon by all who knew their profession.

We need missionaries at the Samoan Islands where the latter city is located, for there is a good opening there, and the natives are the same as at Honolulu and Tahiti.

It is a pity that the great latter-day work should be so misrepresented by those who have departed from the faith, and an effort should be made by those who have the light to correct all these evils and set the erring ones in the way of righteousness.

The work in this mission is moving slowly onward, and all seem to take an active part in spreading the good news. The dry season, and heavy drain because of the war, has made living too high to mention. We hope to see a favorable change soon.

With best wishes for our future prosperity, I am still in the faith.

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

LOCK 4, PENNSYLVANIA, July 2, 1915.

Editors Herald: This writing finds us still trying to push the work onward and upward, both spiritually and numerically. At last writing from this community nineteen new converts were reported added to the kingdom. We are glad to report eleven more, making thirty since March of this year. We expect one or two more soon.

While we report progress and rejoicing, we are made sad by the loss of our Brother George Masters, who after five years of disputing with the writer concerning the work, joined the church about four months ago, under trying conditions. Brother Richard Baldwin preached the funeral, there being considerable interest on the part of outsiders.

In the gospel,
SAMUEL GASKILL.

ORCHARDVILLE, ILLINOIS, July 3, 1915.

Editors Herald: I write that the Saints of Southeastern Illinois District may know that at present I am at home nursing a sick wife, who was stricken down with consumption December 7. The first four months of her sickness I was permitted to work in my field, going as far as seven miles to preach and back home at night. As her condition has grown worse and worse, it has bound me at home to take care of her, and her present condition seems such that only a few days would be as much as she could stand. We ask the prayers of all the Saints.

If any want to write me concerning the affairs of the district, they may do so at my home address. Brethren S. D. Goosetree and F. M. Davis, my counselors, will attend to all business until I can get out again. I regret that I could not do more in the field as a missionary.

Trusting that the Lord will overrule in our behalf, my prayer is for the welfare of Zion, and that all may be found faithful.

Your brother in Christ,
R. H. HENSON.

VINAL HAVEN, MAINE, July 8, 1915.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing we have lost a dear sister, Mrs. Louise Raymond, who leaves a husband and six children to mourn her departure. She was seventy-six years of age. Brother U. W. Greene, who was called to preach the sermon, stayed from June 2 to 7, preaching four times, administering the sacrament, and baptizing three precious souls, Sisters Alice Young and Bessie Barton, and Brother Eugene Barton. We were more than pleased to have Brother Greene with us. He is trying to be a faithful servant in the spread of the gospel. May he continue to the end.

Yours for the Master,
MAE BEVERAGE.

Extracts from Letters

Brother R. C. T. Shulze writes from South Brisbane, Australia: "We are doing fairly well here in Brisbane. I am very grateful to our heavenly Father that I am a member of his kingdom, and that I have the Holy Spirit and intelligence to testify that the Reorganized Church is the Lamb's bride, and to know the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to them that believe, through faith in Jesus Christ. The president of this branch is a real Christian, and a much better one would be hard to find. He is kind and true. Pray for us here."

W. B. Arrowsmith writes from Smethwick, Birmingham, England: "We are doing our best to uphold the truth in this part of God's vineyard. We only hope our efforts will bear good fruit. The war is causing many of our number to do extra work, which is hindering them from getting to meetings. We all earnestly pray that it will come to a speedy end, but we are expecting worse times. We are looking forward to our mission conference in August to strengthen and build us up, that we may keep faithful. Ever praying for the spread of truth and righteousness."

Writing from Creston, Iowa, where he and Brother Columbus Scott are holding tent meetings, Brother J. F. Mintun says: "Rains nearly every day. Attendance at services are affected by the bad weather. A few are interested. We expect baptismal service next Sunday. Unless weather conditions change we can not expect to do much with tent work this year. We have just received an urgent request for tent services at Avery. Several places desire the tent, but from no place comes such an urgent request as from here. The Lord has especially blessed in ministering the word, and in the ordinances."

James C. Page, Andes, Montana: "I just came from the North Dakota reunion. Had a splendid time. . . . I am enjoying a good interest at this place. Everything is fine in this country."

Mary E. Johnson, Nevada, Missouri: "I remain strong in the faith. This work is new to me. I hope to be successful and ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints for this end."

News from Missions

Southern Ohio

On the 10th of May I started for my field of labor, stopping en route at Indianapolis over two days, to visit with Saints of former year associations. We found Brother C. H. Fish still presiding over the branch there, now grown to be quite a good sized congregation of faithful workers. We were gratified to observe the progress that had been made.

We found Brethren J. W. Metcalf and Rowe in the city, ready for work in their appointed field. I had a pressing invitation to remain with them over the following Sunday to attend the district conference, but we felt that we should get on to our destination in the Southern Ohio District, and get to work as soon as possible.

I stopped over in Columbus to visit my two brothers for over two days, and then came on to Creola; but was soon called back to Columbus on account of the serious condition of my brother Oscar, who had been taken to the hospital and had undergone a severe operation. I remained with him for one week, when his improvement became so marked we felt sure of his recovery and returned to our work. This brother is not a member of the church and has never been interested in religion, but is quite a thinker and reader. He is more inclined to the latter-day work than any other form of religion, and we have hopes he may soon accept the gospel.

While I would have preferred remaining in the Clinton District, yet I am glad to be in this territory, where I first saw the light of day, and where I did my first preaching, twenty-seven years ago. Many are the changes that have taken place, and many faithful workers in the cause have passed over into the beyond.

After visiting my father and folks at Creola, I preached at Wellston, Davisville, Vales Mills, Mound Hill, Eichen's Mills, Ironton, Paddle Creek, Crabtree, and am now holding forth at Furnace Schoolhouse, near Harrisonville, in Scioto County. I baptized three at Eichen's Mills, daughter's of Brother Ben and Sister Mollie Bail.

The work in this district is far from what it should be. Some places the Religio work is neglected; some places the Sunday school work is slighted; and in other places all departments of the work seem in decline.

We find plenty to do here, more than we can do with our limited force. Brother L. E. Hills has been taken from us, for the present at least; Brother F. G. Pitt, permanently, leaving only Brethren C. E. Bozarth, Frank W. Mills, T. D. Harnish and myself as the present missionary force.

Brother Bozarth, at last account, was at The Plains, Athens County, with the tent; Brother Mills is localized at Ironton, and though laboring under discouragement, is making a commendable effort. Brother Harnish has been detailed by our chief minister in charge to work on a church building in Columbus. So with Brother Mills doing pastoral work, only Brother Bozarth and I remain to do missionary work. It is thus seen that our force is small indeed.

We have some who are doing good local work, especially Brother H. P. Kelley, of Wellston, and Brother Sam W. Henry, of the Pleasant Valley Branch. There may be others who are doing just as well, but I have not gotten over much of the district as yet. Brother Martin G. Allen was ordained a priest lately and we believe he will make an additional worker for the cause.

On the whole we feel encouraged in the work, and hope for good results during the year.

To the Saints of the Clinton District, who were planning with us for vocal instruction during the year, we will say:

We are sorry our plans suggested by Brother Rushton were interfered with, but we hope that you, in each branch, will take up the work and endeavor to get some one to give you the necessary instruction, and then all make it a matter of persistent, earnest study. I wonder how the Taborville Class, which made such a good start, is progressing?

The recent report that President Frederick M. Smith is now free to give his full service to the church is good news indeed, and should cause every Saint to rejoice. May God especially bless and inspire him, is my prayer.

We have plenty to keep us busy for a long time to come; however, we will be glad to hear from the Saints relative to the needs and opportunities in their respective localities, and we will try and look after those points that seem to be most in need. Brother Bozarth and I will endeavor to do the best we can until we get more help. My field address is Creola, Ohio, care James Moler.

Yours in gospel work,
H. E. MOLER.

Southwestern Oregon---"Jots"

The 1915 reunion held at Myrtle Point, Oregon, has passed gracefully into the gloom of history, carrying with it the glow of the best reunion ever held in the district. Not a "jar" nor a word of dissatisfaction was heard from start to finish. Good will and good cheer prevailed throughout. The weather was ideal, neither hot nor cold, and sunshine every day.

J. W. Rushton, T. W. Chatburn, and the district presidency presided. "Rushton, the different," maintained his reputation with dignity, and added luster thereto.

His sermons were of high character indeed, far beyond the average, with Christ the great ideal Captain and King—the gospel paramount to all things—those who abide not in the doctrine hath not God, was the theme, so beautifully and grandly presented.

Brother Roy Slye, on his way to his northern mission, rendered valuable assistance. Roy is a coming man. His efforts were appreciated by all.

Brethren A. C. Barmore, A. A. Baker, F. J. Chatburn, and others of the regular force all worked together without friction, and the Good Spirit hovered over the camp to the satisfaction of all.

Sister A. C. Barmore, Kate Chatburn, Anna Johnston, and Joseph Laird, with quite an efficient choir, furnished the music acceptably. A nice program was rendered by district Sunday school and Religio workers, Sisters Barmore and Short directing.

The semiannual conference convened with the reunion, Brother F. J. Chatburn and Brother A. A. Baker resigning the presidency and vice presidency of the district. T. W. Chatburn and William Smith were elected to fill the vacancies.

This reunion is the first of the year on the coast in Brother Rushton's field, and just put it down in your book, it will be the best one—from San Diego to Seattle. All those interested take due notice and govern yourselves accordingly, and always remember it makes a "heap" of difference what kind of animals you have in the tent, if they draw well. "Do you ken?"

T. W. CHATBURN.

BANDON, OREGON.

Spring River

I commenced meeting here at Scammon, Kansas, July 8. We are having good crowds and fine interest. There is a noble band of Saints at this place. I have preached at Newata, Oklahoma; Helper, Kansas, and Arma and Joplin, since General Conference. Have baptized twenty-eight since March 1.

Be sure to come to the reunion at Joplin, August 6 to 15. Good water, plenty of shade. Street car line one block from park. We are expecting F. M. Sheehy, Charles Fry, F. A. Smith, George Jenkins, and W. S. Macrae.

This is a day of fads and pleasure. Children should be taught to remain at the preaching and prayer services as well as to attend the Sunday school. Some say that they get tired; some of the parents get tired—they have a tired religion, or a religion they are tired of. I know of one Sunday school where the children all stay for church. This school has an average attendance of one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five; the children and young men and women stay every Sunday, and you will not find a better band of young people anywhere.

If more children were taught to work, and play less we would not have so many crooks. Idleness is an incubator for crime. We boast of our country, schools and wealth. We are spending more money for education, Y. M. C. A. buildings, and a host of other things, than any other country in the world, but we have more murder, divorce and crime of all kinds, and it is on the increase at a greater rate than in any other country. Will some one tell us why this is so?

Your brother,

SCAMMON, KANSAS, July 15.

LEE QUICK.

Montana

I am in the northwestern part of my field, away from the railroad, where there is no post office. We have this whole district in an uproar. A Baptist minister of Glasgow is here, driving around trying to poison the people's minds against our church, but it seems that the more he says the further he is spreading the angel's message. I have told the people that if any one comes along misrepresenting me or the church, to ask him to meet me in public discussion, and wherever this Baptist minister goes the people tell him that if Newby is such a bad man and the doctrine he represents is bad, it is his duty to meet him face to face and expose him and prove his error by the Bible.

This district contains Baptists, Christians, Lutherans, Methodists, Presbyterians, Seventh-day Adventists, Congregationalists, Catholics, and people of the Church of God. I have not an enemy among them.

I have signed propositions with a Momon elder to meet him in debate at Glasgow. I look for a great work to be done here this fall in taking subscriptions for the HERALD and other church publications, if crops mature satisfactorily.

Your brother,

R. NEWBY.

ROCK CREEK, MONTANA.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

The series of meetings which have for several months been held here on Sunday evenings, have resulted in good interest. The extra efforts of the choir and Sunday school orchestra have added much value to the services, and many have been attracted from among those not of the faith, much good being done thereby. Bishop M. H. Siegfried, Eders A. H. Parsons and T. J. Sheldon have continued their interesting discourses on church history, Bible teachings, and the Book of Mormon respectively, to the building up of the work and the edification of those in attendance.

Our Brother G. E. Harrington has been somewhat afflicted of late, together with others of the flock here, who have been faithful workers. For them, together we pray that they may be restored to health.

The morning services and the Sunday school have been well attended, and the spirit of unity and loving service has prevailed. New phases of service have been introduced of late in the several departments of the Sunday school—normal, adult, senior, and intermediate. Special programs were arranged, providing short talks of a historical note, one of which was given by the writer. The musical numbers, vocal and instrumental, with addresses before the school by Brother Garrett, were excellent. Superintendents of departments, Brother E. Etzenhouser, and Sisters Altha Deam and Nora Smith, with their assistants, performed their part to the satisfaction of all. We are to hear from the intermediates next Sunday.

The annual Sunday school picnic was held on July 5 on the fair grounds, and was enjoyed by a large number, among them many members of adjacent schools. The chief features were singing, string selections by a fine band, reading of the Declaration of Independence, and a Fourth of July oration by Israel A. Smith, who eloquently set forth many of the important events of American history. A few short speeches were made by other brethren.

For some time sanitation and efficiency have been among the themes here, evidenced in the efforts by Mrs. G. M. Gassow and Sister J. W. Peterson, the former a successful lecturer on practical psychology, the latter a teacher in nursing and care of the sick. Much valuable information has been derived from both lecturers in relation to the preservation of health. A fairly good attendance has been secured.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. ABBIE A. HORTON.

August 2, 1915.

Perry, Iowa

The Saints here have received renewed inspiration from the weeks' services conducted by Patriarch Frederick A. Smith. On account of many of the membership being out of town on vacation trips, the attendance was not large, but many not of the faith took occasion to learn of our doctrine. The sermons were truly edifying and instructive, and much regret was expressed that we could have Brother Smith with us for only a short time. Many received their blessings, thereby increasing their faith and assurance in the gospel.

By way of extending our influence, a series of cottage prayer meetings are planned to be held in remote parts of the city. One such meeting has been held at the home of Sister Leedham, in the south part of town. Our local men did the preaching, and several interested and intelligent listeners were present and expressed a desire to hear more of the old Jerusalem gospel. We expect to continue the effort every two weeks.

Just at present, the Saints here are particularly interested in the coming reunion of the Des Moines and Gallands Grove districts, to be held at Nevada, Iowa, August 13 to 22 inclusive. Many are planning on attending.

Since our local chorister, Brother J. O. Salisbury, was appointed district chorister, at the recent conference, we have missed him very much as he has been away visiting other branches much of the time. Our musical talent has not developed so rapidly, but we feel we can not be selfish, and know that while we are losers, our loss will be a gain to the other branches, and all will redound to the Lord's glory in the end.

ESTELLE F. TAYLOR.

July 26, 1915.

CURRENT EVENTS

(Continued from page 762.)

through which goods might go to Germany is defended, since, it is urged, this is "the only means of making it (the blockade) effective." Reference is made to the blockade against neutral ports during the American Civil War, and it is stated that "the differences which imposed upon the United States the necessity of reshaping some of the old rules" in that war "are somewhat akin to those with which the allies are now faced." A point of difference is this: the United States contends that during the Civil War a complete blockade of southern ports was maintained, while in the present European war German Baltic ports are open to Scandinavian if not to other neutral trade. Great Britain answers that a rigid blockade is maintained against all trans-Atlantic lines, and that in this blockade she is only applying old principles to new conditions, justified from the fact that German submarines and mines make it impracticable for her to approach for absolute blockade German Baltic ports. Great Britain suggests international arbitration in cases in which the United States is dissatisfied with the action of British prize courts. Offers of peace are said to have been made by Germany to Russia, and rejected by the latter.

Miscellaneous Department*Conference Minutes

MINNESOTA.—June 9, Clitherall. Reports: Audubon 92; Union 181; Bemidji 69; Minneapolis 128. Treasurer Charles Lundeen, reported: Receipts $18.86; expenditures $9.55. Bishop's agent, Leon A. Gould, reported: Receipts $1,501.19; expenditures $1,335.75. Auditors reported accounts correct. It was decided that all members of Oak Lake Branch, disorganized, be transferred to Audubon Branch. Officers elected: B. S. Lambkin, president; Birch Whiting, vice president; Lester Whiting, secretary and treasurer; Hattie Kimber, member library board. E. H. Bennett was ordained elder. There were five baptisms during reunion and conference. A peaceful and spiritual time was enjoyed. Adjourned to meet first Saturday in November. Lester Whiting, secretary, Ottertail, Minnesota.

Convention Minutes

SOUTHWESTERN TEXAS.—Sunday school July 22, San Antonio, First Branch. Business, 3 p. m., interesting program at night. Sunday school work is in better condition here than formerly. H. H. Davenport, secretary.

The Bishopric*AGENT'S NOTICE

To All Whom It May Concern: This is to certify that John Harp has been appointed to collect tithing in Central Texas District. All who can, please send tithing to me by post office money order on Martin, Texas, post office.

Route 2.

B. J. SPICER, *Bishop's Agent.Conference Notices

Eastern Oklahoma, Grannis, Arkansas, August 27 to 29. Election of officers. Send reports, requests, resolutions to Mrs. Nettie Bower, Box 204, Wilburton, Oklahoma.

West Virginia, Mount Zion Branch, September 4 and 5. Sunday school the 3d at 1.30 p. m. Tickets should be purchased for Cornwallis, where trains will be met with conveyances Friday and Saturday. Frank L. Shinn, secretary.

Utah, August 28, 10 a. m., 336 South Fourth East Street, Salt Lake City. Full attendance is urged. Send ministerial and branch reports to secretary, Miss Pearl Wardle, Midvale, Utah, not later than August 21. John Hall, president.

Western Colorado, August 28 and 29, with California Mesa Branch. Good attendance is hoped for. Seph Hubbard, president.

Convention Notices

Western Colorado, August 27, 8 p. m., with California Mesa School. Short program after business. Albert Rose, superintendent.

Quorum Notices*KIRTLAND ELDERS

Meet at reunion, Kirtland, Ohio, August 15 to 30, in daily sessions for study, discussion and business. Attend if possible. L. F. P. Curry, president.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS ELDERS

Meet during reunion, Plano, August 20 to 29. G. P. Fairbanks, secretary, 4039 West Van Buren Street, Chicago, Illinois.

Western Nebraska Reunion Called Off

Reunion to have convened at North Platte, Nebraska, September 17 to 22, is called off on account of difficulties arising that were unforeseen. C. W. Prettyman, secretary.

Requests for Prayers

Sister Lorena Hammon, Interior, South Dakota, asks prayers for her mother, Mrs. Jennie Hodges, who is suffering severely from heart trouble and asthma. These people are isolated and can not have the administration of the elders. They should be remembered.

Died

HENDRICKSON.—Martha J. Hendrickson, born March 17, 1835; died July 23, 1915, after an illness of six days. Married James Hendrickson June 6, 1854. To them were born ten children. Deceased united with the church in the early days. Baptized into the Reorganization by J. H. Condit, Badger, Idaho, in September, 1904. She leaves five sons, one daughter, host of relatives and friends. Services at the home by H. E. Winegar.

PATTEN.—Evelyn H., infant daughter of Stanley and Vida Patten, born July 29, 1915; died August 2, 1915. Sermon by W. S. Hettrick.

ROBSON.—Martha Robson, born March 26, 1858, at Newton-in-the-Willows, Yorkshire, England; died June 25, 1915, Massillon, Ohio. Baptized May 27, 1888, Washington, Ohio, by B. M. Strachan. Funeral by James C. Carlisle.

Book Reviews

LOST IN A FUR COUNTRY.—D. Lange, author of On the Trail of the Sioux, and The Silver Island of the Chippewa. Lathrop, Lee & Shephard Company, Boston, $1, net, postpaid $1.10. "Mr. Lange, now superintendent of schools in Saint Paul, Minnesota, is an expert in the very difficult art of interesting boys profitably, and has proved it to a wide circle by his previous books. Lost in the Fur Country, his new book, is, like the others, an "Indian story"—he knows what the boys want. Those who are lost are twins, a boy and girl, and in following the fortunes of the boy from the abduction of the children from their home in Kentucky by Indians at the age of eleven until their reunion at twenty-one, a vivid and accurate picture of real Indian life is given. The human side of this unique people is wonderfully brought out, and a genuine "Robin Crusoe" interest attaches to the lonely adventures of the boy in the great forests of the Hudson Bay region while seeking his lost sister, who was sold into another tribe."

STILL JIM.—Honore Willsie. Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York City, $1.35. The author of this book is an Iowa woman, born in Ottumwa, graduated from the University of Wisconsin. Frequent articles have appeared from her pen in Colliers, Harpers Weekly, and other leading magazines. She is at present managing editor of the Delineator. Her work has often taken her into the far West with her husband, who is a mining engineer. The work, Still Jim, deals with some of the problems of the United States reclamation service. Besides being a splendid love story, it gives an impressive picture of the reclamation service, its obstacles both in nature and in humanity. One of the very best works of fiction that has been published in recent years; a good, live, wholesome story.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver, Assistant Editor.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
New Series of Tracts	761
The General Choir Movement	761
Current Events	762
The Angel Message Tracts	763
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
The Seventh-day Adventists, by Marcus Cook	767
Where Do We Stand? by J. August Koehler	770
Social Purity Work, by R. W. Farrell	772
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
Patriotism and Christianity	773
MOTHERS' HOME COLUMN
Callie B. Stebbins.	773
THE CHILDREN'S HOME
	775
LETTER DEPARTMENT
W. H. Greenwood—C. A. Butterworth—Samuel Gaskill—R. H. Henson—Mae Beverage—Extracts from Letters.	776
NEWS FROM MISSIONS
H. E. Moler—T. W. Chatburn—Lee Quick—R. Newby.	779
NEWS FROM BRANCHES
Abbie A. Horton—Estella F. Taylor.	780
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT
	781

A New Book of Sermons

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER

By Elder J. S. Roth

The second addition just issued, revised and enlarged by the author. Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—knows that he is a very successful missionary. He has been in the mission field for thirty-five years, and is an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-eight of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor. Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet does not tire the hearer with too much monotony.

Quotations and citations have been verified. This book has been revised and enlarged so that the new edition has 556 pages of reading matter in it. The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book. Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely-arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c. Order No. 248a. Always send your order to the

Herald Publishing House

Lamoni, - - - Iowa

SERVICE

The word service is the watchword of the twentieth century.

The human family is awakening to the fact that they are indeed a family, and such relationship demands service to and for each other.

We desire to be of some service to you in a line in which we are peculiarly fitted—hence our new department.

It's this way:

There is a right and a wrong way of doing things—an effective and an ineffective way. We want to help you do your advertising or announcing in the right way, without cost to you. It is entirely free to our people.

The proposition is to get the most out of what you pay for printing. We want to show you how.

We have recently seen samples of advertising used by some people that were certainly unattractive, and could not command respectful attention. It often happens that your facilities for getting what you want are not good. The place you have your printing done may not be equipped for doing the kind of work you want unless you are able to specify exactly what you want and how it shall be done, and then they may not be able to handle it.

This Is Our Proposition

If you intend to do any advertising in your missionary or branch work, no matter what kind, just send us your copy, and without cost to you, we will promptly advise you, by personal letter, with careful suggestions as to the best way to get the results you want.

If you intend to advertise in any way to increase your business, send us a copy of the wording you want to use, or give us the idea as clearly and definitely as possible, and we will word it for you in convincing style.

It doesn't matter whether you have your printing done at the Herald Publishing House or not. We will give you the same careful attention whether you do or not. However, if you wish to have us give you the advantage of our extensive equipment and facilities, we will promptly quote you lowest prices delivered to your post office.

We are prepared to do this because we have on our force a brainy young fellow who has a complete course in advertising to his credit and is experienced in this work. He feels the true spirit of a Latter Day Saint and is willing to be at your service. Complicated work will receive the combined attention of the departments concerned.

ADDRESS

Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa
Ad Service Department

A New Book
THE INTERPRETER

By Gomer T. Griffiths

A Revision of the "Exegesis"

containing more charts and information than the former book, also an illustrated chapter on offenses—law governing the same—procedure in church courts, and blank forms suitable to the same. The various quotations from the books have been carefully compiled and arranged, so that the instructions pertaining to each office are classified, to assist the reader in locating the duties of each minister from the president of the church to the deacon, also points out how the different officers are called and the manner of their ordination, thereby securing courtesy to whom courtesy is due.

Price ..... 50c

Have you heard of the old Spalding story from which the Book of Mormon was said to have been taken? Well, here is the Spalding story. Better get it and know for yourself. Only .....25c
Order 139.

Failures of Campbellism

A new tract by Elder E. E. Long. Reprinted from a series of twelve articles in HERALD of 1913. Logically presented and systematically arranged. Quotations verified. 139 pages. Order 217 .....20c

What Is Man

Is a book that should receive the careful study of every Saint. It clears away the fog of doubt with reference to the eternal verities of the future state of man. No better book on the subject of immortality. Order 140 .....50c

THE STORY OF THE BIBLE

Contains 168 stories, each story complete in itself and together forming a narrative of the Holy Scriptures. Profusely illustrated with color plates and halftones. Just what you need to put in the hands of your children. Book contains 752 pages.

Order Story of the Bible, cloth ..$1.50

COLORED POST CARDS

Graceland College, Saints' Home, Liberty Home, Independence church, Herald Publishing House, Lamoni church.

1 of each for 15 cents.
2 of each for 25 cents.
Order by number 172.

COMPENDIUM OF FAITH is a work for the student. It is a collection of texts taken from the standard church works on a great many subjects. Also a splendid brief history of the Apostasy.

Order No.
141 cloth .....75c
141½ leather .....$1.00
174 flexible .....$1.50

Objections to the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants Answered and Refuted

You can't take the time, neither have you the data at hand to be able to refute many of the so-called arguments against these two books. Brother J. R. Lambert has placed in book form facts and data to refute these so-called arguments. A handy book to have in your library. Order 143 .....40c

Braden-Kelley Debate

This book contains the full report of an eighteen-night debate between the Church of Christ (Campbellite) and the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. The work is a library in itself. Though it has been in print for several years it is still one of the best books published to show the stability of God's truth. Order 125 .....1.50

The Instructor

A book that is one of our very best sellers, and to see the book is enough to explain why it is such a favorite. This work is the result of Brother G. T. Griffiths' efforts and it has been of untold good. To the student, the busy man, and the investigator alike the book is of untold value. Subjects topically arranged.

Order 126 cloth .....75
127 Leather .....1.00
128 Flexible .....1.75

Have You Ever Been to Yellowstone Park

Did you ever go coaching through this great, natural wonderland—America's Only Geyserland? Have you ever seen the soul-stirring canyons, the wonderful lakes and waterfalls, the unexplained geysers and colored pools of the Yellowstone?

Have you ever enjoyed the health-giving climate and the memory-making scenery of this most interesting park?

Go This Summer via the Burlington

The cost is low. The hotels are first class. The opportunities for camping, coaching and riding are almost unlimited. And the train ride via the Burlington—the all-gateway route is a very important part of the trip.

Come in and get your copy of the Burlington folder describing the trip. It's free!

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

10 beautifully colored poster stamps only 5c

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, AUGUST 18, 1915

NUMBER 33

Editorial

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

CHAPTER 2

FAITH IN GOD. IS IT SCIENTIFIC? IS IT BIBLICAL?

And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God.

The human mind knows no bounds of time or space. A word or a gesture starts a train of thought, and we are off to other lands or other times.

These words of Jesus take us back to a lonely road in Judea. We see a group of men journeying from Bethany to Jerusalem. Our attention is immediately attracted to the leader.

As they journey in the ruddy glow of the morning light, his gaze is drawn to a fig tree at some distance. It is luxurious with pleasant green foliage, a glorious promise of full fruitage. Apparently hungering, he wends his way to this tree for refreshment. But lo, it is barren.

To our surprise he rebukes the tree, and declares, "No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever."

Is this some madman? Is this some fanatic? Is this some irresponsible neurotic?

We must wait until another day for our answer. It is morning again, and we see this same group of men journeying again over this same road toward Jerusalem. As they approach the tree one of the followers cries out in surprise.

At its foot the luxurious leaves of yesterday lie withering in jumbled confusion. The tree itself is blasted and shriveled,—dried up, root, trunk, and branch.

Stricken into sharp attention, as by a lightning's flash, these men stand with bated breath while their leader turns and delivers this short, pregnant sentence, "Have faith in God."

JESUS PREACHES IN THE OPEN

The mystery is solved. This man is Jesus of Nazareth. These are his followers. Having at once secured their attention, demonstrated to them the fate that overtakes hypocritical profusion of promise without fruitage, and impressed them with the power of God over all living things, he preaches a sermon by the wayside.

Jesus was never dependent upon pulpit accessories. He preached upon the mountain's inspiring height, in a boat upon the tossing sea, by the river's brim, by the side of the lonely road, or within the dim and hallowed interior of the synagogue.

On this occasion he preaches a short sermon on faith and forgiveness, fronting as he does so the morning light of heaven, that reverently touches his splendid forehead with a hint of the glory that is to be, the shadow falling behind him, predicting the cross that temporarily shall eclipse the glory.

For the time being we remember only a single sentence of that discourse: "Have faith in God."

IS FAITH IN GOD UNSCIENTIFIC

Is the message that Jesus gave to the world that morning a message for this age? Does that commandment require of us anything that is contradicted by the reason, research, and scientific conclusions of the studious ages that have followed each other in orderly procession since that morning in Judea?

Is it possible to-day to have faith in God and yet keep step with the vanguard of truth seekers everywhere? The men of whom Whittier wrote:

Hail to the future singers!
Hail to the brave light bringers!
Forward I reach and share
All that they sing and dare.

You will meet men who will tell you that science has stormed the citadels of faith. That scientists have undermined and overthrown ancient religion.

OUR APPEAL TO THE COURT OF SCIENCE

We propose to prove that these statements are untrue. We take our appeal to the court of science.

In answer, Sir Oliver Lodge, president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, in his presidential address of 1913, said: "Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity and in the reality of things."—Continuity, p. 106.

SCIENCE AFFIRMS CREATIVE POWER

Lord Kelvin, in an address before the Christian Association of the University of London, 1902, said:

Science positively affirms creative power. It is not in dead matters that we live and move and have our being, but in the creative and directing power which science compels us to accept as an article of belief.—Christian Apologetics, p. 25.

Remember when next you turn the pages of the Bible and read as the great initial postulate of that book that in the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, that Lord Kelvin, called "the prince of scientists," is in harmony with that statement. And he added:

If you think strongly enough you will be forced by science to the belief in God, which is the foundation of all religion. You will find science not antagonistic but helpful to religion.—Ibid., p. 26.

A DOMINATING MIND IN THE UNIVERSE

Edgar Lucien Larkin, director of Lowe Observatory, says:

I do not hesitate to write this: There is not a great scientist now living not aware of the existence of Mind in the Sideral Universe—A Dominating Mind.—Within the Mind Maze, p. 346.

It is not enough to say that faith is not unscientific. We affirm that it is fundamentally and eternally scientific.

Jesus of Nazareth in simple dignity, with clear-cut brevity, stated a principle that to-day is supported by Lord Kelvin and Sir Oliver Lodge.

Where then originates the brunt of this opposition to faith? Perhaps, having failed to find it among scientists, we shall find it among the

"CAMP FOLLOWERS OF SCIENCE"

Professor Alexander Macalister, M. A., M. D., D. Sc., LL. D., F. R. S., of the University of Cambridge, says:

In my opinion there is no conflict between science and the moral and spiritual teachings of the Bible. . . . It has been my experience that the disbelief in the revelation which God has given in the life and work, death and resurrection of our Savior, is more prevalent among what I may call the camp followers of science, than amongst those to whom actual scientific work is the business of their lives.—Religious Beliefs of Scientists, p. 33.

AND AMONG THE SMALL-MINDED

Professor J. J. Walsh, M. D., of Fordham University, New York, says:

All the greatest scientists have been believers. They have no trouble at all in reconciling science and faith. It is smaller men who have found that their little buckets of minds were not large enough to hold science and faith.—Ibid., p. 162.

A SECOND-HAND SMATTERING OF SCIENCE

Professor Frank Cavers, D. Sc., professor of biology at Hartley University, Southampton:

As to the alleged "conflict" between science and religion, I believe you will generally find that the science which is pressed into service by agnostics and atheists is many, many years behind the times, and that these writers and lecturers have only a second-hand smattering of the biology of forty or fifty years ago.—Ibid., p. 77.

Professor A. H. Sayce, LL. D., D. Lit., professor of Assyriology in the University of Oxford:

There are a few "leading scientists" who are irreligious, but the vast majority, so far as my knowledge goes, are quite the reverse. The "irreligious" are for the most part those who have merely a smattering of scientific knowledge.—Page 52.

WHY WE BELIEVE IN GOD

We are admonished to give a reasonable answer for the hope that is in us. Accepting Jesus as our teacher, we accept also his dogmatic precept, "Have faith in God." But there are other reasons which may be set forth in their order. We believe in God because

IT IS NATURAL TO BELIEVE IN GOD

It is both natural and scientific to believe. Kelvin says, "Science positively affirms creative power." Lodge says, "Genuine religion has its roots deep down in the heart of humanity and in the reality of things."

Go where you will, in Patagonia or Alaska, in the islands of the Pacific, in the Orient or the Occident, you will find that all races believe in some supreme or superhuman being.

They may not call it God, but they do their best to carve their rude presentment of deity in wood and stone.

Probably in the first instance they did not worship the image, but rather that for which it stood. Their vision of God is obscured by ignorance and superstition, and so their presentation of him is distorted and grotesque.

Their belief is not because of ignorance, but in spite of it. When we ascend to higher peoples, we find as strong a faith coupled with a clearer perception that forbids men attempting the impossible task of picturing in wood or stone the lineaments of deity.

The clearest-headed statesmen, the most profound philosophers, the greatest scientists, the most inspired poets have believed in God.

Our parents walked and talked with God, as did Seth, Enoch, Noah, and many others. They knew him in the long ago, and that knowledge became a mighty force through all succeeding generations. It has been dimmed by time and distance, yet fostered by all that we see around us.

Atheism, on the other hand, is acquired. It is the result of perverted or incomplete education. Doubt may be and has been nursed and fostered to the point where one will doubt the existence of his own body and of the earth itself. But hunger and cold and hard knocks, as well as joy, comfort, warm sunshine and glowing landscapes, bear a testimony that most men heed; equally positive forces testify of God.

A MATTER OF CHOICE

Next, we believe in God because we wish to do so. It is a choice between anarchy and law. We do not care to go out and tell people that there is no ultimate lawgiver to whom they must sometime give an account.

A noted anarchist said: "I believe in no God. I believe in no hereafter."

Now note what followed in that creed, as naturally as darkness follows the setting of the sun:

I believe in no God; I believe in no hereafter; I believe in no civilization; I believe in no marriage; all property is robbery; all government is tyranny; right and wrong are prejudices; I believe in the red flag of anarchy; the rich and the rulers are only proper food for gunpowder, and dynamite; I am sworn to live and die by the articles of this creed.

This was simply carrying things to their logical conclusion. And let us tell you, if you convince all men that there is no God and no hereafter, you shortly will have no civilization, you will have no marriage, you will have no government, you will have no property. You will have anarchy, with every man his own best law, and bound to respect none else.

OBSERVATION CONFIRMS FAITH

Again, we believe in God because the natural tendency to believe is strengthened by what we see around us.

Chance as a creative force is not in evidence. It is now quite universally accepted as a scientific fact that life must spring from preceding life. So we trace it back until we reach the point that Lord Kelvin said God has "reserved for his own appearing,"—the beginning of life.

We find in every city certain statutes enforced. For instance, there is a statute against trespass. No one need tell us that such a law introduced itself, voted on itself, inscribed itself on the statute books, enforces itself. We know there is a city council and a mayor back of it, and that a very material policeman looks after us if we violate it.

No one need tell us that all the houses in that city designed and builded themselves, or that they sprang up in a night by chance, or that they evolved from a single crooked stick that came into existence years ago as the result of "a fortuitous concourse of at-

(Continued to page 789.)

W. H. KELLEY PASSES

The Saints will mourn the demise of Elder William H. Kelley, who passed away at his home, Lamoni, Iowa, on the afternoon of Saturday, August 14. Elder Kelley had suffered for several months from a complication of ailments, and his death came as a release from a condition of pain and distress to the state of the faithful.

As the family awaits word from absent ones, arrangements for the services are not completed at this writing. The funeral will be at Lamoni, and the interment there also, by the side of his faithful life companion.

The following relating to the life and ministry of Brother Kelley is kindly furnished by Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian:

William H. Kelley was for many years one of the leading ministers of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and was only retired from active service two years ago, and placed on the superannuated list.

He was born April 1, 1841, in Johnson County, Illinois. His great-grandparents, Richard and Maria Gibbs Kelley, emigrated to America from England in 1773. Their son Benjamin Franklin married Miss Nancy Yancey, daughter of Colonel Austin Yancey of North Carolina, in the year 1805. They reared a family of seven children, one of whom, Richard Yancey Kelley, was the father of William H. Kelley. His mother's maiden name was Ballowe. His grandfather Benjamin Kelley, accepted the faith of the Latter Day Saints in the early years of the church, and the family have been identified therewith until the present time.

William H. entered the ministry when only nineteen years of age, and very soon took rank among the ablest ministers of the church. He served in the Quorum of Seventy from 1860 to 1873, in which capacity he ministered in most of the Western States and Territories. From 1873 to 1897 he was a member of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, and as such ministered in all the States of the United States except the Southern States, and in the British possessions of America. In 1897 he became president of the Quorum of Apostles, occupying there until his retirement in 1913. He was not only a preacher of power and influence, but his influence was greatly felt in deliberate assemblies and in discussion in defense of the faith.

In early manhood he was united in marriage to Miss Ellen N. Campbell, of Indiana. Ten children were the fruits of this union; five sons, viz, Cassius, of Niagara Falls, New York, William, who lost his life in South Africa a few years ago, James and Lee of Lamoni, Iowa, and George of Kansas; five daughters, Mrs. Oscar Anderson, Misses Mary, Harriet, Ethel and Loneita, all of Lamoni.

Elder Kelley's father moved from Southern Illinois to Glenwood, Iowa, when he was but a boy, and his youth until he entered the ministry was spent in that vicinity. After he began his ministry he entered in the United States Army and served until the close of the war, when he resumed his ministry.

After his marriage he resided in Versailles, Indiana; Coldwater, Michigan; Kirtland, Ohio; and Lamoni, Iowa; having been a resident of Lamoni for about twenty years. His wife died eight years ago, since which time his daughters have kept house for him.

Elder Kelley was among those of the "Old Guard," who went out in the morning of the Reorganization, when it required faith and courage to enter the cause, and who remained through the heat of the day. Of the work of such men, and of the heritage which their efforts, under God, have left us, the church should be and is appreciative.

And let it be remembered that the same Father who has sustained these men, and who has held together the "little flock" will, if we are devoted and diligent, continue to bear up those upon whom now rests the burden of the work, and to lead onward the ever increasing army of latter-day Israel until success perches upon her banners in the triumphant appearing of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

J. F. G.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

BUMPER CROP.—Reports promise for the United States an unusually large crop of all grains for the present year.

DENY FREIGHT INCREASE.—In a decision handed down the 11th, the Interstate Commerce Commission denied the greater part of the freight rate increases asked for by western railroads.

GUARDS CONFIDENCE.—Declaring he would go to jail rather than divulge a confidential statement made to him by a boy in the Denver Juvenile Court, Judge Ben Lindsey has been held in contempt of court by Judge Perry, of the criminal court. A violation of such confidence, Judge Lindsey held, would be fatal to the usefulness of juvenile courts.

"EASTLAND" INDICTMENTS.—The Cook County Grand Jury on the 10th returned indictments of manslaughter against the president, vice president, secretary-treasurer, and assistant secretary-treasurer of the Saint Joseph-Chicago Steamship Company, on account of the Eastland disaster. The captain and engineer were indicted for criminal carelessness.

REFUND TO GOVERNMENT.—The Guggenheim American Smelting and Refining Company, on the 10th, returned to the Federal Government one hundred and twelve thousand, seven hundred sixty-eight dollars and eighty-eight cents in money, and to Government entry three thousand, four hundred seventy-six acres of valuable coal land the company had opened under false entry. The cash was for coal mined on this land.

POVERTY GOING ON.—The United Charities of Chicago reports that five hundred more families applied for aid during July of this year than in the same month of last year. More than three thousand, eight hundred families, comprising fifteen thousand individuals, were helped. For the ten months past there have been more calls for aid and more help given than for the whole year preceding, and this is a continuation of a steady increase of poverty going on since 1909.—The Public.

UNITED STATES NOTES.—The United States has replied to the Austro-Hungarian note of June 29, contending that the scale on which munitions are being exported from this country to Austria's enemies "is not in consonance with the definition of neutrality." The United States note holds that the shipments objected to are lawful, and that to prevent same because other countries are not in position to receive like shipments would in itself be a violation of neutrality. The United States has also sent a note in reply to the late German note in the Frye case, the contents of which at this writing has not been made public.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Eight Mexican bandits and one Mexican woman have been killed in two Mexican raids, one on the 8th, the other on the 12th, on American soil in the vicinity of Brownsville, Texas. More United States troops are being sent to the border. Secretary Lansing and South and Central American ambassadors and ministers have again been in session over the Mexican situation, and have sent the various Mexican leaders notes urging a peace conference. Carranza has informed President Wilson that he will not agree to any peace plans decided on by the United States in cooperation with Latin-American Republics. The United States gunboat Marietta, and the battleships Louisiana and New Hampshire were commissioned to Mexican waters, the latter two being now under orders to remain at an American base in readiness for any emergency. This movement is understood to be for the protection of foreigners in Vera Cruz.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Germans have continued to gain on the eastern front, where the Russians seem to be showing their usual brilliancy in retreat, and where their army is apparently intact and withdrawn to prepared positions. The Russians are reported victorious over the Turks in the Caucasus. The week on the western front has been one of comparative quiet. Gains for Italy over Austria are reported. The allies claim gains on the Gallipoli Peninsula. Two Turkish battleships and one transport are reported sunk by British submarines; two Austrian submarines by Italian vessels; a British submarine by a Turkish air craft. German submarines and mines have claimed four British steamers and four trawlers; a Norwegian steamer, a French, Norwegian, and Russian bark. The German naval steamship Meteor was blown up after sinking the British auxiliary warship Ramsey, and finding itself unable to escape a British fleet. Germany has conducted two aerial raids on the eastern English coast, resulting in twenty English killed and thirty-seven injured. A German Zeppelin was destroyed oms." We have never seen the designers or builders, yet their works testify of their intellect.

(Continued to page 805.)

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

(Continued from page 787.)

Though men might burn the Bible and publicly renounce the God idea, we are sure that the first time they found themselves free from artificial restraints, out under the eternal stars, their hearts would whisper over the articles of faith that their fathers repeated ere the Bible was written or infidelity was dreamed.

"The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork."—David.

Man himself is one of God's greatest revelations of wisdom and power.

A man went down to Panama,
Where many a man had died,
To slit the sliding mountains
And lift the eternal tide:
A man stood up in Panama,
And the mountains stood aside.

The Power that wrought the tide and peak
Wrought mightier the seer;
And the One who made the Isthmus
He made the engineer.—Mackaye.

A MORE SURE WORD

We believe in God because we have in the Scriptures a revelation of him that speaks for itself. We find there things which man of himself could not have written.

Daniel pictured the future of the world, and for over twenty-three hundred years the events of history in their orderly march have fallen into line to fulfill his prophecy.

Isaiah pictured the coming of Christ, his life, his betrayal, his death. Christ foretold of the destruction of Jerusalem,—it is history.

Now we submit that the written word speaks for itself and shows an understanding of futurity that man of himself could not have. Its moral character is also its own best testimony of divinity. It meets human needs in every age.

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts.—2 Peter 1: 19.

PERSONAL TESTIMONY

We believe in God because we find in his word the revelation of a perfect law, that if heeded would fill the world with love and peace, bringing to pass the ancient ideals,—liberty, equality, brotherhood.

We believe in God because we have something in addition to the written word, or that which we may see.

"If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."—John 7: 17.

We have felt the influence of that Spirit promised to those who do his will, and know that it is not of earthly origin. We do not depend solely upon the word of others. Our gospel came not unto us in word only. We received it not of men. It came in power, with much assurance, and with the Holy Ghost, as it came of old to Paul.

FAITH POSITIVE AND DYNAMIC

Faith is affirmative, positive, dynamic. Atheism is negative (when not evasive); it is static, or reactionary; the creeping paralysis of human aspiration. It makes no affirmation, and has no program. Its gospel is the gospel of doubt and despair.

Atheism, agnosticism, infidelity do not affirm. The more intelligent opposers of the God idea have avoided definite statement.

You may read the lectures of Ingersoll from beginning to end, and you will never find where he says there is no God. You will find where he says, "There may be a God; I do not know." You will find where he said, "In the hour of death hope sees a shining star, and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing."

That calls to our mind the statement of Lord Bacon, "Atheism is more on the lips of men than in their hearts."

Faith is aggressive. It is affirmative. It is constructive.

"I will build," declared Jesus.

"Let us create," said God.

Let us join forces with the builders. The iconoclast has his work in the demolition of error; but it is transient. The Christian has his work; it is eternal. "Have faith in God."

FAITH IN AN IMMANENT GOD

Biblical faith is faith in an immanent God. Note this statement:

Without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.—Hebrews 11: 6.

We must believe in God's existence, and in his divine justice, and in his approachability. True faith presupposes a God that is. The great I AM, who in the midst of most primitive surroundings spoke to Moses from the burning bush, is still at work in the world among the complex and artificial conditions of modern life.

He is able to speak now as of old. He is able and willing to "reward" those who now "diligently seek him," as anciently. He has never drawn a line through any day or year in all the calendar of time and said, This can not be a day of revelation and of miracle. The unbelief of the people has cut them off from revelation and healing,—not the will of God.

Walter Rauschenbusch said of the prophets of old:

"They went to school with a living God who was then at work in his world, and not with a God who had acted long ago and put it down in a book."

This age needs an awakening sense that God IS, and that he is a REWARDER of them that diligently seek him.

FAITH IN JESUS AND IN THE WORD

Faith in God includes faith in Jesus his Son, and in the word of God.

On the road to Jerusalem Jesus admonished his disciples, "Have faith in God."

Very near the close of his ministry, after the last supper had been eaten; after Judas had received his sop and gone out to earn his infamous thirty pieces, Jesus seized the opportunity to give his followers one more impressive admonition and precept: "Let not your hearts be troubled: ye believe in GOD, believe also in ME." (John 14: 1.)

This same Jesus called the attention of the Jews to the necessity of scripture study, and faith in the word: "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." (John 5: 39.)

FAITH MUST BE ASSOCIATED WITH GOOD WORKS

It is true, Paul said that we are "justified by faith," and on that statement is postulated the confession of some professed Christians: "That we are justified by faith only is a most wholesome doctrine, and very full of comfort."

But such a dogma may be very unwholesome and very full of deception. It must be understood that the faith that Paul had in mind is inseparably associated with good works.

Thus James says:

What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? Can faith save him?—James 2: 14.

But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?—James 2: 20.

Beware how you subscribe to the ancient and "orthodox" heresy that men are justified and saved by faith only.

The faith of which we write is associated with good works, character building, complete obedience to the principles and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It is a living faith in a living God.

SUCH A CLOUD OF WITNESSES

Faith in God is both biblical and scientific. It is confirmed by the revelation in his written word, by the immediate testimony of the Holy Spirit, and by the works of nature: "The three grand pillars upon which faith builds her glorious and imperishable works for the life that now is and for the life that is to come."

Every star, every blade of grass, every song bird, is a witness of God. And these things are so wonderful that Professor Larkin, director of Lowe Observatory, says:

The retina of the eye is a portion of the brain, an exploring expedition. . . . the brain tissue itself come forth to see! The visible part of the universe is so supremely magnificent, that the very matter of the brain comes out of its prison of bone—the skull—to behold. . . . The seeing ones tell those in interior darkness of the beauty and wonders of the stars and starry vaults of the celestial sphere. And of the flowers, and the warbling birds, of crystals, colors, and of sparkling gems. These and the radiant sun, the brain came forth to see.

"He that has seen any or the least of these" has seen a witness of God. For, as Emerson says, "Nature is so thin a screen, God breaks through at every point."

Well did Jesus say, "Have faith in God." Well did Paul name faith as one of the six fundamental principles of the doctrine or gospel of Christ.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

NOTE.—The next chapter will be devoted to repentance. This chapter will not be merely a dogmatic, theological exegesis of the doctrine of repentance. It will be a direct and searching appeal to men and women who must repent soon or perish.

Original Articles

THE SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS--PART 3

BY MARCUS COOK

THE SABBATH QUESTION

I will now take up the Sabbath hobby, and notice some inconsistencies connected with it. The Adventists claim:

1. That the seventh-day Sabbath law was in force from the beginning.
2. That the seven days of creation were days of this earth, and measured by its revolutions.
3. That the ten commandments are the foundation of God's government in heaven and on earth.

Early Writings, pages 80, 81, says:

But Satan told his angels that he would make even the crucifixion and resurrection tell to his advantage. He was willing that those who professed faith in Jesus should believe that the laws regulating the Jewish sacrifices and offerings ceased at the death of Christ, if he could push them further, and make them believe that the law of ten commandments also died with Christ. . . . In this bold plan, Satan strikes directly against the foundation of God's government in heaven and on earth:

4. That the ten commandments are still binding as God's law.
5. That the change from the seventh to the first day of the week was made by the pope of the Roman Catholic Church. I quote Early Writings, page 55:

"The pope has changed the day of rest from the seventh to the first day. . . . The pope has made a breach in the holy law of God."

6. That the Sabbath or the fourth commandment is the greatest commandment. That it is the seal of God, God's memorial. Early Writings, page 55:

The pope has changed the day of rest from the seventh to the first day. He has thought to change the very commandment that was given to cause man to remember his Creator. He has thought to change the greatest commandment in the decalogue, and thus make himself equal with God, or even exalt himself above God.

Mrs. White, writing of the judgments coming on the wicked, in a chapter entitled, "God's people delivered," Great Controversy, page 45, also says:

The enemies of God's law from the ministers down to the least among them have a new conception of truth and duty. Too late they see that the Sabbath of the fourth commandment is the seal of the living God.

These claims, if proven untrue, would overthrow the entire system; we proceed to examine them.

WAS SEVENTH DAY FROM BEGINNING?

The first proposition is simply assumed, viz, that the seventh-day Sabbath law was in force from the beginning. There is no mention made in the Bible of any man either keeping the seventh or any other day as a sabbath until the commandment was given to Moses, Exodus 16: 23, over twenty-five hundred years after the creation. The language in Genesis 2: 3, plainly stating that God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, because that in it he had rested from all his work, can not properly be construed to mean other than that the seventh creation day was blessed after God had rested, and not before; and no mention is made of any other than that particular day, and to assume that man was commanded to keep it, with no history of the commandment, and that it was observed as a religious duty as law, with no mention made of it in twenty-five hundred years of history, is, to say the least, unreasonable. Again, it is evident that Israel at the time Moses led them out of Egypt, were not familiar with Sabbath keeping, if so why was it necessary for God to give them instruction how to keep it? Exodus 16: 23, Exodus 20: 10, Exodus 31: 13-15; also when they should begin the Sabbath, Leviticus 23: 32.

Again, the theory of it previously being in force is contradicted by, "The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day." (Deuteronomy 5: 3.)

The ten commandments follow the above, and it would be a foolish juggling of words to question its referring to them as the covenant that was not made with their fathers, especially when compared with Deuteronomy 4: 13, Deuteronomy 9: 11. The seventh-day Sabbath was a part of that covenant, therefore was not made with their fathers.

In Hebrews 4 also the context plainly shows that the Israelites are being discussed. The fourth verse speaks of the seventh day, and in the sixth verse we read, "Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief. . . ."

Here we find again that it was first preached to Israel, so the first proposition falls to the ground.

WERE CREATION DAYS EARTH DAYS

Now to the second proposition, that the seven days of creation were days of this earth and measured by its revolutions.

In this it is claimed that the day begins in the evening at sunset, according to Leviticus 23: 32. I read in Genesis 1: 14-19:

And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night. . . . And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night: he made the stars also. And God set them in the firmament of the heaven. . . . And the evening and the morning were the fourth day.

Now since our friends resort to such technicalities to prove that each day was of twenty-four hours duration, we will apply the same method and ask, How since the great lights, the sun, moon, and stars were not created nor set in the firmament until the fourth day, could each preceding day begin and close at sunset when there was no sun to set? Again:

Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended his work. . . . And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it. . . . These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the Lord God made the earth and the heavens, and every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew: for the Lord God had not caused it to rain upon the earth, and there was not a man to till the ground.—Genesis 2: 1-5.

In the above we find that:

The heavens and the earth were finished.

On the seventh day God ended his work and rested.

God blessed that day on which he had rested.

In verse four the whole period is summed up as a day.

In verse five that every plant and herb were created before they were in the earth.

The physical part of man was not created.

This would indicate that God's work was performed in some other place or world, as the heavens were included in the creation, and the herbs and plants were created before they were in the earth. Now, not knowing upon what planet Jehovah dwells nor how many hours, days or years of this earth it would take to make one of his days, the twenty-four hour creation day theory is untenable. See also 2 Peter 3:8:

But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day.

For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is passed, and as a watch in the night.—Psalm 90:4.

Then the term day is often used to denote a time or period of the world's history, as in Genesis 2:4 already referred to: "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it and was glad." (John 8:5, 6.) In Daniel 8:13, also 12:11, 12, the word days is admitted by Adventists to mean years.

We do not question God's power, but there is to my mind no reason to believe that God's days are measured by the revolutions of this little earth.

ARE TEN COMMANDMENTS FOUNDATION

Third proposition: That the ten commandments are the foundation of God's government in heaven and earth.

If that be true there would have to be fathers and mothers in heaven so that children could honor them, or the fifth commandment would be meaningless. Death would be possible, or the sixth commandment would be absurd. There would have to be marriage and recognition of sex relation in heaven, or why should we in the seventh commandment be commanded not to commit adultery? There would have to be a disposition to steal in heaven, or there would be no occasion for the eighth commandment. There would have to be rival gods in heaven, or there would be no occasion for the first commandment.

And with regard to the special hobby, "the fourth commandment," (I quote from Deuteronomy 5, as that is the only copy as it was on the tables of stone):

But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man servant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; that thy manservant and thy maidservant may rest as well as thou. And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day.—Deuteronomy 5:14, 15.

If this is a part of the foundation of God's government in heaven, then there must be in heaven manservants, maidservants, oxen, asses, and strangers, also the inhabitants of heaven would have to be people who had been servants in Egypt. How would this apply to the angels? Again Jesus says: "The Sabbath was made for man." (Mark 2:27.)

Now since it was made for man it was made for this earth, and could only apply here. So this proposition fails.

ARE TEN COMMANDMENTS STILL BINDING

Fourth proposition, that the ten commandments are still binding as God's law.

This introduces the two covenants that God made with mankind. While salvation through Jesus Christ was preached from the beginning and the gospel covenant was, is, and always will be the first, last, and only means of eternal salvation, the redemption of man was not perfected until the death of Jesus Christ. There was a covenant including the ten commandments made with the Israelite nation on Sinai with Moses as the mediator, and beasts for sacrifices, which being the first executed, is called the first covenant.

The covenant with Jesus Christ as both mediator and sacrifice is called the second covenant. We read:

For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.—John 1:17.

For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to everyone that believeth.—Romans 10:4.

Who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life. But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away.—2 Corinthians 3:6, 7.

Galatians 4:21-26 gives an allegory of the two covenants, stating that the one from Sinai gendereth to bondage. The other, the opposite, the one represented by Hagar, was to be cast out; the one represented by Isaac was to be the heir. Paul says they were not of the bond woman, but of the free.

For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God.—Hebrews 7:19.

But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, The just shall live by faith.—Galatians 3:11.

Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. . . . And this I say, that the covenant, which was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, can not disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect.—Galatians 3:16, 17.

Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator.—Galatians 3:19.

Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ. . . . But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster.—Galatians 3:24, 25.

For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt. . . . In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away.—Hebrews 8:7-13.

Now Adventists try to destroy the force of the texts referred to above by claiming that where the law is spoken of as being done away, vanishing away, and no longer under it, etc., it is the ceremonial law that is referred to, but that the ten commandments are God's unalterable moral law, the foundation of God's government in heaven and on earth, written with the finger of God (Exodus 31: 18), that a copy of them is kept in stone tables in heaven.

We first call attention to the fact that the ten commandments as quoted by the Adventists from Exodus 20: 3-17 do not give the same reason for keeping the fourth commandment that is given in the copy found in Deuteronomy 5: 7-21. And all the evidence points to the fact that the copy of Deuteronomy 5 is as they were written on the tables of stone.

As this is pertinent to the question, let us examine it. In Exodus 20 we have no mention of the tables of stone, but read: "And God spake all these words, saying." (Exodus 20: 1.)

No mention is made of the tables until after the following is recorded in Exodus 24: 4:

And Moses wrote all the words of the Lord, and rose up early in the morning, and builded an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes of Israel.—Exodus 24: 4.

And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do.—Exodus 24: 7.

Now if Moses wrote all the words of the Lord, as the Lord spake the ten commandments Moses wrote them, hence they were a part of the book of the covenant that he read to Israel before the tables of stone are mentioned. The first mention of them is as follows:

And the Lord said unto Moses, Come up to me into the mount and be there: and I will give thee tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; that thou mayest teach them.—Exodus 24: 12.

Now these tables were not given to Moses until the Lord had made an end of communing with him:

And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon Mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God.—Exodus 31: 18.

The above plainly shows that the ten commandments as given in Exodus 20 were written in a book and read to the people before Moses received the tables of stone. The receiving of the first table is described as follows:

And Moses turned, and went down from the mount, and the two tables of the testimony were in his hand: the tables were written on both their sides; on the one side and on the other were they written. And the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables.—Exodus 32: 15, 16.

Now we have the tables of stone with the commandments on them in the hands of Moses, but we read:

And it came to pass, as soon as he came nigh unto the camp, that he saw the calf, and the dancing: and Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount.—Exodus 32: 19.

Now we have the first tables broken, but I read:

And the Lord said unto Moses, Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first: and I will write upon these tables the words that were in the first tables, which thou breakest.—Exodus 34: 1.

Now that the ten commandments as they were on the tables of stone are called a covenant we notice in Deuteronomy 4: 13:

And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone.

When I was gone up into the mount to receive the tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant which the Lord made with you.—Deuteronomy 9: 9.

We have used the last two texts because Adventists sometimes deny that the word covenant used in Deuteronomy 5: 2, 3 refers to the ten commandments; in these texts it is shown that the ten commandments were the covenant that God delivered to Israel and made with them. Now in Deuteronomy 5: 7-21 we have the ten commandments, and to show that this is as they were on the tables of stone, we quote:

These words the Lord spake unto all your assembly in the mount out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice; and he added no more. And he wrote them in two tables of stone, and delivered them unto me.—Deuteronomy 5: 22.

Now we have the testimony of Moses, that God spake these words; that he added no more; that he wrote them on two tables of stone, Exodus 20: 1-17.

We have, "And God spake (not wrote) all these words," (Exodus 20: 1 and Exodus 24: 4) "and Moses wrote (not God) all the words of the Lord."

So Deuteronomy 5 gives them as God wrote them, and as the principal difference between the two copies is in the fourth commandment, we will place them side by side in the dissension of the sixth proposition.

Now Adventists claim that the book of the law written by Moses was the ceremonial law, that when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book and they were finished, he was commanded (Deuteronomy 31: 26):

Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against thee.

This they say was the ceremonial law. If this is true the ceremonial law includes the ten commandments as given in Exodus 20, and quoted by Adventists.

They claim that the ten commandments as written on the tables of stone are God's moral law, but do not quote the correct rendering as given in Deuteronomy 5. Why? We will see later.

But, on this present proposition, to whom were the commandments given?

"I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage." (Exodus 20:2.) Then follow the ten commandments, each one beginning with, "Thou," except the fifth, and it is spoken as if to an individual.

Now who was being spoken to? Israel. Who was brought out of the land of Egypt? Israel. Who was brought out of the house of bondage? Israel. Who then were the commandments given to? Israel. Were they previously given? No, for in Deuteronomy 5:3 we read: "The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day."

How long were they to last? Paul says:

Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster.—Galatians 3:24, 25.

Who was to be the end of the law? Christ. "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to everyone that believeth." (Romans 10:4.)

POINTS OF CONTRAST

We note six points of contrast between the decalogue and the gospel of Jesus Christ.

1. The ten commandments do not mention Jesus Christ.
2. They do not require love for our fellow man.
3. They were given to the Israelite nation only.

Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed.—Exodus 31:16, 17.

See also Deuteronomy 4:13, Deuteronomy 5:2-22, Deuteronomy 9:9-11, Deuteronomy 9:15, Isaiah 56:1-7.

4. They were to be observed by Israel on earth and in the land of Palestine.

Thou shalt keep therefore his statutes, and his commandments, which I command thee this day, that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days upon the earth, which the Lord thy God giveth thee, for ever.—Deuteronomy 4:40.

Honor thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee; that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.—Deuteronomy 5:16.

5. The violation of them was to be punished by civil power upon earth.

Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you. Everyone that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people. Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the Sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death.—Exodus 31:14, 15. (See also Exodus 35:2; Numbers 15:32-36.)

6. They give no promise of eternal life.

But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, The just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith: but, the man that doeth them shall live in them.—Galatians 3:11, 12.

For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God.—Hebrews 7:19.

Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law.—Galatians 3:21.

In the gospel of Jesus Christ:

1. Jesus Christ is the only name by which we must be saved:

And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.—Matthew 28:18.

Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4:12.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life. Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live.—John 5:24, 25; see also John 6:37-40.

2. Love is the greatest commandment in the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.—Matthew 22:37-40.

But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you.—Matthew 5:44.

And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.—1 John 4:16.

3. The gospel of Jesus Christ is for all nations.

And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28:18-20.

For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit.—1 Corinthians 12:13.

Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.—Acts 10: 34, 35.

4. The gospel of Jesus Christ is for the world.

And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.—Mark 16: 15.

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.—Matthew 24: 14.

And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation.—Revelation 5: 9.

5. Punishment for violating or failing to observe the conditions of the gospel of Jesus Christ is in the future life, and is administered by God's judgment.

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.—Mark 16: 16.

He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.—John 12: 48.

And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal.—Matthew 25: 46.

But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.—Revelation 21: 8.

And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.—2 Thessalonians 1: 7-9.

6. The gospel promises eternal life.

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.—Mark 16: 16.

In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.—John 14: 2, 3.

For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.—Romans 6: 23.

Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord.—1 Thessalonians 4: 17.

Luke tells us, Luke 13: 28, that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were in the kingdom of God; Hebrews 11: 5 tells us that Enoch was translated—all of them fathers of Israel, so the covenant of the ten commandments was not made with them, see Deuteronomy 5: 3.

Jesus says: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16: 16), and in none of the commissions are the apostles instructed to teach the world the ten commandments.

(To be continued.)

PUBLIC OPINION ON SPALDING ROMANCE THEORY

FAIRER THAN USUAL

Since my return from the Australian Mission, I have noticed quite a change in the attitude of standard reference and current literature toward the Latter Day Saints in general and the Reorganized Church in particular. Of late I have been taking notes which I herewith transcribe. The late editions of the standard encyclopedias show a complete change in the accounts they give of the origin of the Book of Mormon. The Spalding story is now entirely repudiated. I used to wonder why authoritative literature clung so tenaciously to that tradition when it had been so successfully exploded. Fairchild's discovery was made in 1885, and apparently it has taken until very recently for it to influence the scholastic mind and find its way into secular literature. I once despaired of it being read of outside of our publications. The tide, however, has set in the other way, hence we offer the following:

The anti-Mormon contention against the authenticity of the book. (Book of Mormon. A. C. B.) is untenable. . . . This is, briefly, that a romance of prehistoric America, written in Ohio in 1812, by a Congregational minister, Solomon Spalding, was the source, root, and inspiration by which Smith's associate, Sidney Rigdon, concocted the scheme of a Golden Bible. The recovery in 1885 of the alleged original of Spalding's "Manuscript story" has been to the Mormons, conclusive proof of its nonconnection with the Book of Mormon, for there is no real resemblance between the two. The theory is further invalidated by the fact that it is impossible to show how, when, or through whom, Smith could have obtained one of the two copies of the Spalding Manuscript.—The New International Encyclopedia, vol. 12, p. 603.

It was a contention of the early anti-Mormons, now however, discredited, that the Book of Mormon as published by Smith, was rewritten with few changes from an unpublished romance, the "Manuscript found," written before 1812 by Solomon Spalding, a minister.—The Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 18, p. 843.

It has been claimed that the Book of Mormon was manipulated by Smith and Rigdon from the manuscript of a rejected romance written by Solomon Spalding in 1812, and stolen or copied by Rigdon when he was a printer in Pittsburgh. This manuscript was found in 1844 by President J. H. Fairchild of Oberlin College, while searching among some old documents for matter relating to the anti-slavery movement; and he says: "On comparison there was no resemblance to the Book of Mormon, except in some very general features; not a name or incident being common to the two." A verbatim copy of this "lost manuscript" was issued under Mormon auspices at Lamoni, Iowa, in 1885, and most candid authorities now agree that the evidence adduced for Rigdon's duplicity in the matter is of no conclusive nature. Even Stenhouse admits that those who knew him before he was a Mormon spoke of him in such a manner as leaves no room to doubt Rigdon's own sincerity in the Mormon faith and his total ignorance of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon until after that book was published.—The National Encyclopedia of American Biography, vol. 7, p. 395, article, Sidney Rigdon.

Aside from the theory of divine revelation, there are two theories that attempt to account for the Book of Mormon.

It is claimed (1) that internal evidence shows it to have been written by Smith himself: (2) that it is identical with the "Manuscript found," a romance by Solomon Spalding, a Congregational minister (1761-1816), said to have been copied and communicated to Smith by a printer named Sidney Rigdon. The second theory has been called untenable because the "Manuscript found" in the archives of Oberlin College, bears small resemblance to the Book of Mormon.—Nelson's Encyclopedia, vol. 8, p. 287.

The missionaries proceeded to Northern Ohio, then almost a wilderness, where Pratt presented to his former pastor, Sidney Rigdon, a copy of the "Book of Mormon" published several months before. Up to that time Rigdon had never seen the book, which he was accused of helping Smith to write. The "Mormons" are equally emphatic in their denial of the identity of the "Book of Mormon," with Spalding's "Manuscript found," now in Oberlin College: they quote in this connection James H. Fairchild, president of that institution, who, in a communication to the New York Observer (February 5, 1885), states that Mr. L. L. Rice and he, after comparing the Book of Mormon, and the Spalding Romance, could detect no resemblance between the two, in general or detail.—Catholic Encyclopedia, vol. 10, p. 571.

The quotations from the Encyclopedia Britannica and the New International are from the last editions. Previous editions upheld "The Spalding story." I can not say as to whether the extracts from Nelson's and the Catholic Encyclopedias are from the very last editions or not. The extract from the National is from the edition of 1897. The work is published by James T. White & Company, New York.

The public mind, unfortunately, has not altered regarding the Manuscript Found. It still clings to "the old idea." Neither are our people generally aware of the change that has taken place in standard literature. The Saints, in the main, and some of our debaters, too, still depend entirely upon our own publications for proof of our position.

The ensuing correspondence, to which the writer was a party, is herewith submitted:

FORT BIDWELL, CALIFORNIA, February 8, 1899.

PROFESSOR WRIGHT,
Oberlin, Ohio.

Dear Sir: I have a copy of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, dated April 8, 1896. It contains one of a series of articles in regard to the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints held at Kirtland, Ohio, that year. The reporter, Mr. George H. Gordon, says of you: "Professor Wright of Oberlin was in Kirtland Monday afternoon. He delivered a lecture in Willoughby the same evening. Professor Wright came to examine the temple and get certain information to place in the archives of his college relative to the history of the Latter Day Saints. Professor Wright said the Spalding Manuscript, which, for forty years, was believed by some to be the work that Joseph Smith copied the Book of Mormon from, is among the archives of Oberlin College. He says the belief about the Book of Mormon being copied from the Spalding Manuscript is absurd. He says there is absolutely no similarity in the two documents."

Is the above representation of your position in relation to the Spalding origin of the Book of Mormon correct? Will you kindly inform me if it is or is not? Is it true that the Spalding Romance is in the archives of Oberlin College? Is it also true that it doesn't resemble the Book of Mormon? I am anxious to get the truth in regard to this matter. The public should be correctly informed about it.

Yours respectfully,

A. C. BARMORE.

The following is the reply which I give verbatim, including the letterhead:

G. Frederick Wright,

Professor of the Harmony of Science and Revelation,

OBERLIN, OHIO, February 15, 1899.

MR. A. C. BARMORE,

Fort Bidwell, California,

Dear Sir: Yes: the Solomon Spalding manuscript is in the archives of Oberlin College. The only resemblance between it and the Book of Mormon is that both books deal to a considerable extent with the supposed movements of the prehistoric Indian tribes. The manuscript was discovered by President Fairchild, a few years ago. It has been faithfully copied and printed by the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," at Lamoni, Iowa. By writing to them you can get the volume for a small sum, (not over fifty cents), which will give you the circumstances of the discovery and a verbatim et literatim printed copy from which you can judge for yourself.

Yours truly,

G. FREDERICK WRIGHT.

Without further comment the foregoing matter is presented for the consideration of HERALD readers.

A. C. BARMORE.

Of General Interest

CATHOLIC SHRINKAGE IN THE CITIES

Many who consider the cities the strongholds of Catholicism in this country may be surprised to find a Catholic priest writing in the current Ecclesiastical Review (Philadelphia) in much the same strain as those Protestant clergymen who also deplore the unsettling effect of the city upon religious faith.

But this Catholic writer does not stop at noting the inevitable tendency of city life to undermine religious belief. He actually makes the unqualified statement "that there are no city Catholics": meaning "that a population of city Catholics left for three or four generations, without any recruits whatever from country districts, would certainly be in the last stages of irreligion and indifference; that for the most part the splendid examples of piety and practice which we witness in our city parishes, if examined one by one, will be found to be of people who either come from the country themselves or of the children of those who have come from country districts; and generally that the faith and piety of a Catholic residing or brought up in a large city are in proportion to the degree in which the country spirit has been operative in the home in which he was reared." These statements are the product of ten years' service in a city parish, where the population was constantly changing and a careful census was kept of all parishioners. The results were so astonishing that a survey of conditions in other cities both here and abroad was made. And the same conditions were found to exist.

The writer in The Ecclesiastical Review, who prefers to remain anonymous, found during his years of investigation only five or six cases "of a faithful, devout adult Catholic, both of whose parents were born and reared in a large city." He found that almost always at special services "every head of a family was of country birth." In the parish school "the boy to whom the teacher would call our attention, dwelling upon his punctuality, his faultless behavior, his piety, we found invariably to be a child of parents not many years removed from their country home either in America or Europe." In cases of marriages between a city-bred youth and a country girl and vice versa, the partner of country rearing would be the more devout and the one responsible for the religious training of the children. Moreover, "it is the young men and women in the old Catholic families of the cities who are contracting mixed marriages" with non-Catholics.

It was found difficult to keep up church societies in a parish made up of city people. With the advantage of the presence of the great Catholic churches, schools, and institutions, and considering that so much of the best blood of the Nation finds its way to the cities, Catholics might expect to recruit their clergy and religious communities largely from city children, but the fact is that the great majority "always came from country places." To the objection that America being a young country, its cities must necessarily be made up of country people or their children and grandchildren, the writer finds an answer in his study of immigrants. Every Catholic pastor, he remarks, "deplores the religious indifference of Catholics of Irish names who come from England. It is not the difference between Ireland and England, but the difference of country and city." For these Irishmen or their fathers left Ireland to work in English cities, and these cities did their work. So this priest comes to the "alarming conclusion," in this age of great cities, that

No family leaves the country without certain danger to the faith of posterity. It is not a matter of chance, where some improve and some deteriorate. There are no class of people, no system of training, no conditions of life, which seem proof against this inevitable result. No matter how fervent be the father and mother who take up their abode in a large city, their grandchildren, or at the very furthest their great-grandchildren, will certainly be lost to the faith. The only possible check on this speedy destruction will be in cases where their children or grandchildren choose people of country training for their life partners.

Now, if all this be true, have we priests any greater work of zeal than that of keeping our Catholic people in country districts? Have we any greater evil to contend with than the tendency at this moment of so many people of all classes to rush to the city? We are armed against what we call the great evils of modern times—alcoholism, socialism, divorce, the public school, mixed marriage, race suicide, degeneracy of the poorer classes. Our pulpits ring with denunciations of these evils; our Catholic press expends its best energies in warning our people of these dangers; we organize to combat them. It hardly occurs to us that it is only our city Catholics who have anything to fear from them. Not even one of these dangers threatens the population of a country parish, nor do we seem to realize that urging a Catholic to exchange the country for the city is landing the poor fellow face to face with all these dangers.

A study of conditions in European countries like Italy, France, Belgium, Bavaria, and Ireland proves the same thing. The country people become indifferent after they come to the city. It is found true in such Catholic cities as Lyons, Bordeaux, Marseilles, Naples, Venice, Rome, Florence, Munich, and Bruges. And what of Dublin, the center of Irish Catholic piety? Here the investigator found the congregations swarming the churches every day and every hour. At first he almost hoped that an exception could be found to his theory. But he "learned that the backbone of every congregation in Dublin was made up of a class who, if they themselves had not come from the country, their parents had." One pastor remarked: "Cut off the immigration from country districts to this city for twenty-five years and our churches would be empty." In Ireland,

The clergy throughout the country are doing everything in their power to prevent emigration, the reason being that so many who left home in the fervent practice of religion lost their faith, in America. We took the liberty of saying to them: 'Is it because they went to America or because in America they located themselves in cities?'

If what he maintains is true, asks the writer, in conclusion,

What is to be the future of our own country, whose Catholic population is mostly to be found in the large cities? What of the tide of emigration, millions of Catholic people leaving their simple rural surroundings in Ireland or Poland or Italy or Malta, and condemning all their posterity, within a few generations, to inevitable loss of faith in an American city? What of the good Catholic families lately arrived from country districts, and at present the very life of our city parishes and the consolation of their pastors? Are their grandchildren, or at most great-grandchildren, to have all wandered from the fold? Gladly, therefore, would we find that we are wrong.—The Literary Digest, January 16, 1915.

* * * * *

BILLION-DOLLAR BALANCE

[The following, appearing in the press of the country on July 27, will be of interest to our statisticians.—EDITORS.]

Washington, District of Columbia, July 26.—Exact figures of the record-breaking American export commerce for the fiscal year ended June 30 show the trade balance in favor of the United States—the greatest in its history—was $1,094,422,792, an increase of $623,800,000 over the year preceding, and $428,000,000 more than the best previous record, made in 1908.

Exports totalled $2,768,643,532, an increase of $404,000,000 over the preceding year. Imports were $1,674,220,740, a decrease of $219,700,000.

The gold movement, which reflects the effect of the war shows imports of $171,568,755, and exports of $146,224,148 as against $66,538,659 imported and $112,038,529 exported the year before.

---

The Staff

AUDENTIA ANDERSON, OMAHA, NEBRASKA

August Message

We approach our August message to the musicians of the church with a marked degree of reluctance, for the information which we had hoped to have and to give to them at this time, relative to the music selected for the use of graded choirs, and also that intended for use at next General Conference, has not reached us up to date, and we can not wait another day. But we are trusting that those having the matter in charge will compensate for the delay by sending it direct to the HERALD Editors, that no disappointments may follow the promises made last month.

We are pleased to note the great activity and interest being manifested in the cause of music in many localities. Brother Evan Inslee has at last materialized one of his long-cherished dreams, in the recent organization at Seattle, Washington, of a real live choir. We extend congratulations, and wish to say to the members, that it is a work of great consecration they have entered upon, one which, if properly magnified and developed, will tax the limit of their patience, faithfulness, and allegiance. However, we trust that in the discharge of their work as "singers in Israel," they, with others, will find that as they lose sight of self, and its interests, and hold themselves ever ready to respond to the call of duty, God himself will reward by the bestowal of his Spirit in mighty and comforting power.

It was our good fortune to reach our new home in Omaha in time to hear the concert given by the Council Bluffs Choir on the evening of Sunday, the 1st. In a way, this was a sort of "farewell" effort on the part of Brother Paul Craig, as the concert marked the close of his association with the Council Bluffs Choir in the capacity of director, at least for a time. The work will be carried on by Sister John Lentell, who before her marriage conducted this choir for many years. The concert was very good and inspirational, and showed what can be done in the way of uplift by an energetic body of singers. Sister Lorena Leeka, in a little discourse upon the art of music as a means of soul-expression, contributed greatly to the success of the entertainment. We are informed that the Omaha Choir gave a similar concert very recently, which is still spoken of in glowing terms. All success, we say, to the blessed singers who are also workers, and who "have the vision" of still more wonderful things!

We call attention to President F. M. Smith's message in regard to the organization of the church orchestra, which appeared recently in the HERALD and Ensign. We wish to strongly urge all musicians to get in line for this contemplated move forward, and soon we will have the instruments of brass, and of reed, and of wind, combining with the voices, in rendering tributes of praise to God on high at our big gatherings. He who gave the talents and who inspired their development, will surely be pleased with all offerings dedicated to him in a spirit of humility and service.

Let us enter into the work of the fall and winter with renewed determination to let nothing prevent our offering the very best of ourselves to the Lord along the lines of music and of song. Let us study. Have you noticed that God's word to us is not simply to sing and play at the church services, but it is to CULTIVATE! He seems particularly to desire that his people should have the uplifting and purifying experiences which come with a real study of the art, and not simply expecting us to sing his praises. The thought is here: God evidently recognizes the great value of the study for his people. He sees how it throws a safeguard around the young, refining their tastes, keeping them in good company, giving them the true spirit of sacrifice and of consecration,—all of these being elements so necessary in the character of the young Saint. So he says, "Cultivate the gift of music and of song"; and let us beseech of everyone who has the opportunity, or can make it, Do not neglect or ignore this repeated command of God! Its results and effects are far-reaching, and only the Master himself can rightly estimate the good which will follow, not only to yourself but to others.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, 2009 Locust Street.

---

Coordinating Musical Interests

A serious study of conditions as pertaining to our choirs and welfare musically in the church has forced me to a number of conclusions, which I present for earnest consideration.

One of the ideals of the choir movement is to enlist every individual who has the desire to sing, and those who have become efficient instrumentalists, to engage in a service that is destined to produce beautiful as well as wonderful results, if we proceed in our endeavor with the spirit of humility. And our correspondence and travels over a large part of this country have revealed the necessity of a choir movement.

In the majority of the branches of the church the choir is the most neglected institution, and it does not surprise me in the least that such is the case, when the priesthood, the Sunday school, Religio, and regular church services actually demand our constant attention if we are as faithful as most of us desire to be. But withal, we must have our choir, and, by the way, the choir means: "A body of singers selected to lead the congregation, and it is a school where the music of the church develops and grows for the worship of God and the edification of the people, and by its beauty and grandeur develops nobler thoughts." If such is the case, what are we studying in our choir school, and presenting to the church from Sunday to Sunday?

It is just this last thought that did set the wheels of the choir movement in motion, and here I can enter another ideal of the movement, and that is, uniform music. Until we could learn the musical status of the church we were obliged to use a grade of music most of which we since have found to be far too difficult for the average choir to handle. Hence the establishment of a graded course, which we feel will be welcomed with joy, as it will be an incentive for the forming of choirs where none exist to-day.

This course was inaugurated by a meeting of the choristers of the Middle West, and it was our intention to announce the works selected for our use in this column, but on second thought it has been decided to issue same in printed bulletin form. A number of these bulletins will be sent before September 1 to every district chorister appointed up to date, and will contain full information as to the procuring of the music listed.

It is hoped that every branch in the church will respond to this movement of coordinating the musical interests of the church.

ALBERT N. HOXIE.

Onset Music

It was indeed a great treat to witness the enthusiasm of the Massachusetts District Choir at the Onset reunion, which has just closed after a successful two weeks of outdoor life. Several weeks of preparation in the various branches of the district formed a basis for the serious work musically attempted at the reunion.

Seventy-five voices rendered the oratorio "Olivet to Calvary" the first Sunday in August, assisted by fifteen members from the New York and Philadelphia District, who had journeyed to Onset to take part in this production. The solos were beautifully interpreted by Sister Elenora Whiting, district chorister of Massachusetts, Elder August Koehler, and Tom Fielding. The chorus work was splendid, and deserving of praise for the close attention given to the study and rendition of the beautiful work.

It was a great pleasure to conduct this effort, and it is to be hoped that the Massachusetts District will continue to respond to the urgent appeal to come up higher, and work in harmony with the choir movement. There is a wealth of material in this district, and we look for greater things to happen when all hearts feel to consecrate their talents to the great service of God.

A. N. H.

Philadelphia Notes

Special music was rendered by the choir at the Children's Day services in Philadelphia recently, who were ably assisted by Sister Ethel Kinnaman and her friend Miss Kavanaugh, both of whom were singing with Prior's Band at Willow Grove. Sister Kinnaman has won fresh laurels in the musical world, and her voice has shown remarkable improvement, especially in these last few months of study with Percy Hemus. It was a rare treat that these accomplished artists afforded us.

In anticipation of our study of the oratorio, The Messiah, this fall, the choir went in a special car to Willow Grove to hear a performance in this work by the Philadelphia Choral Society, under the direction of Henry Gordon Thunder, and accompanied by Victor Herbert's Orchestra. The performance was greatly enjoyed, but no less the ride to and fro, with the pranks of our merry cut-ups, and the ringing songs of Zion.

It is expected that fully a hundred voices will enlist for the fall work, which will be the most interesting and inspirational ever attempted.

A. N. H.

Line from Lamoni's Choir

What does the word choir mean to you, or how do you regard it? To some it means a few or many people who sit in the fore part of the church as a rule, and when their time comes, get up and perform awhile; then are seated, and afford you fields for criticism of their dress, actions, beauty, etc.

To others the choir would be missed because they occupy a portion of the time, making it a little more interesting, yet they do not feel that there is much to choir work.

Others really feel the choir helps them to worship the God we adore. This is the true mission of the choir.

Now there are singers who have good voices and can sing a selection through without making a mistake, so far as notes are concerned, but who can not and do not reach the heart of the listener, because the feeling or expression is not there.

Ah, music has its charms, and when properly rendered has its mission in the church and service of God. The thought is, then, that each choir member should realize that there is more for him to do than to hit or reach a certain note at the proper time. Put the whole soul into it and rejoice in the hallelujah chorus; in softer tones, sympathize with those in grief, careful to make the words so clear and plain that all may know what is being said. Can we accomplish all this in our own strength? No; we should not expect to. The writer's heart has been touched more than once when every head had been bowed while one implored the God above to bless our musical efforts.

Lamoni's choir, under good leadership, is trying to heed the admonition to improve our talents and to "sing with the Spirit."

Again, Is faithfully rendering our hymns and anthems on Sunday the whole mission of the choir? We say, Nay. Let love lead the way. Comfort and cheer the aged, or visit the homes of the afflicted; make a trip to places where the singers are few; forget not the prison, or any place where good may be accomplished by music.

Remember that the faithfulness of each member is what cheers the chorister and makes the army of singers strong.

One thing is certain, and that is, in trying to make the congregation feel the Spirit of our song, we should select such music as would appeal to the greater number present.

Why need we wear long faces? We do not. We, as the Lamoni Choir, pride ourselves on being "a jolly bunch." Many are the good times we have. It was only last week we went to a neighboring town to give the cantata "Daniel," and while there such a storm came upon us that it rendered it impossible to come home in the autos, even in the morning. The people of this place, Pleasanton, Iowa, are lighthearted and hospitable, and made us feel at home; so our stay there was very pleasant.

We would like to tell some of the jokes told and pranks played, but it would take up too much space. Suffice it to say that not one of the fifty who made the trip had any regrets. The men with their autos came home the next morning, while the rest came home on train. The experiences of that night will long be remembered by us all. We are ready for another outing, and to give others the benefit of our song, for such occasions are what put the ginger in the life of our choir, and awaken our souls.

We would like to mention the letter received from Sister Tilton, one of our former choristers. She can't forget us, even though she now lives in the Dakotas. She mentions the fond memories she still holds of our good times. It does us good to hear from old friends. Did you ever think of sending word back to the choir you have left, and your letter to be read before all? Or, on the other hand, did the choir ever stop to think of the joy and comfort a card from each might take to a sick member, or one deprived of the privileges they once had?

The choir as a willing body can drop many a diamond for saddened hearts to pick up, while they little realize it.

May God bless all the musical friends in the church, and may they ever be willing to use their time and talents for the advancement of the Lord's work.

We also have an enthusiastic junior choir with by-laws and officers complete, Brother Harold Burgess in charge. They are doing fine work.

The best wishes from the Lamoni Choir.

REPORTER.

God is the fountain whence
Ten thousand blessings flow;
To him my life, my health and friends,
And every good, I owe.—Selected.

There where turbid waters fall apart
From hidden depths of tangled ooze and mire,
The tall, white lily lifts its golden heart—
Soul, shalt not thou aspire?
—Mary Elizabeth Blake.

Letter Department

Of Passing Moment

NUMBER 4

So we left the tares and the garden. The work of preparation was soon accomplished, and together with my host we left for the new-born pleasure of an automobile trip around the great Kansas City.

Independence was soon left behind. Having boarded the street car, we covered the ten miles that brought us to the city in about an hour. Arriving at the city, I was introduced to our genial brother, Elder Joseph Tanner, the pastor of the First Church in that city, who took me through the church, and pointed out the several rooms where the church met. The Sunday school and Religio Society, and the Woman's Auxiliary all have their places in this very interesting branch of church work. The chapel itself is a very neat and comfortable edifice, and ought to attract the people to our cause. I shall have more to tell you of this in my next visit.

The automobile was awaiting us, and we commenced our trip. The day was cold, therefore much of the pleasure was thus taken out of our holiday, but we enjoyed the ride and the beauties of the city all the same. The season was backward, and the "fig tree" and all the trees had not yet put forth their buds or leaves. But the boulevards were there just the same, and truly the city is laid out with splendid design, all the points of the compass being fully represented, so that when it is necessary to direct anyone in a given direction, it is a block north, or south, as the case may be.

This city is known for its fine boulevards. Its reputation is fully justified, for they represent the most modern art in the work of surveying. These boulevards are adorned with some of the most artistic buildings that it has been my pleasure to behold, and I am of the opinion that we shall have to travel a long way to find their equal. Kansas City is indeed a great city, and its people have accomplished some wonderful feats in the way of buiding and designing to make the city what it already is.

After the trip was over, we were put down right in the heart of the city. I was treated to a visit to some of the large business firms, which my host took me through. Many things were strange to me, but also vitally interesting, because of the originality that was displayed in most all that was seen. The people were very commendable, clean and smart, and all the latest fashions could be seen without the trouble of a visit to Paris. I do not know but what some of them were in advance of the reputation of the French capital: however it may be, Kansas City is quite up to date.

Like all other great cities, Kansas City is very busy. You have to keep moving all the time, and the hustle is pressed upon you from every side.

The effect of this kind of business soon began to tell, and in order to keep up our vitality we had to consider the man inside—the furnace had to be replenished, so we looked up some fuel. My host was not a stranger, and as aforesaid, we adjourned to a very pleasant place, I think they call it a café. We found that all seemed to be unanimous, for there was no discussion on the proposition before us. It was a self-evident fact that the business was needful and efficacious, so it carried without a dissentient vote.

This idea gave rise to others. And I thought in my own mind that it would make quite an impression upon our minds and our hearts too, if we could realize more of the self-evident facts that confront us daily. It would help us at least to consider each other a little more than we sometimes do. I will leave the thought with you; it is simply the germ of an idea, and ideas are few sometimes, and the few don't live very long, well, not long enough to draw the old age pension. What think ye?

A few more sights were observed, and then we began to think of the return journey. We were soon speeding homeward, the objective point of all weary souls. "Home, sweet home," even if it is in the war zone!

At home we chatted about our trip to the city. The good hostess was anxious to know what the "new Englishman" thought about the American city, so the tale was told, and then we began to think of the morrow, which was Sunday. Our day had been well spent, at least that was my thought, and this was greatly impressed upon my mind when my host said, "I think that we will just have a tune from the gramophone." So he put on that beautiful record, "A perfect day," by Carrie Jacobs-Bond. These are the words:

"When you come to the end of a perfect day,
And you sit alone with your thought
While the chimes ring out with a carol gay
For the joy that the day has brought,
Do you think what the end of a perfect day
Can mean to a tired heart,
When the sun goes down with a flaming ray
And the dear friends have to part?"

"Well this is the end of a perfect day,
Near the end of a journey, too.
But it leaves a thought that is big and strong,
With a wish that is kind and true.
For mem'ry has painted this perfect day
With colors that never fade,
And we find, at the end of a perfect day,
The soul of a friend we've made."

I shall not soon forget the impression that was made upon my mind by those words. Can you wonder that I should ask for that beautiful song again? Oh! I have thought many times of the silence that reigned while the machine gave forth those wonderful notes of music. Every syllable seemed to have its special appealing effect upon the emotions, and I found myself when alone in the garden wrapped in thought, singing those magic lines, and finding a pleasure that seemed to sanctify the soul. Think of them, and if you have not already heard the music, get it, it will do you good. We parted for the night, to find sleep and repose.

Sunday, March 21, I visited the Sunday school of Independence. Oh! what a sight it was to see one thousand scholars gathered together. I met Brother Gurwell and he took me round and pointed out the several classes, both in the senior and junior departments, and also took me into the library and explained the purpose thereof. The reference library is quite a valuable one, as is also the circulating library, and the scholars should consider themselves very fortunate in having such a wonderful collection of reading matter with which to avail themselves. The order of the school was very good, and Brother Krahl, the superintendent, seemed quite at home with his work.

Both the departments have an orchestra, the senior being directed by Brother Charles B. Eaton, while Sister R. Brocaw is responsible for the directing of the junior. It is a pleasure to listen to the music. I felt quite proud of them, and I promised myself another treat before I left Independence. Through force of circumstances I did not get through the school this morning, but I have promised myself the opportunity next week. Rejoicing in Zion.

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

A Word for Our Sanitarium

I say our Sanitarium, for it belongs to the church, therefore every member of the church has a claim on it, and having a claim on it we should feel it a privilege to uphold it if in no other way than to speak a good word for it, especially since it was built by divine direction.

The object of this letter is to benefit church members who are ignorant of the real mission and purpose of this institution in our church (as I was until my sojourn there).

Prior to the time of my entering, I knew it was under the direction of the church and financed by the church, and a very good place for church members to go, were it necessary for them to enter a hospital. When I found that it was necessary for me to undergo an operation, I had no thought of any other place. Nevertheless, it still remained for me to find out the real purpose and worth of a sanitarium surrounded by church influences.

We all know it is a great privilege to have our elders come and administer to us in our homes, but it is a greater privilege to be able to call them at any time in an institution of this kind. What could be more encouraging to one of our faith than to have your physician say, "I will be glad to administer to you, if you like." Not only this, but the very atmosphere of the building vibrates with the thought of consecration.

The patient, sweet-faced nurses, with their faithful ministrations, for ever kept that thought before me—consecrated service.

Think what their careful three years course of training in this atmosphere is doing for them, and all who have and will come under their care.

I was not aware of the chapel services held every morning, and I will never forget how I felt when the sweet strains of "Never alone," sung by the nurses, came floating into my room, the morning I lay waiting for my operation. I was certainly in need of the comfort conveyed in "Remember I have promised, never to leave thee alone." It meant a great deal to me in that trying hour. Before I left I was privileged to attend chapel, and heard, besides the song and prayer, a lecture to the nurses by the physician in charge, which was again along the line of service.

Compare the atmosphere of this place with other institutions of a similar nature; and yet all the time there are people of our church who are entering other hospitals, I hope because they do not know the value of their own. One lady, not of our faith, told me while there that she had been in other hospitals, but she felt there was an atmosphere here that was soothing to her, and not found in other places.

There are those living near the Sanitarium who make almost daily visits, for the purpose of cheering and ministering to the sick, both in and out of the church. I have in mind Brother Garrett, for one, who always looked to me like an angel of mercy, when he would come to my door.

Although my stay in the Sanitarium marked a period of the greatest pain and suffering, yet altogether I look back on it with gladness, because of the pleasant associations and the profit to myself along the lines I have mentioned.

I speak of these things to encourage our church members in the support of this institution that is doing much good.

MRS. WALLACE H. BLAIR.

CHETEK, WISCONSIN, July 7, 1915.

Editors Herald: The reunion at Chetek, Wisconsin, has come to a close. The Saints have gone to their homes, and the event is a matter of history. Though the days of the reunion are gone, yet the influence is still felt.

We had a really good time. Everyone seemed to enter into the spirit of the time, and a saintly and an agreeable sentiment predominated. To this reunion came the following missionaries: G. R. Wells, F. G. Pitt and wife, G. W. Burt, E. J. Goodenough, J. W. McKnight, Lester Wildermuth, W. A. McDowell and wife, E. L. Whiteaker, S. E. Livingston, Leonard Houghton, and L. W. Fike.

The meetings were well attended, the sermons good, the instructions in the auxiliary work helpful. Many were the thoughts uttered that should inspire men to lead better lives. It is too bad that we can not retain the jewels. Largely the exact statements will be forgotten, but the sweet influence enjoyed by all will not be forgotten. The writer believes that such gatherings are but a foretaste to that which we are looking to in the future.

Brother Wells had the auxiliary work in charge. After his arrival one session each day was given over to that work. A committee was appointed to have charge of the children's hour work. This committee consisted of L. W. Fike, Brother and Sister Medley. We enjoyed the work very much, and are sure that it was helpful to the children. They entered into the work from the start with an interest. We interested them with suitable stories, with games, and then dramatized Bible stories. We would like to see this work carried on by others, and are prepared to give our experience in writing to those who would like to take the work up.

Brother and Sister Pitt were with us, and their presence was enjoyed. The lecture on the Holy Land with views was quite an attraction. Brother McDowell was in a field that has grown dear to him by years of service in this northern country. Many were the friends whom they met, and who were glad that they were with us again.

There were ten adults baptized, an addition which caused all to rejoice. Four, and I believe some others, were baptized just before the reunion.

During the reunion a paper was read each afternoon. The writer was the editor. In that paper were found the events and news of the camp, and the best things which were said in the various meetings of the day. At the close of the reunion a number wanted duplicates of our paper as a remembrance of our camp experiences. This might be tried in other places. It worked well here, and refreshed our memories on many things which we would have forgotten.

This paper was published under the name of The Chetek Reunion Searchlight. The editor offered a prize for the best name suggested for his paper. Many were the names that were suggested; the committee were puzzled to know which was best. They said all were good. One brother whose works had been in the dark, but were made known to the camp, suggested that the name be "Hot Shot." Sister Golden of New Auburn, Wisconsin, received the prize.

Yours in bonds,

LYMAN W. FIKE.

HAMILTON, MISSOURI, July 8, 1915.

Editors Herald: The Saints at Oakdale are trying to keep their lamps trimmed and burning. We have had an enjoyable time the last three Sundays. Last Sunday, our regular fast and sacrament day, we enjoyed the Spirit of God. The week before was our two-day meeting. The Saints of Kingston Branch and Far West Branch met with us, Brethren A. W. Head and T. A. Ivie being in charge. The Lord spoke to us through his servant, Brother Head, all enjoying the Spirit. The Sunday before, the three branches named met with the Kingston Branch in a two-day meeting, in charge of Brethren T. T. Hinderks and B. R. Constance. The Lord met with us by his Spirit. The branch officers of the three branches were admonished through Brother Hinderks to be faithful, to be standing ministers, through teaching, instructing and leading the Saints on in unity, love, and holiness. All are rejoicing in the good work.

We did not get to meet with the Far West Branch, on account of bad weather and bad roads. The three branches are talking of having a union meeting at least once a quarter. It is nice for the branches to be united and working together.

The Saints are anxious to have a few families of Saints move in. Two families by the name of Dawson, of near Dahinda, Illinois, are looking at the country. They are fine people. Their parents and brother located here a year ago last March.

Your brother,
J. T. FORD.

ALBIA, IOWA, July 11, 1915.

Editors Herald: I united with the church eighteen years ago. Elder Kephart baptized me. I have not heard the gospel preached for eight years. I try to live as near right as I know how. If an elder comes into our neighborhood I would like for him to call and see us.

Praying that God will bless all of the Saints everywhere, I ask that myself and family be remembered in the prayers of all.

Your sister,
MRS. JUNE BARNETT.

BELLVILLE, ONTARIO.

Editors Herald: My silence is not to voice my position so far as the interest of the work is considered. I have been a busy girl since I left Kansas City; and on my arrival in the East it spelled a continuous stream of work, but now that it is drawing near a time when I shall be returning to my home in Kansas City, I look forward to pleasanter fields in the old camping grounds, and I am happy to see our people taking such a keen interest in music.

It is my aim and effort, and it has ever been so, to be among those who are coworkers in this great wheel, and I only hope that it will be my pleasure to do some good for those who may be hungry for the opportunity in the school of development.

I wish to thank the many friends for all the prayers which have been offered in our behalf, and only hope mother and I can both be worthy of the support which has ever been given us. And to this end do I desire to labor.

Most sincerely,
MARIE RIGGS.

SARANAC LAKE, NEW YORK, July 13, 1915.

Editors Herald: As we are an isolated family, we write to learn if there are any other Saints near us. If so, we would be glad to hear from them. If an elder were to come this way, we would be pleased to have him stop with us.

Five of us are in the home department of the Sunday school and Religio and find the lessons very interesting. We have a family altar, and oftentimes enjoy the Spirit of God.

I am fourteen years of age, and would be pleased to hear from some of the young Saints. I have been in the church only since I was twelve years, being baptized by my grandfather, J. C. Hoxie.

Your sister,
DOROTHY HOXIE.

163 MAIN STREET.

JONESPORT, MAINE, July 14, 1915.

Editors Herald: Our noble cause is still onward along the coast of Maine. Several have entered the church of late. Brother F. J. Ebeling, president of the Eastern Maine District, is visiting several places and doing good to the cause. Everybody likes him. We are trying to help him what we can. We are enjoying fine liberty telling the old gospel story.

Our worthy Brother G. T. Griffiths, minister in charge, has been with us lately. The instruction we have received from him will never be forgotten. He set forth the place of each one, and suggested that we should have order in the church of the living God. His lectures on parliamentary practice were grand, everybody being benefited by them. He leaves for Boston to-day. May God be with him until we meet again.

It has been a cold and stormy summer so far, all along the coast.

Your brother,
J. C. FOSS.

BREWTON, ALABAMA, August 5, 1915.

Editors Herald: It is indeed a blessing to write to the many Saints through the HERALD. I am glad to say that I am engaged in this glorious work of Jesus Christ. I know that I am in Christ Jesus, because I love him and love the brethren. The love of Christ gives us all things. He not only gave the sheep eternal life, but he says that they shall never perish. He not only saves them by grace, but keeps them through faith by his power unto salvation, to be revealed at the last day. Enlightened by his word, comforted by his Spirit, chastened by his Father, he guides and guards them through peril and duty to the end; and the dearest assurance of the Saints is the pledge of Christ that whosoever is born of God overcometh the world.

The love of Christ never faileth, for nothing can separate us from the love of God, who are in Jesus Christ.

I pray with a sincere desire that the many Saints will join me in fasting on Friday before the first Sunday in September. My desire is that through the earnest prayers of the Saints I may be healed.

Yours in Christ,
MALCOM BOOKER.

CALGARY, ALBERTA, July 27, 1915.

Editors Herald: Realizing the urgent demand for more extended gospel work in our goodly land, and also the need of better accommodation for our conferences and reunions, the district has resolved to purchase a large tent for the purpose. At present the district has no financial worries, there being no money to cause any, but it would like to experience the feeling. The treasurer of district tent fund is Elder William J. Levitt, North End, Saskatchewan, who will gladly receive and give credit for moneys sent to him.

Here is an excellent opportunity of truly helping the latter-day work. The immediate result of your help will be made manifest right at home. Do your bit.

Oh, yes! oh, yes! The Redeemer's cause is grand.
We'll spread his gospel through our land,
But with praise alone we are not content,
Send on the cash and we'll get the tent.

WILLIAM OSLER.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLORADO, July 15, 1915.

Editors Herald: This finds me at the base of the great Rockies in quest of a return to health, having had tubercular trouble for some time. I was privileged to meet with the branch at their cozy chapel on North Prospect Street. It was communion day, and a goodly portion of the Spirit was enjoyed. This flock is presided over by our missionary, S. S. Smith. His wife is down with the same malady as the writer. They think, however, that her worst stages are over, the climate here agreeing with her far better than that of Arizona last winter.

Brother Ammon White, evangelist, and family have also located here for some time, rendering material aid in the branch and the regions round about.

In sickness and in health, I certify to the divine knowledge received concerning this work, and to the joy and the satisfaction received many times in seeking to teach others the beautiful way of salvation.

May we all live worthy to abide in the kingdom of God for ever and ever.

F. J. PIERCE.

EUCLID, ARKANSAS, July 15, 1915.

Editors Herald: I have been a reader of the HERALD for several years. Brother E. A. Erwin has just closed a fine series of meetings here, of twenty sermons. The Saints were made to rejoice in this glorious latter-day work, and Brother Erwin led five noble people into the water and buried them beneath the waves, three men and two women. Others are almost persuaded. Six children were blessed.

A business meeting was held and a brother was called and ordained to the office of teacher under the hands of Brethren Erwin and Moore. At our prayer and sacrament meeting God's Spirit was present, and the Saints were made to rejoice. Some outsiders shed tears. We have the promise that this branch may grow. We think that if Brother Erwin will return in September he will baptize several more fine people.

Truly God is blessing his servants with a good degree of the Spirit. The harvest is great and the laborers few. Let us pray that the Lord will send more laborers into the vineyard. We closed with large crowds.

We are taking up the Sunday school with a good interest.

Praying that the gospel may speedily be carried to all nations, and that Zion may be redeemed, I am,

Your brother,

HENRY B. TOWNSEND.

INGERSOLL, ONTARIO, July 15, 1915.

Editors Herald: It is said by divine authority that "experience worketh hope," and perhaps the episode of the few days just past will magnify the hope we possess, or, to say the least, enlarge that which furnishes a basis for the "anchor."

By unanimous consent, the city council of Ingersoll granted us the use of the city hall for a specified number of dates. Elder Mottashed, of London, secured this consent. One thousand bills were printed, and we immediately boarded train from London to this city to occupy the evening of the 8th.

Calling at the office of the Chronicle—a daily—to file notice of appointment, we discovered that the editor is one of the council, and the same member who offered the resolution granting us the privilege of occupancy. A change had come. The council was to meet that same evening; the editor had a resolution, and hoped it would go through, rescinding the former one. A battle was fought on the position of the Reorganized Church, there in his office, but, like the balky mule of the preacher's story, he was "established"—so was the council.

In company with Brother Hill, of Faldons Corners, we attended the council meeting, and when Alderman Elliott presented his rescinding resolution, the mayor called us to the front. We thought we realized the truth uttered near two thousand years ago by the Man of Galilee, "They will deliver you up to the council." (Matthew 10: 17.)

Reverend McLeod, of the Presbyterian Church, got busy after July 5 and in connection with Reverend Hill of the Methodist Episcopal Church, controlled the council. Reverend McLeod threw the bomb into the trench and retreated.

of the council were frank to confess afterwards. We sought in vain before the council for some allegation, some charge forming the basis of rescinding resolution, but the only thing offered was, "We have consulted experts, and concluded we will make a mistake if we let you in." The vote to rescind was "Yea" by all except the mayor, who quietly said, "You may record my name on the other side." The mayor worked all forenoon the next day to secure another building for us, but was unsuccessful. He told us to go on the street, which we did on Friday evening.

Locating ourselves on the Market Square—the King's Highway—we had a fine crowd. Elders Mottashed and Gray from London were there with billhorn organ and books. Elder Mottashed, in fine address, introduced, Elder Gray followed with good gospel remarks. We took the next opportunity and felt like talking—"The Golden Rule" from the Bible standpoint, free speech, toleration, and the rights of man from a patriotic viewpoint.

We just had to commend the mayor. We informed the people that when he recorded his name in favor of free speech, there was more genuine religion in the act than in a million clergymen using the town council as a "cat's paw" to pull chestnuts out of the embers—to deny free speech—to stab the constitutional rights of men. Political bees may be buzzing in the bonnets, and some may feel they must cater for public favor, but if the blind lead the blind, all will fall into the ditch together. Are the ministers afraid the law is so weak that a public speaker can "slip something over" and not be detected, or is it an evidence that they consider the public incompetent to judge, or think for themselves?

The purpose for which the hall was originally secured, was to give "Bible talks on prophecy, touching the eastern conflict."

Sentiments are outspoken against the action of the council and in favor of the mayor, and Saints. The mayor is a communicant of no church, but is a splendid impersonation of the rights of men, a magnificent specimen of twentieth century Americanism. We have not succeeded, to date, in securing a building; but we learn the council is on the stool of repentance. One councilman told me he was sorry because of what he had done. Maybe, if this repentance is genuine, the fruit thereof will work favorably to the cause, in the last analysis.

In the meantime, we are holding cottage services six miles southeast of the city, at the home of Brother Hill. We have nice services, and attentive, though not exceedingly large audiences. We think to secure the Foresters Hall here for Friday and Sunday evenings.

Great excitement prevails at Ingersoll over the "rescinding resolution," and we believe the heaven is working.

Hopefully yours,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

GRAND RONDE, OREGON, July 15, 1915.

Editors Herald: We have been at this place one year, and have no church privileges so far as our own church is concerned. There is a Catholic church a few rods down the road from us, but we are not much acquainted with Latin, so do not take as much interest in going there on Sunday as we otherwise might do. No doubt there is good said, but we can not understand it.

We have been trying to get a missionary here ever since we came, and just succeeded in getting Brother G. M. Shippy, of Vancouver, Washington, to come to this Indian reservation and hold meetings, and he certainly gave us some grand new thoughts. People who never heard the gospel before were interested in all he said, because it was new to them.

My husband has only been in the church two years. He was told through prophecy that if he were faithful he would live to see his parents baptized. He thought that this must be a mistake, for they never have been much inclined to attend church, although they are fine people, better than some who have their names on church records. We were in Canada at the time the prophecy was given. Shortly after we made arrangements to come here, as my husband's parents were here. I had never seen any of his people, and felt that they might blame me for his joining the "Mormons," as they honestly believed we were.

Until Brother Shippy came they had not changed their minds on this point. But after they heard a few of his good inspiring sermons they could see that we were not so far from being in accord with the Bible after all. They were both baptized the Sunday before Brother Shippy left. It seemed too good to be true, when we saw them coming up out of the water looking happy in entering upon the new life. We had been praying for this ever since we came here, and kept feeling as though it would be difficult to change them, as they were well up in years.

A Methodist woman was baptized the same day. Some of the Lamanite people were interested, and if Brother Shippy can come back this fall we are sure he will baptize some of them.

I ask the Saints to remember us in our isolated condition. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your sister,
MRS. AMY DEMING.

KNOX, INDIANA, July 21, 1915.

Editors Herald: I just closed a short series of meetings at a little place called Hibbard. Splendid attendance all through, good attention and interest. Packed house the closing night. A warm invitation to return. This surely will sound good when I tell you the meetings were held in an Evangelical church. It is a good-sized, modern church. The finest "bunch" of young people I have been privileged to meet for some time.

I occupy at Knox next Sunday. If I am not sidetracked by "fable venders," I will occupy in order named: Ora, Burr Oak, and Hibbard again.

On the side I have seen fishing (if I should tell you the length and number caught—well, you would call it a fish story), swimming, boating and have learned to drive a Ford.

I have just told the bright side.

O. R. MILLER.

News from Missions

Lamoni Stake

As will be remembered by your readers, Elder James F. Mintun and myself were appointed by the late General Conference to labor in the Lamoni Stake. Home affairs and the rainy weather claimed my attention at home until June 4.

On June 5 I joined Brother Mintun at Tingley, Ringgold County, Iowa, whither the gospel tent had been shipped, and the brethren had it pitched, and in the evening we began the tent services of the season.

The rainy season began, also; but notwithstanding the continued rains, we missed only two evenings, and no Sunday services, continuing till July 12, on which date we closed our services there and arranged to come to Creston, Union County, this being the county seat.

We can not forbear to state with what kindness the brethren at Tingley received and aided us in the work there. They These two clergymen are the "experts" referred to, as some stood by the cause faithfully, not being absent from any of the services, and by us in our labors. They do not number many there, but maintain a Sunday school, also a Religion home class. The families of Brethren Joseph J. Christiansen, Charles W. Lent, and William Shields, and Sister Butterfield represent the work there.

Brother Mintun baptized a daughter of Brother Shields while there.

Arriving here on the 15th inst., we set up the tent with the aid of Brethren Hall and Hammer, and began work here the evening of the 17th, and have occupied each evening so far, also the Sundays, without loss of time. There are only a few Saints here, but they stand faithfully by the work. The young Saints are attentive and faithful to the cause. We are blessed with liberty of the Spirit in our labors, for which we are humbly grateful to God.

The work has the interest of a number both here and at Tingley, beside Saints. It is our intention to be here till August 8.

The need of the hour for the entire church is a long, strong pull, altogether, in righteousness, temporally and spiritually, in the light of the divine law, for Zion and zionic conditions. Can we look on the world and its sad conditions now, and then fail to see why the Lord would have the church independent of every creature beneath the celestial world? Can the church live the celestial law, and really be otherwise? Come, Saints, what think ye?

Never were the influences of the world and of Satan trying harder to carry the world before them than now. Watchmen, on the walls of Zion, look abroad and see! Blessed is he that can see both sides of the picture. Let us look and learn and do right.

Your brother in Christ,

COLUMBUS SCOTT.

CRESTON, IOWA, July 31, 1915.

News from Branches

Delavan, Wisconsin

East Delavan is still on the map, and in bright colors. For some years we have been at a very low ebb as a branch. The larger portion of our membership have taken up their abode in Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, and California, and some have passed over to the land beyond.

At our district reunion one year ago Sister Lena Delap obeyed the angel's message. This gave Brother Albert Delap and myself new hope, and we felt that our efforts had not been entirely unfruitful. In January, 1915, Brother Delap, our priest, and Brother C. E. Gaylord, deacon, were called to the paradise of rest, and the greater part of the work devolved entirely upon my shoulders as teacher. At this time, one of our younger brethren, a son of Brother Delap, who had wandered away in the cloudy day, returned and asked readmission into the fold, and was rebaptized by Elder F. M. Cooper. At the present time he is making a commendable effort in the narrow way.

Two years ago we sent a plea to our district conference to send men over into Macedonia to help us. Brother L. O. Wildermuth came, and much good was accomplished. Brother J. O. Dutton also lent a helping hand. Later Brother Wildermuth returned and was assisted by Brother J. W. McKnight. They returned this spring after General Conference, when we held meeting for four continuous weeks, bringing the desired results, and five were baptized into the kingdom. Brother Lester Williams was ordained to the office of deacon.

The brethren, like the apostles of old, were busy both day and night, wielding the brushes when not preaching, giving our little building two coats of white paint. Their work is commendable, and their reward sure.

We are striving on with renewed energy and brighter hope. May the cause of Christ advance everywhere, and the final redemption of Zion come, is our prayer.

Hopefully,
F. M. BALL.

July 26, 1915.

CURRENT EVENTS

(Continued from page 788.)

in the first raid. The English have raided German territory and killed eight. Cancellation by European importers and representatives of the allies of wheat purchases aggregating two million bushels, for September shipment from American ports, and the unloading of two thousand horses on board vessels in Boston harbor for England, has caused considerable speculation in various quarters, reasons for these cancellations being unknown. It is reported that offers of separate peace by Germany to Russia have been rejected by the latter. Diplomatic efforts are being put forth to engage the Balkan states actively on the side of Russia and her allies.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Notices

Independence Stake, Stone Church, Independence, September 11 and 12. Every branch should be reported and represented. Statistical and ministerial reports, together with delegate credentials, should be in hands of undersigned not later than August 31. James Bunt, secretary.

Pittsburg conference and conventions, Glen Easton, West Virginia, September 17 to 19. Sunday school and Religio begin 2 p. m. the 17th. G. T. Griffiths will be present. James E. Bishop, president.

Eastern Colorado, Wray, September 4, 10 a. m. Two proposed amendments to district by-laws will be discussed. Election of officers. E. J. Williams, secretary, 1210 South High Street, Denver.

Convention Notices

Eastern Colorado Sunday School, September 2 and 3, business, 2.30 3d. Send delegate credentials to Agnes Massey, secretary, 2242 Emerson, Denver, Colorado.

Eastern Colorado Religio, Wray, September 2 and 3. Thursday evening, 7.45, joint Sunday school and Religio literary program; Friday, 9.30 a. m., joint prayer service; Religio business, election of officers 10; joint Sunday school and Religio round table, 7.45 p.m. Blanche Sampson, secretary, 571 Emerson, Denver.

Quorum Notices

FAR WEST ELDERS

At reunion, Stewartville, Missouri, August 22. Subject, "Cooperation." We have requested J. T. Ford and J. L. Bear, jr., to prepare papers, which will be followed by discussion. S. H. Simmons, president.

Requests for Prayers

Brother Ephraim Grim, Canton, Illinois, requests prayers. This brother is in poor health, and should be remembered.

Two-Day Meetings

Caseville Branch, Eastern Michigan District, September 4 and 5. Meals 20 cents; children under ten years 15 cents. Everyone welcome. Floyd W. Horton.

Married

SUMPTION-YARRINGTON.—At the home of the bride's parents, Lamoni, Iowa, June 17, 1915, at 9 a. m., J. Frederick Sumption and Edith Yarrington were united in marriage, R. S. Salyards officiating. After a choice wedding breakfast, the young people left for Colorado, to return to and make their home at Lamoni.

Notice, West Virginia

Those coming by rail to West Virginia conference and Sunday school convention, September 3 to 5, come to Cornwallis, West Virginia, on the 3d, morning or evening. Conveyance will meet trains if notice is given to Katie Ross, Cairo, West Virginia, Route 2, or B. Beall, Goose Creek, West Virginia. B. Beall.

Died

WATSON.—Cynthia, widow of Charles Watson, born June, 1842; died August 6, 1915, at Old Soldiers' Home, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Baptized in 1875, and was a true and faithful member. Funeral from the Old Soldiers' Home, by J. D. Stead.

HOOPER.—At Decatur, Michigan, July 7, 1915, Maybelle Jeanette Hooper; born at Decatur, Michigan, December 1, 1892. Mabelle was a graduate of the Decatur High School, of the State Normal College, of Ypsilanti, and of the literary department of the University of Michigan. She had been at home a little over one short week when the end came. Funeral from the home in Decatur; sermon by J. D. Stead.

SHIELDS.—Louisa Sophia Shields was born in Bolwurttemberg, Germany, February 10, 1844; died August 7, 1915, at Fulton, Iowa, where she resided after coming from Germany in 1866. Married John Shields, November 17, 1870. There were born to them 1 son, John W., 4 daughters, Lena Nabb, Mary Hayward, Martha Carter, Minnie, at home. Deceased leaves also 16 grandchildren, 2 great-grandchildren, 3 brothers, 1 sister. Baptized by Oscar Case. She was faithful, and loved the house of God above all else. She was a patient sufferer, but desired to be at rest. Services by John Heide, Saints' Church, Fulton, the house not holding all who came to show respect. Interment in Esgate Cemetery.

RUSH.—Alice J. Rush, died at Lyandon, Kansas, August 9, 1915, of heart failure and nervous trouble, aged 41 years, 6 days. Deceased was well until a few minutes before death, and passed over without suffering. She was the mother of 12 children, 2 passing over in infancy, the remainder with her husband being left to mourn. Sister Rush was baptized by T. C. Kelley. She was faithful and true to the faith until death.

MOCK.—Emma Wiggins Mock, daughter of Brother and Sister G. E. Wiggins, was born August 29, 1884; died July 26, 1915. Baptized October 30, 1898. Married J. E. Mock, October 2, 1904. Interment in Pleasant Hill Cemetery, near McKenzie, Alabama. Sermon by A. E. Warr, services in charge of G. O. Sellers. Deceased leaves devoted husband, son, father, mother, 4 sisters, 4 brothers.

WILLIAMSON.—Myrtle Baldwin Williamson, daughter of John and Margaret Baldwin, wife of W. J. Williamson, was born in January, 1878; died July 28, 1915. Baptized in October, 1890, by M. M. Turpen. Interment in Pleasant Hill Cemetery, near McKenzie, Alabama. Sermon by A. E. Warr; services in charge of E. C. Shelley. Deceased leaves husband, 2 children, 2 brothers, 2 sisters.

ENOCH.—Elmer E. Enoch was born at Carlisle, Ohio, November 11, 1864; died at Liberty Home, Lamoni, Iowa, August 8, 1915. Brother Enoch was noted for his integrity and industry; he stuck to his shoe bench till within about two weeks of his death. The last year of his life was one of sore affliction. He was always ready and willing to accommodate anyone of it was in his power to do so. He was a consistent member of the church. Wife and 2 children preceded him several years. He leaves 1 brother, 2 sisters, host of friends. Funeral in charge of R. M. Elvin; sermon by J. S. Roth, to a large and attentive audience. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

Tithing Cards---Something New

Cards like these are proving very successful. They encourage thrift and the saving of small amounts for this very essential fund.

1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1
5	$1.00	SUNDAY SCHOOL TITHING CARD															$1.00	5
5		For Use in the Schools of .....															5
5		ISSUED TO .....															5
5		as a temporary receipt for amounts indicated by punch marks. This money is to be credited as TITHING for use and benefit of															5
5		REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS															5
5		..... Agent.															5
5		..... School.															5
5	$1.00	(When card is filled the regular Bishopric receipt will be issued.)															$1.00	5
1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1	1

Sunday School Cards

This form printed on good, durable cards. Order No. T1. Prices: 10 for 10c, 25 for 15c, 50 for 25c, 100 for 45c.

Branch Tithing Cards

Note that this form of card is for five dollars. Strong card, convenient size. Order No. T2. Prices: 10 for 10c, 25 for 15c, 50 for 25c, 100 for 45c.

5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5	5
5	$5.00	BRANCH TITHING CARD															$5.00	5
5		For Use in the .....															Branch	5
5		ISSUED TO .....															5
5		as a temporary receipt for amounts indicated by punch marks. This money is to be credited as TITHING for use and benefit of															5
10		REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS															10
10		..... Collector															10
10		..... Branch															10
10	$5.00	(When card is filled the regular Bishopric receipt will be issued.)															$5.00	10
10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10	10

How to Use the Cards

The bishop or bishop's agent in your district will be glad to authorize some one in your branch or school, or both, to have charge of these cards. The subagent thus appointed will issue cards to anyone requesting them. When a contribution is made, he receives the money, punches the card to correspond with the amount, and the owner retains it until another contribution is made. When one card is filled, another is issued. When the card is filled the subagent remits the amount to the bishop or agent, then a regular tithing receipt is issued from his office direct to the owner of the card and he is credited on the books in the usual way.

Punch for Cards

We sell a neat and serviceable little punch for use with these cards for 30 cents, postpaid.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver, Assistant Editor.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter. Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
The Angel Message Tracts	785
Current Events	787
Notes and Comments	788
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
The Seventh-day Adventists, by Marcus Cook	790
Public Opinion of Spalding Romance, by A. C. Barmore	795
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
Catholic Shrinkage in the Cities	796
Billion-Dollar Balance	797
THE STAFF	798
Audentia Anderson—Albert N. Hoxie—Reporter.
LETTER DEPARTMENT	800
W. H. Greenwood—Mrs. Wallace H. Blair—Lyman W. Fike—J. T. Ford—Mrs. June Barnett—Marie Riggs—Dorothy Hoxie—J. C. Foss—Malcom Booker—William Osler—F. J. Pierce—Henry B. Townsend—S. W. L. Scott—Mrs. Amy Deming—O. R. Miller.
NEWS FROM MISSIONS	804
Columbus Scott.
NEWS FROM BRANCHES	804
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT	805

A New Book of Sermons

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER

By Elder J. S. Roth

The second addition just issued, revised and enlarged by the author. Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—knows that he is a very successful missionary. He has been in the mission field for thirty-five years, and is an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-eight of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor. Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet does not tire the hearer with too much monotony.

Quotations and citations have been verified. This book has been revised and enlarged so that the new edition has 556 pages of reading matter in it. The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book. Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely-arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c. Order No. 248a. Always send your order to the

Herald Publishing House

Lamoni, - - - Iowa

SERVICE

The word service is the watchword of the twentieth century.

The human family is awakening to the fact that they are indeed a family, and such relationship demands service to and for each other.

We desire to be of some service to you in a line in which we are peculiarly fitted—hence our new department.

It's this way:

There is a right and a wrong way of doing things—an effective and an ineffective way. We want to help you do your advertising or announcing in the right way, without cost to you. It is entirely free to our people.

The proposition is to get the most out of what you pay for printing. We want to show you how.

We have recently seen samples of advertising used by some people that were certainly unattractive, and could not command respectful attention. It often happens that your facilities for getting what you want are not good. The place you have your printing done may not be equipped for doing the kind of work you want unless you are able to specify exactly what you want and how it shall be done, and then they may not be able to handle it.

This Is Our Proposition

If you intend to do any advertising in your missionary or branch work, no matter what kind, just send us your copy, and without cost to you, we will promptly advise you, by personal letter, with careful suggestions as to the best way to get the results you want.

If you intend to advertise in any way to increase your business, send us a copy of the wording you want to use, or give us the idea as clearly and definitely as possible, and we will word it for you in convincing style.

It doesn't matter whether you have your printing done at the Herald Publishing House or not. We will give you the same careful attention whether you do or not. However, if you wish to have us give you the advantage of our extensive equipment and facilities, we will promptly quote you lowest prices delivered to your post office.

We are prepared to do this because we have on our force a brainy young fellow who has a complete course in advertising to his credit and is experienced in this work. He feels the true spirit of a Latter Day Saint and is willing to be at your service. Complicated work will receive the combined attention of the departments concerned.

ADDRESS

Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa
Ad Service Department

*****

A New Book

THE INTERPRETER

By Gomer T. Griffiths

A Revision of the "Exegesis"

containing more charts and information than the former book, also an illustrated chapter on offenses—law governing the same—procedure in church courts, and blank forms suitable to the same. The various quotations from the books have been carefully compiled and arranged, so that the instructions pertaining to each office are classified, to assist the reader in locating the duties of each minister from the president of the church to the deacon, also points out how the different officers are called and the manner of their ordination, thereby securing courtesy to whom courtesy is due.

Price .....50c

Have you heard of the old Spalding story from which the Book of Mormon was said to have been taken? Well, here is the Spalding story. Better get it and know for yourself. Only .....25c
Order 139.

Failures of Campbellism

A new tract by Elder E. E. Long. Reprinted from a series of twelve articles in HERALD of 1913. Logically presented and systematically arranged. Quotations verified. 139 pages. Order 217 .....20c

Objections to the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants Answered and Refuted

You can't take the time, neither have you the data at hand to be able to refute many of the so-called arguments against these two books. Brother J. R. Lambert has placed in book form facts and data to refute these so-called arguments. A handy book to have in your library. Order 148 .....40c

Braden-Kelley Debate

This book contains the full report of an eighteen-night debate between the Church of Christ (Campbellite) and the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. The work is a library in itself. Though it has been in print for several years it is still one of the best books published to show the stability of God's truth. Order 125 .....1.50

The Instructor

A book that is one of our very best sellers, and to see the book is enough to explain why it is such a favorite. This work is the result of Brother G. T. Griffiths' efforts and it has been of untold good. To the student, the busy man, and the investigator alike the book is of untold value. Subjects topically arranged.

Order 126 cloth .....75
127 Leather .....1.00
128 Flexible .....1.75

What Is Man

Is a book that should receive the careful study of every Saint. It clears away the fog of doubt with reference to the eternal verities of the future state of man. No better book on the subject of immortality. Order 140 .....50c

THE STORY OF THE BIBLE

Contains 168 stories, each story complete in itself and together forming a narrative of the Holy Scriptures. Profusely illustrated with color plates and halftones. Just what you need to put in the hands of your children. Book contains 752 pages.
Order Story of the Bible, cloth ..$1.50

COLORED POST CARDS

Graceland College, Saints' Home, Liberty Home, Independence church, Herald Publishing House, Lamoni church.
1 of each for 15 cents.
2 of each for 25 cents.
Order by number 172a.

COMPENDIUM OF FAITH is a work for the student. It is a collection of texts taken from the standard church works on a great many subjects. Also a splendid brief history of the Apostasy.

Order No.
141 cloth .....75c
141½ leather .....$1.00
174 flexible .....$1.00

The Moving Picture Route to California Expositions

You don't get half the joy of a trip to the Pacific Coast if you take a route that brings you through Colorado's scenic marvels at night, or dodges them altogether. It's a rare privilege to visit Colorado—to view its rugged grandeur, its almost bottomless canyons. It's a travel-mistake to overlook such scenery as this. You need not. The Burlington has planned your scenic pleasure for you. Its Grand Circle Tour to the Pacific Coast is so arranged that you are wide awake when you go through Denver, Rocky Mountain National Park—Estes Park, Colorado Springs, the Pikes Peak Region, Royal Gorge and Salt Lake; then Los Angeles, both expositions; two days on the ocean (meals and berth included to Burlington passengers) San Francisco to Portland; then you visit Tacoma, Seattle, Spokane; and come back via either Glacier National Park or Yellowstone Park. Positively, no other tour in the world like this—so filled with pleasurable excitement—scenic enjoyment—and satisfaction.

Tickets on sale daily. Let us talk this trip over with you—make suggestions based on your desires. We can plan to meet your perfect satisfaction—will supply you with beautiful, complete descriptive literature, maps, etc. If you are going to the Pacific Coast this year you simply can not afford to overlook the special advantages offered by Burlington Tours. Let us tell you all about them, and arrange reservation for you. Please call to-day or write or phone.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

Got your Burlington Route Poster Stamps yet?
Complete set 10 beautiful stamps 5 cents

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, AUGUST 25, 1915

NUMBER 34

Editorial

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

CHAPTER 3

REPENTANCE

Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.—Jesus.

Are you satisfied with your present mode of life? Are you satisfied with your past record? If not, the message of Jesus comes to you, first, in invitation, "Repent ye therefore, and be converted"; second, in warning, Except ye repent, ye shall perish.

GOD WILL WELCOME YOU

Be assured, at the very beginning, that God will welcome you, under the terms of his wonderful gospel plan. His attitude is one of invitation.

A popular, and so-called "orthodox" confession of faith says of Christ, "Who truly suffered, was dead and buried, to reconcile his Father to us."

Make no mistake, Jesus did not come to reconcile God to us. Jesus came to reconcile us to God. The attitude of God has ever been one of love and invitation.

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3: 16.

TO RECONCILE MAN TO GOD

God never hated man or assumed an aloof and vindictive attitude, that Jesus should come and live and die to reconcile him to man. Man went out of the way, and disobeyed, hated, and feared God. Jesus came to reconcile man to God.

And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to-wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself. . . . and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.—2 Corinthians 5: 18-20.

If you have the necessary faith to serve as a spring of action, and the good sense, grace, and courage to repent, God will receive you on the terms of his gospel.

THE RETURN OF THE PRODIGAL

Jesus put into imperishable story form the dramatic experiences of the prodigal son. Having demanded his patrimony of his father, this young man left his father's house and went into a strange country. There he wasted his fair inheritance in riotous living.

Presently there came a famine in the land. His heritage was gone. He was in dire want. So he joined himself to a citizen of that country and was set to feed the swine.

So low had he fallen, and into such want, that he would fain have eaten the filthy husks that had been wallowed over by the swine. But let the Man of Parables proceed with the tale:

And when he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger! I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants. And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him. And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son. But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet: and bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat, and be merry: for this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found. And they began to be merry.—Luke 15: 17-24.

THE ATTITUDE OF THE SON

The son had been, in a sense, insane. At least, like all sinners, he had been obsessed with folly. But at last he came to himself. He already had faith in his father. Next he began to repent.

At first his repentance seemed to be only because of his hard circumstances. The results of his course began to obtrude themselves upon his notice, and they were painful.

This probably is the beginning of repentance with many men. It is not in itself adequate. Probably with many, if indeed not with most men, a halt is first called in their downward course because of a fear of or dislike for the consequences of sin.

This frame of mind must lead to something higher, or true repentance can not ensue. It is at this point that the sense of a Father's love intervenes and leads to complete repentance.

With the prodigal son, the primary impulse to get away from an intolerable situation and back to a comfortable one was succeeded by genuine loathing for the sin that he had committed. He abhorred the state of ignominy to which he had fallen. He loathed himself in that condition. He was resolved never to return to his past course of life, not alone because retribution followed such a course, but because he now saw it in its true light, a thing to detest and forsake because of its very nature. His heart turned back to his father in love.

With the utmost penitence, humility, and sorrow, he returned to his father, willing to do his bidding in all things. Willing to become a servant; he was received as a son.

THE FATHER'S ATTITUDE

Never at any time had the father utterly cast him off. He had never ceased to love him. The father abhorred his folly and his manner of life. But when the son came to himself and returned with true repentance in his heart, and with confession on his lips, he received him with the utmost joy. These are among the things that Jesus taught in that matchless parable.

It was just before he related this parable that he declared: "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." (Luke 5: 10.)

Are you feeding on husks? Are you estranged from your Father in heaven? Have you wasted your fair inheritance? If so, why not come to yourself now? Repent. Turn from your present life. Trust your Father's love. Do his will.

WHAT WAS ACCOMPLISHED BY THE RETURN

The first great thing that was accomplished by the repentance and return of the prodigal was reconciliation to his father. An at-one-ment was effected. They were one again in spirit.

Note this well: The wasted years were not recovered. The wasted inheritance was gone. The past could not be lived over.

But the prodigal had returned to his father's house. He was again willing to include himself within the circle of that father's love. Reconciliation had obtained. He was separated from his sin. And, second great fact, mark it well, joyful thought, hope of all men, he was ready to make a new start. Yes, he was ready to make a new start. Are you ready to make a new start?

START FROM WHERE YOU ARE

Bourke is author of the truism, apparently absurd, really very wise and witty: "If we would go anywhere, we must start from where we are."

However much we may wish to be somewhere else, we must start from where we are. The prodigal made his start from the pig sty. It was not a nice place to start from; but it was necessary for him to start from where he was. That was where he was.

You may not be satisfied with your present condition as a starting point; but from there you must start. There may be some things that you have lost beyond recall, wasted years, energies, and means; but that can not be helped.

The question is, Are you ready for a new start? Are you willing to start now, and from where you are? Do you wish to be a true man or woman from here and now, henceforth? If so, on condition of true repentance, your Father is ready to meet you and welcome you with joy, and you will be in a position to make the most of the future.

Sorrow for the irrevocable past is only a part of repentance; to gird up the loins and press forward into as glorious a future as you can create for yourself, with God's help, is certainly equally important.

THE STORY OF THE SHASTA DAISY

Burbank took the seeds of a common wild daisy and planted them. When the plants springing therefrom grew up, he pulled up all but the largest two, and when they blossomed he plucked off all but the largest two blossoms. The seeds from these he planted, and when they grew he pulled up all but the largest two plants. When they blossomed he plucked off all but the largest two blossoms. From these he saved the seeds and planted them.

This process he repeated with almost infinite patience for twenty-five years, a quarter of a century, and then he had the great, white Shasta daisy. Burbank had only one short life. He was working with nothing greater than a flower.

God has eternity. He is working with immortal souls. If you will cooperate with him, in time, or in eternity, he will carry you forward to the very limit of your capabilities of development.

Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. (Philippians 3: 13, 14.)

FRUITS MEET FOR REPENTANCE

We can not emphasize too strongly the thought that repentance should be associated with a forward movement, with a change of living. Good works and

(Continued to page 813.)

JEWISH THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY STUDENT'S ANNUAL

We are in receipt of the Student's Annual for 1915 of the Jewish Theological Seminary, situated at 531 West One Hundred and Twenty-third Street, New York City. Besides the usual information regarding the seminary, the alumni, students, etc., there is considerable matter in this book of special interest to students of Jewish life in America. There are a number of leading and very interesting addresses. In his commencement address, for instance, Mr. Louis Marshall gives the following presentation of the aims of the institution:

In this institution, Judaism and Jewish scholarship go hand in hand. It strives to inculcate the precepts of our faith, to make our students courageous protagonists in its behalf, to equip them for the proper ministrations to the needs of the congregations to whose leadership they may be called, to qualify them to respond efficiently to the multifarious demands of modern Jewish communal life, in its American setting. It recognizes that the future of Judaism in this country, ultimately depends upon the younger generation, reared in an atmosphere of political freedom, educated in our public schools, constituting a living, breathing, palpitating part of American business, social and civic life, whose vernacular is the English language, whose allegiance is to the Government which has bestowed upon them the blessings and the protection of liberty, whose manners and customs are those of the people among whom they dwell and of whom they form an integral part.

The tenacity with which the graduates from this institution propose to cling to their religion and defend their sacred books is set forth in the following extraction from the address by President Solomon Schechter:

There is a story told by Lea in his admirable history of the Inquisition of Spain (a work that I recommend you all to read) of a Spanish gentleman, of gentle blood and Christian rearing, Lope de Vera. In his early manhood he had already delved deeply in Hebrew lore and was led thereby to embrace Judaism. This took place in the middle of the seventeenth century, when the Inquisition was at its height. What followed was, of course, that he was denounced to that tribunal. All efforts to secure his recantation failed. He finally even refused to argue with his accusers. He was subjected to scourging, which he endured unflinchingly and in heroic silence. For five years the long-drawn-out process was continued. To the repeated visits of the inquisitors his one and only answer and cry was "Viva la ley de Moïsen" (Long live the Law of Moses). The cry of this proselyte and martyr, for he died with unconquerable constancy at the stake, must be our cry. For Torath Moshe we must live, by it alone can we endure. Let the test of all your philosophy, your instruction, your inspiration and your action as teachers in Israel be this: Is it in accordance, can it be reconciled with the principles and teachings of Torath Moshe. If it can not, then whatever its subtle appeal may be, it can not be responded to. For this, now as in the past, has been the source and stay of our continued existence. And "May ye that cleave unto the Lord your God live every one of you this day."

Well may they cling to the teachings of the prophetic books, if they fail not to grasp the spirit thereof, for Jesus said: "They are they that testify of me."

There are also addresses by Honorable Jacob H. Schiff, Professor Louis Ginzberg, and in the back of the book reports of lectures and sermons, including: "Conditions of life as described in the Book of Job," by Jacob Bosniak; "Jewish communal government in Spain," by Rabbi Israel Elfenbein; "The two methods of religious education of children in the Bible and in the Talmud," by Julius Kaplan; "The place of emotion in Judaism," by Jacob Katz; "The bearing of the newly discovered papyri on biblical history," by David M. Shohet; "The rabbi and the press," by Mr. Samuel Strauss; "Pulpit and pew," by Mr. Sol M. Stroock; "The date of the Book of Joel," by Morris Teller. E. A. S.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

SEVERE STORMS.—A severe storm swept over Galveston and other coast towns of Texas on the 17th and 18th, resulting in loss of life estimated at something over one hundred, and in damage to property amounting to fifty million dollars. Twenty persons were killed at Saint Louis, Missouri, by heavy storms on the 20th and 22d.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Minor engagements between Carranza and Villa forces are reported at various points. Villa has accepted the plans of peace submitted to Mexican leaders by the United States and South and Central American republics, and will meet in such conference as has been proposed. Under new orders, the United States battleships Louisiana and New Hampshire have proceeded to Vera Cruz. An attack by Mexicans from across the international border near Brownsville on the 16th, resulted in one United States cavalryman killed and one wounded.

COLORADO LABOR TROUBLE.—Pending a review of said case, the Colorado State Supreme Court has granted a stay of execution of the sentence of life imprisonment pronounced by Judge Granby Hillyear upon John R. Lawson, labor leader held to be guilty of first degree murder in connection with labor troubles at Trinidad, Colorado, last May. The court also barred Judge Hillyear from presiding over pending trials growing out of strike disorders, on the contention that he was biased by reason of having been an attorney for coal mining companies.

"ARABIC" SUNK.—The Arabic, a British passenger vessel, with four hundred twenty-three persons on board, was torpedoed by a German submarine on the morning of the 19th off the southern coast of Ireland, and sank in eleven minutes; twenty-five passengers, including at least two United States citizens, being drowned. Ambassador Page has notified President Wilson that the Arabic was sunk without warning. There is at this writing considerable speculation as to what the Washington administration may do if it develop that the Arabic has been sunk as it now seems, in defiance of the late notes to Germany.

"FRYE" CASE.—The United States in the late note to Germany in the Frye case acquiesces in the German proposal that experts representing the two governments fix the value of the Frye, which was the original American proposal, damage to be paid by Germany. This agreement on the part of the United States is not to be understood as a concession that the Frye was lawfully sunk, and is to be finally entered into "provided also that an arrangement can be agreed upon for the immediate submission to arbitrate of the question of legal justification, in so far as it involves the interpretation of existing treaty stipulations, . . . so that this question of treaty interpretation can be submitted forthwith to arbitration pursuant to article 38 of The Hague convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes."

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Russian retreat continues, the Germans having taken important forts and railroad centers. On the western line comparative quiet has reigned. Minor Italian gains are reported. The allies have landed new troops on the Gallipoli Peninsula, where they continue to gain against the Turks. The Austrians were reported bombarding Belgrade the first of the week. German submarines have claimed nine British, two Spanish, four Norwegian steamers. The Germans announce that a small British cruiser and a destroyer have been sunk by German vessels. Rumania has refused shipment of German munitions across her territory to Turkey, and has ordered a more complete mobilization of her army. The war party in Greece has control of the chamber of deputies in its late organization. It is reported that the Bulgarian representatives have withdrawn from Constantinople. The Germanic powers have massed forces on the Balkan frontiers. The halting of a Norwegian mail steamer and the seizing of the mail on board by a German submarine, has been followed by protest and demand for the return of the mail to Norway. Dutch troops have fired on German Zeppelins flying over Dutch territory. News since the writing of this paragraph announce that by a clever ruse the allies have landed troops on the Gallipoli Peninsula, captured the main lines of communication between the Turkish forces and Constantinople, and endangered the entire Turkish force on the peninsula. It is also announced from London that in an engagement in Riga Bay the Russian fleet has sunk the German battleship Moltke, three German cruisers and seven torpedo boats. Italy has declared war on Turkey, which is expected to influence the Balkan states to join in with the allies against Turkey and her allies.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

LETTER FROM PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH.—Under date of August 10, President Frederick M. Smith writes from Stonington, Maine. He reports a good time at the Onset reunion recently closed. He expects to spend about fourteen days visiting neighboring branches in Maine.

MEETINGS AT CRESTON.—The HERALD editors are in receipt of copies of Creston, (Iowa), Plain Dealer of July 27 and 28, containing favorable mention of the meetings carried on at that place by Elders J. F. Mintun and Columbus Scott, together with brief reports of the sermons by the two brethren mentioned.

CURTIS-ROBERTS DEBATE.—Under date of August 13, Elder J. F. Curtis writes from Port Huron, Michigan. He reports just having closed a debate with W. G. Roberts. The debate lasted eight days, twelve sessions being held. The usual church propositions were discussed. The attendance was good, the average being about seven hundred, about eleven hundred being present the last evening. Brother Curtis was feeling well satisfied with the results. Outsiders were favorably impressed, and a number seemed about ready to unite with the church.

CHURCH EXHIBIT AT SAN FRANCISCO.—The First Presidency, working in connection with Apostle John W. Rushton of the Pacific Slope Mission, and assisted by Professor George N. Briggs, who has been in the employ of the United States Government at the exposition, has established a church exhibit in the Palace of Education, at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Elder James W. Davis, and wife, Inez, recently returned from the Hawaiian Mission, are in immediate charge of this exhibit. They have a supply of all the leading church books and publications, and a variety of tracts for free distribution, including the folders recently announced in the HERALD. They have the walls decorated with pictures of Joseph the Martyr, Emma Smith, his wife, and pictures of the various church institutions. These have been artistically framed by Brother Davis, who is something of an expert in decorative lines, and it is said that the picture display equals, if it does not excel, that of any other church exhibit at the exposition. Also they have a plaster cast from the bust of the late President Joseph Smith, made by Mr. Dreyer, of Kansas City. In this way they are able to come in contact with thousands of visitors, talk with them, explain our church beliefs and positions, and give them such literature as may be deemed advisable. They also have a register and will be glad to have any of the Saints who are visiting the exposition call upon them and register. They will be found in the Palace of Education. The Saints everywhere, and particularly those who are visiting the exposition, will probably be interested in this announcement.

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

(Continued from page 810.)

obedience to God are the natural fruits of repentance.

To the multitudes that came out to hear him preach, John said: "Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance." (Luke 3: 8.)

Jesus himself took up the message proclaimed by John, and, announcing the kingdom of heaven, commanded the people to repent (Mark 1: 14, 15; Luke 24: 46, 47). The apostles carried the message everywhere with them (Mark 6: 12).

Paul said to Agrippa:

Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision; but shewed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance.—Acts 26: 19, 20.

It will be seen by this that the message was to those who would believe, turn to God, and do the works meet for repentance.

THE CHIEF REQUIREMENTS

In considering the things required of man and the things required of God to effect a reconciliation, Wright makes this illuminating statement regarding God's chief demand:

Analyzed, the demand seems to be: (1) a turning from sin, a change of mind, of attitude, of purpose; a repentance; a conversion; (2) the acceptance of a righteous or new nature as a guarantee of righteousness for the future. This second demand, so often overlooked as a necessity of the atonement, is quite essential as the first.—Problem of the Atonement, p. 16.

RESTITUTION WHERE POSSIBLE

It goes almost without saying that true repentance will be accompanied by an effort to make past wrongs right. The law given through Moses required that where one had defrauded another he should restore that which had been taken unjustly, adding to the principal "the fifth part more." (Leviticus 6: 1-5.)

Zaccheus declared, "If I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold." (Luke 19: 8.)

Of course there are many cases where it is impossible to make restitution. In such instances the matter must be left with God for adjudication, trusting to his divine mercy, as in all instances; and if the matter be one between man and man, though restitution may not be possible, human reconciliation and forgiveness should be sought.

A PREREQUISITE OF BAPTISM

On the day of Pentecost Peter addressed a most remarkable congregation. He faced the very men who had consented to the death of Jesus. He faced mockers who had said that the saints were all drunken. He faced men who would not hesitate to kill him and his associates.

But endowed with that power from on high that Christ had promised them, he preached such a wonderful discourse that those men were pricked in their hearts and stood self-condemned, crying out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?"

Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2: 38.

Peter told them what to do to be saved. They already believed. The next step was to repent. Repentance was to be followed by baptism, in its logical order, for the remission of their sins, and then the gift of the Holy Ghost was to be received. All this is in harmony with Paul's enumeration of the principles of the gospel of Christ:

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.—Hebrews 6: 1, 2.

THE GOSPEL MIRROR

The Apostle James uses this remarkable language:

Wherefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls. But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed.—James 1: 21-25.

"Blessed are they that DO." (Revelation 22: 14.) But do not overlook the figure of the mirror. In the gospel of Christ we get a full, fair vision of ourselves as we are. Robert Burns said:

Oh, wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursel's as others see us!
It wad frae monie a blunder free us,
And foolish notion.

Infinitely more important is it to see ourselves as God sees us. Having been granted such a look into the gospel mirror, how foolish to go away and forget, failing to rectify the defects seen; like a man who, looking into a natural glass, sees his face soiled and sooty and his clothing unpresentable, and then, forgetting his condition, goes happily out into the society of the clean and decent.

AROUSING DISCONTENT

This glimpse at ourselves as we are arouses discontent. The sinner sees himself as he is, black, perhaps, with most loathsome immoralities, deformed and all but ruined by excesses.

Slavery of every kind leaves its unmistakable traces in the features and form, as in the "Man with a hoe," immortalized by Markham:

Who loosened and let down that brutal jaw?
Whose was the hand that slanted back that brow?
Whose breath blew out the light within his brain? . . .
Hell has no form more terrible than this.

The man with a hoe must see himself as he is before he even desires to be free. No man can be free who is satisfied with slavery. Discontent must be aroused. Discontent with self is the essence of repentance.

Discontent aroused by a look in the gospel mirror might quickly give place to black despair. But here enters the love of God with the gospel of hope, the "perfect law of liberty." Faith in God, repentance from dead works, regeneration in the waters of baptism, these set men free, and the Holy Spirit guides them on to all truth.

Paul enlarges on the mirror simile used by James; for this marvelous gospel mirror has another quality. It not only shows me to myself as I am; it also shows me as I may be. It reveals to me the man that I may become under God's divine direction:

But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. Therefore, seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not; but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty.—Paul.

QUIT YOURSELVES LIKE MEN

Are you a man? Assert your manhood then.
Break off from evil ways beneath a man.
They do not contribute to make you men.
Shame! Do not say, "I can not"; say, "I can."
Are you a woman? There is the same need.
Behold the little ones are round your knee,
To all your words and actions they give heed,
And imitate with aptness what they see.
Are you a young man? Oh, then while the light
And dew of life's sweet morn is round your path,
Serve ye its Giver in your fresh young might.
For lo, his word a thousand beauties hath.
Are you a maiden? Truly serve the Lord
Before your friends and brothers; make them know
The power of purity in his great word:
Your influence is large, for weal or woe.
Do you love wisdom? Who so wise as he?
Or poetry? Come, you will be at home
With all things fair and beautiful and free.
Do you love wickedness? Then do not come.
From Noah down all prophets cried repent;
And I of passages might find a score
To prove the doctrine. But my time is spent;
And all that I might say was said before.

—David H. Smith.

Note.—The next chapter will be devoted to baptism in water by immersion: A discussion of the great divine commandments, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; and "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Original Articles

THE SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS--PART 4

BY MARCUS COOK

TILL ALL BE FULFILLED

Adventists refer to Matthew 25: 18: "For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled."

There they tell us that the law is as lasting as heaven and earth, and more so, because heaven and earth shall pass away, but the law never.

But they overlook the clause, "till all be fulfilled." When was the law fulfilled? "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to everyone that believeth." (Romans 10: 4.) "Wherefore then serveth the law?" It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made." (Galatians 3: 19.)

So since the law was fulfilled, that it was in force only till the seed (Christ) should come, so this text loses its force as they apply it. But they quote the next or nineteenth verse and apply it to the ten commandments.

Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven.—Matthew 5: 19.

If the above applies to the ten commandments at all the context would show that such application would be limited within the clause "till all be fulfilled." The next verse says:

For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.—Matthew 5: 20.

Now the Pharisees were Jews and zealous of the law, for in it their righteousness consisted. See Romans 2: 17, "Behold, thou art called a Jew, and retest in the law, and makest thy boast of God."

Paul was a Pharisee (Acts 23: 6); was zealous for the law of his fathers before he was converted to Christ (see Acts 22: 3); still was not saved in the kingdom of God, for a saving righteousness must exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, or of the decalogue.

JESUS A LEADER AND COMMANDER

Let us look at this chapter or text from another viewpoint. Jesus was preaching one of his sermons and God says of him (Christ), "Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people." (Isaiah 55: 4.)

Now since Jesus Christ was given as a "commander to the people" would it not be more reasonable to conclude that when he says "these commandments" in the present tense, he refers to the commandments he was then giving in the sermon that follows, especially when read with the closing words of the same sermon as follows: "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment." (Matthew 5: 21.)

Here we have the sixth commandment, but in the next verse he gives his own saying, or commandment, placing his teaching in contrast with the old law: "But I say unto you, that whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment: . . ."—Matthew 5: 22.

In verses 23-26 Jesus gave some special commandments not even referred to in the decalogue.

Verse 27, "Ye have heard that it was said of them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery." Here we have the seventh commandment, but again he says, "But I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." (Matthew 5: 28.)

"It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement." (Matthew 5: 31.) This was quoted from Deuteronomy 24: 1; but Jesus says: "But I say unto you, That whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery." (Matthew 5: 32.)

"Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths." (Matthew 5: 33.) This is from Numbers 30: 2, but Jesus says: "But I say unto you, Swear not at all. . . ." (Matthew 5: 34.)

"Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." (Matthew 5: 38.) Here he quotes from Exodus 21: 24, but Jesus says: "But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." (Matthew 5: 39.)

"Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy." (Matthew 5: 43.) This quotation is from Leviticus 19:18; but Jesus says: "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." (Matthew 5: 44.)

The sixth and seventh chapters contain instructions and commandments regarding alms, prayer, fasting, treasures, wealth, judging others, etc., and at the close we read: "And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrine: For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." (Matthew 7: 28, 29.)

We have noted seven quotations that Jesus makes in the fifth of Matthew from the old law, and out of the seven only two from the decalogue. Now if he meant that whosoever should break one of these least commandments and teach men so, should be least in the kingdom of heaven, and whosoever would do and teach them should be great in the kingdom of heaven, he certainly meant the ones he quoted, and in some of them he commanded exactly the opposite of the decalogue, viz, "an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," "but, I say unto you that ye resist not evil."

Again, "It hath been said whosoever shall put away his wife let him give her a writing of divorcement," "But I say that whosoever shall put away his wife save for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery."

So in all these seven references to the Old Testament, whether from the decalogue or not, they were given in contrast with his commandments, showing their imperfection as a law of life and giving in their place the higher law that would make people wise unto salvation.

So from all these viewpoints the fourth proposition fails.

WAS SABBATH CHANGED BY POPE

Fifth proposition, That the change from the seventh to the first day of the week was made by the pope of the Roman Catholic Church.

It is rather amusing to witness an attempt to prove that the Roman Catholic pope changed the Sabbath; and usually the advocates of this theory simply try to show that the church did it. They refer to Constantine and the law or decree that he established March 7, 321 A. D.

Constantine, Emperor Augustus to Helpidus: On the venerable day of the sun, let the magistrates and people, residing in cities rest, and let all workshops be closed. In the country, however, persons engaged in agriculture may freely, and lawfully continue their pursuits, because it often happens that another day, is not suitable for grain sowing, or for vine planting: Lest by neglecting the proper moment for such operations, the bounty of heaven should be lost.

(I have quoted the above from an Adventist work entitled Two Republics, or, Rome and the United States of America, by Alonzo T. Jones. Review and Herald Publishing Company, Battle Creek, Michigan, 1891.)

In a list of Catholic popes I have before me, taken from a book called Catholic Belief, by Very Reverend Joseph Faa. Di Bruno, D. D., I note the Catholic popes for the fourth century as follows: 31st pope, Saint Marcellus I, Rome, Martyrs, 304 A. D. 32d pope, Saint Emseburs, Calabria, (succeeded) 309 A. D. 33d pope Saint Melchiades, Africa, 311 A. D. 34th pope, Saint Sylvester, 314 A. D. 35th pope, Saint Marcus, Rome, 337 A. D. 36th pope, Saint Julius I, Rome, 341 A. D. 37th pope, Saint Tiberius, Rome, 352 A. D. 38th pope, Saint Felix II, Rome, 355 A. D. 39th pope, Saint Damascus I, Spain 366 A. D. 40th pope, Saint Sincius, Rome, 384 A. D. 41st pope, Saint Anastasus I, Rome, 399 A. D.

Thus it is seen that Constantine was not a pope, and if it should be urged that he changed the Sabbath, even then Mrs. White's statement would not be sustained. And if it should be argued that Constantine made this law to please the pope or the authorities of the church, that would show that Sunday keeping was already common, and the claims that the Sabbath was changed at this time would fail.

COUNCIL OF LAODICEA

Another decree is quoted in almost all Adventist books as showing when the Roman Catholic Church changed the Sabbath, and which was passed at the council of Laodicea, held 364 A. D. This decree follows:

Canon 29, Christians shall not Judaize and be idle on Saturday, but shall work on that day, but the Lord's day they shall especially honor, and, as being Christians, shall, if possible, do no work on that day. If, however, they are found Judaizing, they shall be shut out from Christ.

This is urged by Adventists as the time when the Roman Catholic Church changed the Sabbath. But this was not a general council. I read from Catholic Belief, pages 148, 149:

By a general ecumenical council is understood a council to which the bishops of the whole world are lawfully summoned for the settling of some important matter, though it is not necessary for the validity of the council that all should attend. A council in order to be ecumenical must be invoked by the pope or at least with his consent and presided over by him or his legate, the decrees of the council must also have his approval. A general council headed by the pope by reason of its representing the whole church has the privilege of doctrinal infallibility and supreme authority. It is evident that the largest assembly of the bishops without the pope would be a body without a head, and could not represent the whole church.

Now unless the council of Laodicea was a general ecumenical council and invoked by the pope, presided over either by him or his legate, the whole church would not be bound by its decisions. We give the general councils from a Catholic authority, covering the varying dates given for the council of Laodicea. Catholic Belief, page 149:

First. The first council of Nice (now called Isnick, in Asia Minor about ninety miles from Constantinople), was held in the year 325, under Pope Sylvester, 318 bishops present. Second. The first Council of Constantinople the ancient Byzantium, was held 381, in the emperor's palace, confirmed by the Pope Damascus I, 150 bishops present. Third. The council of Ephesus, Asia Minor, was held in the church of Saint Mary in 431, under Pope Celestine I, about 200 bishops present. Fourth. The council of Chalcedon (now called Santara), facing Constantinople in Asia Minor, under Pope Leo the Great was held in 451, in the church of Saint Euphemia, the Martyr, near Bosphorus in Bythinia, Paschasinus and Lucentius bishops and Boniface Priest presided at this council as legates of the Pope Leo the Great, 630 bishops present. Fifth. The second of Constantinople held in the Sacristy of the Cathedral in 553, and confirmed by Pope Vigilius, 165 bishops present.

From the above, covering the widest range of dates given for the council of Laodicea, it will be seen that the council of Laodicea was not a general council. So we will notice from both Catholic and non-Catholic sources how much importance is attached to this council that nearly all Adventists quote to prove that the Roman Catholic Church changed the Sabbath.

I looked up Laodicea in Encyclopedia Britannica, but there was no mention of the council whatever. Next I looked it up in the New International Encyclopedia and found as follows:

Laodicea, Council of. A council was held during the fourth century but whether toward the beginning, middle or end has been earnestly debated without being determined. It consisted of thirty-two bishops from different provinces of Asia and embodied its decisions in sixty canons relating to matters of ritual, church order, dignity, precedence, discipline, morals, faith, and heresy. The most important of them is the last, giving a list of the books of scripture received at that time as canonical, which does not contain the Apocrypha or Revelation.—Vol. 11, p. 770.

A Concise Cyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, by Reverend E. B. Sanford, D. D., page 516:

Laodicea. . . . An important ecclesiastical council. The first council of Laodicea was held here in 363, which adopted resolutions concerning the canon of the Old and New Testament and concerning ecclesiastical discipline. A second council was held here in 476 which condemned the Eutychians.

The Catholic Encyclopedia, volume VIII, page 795:

There are extant in Greek sixty canons of a council of Laodicea. That this council was actually held we have the testimony of Theodoret (in Colas ii, 18, P. L., LXXXII, 619). There has been much discussion as to the date. Some have even thought that the council must have preceded that of Nicea (325) or at least that of Constantinople (381). It seems safe to consider it subsequent to the latter. The canons are undoubtedly only a resume of an older text, and indeed appear to be derived from two distinct collections.

The council of Laodicea is mentioned in Students' Ecclesiastical History by Philip Smith, B. A., volume I, page 293, as having been held about 372, A. D.

It will be seen from the above that the council of Laodicea was not a general council; that less than one third of the number of bishops were present than at the smallest general council; that even the date of it is very uncertain; that its action was unimportant, in that it was only a resume of an older text; that the pope was not there, nor did he send a legate to preside, as the thirty-two bishops present were all from different provinces of Asia.

Now to claim that this little council, over one thousand miles from Rome, and the pope absent, was the occasion where either the pope or the Roman Catholic Church changed the Lord's rest day from the seventh to the first day of the week, is a piece of monumental nonsense.

APOSTLES OBSERVED FIRST DAY

But the Adventists say that the Roman Catholics claim that they changed the Sabbath, that a Catholic bishop offers one thousand dollars to anyone who will prove that the Roman Catholic Church did not change the Sabbath, etc.

Of course; and we presume they would give ten times that amount if anyone would prove that the Roman Catholic Church was not the only true church, and that Saint Peter was not the first pope. They claim to be the only true church in succession, so that whatever was done in the days of the apostles they claim the credit for. Now if the Roman Catholic Church, according to their testimony, did change the Sabbath, their testimony is just as good regarding the time of the change as to the fact of their changing it, so we quote a statement, part of which is sometimes used by Adventists, but never used by them in full. I have before me a Catholic book called Question Box, by Reverend Bertrand L. Conway. The book was given to me by a Catholic priest as setting forth their belief, so it is recognized as an official work. Pages 254, 255.

Question. What Bible authority is there for changing the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week? Who gave the pope the authority to change a command of God?

Answer. If the Bible is the only guide for the Christian, then the Seventh-day Adventists are right in observing the Saturday with the Jew. But Catholics learn what to believe and do from the divine, infallible authority established by Jesus Christ, the Catholic Church which in apostolic times made Sunday the day of rest to honor our Lord's resurrection, on that day, and to mark off clearly the Jew from the Christian. Saint Justin Martyr (Apol., C. 67), speaks of the early Christians meeting for the holy sacrifice of mass on Sunday. Is it not strange that those who make the Bible their only teacher should inconsistently follow in this matter the traditions of the church?

Now to accept the testimony of the Roman Catholic Church that they changed the Sabbath, when they testify that the change was made in apostolic times, would be to admit that the apostles were Roman Catholics, and the only proof they offer for being responsible for the change is based on their claim of apostolic succession. Now if Saint Peter was not the first pope, and the Roman Catholic Church of today is not the true apostolic church in succession, they did not, according to their own testimony, change the Sabbath.

Nor does the fact that they keep the same day that was kept by the apostles make the day wrong. That the first day of the week was observed we might quote, from Mosheim, who, writing of the first century, says:

All Christians were unanimous in setting apart the first day of the week, on which the triumphant Savior arose from the dead, for the solemn celebration of public worship. This pious custom, which was derived from the church at Jerusalem, was founded upon the express appointment of the apostles, who consecrated that day to the same sacred purpose, and it was observed universally throughout the Christian churches, as appears from the united testimonies of the most credible writers. The seventh day of the week was also observed as a festival, not by the Christians in general, but by such churches only as were principally composed of Jewish converts.—Part 2, chapter 4, verse 4.

The above is quoted from the Compendium, by H. A. Stebbins and M. Walker. Justin Martyr, of the same century, also wrote, ibid.:

On the day called Sunday all Christians who live in cities or in the country meet together and the writings of the prophets and apostles are read. Then the president makes an oration to the assembly, exhorting them to imitate and do the things that they have heard, then we all join in prayer, and after that we celebrate the sacrament.

The above is from Justin's First Apology, chapter 67, as rendered by Whitby in Jenks Commentary on 1 Corinthians 16:2, the following from the Antiochene Fathers. Ignatius, a companion of the apostles, says of himself, and of the church in general, . . . they are:

No longer observing the Sabbath, but living in the observance of the Lord's Day. . . . Let every friend of Christ keep the Lord's Day as a festival, the resurrection day, the queen and chief of all the days.—Epistle to the Magnesians, chap. 9.

The above testimony goes to show that Sunday, or the first day of the week, was observed in the time of the apostles, and that the legislation regarding it made from the time of Constantine and later did not change the Sabbath, but was intended to enforce a practice established in apostolic times. The right or the wrong of keeping the day could no more be affected by laws made to enforce it, than in regard to any other ordinance or sacrament.

We have noted that early writers such as Ignatius, Justin Martyr, and others agree that Sunday keeping was by apostolic appointment, and was observed by the early churches. We note a few scripture references on the subject:

And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight.—Acts 20: 7.

The Adventist method of explaining away this text, viz, that the disciples met late in the evening, Saturday, is merely a dodge, based on the presumption that people do not know that other nations than Israel did not count days from sunset to sunset.

I quote from William Smith's Bible Dictionary:

Theophilus. The person to whom Saint Luke inscribes his gospel and the Acts of the Apostles (Luke 1: 3, Acts 1: 1). From the honorable epithet applied to him in Luke 1: 3, it has been argued with much probability that he was a person in high official position.

Bible Dictionary, by Philip Schall, D. D., L. L. D.:

Luke (Greek Lucas), Colossians 4: 14, 2 Timothy 4: 14, Philemon 24, is probably an abbreviation of Lucanus, possibly Lucilius, but not of Lucius, Acts 13: 1, Romans 16: 21. The evangelist was not a Jew, as is evident from Colossians 4: 14, where the beloved physician is distinguished from those of the circumcision.

Luke was not a Jew, Theophilus was not a Jew, but according to Smith's Bible Dictionary on Luke's gospel: "This Theophilus was probably a native of Italy and perhaps an inhabitant of Rome." Troas where the meeting that is described in Acts 20 was held was a Roman city. The Romans, according to Smith's Bible Dictionary (article "Day"), began their day at midnight.

Now it is unreasonable that a man who was not a Jew, who was writing of events that occurred in a Roman city, to a Roman official, would count time as the old Israelitish law required. And we may properly suppose that he used the Roman method.

Now, according to Acts 20: 7, it was the first day of the week when they came together and Paul preached, and continued until midnight.

The Douay or Catholic version of the Bible says regarding this text in a footnote on verse 7:

And on the first day of the week. Here Saint Chrysostom and many other interpreters of the Scripture explain that the Christians even at this time must have changed the Sabbath into the first day of the week, (the Lord's Day) as all Christians now keep it.

So that in spite of the Catholic claim, (as Adventists say) that there is no Bible authority for Sunday observance, they do quote authority in a footnote of their own Bible.

Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.—1 Corinthians 16: 2.

So the collections were to be taken up on the first day of the week.

Jesus appeared to his disciples on the day he was raised from the dead, also again after eight days, or the second first day of the week, or Sunday. The day of Pentecost, on which the disciples received the Holy Ghost, was the first day of the week (see Smith's Bible Dictionary, article, "Lord's Day"), or the Lord's Day. John the Revelator was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day when he received the revelations recorded in the last book of the Bible. And everyone, except Adventists, and possibly a few other Sabbatarians, admit that the name Lord's Day as used in the Bible and by early Christians, was the first day of the week, and nowhere do we find it used for the Jewish Sabbath.

Then Protestants do not believe that there was a man established in the papal chair as universal father at this time; indeed dates are given by different writers, ranging from 476 to 663, for the establishing of the papacy. The Adventists in their interpretation of Daniel 7: 25:

"And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time."

Also: "And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand, two hundred and threescore days."—Revelation 12: 6.

Also: "And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months."—Revelation 13: 5.

The Adventists claim that the great evil power represented in the above texts is the papacy; that the twelve hundred and sixty days, forty and two months, time, times and dividing of time, all represent the time of his power, viz, twelve hundred and sixty years. They set the time of the establishing of the papacy in 538, A. D., when, they claim that the decree of Emperor Justinian appointed the bishop of Rome "head of all the churches," the end marked by the exile of Pope Pius VI, and the breaking up of the temporal power of the papacy by General Berthisi under France in 1798. But we have shown that they have been claiming that the pope had changed the Sabbath in 321 and 364 A. D., that is, 217 and 174 years respectively before the papacy was established.

(To be continued.)

♦ ♦ ♦ ♦ ♦

IN THE REALM OF THE AARONIC PRIESTHOOD

(Prepared by George Reeves, and read before the Saint Louis Branch priesthood meeting, July 4, 1915.)

In looking for the identification of the duties of the Aaronic priesthood, it seems impossible to find them entirely outside the domain of the Melchisedec. The correlative duties of each are so closely interwoven and harmonized in many respects and functions as to require a careful analysis to distinguish between them.

We will first understand, of course, that there is a broad line of difference. That in formation and purpose, the greater is to administer in certain spiritual matters, to the exclusion of the lesser, and the latter to administer more in the temporalities, not necessarily to the exclusion of the former, but it may have a larger freedom and liberty in the pursuance of its duties.

In the consideration of this subdivision and allotment in well-defined fields of labor, it must not be thought that more importance attaches to one than the other; or that the labors and accomplishments of one are more honorable than the other; or that one in its field of activity and usefulness is in any way inferior to the other. Since there is a harmonious blending of the two in their respective fields, there must be also a harmonious blending and respect by each for the high and honorable calling of both. The reverse condition would be subversive of the very designs of the mechanical organization and spiritual contemplation of each.

Doctrine and Covenants 17 familiarizes us with the duties of each priesthood. We learn from it that elders and priests are to

1. Preach, teach, exhort and expound.
2. Baptize.
3. Administer the sacrament.
4. Ordain priests, teachers and deacons.
5. Solemnize marriages.

Priests of the Aaronic priesthood are proscribed in laying on hands for administration to the sick, the blessing of children and the ordination of elders. The Melchisedec order may ordain elders, priests, teachers and deacons, while the Aaronic may ordain all, save elders. Whether the right to call to any of these stations rests exclusively with the Melchisedec, or whether it is conferred upon the Aaronic to call to the same departments to which it may ordain, I would not say. If a priest may have the spirituality and discernment to ordain another priest, teacher, or deacon, the same gifts and qualifications may possibly entitle him to make a call, subject of course, to further approval.

Seemingly, there is one specific duty laid more especially upon the Aaronic priesthood, that of visiting the membership. Just whether it is contemplated that the spiritual lassitude of the membership may become so aggravated, because of the failure of the preaching of the elders (with apologies, of course,) or some other contributing causes, to entice them from the homes, that it shall engross the entire attention of that priesthood to visit them, and thus circumscribe the priesthood and deprive it of the opportunity for mental and spiritual development and preparation to enter the field of further usefulness, is not stated in the law.

But I am impressed to say that the visiting should be with system and diligence, so much so as circumstances will permit, and confined, first, to those enfeebled with age, and those deprived by conditions of fellowship, rather than neglect them to visit the more fortunate, opulent, and popular.

As we have said, this visiting problem rests more heavily upon the lesser priesthood, but since it is recognized and well based upon authority and custom, that the lesser has no conferred rights and prerogatives not privileged to the greater, it must be equally true that there is no benefit from any duty laid upon the lesser which can not be performed at the pleasure of the greater, or that may not reasonably be expected of the greater if necessity demands. The sharing of these responsibilities, and the performance of all duties laid upon the church, doubtless is binding upon each order to accomplish to the best of their respective opportunities and abilities.

I understand that, so far as a visit of an elder or a priest to the home of a member is concerned, the things said and done would be about the same. The conversation in any event should turn upon matters religious, except that an elder by reason of the cloak of his office could administer to the sick if occasion arose. We have, therefore, seen that there are many duties and prerogatives of elder and priest belonging to each with equal diligence, equal expectation, equal capability, equal sincerity and equal power and equal honor, and last but not least, with equal opportunity.

Discussing the activities of the Aaronic priesthood and its opportunities: It does not necessarily follow that an individual may be expected to officiate in all its departments of labor as acceptably as in some particular place. By virtue of what we call natural traits and gifts, I am constrained to say that these more natural tendencies should be not only recognized, but encouraged and cultivated, rather than overlooked and sometimes unwisely enforced, hard and unnatural of performance, either of preaching, for which one may not be well adapted, or some other particularity where nature and accomplishments have not been copious in endowment. I would say that the duties of the Aaronic priesthood are divided into two general divisions:

1. The visiting of the Saints at their homes.
2. Preaching the gospel.

For the encouragement of the young priesthood, let us consider well the duties assigned. Whatever they may be, they require, at all times the greatest diligence, care, anxiety, preparation and dignity. I emphasize this statement. To know how to approach people, treat them kindly and with patience, by which they are benefited, encouraged and impressed, not only with the mannerisms of the caller, but the great mission of the church, is the opportunity before the priesthood, a decided advantage to the work in hand, and an apprenticeship and schooling many of the priesthood persistently neglect.

In the event of a call to the eldership out of the ranks of the membership, with little or no active service and experience in the Aaronic priesthood, I am frank to say that the absence of this training is keenly felt. I would therefore say that an apprenticeship in this particular department of the work makes for a better priesthood, and consequently a better eldership, the clothing of an individual with a higher name, notwithstanding. I am bold enough to say to the expectant priesthood, that if under that name one can not perform well and faithfully the duties of that office, the mere clothing with a higher sounding name will not change metamorphosis like from the ridiculous to the sublime, from the unqualified to the qualified, or contribute the lacking experience.

This suggestion is offered in opposition to the lack of wisdom of a practice sometimes seen in certain calls, and not reflecting upon the principle involved brought into requisition at the proper time, and upon proper occasions, and under proper conditions. In reality, it is quality of workmanship we want, not names of things and persons. The call to the higher should rest upon capability, efficiency, desire to work, diligence, and the integrity of the individual to meet the peculiar requirements of the higher order.

The tactful handling of the visiting work is not inferior to any task, or any privilege in the church organization. In this division of the work we will be well employed. I can see no preference in the law of the Melchisedec over the Aaronic where the same duties are laid upon each of them, experience and capability being equal.

Constructive method when faithfully carried out contemplates the passing from the lower to the higher, based not so much upon any emergency that may exist, but rather through the qualification and capability wrought through the lessons of experience.

In the careful adoption of this method, we would not expect to find a newly ordained priest the equal in efficiency of an experienced elder. There is no question that the law contemplates the priest to take his place alongside of the elder in the stations wherein the labor is similar; but the line of demarcation where a man is qualified to advance and is not called, and why the failures where the qualities were thought to exist, are questions lost in the mazes of speculation. I therefore feel that substantial deference must be given to successive changes, and that such calls should rest upon merit and experience. Otherwise, there is a tendency to depreciate the dignity of the greater and the confidence of the lesser.

As an encouragement, we may well remember that one thing is true and can not fail, that God will help the man who consistently helps God and himself, whatever classification may have been given, or denied. The encouragement held out to all priests is that they have an equal right with the elders in the performance of the legalized duties assigned them in the law, to perform them as acceptably and without hindrance.

With the thought in mind that the calling of the Aaronic priesthood is honorable, let the priesthood congratulate itself upon the long and patient opportunity, by fortune, design or other circumstance, which has been afforded to take a careful survey of the situation, a deep contemplation of what really makes for a better priesthood and eldership, a better branch, and launch out to improve the opportunity by coming in contact with the people, knowing their difficulties and their needs, getting close in touch with the pulse of life itself, together with the concentration toward knowing the mission of the Savior, the will of God to man, the incalculable value of spirituality and purity, individually and socially,—these are some of the earmarkings of a real priesthood.

I hope so far as the priesthood in this branch is concerned, it may rise to the opportunity, strengthen the fences where down, and so qualify in the various departments as to offer acceptable timber that will stand the test. Seeking for office and stations for prominence will get us nowhere.

I feel that I have shown the duties of the priests to be equal to that of an elder in many particulars. I again define these duties as preaching the gospel, visiting, teaching, exhorting, expounding, administering the sacrament, ordaining other priests, teachers and deacons, and solemnizing marriages.

---

Of General Interest

SCIENCE AND ALCOHOL

Nothing has been more notable in the past twenty-five years than the change of the medical profession towards alcohol.

Twenty-five years ago alcohol was used extensively as a medical stimulant, and the mild use of alcoholic beverages, if not encouraged, was at least not severely condemned. To-day alcohol is practically unknown to medical practice, and everywhere the medical authorities are setting themselves definitely against its use in any form.

One of the most striking illustrations of the change is the recent announcement from the health department of New York City that an educational crusade is to be begun in that city against drinking. Doctor Goldwater, commissioner of health, after declaring the purpose of the department to give the people the facts, says:

A diminution in the consumption of alcohol by the community would mean less tuberculosis, less poverty, less dependency, less pressure on our hospitals, asylums and jails. Intemperate drinking cuts into the support of the family. The drinking of parents weakens the vitality of children. Drinking mothers lose twice as many babies as do sober mothers. More alcoholism is found in the parents of feeble-minded children than in the parents of normal children. The children of drinkers develop more slowly and do poorer school work than do the children of abstainers. Alcohol impairs the tone of the muscles and lessens the product of laborers; it depreciates the skill and endurance of artisans; it impairs memory, multiplies industrial accidents, causes chronic disease of the heart, liver, stomach and kidneys; increases the death rate from pneumonia, lessens natural immunity to infectious diseases.

The New York World pooh poohs this announcement as Quixotic, suggesting that much harm is resulting from the intemperate use of ice water. But that does not minimize the significance of the stand of the health department, a stand that no commissioner would have had the temerity to take twenty-five years ago in any large American city.

Nor can the World pooh pooh the effect of a continued hostility towards alcohol on the part of the medical profession. For every such statement as this from Doctor Goldwater helps to make a public sentiment that in the end will control the voices and votes of the community. In New York City will come exactly what has come in Iowa.

It is altogether likely that the common use of alcohol for any but mechanical purposes will be unknown to another generation. Not that drinking will be altogether abandoned, but that with the vast majority the use of even the milder wines and beers will either be unknown or so casual as to come to the same thing.—The Register and Leader, June 16, 1915.

* * * * *

BUSTING THE KNOT HOLE INDUSTRY

The Saint Paul Pioneer-Press wipes the alcohol out of the corner of its eyes and tells this interesting story about Saint Paul:

Saint Paul made beer is sent out to eleven States.

The total value of the output amounts to $5,600,000 annually.

The total cold storage capacity of the local plants is 375,000 barrels, and the total capacity of refrigerating machines in those plants is 900 tons daily.

The daily capacity of the bottling houses is 600,000 bottles.

The average number of employees in the three Saint Paul plants is 1,225; including the agencies the average number is 1,700.

The pay roll amounts to more than $1,300,000 annually.

One million bushels of barley is used annually, in addition to 42 carloads of hops.

More than 24,500 tons of coal are consumed annually.

Every year the local plants use 550 carloads of bottle beer boxes and barrels, all of which are manufactured and bought in Saint Paul. Four hundred and twenty-five carloads of bottles are used annually.

The amount of freight paid annually amounts to $1,250,000.

The real estate and personal property taxes paid in Ramsey County amounts to $130,000 a year.

The United States tax is $1,050,000 annually.

What a lot of money and energy seems to be spent in Saint Paul in making trouble.

If this money, time and energy were spent in legitimate enterprises instead, what a different story there would be to tell.

More than forty counties of Minnesota have recently voted that they will no longer be made the dumping ground for this deluge of poisoned slop from Saint Paul.

They have become tired of being taxed, corrupted, and submitting to a traffic in the debauchery of their people in order that this aggregation of Saint Paul may become rich.

What will these Saint Paul brewery people do when they are finally prevented from trafficking in degradation? some one asks.

Well, they may do as the big brewery at Wheeling, West Virginia, did—turn itself into a packing house, in which more men are employed and more profit made than was the case in brewery days.

Or they might begin making ice instead, as did the brewery at Charleston, West Virginia, in which more money is made than was made as a brewery.

Or, they might turn their breweries into soft drink factories, as was done at Nampa, Idaho, where the same crew of laborers are now profitably employed in making food instead of alcoholic damnation.

Once there was an old shyster who raised a great roar because he found that he could no longer market lumber all full of knot holes.

"You are destroying a thriving industry," he howled. "What will the coopers do for bungholes in their beer barrels unless we can supply lumber with knot holes in it?"

It is rapidly dawning upon the people of Minnesota that capital, time and energy can just as well be employed in a useful industry as in making trouble, promoting crime, disorder and disease.

They propose no longer to buy knot holes in order to keep up this gigantic graft in Saint Paul that the Pioneer-Press tells about.—The New Republic, August 6, 1915.

If thou desire beyond measure the things that are present, thou shalt lose those which are heavenly and eternal.—Thomas a' Kempis.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS,
LAMONI, IOWA

The Utilis Club

In the fall of 1911, the year in which the Children's Home was opened, twelve ladies met at the home of one of their numbers, and after a pleasant social time together, declared themselves unanimously in favor of organizing to work for the children at the home. Desiring that their name should express their object of making themselves useful, they adopted the name, "The Utilis Club."

Their number soon increased to seventeen and has since reached twenty-four regular members. With few exceptions, each alternate Thursday since their organization has found them at the home of some member of the club, ready to do what their hands found to do, and that has come to be principally mending. They started their work in November, and began with a Christmas surprise for the children. In this they asked the cooperation of the merchants, who donated dolls and toys, some of which needed repairs. With the good cheer that comes with the true Christmas spirit, all needed repairs were made and the work of dressing the dolls was accomplished. A donation of money from the members provided pocketknives for the boys, so each inmate of the home was made happy by the offerings from the Utilis Club.

Piecing quilt blocks was the next undertaking, and this was followed by the hemstitching of pillow slips made from muslin provided by the members.

Early in 1912 as they presented themselves one afternoon in readiness for work, the president said she had a surprise for them, and uncovering a good-sized box that stood in the middle of the room she told them it held garments from the home to be mended. From the beginning they had announced their willingness to do anything the matron of the home would find for them to do, so they were not daunted by the surprise, and that day they mended twenty-three garments. A little later they passed a motion making mending for the home their regular work. Many secondhand garments being used at the home, it is not strange that they easily come to need mending. The club records show as many as fifty-six garments mended at one meeting, at another, thirty pairs of stockings darned.

Most of these ladies are mothers of growing children, so were not strangers to mending, and those to whom fancy work was more familiar proved apt scholars in the art of homely usefulness. But their work has not been confined to patching and darning. At times they have made a good showing of completed garments, cut out at the Children's Home and sent to them ready to make. These included nightdresses, underwaists, and so on. At one meeting they all worked buttonholes.

Occasionally a social evening is arranged for, when the husbands are invited, one of these having occurred at the Children's Home, by the hospitality of the superintendent, matron and assistant, while others have been enjoyed at the homes of the members. At first, refreshments were served on these occasions. Later, there appeared on the records a resolution to the effect that when they entertain they shall not serve refreshments but that, instead, each member shall contribute fifty cents to their fund to be used for the benefit of the home.

In the fall this fund is increased by the proceeds from a sale of candy made by the members. This has now become an annual affair and is held in one of the stores where a show window is kindly granted for the display of the candy. Part of the money raised by the club has been used to pay for dressmaking hired at the home, and a portion is expended each Christmas.

As one result of their meetings the members have stored away many happy memories, and surely such work will be the means of laying up other lasting treasures. By one of their by-laws a fine of five dollars was set as a penalty for gossip. If conversation ever tended in that direction there was sure to be a warning voice that all were ready to heed. They have profited by this commingling in their effort to be useful, and they bear a pleasing testimony of the good spirit that has prevailed in their meetings.

THE DORCAS SOCIETY

Recently a sister organization has been formed known as "The Dorcas Society." This includes some members of the Utilis Club and others, who saw the opportunity for contributing of their work in the week intervening between the other meetings.

This society has twenty members, the number including several dressmakers. A large amount of work has been accomplished at each of the meetings held.

We can not do better than to wish them the continued success and enjoyment that has attended the Utilis Club, and add that the appreciation of all connected with the home goes out to both.

C. B. S.

Our Treasury Department

Suggestions are made by some that in this department should be published the itemized receipts and expenditures connected with the home, that in so doing the friends of the home could see what others are doing, which might lend suggestions to others who are not regular contributors to become such.

Yes, it would indeed be interesting for all of us to know who are helping, and the many ways these are furnishing assistance. It would also be proper for the contributors to realize the many avenues of expense connected with the running of the home. I will give you some of the reasons this is not being done. First, our space in the HERALD is too limited. Second, it would cost us not less than fifty dollars a year to publish these items, and we are endeavoring to keep down expenses. If we publish a mere statement or summary of receipts and expenses at the close of each month, will that be sufficient? What do you think about it? Have you any suggestions to offer us?

Again it would be interesting to have appear in the Children's Home Department of the HERALD photographs of the children from time to time. We should like you to see the splendid faces of these children. While I am writing this I have before me a post card picture of one of the little ones placed in a splendid home. Here is what the foster mother writes me: "I am writing to tell you how nicely baby is getting along. She was eleven months old yesterday, weighs twenty-seven pounds, has eight teeth and can say a few words. She is very dear to me, and a great joy and blessing to our home. I am indeed thankful to the kind Father for this blessing, and pray that I may raise her in the right way."

If you knew this home as I know it and realized the joy that has come into the hearts of the mother and the other members of the household, and what a blessing it is to the dear babe, and that the Children's Home is earnestly endeavoring to bring about this same blessed condition with every homeless child that comes within its care, there is not a Saint whose heart is touched with the divine love of Him who had a care for the children and blessed them, that upon reading this would not feel constrained to offer up a fervent prayer to the heavenly Father for a divine blessing upon our Children's Home and would endeavor to support the institution in a way to supply every legitimate need.

The contributions for the month of July for the running expenses were $329.03. The expenditures for the same month for running expenses were $388.56. We had, however, a sufficient balance so that the expenses were promptly met. We have received during the month of July $248 to apply on home debt. This makes the total receipts for the debt $661, leaving of the $2,500 indebtedness a balance yet to raise of $1,839, plus accrued interest. We have confidence in the friends of the home that they will wipe this debt out as soon as they can, and that there are many who are keeping this need in mind and continue to work with this end in view.

Now about the outlook for the month of August. This you know is the dry month of the year, as a rule; the month in which the least is contributed. A suggestion, I deem, is all that is necessary for us, and that is this: It will necessitate on the part of all a little more willingness to make sacrifice. We trust that when the treasurer is again heard from in September that we will have to report to you that even during the dry month of August the needs of the home were amply met.

In all these matters of financing the home the treasurer will be delighted to hear from any who have suggestions or desire cooperation.

JOSEPH ROBERTS, Treasurer.

---

Letter Department

SMITH'S CREEK, MICHIGAN, July 18, 1915.

Editors Herald: After visiting friends and attending to some long neglected business in Independence, Missouri, we came to Chicago, where we stayed two days and preached in both branches. We were royally entertained by our beloved brother, David Dowker, and wife. Our next stop was at Detroit, Michigan, where we visited with friends and met again some of the brethren we had known before. Preached once there.

We then came home to see father and mother, in the new home they bought since we left the country six years ago. Spent some time visiting and getting acquainted with the people here. We asked permission to preach in the Methodist church and got it by a unanimous vote. Went to the reunion at Port Huron, where we had a very pleasant time. This reunion was profitable to all who went there to learn of the Great Teacher above.

I preached my first sermon on the street while there, and felt better about it than I had expected. Have been back to the same old corner preaching since then, and expect to go again. Came home from the reunion and found that the pastor of the Methodist church had reconsidered his part of the proposition, and I could not preach in their church. A fine young man, a Baptist, proposed that I preach in the Baptist church. I was ready whenever they were, but the Baptist pastor said, "N-o-o-o-o-o!!! They are practically the same as the Mormons." He did not say that to me nor in my presence, but to the flock.

I got permission to preach in the Pink Schoolhouse, where my father and mother went to school in their childhood days. There had not been any Latter Day Saint preaching there in fifty years, or thereabout, when an old, grayheaded man by the name of Davis preached here and no one would keep him but my grandfather, Harry Savage. But a few generations has taken their place, and with them has come more fairness. We have fair congregations when the weather will allow us to meet together; the rain has hindered considerably. Have had good liberty, and begin to have hopes of getting to talk my own tongue as freely as the Tahitian.

Along with ministerial opposition we have found a touch of mobocracy, while the ministers have contented themselves with talking about me behind my back, accusing me of being a "Mormon" and warning their flock against the things I am "keeping back till I get them in my power," etc. Some others, not so artistic at mud slinging in words, have done the act in deed. They threw mud at me while I was preaching in the schoolhouse and succeeded in hitting me once, but they threw at my wife, hitting the window above and below and on each side. But she is from Missouri and they could not hit her. They were on the outside and we had no way of identifying them at the time, but I found out who two of them were later on, and went and talked to them personally and tried to win them over, and got them to promise that they would give me a fair chance with them at the mud slinging after this, and not stand in the dark and throw at me. I warned them that I would not let them off next time they did the like, but that I would promptly prosecute them. I hope to win them over to my side in the end.

All this has not hurt me, and it has advertised our meeting more than ten dollars worth of handbills. The people keep coming. The ministers worry and warn their flocks. So "we should worry."

Your brother in bonds,

H. W. SAVAGE.

---

LAMONI, IOWA, July 19, 1915.

Editors Herald: One year ago last conference I was appointed to labor in southern Kansas, unorganized territory. I labored there until about the middle of October, when I came to Graceland College, where I have been most of the time since.

I enjoyed much of my labor in southern Kansas, finding some noble Saints there, whom I learned to love. With the efficient workers there, J. Arthur Davis, T. C. Kelley and A. C. Martin, the work should grow and the Saints be fed this year.

Some of the missionaries may wonder that I should leave the mission field to attend college. I believe I was divinely impressed to do so. At any rate, the Lord has been with and wonderfully led me since coming here. I can truthfully say that, as a rule, I have found the Spirit working stronger here among the students in their prayer meetings than any prayer meetings I have ever attended. In view of this fact, I am not surprised to hear individuals say they have had evidence that they and a number of others were led here by the Spirit.

I am very much pleased with the work that Graceland is doing. She stands on her sunny hill quite apart from the world, as a living monument to the fair principles of purity. She throws her white mantle of virtue about the young who come here, and softly whispers: "Upon my play grounds and within my sacred walls of learning you will find the name of Saint to be honorable. No finger of scorn is pointed to intimidate here, but your worship is praised. Thus I will nourish you with love until you are strong; I will give you knowledge and teach you the sciences that God has given, and still feed you upon the milk of the word, that while you are in the world and understand the things of the world you may not be of the world, but be a light to the world. Since I teach spiritual things while I am teaching you the sciences, you will naturally associate spiritual things with science, whereas in other colleges, where the spirit of the world prevails, you would associate the spirit of the world with the sciences. If you will not indulge in the vices of sin, I will guide you with innocence in pleasure's paths to tread, and you will enjoy your stay here."

Anything of an immoral nature is unpopular here, while not riches or beauty, but a good character is the criterion by which the students become popular. This condition makes the strongest influence for morality that I have ever known.

I do not know that Graceland is of God's right-hand planting, but I do know that he is working mightily here. I intend to remain here until I hear the Good Shepherd's call again.

Your brother,
O. D. SHIRK.

LAMONI, IOWA, July 20, 1915.

Editors Herald: I desire to bear my testimony by contributing a few lines, as many of our friends might think that we are "down and out," to use a common expression. Six years ago we left Stanberry, Missouri, and moved to Lamoni, Iowa, to place our children under the influence of the church and give them every chance along gospel lines, as well as good school advantages. What the results will be remains for time to solve. As I dwell upon our present needs—spiritual development in the youth of the church, the economic question, the redemption of Zion, living the celestial law that Zion might be redeemed, for "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined," "Awake, O Zion, put on thy beautiful garments"—I stand aghast. Will it ever be a reality, or is it just a dream?

When I hear a brother say, "This work is everything to me," and then see other things take his time, I question his sincerity. When God gave the commandment to Israel, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," he did not want his people to be engaged in other activities that would rob them of their service to their Master. Some of the most remarkable characters that ever lived in this world have died at their post of duty in this great latter-day evangel. They were the finished products of the gospel—that development of character which is an exemplification of Jesus Christ.

I heard the late lamented and beloved Brother Joseph Smith say, when his eyes grew dim with age, preaching in eloquence and power at one of our General Conferences: "I am glad to come back here (to Lamoni) and bear my testimony—I wish I could say, to see you," and at the farewell parting with his son, Fred M., as he is generally called by the Saints, he said, "What a strong hand you have. Oh, for some one to take hold of the reins that won't let go." Oh, for more men so full of faith, humility and love, so tender and affectionate in their gospel ministrations!

I want to bear my testimony to the power of God made manifest in behalf of my child. Wife had prayed and wept over him for several weeks, and when the family physician made his calls he gave us no hope and said the child would likely be afflicted for life with curvature of the spine; some called it "Pott's Disease." Rather than see the little fellow suffer we asked the Lord to take him, if it were his will. "Not our will, O God, but thine be done, but if you spare the child, we dedicate him to you for your service." How well I remember that beautiful summer morning, alone with that child, when praying with all the earnestness of soul and fervency of spirit possible, I said to the Lord that if he would heal our child it would be the greatest evidence to me of the divinity of this work. The Spirit spoke, saying that inasmuch as I proved faithful my request would be granted. I told my companion and her mother of the message. We wept together. The child got well, and is well and sound in his body. Praise the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his tender mercies.

Dear Saints, as we pass along the shining way, may we strive earnestly, faithfully, and prayerfully to make an intelligent application of the law to our lives, and to get "nearer, my God, to thee," that we may in unity and in true gospel fellowship unify our spiritual forces for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to us.

"Wherefore, let every man learn his duty and to act in the office in which he is called in all diligence."

JAMES D. SCHOFIELD.

PERYEAR, TENNESSEE, July 21, 1915.

Editors Herald: The annual reunion of the Kentucky and Tennessee District convened at Foundry Hill, near Peryear, Tennessee, July 3 to 12.

R. C. Russell was chosen to preside over the reunion. Saints and friends expressed themselves as being favorably impressed with the message he bore. Other speakers were J. R. McClain, W. L. McClain, S. E. Dickson, J. M. Nunley, and C. A. Nolan.

The 1915 reunion is believed to have been one of the most successful in the history of our district. Larger crowds than at any previous reunion were an evidence of the ever-increasing interest in these annual assemblies. All branches of the district were represented with the exception of one, and we had visiting Saints from ten different States.

One feature that is worthy of note just here is the excellent behavior maintained throughout the encampment. Brother Russell, with his tact and pleasing manners, encouraged and obtained the respect and good will of Saints and outsiders. He impressed upon the audience the necessity of order, and by his Irish wit and humor held their attention and won their admiration.

The people of the South do not as a rule move about as lively as those of the cooler clime, but they have never been convinced that they could be quiet, even in church, until Brother Russell taught them that it was possible. We feel that there is a work for Brother Russell to do here in the future, and that he will be enabled to reach a class of people that have not been willing to listen to the gospel before.

Seven were baptized, three adults and four children. Five infants were blessed.

Thursday was observed as Children's Day. The forenoon was devoted to Sunday school work, and in the afternoon Brother Russell spoke to the children, after which some lively contests were enjoyed by young and old. In the evening an appropriate program was rendered by the various schools of the district.

We hope to have even a better reunion in 1916.

LOUISE A. WALL.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK, July 24, 1915.

Editors Herald: Having spent a very pleasant and I trust profitable time among the Saints everywhere during my four months sojourn in America, I wish to say to all whom I met and from whom I received the evidence of Saintly love, that I feel very grateful for all kindness shown me. As I can not write each individually, I take this means of reaching all.

The boat Bergensfjord leaves here to-day, at 2 p. m., and I am billed for passage on it to Bergen, Norway.

With love and best wishes to all, I remain,

Your fellow servant,
PETER MUCEUS.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, July 25, 1915.

Editors Herald: The beautiful sun of the early morning arose over a sad city after the terrible catastrophe that overtook the steamer Eastland, just as she was ready to leave the docks yesterday morning, thronged with pleasure seekers, when she overturned in the river, giving none time to aid themselves. What a thankful people we should be that the Lord is so mindful of us as to have warned us that the waters are dangerous.

We notice among the names of those lost on this ill-fated vessel a family of six who all lost their lives, and four children of which family were among our Sunday school scholars on the West Side when I was primary superintendent.

Brother David Dowker spoke this morning. Mr. Meyers, a stranger, worshiped with us and seemed pleased, and promised to come again. The opening at Dalton is very promising. Brother Dowker and others who have been there assisting report being blessed in the efforts put forth.

The work in Chicago is in good condition. Our local force is bending every energy to assist our missionary, Brother Dowker, who is a busy man.

Success to God's work wherever it is being promulgated.

MRS. L. M. HORTON.

KINGFISHER, OKLAHOMA, July 25, 1915.

Editors Herald: As the major part of the summer has gone, and the time draws near for the young of the church to enter school again, my mind is centered on our own college, and the pleasant and profitable year that I spent there last year.

Since I entered high school I have looked forward to attending school at Graceland, but my first year in college was spent in a school near home. Then, last year, I went to Lamoni; but since Graceland has been made a junior college, I must look elsewhere to further my schooling. To me it seems a pity that the people of our church can or will not properly maintain one college. I assure you that to my judgment the work done there is as good as elsewhere, and other conditions are far better.

The college is seriously in need of finances. The needs of the school are many; still nothing is undertaken that can not be successfully finished. It was this spirit which caused the school to be changed from a senior to a junior college. The work and material for the first two years' needs are ample for a strong course, but because the equipment for the next two years was slightly below what is required to make them standard quality, and because of the true-hearted, conscientious men at the head of the school, who were determined that nothing should be given which was not as good as could be received anywhere else, the change was made from a senior to a junior college. Under the conditions I think the change was proper, but I am exceedingly sorry that it was necessary. As I said before, I am well satisfied with the work I received during my nine months there. I can truly say that I know that my instruction was on a par with that of many larger institutions.

Nothing but the latest methods and textbooks are used, and those giving the instruction are those whose companionship is the most congenial. Those who are young and need the advice and counsel of older and wiser heads (and we all do) are carefully and prayerfully looked after. I have attended another school and visited many of them, and in not one of them is the moral welfare of the student so closely guarded.

The student prayer meetings are a source of much spiritual strength. I have been raised in the church; in fact I am the fourth generation on my mother's side in the church, and I firmly believe in all the gifts of the gospel, but as I have always been one of the isolated ones, I heard at Graceland, in the student prayer meetings, some of the gifts for the first time.

There are plenty of amusements to keep "Jack from becoming a dull boy." Athletic contests of various kinds are engaged in, football, baseball, and basket ball being especially prominent, while tennis is fast becoming a Graceland sport. These games are only moderately indulged in, but sufficiently encouraged to suit the true sportsman.

Many good lectures, as well as other high class entertainments, are heard each year. As I said good-by to the friends I had made there, there were many whom I hoped would go on with their education elsewhere, as they had finished there—there were also many whom I sincerely hoped would find themselves back at Graceland, for there is that there which they need, and which they can not receive elsewhere.

I write what I have, hoping to encourage some one to consider attending Graceland College, which should be loyally supported by the Saints. Yours in gospel bonds, DANIEL B. SORDEN.

Diction, Phraseology, Idiom

The answers to my eleven direct questions that appeared in HERALD for December 30, 1914, relative to the use of such embryotic phrases as thee, thou and thine, in our addresses to Deity, suggests other questions that I think will be interesting and profitable to your readers; so I am asking for a little more of your valued space.

It is sometimes thought that they more nearly approach the manner of reverential speech employed by the Lord when among men. They are thought to represent the most sacred speech which has ever fallen from lips of flesh, and thus more sublimity to responsive feelings, and stir a deeper spirit of devotion than more modern words about which no such hallowed memories cluster.

That is probably true so far as the "traditions of the elders" are concerned. But how about the great, thinking, agnostic world, and the natural-born critic? How about the pliant minds of children before they have any fixed traditions? And how about the facts in the case?

I am vividly reminded of the good old Welsh brother who was often called to administer to the sick of the neighborhood; especially the children always called for him in preference to other elders. He enjoyed a happy faculty of begetting in their young minds that degree of faith that breaks the shackles of disease—he had the gift of healing. In his prayers and ministrations he could get very close to the Lord. How was it done?—except you become as this little child, etc. Right here seemed to be the point of difference; no child could utter a request in simpler form of speech than he approached the good Father with; no blind attempt was made to ape or personate the ancient worthies or anyone else: The spirit of simplicity was all pervading.

What course should a young man pursue who wishes to become a great orator? Did anyone ever give a better answer to this question than Henry Ward Beecher? i. e., let the young man fill himself so full of his subject that he can hold no more; then pull out the bung and see nature caper. Can you name one successful orator who owes his success to having imitated or simulated other men?

The writer does not think it criminal or wicked to use these superannuated phrases, or any other special effort to personate the speech of others. But is it not infinitely better to observe childlike simplicity, to be ourselves, to use our own language, and to live in the immortal present?

When one forms a habit of preferring the language of the past, being charmed by the music of the past, gazing at the beauties of the past, and worshiping the heroes of the past, is that person's soul in tune to catch the musical vibrations, and witness the beauties, and appreciate the heroism of the ever present?

What evidence have we that these primitive terms are in any way nearer like the speech used by our Lord than their modern equivalents? Do you know of any lexicographer who pretends to trace them back to a Greek or Hebrew root? Has anyone traced them back past the corrupt hotbed of Catholicism?

If the English language is retrograding and we are trying to hang on to original methods of speech, why not go back into the womb of our language to the Teutonic tribes, who came together in England in the fifth century and there gave birth to the old Anglo-Saxon language and pronounce the pronoun you, as they did, i. e., "Thic," or "thik" or "thuk." Will some of our Hebrew, Latin and Greek scholars please come to our rescue now and tell us which of these varied spellings comes the nearer the Hebrew equivalent that our Savior probably used?

If we hang on to these old-fashioned forms because they have done good service in their time, should we not with equal wisdom hold to ancient methods of travel, and on to the stanch old long bridges, and wooden plows?

Why should we use ye as a nominative and you as a dative, since the latter so completely does duty for both?

Since the machine runs lighter with less friction, and less noise, and does better work, why in the world should we hang on to the noisy, cumbersome, wabbly old wheels?

Did the all-seeing intelligence of Jesus ever utter a truer saying than this: For the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light?

If we excuse ourselves for using these primitive forms because they occur in prophetic utterances, then we are reminded that the opinion of those thought to be the highest authority on earth is that God does not as a rule give words, or language to his prophets. Let the same truth be revealed to twenty different persons, each one would tell it in his own peculiar form of speech.

FROM ANOTHER ANGLE

In all probability the most direct language we have from heaven may be found in the great message given to the boy of fourteen in the spring of 1820, from the Father and his Son. And next to this probably comes the discourse thrice uttered by the angel of God from the courts of glory, on that memorable night of September 21, 1823, which occupied the whole night. Then add to these the six succeeding ministrations of the same heavenly personage, making ten distinct discourses delivered by individuals direct from heaven.

We have had eighty-five years in which to study all there is of record of these astonishing events. And has anyone in all these years found where any use was made of these cast-off germs of our language? If so, where are they? If not, then is it not reasonable to assume that the hosts of heaven are not deeply in love with them?

The writer has grown weary in his awkward, uncouth, clumsy efforts to rightly apply these unusual terms. But lest I weary you by being too lengthy, I ask in conclusion:

Can anyone point to the terms ye, thee, thy, thou, or thine, in any official utterance to the church through him who "learned to love and loved to learn" since the 15th day of the 4th month of the year 1894?

Had his long experience, his keen discernment, and intimate acquaintance with the Lord, taught him that the old-time Catholic diction was not comely?

D. R. BALDWIN.

Peace! And no longer from its brazen portals

The blast of war's great organ shakes the skies,
But beautiful as songs of the immortals

The holy melodies of love arise.—Longfellow.
Instruments blending together, yield the divinest music,
Out of a myriad flowers, sweetest of honey is drawn.

—William Wetmore Story.

News from Missions

New England

My last communication was from Jonesport, Maine. From that town I went to Corea, Maine, and there had the pleasure of organizing a branch of the church. Brother John F. Sheehy was placed in charge temporarily. Brother James Clark was ordained a priest, Brother Guy Francis a deacon, Sister Ella Young chosen secretary.

The Saints in Corea met with considerable opposition in times past. Many at that time were members of the Union Church, and when Brother Arthur Koehler began his services there, a division took place among the people: they lined up for and against him. He was turned out of the church building; sixty-five people went with him. The Baptists assumed full control, apparently against all law and order. Our Saints and their friends entered into suit against those who had denied them privilege to hold services in the church. The judge before whom the case was tried, rendered a decision requiring that $1,050 be paid over to the Saints and friends by the opposing factor. With this money, somewhat increased by special contributions, the Saints have erected a large and splendid church, one that they can well be proud of. For the successful turning of this affair much credit is due to Arthur Koehler, whose faithfulness made it possible to reap so great results.

Brother John F. Sheehy wields a great influence with the people in Corea and vicinity. He has recently baptized several there, and more are to follow upon his return from the reunion.

I directed the president of the Eastern Maine District, Brother Ebeling, to organize a branch at Jonesboro, where from twenty to twenty-five faithful members reside. J. C. Foss formerly of Independence, Missouri, lives at this place. This brother is one of the old-time missionaries, who helped to establish the gospel work along the rock-bound coast of Maine, over forty years ago. I meet many people in Maine who speak very favorably of Brother Foss, and remember well his many sacrifices for the Master's cause. I am pleased to note that he still wields an influence for good among them. He has permission from the missionary in charge to do all the good he can.

I have known Brother Foss for thirty-five years, and never have had cause to regret forming his acquaintance; and my prayers are that the heavenly Father may bless him in his declining years, with that sweet peace which no man can give or take away. His companion is enjoying better health in the East than she did in the West. Both seem to be cheerful and happy.

I visited Stonington, Maine, and was domiciled at the pleasant home of Brother and Sister Henry Eaton. These good people made my stay pleasant. I was grieved to learn of the serious sickness of Brother George Knowlton, president of the branch. He had undergone an operation for appendicitis, a bad case, but through the goodness of God he was spared. At Stonington I had the pleasure of meeting our good old friend Brother Isaac M. Smith, who though not very well in body is still striving to help the Saints to become strong in spirit.

Maine is the best field for missionary labor that I know of. It offers wonderful opportunities for reaching the people; but it is a case where the harvest is plentiful but the laborers few. In this State many schoolhouses are open to us, and large audiences are anxious to receive the word. We ought to have ten missionaries here where we have one. The people are the most hospitable I have ever met. Summer and fall are the best seasons in which to prosecute the work, but the winter months offer special opportunities—then the farmers have more leisure and the seafaring men are home.

I spent a few days visiting my wife's relatives in Worcester, not having seen them for years. My mother-in-law was visiting her daughter at Pittsfield, and another daughter was at the seashore; these I did not see. However, I enjoyed my sojourn in the city at the home of my sister-in-law, Mrs. Kinney.

The Massachusetts reunion convened on July 24, and is still in session, but near its end, closing next Sunday, August 8.

Bishop E. L. Kelley and wife spent a few days with us. While here he delivered sermons along financial lines, which were appreciated by the Saints. He left this week for Philadelphia.

President Frederick M. Smith and family arrived here Wednesday from Worcester, to remain till the close of the reunion. Brother Smith delivered a sermon last night which was well received by the Saints. He dealt with church matters, and his frankness won the respect and confidence of all present. He seems to have regained much strength, and is his old-time self—alive to the interest of the work, and manifestly in earnest.

We are confident that in the due time of the Lord, Brother Smith's influence will be felt for good throughout the church. He will soon be able to devote his full time and talents to the interests of church work in general. Our association with the President of the church has deepened the impression that indicates the Spirit's guidance of Brother Frederick M. Smith, unfolding to him the greatness of his task, and qualifying him for its accomplishment. We are confident that all faithful Saints will see and feel that Israel's God is with him. All should help him by rendering cooperation. It is God's work. Brother Smith and family will start for Independence at the close of the reunion, via Maine and Canada.

Brother U. W. Greene is attending the reunion. He has rendered good service. He will go to the Kirtland reunion from here, after which he will labor in his old field around Ohio till holidays. We have also here with us Dr. Joseph Luff, Elders H. J. Davison, J. F. Sheehy, H. A. and J. A. Koehler, R. W. Farrell, with local brethren, including the district bishopric and presidency. Thus we have not lacked for preachers. The sermons throughout have not been lacking in spirituality and truth. Those who occupied the rostrum have not shunned to declare all the counsel of God, keeping back nothing that was profitable. Their work had the old Jerusalem gospel ring.

The social meetings have been spiritual and therefore edifying. Over one hundred young people were present at the reunion. Over three hundred campers on the ground; this number much augmented on Sundays. About five hundred came out last Sunday and were entertained by listening to the oratorio, "From Olivet to Calvary." Brother A. N. Hoxie was leader. Singers were present from the Massachusetts and New York and Philadelphia districts. The institute work under the charge of Brother Davison was a success. The lectures given by the writer were well attended. The weather this past week has been against us; rain and wind have not been able to discourage the Saints, however, who seem to enjoy fully their privilege to associate and talk of God's goodness to them.

We have had the average number of baptisms, eleven in all, but the attendance of outsiders has been small. We do not wonder at this, when we consider that within a short distance from us is the Onset Spiritualist camp ground, and also a fashionable summer resort. People seem to love pleasure more than they love God. The Saints indulged in innocent amusements, such as ball playing, bathing, etc.

The Saints own the reunion grounds, which contain fifty acres. There is a fine salt water front, and plenty of shade under oak and pine trees. Good bathing place. Abundance of cold drinking water. Several cottages have been erected here. Many more are to be built in the future. Many prefer these to tents; they are drier in wet weather. Some campers have board floors in their tents, which help considerably.

There are Saints here from the north, south, west, and the east. I have heard many pronounce this the best reunion held in Onset. Personally, I have enjoyed my sojourn exceedingly, and I shall not soon forget the Saints and the pleasant time I have had on these grounds. I trust that I shall have the privilege of meeting these kind Saints again.

Wishing them success in their endeavors to serve the Lord, I remain,

Your brother in the Lord,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

ONSET, MASSACHUSETTS, August 6, 1915.

Toronto District

At the time of receiving my appointment from the church in April, I was in attendance upon my mother, who was seriously ill, and who departed this life on the morning of May 7. It seemed as though it was useless for me to think of taking the field, but mother's counsel before her death was that I should do so. Following her demise, I assisted my father, Elder Samuel Brown, to arrange affairs as best I could.

On the eve of my departure, the Saints invited me to a miscellaneous shower at the home of Brother Charles Osborne. Here I listened to a very flattering address and was presented with a gold-handled umbrella and a sum of money, all of which I endeavored to receive in the same spirit in which it was presented. I trust I may always merit the respect of the Saints.

I bade loved ones good-by, and this time it was different than heretofore, for R. T. was leaving for the missionary field instead of father. On Sunday I met with the Saints at Garafraxa. They had good meetings, and the Spirit was present. Brethren W. D. Ellis, A. T. McClain, J. T. Whitehead, and the writer were the speakers. Brother Ellis and myself continued there and worked until Saturday, when we left for Elsnore to attend a grove meeting on Sunday. The Saints of neighboring branches were present, so we had a reunion on a small scale. I went by request to the home of our genial district president, Brother D. B. Perkins, and was treated well here, as elsewhere.

In company with Brother Perkins, I visited Wiraton and spoke on Monday evening, and Tuesday evening at Hepworth. On Wednesday I left for Owen Sound. I was here made welcome at the home of Brother William Elliott. I preached here Wednesday and Thursday evenings. On Friday at 9 p. m. I took boat for Manitowaning, arriving there at 10 a. m., June 26th. Brother John Shields arrived in the evening from the north shore. We attended meeting in the church at Lake Manitou on Sunday, and during the week held meetings, Brother Shields giving blessings.

On Thursday we attended the annual picnic of the Saints. They realized from the stands and tables about eighty-five dollars, some of which they intend to use for fencing the church grounds. On Sunday the Saints from the Slash and Sanfield branches met with the Manitowaning Saints. We held four services, the first being a prayer meeting. The gift of tongues with interpretation was manifested through Brother Shields.

Brother Shields and I labored together until he took his departure for the reunions. Since that time I have been holding meetings and visiting among the Saints, trying to do the best I could under the circumstances. I have baptized three young men since coming to the island. I trust I may be instrumental in bringing many more into the kingdom.

I find the limited musical ability I possess to be a great help both in singing and in playing. This seems to be of interest when the preaching of the word fails. I hope to be able to use these abilities, though they may be small, in a way and manner that will be most pleasing to my heavenly Father.

The brethren who have labored here in the past are still remembered by the Saints. Brethren Tomlinson, Walter Bennett, and Shields are mentioned as the pioneers. Brother Smith, president of the Manitou Branch, is always at the post of duty, willing to assist in whatever he can to help the good work along. In fact, most of the Saints are willing to do their best.

Trusting that I may be able to assist in building up and strengthening the work, I am,

Your colaborer,

ROBERT T. BROWN.

MERLIN, ONTARIO, Route 4, Home Address.

Arizona

We can report the work of the Lord progressing in South-western Arizona. Since beginning work in our new church at Douglas, little more than a month ago, we have baptized eight, representing six families, seven of whom are adults. Meetings have been regularly held each Sunday at 11 a. m. and in the evening. Of late we hold Wednesday night prayer meetings.

The Ladies Aid has been active in reducing the debt by ice cream socials and in other ways. Readings by Sister Aura Belle Fike at the high school auditorium have added to our revenue, and to our appreciation of Graceland's late professor of elocution. We do not forget either that she is a product of Arizona.

A brother was baptized in Bisbee on July 8, and others there are almost persuaded. Opportunity for a good work here has never seemed brighter to us. We are crippled, however, from a lack of finances. Missionaries can not labor for their sustenance and still accomplish the best in the field. The Saints and friends of Douglas have been taxed to finish the church and pay the indebtedness, and are not able to assist in the general work. The church is now finished, or near completion, and is nicely seated.

Saints passing through will be welcome to our worship.

In bonds,

S. D. CONDIT.

DOUGLAS, ARIZONA, August 5, 1915.

News from Branches

Toronto, Ontario

The fourth annual reunion of the Toronto Branch was held at Lowbanks, July 17 to August 15. This summer event rivals in magnitude the theater campaign conducted during the winter season; but of course is not so prolonged.

The value of this summer outing is becoming more and more recognized; and so many are taking advantage of it that some go weeks before the reunion proper begins, and remain for some time after its close. Their time is fully occupied in making ready for the arrival of the Toronto specials on opening day. On the arrival of these trains the grounds present an animated scene. All is hustle and bustle, getting settled in tents. It reminds one of the arrival of a circus, were it not for the absence of elephants (and clowns?).

Special excursion rates are arranged, good going any day during reunion, and a very good week-end auto service is maintained.

A great amount of time and labor has been spent in developing the grounds, which are now in splendid condition. Permanent dining hall, store, kitchen and cement cellars have been built. Cement walks are laid, and the grounds are piped and illuminated by gas.

The attendance this year was good; and all are unanimous in declaring it the "best ever." So popular is the reunion becoming in the Lowbanks neighborhood that hundreds of strangers are in attendance on Sundays. All kinds of vehicles line the roadways for great distances. The large tent is far too small to accommodate the crowds at the preaching services on Sunday. The reunion is accomplishing much good in that section of country, besides being of great value spiritually to our branch.

During the last week a number of brethren from outside places were present, among whom were Elders J. F. Curtis, R. C. Russell, John Shields, J. W. Wight, Will Anderson, and James Pycock, the latter being present throughout the reunion. All did good work in their respective lines, and their efforts were enjoyed by the Saints.

Bishop Evans has labored hard to bring this reunion up to its present standing. The Toronto Branch has placed him in charge of the whole work, and its splendid organization is due to his ability as an organizer, and a man who gets results. He is willingly assisted by all upon whom he calls for help. He recognizes the value of exercise, and certainly keeps the Saints on the move, continually, from one work to another.

The work here is onward. Baptisms are frequent, and the Saints are rejoicing in the great latter-day glory.

Your brother,

A. F. MCLEAN.

48 Fern Avenue, August 16, 1915.

Cleveland, Ohio

Cleveland Branch has been much benefited by the presence of Brother L. E. Hills this summer. We held a series of meetings during the week, which were well attended. One was added to our number last week. Our open-air services in the park have been very interesting and instructive, and a power for good through the instrumentality of Brother Hills. Some of the audience have attended our branch meetings as a consequence.

District Convention will be held at Kirtland. We have pamphlets for distribution to visitors, giving a brief history of the Temple, its purpose, how conducted, also showing by court rulings our sole right of title to the property.

Cleveland Branch meets at Wade Park Avenue and Seventy-first Street.

F. C. WEBBE.

August 11, 1915.

Los Angeles, California

Brother Chapman, late of Portland, Oregon, has been visiting at Ontario the past few weeks. He visited and preached at San Bernardino, Long Beach, Los Angeles, and Santa Ana.

Brother A. Carmichael, formerly bishop of Southern California, but of late years manager of the Herald Publishing House, is a welcome visitor to this section. He held special services at Los Angeles, August 2 and 3, which were edifying and instructive to the Saints who attended. He also preached to a good congregation of Saints and friends at Long Beach. At present he is attending the Northern California reunion, and expects to be in attendance at ours.

Los Angeles and Long Beach congregations are much pleased with their new individual communion sets, which seem very satisfactory and a valuable addition to the service.

Brother Goodrich continues to improve.

289 East Forty-Eighth Street.

R. T. COOPER.

Miscellaneous Department

Convention Minutes

MINNESOTA.—Religio, June 17, Clitherall. Standard of excellence was adopted for district and locals. Officers elected: Ella M. Lambkin, president; R. J. Wildey, vice president; Alta Kimber, secretary; Lillian Wolfe, treasurer; Cora Wildey, member library board; Iva R. Gould, home department superintendent; B. S. Lambkin, superintendent temperance department; W. E. Peak, superintendent good literature. Bemidji local disorganized, members thereof recommended for membership in Pine Wood. Adjourned to meet day previous next conference same place. Genevieve N. Whitney, secretary.

Convention Notices

Utah Sunday school, August 27, 336 South Fourth East Street, Salt Lake City. Business and institute 3 p. m., literary and musical program 8. Floy W. McKim, superintendent. Pearl Wardle, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Florida, September 18 to 26, Florida Branch. Meals 15 cents. We hope to have Brother R. C. Russell with us. O. O. Simmons, secretary.

Two-Day Meetings

East Jordan, Michigan, September 18 and 19. J. F. Curtis will be present. Bring well-filled baskets. C. N. Burtch, secretary.

Bay City, Michigan, September 4 and 5. Beaverton, Michigan, September 11 and 12. All invited. Good speakers. George W. Burt, president.

To Locate Members

Union Fort, Utah, Branch desires information of whereabouts of: Susan M. While, born May 22, 1835, George Frank White, Susan M. White, born November 19, 1860, Olive White, Thomas G. Thornton, Mary Olive Raymond, Edward Raymham and August A. Okesson.

CHARLES D. WARDLE, Branch Clerk.

SANDY, UTAH, Route 3.

Addresses

Charles E. Crumley, box 70, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Requests for Prayers

Request comes from Saints at Fayette City, Pennsylvania, for prayers in behalf of a number of children afflicted with gatherings in their heads. These children are to be administered to on the afternoon of September 5, and it is desired that the Saints pray that they may find relief.

Sister Mary J. Meade, of Colorado, asks prayers that she may recover her eyesight and be strengthened in body. She also asks that the Saints pray that her son may have opportunity to hear the gospel.

Married

REES—MCMILLEN.—At Kirtland, Ohio, August 14, Mr. Archibald Rees, to Sister Frances Ellen McMillen of New Philadelphia, Ohio, L. W. Powell officiating.

Died

DOBBINS.—Eliza Green Dobbins, born March 14, 1826; died August 5, 1915. Baptized April, 1873, by Joseph Lakeman. Services from Union church, West Jonesport, Maine, by F. J. Ebeling. A large number of people attended, deceased being the oldest citizen in the neighborhood and related to many. She died rejoicing in the glorious hope of the resurrection.

POOLEY.—Bessie E. Leighton was born December 2, 1885, Grindstone, Michigan; died August 3, 1915, of appendicitis, after an illness of only thirty hours. Baptized by W. D.

Ellis. Married Earl Pooley, December 24, 1914. Deceased was an active church worker, loved by all who knew her. Leaves husband, father, stepmother, 5 brothers, Robert, Herbert, Roy, Enid, Montana, Albert, Frank, (Flint, Michigan), 3 sisters, Evah Reynolds, Sarah, Enid, Emma Saltzer (Flint). Services at Saints' church, Andes, Montana, by J. C. Page. Interment in Andes Cemetery.

REID.—William Reid, born March 28, 1859, Georgetown, Ontario; died August 11, 1915, Spry, Ontario. Baptized by S. G. St. John, May 19, 1907, deceased remained steadfast in the faith. He leaves wife, 1 son, 5 brothers, 4 sisters. Services in Presbyterian church, Spry, were well attended by a large audience. Sermon by W. D. Ellis, interment in Eastnor Cemetery.

MCDONALD.—William John McDonald, beloved husband of Mary McDonald, born March 25, 1871, in Nova Scotia; died near Fresno, California, August 4, 1915. The large attendance at the funeral expressed the esteem in which he was held. Services in charge of J. B. Carmichael.

Kentucky Feuds

Not many years ago Clay County, Kentucky, was one of the most notorious counties for the famous feuds that broke out continually. The newspapers made frequent mention of the Baker-Howard Feud that was waged bitterly. To-day there is no newspaper notoriety for Clay County, for there is no feud there. The remarkable story of what conquered the feuds is to be told in The Sunday School Times by a well-known writer who visited the county and met the man who is the hero of this thrilling story. This man who brought about the transformation in the county was once in the thick of the feud himself. A three weeks' free trial of The Sunday School Times may be had (as long as the supply lasts), for a post card request, asking for "Kentucky Feuds," addressed to the Sunday School Times, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

September "American Boy"

The first of the fall numbers of the leading boys' magazine presents an unusually attractive group of fiction and articles of genuine merit. The new serial, "Indian Lodge Post," by Dillon Wallace, the Newfoundland explorer, is not only a high tension story of adventure but the many years its author has spent in the northern woods insures an accurate portrayal of trading post life. "Three inches of water," by C. H. Claudy, is a novel story of a boy who saved his life with his camera when in a perilous situation. Those interested in football will enjoy "Open field running," by R. C. Zuppke, the coach who led the University of Illinois eleven to the championship of the Western Conference last fall. It is illustrated with diagrams of some of Coach Zuppke's winning plays. The baseball contingent is also represented and will be more than satisfied with an article in which Ty Cobb tells what he believes is the secret of his success in becoming the leader in the national sport. Harold Titus has worked out an interesting story of Randall Forbes named "The lonesome boy." Incidentally, it gives some accurate information in an interesting style of the operation of oil wells. "A sense of humor," by Harold de Polo; "Daddy Travelyan," by Tudor Jenks, and "The lonely trail," by James B. Hendryx, are interesting stories. "A naturalist on the Orinoco" is an informative article on life on the South American Continent as seen by Leo Miller, of the American Museum of Natural History on his exploration trip with the Roosevelt South American Expedition. The departments are evidently conducted for the live boy who does things, and the September issue offers enough suggestions of things to make and do to keep a wholesome boy out of mischief. Many brief articles cover current events and men and boys in the public eye. Take a copy home to the boy. $1 a year. Published by The Sprague Publishing Company, Detroit, Michigan.

"The Diplomatic Point of View"

It will perhaps be news to many Americans that the diplomatic circle in any country is the least snobbish of all circles. Yet that is said to be the unusual contention of Maurice Francis Egan, our minister to Denmark, in an article announced under the title, "The diplomatic point of view" for the September Century. And the statement is said to be very well substantiated. "The daughter of a duke," writes Mr. Egan, "without thought, without question, walks in to dinner or takes her place in a circle at court after the wife of an

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver, Assistant Editor.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter. Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
 The Angel Message Tracts—Chapter 3 - - - 809
 Current Events - - - - - 811
 Notes and Comments - - - - - 812

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
 The Seventh-day Adventists, by Marcus Cook - 814
 In the Realm of the Aaronic Priesthood, by George Reeves - - - - - 818

OF GENERAL INTEREST:
 Science and Alcohol - - - - - 820
 Busting the Knot Hole Industry - - - - - 821

THE CHILDREN'S HOME - - - - - 822
 Joseph Roberts.

LETTER DEPARTMENT - - - - - 823
 H. W. Savage—O. D. Shirk—James D. Schofield—
 Louise A. Wall—Peter Muceus—Mrs. L. M. Horton—
 Daniel B. Sorden—D. R. Baldwin.

NEWS FROM MISSIONS - - - - - 826
 Gomer T. Griffiths—Robert T. Brown—S. D. Condit.

NEWS FROM BRANCHES - - - - - 828
 A. F. McLean—F. C. Webbe—R. T. Cooper.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT - - - - - 829

A New Book of Sermons

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER

By Elder J. S. Roth

The second addition just issued, revised and enlarged by the author. Everyone that knows Elder Roth—and many that do not—knows that he is a very successful missionary. He has been in the mission field for thirty-five years, and is an excellent preacher. This book of his sermons—thirty-eight of them—covers so wide a range of subjects and does it so thoroughly that you need it for your own information, and to lend to your investigating neighbor. Elder Roth is always a preacher for the people; uses enough scripture to make his utterances authoritative, tells where to find it, yet does not tire the hearer with too much monotony.

Quotations and citations have been verified. This book has been revised and enlarged so that the new edition has 556 pages of reading matter in it. The autobiography of the author is a valuable feature of the book. Through the generosity of Elder Roth we are enabled to offer this well-printed, nicely-arranged, and well-bound book at the nominal sum of 75c. Order No. 248a. Always send your order to the ambassador or minister who may happen to be the daughter of a Dutch roturier." Etiquette itself, in diplomacy, becomes in this way the promoter of democracy. The disadvantages of diplomats who do not speak French, and of American diplomats who have no order to bestow in return for courtesies and favors granted to their country or countrymen, the unexpected frankness of diplomats, the European view of diplomatic uniforms, subjects which diplomats consider safe and unsafe for conversation, are among the many subjects said to be familiarly discussed by this veteran of the service.

Herald Publishing House

Lamoni, - - - - - Iowa

Book Reviews

STUDIES IN RECENT ADVENTISM.—Henry C. Sheldon, Abington Press, New York City, 150 Fifth Avenue, $1. This is a book of about one hundred sixty pages, containing a review and an analysis of the assumptions, claims, and teachings of Adventism. The name of the author is somewhat familiar as he is author of associated works known as A Fourfold Test of Mormonism, and Christian Science So-called. This book is advertised as "a valuable antidote to the materialism, Russellism, and premillennialism to to-day." In his preface the author states that he was led to write it because of communications received from pastors who were under pressure of dealing with radical types of Adventist teaching. He felt moved to come to the rescue of those who were thus put to their wits' end to meet the Adventist people. Special attention is given to the teaching of Pastor C. T. Russell.

CARDINAL TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.—Samuel F. Halfyard, Professor of Philosophy and Theology in Wesley College, Methodist Book Concern, New York City, 150 Fifth Avenue, and Cincinnati. $1. "An eminently sane and reasonable discussion of such topics as The Meaning of the Cross, Sin—Its Origin, Nature, and Penalty, The Birth from Above, etc. While perfectly in harmony with the evangelical viewpoint, the author recognizes the changed emphasis in the modern day and gives reverent and constructive scholarship its rightful place. The style is logical, clear, and convincing."

THE OLD FAITH IN THE NEW DAY.—Joseph M. M. Gray, Abington Press, New York City, and Cincinnati. $1. "An unusual treatment of a vital subject, showing the true plan and work of the church in the modern day. The style is original, the reasoning clear and forceful, and the effect cumulative and convincing. The critic of the church is fearlessly met and put on the defensive. The book is a distinctly constructive contribution."

THE LAST DITCH.—J. Raymond Elderdice, Rand McNally & Company, New York City. $1. A story of the Panama Canal. "Carvel Hildreth, the hero of this story, leaves college under a cloud, but redeems himself by hard work on the canal, and ultimately returns to Ballard, where he immediately regains his leadership. It is a fine, spirited, and decidedly pointed story, which will make a strong appeal to American youths. In it no less than three big ends are achieved. The first is patriotism, for a man practically without a country is born anew into intense love for the United States; second, the book presents a magnificent picture of the Canal Zone and its colossal engineering feat, from the viewpoint of an earnest striver for the honor of the States in the successful accomplishment of a mighty task; third, it depicts the conversion of a careless, heedless spendthrift of time and money into the ideal of noble manhood."

JACOB, A LAD OF NAZARETH.—Mable Gifford Shine, Rand McNally & Company, Chicago. $1. "The life of Christ is here given in a most attractive form and the beauty of his character is clearly revealed. Being told from the standpoint of the playmates of Jesus, the story will appeal to both old and young. Both the childhood and manhood of the Savior are portrayed, but the author has refrained from picturing the agonies of the crucifixion and the tragic events which preceded it."

THE A B C OF SOCIALISM.—I. G. Savoy, editor of the New England Socialist, official organ of the Massachusetts Socialist Party, author of Socialism and Youth, and M. O. Teck, author of Patriotism and Profit. Richard G. Badger, Boston and Toronto, paper 25 cents, cloth 50 cents. The author has announced that the A B C of Socialism means the X Y Z of capitalism. The publishers assert that this is a book of big ideas in small words containing a list of new answers to old objections against socialism. Chapters are devoted to "The extent and growth of modern socialism," "Socialism as a study of human progress," "The modern class struggle," "Socialism as a criticism of modern society," "Ideal aspects of socialism," "The Socialist Party," "Objections to socialism answered," "The labor theory of value," etc.

The New Folder Tracts Are Popular

Just recently the HERALD announced the printing of an edition of two new folder tracts. From the ready response and the words of commendation received, the Bureau of Publicity is pleased to announce that a second large edition is now being issued. There are still a number of communities not heard from who should secure some of the folders for distribution. They are distinctively tasty, and will be read where a plain tract would not. They cost a little more than the ordinary kind, but are worth the difference. It will pay to use these liberally.

Folder Number 1

Gives a brief epitome of the history of the church—just enough to properly inform and yet be read by the average busy person. One page is devoted to pungent proofs that we are both evangelical and orthodox.

Two full-page illustrations—one of the Quorum of Twelve in a late session at Independence, Missouri, and the other good picture of an audience in front of the Independence church.

Folder Number 2

Gives a short history of the First Presidency of the church, especially of the presidents. There are excellent pictures of Joseph the Martyr, President Joseph Smith, and President Frederick M. Smith.

"What we believe" occupies one page on the back.

Part of the editorial appearing in the Kansas City Journal concerning the life of Joseph Smith is included in the tract.

The printing is done with a pleasing sepia ink on a pretty India-tint plate paper. The size when folded is three and a half by eight and a half inches—convenient pocket size.

The price is 20 cents a dozen; $1 per 100; $7 per 1,000. Always order of

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE, Lamoni, Iowa

GRACELAND COLLEGE BONDS

In order to place the finances of Graceland College on a better basis, those having the financial responsibility of the same have thought best to issue bonds to the amount of $35,000.00.

These bonds run from July 1, 1915, to July 1, 1920, and bear 5 per cent interest, payable semi-annually.

They are offered to the Saints and to any investor as a first-class investment.

These bonds are secured by a first mortgage on real estate valued at about $62,000.00.

Each bond is valued at $100.00. We earnestly invite the attention of any having money to invest to investigate this proposition.

You will be not only putting your money in a safe place (as the whole church is back of these bonds as well as secured by mortgage) but you will be helping the work of the church.

Address all communications to

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Lamoni, Iowa

*****
A New Book
THE INTERPRETER

By Gomer T. Griffiths

A Revision of the "Exegesis"

containing more charts and information than the former book, also an illustrated chapter on offenses—law governing the same—procedure in church courts, and blank forms suitable to the same. The various quotations from the books have been carefully compiled and arranged, so that the instructions pertaining to each office are classified, to assist the reader in locating the duties of each minister from the president of the church to the deacon, also points out how the different officers are called and the manner of their ordination, thereby securing courtesy to whom courtesy is due.

Price .....50c

Objections to the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants Answered and Refuted

You can't take the time, neither have you the data at hand to be able to refute many of the so-called arguments against these two books. Brother J. R. Lambert has placed in book form facts and data to refute these so-called arguments. A handy book to have in your library. Order 148 .....40c

Braden-Kelley Debate

This book contains the full report of an eighteen-night debate between the Church of Christ (Campbellite) and the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. The work is a library in itself. Though it has been in print for several years it is still one of the best books published to show the stability of God's truth. Order 125 .....1.50

The Instructor

A book that is one of our very best sellers, and to see the book is enough to explain why it is such a favorite. This work is the result of Brother G. T. Griffiths' efforts and it has been of untold good. To the student, the busy man, and the investigator alike the book is of untold value. Subjects topically arranged.

Order 126 cloth .....75
 127 Leather .....1.00
 128 Flexible .....1.75

Have you heard of the old Spalding story from which the Book of Mormon was said to have been taken? Well, here is the Spalding story. Better get it and know for yourself. Only .....25c
 Order 139.

Failures of Campbellism

A new tract by Elder E. E. Long. Reprinted from a series of twelve articles in HERALD of 1913. Logically presented and systematically arranged. Quotations verified. 139 pages. Order 217 .....20c

What Is Man

Is a book that should receive the careful study of every Saint. It clears away the fog of doubt with reference to the eternal verities of the future state of man. No better book on the subject of immortality. Order 140 .....50c

THE STORY OF THE BIBLE

Contains 168 stories, each story complete in itself and together forming a narrative of the Holy Scriptures. Profusely illustrated with color plates and halftones. Just what you need to put in the hands of your children. Book contains 752 pages.

Order Story of the Bible, cloth ..$1.50

COLORED POST CARDS

Graceland College, Saints' Home, Liberty Home, Independence church, Herald Publishing House, Lamoni church.

1 of each for 15 cents.
 2 of each for 25 cents.
 Order by number 172a.

COMPENDIUM OF FAITH is a work for the student. It is a collection of texts taken from the standard church works on a great many subjects. Also a splendid brief history of the Apostasy.

Order No.
 141 cloth .....75c
 141½ leather .....$1.00
 174 flexible .....$1.50

"There's No Place Like Colorado After All"

Haven't you found that nearly everybody has a longing to go to Colorado? Even though you have never seen the state, there is a call that reaches out and bids you come.

Certain it is, that those who have once filled their lungs with the invigorating ozone and bathed in the indescribable sunshine—invariably long to return.

Colorado is a wonderful place for children. The summer life out there is just about as ideal as can be imagined and a few weeks of outdoor life is wonderfully beneficial to everybody. Best of all—it isn't expensive.

The Burlington's Colorado-Utah handbook is worth reading even if you don't go. Send for your copy to-day.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

Colorado's charm, once realized, is all but irresistible

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, SEPTEMBER 1, 1915

NUMBER 35

Editorial

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

CHAPTER 4

THE BAPTISM OF WATER

And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.—Matthew 28: 18-20.

In order to establish a true relation among men and between man and God, the church was instituted through Jesus Christ. Various ordinances and commandments were given by him for faithful observance. He provided a perfect form of worship which would when accepted result in a marvelous transformation of character, purity of life, loving one's neighbor, rendering assistance to the needy, visiting the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and keeping oneself unspotted from the vices of the world.

DISCRIMINATION NECESSARY

The foregoing words of Christ spoken to the apostles indicate that baptism is positively commanded.

Is it true that in carrying out the command so-called, baptism may be administered by pouring or sprinkling, or by immersion, under the hands of one not holding authority from God to officiate in the ordinances of the Lord's house? Are there three distinct ways of keeping the one positive command of Christ?

To be involved in spiritual iniquity or confusion means to be away from God. He does not walk in crooked paths.

John the Revelator announces that in due time an angel will cry:

Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.—Revelation 14: 8.

He also writes:

And I heard another voice from heaven saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins and that ye receive not of her plagues.—Revelation 18: 4.

It is necessary to discriminate between doctrines of men and the doctrine of Christ; otherwise, there will be no rejection of the doctrines of men and no acceptance of the doctrine of Christ. Truth and error should not be intertwined in the minds and hearts of men. One should believe in Christ, affirm the truth of his teachings, and have faith in the efficacy of all the words that came from his gracious lips.

Baptism is declared to be one of the "principles" of the "doctrine of Christ":

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.—Hebrews 6: 1, 2.

John writes:

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.—2 John 9.

The Jews made a great mistake in setting aside their best judgment concerning Christ and his work, and accepting in lieu thereof what their leaders enjoined upon them.

BAPTISM ESSENTIAL

And he [Jesus] said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.—Mark 16: 15, 16.

So important was baptism that Jesus after his resurrection made this direct reference to the ordinance; and also commanded his apostles to go and "teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Words could not convey more plainly that this ordinance precedes and is a condition of salvation.

Jesus said to Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.)

Simpler words, or words fraught in their operation with greater consequences, were never spoken. They reveal the mind of Christ relating to an entrance into the kingdom of God, and should be accepted as the truth.

Peter is on record as follows:

The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God), by the resurrection of Jesus Christ.—1 Peter 3: 21.

Concerning Christ we read: "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4: 12.

PERSONALITY OF CHRIST

It is not well to allow any theory of belief or philosophy to separate the Savior of the world from the church he founded, the gospel he proclaimed, or the work he performed. There is no salvation in Christ apart from his royal representations showing forth the will of God. Can one believe in Christ and reject his words?

Napoleon Bonaparte loses his unique personality if not identified with his military achievements; Abraham Lincoln can in no true sense be separated from his work of emancipation of the colored race; George Washington is inseparably connected with the service he rendered to his country; and Christ, the Savior of the world, can not be separated from his gospel. James declares it to be the "perfect law of liberty." If Christ were separated from what he stood as a representative of, wherein would his personality be different from that of any ordinary person?

Since salvation is the result of obedience to the teachings of Christ, loss and disaster must follow in the wake of a repudiation of what came through the Son of God. In no mystical sense does Christ save, apart from obedience to his gospel. He said:

Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?—Luke 6: 46.

But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.—Matthew 15: 9.

He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.—John 12: 48.

CITIZENSHIP

An alien applying for citizenship in the United States must do the very thing exacted by our Government to obtain citizenship; he must live in the country a certain number of years, appear before an authorized officer of the law and swear allegiance to the Constitution of the United States. All this is required before citizenship is secured. Respect for law and authority is necessary to obtain citizenship.

Jesus, the "head of the church," the "apostle and high priest of our profession," has said, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." Exacting are the requirements of entrance into the kingdom of God. Have you obeyed Christ? Are you a citizen of the kingdom of God? Paul writes: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."—Galatians 3: 27.

FOR THE REMISSION OF SINS

Baptism is one of the conditions provided in the gospel for the remission of sins; this the law of God unequivocally proclaims:

Then Peter said unto them, repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2: 38, 39.

These words were spoken on the day of Pentecost to the immense throng, under the guilt of sin, who asked: "What shall we do? (i. e., to get rid of our sins and receive pardon)." The answer made by Peter is in full accord with the words of Christ: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." It is in perfect harmony with Christ's words to Nicodemus, making known how man can gain an entrance into the kingdom of God.

Ananias said to Saul: "And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." (Acts 22: 16.)

We read concerning John the Baptist:

John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins.—Mark 1: 4, 5.

Man fell by disobeying the words of God; now salvation is possible by obeying the law of God revealed through Christ the Lord. The servants of Jesus Christ to-day are teaching and practicing in harmony with Peter and Paul and John and Christ; and administer baptism as did his church nineteen hundred years ago for the "remission of sins." "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever." (Hebrews 13: 8.)

PREREQUISITES OF BAPTISM

Peter said to the Pentecostal throng, outside of the church: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Without repentance there would be no remission of sins in the administration of baptism. Jesus said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Unless accompanied by faith in God baptism would be a useless form. Combined with faith in God and repentance, baptism remits sins. The value lies in obedience to an ordinance instituted of God.

INFANTS NOT BAPTIZED

Baptism is for the "remission of sins" (Acts 2:38), children have committed no sins, therefore they are not proper subjects for baptism. No case of infant baptism is recorded or referred to in the Bible. It is not true that "Hell is crammed with infants damned, without a day of grace." Little children are of the "kingdom of heaven,"—when they arrive at the age of accountability they may be baptized.

Infant baptism is based on the traditions and doctrines of men. It comes in conflict with the true ordinance of baptism, the administration of which requires upon the part of candidates faith in God and repentance. Children before arriving at the age of accountability can not exercise faith or repentance—in case of death they are not lost, but are saved through the atonement of Christ.

The practice of the church of Jesus Christ was, and is, to have little children blessed through the laying on of hands; not baptized. Consider the following:

Then were there brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them, and pray; and the disciples rebuked them. But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven. And he laid his hands on them, and departed thence.—Matthew 19:13-15.

Jesus is the "Apostle and High Priest" of the church's "profession." (Hebrews 3:1.)

MODE: IMMERSION

According to Greek lexicons the primary meaning of the Greek word baptizo, from which comes the word baptize, is: dip, plunge, immerse, submerge, overwhelm. This should satisfy any mind as to whether scriptural baptism includes sprinkling or pouring. No command from God exists for water to be poured or sprinkled on anyone as a means of entrance into the kingdom of God. All are commanded to be baptized. No example is given in the Scriptures of three distinct modes being offered to the world for keeping any command of God.

The terms immersion and sprinkling are not convertible terms. To read sprinkling where the word baptizo occurs does not make good reading or sense. To illustrate:

I indeed have baptized [sprinkled] you with water: but he shall baptize [sprinkle] you with the Holy Ghost.—Mark 1:8.

And John also was baptizing [sprinkling] in Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized.—John 3:23.

And Jesus, when he was baptized [sprinkled], went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him.—Matthew 3:16.

(Continued to page 837.)

CURRENT EVENTS

HAITIAN PROTECTOR.—A treaty to run twelve years has been proposed by the United States to Haiti, establishing American control over finances in that revolution-torn country.

JEWISH EXPULSION REPEALED.—The decree of expulsion of Jews from Spain, issued by Ferdinand and Isabella in 1492, long a dead letter, has been formally repealed.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Fighting between Carranza and Villa forces continues, as do skirmishes along the international border between Mexican foragers and bandits and United States cavalrymen and sheriffs' posses. Carranza is said to be removing his capital from Vera Cruz to Mexico City. A peace conference seems more hopeful at this writing than heretofore. Daily deaths from starvation are reported from Mexico City. It is said that starvation also faces the populace in other parts of the republic.

THE "ARABIC."—Germany early in the week requested the United States Government not to act in the Arabic case until opportunity was had to present the German side. German authorities expressed the opinion that reports of the sinking could not "correspond with the facts," and added that if American lives were lost it was contrary to the intention of the German Government. Germany is reported as having since informally assured the United States that following the sinking of the Lusitania instructions were given submarine commanders to refrain from attacking passenger ships save under the conditions of international law. Germany gives further assurances that if the Arabic was sunk according to report, proper apologies and reparation will be made. A formal note is expected soon.

EASTMAN MONOPOLY.—The Eastman Kodak Company has by Judge John R. Hazel, of the United States District Court at Buffalo, New York, been declared a monopoly in restraint of trade, in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. Defendant has opportunity to present a plan "for the abrogation of the illegal monopoly" on November 1. The Government complains that this company controls seventy-two per cent of the trade of the country by prohibiting dealers selling Eastman goods from handling any other, and by fixing the retail price. The company urges that a dissolution is impossible, since said company has grown by the purchase and development of patents, and not by the purchase of competing corporations.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Germans report further gains in the east, including important points in the Russian second line of defense. The Germans have again resumed the offensive in the Baltic provinces. The Russian retreat continues orderly, and Germany is still baffled in her attempt to crush the Russian army. The week on the western front has been uneventful, except in the Vosges, where Germany and France have done considerable fighting. Comparative quiet characterizes the Austro-Italian line also. It seems that reports last week from the Gallipoli Peninsula were overdrawn; official British announcement states that "further serious and costly efforts will be required before a decisive victory is won." Except for a few minor losses, the week has been one of quiet on the seas. The air craft have been generally active, but with slight effect. The German Reichstag has unanimously voted a new war loan of two billion, five hundred million dollars. Japan is perfecting plans in accordance with a recent decision to employ all available resources, governmental and private, for swelling the nation's output of munitions to aid the allies. Negotiations are proceeding between Serbia, Greece and Rumania regarding proposed concessions to Bulgaria, with a view to an adjustment between these countries, pending the entrance of all of them into the war on the side of the allies.

---

NOTES AND COMMENTS

SAFELY HOME.—Word received from Elder Peter Muceus, dated August 13, is to the effect that he has arrived safely in his field, Norway. It is a matter for thanksgiving that thus far the elders and Saints have been delivered from the dangers of voyage in these perilous times.

FROM THE EAST.—President F. M. Smith writes from Stonington, Maine, under date of August 16 as follows:

Yesterday we spent a busy day with the Saints. Preached afternoon and evening with good attendance. Next Saturday and Sunday Western Maine District conference at Little Deer Isle, which we expect to attend. Our plans are to leave here on the 23d for Toronto.

NEWS FROM AUSTRALIA.—Brother C. A. Butterworth writes from Victoria, Australia, as follows:

The drought last year and the present dreadful war has made living very high in this country, and many are in poor circumstances even now, and the end is not yet. Hay is seventy-five dollars a ton, and about half the dairy herds are dead; but as the new grass is fast coming on the rest will be saved. I hope to be able to give our young men the proper advice in these times of trouble and distress. The Lord has spoken several times to the young men, stating that he has a work for them to do. He exhorts them to study the church books and make themselves ready, which indicates to me the kind of warfare he wants them to enlist in.

FROM OMAHA.—Under date of July 25 Elder Paul N. Craig writes from Omaha. Although the letter is personal, we take the liberty to extract the following:

We are getting along nicely here. Last Sunday we had an interpretive concert. The choir did exceptionally well. Sister Leeka read the words to each number that was given and gave the interpretation. It was a decided success and the numbers were appreciated by many who would otherwise have been slightly effected. We have decided to have these concerts occasionally. There was a fine large audience; a number of nonmembers were present. Last night Doctor W. O. Henry, one of our best physicians of the city, lectured to our men on the social evil. It was the finest thing I've heard along that line, treated from the Christian standpoint, as well as the purely physical. This was an open meeting of the priesthood. We are taking a course of instruction in grammar, and also a course in delivery. This latter includes pulpit conduct, presiding, scriptural reading, development in all lines necessary to our priesthood in presiding and speaking. It is really one of the best things we've undertaken yet. These lessons come every other Monday night. The other nights are taken up with regular priesthood work, lectures, discussions, etc., and the first night in each month is branch officers meeting.

HISTORY OF DECATUR COUNTY.—The church library is in receipt of a recently published history of Decatur County, Iowa, in two volumes, published by the S. J. Clarke Publishing Company, of Chicago. In this history our people have been given very generous and fair treatment. The following articles, written by members of the church, appear: "Hamilton Township before the war," by Duncan Campbell; "Graceland College," by Inez Smith-Davis; "The founding of Lamoni and the work of the Order of Enoch," by Asa S. Cochran; "The beginning of the Latter Day Saint Church," by Heman C. Smith; "Early settlement of Garden Grove," by Heman C. Smith; "The Decatur County Historical Society," by Frederick M. Smith, (erroneously credited to Heman C. Smith); "Biography of Joseph Smith," by Mary Audentia Anderson; "Biography of Alexander H. Smith," by Vida E. Smith; "Biography of Heman C. Smith," by Heman H. Smith. There are also other biographies of church members, making a total of about fifty. Among the illustrations we note pictures of Graceland College, the Lamoni church, Saints' Home, Liberty Home, Children's Home, High School Building, West Side School, the original Herald Publishing House, Herald Publishing House with 1892 addition, and the new Herald Publishing House. There are portraits of President Joseph Smith, Patriarch A. H. Smith, David Dancer, and other church people. The frontispiece of the first volume is a picture of the church historian, Heman C. Smith. The history is well gotten up and splendidly printed, and our people are to be congratulated on the fair treatment that they have been accorded.

---

There is more power in tenderness and sympathy than there is in a dynamo.—Selected.

Well is it known that ambition can creep as well as soar.—Burke.

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

(Continued from page 835.)

And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized [sprinkled] and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.—Acts 22: 16.

Therefore we are buried with him by baptism [sprinkling] into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.—Romans 6: 4.

A perfect definition of a word will make good sense when substituted for the word; the substitution of sprinkling for baptism renders the reading ridiculous, and makes void the word of God. The erroneous doctrine of "It makes no difference what one believes, just so one is sincere," does not make commandments of men equal to the doctrine of Jesus Christ.

The manner of Christ's baptism is thus chronicled:

Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: and lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.—Matthew 3: 13-17.

Christ "when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water." The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost took part in the baptism; the Son of God obeyed; the Holy Ghost descended in the form of a dove; and the Father said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Reader, have you been baptized, and did you come up "out of the water" as did your Savior? All in the church were baptized after the manner of Christ's baptism—they followed the words and example of their Lord.

ONE BAPTISM

Paul writes there is "One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in all." (Ephesians 4: 5, 6.) In writing to the Hebrews mention is made of "baptisms" as a part of the doctrine of Christ (Hebrews 6: 1, 2). There is no conflict. Jesus said: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." The baptism of water is not complete without the baptism of the Spirit. On the day of Pentecost Peter promised the gift of the Holy Ghost to all who would be baptized "in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." John said those whom he baptized with water Christ would baptize with the Holy Ghost.

Concerning Cornelius and those with him who received the Holy Ghost before baptism, which was done to confirm to those of the circumcision that the gospel was designed for the Gentiles as well as for the Jews, Peter said:

Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.—Acts 10: 47, 48.

The two baptisms are thus associated. To be "born again" one must receive both baptisms.

There is "one God," yet there are "three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one." (1 John 5: 7.)

There is an "inward man" and an "outward man"; but it is proper to speak of the two as one man. (2 Corinthians 4: 16.)

So one may speak of "one baptism," or of "baptisms," as did Paul.

CHARACTER TRANSFORMED

The truth of baptism may be determined by dealing with its source, its substance, and its results. The results of baptism are disclosed in the following texts:

Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead.—Colossians 2: 12.

Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve him.—Romans 6: 3-6.

Baptism is represented as a burial, the purpose of which is the putting away of the old man and his deeds, the bringing to an end of a sinful life, and the rising to a "newness of life" in Christ. Can one be "buried" with Christ in baptism except by immersion?

Note the character and unquestionable standing of those who are baptized: Jesus, Paul, and all the church for it is written: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Galatians 3: 27.)

"HEAR YE HIM"

Membership in the kingdom of God is not gained merely by refraining from evils prohibited in the Mosaic law, swearing, stealing, lying, and covetousness. Who will say one can be saved through the law of Moses? If so, why was there a need for a faultless covenant, sealed by the blood of Christ? The voice out of the bright cloud on the Mount of Transfiguration said concerning Christ: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." (Matthew 17: 5.)

Why all the testimony through the world about Christ being the Savior of the world, if one can be saved without hearing and obeying him? He has spoken: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." It was not necessary for him to say, He that believeth not, and is not baptized, shall be damned, for one not believing would not be baptized. Likewise one who truly believes in Christ will be baptized.

AUTHORITY NECESSARY TO BAPTIZE

Citizenship comes in an earthly government by obedience to the law of the government, and recognizing its authority—the same is true of obeying the law and recognizing the authority of the kingdom of heaven. All governments have authorized officers. Jesus said to his ministry: "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." (John 20: 21.) By baptism one gains citizenship in the government of God.

Has any man, or woman, or child, the right and authority to baptize persons who profess to believe Christ is the Son of God? In the Mosaic system, which was a "shadow of good things to come" under Christ (Hebrews 10: 1), there was an administration of its ordinances only by those holding the priesthood, the right to act for God. So the ordinances of the kingdom of God, under Christ, should be authoritatively administered. Otherwise the Mosaic polity was not a "shadow" of the order of government that was to rest on the shoulders of Christ.

Baptism as an ordinance in the church of God is not simply immersion in water; it is immersion in water of a repentant person having faith in God, by an authorized servant of God. Aliens must appear before authorized officers in order to obtain citizenship, whether in the governments of men or the kingdom of God. In the commission given to the apostles, the Lord said:

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.
—Matthew 28: 18, 19.

Authority is thus associated with baptism.

No elder, deacon, evangelist, or bishop has the right to officiate to-day in the ordinances of the Lord's house on the basis of authority given nineteen hundred years ago to apostles, or to other men; to do so would be no less absurd than claiming civil authority on the basis of authority given by our government to other men. One must be called and authorized of God to act in his name. Men without revelation from God can not appoint their fellow men to officiate in the ordinances of the Lord's house. "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." (Hebrews 5: 4.) The fundamental teaching of the church of God is respect for law and order. True orthodoxy is that which is in harmony with divine law. We read:

And it came to pass, that, while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts came to Ephesus; and finding certain disciples, he said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, we have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus. When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied.—Acts 19: 1-6.

Why were these persons baptized by Paul after having been immersed by some one? They evidently had been immersed by some one not sent of God, not having authority to baptize; hence they were "baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus" by Paul. Paul defended John, taught these people concerning the Holy Ghost, and rejected the baptisms performed by some one who had said nothing concerning the Holy Ghost, and who had baptized in imitation of John's baptism. If these persons had been baptized by John, Paul would have recognized the baptisms as valid, for John was "sent of God." (John 1: 6.)

Christ asked certain ones who interrogated him: "The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? answer me." (Mark 11: 30.) This discloses that there can be a baptism "from heaven" and a baptism "of men."

Has one authority to baptize who denies that baptism is essential to salvation?

Has one authority to baptize who is willing to sprinkle, instead of baptize?

Has one authority to baptize who says the ordinance is not for the "remission of sins"?

Has one authority to officiate in the ordinances of the Lord's house who says God does not reveal his will to men to-day?

Without a call from God by revelation, how is a man to know he should act as an officer in the government of God? How would he know what office he should occupy?

Jesus came from Galilee to Jordan to receive baptism at the hands of John the Baptist, who possessed authority to administer baptism by reason of being "sent of God." Nowhere is there an account in the Scriptures of valid baptism being administered by one not holding authority to act of God.

TRUE BAPTISM

What a beautiful ordinance has been given to close a sin-sick life and start life anew in Christ!

As national festivals have been ordained and established to commemorate great events in the history of nations, so it is eminently fitting that the children of God should look back in their religious life upon an ordinance which to them commemorates their translation from the kingdom of this world into the kingdom of God's dear Son. The ordinance, being a burial, symbolizes in a beautiful manner the burying of the past life, the "old man with his deeds," and the rising to walk in "newness of life" in Christ.

Christ declared, "I will build my church." One church only was established by the Lord. The latest book of the New Testament was written near the close of the first century. After the first century serious changes took place, affecting the organization, doctrine, and practice of the church. The multitudinous sects of to-day testify by their existence to a departure from the faith of the primitive apostolic church. But God has not changed. And now in the evening of time, he has restored the gospel, as it was in the beginning, in harmony with prophetic announcements. (Matthew 24:14; Revelation 14:6, 7; Malachi 3:1-6.)

The Church of Jesus Christ in these latter days exists in complete accord with the primitive apostolic model of the church. The invitation is extended to all outside of Christ:

"Come. And let him that heareth say, Come."
(Revelation 22:17.)

PAUL M. HANSON.

NOTE.—The next chapter will take up the subject, "The baptism of the Spirit." Was the baptism of the Spirit promised to a few ancient disciples only? or is it for all obedient believers? What is the office work of the Holy Spirit?

Original Articles

THE SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS--PART 5

BY MARCUS COOK

IS FOURTH GREATEST COMMANDMENT?

We will now take up the sixth proposition: That the Sabbath of the fourth commandment is the greatest commandment. That it is the seal of God.

I have before me an Adventist tract by D. E. Scoles, which has been extensively circulated in the West. The title is, The Seal of God, and the Mark of the Beast. This tract advocates the Sabbath as the seal of God, and Sunday keeping as the mark of the beast.

There is no place in the Bible that says that the Sabbath is the seal of God, and only by a process of hair-splitting scrap-book style of reasoning can these claimants even give color to their arguments. They claim that the Sabbath was instituted to commemorate creation and the Creator. In the above tract several texts are used: Psalm 111:4 (Jewish Translation); Ezekiel 20:12, where God is speaking to the Israelite nation and apply it "between God and us"; 2 Corinthians 5:17, margin revised version; and part of Exodus 20:8-10.

We then read:

Hence the Lord says the Sabbath is a "Sign" of his power to sanctify, it is at once evidence that it is the seal of what he is, and as he is the only true and living God, it is a seal of his power and godship as he says in Ezekiel 20:20: And hallow my Sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God.

The Sabbath then is a sign of what God is to his people—a Savior.

Of course this follows after assuming that the ten commandments are God's unchangeable moral law, and that there must be a seal by which it is to be bound, which is the Sabbath. The first part we showed to be false, the latter "That the Sabbath is the seal" we will now notice.

It is nowhere called a seal in the Bible. All the texts, such as the above, are plainly spoken to the Israelite people as a nation, and when quoted as they were recorded on the tables of stone (see Deuteronomy 5:12-15) make no reference to creation whatever. So the Sabbath which our friends claim is the memorial of God and creation, God's unchangeable law because written with his finger in stone, when read as recorded on the tables of stone (Deuteronomy 5:22), do not mention creation, but read as follows:

And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath Day.—Deuteronomy 5:15.

The above, according to verse 22, is what God spake, and he added no more, and he wrote the commandments on two tables of stone; but the Adventists quote what Moses wrote, Exodus 20:1-17, and Exodus 24:4, 7, 8, and read to the people, and with the other writings of Moses put in the sides of the ark (Deuteronomy 31:24-26) which they claim is the ceremonial law, and not binding. Now they have to do this to harmonize the Scriptures with Mrs. White's teachings. So they say that what Moses wrote was the ceremonial law. That what God wrote was the moral law. That what Moses wrote was to be done away. That what God wrote could never be done away.

But Moses wrote the ten commandments as they are in Exodus 20. God wrote them as they are in Deuteronomy 5.

They quote from Exodus 20 because it reads like the teachings of Mrs. White, so they have to assume that God wrote what they otherwise teach was the ceremonial law, against the plain utterances of the Bible. So away goes the sixth proposition.

PRINCIPAL ADVENTIST TEXTS

We now examine the principal texts that the Adventists use to prove that the seventh day should be kept.

And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made.—Genesis 2: 3.

This tells us that the day was blessed after God had rested. Then it had not previously been kept, and there is no command whatever connected with it showing that man was instructed to keep it. Indeed it is not mentioned again until in Exodus 16, wherein is recorded the first command to man to keep the Sabbath.

Because that Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws.—Genesis 26: 5.

Here the Adventists tell us Abraham kept the Sabbath because it was one of the commandments, and one of God's laws. But we have previously shown that the law of which the ten commandments were a part was not given until four hundred and thirty years after the covenant with Abraham. Now notice the preceding verse.

And I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and will give unto thy seed all these countries; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.—Genesis 26: 4.

Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ. And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, can not disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect.—Galatians 3: 16, 17.

Now Abraham was commanded to leave his father's house, his kindred, and his father's country, and go to a land that God would show him, with the promise that through him there should come a great nation (Genesis 12: 1-5.) Abraham obeyed. He was commanded that all male children should be circumcised at the age of eight days (Genesis 17: 9-14). This he obeyed. He was commanded to cast out Hagar, his polygamous wife (Genesis 21: 12-14). He obeyed. He was tried by being required to offer up Isaac his only son as a sacrifice (Genesis 22: 1-14). Here also he was faithful. So it is evident that he kept the commandments and laws that God gave to him. But that the above text (Genesis 26: 5) refers to the ten commandments is simply assumed against the plain utterances of the Bible.

The ten commandments (Exodus 20: 1-17), we have previously shown, were given to the Israelite nation only, so we will pass them by.

These are the feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to an offering made by fire unto the Lord, a burnt offering, a meat offering, a sacrifice, and drink offerings, every thing upon his day: Beside the Sabbaths of the Lord, and beside your gifts, and beside all your vows, and beside all your free will offerings, which ye give unto the Lord.—Leviticus 23: 37, 38.

The above is used to prove that the Sabbath should be kept beside the ceremonial law, but the whole text refers to Israel only, and the word Sabbaths as used in the above text would properly apply to all the regular as well as special Sabbaths of the whole Mosaic law. By the above, Adventists try to make it appear that there were two laws in operation.

And it came to pass, when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finished, that Moses commanded the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, saying, Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against thee.—Deuteronomy 31: 24-26.

This, we are told, was the ceremonial law, but that the ten commandments were God's moral law. But the book as we have previously shown contains the ten commandments as the Adventists quote them; and then Jesus when he was asked, "Which is the greatest commandment of the law?" answers as follows:

Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Matthew 22: 37-39.

The above is not in the ten commandments. The command to love God is quoted from Deuteronomy 6: 5; to love one's neighbor, from Leviticus 19: 18, 34. Both taken from the book that Moses put in the side of the ark of the covenant by command, still Jesus says this is the first and great commandment. And he further says: "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."—Matthew 22: 40.

Now Adventists teach, as we have previously shown, that the Sabbath is the greatest commandment. Jesus says that love to God and our neighbor is the greatest commandment. Which is right?

If Jesus was right, the greatest commandment was in what Adventists call the ceremonial law.

When Jesus was tempted of the Devil, as recorded in Matthew 4, he answered each temptation by quoting from the law, but not one answer from the decalogue:

1. Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.—Matthew 4: 4.
2. Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.—Matthew 4: 7. (See Deuteronomy 6: 16.)
3. Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.—Matthew 4: 10. (See Deuteronomy 6: 13.)

Here again Jesus, if he makes any distinction at all between the so-called moral and ceremonial law, gives preference to the latter.

Adventists also use 2 Kings 21: 8, but the answer to the above will apply equally to this. Israel only is being spoken to.

Be ye mindful always of his covenant; the word which he commanded to a thousand generations; even of the covenant which he made with Abraham, and of his oath unto Isaac; and hath confirmed the same to Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant, saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance.—1 Chronicles 16: 15-18.

It is claimed that his means the decalogue; but we have shown from Deuteronomy 5: 3 that the covenant of the decalogue was not made with the fathers of Israel. So our friends only assume this again, and against one of the plain utterances of the Bible.

They say that this text proves that the decalogue was "commanded to a thousand generations." Well, to date, counting the average at thirty-five years, or a generation for every thirty-five years, the world has not stood two hundred generations yet, and if it stands eight hundred more generations, how about the end of the world that Adventists tell us is so near? No! No! This is only another misapplication of scripture, only another blunder.

Thou comest down also upon Mount Sinai, and spakest with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments, and true laws, good statutes and commandments: and madest known unto them thy holy Sabbath, and commandedst them precepts, statutes, and laws, by the hand of Moses thy servant.—Nehemiah 9: 13, 14.

The above had been read from the book of the law of the Lord (Nehemiah 9: 3), hence was to Israel only; and since God made known his holy Sabbath when he came down on Mount Sinai, they did not know it before, so this text instead of proving an everlasting Sabbath, indicates, as in Deuteronomy 5: 3, Hebrews 4: 6, that before God came down on Mount Sinai the Sabbath was not known, hence not observed.

The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.—Psalm 19: 7.

Here again they say that the law of the Lord means the decalogue. But what reason for it? None whatever. We have cited texts showing that by the works of the law no flesh could be justified in his sight; the law made nothing perfect, was to be done away, etc. And now to assume in the face of all this that Psalm 19: 7 refers to the decalogue is puerile nonsense. In the margin the word law is rendered doctrine, and the whole text, along with the entire chapter, plainly refers to the law of Christ that saves the soul.

The same blunder is made in regard to Psalm 40: 8, also Psalm 89: 27-36, and Psalm 119. "He that turneth his ear away from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination."—Proverbs 28: 9.

This, it is claimed, means the decalogue, but when the word whatsoever is used and applied to mankind in general, the law used in connection with it would have to be a world-wide law, which we have previously shown is not true of the decalogue, as it was given to Israel only, and was to apply in Palestine only. But the gospel, the law of the spirit of life in Christ, is world-wide in its application, and "who-soever will may come," therefore that must be the law referred to.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.—Ecclesiastes 12: 13, 14.

It is assumed that this scripture refers to the ten commandments, but it is pure assumption. Where in the ten commandments is there a command to be baptized? Still Jesus positively commanded it. Where is the commandment in the decalogue that men should repent? But no Christian can question its necessity. The ten commandments taken alone do not require any service to God whatever, just so their adherents have no gods before Jehovah. One might be ever so impure, so he does not commit an act of crime, he has not violated the decalogue. He might beat and maim his brother, so he does not kill him, he has not violated the ten commandments. Now who would say that the whole duty of man consists in keeping so imperfect a law?

The Lord is well pleased for his righteousness' sake; he will magnify the law, and make it honorable.—Isaiah 42: 21.

Here they tell us that Christ will magnify the law (the decalogue) and make it honorable; but who said that this refers to the decalogue? The Adventists. Does the Bible say so? No, indeed; but it does say, speaking of the two covenants:

And when he said, Sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings and offering for sin thou wouldst not, neither hadst pleasure therein; which are offered by the law; then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second.—Hebrews 10: 8, 9.

So Christ fulfilled the old law, then took it away, introduced or established the new and everlasting covenant, which he will magnify and make honorable. (See also Hebrews 8: 7-13, 2 Corinthians 3: 6, 7.)

Thus saith the Lord, Keep ye judgment, and do justice: for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed. Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil. Neither let the son of the stranger, that hath joined himself to the Lord, speak, saying, The Lord hath utterly separated me from his people: neither let the eunuch say, Behold, I am a dry tree. For thus saith the Lord unto eunuchs that keep my Sabbaths, and choose the things that please me, and take hold of my covenant; even unto them will I give in mine house and within my walls a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters: I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off. Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant.—Isaiah 56: 1-6.

The above is quoted and applied to the time after Christ, and construed to apply now to all Christians but one only needs to read the next verse to see the fallacy of it.

Even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called a house of prayer for all people.—Isaiah 56: 7.

Adventists quote this chapter down to the sixth verse and say that the clause in the first verse, "My salvation is near to come and my righteousness to be revealed," places the prophecy after the time of Christ, and that the sons of the stranger who join themselves to the Lord, spoken of in the sixth verse refers to Gentile converts, therefore they are required to keep the Sabbath. They never quote the seventh verse in full, as it locates the time of the proper application of the prophecy, when they shall offer burnt offerings that will be accepted on God's altar, which has not been true since Christ came.

Why do they just quote the part that can be wrested to support their theories and stop, when the next verse would show plainly that they are misapplying the scripture? Why does Mrs. White in The Great Controversy, page 283, quote up to the very clause that mentions burnt offerings and there stop and say, "These words apply to the Christian age"?

Isaiah 58:12-14 is used also, but the context plainly shows that it is the seed of Jacob or Israel that are being spoken to as a nation, so no further notice will be necessary.

For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord.—Isaiah 66: 22, 23.

Here it is said that the Sabbath will be kept in the new earth; so if we are saved we will keep it there. Well, if this is applied correctly, the new moons will also be kept in the new earth; and if the Sabbath is in force because of this text, so also are the new moons. Now why don't the Adventists keep the new moons? Their hobby doesn't cover that. But do we read that the new moons and Sabbath will be in the new earth? I do not think that a proper application of the above text will justify such a position, because the text merely uses the new heaven and now earth as a comparison of the perpetuity of the seed of Israel. But if it is insisted that this poetic statement proves that the new moons and Sabbaths will be kept in the new earth, let us apply some similar texts and see how it will work. Describing the new heaven and new earth, John says:

And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign for ever and ever.—Revelation 22: 5.

And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven, and sware by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer.—Revelation 10: 5, 6.

The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory. Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended.—Isaiah 60: 19, 20.

Adventists claim that the Sabbath begins with sunset, but in Isaiah's description of the new earth he tells us that the sun will no more go down. How can the day begin at sundown, and every seventh sundown be the beginning of the Sabbath when the sun will no more go down?

How will the new moons be kept when the moon will no more withdraw itself? I suppose it might be as it was in the beginning, when the first three days were measured by the sun before the sun was created.

Again, how will Sabbaths be counted when time shall be no longer? Perhaps our friends will answer as they do with regard to creation. They say that the sun is not necessary to count the days by, that the earth revolves every twenty-four hours, and they could count time just the same. Or they might quote Leviticus 23: 32:

It shall be unto you a Sabbath of rest, and ye shall afflict your souls: in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even, shall ye celebrate your Sabbath.

From this it might be argued that there would be evenings, for it might be urged that Revelation 22: 5; 10: 5, 6, Isaiah 60: 19, 20, were poetical and figurative, etc.; but Revelation 22: 5 says: "And there shall be no night there." Now if there is no night there there would be no evening; so this fails them.

Thou hast despised mine holy things, and hast profaned my Sabbaths. . . . Her priests have violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they shewed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my Sabbaths, and I am profaned among them.—Ezekiel 22: 8-26.

This as usual is read separate from its connections, and as usual applied to our time. That the above texts apply to the Jews and Jerusalem, no further evidence is necessary than to read:

Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Now, thou son of Man, wilt thou judge, wilt thou judge the bloody city? yea, thou shalt shew her all her abominations. . . . Son of man, the house of Israel is to me become dross: all they are brass, and tin, and iron, and lead, in the midst of the furnace they are even the dross of silver. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye are all become dross, behold, therefore I will gather you into the midst of Jerusalem.—Ezekiel 22: 1, 2, 18, 19.

This plainly shows that the above texts refer to Israel and Jerusalem and not to the Christian age.

And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time.—Daniel 7: 25.

Here, it is said, is the prophecy that the pope will change the Sabbath. But it is only asserted that the Sabbath is referred to. We have previously shown that the change was made before the pope of Rome was recognized as the "head of all the churches." The Adventists themselves tell us that this was in 538 A. D. Then they tell us that Constantine (who was not a pope) changed the rest day in 321. Then they claim it was done over again at the Council of Laodicea, 364 A. D. Now how shall we harmonize these claims?

One certainly would not think to do a thing before he came into existence! These things would not be given into his hands two hundred years before he was established. Then they were only to be given into his hand a time, times and half a time, or one thousand, two hundred and sixty years, which the Adventists tell us ended in 1798, and since that time Catholics and Protestants continued in just the same attitude toward the Sabbath as previously, with no protest until after 1844. Now unless it can be shown that the Sabbath change was given into the hands of the papacy in 538 A. D., and taken out of their hands in 1798, all argument on this text is worthless. Unless it can be shown that this was the only change that was made in times and laws, the position is untenable.

(To be concluded.)

* * * * *

ONE THOUSAND DOLLAR DILIGENCE

If some philanthropist were to place a standing offer of one thousand dollars for every soul that you might earnestly try to lead to Christ, would you endeavor to lead any more than you are endeavoring to lead now? Note, the question is not placing the responsibility of converting or saving souls upon you; but are you trying to lead them Godward, that they might be saved?

If one thousand dollars were the prize, would you try every day, at the risk of blunders or even ridicule? Would you study and meditate constantly of words to speak and means to use to interest others in Christ's gospel of love?

Suppose you were to see a blind man approaching the brink of a high precipice. If you should sit idly by and put forth no effort to warn or save him from certain death, would you be in any way guilty of his murder in God's sight?

With what feelings would you view the dead body of a dear friend who had slowly bled to death from a wound, which those standing by had refused to bind? To think that the loved one might still be with you, if only a little effort had been put forth to warn or assist!

The death of a body, which might have been, but was not prevented, is a horrible thing, but how much worse the eternal death of a human soul which could have been prevented! If my neglect of another's body was murder, surely the neglect of another's soul would be an unspeakable crime. Oh! I solemnly wonder, for how many unsaved souls will God the Father of the entire human race, hold me responsible.

Suppose you were to hear a cry for help faintly echo from the depths of a cistern. Just suppose some unfortunate one had stumbled into its uncovered mouth while walking in his sleep; that he was cut off from communion with the sources of life; that slowly but surely he would be drawn to an untimely death; that exposure in the icy water and starvation would gradually weaken his powers of resistance, and that when death came he could not even lie down and pass away in sleep because of the watery grave awaiting to snatch him, should he fall, his only hope that some one from above might hear his cry and send down a life line before it was too late. Now just suppose that you were the one whom God had sent, that you were his only hope of rescue, that you heard the cry but would pass on in cold indifference, saying,

"Let some one else do it; I wouldn't be strong enough to pull him out anyway." But soon his voice becomes so faint that no one else hears the cry and he goes beyond recall. My dear brother, would you long for the coming of the day when we shall "know as we are known," in the face of such neglect?

If God will not hold you guiltless for the neglect of the life thus placed in your power to save, how much greater is our responsibility towards those who go down in the dens of vice and the bottomless pits of sin? Such are first rocked to sleep in the cradle of the world's infidelity, and in this condition of indifference and spiritual night they fall into a snare from which by their own power they can not escape. They realize that they are cut off from the sources of real life, that they are being starved and gradually weakened until they can no longer resist evil, nor even retain the breath of their lustful existence, but shall soon be precipitated into an untimely and miserable death. If they cry for help and we who have the "power of God unto salvation" neglect to give the helping hand, may God above have pity on us!

Then how diligent we should be to perform our every duty that we may some day be found blameless before God.

Listen to the Apostle Paul's language recorded in Hebrews 2: 1:

Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?

Suppose that in our daily employment we were spasmodic in our service, zealous one week, lukewarm the second, and utterly indifferent the third; then zealous, lukewarm and indifferent again, and so on; how long would our employer stand for such service as that? How, then, about our service of life-saving for God? If God's love for us were as spasmodically manifested as our love for him, how would you fare?

Now, my dear Christian friends, remember the thousand-dollar offer, and don't let it ever be said that your love of money outweighs your love for God, —that you would take more chances and make greater effort for the substance that perisheth than you would to save a soul for God.

CHRIS B. HARTSHORN.

* * * * *

"MORMON" PHOTO DRAMA

TRUE SPIRITUAL FERVOR EFFECT FAILS TO APPEAR

An attempt is made by Utah Church promoters to set forth the leading features of the great restoration of the gospel by moving pictures. The effort comes no nearer a correct representation of the distinctive spirit, genius, and power which actuated the souls of the pioneers of this gospel age than the Utah Church has approached the truth in other matters.

The acting undertakes to show Joseph Smith's interview with the angel, subsequent conversation by Joseph with his father upon the matter, the finding of the Book of Mormon plates, the translating of them, the first baptisms, persecutions by mobs, etc.; but as there can be no proper blend between sacred truth and bungling sham, especially where those who would interpret a truth have no conception of it, this picture proves to be a flat and lifeless affair, so far as enhancing any true concept of the power of the restoration is concerned.

The picture comprises five reels of film, under the title of "One hundred years of Mormonism," and at this writing is being shown in Phoenix, Arizona, advertised in the papers as follows: "The official history of the founding of the Mormon Church, as prepared under the direction of that institution and picturized."

Naturally, the most sensational circumstances of the history of Joseph Smith and the early church are featured, such as mob violence, and the numerous murders of the Saints which were committed, and all this is with quite an aptitude in similarity to the way which such things would in reality, no doubt, appear, but in attempting to give expression to those events which have the greater religious and spiritual significance there is a deficiency which is painful to the observer.

Many of the views showing incidents in camp-life experience as Brigham Young and party crossed the plains to Utah, are well staged and quite interesting, and no doubt valuable for their historical features. Promoters of the Utah church who acted in the poses are undoubtedly better qualified to express the dearth of spirituality which impoverished the followers of Brigham Young as shown in the regular old "hoe-down" dance scenes in camp as the Saints were crossing the plains, than they are to interpret before the camera the emotions of a soul in open communion with a heavenly messenger.

Zion's camp, supposedly being led by the Lord, and a holy ministry, is pictured assembled in a circle formed by their wagons and ox teams. The scene is a sensuality-begetting dance. Holy brethren in boots and spurs encircle their valorous arms around the waists of the various wives and fair daughters of Israel, and trip the light fantastic, not to the tune of the "Arkansas traveler," but to the strains of "Zion's reveille." Perched high above where Saints swing their partners, is to be seen the "official" violinist, who, moving to the active rhythm of the fiddle bow, seems to be saying:

On with the dance!
No sleep till morn
Where Saints and elders meet
To chase the hours with flying feet;
On with the dance!

And, in these times, among playful Israel the dance still goes on. Associated also with the dance is the inseparable tendency toward unlawful liberties. Where the seeds of one are sown, the harvest of the other is reaped.

But then there is plenty of scripture which may be read in support of the dance; such as in Exodus 32, where we learn that after the Moses man had been away from the people for a while they "sat down to eat and rose up to play," and made calves of themselves by making a golden calf and then having a dance to celebrate the calf. So it was quite natural and scriptural that after the prophet had been taken from among latter-day Israel they should have a calf and also a dance.

And then if this scripture is not sufficient to satisfy the conscience in the thought that the Bible really does teach some good things about dancing, we might read 2 Samuel 6:14, where it says that "David danced before the Lord with all his might." Of course it is true that subsequent history shows that David's frolicsome dancing disposition finally got him to dancing before others aside from the Lord, and that finally he got to marrying a little more than Adam's example, or than the commands of God would justify—but then in considering the dance as a means "to keep up spirits" Brigham could forget David's latter experience—and go and do likewise.

So may Brigham and his unfortunate followers and successors do, and then throw the shame of it upon the moving picture screen; but it is all dramatized and staged to be rendered in its true colors in the judgment, without the aid of the flickering light of an untrustworthy "movie" machine.

Truth is not only stranger, but stronger than fiction; and upon this basis the Utah church and all the world will yet know, despite the misleading and fictitious pictures and stories, that the true, restored church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints did not go to Utah, and that it stands free from the follies and crimes which were committed under the Utah leadership in the name of Christ, and under the cloak of religion.

J. E. YATES.

---

Of General Interest

CANNING COMPOUNDS DANGEROUS TO HEALTH

(The following, issued by the Office of Information, United States Department of Agriculture, should be read with interest and profit by those who do their own canning and preserving.)

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—Information has come to the Department that the canning season has brought the usual demand on the part of housewives for salicylic acid and boric acid. These preparations are sometimes sold in the form of powder under various trade names, and are recommended by the promoters for use in preserving canned goods in home canning. In the directions for use the housewife is told to fill the jar with the fruit or vegetables, cover with water, and add a teaspoonful of the preserving powder. While it is true that these compounds may retard the decay of the fruit or vegetable, it is pointed out by the experts of the Department that their use may be attended by serious disturbances of health. Salicylic acid is well known as a poisonous substance, and one of the evils which may accompany its use is derangement of the digestion. It is therefore plain that its extensive use in food may lead to disturbance of digestion and health.

The Federal Food and Drugs Act prohibits the use of harmful preservatives in foods that enter interstate commerce. The food law of nearly every State in the Union forbids the sale within the State of foods that have been preserved with harmful substances. Neither the federal nor State food laws apply to foods that are canned in the home and consumed there. It would seem, however, that the housewife would not knowingly use, in the foods she provides for her family, substances that she could not use in foods for sale without violating the law, because these substances are injurious to health.

ARTIFICIAL PRESERVATIVES NOT NECESSARY

Fruits and vegetables can be kept indefinitely if they are sterilized by heat and properly sealed, and there is no excuse, in the opinion of the experts of the Department, for running any risk by using preserving powders, which may be injurious to health. The use of such powders in addition to the possible injury to health encourages uncleanly or careless work in canning. Reliance is placed in the efficacy of the preserving compound instead of upon cleanliness and heat.

The Department has issued bulletins that give specific directions for the preserving and canning of fruits and vegetables without the use of preserving powders or canning compounds. These bulletins may be obtained without cost from the Department of Agriculture. Application should be made for Farmers' Bulletin, Number 203 on canned fruit preserves, and jellies, and Number 521 on canning tomatoes at home and in club work. Also Forms N. R. 22, N. R. 23, N. R. 24, N. R. 34, and N. R. 37 of the Office of Extension Work, North and West States Relations Service.

---

The old shepherd who offered prayer in a Welsh revival meeting put it exactly right when he lamented his backsliding in these words: "Lord, I got among the thorns and briars, and was scratched and torn and bleeding; but Lord, it is only fair to say that it was not on thy ground; I had wandered out of thy pasture."—Mary E. Watson.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS, LAMONI, IOWA

ADVISORY BOARD OF WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Mrs. S. R. Burgess, president, 5920 Etzel Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri; Mrs. B. C. Smith, vice president, 214 South Spring Street, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Carrie Maitland, secretary, 1326 Sampson Street, Des Moines, Iowa; Mrs. J. A. Gardner, treasurer, 707 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. A. L. Yingling, West Waldo Street, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Anna DeJong Smith, 2903 Sullivan Street, Saint Louis, Missouri.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF DEPARTMENTS

Home and Child Welfare Department, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, 724 South Chrysler Street, Independence, Missouri; Literary and Educational Department, Mrs. Lydia Thomas Wight, Lamoni, Iowa; Eugenics Department, Mrs. Jennie Studley, 17 East Cottage Street, Roxbury, Massachusetts; Domestic Science Department, Vera Goff, Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri; Sewing and Aid Department, Mrs. Edith Cochran, 1107 Powell Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri; Young Woman's Department, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 707 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Home and Child Welfare Department

OCTOBER READING.—THE HYGIENIC EFFECT OF JOY IN WORK

"It is a comely fashion to be glad.
Joy is the grace we say to God."

REAL PLEASURE

"If one lives for pleasure one does not enjoy life in the degree possible to one who lives for work and finds his pleasures unexpectedly as sidelights on the pathway. Eighty per cent of so-called amusements are not recreations. They exhaust more rapidly than they rest. Momentary excitement is not recuperation, the remaking of nervous tissue.

"If one seeks for pleasure only, it will elude him. . . . The real pleasure in life comes from the consciousness of power to do what the mind has willed, from seeing the work of one's own hand and brain prosper.

"Madam DeStael defined happiness as 'Constant occupation upon some desirable object, with a continued sense of progress towards its attainment.' This work of creation, of transformation to desirable results, is the purest joy the human mind can experience. . . . The delight in life is what we can do with it."—Mrs. M. Dewey.

CHEERFULNESS AND EFFICIENCY

"That a maximal degree of efficiency in any line of work is inconsistent with gloom and depression is not only a common verdict of general experience, but a logical inference from scientific principles. It is a well-established law of psychology that a state of mind which is predominantly pleasant in its affective coloring is always accompanied by certain well-defined physiological phenomena: (1) an increase in the volume of the body, due to a distension of the capillaries running underneath the skin, (2) deeper breathing, (3) increased rate of pulse beat, and (4) increased muscular energy. A state of mind which is unpleasantly toned, on the other hand, is accompanied by bodily phenomena of the opposite character: decrease in bodily volume, lighter breathing, decreased rate of pulse beat, and decreased muscular energy.

"The relation of these factors to efficiency is obvious. Hope and buoyancy simply mean, other things equal, a favorable condition for good work of any sort, while gloom and depression must, by the same token, form a heavy handicap in any line of endeavor. . . . Sarcasm and ridicule are worse than blows."—The Educative Process, by William Chandler Bagley, Ph. D.

WHOLESOME INFLUENCE OF WORK

"The instinct of workmanship is one of the most generic of human motives and when given a suitable outlet is one of the most sanifying. . . . School work should feed the instinct of workmanship instead of starving it. . . . It behooves us to make doing just as attractive as knowing, and to explore ways and means of enlarging the child's opportunities for the accomplishment of simple, wholesome and enjoyable things. Plays and games which demand quick decision and self-reliance are indispensable to a well-balanced mental development. Good players seldom become 'queer' or socially inefficient.

"We must find for each child the level where he can function successfully if we would have him escape the shocks of disappointment, the habits of failure, and the resulting inactivity, daydreaming, vain wishing, and the chasm between thinking and doing. If we will only take pains to fit tasks to the capacity, every child can be taught to do certain things well and to take pleasure in doing them. Nothing is more subversive of sanity than a regime of inactivity and repression which creates a smoldering volcano of sentiment and frothy desire.

"The use of the brain in varied physical and mental activities improves its circulation, its nutritional processes and therefore its finer development and highest functioning. Probably also it delays the degenerative processes of old age, for senescence, unfortunately, does not leave the brain unaffected. . . . The processes of decay seem to occur late in the life of the mental worker, and prematurely in those whose labor is mostly physical."—The Hygiene of the School Child, by Professor Lewis M. Terman.

"There was never any artificial teaching devised so good for children as the daily helping in the household tasks. Boys and girls, healthy, cheerful and patriotic, have abounded in country homes in the past and it has been recognized that the prevalence there of these high qualities was largely due to the family life, which required each individual from his earliest years to bear his share in providing for the maintenance of the home. . . .

"The child without interest in work or play does not develop; the man with no stimulus walks through life as in a dream. The simplest tasks when well done give a glow of satisfaction. Every child naturally tries to express his thoughts in making things. Of course his attempts are crude, but the necessity is there; therefore this joy of doing should be cultivated in children.

"The psychology of life includes a definite aim and purpose, therefore the task or daily work is a necessity for mental and physical health. It must be accepted as a part of the science of right living and the will and energy directed to doing it well."—Mrs. Melville Dewey, in an address before the First National Race Betterment Conference.

WORK A BLESSING

"There are those people in the world who are always complaining of work, in contradistinction to those who can afford to be idle, never realizing that work, if not too severe for the body and mind, is most healthful and beneficial and tends to mental happiness and physical strength; while idleness tends more quickly to degeneracy and disease. General Gordon of England wisely remarked when laid aside that no one knows what a blessing work or occupation is until taken away from us. And who of us has not experienced vividly just such feelings? If we work alone for the dollar without any love for our work, it will be drudgery indeed. Earning our bread by the sweat of our brow has turned out many times to be a blessing in disguise; it gives a certain zest to life and helps us appreciate more what we work for. It is only the drudgery that palls. . . . It is not work that kills and wastes tissues and enfeebles the nerves and brings about discontent. . . . The busy man or woman has less time for worry, cares, anxieties or gossip than have the unoccupied disinterested ones, and is much happier. Ignorance, anxiety and laziness kill more people than useful work. This machine of ours was made to endure considerable, and much more, without injury to it, if our work is done with little or no friction or tension and with an amount of enjoyableness and pleasure. Work is noble, and no labor is low if done in this spirit."—Good Health and Long Life, by William D. H. Brown, M. D.

"Even if it is twice as much work to show the boy or girl how to do certain things and oversee them as it would be to do it oneself, the mother who cares for the development of her child's character will find it pays. It is the idle child and the child who thinks of nothing but his own amusement that gets into trouble. . . . The fact remains that Satan still continues to find work for idle hands to do, even if that warning proverb has been eliminated from the modern curriculum. Children like to help, they like to feel that they are of value and importance, and there is nothing that will do more to make them efficient and conscientious citizens than giving them habits of industry, and the realization that they also have their place to fill in their little world, which is a part of the big world of grown-ups."—Judge Ben. B. Lindsey.

PLAY AND WORK

"Play and work may each have an influence on the child's general health, and the upbuilding of a perfect body. In fact it is not easy to distinguish between them. Work that is done lovingly, rather than in the spirit of duty is more truly play than work."

For adults the benefit from accepting the duties of life in the spirit of work lovingly done is expressed in the lines:

"There is work that is work; there is play that is play;
There is play that is work and there's work that is play,
And only in one of these lies happiness."

In mature life even one's play must be fitting him for work to be done in this spirit, or it loses the power to bring happiness.

"Children should be taught to work. Quite early little duties should be assigned, and all the teaching should be directed toward the aim of having the child love the work. Then work is pleasant and beneficial. Work for smaller children should be mental and manual, excluding neither. The manual labor must be light, but yet of a kind that will exercise muscles and develop strength.

"Professor Kilpatrick wrote that 'physiologically, work requires the use of the same parts of the body or brain in the same way for a considerable time, while play exercises many parts of the body in a variety of ways, and usually no one part for very long without change. In work the least available energy is often used, and the activity is always directed, while in play the parts having the most utilizable energy are freely active. For this reason work is much harder and more wearisome, even when the amount of activity is less.'

"So from this viewpoint, work that is play should be best for the child. Mentally, the child delights in being useful and helpful, and if such light duties can be assigned as will encourage this feeling and at the same time afford some systematic, regular exercise, it is surely desirable.

"The care of pets and flowers is ideal work for the children. They will delight in it, and such work can not overtax or injure them. Whether pets are inconvenient in the home or not, they should be tolerated for the child's sake, and the educational value of seeing things grow, as well as the labor that assists them to grow, makes the little garden or the window box a necessary part of the household equipment. If the child is held personally responsible for the welfare of its pets or flowers, and the parents assist it to remember the duties and insist upon their performance at the proper time, the work will be delightful and beneficial."—The Uplift Book of Child Culture.

RESULTS OF SCIENTIFIC WORK AND PLAY

The hygienic effect of joy in work is marvelously illustrated in the children of the Montessori schools in the poorest quarter of Rome, where the parents are day laborers who are frequently out of work and who are so illiterate that many of them are unable to read. Of these children Doctor Montessori writes:

"We have never served food in the school, the little ones [between the ages of three and seven], all of whom live in their own homes, with their parents, have a half hour's recess in which to go home to luncheon. Consequently, we have not in any way influenced their diet. The pedagogic methods employed, however, are of such sort as to constitute a gradual series of psychic stimuli perfectly adapted to the needs of childhood. . . . The children are free in all their manifestations and are treated with much cordial affection. . . . The seed is sown in the consciousness of the child, leaving free opportunity . . . for the spontaneous expansion of its personality in an environment that is calm and warm with a sentiment of affection and peace.

"The results achieved were surprising. . . . The intellectual activity of these little children was like a spring of water gushing from beneath the rocks that had been erroneously piled upon their budding souls; we saw them accomplishing the incredible feat of despising playthings, through their insatiable thirst for knowledge; carefully preserving the most fragile objects of the lesson, the tenderest plants sprouting from the earth—these children that are reputed to be vandals by instinct. . . .

"But what is still more marvelous is that all these children are so much improved in their general nutrition as to present a notably different appearance from their former state, and from the condition in which their brothers still remain. . . . In general the children have gained flesh and become ruddy to such an extent that they look like the children of wealthy parents living in the country. No one seeing them would believe that these were the offspring of illiterate lower classes. . . .

"At the time of entering school, for the great majority, the same note was made: need of tonics. Yet not one of them took medicine, not one of them had a change of diet, the renewed vigor of these children was due solely to the complete satisfaction of their psychic life. And yet they remain in school continually from nine till five through eleven months out of the year! . . . During all this period the children are continually busy, . . . after they have returned home they continue to busy themselves up to the hour of going to bed . . . and many of the little ones are back again at school, by half past eight in the morning, tranquil, smiling, as though blissfully anticipating the enjoyment that awaits them during the long day. . . . Their stature, which we measure month by month, shows how vigorous the physiological growth is in every one of them, but particularly in certain ones, whose blood supply has become excellent.

"Such results of our experiments have amazed us as an unexpected revelation of nature, or to phrase it differently, as a scientific discovery. Yet we might have foreseen some part of all this had we stopped to think how our own physical health depends far more upon happiness and a peaceful conscience than upon that material substance, bread!

"Let us learn to know man, sublime in his true reality! let us learn to know him in the tenderest little child; we have shown by experiment that he develops through work, through liberty and through love. . . . Man lives for the purpose of learning, loving, and producing, from his earliest years upward; it is from this that even his bones get their growth, and from this that his blood draws its vitality."

CALLIE B. STEBBINS.

Letter Department

THORNE, NORTH DAKOTA, July 26, 1915.

Editors Herald: The North Dakota reunion held near Logan, recently closed, was the largest and most successful one held in the State. There were about twenty well-filled tents on the ground, the most of the Saints doing the proper thing and bringing all the family along, some even driving through from Montana, some two hundred miles; and everyone seemed well repaid for the sacrifice made.

The preaching was the best and the prayer services especially fine, the gifts of the Spirit being made manifest at nearly every service.

Brethren J. A. Gillen, J. W. Wight, and Gomer R. Wells were the visiting elders, assisted nobly by the district missionary force. A large number took advantage of the presence of Brother Wight and received their blessings. The work of Brother Wells for the auxiliaries was enjoyed by all, and will no doubt show good results.

Thirteen were baptized during the reunion.

The Saints responded nobly in the financial line. All expenses were promptly met and a balance of $82.30 left in the hands of the reunion treasurer for next year. The new committee are planning for a larger and better reunion next year. They plan to buy fifty or sixty folding chairs, and some new small tents. Arrangements for children's hour every day from 10 to 12 was put in the hands of the district Woman's Auxiliary. L. W. Bronson was placed at the head of a committee to make plans for proper entertainment for the young people, between services.

Let every Saint in the district be a booster for next year's reunion. Do not get the idea that you can not afford to go, but rather that you can not afford to stay away. You will feel well repaid for the outlay.

Yours in bonds,
J. W. DARLING.

GUYMAN, OKLAHOMA, July 29, 1915.

Just closed two weeks of meeting last night at the Union Center Schoolhouse, about thirteen miles northwest of Guyman, Oklahoma. The people were very busy with their farm work, but a fair hearing was had and many friends were made to the work, as well as becoming personal friends of the writer.

Yesterday I had a visit, and an all-day visit at that, with a good Methodist family, and to say the least, it was profitable. A married son of the old brother came with a team and buggy, and I was asked to take a ride with him and his father. I did so, and as soon as we were on the way the young man said (he had never heard me preach), "Now let me hear something about your church. Some people say you are a Mormon and believe in polygamy."

I began very mildly to outline the rise of the church and the translation of the Book of Mormon, and then drew attention to the fact that the book bore the name of Mormon because the man who compiled it was named Mormon, and not because it had any connection with the belief of the people of Utah, who are called Mormons. I then quoted at length from the first and second chapters of Jacob, after having told them what the Book of Mormon purported to be: That it claimed to be a record of the ancient inhabitants of America and of God's dealings with them, just as the Bible claims to be a record of the ancient people of the Eastern Continent and of God's dealings with them.

When I had finished quoting: "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife, and concubines he shall have none," the old gentleman said, "That sounds as good as our Bible." I then suggested that he would find it interesting to read the Book of Mormon, and he thereupon gave me an order for a copy. I went on and quoted from Doctrine and Covenants 42:7 and 49:3, and then section 111, and both admired our position on marriage.

Before we had completed our journey and returned again to the house, I gave them an outline of the rise of the church, its growth; the death of the martyrs; the apostasy and the Reorganization, as well as some of my personal experience in the Utah mission. I also showed how Joseph Smith's translation of the Bible condemned David as well as Solomon for polygamy, and it was well received by both of them.

This is a new opening, and we now have many friends here. I hope to be able to get back here a little later and hold another meeting. The universal expression of those at meeting last night was, "Come again, Brother Vanderwood," and "We will look for you back in the fall."

Brother W. A. Powell and family are the only members we have here. Have made my home with them. They are to be commended for their good deeds.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

News from Missions

En Route to Australia

On the morning of June 23, a number of Saints met at the wharf in San Francisco to bid farewell to my wife and me, who were on board the Moana ready to sail for the Australasian Mission. Deep was our appreciation of the kindly presence of dear friends at the parting moment—then the steamer left the wharf and slowly moved out, seeking her pathway in the sea.

Our journey on the ocean was without special incident; the sea was unusually smooth all the way and the weather pleasant. For the first time in my life I traveled on the sea free from severe sickness. But it is a long run to Papeete, and we were glad the afternoon of July 4, when we saw the faint outlines of Tahiti, and sailed late in the evening into the harbor of Papeete.

We were met at the steamer by Elder Clyde F. Ellis, his wife, and two of the native brethren, who gave us a glad welcome, and escorted us to the church, where a large number of the native Saints from all over the district had gathered, awaiting our arrival. Songs were being sung. As we entered all arose and sang an appropriate hymn in the Tahitian tongue, but the spirit of it rested upon me, the words coming from hearts that overflowed with gladness because of our arrival in their midst. Prayer was offered, and very touching was the sentiment expressed. Another song was sung, then Elder Varoa, president of the branch, made an address of welcome. They looked upon me as an ambassador of Christ, and respected my office. Individuals in the congregation then arose, and in simple and beautiful language gave expression to their feelings and thoughts. Truly a royal welcome was received from the dark-skinned Saints in these far-off islands of the sea! How could I speak to them except as a messenger of God? It would not have been possible to restrain the fountains of my soul from overflowing with love and good will toward them.

At the Heberona Branch, about three miles out in the country, a like reception was later accorded to us, the natives as in Papeete showing their appreciation of our presence by the presentation of numerous gifts. Heberona is situated in the midst of beauty. Here is seen banana palms revealing their rich fruit, coconut trees waving their feathery branches in the breeze, homes embowered in tropical vegetation, and from the mountain side may be seen a beautiful view of the sea and the island of Moreo.

The church in Papeete is in the midst of tropical vegetation, near the ocean. Adjoining is the mission house, the home of our missionaries, and where we found with Brother Ellis and wife, and later with Brother Chrestensen and wife, at all times a happy home during our sojourn in the islands.

The natives are dark-skinned, some of whom in their appearance bear a strong resemblance to the American Indians. Their manner of life is primitive. Many of them in attendance at church are dressed in white suits, and, though barefooted, appear well dressed; after being here a short time, for them to be so dressed does not seem unbecoming, rather does it seem to be an ideal form of dress for the natives in this climate. The feet of the women also are uncovered, but they appear becomingly clad in their loose, clean dresses and long, black, flowing hair. The clothing of both sexes is spotlessly clean; and the same weight of wearing apparel is worn the year around.

Calls from different parts of the mission came for our labors, so a tour of the islands was outlined, which would take us to the islands of Apataki, Kaukura, and where an opportunity would be offered to meet many of the Saints. On the afternoon of July 10, Brother Ellis and I boarded the Saint Francois, a small French steamer trading in the islands, and after a rough night at sea sailed the next evening into the pass of Apataki, one of the Tuamotuan group of islands. These islands lie low, just a few feet above the level of the sea, and are covered with coconut trees.

It was here in these islands where in years past tidal waves did great damage and caused much loss of life. At different times cyclones have caused the water to sweep over many of the islands. They are of coral formation, and consist of a narrow strip of land, from one half mile to one mile in width, each island surrounding a lagoon. Some of the lagoons are thirty miles long and ten miles wide, and in them the water is comparatively calm. Around the islands are coral reefs, situated a sufficient distance from the shores so that the seas in breaking upon them with tremendous force lose their power before reaching the land. What a wonderful protection to these islands. Nearly every island has a narrow pass through which small boats can enter into the lagoon. It was in one of the passes that our steamer anchored, and soon we were resting on the island of Apataki. A cargo of copra (dried coconut) was then taken on board, for which the natives had received in exchange money and necessary provisions.

Here we spent two days, awaiting an opportunity to get to Kaukura, where many Saints were gathering to greet us. We brought food supplies with us. Brother Ellis did the cooking. Few of the homes have beds or chairs, but where we stayed we were fortunate in having both. The cooking was done out-of-doors on a primitive fireplace, on irons, but to its quality I paid frequent compliments by asking for repeated servings.

On July 13 we boarded a small auxiliary boat, propelled by gasoline and sail, and in a few hours passed through the very narrow, dangerous pass of Kaukura. The boat was in charge of natives, and I marveled at their skill in maneuvering it among the rocks, and bringing it safely into the lagoon. Through the pass the boat marked a sharp zig-zag course. As we passed through we saw near the boat a number of sharks, the water being very clear.

From the boat in making the landing we were taken to more shallow water in a vaa, a small canoe with an outlying rigger, and when we could go no farther we were carried on the backs of natives to the shore.

We at once proceeded to the church, and here we were accorded a reception similar to the ones I have described.

The national holiday of France fell on the 14th, and in accordance with the call of the governor of the island, the people assembled at Raitahiti, a small town on the island. Because of war existing in Europe, instead of a program of recreation being provided, the people of all faiths were called together to engage in prayer to God, supplicating him to examine into the conditions in Europe and bring the unhappy conflict to a close. The assembly met in a building open at the sides, the roof of which was thatched with palm leaves. In front was an awning spread out to protect from the rays of the sun those who could not find room inside of the building. Near by, floating from a pole, was a French flag. A few speeches were made, one of the chief speakers being a native elder in our church. Very appropriate was the thought expressed, and eloquent were some of the speakers. Religious songs were sung, and at the close there was an offering of prayer.

In the morning we called on the governor of the island and said to him, "Greeting to you, the governor of the island of Kaukura." He extended his hand and in response said, "Greeting unto you, the servants of the Lord."

At night I preached at Raitahiti in our own church, and at the close of the meeting the Protestants present through one of their number, presented to us a gift of five dollars in appreciation of our labors in a worthy cause.

Though the manner of life of the inhabitants of these islands is primitive, I have from the first loved them. In meeting them my mind does not dwell on their dark skins. They are a lovable people. They have their failings, but I regard them as being largely the victims of influences beyond their control. They rejoice in God and in the knowledge of the gospel of Christ. Wherever we went among the people we left with them the blessings of our office. I brought to their attention the things I considered they needed most; and I found that when matter was presented in a kindly way the Spirit of God confirmed the truth of the teachings to their hearts.

In all of the gatherings of the people I portrayed the power of Christ as a means to social uplifting; pointed out the evil results of giving away children, even though other children were accepted in their stead; condemned the custom of providing costly feasts at the dedication of their churches; explained tithing as a part of the law of God that should be observed, both for the good of the individual, and the church; and endeavored to bring the light of Christ into the people's lives.

One night when preaching at Kaukura several native elders were called out to administer to a child. About an hour after the close of the meeting we learned the cause. A bright little boy about two years of age had swallowed a large copper coin which lodged deep in the throat. Those in charge tried to remove it with their fingers but it was beyond their reach. They could not locate it, and in the islands no physician was accessible. I at once realized the seriousness of the case. Elder Ellis and I went to the home. The child was lying in a young woman's arms; a number of the neighbors had gathered in and were standing around in the room. All were fearful of results, but knew not what to do. I took the child in my arms, turned its head down, and with one hand manipulated the throat; soon the coin was released and forced by gravitation and the child's efforts, came ringing to the floor. All greatly rejoiced that the child's life was saved.

July 18 at Kaukura was a busy day; the district president, a native elder, preached at 8 a. m., after which I baptized eight in the waters of the Pacific. Elder Ellis preached at 10.30 a. m. Several children were blessed and one brother was ordained at the afternoon prayer service, and the writer preached at night. There was a large attendance at all meetings.

At Kaukura I met an old man, a full-blooded native, said to be the only one remaining of the number baptized by the missionaries sent out in the days of Joseph the Martyr. He was baptized on the island of Anaa by Elder Benjamin F. Groward, who with three other missionaries left America in 1843 on the ship Timoleon. He is yet a well-preserved old man, and has borne a strong testimony in the interest of the truth of the gospel; he remembers well the teachings of these first missionaries relative to the order of marriage, and when the representatives of the plural marriage system under Brigham Young came to the islands he declared their teaching was not the same as the teaching of the missionaries in the beginning. When the elders of the Reorganized Church came he said their teaching was the same, exactly the same as what he heard in the beginning. I have heard the old man in public eloquently and earnestly set forth the teaching under Joseph the Martyr, contrast it with the teaching of polygamy under Brigham Young, and then harmoniously blend the work under "Young Joseph" with the work supported under the direction of his father. This old man has evidently in his long life been able to perform a good mission.

The translation or sale of the Utah Book of Doctrine and Covenants in the Tahitian tongue is not permitted here in the islands by the French Government, owing to the revelation it contains providing for plural marriage.

On the morning of July 21 we boarded a small one-masted schooner at Kaukura in order to be at Apataki to catch the Saint Francois on her return trip to Papeete. In the morning before leaving, the Saints of Kaukura held a prayer service in the church, which was filled to its capacity; very earnest and spiritual prayers were offered in our behalf, God being asked to protect us while traveling amidst the dangers of the deep and to "straighten a pathway in the sea," that we might reach our destinations safely. A few of the brethren and sisters then under the power of God bore testimony to his goodness, rich blessings received, and in fitting language spoke parting words to us that shall live in my heart for ever. The assembly wept. The thought of their dark skins or their primitive life hardly came to me—they were my brethren and sisters in Christ, and I rejoiced with them in the heavenly truth restored in these latter days.

Soon we were on the little schooner. There was some doubt in the captain's mind whether or not we should proceed to Apataki, as a very strong wind had been blowing for several days; but he said if the sea should be found too rough he would turn back. On board were a number of the native brethren returning to their homes. Before long we found the sea was lashed into a fury. I lay helpless on the deck, seriously affected by the motion of the sea; at times spitting blood. We were nine hours going the forty miles, and during all this time two native brethren sat faithfully by my side lending every assistance, and holding a piece of canvas over me to protect me from the waves which frequently washed the deck. We were drenched to the skin, but safely sailed into the pass of Apataki at 8 p. m. After a few days of lonely waiting the steamer came and, after calling at Rairoa, reached Papeete the next day.

On our return here we met Elder Alva Chrestensen and his wife, and Ammon, their bright little baby, who was born in the islands. For several months they had been laboring in the Tuamotuan islands.

Many have been the hardships of the missionaries who have labored in these islands, especially in traveling on the small boats among the various islands, and being subjected to conditions not equal to those of advanced civilization. This is a difficult mission, and I have words of praise for the good work being done by the young men and their companions who now are here. Elder Ellis on all occasions proved to be a very skillful interpreter. Considering the short time our missionaries here have been in the islands, I have marveled at the facility with which they speak the Tahitian language. As rays of light, they are entering the lives of the people in this mission. All who have labored here in the past are held in pleasant memory.

The following, copied from the Tahitian and English Dictionary, page 1, referring to the Polynesian language, which is spoken by the inhabitants of most of the numerous islands of the South Sea, may be of interest to readers of the HERALD:

"Its resemblance to the Hebrew in the conjugation of the verbs, and in many of its primitive words could easily be shown; many words seem to have truly Hebrew roots, such as mate, death, mara or maramara, bitter, rapaanto, heal, pae, side, etc."

The members of the church regard themselves as having descended from Joseph, through Manasseh.

Next Sunday a large gathering of the Saints from here and Tiona will meet with the branch at Heberona. Elder Chrestensen will then be ordained to the office of seventy, in harmony with action taken by the General Conference, and in accordance with direction received from the Presidency.

On Monday or Tuesday the steamer Marama is due, on which we intend to go direct to Australia. May we be supported by the faith and prayers of the church.

Until permanent address is given, mail addressed to 623 Darling Street, Rozelle, New South Wales, will reach us.

PAUL M. HANSON.

PAPEETE, TAHITI, July 30, 1915.

Central Illinois

I was confined at home for some time following General Conference, on account of the illness of my wife, but through the mercies of our Father who is able and willing to care for those who trust him, she was raised from her bed of affliction, and I was again permitted to be about the Master's business.

While my wife was yet bedfast, I received an urgent plea from Hersman, Brown County, to come and try to minister to the wants of those who were hungry for the gospel and the administration of the ordinances of the church. I accordingly left my companion in good hands, her mother, Mrs. J. T. Curtis, of Independence, Missouri, being present, and went to the firing line.

Arriving at Hersman, I found that the parties for whom I was seeking lived seven or eight miles in the country, and because of misunderstanding no one met me. I caught a ride part of the way, and walked the rest. Arriving at the end of my journey, I was repaid for trouble and hardship, on receiving the cordial welcome of Brother and Sister Moore and Sister Sanatt, who had been a member of the church for over thirty years. The South Bend Branch to which they belonged has long since been broken up, leaving them stranded without a shepherd and isolated. For years they have been faithfully holding to the iron rod and praying the Lord to send one of his servants their way.

While here I preached as much as possible and did a great deal of fireside talking. My feeble efforts resulted in the baptism of two of Brother and Sister Moore's married daughters, one of whom had been afflicted for some time. I also administered to Brother Moore and to one of his daughters just before leaving. As I laid my hands upon them the power of the Holy Spirit was present to a marked degree. I have learned since that all who were afflicted there received wonderful blessings.

I quote from a letter from there: "This work is wonderful beyond description. We are going to organize a Sunday school; twenty-five have promised to study with us. We also have a nice piece of ground given us upon which we hope to build a little church in the near future." We rejoice in receiving such encouraging letters from points of labor. May the Lord be with them.

Brother A. M. Baker, my colaborer, had started the tent season with a series of meetings at Springfield. On July 1 I received a card from him instructing me to secure a location in Virginia, Illinois. I acted promptly, and on the 8th we erected the tent and commenced operations in our first new opening for the year.

There had never been any Latter Day Saint preaching done here before, and ours was a battle full of discouragements. But the Lord is with us in directing and encouraging power, and when we faltered we were prompted and inspired by the Holy Spirit to press onward.

After preaching two sermons almost every day for twenty-three days, one in the courthouse yard, and the other in the tent, we succeeded in arousing the activity of the Baptist brethren, who sent for an evangelist to counteract our efforts, but our work was done and we were ready to leave. One sister had given her name for baptism, and others were interested and earnestly investigating.

Strange as it may seem, the zeal which prompted our Baptist friends to try to counteract our efforts acted as a sort of a boomerang. It seemed as though the presiding pastor of the Baptist Church was opposed to this particular evangelist, and about the time the evangelist tried to occupy the pulpit, things began to happen. We were already out of town, having withdrawn to Browning, but heard of the fray through the Springfield papers. The mayor of Virginia was compelled to appoint six or eight extra police to stand guard over the evangelist and his followers, to prevent the presiding pastor and his followers from ousting the evangelist. The result is a split in the Baptist church.

The Springfield morning paper states that the former presiding pastor of the Baptist Church of Virginia has been released by vote of a majority of his congregation. By his influence, however, he still holds a part of his flock, thereby causing a division so serious that there is talk of the mayor again appointing extra police to take care of the situation.

I might also state that the aforementioned pastor is the same elder who was instrumental in inciting a mob to violence some years ago at Snicarte, Illinois, and which mob resorted to hard missiles in the form of brick bats, to counteract the effort of J. W. Paxton and myself. We are only made sorry to think that one who might be an effective worker for good has fallen so far short of his privileges.

On Sunday, July 8, a sister of Virginia came to Beardstown where the writer buried her beneath the wave in obedience to the Master's will. Two private houses in Virginia are open to us for cottage meetings any time we can reach there. Our work at Virginia was a success.

We are now holding forth at this place to large crowds of interested listeners. The Saints of Beardstown and Snicarte branches have been supporting us royally in our efforts, and other Saints in central Illinois have been helping.

My prayer is for the upbuilding of this great work

R. L. FULK.

BROWNING, ILLINOIS, August 11, 1915.

Travel Notes

My departure from Kansas City, Tuesday, July 13, for the Pacific Coast was not had without certain misgivings or concern regarding matters of health and leaving companion behind. Sister Nellie accompanied me to the city; luncheon at Brother and Sister Pickering's; a pleasant visit; an auto ride to the station with Brother Pickering; the depression of parting with the loved one; and our train pulled out at 6 p. m. for the great Northwest.

Two hours later found us driving through another of those fearful and wretched thunderstorms, that have had a tendency for the past three months to discount Missouri just a little as a place of residence, and only until we reached the barren or "bad lands" of western Nebraska the following day did we begin to experience the restful and delicious sensation of clear, cool weather, with the quality of certainty about it, and of a brand which we have been continuously enjoying ever since—a few light perpendicular showers, but not a streak of lightning nor a sound of thunder cannonade, something beautifully different, as we view matters.

Reaching Montana the third day out, the sight of snow-capped mountains greeted for the first time our vision, and the fine bracing air and new scenes seem to be breathing already a taste of new life and physical enjoyment and sense of appreciation of a day of wonders new, upon which we were entering. Arriving Thursday evening at Glacier National Park, we concluded to give ourselves a treat of a day's visit to its wonders, and never expect to regret our action in this matter.

Glacier Park's most wonderful "Foy Hotel," costing a half million, and unlike anything in the world, has a far more beautiful exposition of art in nature than anything I had ever seen, rendering an uninteresting comparison to the luxurious but commonplace endowments of wealth produced by familiarity with such as the Baltimore or Muelbach of Kansas City.

Well, something about Glacier Park. How shall I attempt reaching HERALD readers with a vision of God through his handiwork?

If you and I were privileged to read or successfully interpret the language or meaning of King David when he wrote the nineteenth Psalm—something of his spirit seeming to possess me as I gazed with awe and wonder new to me, and beheld the result of the tremendous creative forces which nature's God was and is master of, and in the exercise of which he had planned to make a revelation of himself, ages before he placed me here, a created son of his, so that, in the eye-opening process had in great school of experience and of the spirit of things material to our growth and development toward a truly Godlike estate, I might learn to know and worship him more truly, more acceptably—more profitably.

A day of delightful and new experiences in the finely equipped auto cars, and steamer upon Saint Mary's Lake, to "go on to the sun mountain,"—an appropriate nomenclature of Indian origin with fine poetic emphasis still maintained, as I thought, brought us to the Chalets, a small but beautiful inn, made of the tremendous firs of this wonderful and fascinating environment. And as I looked up, the towering ten thousand feet of these giants "going on toward the sun" and left us to gaze upon the peak, upon which was then, upon this summer day, a beautiful snowstorm descending, and which in a five thousand feet descent turned into rain, falling in mist to the flowers at our feet.

It was our fortune to rub elbows upon this day and occasion with the Democratic governor of the Republican State of Minnesota and his party of thirty people.

A fine dinner of trout that Kansas City and Independence people do not eat unless they come after it, with proper accompaniment, and a ninety-mile trip besides, through snow-clad ranges of mountains, brought us around and back to Glacier Park, where, wrapped in Indian blankets, which the cool but delicious mountain air made necessary, we passed out through the gate of slumberland from a red-letter day in the life experiences of,

M. H. BOND.

PORTLAND, OREGON, August 2, 1915.

News from Branches

Lachine, Michigan

Lachine Branch was organized four years ago next winter by Brethren F. A. Smith and J. C. Goodman, with a membership of about twenty-five. Since then our membership has increased to fifty-eight. Nineteen of this number have been baptized since April 18, of this year. We have two elders and a priest, with the assistance of J. W. Carpenter of Wilson Branch, and A. C. Blackmore of Alpena Branch, the latter having baptized six of the nineteen referred to. Both these brethren have rendered valuable service. This good work has not all been done by preaching, but is partly due to the Sunday school.

My labor has been outside of the branch. By request of Sister Giar, I began services in a schoolhouse near their home, with good interest. I preached about fifteen sermons, and through the untiring service of Brother and Sister Giar, and Sister Flanders, we have kept the camp fires blazing.

I speak with praise of Mr. E. Flanders, who gave me a welcome in his home and by a hearty handshake and pleasant smile makes me feel at home indeed. Mr. Nicholas also, although not a member of the church, has shown great kindness in furnishing light and financial aid. Twice this good man has hitched up his horses and taken me home, a distance of five miles.

On July 18 I baptized three precious souls, one of them being this man's daughter, a promising young woman. She was the first to give her name for baptism. Last Sunday I had the pleasure of baptizing her mother and her mother's sister, making five in all, and it is announced that we will trouble the waters again next Sunday.

We have built a neat little church in the village of Lachine. Brother J. A. Carpenter was in charge of this work. This building has not been dedicated, but we hope to be able to have this done soon. Brother Carpenter has worked hard in building for us a place of worship, and in preaching the gospel. He has baptized a goodly number, three last week. So the good work goes on.

Ever praying for the advancement of the cause, I am,

Yours in bonds,

GEORGE L. BLACKMORE.

DAFOE, MICHIGAN, Route 2.

Independence, Missouri

Our sisters are often found at the auditorium of the high school listening attentively to Jackson County boards of education, professors, and teachers, while they discuss methods of teaching, efficiency, etc., at their annual meetings. This year it was sanitation, playgrounds, ways and means for drying the children's clothing after reaching the schoolhouse in wet weather, keeping the dust from the school room, securing the cooperation of parents, while cooking, sewing, etc., are being taught the girls and industrial pursuits the boys. These progressive movement meetings have been the order here for a year or two, and foremost among its advocates have been our very earnest sisters of the Stone Church.

The musical people among us are as ever wide-awake, and they are in line supporting their elders. The art of skillful cooking, dining room etiquette, etc., has been successfully taught by our courteous sister, Mrs. J. Mader. The young people have enjoyed the demonstrations and pleasant little talks. Her husband, superintendent of the Sunday school intermediate department, also gave an excellent program a couple of Sundays ago, one of the best in vocal and instrumental music.

The church services of late have been spiritual and uplifting. The gifts have been manifested and the hearts of the Saints have been comforted.

We rejoice in the partial recovery of our beloved president, G. E. Harrington; also Sister Joseph Smith, who for many months lovingly ministered to her companion, bearing in patience the burden as a sacred service for the Master.

May the heartfelt benediction of peace of our lately deceased prophet rest on all God's people evermore.

MRS. ABBIE A. HORTON.

Saint Louis, Missouri

Since our last district conference the missionaries who have been laboring in this city have been very busy. Brethren F. A. Russell and Ward L. Christy have been holding tent services nightly excepting Saturdays, having had the tent in three different locations, remaining two or more weeks at each place. The result of their efforts remains for the future to tell. We sincerely trust the honest in heart will treasure well the words of truth presented to them.

These brethren also occupied at the church Sunday mornings, our local workers in the evenings. The young people have lent their support to the tent services in the way of singing, etc. The Sunday school and Religio have also received the attention of the young, evidencing their interest in this glorious work.

Notwithstanding the terrible storm which preceded the opening day of our district reunion, some thirty tents were erected and services started at the appointed time. Brethren E. A. Smith, Paxton, Christy and W. A. Smith, with the local officers, compose a goodly band to dispense the spiritual truth, for which the Saints have mainly gathered.

The grounds are so situated that those employed can if they wish, make the trip morning and evening, thus some families are given an opportunity of enjoying the camp life that otherwise could not do so if these grounds were farther away.

Although the tent services and reunion take a majority of the membership away from our services, regular meetings have been held, giving everyone an opportunity to attend somewhere.

Brother Russell has returned to his home, but will return to the district when conditions are such that he can leave.

Your sister in Christ,

2739 Greer Avenue.

ELIZABETH PATTERSON.

I gave a beggar from my little store
Of well-earned gold. He spent the shining ore
And came again, and yet again, still cold and hungry as before.

I gave a thought, and through that thought of mine
He found himself, the man, supreme, divine!
Fed, clothed and crowned with blessings manifold,
And now he begs no more.—Anon.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Notices

Chatham, September 25 and 26, Chatham, Ontario. Statistical reports and delegate credentials should be in hands undersigned not later than September 10. Anthony Hewitt, secretary, 41 Lowe Street, Chatham, Ontario.

Massachusetts, October 23, Providence. District presidents, branch presidents, reunion treasurer, Sunday school and Religio, quorums and priesthood should report to W. A. Sinclair, 116 Pearl Street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts, ten days before conference.

Pittsburgh date changed from September 17 to 19, to September 24 to 26, in order to have minister in charge with us. James E. Bishop, president.

Convention Notices

Florida, Sunday school, September 17, Alafloa Church. W. L. Armstrong, secretary.

Reunion Notices

Northwestern Kansas, September 3 to last ten days, Lebanon, Kansas. Conference September 6. Send reports to J. W. Shower, Lebanon. Board for visiting Saints at reasonable prices. A patriarch is expected. Notify Sister H. O. Turner, Bellaire, Kansas, who will arrange for board and lodging. A few tents for those desiring to camp. J. D. Shower.

Quorum Notices

FIRST QUORUM OF ELDERS

Southeastern Mission elders meet during Dicksonville, Alabama, reunion, 4 o'clock Tuesday. Matters of importance. A. E. Warr, secretary pro tem.

CHATHAM TEACHERS

Chatham teachers meet at Chatham, September 25 and 26. Reports of labor from September 15, 1914 to September 15, 1915, should be sent as soon after the latter date as possible, that a summarized report may be sent by undersigned to conference. Anthony Hewitt, secretary, 41 Lowe Street, Chatham, Ontario.

Notice of Release

This is to notify all concerned that Eder F. B. Farr, appointed at the last conference to labor in western Oklahoma, and Panhandle of Texas, by his request has been released from the field and missionary work.

W. M. AYLOR,
Missionary in General Charge.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, August 27, 1915.

Died

MCBIRNIE.—Elder Samuel McBirnie was born in Ireland, April 5, 1834; died at his home, Boone, Iowa, August 22, 1915, after an illness of 3 or 4 hours. Baptized in Scotland. He was an elder in the church for many years, and did all in his power for the advancement of the cause. His place was a home for the missionaries. On coming to this country he first resided in Pennsylvania, and then came to Boone, where he was justice of the peace for 15 years, and a member of the city council for 4 years. He was highly respected by all who knew him. Survived by wife, 2 sons. Services in Methodist church, Boone, in charge of Reverend Shephard, sermon by J. S. Roth, music by Methodist choir. Burial in Boone Cemetery.

ROBINSON.—Mary E., wife of Hiram H. Robinson, was born at Allerton, New Jersey, January 30, 1860; died at Independence, Missouri, August 19, 1915. Baptized at Allerton by John Stone. Married at the same place to Brother Robinson, April 27, 1885. One son born to them died when 19 months old. They came to Independence in April, 1886, where they have since resided. By a quiet, consistent life, Sister Robinson manifested her devotion to the Lord. Survived by husband, niece, 4 nephews. Funeral from the home. Bishop Bullard in charge, sermon by W. H. Garrett. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

CURRY.—Emma Avery Curry, born near Rushville, Illinois, June 22, 1842; died at her home Rushville, July 21, 1915. Baptized by William Sellars, March 19, 1866. Married William J. Curry, May 21, 1866, Rushville, who with 7 children, 17 grandchildren, 13 great-grandchildren, survive her. Services by Elder Fulk, of Beardstown, Illinois. Interment in Rushville Cemetery.

VICKERY.—Graydon Vickery, youngest son of Brother and Sister A. J. Vickery, born August 28, 1897; died in a hospital in New Orleans, Louisiana, August 12, 1915. Burial at McKenzie, Alabama, sermon by F. M. Slover, prayer by A. E. Warr. Deceased leaves father, mother, 3 sisters.

Book Reviews

CHRISTIANITY AND INTERNATIONAL PEACE.—Doctor Charles Edward Jefferson, pastor Broadway Tabernacle, New York City. Thomas Y. Crowell Company, New York City, $1.25. "One of the most vigorous presentations of the question of world peace which has yet appeared is this from Doctor Jefferson's pen. It was first given in the form of six lectures at Grinnell, Iowa, the subjects being: 'The greatest problem of the Twentieth Century,' 'The Bible and war,' 'The church and peace,' 'Christianity and militarism,' 'Fallacies of militarism,' and 'What shall we do?' Doctor Jefferson is no recent convert to the peace movement, having studied and labored for twenty years in its behalf. He brings a seasoned opinion to bear upon the subject, and a clear vein of logic which will at once hold the reader, whether of his way of thinking or not. His denunciation of militarism is unsparing, and he shows that not one nation alone but every nation falls under this term. In the light of the recent agitation in America against our military unpreparedness, the opposite point of view will challenge argument. Indeed, this suggestive book invites quotation and comment at every point, and is well worthy of the closest reading. For example, Doctor Jefferson says that since we have a Department of War, why not also have a Department of Peace? Why not devote a fraction of the sum we spend annually on armaments in cultivating the good will of other nations? Finally, he looks to the world federation of nations as the ultimate goal."

THE EARLY CHURCH.—George Hodges, Dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Massachusetts. Houghton Mifflin Company, 4 Park Street, Boston. $1.75. This work covers the early church, from Ignatius to Augustine. The chapters are devoted to subjects on "The Roman world," "The struggle for life," "The defense of the faith," "The organization of religion," "The Arian debate," "Monasticism in the East," "Monasticism in the West."

These chapters began as Lowell lectures in 1908. The lectures were given without manuscript, and have been repeated in that form in Cambridge, in Salem, Springfield, Providence, Rhode Island, and in Brooklyn, New York. The 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th were then written out and read at the Berkeley Divinity School, Middletown, Connecticut, as the Mary H. Page Lectures for 1914. In like manner the 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th were given at Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, as the Bedell Lectures for 1913. The 10th was given in 1913, at Ann Arbor, Michigan, on the Baldwin Foundation. Finally, the lectures, as they now appear, were repeated in 1914 at West Newport, California, at the summer school conducted by the Commission on Christian Education of the Upper Diocese of Los Angeles.

IS DEATH THE END?—John Haynes Holmes, minister of the Church of the Messiah, New York City. Author of the Revolutionary Function of the Modern Church, Marriage and Divorce, etc. George P. Putnam's Sons, 6 West Forty-fifth Street, New York City. $1.50.

This book is a statement of the arguments for immortality, the justification from the standpoint of modern scientific thought of the immortal hope, and a consideration of the conditions of immortality and their relation to the facts and problems of present human existence. The chapters are devoted to "Intimations of immortality," "Immortality and evolution," "Immortality and scientific research," "A proof of immortality," "Conditional immortality," "What will immortality be like," and "Is immortality desirable." The author examines from many angles the subject of immortality, a subject that has stimulated speculation ever since man gave thought to his destiny in the universe. So many sane suggestions are offered as to the reality and the nature of immortality, and the whole question is brought into such convincing relationship with other universal tendencies and world principles that the reader is repeatedly forced to conclude that the clear light of the author's reasoning has found an opening in the black, baffling wall against which so many random arrows of speculation have been shot. To laymen and churchmen alike the volume will prove of inestimable importance.

WRITTEN ENGLISH.—A course of lessons in the things to know in order to write English correctly. Edwin C. Wooley, Ph. D., author of Hand Book of Composition. D. C. Heath & Company, Brooklyn, New York. $1. "The object of this book is to teach students to write English correctly. The common complaint that instruction in composition fails to bring about practical results is due to the fact that discipline in the principles of correctness, as found in the majority of text-books, is insufficiently thorough and systematic. To furnish an adequate and effective system of instruction in practical application is the purpose of this book. Written English deals with five of the leading principles of mechanical correctness in composition: Manuscript arrangement, Grammatical correctness, punctuation, spelling, conventional usage in letter-writing. A study of grammatical theory closely accompanied by a study of practical principles in the foundation on which the author bases his training in correct writing. The method of dealing with these subjects is simple enough to be understood by one who has no previous knowledge of them, and at the same time provides an excellent review for the more advanced student. The book proceeds on the principal that effective instruction requires not only clear statement but abundant drill. The numerous illustrations, exercises, and discussions give ample opportunity for the application of every principle. Each lesson is designed to furnish the maximum of aid in the study of subsequent lessons. The sequence of class assignments and theme assignments has been so arranged that for the writing of nearly every theme the student will have received special help and preparation from a class exercise previously held."

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver, Assistant Editor.
 Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.
 When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.
 If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.
 This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.
 All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.
 All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.
 Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.
 For advertising rates apply to the business department.
 Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.
 Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
The Angel Message Tracts—Chapter 4	833
Current Events	835
Notes and Comments	836
Editorial Selections	836
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
The Seventh-day Adventists, by Marcus Cook	839
One Thousand Dollar Diligence, by Chris B. Hartshorn	843
"Mormon" Photo Drama, by James E. Yates	844
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
Canning Compounds Dangerous to Health	845
MOTHERS' HOME COLUMN	846
Callie B. Stebbins.
LETTER DEPARTMENT
J. W. Darling—J. E. Vanderwood.	848
NEWS FROM MISSIONS
Paul M. Hanson—R. L. Fulk—M. H. Bond.	848
NEWS FROM BRANCHES
George L. Blackmore—Mrs. Abbie A. Horton—Elizabeth Patterson.	852
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT
	853

SERVICE

The word service is the watchword of the twentieth century.

The human family is awakening to the fact that they are indeed a family, and such relationship demands service to and for each other.

We desire to be of some service to you in a line in which we are peculiarly fitted—hence our new department.

It's this way:

There is a right and a wrong way of doing things—an effective and an ineffective way. We want to help you do your advertising or announcing in the right way, without cost to you. It is entirely free to our people.

The proposition is to get the most out of what you pay for printing. We want to show you how.

We have recently seen samples of advertising used by some people that were certainly unattractive, and could not command respectful attention. It often happens that your facilities for getting what you want are not good. The place you have your printing done may not be equipped for doing the kind of work you want unless you are able to specify exactly what you want and how it shall be done, and then they may not be able to handle it.

This Is Our Proposition

If you intend to do any advertising in your missionary or branch work, no matter what kind, just send us your copy, and without cost to you, we will promptly advise you, by personal letter, with careful suggestions as to the best way to get the results you want.

If you intend to advertise in any way to increase your business, send us a copy of the wording you want to use, or give us the idea as clearly and definitely as possible, and we will word it for you in convincing style.

It doesn't matter whether you have your printing done at the Herald Publishing House or not. We will give you the same careful attention whether you do or not. However, if you wish to have us give you the advantage of our extensive equipment and facilities, we will promptly quote you lowest prices delivered to your post office.

We are prepared to do this because we have on our force a brainy young fellow who has a complete course in advertising to his credit and is experienced in this work. He feels the true spirit of a Latter Day Saint and is willing to be at your service. Complicated work will receive the combined attention of the departments concerned.

ADDRESS

Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa
 Ad Service Department

The New Folder Tracts Are Popular

Just recently the HERALD announced the printing of an edition of two new folder tracts. From the ready response and the words of commendation received, the Bureau of Publicity is pleased to announce that a second large edition is now being issued. There are still a number of communities not heard from who should secure some of the folders for distribution. They are distinctively tasty, and will be read where a plain tract would not. They cost a little more than the ordinary kind, but are worth the difference. It will pay to use these liberally.

Folder Number 1

Gives a brief epitome of the history of the church—just enough to properly inform and yet be read by the average busy person. One page is devoted to pungent proofs that we are both evangelical and orthodox.

Two full-page illustrations—one of the Quorum of Twelve in a late session at Independence, Missouri, and the other good picture of an audience in front of the Independence church.

Folder Number 2

Gives a short history of the First Presidency of the church, especially of the presidents. There are excellent pictures of Joseph the Martyr, President Joseph Smith, and President Frederick M. Smith.

"What we believe" occupies one page on the back.

Part of the editorial appearing in the Kansas City Journal concerning the life of Joseph Smith is included in the tract.

The printing is done with a pleasing sepia ink on a pretty India-tint plate paper. The size when folded is three and a half by eight and a half inches—convenient pocket size.

The price is 20 cents a dozen; $1 per 100; $7 per 1,000. Always order of

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE, Lamoni, Iowa

GRACELAND COLLEGE BONDS

In order to place the finances of Graceland College on a better basis, those having the financial responsibility of the same have thought best to issue bonds to the amount of $35,000.00.

These bonds run from July 1, 1915, to July 1, 1920, and bear 5 per cent interest, payable semi-annually.

They are offered to the Saints and to any investor as a first-class investment.

These bonds are secured by a first mortgage on real estate valued at about $62,000.00.

Each bond is valued at $100.00. We earnestly invite the attention of any having money to invest to investigate this proposition.

You will be not only putting your money in a safe place (as the whole church is back of these bonds as well as secured by mortgage) but you will be helping the work of the church.

Address all communications to

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Lamoni, Iowa

A New Book
THE INTERPRETER

By Gomer T. Griffiths

A Revision of the "Exegesis"

containing more charts and information than the former book, also an illustrated chapter on offenses—law governing the same—procedure in church courts, and blank forms suitable to the same. The various quotations from the books have been carefully compiled and arranged, so that the instructions pertaining to each office are classified, to assist the reader in locating the duties of each minister from the president of the church to the deacon, also points out how the different officers are called and the manner of their ordination, thereby securing courtesy to whom courtesy is due.

Price .....50c

Have you heard of the old Spalding story from which the Book of Mormon was said to have been taken? Well, here is the Spalding story. Better get it and know for yourself. Only .....25c
Order 139.

Failures of Campbellism

A new tract by Elder E. E. Long. Reprinted from a series of twelve articles in HERALD of 1913. Logically presented and systematically arranged. Quotations verified. 139 pages. Order 217 .....20c

Objections to the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants Answered and Refuted

You can't take the time, neither have you the data at hand to be able to refute many of the so-called arguments against these two books. Brother J. R. Lambert has placed in book form facts and data to refute these so-called arguments. A handy book to have in your library. Order 143 .....40c

FOR SALE CHEAP

Latest model Hammond Typewriter, "the Multiplex," in strong sole-leather case. Weight 25 pounds. Three sets of type, two of them in machine at one time. Type shuttles for every known language can be bought. "Just turn the knob" and change instantly from one type or language to another.

Does beautiful work. Thoroughly dependable and high grade machine, in perfect condition; will last a lifetime. Universal keyboard. Back spacer, etc.

Inquire of G. R. Wells, Lamon, Iowa. 35-3t

What Is Man

Is a book that should receive the careful study of every Saint. It clears away the fog of doubt with reference to the eternal verities of the future state of man. No better book on the subject of immortality. Order 140 .....50c

THE STORY OF THE BIBLE

Contains 168 stories, each story complete in itself and together forming a narrative of the Holy Scriptures. Profusely illustrated with color plates and halftones. Just what you need to put in the hands of your children. Book contains 752 pages.

Order Story of the Bible, cloth ..$1.50

COLORED POST CARDS

Graceland College, Saints' Home, Liberty Home, Independence church, Herald Publishing House, Lamon church.
1 of each for 15 cents.
2 of each for 25 cents.
Order by number 172a.

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER

Revised and Enlarged

A new edition of this book is just off the press, containing sermons and articles of the well-known and successful missionary, Elder J. S. Roth. The worth and popularity of this book has been attested by its long and steady sale. The price remains the same.

Order 248a .....75c

YOU Can See America Best

on the Burlington's Grand Circle Tour en route to California Expositions. Think of it! Scenic Colorado, Salt Lake City and Great Salt Lake in daylight; glorious California, Los Angeles, both Expositions; a romantic salt-sea trip up the coast to Portland, Tacoma, Seattle, the Puget Sound country and Spokane—then home via either Glacier National Park or Yellowstone Park and the good old-reliable Burlington. The most picturesque sights—most wonderful places in all the West are included in this tour. Honestly, this is THE vacation trip of a lifetime. Ninety golden days in the golden West. Stopovers—as you please. Step in and get your copy of our California Expositions folder, next time you're going by and let's talk it over.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

IF YOU WOULD LIKE TO OWN A FARM, where life is worth living and where you can raise bountiful crops; where the climate is great, markets fine and the price of land right, write to-day for a copy of our "There's a Farm for You in Colorado" folder. S. B. Howard, Immigration Agent, 1004 Farnam St., Omaha, Nebraska.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, SEPTEMBER 8, 1915

NUMBER 36

Editorial

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

CHAPTER 5

THE BAPTISM OF THE SPIRIT

If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you.

But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come.—John 14: 15-18, 26; 16: 13.

These words were spoken by the living Christ, who said: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore." (Revelation 1: 18.)

"Another Comforter" was promised, inasmuch as the time was at hand for Jesus to depart from earth life. Until this time vexatious problems were brought to him for solution; compassionate words were heard spoken in a voice containing heaven's harmony; the mind of God was made known when necessary—now the time was near for his departure from the church! And he said: "I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you."

This promise of the baptism of the Holy Spirit reveals how precious is man in the sight of God. The realization of God in the lives of men was to be the object of the communion promised. Did not Christ come into the world to bring man and God into close relationship? God's work was to continue to be the bringing to pass of eternal life to man.

LAW GOVERNS SPIRITUAL BLESSINGS

The words of Christ indicate clearly that the "Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost," was to be given not indiscriminately to mankind; but was to "dwell with" and "be in" those living in accordance with heaven's will.

An intelligent agency and power was promised that was to be known by the children of God, "abide" with them for ever, administer comfort, "teach" them all things, bring all things to their remembrance, "guide" into all truth, and show them "things to come." A heavenly blessing from the throne of God with far-reaching effects!

The disclosing of the way by which one may come into possession of this invisible, yet real heavenly power, that bears witness of God to the souls of men, is possible to all who will humbly investigate and place a high valuation upon the things of God.

The world, for reasons that must appear evident to all, were not to be recipients of this holy power—violators of law are not in accord with God. Even as law governs the operation of electricity (this invisible power will not run along a wooden wire), so in the spiritual realm well-defined laws govern the operation of the Holy Ghost. To be influenced by the Spirit of God, one must be sensitized by obedience to divine law. It is even possible to sincerely partake of the "wine of the wrath" of Babylon, be made drunk by her false doctrines, and in such a stupid state pass through life without perceiving or recognizing the presence of the Holy Ghost. The imbibing of false doctrines is as destructive to spiritual insight and communion with God as the partaking of alcohol is destructive to one's physical powers of discrimination.

BAPTISM OF THE SPIRIT ESSENTIAL

Jesus said to Nicodemus: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 5.)

From these words the pendulum of interpretation has swung to extremes. They have been interpreted by some to mean water baptism alone is sufficient—no such thing as a baptism of the Spirit in addition to the water; while others have said the baptism of the Spirit is all that is necessary, and have spoken slightingly of water baptism. What saith the Lord? Both the baptism of water and of the Spirit are by the language made essential to entrance into the kingdom of God. The same authority is found for the baptism of the Spirit as for the baptism of water.

Paul, in enumerating the principles of the doctrine of Christ, refers to "baptisms":

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms [of "water and of the Spirit"], and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.—Hebrews 6: 1, 2.

When prosecuting the work of building up the kingdom of God, he asked certain disciples near Ephesus:

Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost.—Acts 19: 2.

After instructing them more fully concerning Christ they were "baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied." (Acts 19: 5, 6.)

Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, on the day of Pentecost publicly preached:

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2: 38, 39.

John the Baptist taught his disciples:

I indeed have baptized you with water: but he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost.—Mark 1: 8.

The belief of the church was:

But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.—Romans 8: 9.

And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit.—Ephesians 5: 18.

For our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance; as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake.—1 Thessalonians 1: 5.

The Holy Ghost is God's seal placed upon his children. Note the following:

In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory.—Ephesians 1: 13, 14.

The entrance requirements of the kingdom of God as set forth by Jesus to Nicodemus have not changed—Jesus Christ is the "same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever." (Hebrews 13: 8.)

FOLLOWS THE BAPTISM OF WATER

The order of the "baptisms" spoken of by Paul to the Hebrews (6: 1, 2) was given by Peter in his words on the day of Pentecost, when the multitude asked, "What shall we do?" He answered:

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2: 38.

Of the baptism of Jesus we read:

And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him.—Matthew 3: 16.

After the Samaritans were baptized, the apostles sent Peter and John unto them:

Who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus). Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.—Acts 8: 15-17.

In explaining the new birth to Nicodemus the Savior placed the baptism of water in order before the baptism of the Spirit. (John 3: 5.)

The rule of procedure is established in these passages from the scriptures—the baptism of the Holy Spirit follows the baptism of water for the "remission of sins." How orderly is the divine arrangement!

In the case of Cornelius and those with him, Gentiles upon whom fell the Holy Ghost before baptism, while they were giving audience to Peter's preaching, it is clear that this was done to confirm the fact that the gospel was not designed exclusively for the Jews, and to open up the pathway of the church to the Gentiles. It was considered not lawful by the Jews to keep company with those of the uncircumcision (Acts 10: 28) so God showed open favor to the Gentiles before their initiation into the church. But Peter, who knew the true order, as it had been announced by him under inspiration of God on the day of Pentecost, at once said concerning Cornelius and those with him:

Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.—Acts 10: 47, 48.

As we move in harmony with God, we move safely—false doctrines intoxicate and lead into the broad way.

BAPTISM NOT SPRINKLING

The reception of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost indicates that the baptism of the Holy Ghost was an overwhelming, not a sprinkling of the presence of the Holy Ghost—literally an immersion:

And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.—Acts 2: 1-4.

PROMISE WITHOUT TIME LIMITATIONS

The promises and commandments of our Lord are in force throughout the gospel dispensation. God has not limited his work through Jesus Christ. We are now living in the light of that glorious dispensation.

Peter's words may well be proclaimed to the ends of the earth: to all who are ignorant of or who have not received the Holy Ghost:

Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2: 38, 39.

If an entrance into the kingdom of God is possible to-day, the baptism of the Spirit is possible, for: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—Jesus.

The same kind of reasoning that establishes baptism of water as a part of the gospel of Christ, establishes the baptism of the Holy Spirit as essential to salvation.

Peter said in reference to the pouring out of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost:

For these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day. But this is that [Spirit] which was spoken by the Prophet Joel; and it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy: and I will shew wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath: blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke: the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come: and it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved.—Acts 2: 15-21.

In no sense did Peter say the fulfillment of the prophecy of Joel was limited to the day of Pentecost; but what was manifested was "that which was spoken by the Prophet Joel." The record does not show that on that day the Spirit of God was poured out "upon all flesh," that "sons and daughters" prophesied, that young men saw "visions," or that old men dreamed "dreams"; in no sense is it suggested that after that day there was to be no further manifestation of the power of God by means of the Holy Ghost.

The marvelous doctrine of the unchangeability of God should enable one to understand that the promises in the will of God sealed by the blood of Christ

(Continued to page 861.)

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

EARLY TO PRESS.—Owing to conditions which require this issue of the HERALD to be locked up early for the press, this column can not be kept open to our usual time.

WILSON FOR PRESIDENT.—President Wilson was on the 1st indorsed by the Kentucky Democratic Convention as a candidate for reelection.

"F-4."—The United States submarine F-4, which sank in Honolulu harbor last March, has been raised, and bodies are being removed therefrom. The cause of the catastrophe is yet unknown.

LIFTING BLOCKADE.—Under the relaxation of the British orders in council allowing shipment of goods made in Germany and Austria, forty million dollars worth of German goods stored in Holland, are released for shipment to the United States.

MODIFYING SUBMARINE WARFARE.—In a note to Secretary Lansing made public the 2d, the German ambassador says that the next German note in the Lusitania case, decided upon before the sinking of the Arabic, will contain the following:

Liners will not be sunk by our submarines without warning and without safety of the lives of the noncombatants, provided that the liners do not try to escape or offer resistance.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—It is announced that forty-seven Mexican bandits who attacked a ranch north of Brownsville, Texas, on August 8, have been killed by American posses and officers. General Orozco and four other Mexican raiders were shot by an American posse near Sierra Blanco, Texas, August 31. Two Americans were killed on the 2d by Mexicans near Brownsville. These Mexican bands are said to be driven by hunger to cross the international border in foraging parties. Zapata has replied favorably to the note suggesting a Mexican peace conference.

EUROPEAN WAR.—With the exception of on the north, where the Russian line is holding, Germany continues to gain territory, having taken the last Russian fort in Poland. Few Russian soldiers, guns or supplies are captured. Reports from the western line are few, and indicate inactivity. The Turks report holding their ground on the Gallipoli Peninsula, with the allies suffering heavy losses. The German submarine that sunk the Arabic has not yet reported to German headquarters, and it is presumed that it has been sunk by a British vessel. It is officially announced by England that in the year just passed, eighty-nine English subjects have been killed, and two hundred and twenty-one injured by German Zeppelins. Germany and Austria-Hungary are said to have warned their subjects in neutral countries that work in munitions factories on materials to be sent to enemy countries will be punished by imprisonment or death.

---

NOTES AND COMMENTS

INDEPENDENCE WITHOUT SALOONS.—Independence is now in a good financial condition in spite of the fact that the saloon revenue has been taken away. Ten years ago with saloons we were in debt and behind on bills. Lexington, Missouri, with, I don't know how many saloons, ten I believe in one block, is voting on a plan to borrow money to pay expenses.—The Jackson Examiner, published at Independence, Missouri.

THE HORROR OF WAR.—Jane Addams in addressing an audience in the Auditorium at Chicago on the evening of July 22, and in giving her impressions of the war gained during her recent pilgrimage in Europe, said:

We encountered the fear that if the war went on too long the military would become established in the place of civil authority. We heard in six different countries that the war is breaking down rights and safeguards that in many cases had been fought for in revolutions. We found a certain horror of war even among the soldiers.

SUCCESSFUL ADVERTISING.—Brother Leonard S. Rhodes of Centralia, Washington, writes to Brother E. D. Moore, of the Bureau of Publicity, regarding the remarkable success of the advertising committee of the reunion recently held at that place, working under the direction of Brother Moore. A committee of five were appointed; funds were collected, bills, posters, cards, and badges circulated, and articles and cuts furnished the daily press. The attendance of outsiders was exceptionally good, and the interest was excellent. Brother Rhodes is to furnish articles dealing with the faith of the church for publication in the local press during the coming year. This is the kind of advertising work that brings results, and it is the kind in which our brethren are being successful at many points. May the good work go on.

AT THE EXPOSITION.—Elder F. G. Pitt writes from San Francisco, California, as follows: "We are informed that some of our members have difficulty in finding our exhibit at the Panama Exposition. Here is the direction. Enter the Palace of Education at the east door, go west down the center isle, which is Avenue C, to the end, and our desk will be found a few steps to the left of the clock. Do not fail to look us up. All members and friends are expected to register. The Saints' church in this city is located at Caselli Avenue and Danvers Street. Take Market Street car, transfer to Eighteenth Street line, get off at Danvers Street, walk one block. We will report later some of the interesting experiences we are having at the exposition. We are meeting many nice people, who seem anxious to learn who we are, and accept our literature. The exposition itself is something wonderful.

---

Hymns and Poems

(SELECTED AND ORIGINAL)

Let the Children Come

O Lord as we assemble here
Beside the liquid grave,
Behold the lambs who seek to know
Thy wondrous power to save.
They come to thee with contrite hearts;
Receive them, Lord, we pray;
And help them keep this covenant,
And walk the narrow way.

Oh may this act be ratified
In heavenly courts above,
And angel hands their names record,
Where all is peace and love.
And may their lives be always pure,
Their lips be free from guile,
That they, with all the pure in heart,
May bask beneath thy smile.

And in the confirmation, Lord,
Bestow thy Spirit, free;
That by this testimony they
May know they follow thee.
They're young in years and need thy care;
Oh bless them with thy grace,
And lead them in the narrow way
To see thee face to face.

E. E. LONG.

---

Child Labor

Shut from out God's air and sunshine,
By the grip and lust of greed,
Hear ye not the children crying,
In their hour of bitter need?

Naught of life know they nor feel
Save its grind and iron heel—
Born to catch the lilt of song bird,
Bred to note the whirring wheel.

Careless, know ye not, my brothers,
Smiling in your seats of power,
That a bud once dwarfed and blighted,
Can not grow to perfect flower?

Gone, alas! the Nation's bulwarks,
Lest ye wake with sudden leap,
Guarding well her weal and glory,
Trusted to their childish keep.

—Ever M. Holmes, in Child Betterment.

(Continued from page 859.)

are sure, and their realization is dependent alone upon men observing the stipulations on which they were based. The following is conclusive that the promise of the Holy Ghost by Christ and Peter, et al, has not expired or become of none effect:

Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto.—Galatians 3: 15.

RECEIVED THROUGH THE LAYING ON OF HANDS

It must appear to all readers of the Scriptures that many of the choice blessings of heaven were enjoyed after the imposition of hands by God's ministry. God has not departed from the order he instituted in the beginning. This practice does not mean that Christ is supplanted, but that Christ's ambassadors are acting authoritatively in his name. Thus the ministry of Christ become a medium of blessing to the people.

The laying on of hands was practiced by the church for the reception of the Holy Ghost:

Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus). Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.—Acts 8: 14-17.

And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost.—Acts 9: 17.

When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied.—Acts 19: 5, 6.

The church was not at this time in apostasy; and as it did not practice an ordinance of human appointment in so sacred a relation, it is clear that the ordinance of the laying on of hands for the purpose practiced was given by commandment of God.

Christ in his commission to the apostles, commanded: "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."—Matthew 28: 20. Then was not this an ordinance that was observed by the church commanded of the Lord?

Paul in making known the cardinal principles of the doctrine of Christ, immediately after mentioning "baptisms" makes specific mention of the "laying on of hands." (Hebrews 6: 1, 2.)

The account of Ananias laying his hands on Saul that he might be "filled with the Holy Ghost" establishes the fact that the practice of the laying on of hands for the bestowal of the Holy Ghost was not confined to the apostles.

The same church that practiced the baptism of water for the "remission of sins," practiced the laying on of hands for the bestowal of the Holy Ghost.

MINISTRY CALLED BY REVELATION

By the Holy Ghost men were called to the ministry:

As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.—Acts 13: 2.

Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers [their position was made known by the Holy Ghost revealing the mind of God], to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.—Acts 20: 28.

If there is no revelation from God to-day by the power of the Holy Spirit, how are uninspired men to know who should be "overseers" in the church? Will guesses by men denying revelation from God place men approved of God in offices in the church? Such procedure had no place in the church under the administration of Christ.

Timothy and all others of the ministry were ordained in harmony with the mind of God made known by the Holy Ghost:

Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy [in accordance with prophecy], with the laying on of hands of the presbytery.—1 Timothy 4: 14.

And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron.—Hebrews 5: 4

OPERATIONS OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

The Holy Ghost was to "dwell with" and "be in" the children of God, and "abide" with them for ever. A definite work therefore was to be accomplished by the presence of this holy power of God in the lives of his people. Its operation was to be not only through the word of God, but also independent of the word, in which the mind and heart would be touched by the Lord, and the man thus brought into close fellowship with God. On the day of Pentecost the Holy Ghost so wrought; direct from heaven, not merely through the medium of the written or spoken word.

If there is only the word, no Holy Ghost to operate on the minds and hearts of men, it must appear evident to all that uninspired teachers will involve the world in interminable confusion in giving interpretations to what was given through inspired men.

The Samaritans experienced great joy in hearing the gospel and being baptized; but the Holy Ghost was "fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." Then Peter and John laid their hands on them, and they "received the Holy Ghost." Of a very elementary character, indeed, would have been their religious experience without the reception of the Holy Ghost—if they had only been baptized.

Again Paul in addressing the church, writes:

But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man [in the church] to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues: but all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.—1 Corinthians 12: 7-11.

These gifts bestowed by the Spirit, were to find expression as the faculties of men were wrought upon directly by the Lord. God blesses both directly by his Spirit and through the word.

Some religionists would have us believe that the only way one can come in contact with God now is to read what was given through his servants ages ago. They might as well teach that the only way the world can come in contact with the Devil to-day is to read what was given through his emissaries ages ago! Who doubts that the power of the Devil will operate now, in harmony with, yet independent of any record of his past display of power? Such teaching as the above is dangerous, for it represents God as being less active and more changeable than the Devil. God has ever represented himself as being particularly accessible to his church and covenant people. The following are the words of the Son of God:

Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: for every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened. Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent? If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?—Matthew 7: 7-11.

Jesus said to his apostles:

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.—Mark 16: 15-18.

An analysis of these words reveals that the Holy Ghost in its operations was not confined within a period of a few decades after Christ made known the will of the Father. Nor were the "signs" confined to the apostles. Since the apostles are the antecedent of "ye," they can not be the antecedent of "them," for "ye" is a personal pronoun of the second person, while "them" is a personal pronoun of the third person. Is it a true course to pursue to plead for the belief, or the baptism of water, as set forth by Christ in these words, and reject the signs which he said would manifest the existence of the Holy Ghost in the church and the faith of men in God's word? Truly, no.

We may further learn of the wonderful and helpful work of the Holy Spirit:

But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together. Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which can not be uttered. And he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the mind of the Spirit, because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God.—Romans 8: 9, 11, 14, 16, 17, 26, 27.

And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.—Ephesians 4: 30.

Hearken! God works to-day in association with his ordinances, his law, and his promises, according to the faith of men: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."—Matthew 24: 35.

What the compass is to the mariner traversing the deep, the Holy Spirit is to the children of God on life's turbulent sea. The Holy Spirit oftentimes leads from the popular throng, leads one as Saul and Moses and Abraham were led, to God, Christ, and the keeping of the commandments that enables one to live a life approved of God.

The art galleries contain wonderful specimens of sculpture; cold, inanimate marble seems to pulsate with life, and in the stone various emotions are portrayed. Such being the product of chisel and mallet and the directing power of the human mind, think what beautiful statuary is possible through the operation of the Holy Spirit under the direction of God, upon living, pulsating creatures! Statuary fit for celestial environments! Faces on which sorrow has deeply stamped its lines soon reflect the glorious image of Christ. Under God's power character is transformed. One is made a "new creature"—old things have passed away.

Brother, is life's morning clouded?

Has its sunlight ceased to shine?

Is the earth in darkness shrouded?

Dost thou at thy lot repine?

Cheer up, brother, let thy vision

Look above; see light is near;

Soon will come the next transition,

Trust in God and persevere.

PAUL M. HANSON.

NOTE.—The next chapter will discuss the topic, "The laying on of hands." This is one of the principles of the gospel, yet it is little understood and seldom preached in many so-called orthodox circles.

Original Articles

THE SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS--PART 6

BY MARCUS COOK

CATHOLICS CHANGED LAW

We will look at the other side. From a list of heresies that were introduced into the church taken from "Historic Notebook," by Reverend E. C. Brewer, LL. D. (copied from A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, by Daniel Macgregor), I quote:

- A. D. 200, Prayers for the dead began.
- A. D. 251, Paul the first hermit.
- A. D. 325, Celibacy of the clergy recommended.
- A. D. 360, Adoration of saints, martyrs, and angels.
- A. D. 375, Christmas Day appointed as a religious festival.
- A. D. 390, Bells used in churches.
- A. D. 431, Mary called the mother of God.
- A. D. 487, Sprinkling of ashes in Lent (Felix III).
- A. D. 500, Priests began to wear a distinctive dress.
- A. D. 506, Stone altars enjoined.
- A. D. 525, Extreme unction introduced by Felix IV.
- A. D. 547, Lenten fast extended to forty days (Council of Orleans).—Historic Notebook, Philadelphia, 1901.

Here we have changes made that would fulfill the prophecy of Daniel 7:25 as fully as the alleged change of the Sabbath. And then as to this applying to the ten commandments, the decalogue was never given by God as a law to the Roman nation, but the law of the gospel was given to all the world, including Rome, and it was this law that the Roman Catholic Church changed. She has changed the order of church organization, claims power and authority beyond anything taught in the Scripture; has introduced images, worship of angels, and Saints; established a large number of holy and feast days, no authority for which can be found in the Old or New Testament; changed the mode of baptism, and introduced infant baptism.

Jesus said: "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." (John 18:36.)

Force was early employed by the papacy to put down heresy. Now the papacy was established 570, A. D. For proof see Marvelous Work and a Wonder, by Daniel Macgregor.

From this time on the Roman Catholic Church assumed worldly power in a manner entirely at variance with the kingdom of God and the teachings of Jesus Christ. An age of darkness followed and continued for centuries, the extent of the darkness and evil is partially shown by action taken at the council of Toulouse. Smith's Ecclesiastical History, volume 1, page 622:

An ecclesiastical council met at Toulouse to devise a more subtle and permanent machinery, for the extirpation of the heresy which was still unsubdued (Number 1229). It enacted forty-five canons for the extinction of heresy and "the establishment of peace"—in the sense of the ruling powers. The laity were now, for the first time, forbidden to possess the books of the Old or New Testament (except perchance the psalter and passages contained in books of devotion,) with a most stringent prohibition of their possession in a vernacular translation, and this was soon made a presumptive test of heresy. No heretic, or person suspected of heresy . . . was to be allowed to practice as a physician or to approach the sick or dying; and all wills were to be made in the presence of a priest. . . . Whoever was convicted of harboring a heretic forfeited the land to his lord and was reduced to personal slavery.

These were not changes of the decalogue, but were changes of the law and teaching of Christ and the apostles.

The disposition to observe times was censured by Paul in his day.

Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain.—Galatians 4:10, 11.

Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days.—Colossians 2:16.

From the above it will be seen that Paul found fault with the Galatians for doing just what the Catholic Church has since done. Also his advice to the Colossians would not allow the catholic Jews or Adventists to sit in judgment over others in these things. But the Catholic Church has assumed this power, and tries to support her attitude by her interpretation of the Scriptures, and judges all as wrong who oppose her. The Catholics quote the decalogue as a law still in force as they interpret it. So the Adventists have left the teachings of the apostles, and judging all by their interpretation of a law that was given to the Israelite nation, are condemning those who do not agree with them. Thus they are following in the footsteps of the papacy.

IS ISRAELITE SABBATH ALWAYS BINDING?

Before leaving the Old Testament, I wish to notice a text that is urged by Adventists to prove that the Sabbath of the Israelites always will be binding:

Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed.—Exodus 31:16, 17.

Here they tell us that the Sabbath was a perpetual covenant, and being perpetual would never end. But if this is true the tabernacle service and the sons of Aaron as priests would also be endless:

And thou shalt gird them with girdles, Aaron and his sons, and put the bonnets on them: and the priest's office shall be theirs for a perpetual statute: and thou shalt consecrate Aaron and his sons.—Exodus 29:9.

Now this would make it as necessary for the people to get the sons of Aaron and put girdles and bonnets on them after the old pattern and have them minister in the office of priests as of old, as it would be to apply to us Exodus 31: 16, 17, addressed exclusively to Israel, and condemn those who do not accept it.

From the same viewpoint notice the following:

And when Aaron lighteth the lamps at even, he shall burn incense upon it, a perpetual incense before the Lord throughout your generations.—Exodus 30: 8.

This is the offering of Aaron and of his sons, which they shall offer unto the Lord in the day when he is anointed; the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meat offering perpetual, half of it in the morning, and half thereof at night.—Leviticus 6: 20.

And it shall be Aaron's and his sons'; and they shall eat it in the holy place: for it is most holy unto him of the offerings of the Lord made by fire by a perpetual statute.—Leviticus 24: 9.

These texts are just as much directed to the Christian world as Exodus 31: 16, 17, because it plainly states "the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, . . . throughout their (the children of Israel) generations, . . . a sign between me and the children of Israel (not the Christians)." Now if because this is spoken of as a perpetual covenant made with that people, it includes all believers in the true God.

The burning of incense, meat offerings, and offerings made by fire would be equally binding as they were as shown above, all perpetual. Again, no law is any more binding than the prescribed punishment for its violation, and in Exodus 31: 14, 15 we are twice told that "whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath Day he shall surely be put to death." He who gave the law specified the punishment, and nowhere in the Bible has it been abrogated, and if the law applies now, so also does the punishment. The Bible is replete with statements of God's unchangeableness; and he commanded (Numbers 15: 35) that one who had worked on the Sabbath "should be put to death." The record tells us (Numbers 15: 32) that the offense for which this man suffered death was "gathering sticks." "Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the Sabbath Day." (Exodus 35: 3.)

If the Israelite Sabbath law is in force now, whosoever kindled a fire on the Sabbath Day would violate the Sabbath, and if the prescribed penalty was inflicted, would be put to death. But Adventists do not pretend to practice this part of the law.

All this goes to show as we previously proved that the decalogue with its Sabbath was given to Israel as a national law, to be observed in Palestine only.

"But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath Day." (Matthew 24: 20.) This is flaunted before us as proof that the Christians would be keeping the Sabbath after Christ, for the events predicted took place 70, A. D. But if it should be argued that it would have been a crime for them to flee on the Sabbath Day because of these words, it would be equally wrong for them to flee in the winter, because both words are used in the same sentence, and in such a manner that would make them of equal importance.

All the answer necessary is to note the fact that Jerusalem was the place where these events were to transpire; that the Jews who controlled Jerusalem were very zealous in enforcing the law including the Sabbath; that the gates of Jerusalem were closed on the Sabbath Day:

And it came to pass, that when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark before the Sabbath, I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the Sabbath: and some of my servants set I at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the Sabbath Day.—Nehemiah 13: 19.

It will be seen from the above that there would be difficulties in leaving Jerusalem on the Sabbath as well as in the winter, hence they were advised to pray that they would not have to make their flight with these difficulties to encounter. It does not say that the disciples should or would be keeping the Sabbath, but that they would be in a place where the people around them would be keeping it. One could just as well reason from the preceding verse, "And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days!" (Matthew 24: 19), that it would be a crime to raise children, and for mothers to care for them, for Christ said: Woe to such. Mary to see the sepulcher.—Matthew 28: 1.

In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other

This only proves that the Sabbath was kept up to the time of the resurrection of Christ, which has no bearing on the question.

"And he said unto them, The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." (Mark 2: 27). This contradicts the teachings of Mrs. E. G. White, where speaking of the decalogue she says (Early Writings, p. 215): "In this bold plan Satan strikes directly against the foundation of God's government in heaven and on earth."

The above follows the claim that she was shown that Satan would make the people believe, "that the law of ten commandments also died with Christ."

So the claim is that what the Bible says was made for man is the foundation of God's government in heaven as well as on earth. I shall not urge that the Sabbath was not made for man, but I do argue that the particular day of the week that in old time began at Jerusalem and was kept by Israel is not binding upon others.

DIFFICULTIES PROHIBITING SAME SABBATH

It is absolutely impossible for all to keep the same Sabbath on a round earth, and the only way it could be reasonably argued that the same Sabbath that was kept in Eden is now kept (as Adventists claim) would be first to locate where Eden was, and then count every seven days, beginning at that point and having the clocks and watches running absolutely correct, keeping informed as to the exact time the sun goes down in Eden, and at that time beginning our day, wherever we happen to be, which would involve us in several impossibilities, such as:

1. No one has ever located Eden.
2. We have no certainty that dates have been correctly kept from Eden until now.

I here give a few words from Hurlbut's Teacher Training Lessons, pages 16, 17:

The chronology of the Bible is not a matter of the divine revelation, and scholars are not agreed with respect to the dates of early scripture history. The system of chronology commonly found in reference Bibles is that of Archbishop Ussher, who lived 1580-1656, long before the modern period of investigation in Bible lands. Ussher's dates of events earlier than the captivity in Babylon, B. C. 587, are now mostly discarded by scholars. . . . It is now believed that from Adam to Christ was much longer than four thousand years.

Adventists tell us that inspiration set the right day when God gave the law to Israel, but they have absolutely no proof that it was the same day of the week that God kept at the creation, and if that were true, dates differ widely as to the time since then. But if we were to admit for argument's sake that this were true, time is not counted from Jerusalem, but from a point one hundred and sixty degrees west of Greenwich, or somewhere in the Pacific Ocean, so we in the United States and those in Europe are not now keeping the same day that was then kept, for the changing of the line half way around the earth necessarily changed the day of the week; and if one should keep the same day that Israel used to keep he would have to change back to Israel's place of reckoning time. Then according to which way he would move the line, would put his Sabbath either on Friday or Sunday.

Again, since Mrs. White has claimed that the decalogue is the foundation of God's government in heaven and on earth, which would make it necessary for them to keep our Sabbaths in heaven, think of the difficulty in Jupiter, where the days are only ten hours long, or Venus where the days are twenty-three hours long. Now if they do begin their Sabbath at the sunset on this earth, on what part of the earth do they count time from in these planets?

OTHER TEXTS

Several other scriptural texts might be used, but a careful study of them, who is speaking and who is spoken to, will show that all the Scriptures used to prove that the seventh day is binding on us to-day do not apply to anyone but the nation of Israel. Sometimes when this is urged it is asserted that all true Christians are Israel, and that they are thus under the law. If that be true, why not require circumcision, and every other law that was bound upon Israel?

They might answer that Paul says: "For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision; but faith which worketh by love." (Galatians 5: 6.) Also: "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature."—Galatians 6: 15.

Very good. Let us apply what the same writer says about the Sabbath.

And having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it. Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days: Which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ.—Colossians 2: 15-17.

This refers to the Sabbath, and no scholar outside of a few Sabbatarians will question it. Here it is listed with other ordinances which according to verse 14, Christ "took it out of the way." Hence it is no more binding than circumcision, new moons and other Jewish holy days.

Another position advocated by Adventists is:

That the decalogue was a religious as well as a civil law, therefore it could never be changed because of God's unchangeableness. The first four commandments set forth our duty to God, the six remaining ones our duty to our fellow man.

We have previously shown that the first four do not fully set forth our duty to God, nor do the remaining six fully set forth our duty to man. We shall not deny that there were religious features connected with the law, but when we consider the necessity of keeping Israel from the worship of gods of the heathen nations for purely moral reasons, as well as to preserve them a separate nation until Christ should come, we can see the wisdom of God in giving the restrictions regarding their religious duties contained in the decalogue.

The idol worship and that of the heavenly bodies prevalent among the nations at the time of the giving of the law, and throughout the history of Israel, permitted and enjoined some of the most horrible crimes, such as human sacrifice, and some of the most disgusting forms of prostitution. Hence the necessity of placing the religious restrictions contained in the decalogue upon the nation of Israel. And now that the conditions then making them necessary no longer exist, they have accomplished the purpose for which they were given, so, as the Bible teaches, have been done away.

IN CONCLUSION

We have tried in this article to show the fallacy of the claims of Adventists, and the sophistry they employ. Their scriptural references are often garbled quotations, and from them positions are assumed.

We have quoted from their own recognized standard books (with but one exception where we gave a quotation from Canright) when making a statement of their belief, and have sought to present them fairly.

We do not make an accusation of intentional dishonesty against them; we realize that under a false system one's mind becomes darkened, and it is very difficult for him to see his error. Some of them have sacrificed much for their faith, and we hope that such will be led out of the darkness and error that blinds them to the truth, into the light and freedom of the gospel of Christ.

(Concluded.)

* * * * *

FOR WHAT PURPOSE ARE WE HERE?

If I could live my life over again, knowing at the outset what I have learned by experience and study, how different the two periods would be!

How often we hear the above expression, or words to the same effect; how often we have thought it ourselves when reviewing past failures and mistakes. Such thoughts have caused the writer to wonder why it is we are placed in the world as we are, to enter upon the gravest responsibilities of life, often with little or no preparation.

I do not speak now of professional life, or of any means by which the "outer man" is provided for; I have in mind the spiritual part of our being. For instance, let us consider parenthood. When the new home is set up and in time a helpless little one is laid in the arms of the young parents, how much do they know, as a rule, about training it? In some cases, perhaps, they may have conscientiously tried to prepare themselves by much study and thought to do their duty in the best possible way (would that all could and would do this), still the fact remains that they must meet their problems as they arise, and that they learn largely through the mistakes they make—mistakes that are made even by those who have had and utilized good opportunities to learn and prepare themselves.

How many parents who have raised families—either one child or more—can look back over their past experiences and see nothing to regret? There may possibly be such, but as a rule the parent looking back sees many mistakes, and with deep regret wishes he or she had done differently. We remember many occasions where we wish we had been less hasty and more loving and patient.

And to what end is all this permitted—this work with unskilled hands and the sorrow that follows? this learning by the things we suffer?

In the beginning man dwelt with his Father in heaven, as we are informed in his word (Doctrine and Covenants 90:4, 5). Remembrance of that home we have not, nor of our condition there; and from the information we glean from the scriptures concerning it, the children of men, and even the Saints, have formed various opinions regarding it. This much, however, we may say we agree upon, viz, that it is a beautiful and desirable place; a condition of perfect happiness. Nevertheless, it seems from the meager account we have, that perfect contentment was not always found there, for at one time "there was war in heaven." (Revelation 12, also Doctrine and Covenants 28:10.) We wonder how it could be possible for anything so dreadful as war to be found in that beautiful place of light and glory! It must have been because those who dwelt there had never experienced anything of a disagreeable nature; in other words, without an experience of the bitter, they would not appreciate the sweet (Doctrine and Covenants 28:10). It is said of two of them, who were later placed in the Garden of Eden, that had they remained in the condition in which they were then found they would have had no joy, because they knew no misery; would have done no good because they knew no sin. There must be an opposite in all things (read Lehi's talk to his son Jacob in 2 Nephi 1, latter part of chapter).

Such being the case, and God having a perfect knowledge of these things, he formed the plan of redemption in the beginning, and man was placed for a period of time (long or short, according to divine knowledge of each one's needs) within the boundaries of the Adversary's dominion because "it must needs be that the Devil should tempt the children of men, or they could not be agents unto themselves, for if they never should have bitter, they could not know the sweet" (Doctrine and Covenants 28:10).

To my mind this seems like the key to the whole matter. We must suffer in some form or other. We must have the fact impressed upon our very souls that suffering is the penalty of disobedience. This part of the subject branches out in so many directions that it would take too much time and space to follow up the various lines, even if the writer were capable of doing so; but one point I do wish to discuss a little, and that is the development of faith. We are told in the word—and it is quoted from the Psalm by several scriptural writers—that "the just shall live by faith." How I love those words! and how often the remembrance of them has helped me when under trial!

Yes, we must learn to live by faith; to have implicit confidence in our divine Parent. The time was when we dwelt with him, and no doubt knew him face to face; but that privilege seems not to have deterred some of our brethren from rebellion, and as we were not able to fully appreciate the heavenly environment, we were permitted to go, as it were, to a far country (this earth), without even a remembrance of our former condition, our Father's face hidden from us, yet each with a guardian from that other home, and with adequate directions (his word) as to what course to pursue in order to reach home again. We are harrassed by many evil tendencies and weaknesses of the flesh which the word tells us we must overcome, or conquer, and we are assured that we shall receive sufficient help from the Father to do this.

But "his ways" of helping us are not as "our ways," and we can not always understand his methods of dealing with us. We sometimes imagine that "our ways" are best in our own particular case, but right here comes the reminder: "The just shall live by faith." We are here in this life to prove ourselves, whether we can abide by the Father's commands or not; whether we can be trusted to do the right thing under all circumstances. We must learn the lesson that his way can not be improved upon; that all our experiences in life, hard and bitter though some of them may be, all are as instruments in the divine plan for the perfecting of our character, or nature.

This should be easy for parents to understand, for do we not pursue something of the same course with our children? We deprive them at times of things which they consider desirable, because our experience has taught us that such are harmful. We require them to do tasks that are disagreeable to them, because we know that such things are necessary for their development. We do not always explain our object in so doing, but try to impress the thought that father and mother know best. Can we not, then, take to ourselves the lesson we endeavor to teach our children? We are trying to lead them to have faith in beings who are very faulty and liable always to make mistakes, yet how it pleases us when they show confidence in us.

Our heavenly Father asks us to place our faith and confidence in one who can not make a mistake; he fashioned our bodies, even permitting us to be fettered with weaknesses (for a wise purpose); he placed us in exactly the environment to conduce to our fullest development. Oh! can we not trust to his loving guidance; and though we must walk blindly as it were, knowing not the why and wherefore of our hard experiences, can we not put our hand in the divine one outstretched to help us, and let him lead us where he will!

The mistakes we have made in connection with the training of our children are the ones that hurt us the most keenly, consequently they are the ones which will most effectively serve their purpose in bringing us to a right attitude before the heavenly Father, if we will allow ourselves to profit by them. For we will have the opportunity, or privilege rather, of living our lives over again in one sense, but it will be in another sphere. Blessed and happy will we be then, if we shall have incorporated into our nature the truths learned by the experiences of this life, so that our Father can welcome us back home, knowing that from henceforth we can be trusted. Are we striving to prove ourselves? CLARA M. FRICK.

* * * * *

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE CROSS

If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.—Luke 9: 23.

Some years ago, as noble a Saint as I ever met, related to me a mental vision she had received, the narrative of which runs something like this:

She was sitting in her room during a summer afternoon, quietly meditating, when suddenly she saw before her mind's eye two groups of people. One group consisted of a great multitude in a wanton mood, gayly and giddily passing along a broad, well-beaten roadway, bearing a little to the left, which from all appearances led around the steep, rugged mountain that towered heavenward just before her. They seemed to be careless and apparently very merry as they pressed forward, without serious thought in their destined course.

The other group of people consisted of a much smaller number, some of whom were personally known to her. Their course was directly up this steep, rugged, stony mountain side. As she beheld them her attention was attracted to a peculiarity in their appearance. She observed that each of them had what appeared to be a cross placed on his back; these crosses varied greatly in size. But upon closer examination she discovered that some of the people did not have crosses at all, they merely had shadows of crosses. Some shadows were large, some small. Some of the people bore crosses that were very small, others bore larger crosses, and a few of them were laden with very heavy crosses. These were bowed down as it were under the heavy crosses that lay heavily upon them.

Peculiar as it may seem, she observed that some of those who simply bore shadows of crosses were murmuring and chafing under what to them seemed to be a heavy burden. Some who bore very small crosses seemed to also murmur and chafe under them. They would move forward by starts and jerks, and then they would stand still and complain. They would throw the small crosses to the ground and attempt to go forward without them. Then complainingly, they would return and take them up again, continually murmuring about the hardness of their journey.

Others whose crosses were a little larger also moved forward very unevenly, going hastily for a few steps; and then standing still, they would worry and complain and declare they would go no further. They would then express a desire to be relieved of those trying crosses. Those whose crosses were a little larger would also squirm and apparently grow discouraged.

But to the astonishment of that noble Saint those who bore crosses, so large and heavy that they were bowed down under them, moved steadily onward and upward. They did not chafe or murmur under their loads, but when others with lighter burdens complained, they placed their hands under the burdens of their fellow travelers and lifted so as to make their burdens lighter, while already bowed down under the crosses they bore.

The faces of the few quiet ones looked weary, but very serene. They seemed not to think of their own heavy crosses, but simply tried to lighten the burden of others as they pressed their way up the mountain height.

The foregoing narrative is suggestive of the true spirit of service, and in perfect accord with the moral of the text we have used. It suggests to us the fact that so long as self is in the ascendancy, uneasiness and suffering will be the inevitable result. Some who have only shadows to rest upon them are the most uneasy. Those whose burdens are lightest are often the ones who complain most. Those who make the least sacrifice are generally the ones who have the most to say about their heavy burdens. This is all due to the fact that selfhood has never been dethroned.

Jesus says, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself." If therefore, I follow only my selfish desires I am not following Christ. To go after Christ means for us to follow where he has led the way! He denied himself a place in the highest heaven that he might come to earth in the form of a servant and minister to the comforts and necessities of mankind. When the people would have gladly taken him and crowned him their king, and set him upon the throne of David, he denied himself that privilege and glory. His life was a life of self-denial and self-sacrifice. He chose rather to lose himself in the service of others than to be the world's most honored monarch. To uplift and bless those who were groaning beneath heavy loads of sin and selfishness was his fondest desire. His message was, and still is: I am among you as he that doth serve.

If then, I am to follow Christ, I must curb the desires and passions of selfhood. Bridling all my earthly appetites and fleshly desires, let me learn to meekly and gently lift and lighten the load of others by giving them such wholesome encouragement as will fit them and strengthen them to bear their own burdens in life.

It is the selfish person who is always complaining and finding fault with others. The self-centered man is always looking for slights, and consequently receiving them. Touchiness is a disease with which all self-centered people are afflicted, and there is only one remedy for them; that is to deny self and daily take up the cross upon which self is to be crucified.

Let men cease their sensitive and touchy dispositions if they would become followers of the Christ. Let that self-centered, craving disposition be subordinated to the love of altruistic service. Let men practice kindness and good will, and lo, they will dwell in a new world. If man will enjoy the blessings of heaven while he is living upon the earth, let him daily deny himself all selfish indulgence and the heaven of divine peace will surround him.

Jesus never murmured, he never complained. His life was always serene and perfectly poised. He could be approached at any time, and be found to possess the key to every mystery and trial of life. He went about daily doing good; his entire life was a perpetual benediction.

If I am following him I will cease murmuring and complaining about my crosses. I must learn how to poise my life and purify my body, that it might be a fit temple for the indwelling of the divine Spirit. I must learn in all things, under every circumstance, and wherever I may be found to go about doing good unto all mankind. It was said of Christ: A bruised reed shall he not break, and a smoking flax shall he not quench, he shall bring forth judgment unto truth. This is indicative at least of the fact that he was to be kind, considerate, loving, and gentle towards all men. He says of himself: "I am meek and lowly in heart."

If I am following him I too must be kind, gentle, patient, forgiving, meek in spirit, humble and peaceful. In place of murmuring and complaining about my burdens, crosses and trials, I should meekly extend a hand of service unto my brother. While I am speaking words of comfort and cheer to him I should also lift him up, steady his palsied hands, strengthen his feeble knees, and fire him with courage. Having strength myself, I should impart it unto him, that he might become able to bear his burdens better.

Harsh denunciations and sarcastic criticisms do not bespeak for us a condition of at-one-ment with Christ. We can only prove to the world that we are his followers when our lives resemble his life, and our characters reflect his character. No amount of verbal profession or formal observances can achieve this condition for us. It requires persistent painstaking on our part, coupled with an ever-earnest and noble resolve. We can attain true success only when the earthly man is subordinated to the will of the divine Spirit.

This condition of filial love, divine blessedness, patient endurance and perfect peace can only be reached and acquired when we have daily borne the cross in meekness until at last we reach triumphantly the crest of Calvary.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

Of General Interest

PROSPECTIVE JEWISH NATION

A worldwide movement toward establishing a Jewish nation was begun last night at a meeting in the West Side Auditorium. Judge Julian Mack was the chairman, and many prominent Chicago men were present.

Pinchus Rutenberg, of Russia, the world's foremost Jewish socialist, the man who started the Jewish revolution in Russia in 1905, which saw its climax in the memorable "Bloody Sunday," is here and was the principal spokesman.

Though Rutenberg is a terrorist of international achievements, the present agitation is not inspired by dependence on violent means. It contemplates the unification of Jewish people of all lands, no matter how divergent their theories may be, into a sweeping but conservative plan to give the Jew an identity among the world powers. . . .

Rutenberg is canvassing the globe on behalf of the plan, and wherever he has gone has found support from his coreligionists, including men of wealth and the poor, Zionists, socialists, nationalists and antinationalists. It is planned to combine all these into a movement founded on a common desire and absorbing the best thoughts of all parties. This will be done nationally, and in October a Jewish congress will meet in Washington.

There the most important work on behalf of the Jews of the world in history will be formulated.

FOR PERPETUAL GOVERNMENT

Committees will be empowered to visit the government of every nation for conference. To the heads of all countries will be made known the fact that the Jews of all lands have organized for the purpose of forming a perpetual government, which will take its place in the halls of nations, will treat with kings and republics, will represent the fourteen million Hebrews of the world, and will seek to protect and guide them.

This new government will have its headquarters in Palestine. This does not mean that it will adopt the Zionist plan to bring the Jews to a single country. Its executive work will be done there, and the highest of the committees, with financial and patriotic support of Jews of the world, will demand recognition as a distinct power, with ability to declare war if necessary, and ample funds and men to wage war if it is declared. There are now seven hundred thousand Jews on the battle fields of Europe.

ENVOYS AT CAPITALS

The Jewish nation will ask that ambassadors be accredited at every capital who will represent Jews just as the French ambassador in Washington represents the French. It will also ask a delegate at the peace congress and will seek to make treaties with governments.

Wherever Jews live, the new nation proposes to treat with the heads of governments as to legislation and conditions directly affecting Jews as Jews, such as restrictions of rights and compulsions of tribute which are levied against Jews by special injustice.

"The war has brought this movement which had for centuries been nursed in the breasts of the foremost Jews of the world," said Rutenberg. "The Jew is an important factor in the world war. He is helping various nations fight for a perpetuation of the cruel discrimination which has been his since before civilization began.

"The Jew does not seek to take advantage of a crisis in the affairs of governments. The war has only brought home to him more strikingly than ever his helplessness because of lack of organization. He helps everybody and nobody needs to consider him, nor can he enforce such consideration. He has been the balance of power in many world movements, and has never moved as a power for himself or his children's children."—Chicago Herald, August 14, 1915.

* * * * *

A TURKISH SCHISM

All of the thought of the Turkish Empire evidently is not devoted to the war, for there has developed at Constantinople a spirited religious dissension.

Mohamet enjoins upon the faithful that they shall each day listen to a reading of the Koran. For many centuries, in obedience to this command, all good Mohammedans have journeyed faithfully to the mosque, and have pressed a coin into the hands of the priest, as a reward for his reading of the Moslem scriptures.

The present trouble is due, like nearly everything else in the twentieth century, to Thomas A. Edison. Mr. Edison invented a phonograph, and some one recently discovered that records could be made in the Turkish tongue, as well as in English and the grand opera languages. So the Mohammedans are furnished with talking machines, and Koran records. Instead of wearily trudging to the mosque, they crank up, put on a disc, and lean back at ease while a beautifully modulated voice pours out the wisdom of the inspired prophet.

The priests object. They declare that words from a phonograph are purely mechanical, and do not come from a messenger of the mouthpiece of Allah, and that this mechanical separation destroys their value as a means of ascending to the Mahammedan paradise. Incidentally, if the Koran may be read at home through a phonograph, the priests will lose out on fees. This makes them all the more certain that Mohamet did not have Edison's invention in mind when he made his stipulation concerning the scriptures.

Owing to the censorship, it is not known how serious is the schism in the Mohammedan Church. But it may have an important effect upon the religious world, since the Christian Church has been split and subdivided time after time, over matters of less importance than this little dispute among the children of Allah.—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register and Leader, August 11, 1915.

---

Sunday School Department

EDITED BY GOMER R. WELLS, LAMONI, IOWA

Studying the Soil

No gardener succeeds who does not study the nature of the soil into which he casts his seeds. Neither can a Sunday-school teacher succeed, as the Master would have her succeed, without studying the soil in which she is expected to plant the "good seed." We rejoice in the restored gospel—that is the good seed. We are well equipped in that respect. We can not improve on the seed; that is perfect. But what about our work? Shall we not study the soil? And what is the soil? It is the minds of our children in the various classes, each class comparable to a little garden.

Shall we be content to merely scratch, Indian fashion, on the surface? The progressive farmer studies the nature of his ground, and the best methods of cultivating and tilling it. Is our time and our work of any less importance than his? We commend the language of Haven, who said:

"To know the mind that is to be taught; how to stimulate, how to control, how to encourage, how to restrain, how to guide and direct its every movement and impulse,—is not this the very first and chief thing to be known?"

Do our pupils show little interest? Then let us consider whether there is any interest without attention. How much are we responsible for it? Can we remedy it? To do so means work. Are you willing to work? Then find out if the same methods to gain attention succeed the same in children of all ages. In what way does it vary? Why? Start out with this rule well in mind: That without attention there is no fixedness of thought.

Do we understand the laws that govern attention? We certainly need to know—in fact, we must know them, if we succeed as teachers. That means study, but that is our work. That is studying the soil.

Now, I cheerfully admit that teachers have a great many competitors against which to strive to gain attention. But, gain it you must. Settle yourself down firmly in that conviction and you will succeed, and you will be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

You can find out many of the peculiarities of mind growth at each stage of the pupil's development. You can find out by study what are the special, individual interests at each stage of the development. And right there you will find the point of contact. Note it,—finding the pupil's special, individual interests will help you to get his attention, following which you will soon have him interested. The rest will be much easier. He will not fail to remember something. But you still have the spiritual goal before you: To inspire him unto the doing of God's will, unto the developing of a Christlike character.

FOR PARENTS TOO

There are specialists in this field of investigation whose books you would do well to study. I am sure it would be to the best interest of all parents to join in this study, for none of us know this part of the subject perfectly. Many a mother loses control of her boys at about twelve, and does not know the secret of it. Many a father fails later on for the same reason. If parents could practically cooperate with the laws of mind growth, child training would be a different proposition; the Sunday school would be greatly helped in its mission, and the redemption of Zion hastened.

"GO IN AND OUT AND FIND PASTURE"

Jesus, the teacher of all teachers, understood the laws governing teaching—how, we need not now discuss; but a study of his methods show that he proceeded according to the law governing teaching.

There is always a good reason for success. It does not come by luck or by chance. There is a law underlying it all. Let us get acquainted with as many of those laws as man has discovered. The Doctrine and Covenants bids us study all good books and obtain knowledge by study and by faith.

Such is a part of our work. Let us not be slow to appropriate to our use all that those brain and mind specialists have worked out, which we can have for a small sum of money and a half hour or more of careful reading and reflection each day or so, and much more during the long winter evenings.

Note how skillfully Paul at Athens used what people knew as a means to tell them about what they did not know. Note also his earnestness. As he waited there for the brethren to come, his soul was "stirred." His soul was thirsting for an opportunity to teach those Athenians a better way. The successful teacher must himself be interested in his work, enthusiastic, in deep earnest. If the latter-day message has seized us properly, we will be all of that.

LOVE FINDS A WAY

Let us take it for granted that we do love this work, fervently, practically (not from the lips only), and constantly. Love will find a way over all difficulties. Love even laughs at difficulties, and declares they were made to be overcome and demonstrate what stuff we're made of.

One of the difficulties most common is the holding of teachers' meetings. More superintendents lie down before this difficulty than any other one thing required by our Constitution. Whether under uniform or graded lessons, it has been everywhere the same.

May we urge that these meetings be held as often and as regularly as the circumstances of the majority will permit? If only one comes, let him or her go through the work, prayerfully. The class will know the difference the next Sunday.

We talk of the pupils' interest—what about our interest in becoming more efficient? Is it not a fact that we generally do about what we want to do? If we really are in earnest and want to succeed in our work we will find a way to accomplish it. It is a question of "want to" strong enough.

Why not hold teachers' meetings? The Savior will come some of these days. Where he may find us, and what we may be doing, should ever be prominent in our thoughts.

It is a mistake to have teachers' meetings solely to study the lesson. May we suggest that you hold the meeting the latter part of the week, with the understanding that every teacher shall have already studied the lesson, noting the points not understood, or hard to teach, or best method to teach them?

Let the meeting open with prayer, the first half hour to be devoted to the study of mind-growth (the soil), using either the books recommended by the Religio-Sunday school normal course, or some similar course, taking up a well-defined lesson each time. Following that, take another half hour in helping each other in the aforementioned hard points and suggestions as to difficulties in teaching or discipline, already encountered. Take this suggestion and adapt it to your special circumstances. We can not lay down a rule for every locality. Love finds the way and will is always there to execute it.

To begin with, I recommend the little fifteen-cent pamphlet sold at the Herald Publishing House, called, From One to Twenty-One. This is only a small introduction to the study in mind growth. Follow it with others, such as, A Study of Child Nature, by Harrison, ($1.10); Seven Laws of Teaching, by Gregory, 50 cents; The Making of a Teacher, by Brumbaugh, $1; all obtainable from Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

Perhaps your local or district library already has these books. If not they should have. We do not say every teacher must buy one of these books, unless they choose. We suggest that one or two be purchased, all sharing the expense. Study them by the lecture method, that is, select one of your number by turns to study the chapter or chapters that composes or compose your next lesson and give it to you in a lecture, with a thorough discussion following.

Thus we see the Sunday school message is a call to service. Service implies work. In this latter-day work, the Master is busily engaged in the service of mankind. His people must have their eyes upon the same objective.

Pull in Your Kite

The General Convention of 1909 adopted a "standard of excellence" for districts. These words suggest something elevated, and we fear some have unconsciously associated them with perfection. Such a thought was never even hinted at. It was clearly stated by Secretary Krahl, who was appointed by the executive committee to introduce the standard, that it was adopted to increase efficiency, "with the thought of securing better work and of knowing where the work was in need of an uplift." It was not the highest possible standard, but just a standard; not too low nor too high to reach—just a little higher than our work now is.

How far from perfection is our standard for districts the reader will quickly gather from the article that follows. It is from the secretary of the Mobile District, which recently attained the rank of first grade. Notice how she "takes stock" now. She makes the rather startling statement that a district might attain to first grade without having a single first grade school. Now pull in your kite, and have a good look at it.

After First Grade, What?

Two years after adopting the standard of excellence our district qualified on all ten points and became one of the five first grade districts in the entire world. This does not mean that it took only two years' work to reach the standard.

For nineteen years the work had been developing, but it was only two years ago that the district workers decided upon a definite aim.

We found by experience that "it is easy to aim at nothing and hit it." We also know that it is easy to aim at something and miss it. But we are glad that we aimed at something and hit it. Now that we are first grade the question naturally arises, After first grade, what?

Let us not get the mistaken idea that we have done all there is to do. That we have reached the topmost round does not mean perfection; but rather it means that we have laid a foundation and are now in a position to obey the instructions of Paul, who says, Let us go on to perfection, or as we have it in latter days, Come up higher. The Religio motto, "Onward and Upward," is also good for the Sunday school.

We are at the top of the ladder so far as the standard of excellence is concerned; but we must not die there. By hard work we have barely gained the ten points in the standard. To stay just where we are we must continue to work. To go farther we must work harder. Do you get that? We must work! There's no standing still; we either go forward or backward. Let us choose for our motto, Forward!

It is hard for some to understand how we can be a first grade district when we have no first grade schools; but it does not require first grade schools to make a first grade district; however, it does take schools that are working to a standard. The victory depends on the schools, where, of course, the responsibility rests.

To know what to do now, we must know our needs. We must examine every point to see just what is lacking. On half the points we made a hundred per cent; district fully organized; institute and convention work; reports to general secretary annually; and delegates to General Convention. But how about the other five—are they the foolish virgins? Let us examine them.

Library work in harmony with plan of Library Commission: Yes, we are in harmony so far as electing a member is concerned; but how about that member's work? Usually we have no report from him, or if we do, he hasn't done much, hasn't been in office but a year or two; doesn't know just what is required of him, and closes with a request that some one else be chosen for the office. Then if he won't work, we elect another, for we simply can't lose that point. But what doth it profit us? It has helped us reach the standard, but we find that stumblingblock, "inefficiency" in our pathway. We see it shutting out from us the good we might and ought to get from the library work, and though we are standing on the top, we are surely not workmen that need not to be ashamed.

Fifty per cent of the schools must have teacher-training classes: I wonder where ours are? We gained the point, but what has it done for us? Five graduates are all we have out of our four hundred and fifty Sunday school members in the district. Inefficiency again.

How about our home department? We have one. Are we doing anything for it? It needs help, and we must work it, if we expect any good from it. We need not look for gratifying results without work. About one half, or more than four hundred of our church membership, are reported as scattered members. This means that they are isolated and have no church privileges. If the home department has gone to them, then it is surely accomplishing what is intended for it; but has it gone to them? Let us examine the report. It's true we can not always measure results by reports, but they give facts and figures, and we see a very small percentage of our membership on the report. The fault lies not only with the district superintendent, but with the local superintendents. The sleeping giant is still sleeping. Shall we wake him by becoming more efficient workmen? or shall we be content to sit still at the top while those we might help, and have as helpers, are floundering in indifference?

The cradle roll should be the connecting link between the school and the home. Are we reaching the standard? By examination we find efficiency lacking on at least half the points. It is time we were finding out what the standard actually means, and getting out of it all the good it means to convey.

When our annual report was all completed we were proud that we had reached first grade. That was our aim. We had worked hard to get there. We hadn't had much time to look farther. But when we reached our lofty pinnacle and proclaimed to those in convention assembled that we were "first grade," we could see the signs of contentment pass over the assembly, and possibly many were the silent expressions. Those district officers have reached the goal, and can not get off their hobby. It was then that we began to look around to see what we still had to do. We looked behind the scene, as it were, and then we realized more than ever our inefficiency. The need is the same in every school.

Our work has been approved of men. We have reached the mark that was set for us by men, and so far God is pleased with our work. But we have not reached the mark he has set for us. We must continue to strive for perfection, by studying to show ourselves approved unto God, workmen that need not be ashamed.

EDNA COCHRAN.

Intensive Cultivation

Here's the story of how dauntless pluck counts in church work. Sister T. B. Jackson, superintendent of the Idaho District, not only shows persistence but also originality and initiative.

In her efforts to raise the grade of her district she met with a very serious check. The school officers would quote certain ones to this effect, that the plan adopted by the General Association was practicable only for large schools, like those at Lamoni and Independence. The standard could not be worked successfully for small schools. She says this has been dinned into the small schools until it seems a life-time job to get them to believe they can do anything. Two years ago this spell of paralysis was so bad that she nearly gave up in despair, but she held on and began to think. That was just the time to think and pray, too. At such times, concentrate and you'll get something.

She decided to work from the other end of the proposition, that is, inductively, a sort of intensive cultivation, commencing with one school and proving by a concrete illustration that it can be done—she determined to show this to the other schools.

Taking the Boise school, where she lived, she introduced the standard for schools recommended in our Gospel Quarterlies, inside back cover page (please turn and read), and set to work to bring it up to first grade, which, in due time she had the pleasure of seeing. Then she had the best kind of argument to present to her schools. On the one side was the bare assertion that it could not be done, and on the other the actual demonstration that it could be done because it had been done. But she wanted the job done well, and her experimental garden patch was now ready for a little more intensive cultivation. They agreed they were not to be satisfied with stopping at first grade. She presented the following new standard, which was readily adopted. Note that it contains fifteen points instead of ten. When folks get going, they can't be held back. Getting them started is the thing.

STILL HIGHER

1. One session each Sunday.
2. Average attendance of sixty per cent of enrollment.
3. Every teacher and officer present at least three Sundays in each month.
4. School fully graded.
5. Statistics reported to district secretary quarterly.
6. Contribution to district each quarter.
7. School represented at each convention held in the district, by delegates with credentials.
8. Library work in harmony with outline of Library Commission.
9. Cradle roll.
10. Home department, and a quarterly report from the local home department superintendent to district home department superintendent.
11. Fifty per cent of adult members of school taking normal course; including all officers and teachers.
12. Business session at least once a month.
13. Teachers' meetings each week.
14. No tardy members, and teachers in their seats with classes five minutes before school time.
15. Every church member enrolled in the Sunday school must have name on book of bishop's agent as tithepayer.

The report just received shows that the Boise school has qualified on all fifteen points. They are still first grade, but a higher first than any other school in the association. Who is ready to challenge that?

As fast as the school qualified on a point, the district secretary was notified, and sent the school a gold star to be pasted opposite that point on printed oilcloth five by five feet that hung in the school room. There was business even in that: their standard was ever before them; they couldn't forget it. We have a copy of it. Those gold stars look mighty good to us—kind o' celestial-like, you know, not yet perfect, but going strong in that direction.

HELPING THE BISHOP OUT

We just can't stop thinking of point fifteen. Regarding this, Sister Jackson says: "To reach point fifteen we used the Sunday school tithing cards as advertised in the HERALD and were able to qualify in three weeks' time. We have found them a great success. Even the little beginners clamor for a card. Two other schools of the district have added that point to the standard as printed in the Quarterlies. We have sent for enough cards to supply every school in the district.

"Sister Anderson, the district secretary, and myself visited a school last Sunday. When they said, We can't, I asked them if they were not as intelligent as other schools that could and did, and were they satisfied to have the district officers send in the report of their school with the names of their officers and tell the general officers they were the only ones in the district that could not even make up their minds to try to better their school? Before we were through they voted unanimously to adopt the motto, 'Come up higher,' and tacked the tithepaying point onto the standard of excellence as printed in the Quarterly, making eleven points."

Again we ask you first grade districts to haul in your white-winged birds and have a good look at them. Are your workers as intelligent as those of the Idaho District? What has been done can be done. What are you going to do about it?

Concerning the "Quarterlies"

The lessons for next quarter for our regular subscribers are now being mailed. Those who order by the year are not worrying, but some who order only by the quarter will forget until too late and the edition is exhausted. On account of the short-time orders we are always perplexed to known how many to print. For years the office has been trying to find a sure way of estimating the demand, but they are still at sea, because we have not a sufficient number of yearly subscribers. We are not like a baker who has five hundred steady customers, who knows how much flour to mix up. The schools could save quite a neat little bit by ordering for the year. Some never have enough money ahead. Could not some one advance it for you, and could you not make a special effort to get your treasury ahead? Try it. If you don't do something, we shall be compelled to set the date of mailing much later, and the old trouble of late deliveries will result. This is unfair to the outlying schools. The post office department requires that the bulk of the quarterlies must be mailed at the regular mailing date.

The Oriole Girls

We had a complete explanation of the Oriole Girls movement prepared for this issue, but it was crowded out. We may possibly include it in a leaflet on organized class work.

Corrections

In last issue of this department, August 4, page 750, under heading, "General aim of course of study," read developing instead of "devolving," making it read: "2. To inspire the doing of God's will, thus developing a perfect character in Christ."

In Senior Quarterly, lesson for July 18, page 11, "First Colony," second line from bottom of page, read "three millenniums" instead of "three centuries." Several have called attention to this slip of the pen. Our Senior editor says she is glad we have critical students of the lessons.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS,
LAMONI, IOWA

There are many phases to the child-saving problem, and one of the saddest is that of the boy who has not had the needed help early enough and must be sent to a reform school.

That these schools do work a reformation in some instances at least, reclaiming such boys to lives of usefulness and honor, can no longer be doubted. A clipping from a Des Moines paper saved some months ago because of the inspiration it contains, shows what generous, noble souls there are in the world, and how one boy was offered an opportunity for a new start in life after having had his training in one of these schools.

This boy had been promised parole from the State Reformatory at Anamosa on condition that he find employment within the State for a period of at least six months. A relative of the boy wrote a letter to the paper, making request for occupation or a home for him. In response, he was overwhelmed with letters, some of which he sent to the board of parole. The clipping contains a second letter to the paper.

"I am under lasting obligations to you," he writes, "for publishing my letter in last Sunday's Register and Leader in regard to a home or employment for my brother-in-law, . . . an inmate of the Iowa State Reformatory at Anamosa, whom the board of parole agreed to release if we could get some one to stand sponsor for him for six months and that he remain within the State.

"The response to the publication of my letter has been so overwhelming that I am unable to answer every letter personally. Your newspaper certainly has a broad circulation, and broader still are the hearts of the good people of Iowa.

"Some of the letters I have received would melt a heart of stone. Men and women of every walk of life, young and old, have opened their hearts and homes to this young man. What touched me most were letters from old gray-haired fathers and mothers; some who have had wayward sons of their own, wrote: "Send the boy to us; we will take him into our home and never mention the past." This is true Bible Christianity, and the kind Christ taught to the woman at the well, and the kind of sacrifice Isaiah made when he said, "Here am I, Lord; send me." Many said they had no work for the boy to do, but they had a Christian home such as a youth would need after being released from such a place and just starting out on young manhood's morning. "He doeth exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think" is in the Bible because it is true. We give it to the good people of Iowa, for again verifying this promise in our lives.

"As soon as Paul is released he will write each one who has offered assistance a personal letter. I wanted him to read the letters and answer them. It will strengthen him for the tasks that lie before him. It will encourage his heart and give him more faith in humanity. I wrote him a letter and told him about the numerous kindly offers and added that if he ever betrayed such trust he would deserve to be hung. I do not fear but that he will "make good." He has a bright mind, a strong body, the hope and enthusiasm of youth, no vicious habits, a purpose firm, and faith in God that will not falter.

"God bless you and the people who have so nobly responded."

C. B. S.

Suggestions

We have published several suggestions from brothers and sisters in regard to ways of raising means for support of the Children's Home. Here is another one from a brother who sends with it his own contribution and that of two others according to the suggestion.

"I see by the HERALD that there is a debt against the Children's Home, and a suggestion made that we try to pay off the debt. I have read of the different ways suggested to pay this debt, also that some have put their suggestion to action and have sent along their money in hundred dollar lots, which certainly is a good way and undoubtedly will relieve the home of a considerable portion of the debt. And I am glad that there are those who can, and have used that method; but there are many of the church who can not pay one hundred dollars, myself being one, that the following method appeals to me as feasible.

"It seems to me that of the seventy thousand or more of a membership in the church there ought to be at least twenty thousand heads of families who if they would accept the needs of the Children's Home equal with their own home, and would say, 'I will give the next dollar I spend to pay off the debt of the Children's Home,' you would have twenty thousand dollars in the next month. I believe the number in the church who are unable to pay one dollar are very few, if they could really see the need of keeping up this home and would make up their minds to do it."

To Adopt One Thousand Children

Mr. Charles Page of Tulsa, Oklahoma, has adopted seventy children, and intends to care for one thousand. He has built eight houses for poor widows, and will have a hundred more constructed this winter. Each house will have two rooms, with free gas for heating and cooking, free water, free electric light, and a garden plot. The children now have an eighty-acre playground, and all contrivances for amusement, a hospital, a zoological garden, a kindergarten, a graded school, and a high school. Mr. Page has laid away an endowment to perpetuate his large benevolence.—Christian Herald.

Unkissed Children

This world's a rare and joyous place
For those who deem it so,
With smiles enough for every face—
This is no tale of woe.
But yet, when all's been done and said,
Some little children creep,
At cuddling time, unkissed to bed
And sob themselves to sleep.

Their daddy's off at work, somewhere,
Their mammy's tired and worn,
Both burdened down with carking care
From the first break of morn.
Each love-starved young one on the list
Has troubles by the heap,
Yet each must go to bed unkissed
And sob himself to sleep.

Oh, world of sunshine mixed with storm,
Oh, world of tears and joy,
Oh, world of frozen hearts and warm,
Oh, world of man and boy.
Less were your sorrow, less your dread,
If, when night's shadows creep,
Each little lad went kissed to bed
And smiled himself to sleep.

—Exchange.

Letter Department

Of Passing Moment

NUMBER 5

Last week I told you of my first impression upon visiting Mount Zion Sunday School at Independence. I had only a glimpse of that organization on that occasion, but I promised to visit it again, so I will complete my reflections later.

The Sunday school session closed, and then the Saints began to meet for worship; the church was soon filled again, and I had a very good view of the whole congregation, being invited to assist Brother G. E. Harrington, the pastor of the Independence Branch. It was a very fine assembly, too, the church being well filled. I am informed that the church will seat twelve hundred or more.

Brother Ralph Smith presided at the grand organ, which gave forth strains of most heavenly music, which bespeaks the fervor of soul possessed by our brother organist, whose reputation can not be disputed, and whose work at the organ adds much to the success of the service and worship of God. The choir, too, sang sweetly under the leadership of Sister Audentia Anderson. This sister is a born leader, and it is a real treat to watch her every movement. I must thank one and all of the choir for the pleasures enjoyed. I think of it all many times, especially in the congregations of the Saints.

At eleven o'clock, the morning service opened with the pastor in charge; the hymn was sung, and the writer offered the prayer. The choir then rendered an anthem, after which Apostle G. T. Griffiths, the president of the Quorum of Twelve, occupied the hour, recounting many of the experiences of a long ministerial life in the service of the church, full of interest. The testimony thus borne by the brother seemed to supply just the need of the hour.

I felt blessed. I have known our Brother Griffiths now for over twenty-three years, and I well remember his first sermon preached in the British Isles. It was in August, 1892, at the mission conference, and at the morning service. His text was, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" The lesson of the morning was taken from John 15. I shall ever remember that sermon. I thought that if ever there was an especial witness of the power of the gospel it was the preacher of that hour. And I confess that I believe that the seal of the ministry of the Twelve to this mission began with that sermon. Oh, if we had only been faithful to our trust from that hour! what a mighty work would have been accomplished. Understanding would have taken the place of misunderstanding, and many good, faithful souls would have enjoyed the rest, the joy, and the peace of the Holy Ghost.

These thoughts passed through my mind as I listened to our brother recounting his experiences. Experience is the greatest of all teachers, that is, if we will be taught and let the history of the past be our guide for future action.

In the afternoon I attended the prayer service. Many good testimonies and prayers were heard from the Saints from all parts of the world. The knowledge of the truth was common to all, while the joy of the soul was expressed in the hymns of praise that were sung with fervor of spirit only known to the Saints of God.

In the evening my host and I journeyed to Kansas City, where we attended the service at the First Kansas City Church, where I again met Brother Joseph Tanner, the pastor of this church, and also our Brother Daniel Macgregor, who was announced as the preacher for that evening.

Brother J. W. Rushton being invited to preside, and the writer to assist, Brother Macgregor observed in his opening remarks, that it looked very much like a British administration that evening, for we had two Englishmen and a Scotchman allied together. The union was effective, and a very successful meeting resulted. Brother Macgregor gave us a very powerful sermon on the subject of "The laying on of hands." Not only in the spiritual sense is there virtue in the laying on of hands, but in the most common things of life if we wish to succeed we must lay our hands to the task with all our might.

But how little thought we give to the subject. Our hands are truly means of blessing. Why then not bless? Every little thing that we do we should perform with the thought of blessing, and on no account should we do anything that will prove otherwise. Oh, may we always try to be found doing what our hands find to do for the blessing of our race, whether they be of the household of faith or not; then we shall have joy in all our labors, and the fruit thereof will be pleasant and of the finest possible quality.

On Monday morning, I betook me to the garden for a little exercise, destroying the weeds, and planting the seeds, thus bringing about the desired change, "converting the soul of things" in the garden, just as we hope to convert the soul of man by uprooting the weeds (bad habits) and planting the seeds (good deeds) which will beautify the character and sweeten the soul of every living man and woman; just as we convert the garden from its weedy condition by the raising of flowers and fruit, for the flowers purify the thoughts and sweeten the mind and make all feel joyous and happy; while the fruit will bring contentment and pleasure, and sustain life: and also promote health by the cleansing of the blood (which is the life of the flesh,) thus assisting man to overcome his carnal and sensual nature, and to develop the spiritual, intellectual and divine nature within him.

The afternoon was spent in visiting the Saints. On this particular day I was the guest of Brother and Sister Joseph Arber, late of the British Isles Mission, now of Independence. I enjoyed my brief visit with them. Many were the inquiries made by Brother Joseph of the old-time friends in England, and also of the conditions of the work in that land. I must express my pleasure in making the acquaintance of the family of our brother, and also of the success that he has met with in the land of his adoption.

In the evening I was the guest of the famous "Jots Man." I must not begin to tell of the guests, because I could not remember one half of the names of those present. But I will say that Ye Jots Man was all there, very much there. When I was taking my leave, I stated that I was pleased to be present, and wished him many, many, happy returns of the day; but I hoped that if he should live for another seventy odd years there would be a change in him. He quite enjoyed the idea, and after a most pleasant evening we said good-by. I take very much pleasure in wishing the old warrior a most successful mission, in company with my late genial host in the west. Let us have a few jots by the wayside. It will be pleasant and reviving, and a change from the war news.

The afternoon of Tuesday was spent with Brother and Sister Barrett. Sister Barrett is an old-time English Saint. I was pleased to find them happy and contented. Though the brother was very ill, he was very cheerful. I had quite a long chat with them. My host and hostess were entertaining the Quorum of Twelve, so I had orders to return in good time. Having been taught always to be obedient, I was found in my place at the hour appointed, to make up the lucky number thirteen at the table.

I had the pleasure of dining with Brother and Sister T. J. Sheldon. I met Brother Sheldon in England. In fact he and I were ordained at the Mission Conference of 1902, to the office of seventy, when Brother Joseph Smith and Bishop R. C. Evans, then of the Presidency, were visiting the British Isles. I enjoyed my short stay with them. I received the well-known, "good-by, come again," but I was unfortunate in not finding the time to pay these good people a second visit.

After supper the next evening my host and I found our way to the Stone Church, where the choir rendered the cantata, "From Olivet to Calvary," which was sung very nicely indeed. There are some very fine passages in this cantata. The music is splendid. The organist and soloist, together with the chorus, did some fine work, which seemed to be enjoyed by all present.

Friday evening, March 26, I attended a social or meeting of welcome arranged by Sister Joseph Smith and family in my honor at the home of Sister Audentia Anderson, where a great number of the Saints of Independence and Kansas City gathered to bid me "Welcome to America," as the representative of the British Isles Mission. I was received by Brother I. A. Smith, the second son of our late President Joseph Smith, who delivered an address of welcome, to which I replied suitably, acknowledging the kindness and assuring them of our kindly relationship as Saints. The privilege was then accorded to all present to have two minutes' conversation with me in turn, so you may guess that I had quite a time before I got through.

I felt quite at home, and the sincere welcome thus extended gave me much encouragement. Throughout my stay both before and after the conference the same kindness was shown me by one and all, both rich and poor alike. And I can assure you that the warmth of that welcome will live in my memory for a long time, and when I return I shall have many friends to visit and rejoice with over again.

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

LANSFORD, NORTH DAKOTA, August 4, 1915.

Editors Herald: It is with a feeling of pleasure that I undertake this letter to your valuable pages. I have been a member of the church near a quarter of a century, and a reader of your pages the most of that time, yet I do not remember of ever contributing to your columns, much as I have appreciated them.

The work in this field has made considerable advancement since my first acquaintance with it twelve years ago, at the first reunion held in the State—Bottineau. I think a reunion has been held annually since that time. Our reunion this year was a very profitable one, the preaching of a high order and along practical lines. The social services were good, the Lord speaking through his servants to the Saints in encouragement and admonition.

Those present of General Conference appointment were: James A. Gillen, J. W. Wight, Gomer R. Wells outside of district, and of the district: William Sparling, J. E. Wildermuth, Thomas Leitch, Lester Bronson and J. C. Page of Eastern Montana District. All these men rendered valuable and efficient service along their respective lines. It was unanimously voted to hold a reunion at Logan again next year. We understand nearly one hundred dollars was left over in the hands of the reunion committee for next year.

We can not close this letter without noting the passing of Elder F. C. Keck, who was the first representative of the gospel restored that we ever heard. When these noble men fall in the front ranks, where are the younger men to take up the armor? May the good Lord give strength and succor to the bereaved family.

WARREN MCELWAIN.

Extracts from Letters

J. L. Rust, Gladstone, Illinois: "The Lord admonishes us to stand in holy places, in the holy covenant of the Lord's doctrine. There is no name given among men whereby we may be saved, other than the name of Christ."

W. H. Greenwood, Morecambe, England: "I called a mass meeting of Sunday school workers together at the late mission conference, and succeeded in organizing a mission association of Sunday school workers, so that we hope to report to the next Sunday school convention with a view of becoming a branch of the General Association. I feel sure that you will be glad to hear this good news. I never was so busy in my life. I want to see the work grow. . . . I am pleased to say that we had a splendid conference at our annual gathering; much good was done and a better understanding had."

A party writing from Fayette City, Pennsylvania, says: "The work is growing here, and many have been added to the fold in the last six months, for which we are thankful. We desire to see the good work grow. We know it is true."

Under date of July 20, Brother C. Ed. Miller writes from Glen Forbes, Victoria, Australia: "I expect to stay here until the Sydney conference at Christmas, as Brother Butterworth has asked me to do so. I wanted to be home this Christmas, but will stick it out, and shall have put in nearly three conference years in this mission, so I think I have done my duty. Have been unusually blessed, not in baptisms, but in doing high priest work, so I feel encouraged."

Elder J. Charles May writes from Lamar, Colorado, as follows: "New openings for the presentation of the truth are opening all about me here, and I feel that great good is to be done in this locality. I have already baptized ten, and the prospects are favorable that a branch will soon be organized here, as there are about fifty or sixty Saints in a scattered condition in this neighborhood."

George H. Graves writes from Detroit, Michigan, under date of August 28: "I am very busy this year; plenty of new openings, but find the people are very slow to receive the doctrine of Christ."

News from Missions

Spokane District

It is with much satisfaction that we read the splendid editorials, articles, sermons, letters, etc., appearing in the HERALD, which we welcome each week, and wonder how we could get along without it. When in our missionary travels we find a Latter Day Saint home trying to get along without the HERALD, we aim to convert that home to taking it.

I believe this is one of the very choicest districts in the church. We have found it very pleasant to labor in. So far as we have been able to find, peace prevails throughout the entire district. There is not a ruffle that I have been able to see in the time I have labored with you. For this we are very thankful, and pray that we together may so labor on in peace and unity that God will continue to bless our efforts and crown them with success.

We were pleased last spring when our missionary in charge told us that we carried the banner for the year of 1914 in the Rocky Mountain Mission, and were still more pleased when in a letter from him a few days ago he told me that this year was ahead of last year. Come on, Saints, we will hold the banner high! We have worked together, we are working together, and we will work together! Where there is union there is strength! When God's people work together in harmony with his instructions things will move!

I have not been able to labor in as many places this summer as I had hoped to do, and I hope that the Saints who have been so anxious for my services and have not been reached will be patient, as there is much to do and few to do it. Our hopes were raised at conference this spring when we learned that we were to have another missionary in our district, but we were soon disappointed in learning that conditions were such at home that he could not be with us.

After conference at Spokane in June, I went to the "Big Bend" country with Brother and Sister L. E. Holmes of Mansfield, in their auto, a trip of something like one hundred and fifty miles. I said Sister Holmes, for we had the honor of baptizing her at the conference. I was taken to my home, Van Eaton's, on the way out, where I was received with welcome. "Mother" looked just as dear as ever, God bless her dear soul! It was good to be there again, even if the "kids" did dress up the bust of Robert Burns and put it in my bed, which might have scared me to death. We met with many of the Saints there, and were pleased to find the branch in first-class condition. Anna Jo and Tod took me to the home of Brother Holmes at Mansfield.

From Mansfield I hurried to Okanogan, Brother Holmes taking me better than half way in his auto. While at Okanogan I stayed at our new Latter Day Saint home there, the McDonalds. I baptized them last year, and am glad to say they are proving the gospel to be "the power of God unto salvation." We held two weeks of meetings there, with fair interest. While there we ordained Brother Dana McDole to the office of elder, and were made to know that Brother Charles McDonald would be called to the priesthood. I did not organize the branch there as conference provided for, but if wisdom directs, it will be organized at a later date. We are not sure but that some of the Saints will move away from there this summer, and if they do it would not be wise to organize at present. The debate we had at Okanogan last winter has helped the work there in strengthening the Saints and hushing the so-called "Church of God" people; we did not hear a murmur from them while there this time.

While at Okanogan word came to me to hurry back to Valley, Idaho, as soon as possible. I went there and labored with our worthy Saints, and last Sunday our efforts were crowned with success. I baptized fourteen fine people. When I left home this spring (Andes, Montana), Brother Sam Andes spoke to me under the Spirit and told me to hurry to this place, that the people would receive me with open arms, as they were ready to hear the gospel. I went as directed and the Lord opened the hearts of the people.

One family in particular I wish to call attention to, by the name of Crabb. A year ago the parents in this family would not attend our meetings, and tried to persuade their boys not to believe us. They were Hard-shell Baptists, and wanted their boys to be; in fact soon after wife and I left there one of the boys, knowing that he ought to be baptized, went and was baptized into the Baptist Church, in accordance with his parents' wishes, but not his own, for he wanted to be a Latter Day Saint. He was only twenty years old. As the Lord had said, the people were ready to hear; and that family all came out to hear, and the best of it is I baptized the father and mother and six of the children, and blessed the other two children. I believe I never saw a family rejoice so in the gospel. The boy Charles, who joined the Baptist Church last winter wept for joy that he could now unite with the true church, and have his father and mother and sister and brothers with him. Brother Omans, our district president, was mouthpiece at his confirmation, and was led to admonish him to prepare for the priesthood. Look for Mrs. Crabb's testimony in the Ensign.

Since the June conference I was called down to Palouse, Washington, and while there baptized ten fine people, making in all twenty-seven since conference.

While at Palouse I was made glad in receiving as a gift from Brother John Turnbow's threshing crew a new suit, shoes, hat, shirt and plenty of money. I held a short debate there last winter. The man I debated with only lasted two nights. The last night after he had talked about half an hour, he turned to the chairman and asked him how long he had yet to talk, and when told that he had fifteen minutes he said: "My, I have been talking faster than I intended to." We are to try it again this fall. He says that he thinks he can last a week this time. I also have a debate with a Hard-shell Baptist this fall at Leahy.

I have not labored much in the Spokane Branch this summer, as there is much to do outside, and they have good help there in Brother Gray and the local men. Brother Gray is loved by all, and has done a splendid work in Spokane; those who know say the work is in better shape there than it has ever been before. He has done much good out in the field also. We are glad that he feels welcome to push out in the field.

At one point this summer Brother Gray opened up a new place, and before he left it he baptized six; more will follow there.

I have not been at Sagle Branch this summer either, and have felt satisfied that I was not particularly needed, as we have good local help there. Brother Summers is surely coming to the top.

Brother Omans told me last Sunday that he would soon start out to make a tour of the district. May God bless his work. I wish to heartily recommend him to all the Saints in the district who have not met him, and to those who have met him he needs no recommendation.

To the Saints of the district I would like to say that I will be pleased to hear from any of you and I will fill as many places this fall and winter as I possibly can. I am now on the train bound for home in eastern Montana, but will soon be back in the field, and will have our other missionary "Bill," and babe with me. My field address is South 238 Haven Street, Spokane, Washington, home address Andes, Montana. May God bless his work, is my prayer. I want to be

Your servant,
J. A. BRONSON.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes

CENTRAL TEXAS.—Hearne, July 24 and 25. Reports: Texas Central, Cooke's Point, Philadelphia. B. F. Spicer was inducted as bishop's agent. Election: N. L. Starks, president; C. M. Mitchell, secretary-treasurer; Lizzie Mitchell chorister and organist; Sheldon Armstrong, member library board. Preaching by E. L. Henson, John Harp, N. L. Starks. Conference was followed by a reunion, the prayer and testimony meetings being a special feature. Five were baptized. C. M. Mitchell, secretary.

YOUNGSTOWN-SHARON.—Organized August 21, 1915, by G. T. Griffiths, in Kirtland Temple, Kirtland, Ohio. Martin Ahlstrom, 90 North Oakland Ave., Sharon, Pennsylvania, elected president. Sister P. L. Glassford, 444 West Delason Avenue, Youngstown, Ohio, secretary-treasurer. Branches were requested by motion to contribute one collection each quarter for district expenses. Bishop E. L. Kelley recommended Martin Ahlstrom for bishop's agent, selection approved. Following branches comprised district: Youngstown and Warren, Ohio, and Sharon, New Hamburg, and Conneautville, Pennsylvania. Adjourned to meet at Youngstown in conjunction with Kirtland District, August 9 and 10. Mrs. P. L. Glassford, secretary.

The Bishopric

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of the Portland, Oregon, District; Greeting: Having accepted the appointment as bishop's agent of this district, I take this means of stating our needs. We require about ninety dollars a month to pay the family allowances, and would like to have a balance on hand to help the missionaries, as occasion demands.

All the men whose families receive the small allowance they do are worthy men, and are giving their time and talents to the Master's cause.

By each Saint helping with what his temporal means allow, no matter how small the amount, if they are doing all they can, we are cooperating with the Master and each other for the advancing of the cause we say we love. We are very much in need of funds at the present time, to the amount of one hundred and fifty dollars, to pay the allowances to date. If you want to be good, loyal workers, come to our aid, and "do it now." To make it more convenient for the Saints in the following branches, we have asked Brethren N. E. Austin, of Condon, Oregon, R. E. Chapman, of Hood River, Oregon, George W. Stover, of Vancouver, Washington, to collect for us.

As we ask the Lord to prosper the work, and give his servants success, let us remember that we can assist with our means. We would like to see each Saint a payer of tithing or offering this year. Let us get in the habit of paying something each month, so there may be a regular income, and we will assure you it will be used to the best advantage.

Address me at Eighty-sixth Street North, Portland, Oregon. Hoping the Lord will prosper and bless all his people, I remain,
Your coworker,

P. G. HAGER.

August 26, 1915.

Conference Notices

Pottawattamie, Underwood, Iowa, 10.30 a. m. Send all documents to undersigned on or before the 20th. J. Charles Jensen, secretary.

Eastern Maine with Corea Branch, October 2 and 3. This is a new branch. Let there be a good attendance. Send reports to Newman Wilson, Jonesport, Maine. F. J. Ebeling, president.

Convention Notices

Gallands Grove, Sunday school and Religio, Gallands Grove, Iowa, September 24, 2.30 p. m. Trains met Friday and Saturday a. m. at Dunlap and Dow City. Floy Holcomb, secretary.

Two-Day Meetings

Belding, Michigan, September 25 and 26. Dedication of Belding church. Competent ministers in charge. G. A. Smith, president; W. P. Buckley, secretary.

Died

JENKINS.—George T. Jenkins, born November 4, 1857, Saint Johns, New Brunswick; died August 28, 1915, Jonesport, Maine. Baptized by U. W. Greene, December 2, 1908. Deceased leaves a saintly wife and daughter. Services at the residence by J. C. Foss.

RUSSELL.—Isabelle O., wife of Isaac Russell, mother of George O., Thomas A., William H. Russell, and Mrs. T. P. S. Brown, a native of Scotland; died August 15, San Francisco, aged 80 years 11 months. She was a faithful Saint. Funeral in charge of C. A. Parkin.

Book Reviews

THE CONQUERING JEW.—John Foster Fraser. Funk & Wagnalls Company, London and New York. $1.50. This work is devoted to a review of the manifestations of Jewish genius in history, recounting that which the Jew has accomplished, and a further consideration of the Jew in America, his occupations, etc., the Jew in Great Britain, in Germany, Austria, Russia, France, Southern Europe, and the far East. A very comprehensive review of the present world status of the Jew.

The author states that the work undertaken is the result of his travels in many lands. His purpose was to study the economic development of different countries. Wherever he was when he found the Jew as a principal factor, whether in European financial centers, on Broadway, in Russia, in Argentina, or in Africa, the Jew was always prominent. He found the general sentiment that "the Jew is getting hold of everything." Led to make a closer inquiry into the situation, he soon discovered a field of startling facts into which he made further study, resulting in the publication of this book. In their announcement the publishers say: "A nation without a country: resident in every country on the globe, taking a prominently active part in its economic and social life, using its language, even adopting its nationality, yet remaining withal a separate and distinct nation. English, French, German, Russian, American—yes, but always and finally a Jew. Surely one of the marvels of the world's history! Why is it, how is it, that this should be the case? Mr. Foster Fraser has studied the position of the Jew in every quarter of the globe; he, too, has pondered on the vitality of this curious nation, on its adaptability to the variant circumstances, on its ability, its virility, and in this book he records the results of his observations, and the deductions suggested by them concerning the all-conquering Jew. There are facts contained in its pages which will probably startle the general reader, and which must arouse interest and admiration of all for the marvelously recuperative powers of this cosmopolitan 'nation.' What is the future position of Judaism in world politics? Will there ever be a homogeneous Jewish nation? Will it ever possess a country where its national aspirations can be exercised or find satisfaction?"

GOD AND WAR.—Daniel Roy Freeman. Richard G. Badger, Boston and Toronto. 75 cents. An exposition of the principles underlying creative peace. The object of the book is to show the economic futility of war, its religious absurdity, ethical and cultural insanity. Its contention is that war is outgrown and obsolete. The author relates in his preface that at the very moment in the summer of 1914 when the Imperial German Ambassador was handing to the Russian minister of foreign affairs in Saint Petersburg the declaration of war, he (the author) was standing on the rocky coast of Maine looking out over the shining waters of Linekin Bay. Filled with admiration at the beauty of sea and sky, the coloring of the ocean and the wooded hills, he felt to repeat the lines of Browning,

"God's in his heaven,
All's right with the world."

The next day he learned that Europe was in the seething caldron of war. Thereafter for a long time he gave his consideration to the problem of God and war, resulting in the publication of this book. Preliminary chapters are devoted to "The paradox of modern warfare," "Warfare and personal ethics," "Tolstoy," "Overtones of war," ending with a chapter which gives direct consideration to the relationship of God and war.

Autumn Leaves

Subscription

$1.00 per year

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver, Assistant Editor.
Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

The Angel Message Tracts	- - - - -	857
Current Events	- - - - -	859
Notes and Comments	- - - - -	860
HYMNS AND POEMS	- - - - -	860

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

Seventh-day Adventists, by Marcus Cook	- - - - -	863
For What Purpose Are We Here, by Clara M. Frick	- - - - -	866
Significance of the Cross	- - - - -	867

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

Prospective Jewish Nation	- - - - -	869
A Turkish Schism	- - - - -	869

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT

Edna Cochran.	- - - - -	870
---------------	-----------	-----

CHILDREN'S HOME

- - - - -	- - - - -	873
-----------	-----------	-----

LETTER DEPARTMENT

W. H. Greenwood—Warren McElwain—Extracts from Letters.	- - - - -	874
--	-----------	-----

NEWS FROM MISSIONS

- - - - -	- - - - -	876
-----------	-----------	-----

J. A. Bronson—L. Houghton—Henry Sparling.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

- - - - -	- - - - -	877
-----------	-----------	-----

SERVICE

The word service is the watchword of the twentieth century.

The human family is awakening to the fact that they are indeed a family, and such relationship demands service to and for each other.

We desire to be of some service to you in a line in which we are peculiarly fitted—hence our new department.

It's this way:

There is a right and a wrong way of doing things—an effective and an ineffective way. We want to help you do your advertising or announcing in the right way, without cost to you. It is entirely free to our people.

The proposition is to get the most out of what you pay for printing. We want to show you how.

We have recently seen samples of advertising used by some people that were certainly unattractive, and could not command respectful attention. It often happens that your facilities for getting what you want are not good. The place you have your printing done may not be equipped for doing the kind of work you want unless you are able to specify exactly what you want and how it shall be done, and then they may not be able to handle it.

This Is Our Proposition

If you intend to do any advertising in your missionary or branch work, no matter what kind, just send us your copy, and without cost to you, we will promptly advise you, by personal letter, with careful suggestions as to the best way to get the results you want.

If you intend to advertise in any way to increase your business, send us a copy of the wording you want to use, or give us the idea as clearly and definitely as possible, and we will word it for you in convincing style.

It doesn't matter whether you have your printing done at the Herald Publishing House or not. We will give you the same careful attention whether you do or not. However, if you wish to have us give you the advantage of our extensive equipment and facilities, we will promptly quote you lowest prices delivered to your post office.

We are prepared to do this because we have on our force a brainy young fellow who has a complete course in advertising to his credit and is experienced in this work. He feels the true spirit of a Latter Day Saint and is willing to be at your service. Complicated work will receive the combined attention of the departments concerned.

ADDRESS

Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa
Ad Service Department

*****
A New Book
THE INTERPRETER

By Gomer T. Griffiths

A Revision of the "Exegesis"

containing more charts and information than the former book, also an illustrated chapter on offenses—law governing the same—procedure in church courts, and blank forms suitable to the same. The various quotations from the books have been carefully compiled and arranged, so that the instructions pertaining to each office are classified, to assist the reader in locating the duties of each minister from the president of the church to the deacon, also points out how the different officers are called and the manner of their ordination, thereby securing courtesy to whom courtesy is due.

Price .....50c

Have you heard of the old Spalding story from which the Book of Mormon was said to have been taken? Well, here is the Spalding story. Better get it and know for yourself. Only .....25c
 Order 139.

Failures of Campbellism

A new tract by Elder E. E. Long. Reprinted from a series of twelve articles in HERALD of 1913. Logically presented and systematically arranged. Quotations verified. 139 pages. Order 217 .....20c

Objections to the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants Answered and Refuted

You can't take the time, neither have you the data at hand to be able to refute many of the so-called arguments against these two books. Brother J. R. Lambert has placed in book form facts and data to refute these so-called arguments. A handy book to have in your library. Order 143 .....40c

FOR SALE CHEAP

Latest model Hammond Typewriter, "the Multiplex," in strong sole-leather case. Weight 25 pounds. Three sets of type, two of them in machine at one time. Type shuttles for every known language can be bought. "Just turn the knob" and change instantly from one type or language to another.

Does beautiful work. Thoroughly dependable and high grade machine, in perfect condition; will last a lifetime. Universal keyboard. Back spacer, etc.

Inquire of G. R. Wells, Lamoni, Iowa. 35-3t

What Is Man

Is a book that should receive the careful study of every Saint. It clears away the fog of doubt with reference to the eternal verities of the future state of man. No better book on the subject of immortality. Order 140 .....50c

THE STORY OF THE BIBLE

Contains 168 stories, each story complete in itself and together forming a narrative of the Holy Scriptures. Profusely illustrated with color plates and halftones. Just what you need to put in the hands of your children. Book contains 752 pages.

Order Story of the Bible, cloth ..$1.50

COLORED POST CARDS

Graceland College, Saints' Home, Liberty Home, Independence church, Herald Publishing House, Lamoni church.

1 of each for 15 cents.
 2 of each for 25 cents.
 Order by number 172.

THE GOSPEL MESSENGER

Revised and Enlarged

A new edition of this book is just off the press, containing sermons and articles of the well-known and successful missionary, Elder J. S. Roth. The worth and popularity of this book has been attested by its long and steady sale. The price remains the same.

Order 248a .....75c

The Old Atlantic's Waiting!

The salt-tang breezes of the Atlantic—the cool winds of the Nor'east country are reaching out for you—calling you to forget your worries and rebuild your health—this summer at one of the cool, delightful Eastern Resorts. Atlantic City is more inviting than ever. The Thousand Islands hold ten thousand joys. And then there is Georgian Bay, Lake George, Niagara and the New England resorts—no end of summer pleasures at New York, Boston, Montreal and Quebec.

Go via the Burlington

—and you're right from the start. Excursion tickets are now on sale. Investigate!

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

Get your Burlington Route poster stamps to-day.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, SEPTEMBER 15, 1915

NUMBER 37

Editorial

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

CHAPTER 6

THE LAYING ON OF HANDS

For many years Christianity has been heralded to the world as being of God. We believe this representation of the work of Christ to be altogether correct. Christ is the Savior of the world. Through him there was not reflected one ordinance, one commandment, one promise, that did not have to do with the welfare and salvation of men. Faith in Christ leads to an acceptance of all of those principles which in their entirety constitute Christianity.

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." (Mark 16: 16.) Believeth what? Roman Catholicism, Greek Catholicism, "Mormonism," all the doctrines of Protestantism, or what? We answer: the teachings of Jesus Christ and his authorized ministry—the gospel as it was taught by them in its entirety.

The gospel must be given representation before it can be believed; it can not be believed until it finds expression through the same teachings, ordinances, commandments, and promises given by Christ. A true belief of the gospel can follow only a correct and full representation of the gospel to the mind. Where only a fragmentary part of the work of Christ is represented the belief is not complete in the great work of Christ our Lord. All of Christianity is essential to salvation,—there are no nonessential doctrines or ordinances in the church of Jesus Christ.

A PERPETUAL ORDINANCE

James wrote:

Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed.—James 1: 25.

That which is "perfect" is capable of unfoldment, but not of improvement. The gospel of Christ, which is made up of parts, is termed the "perfect law of liberty." Without the parts there can not be the whole. To add to or take from what is perfect will render it imperfect. Now the laying on of hands was established as an ordinance of the Lord's appointment; it is a part of his doctrine:

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.—Hebrews 6: 1, 2.

It is here placed in the midst of the cardinal principles of the gospel of Christ: faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment; and is specifically referred to as a "principle" of the "doctrine of Christ."

Christ commanded his apostles:

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28: 18-20.

The church soon after this instruction was given, both taught and practiced, observed, the laying on of hands. During the whole period of such teaching and practice the church was not under the guidance of uninspired men, not in apostasy, but was enjoying the favor of God in marvelous blessings from heaven. It is, therefore, conclusive that such observance was commanded by the Lord. In the midst of such practice by the church the apostle wrote:

There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all.—Ephesians 4: 4-6.

FAILURE IN RESULTS

The present age of Christendom in no sense equals in its spiritual results those of the apostolic age. Noticeable among the defects of the present age are uninspired men, lack of unity of religious belief, multitudinous religious organizations, healing by the power of God denied, infants baptized, empty churches, those converted having to be rewarmed, etc.

Every effect has an adequate cause; may the cause of the present religious unrest and spiritual darkness not be a repudiation of one or more of the forces ordained of God to bring spiritual sunshine in the lives of men? Therein lies the reason.

SCIENTIFIC ACHIEVEMENTS

With wonderment we have looked upon the advancement and achievements of the scientific world—men of science have endeavored to utilize every law which in its operation has been found beneficial to man. They have endeavored not only to maintain and perpetuate the scientific accomplishments of the past, but to make greater use of the forces which in any age were found to add to human welfare. The invisible power of electricity is not only used to-day, but an attempt is made to widen the sphere of its operations; no one would say that the last word has been said concerning the development and use of this wonderful and invisible power.

Scientists do not merely hark back to past days of achievement and live therein, but gather up the forces of the past that have benefited man and use them to-day.

Many religious people are satisfied to think there were divine forces in operation nineteen hundred years ago by which the world was blessed, and which surrounded the church with a halo of glory,—but those forces belong to the past! Hearken! Is God a God only of the past? or of the past, present, and future? He has declared he is the great I AM. He said through Malachi: "I change not."

Suppose men of science to-day would simply look to the splendid achievements of the past, and be content with a mere historical recital of scientific advancement, and deny the possibility of a like progress reaching this age.

Do not many religious people rejoice in a mere historical recital of the power of Christ manifested nineteen hundred years ago, and deny an equal manifestation of the power of Christ to-day?

May not the course pursued by scientists in clinging to what has been demonstrated to possess scientific value explain the cause of the decline and lack of spiritual results in Christendom to-day?

Would it be a source of gratification to think of the scientific world to-day not equaling in its results the scientific achievements of the past?

Is it inspiring to think of the religious world to-day not equalling in its blessings and manifestations of power the church of Jesus Christ in the first century?

Persons do not care to attend church where there is not an administration of the means ordained of God to satisfy their spiritual nature—just as persons are restless under a form of government that does not provide a medium for the exercise of their inalienable political rights.

It will be found that the laying on of hands held a high and important position in the divine economy under Christ, under whose rule and the administration of whose ordinances there were wrought the marvelous achievements chronicled in the New Testament. The precious promises of the gospel of Christ can be realized to-day by an observance of the laws and an acceptance of the means ordained of God through Jesus Christ—through which the power of God finds expression.

The laying on of hands was practiced for many purposes:

FOR ORDINATION

Very clearly is it outlined in the Scriptures that imposition of hands was practiced in ordaining to the ministry:

As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away.—Acts 13: 2, 3.

And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas a proselyte of Antioch: whom they set before the apostles: and when they had prayed, they laid their hands on them.—Acts 6: 5, 6.

Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the presbytery.—1 Timothy 4: 14.

Through this ordinance authority was conferred to preach and officiate in the ordinances of the Lord's house, after a call from God to the ministry. No one can be a self-constituted ambassador of Christ. Without knowing the divine mind no one can represent God, or send men to represent him. The Lord must call by revelation, and then the person is set apart by the laying on of hands of those in authority. The necessity of ordination as a prerequisite to preaching is found in the words of Christ:

And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach, and to have power to heal sickness, and to cast out devils.—Mark 3: 14, 15.

FOR HEALING THE SICK

Christ provided in his church the power to heal the body as well as to save the soul. He commissioned his apostles:

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. All these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.—Mark 16: 15-18.

It will be noted that these blessings were not limited to the apostles, but were to follow believers of the gospel proclaimed by the apostles. The Lord

(Continued on page 885.)

GRACELAND COLLEGE DAY

Sunday, October 3, 1915, is the day set apart by the church in General Conference for special work in the interest of Graceland College, an educational institution located at Lamoni, Iowa, and open to all who need educational advantages.

All should feel a special interest in the important work, and every member and friend of true educational growth prove himself a helper, and place the work of this institution upon such lines as shall offer the greatest possible good to the young men and young women who shall avail themselves of its advantages, and special helps in mental and moral growth.

It must be remembered that to make this day a success the work should be taken up in each branch or neighborhood a few days before the date named for the collection, so that all may be reminded of duty in connection therewith, thus giving ample opportunity to each to prove himself or herself a faithful helper in sustaining an institution which holds out its ready hands of uplift to so many who need.

To enter upon the work it is only necessary for the officer or member in immediate charge to have a few subscription lists at hand, and ask all who can help to give their names and amounts prior to the 3d, or upon that date, and this will greatly help in the work and aid also the members and friends, who desire to take part in assisting a worthy and needy cause.

Parties who are able to do so should subscribe quite liberally to this educational institution. The help is greatly needed, and if those who can do so will pay five, ten or twenty-five dollars, they will be blessed in their work as they bless others who are struggling to fit and prepare themselves for better work in life. And if all do the best they can there will be no necessity to trouble the Saints upon the college expense question for one year at least, and probably two. Also if early returns are made, as they should be, the same will be duly published, with names of persons and places contributing, before the close of the year 1915.

This work by direction of the church has been placed with the Bishopric; and it will be proper for all officers and helpers in charge in districts and branches to recognize the financial officers in the districts or branches where the contributions are paid, that the returns may be properly made through these officers to the office of the presiding bishop, Box 125, Independence, Missouri. The funds, however, must be kept entirely separate from other church funds, so accounts may be rendered at an early time. Instructions and blanks are being made ready to send out to officers; if any are omitted let them notify this office.

We bespeak for this work the earnest assistance of all, trusting fully that the Lord will add his special blessing.

In behalf of the Bishopric,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

CHINESE GOVERNMENT.—Reports from China forecasting a change of the Government from a republic to a monarchy have appeared from time to time. The vice president has resigned. Professor Grant J. Goodnow, legal adviser to the president, has left Peking for the United States, and is reported to have advised a monarchy in the interests of the country. Other advisers are urging against the change. It is announced that the Government has decided tentatively to maintain a republican form, but to make the presidency permanent and hereditary.

AMBASSADOR IN ILL FAVOR.—Apprehended in asking his Government to approve extensive plans instigated by him in this country to withdraw Austro-Hungarians from American factories engaged in the manufacture of war munitions, and to incite strikes and other labor troubles, his message sent by the hand of an American newspaper correspondent carrying an American passport, constituting what Secretary Lansing in his note to Austria calls a "flagrant violation of diplomatic propriety," Ambassador Dumba of Austria, has incurred the ill favor of the United States Government, and Austria has been requested to recall him.

"ARABIC" CASE.—The commander of the German submarine which torpedoed the Arabic, the submarine having returned to its base, represents to the German admiralty that he torpedoed the liner in the belief that it was about to attack the submarine. Germany in a note to the United States Government regrets the loss of American life, but recognizes no liability for indemnity, even if her commander was mistaken in believing the Arabic was about to attack the submarine. The submarine contention between the United States and Germany is complicated by the recent reported sinking without warning of the Hesperian, with Americans among the crew, none of whom, however, were drowned.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Carranza forces are reported victorious over Villa in central Mexico. Clashes along the United States-Mexican border grow more frequent, lawless Mexican bandits continuing to cross the line and attack United States ranchers. At least fifty Mexicans have been killed in skirmishes during the week. Two United States citizens have been killed. Twenty-two thousand United States soldiers line the border in the vicinity of the trouble. Several thousand Carranza troops are gathered on the Mexican side of the line. Carranza has declined to meet with the proposed peace conference. He proposes a meeting of the Pan-American representatives, at which he would present reasons why his government should be recognized. Secretary Lansing has announced that the Pan-American representatives will meet shortly to formulate decisive plans of action, looking to a restoration of order in Mexico.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Fierce fighting on the north of the eastern line has failed thus far to gain for Germany, Riga, an important Russian Baltic port. German success is reported in the center of this extended line, Russia being successful in Galicia. The Czar of Russia has placed himself at the head of his army. Heavy fighting has developed in France; the western line, however, remains practically unchanged. The Russians report success over the Turks in the Caucasus. Skirmishes are reported between Austrian and Serbian troops along the border. Italy has taken the Austrian fortress Roverto, which brings them within thirteen miles of Trent. The situation is considered encouraging for Italy. Heavy fighting continues at the Dardanelles, where the allies are concentrating additional troops and war vessels. Two Norwegian barks, one Danish, one French, two British steamers have been sunk by German submarines. Zeppelin raids on Great Britain, including sections of London, on the 7th and 8th resulted in the death of thirty-seven, and the injury of about one hundred. The situation in the Balkans is uncertain. Bulgaria demands all of Macedonia if she shall enter the war on the side of the allies. Serbia concedes most of this demand, but insists that her territory shall touch that of Greece. Turkey offers Bulgaria territory for her services on the side of Austria and her allies. Proposals for peace, supposed to have originated in Germany, have been discussed by the press. To the proposition that the allies pay a heavy indemnity for the withdrawal of the Germans from Belgium and France, Sir Edward Grey, British minister of foreign affairs, is said to have replied that such will not be done.

---

NOTES AND COMMENTS

CRITICISMS ON NEW TRACTS.—We have received some valuable criticisms and suggestions from the elders relative to the new series of tracts known as the Angel Message Tracts. These criticisms are gladly received, and whenever they are found available and valuable they are utilized. We hope that the members, and elders in particular, will continue to scrutinize these tracts carefully as they appear, and give us the benefit of any suggestions they may have to make. It is far better that any errors appearing in the first print should be eliminated before the tracts are put into permanent form.

FREDERICK M. SMITH RETURNS HOME.—President Frederick M. Smith arrived in Lamoni, Sunday, September 5, in time to preach the closing sermon of the Lamoni reunion. His effort was along the line of the necessity of consecration. He emphasized the fact that not only money but individuals should be consecrated. The sermon was very favorably received by the Saints. It was timely and forceful, and evidenced spiritual insight and power. He proceeded to Independence on Wednesday of the week past, and will now be in position to give his attention more entirely to the affairs of the church coming within the jurisdiction of his office. The Saints will be pleased to learn that he is quite completely recovered from any ill effects incident to his sickness.

DEDICATION AT COUNCIL BLUFFS.—The new church at Council Bluffs, Iowa, was dedicated under very favorable auspices on Sunday morning last, the services being at 10.45. The dedicatory sermon was by President E. A. Smith, the prayer by Elder James A. Gillen, president of the mission. Elder Samuel Harding, president of the Council Bluffs Branch, was in charge of the service. Special music was ably rendered under the direction of Paul N. Craig, of Omaha. This church is of brick, artistically finished, inside and out, at a cost of seven thousand, one hundred dollars. It should be of material service to the cause in Council Bluffs, furnishing the Saints and friends a desirable and conveniently located place of worship. It is hoped that through this and other available means the work in this place, which has been promising, will make in every way an efficient point for ingathering and upbuilding in the kingdom of God.

---

EDITORIAL SELECTION

Lifters and Leanners

There are two kinds of people on earth to-day;
 Just two kinds of people, no more, I say;
 Not the rich and the poor, for to count a man's wealth
 You must first know the state of his conscience and health,
 Not the humble and proud, for in life's little span
 Who puts on vain airs is not counted a man.
 Not the happy and sad, for the swift flying years
 Bring each man his laughter and each man his tears.
 No! the two kinds of people on earth I mean
 Are the people who lift, and the people who lean.
 Wherever you go you will find the world's masses
 Are always divided in just the two classes.
 And, oddly enough, you will find, too, I wean,
 There's only one lifter to twenty who lean.
 In which class are you? Are you easing the load
 Of overtaxed lifters who toil down the road?
 Or are you the leaner, who lets others bear
 Your portion of labor, and worry and care?

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

(Continued from page 882.)

announces clearly the recovery of the sick through the laying on of hands, as one of the signs following believers of the gospel.

In no sense were fanatical ideas held by the church. Luke is referred to as the "beloved physician" (Colossians 4: 14), which indicates that there was no disparagement of the true physician's skill in alleviating bodily ills. God's law is in its operation remedial, preventive, and miraculous. All have not faith to be healed, as is evidenced from Paul's words to Timothy:

Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick.—2 Timothy 4: 20.
Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities.—1 Timothy 5: 23.

It is seen from the foregoing that the power to heal was with God and not with the ministry to heal whomsoever they desired. A physician to the church could be of immense assistance. But it is clear that God provided in his church a power, accessible by faith, that would supplement man's powers when used to the utmost. This healing power of God was not placed in the church to encourage ignorance, or violation of law, spiritual or natural.

No promise is made that the sick should always be healed instantly, but that they should "recover." The testimony of the church to-day is that the promises of God are sure, and that God has not changed.

The following references will suffice to prove the laying on of hands was practiced for the healing of the sick:

And he [Jesus] could do a mighty work, save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them. And he marvelled because of their unbelief. And he went round about the villages, teaching.—Mark 6: 5, 6.

Now when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto him; and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them.—Luke 4: 40.

And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux: to whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid his hands on him, and healed him.—Acts 28: 8.

And, behold, there cometh one of the rulers of the synagogue, Jairus by name; and when he saw him, he fell at his feet, and besought him greatly, saying, My little daughter lieth at the point of death: I pray thee, come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed; and she shall live.—Mark 5: 22, 23.

It will be observed that so well was it known outside of the church that the laying on of hands was practiced for the healing of the sick that Jairus in making his request of Jesus to heal his daughter, said: "Come and lay thy hands on her."

The following reveals clearly the practice of the church:

Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.—James 5: 14, 15.

FOR THE BLESSING OF CHILDREN

Children under the age of accountability were not sprinkled by the church of Jesus Christ, but were blessed through the ordinance of the laying on of hands:

Then were there brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them. But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven. And he laid his hands on them, and departed thence.—Matthew 19: 13-15.

Not one case of infant baptism is recorded in the Scriptures. The practice of Christ in the blessing of children, given as an example to the church, is the practice of his church to-day. He is "the Apostle and High Priest of our profession." (Hebrews 3: 1.)

Read also Genesis 48: 8-19 (which reveals that through this ordinance patriarchal or spiritual blessings were given).

FOR CONFIRMATION AND BESTOWAL OF HOLY GHOST

Baptized persons were not initiated into the church by giving their "hand to the preacher and their heart to God." They were confirmed members of the church by the laying on of hands, and were entitled as members of the "body of Christ" to the reception of the Holy Ghost. The Lord said:

If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you.—John 14: 15-18.

Of the practice of the church in Samaria we read:

But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.

Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus). Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.

And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost. But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money.—Acts 8: 12, 14-20.

Paul received the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost:

And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost.—Acts 9: 17.

In building up the kingdom of God Paul practiced the ordinance:

Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus.

When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied.—Acts 19: 4-6.

The church did not enter into competition with itself, therefore the practice of the church was in harmony with the foregoing examples.

The following indicates the probability of the apostles receiving the laying on of hands:

And when he had said this, he breathed [which shows close proximity] on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost.—John 20: 22.

Luke records:

And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high. And he led them out as far as to Bethany, and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them.—Luke 24: 49, 50.

Concerning those who united with the church on the day of Pentecost, we read:

Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers.—Acts 2: 41, 42.

The "apostles' doctrine" is found represented in the practice of the church; and in the teaching of Paul to the Hebrews:

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.—Hebrews 6: 1, 2.

Through the ordinance of baptism there comes the "remission of sins" (Acts 2: 38); through the ordinance of the laying on of hands the Holy Ghost is given.

CONCLUSION

God did not, in blessing through the laying on of hands, indorse a meaningless ceremony. His ministry were not practitioners of an empty, hollow form. The laying on of hands was one of the "principles of the doctrine of Christ,"—such was the ordinance that was practiced by Christ, Peter, John, Paul, Ananias, et al; and such was the ordinance after the practice of which followed an authoritative administration of the gospel, the healing of the sick, the blessing of children, patriarchal blessings, and the reception of the Holy Ghost.

God has not changed—the gospel is still the "power of God unto salvation."

To receive the blessings enjoyed and accomplish the works performed in the days of primitive Christianity, the ordinances then employed should now be obeyed. It is not consistent to practice the laying on of hands for one purpose and not for all the purposes for which it was observed by the New Testament church. In case of doubt in religious as in all other matters, one should take the safe side.

To overemphasize or complacently ignore this ordinance of the church of God is disastrous to spiritual life.

As the highest developments of science of any age are not discarded, but an attempt is made to perpetuate and maintain them, so this ordinance employed by the church by which great blessings from God were received should not be discarded but should be practiced, perpetuated, and maintained among all believers in Christ. We should have at least a condition equal to the greatest advancement ever reached through the employment of divine forces.

The church is not weakened but strengthened by giving all church ordinances their proper places. The means by which Christ performed his work nineteen hundred years ago have not become obsolete.

God is unchangeable and is no respecter of persons—the work of Christ in its entirety is for men to-day.

PAUL M. HANSON.

NOTE.—If a man die, shall he live again? Is the human spirit immortal? These old yet ever new questions will be answered in the next chapter.

At one of the Northfield conferences, a few years ago, an American missionary to Africa told a story that stirred the heart of every listener. He began his work with companions as eager as himself. One by one they succumbed to the terrible climate. Three he buried—the others he took to the coast and sent home. Then he turned back, to stand, utterly alone, in the midst of hundreds of thousands of men who had never heard the name of God. Again and again he tramped the blistered plains with his tongue so swollen that he could not speak. Thirty times he was stricken by fever, with no one to care for him. Lions attacked him, natives ambushed him; he had lived upon everything, from ants to rhinoceroses. And here was his conclusion: "I know the great joy of walking with Jesus Christ in the midst of all this; I stand ready at this moment to go through it all again for the joy I have had in flashing the word Savior into the darkness of a great tribe! Is it God's will? That makes the wilderness a garden; that makes the desert glow with the very presence of God!"—Youth's Companion.

Original Articles

HOW TO RECEIVE A BLESSING

LITTLE SERMONS TO SAINTS—NUMBER 7

BY F. J. EBELING

Every individual who accepts the gospel of Jesus Christ does so, primarily at least, because of the blessings promised therein. The first motive is a little selfish, and which possibly is a good thing, but as we advance in the divine life, will gradually discover that our reward is secondary to that of others. And the great secret of the blessing comes to us in seeking to bring the blessing to those whom we see stand in need of it.

The more one partakes of the Spirit of the Master, the more he thinks of others' comforts and the less of his own. He begins to more fully realize the true meaning of the family of God. It becomes not a question of how much he can get out of the church, but how much can he put into it? The church to him will become the body of Christ of which he is a member, cooperating and coordinating for the common interest of all the members.

The only way the body can be normal is to have every part thereof performing its function; and no member can be in good normal condition, and thereby happy, so long as any other member is out of working order.

THE PERFECT LAW

The Apostle James gives a broad presentation of how to receive the blessings contained in the gospel: "But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed."

There are three important things in this quotation: Perfect law, the keeping of it, and the resultant blessing.

In the giving of a law to govern the moral action of humanity, God well knew every need of man, and thereby gave a law perfectly adapted to every call. In the keeping of the perfect law, we change from the abnormal to the normal, physically, mentally, and spiritually, which makes a well-balanced body politic.

The law being perfect, there can not be a single item omitted, neither is it susceptible to improvement. Just what the law was in the beginning, with all its ramifications, so must it be in the end.

CONCERNING TEMPORALITIES

A very important feature of this perfect law was that that pertains to temporalities.

In paying my tithing I am putting myself in harmony with the perfect law, which should operate just as far back as any other feature of the law.

When I was baptized into the church for the remission of sins, how far did I want my sins to be forgiven? Just as far back as my sins went. So in the keeping of the law of temporalities, I should pay my tithing as far back as the day I began to accumulate. I take my inventory and pay my back debt to the Lord, as far back as he forgave my sins. I then have a clear record to begin with. And while the gospel that came to gladden my life cost me nothing, it cost somebody something. It meant many lonely hours to some sacrificing wife and children. Now with all my sins forgiven, which is the greatest of all blessings, I will freely pay my tithing, even from the day I began to accumulate, to take the blessed law of pardon to others, who stand in need of the very thing that I once stood in such imminent need of.

It makes no difference whether I go in person to take the message to a dying world, or make it possible for some one else to go, more able along that line than myself. In the day of rewards, we will both share the same, each his "penny." For, so doing, the prophet Malachi 3, says: "I will . . . open the windows of heaven, and pour out a blessing."

I think at times we put too much stress upon the temporal blessings and overlook the spiritual. In paying our tithes and offerings, it is not to put in ten dollars for the purpose of getting back ninety. If so we would have all the speculators in the country flocking to us. The sole object should be to place ourselves in harmony with God's law. I have known individuals who after paying their tithing have met with financial reverses, and consequently became discouraged and lost faith, for they had been taught that if they would pay their tithing almost everything they touched would turn to gold. The first and prime reason for doing our duty in any line is simply because God requires it. It may take faith to do so, but that is what will bring the blessing.

ENTERTAINING THE ELDERS

One immediate way in which we may receive a blessing is found in Matthew 10: 11-13.

And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, enquire who in it is worthy; and there abide till ye go thence. And when ye come into a house, salute it. And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it.

This was the instruction Jesus gave to his ministry in sending them out to reprove the world. And those who would receive them, should have their peace to abide in that home.

I believe some of the Saints are depriving themselves of this peace because they do not entertain the servants of God, who if they are living as they should, will leave a blessing in the home.

In this connection it will be well to remember the widow who gave the prophet of God her last bit of oil and meal, which she was preparing to eat and then die. She gave it to the prophet, who ate and blessed her house and said, As long as the famine last in the land of Canaan, the oil and meal will never grow less. As fast as she took from them, they were miraculously restored. And to the ones who will do the same to the servants of God in these days, God will do the same as he did in the days of Elijah, if necessary.

In Doctrine and Covenants 75:3 the Lord reiterates the promise: "And in whatsoever house ye enter, and they receive you, leave your blessing upon that house."

I once heard a remark by one whose home is always open to the elders, and who said, If Jesus were to come to the church everyone would rush up to take him home with them. I consider when I take one of his servants into my home and care for him it is the same as if I had taken Jesus, for he said, Whosoever receiveth them receiveth me.

I marveled at the broad and beautiful conception this person had of the mission of Christ. This sister is enjoying the blessings of God, even though amidst bitterness and trials.

Blessings are for all on the same terms. Entertaining the elders is a noble work, of which there is no report made here, and if one is entitled to blessing it is he who throws his home open for the elder, who is giving the best of his life for the blessing of mankind.

THE BEATITUDES

In Matthew 5, Jesus offers no less than eight receipts for a blessing. While the remedy at times may be a little bitter, if it does the work why not take it? When we are sick of body we send for the doctor, take his medicine, ever so bitter, pay him a big price, all without complaint. Now when we are soul sick and stand in need of the remedy prescribed by the Great Physician, we should gladly take it for the blessed results which follow. Here are the prescriptions: "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." It may be a little trying to be all the time conscious in spirit that we have nothing in this world, but that which spurs us onward is the promise that the kingdom of heaven is ours.

"Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted." The evil condition of this world may cause us to mourn, but the blessing comes when mourning is over, by receiving the comforting promises of God. Paul declared the afflictions of this world are for a moment, but they work out that far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." It may be difficult at times to keep meek, but when we consider what is offered us in return for meekness it is a very little price to pay. The whole earth and all its pristine beauty is laid at our option. Can we afford to forfeit such a prize?

"Blessed are they which hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled." The blessing of food and drink can only be enjoyed by those who have been deprived of them for a while. To enjoy the blessings of the gospel, we must yearn and seek for them as a thirsty man would a fountain of pure water.

"Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy." Before we can obtain the mercy offered by Christ we must first show our mercy to others. If Christ were to measure to us by the cup of mercy we measure to our brother or sister, there would sometimes be little for us. To receive mercy we must give mercy.

"Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." What a world of meaning there is in this statement. We are all striving to see God, but are we fully awakened to the sublime meaning of "pure in heart"? When we are entirely free from every wrong intent, and would rather suffer to be wronged than to do wrong, then we are approaching the great goal. The Lord in latter-day revelation, has told us that "Zion is the pure in heart." Hence if we ever expect to see God it will only be through Zionie conditions.

"Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." Of all the endearing terms applied to the people of God, none excels that of a child of God—to be in the great family of God, and with him as our Father. And in the family of God nothing but peace can reign. No family jars there. Therefore, only the maker and lover of peace shall be there.

Inasmuch as there is always a negative to every affirmative, if the peacemaker is a child of God, the mischiefmaker is the child of the Devil. And so if the pure in heart shall see God, the impure shall see the Devil. Which do we prefer? Stop! look! listen! and apply the remedy.

In the next expressions of the beatitudes, the blessings following those who willing face persecution, there are some things of the perfect law we must do if we would be blessed in our deeds. They are within our reach. Can we afford to lose them? We shall keep constantly in mind the warning of John, Hold fast that which thou hast that no man take thy crown.

* * * * *

OBEDIENCE BRINGS REDEMPTION

It is necessary for those who desire the favor of God to learn his will and obey the same, which will entitle them to the rich blessings he has promised to the faithful. Jesus' last command to his disciples was to teach the people to observe "all things" whatsoever he had commanded them, with a promise that by so doing he would be with them even until the end of the world. (Matthew 28: 20.)

As preachers of the gospel of Christ, we must follow out this instruction if we expect Christ to be with us in our work, and those who hear the teachings of God's servants must realize the necessity of keeping the whole law of God to receive the fullness of the blessings promised to his faithful children. To do this we must have faith in God and the entire gospel plan, and must realize what true repentance means, that when we discover that we have broken God's laws, either by sin of commission or sin of omission, we must repent of the same, cease to do evil, and go forward in the discharge of every known duty. I believe that the sins of omission will in many cases outweigh the sins of commission. As one writer says:

And it's not the things you do, dear,
It's the things you leave undone,
Which give you the bit of heartache
At the setting of the sun.

Prayer is much neglected and yet is essential to the development of God's children. Prayer is the bucket by which we draw the water from the well of life. Hannah More says:

Prayer draws all the Christian graces into its focus. It draws Charity with her lovely train; Repentance with her holy sorrows; Faith with her elevated eyes; Hope, with her grasped anchor; Beneficence with her open hands; Zeal, looking far and wide to bless, and Humility, looking at home.

True prayer will help us to manifest our faith by our works and to eliminate every evil from our lives. We must be strictly honest with our God, our neighbor, employer or employee. The duty of man is summed up by Christ: To love God and love thy neighbor as thyself. One writer says thy neighbor is he whom thou hast power to aid and bless.

One of the greatest evils, and that which is hindering the progress of this latter-day work and the preparation for the coming of our Savior, is that of covetousness and selfishness. The standard dictionary gives the following definition:

Covetous, inordinate eagerness to acquire and possess, especially by unrest or unlawful means; unduly desirous to have or own; avaricious, as covetous of wealth.

Selfishness, the quality of being selfish or governed by self-interest; undue or inordinate love of self or regard for one's own interest, pleasure or advantage; to seek one's own gratification, welfare, advancement or the like regardless of or at the expense of those of others.

The Apostle Paul in writing to the Colossian saints admonishes them against the sin of covetousness which he says is idolatry (Colossians 3: 5); and in Ephesians 5: 5 he says that no covetous person has inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

Jesus looked upon the rich young man. He saw that he was covetous, and said unto him, "Go sell that thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasures in heaven, and come take up thy cross and follow me."

The lesson sought to be taught was not that each one should sell all he had and give to the poor, but that each should seek to eliminate covetousness, selfishness from his life.

The Lord speaking through the Prophet Malachi says: "Will a man rob God! yet ye have robbed me in tithes and offerings. The tithes and offerings are for the support of the ministers' families while they go forth to preach the gospel, also to supply necessities to the poor and needy.

To-day there are many able men who would be available to the church as missionaries to carry the message of life to those groping in darkness if there were means at hand to support their families; but they feel they can not under existing conditions, ask their families to live on the allowance the family of an elder receives, and unless there is an increase of allowance or the cost of living reduced other men will have to drop out of the active ministry. We have men in the ministry who have left positions or business that brought them twelve hundred to four thousand dollars per year. Is it right that the elder and his family should make sacrifice, while many of the Saints are not paying their tithes and offerings or consecrations?

We are told in Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3, that we should be equal in temporal things if we would be equal in spiritual things. In a revelation given to Joseph Smith in 1833, the Lord said there was then sufficient means in the church to redeem Zion. In the Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 11: 109, we read:

And except they should have charity, they were nothing; wherefore, if they should have charity, they would not suffer the laborer in Zion to perish. But the laborer in Zion shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish.

Again, in Jacob 2: 24:

And after ye have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good; to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick, and the afflicted.

The Lord is able to fulfill his promises. The gold in the mine and the cattle upon a thousand hills are his, and he could bring into his storehouse all that is necessary to carry out his purposes, and to fulfill his promise, "Ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them . . . for the intent to do good"; but unless we overcome the evil of covetousness and selfishness we can not enjoy the blessings of the Lord, and Zion can not be built up, for "Zion is the pure in heart."

We read in Proverbs 11: 23-25:

The desire of the righteous is only good: but the expectation of the wicked is wrath. There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself.

Those who freely give of their substance to aid God's word and give in a proper spirit, the Lord has promised to bless. "The liberal soul shall be made fat."

He coveteth greedily all the day long: but the righteous giveth and spareth not.—Proverbs 21: 26.

Woe unto them that join house to house, that lay field to field, till there be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth!—Isaiah 5: 8.

There are Saints who have taken their tithing (the Lord's money) and purchased more property, or have speculated with that which belongs unto the Lord, and have said, If I make well out of this deal, I will then pay my tithing. What right has anyone to take that portion that belongs to the Lord instead of giving it to the Bishop as the law directs?

In Luke 12: 15-21 we find this language:

And he said unto them, Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth. And he spake a parable unto them, saying, The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully; and he thought within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits? And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry. But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided? So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God.

Here Jesus admonishes the people to beware of covetousness.

In Proverbs 28: 20 we read, "A faithful man shall abound with blessings: but he that maketh haste to be rich shall not be innocent."

God has promised to bless those who do his will and work with him. He says in Malachi 3: 10-12:

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightful land, saith the Lord of hosts.

Let us, dear Saints, not be like those spoken of in Ezekiel 31: 31:

And they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: for with their mouth they shew much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness.

Some say, "But that is just the temporal law and it is optional whether we comply with it or not."

In Doctrine and Covenants 28: 9 the Lord says that all his laws are spiritual and not at any time has he given a temporal law. Those who pay their tithing, keeping all of his commandments, will not be burned at his coming (Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5); and those who impart not of their substance to assist the poor shall lift up their eyes in hell, being in torment. If every member of the church would pay his tithing and impart of his substance for the building up of Zion according to the law of God, and do it at once, the church would be out of debt, and would be able to put up a suitable office building for the Bishopric and other officers, and the work would be carried on more effectually. We could thus show our thankfulness that the gospel found us, and thereby brought us to a great light.

And shall we in this land of plenty,
Sit inactive while the store is empty.
Ah! let us arise to the urgent desire,
And our souls will be filled with the old gospel fire.
Let us send in our means to the storehouse, to bear
The news of the gospel to all far and near.
Let the young men equip themselves for the labor
Of carrying the news of a crucified Savior.
Then let us, dear Saints, our thankfulness show
By learning his word, doing all that we know,
To hasten the time when we will all gather in
To Zion to welcome our Lord and our King.

Let everyone examine himself, and if he is covetous, see to it that by the help of God this sin is rooted out. Obey the financial law, and do it now, thus aiding the church to move on triumphantly.

Yours for the onward progress of this great latter-day work,
ARTHUR ALLEN.

* * * * *

LOYALTY TO THE KING

With a degree of reluctance, I essay a task which must sooner or later fall heavily upon some one. Sooner or later some one for a time will be considered irregular because of advocating an unpopular principle, but which is destined in the mind of God to grow in power until indorsed by every true Saint in heaven and on earth. It must have a beginning among the Saints. It had a beginning in the mind of God, and has been expressed a long time ago, as well as in latter days.

The writer was encouraged toward this task a few months ago by an address along the lines of neutrality given by President Frederick M. Smith, at a conference at Fall River, Massachusetts, in which he urged the Saints against imbibing the spirit of war. One sentence stands out strong and clear, "Whatever others may be, the Saints of God must be neutral."

When I read in the last issue of the HERALD (August 11) extracts from a sermon by Reverend B. M. Fellman upon the subject of patriotism and Christianity, I felt indeed that the time had come to express what has been struggling upward for a long time.

If Mr. Fellman from his point of vision can see the harmful effect of pseudo-patriotism in the world, as against the cause of Christianity generally, where does the Latter Day Saint stand that his mental and spiritual vision should be so obscured by custom and world training that he can not see the disastrous results if encouraged, when practiced and taught to children of these perilous times within the very walls of buildings dedicated to the service and promulgation of the kingdom of heaven—the kingdom of the Prince of Peace?

In the great world family we are all brothers and sisters, and national lines and distinctions are but family factions and wars but family feuds.

The mission of Jesus, the Prince of Peace, is, by the principle of love, to break down all those dividing lines and make one family, one nation, one kingdom, with a million hearts that beat as one. As expressed by the sacred writer, breaking down the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace.

If the term Jew means the Hebrew race, and the term Gentile embraces all other nations, then we have it all in a nutshell. It can be readily seen then, that everything that is done to maintain those distinctive features, and inculcating that spirit in the hearts and minds of our little ones, is but frustrating the work of Jesus just that much.

The blunt statement that every decoration of the church with a national flag or royal insignia of any kind is radically wrong, and is really an act of disloyalty to Christ, would perhaps hurt the tender feelings of many a patriotic Saint, and no doubt would be resented, yet on maturer thought, resentment would give way to another sentiment.

With the love of country and flag, struggling with the love of the kingdom of God, the United States citizen can be pictured as saying, "Dear Old Glory." Yes, the writer can appreciate all that. He can also appreciate the Canadian heart, pulsating with tender and patriotic emotions in favor of the Canadian flag; the Briton, the British ensign; also the German Saint, the German flag. The church not being a national church or religion, it would be as lawful for the German Saint to pledge allegiance to his national flag and Government before the altar of the Lord as it would for the British Saint, or one of any other nation. But let us imagine Jesus above looking down upon his children, pledged to loyalty in his kingdom, before his altar pledging allegiance to the different nations of the earth—in deadly conflict with each other, or liable to be. Can we not hear him say, "My little children, how long must I be with you?"

What do we really mean when we salute the flag?

Is it not a sham and mockery when we do not indicate that we are ready to take up arms and die if need be in defense of it? Or even at the call of our Government, whether the cause be just or otherwise?

Then what are we who have taken upon us the name of Jesus going to do with the word of God, given to us so recently, August, 1833? Let us consider it in the light of present conditions and worse conditions that may fall upon us in our day. Doctrine and Covenants 95:3:

Therefore, be not afraid of your enemies; for I have decreed in my heart, saith the Lord, that I will prove you in all things, whether you will abide in my covenant, even unto death, that you may be found worthy; for if ye will not abide in my covenant, ye are not worthy of me; therefore, renounce war and proclaim peace, and seek diligently to turn the hearts of their children to their fathers, and the hearts of the fathers to the children.

Read also paragraphs 5, 6 and 7, and get God's law concerning war.

Brethren, is it in harmony with the spirit of the foregoing—in fact, is it possible to renounce war while inculcating the very spirit and genius of war in the hearts of our children in our church and Sunday school entertainments by that which Mr. Fellman calls pseudo-patriotism?

Jesus said, John 18:36: "If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight . . . but now is my kingdom not from hence."

Does all this mean anything to us? Is not Christ and his kingdom bigger than any kingdom or nation on earth? Is not Christ and his kingdom bigger than all the kingdoms on earth combined?

We often quote Doctrine and Covenants 45:13, "And it shall come to pass, among the wicked, that every man that will not take his sword against his neighbor, must needs flee unto Zion for safety . . . and it shall be the only people that shall not be at war one with another." The preceding paragraph clearly states where that Zion shall be.

Did it ever occur to the Saints that there never can be such a place and such a condition until the Lord finds a people who will not fight?

When and where is to be the beginning of this Zion that will not fight?

Where will the precepts and examples come from?

Who will be the Sunday school superintendents and teachers that will instill into the minds of our rising generation that all this glory of warfare, so-called, has no place in the gospel of Christ, and that there is something higher, nobler, grander, in the kingdom of Christ than is represented by all the best flags of the best nations and governments on earth? These shall all pass away, and their glory shall fade when all the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

Must we wait until Christ comes to begin it? or is he to find such a people when he does come?

Would I, as a branch president, eliminate all such patriotic demonstrations, decorations, and flag saluting from the church buildings? No, not by any arbitrary ruling or edict, for that might defeat the very object desired, by provoking a war of retaliation.

As said in the beginning, sooner or later those things will all be of the past, but it will be brought about by the Spirit of the Master, the spirit of peace.

Those things never obtained because of any vicious motive or intent, the opposite is more likely to be true; hence it is only necessary to get the great heart of the church awakened, and the thoughtful Saints thinking and praying over the matter, and the problem is solved.

H. J. DAVISON.

Of General Interest

ENORMOUS TRADE

LONDON, August 17.—Sir George Paish, editor of the London Statist, gave the Associated Press to-day a statement concerning the present abnormal rate of exchange and the proposals for rectifying the situation by establishing a large credit in the United States. He is a recognized authority on international credit operations, and was sent by the British Government to the United States last fall to adjust the disturbed conditions then existing. He said:

The fall in American exchange on London to a discount of about 4 per cent is due simply to the great purchases of American products by the peoples of Europe. In normal years Europe pays the United States for goods purchased largely by means of sums spent in Europe by American tourists. This year there naturally have been few tourists visiting Europe.

Moreover, Europe is buying from the United States much greater quantities of goods than normally, American exports to all the world in June having been no less than seventy per cent greater than normally, while her imports from the rest of the world were smaller than usual.

For the six months ending with June, America's imports were reduced some $115,000,000. Her exports expanded $654,000,000. Her tourists expenditures, normally $200,000,000 a year, were practically nothing. America had a balance in her favor amounting in the neighborhood of $900,000,000 more than she had in the first six months of 1914. Last year, however, she was borrowing money from Britain and Europe, whereas this year she has been buying securities back from Europe. After allowing for all outgoings, the trade balance in favor of America in the first half of 1915 was nearly $700,000,000, and they took payment of this vast sum in about $120,000,000 in gold and the balance in securities and credits.

But in the June half of the year America's exports were much smaller than they will be in the December half of the year, and in the next six months to Christmas the balance of exports of the United States, after making allowance for all outgoings for interest and such, probably will be $1,000,000,000. It conceivably may reach a still greater figure.—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register and Leader.

ENGLISH QUAKERDOM'S WAR-ORDEAL

Of all the religious bodies in the belligerent countries which have groaned under the blight of war, the English Society of Friends, or Quakers, is perhaps in the most trying position. In fact, we find an American Quaker journal quoting from a London correspondent of the New York Evening Post the statement that "this war will either make or break the Society of Friends."

While Christian authorities other than Quakers in the fighting nations bewail the sin of war, they have not the least reluctance about defending the cause they hold as just. It will be recalled, moreover, that in the French and Italian armies clergymen serve at the front, not only as spiritual advisers, but also as combatants. Among the Quakers, however, to whom peace is a cardinal principle of the faith, the enlistment of young men in the British army is causing serious dissension. The hundred thousand odd Friends in the United States can scarcely have a "fair comprehension of what our English Friends have been facing since the European War began," says the Philadelphia Friend in an article reproduced by The Friends' Intelligencer of the same city. So The Friend, in speaking of the London Yearly Meeting, is gratified to cite the letter of one in attendance who writes:

Thou wilt read of our Yearly Meeting, but cold print can not convey what a marvelously uplifting time it has been. Often one thousand Friends were at the sittings, and the times of silence were most solemn,—the overwhelming conviction being present, in spite of some whom we love thinking otherwise, that we must, even in this critical time, reassert our testimony that Christ and war can not be served together.

The logical outcome of the Quaker policy, as another Friend said at the meeting, "might mean crucifixion, but Gethsemane and Calvary had been indicated by nineteen centuries of Christian experience."

Meanwhile we read in the press that young Quakers are active in Red Cross service in France and Belgium. More striking still is the announcement that the Society of Friends in England has raised two hundred and fifty thousand dollars there and in the United States for war relief purposes. In this work the peculiar achievement of the Friends is the building and rebuilding of houses in French territory devastated by war.

The American Friend (Richmond, Indiana,) quotes from the London correspondent of the New York Evening Post as follows:

This war will either make or break the Society of Friends. One of two things must happen. If the event justified those who assert, with the leaders of most the churches, that the defeat of Germany will be equivalent to the triumph of Christ over the Devil, then the Quaker testimony against all war will be shown to be mistaken. If, on the other hand, even this war, so enthusiastically acclaimed as a Christian duty, turns out to be the evil thing that most other wars are seen to be fifty years later, then there will be a great access of influence to that religious body which makes opposition to war one of the articles of its creed.

—The Literary Digest, for August 7, 1915.

The Staff

AUDENTIA ANDERSON, OMAHA, NEBRASKA

Again the school bells are ringing, calling to study and acquirement! Again the choirs after their little hot weather playtime, are meeting, and outlining, and planning, preparatory to taking up, in real, new, enthusiastic earnest, the music work of the fall and winter. How about your schedule? Does it embody a full program of fall concert, Christmas cantata, general choir anthem and oratorio work? If not, you are hardly yet conscious of the magnitude of opportunity lost to you, and the great influx of spirit and consecration possible for you and your members to receive through the stimulus this combined musical effort would afford. Let us urge upon you again, to get in line, and to realize that this effort is for you, no matter how small your choir may be, nor where or how located.

There is everything to be gained by being in touch and sympathy with this movement, and nothing to be lost, except the feeling of aloofness and separation which you may have hitherto had. Get in touch with the leaders of our church music; outline your work in harmony with the proposed plans, and then get busy, and make a new and determined start towards making this year the very best, from a musical standpoint, that your branch or your district has ever known. Do this, and all will agree that the uplift to the work and spirituality of the members in your locality has been felt to a remarkable degree.

We present this month the paper on piano study written by Sister Laura Kelley, and read before a session of the musical institute, held in Lamoni last April, in connection with the General Conference. We ask a careful reading of this splendid article, especially by all parents who are paying out money for piano instruction for their children. It is wisest that only the best teachers should be employed, as there are few things more pitiable than to see a lot of good money wasted for poor returns. It is the greatest kind of extravagance, and none of our people can afford this particular kind of indulgence.

In connection with Miss Kelley's article we also have in this issue one along similar lines, contributed, at our request, by Mrs. Maude Bond Woodall, of Grand Rapids, Michigan. Mrs. Woodall will be remembered by Graceland students as having been in charge of the music department of that institution for several very successful years, and her thoroughness as a teacher, and her devotion to her art and its spiritual expression, made her work there to be of a lasting and permanent character. Her article in this issue reflects the clarity of her opinions upon her topic, and the stability of her judgment along the lines of music.

In our efforts to "cultivate," in compliance with the oft-repeated command of God, let us seek to follow right paths. There is so much of cheapness and slipshod methods extant to-day, so much of "graft" along the musical as well as every other line, that Saints should examine carefully before they place their children and their confidence (and their money) in the hands of incompetent teachers, who will do vastly more harm than good, and ruin the finer musical perceptions of the students to such a degree that real true work becomes distasteful to them, and they are content with a cheap, trashy performance of the ragtime, and other unworthy compositions so prevalent on the music counters of the day. Avoid them, dear Saints, as you would a pestilence.

Can you imagine for one moment that God, when he said it was his will that his people should "Cultivate the gifts of music and song," and that we should "praise him with the timbrel and the harp," etc., had such "things" in mind as "My baby doll," "Bawlin' Jack," "He a devil," and so on, through the long, unworthy list?

Banish the thought! Comment is unnecessary! Let us each do our utmost to raise high Zion's standard, of music as well as of ethics; demonstrating to the world, by its very essence and quality, that we are striving in that, as well as in personal conduct and conversation, to reflect the divine which is in us, and which is the only safe guide "into all truth."

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, 2009 Locust Street.

Our Bulletin

How many times we looked forward to the possibility of rest and recreation as the summer approached, and now that it is passing we look back upon our activities, and find that the typewriter clicked as long and merrily, the bow was drawn as steadily, and the conductor's stick swung along as often as in the days of winter, when we expect to accomplish more than in the lazy months. For all that, we have enjoyed the summer—have found a degree of inspiration and rest in the recreation, and now are eager for the work of the fall.

The Bulletin, announcing the graded course, will have already gone forward to the district choristers for distribution before this announcement reaches you. As we send it out, accompanied by our little letter of instruction, we breathe a prayer that this, our greatest effort, will meet with a response so generous and hearty that we will feel fully repaid for the long hours we spend in inaugurating this important move.

Another desire, too, comes into our hearts—that every district will be in a position to proclaim a district chorister. With this end in view we are writing to district presidents, asking them to present to the secretaries of their respective districts our request for a recommendation on their part of the best qualified individual whom they desire to act as district chorister. This action, of course, is to be taken in districts where the general chorister is not acquainted with conditions, and where no appointment has been made up to the present writing.

We include a list of choristers appointed, up to date. If your district is not represented, a line to the general chorister will put you on the mailing list, which is now being compiled in order to keep choristers in touch with the bulletins, which will be issued quarterly:

Willoughby, Ohio, Bishop J. A. Becker. Saint Louis, Missouri, Edward C. Bell, 2817 University Street, Saint Louis. Independence, Missouri, Mrs. Royal Brocaw, 816 West Electric Street, Independence. San Jose, California, Mrs. H. R. Burgess, San Jose, California. Milton, Florida, Mrs. C. J. Clarke, Star Route. Los Angeles, California, R. T. Cooper, Suite 420, Marsh Strong Building. Omaha, Nebraska, Paul Craig, 2424 Maple Street, Omaha. McKenzie, Alabama, J. A. Harper, McKenzie. Seattle, Washington, E. E. Inslee, 743 15th Avenue, N. W. Seattle. Spring River and Northeastern Kansas, Mrs. Florence McNichols, 715 Cypress Street, Kansas City. Port Huron, Michigan, Miss Lizzie Plato, 913 Poplar Street, Port Huron. Chicago, Illinois, Orson Randall, 1138 South Central Park Avenue, Chicago. Central Illinois, W. J. Richards, 920 East Oak Street, Taylorville, Illinois. Des Moines, John Salisbury, Perry, Iowa. Lamoni Stake, Mrs. May Skinner, Lamoni, Iowa. Chatham, Ontario, J. H. Tyrell, 197 King Street, West Chatham. Nauvoo District, David J. Williams, 725 Lewis Street, Burlington, Iowa. Massachusetts District, Miss Enenora Whiting, 184 Lowell Street, Somerville, Massachusetts.

Your correspondence and suggestions will be gratefully received.

Sincerely yours,

ALBERT N. HOXIE.

NEW YORK CITY, 179 Madison Avenue.

"The Messiah"

We have selected the oratorio "The Messiah" as being particularly appropriate for rendition at the next General Conference. It will be an honor for you to participate in this wonderful work. But it means hard work and study. Yes, the very hardest kind of work.

When your conductor takes the chair during the few final rehearsals prior to this performance, it is expected that every member of the combined conference choir will be familiar with the choruses selected from this work. For the good of the cause, and in justice to those who are willing to spend this winter in preparation, we shall not accept the service of any individual who can not present his credentials showing that he has qualified for this production.

A. N. H.

Orchestra Feature

How many of our instrumental players read the announcement by President Frederick M. Smith, relative to the orchestral feature of our work, appearing in the SAINTS' HERALD of August 11, and in the Ensign of the previous week? All who are interested in this new feature, kindly correspond with the general chorister, as the graded course for orchestras is ready.

The 1916 conference series, bound and indexed, will be ready for delivery on October 10. Orders must be in the hands of the general chorister before October 1. Otherwise these anthems can be purchased only in octavo form, which is much more expensive and less desirable. For prices and information pertaining thereto, see the Graded Course Bulletin. If your choir director has not received this bulletin, ask him to send for one.

A. N. H.

Piano Study

(From an address before the musical institute at the late General Conference.)

While wondering how it would be possible to give a few minutes' talk on the subject of the study of piano, I was reminded of the story of the old German music professor who had little patience with the rudimentary teaching and got over the foundation work about this way: "Also, dies iss ja mittle C; das is high C, das der low. Nun also, let us der Waldstein Sonata blay!"

An essential function of the educator, whether he be a teacher of music or of any other art or science, is to awaken and direct the natural faculties of the student. The teacher should inspire the learner to self-development.

In piano we have two main lines of study,—the technical and the musical. The general rules for the technical development of fingers, hands, arms, and shoulders, apply to every student; and then, of course, each one has his particular problems to work out. Some have very weak finger joints, or unruly thumbs, and a great many of the older ones find the principle of relaxation a hard thing to master, when they have not learned it when beginning their piano lessons. This principle has been a much-talked-of factor the last few years, and in their enthusiasm for it, many teachers have taught too much of it. Relaxation, like muscular strength, must be controlled.

It is true that in our time we are hearing less about piano method, and more about the science of piano playing. From the day when a pupil was kept on nothing but finger work and scales for a year or two, we have come to the time of touch exercises, musical studies and Bach. Where the old school relentlessly drilled young fingers, giving them nothing but musical husks for the imagination, we give instead of finger gymnastics, Bach—and more Bach, in whose music floats the best of tonal art. Not only is a young mind taught habits of concentration, but the fingers learn self-independence. Bach should be the daily bread of students and teachers alike.

It has been well said that if a student can master all the things that Bach has composed for the piano he can play anything anyone has ever composed. It is with considerable eagerness that I wait for a pupil who has been given the first "Little Prelude" of Bach for a lesson. To my question, "Did you find this rather tedious?" one little girl looked up with surprise, answering, "Why, no; I rather like it!" And still better, another one came to the piano, opening her book, as she said, "I just love this piece!"

One of the greatest problems is to teach people to cultivate a taste for good music. During the elementary stages of piano teaching there may be many studies and pieces used for development that may not belong in the class of artistic music, and even later one is obliged to use more or less of such music. While regretting the necessity for this, the aim should be to advance the pupil beyond this period as fast as possible, when he may select only such music as is worth listening to. If all the students could be taught from this standpoint it would help amazingly in the development of the musical taste of this country. This is not saying there is not a sphere for light music; but we believe that musical comedies and similar trifles should be enjoyed much the same as the joke column in newspaper or magazine. It is a regrettable fact that parents often buy ragtime for their children, and express delight upon hearing it played. It occurs to me that these same parents would never think of buying dime novels for their children to read.

Often we are asked about the value of harmony to a piano student. When we realize that the study of harmony is the learning to think in music, we will know how great a factor it is in musical development. When Hippocrates said, "Life is short and art is long," he passed one of the greatest truths down to posterity. Perhaps this accounts for the much-talked-of haste and flurry of the American student. In the line of music study, however, this hurrying attitude is fatal. It is not that the American students do not work, but that so many of them work without thinking or listening. This may account for the fact that they are not considered so musical as students of other nationalities, who think always of interpreting their music so that it carries a message to the listener.

I have tried to impress on students that it is impossible to play a piece unless they can first think how it ought to sound. In other words, they must hear it mentally before they make the sounds on the piano. It is so easy to begin to play before one is mentally ready,—especially when one feels a little nervous. I suppose I have said at least a thousand times this year, "Now don't start too soon!" or "Let's begin again, please; you didn't know what you were going to do before you started!" In piano playing a perfect coordination of mind and body must be aimed for. Work is victory!

When we hear only the finished results it is hard to realize what unending work the great pianists have done.

Paderewski said recently, "I try always to hold high the character of my art,—to hold it pure. I will confess to you, that I am a hard, persistent worker!"

De Pachman declares that "Work is my life secret,—work, unending work."

A motto I like to point out to students is: Do not let yourself belong to the worthless multitude of poor players. It is a good thing, I believe, for them to consider early whether they are going to be satisfied with something less than doing their best.

Just a word about piano as an essential preparation for those studying voice culture or solo instruments. So many teachers of voice or violin complain that pupils come to them with insufficient knowledge of piano. I remember a well-known vocal teacher saying, "What a relief it is to find a pupil who can play her own accompaniments!" Often the first question a teacher of pipe-organ asks is, "Do you have a good piano foundation?"

We have often been asked the question, "Shall I insist on my child's practicing his music lesson whether he wants to or not?" The same parents would have no hesitancy in affirmatively answering the question, "Shall I send my child to school, and see that he is preparing his lessons?"

There is a time when the practice hour is looked forward to with very little pleasure, indeed; but this can be overcome in large degree by the interest taken in the child's progress by the mother and other members of the family. Often a child's dislike for practice can be traced to a preference for play with the neighbor children and not to a real dislike for the music lesson itself.

The ridiculous idea seems prevalent that the ordinary price for music tuition is too much to pay for the little folks' beginning lessons. An ill-prepared "cheaper" teacher will do more towards spoiling your child's technic and his appreciation of real music in one year than a good teacher can undo in two years. Since according to the German proverb "Aller Anfang ist schwer," let us be sure to start right in the beginning.

The idea that "sister must take a few music lessons so as to play sometimes for company" is fast disappearing, and people are coming to know how serious a study the pianoforte is, as well as to realize that it is well worth one's best efforts.

LAURA B. KELLEY.

A Little Talk With Teachers of Piano

What are some of the things necessary in a teacher of piano who is to win success as a teacher?

First I would say, A really honest desire to help others; a love for the work which overflows in genuine enthusiasm, making each lesson a pleasure. And this love must be great enough to cover with patience the least promising pupil—and to rejoice with him over every small victory. What he has learned and is learning may seem very little to you, but to him and his home folks it may mean a great deal. And the loving effort expended can not be wasted, even though at times it may seem to be. All know that the best preparation in any line is attained when one starts with an honest aim in view, filled with a strong desire to share with others what he gains. And this very thing will bring about the ability to impart the good.

Then there must be the talent of seeing, distinctly, the need of each pupil, and of applying directly and quickly the necessary stimulus, or check rein. To ignore the mental call is often to discourage the one, or to fail to interest another. There must be mutual interest of some sort between teacher and pupil, and that pupil advances most rapidly who brings to a conscientious teacher a mind open and unprejudiced, plus a hunger for music.

If the pupil has ideas already formed, it is well to bring them up during the lesson hour and compare them with the teacher's ideas. Far better is this than to silently disagree, or mentally fight what you do not understand. Every good teacher has a plan in general and more than often a plan in particular for each pupil. As long as there exists a closed door between teacher and pupil, no teacher can lead the pupil in the upward path. To explain and illustrate the beauty of phrase, sentence, or solo, is only possible when the thought of the pupil calls it forth. And the others who yet must attain this truly teachable stage, the teacher must slowly, quietly lead toward the promised land.

Oh, the joy in the finding when a dull, hopeless looking clod of earth breaks open, revealing tender blades! The promise! With great thankfulness the teacher knows that now the door is open; love will bring the plant to maturity and blossom.

Many and various are the kinds of plants in this teaching garden, but to the gardener teacher it is all the more interesting, for each has his own place to fill, and each has his own special niche in the heart of the culturist. The violet, the daisy, the rose, the lily, the pompous chrysanthemum, and many more are found in blossoming time. But the gardener in each case must be able to recognize each plant when it puts forth its first leaves, else the blossoming will be delayed, faulty if not altogether blasted.

To come back to the real working plan: It is not possible to lead the pupil to flowering maturity without first gaining a working knowledge of roots. The hand must be trained and formed; and just in proportion as the teacher is successful in impressing the pupil with the necessity of thinking and listening as he practices the finger work, and scales, in just that proportion does he see results. Concentration of thought is necessary in all lines we well know, but to gain a strong, active, supple hand and fingers it is imperative to think. Part of each lesson hour must be given over to earnest effort on the part of both teacher and pupil in this line. Having done this, turn to the studies expecting perfection in notes and rhythm, and if the study holds a poetic thought, point it out and attempt its expression. There are those pupils coming from careless teachers who can not seem to grasp any one thing to perform it technically correct; yet patient striving will prove even to these that it can be done.

The clearest and best results are shown by always being sure that each pupil has studies suited to his needs and, that they are not beyond his reading ability. To have the confidence and knowledge of a study played from beginning to end without a stop or mistake acts like a spur to the pupil. It gives him hope, and more than often fires a dormant ambition leading to high attainment.

Following these two steps comes the expression of thoughts in tones. In the solos or duets seeking first the composer's meaning or ideas, and expressing these ideas according to our highest concept of truth. Warm, pulsing, honest tones are ever backed by that quality of thought. Few realize that they are showing character or lack of it when they play. But it is nevertheless true, to those who have eyes that see and ears that hear.

A small child very readily grasps the idea of talking with his fingers on the white ivories. A grasshopper? Well, then he must jump like the ones in the sunny fields. A little melody? Then it must sing like a voice.

And the older ones will find a study of the lives and folklore of each nation represented will do much toward opening up the meaning of the classics.

Each pupil unconsciously approaches the ideal held by the teacher, and we do well if we are quite sure a sound, intelligent, moral thinker is leading our thoughts upward. A music lesson is infinitely more than a few notes on a sheet of music.

To learn to express a true thought, or to teach another to express a true thought, should be the aim of every honest seeker of the beautiful in the realm of music.

MAUDE BOND WOODALL, B. M.

Notes of the Staff

After a month's "vacation" from regular duties (and privileges!), the members of the Omaha Choir were favored with a very enjoyable reception (following a short but energetic rehearsal) on the evening of the 3d. This reception was given by the officers of the choir, and served to start the season with much enthusiasm. The long tables in the basement of the church were tastefully decorated with fall flowers, candle lights, crepe paper, and "eatables," and presented a picture of grace and beauty, calling forth expressions of appreciation from the thirty-five fortunate singers present. The "father of the flock," Brother H. A. Scott, president of the branch, as well as basso profundo in the choir, gave a most inspiring talk upon the relations between the choir and the branch, and pointed out many ways in which the former is a help and tower of strength to the latter. His talk was followed by one from Sister Anderson, upon the "General choir movement," in which she presented the possibilities and the advantages of getting into line and whole-hearted support of this effort. Brother Craig, as director, then told of some of the plans for the year, and managed to make every member present feel that he will be missing something he can not recover should he, by any mischance, fail to be present at any session of the choir.

The Omaha Choir voted to hold a musical convention on October 22, 23, and 24. Brother E. C. Bell, of Saint Louis, the newly-appointed assistant chorister of the church, will be present and in charge, and other talented musicians of the church will assist in various ways. All the neighboring choirs are cordially invited to come in numbers, either as whole organizations or represented through delegates. Committees on reception, publicity, and other features, were appointed, and if all plans mature and a hearty cooperation is had, a feast of good things will result.

N. B. If the "Notes of the Staff" issues now appear to be rather exclusive, and run to doings of the Omaha choir more than others, remember we can not write of what we are not apprised of and other choirs and other places have no one but themselves to blame. The Staff editor, like other editors, is extremely anxious for good copy, and she has repeatedly invited and urged all choirs to report their musical activities.

A. A.

Letter Department

GALES FERRY, CONNECTICUT, August 1, 1915.

Editors Herald: The Onset, Massachusetts, reunion is at an end. We were favored with the presence of Brethren G. T. Griffiths, E. L. Kelley, Joseph Luff, F. M. Smith, U. W. Greene and others. Though there was much rain, we were reasonably well, and received a great spiritual uplift.

Let us all put our shoulders to the wheel and lighten the load by bearing our own burdens as much as possible, and also bearing what we can of the burdens of others.

We ask the Saints to pray for a young lady near here who has been striving to serve God, but not lawfully. Through fasting and striving she has brought on a nervous collapse, and Satan has taken control of her. I have prayed with faith that God would restore her and lead her to the true faith.

With love to all, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

THOMAS G. WHIPPLE.

NEW WESTMINSTER, BRITISH COLUMBIA, August 18, 1915

Editors Herald: We express joy and pleasure at still being found faithful to this latter-day work, and also for the many blessings God has showered upon us during the last year. Although separated from Saints for nearly a year, except when I went about seventy miles to Creston and met Brother and Sister Robert Boodway, who are trying hard in their isolated condition to live worthy Saints, I was greatly blessed in making many friends, some of whom are honest in heart and need only a missionary or a good elder to hold services in Cranbrook, to lead them into the fold.

There has been no missionary work done in East Kootenay except a few services at Creston a great while ago. I was in that district for nearly a year, but being unable to get work and being troubled with asthma, I came to Vancouver. I tried while there to do all I could to let my light shine. If I had some of Bishop Evans's sermons and some tracts to send to these people I think they would do good. One of those interested was the wife of a leading physician there, who is very wealthy.

God was good to me and permitted me to come to Vancouver, where I have been permitted to meet with the Saints again, and in permitting me to enjoy the acquaintance and friendship of Elder and Sister Isaac McMullen, before they were directed to other fields of labor. He was in charge of Vancouver Mission of the New Westminster Branch. They were the first Saints to live in Vancouver, moving there fifteen or sixteen years ago. The first services held there were held in their house, by Elder Macgregor. They were persecuted, but stood faithful. Brother McMullen was first ordained a priest here, and afterwards an elder. He did what he could between Vancouver and New Westminster, to build up the work. After the death of Brother Rainey he was elected president of New Westminster Branch, filling that office until Brother Pope came from London.

Vancouver Mission is something that many other branches with more members would do well in equalling. This mission owns an organ, chairs, pulpit, and has a fine hall rented.

As a slight token of the esteem in which Brother and Sister McMullen are held, they were presented with a suit case at the monthly Religio social held in August. In their leaving Vancouver some other branch or branches will gain. They went from here to Calgary.

Brother Johnson, formerly of Toronto, who came here a few months ago, has been of assistance to the work.

If there are any Saints living in Provo, Utah, who know the children of George Manning, who went there from Ohio with Brigham Young, I will be pleased to have them write Mrs. C. Burdick, Sapperton, New Westminster, British Columbia. This woman is a cousin of theirs.

I ask God's blessing to rest upon us all, so that we may labor together in building up his kingdom.

In gospel bonds,

338 Twelfth Street.

GEORGE W. WIND.

News from Missions

Northern Wisconsin

This is a country vicinity, among the hills and valleys of western Wisconsin, where I arrived last evening after a tire-some day's journey. I expect to begin meetings here soon, and may continue ten days. There is one family of Saints in this vicinity. There is much to do in missionary work in northwestern Wisconsin.

After the winter's work in the mission field, I arrived at my home at Clitherall, Minnesota, the latter part of March. I had thought some of attending the General Conference, but as the demand for labor seemed great and the expense and time required to attend conference being considerable, I thought it more profitable to spend the time otherwise, so after remaining at home about ten days, I was called to Brother Maynard Peterson's, about twelve miles away, to hold meetings in answer to the urgent petition of some in that community. We had very good meetings.

Returning home, I helped wife and the boys with the work a few weeks. May 2 I said good-by again, and started for my field in Wisconsin. Arriving at Superior and remaining over night, I went on the next day to Gordon, and here with profit I spent a week holding meetings and visiting the few Saints and some others in this little town.

I then hurried on to Chetek to assist in making arrangements for the reunion. After visiting the Saints and doing some preaching at Porcupine and Black River Falls, I again returned to Chetek to attend the reunion. I think we had the best reunion held in the district. Weather and attendance were good. There were nine missionaries with us, besides various other brethren of the priesthood. Elder G. R. Wells, superintendent of the General Sunday School Association, was in attendance and did a good work, which was much appreciated. Brother L. W. Fike did some work by way of furnishing entertainment for children, which, while somewhat new in our reunion, seemed to be greatly enjoyed. There seems no reason why such work, if properly carried on, can not be helpful and beneficial, giving relief to the mothers and instruction and entertainment to the children. Brother and Sister Pitt's lecture and lantern pictures of their travels in foreign lands was much enjoyed, especially their song in the Tahitian language. During the conference the Saints decided to purchase an additional piece of land adjoining the reunion grounds. Thus we now have a very fine camp ground.

We hope all the Saints of the district will kindly remember the necessities of the Lord's work and help it along financial lines. The kind Master has given another harvest and many other blessings. Will we fail to return to him that which is lawfully his? The hour and time to fulfill the law is now.

The past few weeks I have been laboring at Valley Junction, Necedah, and Union Center. Considering the discouraging conditions that have prevailed at the two former places the past few years, we were pleased to note the interest and attendance, which were very good. Some are nearly ready to accept the gospel at these places. Thus the good work goes on, and we hope for better things in time to come.

The Saints at Porcupine are raising up the church building at that place and putting in a full basement. This is going to be a nice thing for the work. The district conference will be held there in February, and we hope for a good attendance. The Saints at Black River Falls in their enterprising way, bought a small missionary tent this spring, which Brother L. W. Fike has been using with good attendance and interest near New Auburn and also near Chetek. I am planning on starting north a few weeks and stopping at several places on my way.

I was surprised and sad to note the recent death of Brother William H. Kelley. Soon the "Old Guard" will all have passed from their conflict here. They have fought a good fight, and have kept the faith.

All things are moving on at a rapid rate in the world's great conflict. We are eagerly watching from week to week to see what is happening.

L. HOUGHTON.

TUNNEL CITY, WISCONSIN, August 16, 1915.

Southern Missouri

We just closed two months of tent work in this city. While we can not count any additions by baptism, our tent was well filled with what appeared to be an interested congregation most of the time, and we have reasons to believe the seed sown will yet bear fruit. I notice quite a difference in the attitude of the people toward our church and people here from what it used to be. The Saints as a rule have proven themselves a good, honest people, and we are certainly proud of our little flock. Our faithful branch president, John Quinly, resigned after serving us sixteen years. We elected a younger man who is trying hard to make good.

The branch bought a new tent for city work, and it fell to me to take charge. The Saints of the district will understand, therefore, why the district president has not called on them before this. The tent season will soon be over, and I will then make the rounds of the branches.

Several attended the Joplin reunion, with the writer and his daughter, Mrs. Plum. I am sure if all could realize the good to be gathered in attending some reunion they would make more of an effort to attend. Brother Quick had charge of the Joplin reunion, and he is a live wire. He was ably assisted by others, who tried hard to make the affair a success. So far as I could judge, it surely was a success.

At the close of this reunion daughter and I went to Rich Hill, and there the same true Spirit prevailed. Brother Macrae was the main spoke in the wheel, and was a busy one. The preaching and other services were edifying and uplifting. Brother Tanner was there and made quite an impression as a temperance speaker with the Ninety-Niners, who came in a body to the tent to hear him, and who the next day invited all the male Latter Day Saints of the camp to a fine banquet, at which we all made a hit. Near the close of the reunion Brother Sheehy came and gave us some advice. The reunion closed in a thunderstorm, which scattered us in a lively manner.

Daughter and I came to Mapleton, Kansas, to visit old-time Saints, and I was pressed into service for a week, with good attendance. I was glad to meet many familiar faces. It surely does one good to get out among others once in a while, and I never was any place that looked better than the Queen City of the Ozarks.

I wish to say to all Saints attending the State normal at our city, that we are always glad to see them attend our meetings. Call us up by phone, 2004J, and we will direct you how to find us and the church.

Yours in bonds,

HENRY SPARLING.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, 2002 Kilham Street, Aug. 29, 1915.

Central Nebraska

Elder J. W. Smith and the writer labored together in Antelope and Madison counties for about one month. Five were baptized. Brother Smith then went to South Dakota. I have done no labor since, having come home ill July 20. I am now slowly gaining, and hope soon to be fit for duty. Some of our plans for labor will necessarily have to be abandoned, but efforts will be made to reach the most urgent ones. Let us hear from the Saints. Brother W. O. Self is in the district, and we hope for good results from his efforts.

I sought to resign as bishop's agent, but just received a letter from the Bishop saying nothing had been done about appointing an agent for the district, and hoping I would be able to continue; so until further notice the Saints may continue sending tithing and offerings to

ELI GAMET.

INMAN, NEBRASKA, August 30, 1915.

British Isles

We have now entered into the fifth year of our sojourn in London. Ofttimes we have felt discouraged at the outlook; at other times more hopeful, as we have seen the twos and threes gather into the fold, yet it is far short of what we would wish to see. When we look upon the vast field, and the great number who have not as yet heard the latter-day message, we have often been inspired with the thought that surely God has yet a people among this great throng of humanity that crowds this and other great cities in the British Isles. When we think of so many of Zion's children in America, who are natives of this country, who no doubt have many friends and relations still residing in this land, whom they would rejoice to see gathered out of Babylon into the kingdom of light, that they may partake not of her sin, and receive not of her plagues, the question arises, How are they to be reached? We are without the means at hand to push forward the gospel work, and those here who hold the priesthood and who would like to do something to forward the cause are laboring men who have to work late and early to support their families, with no leisure time to study and fit themselves for service.

Brother May, who has charge of the work of the bishopric in the British Isles, can find but little time to devote to missionary work, having to be away visiting other branches teaching the financial law, which most of the Saints feel a great desire to understand, he being away week ends at a time, and no one to leave in charge of park and open-air work in his absence, to hold the interest of those who may have become interested by his efforts at times. Under such conditions, how can church work prosper and grow? It is a trying position to be placed in, yet we would be willing to remain in this land a few years longer, provided one or two good, active elders could be placed here in London, who could put their whole time in looking after missionary work, tracting by day and preaching in the evening in the parks and public squares, together with a little hall, large enough to be noticeable and sufficiently attractive to be inviting to the passer-by. As it is, we are more like missionary tramps, without any established public place of worship except our own private house, and unable to properly represent ourselves before the public.

Again, when one considers such a vast concourse of people, nearly seven and a half million, in such a small compass of territory comparatively, how often we have thought what a good thing it would be if we could be provided with a motor car, with two good missionaries to occupy. How many places could be reached in different parts of the city! and what a gospel messenger it would be! It would answer for a preaching stand, and also would carry a few singers from place to place. Think of the many autos that are used for business and pleasure-seeking purposes, and yet the greatest and most important business on earth, the great gospel work, is dragging and lingering behind in this fast age, for the very need of such assistance. How is the world going to be warned, and who is going to stand responsible or without excuse at the day of reckoning, if this is a day of sacrifice and self-denial?

We have been often reminded by the Lord through his servants of what is required of his children. If we have not the interest in the building up of his kingdom that we have in our own personal interests and pleasures of life, how shall we answer to him for the stewardship which he has intrusted to our care, and what kind of an inheritance will we receive? Will we receive our crown of glory? will there be any stars in that crown? Oh, may these questions appeal to us all. May the Spirit of God stir the hearts of the children of the kingdom to make the sacrifices he requires at their hands; that when their Lord comes they may not be weighed in the balance and found wanting. Let us be ready and waiting for the midnight cry, "Go ye out to meet him."

I can truly say I am becoming attached to this land and its people. Among them can be found as good and as kind-hearted people as can be found in any part of the world. They have been very kind to us in this mission. I have seldom had the privilege of going out with my husband to visit the different parts of the mission, as it takes money to travel, and there being no half-fare permits for missionaries, and since the war, no excursion rates, not even the regular week-end rates. However, I accompanied him to Gloucester, to attend the Eastern Wales district conference. It was a very enjoyable trip. Being midsummer, all nature was clothed in its most beautiful attire, the air fresh and pure, so different from the smoky air of the city. We glided along through hills and valleys, with winding streams and canals, over smooth and well-kept roads. We noticed that every little nook and corner of spare ground was utilized and artistically arranged into neat little flower beds, that seemed to smile a cheery welcome to the passer-by. It was refreshing to one after being housed up in London all winter, not saying but what London has its many attractions of parks and flowers, and also many historical things that are very interesting. When within a half-hour ride of our destination, we passed through the picturesque town of Stroud. Soon reaching Gloucester, we were met by Brother A. T. Trapp, who conducted us to his home, where we were made welcome by his kind-hearted companion. We met in the evening in their neat little hall. Business was called to order by Brother J. E. Trapp, all taking an active part in the business.

Sunday we listened to short, inspiring addresses by promising young men of the priesthood. We met again in the afternoon with the Saints at the prayer meeting, where, to our joy and encouragement, we were comforted by the voice of the Spirit, exhorting the Saints to greater faithfulness to duty, with the promise of blessings to follow their obedience. On Sunday and Monday nights Brother May discoursed on the law of inheritance and consecration, and all seemed anxious to hear the higher law. Among those present were a bright and intelligent German lady and her husband, who we learned have been baptized since, with others of the family investigating. We visited at the homes of Brethren Meadors and Smith, where we received the kindest of treatment.

Brother Trapp undertook to show us the historical part of the town. First we noted the cathedral, which for beauty is next to the Westminster Abbey of London, and which was ruined by the hands of Oliver Cromwell and his men, but has since been restored to its former beauty. Going down through its corridors and chambers, too numerous to mention, we passed out through the yard where the monks and friars did their work. Just across from this stands the life-sized statue of Bishop Hooper, upon the spot where he was burned to death for stating his honest convictions that Christ and not the king, was the head of the church. Wending our way through narrow passages, we were brought to the world-renowned and old-styled house, with its low ceiling that could be touched by a reach of the hand, where Robert Raikes started the first Sunday school. Purchasing a few penny pictures of the house, we hastily made our way to Brother Smith's for lunch, so generously provided. We said good-by and took the train for home, feeling much the better for our trip.

Again, August 1, we attended the mission conference at Manchester. The business passed off without a jar. - One could feel that the Saints had the gospel work at heart, and we were impressed with the seriousness of the times, sorrow and mourning on every hand, realizing that the day of calamity and desolation has come, to lay waste and destroy, when those who will not hear the warning voice of God will feel his chastening hand. There seemed to be an awakening of the Saints, and on Monday night we met to engage in a farewell social meeting which proved to be the crowning spiritual feast of the conference. A refreshing shower from the Lord was bestowed upon his children, exhorting them to renewed efforts and diligence of duty, with the promise that if obedient to his voice, the destroying angel would pass them by as it did the children of Israel. It was soul-reviving, and all parted, strengthened and feeling to renew their covenant to be more diligent in coming days. Three young ladies were baptized, one, a Miss Dorie Gray, of the London Sunday school.

Tuesday we visited with Brother Leggott for dinner, and enjoyed a pleasant drive in his motor car in the afternoon, accompanied by himself, wife and son, the latter proving to be an excellent driver. We visited a beautiful seaside resort called Black-Pool, about fifty miles from Manchester, and after spending about two hours there, again reached Manchester about nine o'clock. On Thursday, parting with Brother and Sister Armstrong, with whom we made our home during our stay and whose kindness we will not soon forget, we reached home in the evening, finding daughter and family safe and well.

SISTER RODERICK MAY.

LONDON, ENGLAND, 58 Ickburgh Road, Upper Clapton, August 21, 1915.

Hoosier Variations

During the past two months I have occupied at Knox, Ora, Burr Oak and Hibbard, Indiana. Small attendance at Knox, however. I enjoyed splendid liberty when talking to the few kind Saints and friends.

We have no organization at Ora, but we have a nice little brick church, which was erected at a great sacrifice, and with but little outside help. A sect holding the name "Church of God" gave thirty dollars toward the erection of the building. Of course they frequently worship there.

I spoke five evenings at Burr Oak in a church owned by a sect called The Church of God (these are first-day folk, while the others were seventh-day folk). Pretty good attendance, but prejudice galore. I was misrepresented and accused of everything, from chicken stealing to dealing in white slavery.

While making the above-mentioned tour "the powers that be" got busy and ordered the Evangelical church closed against us, at Hibbard. We had only two members there, and they as well as many outsiders donated to the building of the church. But common consent is a small thing with the Evangelicals—like their mother, Rome, they will rule or ruin. We went to the schoolhouse near by and opened fire in dead earnest. They talked of starting a movement that might close the school building, and I plainly told them even if they did that they would not get rid of me, for I would go to the street, and that the only way to get rid of me was to break my neck and throw me in the river and then I would rise again.

We began at the schoolhouse August 20. Sunday evening, the 22d, was the reverend's regular appointment at the church, so we kindly dismissed and helped furnish him a crowd (I am told that he seldom had half so many). He read Proverbs 23:23: "Buy the truth, and sell it not." He said he would only have time to handle the first half of the text, "Buy the truth." He was soon crying "false prophet," "many wives," etc. He reached his climax by begging the people not to be led away by fine-looking men, speaking great, swelling words, for, said he, the Devil can appear as an angel of light. Once before, under similar circumstances a minister's text was, "When the sons of God came together." He advised his flock to stay away from the schoolhouse unless the Holy Spirit should prompt them to go. Judging from the crowd that greeted me Monday night, I concluded that the Holy Spirit had done his work.

The following Sunday morning he returned to finish his text, but as it was not a regular appointment, we also had services. The Holy Spirit evidently kept working, for that afternoon we baptized twelve (we had already baptized one), so thirteen were baptized, and two more gave their names and will be taken in later. One of the number had been baptized by the Evangelical minister, and three had been taken into his church, but not yet baptized. Many more are deeply interested. We only held ten days, and had to close for their school preparation.

In the conflict,

O. R. MILLER.

Farewell to Hawaii

I was requested to write to the HERALD about our last days in Hawaii, and the farewell from the Saints there. It is hard for me to turn my memory back to write of those events (though I never wish to forget them), because of the feeling of sadness at the parting which always returns to me as I think of the beautiful islands and the people there.

It caused the deepest sense of regret to me that we were forced to leave the islands, more so because I was the cause of our leaving; it seemed as if I could not give up and go home. At one time I was ready to go home with my auntie, but was administered to and admonished to stay with my husband, so changed my plans. For about six weeks after that administration I was perfectly well, but another attack of the trouble alarmed my husband, and he obtained his release to come home.

I would rather be a help than a hindrance to the work. Who would not be? That is the great regret I have for leaving Hawaii. I can not recall the last days at Hilo without tears. Hilo is one of the most beautiful little towns on earth, with the sea lying calm and beautiful at its feet, and the mountains rising back of it. I did not like to think I was looking upon Mauna Kea for the last time. But it was not the beautiful scenery that held our hearts to Hilo.

Never has any parting with friends caused me the sorrow that this parting did. I think because I felt we were leaving them as sheep without a shepherd to wander, nobody knows where. The Saints in Honolulu have one of the best of shepherds in Brother Waller, but the might-have-been Saints on Hawaii have no one to teach them.

We were all there the last Sunday, and all in tears. Brother Davis could scarcely preach the farewell sermon for his own emotion. We generally held but one service on Sunday, but on that last Sunday everyone wanted a final session of the Bible class, and it was held. The interest in discussion for a moment made us forget that we would soon be parted, but when at the close of the session Mrs. Shipman arose and presented for the Sunday school a koa calabash to Brother Davis, and a koa tray to myself the gloom of parting came over us once more.

As I said before, it is hard to recall these scenes without tears. Perhaps the details would not be interesting—how we visited the homes of the friends we had learned to love, prayed with them, and bade good-by with broken voices. We had dinner that last day at the Rhinehardt home, and it was surely a lovely dinner, and the little band who met that day, perhaps for the last time, forgot that oceans would soon lie between us, and just fell to and ate, until we were certain we three would be most heartily seasick.

I forgot to mention Healani, the third member of our party. She is the daughter of Sister Antone, one of our very active workers in the church in Honolulu. Healani had been with us for six weeks, and had helped a whole lot to keep us from lonesomeness. We had grown quite attached to her, and began to dream dreams about taking her with us. I really was afraid they would not materialize, but Healani said confidently, "I am going," and she did go. But that is getting ahead of the story.

The trip between the two islands, Hawaii and Oahu, was the best we ever made, even I was not seasick, but enjoyed the trip. I must not miss this chance of correcting the Sunday School Association secretary of Hawaiian geography. Hilo is not a small island near Hawaii, as the conference HERALD stated, but it is the largest town on Hawaii, the largest island of the Hawaiian group. Honolulu is by far the largest city, but it is situated on the small island of Oahu. We started from Hilo, Monday afternoon, June 28, and reached Honolulu the next morning. Sister Antone was on the wharf to meet us—I say meet us, but Mrs. Antone's eyes were searching for her girl, who was coming home, after being away from mother the first time in her life.

Honolulu was glorious that day with golden shower and ponciana regis. I never saw anything like it before. I never expect to again, unless I go to Honolulu in June. My window was a Japanese picture in a frame, a picture of drooping boughs of golden shower. Our stay in Honolulu was too short. We didn't even get to see our friends and tell them we were going. We were there only two or three days. However, the Saints gathered at the church on Wednesday night to wish us Godspeed. It is the custom there to give the departing missionaries a social, with plenty of ice cream and cake and a good time for all. There was not time for this in our case, but such is the good heart of the Hawaiian people that they showed their aloha for the missionaries in so substantial a way. After an eloquent speech, Brother Isaac Harbottle presented a purse, the gift of the Honolulu Saints. The purse itself was a beautiful souvenir of Hawaii, and within was a parting gift of fifty dollars. These are not a rich people, but for liberality and hospitality they are unexcelled.

Then there were the farewell speeches. Brethren Harbottle, Lee, Puuohau, Kalii and Cockett were among the speakers, and Sisters Thompson, Kanui and Dolly Lee, spoke also. We responded as best we could but we could not express our appreciation of the thoughts expressed by these brothers and sisters. How we wished that we might have been able to have done a work worthy of this loving remembrance. There may have been others who spoke that night whom I have failed to mention, but I do not mean to overlook any. One and all expressed the most beautiful of sentiments.

Resolutions were drafted to present the members of the Presidency. These messages express the confidence of the Honolulu Saints in our newly-ordained Presidency, and although delayed in transit, will soon be personally presented to Brethren Frederick M. Smith and Elbert A. Smith, and I hope published, so the Saints elsewhere will know that we in Hawaii are with the rest of the church in spirit, even though long distance separates us from the main body, in fact.

We were sorry to bid the Saints farewell, and we hope the day may come when we will meet them all again in this earth life, but if not, we know that assurance that comes with every Saint's good-by, that even though life separate us, some day we will meet with "joy 'round His throne."

We are in San Francisco now, at home, and feel like we were home, but our girlie is far from home and a dear, kind mother, and she misses them very much. We want her to go to Graceland, and then fit herself for some sphere of usefulness among her people. I hope the Saints, young and old, who meet this young sister from Hawaii, at school and elsewhere, will try to make her feel happy and at home in this strange land. She has come a long way from her homeland and a loving mother, and it will take a great deal of courage for her to "stick it out," unless she is everywhere made to feel that she is at home wherever there are Saints of God.

My letter is long drawn out, so I will not speak of our work at the fair, but save that for "another time."

With best wishes for the success of the work everywhere,
Sincerely your sister,

INEZ SMITH DAVIS.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, August 18, 1915.

News from Branches

Winnipeg, Manitoba

We are still striving to keep the gospel work moving here, although it seems very hard indeed, to interest the people. However, we do not intend to give up the struggle, but wish to press onward and upward, ever striving to follow the One who was destined to be a leader and commander to the people.

During the last week of July a special effort was made by Brethren N. Wilson district president, and E. F. Robertson, who is our missionary this year, to get the gospel before the people. The district tent was set up in the suburbs of the city, and the vicinity round about was canvassed and bills distributed by the sisters. A number of outsiders attended, some quite regularly, and there appeared to be a little interest at the time, but up to the present no visible results have been accomplished; yet, we can not, of course, measure the good that may have been done. The seed has been sown, and we pray that some of it, at least, may have fallen on good ground and will bear fruit.

We are glad indeed, to read from time to time of the spreading of the gospel in other places, and pray that the time may be hastened when the work in this part of the vineyard may move onward more rapidly. Our branch here is small. A number have moved away the past year or so, and others may leave soon. The Sunday school and Religio work is progressing. Quite a number of children belonging to non-members attend our Sunday school and quite an interest is taken in this department of the work; we trust that it may continue.

Certainly the conditions existing to-day in the world point very clearly to the near approach of the second coming of Christ; and viewing the conditions as we see them, both in the church and without, the words of the Master often come to us, wherein he asked the question, When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?

We are glad for the gift of the gospel and the measure of God's Spirit that we have enjoyed. It is our desire to be among those who will be counted worthy, and we hope that we may be instrumental in assisting others to see the light, and to "come up higher."

Ever praying for the advancement of the work in every department,
Your sister in the faith,

ESTELLA HAYWARD.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes

WESTERN MAINE.—Little Deer Isle, August 21 and 22. Reports: West Surry 84; Little Deer Isle 118; Sargentville 26; Mountainville 51; Stonington 237. Bishop's agent, Henry R. Eaton, reported: Receipts, $792.63; expenditures, $250. Treasurer, Pearl F. Billings, reported on hand $23.31. Auditors reported accounts correct. There were present President Frederick M. Smith, Isaac M. Smith, and two elders from eastern Maine. Adjourned to meet with Mountainville Branch in November, date left with presidency and minister in charge. George H. Knowlton, secretary.

Conference Notices

Youngstown-Sharon, Saints' chapel, Harrison Avenue, near Market Street, Youngstown, Ohio, October 2 and 3. Time devoted to worship and educational work. We desire to organize district associations of Sunday school and Religio.

Nodaway, October 9 and 10, Union Church, near Bedison, with Bedison Branch, 10 a. m. Committees, branch presidents, etc., send reports to secretary one week before conference. Election of officers. W. B. Torrance, secretary, Bolchow, Missouri.

Kewanee, Joy, Illinois, October 2. Delegates to General Conference chosen. President E. A. Smith has promised to be with us if all goes well. Branch clerks send reports to district secretary not later than September 27. Those expecting to attend notify O. E. Sade or J. W. Bean, Joy, Illinois. Mary E. Gillen, secretary, 115 Clarke Avenue, Peoria, Illinois.

Gallands Grove, September 25 and 26, Gallands Grove, Iowa. Good attendance is desired, as this may be the last conference held in Gallands Grove on account of number of scattered members. Visiting Saints met at Dow City and Dunlap Friday and Saturday forenoons. Those coming later phone number 16 Dunlap. L. C. Hatch, secretary.

Southern Missouri, Mill Spring, October 16 and 17. Branch and ministerial reports should be sent to undersigned one week before conference. Branch presidents, see that district dues are sent with reports to meet expenses. Expect some leading officials of the mission. Benjamin Pearson, secretary, Tigris, Missouri.

Central Michigan, Glover Branch, October 9 and 10. Visitors will be met at Bently, those coming from north on Michigan Central at Standish, Thursday afternoon. Branch secretaries should report. Those who can should bring bedding. George W. Burt, president.

Fremont, with Henderson Branch, October 16; 11 a. m. Convention of auxiliaries held previous to conference. We hope for a full representation. T. A. Hougas, president.

Pottawattamie, Underwood, Iowa, 10.30 a. m., September 25. Send all documents on or before the 20th, to J. Charles Jensen, secretary.

Toronto, Port Elgin, Ontario, October 2 and 3. At the 1914 conference resolution prevailed that meals be paid for at conferences, 15 cents each for adults and 10 cents for children under 12. Send delegate credentials to secretary not later than September 25, box 340, Dunnville, Ontario. D. B. Perkins, president; Floralice Miller, secretary.

Convention Notices

Southern Missouri Sunday school, Mill Spring, October 15. Myrtle E. Pearson, secretary.

Toronto Religio, Port Elgin, Ontario, October 1, 2 p. m. Send delegate credentials to secretary not later than September 25, box 340, Dunnville, Ontario. Earnest Rowett president; Floralice Miller, secretary.

Requests for Prayers

Sister L. B. Aschbrenner asks prayers for her son, that he may recover from injury and that he may obey the gospel.

Pastoral

To the Saints of Southwestern Oregon District: Owing to Brother T. W. Chatburn's continued ill health he thought it advisable to return home. We regret very much to lose our brother's services and association, which are appreciated very highly, and earnestly pray our heavenly Father will return to him his health.

We have decided to request Brother F. J. Chatburn to resume his position as president of the district, which position he generously resigned last conference in favor of his father; also that Brother A. A. Baker associate with Brother William Smith in the vice presidency. These three brethren will care for the district as usual until we meet in conference. Brother Bronson will take care of the missionary work and labor in cooperation with the district presidency as before announced.

All district matters and reports must be presented to F. J. Chatburn, Bandon, Oregon. JOHN W. RUSHTON.
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, 281 Castro Street, August 24, 1915.

Died

MCINTOSH.—Cornelius Green McIntosh was born March 14, 1827, at Gibson County, Tennessee; died August 17, 1915, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, Married three times, his last wife, Emma Stevens McIntosh, preceding him in death July 31, 1910. To these unions 5 children were born, of which 1 son, John A. McIntosh, survives. Baptized in the old church, 1839, by Zechariah Wilson, and in the latter part of May, 1860, was baptized and confirmed in the Reorganized Church by his father, John A. McIntosh, at Crescent, Iowa. At the organization of the Crescent Branch he was chosen teacher, and in the fall of the same year was ordained to the office of elder. Filled a mission in the winter of 1862, in Lee County, Iowa. In 1864 was ordained a seventy at Parks Mill, Pottawattamie County, under W. W. Blair and John A. McIntosh. Was appointed to a mission in Utah the same year. At the last semiannual conference held in western Iowa he was ordained a high priest, James Caffall officiating. Besides filling two missions, he did a great deal of local labor, principally in Pottawattamie and Gallands Grove districts. He had lived an upright, conscientious Christian life, a staunch defender of the latter-day work, ever striving to hold aloft the banner of King Emmanuel until forced by age and infirmities to lay it down. Many true friends mourn his departure, but we know that our loss will be his gain, for he did what he could. Service at Crescent, Iowa, sermon by D. R. Chambers, assisted by H. N. Hansen, a large circle of friends attending.

MASON.—At Rochester, Minnesota, August 24, 1915, Victor Mason, son of Sister Elvina Mason, of Lamoni, Iowa, aged 41 years, 2 months, 15 days. Mother, wife, son, 2 brothers survive him. Diseases that caused his death were catarrhal troubles and gallstones. The body was brought to Lamoni for burial services by H. A. Stebbins and A. S. Cochran.

LUNDEGREN.—At Lamoni, Iowa, August 31, 1915, Brother Swen Nelson Lundegren, aged 84 years, 5 months. Deceased was born in Stockholm, Sweden, married in 1851. They came to America in 1862, and walked across the plains to Utah in the 60's. Seeing the errors there, they returned East in 1871, heard the Reorganized Church doctrines and united in 1875. Of 6 children, Alma, of Amarillo, Texas, one daughter at Seattle, Washington, and one near Lamoni, with the wife, survive. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins assisted by A. S. Cochran.

BUTTS.—At Lamoni, Iowa, August 31, Sister Nancy J. Butts, aged 83 years, 5 months, 16 days. Born in Covington, Kentucky, married Harrison Butts in 1853. No children were born to them. From 1883 to 1903 deceased lived in Monona County, Iowa, when she came to Lamoni and lived in the Saints' Home. Baptized at Logan, Iowa, in 1895, by David Chambers, and adhered faithfully to the gospel. Services by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by A. S. Cochran.

BLISS.—John L. Bliss, born March 22, 1855, Lamont, Illinois; died in Oklahoma, September 5, 1915. Married Catherine Rooney in May, 1880. To them were born 6 children, 3 of whom died in infancy, the others living with their father until his death. His companion preceded him 7 years ago. They came to Oklahoma in 1909, where Brother Bliss and 2 daughters were baptized, 4 years ago by Hubert Case. He was one of the noblest men of world, loved by all who knew him, for his honesty and honorable life. A large crowd listened with intent interest to the funeral sermon by Hubert Case, from John 10: 21, 22, assisted by A. W. Sanders.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
 The Angel Message Tracts - - - - 881
 Current Events - - - - - 883
 Notes and Comments - - - - - 884
 Hymns and Poems - - - - - 884

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
 How to Receive a Blessing, by F. J. Ebeling - 887
 Obedience Brings Redemption, by Arthur Allen - 888
 Loyalty to the King, by H. J. Davison - 890

OF GENERAL INTEREST:
 Enormous Trade - - - - - 892

THE STAFF - - - - - 893
 Audentia Anderson—Albert N. Hoxie—Laura B. Kelley—Maude Bond Woodall, B. M.

LETTER DEPARTMENT - - - - - 896
 Thomas G. Whipple—Georgé W. Wind.

NEWS FROM MISSIONS - - - - - 897
 L. Houghton—Henry Sparling—Eli Gamet—Sister Roderick May—O. R. Miller—Inez Smith Davis.

NEWS FROM BRANCHES - - - - - 900
 Estella Hayward.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT - - - - - 901

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver, Assistant Editor.
 Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.
 When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.
 If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.
 This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.
 All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.
 All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.
 Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.
 For advertising rates apply to the business department.
 Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.
 Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

See Ad for "Autumn Leaves"

It Is To Your Best Interests

Your publishing house is well equipped for all kinds of printing and bookbinding.

TO use more good printing. Use it in more ways—to a real purpose.

"What is worth doing at all is worth doing well" applies with much force in the use of printed matter.

Your name or your business—perhaps both—should be properly and persistently presented to the public.

Herald Publishing House
 Lamoni, Iowa

If You Like Good Reading

you'll especially like the new serial and its sequel, beginning in the November number of Autumn Leaves.

Written by Elbert A. Smith
and
Illustrated by Paul Craig

"JOE PINE" is the title of this new story. It is a live story of boyhood on the prairies; of an emigration in a prairie schooner of the old type; of an intimate boy and girl comradeship; of the dedication to God of an only son by a widowed mother; of the self-sacrifice of an uncle whose iron creed was honesty and hard work; of the advent of the gospel in a new community.

The author has lived a life of interesting experiences that qualifies him to correctly and interestingly portray the scenes and incidents in their true settings and with an inspirational ring. Those who know his writings—and there are few who do not—will undoubtedly want this story for themselves and those to whom they are responsible for good reading.

The illustrator, Paul Craig, now laboring as a missionary in Omaha, is perhaps the ablest artist in the church, having studied and worked for several years in Kansas City and New York. As this is not the first book he has illustrated, he will be able to interpret the author's word-pictures admirably.

"CALLED TO BE AN APOSTLE" is the name of the sequel, and it will follow the story of "Joe Pine." This is a story of Joseph Prian Brady, a typical young man with the same longings and impulses and heart-yearnings as we all have. What he does with the memory that his mother dedicated him to God while he was a mere lad, will stir the emotions and interest in other young men in similar situations. He could not preach, write, paint, or sing—but he had a talent for making money. He falls in love with his former girl comrade and finally wins her from a covetous rival.

AUTUMN LEAVES

is a monthly publication for the youth of the church. It is of special and general interest to the whole family. These stories are worth more than the price of the paper, yet there will be many other articles and stories and illustrations of all kinds—such things as educate and interest.

The subscription price is only a dollar a year, and those who subscribe now who do not already receive the magazine, will receive the October, November, and December numbers free, and the magazine for the whole year of 1916 in addition. Send a dollar to-day.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Lamoni, Iowa

A New Book

THE INTERPRETER

By Gomer T. Griffiths

A Revision of the "Exegesis"

containing more charts and information than the former book, also an illustrated chapter on offenses—law governing the same—procedure in church courts, and blank forms suitable to the same. The various quotations from the books have been carefully compiled and arranged, so that the instructions pertaining to each office are classified, to assist the reader in locating the duties of each minister from the president of the church to the deacon, also points out how the different officers are called and the manner of their ordination, thereby securing courtesy to whom courtesy is due.

Price .....50c

THE TWO-STORY BOOK. Excellent gift book. One story by Mary Leland Carter and the other by Elbert A. Smith. Especially recommended for inquirers. No. 247, each .....50c

FOR SALE CHEAP

Latest model Hammond Typewriter, "the Multiplex," in strong sole-leather case. Weight 25 pounds. Three sets of type, two of them in machine at one time. Type shuttles for every known language can be bought. "Just turn the knob" and change instantly from one type or language to another.

Does beautiful work. Thoroughly dependable and high grade machine, in perfect condition; will last a lifetime. Universal keyboard. Back spacer, etc.

Inquire of G. R. Wells, Lamoni, Iowa. 35-3t

CHRISTMAS RECITATIONS. A book you will need for Christmas time. Contains 228 recitations for the season, in poetry and prose, by leading authors. No. 183, each .....15c

OUR CHRISTMAS BOOK No. 1. Edited by prominent church writers especially for Latter Day Saint entertainments at Christmas time. About 70 pages of original songs, dialogues, recitations, and drills. No. 183a, each .....25c

GOOD HOTEL BUSINESS

Leading hotel in Lamoni, for sale. Baths, running water in every room, good run of business; location near depot. Easy terms to right party. Address W. C. Jones, Lamoni, Iowa. 37-4t

FIRESIDE TALKS WITH OUR GIRLS. Every young girl will profit by reading this book published by the Woman's Auxiliary. Wholesome teaching easily read. Order number 213, each .....30c

LOOSE-LEAF BINDER. The binder that holds any or all the new standardized report blanks. Size of sheet: 8 1-2 by 11. Highly commended by those who have used them. Every church worker should have them for reports and minutes. Four posts, durable buckram binding. Order No. M-EA1 1-2R, each .....$1.90

COMPENDIUM OF THE FAITH. A valuable reference book for students. Has the best quotations from Inspired Translation of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants on important church doctrines and subjects. Order No. 141, each .....75c

Will You Join Me

in a tour of the North Platte Valley of Nebraska and the Big Horn Basin of Wyoming, leaving Omaha, September 21? The prevailing high prices and great demand for agricultural products will soon force a big increase in land values. This trip will enable you to see first hand the almost unbelievable opportunities that abound in these sections and give you a chance to buy land before the price goes up. Neither the company nor myself have any lands for sale and my services are free. We want reliable farmers as residents along our lines. I strongly urge you to make this trip, because it won't cost you much, and because I believe it will pay you handsomely to do so. How many will there be in your party and where will you start from? Let me know soon, please, so I can make the necessary arrangements.

S. B. HOWARD, Immigration Agent
Room 412 Q Building, Omaha Neb.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, SEPTEMBER 22, 1915

NUMBER 38

Editorial

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

CHAPTER 7

IMMORTALITY AND THE RESURRECTION

Those who hope for no other life are dead even for this.—Goethe.

Our Savior Jesus Christ . . . hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.—2 Timothy 1: 10.

Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. . . . But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept.—1 Corinthians 15: 12-20.

In the death cell where great Socrates waited for his draught of hemlock, they fell to discussing that question of the ages, immortality. Some contended that man is like a harp; his emotions, his thoughts, his deeds merely the music that issues from the harp; that when the harp is destroyed man ceases to be.

Socrates replied that man is neither harp nor harmony; that man is the harper; and even if the harp were broken the musician would still exist.

THE ROCK THAT BECAME A THRONE

The belief of Socrates was put to the test when Jesus was laid to rest in the rock-hewn tomb. A great stone was rolled before the door and the august seal of Rome was placed upon the tomb to certify that all was over and done. There reposed the hopes of humanity; and humanity, through its dominant governmental authority, had said that the tomb should for ever remain sealed and inviolate.

But this man said, "I lay down my life, that I might take it up again. . . . I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again."—John 10: 17, 18.

The great rock that rested on the heart of the world, sealed by imperial Rome, was presently rolled aside by divine power, and became the throne of an angel from heaven, with raiment like snow and countenance like lightning, who announced:

Ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here: for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay.—Matthew 28: 5, 6.

Hear it, ye mothers who weep by night over empty cradles! The angel rolled the rock from off your broken hearts. Hear it, all people!

But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.—1 Corinthians 15: 20-23.

I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.—Revelation 1: 18.

EVEN ATHEISM DISCERNs A STAR OF HOPE

It is a strange phenomenon of the times that many have lost faith in immortality, whereas formerly it was generally accepted. Some even put on a spirit of bravado, and pretend to treat the subject with indifference. Men shrug their shoulders and dismiss the subject, saying, "One world at a time."

Probably this attitude is assumed by those who, having lost faith, feel that they may as well put on a bold face to a bad situation that they can not remedy.

But when men come face to face with the loss of loved ones, when in hours of contemplation their spiritual vision is opened, this attitude of indifference breaks down. Even the agnostic expresses a feeling of great concern. Ingersoll, standing at the side of his brother's grave, declared, "In the hour of death hope sees a shining star, and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing."

MATERIALISM HAS THE WORST HELL OF ALL

Huxley, who was agnostic as touching this question of immortality, wrote:

It flashes across me at all sorts of times with a sort of horror that in 1900 I shall probably know no more of what is going on than I did in 1800. I would sooner be in hell a good deal, at any rate in one of the upper circles where the climate and company are not too trying.

So it has been reserved for the creed of materialism to imagine the worst hell of all. Subscribing to the creed that death ends all, the heaven-aspiring, immortal soul of man is filled with intolerable despair.

Darwin said, "It is an intolerable thought that man and all other sentient beings are doomed to complete annihilation, after such long-continued, slow progress."

THE "CREEDS" OF MATERIALISM

If we adopt the thought that death ends all, with correlated ideas, we are in essence adopting a creed. We might just as well face the issue and decide for ourselves the logical conclusions that will follow such a position.

Granting the creed of materialism to be correct, the universe is irrational, and we are the victims of blind forces that are both unreasonable and unjust. Having struggled upward for centuries untold and having finally brought into existence personality, something that can feel, that can aspire, that can sacrifice, and love, struggle, and die for an ideal, then these insensate forces blindly destroy the climax of their production, the most valuable thing in the universe.

We must conclude then that "the great soul of Abraham Lincoln was sacrificed out of deference to the few particles of matter that were deranged by the bullet of the assassin."

THE VIOLIN MAKER

What would we think of one who should toil for many years to produce a violin, a perfect instrument, and learn to play upon it a divine melody, and then smash it to atoms? We would say that insanity entered in somewhere in that proceeding.

What shall we say of the forces of the universe if for eons they have toiled to produce a human spirit, an intelligent entity, that can think, feel, aspire, love, hate, reason, and then at the hour of death dash it to oblivion, and start the process all over again with some other individual?

Is God blowing soap bubbles? Did he dip the pipe of his power in the suds of matter and blow the character of Jesus, that it might entertain him with its iridescence, burst to his satisfaction, and be gone?—Fosdick.

If we take this materialistic view and believe that death ends conscious existence, it all appears as a great, irrational, unjust tragedy,—the superlative, universal tragedy.

ALL ADEQUATE INCENTIVE GONE

This conception blots out from our philosophy faith, hope, and charity. There is no ground left for faith in God; there is no ultimate hope left for either the individual or the race; and there is no adequate incentive for charity.

But the Apostle Paul says, "Now abide faith, hope, charity." There is the contrast.

This other philosophy takes away all hope of ultimate reward and fear of ultimate punishment. No incentive left there. It takes away that which is vastly higher and nobler than either of these, the impulse and the desire to serve, because it offers no adequate incentive to service, indicating as it does that there can be no ultimate fruitage of our service worthy the sacrifices we are called upon to make.

A SHORT LOOK AHEAD

Some seek a ray of light in the universal gloom of such a theory by assuming that society will gather up and conserve human gains. The individual will perish but society will go on. They have acquired "social consciousness" and are willing to obliterate self for succeeding generations,—as they should be.

It is a noble sentiment, so far as it goes, but the merit of their theology is apparent rather than real. Its plausibility depends on "a short look into the future." If we take a "long look into the future," we discover nothing in it worthy of our consideration.

If we look far enough we discover that if the individual must perish, so sometime, somewhere, the race must perish. The world will have burned out. The race will have expended its initial impulse. And sometime, somewhere the last living man must go down to his grave in a world of graves.

Where then are the social gains? Where then are those things we have sacrificed for and bequeathed to society? They are eternally lost.

ABSORPTION INTO DEITY

Another class long for absorption into Deity, or some mysterious reservoir of soul energy, and thus hope to escape the eternal loss incident to the blotting out of personality.

"What does it matter?" they ask, "if individuality perish, so long as all love, justice, morality, and truth that are in the individual flow back into the great source and are preserved?"

But remember, these attributes we do not wish to have blotted out and lost are attributes that can be exercised only between and among individual entities. They can not be exercised by one individual upon himself alone.

And so when we look far enough into the future and see this old planet nothing but a tomb, all those qualities gone back into God, we have God alone, all love, with nothing but himself to lavish that love upon; all justice, with no one to exercise justice toward but himself.

How much more sublime is the New Testament conception that we are collaborators with God, that we are and always shall be, independent, ever-existing, intelligent entities between whom and God there can always exist this continuation of justice and this flow of love.

BETTER HAD WE NEVER BEEN BORN

Neither absorption into Deity nor self-effacement in society offer any permanent hope for humanity. If the creed of materialism be true and death ends all, then, as Paul says, man is of "all creatures most miserable"; by blind, unreasoning forces having been brought up to the heritage of intelligence only that he may contemplate the black abyss at his feet.

Then the language that was used concerning the miserable Judas Iscariot may well be used concerning the entire human race: "Good were it for that man if he had never been born."

Well does Fosdick say:

Nevertheless, when, believing in annihilation, one takes account of the long travail of the ages, weighs in his imagination all the agony of struggle and misfortune there, and perceives the inevitable end, when, like a burned-out cinder, the earth whirls back to its primeval chaos, he can understand the meaning of the philosopher who wrote: "Considering the immense and protracted sorrows of mankind, it would have been better if the earth had remained like the moon, a mass of slag, idle and without a tenant."—The Assurance of Immortality, p. 24.

A BETTER CREED

But how much higher and better the thought we have to present. We may say of all worthy men, as was said of one of old:

We doubt not that for one so true
There must be other, nobler work to do.

Paul takes up the same thought and says that God has not baptized us with the Spirit of fear; and he goes on to add:

But ye are come unto Mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect.—Hebrews 12: 22, 23.

BELIEF IN IMMORTALITY NOT UNSCIENTIFIC

Should any man or woman hesitate in making a choice between these two conceptions, between these two creeds?

Ah, but some one says, science has demonstrated that man is wholly mortal, and that death ends all. That is a misconception. Science has never done anything of the kind. A belief in immortality is not inconsistent with scientific research and enlightenment.

Many quotations from eminent authorities might be given to support that statement. We present two or more from two of the greatest of modern scientists: William James, the psychologist; and Sir Oliver Lodge, President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

During comparatively recent years the science of

(Continued on page 999.)

COLLEGE DAY

To the Church: Let it be urged upon the Saints that to help Graceland College fulfill its mission is not merely a duty but a privilege. Helping the college is helping the church. This has been clearly demonstrated by the past history of the college. The institution has struggled along against great odds, and we sincerely hope that before long sufficient financial support will be given it to guarantee its annual expense and lift it out of its present difficulties. It is a worthy institution and we should give all possible assistance to the board members upon whom we have placed the task of caring for it.

I earnestly appeal to the Saints to render substantial support to Graceland College. Remember it liberally "College Day," and then do not forget that many other days present opportunities to help its work along.

Your servant,

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 17, 1915.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

HAITI RECOGNIZED.—The United States has formally recognized the new government of Haiti, headed by President D'Artignevave.

ABSENCE FOR PAPAN.—Captain von Papan, German military attache who acted recently with Ambassador Dumba, of Australia, has been given a leave of absence, and will return to Germany when a safe conduct can be obtained.

UNPRECEDENTED HEAT.—The people of the New England and Middle Atlantic States have for several days been suffering from heat, all but unprecedented for the time of year. Schools have been closed at noon, and deaths are reported.

SENTENCE FOR PERJURY.—Gustavo Stahl, who made affidavit to having seen four guns on the Lusitania before she sailed on her last voyage, has plead guilty of perjury and has been sentenced to eighteen months in the Atlanta Penitentiary.

THE "HESPERIAN."—The German Government, in a note to Ambassador Gerard, has made a qualified disclaimer for the sinking of the Hesperian, contending that on the basis of information thus far obtained, the theory that the vessel was sunk by a German submarine is not sustained.

TO PROSECUTE ROCK ISLAND.—Judge George A. Carpenter, of the United States District Court, has ordered the receivers of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company to bring action against present and former directors for the recovery of six million dollars alleged to have been misappropriated, said action to be based upon transactions arising from the acquisition and divorcing of the "Frisco" system.

AMERICAN GOODS CONFISCATED.—On the grounds that goods, valued at fifteen million dollars, bound for Copenhagen, and included in abnormally large shipments to Denmark, giving assurance, as claimed, that the same were intended for the German army, a British prize court has condemned as contraband the greater part of the cargoes on four steamships seized by British vessels in November, and the goods, products of American meat packing companies, have been declared forfeited to the Crown.

NEW ARCTIC LAND.—Vilhjalmur Stefansson, commanding the Canadian Arctic expedition, not heard from since April 7, 1914, and thought to be lost in the far north, announced from Herschel Island, Alaska, August 22, the discovery of heretofore unknown land, at seventy-seven degrees, forty-three minutes, north latitude, and one hundred and fifteen degrees, forty-three minutes, west longitude. Report is that Stefansson plans to explore this new territory during the winter, and next summer to press on further into the unknown territory between Alaska and the Pole.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Villa seems to be fast losing ground from defeat and desertions, Carranza gaining accordingly. Friction along the Rio Grande has not been so irritating the past week as the week before. Shots have been interchanged, but no known deaths are reported. Americans have been urged by the United States Government to leave border States in Mexico and districts where military activities are taking place. American consuls are also ordered to leave northern Mexico. Pan-American representatives and Secretary Lansing, at a meeting the 18th, concluded to recommend to the various governments participating that the time had come to extend recognition to a government in Mexico, the particular party to be decided upon later.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Germans have continued to advance on the eastern line and have taken important points on the Petrograd railroad. While the Germans have gained in the north and on the center, in the south the Russians continue to gain from the Austrians in Galicia. Indications are that the Russians are better equipped with munitions than for some months past, and it is thought with rainy weather and approaching winter, the Germans may not proceed far beyond the present line. The Russians are increasing their activities in the Caucasus. The British line in the west has been extended, indicating the sending of additional forces to the front. Severe fighting with heavy casualties has occurred in the Vosges Mountains and forests of the Argonne, but without material change in the lines. No change is reported from Italy or the Dardanelles. The British cabinet is said to be considering compulsory army service. Premier Asquith has moved in the Commons for a vote of credit of one billion, two hundred and fifty million dollars for war purposes and civil lists resultant. The Russian cabinet has resigned, amidst rumors of graft and corruption. The Czar has dismissed the Duma, popular uprisings against which act are reported at many points throughout the country. In a note to Bulgaria, granting concessions by Serbia, following concessions said to have been made to the former country by Turkey, the allies ask that Bulgaria declare herself as between the allies and the central powers. The Turks are said to be massacring and otherwise torturing Armenians.

---

NOTES AND COMMENTS

HERALDS WANTED.—Copies of the HERALD for January 20, 1915, and June 2, 1915, are desired by HERALD Editors to complete their files and for other purposes. Anyone sending these copies will be helping us, and the favor will be appreciated.

FROM CHURCH EXHIBIT.—Professor George N. Briggs has reached Lamoni from San Francisco, and has entered upon his work as president of Graceland College. He makes a very favorable report regarding the church exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. He says that we are favorably located and attract our share if not more than our share (some would say more) of interested visitors,—comparing ours with other church exhibits. Brother James W. Davis and Inez, his wife, have been released from oversight of this work, on account of Sister Davis's ill health, and Brother and Sister F. G. Pitt have been put in charge. Under date of August 29, Elder Pitt writes as follows:

Having been placed in charge of the church exhibit at the exposition, my wife and I took up our duties there last Wednesday, and I know that you will be pleased to learn we are meeting with excellent success. Being located in the Palace of Education, many school-teachers visit us, and the majority seem pleased to know that we differ from the Utah church. A number have told us that they have friends who are members of our church and who told them they had no connection with the Utah church, but they did not believe them. But seeing our exhibit in the Educational Department they are easy to convince. We meet all classes of people and from all parts of the world, and we are giving away a lot of literature. We are very careful to offer it only to those who are interested. Some come back after more information and literature. As a general thing we meet with very fine people. It seems to me that this is the best opportunity we have ever had to get our work before the public. Too bad we did not go after it sooner so that we could have had more space. But as it is, we have a very neat little exhibit, one that we have no reason to feel ashamed of, all the result of Brother J. W. Davis's effort, whose work was untiring. But he having to go home, we were left to carry on the work. The Utah "Mormons" pass by often, manifesting their indignation. They do not like the statement under Emma Smith's picture, "The only wife of Joseph Smith."

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

(Continued from page 907.)

psychology has demonstrated in a remarkable manner the dependence of the mind upon the physical brain. This dependence is so great and so marked that many students have concluded that when the brain ceases to exist the mind ceases to exist.

With the facts of psychology religion has no quarrel. They but sustain the statement made in modern revelation emphasizing the extremely intimate relations of body and spirit: "The spirit and the body is the soul of man."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 4.

Erroneous conclusions drawn from the facts stated by psychology and kindred sciences have caused this modern loss of faith in immortality.

In an address at Harvard University, Professor William James took pains to correct these false conclusions. He said:

But such dependence on the brain for this natural life would in no wise make the immortal life impossible,—it might be quite compatible with human life behind the veil hereafter.—Human Immortality, p. 18.

Even though our soul's life (as here below it is revealed to us) may be in literal strictness the function of a brain that perishes, yet it is not at all impossible, but on the contrary quite possible, that the life may still continue when the brain itself is dead. The supposed impossibility of its continuing comes from too superficial a look at the admitted fact of functional dependence.—Human Immortality, p. 12.

In his presidential address before the British Association, 1913, while considering psychical facts brought before the attention of scientists, Sir Oliver Lodge said:

The facts so examined have convinced me that memory and affection are not limited to that association with matter by which alone they can manifest themselves here and now, and that personality persists beyond bodily death.—Continuity, p. 103.

And he wisely adds,

Yes, and there is more to say than that. The methods of science are not the only way, though they are our way, of being piloted to truth.—Continuity, p. 104.

Science, it is true, may not have demonstrated that life continues beyond the grave. Demonstration is made by those who pass over to the other side, and the moment their demonstration is completed they are removed from the circle of mundane investigators. We can only learn what they have learned as we shall receive revelation from some higher intelligence that knows what is existing on the other side. And we do not need to depend on doubtful manifestations of Spiritualistic mediums. We have a "more sure word of prophecy" whereunto we do well that we give heed.

RELIGION AND REVELATION ENTER

Here is where true religion enters. Here is where true revelation appears. That is why Paul says that Jesus Christ has "brought immortality to light."

Jesus revealed it, not only by word, but also by his great experience when he came up on the other side of the grave and said that the keys of death and of hell were delivered into his hands.

THE ANCIENT PROMISES

It is our purpose to call attention to and reiterate the ancient and eternal promises. The hope as well as the morality of the race depends upon a proper understanding of the nature and destiny of man.

Apparently in anguish of spirit, Job cried out: "If a man die, shall he live again?"

That question has ever been in the hearts of men. In every little hamlet some home has darkened windows and crepe upon the door.

The hollow rattle of clods on the coffin box is never out of the ears of humanity. Looked at from one viewpoint, life is one long, heartbreaking, Good-by! good-by! We are left with our memories. And every time memory stabs the heart, the lips cry out, If a man die shall he live again?

THE ANSWER

Job got the answer to his question. He got it by revelation from that Man who brought immortality to light. The answer is so important that it brings hope to replace despair. It gives a different color to life.

It was so important that Job wished that his words were printed in a book, "graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever."

A remarkable wish fulfilled perhaps beyond his wildest dream, for to-day his words are printed in the greatest of books, in millions of copies, and great presses run hourly, striking off other copies to be carried to all people, as Riley says:

By the winds of the tongues of all nations,
Like a litter of leaves wildly whirled
Down the rack of a hundred translations.

Listen to the answer to his question:

For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me.—Job 19: 25-27.

THE PROMISE OF JESUS

Jesus, who demonstrated the resurrection, and issuing from the tomb in defiance of Cæsar and Death, brought immortality to light, "the first fruits of them that slept," made these promises:

I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.—John 11: 25.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man. Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.—John 5: 25-29.

TWO RESURRECTIONS

Jesus thus clearly announces the resurrection, and that there shall be two resurrections. The resurrection of the just shall occur at his second coming, and they shall reign with him a thousand years. The wicked are not raised up until the thousand years are ended, prior to the great judgment mentioned in the twentieth chapter of Revelation.

For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first.—1 Thessalonians 4: 14-16.

And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.—Revelation 20: 4-6.

WITH WHAT BODY SHALL THE DEAD COME FORTH?

Volumes of profitless speculation might be written on the character of the body that shall come forth. Innumerable questions might be asked that no man could answer with our present knowledge. The facts of the resurrection are no more wonderful or strange than the facts of birth and life that we see every day but do not comprehend.

We are content with this confession:

As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness.—Psalm 17: 15.

Beloved, now we are the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.—1 John 3: 2.

For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection.—Romans 6: 5.

For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself.—Philippians 3: 20, 21.

WHAT MANNER OF MEN OUGHT WE TO BE?

In closing we wish to present this thought. If we are in fact immortal, we are at the present time in one sense immortal. That is, we have already entered upon an existence that will never have an end.

In view of that fact, what manner of men ought we to be? The things that we do now not only affect us here, and for three score years and ten, or less, but they affect us for ever and for ever. They will either make or mar for eternity. If men could only sense this, they would not live as they live now.

Jesus Christ came here with that conviction and always retained it. He gave us the supreme example of right living. He demonstrated the manner of life that a man lives who in his heart and his soul believes he is an immortal being who will never die.

Whatever crazy sorrow saith,
No life that breathes with human breath
Has ever truly longed for death.
'Tis life, whereof our nerves are scant,
Oh, life, not death, for which we pant;
More life, and fuller, that I want.

—Tennyson.

In reply to that great appeal for fuller life, coming up from the human heart, Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

He shows us how we may be worthy of that greater, fuller, better life, here and hereafter, for ever and for ever.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Note.—The next chapter will discuss "The eternal judgment." God has set a day in which all men shall be judged in righteousness. None can escape. Men will be judged according to their works, and with equity, and not according to profession only. There will be many degrees of glory and many grades of punishment and not merely two degrees, one in hell, the other in heaven.

Original Articles

SUCCESS

LITTLE SERMONS TO SAINTS—NUMBER 8

BY F. J. EBELING

I am doing a great work, so that I can not come down: why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down to you?—Nehemiah 6: 3.

Surely Nehemiah had undertaken a great work, and he fully realized that the only way to succeed was to keep right at it, not allowing anything to take him away from his work.

His great soul was filled with an intense desire to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem. He earnestly sought and secured the consent of the King Artaxerxes. He immediately began organizing the men into groups, assigning each group their respective work.

The remarkable success which followed provoked the jealousy of his enemies. So Sandballat, Tobiah and Geshem formed a conspiracy to defeat Nehemiah in his project. Four times they tried to get him to come down into the valley of Ono, but to these cunning devices the prophet sent back his famous reply, "I am doing a great work, so that I can not come down."

And with a zeal which could only bring success, the walls were rebuilt in fifty-two days. The like was never known, even in modern engineering craft. Had Nehemiah compromised himself with the challenges of those who planned his defeat, no such work as he accomplished in so short a time could have ever been done.

From the creation of man—yes, we may go back beyond that—every good undertaking had to meet the opposing power. The very first commandment the Almighty ever gave to man the Devil countermanded. Ever since the first man yielded to the Evil One there has been a continued struggle for supremacy. In all lines of achievement we are met with opposing forces.

The farmer has his opposition, the scientist his, the navigator his, the doctor his, the minister his, the politician his, and so on through all the vocations of life. In fact life is principally made up of overcoming obstacles, which accentuates the fact that we are only here preparing the way to live.

"In this life we never get what we want and always want what we never get." But we know that if we get what we want here, we may not want what we get over there; so the best way is to do as Nehemiah did, pay no heed to any who seek our downfall, but press steadily onward.

We are called to do a greater work than Nehemiah. He was called to build the walls around Jerusalem. We are called to build the strong walls of character to keep out the enemy of our souls, who is always asking us to come down from our great work into the valley of sin.

All along the way we have our Sanballats and Tobiahs, who would have us to stop great work and come down in the valley of Ono; but each time our answer should be, "Oh, no, I have a great work to do, and can not come down."

"Ono" is the "valley of craftsmen" (Nehemiah 11: 35). But the cunning of Nehemiah's enemies was not able to lead him from the work in which he was engaged. We should be so much absorbed in our work that the Devil with all his craftiness shall not be able to draw us from the performance of it, and nothing but complete success should satisfy us.

The enemy, seeking our overthrow, does not always come to us with flying banners and sounding trumpets, but in such little ways that at first we can hardly discern the danger of them. If he can only get us to take the first step, we may go the entire distance without much of his assistance.

In Book of Mormon, page 153, Nephi warns us against Satan's cunning devices:

Yea, and there shall be many which shall say, Eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die: and it shall be well with us. And there shall also be many which shall say, Eat, drink, and be merry; nevertheless, fear God, he will justify in committing a little sin: yea, lie a little, take the advantage of one because of his words, dig a pit for thy neighbor; there is no harm in this.

This surely sets forth the craftiness of Satan, who is too wise to know he can not get us to "come down" all at once, but will plant the little seed, that by an occasional watering will grow into a tree of destruction. We want to watch the little wrongs and sins, and we will have no trouble with the big ones.

A German philosopher was teaching his student how to prevent evil habits from getting such a strong hold on him that he could not conquer. He took the young man into his field, and pointing to a little twig told him to pull it up by the roots. He did so with thumb and finger. Pointing to another, a little larger, he told him to pull it up. The student had to take his whole hand to do so. Pointing to a third, the philosopher said, "Pull it up." He tried with one hand and could not; taking both hands, with considerable effort, he pulled it up. Pointing to a fourth, still larger, he told him to pull that up. Seizing it with both hands, he pulled and pulled. Turning to his teacher he said, "I can not pull it up; it is rooted too deeply in the ground."

"See," says the philosopher, "that is just so with our habits and views of life. At first they can be overcome very easily; later on they are harder, and later on still harder, until finally they have the mastery of us and we can not change them."

In this we see the wisdom of the Lord in instructing the church to have instilled into the minds of our children the principles of the gospel, so when they come to be eight years of age they may take hold of them, and at that age have good habits started. Let them "sow wild oats," and they will reap what they sow.

How often have I heard mothers say, while indulging their children in questionable things, "Oh, well, they are only children, and they must have some liberty." Perhaps that little "liberty" might be the planting of the tree which in after years they may try to pull up and can not.

Beware of the little spark hidden within. We are warned against the "root of bitterness" (Hebrews 12: 15). The little things in life are those that will "pull us down."

Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord: looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled.

The root of bitterness is defiling many. In order to get rid of the entire trouble we must get rid of all the root.

If two brothers have had trouble, if they get together as the law provides, talk it out, and if they do not fully forgive from their hearts, but have a little feeling there yet, it will be constantly springing up to trouble them and others. We should be so busily engaged in doing our brother good that we have not time to come down to his level to do him injury.

All along the way we will have our Sanballats and Tobiahs, whispering to us, Backbite a little, withhold your tithing, you do not know what becomes of your money, take a little drink, stay away from church or Sunday school, stop paying, and so forth, all of which should be brushed aside in that we are so busy in the great works intrusted to us that we have no time to come down from the walls of protection.

One evil thought, if let go unquenched, will work our ruin. Note the sad experience of David, who beheld the wife of Uriah. Permitting the thought to take action, from one evil seed to another it went, until an innocent life was taken, and by it was the illustrious life of David overshadowed with a dark crime.

We may not be able to keep the birds from flying in at the doors and windows of our houses, but we can prevent them from building their nests and hatching their young; so with our minds or thought; evil may enter, but we should see to it that it do not hatch a foul brood of evil deeds. When we succeed in this we are succeeding with the greatest success, a success that will succeed in sending to us the successful victory.

Now, behold, a marvelous work is about to come forth among the children of men, therefore, O ye that embark in the service of God, see that ye serve him with all your heart, might, mind, and strength, that ye may stand blameless before God at the last day.—Doctrine and Covenants 4: 1.

If we serve God according to the commandment given herein, we have no time for anything else. Success in God's work is much different from success in the warfare of man; man's warfare is measured by the lives killed: the work of God, by the lives saved; with the work of man by the dollars accumulated, with God, the dollars given. We may gain the whole world, but who is able to give an answer to the question, "What doth it profit you?"

Success in a business way comes only to those who give it their undivided attention. I once had the privilege of hearing Mr. John D. Rockefeller, supposed to be the richest man in the world, say, while sitting on the green lawn before the Temple at Kirtland, that there were just two things, if observed, that will make any man rich; namely, industry, and economy. In this I think he is right. Industry to make it, and economy to properly use it. In the great work of God there are certain principles we must observe if we would be successful, and the key to this is found in Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.

Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have a desire to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care.

These are the sublime qualifications which will make for an eternal success. Let us therefore, cultivate them to the uttermost; and like Nehemiah of old, be so thoroughly absorbed in the great work committed to us that we will have no time to condescend to the challenge of the Evil One to come down into the valley of neglect.

"Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown." (Revelation 3: 11.)

* * * * *

EDUCATION AND PERSONAL QUALITIES

[This article, one of a series, appeared first in the Autumn Leaves, in the year 1903. It is being reproduced here for its wholesome and timely counsel to young men and others seeking to qualify for usefulness in the church.—EDITORS.]

CITY WORK

While it has been my fortune to engage in city work the greater portion of the time since my ordination to the ministry, I have never felt that I was qualified to set forth any rule of action to govern in that class of work. I can only suggest some thoughts, for the consideration of those desiring to become church workers, which may be developed and applied by the worker, as the circumstances arising may demand. No rule will govern in all cases. Conditions and surroundings must govern to a large degree.

EDUCATION

One's education should be of the practical sort; it does not follow that it must be a college education; the high school, as now conducted, will offer great facilities, if the student will apply himself as he should and seek to store information in his mind in a practical way, so he can draw upon it readily, thus enabling him to make a free use of it at any time or place and in unexpected emergencies.

Literature should be studied, both ancient and modern, as he will frequently find it the subject of conversation, and his opinion as a minister may be asked for, so some knowledge of it will prove very helpful to him. This feature is one of the things which will help toward success.

Elocution will prove good and useful if the young man will learn to use it wisely and not allow it to rob him of his own personality. If his work should show studied effect it will rob it of its force, and as a consequence, weaken the man's effort for good. Nothing is more essential in church work than for one to act natural and be himself. I know of nothing that will so thoroughly disgust the people with a man as to see him "put on," or imitate some one else. Whatever he does, he should be natural.

History is an indispensable study, and the young man who desires to succeed in church work should seek a goodly knowledge of history, ancient and modern, sacred and profane, and especially the early history of the church, before and during Christ's time and down to the present. He should make himself familiar with the history of our own times, from the rise of the church until the present date. He will find this a source of constant help to him in his work in the cities.

In connection with history, a careful study of the habits, customs, and worship of the people in different ages will prove interesting and useful in his work for the church.

A knowledge of language, or grammar, is an absolute necessity, and should not be neglected by any young man who would do city work for the church, and do it to advantage. Especially should he strive to express himself in simple and plain, yet good language. He should not lose sight of the fact that if he speaks so the least informed can understand him the others will all be able to understand. He is supposed to be laboring for the good of mankind as a whole, and in the interest of salvation, and not to please mankind, or to tickle their ears with high-sounding words, but to point the way of truth and life. Nor should he lose sight of the thought that things which are familiar to him many not be so familiar to his hearers, or those with whom he may be laboring. Hence the necessity of being plain and careful in his explanations; but he should seek to avoid being tedious, also, refraining from frequent repetition.

He should strive as a representative of the church to portray the teachings of the church as the church holds them, and not present private opinions and speculative theories as the teachings of the church. He must diversify his preaching to some extent if he would hold the interest of his people; this he can do by clothing his thought in different language from time to time, and by changing the order of his proof texts. To do this may require some study and thought upon his part; but if he desires to make a profitable church worker he will not hesitate at that.

He must thoroughly acquaint himself with the doctrine of the church by a diligent and prayerful study of the standard books of the church, along with all the information he can obtain from other sources, such as scientific works, archæology, or any other source where an item of truth may be found. Nor should he confine himself to the doctrines of the church; he should study the teachings of other bodies. He will find such information very valuable to him in many ways. It will also prepare him to meet any emergency that may arise in the great controversy in which we are engaged.

These are only a part of the many lines the young man has before him, in which he can spend his time and energies to good advantage in preparation for city work.

PERSONAL QUALITIES

It will be no easy task to properly outline the personal qualities that are necessary to carry city work to a successful and abiding end; and I shall not attempt to set forth all that will be required, only a few suggestions.

One of the first will be patience. If the young man who aspires to church work in the cities has not this quality naturally, he should use every opportunity to cultivate it; for city work will make an urgent demand on him to exercise it, and that to an unusual degree. There are so many things in city work that must be met with a patient, considerate effort upon the part of the worker, that he needs all he can acquire of this quality. He must labor and then patiently wait—wait for the results to manifest themselves. The lack of this trait of character has caused some of our earnest and energetic workers to become very much discouraged with city work; but mix with patience, perseverance and diligence, and use them with wisdom, and the results will demonstrate their usefulness, to the good of the work and to the satisfaction that must come to the honest worker.

Conversation: This quality, backed by a well-informed mind and considerateness, will be found of great value to a church worker; but must be used with wisdom and prudence. Unless used prudently it may make him a bore, and be of doubtful value, if not an injury; but if used within proper limits, it is hard to estimate the possibilities it may hold for him. Hence the faculty of being a good conversationalist is a desirable one, if used with the gift of wisdom.

Wisdom is one of the qualities necessary to successfully carry on the work of God, wherever one's duties may call him, in the city or country. City work throws one in contact with such a variety of people and conditions, and he will be sought after for advice and counsel upon so many different things, that wisdom will be found an indispensable quality; and if he does not possess it as a natural gift, and fails to acquire it by thoughtful study and prayerful entreaty of the Lord, his work will prove largely a failure, though he may have many other desirable qualities.

In a church worker, unselfishness and cheerfulness are two very desirable qualities. These traits will prove a source of comfort, not only to the worker who can exercise them, but to those with whom he is called to labor.

The city worker will need to make many sacrifices of his own feelings and desires and physical comforts to minister to others. His own sorrows and difficulties must be kept in abeyance, while he cheerfully seeks to ameliorate the sorrows and afflictions of the people around him. One brother, a city worker, once wrote me: "The sapping process ever goes on with all with whom I come in contact. The missionary must ever be ready to hear the sorrows, cares, the fears of all others; but ever is he denied the privilege of pouring out his soul and making a confidant of another." The necessity of wisdom, unselfishness and cheerfulness, is very apparent.

The city worker should be an energetic man, for this line of work calls for an active worker. There is no room in the city for a man to sit down at ease, if he would make his work effective for good. Visiting is an absolute necessity. He must come in close touch with his people, both Saints and outsiders, so far as it is possible to do so. There is nothing that brings quicker or better returns than visiting. It enables the city worker to become acquainted with the surroundings and mode of living of the people, and gives him a clearer insight into their needs and the methods he must use to help them. It is sometimes very irksome, 'tis true, and demands an expenditure of time and money, with some sacrifice of personal desire, but this is one of the places where his unselfishness and cheerfulness come in, and he is under the necessity of denying himself in the interests of the great work in which he is engaged.

Order or system is a splendid quality, and if not a natural trait, should be cultivated, as it will help him in all his work, city or otherwise. He should strengthen every weak point he may find in his character, if he would prove helpful and grow more useful in this work. He should cultivate a keen sense of propriety as to time, place, and surrounding conditions, if he would not appear awkward and out of harmony with his environment; study to be able to say the right thing at the right time, and in the right place to keep silent when it is wise so to do.

It is not wisdom to try to force his views upon men when they are busy, or at their places of business, unless invited by them to do so. In visiting, one should be very careful that he does not work a hardship on his friends by being too friendly during business hours. He should visit them in their homes, or at some place appointed, unless invited to their office or place of business. If he calls upon them at their work, he should make the call brief, note the conditions under which they labor, and learn their time and strength. He can then judge better of their needs and opportunities for study and attendance, and suit his work to their necessities and conditions to a far better advantage to them and himself, as well as secure the best of results for the work of God.

He should appear neat and clean in his dress and person, if he would command the respect of the people. This can be done without going to the extreme.

Adaptability is a valuable qualification in city work, where one may be changed from one class of society to another very quickly. Happy is the man who can adapt himself to changed conditions readily and with ease. To be able to move with easy grace from the humbler walks of life to the higher, or from the cultivated to the uneducated, and be able to feel at home and free with either class, and make them feel free with him, is a qualification to be desired. This may be acquired by diligent study and application. Here one will realize more and more the meaning of the statement of the Apostle Paul, where he said he was all things to all men. One must not allow the spirit of jealousy to enter his heart. He must expect to hear criticisms upon his work, and sometimes comparisons that do not favor him, and at times see others seemingly preferred before him, without showing pique or discouragement. Some of these things prove only transitory, and if he conducts himself right will react in his favor in the long run. The persistent, patient, faithful, energetic, wise worker need have no fears; he will see good results in the end.

Now, there are two things yet, and though last, they are by no means least, but must be used with every other qualification or feature of education with which one may be blessed: These are humility and prayer. They are the keys that will open the door to the storehouse of divine wisdom and knowledge, and enable one to call to his assistance the Holy Spirit's direction and help in every duty or emergency that may lie in his pathway. They are essential to success in any part of this great work of God, no matter where one labors, or what office he holds.

When a man has sought to take every advantage of the opportunities for an education that are open to him, and profits by them to the best of his ability, striving all the time to carry into effect in his own life the personal qualities that are outlined, and so essential to the successful church worker in the city, he may become a polished, keen, well-balanced instrument in the hands of God for the accomplishment of great good in his work in the cities, or wherever he may be called to occupy.

In presenting these rambling thoughts for the consideration of those who may desire to become useful, and coworkers with our beloved Master in what is known as church work, we are hopeful they may prove helpful, and have a tendency to lead to good works and the spread of this glorious work of God.

FREDERICK A. SMITH.

* * * * *

THE WORD OF WISDOM

THE OCCASION FOR

It seems a reasonable hypothesis to say that the revelations of the latter days, like those of former ages, were given to meet the special, and largely local needs of those to whom they came. If this hypothesis is true, it in no way detracts from their profitability to us; but rather, by a study of the local conditions which called them out, we obtain a better understanding of the truths therein contained.

When this document under consideration was given (February, 1833), and for years thereafter, the church was very largely a frontier church, and the manner of living among the Saints was that which largely obtained among our pioneers. They did not waste much time in providing either vegetables or fruit, for meat was to be had for the taking, and the man who had a good-sized piece of meat and a bag of corn meal, in addition to the usual bottle, jug, or barrel of alcoholic drink, and a plentiful supply of tea and coffee, had all that was considered necessary for his daily needs. As for the canning of fruits, it not only was not thought of, but was not known.

Within our own recollection, commencing with the later sixties, the main diet to be met with among our farmer Saints was meat, potatoes, and bread—more often of corn than wheat. If fruit was served it was usually in some form of preserves.

Under this custom of diet it is not to be wondered at that when an epidemic of smallpox came along the people had nearly as much cause to dread it as they did cholera.

It is no wonder that the Master, who always sets his people to be "the light of the world," gave them this revelation, warning them against the use of stimulants, and emphasizing the fact which seventy years later the scientific world was iterating everywhere, that "wholesome herbs" and "every fruit in the season thereof" was to be preferred to a diet of meat, corn bread, tea, coffee, and alcoholic drinks, and that of the grains given to man, wheat was best adapted to his needs.

THE APPLICATION

In the application of this "scripture given by inspiration of God," it seems to us that we do not need to misapply it in our zeal for the written word. We can afford, even in this, to let our "moderation be known unto all men"; and the good housewife who, "in the season thereof," secures and cans a good supply of the fruits of her locality, is not only prudent, but assisting in the spirit of the revelation in question, that her household may find "health in their navel, and marrow to their bones"; and if, in addition to keeping in line with the diet prescribed in this "Word of Wisdom," they are found "walking in obedience to the commandments," they shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and . . . the destroying angel shall pass them by." A. M. CHASE.

Of General Interest

FREEDOM AND PALESTINE FOR JEWS

Representatives of 10,000 Jewish workmen enrolled in seventy Jewish organizations met in the West Side Auditorium yesterday and launched Chicago's part of a country-wide agitation which has for its ultimate aim the colonization of Palestine and freedom for the Jews from civil, political and national yokes under which the race has labored for two thousand years.

Jewish speakers exhorted the four hundred men and women present to fight for the world equality of Jews. By a rising vote a resolution was adopted against the treatment of the Jewish people in the war-stricken countries of Europe. . . .

The meeting was held primarily to agitate freedom for European Jews. A member of the committee said, however, the meeting would become known as Chicago's first step in an American movement to place all Jews on an equal footing with the citizens of every country.—Chicago Herald, August 23, 1915.

* * * * *

NO "HOLY WAR"

Probably no greater surprise attaches to any incident or feature of the war than to the universal wave of loyalty to England which has swept over the 700 native states of British India. This has been carried home not only to the Germans, who witness for the first time in history the presence of an army corps of Indian soldiers fighting in Europe for the empire, but also to the rest of the world who see the anomaly of Mohammedans taking up arms for Christian allies, fighting against the Moslem Turks. Native princes and peoples from the Himalayas to the Indian Ocean have offered men and money, regardless of race or creed. Hindu and Moslem, Aryan and Mongol, all are loud in loyalty to the mother-empire—there has even been a tender of Tibetan troops, while innumerable lamas all over that mysterious mountainous land are said to be putting up prayers for the success of the British arms.

The espousal of the cause of the allies by the Mohammedans has been practically universal, and this is the most surprising feature of it all. The hope that with Turkey enlisted on the side of the two Kaisers and against the allies, a Mohammedan uprising might be induced under the "green banner of the prophet," proves to have been entirely vain. Indian subjects of the sultan—at least religious followers of Mohammed's successor—have assurances that though Britain is at war with Turkey, she will not attack their holy places or violate their religious scruples. In fact they claim that the British Empire is a Moslem empire, for under no other sovereign is there so large a Moslem population as under the British king, neither is there any other sovereign who is, and has reason to be, so true a friend of Islam. The "holy war" which was anticipated, and which German diplomacy was roundly abused for having incited, is thus shown to be wholly nonexistent.—Deseret Evening News.

* * * * *

SLUMP IN LIQUOR BUSINESS

WASHINGTON, August 28.—The preliminary report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, just made public shows some significant things.

The detailed figures show that there has been a heavy decrease in the consumption of liquors of all kinds. There has also been a large decrease in the number of special taxpayers as "retail liquor dealers." In other words, the report shows a slump in the liquor business all along the line.

The returns show that there is a decrease of 16,270 liquor dealers in the country, which is going some.

Spirits distilled from apples, peaches, grapes, pears, pineapples, oranges, apricots, berries, prunes, figs and cherries, 2,704,752 gallons in 1914, as against 2,516,054 in 1915, a decrease of 188,698 gallons.

Spirits distilled from materials other than apples, peaches, pears, grapes, pineapples, oranges, apricots, berries, prunes, figs and cherries, 136,433,749 gallons in 1914, as against 121,639,124 gallons in 1915, a decrease of 14,794,625 gallons.

Fermented liquors, 66,105,445 barrels in 1914, as against 59,746,701 barrels in 1915, a decrease of 6,358,774 barrels. And this is some decrease, it may be suggested, when it is noted in barrels.

Of the ten kinds of spirits on which tax was collected it will be noted, and this is significant, that but three items showed increases, these being on "Wine, etc., domestic and imported," stamps for distilled spirits intended for export, and "grape brandy used in the fortification of sweet wines."

The greatest increase, that on wine, domestic and imported, includes, as the item states, the revenue collected on importations. The next highest is on brandy for fortifying wines. The next, a small item, is for spirits for export. This statement, analyzed, shows that there was not an increase on whisky, the greatest offender, for domestic consumption.

Further on in the statement by the commissioner appears an item to which the eye of the liquorites will go as if drawn by a magnet. But that he may not be able to fool the public by a reference to it, the teeth should be drawn from it at once. The item referred to shows an increase of $12,354,936.32 for 1915, over 1914 in the amount of revenue collected on "fermented liquors" (barrel tax). This is easily explained. It is due to the fact that an emergency tax of 50 cents additional on each barrel of fermented liquors was collected in 1915, the total amounting to $18,713,679.88. Were it not for this emergency or war tax the total collected on "fermented liquors," barrel tax, for 1915, would have shown a decrease as compared with 1914 of the neat sum of $6,358,743.56. In other words, the fermented liquors, barrel tax, for 1915, without the additional collected as a war tax, would have amounted to but $59,746,701.09.

The receipts on spirits for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, were $159,098,177.31. The receipts for the same period for 1915 were $144,619,699.37, a decrease for 1915 of $14,478,477.94. This decrease for the year means a decrease per month of $1,206,539.82, a sum not to be sneezed at in itself, and of $39,667.06 per day; taking as a basis the 365 calendar days of the year. If the business days were taken as a basis the decrease would be even greater.

The receipts on each of the various kinds of spirits for the years 1914 and 1915 were as follows, the increase or decrease of each instance being noted.

Again, it may be noted that decreases were shown in the collections on the following items:

Brewers (special tax), retail dealers in malt liquors (special tax), and wholesale dealers in malt liquors (special tax).

Nowhere throughout the entire preliminary report, therefore, can a single item which would bring comfort to the distillers, the brewers or their associates, be found.—The New Republic, September 3, 1915.

Letter Department

Another Hero Triumphant

Elder William H. Kelley has passed triumphantly to the bright beyond. He was a faithful minister of Christ and the church, and awaits a glorious reward. Thus one by one God's servants pass on to join each other on the heavenly shore.

Brother Kelley was a seventy for a number of years, and an apostle of Jesus Christ for forty years. He was also a soldier of his country in the troublous days of 1861 to 1865. He was a man of thought, of liberal sentiment, of strong intellectuality, an able advocate of the gospel.

I knew him when I was a lad, and soon after I entered the ministry was appointed to labor under his direction in Michigan, Indiana, and elsewhere. He was always congenial in his ministry, and was the servant of all. He was considerate in council, trying to aid in every way open to him.

We sympathize with his sorrowing family. His memory remains sacred. Let us trust that his rest is sweet, his journey to the other side glorious, and his reward eternal with the redeemed of the ages, in the midst of those whom he has been instrumental in God's hands in bringing into the kingdom.

Trustingly,

COLUMBUS SCOTT.

Of Passing Moment

NUMBER 6

Saturday, March 26, I set out with my host to spend a little time with his mother and father. On the way we called to see our genial brother, Doctor Messenger, who very kindly examined me for my throat trouble, and afterwards complimented me on having a throat and a half, so that I ought to be able to make a big noise. However, I thank the good doctor for his excellent advice, for I wish to last a few more years for the work's sake. I know that the work would get along without me, but I also believe that the work can do with the peculiar kind of labor that I feel capable of giving, and I want to be able to continue the giving, because I am receiving while I am giving, and that fact means life to my soul. And it is the abundance of life that I am after. Are you?

It seemed good to greet Brother and Sister Rushton, senior.

The next day was the Sabbath, and the writer was advertised as the speaker at the Stone Church at Independence, at 11 a. m. At 9.30 I attended the Sunday school session.

I wish to say that since my return to the British Isles I have organized a district of the Sunday schools. And at our late mission conference we organized a mission association for the Sunday schools here. We hope to hold a convention every year. Our object is to become a branch of the General Sunday School Association, worthy of the name. I am sure that all need to be encouraged in this great work. We must save our own children. If it is true that salvation begins at home, and I firmly believe it does, then it is high time that we as a church strive to put an end to the waste that we have permitted for so long a time, and the Sunday school is the first place to begin the work.

Many seemed interested in the discourse, the plainness of which seemed to be understood.

Brother Hale W. Smith and I journeyed to Kansas City in the evening, where I spoke in Central Church to a very nice company of Saints. The attention was most excellent.

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

LORAIN, OHIO, August 4, 1915.

Editors Herald: In grateful acknowledgment of the many favors shown me by a loving Father, I am writing this as a testimony to all who may chance to read it.

Fifteen years ago, at the age of ten years, I was baptized by my uncle, Henry C. Smith, who then had charge of the Kirtland Temple. I was thoroughly convinced of the truthfulness of the gospel, and for several years afterward took great delight in being able to prove it from the Bible to my unbelieving relatives and friends. But many are the dangers that lurk in the pathway of the Saints; and almost before I was aware of it, by listening to the false theories and doctrines of men, I was lead to doubt many of the truths of the gospel. I feel to thank God for again illuminating my darkened mind. The precious truths of the Bible again shine clear and bright to my vision.

Five years ago this summer, while I was in the condition before mentioned, I feel that I was miraculously healed of a serious illness of long standing. This last spring I was again stricken with the same illness and was again helped by administration. While I was recovering, and since then, I have felt the influence of the Holy Spirit to a greater degree than ever before. I doubt nothing regarding this work, and I pray that I may never again swerve from the right way.

My heart is made to rejoice as I realize that the promises of God are being fulfilled in regard to the restoration of Israel, and other events which point to Christ's soon comng.

We as Saints should strive harder than ever to let our light shine before the world.

Wishing the gospel great success, I am,

Your sister in the faith,

HAZEL L. MINKLER.

LA JUNTA, COLORADO, August 4, 1915.

Editors Herald: We have Sunday school on Sunday afternoons at two o'clock, prayer meeting at 3.15, preaching at 7.45. We have in the Sunday school an attendance of about twenty-five. Some visitors also attend. A few outsiders attend preaching meetings and prayer meetings also. We have only four families of Saints living in North La Junta. We have no branch organization as yet, but hope to have one soon.

These opportunities seem limited, after having been in a large branch of the church. We are sometimes discouraged, but continue to go on. We formerly lived at Hiteman, Iowa, for about seven years. We miss the association there very much. My father had to leave there on account of his health, which is improving, the climate being much better for him here than there. If we had a larger number of Saints here and could have a branch, it would not seem so discouraging.

Often when Saints have branch privileges they do not appreciate them. We are striving in our weak way to do what we can here. Six of us Saints had the privilege of attending the conference of the Eastern Colorado District at Denver last March 5 and 6. We all enjoyed it very much. We were treated very kindly while there. Our next conference meets at Wray, some time this fall.

We were sorry to learn that Brother F. A. Russell was changed from this district to Missouri. Brother Russell was here in the spring and preached almost a week. He gave us some fine sermons. We are looking forward for one of our missionaries to come here this fall.

Your sister,

MISS MARIETTA WILLIAMS.

FRUITLAND, NEW MEXICO, August 6, 1915.

Editors Herald: We closed an interesting meeting last Sunday night at Durango, Colorado, where we were assisted by Brother William B. Farley, president of the branch, also by Brother Peter Adamson, of Fruitland, New Mexico. Our attendance was small but attentive. Several were baptized, all adults.

Our confirmation meeting Sunday afternoon was good. Outsiders were made to feel the influence of the Spirit. Testimonies were heard from many Saints of Bayfield who were present. The new converts were heard in testimony of God's goodness.

I had the pleasure of baptizing one of the oldest converts of this year, Sister Mary Simers, born January 25, 1830. One Brother J. T. Scaunell, raised a Catholic, was ordained a deacon, and will be a help to Brother Farley in the Durango Branch.

May the Lord bless his people, that their lives may reflect the life of Christ that others may be brought into the fold.

In bonds,

J. F. PETRE.

ALBIN, WYOMING, September 6, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am doing all that ability and opportunity permit. I stopped over for a while in Nebraska to look after some business, and while there baptized three. Since coming to Wyoming I have confined my labors to Albin and vicinity, and while circumstances and prejudice have hindered much preaching, I have succeeded in getting five grown persons to take the initial steps into the kingdom.

If any one in Wyoming desires my assistance as a missionary, please address me as above.

Yours in faith,

J. M. STUBBART.

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA, August 16, 1915.

Editors Herald: I saw an article not long ago in the HERALD regarding the indebtedness of the church. I for one am willing to try to do my part, and I am sending six dollars for my wife and myself. I have three children who belong to the church, and I am going to send a dollar a month for each of them until I have paid three dollars for each. I pay my tithing, have quit using tobacco, am willing to leave off things of pleasure until we pay our part of the debt. Let us all put our hands to the wheel and pay it off. I own as much stock in this work as the president of the church, if I live for it, so I owe as much of the debt as he does.

T. G. MANING.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO, August 19, 1915.

Editors Herald: All meetings but the first I held in the shooting gallery were complete failures. I can not tell why the people did not, nor would not come, but they didn't, and I felt greatly disappointed, but not discouraged. I made up my mind that I would try in other ways to persuade the people to hear the gospel. I found myself with twenty-four good seats, but no one to occupy while I preached to them. They had cost me close to twenty-three dollars, and I felt bad about that, but I could not help it. I had no tent of my own, but I looked forward to the time when I would have one, and I set my teeth and grinned if I could not laugh.

There are only three members of the church here; two sisters and one brother. Though warmly welcomed by the good sister to the place where I was stopping, I was ordered to leave by her husband, who is very much opposed to our work, and who is at present in the great conflict in Europe. He stated that if I did not go, when he returned he would look me up and pump a Colt's pistol into me, a most unpleasant experience I presume, and not being at all anxious to be transformed from a blacksmith into a sieve, I left. Wouldn't you?

This situation being explained to the other two members of the church, who are among those whom Jesus said the gospel was preached to, the poor, arrangements had to be made to find place with them. I was sorry I was compelled to do this, for the brother gets only twenty-two dollars per month, and they have to pay fifteen dollars for rent, and the balance left is easily figured.

One married daughter lives with them, which helps out some; otherwise I do not know how things would go, for provision has to be made for four children in this home.

House to house work seemed to be all that was left me to do. But with faith undaunted, and hope shining brightly before me, I continued to press on and on, looking forward to the time when a change would occur, and ever praying to God to open the way. At last it came. There appeared a notice in the press about a great series of prophetic lectures to be delivered in a tent. I went and took notes of what was going on, and what was said. I knew my man was a Seventh-day Adventist, a great talker, and a smart fellow, I assure you. He cut a wide swath. He went into the Sabbath question, soul sleeping, and denied the spirit of man in man, and a number of other things. Every Sunday keeper had the mark of the beast, and all were in an apostate condition. Well, I stood it as long as I could. I remembered that I had the seats, and all I needed was a tent, and I could rent one if I did not have enough money to buy one.

Accordingly, on August 7, the tent was up. I announced a complete refutation of Mr. Johnston's position of the ten commandments being the new or second covenant. He had taken the position that the ten commandments were the new covenant, written in the fleshly tables of our hearts, and he left out Jesus Christ entirely. Well, never did I have better liberty, or a more comprehensive grasp of the new covenant. I swept this man's position clean off the field.

We announced the meeting for Sunday evening, but lo, and behold, Sunday, about dinner time a storm laid my tent as flat as a pancake, but did no other damage except to tear the tent some. It cost me $37.40 to get really started in this series of meetings, which have been continuing for ten nights. Each night the tent is full, with numbers on the outside that can not get in. I want to continue as long as the weather will permit. Have just telegraphed Brother Curtis for help, as I can not do it all myself.

Last night I preached for an hour and a half on the Book of Mormon; everybody was as eager for the last word as for the first. One man said I put the Book of Mormon ahead of the Bible, and I said to the audience, Friends, I am almost played out, but I do not want to leave this statement unanswered, for you might think that I can not do so. Can you stand it for ten minutes more? A number of voices replied, Yes, for an hour more, and some said, All night. Well, the thirty-seventh chapter of Ezekiel never shone out more clearly than it did last night, to me at least. It was just ten o'clock when I said good-night to a crowd of people who were warmly discussing the question at the tent, when I wended my way to bed.

I was compelled to take means from the French literature fund to pay this expense, but the collections have already amounted to $20.68, and I bid fair to have every cent of the expense paid back before the meetings close.

I want to thank four people in particular for greatly assisting me in carrying on the work here. Sister M. A. Isaacs, of Independence, Missouri, who sent me $15; Sister Lola S. Mitchell, Santa Ana, California, $10; Brother John Marno, Bethune, Saskatchewan, who called the attention of the Disley Sunday school to what I was doing, and they contributed handsomely, as did also Brother James McLean, of the Dundalk Branch who sent me $6.50.

When I left Chicago the amount furnished me by the church in excess of the regular railroad fare was exactly fifty cents. I have not received a cent from the church since then; but thank God, I have been remembered by thirty-nine sisters and nineteen of the brethren. And now I have the seats paid for, and I only hope that when the cold weather comes I will have a place where I can hold meetings inside, for I will not be able to use a tent then. This will cost far more than tent room, but I am looking forward with hope.

I am now permanently located at 49 Lorne Avenue, with two Saints, very poor in pocket, but immensely wealthy in the grace of our Lord and Savior. I feel that I can not close more fittingly than with these words:

"Truth is eternal—truth is divine,
Truth like the sun in splendor shall shine.
Truth is the armor—truth is the shield,
Truth is the weapon—error shall yield."

In the fight,

PHILEMON PEMENT.

PORSGRUND, NORWAY, August 13, 1915.

Editors Herald: Having arrived safely, a few days ago, in my native land, after a safe and very pleasant journey, I wish to send this information to your valuable paper, that the Saints who are interested in my whereabouts may learn that I have crossed the mighty deep and landed in Norway, my field of labor for the present year.

I left New York on the Bergensfjord, Norwegian-American Line, the safest line for Europe at present, I believe, on July 24. We had smooth sailing and fine weather all the way across, but on the second Sunday, August 1, we were taken by an English cruiser that sent a few sailors and two officers on board to take charge of the ship. While the ship's papers were examined, both we and the cruiser were lying still about two hours, after which we started for Kirkwall, making slow speed except Monday night, when the ship made her best in order to avoid the German submarines.

Early on Tuesday morning we spied the Orkney Islands, and about seven a. m. the anchor dropped in the harbor of Kirkwall. No one was allowed to go ashore but the captain who took our mail ashore and brought some post cards of the city. Our stay there was very short, as we were permitted to leave again the next day just before noon. There was no wind and the sea was as smooth as a floor, and this continued during the remainder of our journey, or till the next morning, when we landed in Bergen.

Taking into consideration my pleasant voyage to America and my very enjoyable and profitable visit to the conference and among the Saints, I feel that I have great reason to be thankful to God for his protecting care over me, and for the many blessings received from his hand.

I also desire to express my appreciation to all the dear Saints and friends for their hospitality and kindness toward me, and for their interest in our mission work in Norway. I can assure you that your kindness shall not be forgotten, or your financial aid misused.

With faith in God and best wishes for all the Saints and the grand work in which we all are engaged, I remain,

In bonds,

PETER MUCEUS.

PISGAH, IOWA, August 21, 1915.

Editors Herald: The Little Sioux District assembled on the Pisgah reunion grounds, one half mile east of Pisgah, in reunion capacity, Friday, August 13. A good time was enjoyed by all, despite heavy rains which fell Monday and Tuesday, thoroughly wetting the camp, baggage, bedding and all, causing some discomfort; oilstoves and optimism were exercised, and with the help of the welcome sunshine of Wednesday we got dry. The Saints of Little Sioux District are not "fair weather" Saints. I did not hear a word of complaint, and as we had no sickness in the camp, we had reason to be happy together.

The following brethren did the preaching: J. A. Gillen, Joshua Carlile, Amos Berve, Alma Booker, H. N. Hansen, Joseph Seddon and Sidney Pitt, sr., while Blanche Andrews, Cora Cohrt and Charles Smith were busily engaged in the auxiliary work.

We found this district competent in the carrying on of a successful reunion, as we had splendid water, shade, food and conveniences, such as telephone and mail service and auto conveyance to and from the depot. They also show they have been properly trained, in that they expect and prepare to attend the reunion from year to year, and go with the intention of receiving spiritual strength, enjoying an outing and good time together, and lastly to renew their subscriptions and buy a few books and tracts for themselves and their neighbors, a trait of genuine discipleship. Sixty tents were on the grounds, and almost every branch in the district was represented. It was estimated that a thousand people were on the ground the first Sunday, and two thousand, five hundred and four hundred autos the last Sunday.

Proper amusements were entered into by the young people: They popped corn, played "three deep," pass the clothespin, and other games, by which means they became better acquainted, and the camp received a touch of life and color.

We enjoyed our week with this people, and hope to meet with them again under similar conditions.

VAUGHN BAILEY.

KIRKSVILLE, MISSOURI, August 29, 1915.

Dear Editors: I want to say a few words to let you know that I have finally reached my field, and am nearly ready for the mission work, and that my address is as herein given.

I was saddened by the news that upon the very day we left Lamoni Brother W. H. Kelley passed over to the other side. It is seldom that an occasion of this kind causes me to feel so much a sense of personal loss as this does. In my association with Brother Kelley as a missionary and personal friend I learned to love and esteem him for his sturdy, fearless, and yet considerate character.

There was a time when I did not understand the character of Brother W. H., as nearly everyone in the church called him, and when we were appointed to labor as one of his force we rather dreaded it, thinking that we would not be congenial spirits; but when we came to meet and be intimately associated with him there are but few men whom we have learned to love and esteem more highly. He was a "good soldier for Christ" and humanity.

While I am on this topic let me say that there was a death in Utah about a year ago which caused me somewhat of this same feeling, though in not so close a personal manner, and that was Bishop F. S. Spaulding, of the Episcopal Church; and while the bishop, and Brother W. H., as also myself, looked at some things from different angles, still his was a character of sterling worth, and mankind suffered the loss of a true soldier in his death. Think of an Episcopal bishop who had the courage and conviction to be an ardent and outspoken Socialist!

In my limited acquaintance with Bishop Spaulding I found him ready to listen to others and to try to give them credit for what they were trying to do of worth for mankind, and willing to get their viewpoint in forming his judgment. In other words, a broad-minded, devoted minister of what he understood to be the Christ message, or, rather, the Christ message as he understood it. All honor to such characters, wherever found!

In moving to this point I have found much to do that has not permitted me to enter the active mission force as yet, getting the family settled here and ready for the winter; however, I think I will be ready to answer calls for labor by September 10, and I am still in the faith and desirous of telling the gospel story.

I shall be glad to hear from any of the Saints of this mission, and will endeavor to answer the calls that may come in this way, as well as to find such openings as may be practicable.

Ever in the conflict for the truth, I am,
Sincerely,

705 West Pierce Street.

A. M. CHASE.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, August 8, 1915.

Editors Herald: The Central Texas reunion was held near Hearne, July 26 to August 1, the district conference convening on Saturday and Sunday preceding. There were between ninety and one hundred Saints present, and about the same number of nonmembers. The prayer services each morning were a source of encouragement and a great strength to all who attended. Truly the Lord met with the Saints in no uncertain way.

Quite a number of the young took an active part in these meetings, which shows that the Lord is working with them, preparing them for still greater service. Some threw their tobacco away and said they wanted to be clean.

Brother Jacob Watson, a nonmember at the time, was outside the arbor during one of the prayer meetings, and saw in vision the roof of the arbor removed from over the Saints and a beautiful light shining upon them. At the close of the meeting he requested baptism.

The Spirit of the Lord was with his servants in the preaching services, which will no doubt bear fruit in time to come. In all there were five baptized. This reunion is declared by many to be the most spiritual held in this district for a number of years. Yours in the gospel,

SHELDON ARMSTRONG.

[The following from a letter by Sister Lucie H. Sears to Elder G. R. Wells is of interest in suggesting the possibilities of active, comprehensive work in and for the church.—EDITORS.]

EAST DENNIS, MASSACHUSETTS, August 22, 1915.

I am just home from a six-week sojourn in Philadelphia, brimful of enthusiasm, some thoughts and a few half-developed plans for work.

Philadelphia and the "bunch" there would put heart in the most disheartened, it seems to me. It showed me what I have long believed—that our plan of social service was workable if one was only consecrated enough to make it work.

I suppose there is not another community like Philadelphia in the country. The gospel has gone to the people by ministering to their secular needs. It has given them sanitation, physical recreation, social life, education, and employment.

If you could see those young people, . . . hear their life histories and see what they are to-day, you would marvel at the power of the gospel and exclaim as I did, "Great is the mystery of godliness!"

Some one asked me: "Do you think they will endure?"

And I answered: "If I can have the power of endurance many of them have shown thus far, I shall feel I will be safe."

Among the older ones are brands literally snatched from the burning, and to-day with faces shining with inward joy and peace some occupy places in the priesthood, the Sunday school and Religio.

Brother and Sister Walter Smith have given of themselves, their time, their talent, their home life (for they can have no privacy)—everything, to those people, and the results are all that we hear of Philadelphia.

The young people all seem to have an ideal, an aim to work for, and are bending their energies toward acquiring an education, not solely to be educated, nor yet that they may make advancement in the world, but with an idea of consecration; that they may be skilled workmen and women in helping to build up Zion! Doesn't that make your heart glow! and aren't you glad that we have some who are so practically spiritual that they can teach that?

I can't tell what Philadelphia has done for me, the new vista it has opened up, the courage and confidence I gained, and the impetus for work.

I went to see what had been done and how it had been done, thinking Brother Smith had some peculiar talent the Lord used in the work. I came away convinced, as Walter has often said of himself, "Anyone who will can do what I have done."

The summer school work was very interesting, and Brother Smith found plenty for me to do. After a few days he let me have charge of general exercises, tell the stories, maintain discipline, and get the boys to and from the school playground.

I had a class of about forty boys in the industrial period, making balls and raffia work of various kinds. He had the larger boys, who made hammocks, baskets, etc.

There were several classes of girls in sewing, embroidery, weaving, and a large kindergarten—about three hundred children, with an average attendance of two hundred and eighty-five.

Elder Hale W. Smith and his wife did fine work at the Second Church. Sister Smith told me that in spite of the fact she had never worked so hard in her life as this summer, . . . she would not go back to Independence to just housework and an embroidery club.

It was hot, bless you, hotter even than I found Lamoni that summer I was there, but we worked on and on. "Commencement" night saw what our patience, perseverance, prayers, and perspiration had accomplished. It was a joyful occasion, and we were repaid in the joy of the children and the delight of their parents and friends.

A record is kept of every child, home, Sunday school, etc.; if he has no Sunday school he is invited in, if he has one, nothing is said about it, except to be friendly, but it means if there is a difference of opinion arising in that church they'll turn to us. Three visitors of the State Association were present and took part on the program the night we closed, and expressed their delight, and the papers described ours as the best of many good schools.

SEBASTAPOL, CALIFORNIA, August 26, 1915.

Editors Herald: The reunion of the Northern California District at Irvington, August 13 to 23, was a success in every way. That spirit of brotherhood, which is characteristic of Latter Day Saint gatherings was evidenced throughout the entire time, and in all departments of the work.

Sister Lucretia Miller was baptized. She was formerly a member of the old church, having been baptized in 1846. She repudiated the Utah organization many years ago and now is happy to be back in the fold again.

Brother Rushton presented inspiring ideals to be attained; Brother Carmichael explained the financial law, and what the various institutions of the church are doing, or aim to do; while Brethren Pitt and Bond pointed us to the "old paths." All went home strengthened, and with a better idea of the meaning of true consecration to God's service. Those who attended were well repaid for their trouble, and those who stayed at home certainly missed something.

Reports from the booth at the Panama-Pacific International Exhibition are very encouraging. Brother and Sister F. G. Pitt are in charge there now, succeeding Brother and Sister J. W. Davis, who left for the East on Wednesday.

In the field there is much more than the present mission force in California can do, but if all the Saints in California will do their best, much may be accomplished. If there are any openings, especially in Lake County, Butte County, or Modoc County, I would appreciate it if those who know of them would write me.

With hope bright for the final triumph of our cause,
Sincerely,

M. A. MCCONLEY.

CHICO, CALIFORNIA, 1001 Main Street, field address.

SHABBONA, MICHIGAN, August 23, 1915.

Editors Herald: We have just enjoyed a two-day meeting at this place, and have again found God true to his promises in the blessing of his children. Because of the rain many did not come, but God blessed those present, and we believe blessed those who desired to come but could not on account of conditions.

Our Brother Kenneth Greene, district vice president, was with us and gave us instruction and advice. Our district chorister, Sister Plato, was also present and we truly enjoyed her inspiring gift of music. She is promoting the musical interest throughout the district. We also enjoyed the presence of noble visiting elders. The prayer services were enjoyed by all, a goodly measure of God's Spirit being manifested. As we listened to the brethren and sisters relating their experiences at an experience meeting, the Spirit of God burned within us, and we were much encouraged.

We feel indeed that trying times are at hand, and that God's people must be on the watchtower continually. Let us pray for one another and work together that the great army of God may move on against the foe, and in the end victory shall be ours.

We separated feeling benefited and encouraged to press our way onward and upward in the great cause.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion and that God's people may overcome, I am,

Your coworker,
ORVAL O. THOMPSON.

MCKENZIE, ALABAMA, August 23, 1915.

Editors Herald: The reunion just closed here was excellent. A. E. Warr, A. G. Miller, E. C. Shelley, and the writer did the preaching. We are glad to note that each of these young men, lately entering the mission field, are growing in the work.

The prayer services and the Sunday school work were uplifting, and added greatly to the success of the reunion. The hearts of the Saints were made glad under the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit. The song services under the direction of Professor W. S. Lee, were one of the inspiring features that helped to make the meetings successful. There were many willing ones who worked hard and whose efforts helped in the good work.

There were twenty-one baptisms, and others almost persuaded to obey. The Saints enjoyed a spiritual feast which we hope will help them to higher grounds, and to the enjoyment of still greater things in store for those faithful and obedient.

Your coworker,
F. M. SLOVER.

HEATHERDOWN, ALBERTA, August 25, 1915.

Editors Herald: We are about thirty-five miles from Edmonton, where there is a nice little band of Saints; but we might as well be five hundred miles, for all that it can do for us. We have not been here long enough to reap the golden harvest, but sufficiently long to have spent what little we had of this world's goods, and now we are, with many others, feeling the effects of what the war has brought to this part of the country, as well as to other of the British possessions.

There is nothing that brings me so much sorrow or regret as reading the many appeals and calls for money for various worthy objects connected with the church, when I find myself powerless to contribute to any of them; and it was a real grief to find our names absent from the list of tithe-payers recently, the first time in over twenty years. I guess the Lord feels he can get along without our money, as we share the common losses of all, and our crops are ravished and our possessions spoiled by destroying influences, so that we are existing on money that was tithed in the past. Just how long we will be tried in this way I know not, but we hope for better things in the future. (Hope springs eternal in the human breast.)

We are all well, however, and my husband's health is very decidedly improved. He works hard and long, and yet seems to be able to cope with conditions without bringing physical discomfiture to himself, and the girls are brown and rugged, and in the best possible condition physically, and they are not old enough yet to miss any of the advantages of our more modern and advanced civilization.

It is impossible to get so far away from church activities as to leave behind one's hopes in the gospel, and isolation and privation often are the means to draw individuals nearer to God. If the experiences through which we have passed and are peculiarly being tried with will in the end result in our good and the bringing of the gospel to this little neighborhood, we shall feel well repaid. This is our hope, and we are trying to live so that when that time comes we shall not have lowered the standard of high ideals and righteous conduct that accords with the righteousness required of professors of the religion of Jesus Christ.

My chief comfort, now that my hands are tied financially and otherwise, is that when circumstances were favorable to the carrying out of the law, I failed not; nor did I ever grow weary in doing what I could for the furthering of all the activities of the church. I still can read of the growth of the old as well as the new movements along church lines; and it gives me pleasure to see individuals progress and develop as they assume positions of responsibility in performing their work.

I trust that a brighter day will dawn for us all, and that all these conditions that are trying now will work together for good to the church as a whole, for surely we are living in perilous times. We enjoy reading letters from those whom we are acquainted with, and they are many, and take this means of telling you that we are still in the faith and happy and well, and that we are looking forward to a day when church associations will again be enjoyed.

With all good wishes, I am,
Hopefully,
ADA S. NEWCOMBE.

News from Missions

At the Exposition

We have reached our field of appointment at last, after many stop-overs at different branches en route, reaching here a couple of weeks ago. We are located at the present time at the exposition, where we are in charge of our church exhibit.

This is one of the greatest opportunities for spreading the gospel and for enlightening the people from all parts of the world as to our position. It will be impossible for me to impress upon you how interested the people are, and it is the rare exception when we are not listened to. We have entered into this work with all our enthusiasm, and in fact I was too enthusiastic, for I found after the first day's work, which consists of talking almost steady all day, that I was completely exhausted, and as a result am trying to guard against this.

The exhibit of our church is very nicely gotten up, and very artistic and educational. Brother J. W. Davis, en route home from Hawaii, was in charge when we arrived, and as most of us know, Brother Davis is an enthusiastic and earnest worker in whatever he undertakes, so we appreciate his efforts and work in making the church exhibit what it is.

First, there are several large cards telling what we believe. One especially was instrumental in drawing the attention of a very famous public speaker on social reform, a lady from New York City. She read what our platform was, individual regeneration, and above this is President F. M. Smith's picture, and she came to us one evening just at closing time, and made herself acquainted and said, That is the best thing I have read in any of the buildings, and it has made me want to know you people and your work. She of course had heard of the "Mormons," and was acquainted with several of them, but had not heard of our church, and was deeply interested. She came back the other evening at closing time, as she is busy also during the day, and said, Mrs. Pitt, I must know you and Mr. Pitt better, and learn of your faith, for it draws me here, and I like all you say. We are looking forward to having her meet Brother Rushton when he returns here. She has our literature and is delighted with our explanation of the Scriptures.

Then the next day a very nice-appearing man came along and smiled when he saw Joseph Smith's large photo, but became very interested when I said, We are not of the "Mormon" people. I talked with him for an hour and a half. He is greatly interested. He is an infidel. I said I would not be able to convince him, for he did not believe the Bible. He is coming again when Elder Pitt is present. Before leaving he said, Well, I have taken up fifty cents worth of your time, give me a Book of Mormon. I read to him where it says that no man among you shall have save it be one wife, etc., and that more than one is an abomination before the Lord. He came again and said, Well, what else have you to sell me? you haven't convinced me yet. I was sorry we did not have the "Old Jerusalem gospel," for this man is in earnest. He said, I am open to conviction, and these other people along here (meaning the other church exhibits) haven't anything. He is coming again, and I trust that his talk with Elder Pitt will help him.

There are many experiences one could relate, but I will only mention those which are really wonderful, at least to me. Yesterday I had the most wonderful time of all. A nice-appearing gentleman came along, and read the large sign, "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S.," and looked at me. I at once said, This is not connected in any way with what is known as the Latter-day Saints of Utah. I told him of the old Jerusalem gospel. He had me analyze each point, listened attentively, and asked numerous questions, such as, What does one have to do to join your church, or Christ's church as you teach it? I said, Baptism is the door, baptism for the remission of sins, and explained it all to him, and he talked for more than an hour, in the meantime losing his wife in the crowd; but this he did not seem to mind, as he was so interested. He said, "Well," (now I am going to relate his exact words if you will pardon) "I have traveled a great deal and talked with all kinds of religious people, but you have them all beat, my girl," and he said, "You have the best thing here that I ever heard, and I am coming back." I gave him literature, of course, and as he was leaving he said, I will be back. He kept his word, for in less than an hour he returned, and stood and talked with me again for half an hour. What appealed to him was our views on the different glories, our views on all the points of doctrine. At this time Sister Holling, a very enthusiastic sister of San Francisco, who comes often and helps us out, was present, and the gentleman came close to us and said, with tears in his eyes, You people do not know me, but, before God, I would give all I have in this world if I knew the truth. I said, Ask God to show you which of all is the right way, and it shall be made known unto you in some way. That pleased him also. He very reluctantly walked away. He is coming this afternoon again. Elder Pitt will have a talk with him, and I trust we may be the means of bringing the gospel to him, for he is an earnest seeker, I feel certain.

Another man came along and read the sign. I said, We are not connected with "Mormons" of Utah. He stopped and listened, and I talked an hour with him. He asked me several questions and soon became very much interested and said, You have told me more than I ever heard from anyone, and now there is one more question, but I don't suppose you can answer that; it is, What do you consider the soul of man, and how do you teach about the body and the spirit and the soul? Instantly I replied, We teach that the body and the spirit united is the soul of man. He had me repeat it again and then said, You are the first in my life to ever tell me that. Why I just asked that Russell man there and he could not tell me. I have asked noted ministers that question, and you are first to tell me. I am surprised, and I can say that what you have told me sounds the best of anything I ever heard, I will be around again.

A very well educated lady, a young married lady, came and talked and we visited on the gospel and Bible for an hour and a half. She is delighted. She had me explain all we believed as to each point of doctrine, and as I did so, she kept saying, Oh, that is fine. And when she wanted to know what became of all those who went to hell, and I explained that Christ preached to the spirits in prison, those who had been disobedient in the days when Noah was preparing the ark, and that we taught that there would be a chance for those who went to hell, she said, Oh, that is not in the Bible, surely, for I have read the Bible and never saw or heard of such a thing. I said, Yes, in the third chapter of First Peter. She told me when leaving, You certainly will convert the people. I said, I do not want to convert them; I want to tell them the gospel as it is in the Bible, and then let the Lord do the converting. She said, There you are again, that is another beautiful thought. She told me when leaving she was a Universalist, but that she would be back. She has been back to see me three times and is getting much interested. She said we certainly had the best thing she had heard.

I could keep on for hours relating many fine experiences, also some not so fine. One I will mention. One day I had about ten in the exhibit, and was relating the church organization, etc., and explaining that we were entirely different from the people of Utah and their church. As I talked I noticed a couple of girls walk up and listen, and I felt I had presentiment enough to ask them if they were not members of the "Mormon" Church, and they instantly replied, Yes, we are "Mormons," and we want these people here to know we do not recognize you people at all. I said, Thank you very much, that has saved me a great deal of explanation, for that is what I wanted them to know. And as they were leaving, I said, You know we believe in discernment to-day and they said, Well, you certainly had it that time.

Many of the "Mormons" come around and look and listen. They are not pleased with the idea of our being here, and handing our literature out and explaining to the people that their church is a departure from the original, and that our church is the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. We always try to treat them with every courtesy, but they do not stop very long to talk.

One day a couple of Episcopal clergymen came and said, Now we would like to know about this church, for we have a very dear relative who was a Baptist preacher, and who left his church and is one of your members. I think they said he was one of our ministers, his name is Smith. They took the pamphlet, An Open Letter to the Clergy, and said they were pleased indeed, to have our position explained to them, and were glad to get literature.

It is impossible to explain the wonderful opportunities we are having. At times, from about three in the afternoon until six, closing time, we could keep three or four of our people busy caring for the people. When I see certain ones pass who seem afraid to even look over, I say, This is not connected with the "Mormons," for I am determined to let them know that even though they do not want to hear. But almost everyone comes and listens, and says when leaving, We wish you all kinds of good success. I tell the people when they have expressed themselves as having been delighted with all I say just to forget me, but to remember what I tell them that Christ said, for his word will judge them at the last day. So we hope for good success.

We are made very welcome at the pleasant home of Brother and Sister Anthony, and after several days as their guests we are now doing light housekeeping, my first attempt since our little Jerusalem home, and we are enjoying it very much. Sister Anthony is not forgetful of our wants though, and always has something good for us upon our return home in the evening. These kindnesses we appreciate very much, which recall to my mind the days of long ago, when dear mother had pleasant surprises for me.

Asking that all will remember us in their prayers, that we may be humble and faithful in the duties before us, I am,

Your sister in the gospel,

ROSA P. PRATT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, 281 Castro Street, September 1, 1915.

Lamoni Stake

The tent work in the Lamoni Stake has been continued under most trying experiences on account of the weather conditions. Aside from these adverse conditions, indifference has been the only other great hindrance. Prejudice is largely giving way. One addition at Creston, Brother John Baker, not as a direct result of the present effort, but after months of investigation. Several prominent people of Creston express themselves much impressed with the beauty of the religious system represented, and they were surprised that since the Bible so clearly sustained this system others had not discovered it. Surely the things of God are spiritually discerned.

Thinking we must close our meetings there for the time on account of the reunion at Lamoni, Iowa, we announced the closing service, and not till we had gathered for that service were we informed that the reunion had been postponed, then only indirectly, but we concluded to close and go to Avery, where we began on Thursday, August 12, and continued over the 22d. Here we enjoyed the best weather and attendance we have had during the year.

On August 1, The Avery Banner issued what was called a "Mormon edition," in which two pages and a half were given to announcing the tent meetings, and in representation of the editor's views of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. Among other things he said, "Who was Joseph Smith? He was a great prophet, and the only religious American prophet we ever had. Fully equal to any of the Bible prophets.

"The Book of Mormon. Have you read it? Greatest discovery of the age. Found by Joseph Smith in the form of golden plates at Palmyra, New York. . . . The Book of Mormon is a unique book, and well worth a perusal by the thoughtful student of sacred literature. It reads just like the Bible, being a record of the wanderings of the lost tribes of Israel." (It will be seen by this last expression that the editor is not a Latter Day Saint, and in this was misinformed.)

"Our Bible speaks of the Book of Mormon in several places, hence it is probably true what the Latter Day Saints claim about this sacred book."

Dated August 20, a petition was addressed to "The Honorable Reverends J. F. Mintun and C. Scott," in which was stated, "We should be very much pleased, . . . if you would be so kind as to give us two special lectures or discourses before you leave Avery, one on Joseph Smith and the other on the Book of Mormon, is it an inspired book of God? and we will try to turn out and carefully listen to same," and signed by forty of the citizens of the town. This request was complied with the 20th and 21st, and the majority of the petitioners heard, with others.

Dated August 22, we received a lengthy communication from the editor previously referred to, with a small contribution for tent expenses, in which he says: "My Dear Sirs: In olden times it was the habit of the American people in general to revile and persecute the poor 'Mormon' missionaries and traveling elders and officers of the church, when they would go out without scrip or purse to preach the restored gospel to the Gentiles, so that for a change and a diversion, it would be something quite new and novel for you people to receive some praise and commendation for the work you are doing.

"I am going to let Avery have this distinction and honor, and I write you this communication in order to heartily thank you both in my behalf, and that of those that signed the petition, and the town of Avery in general, for the interesting discourses that you gave us about 'Joseph Smith, was he a prophet of God?' and 'The Book of Mormon,' last Friday and Saturday evenings. . . .

"I must say . . . that you people presented much more and complete evidence from the Bible in regard to Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon than I thought really existed, and I am willing to say and to go on record that you completely proved your case from a Biblical standpoint. . . . In fact some of the women that listened to Elder Mintun's discourse, I heard commenting on the subject the day after, and they declared unanimously, that Joseph Smith could not be blamed for what Brigham Young said and claimed of Smith many years after his death, and they fully approved of Smith. . . .

"I have become convinced by the evidence presented by the Reorganized Church that Joseph Smith was not a polygamist, nor believed in it."

Last week while at home I received a letter from Brother George T. Angell of Avery, "In talking to the people, I find some have got a different idea of our work." Weather permitting after the reunion, tent meetings will probably be continued there.

It has been noted already in the HERALD how liberal the dailies of Creston were in printing a synopsis of nearly every sermon delivered there for over three weeks.

Found companion not so well as last fall, but we will continue to work and pray, as God may give opportunity.

LAMONI, IOWA, August 31, 1915.

J. F. MINTUN.

An Echo from California

If an echo from the southern California reunion, which has at this date just closed, may be caught upon the receivers of our HERALD press, and tossed abroad by the magic wand of printer's ink, the echo, though incomparably small in comparison with the reunion voices blending in the song of brotherhood, may bound, echo fashion, from hearts that love to hearts that respond, and in its sanctifying caress be worth while.

From the beginning of the reunion there seemed to be an earnest desire upon the part of the Saints to enter into such devotional relationship with the Lord as is our reasonable service, in order to obtain the riches of spiritual vigor, which are conveyed under his approval of his children.

Thus the mightiest powers of the universe and of all time were enlisted in a very happy degree to assist in the ever-present need of being lifted above the sordid and base things and incidents of life, up into the clearer atmosphere of love, forbearance, truth, holy communion, and liberty. Under such conditions, how could a meeting fail to be a success?

The Spirit which is holy because it is true in all things, which Spirit is the Comforter, even the Holy Ghost, is the one and only power whose abode in the souls of the people of God may stand as a commander of success and an unailing guarantee of ultimate, complete, and most splendid victory. As individual units in the kingdom of God, each Saint has the privilege, that by power of his will, the holy champion sent from the immediate presence of Jehovah himself may come in and in very joyous reality take command of every fortification of the soul against the encroachment of evil, which is being projected by the master rebel, Satan.

At the will of the Saints, expressed in prayers and service, this heavenly champion, the Holy Spirit, will draw his flaming sword in defense of the weakest. Who then could penetrate this matchless defense and subjugate it to defeat? None, so long as their guardian angel guest be not banished from them or grieved to depart.

Every material atom of the universe if thrown into one wall of resistance can not form an effectual barrier to the success of the soul which continues to work in rapport with the great God who marshals all material forces at his matchless will, and whose personal executive the Holy Spirit is. All the rebellious intelligences, who because God has refrained from depriving them of their free-will agency have united themselves with Lucifer's league,—all these combined can never captivate that soul which is truly hid with Christ in God, unless that security be forfeited by reason of the sad departure of that Spirit of God which prompts men to employ every circumstance as a means by which to give expression to the progressings of true holiness.

The people gathered at the Southern California reunion, August 20 to 30, seemed to take these things into account in their devotions, hence the success of the meeting as a distributor of blessings to those whose hunger and thirst for spiritual refreshing made them happy partakers. It was by the gracious permission of the missionary in charge of the Arizona mission that the writer was permitted to get over the border of our appointed field, Arizona, long enough to greet for the first time the fairy kingdom of the Golden West, and to join in the song of the Saints by the sounding sea.

So we return to our Arizona mission refreshed, invigorated, and zealous that the work of God, which has so richly abounded in the California Saints to our edification, may in turn be borne through us unto others, in order that righteousness and joy in the Holy Ghost may be brought to those who know not the truth.

With renewed declaration of love toward all the family of God, my own kinsmen in the most holy alliance of the everlasting gospel, and a will to serve and be spent as our Lord shall choose to direct, I am,

Yours fervently,

JAMES E. YATES.

West Virginia

The attendance at the West Virginia Sunday school convention and conference was fairly good, but we believe more people living in the central part of the district could have attended. Elders in attendance from adjoining districts were, W. R. O'Dell, and L. D. Ullom. We had a good conference, and the Saints and friends at Goose Creek did their part well in entertaining the people.

Since last fall the local elders at Clarksburg baptized eight or ten, and in Jackson County, Elder J. M. Jeffries baptized five. During the conference one young man was baptized by A. V. Closson.

The writer arrived in this field June 1, and held a meeting near Parkersburg. Near Elizabeth I preached sixteen times, at Girta nine times, and at two other places held forth a few nights on my way to conference. These meetings have helped and encouraged the Saints, and a few nonmembers have heard the gospel. Three have said they believe, and intend to be baptized when they shall have read more and become better prepared to live the Christian life.

Brother A. V. Closson has held meetings at Orlando and Clarksburg. We met at Goose Creek during the conference and continued holding meetings after the close of the same. We intend to labor together part of the time for a while, but soon will have to part, for there are some new places where preaching is wanted, and Brother Closson being district president will need to labor much of the time among the branches.

The outlook in the district is encouraging, and we expect to accomplish a good work yet before the end of the year. We desire the Saints and friends to write us and let us know about opportunities for preaching, so that we may use our time to the best advantage. My mission address is 404 Stealey Avenue, Clarksburg, West Virginia. Mail will also reach Brother Closson at the same address.

Your brother and colaborer,

FRED MOSER, JR.

HARRISVILLE, WEST VIRGINIA, September 10, 1915.

In 1881, the home class in Sunday school work was called, "a new idea." In 1887, attention was called to it in the International Convention, but in 1890 they commended it. In 1893, they recognized it as a "department" throughout the world. They now have a "family worship" agitation being promoted among its workers.

And ah! for man to arise in me,
That the man that I am may cease to be.

—Tennyson.

News from Branches

Independence, Missouri

The Saints have been blessed of late with excellent instruction and spiritual uplift both at preaching services and at prayer meetings. Baptisms have been frequent. A renewed interest has been awakened in the young through the forward movement of the musical talent among us. In the manifestations of the gifts of healing and prophecy the hearts of the Saints are often made glad.

The twenty-seventh semiannual stake Sunday school convention convening on September 10, also the stake conference, convening the following day, were efficiently conducted, peace and unity prevailing at the sessions. The Sunday school convention was well attended, nearly the entire delegation of schools being present. The program furnished was instructive, interesting and up-to-date.

At the morning church service on Sunday the 12th, the Saints rejoiced greatly in the stirring spiritual discourse of our beloved President Frederick M. Smith, who was greeted by a very large audience, every seat in the upper auditorium being occupied. Brother Frederick M. started his vigorous address by the statement, "The hastening time is near, and God is loosening the forces that move and drive the people into activity." Section 42 furnished his theme. He was glad to hear from every direction, reports of increasing spirituality. The glories of the kingdom were to the speaker's mind, set forth in the commandments read. He exclaimed, "I feel to arise to the question of the hour, and bid you as Saints to seek to honor your high calling before the Lord."

May our heavenly Father speed the work.

MRS. ABBIE A. HORTON.

Miscellaneous Department

The Bishopric

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana: On account of poor health, I will not be able to get over the district before our fall conference which convenes at Galien, Michigan, October 16 and 17. As we are in need of financial help, I trust the Saints may remember us at this time as they have in times past.

May we not only ask ourselves what have we done for the work, but also what can we as individuals do at this present time to help the Bishopric in their many calls.

As ever your brother,

SAMUEL STROH, Bishop's Agent.

COLDWATER, MICHIGAN, September 14, 1915.

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Spokane District: I am still bishop's agent, and herewith will be found names of collectors authorized to solicit and receipt for tithes and offerings in this part of the great mission field.

Dear Saints, as the Bishop urges me, I urge you to assist at once, paying that part of your substance which belongs to the Lord and is needed now. Let us not think we can be saved by keeping a part of God's commandments, thus deceiving ourselves. We are charged to observe these things, and we must work for the Lord if we receive the final plaudit, "Well done."

Our subagents are: J. E. Turnbow, Palouse; J. H. Van Eaton, Leahy; Peter F. Klaus, Gifford; Oliver Turbull, Sagle; D. S. McDale, O'Kanogan; J. O. Hower, Cour d' Alene.

Yours in the faith,

W. H. FORDHAM.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, South 238 Haven Street, September 13, 1915.

Pastoral

To the Branches and Sunday Schools of Southern Missouri District: As the time is drawing near when our quarterly conference and district Sunday school conventions are to take place, I wish to say that in order to save expense I think that with the consent of the district conference we can meet at 9.30 a. m. Saturday, October 16, at the Saints' church near Mill Springs, and in the time allotted, in the forenoon transact our business. By expediting business I think the district can also complete its business in the afternoon. In order to do this all district reports should be in hands of secretary, and all branches should send one or more delegates, the Sunday school likewise.

As the place of meeting is a little out of the way for the northern part of the district, it may cost more than one person feels he can spend, and we advise that branches at their business meetings select some one or more to represent them, and that a collection be taken up to defray expenses. In some places the Sunday school may cooperate in this. We especially urge all branches in the southern part to come in a body. It is for your benefit that we have this conference in this part of the district.

Owing to the death of Brother F. C. Keck and the illness of Brother R. T. Walters, of Clinton District, I have been requested to go there and assist, and perhaps defend our cause against the attack of a Baptist or Christian minister, or both. In the meantime, any district or Sunday school matter demanding attention may be referred to my associates, J. F. Cunningham and A. T. Gray.

Expecting the full cooperation of all in the district, I remain,

In bonds,

HENRY SPARLING.

Conference Notices

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, October 16 and 17, Galien, Michigan. Election of officers and selection of delegates to General Conference. Michigan quorum of elders expect to hold meeting. We would like a large gathering. Ministry and branches send reports to secretary as soon after October 1 as possible. G. A. Smith, president; W. P. Buckley, secretary.

Eastern Iowa, October 16, 10 a. m., Fulton, Iowa. Let reports be in hands of proper officers not later than October 10. Those attending notify John Heide at an early date, to be met at station at Maquoketa, Iowa, up to noon the 15th. J. E. Benson, secretary.

Mobile, October 23, 10 a. m., Vancleave, Mississippi. Priesthood meetings a feature. Educational program. Branch, district officers, and priesthood send reports in time. A. E. Warr, president.

London, October 9 and 10, London, Ontario. Delegate credentials should be forwarded not later than October 4. Statistical reports should be in hands of secretary not later than September 30. P. H. Philippin, secretary, 92 Chesley Avenue, London, Ontario.

Eastern Michigan, October 23 and 24, Sandusky. J. F. Curtis, minister in charge, is expected. Send branch reports to William J. Rushton, Applegate, Michigan, route 2, missionary and local reports to William Grice, Crosswell, Michigan, not later than October 15. William M. Grice, William Davis, presidency.

New York, educational conference, Niagara Falls, New York, church, corner Seventh Street and Willow Avenue, October 16, 2.30 p. m. G. T. Griffiths, minister in charge, has promised to be present. A. E. Stone, president; Anna Brothers, secretary, 36 Tremont Avenue, Buffalo, New York.

Western Montana, October 2 and 3, Deer Lodge, time having been changed last conference from December to October. Branches and officers send reports promptly to Mrs. Allen Secor, secretary, 145 Black Avenue, Bozeman, Montana.

Nauvoo, October 2, Rock Creek Church, near Adrian, Illinois. Send reports to W. H. Thomas, secretary, Ferris, Illinois, route 1.

Kirtland, October 2 and 3, Youngstown, Ohio. Time devoted to worship and educational work. Martin Ahlstrom, secretary.

Convention Notices

Mobile Sunday school, Religio, October 22, 9 a. m., Vancleave, Mississippi. Prayer service followed by program. A. E. Warr, superintendent.

Nauvoo Sunday school, Ferris, Illinois, October 1, 10 a. m. Prayer service 9.30 a. m. Mrs. John H. Laubscher, secretary, 1319 1-2 North Eighth Street, Burlington, Iowa.

Western Montana Sunday school, Deer Lodge, October 1. Prayer meeting 10 a. m. Business 2 p. m. Program 8 p. m. William J. Murray, secretary.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
The Angel Message Tracts	905
Current Events	907
Notes and Comments	908
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
Success, by F. J. Ebeling	910
Education and Personal Qualities, by Frederick A. Smith	915
Word of Wisdom, by A. M. Chase	915
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
Freedom and Palestine for Jews	915
No "Holy War"	915
Slump in Liquor Business	916
LETTER DEPARTMENT
Columbus Scott—W. H. Greenwood—Hazel L. Minkler—Marietta Williams—J. F. Petre—J. M. Stubbart—T. G. Maning—Philemon Pement—Peter Muceus—Vaughn Bailey—A. M. Chase—Sheldon Armstrong—Lucie H. Sears—M. A. McConley—Orval O. Thompson—F. M. Slover—Ada S. Newcombe.	922
NEWS FROM MISSIONS
Rosa P. Pitt—J. F. Mintun—James E. Yates—Fred Moser, Jr.	925
NEWS FROM BRANCHES
Mrs. Abbie A. Horton.	925
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver, Assistant Editor.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

Eastern Iowa Sunday school, October 15, Fulton, Iowa. Send reports as soon as possible. Miss Anna Lowe, secretary.

Kirtland Sunday school and Religio, October 1, Youngstown, Ohio. District Sunday school and Religio associations will be organized for Youngstown-Sharon and Northwestern Ohio districts. Send reports for third quarter before October 1 to C. B. Keck, secretary and treasurer, 1907 East Sixty-sixth Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

London Religio, October 8, 10 a. m., London, Ontario. Local secretaries send reports and credentials as soon as possible after October 1 to secretary. James Winegarden, president, London; George Tomlinson, jr., secretary, Saint Marys, Ontario.

Central Michigan Sunday school and Religio, October 8, Glover. O. J. Hawn, Matthew Umphrey.

New York Sunday school and Religio, October 15, Saints' chapel, corner Willow and Seventeenth Street, Niagara Falls, New York. Business 4 p. m., program 8. Ethel Hageman, secretary Religio; Marie Dixon, secretary Sunday school.

Pottawattamie Sunday school, September 24, Underwood, Iowa. Business 2 p. m. Ruth Timm, secretary.

Notice of Transfer

To Whom It May Concern: Through concurrence of First Presidency and missionaries in charge, Elder L. E. Hills has been transferred from Ohio to the Independence Stake, and Elder John Davis has been transferred from Dakota to Missouri.

FREDERICK M. SMITH, President.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, September 17, 1915.

Notice Concerning Silence

To Whom It May Concern: This is to give additional notice to the Saints directly concerned that E. W. Nunley was some months ago placed under silence by the undersigned, acting in conjunction with the missionary in charge of that field. We feel our action has been fully justified, and we hereby request the Saints and officers of the church in the part of the field affected to refrain from recognizing Brother Nunley in any official capacity, as he is under silence, though he has not as yet returned his licenses to the undersigned as requested.

Very respectfully,

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Two-Day Meetings

Marlette, Michigan, October 2 and 3. Single meals 15 cents, 8 for $1. All invited. William Grice, William Davis, presidency.

Address Desired

Sister Marie Julie T. Adamson, Lower Lake, California, desires the address of the English brother baptized by William Newton, Exeter, Devon, England, who asked if she could send him an early copy of the Doctrine and Covenants. She has a late copy she can send.

To Locate Members

We wish to locate the following members whose names are on the Spokane district records: David E. Crockett, Frank Greenwood, Minnie Quinn, Laura C. Nelson, Sarah A. Johnston, James E. Turner, Jennie Turner, Erma E. Turner, Emma J. Dopp, Helena Roble, U. Wolf, William A. Borton, Ila L. Closson.

W. H. FORDHAM, District Secretary.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON, South 238 Haven Street.

Died

BAKER.—Clyde Wilfred Baker, born November 23, 1887, Colebrook, New Hampshire; died Colorado Springs, Colorado, September 9, 1915, of hemorrhage, following tubercular trouble for three years. Educated at Colebrook. By profession a printer. Baptized by J. A. Tanner at Saint Louis, Missouri. Held office of priest. Leaves wife, son, sister, 2 brothers. Services in charge of S. S. Smith, sermon by Ammon White, interment in Colorado Springs. In life deceased was honorable and respected. A strong temperance advocate and Sunday school worker. Many friends feel proud of his life and the worthiness of his exemplary manhood.

October "St. Nicholas"

That one of the original locomotives of George Stephenson, built in 1822, is still, after ninety-three years of service, in operation at Hetton Colliery in England, the owners wishing to keep it going till its wonderful career has passed the century mark, is one of the interesting statements said to occur in an article on "Curious types of small locomotives," contributed by George Frederick Stratton to the October St. Nicholas. The article, it is announced, will provide an interesting survey of the various industrial locomotives, with illustrations and diagrams, showing their construction and their use in mines, lumber yards, tunnels, and the like.

Every device for making school life attractive and physically beneficial is welcome nowadays, and one of the most novel of these devices, already tried out at a Rhode Island school, will, it is announced, be described in an article entitled "Building a winter camp," in the October St. Nicholas. This experiment, it is said, consisted of a log stockade, fifty feet by thirty, erected by the boys a few steps from the school buildings, fitted out with a blockhouse and a large tent to serve as a dormitory, the whole system being conducted on strictly military lines and with great success, according to the author, who illustrates his article with a series of photographs.

If You Like Good Reading

you'll especially like the new serial and its sequel, beginning in the November number of Autumn Leaves.

Written by Elbert A. Smith

and

Illustrated by Paul Craig

"JOE PINE" is the title of this new story. It is a live story of boyhood on the prairies; of an emigration in a prairie schooner of the old type; of an intimate boy and girl comradeship; of the dedication to God of an only son by a widowed mother; of the self-sacrifice of an uncle whose iron creed was honesty and hard work; of the advent of the gospel in a new community.

The author has lived a life of interesting experiences that qualifies him to correctly and interestingly portray the scenes and incidents in their true settings and with an inspirational ring. Those who know his writings—and there are few who do not—will undoubtedly want this story for themselves and those to whom they are responsible for good reading.

The illustrator, Paul Craig, now laboring as a missionary in Omaha, is perhaps the ablest artist in the church, having studied and worked for several years in Kansas City and New York. As this is not the first book he has illustrated, he will be able to interpret the author's word-pictures admirably.

"CALLED TO BE AN APOSTLE" is the name of the sequel, and it will follow the story of "Joe Pine." This is a story of Joseph Prian Brady, a typical young man with the same longings and impulses and heart-yearnings as we all have. What he does with the memory that his mother dedicated him to God while he was a mere lad, will stir the emotions and interest in other young men in similar situations. He could not preach, write, paint, or sing—but he had a talent for making money. He falls in love with his former girl comrade and finally wins her from a covetous rival.

AUTUMN LEAVES

is a monthly publication for the youth of the church. It is of special and general interest to the whole family. These stories are worth more than the price of the paper, yet there will be many other articles and stories and illustrations of all kinds—such things as educate and interest.

The subscription price is only a dollar a year, and those who subscribe now who do not already receive the magazine, will receive the October, November, and December numbers free, and the magazine for the whole year of 1916 in addition. Send a dollar to-day.

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE

Lamoni, Iowa

A New Book

THE INTERPRETER

By Gomer T. Griffiths

A Revision of the "Exegesis"

containing more charts and information than the former book, also an illustrated chapter on offenses—law governing the same—procedure in church courts, and blank forms suitable to the same. The various quotations from the books have been carefully compiled and arranged, so that the instructions pertaining to each office are classified, to assist the reader in locating the duties of each minister from the president of the church to the deacon, also points out how the different officers are called and the manner of their ordination, thereby securing courtesy to whom courtesy is due.

Price .....50c

THE TWO-STORY BOOK. Excellent gift book. One story by Mary Leland Carter and the other by Elbert A. Smith. Especially recommended for inquirers. No. 247, each .....50c

FOR SALE CHEAP

Latest model Hammond Typewriter, "the Multiplex," in strong sole-leather case. Weight 25 pounds. Three sets of type, two of them in machine at one time. Type shuttles for every known language can be bought. "Just turn the knob" and change instantly from one type or language to another.

Does beautiful work. Thoroughly dependable and high grade machine, in perfect condition; will last a lifetime. Universal keyboard. Back spacer, etc.

Inquire of G. R. Wells, Lamoni, Iowa. 35-3t

CHRISTMAS RECITATIONS. A book you will need for Christmas time. Contains 228 recitations for the season, in poetry and prose, by leading authors. No. 183, each .....15c

OUR CHRISTMAS BOOK No. 1. Edited by prominent church writers especially for Latter Day Saint entertainments at Christmas time. About 70 pages of original songs, dialogues, recitations, and drills. No. 183a, each .....25c

GOOD HOTEL BUSINESS

Leading hotel in Lamoni, for sale. Baths, running water in every room, good run of business; location near depot. Easy terms to right party. Address W. C. Jones, Lamoni, Iowa. 37-4t

FIRESIDE TALKS WITH OUR GIRLS. Every young girl will profit by reading this book published by the Woman's Auxiliary. Wholesome teaching easily read. Order number 213, each .....30c

LOOSE-LEAF BINDER. The binder that holds any or all the new standardized report blanks. Size of sheet: 8 1-2 by 11. Highly commended by those who have used them. Every church worker should have them for reports and minutes. Four posts, durable buckram binding. Order No. M-EA1 1-2R, each .....$1.90

COMPENDIUM OF THE FAITH. A valuable reference book for students. Has the best quotations from Inspired Translation of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants on important church doctrines and subjects. Order No. 141, each .....75c

The Route That Offers Most to California Tourists

It's an investment that means a lot—your trip to California and the Expositions. You should buy the ticket that will pay the biggest dividends in scenic enjoyment, in attractive and interesting points reached—in luxurious, smoothly-handled train service.

The Burlington is offering a Grand Circle Tour for exposition visitors that comprises the biggest "Seeing America First" value ever offered. If you have made a Pacific Coast tour before you will realize this. If not, ask your friends who are familiar with the West—who know what's what.

Just get the facts about this Grand Circle Tour, then compare them with any other that you know about, and form your own conclusions.

Stop-overs allowed at any point. Step in and get your copy of our California Expositions folder, next time you're going by. It's worth reading even if you don't go.

L. F. Siltz, Ticket Agent

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, SEPTEMBER 29, 1915

NUMBER 39

Editorial

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

CHAPTER 8

THE ETERNAL JUDGMENT

The Lord is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed.—1 Samuel 2: 3.

Our theme is not a popular one in polite society. It is not a theme that is often discussed at dances or at card parties or at feasts. Society has agreed to ignore it. It is tabooed.

But God does not always observe good form (according to some standards, at least). He thrust this subject upon the attention of King Belshazzar at a time when he was giving a feast to his wives and concubines and a thousand of his nobles (Daniel 5).

The king beheld a hand in the act of writing on the wall. When the king with shaking knees and quavering voice asked for the interpretation, Daniel gave it. In part it was:

"Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting."

That was in harmony with our text: "The Lord is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed."

What bad taste (some might say) to drag a pair of balances upon the scene of that great social function and proceed to weigh the king and to write the result on the wall for all to see. But God is no respecter of persons. At some time every man who ever lived must be weighed in the balances. Are you ready for the test?

MEN JUDGED NOW

In a certain sense judgment is going on now. Men are constantly judged and punished or rewarded, according to the laws of Nature, which are the laws of God.

If you put your hand into the fire you commit a physical sin and you are judged and punished immediately. If you do a mean, contemptible, vile act, the result to yourself may not be so obvious, but it is no less sure. Paul speaks of some whose consciences are seared as with a hot iron.

Spiritual injuries, malformations, and deformities resulting from corrupt thinking and doing are more hideous, monstrous, and terrible than anything resulting to the flesh from violation of physical laws.

Men bear in their own souls the marks of God's judgments on sin. You can see it in their eyes.

Nevertheless, many apparently escape the consequences of their evil ways, to an extent at least; though probably their immunity is more apparent than real. On the other hand many innocent people suffer for the sins of others, due to the interdependence of humanity; for no man liveth to himself alone. Consequently in the providence of God there is a set time coming when all things will be equalized and every man will get his deserts.

Men may appear to sin with immunity for a time, but it is a true saying: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." (Galatians 6: 7.)

Ye have plowed, ye have sowed, and the harvest shall be of its kind;

What ye sowed ye shall gather and grind;

What ye grind ye shall bake, saith the Lord, and, or bitter or sweet,

In the days that shall be ye shall eat.—Shoonmaker.

SPECIAL JUDGMENTS

There are special judgments of God, as in the case of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts 5). A case in point also is that of King Belshazzar already referred to. The destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah might be mentioned in this connection. Their object is mentioned in Isaiah 26: 9: "When thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."

We must not flatter ourselves that these special dispensations are altogether a thing of the past:

Did ye deem that my wrath was a cloud that had thundered and gone,

Swallowed up in the smile of the dawn?

PRELIMINARY JUDGMENT

There are also what might be termed preliminary judgments. We are told that at death: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." (Ecclesiastes 12: 7.)

All kinds of men are dying all the time. All kinds of spirits are ascending to God. Do they all remain with him?

We understand that those who find favor with him are received into paradise to await the final judgment; while the wicked are sent to the prison house to await the same great event. This presupposes a sort of preliminary judgment at death.

To the penitent and forgiven thief Jesus said: "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise" (Luke 23: 43; see also Revelation 14: 13; 2: 7; 2 Corinthians 5: 1-9).

While of the wicked and unforgiven it is said:

The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God.—Psalm 9: 17.

And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit.—Isaiah 24: 22. See also Psalm 55: 15; Zechariah 9: 12; 2 Peter 2: 4-9; Ezekiel 31: 16, 17.

THE FINAL JUDGMENT

But there is also to be a final great day of judgment. We are told:

He hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained.—Acts 17: 31.

And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.—Revelation 20: 12.

EVENTS LEADING UP TO THAT DAY

Jesus is to come again. He left that definite promise on record: "And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again" (John 14: 3).

The angels confirmed this promise at the time of his ascension:

Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven.—Acts 1: 11.

His departure was real and personal; his second coming will be real and personal:

For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works.—Matthew 16: 27.

At his coming the first resurrection, that of the righteous, is to take place, and they are to be with him a thousand years:

For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first.—1 Thessalonians 4: 16.

And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection.—Revelation 20: 4-6.

This is followed in John's account by his description of the great judgment when the dead both great and small were judged.

The events then are: The second coming of Jesus; the first resurrection, at which time the dead in Christ are resurrected and the living righteous meet him; the thousand years millennial reign; the resurrection of the wicked, followed by the loosing of Satan for a time; and afterward the final great judgment.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THAT JUDGMENT

John tells us (Revelation 20) that both small and great shall stand before God,—the king from his throne, the peasant from his hovel, Dives who lived in luxury, Lazarus who lived in rags,—all will be there.

"And the sea gave up the dead which were in it." The men who now sleep in the luxurious staterooms of the Titanic and the Lusitania at the bottom of the sea, in the most splendid coffins ever constructed by man, will be there.

"And death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them." The most remote recesses of the bottomless pit will yield up the lost souls that cower there. Men must face that judgment bar. It is not a matter of choice but a matter of necessity.

The judgment will be just. God will be our righteous judge in that day, in connection no doubt with the Master: "Because he hath appointed a day, in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained" (Acts 17: 31).

He shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears: but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth. . . . and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.—Isaiah 11: 3, 4.

A judge stopped a runaway horse and saved a man. Afterward that man was charged with murder and arraigned before that judge. He pleaded, "Judge, you do not know me. You saved me once, you can not take my life from me."

The judge replied: "I was your savior then; but now I am your judge."

When Jesus was here he said:

I came not to judge the world, but to save the world.—John 12: 47. The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.—John 12: 48.

Jesus came once to save the world. Presently he is coming to judge the world. He is both savior and judge. By his word we shall be approved or condemned.

THE BASIS OF REWARD AND PUNISHMENT

It is distinctly stated that all men are to be judged according to their works:

And the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.—Revelation 20: 12.

And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be.—Revelation 22: 12.

This idea of merit as a basis of reward appeals to common sense. It is just, as God is just. Yet it controverts the old theological idea of one great, eternal reward of everlasting glory in heaven, and one great eternal, everlasting punishment in hell,—just two places and conditions,—heaven on the one hand, hell on the other.

A LINE OF MEN FOR JUDGMENT

To illustrate: let us in imagination arrange a line of men before us for judgment. At one end of the line is the meanest man that ever lived. At the other end is the best man that ever lived. They are graded down morally from the best to the worst, and stand shoulder to shoulder, scarcely an inch apart physically and morally.

Tell us now, where can we put our hand down in this line and say that all on this side shall go to heaven and all on that side shall go to hell?

And if God fixes the dividing line between two certain men, will he say that this man who has missed hell only by the thickness of a hand shall go into heaven and share celestial glory equally with the best man who ever lived? And that this other man who has lost heaven by an inch shall go to hell and suffer the same punishment that is meted out to the worst man who ever profaned the human form?

We do better than that here, in our high schools and our police courts. We at least try to give reward in proportion to merit and mete out punishment according to degree of guilt.

DRAWING THE LINE ELSEWHERE

But one says, We will not draw the line in that way. We will draw the line between those who accept Jesus and those who reject him. Very well, we will rearrange our line of men.

But the problem is not solved in that way. For there still exists the utmost diversity of character, service, merit, and development among those who have accepted Jesus. Some are not worthy to receive, neither are they prepared to enjoy the reward that others merit. And the same great differences exist among those who have not accepted Jesus.

Most noteworthy of all, perhaps, some who have professedly accepted him are not so worthy as some who have failed to accept him. Following is a case from life. It is a true incident, excepting that the correct names are not given.

A CASE FROM LIFE

Henry Clay Bates, a young man, member of a well-known aristocratic family of Virginia, fell in love with a dissolute girl of the neighborhood. He became so enamored of her that he took his young wife, mother of his little boy, riding in his automobile, stopped at a lonely place on the road, took a shotgun from the weeds where he had hidden it, and killed her.

He was arrested, tried, convicted, and sentenced to be hanged. After he had carried the case through the various courts, and exhausted every artifice that money and legal talent could employ, after appeal for pardon had failed, and as the day of execution drew near, and the time approached to set the death watch at his cell door, he sent for a clergyman of an orthodox church (so-called), confessed his crime, "accepted Jesus," received "religious consolation," and declared, "I die happy."

We are asked to believe that the executioner swung him, black-faced and strangling at the end of the hangman's noose, right into eternal glory. Can you picture Peter meeting him, removing the hangman's cap, loosening the noose, taking him by the hand, and saying, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord"? Will John the Beloved and the devout Stephen move over to make room for Henry Clay Bates, up close to the great white throne?

What about Mrs. Bates? She was a good woman, but not a member of the church. She had not accepted Jesus, by formal profession. Her husband gave her no time for confession. We are asked to believe that the explosion of that gun that blew her gentle mother spirit from her breast blew it right into hell. Must Judas Iscariot and Jezebel move over to make room for Mrs. Bates, up close to the hottest fire for ever and for ever?

THE THEOLOGIANS' GOD

If judgment were held before that kind of a God we believe that some one would be there with courage to stand up and declare, "You may be a God of power, but you are not a God of justice." And that kind of a God would have no answer to that kind of a charge. He might stop that man's mouth with brimstone and fling him into the bottomless pit; but he could not answer him.

But, thank God, such a deity is merely a creation of the theologians. He does not exist. Our God is a God of knowledge, and a God of justice, by him "actions are weighed." By him men are judged,

(Continued on page 933.)

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

PROHIBITION FOR SOUTH CAROLINA.—On September 14, the people of South Carolina by a majority estimated at twenty thousand, adopted the prohibition amendment to the State constitution submitted by the last legislature. The new law will go into effect January 1. South Carolina is the nineteenth State to declare for state-wide prohibition.

"FRYE" CASE.—In a note made public the 23d, Germany accepts the proposal of the United States to fix damages by commission for the sinking of the Frye, appoints her representative, and agrees to allow The Hague to pass upon the dispute over treaty rights. She also gives assurances that no American merchantman carrying conditional contraband will hereafter be destroyed under any circumstances.

ARMENIAN PERSECUTION.—The Turks are reported to have sorely persecuted the Christian Armenians, assassinating them and driving them from their homes into desert places, under the pretense that it has been necessary as a war measure to prevent rebellion and plotting. Viscount Bryce, former British ambassador to United States, has sent a plea to The Associated Press for America to stop this wholesale slaughter and exile. United States Ambassador Morgenthau has protested against the ill treatment of the Armenians.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Chihuahua, Villa's capital, has been taken by Carranza forces. Americans are leaving northern Mexico. On the 24th a band of Mexicans crossed the border and raided the town of Progreso, Texas, looting several stores and the post office, and burning buildings. In driving the invaders back to their own territory, one American soldier was killed and one wounded, and at least two Mexicans were killed.

HILLIS CONFESSES.—Doctor Newell Dwight Hillis, successor to Henry Ward Beecher in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, on Sunday, the 19th, confessed before his congregation to a lack of constancy to purpose and consecration to his calling, when referring to certain personal financial losses, as well as losses of others relying upon his judgment, understood to have occurred from speculative investments, he said:

Often I have loved my books more than the poor; I have loved position and honor. Sometimes I have thought of my own interest, when every drop of my blood and every ounce of my strength and every thought of my mind belonged to our schools, to the sick, to the friendless, to the poor, and to the boys and girls with their eager and hungry minds. Often I have taken honors when I should have chosen solitude, and dwelt apart, and listened to the voice of God and tried to be a true prophet of God to you.

Doctor Hillis's congregation will continue him in his pastorate.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The fierce artillery struggle in the west continues. Russia continues to gain in the south, and succeeds in still holding the Germans to slow advances in the center and north. The Germans and Austrians are massing forces along the Danube for an attack on Serbia, presumably in the hope of opening up a passage for munitions to Turkey. British soldiers have been sent to the aid of Serbia, and it is said that the Serbians are being assisted by the French. Bulgaria has ordered the mobilization of her entire army, announcing that such is done for the purpose of armed neutrality. Greece has ordered the mobilization of her army and navy "as a measure of elemental prudence." Rumania, while not fully mobilized, is ready for any emergency. Bulgaria and Turkey, enemies for years, are said to have composed their differences. The outcome of these developments in the Balkans is uncertain, but with the Balkan states armed to the teeth, urged by present combatants, and enticed by the hope of territorial gains, it is expected that sooner or later they will join the war. After a season of comparative inactivity, German submarines are again vigorously pushing their campaign against merchantmen, having sunk five British steamers in the past few days. Rumor suggests that the British navy by a successful campaign against German submarines, in which the German vessels have been ensnared with wire netting and sunk, have materially depleted the number of German submarine vessels.

DENY SINKING OF "HESPERIAN."—All submarine commanders out at the time of the sinking of the Hesperian deny torpedoing that vessel.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

WILEY AND THE WETS.—Brewery interests have been circulating recently in an advertisement, a statement credited to Doctor Wiley, of pure food fame, as follows: "Beer is a veritable food product. It can truly be termed liquid food." In denying this statement, Doctor Wiley in Good Housekeeping for September, says:

Furthermore, in the last few years I have been irresistibly driven to the conclusion that the best thing for the mental and physical health of our people would be the complete abolition of commerce in alcoholic beverages. This conviction makes it doubly irksome for men to see my name continually used to promote the sale of beer as a food.

The New Republic suggests that the brewers have made a mistake in pretending to quote from Doctor Wiley before his demise, having failed to wait until his pen was stilled in death, as they have done with Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, et al.

To be gentle is to be great.—Proverb.

THE ANGEL MESSAGE TRACTS

(Continued from page 931.)

"according to their works," for so his word assures us.

THE GLORY OF THE STARS

God has a reward for every man proportionate to his works, his merit, his service, his spiritual development. He has a punishment for those who are condemned, adapted to the degree of moral turpitude of each. And he punishes to reform; not for vengeance.

Paul says:

The glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another. There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars; for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead.—1 Corinthians 15: 40, 41.

The heavens refute the theologian's travesty upon divine justice. As the psalmist says, "The heavens declare the glory of God."

The glories and rewards that he will bestow are as diverse as the glories of the stars, the moon, and the sun. They range from the glory of the dimmest star that you can perceive, to yonder constellation of the first magnitude, and on up to glories like that of the moon and the sun.

It is clear, too, that he will differentiate in punishment as in reward. Jesus said of certain people: "It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city" (Matthew 10: 15).

PREDESTINATION AND MOHAMMEDANISM

Needless to say, this basis of judgment according to works is utterly opposed to the old predestination theology, which is stated in one of the creeds thus:

By the Decree of God for the manifestation of his Glory, some Men and angels are predestined upon everlasting Life, and others foreordained to everlasting Death.

These Angels and Men thus predestinated, and foreordained, are particularly and unchangeably designed, and their number is so certain and definite, that it can not be either increased or diminished.

And this creed goes on to say that God did not base his foreordination on any foreknowledge of their faith and good works, or the reverse. He merely selected some for eternal bliss and chose to pass others by, reserving them for hell, and all "to the praise of his glorious justice."

This accords well with Mohammedan theology, which is thus stated by Clarke:

Accordingly, when God—so runs the tradition,—I had better say blasphemy—resolved to create the human race, he took into his hands a mass of earth, the same whence all mankind were to be formed, . . . having then divided the clod into two equal portions, he threw the one half into hell, saying, "These to eternal fire, and I care not"; and projected the other half into heaven, adding, "and these to paradise, and I care not."—Ten Great Religions, part 1, p. 79.

But it does not accord with the divine love and justice of God; who is "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (2 Peter 3: 9).

For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth.—1 Timothy 2: 3, 4.

SALVATION AND REWARD

Jesus has worked out our salvation in the sense that he has made it possible for us. He made the sacrifice. He lived the perfect life. He presents the divine plan. It is ours to accept and obey. But while he saves us out of love, when it comes to the question of reward, we must work that out. We will get that for which we work.

This is made very clear in the following:

For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire.—1 Corinthians 3: 11-15.

Some, then, may be saved terribly, and as by fire, and receive little or no reward. Others may receive reward according as they have built of precious stones, gold, or silver on the foundation laid for them in the divine wisdom and mercy.

It is conceded that works have a vital bearing on salvation, and acceptance of Jesus has a vital bearing on reward; but broadly speaking, salvation comes by acceptance of Jesus, and reward comes according to works. By acceptance of Jesus we mean sincere acceptance and obedience. Many profess to accept him who do not accept him at all, neither obey him. Others make no outward profession, yet really accept some at least of the truths that he taught.

By and by the hypocrites will be exposed. By and by those who now accept a part will openly accept all,—if they follow the leadings of God, otherwise they will go backward and lose that which they now have.

BUILDING OUR MANSIONS

It becomes of the utmost importance then that we shall begin now to build wisely and well, that our works may stand the test mentioned above, and we receive the highest reward. Jesus said:

Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock.—Matthew 7: 24.

In my father's house are many mansions: if it were not so,

I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.—John 14: 2.

We do not presume that those mansions will be like rows upon rows of tenements, each exactly like its neighbor, and with no individuality. But each will express perfectly the individuality of its occupant.

In a sense we are building our own mansions on high. Oliver Wendell Holmes strolling along the seashore picked up the cast-off shell of a chambered nautilus. Holding it in his hand he soliloquized:

Year after year beheld the silent toil
That spread his lustrous coil;
Still, as the spiral grew,
He left the past years dwelling for the new,
Stole with soft step the shining archway through,
Built up the idle door,
Stretched in his last-found home, and knew the old no more.

Then the poet turns upon himself and with introspective gaze continues:

Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea.

THE OTHER UNWISE BUILDER

Edwin Markham has this modern parable:

But there is flying through the world the story of another builder, a foolish eye-servant, a poor rogue. He and his little ones were wretched and roofless, whereupon a certain good Samaritan said, in his heart, "I will surprise this man with the gift of a comfortable home." So, without telling his purpose, he hired the builder at fair wages to build a house on a sunny hill, and then he went on business to a far city.

The builder was left at work with no watchman but his own honor. "Ha!" said he to his heart, "I can cheat this man. I can skimp the material and scamp the work." So he went on spinning out the time, putting in poor service, poor nails, poor timbers.

When the Samaritan returned, the builder said: "That is a fine house I built you on the hill." "Good," was the reply; "go, move your folks into it at once, for the house is yours. Here is the deed."

The man was thunderstruck. He saw that, instead of cheating his friend for a year, he had been industriously cheating himself. "If I had only known it was my own house I was building!" he kept muttering to himself.

Every man who tries to cheat God or his neighbor ends by cheating himself. We are building for eternity. The house we build we must live in. The reward we work for we shall get.

The eternal judgment is not a popular theme in polite society. It has been tabooed. Yet it is not such a terrible theme excepting to the unprepared. It is not presented to frighten.

In it are revealed the greatness, love, mercy, justice of our God, "Who is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Original Articles

THE BUSINESS OF EDUCATION

[The following was the address of Brother George N. Briggs, delivered at the opening exercises of Graceland College held on the morning of September 10.—EDITORS.]

It is with a very high degree of personal satisfaction and pleasure that I am privileged this morning to welcome new students and rewelcome old students to Graceland.

The commencement period is usually thought of as being in June—at the close of the school year. It is then that we make a survey of the year's work, and take a look into the future. We always have some regret because of not having taken full advantage of the opportunities that have come to us. Now, at the beginning of the year, rather than at the end, is the time to take stock, the time to see whither we are drifting, and to steer our bark free of the rocks on which it may be shattered.

YOUR CHIEF BUSINESS

The one thing I desire to impress on your minds this morning is the fact that the chief business of government is education, and as individuals composing the government your chief business is education. I feel that you all realize that to-day. The fact that you are here this morning, at considerable sacrifice of time, money and possibly inclination, is prima facie evidence that you sense the significance of the enterprise upon which you are entering.

If, for the next year at least, the business of attending college is the one to which you are to devote your energies, you must make up your mind that outside influences, not related to the work of the college year, are to be eliminated from your program. That may mean a sacrifice at times, that is, a temporary sacrifice of personal pleasure or gratification of some friend's desire, but it will mean no sacrifice in fact; indeed it will mean a very great and lasting sacrifice if you surrender yourself to the emotions or longings of the moment. You are now in the business of going to school, and that means close application, long hours, devotion to the schedule you have mapped out for yourself, and a full determination not to let the pleasures and incidents of the moment interfere with your well-laid plans.

We are sometimes overambitious when we are planning our schedule—there are so many courses we would like to take—that we find difficulty in making our selection. We feel that we can take several hours more work than the schedule calls for. In fact, very frequently it is true that after we start upon our work, the first few weeks seem to prove that we could easily have carried a few extra hours. However, it usually turns out that the schedule committee was right in limiting your hours. It is not the quantity of work, the number of different studies one pursues, but the quality of effort put forth, the frame of mind with which one enters upon it, and the devotion with which the effort is made.

CHARACTER AND ABILITY NEEDED

It is especially necessary just at present that we have a body of young men and women in this country ready for the very great demand that is to be placed upon mankind at the close of this world war now in progress. The saddest thing about war is not so evident at the time the war is in progress, although that is bad enough, but the after effects are the worse, and in proportion as the present war is the greatest in the world's history, so the deadly effects will be felt further and for a longer time than in any previous conflict. It will be fully fifty years before the world is back to normal. Not in the lifetime of most of us will the countries now at war take their place in the affairs of the universe. That means that those countries not in the conflict, and beyond all others the United States, must be depended upon to do the big things which the progress of the world is going to demand. If there has ever been a time in the history of mankind when young men and women of character and ability were needed more than any other period it will be for the next fifty years, or during the active lives of most of you, and now is the time for you to determine whether or not you will be counted among those with their "lamps trimmed and burning."

We often hear of the commercial and financial supremacy that is to be ours during the next several decades, but God's great lesson of this war for us is the moral and humanitarian supremacy which comes from man educated and enlightened body politic.

A VITAL PART OF PUBLIC LIFE

Many of the early colonists brought the belief in education with them. They were firmly convinced that it was a necessary adjunct of freedom both in religion and the state. The enormous growth of the college system in this country registers the persistence of the American faith in education. The growth of the state universities of the West and Far West have been phenomenal, and the intimacy of relationship between many of these institutions and the public life of the states has been the result of this deep and practical public interest.

The United States Commissioner of Education gives as one of the reasons for the persistent vitality of the small independent college the fact that it has had such an extraordinary influence on the life and ideals of the nation. He points out that these independent colleges have actually furnished the country with a surprisingly—one might almost say a disproportionately—large number of the national leaders in politics, in the professions, and in commerce. These facts have thoroughly entrenched the small college in the regard of the people.

However, higher education in the United States is at present under fire. This fact in itself is distinctly encouraging. It proves that the American people regard education as a vital part of public life, and it also shows that the old idea that natural "gumption" was the only thing necessary for dealing with any situation or handling any material is rapidly giving place to the modern idea that men and women must be educated, that is, prepared, for every kind of work. A generation ago there were three learned professions; now there are probably a hundred, if not more; and there is no vocation so lowly or so elemental that training for it is not regarded as essential.

A recent study made by the United States Bureau of Education showed that the growth of a typical state university in regard to the number of schools or colleges represented and the number of different courses offered had been truly remarkable. In 1875 this university consisted of three colleges or schools with only two years of college work offered in seventy-eight subject courses. For the last college year, 1914-1915, this same typical state university had been organized into twelve distinct colleges, offering one thousand, six hundred and twenty-two subject courses as suitable topics of study looking toward a university degree and the pursuit of a learned profession.

A COOPERATIVE INSTITUTION

The college is a cooperative institution. The faculty, however devoted and educated to their work, can not do that work without the aid of students. Nor can that work be agreeable at all times, since one of its chief ends is by discipline to train the mind to concentration, steadiness, and persistence.

A student may feel that things ought to be made pleasant for him; and that, if he is not interested, he is absolved from attention. It is true that every subject may be made interesting, because a class of live, wide-awake students will find the life interest in the vital subjects of study. But men do not go to college primarily to be interested; they go to be educated; and education itself involves self-denial, self-control, and self-direction. Our tasks in life are set before us to be accomplished, and we are not asked whether they are agreeable to us or not.

There is a great lack of seriousness among large bodies of college students. One of the first qualities of a successful man is the sense of obligation; the man who wastes his time in college does not possess that quality. No man, no matter how generous he pays his way in college, ever pays for his education. No college could live on the tuition fees of its students; it lives only because of outside contribution, either from the State, individuals or societies. Every man in college is to a certain extent a charity student; he does not, and can not, pay his way. Other people have made it possible for him to use the immense advantages of the college, for which he does not, and can not, pay. He who does not profit to the very greatest extent possible and take advantage of the great opportunities other people have opened up to him, loafs on the foundations which self-denying and able men and women have laid; he takes his ease at the expense of other people; he is one of the human parasites for whom there is no legitimate place in this world.

The United States Bureau of Education recently investigated the cost of education in colleges and universities in the United States, and looked into the matter of the proportion of the total cost paid by students in the shape of tuition and other fees. It was found that in Cornell the student pays twenty-six per cent of the cost of his education, at Harvard he pays thirty-four per cent and at Yale forty-one per cent. Just what the percentage is here at Graceland I am not advised, but you may rest assured that after you have paid every cent in the way of tuition, laboratory fees, and other college expenses, you will still be receiving a large yearly contribution from the friends and others interested in Graceland College. You may also rest assured that these contributions are gladly given for the very great work that can be accomplished by you as students if you take advantage of the opportunities here prepared for you. Be men and women, not parasites.

To help a boy or girl through college usually means self-sacrifice on the part of the whole family. Is it worth the money? Is it wise? How shall one know in any particular case? How can the college lads be sorted out from those who are to have a somewhat different opportunity in business, in farming, or the trades and occupations by which men earn bread for themselves and their families? Not all boys can be college bred; which shall be given the opportunity? The burden of proof rests on the boy and not the college, which offers opportunities but has a right to demand evidence of fitness to improve them.

HAVE A PURPOSE

What takes the boy to college? Is it simply because the other boys are going? That is a very inadequate reason, quite unworthy the sacrifice the fathers and mothers will be called upon to make in the support or partial support of the boy through his college course. If the boy has not come to years of sufficient discretion to be aware of any purpose in a college course more serious than to "be in the swim," he is not yet prepared to enter.

It is not properly the business of the college to awaken boys to a sense of purpose. That should precede the college years. Most of the difficulties of college discipline and of failures in college arise along just this line of purposeless thoughts and lives. Every boy and girl who enters college should be sure of some clear and sober thoughts of life and its opportunities, and what these mean. There are opportunities which only the college can offer, but its horizons of general culture are not hidden from the man who has the desire of intellectual attainment. They are more frequently hidden, indeed, from the college student who spends his college days largely in evasion of his duties and in having an easy time. As the president of one of our greatest educational institutions has said, "This institution is a place for men to work, and not for boys to play."

The personal contact and intimate acquaintance to be had in the small college is the one great reason why the independent institution, as pointed out by the Commissioner of Education of the United States, has turned out such an undue proportion of the great men and women of the country.

ONE OUT OF SIXTY

I had occasion, in connection with an investigation I made some months ago, to ascertain what proportion of students entering the primary school system survived through the grades, the high school and the college. I found that for every 60 pupils entering the first grade, 53 remained until grade four, that is, 7 dropped out for one reason or another during the first four years; 25 remained until grade eight; 15 entered high school; 5 completed the high school; 3 entered college and 1 graduated; that is to say, for every sixty pupils entering the public school system, one graduates from college sixteen years later. These are the figures for the entire United States, as reported to the United States Commissioner of Education.

My hope for Graceland is that no young man or woman who can make use of knowledge will be denied it on account of poverty, and that all young men and women will have as inspiring a send-off into the work of life as has that one out of sixty who has heretofore been able to complete his college course.

THE THREE H'S

Education used to be regarded as consisting of the three R's. It is now recognized rather to consist of the three H's, head, hand and heart.

Education of the intellect and training of the hand have their very great place in the general scheme of individual development, but they are injurious, unnatural and unbalanced, unless in addition to cultivating the memory and reason and developing skill, we educate the heart also in the truest sense. A well-balanced character should be the object and aim of all education. Cold, calculating intellect without a heart for the philosophic, idealistic and poetic side of life will make the rascal rather than the man. A knowledge of languages, mathematics and history is of much importance, but far more so is the appreciation of the fact that true success in life depends on integrity; that health, peace and happiness all depend on character; that dollars, though of importance and value, do not necessarily make one wealthy.

"Knowledge is power," but it must be combined with wisdom to become useful, and to gain that wisdom the development of the heart is the prime essential.

Some one has said, "Where one man fails for lack of mental ability, one hundred fail for lack of moral standing."

THE POWER OF SOLITUDE

Full individual growth, special development, rounded mental operations—all these demand room, separation from others, solitude, self-examination and self-reliance which solitude gives.

The finest tree stands off by itself in the open plain. Its branches spread wide. It is a complete tree, better than the cramped tree in the crowded forest.

The animal to be admired is not that which runs in herds, the gentle browsing deer or foolish sheep, thinking only as a fraction of the flock, incapable of personal, independent direction. It is the lonely prowling lion, or the big black leopard, with the whole world for its private field, that is worth looking at.

The man who grows up in a herd, deer-like, thinking with the herd, acting with the herd, rarely amounts to anything.

Do you want to succeed? Grow in solitude, work, develop in solitude, with books and thoughts and nature for friends. Then, if you want the crowd to see how fine you are, come back to it and do for it what it so greatly needs.

Constant craving for indiscriminate company is a sure sign of mental weakness.

If you enter a village or town and want to find the man or youth of ability, do you find him at the railway station, looking at the train passing through, sitting on the grocery store boxes, lounging in the smelly restaurant? Certainly not. You will find him at work, and you will find him by himself.

Goethe says, "Talent is developed in solitude, character in the rush of the world."

You wonder why so much ability comes from the country—why a Lincoln comes from the backwoods, while many flourishing in a great city, can barely keep their places and make a living. The countryman has got to be by himself much of the time, whether he wishes to or not. If he has anything in him it comes out.

Astronomy, man's greatest study, grew up among the shepherds. Those of the cities never even see the stars, much less study them.

Remember that you are an individual, not a grain of dust or a blade of grass. Don't be a sheep; be a man. It has taken God many centuries to produce you. Don't make him sorry he took the time.

Get out of doors and walk and think. Get up in your hall bedroom, read, study, write what you think. Talk more to yourself and less to others. Avoid excessive magazine and newspaper reading.

There is not a man of average ability but could make a striking career if he could but will to do the best that is in him.

Proofs of growth due to solitude are endless. Milton's greatest work was done when blindness, old age and the death of the Puritan government forced him into complete seclusion. Beethoven did his best work in the solitude of deafness.

Bacon would never have been the great leader of science had not his trial and disgrace forced him from the company of a grand retinue and stupid court to the solitude of his own brain.

"My spirit hath been much alone," this he said often, and lucky it was for him. Loneliness of spirit made him.

Get a little of it for yourself.

Drop your mania for being with some one every waking hour.

Get away from the crowd when you can. Keep yourself to yourself, if only for a few hours daily.

GRACELAND'S STUDENTS

You have come together from many States for the single purpose of becoming better fitted for some vocation which will make you more useful to yourself and to mankind. You have each determined for yourself that the larger outlook on life demands more thorough and more extended preparation. The college authorities, the faculty, and the community of Lamoni welcome you into our midst. This institution has enrolled hundreds of young men and women from nearly every State in the Union and from several foreign countries. With few exceptions they have acquitted themselves as men and women of character and ability. They have gone out from this institution stronger in mind, body and heart, ready to face the problems of life with a firmer conviction that success depends entirely on their willingness to do at least a little more than is expected of them, and to do it a little better than their predecessors.

I have met graduates of Graceland College in the far distant parts of this country, from Massachusetts to California, and without exception they are acquitting themselves in a way which should make this institution proud of the fact that it is the Alma Mater of such a body of men and women. Many of them have expressed to me the ardent hope that they might be privileged to return at some future time either to continue their studies here or to render service. All that you can do, and we expect no less, is that you will so conduct yourselves and so take advantage of the opportunities here presented, in the college and in the community, that the alumni and other old Graceland students will be as proud of you and your accomplishments here as are we of their work while here and of the things they have stood for and done since leaving here.

GRACELAND'S FIELD

This is to be a busy year. Graceland has taken on a new dignity in the eyes of the educational world. There is a distinct place in the scheme of higher education in this country for the Junior College. Graceland is a pioneer in this State in this advanced step, and I have been assured by educational authorities, both national and state, that they are going to keep in touch with us, help us to develop this institution to become a type of the highest and the best Junior College in the country. To do this will mean the heartiest cooperation of all interests concerned.

We have been assured of this cooperation on the part of the Board of Trustees and the faculty. These two bodies, however, are not enough to carry this plan to its fullest development and its rightful fruition. It will require the assistance of the student body, the local community and the friends of the institution at large. My plea this morning is for that cooperation and assistance. It is not merely financial assistance that we need, although that is essential, but we must have your support in the larger sense of the right attitude towards everything educational and everything pertaining to the work of the college. I know it has had this assistance to a very large degree from the great majority in the past, and we ask for it in the future to even a greater extent.

This institution has a very distinct place to fill, is quite unique in many respects, and its work can be accomplished only by "team work," as one of the best friends of the college expressed to me the other day. My plea is for that team work on the part of the student body, the faculty, the community, the Board of Trustees and the friends of the institution at large which will continue Graceland on its high plane of accomplishment.

* * * * *

PERFECTION

LITTLE SERMONS TO SAINTS—NUMBER 9

BY F. J. EBELING

Hebrews 6:1-3 is a favorite with Latter Day Saints. And hardly is there a sermon preached but what one or all of the principles mentioned therein are referred to. But there are more in these principles for those in the church than those outside.

That somewhere in the long journey of man there must be perfection, must be apparent to anyone who has given the subject any thought. It is but a logical conclusion that adhering to a perfect law will produce perfect subjects.

In the opening of this favorite chapter, the apostle says, "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection." Thus we discover, perfection is the objective point.

In the closing part of the fifth chapter, Paul was writing to a class of people who had obeyed the first principles of the gospel, but who were not making the progress they should. Doubtless they were thinking because they were in the church there was little else to do than to simply sit down and talk of the first principles. But Paul gave them to understand these were but a means to an end; and the end was perfection. The church of Christ is a progressive church, and in which perfect characters must be evolved.

Jesus says in Matthew 5:48, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Jesus did not mean by this that we should be perfect gods, but perfect mortals. Perfect in our sphere, as God is perfect in his.

Neither does perfection mean we will become so we can not sin; but that we will have developed so far in the divine that we will not have any desire to sin. The perfect man in this world will hasten to make the wrong right as soon as he discovers it.

The ethics of Jesus is the only solution for the great economic problems which at the present time are absorbing the attention of some of the brightest minds of the world. However good and noble the intentions of these men may be, the ideal condition of society will never be reached, and the fuller life enjoyed, until the gospel of Christ shall have its perfect work in us.

Nearly all great social and political upheavals are due to the fact that men do not understand each other, and the selfishness and suspicion within man impel him to acts of evolution.

When we shall have reached that condition of seeing eye to eye, I shall fully understand you, and you shall understand me. While we shall always maintain our individuality, with a perfect understanding of each other, the great social compact will move smoothly along.

There is a vast difference between a sinless state and perfect state. We may be sinless and only started toward perfection. When we were freed from our sins, we had then just begun to perfect our characters. One may not be nearly so sinless and innocent as the day he was baptized, but he may be a more perfect man.

I have heard Saints say they wish they could always feel just as they did when they first came into the church. Such are only looking at the dreams of childhood innocence, and not at the full-grown man. While it is beautiful to think of the purity of our children, no parent would want to have them always remain as innocent babes. They delight in seeing them grow and develop into manhood, notwithstanding the many rebuffs and temptations that beset their pathway.

In Matthew 19: 21, Jesus said unto the rich man, "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor." Between the young man and perfection there was a great wall which must be broken down. The wealth of this young man was his idol, preventing him from pursuing a course in life necessary to the unfolding of the good within.

While riches may not stand in the path of spiritual progress, yet there may be something equivalent. Nearly everyone has an idol of some kind which he must get rid of if he would be perfect. Anything that takes more of our attention than we give to God, or that displaces the duty we owe to God, is our idol. It may be love of pleasure, love of dress, a fine house, farms, friends, or habits of any kind, even we can make an idol of our children, husband or wife. Of this Jesus said, He that loveth father, mother, husband, wife or children more than me, is not worthy of me.

John wrote to the saints in his day, Little children, keep yourselves from idols. He evidently referred to those things upon which they had set their hearts.

"I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one." Jesus here prays for the perfection of his people, and sometime we expect that prayer to be answered.

Paul's parting words in 2 Corinthians 13: 11 were, "Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect."

In Colossians 1: 28 we read, "Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom, that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus."

As the principles of the gospel are a means for the perfecting of those who observe them, so also are the officers. In the fourth chapter of Ephesians where Paul mentions the different officers and their object, he says, "For the perfecting of the Saints." From Job 6 and Ephesians 4, we learn that the purpose of the principles and organization were but a means to bring the saints to a state of perfection.

Eventually the church, by its functioning process, will be brought to that condition presented to us in Ephesians 5: 25-27, where we read:

Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.

That will be a glorious day when the church as a whole shall be without spot or wrinkle. And through its organization shall have worked out every wrinkle.

The church militant, as it is sometimes called, can be compared to a great, hot, smoothing iron, passing over us and ironing out the wrinkles of our nature. By yielding to this process, we will have all the rough places of our characters smoothed down, and by and by will make fit linen for the beauty of the table of the marriage of the Lamb.

The process of this great making, may be divided into five successive steps: Thought, action, habit, character, destiny.

Before any intelligent action there must be thought, and the intensity of the action will be determined by the degree of thought. A man must think he can do a thing before it is done. Making up one's mind firmly to do anything, the task is mostly done. For thought is the basis of the great object aimed at. No greater truth was ever expressed than as a man thinketh, so he is.

After we become thoroughly satisfied in mind any undertaking is a good one, begin to act accordingly. By acting out in our lives every mental whim, those actions will finally become a habit, and blessed is the man or woman whose actions for good become a habit. This should be the purpose of all who come into the church. Get the habit of going to church by going so often that you will feel out of place if you are not there. And when there, get the habit of taking part in the services. Get the habit of always thinking and saying good things about your brother. Cultivate the habit of patience so thoroughly that should you give way at any time, immediately you feel condemned. All these, and many more too numerous to mention, finally become traits of character, which will cause us to do good as naturally as the normal stream follows its course.

One can become habitually good or habitually bad. Life is made up of a bundle of habits, and we do them subconsciously. Who would think of sitting down to the breakfast table without washing? What farmer forgets to feed his stock in the morning? What preacher forgets to open his meeting with prayer? A hundred and one things are done readily or subconsciously by the power of habit. Then let our duty to God become a habit, which brings enjoyment to the perfecting of our lives.

Character, the great end of the gospel having been attained, we are prepared for our final destiny, to dwell in the presence of God, who can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance.

In the language of the great apostle, let us leave those things we have already observed and go "on unto perfection," having our characters so attuned to the heavenly environments that we will feel perfectly at home in the presence of the holy angels, Jesus and the heavenly Father.

"Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."

---

Of General Interest

THE SING SING SITUATION

Current statements as to what has happened in Sing Sing since Thomas Mott Osborne became its warden are conflicting—almost as conflicting as are the prophecies, based, as usual, oftener on hope than on information, as to what is going to happen there. We hear, on the one hand, that discipline has entirely disappeared from the prison and that the convicts are not only running its affairs to suit themselves, but are running them as would be expected from a lot of criminals. Others tell us that Sing Sing is already a changed place with order maintained as never before and the atmosphere turned from resentment and despair to friendliness and hope. As for the prophets, some are sure that Mr. Osborne is to go, and soon, and others that there is no thought of his removal.

In the midst of these uncertainties there stand a few unquestionable facts, among them these: Sing Sing, if changed at all, must be changed for the better, since in its former state it illustrated every evil of the old penology—the penology that professed to have three ends in view, to punish, to deter, and to reform, but failed miserably in all of them except the first. It is true that Mr. Osborne did not begin the work of reform, but he believed in its practicality more enthusiastically than had even the best of his predecessors, and he carried to their logical conclusion the theories which he had accepted, not invented, as to the potential responsiveness of convicts to confidence and kindness. Nobody really charges him with anything except going too fast and too far in the right direction. His best friends do not deny that he has made mistakes and by excess of zeal occasionally supplied with ammunition both those who honestly think that prison life should be very distinctly unpleasant and those who have found the new management detrimental to their political or financial interests.

It would seem to be fair to judge Mr. Osborne, not by petty details of his conduct of the prison, but by the effect which that conduct is having and will have on the characters and the futures of the prisoners. The critics who have given attention to that phase of the situation are practically unanimous in expressions of satisfaction and hopefulness. The governor, in whose power it lies to remove or to retain Mr. Osborne, should not forget that in him he has a man whose absolute honesty of intention is unquestioned in any quarter—a man who is working with complete disinterestedness, directly for the benefit of the prison's inmates and indirectly for the general good. Such faults as he has are apparently those of tact and caution. Whether remediable or not, they are as far as possible from being those that have marked too many wardens in the past. Corruption is as little to be feared from him as cruelty.

It is neither needful nor sensible that men like the governor, superintendent Riley, and Mr. Osborne should be at odds. They proclaim the same purposes, and the public believes all three of them. Let them prove the sincerity of their professions by getting together and talking together, each making to the others those proper and permissible concessions by which purposes are attained. A man who gives his time to a public work for the love of it is not lightly to be parted with. Mr. Osborne is not a politician. And politicians ought not to be allowed to pass judgment on his work.—The New York Times, August 8, 1915.

* * * * *

MUST THE CHURCH BE VULGAR?

To what extent the church should vulgarize its speech and sensationalize its methods to catch the ears and the eyes of the masses is a question for thoughtful Christians to ponder, writes Reverend Charles E. Jefferson in The Christian Work. He notes the modern craving for the spectacular, the bizarre, and the thrilling; how we take up and throw aside successively the book, the magazine story, the storiettes, and seek refuge in the newspaper, to "skim the headlines, look over the jottings, glance through the squibs." We are bored by long editorials. We do not enjoy long plays, and rush to vaudeville and to moving pictures which "give us the sense of rush, and at the same time employ no part of us but our eyes." Doctor Jefferson continues:

To a generation so constituted the church service is of course somewhat tedious. There is not enough bang and sparkle to it. The anthems are too long, and the prayers lack interest. The preacher is too dignified and he uses only language which good society counts proper. The result is a certain tameness which fails to stir the mind. The pressure upon the church to adopt the methods of the variety theater is tremendous. Religion, men tell us, must be made interesting, and how can it be made interesting unless you present it in a form which the popular taste craves?

Since many people are vulgar in their tastes, why not bring religion down to their level? Since most people use slang, why not translate the New Testament into slang? Since most people are fond of racy stories, why should not theological seminaries teach the art of story-telling? Since the masses of men and women enjoy a drama, why should not a preacher develop his powers as an actor?

These are questions which many good people find it difficult to answer. They are not sure but that the church of Jesus Christ should, in order to attract the attention of the multitude, make use of every device which the children of the world have found effective. And so we have ministers who work their subjects into fantastic forms, and adopt the methods of the hustling promoter, and convert their sermons into theatrical exhibitions, for the sake of making an impression on hearts too indifferent or hard to be reached in any other way.

The church is always molded and colored by the spirit of the age in which it lives, and just as the church in the Middle Ages degenerated because of the mighty pressure of the barbaric nations upon it, so the church in our day is in danger of deteriorating in all the finer graces of the spirit because of the vulgar temper of large classes of our population. We have had for many years a yellow press, with screaming headlines and atrocious pictures, and there are many men of intelligence who defend it, and men of character who lend to it the luster of their names. It is not surprising, therefore, that yellow evangelism should have its stout defenders, and that multitudes should feel that anything which makes a stir and draws a throng is justifiable. One of the questions for thoughtful men to ponder is, How far should the church vulgarize its speech and secularize its methods in order to catch the ear of the crowd?—The Literary Digest, June 19, 1915.

* * * * *

WOULD TRAIN SCOUTS

The Reverend A. B. Leamer, pastor of the Saint John Lutheran Church of Des Moines will introduce military training in the Boy Scout movement in Iowa.

As chaplain of the Third Regiment of infantry, Iowa National Guard, Mr. Leamer has been impressed with the benefits to young men to be gained by military instruction. He says that he intends to organize the boys of his church into a band of scouts and to drill them himself.

The idea of making soldiers out of the scouts has the indorsement of Adjutant General Guy E. Logan. He believes that the plan will get the youngsters interested in military affairs and will make them more patriotic. As the boys grow older they will supply material for the Iowa National Guard and the regular army. After a number of years of operation of the system of training the boys when young, the country will be able to raise a volunteer army which can be put into the field in a remarkably short period of time, he says.

The military men say that everything in a military way which is taught to the boy scouts will be of advantage to them in future years. Therefore they will give the new scheme every encouragement. There are many bands of scouts in Des Moines and other cities, but they are not getting military instruction. It is believed that as soon as the system is introduced into the scout band of one church the others will quickly adopt it.

Socialists and labor organizations generally have adopted the policy of opposing the boy scout movement, even of refusing to allow scouts to march in Labor Day parades, on the theory that it was essentially military. Scout leaders generally insist that there is no military flavor in the scout rules and propaganda.—The Des Moines Register, August 18, 1915.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS,
LAMONI, IOWA

Conditions Encouraging

During our late visit to the several reunions we received much to encourage us in our work of caring for and providing for the Children's Home. Everyone is in favor of continuing the good work, paying off the debt, and providing for the homeless children as well as we would wish our own provided for when we have left them, should we not have the privilege of remaining with them until they have passed the dependent age.

At Nevada, Iowa, at the reunion of Des Moines and Gallands Grove districts, the authorities decided to take up a collection for the Children's Home when a very large audience was present, though they were in arrears on expenses at the time.

One especial feature we wish to mention, we had the pleasure of speaking for thirty minutes in behalf of the home at the reunion of Fremont, Iowa, and Southern Nebraska districts at Thurman, Iowa. A special tent had been prepared in which to entertain the small children, and when they repaired to their tent these little ones took up a collection to aid the children at the home, and as we received the handful of pennies we thought of the comment of the Master when the poor widow cast her two mites into the treasury, and mentally exclaimed: They have cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury.

To the credit of our Children's Home family and those who have had the care and training of these little ones we relate an incident:

A gentleman whose residence property adjoins the Children's Home grounds said to us, "They are the most orderly and well-behaved children I ever saw. I have known families of three or four children who have given more trouble and annoyance to neighbors than all these do."

Surely people who can receive from thirty to forty children from various surroundings into their care and so train them as to bring them under such orderly discipline, and at the same time retain their love, are entitled to much credit.

Of course this is not the only feature that requires attention, but it is a very important one. A teacher in the public school who has an excellent reputation for deportment in his classes said: "I receive into the school from no family more polite, or better governed children than I receive from the Children's Home."

Sympathy

There is nothing that touches the human heart with more purifying effect than sympathy, and there is no creature that will enlist sympathy deep and sincere more than a child. No wonder that our helpless children receive the heartfelt sympathy of the Saints and friends as they do, and that the rich as well as the poor are contributing to the demands of these little ones.

The following poem is an example of how a selfish man can be touched and transformed by its magic power.

THE MOTHERLESS BABE

'Twas the close of a long and weary day,
As the "Fast Express" sped over its way.
And its living freight, with deep cares oppressed
Had one by one sunk into their rest;
Until at length their slumberings mild,
Were roused by the cry of a fretful child.
A man's arms held it, a man's voice tried
To soothe it and calm it, yet still it cried.
Annoyance indeed to the tired nerves
Of weary traveler who sleep deserves;
Till at last a man, with visage grim,
And thinking of naught but the nuisance to him
Said harshly, "I've stood this thing until
I've had of that crying child my fill.
It's really a most confounded bother,
Why don't you take the child to its mother?"
Low, soft and sad was the answer given,
"The mother, sir, is at rest in heaven.
Her spirit has crossed the harbor bar;
Her body now lies in the baggage car.
No more will her arms her baby press,
Or tenderest love can her lips express.
And many miles have I wearily come,
To bring her and babe to my early home."
Something that seemed very much like a tear
Shone in the eyes of the listeners near,
And he, who had spoken so harshly and cold,
Reached forth his arms the infant to hold;
"I beg pardon," he said, still gruffly, and yet
The shaggy eyelashes with tear drops were wet.
All night up and down through the narrow aisle
He paced till the sobbing was hushed, and a smile
O'er the lips of the babe came softly to creep,
And the little eyes closed in peace-giving sleep.
Oh, sympathy great, that human hearts bind,
No heart so callous but somewhere you'll find,
Though filled with its cares, and selfish at best,
Sometimes will awake at thy tender behest.
The fountain, though long kept under a seal,
At sympathy's call must its presence reveal.

Our Treasury Department

In the report of the treasurer for the month of July we made this statement: "We trust that when the treasurer is again heard from in September that we will have to report to you that even during the dry month of August the needs of the home were amply met." Here are the receipts and expenditures for the month of August. The total receipts for the running expenses were $148.94; the expense of running the home for the help and bills for supplies was $178.56. There were not sufficient receipts to meet the expense for the month of August, making a deficit of $29.56.

The contributions received for the indebtedness on the land for the month of August were $63, making total receipts of $724.

We trust the reader is interested in these reports given for each month, and that as they set forth briefly but clearly the needs of the home in the matter of finances connected therewith, that the friends of the home will continue the support which they have so splendidly given in the past.

There are numbers who are not able to contribute large sums, but who are willing to set aside some definite amount each month. We wish to take this opportunity to state that these small amounts coming in regularly as they do are a great help toward meeting the regular monthly expenses. When these smaller amounts are all placed together each month they go to make up a larger amount.

The home needs more of these friends who are willing to set aside each month a certain amount whether small or great. We have in our office contribution cards which we will send for distribution, the aim being to secure the names and addresses of those who are willing to put forth the effort to contribute regularly. Shall we send you some of these cards?

We desire to make mention of an aged lady living in Ludington, Michigan, Mrs. Margaret Yake, eighty-six years of age, and not a member of our church, who with her own hands has labored in support of our Children's Home in a way to meet the urgent needs of the home. This is only one out of many not of our church who are interested in the institution.

Brother George B. Hall, sending in a contribution and writing a few lines, states: "I have read with interest the means used by different ones, printed in the HERALD, for raising money for the home.

"Several months ago I obtained a nice little bank with key. I took it to Sunday school, set it upon the bookcase. I spoke to the children about it, told them that every cent that was placed in it should be sent to the Children's Home, and as a result you know I have sent to you about one dollar a month, which I think is real good for a small school." We think so, too, Brother Hall, and thank you for the suggestion of this method. Can not some others profit by this suggestion?

JOSEPH ROBERTS, Treasurer.

Letter Department

Of Passing Moment

NUMBER 7

We left Independence shortly after nine o'clock, March 31, for Lamoni, Iowa, going by interurban to Saint Joseph, Missouri, where we took train for Lamoni, reaching that place about eight o'clock in the evening. We were greeted by Brother Holloway of the reception committee, and taken to the Herald Publishing House, where we met the committee, who gave us a hearty welcome. I was located at the home of our genial Brother and Sister W. A. Hopkins, where I was received very kindly.

Next morning I made my way to the Herald Publishing House, and was presented by the credentials committee with proper card and badge admitting me to the General Conference. I here met Brethren Heman C. Smith and Frederick A. Smith. I was shown about the building by Brother Frederick A., meeting brethren from all parts of the world. I met Brother Fred Cousins in the afternoon, and was taken to his home seven miles in the country for a brief visit. I was sorry I could not comply with his request to remain with him, but the conference was my first consideration, and pleasure must come after, if I had any.

I attended the session of the Religio and Sunday school conventions except the first one, and though not a delegate, the privilege of voice and vote was extended to me in both Sunday school and Religio conventions. One of the marks of progress, in my opinion, was the addition to the executive council of the Sunday school of Frederick M. Smith of the Presidency, and J. W. Rushton of the Twelve. This step should remove all doubt as to the position occupied by the Sunday school association.

That our people may understand the degree to which the general Sunday School Association and its superintendent are interested in the Sunday school work of the British Isles, I quote the following:

"BURLINGTON, IOWA, March 18, 1915.

"ELDER W. H. GREENWOOD;

"COLUMBUS, OHIO.

"Dear Brother Greenwood: Welcome to America! Glad to hear of your safe arrival. I look forward to seeing you at the coming conference and conventions.

"Religio convention begins April 2, and the Sunday school convention follows the next day, April 3 at 2 p. m. On behalf of the program committee, of which I am chairman, would like to know if you will give the convention a short talk of say about thirty minutes at the night session of the Sunday school convention, April 3. Tell us about the Sunday school work in the British Isles, its management, its progress, its spirit, its workers, and its needs, or whatever you think will both interest and inform the Saints.

"Tell if there is sufficient tie between the association here and there. If not, why? What do you think our association could do that would be most essential to help the work there? Touch on matter of lessons. Are they suitable? If not, in what respect? Out of this rather large order, select that which you think will be most vital and beneficial to both the association and the Sunday school work in the British Isles.

"Let us know if we can count on you.

"Sincerely yours,

"GOMER R. WELLS,

"General Superintendent, For Committee."

I wrote to Brother Wells accepting the task, promising to do my best. A synopsis of the speech appeared in the DAILY HERALD for April 5. I afterwards interviewed the executives of the Sunday school and Religio associations, with the result that they gave me a commission to act by their appointment as the chief field worker of the association in the British Isles Mission.

I am happy to say to the Saints in the British Isles, and also to the association, that we have already organized a British Isles Sunday school association, with the writer as superintendent and Brother Abel Hall, of 48 Corelli Street, Newton Heath, Manchester, secretary. Every Sunday school in the mission has received a separate invitation to join this association, which will give us at least the foundation for report to the next General Convention. We are happy to report progress, and another General Convention will receive our petition for membership to the General Sunday School Association. We want to be a unit in the association in the great work, and feel sure that said association will receive us with joy and gladness.

I organized an association of Sunday schools in the Sheffield District. The workers of this district came together at the conference of the district, and rejoiced to learn of the interest of the general association in them. I gave them a lesson and two or three addresses on the subject, and they have improved already. We hope to have another district gathering in October. I hope to organize the Religios in the near future.

My particular attention is with the church, and for the church, and all its auxiliary forces, which I am determined to nurse, at least for the present, for the healthy babe of to-day may be the strong man of to-morrow.

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, August 31, 1915.

From Panama-Pacific Exposition

[The following letter to President Elbert A. Smith will be of interest as relating to the church exhibit at San Francisco. —EDITORS.]

I was pleased to receive the package of literature from the Herald Office yesterday. It was just what we needed, as our stock was running low. We dispose of a lot of literature in spite of the care we use in giving it only to those who seem interested. And then we give only such tracts as seem most suited to the individual. Some want to know what we believe; others ask for evidence concerning the Book of Mormon; others the difference between us and the Brighamites. We generally give tracts that will best answer these questions, when we have them. Some step up to our table and help themselves to a sample of each, but this is the exception and not the rule. The Utah people seem the most anxious to get our literature. Some have bought our books. The other day one bought the Inspired Translation, another our Doctrine and Covenants.

Nearly all who read our sign confuse us with the "Mormons," and we frequently hear the remark, "Mormons." If they stop and show the least interest we reply, "No, this is the Reorganized Church whose headquarters is at Lamoni, Iowa. We have no affiliation with the Utah church." We then tell them the story in brief.

Then usually comes the remark, "Why, this is news to me. I never knew there were two churches." This gives us an opportunity to present the gospel as we understand it. And in most instances the people seem pleased to know the difference and accept our literature with thanks. I am glad to say that very few stop to contend with us, but some come back the second and third time to learn more. Sometimes we have a crowd around us listening to our explanations. A number want to know where we are located in the different cities; and if we had the church directory as published some years ago in the Ensign we could make good use of it here.

It is a little surprising to us to see the tract "One wife or many?" disappear faster than the others. We never give this tract out, but it disappears from our table in some way more quickly than the rest. We enjoy our work; but shall be glad to be relieved, as we are needed in the district and I feel that I should be laboring in the branches where there is a demand for our labors.

In gospel bonds,

F. G. PITT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, September 9, 1915.

NEW WESTMINSTER, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Editors Herald: I often wish I could put into words what I know of the gospel. The Saints of Vancouver and New Westminster are a faithful little band. We have a reunion the first Sunday of every month, taking it in turn. One month we go to Vancouver, the next they come to New Westminster. It is a day well worth the trouble. God has said he is well pleased with our meeting together. May the day soon come when we can enjoy the promised blessings. May all endeavor to come up higher.

Here and at Vancouver we regret the loss of the services of Brother and Sister McMullen and their little girl Isabelle. We all miss them. I labored with him as a priest before coming to New Westminster. Our prayer is that God will bless and prosper him.

I am sure the Saints of Vancouver have in Brother Johnson, who was called to fill the place of Brother McMullen, one able to continue the good work.

We have a fine Religio and Sunday school here, but have to hold our meetings in private houses. Within the last twelve months we have had a large tent up twice, but have seen no fruits of these labors, which were conducted by two young missionaries, Brethren R. S. Budd and R. D. Davis. The people here do not seem to want Christ's doctrine, they are satisfied with the persuasions of others.

My prayer is for the welfare of Zion.

Your brother,
W. C. REED.

PERSIA, IOWA.

Editors Herald: Our reunion closed last Sunday night. There was a goodly number of campers on the grounds besides others attending. We had a splendid time except for rain, and that was borne cheerfully by all, no word of complaint being heard. There was very little sickness. The writer, Joseph Seddon, J. C. Crabb, J. A. Gillen, Amos Berve, Alma Booker, and J. C. Carlile did the preaching. The grounds used last year were not fit for camping, being too low, and a new site was selected, which proved a splendid place. This made the committee a great deal of extra work, which they cheerfully did.

The business session passed without a note of discord, and it was unanimously agreed to meet at Logan in 1916. A tent committee was elected with power to purchase a new tabernacle, the old one yielding to the ravages of time, wind and weather. The personnel of this committee insures us a good tabernacle.

What memories the old weather-beaten tabernacle brings to our minds! What beautiful manifestations of the Master's power have been enjoyed beneath its sheltering folds! when God's people with hearts attuned to the divine music have listened to angelic messages delivered by human tongues, under the divine spell of the inspiration of the Holy Ghost! And what grand lessons have been taught by our brethren Joseph and Alexander Smith, W. W. Blair, M. H. Forscutt, J. W. Gillen, J. R. Lambert, Charles Derry, Joseph Luff, and a host of others, who with hearts filled with love of God and humility, and with intelligence quickened by the light-giving touch of the Spirit, have proclaimed the wonderful words of life to the honor and glory of God, and the joy and uplifting of humanity. There were giants in those days. Thank God for the memory of those gone before, for the lives of those who remain, and for the host of teachers who are now developing under the same influence which possessed those who have passed on. The good they will accomplish is beyond human calculation. May God speed them on.

I am happy to say that the Little Sioux District is in very good condition. Of course it could be much better; there could be a great many more names on the tithing list, more freewill offerings should be laid at the bishop's feet. Notwithstanding our lack, however, we bring cheer, and say that in each of the twelve branches of the district at least some progress is being made.

Your brother in Christ,
SIDNEY PITT, SR.

WICHITA, KANSAS.

Editors Herald: The first reunion of this mission was held at Wichita, Kansas, August 13 to 23. Heavy rains preceding and during the reunion interfered seriously with the attendance. Still the Saints who attended were strengthened and blessed. Saints from other districts were present and enjoyed with us the good sermons and spiritual prayer meetings.

Missionary J. Arthur Davis of Pittsburg, Kansas, was in charge, assisted by Elders T. C. Kelley of Independence, Missouri, W. Vickery of Winfield, Kansas, E. T. Lucas, late of Topeka; priests, Alvin Martin, Independence, and J. N. Madden of Tulsa, and Elder E. L. Barraclough, pastor of the Wichita Branch.

We were very fortunate in having Elders F. A. Smith and F. M. McDowell of Lamoni, Iowa, with us during part of the reunion. Brother Smith gave a number of blessings and preached several of his characteristic sermons, edifying the Saints and strengthening them greatly. Elder McDowell ably represented the cause of education and Graceland College. Some of the young Saints present developed a desire and determination to attend college in the near future.

The daily papers gave us favorable notices. The Eagle gave us an excellent article, heading it "Saints are not Mormons," and using the subtitle "Members of the Reorganized Church camping here do not believe in polygamy." This was published in the Sunday paper, and will do much toward removing the prejudice that exists in some parts of the city and county. For this we are very grateful.

As a result of this reunion, the Saints are strengthened and encouraged, some are ready for baptism, and others almost persuaded. The tent will remain in Wichita two weeks, in charge of Brother A. C. Martin of Independence, and then will be removed to Conway Springs. Many calls are coming in for tent work, and the brethren will be busy while the season lasts.

Sunday school and Religio home class work were discussed at the afternoon meetings, following preaching services. Much interest was manifested in these departments, as also in the Woman's Auxiliary movement. The discussions that followed the papers and talks showed that our people are reading and thinking along these lines, and only need organization to develop ability and usefulness.

The reunion will be held in Wichita next year. Officers and members are all planning for a bigger attendance, better facilities and greater success. The work of the various committees during the reunion is deserving of special mention. All worked with one accord, with "diligence, preparation and prayer," meeting with the approval and blessing of our Father in heaven, which brought us comfort and peace, and strengthened us for greater efforts.

Our little tabernacle is located at 116 North Elizabeth, four blocks west of Wichita Hospital, on Douglas Avenue, and one block north.

MRS. IDA H. STEWART.

116 North Elizabeth.

VALLEY, IDAHO, August 25, 1915.

Editors Herald: I have just entered this work. God has been very good to our family, and we can say of a truth that he is love. I wrote to the HERALD just before I entered the church, telling something of my experiences. I prayed day and night for the light to be shown our family, and God is good indeed and answered my prayers. There were eight of us baptized, father, mother, four sons, two daughters. The oldest son is in his twenty-first year, the second in his nineteenth, the third in his sixteenth, the fourth in his fourteenth, the little girls are aged ten and eight; the little boys, five and two, were blessed. Surely God is good.

We ask the prayers of all that the Master may ever lead us and keep us in the narrow way. I have read and prayed a great deal and the more I read the more God shows me and enlightens me. I feel this is the only way. I lived in the Baptist faith for over fifteen years, now I see differently, and pray that I may realize more the greatness of the gospel way.

Elder J. A. Bronson is a faithful worker for God and the gospel. We earnestly pray that he may be sent to this field for years to come. There is a great work here for him to do, were he here now. Many were disappointed at his going away, and sorry that they were not allowed to hear him preach more. He was told in prophecy to come to us, that there was a people waiting in readiness and would receive him with open arms. It was even so at our home. He led the way of my understanding by preaching an instructive sermon on the Book of Mormon. We did all we could to make Brother Bronson happy and at home with us, and think he will always have a good word for our big family.

We have subscribed for the HERALD and Ensign, and received our first copy to-day.

Wishing Godspeed to all the gospel work, I am,

Your sister,

MRS. JENNIE CRABB.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, August 30, 1915.

Editors Herald: Southern California district reunion convened August 20, and closed August 29. A very good time was enjoyed by all present. Prayer meetings were spiritual and profitable, preaching was of a high order, vigorous, strengthening and edifying. John W. Rushton, Albert Carmichael, M. H. Bond, V. M. Goodrich, J. E. Yates, R. O. Self, N. T. Chapman and Brother Dillon, besides the local forces, were present.

Considering the general conditions, the attendance was very good. Religio and Sunday school held conventions, also the Woman's Auxiliary, under the supervision of Sister Hermina Badham.

Election of officers for the district resulted in the choice of T. W. Williams for president, George H. Wixom vice president, R. T. Cooper secretary-treasurer and chorister. The outgoing president and vice president N. Carmichael and F. W. Burton, were accorded a unanimous vote in recognition of their services the past two years.

A great effort is being made for the harmonizing of all our interests for the solidification of our forces, so that the work may roll forward by the undivided strength of all the members, directed by a united priesthood. If this program is sincerely and faithfully followed, success and great growth is assured and devoutly to be wished.

A special program of music and readings was given by Religio and Sunday school. Baptism was administered to three candidates. The Sunday school and Religio each had a very profitable and interesting institute session, and a round table discussion of matters and questions concerning the financial departments of the church interests met with hearty response, presided over by Bishop Carmichael and the district agent, R. T. Cooper. A set of by-laws was adopted, covering the principal points of district legislation and government, and practically in harmony with the other districts on the coast.

Much good was done by the presence of Bishop Carmichael in discussing the financial and business policies of the church. Brother Rushton's forceful and beautifully-phrased presentations, and his genial temperament, also did very much towards the general good spirit and fellowship which prevailed.

While the crowd was smaller than usual, it was a very good and enjoyable occasion, contributing to the benefit and growth of the Saints. The sea bathing was just right, inducing recreation, healthful exercise and sincere enjoyment, without being abused, all trying to be faithful in attendance on all services, and mingling devotion, duty, recreation and gratitude in about the right proportions.

289 East Forty-eighth Street.

R. T. COOPER.

CARSONVILLE, MICHIGAN, August 31, 1915.

Editors Herald: The two-day meeting held at Carsonville, August 28 and 29, was a success in every way. On account of the weather the crowd was not very large on Saturday, but on Sunday there were about three hundred people gathered. The prayer meeting on Sunday morning was one long to be remembered. One brother was ordained to the office of priest, and six baptised by Elder Grice on Thursday before were confirmed. At one o'clock on Sunday Elder Grice baptised three more and they were confirmed at the two o'clock prayer meeting.

Among the elders and speakers present were William Grice, William Davis, E. Goheen, William Ruston, K. H. Green. Street services were conducted Saturday evening with good interest. Sister Plato, our district chorister, took charge of the music and the Woman's Auxiliary meeting.

ORVAL THOMPSON and KENNETH GREEN.

BAY MINETTE, ALABAMA.

Editors Herald: Alabama district reunion convened August 14. In the beginning the services, especially the prayer meetings, were characterized by the spirit of discouragement. The Saints were urged to fast and pray and humble themselves before the Lord, that the evil influences might be driven out. The spirit of humility and love which prevailed in the hearts and minds of the people brought optimism in the place of depression.

Auxiliary work was present and the children were cared for. Twenty-one were baptized the last Sunday. Those who missed the confirmation service missed one which alone paid for all the work.

Are these things worth living for, working for, sacrificing for? Everywhere the echo answers Yes, and worthy of the best efforts of a united people. The reunion of 1915 goes down in history as the most spiritual for a number of years.

May the encouragement and interest received move us hopefully forward into another year of sacrifice and service. May the financial depression of the times not react so as to bring spiritual depression, but rather life more abundant.

In the hope of Zion,

A. E. WARR.

SNOVER, MICHIGAN, August 24, 1915.

Editors Herald: The two-day meeting held at this place August 14, 15 was well attended and a success in every way, notwithstanding that this is a new branch with only a few members. The meetings were well attended by outsiders and a good interest was shown. A goodly degree of the Spirit was present, and all seemed to enjoy the meetings.

K. H. GREENE.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA, August 26, 1915.

Editors Herald: Since writing to the HERALD about two years ago, I have passed through hard trials of suffering and affliction, but I believe that God has blessed me. His Holy Spirit has been a comfort to me in my trouble. Dark clouds have been removed from over me. I have been an invalid with rheumatism for six years, and for four years I have been as helpless as a babe. No one knows the pain and suffering that I have had to bear only those who have had similar affliction.

I have heard only one sermon in four years. It is a great pleasure to me for the elders to come to see and talk with me. Brother Joseph Arber was with us and preached over three Sundays. While here he made our house his home, which was a great treat to me. We learned to love him as a brother, and were sad when he had to go.

I ask the prayers of all true Saints in my behalf, that my affliction may not be so great, and that I may be patient and faithful to the end.

Ever praying for the gospel work,

Your brother,
JAMES H. BUSSELL.

WITTY, MISSOURI, August 27, 1915.

Editors Herald: I just came to this neighborhood from Arkansas. I find a few Saints here, but no preacher. We are very anxious to have some meetings. I am to hold meetings. I think much good can be done. I am a priest, and would be glad if some of the elders of this district would come this way and hold services.

We understand that Brother L. M. McFadden has been assigned to this district. We would be glad to have him come this way. If any of the elders wish to come, they may come to Oldfield, on Chadwick branch of the railroad, and take hack to Witty. Come to N. J. Hodges, or come to Rome, Missouri, and some of the Saints there will convey you to this place.

In hope,
W. G. HODGES.

OLTON, TEXAS, August 27, 1915.

Editors Herald: One year ago the latter part of this month I came to this place and made an opening in the way of gospel work. At that time a great deal of prejudice existed and the hearing we received was small, but we planted the seeds of truth.

At the present we are here to cultivate and water the planting, that it may grow, so that the future may reveal a harvest of character and life. Our audience is much better this time than it was a year ago, the prejudice is not so strong, and I feel that the work of a year ago is already finding its way into the hearts of the people. I have many warm friends here, who were glad to welcome me back to their community.

The writer expects to remain here for some time and preach the gospel of life to the people. The noble lives and excellent characters of those who have taken upon themselves the name of Saint is encouraging, and it is such that lends dignity and impetus to our work.

Our crying need is men—give us men! Men in all the walks of life whose lives and characters will reflect the Christ life. Men who will forego the fleeting pleasures of life for the permanent good of our race. We want men who are willing to sacrifice all the desires of selfhood for the riches of altruistic service. Our work is of such a nature that there is opportunity for all. Let us therefore arise in the strength of our manhood and utilize that which the Lord has intrusted us with for the weal of the world.

Sincerely yours,
J. E. VANDERWOOD.

CASEVILLE, MICHIGAN, September 7, 1915.

Editors Herald: The two-day meeting held at this place September 4 and 5 proved to be a success in every way, and we believe did much good. There were six services held on Saturday, including a good Sunday school talk by V. D. Schaar, of Detroit, district superintendent. Am sorry to say that Elder William Grice, our district president, was called away Saturday to preach a funeral sermon, being missed by many.

There were seven services held on Sunday, among them a Woman's Auxiliary meeting, conducted by Sister Plato of Port Huron, and a Sunday school service by V. D. Schaar. At the prayer meeting Brother Henry Gardner, of Bay Port, was ordained to the office of teacher, and at 3.30 four precious souls entered the waters of baptism.

Among the elders and speakers present were William Grice, William Davis, H. W. Savage, M. A. Carr, J. J. Bailey, and K. H. Green.

H. W. SAVAGE.
K. H. GREEN.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original

The Rest We Seek

If all the skies were sunshine,
Our faces would be fain
To feel once more upon them
The cooling splash of rain.

If all the world were music,
Our hearts would often long
For one sweet strain of silence,
To break the endless song.

If life were always merry,
Our souls would seek relief
And rest from weary laughter
In the quiet arms of grief.

—Henry Van Dyke.

Book of Mormon Song

(Tune, "There's a veil that hangs before me.")

Hear, oh hear, the sacred message,
Of they of the ancient day,
How they left their home and kindred
For a land far, far, away.
Mindful of the Savior's promise,
If you follow every day,
Then my Spirit shall be with you,
Yea, be with you all the way.

Chorus:

All the way, they heard him say
I'll be with you all the way,
For Ephraim through Joseph,
Shall be blessed till endless day.

Where are they, oh, where this people?
Did they no record leave behind?
Jesus said to search the Scriptures;
Read Isaiah twenty-nine.
There the prophet tells us truly,
They shall speak from out the dust;
And the words that there are hidden
Surely tell us, God is just.

Marvelous work, yes, and a wonder,
Shall come forth in latter days,
Shining with majestic splendor,
Glorious its enlightening rays.

Then the deaf shall hear the message,
They shall see who once were blind;
And the gospel of the kingdom
Shall be preached to all mankind.

Book of Mormon, blessed scriptures,
"Stick of Joseph," Ezekiel said,
Place it with the Stick of Judah,
They tell of a nation dead.
Jesus said to his disciples,
So the Scriptures plainly tell,
Other sheep have I to gather,
In my one great fold to dwell.

J. R. GRICE.

The Comforter

Shine on! O beautiful Sun,
And let thy sunbeams fall,
That we may know a day's begun,
And heed the welcome call
That comes in silence from above
And through the windows steal,
To teach us of a Savior's love,
And his holy presence feel.

Or may our days be always bright,
And full of sunshine, too,
And may we always have this light
With us what'er we do.
We know how dreary are the days
When the Sun hides from our sight,
Behind the clouds that veil the rays
So beautiful and bright.

Shine on! O message true
Restored in latter days,
And may we be among the few
To bask in its glorious rays.
We know how dull it would be,
Without this message of love—
That we all may eye to eye see,
And enjoy blessings from above.

Now what would we do without
The sun that shines by day,
And the moon and stars that at night creep out
To light us on our way.
Then let us praise our Lord and King
For the Comforter he has given,
To guide and direct us all to bring
Men into the kingdom of heaven.

—J. C. Bradley, in The Gospel Standard.

Memories of Mother

I am thinking of you, mother,
As I sit alone to-night,
And my heart is longing, mother,
For your love so warm and bright.

In sweet dreams my memory wanders
Back to childhood's happy days,
And my mind with pleasure ponders
Of your care in childhood's frays.

How your hand with patience led me,
When in anger, mischief, strife,
And by the rod at times you saved me
To a better, purer life.

Mother, dear, no malice lingers
For the chastening which you gave;
Only love for you still lingers,
And ever shall unto the grave.

Mother dear, I long to clasp you
Once again in my arms,
And I long to kiss your lips, true;
Long to feel a mother's charms.

Will you, mother dear, forgive me,
For my folly in the past?
I know my folly oft has grieved thee,
Stung you like a winter's blast.

Oh, my Father dear, in heaven,
Bless my mother dear, to-night;
May thy peace to her be given;
Comfort her with Spirit's light.

As life's evening shade draws round her,
May her days to her be sweet;
Prepare a mansion for her, Father,
On New Jerusalem's golden street.

OLIVER D. SHIRK.

News from Missions

Palestine

The HERALD and Ensign have almost become perfect strangers at our home; so we do not know whether all our letters have reached your pages or not. Some of them have we know, for they have been referred to in the few letters we have received. The last HERALD to arrive at our home was dated March 31, 1915. Only a few have reached us since last October.

We are holding our services, Religio, and Sunday school as usual. There are some strangers coming to hear us once in a while. On last Sunday we had quite a number. The Gospel and Religio Quarterlies have not reached us this quarter, and only the Religio Quarterlies came to us last quarter, so we are now using back numbers. Both Gospel and Religio Quarterlies are so excellent that it is well worth our while to study them over again.

A week or so ago we had a visit from a Greek priest. But as he could not understand English nor I Greek, our conversation was carried on through an interpreter. He will call again after we return the visit.

A few days ago Sister Jenkins was invited by some lady missionaries and a few other friends to go with them to see the local school for the blind. It is conducted by an elderly lady. It was really wonderful to see and hear them read so rapidly, and all by touch. It is good to think that every effort put forth for the uplift of humanity will be amply rewarded.

We are trying to make things as pleasant as possible under present conditions, but our hearts are yearning for home and more pleasant and congenial surroundings. On the 5th inst., a few missionaries and other friends met with us to celebrate the glorious Fourth. We had quite an enjoyable time. It relieved, for the time being, the tension of the long silence between us and the home folks.

We know nothing about what has been done with reference to this mission, but are anxiously awaiting the news. I believe it would be a mistake to suspend this mission now, unless it is absolutely necessary on account of conditions. If it can be maintained, then by all means it should be done. But some means must be found by which our financial needs may be supplied. So far, nothing has reached us from America since Brother Greene and Brother and Sister Koehler departed. Brother Greene has sent money to both Brother Solomon Njeim and myself, but nothing has been received. There were also some goods—groceries—sent by the Vulcan last March. Of all that was sent me, we have received one hundred and twenty pounds of shortening and six pounds of baking powder, nothing else. We learn now that the only way money may come to us is through the Standard Oil Company.

Brother Solomon Njeim and his family, or rather wife, son and daughter, are also entirely dependent upon us for their support. Brother Ayiz Elias is also with us, and depending upon us for his living. We hope, therefore, that we shall receive help soon.

If any should feel to write us a few lines sometimes, they must say nothing of the conditions in the world. Their correspondence must be strictly of a private nature or about church work.

We ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints.

Your brother in Christ,

REES JENKINS.

JERUSALEM, PALESTINE, care of American Consulate, July 14, 1915.

Western Oklahoma and Panhandle of Texas

I am delivering the angel's message at Farmer, Texas, to small crowds, with some interest. I am well, and am enjoying fine liberty. I closed a two-week meeting last week at Brison, Texas, twenty miles southeast of this place, where I baptized four. I had the largest crowds there I have had the privilege of preaching to. Many were almost persuaded to come with us.

My wife is with me; her health has improved. We are being cared for by good people not of the church. Calls come thick from the world for us to go preach. A good man said to me yesterday, "Can you not go to eastern Texas and preach for us?" We can not meet all these requests. We have letters from Oklahoma asking for help. I never saw a brighter day for gospel work. People are ripening for the harvest. This part of the field is unorganized; there is not a branch of the church in it. I have not heard a sermon since General Conference; have not attended a prayer meeting or taken the sacrament.

I need help. I am sixty-three years old, and should have a young man to help me. I am overworked and can not do all or near all that is needed to be done in the way of gospel work. I need some one to talk Sunday school, prayer meeting, some one to polish the people up. I can get them ready for baptism, but I need a man who can persuade them into the water. I am not much of a proselyter.

I am rejoicing in this the greatest work of all the world, lonely as it is for me here in Texas, with only a Saint here and there, one or two in a place. How glad it makes me feel to meet these few, however. I am proud to find a welcome both for myself and wife in the homes of the good families not of the Saints. I hope and pray they may soon be Saints indeed.

By the help of God I am removing prejudice and aiding many to see the work in the true light. I baptized a lady at Romero, Texas, on the New Mexico line. She has a noble husband who is not yet enlisted with us, but is a friend. He is a sensible gentleman and willing to help. When I left his home he remembered me nicely in a financial way. May God bless him. He has a noble wife and two good children. I made some good friends in that vicinity, and intend to return there as soon as I can.

I was three months on the north plains of Texas. My brother, Andy Simmons, is not yet a member, but is a good helper. No one goes to his place and comes away empty-handed. His wife and son Hayden are good Latter Day Saints. I can not say much for baby Simmons yet, only that he is as smart as can be. He will be looked after by a mother not a whit behind the chiefest.

We have a family of four near Grogan, Texas, by the name of Bradford, formerly of Illinois, recently of Independence, Missouri. They are related to F. M. Slover. I preached to these fine people and their neighbors a few times in a school-house. I also preached in the courthouse in the town of Ochiltree. My work is scattered over a wide territory, extending from Forth Worth to New Mexico. We have a few Saints at Odell, Texas; among them is M. Crownover and his noble wife and children. Sister Crownover is a sister of our young brother and missionary Glauud Kuykendall, of San Antonio.

I wish to say to the scattered Saints of northwestern Texas that I am authorized to receipt offerings or tithes. Let me plead with you, dear Saints, to make a sacrifice, sending same to me at Loveland, Oklahoma.

Your brother,
S. W. SIMMONS.

News from Branches

Toronto, Ontario

Toronto has had the pleasure of a visit from President Frederick M. Smith and family. They arrived from the East Friday morning, August 27, and were met at the boat by Bishop Evans, by whom they were entertained while in our city. Many of the Toronto Saints had met our late President Joseph Smith, but few had seen our new president. All looked forward with pleasure to his visit; and decided to give him a royal welcome in the way of a monster banquet, which was given Saturday evening, August 28.

All available space in the basement was set with tables, which were loaded with an abundance of the best eatables to be had. The decorations were lavish. Palms, flowers, flags, bunting and hundreds of electric lights of all shades gave a brilliancy to the scene, which made the surroundings very pleasant.

A table was reserved at the end of the hall, in front of the platform, for President Smith and family, also Bishop Evans and wife. The Saints were seated at the tables before the party entered. As they entered the Saints arose and sang, "Blessed be the tie that binds." All lights were out except a large electric sign, "Welcome," which was arranged on the center of the platform, banked on all sides by flowers and palms. When the guests of honor were seated, all lights were turned on.

After justice had been done to the good things to eat, speeches were the order of the evening. Bishop Evans read an address of welcome to President Smith and family. Brother Smith replied, which was Toronto's first opportunity of hearing him speak. Sister Smith and daughter also spoke; and we are convinced that good speech-making is not confined to men only. An address of appreciation and confidence in his work was presented to Bishop Evans by our branch.

After a number of speeches had been made Brother Evans lined up the Saints; and as they marched past he introduced them to President Smith and family. And thus ended a very enjoyable evening, and one which Toronto will long remember.

Prayer service opened Sunday morning at 9.30 a. m. There was a large attendance. President Smith preached two excellent sermons, at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m., and although the weather was bad the church was full. To use a common expression, Brother Fred M. made a "hit" with his Toronto audience. All are unanimous in expressing confidence in our president; and feel we have a man to be proud of, and one who will not swerve from the path of duty.

Brother Smith and family remained in the city until Thursday, September 2. Their visit was very much enjoyed by the Toronto Saints; and we trust they will not forget where Toronto is located, and give us a visit frequently.

Our big Canadian National Exhibition is over. Quite a number of Saints from outside branches were noticeable at our services during the fair, among whom were Brother and Sister Frank Gray, of London, formerly of Toronto. They report the London Saints busy on their new church.

The fall conferences are approaching, after which Bishop Evans will get busy on his winter's campaign, and we look for a big season.

48 Fern Avenue.

Your brother,

A. F. McLEAN.

London, Ontario

London Branch is now in the midst of building operations on a new church on the site of the old historic structure, so well known to many of the brethren in different parts of the world. Nothing in the old building is being wasted that can be used in the new structure, which is of red brick with stone trimmings. The cost of the building to the Saints of London will be in the neighborhood of $9,000. The value of the building will be near, if not beyond, $15,000.

Owing to the fact that the London Saints have no home now of their own, they are holding meetings in the East End Town Hall. All delegates to the conference therefore, who leave their train at the city depot, may be taken right to the door by taking any car going north and transferring to a Dundas going east, or an Ottawa car going in either direction. Those who can land at the London east station will have only about a five minute walk down Rectory Street to the corner of Dundas Street.

The ceremony of laying the corner stone and that of the Ladies' Aid is being postponed if possible until the convening of the conference, when it is hoped that Bishop Kelley and Bishop R. C. Evans, the mayor, and other city officials will be present.

An effort is being made to get the basement ready for use by Christmas.

It is hoped that the district will turn out to the conference and that all those who wish to give the work a boost in any direction will feel that they have a special invitation to "have a heart" and "bear a hand."

P. H. PHILIPPIN.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes

UTAH.—Reports: Salt Lake City, Ogden, Union Fort, Provo. By previous resolution, branches were reminded to take up collection each quarter for district treasury. Auditing committee chosen: Pearl Wardle, 3-year term; Keith Rogers, 2-year; George Kinghorn, 1-year. Adjourned to meet at call of presidency and minister in charge. Pearl Wardle, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN MISSOURI.—June 26, Lagonda. Reports: Bevier, Higbee, Menefee. Reports of bishop's agent and treasurer approved. By-laws were adopted to govern district. Election: William B. Richards, president; Edward E. Thomas, vice president; William C. Chapman, secretary-treasurer. William C. Chapman, secretary.

INDEPENDENCE STAKE.—September 11 and 12, Independence, Missouri, Stake Presidency and F. M. Sheehy presiding. Statistical reports from 22 branches showed membership of 6,266;

net gain for 6 months 236. Organization of branch at Warrensburg, Missouri, referred to stake presidency and minister in charge. Resolution passed disapproving sale of tobacco by members of the stake engaged in that class of business. Robert Winning and H. R. Mills of Stake High Council were released on account of distant residence from Independence, and inconvenience incident to attending meetings, Hugh H. Goold and I. A. Smith being selected to fill vacancies. Resignation of M. H. Bond as counselor in stake presidency accepted, A. H. Parsons being chosen to fill vacancy. Stake organization of Woman's Auxiliary effected. Ordinations: Wilhelm Danielson, Charles H. Strader, I. M. Ross, to office of elder, and John A. Miller, counselor to president of third quorum of priests. Special and general music was rendered during devotional services. Preaching by F. M. Sheehy, F. M. Smith, W. M. Aylor. Afternoon session Sunday in charge of stake bishopric. Adjourned to meet at Knobnoster, Missouri, March 11 and 12. James Bunt, secretary.

Convention Minutes

UTAH.—Sunday school, Salt Lake City, August 27. Ogden, Provo, Salt Lake City, Malad reported. Short session of institute work held. Entertainment in evening. Pearl Wardle, secretary.

The Bishopric

AGENT'S NOTICE

To the Saints of Northern California; Greeting: As the year is coming to a close, I feel it my duty to exhort all who have not done what they could in a financial way to aid the cause of Christ, to do so at your earliest convenience. We are all called upon to be laborers with God, but sometimes we put it off for a more convenient time.

It is perhaps needless to say that we should be anxiously engaged in the good cause, and surely it is a good cause to help to build up the kingdom of God. No person should be content with his work until he has done what is possible to aid the church in every way, financially as well as living a pure life. The railroad men say, "Safety first." In our work as representatives of Jesus Christ it is "Purity first," then do all we can in every way to aid the work. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

Yours in the cause,

C. A. PARKIN.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, 579 Fifth Avenue.

Conference Notices

Southern Indiana, October 16 and 17, Louisville, Kentucky, Highland Park Church. Reports from branch officers and priesthood should be in hands of secretary by October 5. Pearl F. Newton, secretary, 962 Congress Avenue, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Northern Michigan, October 30 and 31, Boyne City. Branch secretaries send reports early to secretary. Priesthood report labors since last conference. C. N. Burtch, secretary.

Des Moines October 9 and 10, Nevada, Iowa. Send statistical reports to secretary; ministerial reports not required until February. Bessie Laughlin, secretary.

Northeastern Nebraska, October 16 and 17, Blair. Anna Hicks, secretary, 2914 North Twenty-fifth Street, Omaha.

Convention Notices

Northern Michigan, Sunday school and Religio, October 29, Boyne City, Michigan. Forenoon for business, afternoon for institute work. C. N. Burtch, A. E. Starks.

Southern Indiana Sunday school and Religio, October 15, Louisville. Jessie Mast, secretary Sunday school; Goldie V. Brooks, secretary Religio.

London, Sunday school, October 7 and 8, London, Ontario, 7th devoted to institute work by Sunday school and Religio. Meetings, 10 a. m., 2.30 and 8 p. m. Sunday school business 2.30 p. m. Friday. We expect General Superintendent G. R. Wells and Superintendent of Normal Department, L. F. P. Curry. All are invited to share our Thanksgiving Day, October 11. Reports should be on hand. Marie Mottashed, secretary Sunday school.

Quorum Notices

MICHIGAN ELDERS

October 16 and 17, Galien, during Southern Michigan conference. Regular program arranged and splendid time anticipated. W. L. Bennett, secretary, 71 Antoinette Street, Detroit, Michigan.

Ontario Quorum of Priests meets at London, Ontario, conference October 8 and 9. L. B. Richardson, secretary-treasurer.

Addresses

Amos Berve, 112 Market Street, Sioux City, Iowa.
E. J. Goodenough, 427 North Murray Street, Madison, Wisconsin.

Requests for Prayers

Prayers are urgently requested for a young sister suffering with tuberculosis of the bone in her leg, that if it is God's will she may be healed and spared to bring up her two children and be a helpmeet to her husband in his duties in the church. This sister has had evidence in the past of the power of God to heal, and desires to seek this blessing at his hands if it is his will, and to him be the glory.

Prayers are asked for Sister Arvilla Wismer, of Amhurstburg, Ontario, who is seriously ill, suffering from kidney and heart trouble, and who the doctors say can not recover. Her friends ask that this request be complied with, praying that the Lord may hear the petition of the Saints.

Greater Graceland Association

We wish to call the attention of former Graceland students to the fact that there are many who have not responded to the letters sent out by the Greater Graceland Association. In that letter you were made acquainted with the purpose of the organization and with the end it has in view. You will realize that in order to accomplish this the cooperation of all will be necessary.

We believe there are many who have a desire to help the old school in any way possible, and we believe the plan of this organization places within the reach of all an opportunity to help much. If you have neglected to send in your application for membership please send at once to C. B. Woodstock, Lamoni, Iowa, using the blank sent you. If you did not receive a letter from the association it is probably because your address could not be obtained. If such be the case we would be glad to hear from you. Drop a line to Ruby Baguley, secretary of the association, Lamoni, Iowa. She will be glad to write you, giving full details of the organization.

All colleges must have much outside assistance, and many of them are aided much by organizations of their old students. We believe the old students of Graceland have a common interest in her future welfare, and that if they unite their efforts a great deal of good can be done.

Please do not neglect this matter longer. Get behind the movement and give it your hearty and much-needed support. If you have not yet become a member, send in your enrollment to-day.

GREATER GRACELAND ASSOCIATION.
BY W. G. BADHAM, Vice President.

To Locate Members

Particulars of whereabouts or demise of following parties, members of the Santa Rosa Branch, are desired: Charles W. Adamson, Simeon Jones, Z. Branthouse, Corinda E. Smith, Nancy M. Springston, Josiah Taylor, Susanna Woodward, John D. Putnam, Louisa S. Putnam, William McCune, Permelia McCune, Susan Onran, Nancy Farley, Susan Farley, Ira Conger, Frances Benson, Orrin J. McCassion, Nettie L. Stanahan, Charlotte Davis, Lemuel A. Davis, Solomon H. Apple, Martha E. Apple, Fannie L. Hawkes, Anna A. Genazzi, Hathe Green, Sarah A. Willis.

CORA B. LANDIS, Clerk.
SANTA ROSA, CALIFORNIA, 1073 Third Street.

Inviting Elders

If any elder passing will please stop, sister and I will take excellent care of that servant.

W. M. YOUNG.

MINNEWAKON, NORTH DAKOTA.

Married

DAVIS-BEVAN.—At the home of E. B. Morgan, Lucas, Iowa, officiating minister, Mr. Albert Davis and Sister Fortune J. Bevan, both of Chariton, Iowa, were joined in holy wedlock. Sister Bevan lived at Cardiff, Wales, coming to this country about three years ago. Valuable presents and warm congratulations attest the high esteem in which this happy pair are held.

May their minds in future blending,
Know the purest of earth's peace;
May no evil cloud descending,
Cause their perfect trust to cease.

Died

HILL.—N. A. Hill, born May 20, 1864, Woodburn, Indiana; died August 15, 1915, in Ionia Hospital, Michigan, shortly after a motorcycle accident near that place. Baptized May 3, 1902, at Belding, Michigan, by W. D. Ellis; ordained priest, August 21, 1903, elder, January 25, 1904. Services at Saints' chapel, Belding, by G. A. Smith, assisted by B. H. Doty.

ROBINSON.—Maggie Kaley Robinson, born March 22, 1856, in Germany; died September 9, 1915, Magnolia, Iowa. Deceased came to America with her parents in 1867. Lived in Pennsylvania 9 years, then came to Harrison County, Iowa. Married James Robinson, May 14, 1875. They lived at Grand Island, Nebraska, 25 years, then came to Magnolia. Baptized September 20, 1908, by W. A. Smith. Deceased leaves husband, 1 sister, 1 niece, 3 nephews. Services at the home by D. R. Chambers.

PRESNALL.—At his home, Cambridge, Iowa, September 13, 1915, John Wesley Presnall, aged 69 years, 6 months, after many years of illness. Baptized about 29 years ago. Although isolated nearly all these years, deceased remained true to his covenant. It is a common saying by relatives and neighbors, that if there were ever a good man, John Wesley Presnall was one. He leaves aged companion, 2 children, 4 stepchildren. Services at the Methodist church, Cambridge, in charge of J. F. Mintun, who preached to a large audience, from Psalm 39: 4.

MITCHELL.—Arthur Mitchell died August 28, 1915, aged 75 years. He had been a member of the church for 40 years, and held the office of teacher. Baptized by W. W. Blair, at Austin, Nevada. His wife, the daughter of Elder Albert Haws, died many years ago. He leaves several brothers and sisters, of whom James, of Sacramento, California, and Mrs. Shenagel of Lamoni, Iowa, are members of the church. Funeral by W. A. Brooner.

CLARK.—Edward Henry Clark, born June 8, 1837, in England; died at his home, Mathersville, Illinois, September 13, 1915. Married Isabelle Young, September 4, 1857. To them were born 4 sons, 4 daughters, 2 sons having preceded him. Came to United States in 1880. Baptized by J. A. Davis, February 8, 1903, Kewanee, Illinois. Deceased remained faithful to the end. He leaves aged wife, 2 sons, 4 daughters, number of grandchildren, host of friends. Funeral from Saints' church, Mathersville, in charge of George Sackville, sermon by Charles E. Harpe.

LARUE.—Llenn Lowry LaRue, born October 25, 1888, Bluegrass, Pennsylvania; died September 16, 1915, at his home, Millersburg, Illinois, after an illness of 24 hours, his sudden death being a shock to all. Baptized October 25, 1908, at Millersburg, by J. T. Hackett. Ordained a priest November 2, 1908. Married Gertrude Duncan, June 16, 1909, Omaha, Nebraska. To them were born 1 son, 2 daughters. Besides the children, deceased leaves wife, mother, father, 2 brothers, 5 sisters, aged grandmother, many friends. Services in charge of Joseph Terry, sermon by Charles E. Harpe.

PENDLETON.—Sarah Warnock, born near Toronto, Ontario, May 24, 1833; died August 29, 1913, at her home near Farmington, Iowa. Married William Pendleton in December, 1862, who died 3 years ago. Baptized in March, 1864, remaining faithful until death. Deceased is survived by 1 brother, Robert Warnock, Independence, Missouri, 1 sister, Susan Warnock, Farmington, Iowa. Services by Charles E. Harpe.

SHENOGL.—Louis Frederick Shenogle, born June 22, 1826, in Prussia; died at his home, Lamoni, Iowa, September 16, 1915. Came to United States in 1861. Baptized August 11, 1891. Deceased was a devoted husband and a good neighbor, and tried in his life to follow the Master and keep the faith. Passed peacefully away to the rest prepared for those who overcome. Services in charge of R. M. Elvin, sermon by John Smith, interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver, Assistant Editor.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
The Angel Message Tracts	929
Notes and Comments	932
Current Events	932
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
The Business of Education, by George N. Briggs	934
Perfection, by F. J. Ebeling	938
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
The Sing Sing Situation	940
Must the Church Be Vulgar	940
Would Train Scouts	941
THE CHILDREN'S HOME	941
Joseph Roberts.
LETTER DEPARTMENT	942
W. H. Greenwood—F. G. Pitt—W. C. Reed—Sidney Pitt, sr.—Mrs. Ida H. Stewart—Mrs. Jennie Crabb—R. T. Cooper—Orval Thompson and Kenneth Green—A. E. Warr—K. H. Greene—James H. Bussell—W. G. Hodges—J. E. Vanderwood—H. W. Savage and K. H. Green.
HYMNS AND POEMS	946
J. R. Grice—Oliver D. Shirk.
NEWS FROM MISSIONS	947
Rees Jenkins—S. W. Simmons.
NEWS FROM BRANCHES	948
A. F. McLean—P. H. Philippin.
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT	949

Colored Post Cards

Of Herald Publishing House, Saints' Home, Liberty Home, Graceland College, and Saints' Church. All situated in Lamoni.

Price per dozen - - - 25c

Order of HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE
Lamoni, Iowa

Branch Presidents
Are You Getting Results?

Are you satisfied with your efforts to reach the people?

Are there not dozens—perhaps hundreds—of families that are merely indifferent and might be reached?

Your community is your opportunity as well as your responsibility.

Our most successful men are not only preaching about service, but also suggesting opportunities to try it out.

If you want to try still other methods and plans, why not write our Ad Service Department and let it help you?

If you follow the suggestions received it may cost you no money whatever to reach twice as many people. But even if it does cost a little, the expense will be justified.

The service costs you nothing, but it may be worth much to you. If printed matter is recommended as a part of the campaign, you are under no obligation to get it from us, though we will be glad to do it.

Write while you think of it.

Herald Publishing House
Lamoni, Iowa

*****

A New Book

THE INTERPRETER

By Gomer T. Griffiths

A Revision of the "Exegesis"

containing more charts and information than the former book, also an illustrated chapter on offenses—law governing the same—procedure in church courts, and blank forms suitable to the same. The various quotations from the books have been carefully compiled and arranged, so that the instructions pertaining to each office are classified, to assist the reader in locating the duties of each minister from the president of the church to the deacon, also points out how the different officers are called and the manner of their ordination, thereby securing courtesy to whom courtesy is due.

Price .....50c

CHRISTMAS RECITATIONS. A book you will need for Christmas time. Contains 228 recitations for the season, in poetry and prose, by leading authors. No. 183, each .....15c

OUR CHRISTMAS BOOK No. 1. Edited by prominent church writers especially for Latter Day Saint entertainments at Christmas time. About 70 pages of original songs, dialogues, recitations, and drills. No. 183a, each .....25c

THE TWO-STORY BOOK. Excellent gift book. One story by Mary Leland Carter and the other by Elbert A. Smith. Especially recommended for inquirers. No. 247, each .....50c

BOOK OF MORMON MAPS. Every teacher of the lessons in the Junior Religion Quarterly should have a set of these maps. The set contains six maps prepared by the church committee on archaeology. No. 182. Per set.....15c.

DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE.—No teacher should be without a good Bible dictionary and this one is one of the very best. Over 800 pages, with colored maps and 440 illustrations. Give one for Christmas. No. 185.....$1.60

OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL. Book of 29 sermons by Elder Joseph Luff. A very popular book and should be freely read and loaned. Nice type, easily read. No. 248 ..... 75c.

For Sale

A Lamoni home for sale, five rooms, closets, cellar, unfailing well; located within less than half block of Saints' church. ROBT M. ELVIN.
39-2t

FIRESIDE TALKS WITH OUR GIRLS. Every young girl will profit by reading this book published by the Woman's Auxiliary. Wholesome teaching easily read. Order number 213, each .....30c

LOOSE-LEAF BINDER. The binder that holds any or all the new standardized report blanks. Size of sheet: 8 1-2 by 11. Highly commended by those who have used them. Every church worker should have them for reports and minutes. Four posts, durable buckram binding. Order No. M-EA1 1-2R, each .....$1.90

COMPENDIUM OF THE FAITH. A valuable reference book for students. Has the best quotations from Inspired Translation of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants on important church doctrines and subjects. Order No. 141, each .....75c

BUY LAND NOW!

You can make no better investment right now than to buy Western farm land—and do it before the high prices of and great demand for agricultural products forces a big increase in values. In the Big Horn Basin and in the North Platte Valley, irrigated farms are being cut in two and offered for sale on very favorable terms. All crops there are the heaviest on record. You can secure a Government irrigated farm near Powell, Wyoming, almost as a gift. Ask about this. The value of this year's crop, on thousands of acres in Nebraska and Colorado, is equal to the original cost of the land.

If you are not fixed to buy, even on easy terms, take a 320-acre Mondell homestead in Wyoming, for mixed dairy farming. Look the West over now. You can ride all day through miles and miles of bumper crops and make your own deduction as to what this condition means to the man who will buy land in these localities now. Write me. I can help you. My services are free.

S. B. HOWARD, Immigration Agent
Room 409 Q Building, Omaha, Neb.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, OCTOBER 6, 1915

NUMBER 40

Editorial

T. W. CHATBURN PASSES

The church will be grieved to learn of the demise of Elder T. W. Chatburn, which occurred October 2, at Independence, Missouri, the home of Brother Chatburn and family. Elder Chatburn had been ailing for some little time, and had a few weeks ago returned home from his mission field in the State of Oregon. His passing therefore, was amid scenes he loved, and in his last days he was comforted by the ministrations of those dearest to him. This seems a fitting close to a long life of faithful service, a large part of which was spent away from friends and home, in the arduous work of a Latter Day Saint missionary.

Thomas W. Chatburn was born March 22, 1841, at Lancaster, England. He was baptized at Harlan, Iowa, January 12, 1870, by Charles Derry. His ministerial career began four years later, when on July 20, 1874, he was ordained to the office of elder, at Dow City, Iowa, by J. R. Lambert and J. A. McIntosh. He was ordained a seventy at Independence, Missouri, April 14, 1892, by Duncan Campbell and W. H. Kelley; a high priest at Lamoni, Iowa, April 19, 1907, by F. G. Pitt and I. N. White. The only information we have with reference to the funeral is that it is arranged that it be conducted at Independence, Missouri, October 5, at 3 p. m., by Presidents Frederick M. and Elbert A. Smith.

These few lines, gathered mainly from the records in the office of the church recorder, are all the definite data we have with reference to the life of Brother Chatburn. They may be enlarged upon by the family who received of his fatherly ministrations, by the eldership of the church who met him regularly at the General Conferences, by the many Saints and friends among whom he unselfishly labored, and by the thousands of others who knew him through the publications of the church as "Ye Jots Man." His was an active life, and he leaves friends in many States where he has been commissioned to represent the church. And everywhere he went, he carried good cheer, courage, and hope, for he was jovial and bouyant, and possessed an abiding faith in the ultimate triumph of the cause he served.

Elder Chatburn was a staunch friend of President Joseph Smith of honored memory. It was given him to pilot our beloved prophet among the familiar scenes of the conferences during the last years of his life when age and infirmity had drawn a veil over his once clear and penetrating vision. It is well that these, between whom there was such a brotherly bond in this life, should so soon be reunited in the life beyond. And it is comforting to know that now neither needs the aid of the other, but that, loosened from the bonds of the earthly estate, they are free to enter upon the heavenly.

Thus passes another of what has come to be called the "Old Guard." While we mourn the departure of these who have stood in storm and battle during the heat of the day, we thank God for the many noble men and women who stand ready to close up the ranks and press on in the good fight of faith.

J. F. G.

THE FLIGHT OF THE AEROPLANES

JERUSALEM, September 12.—Armed airships and aeroplanes are continually flying over the birthplace of the Prince of peace at Bethlehem. Nearly the entire Holy Land has been transformed into a military camp. Soldiers are maneuvering every day on the Mount of Olives, at Golgotha and Jerusalem. The English, French and Russian convents have been turned into barracks, and between Judea and Jericho, where transportation was by mule pack in the days when Christ came to bring "peace on earth," a road is being constructed for armored motor cars.

Long columns of buffaloes, driven by Arab peasants, are hauling carts loaded with powder, projectiles and other supplies for the Turkish army, the favorite routes of pilgrims in Palestine. Fast dromedaries of the camel corps maintain communication between the camps in Palestine and the Turkish headquarters. It is supposed that the concentration of the young recruits in the Holy Land is with a view to another attack upon Egypt.—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register, September 13, 1915.

Not the least dramatic of the incidents of the world war is that recorded in the foregoing news item. Armored aeroplanes like birds of prey now cast their black shadows on Bethlehem. Soldiers are drilling at the Mount of Olives.

We heard a girl say, "I love to climb to the top of a mountain where I can look up and up, almost, it seems, clear into heaven." Jesus also loved to stand upon an eminence.

At the very time when he was delivering his discourses regarding the signs of his second coming and the end of the world he spent his nights on the Mount of Olives.

And in the daytime he was teaching in the temple; and at night he went out, and abode in the mount that is called the Mount of Olives.—Luke 21: 37.

If he were there to-day, what a change he would witness. If that girl were to climb the Mount of Olives now and look up into the sky she would not see far into heaven. Armored aeroplanes would arrest her vision. They have taken the place of the angelic hosts that sang, "Peace on earth, good will toward men." Her reveries would be disturbed by the tramp of soldiers. They march now where the twelve apostles of the Lamb formerly abode with their Master.

What does it mean? These are but signs of the times mentioned by Jesus, when wars and rumors of wars should engage the attention of men. Even the sacred stillness of the upper air in the Holy Land is disturbed and affrighted by the whirling propellers of airships.

In his wonderful poem, Locksley Hall, Tennyson says: "For I dipped into the future, far as human eye could see."

Evidently he dipped into the future farther than human eye unaided could penetrate. Without doubt the major poets have at times been inspired with the prophetic spirit, they are spiritually kin to the prophets. He continues:

For I dipped into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder yet to be;
Saw the heavens filled with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;
Heard the heavens filled with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue.

Daily the air men of the nations fight among the clouds. A war plane drops down above a great Zeppelin and fires into her. There is an explosion, the members of the crew are blown to bits,—as when Tennyson in his vision heard the heaven filled with shouting, and beheld the ghastly dew raining from the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue.

A great Zeppelin hangs suspended in midheaven at midnight and rains fire and earthquake on populous London.

What more spectacular sign could be set in the heavens than this flight of the armored airships, now taking place over Europe, and especially over the Holy Land, where Jesus was born, and where he dwelt when he said: "Ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars . . . for nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

---

BE CONSTANT

The spirit of speculation . . . is unseemly.—Doctrine and Covenants.

The confession of Reverend Newell Dwight Hillis before his congregation in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, recently, is heralded the country over as a manly statement, and as an utterance clothed in wisdom and setting forth a great lesson—the ill effects of speculation. In this connection we call especial attention to an editorial from the Chicago Herald, reproduced in the Of General Interest Department of this issue of the HERALD. This lesson is one which has heretofore come to Latter Day Saints in the clear and direct instruction of the revelation of 1906:

The spirit of speculation, the exhibition of greed for gain is unseemly in the Saints and officers of the church, and should be avoided. It has the appearance of evil. Heed should be paid to the admonitions of those who from time to time preach and write upon the gathering to remove the principle of selfishness from the hearts of the Saints and especially from those upon whom rests the burden of the church and its ministrations abroad.

That man can not serve God and mammon has been known for many centuries. That eventually every man who attempts so to do will come to loss is as sure as the judgment.

There is for Latter Day Saints an additional lesson in all this. To seek first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness—let this be the motive of every man; and then in the gathering "in righteousness" of the things of this world will our work be approved of God, and our substance be blessed for the establishment of the Zion of latter days.

Have you ability? Are you honoring God with his portion, in money or in kind? Are you consecrated with all that you have and are to the good of his work? If you and every Saint labor thus, having "faith, hope, charity," which "with an eye single to the glory of God" qualify for service, you may rest in the assurance not only of your own final triumph, but, greater thought, in the assurance of the triumph of the cause of righteousness, and at a time, perhaps, earlier than we think.

J. F. GARVER.

---

The time to aid people is before they are down and out.—Selected.

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

PACKERS APPEAL.—Report is that Great Britain has decided to admit to The Hague for adjustment the appeal of the American packers against action of the British prize court denying compensation for seized cargoes.

DUMBA HOME.—Ambassador Dumba has been recalled by the Austrian Government and arrangements have been made for his safe conduct through the war lines of the allies. It was expected that he would sail from New York the 5th.

GULF STORM.—One hundred and forty-nine are known to have been killed and many others injured by a severe storm on the night of September 29, sweeping in over New Orleans and surrounding country. The damage to property will reach into the millions.

HAITIAN TROUBLES.—In repelling an attack by Haitian rebels on September 26, United States troops killed forty. One American was killed and ten wounded. The United States forces are marching into the interior to disarm rebels who refuse to give up their weapons.

ORDERED DISSOLVED.—The Motion Picture Patents Company, controlling a large part of the film business of the country, was by Judge Oliver B. Dickinson, of the United States District Court, at Philadelphia, on October 1, ordered dissolved, the same being declared a monopoly in restraint of trade.

DAMAGING EXPLOSION.—Forty-four people were killed, as many more injured, and considerable damage done to property by a gasoline explosion at Ardmore, Oklahoma, September 27, when the gasoline in a tank railroad car was ignited by sparks from a workman's hammer in the act of repairing a leak.

MONARCHY FOR CHINA.—It is reported that a movement to set up a monarchy in China is rapidly spreading, with no organized effort apparent on behalf of the Republic. The question of determining the future form of government, it is said, is to be left to a citizen convention, to be selected by the people.

BIG LOAN.—After some time spent in a discussion of details, an Anglo-French commission has effected a loan from American financiers of five hundred million dollars, secured by five per cent British and French bonds, payable jointly and severally by the two nations, on which the loan will be a first lien. The proceeds of this loan will be used exclusively in America, to make the rate of exchange more stable, and to help maintain the volume of American exports.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Friction along the Mexican border has grown less as the week has advanced.

Agencies of the various Mexican factions are active in behalf of their parties, strengthening their causes in the hope of recognition. Secretary Lansing and representatives of Carranza met in New York the 2d. The secretary was to receive in Washington, the 4th and 5th, representatives of Villa and Zapata. The results of these conferences are to be communicated to the South American diplomats at a later meeting.

WIRELESS TELEPHONY.—On September 29 a wireless telephone conversation was carried on between Arlington, Virginia, and Mare Island, California, a distance of approximately two thousand, five hundred miles, said to be the greatest feat ever accomplished in telephony. This unprecedented event, however, was far outdone a few hours later, the press reporting that subsequent experiments resulted in successful communications between Arlington and Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, a distance of four thousand, six hundred miles.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Interest in the European war has shifted to the western line in France, where the British and French in attacks all but unparalleled, have made the greatest gains reported for them since the battle of Marne, earlier in the war. The greatest gains have been in the Champagne district, north of Arras, and in the Argonne. At some points the allies have broken through to the German third line of defense. Casualties have been unusually heavy. The Kaiser is on the western front, where German reinforcements have been transferred to the scenes of attack. The German attack on the eastern line continues to grow weaker, and is maintained strongly only near Dvinsk and Vilna. In the south the Russians continue to gain a little ground. The expected German-Austrian attack on Serbia has not yet developed. The American sailing ship Vincent was on September 27, blown up by a mine in the White Sea. The Germans claim the sinking of one British warship and the disabling of two. Mutual suspicion and distrust prevail over the Balkan situation. Sir Edward Grey announced in the British Parliament, September 28, that the allies had failed to win Bulgaria over to their side. Bulgaria has repeated assurances that the mobilization of her forces is for neutral purposes only. Greece and Bulgaria have ordered the return of reservists in the United States. Martial law has been established at various points in Greece.

---

How much a year do you think that anybody would give you for all your fretting? As far as I have ascertained, either by my own experience or by the observation of others, I have never discovered that anxiety has comforted anybody, or that it has brought any grist to the mill.—Charles H. Spurgeon.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

ELDER WALLER ON BOARD OF HEALTH.—We learn from the Pacific Commercial Advertiser of September 5, that Governor Pinkham of the Hawaiian Territory, has appointed Elder G. J. Waller a member of the territorial board of health for a term of two years.

BEATRICE WITHERSPOON.—This is to call attention to an advertisement elsewhere in this issue, presenting the book of Sister Emma Burton, entitled Beatrice Witherspoon, now ready for shipment. Especial attention of those who sent their names to Sister Burton expressing desire for a copy of the book is called to the matter. Send your order now to the Herald Publishing House.

HAPPENINGS AT INDEPENDENCE.—At the Sunday afternoon prayer meeting of September 26, at Independence, Missouri, Elder A. H. Parsons was ordained counselor to Elder G. E. Harrington, President of the Independence Stake. At the same time Elder I. A. Smith and Elder Hugh Gould were ordained members of the Stake High Council. Brother Harrington, president of the stake, has been confined to his home by illness for some time, and at last report was still unable to be about.

FROM OUR CHURCH EXHIBIT.—Under date of September 19, Elder F. G. Pitt writes from the Panama Pacific Exposition, as follows:

The interest is fine at our exhibit. We have already made friends who are defending us. A prominent doctor told us to-day when he came for literature that he had been defending us. The Hindu doctor, who has an exhibit near us, said he told a number of people that we were not "Mormons." We have lately added another sign, "Not the Mormons." This has the effect of causing people to stop and ask questions. A young man from Philadelphia to-day was much interested and said he hoped to preach the gospel some day. Two Utah boys seem much impressed and took our literature. We are reaching a lot of people, and most of them leave pleased. We have reason to believe that we are doing good.

LETTER FROM F. A. SMITH.—The Editors are in receipt of a letter from Patriarch Frederick A. Smith, dated Brewton, Alabama, September 27. He reports that on the previous Sunday he assisted in the dedication of the church in the vicinity of what is known as Dixonville, Alabama, about one hundred yards from the Florida State line. Owing to its proximity to the line between Alabama and Florida, the branch is known as the Alafloora Branch. The building has a seating capacity of about four hundred and fifty, and is free from debt. The dedicatory sermon was preached by Elder F. A. Smith, the prayer being offered by Elder F. M. Slover. The meeting was in charge of Elder B. L. Jernigan, the branch president. The bishopric was represented by the bishop's agent, E. N. McCall. Elder Smith expects to be present at the dedication of a church at Pensacola in the near future, and will continue work in Florida and Alabama for the immediate present.

Hymns and Poems

(SELECTED AND ORIGINAL)

The Light of Life

My hope is built on Jesus Christ,
His law to me is pure;
His character is excellence,
His word is strong and sure.

In him I see the light of life—
His love surpassing all
Can lift us from the pits of sin,
And save us from the fall.

Divinely pure his message is,
It cheers the heart and mind;
It purifies my life for me
And makes my spirit kind.

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

A Woman's Voice

O heart! what is it you hear above the noise of a nation,
Above the sound of clamor and shouting
And men making ready for war?
Only a single voice, little more than a broken whisper,
Patient and unprotesting—only the voice of a woman.
Yet I hear it above the sound of guns
And the turmoil of men embarking.

I

There's no use praying any more; the prayers are done and said

But daytime going through the house, or nighttime in my bed,
They trouble me, the old prayers, still ringing in my head.

The young men from the papers, they brought the word to me.
I'm thinking of their mothers, how glad they ought to be,
Who never said, "Good-by" to them and let them off to sea.

As strong as any man he was, and bold to do and dare,
And why should I be hearing, then, all night above the prayer,
A little lad that's calling me—and wanting me—somewhere?

II

He said what he thought was right:

"Let you be proud," he said.

"That you gave a son to the fight;

'Tis a glory over your head!"

'Tis never a good man's words I'd scorn,

And he said what he thought was best;

But I knew my pride when the lad was born,

And his head was warm on my breast.

"Let you be proud," he said.

'Twas the word that stabbed me through;

Proud—and my one son dead

In a land I never knew!

'Tis the women know when glory's worn

(Though he meant the word for the best);

I knew my pride when the lad was born,

And his head was warm on my breast.

Only a woman's voice—patient and unprotesting,
But I hear it above the sound of guns
And the turmoil of men embarking.

—Theodosia Garrison in Literary Digest.

Original Articles

TRINE IMMERSION

Trine immersion means a threefold immersion, or immersing a person three times as one ceremony. In this argument those who follow this method will be designated as trine immersionists. The people in this country who have adopted this practice, like all who are trying to follow the Lord conscientiously, are no doubt very excellent people; but this is not a sufficient defense for a practice which is not in accord with the plain instruction of the Bible.

One may be convinced that Christ taught and his followers practiced baptism by immersion, and that the New Testament records these facts, and be in the dark as to the candidate having been immersed once or thrice, I am ready to admit. Allusion is made by trine immersionists to the formula of Matthew 28:19; "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." The whole question turns on the word baptizing. Does it denote one action, or three? It is said that the verb baptize is a verb of repetition, and therefore denotes more than one action. Admitting that it is a verb denoting repeated action, is there any proof that the repeated action pertains to the same individual? Of course the act is repeated indefinitely, as the ministers of Christ baptize some among "all nations."

THE FIRM NAME

But it is urged, there are three names in the commission and therefore the act must be performed three times. But it does not read, in the names, but "in the name," showing that all are included in one name. The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, therefore, constitute, with reference to the work of conversion, the name.

It is the name, so to speak, of a firm, all the members of which are equally concerned in the work. To perform a baptism in the name of each one separately destroys this unity. It is not so done in ordinary transactions among men, and we should avoid giving to language in the Bible a different meaning from that which it has in ordinary use, unless there is some proof in the context to cause us to do differently. Firms consisting of three parties are numerous in the commercial world; and anything done by their agent for them in the firm name, is done only once for them all. If a firm composed of J. Field, E. Jacobs, and P. Simpson, should send an agent to deposit a thousand dollars in a bank, and the banker should ask him, "In whose name do you deposit this money?" he would reply, "In the name of J. Field, E. Jacobs, and P. Simpson"; or, in the shorter and more common form, "In the name of Field, Jacobs, and Simpson." This would not signify that he deposited a thousand dollars for each name, making three thousand dollars in all, or deposited a thousand dollars three times, but only a thousand dollars in the name of all combined, because all are equally concerned in it. But the union existing between the members of any commercial firm comes infinitely far short of that existing between the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; a baptism is not required for each one, as though they were independent parties; but one baptism shows the relation of the sinner alike to all three; and that is all that is required.

It is said, further, that the language is elliptical, and that the ellipsis can be supplied only by reading it thus: "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and (baptizing them in the name) of the Son, and (baptizing them in the name) of the Holy Ghost." But this is not true. The facts of the Scriptures, as well as the analogies of language, are against it. Try the argument on Exodus 3:15: "And God said moreover unto Moses, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, The Lord God of your fathers, the God of Abraham (one God), the God of Isaac (a second God), and the God of Jacob (a third God), hath sent me unto you," etc. We can claim three different Gods from Exodus 3:15, on the same ground, and with just as much evidence, as three baptisms can be claimed from the wording of Matthew 28:19.

THE ONLY NAME

If it is a fact that Christ commissioned the apostles to immerse a person three times, as trine immersionists claim that he did, once in the name of the Father, a second time in the name of the Son, and a third time in the name of the Holy Ghost, why did they refuse or fail to do as they were commanded? The New Testament history gives us the information that the apostles taught and practiced baptism "In the name of the Lord Jesus"; nowhere does it record that they taught and practiced baptism in the names of the Father and the Holy Ghost. Proof is found in the following:

In the name of Jesus Christ.—Acts 2:38.

And the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized.—Acts 8:12.

And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord.—Acts 10:48.

When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.—Acts 19:5.

We glean these facts from the most authentic history known to man, the New Testament. We observe that the apostles both taught and practiced baptism "in the name of Jesus Christ," or "in the name of the Lord Jesus," which is the same person, and not in the names of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, three times, as trine immersionists would have us believe. The interpretation placed on Matthew 28:19 by trine immersionists is incorrect, or the New Testament has failed to record all that the apostles taught and practiced.

Nowhere in this record do we find that the apostles taught and practiced that a person should be immersed three times, in the names of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, but we do find that they taught, and baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. The teaching and practice of the apostles prove that trine immersionists are mistaken in their interpretation on Matthew 28: 19, therefore, they are wrong in teaching trine immersion and practicing that doctrine. The apostles were authorized to go teach and baptize by that person in the Godhead who was sent by the higher powers to represent them on earth among men, and the apostles evidently understood that they were given authority to teach and baptize by the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, through their representative, Jesus Christ, and what they did in his name would be binding in heaven and recognized by the Godhead.

A very brief examination of the subject is sufficient to show further that trine immersion is "three baptisms," which contradicts the declaration of Paul that there is only one baptism (Ephesians 4: 5); that it is entirely out of harmony with the form of baptism set forth by Paul in Romans 6; and that in the ceremony of trine immersion, the significance of the ordinance is entirely lost.

THE ONE BAPTISM

Trine immersionists never sprinkle, because they hold that the Greek word for baptize means only to immerse. On this point, then, we stand upon common ground, that baptism and immersion are synonymous terms; that nothing else but immersion, or being buried in the water, is baptism. But we turn to Ephesians 4: 5, and there we read that there is "one Lord . . . one baptism." Inserting the equivalent term immersion, it would read as follows: One Lord, one faith, one immersion. But trine immersion means three immersions, whereas the apostle admits only one.

It may be urged that inasmuch as the Greek Church practices trine immersion, we ought to follow them in the interpretation of their own language. There would be more force in this claim if they were consistent with themselves; but while they are evidently true to the language when they immerse because the commandment is to baptize, they just as clearly depart from it by adopting three immersions, when Paul says there is but one; for trine immersion, as already noticed, is in reality nothing but three baptisms. To say that it is only one baptism with three immersions is a contradiction of terms, if baptism means immersion, as they admit. It is equivalent to saying there is one baptism with three baptisms, which would be absurd. To decide otherwise would be to admit that baptism is not identical with immersion; but that would be to throw the whole subject of the mode or manner of baptism into doubt, and leave that an open question yet to be settled.

It further appears that this practice is not consistent with their theory: They say that baptism is three immersions; and hence they could carry out the commission of Christ only as follows: Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them (thrice immersing them) in the name of the Father; and baptizing them (thrice immersing them) in the name of the Son, and baptizing them (thrice immersing them) in the name of the Holy Ghost. And thus nine immersions, instead of only three, would be necessary to fulfill the commission. Trine immersionists can not possibly avoid this conclusion, unless they admit that they truly and properly baptize in each name by one immersion. But to say that one baptism is truly administered by one immersion, is fatal to their theory.

In favor of a plurality of baptisms, Hebrews 6: 2 is sometimes quoted "the doctrine of baptisms." This certainly refers to a plurality of baptisms. Then why do they deny that they practice three baptisms? Where is the necessity for them to twist language into such a contradictory form as to say "One baptism with three immersions?" Paul is correct in speaking of baptisms, plural, for there is more than one. There is the baptism of the Spirit, the baptism of water and the baptism of suffering, (Matthew 20: 22). To say there are three of any one kind is to contradict the plain statement of Paul. There is only one baptism of each of the kinds spoken of.

Tertullian mentions three baptisms, by which it appears that the practice of trine immersion was beginning to be introduced as early as his day. The matter, however, is put in its true light, if Professor Stewart correctly quotes him as saying, "Thence we thrice immerse, answering (that is, fulfilling) somewhat more than the Lord had decreed in the gospel" (De Corona Militis, 3). Here he gives the whole practice away by admitting that it is more than the Lord decreed; and the language of the Gospels plainly shows that the Lord never decreed three baptisms, but only one. And when Paul emphatically says there is only one, to introduce more is to go beyond the word of the Lord, as Tertullian admits.

CONTRARY TO FORM

We have said also that the practice of trine immersion is entirely out of harmony with the form of baptism set forth by Paul in Romans 6. There the apostle says that we are "buried with him (Christ) by baptism into death"; and again, verse 5, "planted together in the likeness of his death." Christ died for our sins, was buried, and rose again (1 Corinthians 15: 3, 4). Then death, burial, and the resurrection is the order brought to view, and this order baptism is meant to represent; Paul says that they "obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you." For, as being buried in the water is the likeness of Christ's burial, the coming up out of the water is "the likeness of his resurrection." That Paul has reference to this order in Romans 6 is evident, for he speaks first of our being "dead" to sin, verse 2, then being "buried" into Christ's death, by being buried with him by baptism, verse 4, then coming up from the water "in the likeness of his resurrection," verse 5. And we might ask right here with reference to the foregoing proposition, Did Christ die three times? And in the likeness thereof must the sinner backslide and die to sin three times? And be baptized three times? And be raised up out of the water three times? Yes, according to the view of the trine immersionists, but not according to the Scriptures.

But trine immersionists plunge the candidate three times face forward, into the water. Is that a likeness of Christ's death and burial? The practice of the Jews must govern our ideas in this matter of form, and they laid their dead decently on the back in the tomb, not face downward. It would be repugnant to all our ideas of propriety to bury our dead face downward. Christ was not so buried; hence that is not the form of baptism to be followed, according to Romans 6.

To justify the forward action it is sometimes said that Christ bowed his head upon the cross, and gave up the ghost, and that makes the forward movement in baptism appropriate. If this be so, then the candidate should go into the water of such a depth that simply bowing the head would cause the immersion of the whole body; but this is hardly possible. On the other hand, in trine immersion it is asserted that the candidate kneels down in the water, and then the whole forward portion of the body is plunged forward three times under the water. The Savior did nothing of this kind on the cross; hence there is not here the least likeness of Christ's death.

Thus, from every point of view, the proposition is established that trine immersion is contrary to the form of baptism set forth by Paul in Romans 6, and in all the Scriptures.

SIGNIFICANCE OF ORDINANCE LOST

In trine immersion the significance of the ordinance is entirely lost. If the foregoing propositions have been proven, as it is confidently submitted that they have been, the one now before us follows as a matter of course. The significance of baptism lies in the showing forth of our faith in the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ; and the form of baptism must be such as to resemble, as nearly as may be, those great facts. If we go through a ceremony which has no resemblance to the burial and resurrection of Christ, the significance of our act as indicating that faith is lost. The forward action and the three plunges, having nothing in common with the service performed in the burial of Christ, can not be the form to be followed.

It is sometimes said that baptism is the door into the church. If this be so, it is against the forward plunging; for in that case the candidate is raised up backward, and goes into the church through that door in that manner. But one does not usually, when he goes to the house of a friend, and when the door is opened, turn around and back into the house. We must have the backward movement in the burial in baptism, to have the forward movement in being raised up out of the water, to go naturally through that door into the church.

When we come to history on this subject, that history deals only with these apostate times. Much is made of history by trine immersionists; for as in the case of all traditions, their proof for their position is found only there. But even history, as can be shown, does not sustain them, but in reality disproves their claims. It matters not how nearly an error can be traced to apostolic times; if it does not actually reach them, it has no ground for a claim of truthfulness.

IN CONCLUSION

I wish to say that I was requested to write an article on this subject for publication in the HERALD. In this article I have tried to furnish the readers of the HERALD with the best argument known to the writer on the subject. In my research for everything I could find that has been written on this subject, the best thing that I found was a little tract written by Uriah Smith, of Seventh-day Adventist fame. Mr. Smith's argument was so full and complete that I have used some portions of it in this article without designating which part of it was first written by him. The facts are that much of this article I have furnished is Mr. Smith's tract on trine immersion, with much of it left out, and with some matter added by the writer in order to make the article more complete.

I trust those who have been looking for something to meet those who hold to the doctrine of trine immersion will find in this article that which will be helpful to them.

(Written by one who does not believe in trine immersion.)

SCIENCE OF HAPPINESS

LITTLE SERMONS TO SAINTS.—NUMBER 10

BY F. J. EBELING

That happiness is a science may not have appeared to all.

All conditions have corresponding causes back of them, and in search of this priceless jewel, we must look for the causes. That somewhere and sometime the restless tide of human struggle shall cease and eternal peace and quietude shall ensue, is the natural impulse of the human race. Embedded in the human soul there is ever an insatiable yearning for the "peace within." And unutterable sacrifices have been made in an effort to secure it.

All Christendom agrees that true happiness is only secured by an adherence to the ethics of Jesus Christ. But too often men give us only a dreamy or hazy idea of the ideal. On all sides we hear the animated cry: "Believe, believe!" "Pray, pray!" "Blood, blood!"

All this is misdirected energy unless given its proper place in the sublime economy of Christ. All the oratory that has ever scaled the summit of theological flight in an effort to present the causes of happiness can not say more than can be said in these two words, "Right living."

The sole aim and object in the gospel of Jesus Christ, through his church, is to teach men and women how to live right in the great social compact—the true relationship toward each other.

God seems to think that the highest happiness of man could only be sensed by placing a soul, life force, a real entity, in a bodily organism. Just so long as the complex organism elected to live in harmony with the environments, just so long was happiness guaranteed, but when it failed to do so, misery and death followed. And this was the sole purpose of Satan in tempting Adam to place himself out of harmony with the holy environments, it was with a view to thwarting the object of God in placing the spirit in an organism.

The greatest blessing God ever gave to man was that he should live, and the next greatest blessing, that he should die. If man had properly used the body given him, he could have lived for ever, for while in this state he had access to the "tree of life," which the Book of Mormon says represents the love of God (1 Nephi 3:68). The Devil knew this, and it was his business to bring death, which is the separation of soul and body, and both from God's love.

In the plenitude of God's love he placed a flaming sword before the tree of life, lest man should partake and live for ever. Better far that he should die and be made perfect again through the resurrection, than that man should live an immortal sinner. We can not imagine a more unfortunate state than to live for ever in sin. We have digressed here a little to show the importance of the inseparable soul and body.

Now when all the organic functions are working in harmony with the design of the Creator, happiness is bound to follow.

The five senses of man are but the soul's channel through which it diffuses the divine efflorescence, and if those channels are corrupted the divine can not flow. Now the greatest degree of happiness is obtainable when all the senses are being exercised at the same time.

High-class hotel keepers realize the psychology of this. The tables are decorated with the finest of ware to please the eye; the rooms are filled with sweet-scented flowers to please the smell; the food is prepared in the most approved fashion to please the taste; the electric fan appeals to the feelings; while sweet music peals forth to please the hearing. In such surroundings, when all the senses are being exercised, one can not help feeling better, and if financially able, will often seek such time and place again.

These senses are eternal with man, consequently will demand to be supplied. And here is where the gospel comes in and orders just the kind of food best suited for the pleasing of those senses. It tells us just what to look upon and what not, what to smell and what not, what to taste and what not, and so on.

In the immortal state men will still have dealings with each other. The gospel is to teach us how to conduct ourselves under the better environment. It will operate in a way that will fully safeguard the rights and privileges of all others. In all our intercourse we will do nothing which in the least will infringe on the rights and happiness of our brother or sister. The secret of the whole matter will be to show us how to use every organ and sense of our beings for the best interest of the great family of God.

It requires but little argument to convince the observing mind that nearly all our sins are industrial or social. The only solution for the great industrial wars which have and are now bringing so much suffering and unhappiness to the world, is to operate all industries for the benefit of the social compact. When that time comes, man will be content, having "meat and drink," and a little palace of his own. When the earth shall be covered with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the deep, then selfishness shall have been eliminated, and the gospel shall have wrought in our lives just what was intended when it was given.

The whole spirit and genius of the gospel is a rule of right conduct, one toward another, in all the industrial affairs of life. It tells us how to operate a railroad, factory or mill, how to cultivate the land for the best interest of the whole. When the gospel is in full operation, half of the energy of labor will not be spent in competitive war for advantage.

When man fully realizes that when he sins he sins against society, of which he is a part, and when he puts himself in harmony with the law of the church, the ideal condition of society shall have been reached.

The effect of every violation of the spiritual law has its consummation in the physical, communicated through one or more of the five senses. If I fight, curse, rob or murder, or do any crime which the spiritual law forbids, some part of the great social compact is being distressed. When a person sits in a room or a car "enjoying" his smoke, could he realize the annoyance he is causing others, he might not enjoy it so much. There is no law in the universe that permits a man to poison with tobacco or liquors the atmosphere which I am compelled to breathe. The spiritual law says these are not good for man, and the moment one observes them, society is immediately the beneficiary. The change from bad to good habits benefits the man next to him as it benefits the man himself.

Whenever a man places himself in an attitude to contribute a little toward the happiness of the grand whole, he can not be otherwise. Place a man among a people who are happy, and he can not help but drink in of the same spirit, and more especially when he is fully conscious he has contributed toward that universal condition.

When the religionist fully realizes what true worship is, he does not work so much for his own salvation as for the salvation of others. He is soon made to realize that his salvation is best secured by honestly laboring to serve others. When we realize that God does not need our service, and the only way we can glorify God is to make happy his creatures, the sooner will we be recompensed for the service rendered here and now.

In taking this view of the matter, we understand what is meant by the oft-repeated phrase, "The fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man." We will serve our brother because we love our God. In the keeping of every commandment of God, which is an exhibition of our love for God, our brother, or neighbor, and even our enemy, is the happy recipient of our ministrations.

Were I to propose a motto to be hung upon the wall of every Christian home, suggestive of divine service, it would be:

Behold, I tell you these things that ye may learn wisdom; that ye may learn that when ye are in the service of your fellow beings, ye are only in the service of your God.—Mosiah 1, 49.

Mosiah uttered these words when the church of which he was the earthly head was at its height of true service and favor with God. Having the true conception of the union of the church, he was well qualified to speak. The church is but the point of contact between God and man, a divine institution we should seek to push forward, not for what we can get out of it, but for what we may put into it, to bless him who stands in need. Nor does this necessarily mean we must make all men Latter Day Saints in order to bless them; for some of the "fellow beings" to whom Mosiah referred, will doubtless be satisfied with the common salvation. If so, our duty is to help them sense it. And if we can not make a Latter Day Saint out of a man, let us make a man out of a latter-day sinner, which is a thought worthy of consideration, to which I lay no original claim.

The close relationship of the spiritual to the physical is beautifully illustrated by Joseph Smith, and should for ever vindicate him from the vile attacks of his enemies. He said, in Times and Seasons, that for a man to consecrate his property, his wife and children to the Lord, is nothing more nor less than to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the widows and fatherless, the sick and afflicted, and do all they can to administer to their relief in their afflictions.

This sublime thought is only surpassed by him who said, Inasmuch as ye do it unto one of these my brethren, ye do it unto me.

These are some of the practical ways of demonstrating our true service to God. Do them and be happy.

* * * * *

FAITH THAT ENDURES

(Synopsis of a sermon delivered at the Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, June 6, 1915, by Elder E. D. Moore.)

The text for the evening is an extract from the words of the Savior, as found in Mark 9:23: "All things are possible to him that believeth."

There was a time when you people here believed that statement must be true, but now you know it is. Life has brought many experiences, some pleasant, many disheartening, and you have put the statement to the test.

YOUTHFUL TRUST

When you were young and life was bright and rosy, you felt the quickening impulse of faith impelling you onward, and you often trusted in those impulses and forged ahead. You required not knowledge. Though knowing little of your individual personal histories, I feel safe in saying that in this small audience are pioneers who have worked and suffered, plodded and toiled, sacrificed and foregone, all because they had abundant faith in the outcome.

It requires but a dreamer's fancy to look back into those years and see you as happy, vivacious young people, full of hope and joy, perhaps plighting your troth, and as happy pairs beginning life's journey together. Faith was perhaps one of your chief assets in that beginning. You may have begun in a log cabin with the firm resolve that some day fortune must smile on you and bestow the comforts of a mansion filled with happy-hearted, bright-faced children whose faith would be centered in you as their happy parents.

Those were joyous days and you like to remember them. We all do. We are glad to have you tell us of them. When you fondly recall them and what they meant to you, you readily admit that faith was the great, permeating force that made such felicity possible. You were willing to trust each other, and together trust God and move out. Could you have looked into the future and known all it held for you, fear might have overcome, courage waned and this audience not have been here to-night.

THE BALANCE OF LIFE

Faith is the beginning of all activity—faith in some form. Life as we know it, according to one writer, is made up of work, play, love, and worship. Ofttimes the balance is not even. Life may have served too much of the first and we not be able to appreciate the latter three. We need a good balance and should do all we can to secure and maintain it. But most of that is past for you. You have worked and must now leave the results in other hands. You have played as you were taught to appreciate play or recreation and relaxation. Love has done its great work and abides. The privileges of worship may not find it possible to work much, and you have little inclination to play, but you enjoy the results of love, and your hearts are full of it, while worship is indeed a living part of your lives.

SOURCES OF SKEPTICISM

When you were children, most of you were taught are brought to you here and you enjoy them. You the Scriptures by the reading thereof. You memorized, you recited, you learned to love them and the source of their inspiration. You knew what faith had done and would do.

When your children went to school they read the Scriptures as a prelude to their day's work. There was something of a reverence that made its impression on them, and your efforts to teach the principles of the gospel were rewarded with a responsiveness that comes from familiarity. Faith was accepted as a virtue.

Your grandchildren in the schools of to-day seldom if ever read the Bible at school. If there is a reference to it at all it is likely to be only as a literary production or as historical matter. In the high schools and colleges the statements of the creation are largely discounted by the theories of men. Various principles of the gospel of salvation are overshadowed by atheistic teachings, colored by skepticism. Faith is pushed aside and eliminated from the modern curriculum.

Is it to be wondered at that the American people to-day are notoriously a nation of little or no faith? Do you wonder at the query of the Master, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?"

You have seen all of this to your sorrow. So have we all. It is a condition of affairs we must recognize and cope with.

REQUIRES AN OBJECT

True, positive faith is not faith till it is bestowed on something. It requires exercise and an object.

In your younger days you used to poke your head into the empty rain-barrel and call the dog and make sundry similar noises. You were merely demonstrating this principle.

At a certain point in the Ozarks we used to go out and call to a cliff across the hollow. The call would be sent back, to again rebound, till seven distinct echoes could be heard. There was not sufficient scope for its exercise, and this was the result. With our faith and our works we must have more than the echo to satisfy us.

NATURAL OUTCROPPING OF THE SOUL

Faith is but the natural outcropping of the soul. It is as natural for us to possess it as for the lawn to be covered with grass or the forest filled with trees. To utterly lack faith is the result of persistent, perverted training. We become abnormal and warped when we repress it. Like other worth-while possessions, it must be cultivated and cared for to produce its fruit in abundance, but we all have it when children, as a God-given heritage.

When mere babes we had implicit and unshaken faith in all that father or mother did. What they said must be true. We knew no other authority. We lived by faith. "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

As we developed judgment, and knowledge began to be ours, our faith was replaced by our knowledge, and we needed less, for we knew more. When faith becomes knowledge it ceases to be faith.

When we approached maturity and rose high enough to begin to look over our little world, our store of knowledge as compared with what we had hitherto known was marvelous in our eyes. Some of us may have foolishly thought we had enough knowledge to eliminate faith—if we knew what faith was. You will recall the symptoms of those youthful days.

But we had not reached the top. You know now that no one ever does in this life. Men may devour tomes of instruction and theoretical knowledge. Men may travel this world o'er and explore its darkest corners. The best that science affords and universities offer may be received; still there is knowledge unknown and experiences not ours. Till we have all knowledge we need much faith.

THE BACKGROUND

It is a principle of art that all objects are best observed as they have a distinctive background. Most often the background is dark. On the wall yonder we may see a painting of Joseph Smith, the Martyr. Note the high lights on the lifelike countenance, while all around is darkness, and the horizon is obscured by dark and lowering clouds. Thus it was with his life. Thus it is with many of ours. The light of faith may illuminate our countenances till they are an inspiration, and the clouds of life be but a background to show them up. True faith is not appreciated till it is seen on its darker setting. You have all seen it thus.

It requires the use of all our faculties to be sure that our faith is based on right principles. It profits us nothing to believe implicitly in something that is wrong. It would be like the house that was built on the shifting sands. We are not true to our best impulses to merely believe. Our belief must be built on right principles.

FOURFOLD FAITH

We may for ordinary purposes classify our faith under four general heads: Faith in God, in man, in our friends, and in ourselves. No one of these is sufficient. If we believe in God we must have confidence in his creation: man. If we have faith in God we will believe that he can work through our friends and us.

AN EXAMPLE

Some of you have experienced and all of you have frequently observed one of the most inspirational evidences of faith. In many places in our land, and especially in this place, we see the mother of children whose father is miles away, carrying the gospel to those who know it not. He is fighting error and indifference and wrong. He is busy with the problems of his mission to the world. He has his troubles and difficulties as well as joys of service. He is afraid to stop lest he break the bonds and hasten home, never to return. His is a life of sacrifice, impelled by faith.

But what of the mother? She is busy with the ordinary toil of the home. Perhaps she is doing her utmost to make the slender and oft-delayed allowance supply the increasing needs of her family. She struggles on, bearing her burden and the responsibility of the father as well as her own. Think you faith has no work here? How often she would say to the far-distant companion, Come—and he would come! How often she would say to the Father, It is too much—it must not be expected of me! But she does neither.

Nothing but faith in God as the author of the great plan of salvation could possibly inspire and sustain sufficiently in these and similar cases. All we can do to supply the comforts of life can not atone for the sacrifices, yet—

By our works do we show forth our faith. Quoting the Apostle James, "Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works."

DEMONSTRATION OF FAITH

We are brought face to face with the demonstration of our faith. We shall not dwell on that. You people here have done your part. You have carried the burden in the heat of the day. The evening draws around, and you must be content to quietly sit by and let the younger people try to carry the load. You have experienced the "dark and cloudy day" and all that it brought. You have seen the growth of the church and what it is bringing. All that you have done and seen and known are recorded. We admire you for it all, and cheerfully shoulder the burden, fearful of our ability though we may be.

The times are different now. What we may do and what we may say might seem innovations to you, but remember that we have many different problems to meet. Our responsibility is greater, for we have the knowledge that your experiences have developed and shall be held accountable for it.

These are the hastening times. The progress of the world is marvelous. More inventions to save time in transportation have been made in your lifetime than in all the centuries that have passed. Social conditions have vastly changed. New problems have developed. Daniel prophesied that "men shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased." We know it to be verily true.

God knows that we of the younger people need your support. He also knows we need to show our faith by our works. He has decreed that right shall prevail over wrong. You may wonder what is left for you to do. In every war there must be those who stay at home to care for the wounded and those who remain. Whether we are on the firing line at the front, in this army of the Lord, or at other numerous duties, your lives should be an inspiration to us. The things the generation passing has done will not be forgotten. You can pray for, you can encourage and sustain in your way the wives and the children who must remain. Your faith will inspire us to do our best.

God grant that when the time comes that his people must move and act quickly or be lost, that his soldiers will not falter or fail. We must not fail. It is for us to succeed if we will. But it will require courage.

Writers of conditions at the front in the present war say that in the heat of engagement there comes an intoxication of courage that knows no fear. The blood lust overshadows all, in those awful encounters. We may require as much courage without the intoxication. We must be sanely conscious of conditions as they are, and our courage must be inspired from on high.

We know not what the future may bring forth. The days are portentous. The time is not far distant when "he that will not lift his sword against his brother must needs flee to Zion." When they get here, dear Saints, what then? When the fleeing times comes and these people must be provided for, what will be done?

Quick decision will be necessary. Decisive action will be required. Actual bloodshed may or may not be ours to witness. War and carnage are rampant and we may hardly escape. But we know not the details, nor does it matter so much. It is well that we do not. If we act wisely and promptly it will be because we have used our heritage wisely and well.

May the aged of the church support the young. May the young honor and support the aged. May we all do all we can for the redemption of Zion. We shall require the faith that endures.

---

There is enough wickedness in every man to make a demon out of him, if Satan can get the job. There is a possibility in every man of making a saint out of him, if he puts himself in the hands of Christ. We are transformed into the image of the one we serve. It is not so much a question what faculties we possess as it is what we are going to make out of them. It is not so much a question where we are as the direction we are traveling.—Selected.

Of General Interest

DOCTOR HILLIS IN TROUBLE

NEW YORK, September 20.—The congregation of the Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, is to stand by the Reverend Doctor Newell Dwight Hillis in his efforts to straighten out his tangled financial affairs.

Following the dramatic statement of the minister from the pulpit yesterday, in which he declared his ambition had led him from his ideals, Doctor Hillis to-day offered to sell his thirty thousand dollar home to meet financial obligations, it was said. He will continue to preach from the pulpit once occupied by Henry Ward Beecher, and will have the support of a majority of the church members.

Few more dramatic incidents have occurred in the famous old church than that of yesterday, when Doctor Hillis told his congregation of his financial difficulties.

NEPHEW NOT SEEKING MONEY

"Percy D. Hillis is not seeking money from his uncle," was the assertion of William Austin Moore, the attorney who filed the nephew's fifty thousand dollar suit. "He simply wants a retraction from Doctor Hillis of the article published in the Portland Oregonian of July 15, in which it was made to appear that Doctor Hillis was putting up money to pay the debts of his nephew, following the failure of a timber company."

No copy of the complaint was served. Only a summons saying that the suit had been filed was sent to Doctor Hillis, who was given twenty days to answer.—Chicago Herald, September 21, 1915.

* * * * *

DOCTOR HILLIS'S CONFESSION

The Reverend Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor for the last sixteen years of Plymouth Church in Brooklyn, New York, stood last Sunday in the pulpit made famous by Henry Ward Beecher and Lyman Abbott, and confessed to his weeping congregation, and to the world, that his love of money had led him into speculation that had brought him to the verge of poverty and had utterly crushed his life. His ambition to get rich had led him far from his duty to God and his ideals of the ministry, and had humbled him so that he was not worthy to stoop down and unloose the shoe latches of a poor worker in the slums. . . .

Doctor Hillis said:

I am going to say a few words that were not written an hour and a half ago. My dear friend and attorney, Mr. Heinrichs, does not know what I am about to say. It has been borne in upon me during the last few hours that some sort of statement is due from me, and it is probably the only public statement that I shall make. I am following the light I have had in the last few minutes.

During the past few months I have been the center of storm and criticism. I wish to meet this storm with face to the front, and I owe a public statement to my friends in and out of Plymouth Church. Some criticism is justifiable, perhaps, but let me say at the outset that this statement is not intended as an apology, for I am not conscious of having at any time betrayed the trust that the people have reposed in me.

Some ten years ago, for reasons that seemed just and honorable, and under the influence of what I believed to be duty, I endeavored to make provision for the future of my own family and others dependent upon me, and also to give certain young men a start in life. In the interest also of a certain other plan, not selfish in nature, I decided to invest a sum of money which I had accumulated as lecturer and writer. I am ashamed to say how much, in view of the wages of working people and the poor.

Like many others, when I trust I trust completely, and when I give my confidence I give it with all my heart. Those in whom I had most confidence advised me that there could be no doubt of the safety and conservatism of the investment of my funds or the ability and capacity of those who had charge of them. For several years all went well. Then came the panic of 1907, with later business reverses for some of those to whom I had related myself in connection with these enterprises.

I wakened up suddenly to the discovery that there was doubt as to the real value of some of the property in which I had invested, and as to the accuracy of the report by men who were called surveyors and cruisers. Unfortunately others had invested with me, and therefore at my own initiative and expense I sent an expert to examine critically the assets and to report to me the actual values.

I became convinced that inaccurate estimates had been made either through ignorance or inexperience. Immediately I set before myself the task of seeing to it that no friend of mine suffered any financial loss through confidence in me, or through an introduction that I had given.

Now I am told that I have enough to pay off the last of my indebtedness, so that I hope soon to begin life again, without property indeed, but also without debt.

Of late serious complications have arisen, which I shall try to meet according to the light which is given me. Henceforth my attorney, Frederick W. Heinrichs, will speak for me, but at this time my words are mine alone.

For several years I have been increasingly disturbed lest the little influence I may have had upon some students and young ministers was far from my ideal. I have feared lest I was biasing these young men toward the lecture platform, public life and prosperity, instead of toward obscure, gentle, tender, Christ-like service.

To these young men I owe this statement—that often I have loved my books more than the poor; I have loved position and office and honor, and sometimes I have thought of my own interests, when every drop of my blood and every ounce of my strength and every thought of my mind belonged to our schools, to the sick, the friendless, the poor and to the boys and girls, with their eager and hungry minds.

Perhaps I have taken honors offered me when I should have chosen solitude and dwelt apart and listened to the voice of God and tried to repent. For years I have had a growing conviction that a minister has no right to make money, and does his best work without it. If, therefore, there is anywhere in this wide land a noble boy studying for the Christian ministry who has done me the honor to read my books and sermons, or to listen to my lectures, and who has come to cherish a secular idea of the Christian ministry, let me say to him I deplore that ideal, and that my latest, deepest thought is that there are home missionaries and foreign missionaries and social settlers and neighborhood visitors whose very shoe latches I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose.

At best the longest life is short, all too short, for the noblest of tasks, that of the Christian minister. Great is the influence of the law and medicine; wonderful the task of the jurist and statesman; marvelous the power of the press; great, also, the opportunity of the merchant and manufacturer, who feed and clothe the people; but nothing can be higher than the call to shepherd Christ's poor and weak, and happy the minister who never has interpreted his ministry in terms of intellect alone, or has never secularized his sacred calling and who, at the end of his life, is able to say: "Behold, these are the sheep thou gavest me, and not one of them is lost." . . .—The Kansas City Star, September 26, 1915.

* * * * *

A HARD SAYING

Dr. Hillis came up to one of the most perplexing problems of life when in his personal confession before Plymouth Church he debated the relation of the preacher to personal preferment and worldly gain:

For several years I have had a growing conviction that a minister has no right to make money and does his best work without it.

That is a hard saying, and yet it would seem to be the almost universal experience that those who try to get away from it soon find themselves serving two masters.

To be a true prophet for his age any man must hold himself aloof from the honors and emoluments of the times he lives in. He can not have them in high value and be true to his mission, which is frequently to drive the money changers out of the temple.

And yet there are babes to be reared and educated, there are social duties to be performed, there are vacations to be enjoyed, the conventions of life must come home to even the seer and the prophet. Moreover there is something hard-headed about our western race that gives asceticism no appeal to western culture.

But where is the line to be drawn? Where shall the comfort that belongs to everybody be found in the preacher to run over into indulgence? The line with Doctor Hillis was plain when he discovered that:

Often I have loved my books more than the poor; I have loved position and honor. Sometimes I have thought of my own interest, when every drop of my blood and every ounce of my strength and every thought of my mind belonged to our schools, to the sick, to the friendless, to the poor and to the boys and girls with their eager and hungry minds. Often I have taken honors when I should have chosen solitude, and dwelt apart, and listened to the voice of God and tried to be a true prophet of God to you.

Must every man find this line for himself, or is there some recognized standard of abnegation to which the preacher should adjust himself in the outset of his career?—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register, September 22, 1915.

* * * * *

YOU CAN'T BEAT THE GAME

The confession of Doctor Newell Dwight Hillis to the congregation of historic Plymouth Church, Henry Ward Beecher's old charge, was striking, unusual and touching. Seldom, if ever, has a minister of his repute stood up in his pulpit and borne witness against himself in such unsparing terms. We may be sure that the verbal flagellation he inflicted on himself was far acuter in its pain than any which the penitents of old endured.

But the conclusion from his unfortunate experience with what appear to have been speculative investments—investments in which not only he but numerous other persons influenced by him lost their money—was too partial. He draws from it a word of counsel and warning to those who undertake the Christian ministry. He is taken up with the idea that he has fallen away from his ideals and must find them once more along the paths of "gentle, tender, Christlike service."

There is, however, a lesson applicable not alone to ministers but to hundreds and thousands of his fellow citizens in his misfortunes—a lesson which this country has had time and again, but never in a more striking form than now. In bearing witness to what he conceives as his own choosing of the worsen path, Doctor Hillis also bears witness to the important fact that you can't beat the game of speculation.

Nobody can beat that game. Even the speculators can't do it. For a while they may swim on seas of glory, but in the end the deep waters engulf them. The business man can't beat it. Sooner or later the end arrives and there is ruin and despair where there was once prosperity and hope. The lawyer can't beat it; the minister can't beat it; even the purely professional gambler can't beat it. In the end it is unbeatable.

The world is strewn with the blasted hopes and ruined fortunes and often the shattered reputations of those who cherished the illusion that they could beat the game of speculation. Every year brings its striking lesson of the futility of embarking on such dangerous adventures. But too often the temporary success of a single man serves to obscure all the wisdom of experience and to lure the credulous from the ways of safety and of peace of mind.

Doctor Hillis has preached a bigger sermon in that confession than he seems to have perceived. Great, indeed, would be the service if the unconscious part of it should impress those who need the lesson of the bitter end of speculation as directly and forcibly as his bitter regret for compromised ideals seems to have impressed the congregation of Plymouth Church last Sunday.—Chicago Herald, September 21, 1915.

Letter Department

Education

"Educate: To develop and cultivate mentally or morally; to expand, strengthen, and discipline, as the mind, a faculty, etc.; to form and regulate the principles and character of; to prepare and fit for any calling or business by systematic instruction; to cultivate; train; instruct; as, to educate a child; to educate the eye or the taste." (Webster.)

"Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith." (Doctrine and Covenants.)

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." (Jesus.)

I am highly in favor of the very best college and university work. However, some have not been able or in a position to get such an education, yet have acquired a splendid learning in other ways. "Book larnin'" alone, leaves one undeveloped. A self-made man will do, unless he worships the maker. It is better to worship God, "and him only." To say to the young, "the church can furnish all your needs," may sound grand but it can not be sustained. The very fact that we are admonished, "to study all good books," and that our men are compelled to seek other schools, for ever refutes that.

There is enough in the gospel of our Lord to furnish perfection, but we fall short in the practice of what we know to be true, and there is much we do not yet understand. He that knows to do and fails shall be beaten with many stripes, is a well understood law. He that knoweth not, and shall fail, shall be beaten with few stripes, because he does not try to learn.

"It is better to be unborn than untaught," and "a little learning is a dangerous thing." Some theological warriors are "ever learning [a smattering of Greek and a smear of fables] but never come to a knowledge of the truth." That fits our opponents splendidly, but we are not immune. Organization and gifts are to bring us to a unity of the faith. We can easily find comment on the division caused by the many existing church organizations in the world, and we can see a multitude of differences among ourselves.

From among us some splendid debaters have arisen, and why not—we have had plenty of opportunities to qualify and exercise our qualifications. In fact, at times it has seemed that we were one big debating society. Plenty of theories to discuss, and there always will be. It is easy to differ on points of theology, because we often discuss subjects that we possibly may never understand till this mortal cloak is cast off. Through our theological combats with others (or self-erected men of straw) we have often won many from other denominations. I offer no serious objection to that, but there are those among the rich and poor who are alike in the meshes of sin and iniquity, who have never been reached by the influence of any church. They are those who need more ethics and less cold and possibly useless theory display. What is the trouble? Have we failed to reach them because we are not prepared to instruct along those lines? Possibly we are of the class that believe in getting them in the church and then telling them to "quit their meanness." "Safety first." "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." "A fence at the top of the precipice is better than a sanitarium at the bottom." "Preach repentance unto this generation." There is one thing sure, one can not offer an argument in favor of sin. Burning, blasting, destroying sin! Men may try to excuse themselves. They may say: "I know it is wrong, but I can't quit it," but they can not deny its deadly work.

I am glad to see the word transition standing out before us in dazzling beauty. Young men and women are preparing along needed lines. But in order to become proficient they must be given an opportunity to give what they have received; to teach as well as be taught.

I opine we have the best "theological" schools in the world. What! Why, Brother Miller, we don't believe in such schooling! But, just the same, dear brother, we have them. The leading seminaries of the day are crowded with students. One teacher has a multitude under his supervision. They are given but a small portion of his time. Our young men usually start out with an able minister. Think of it—a teacher with only one pupil. He has plenty of time to instruct and answer questions. The student hears his instructor deliver sermons. With joy he hears him clinch his points, and longs for the time when he can likewise hold an audience spellbound. As he fills his mind, he is given an opportunity to develop by practice. By using the good you procure is the only way to advance rapidly and become proficient. The Dead Sea is dead because it has no outlet. As long as an ambitious person has something to strive and reach for he will usually remain humble but keep advancing; but if you want to see him die spiritually put him in a position or place where he does not belong.

A natural-born rural minister who knows practically nothing about city ways and conditions; who knows less than nothing about organizing and doing proper advertising, which is absolutely necessary in city, spells failure at every turn. On the other hand, a minister who has studied and prepared for such work; who has been successful in doing such work, will feel at home in a city, but usually discouraged and absolutely lost in country or town. It does not take very much inspiration to see that fact—just a little business ability will solve it.

While the cry has gone out for proficient men, it might be in order for the men who have gained a little proficiency and possess a little natural ability along certain lines to demand proper places to work! Before me is a poem of eleven verses written by Henrietta Burdick. I wish to here introduce only a part of them:

"Yes, the gospel work is onward,
It is spreading far and wide.
We can see it on the mainland,
We can feel it on the tide.

"There are none too poor and lowly
By the gospel to be sought.
Likewise, there are none too learned
By the gospel to be taught.

"In the wild it finds the savage,
On the throne it finds the kings.
It is not abashed at learning,
Nor too high for humble things.

"In the home land of our dark man
It has shed its welcome light,
And has found there hearts as loyal
As are those whose skins are white.

"Now we see the work is onward,
So we scarce can keep apace,
But more rapid would it travel
If each man were in his place.

"For it calls for human effort,
For our good God made it so;
Thus our interest is awakened,
And we care to see it go.

"Let us listen while God speaketh,
That his message we may know;
Answer quickly, when he calleth,
'God is calling, and I go.'"

Yes, "God is calling"—not man. Preachers, like men of other professions, are born and not made. Many may rightly hold the priesthood who will never make preachers. Many a farmer lad has been coaxed to go and try to preach when he would have made a much better "mule driver." Splendid mechanics are weekly disgracing the pulpit. By the grace of God, men, follow your own bent! Shake off the shackles of priestcraft and brain-slavery, then peace and liberty will gladden your own soul, and with your talent and genius you will bless a waiting and imprisoned world!

My opinion is that we have the best organization in the world, but at times abused authority; the best financial system, but the poorest results. Yea, brother, it is an unpleasant fact.

I know unpleasant, timely-spoken facts have at times unjustly banished the minister on Patmos! Possibly a Mother Grundy and a Father Faker were sorely grieved to hear the preachers use such strong language. No doubt they had often been delighted to hear him score Rome and her daughters, but it is different, you know, when you get after Mother Grundy and her tongue, and Father Faker and his freaks. These are the dear ones who usually say you are not preaching the gospel unless you are preaching some of the faith, repentance and baptism sermons you memorize from a tract! Some folks call those principles doctrine, and at the same time imagine that illustrations and exhortations are not doctrinal. Please read the Sermon on the Mount, and the declaration: "They were astonished at his doctrine!" Again, some leave the impression that Jesus referred to faith, repentance and baptism alone when he stated: If men will do his (God's) will they shall know of the doctrine. Yes, after you sincerely subscribe to these principles you have a right to know regarding the doctrine you have complied with!

Of course we can then reason that obedience to those principles with a knowledge of the same must necessarily confirm us as to the truthfulness of the body into which we were baptized. Then, we have only started in the new life. There are many, many more things to learn, and according to the reasoning of our Lord we are only entitled to know as we comply (do his will). When we shall have done all his will, we shall then be in his presence, and in possession of eternal life, which is to know God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent. The most confirming and scientific evidence of my calling is the blessed power that accompanies my efforts.

I started in to a series of meetings not long since, and many were disappointed when I failed to dwell long and loud on first principles, etc. One dear soul bluntly told me I did not preach the gospel. I had been bombarding heavily with my repentance meter gun. (You know we are commanded to preach repentance to this generation.) Well, in fact we are often told how we should preach, by some good sister, or maybe a brother who could not say "sua!" if the hogs were after him. This dear bundle of wisdom who told me I did not preach the gospel was favored (by somebody) with the gift of talk. She reminded me of a lady who returned to the bedside of a sick relative from a camp meeting where religion had been plentifully distributed. She proceeded to tell the dear child how happy she was and how she loved Jesus. Later the invalid wanted assistance. She had no one to call upon but the sister who loved the Lord so much that she didn't want to be bothered. She turned on the poor sick soul and thundered: "You aggravate me nearly to death. You almost cause me to lose all the religion I have!" I have concluded that she did not have much to lose in the first place. She was a "first principle" Saint. Many of us need to seek a promotion from the primary (first-principle) grade and go on as Paul admonished!

I stand for a complete education, that will do more than give us college degrees. A young lady may return from college with learning and accomplishment enough to play the piano and correct the blundering speech of her mother, but if she can't bake eatable bread (and boil water without scorching it) she isn't educated! A young man may return from college and adorn the wall with diplomas, but if he refuses to aid his father on the farm, or ignores him when in company, he is ignorant.

One editor has said: Within a few years a new dictionary will be printed which shall define ignorant people as those "who are of the least comfort and assistance to their immediate associates." And then the hard-working housewife will shine brighter than the society leader. The man with the dinner bucket who goes straight home after his day's work to dandle Jimmy and Susie on his foot, will be called wiser than the silk-hatted gentleman who dines in a grill room, arriving there in an auto which bears his coat of arms.

Doctor J. H. Kellogg says: "Any system [of education] which neglects any of the three departments of human nature, mental, moral, or physical, must be necessarily a failure. Simply educating a boy in the arts and sciences, without developing a love for truth, purity, goodness, justice, and other moral qualities, only prepares him to become the most expert of criminals." It is a known fact that a large percentage of the state prison inmates are graduates from college. Statistics show that in 1914 there were 1,400 college-bred men in the city of New York alone who were tramps and criminals. This of course was not because they were college bred, but because their education was lopsided.

Ralph J. King says: "A woman may have a beautiful diploma hanging on the wall and still not have a good education, unless: She knows how to cook and bake. Sew and mend neatly. Care for the sick. Be pleasant in the home. Keep from gossiping. Keep a secret. Keep the home neat. Plan housework to save time. Take good care of her health. Respect the aged. Be neat in dress. Be economical." Mr. King's short essay will suggest to the active mind elaborative thought, and give one a clue to compile a multitude of necessities for the men, as well.

The field is wide for the teachings of ethics, but when the young man begins to bear down with sarcasm on the degrading, damning fetters and frivolities of the age, he can expect to be watched, unduly criticised and slandered. And even though you do not produce a shadow for some of them to grab at, some slimy tongue will be ready to manufacture something, and then look out—she may not even be a member of the church, and if she is she may be a noted gossip, yet there will be those only too anxious to believe every word she utters. Be patient—it is only the price all aggressive ministers must pay.

Truly,

O. R. MILLER.

HIBBARD, INDIANA, July 27.

Concerning Book of Commandments

The following is a copy of a letter written to a brother regarding the much-mooted question of the Book of Commandments. I thought it might be well to publish it, not only to throw light upon the question, but to correct what I am now persuaded is an error in the history on page 580, volume 1, where the words "and edited" should be expunged.

"Dear Brother _____:

"I have yours of September 21, with carbon copy of letter to Brethren _____ and _____ inclosed.

"I have not answered your former letters, all of them, for the reason that you indulge in personal reflections, and I have always made it a rule not to answer any personal reflections upon my honor or character, but this note appears to be indited in a better spirit and therefore I have given it some attention by reexamination of the question at issue.

"I am not especially interested as to whether Oliver Cowdery or W. W. Phelps was the author of the paragraph quoted on page 581, volume 1, Church History. The result is the same. You entirely misunderstand the paragraph following it when you say that the historian lays particular stress on this paragraph. The comments following quotation of this paragraph are based on testimony of Oliver Cowdery and others as given in the General Assembly of 1835, and is so expressed in positive terms, and I do not see how you could misunderstand it.

"The statement that Oliver Cowdery was editor, has reference to The Evening and the Morning Star, published at Kirtland, Ohio. On page 580 you will note that the historian says that the fourteen numbers published at Independence, Missouri, were edited by W. W. Phelps. If we made any mistake, we think now after careful investigation that the mistake was in the latter statement, that W. W. Phelps was the editor of the first fourteen numbers.

"You said that on page 8 of The Evening and the Morning Star for June, 1833, that W. W. Phelps is advertised as publisher. This is very true, but to be publisher is not necessarily to be editor. In fact, had you quoted this statement in full, you would have discovered that the publisher was not the editor. The statement in full is as follows, which plainly indicates that the editor and publisher were two different parties, so that whether the editor was Oliver Cowdery or not, it was not W. W. Phelps.

"The Evening and the Morning Star.

is published every Monday at INDEPENDENCE, JACKSON COUNTY, MO.,
BY W. W. PHELPS & CO.,

"The price is one dollar for a year in advance, except special contract with the church. Every person that sends us $1, (U. S. paper,) shall be entitled to a paper for a year, gratis. All letters to the editor, or publishers, must be post paid."

"I am inclined to think that it was Oliver Cowdery, for the following reasons: In revelation found in Section 55, addressed to W. W. Phelps, he is appointed to assist Oliver Cowdery in the work of printing and selecting and writing, etc., and is to be planted in Zion for that purpose. This has particular reference to the writing of school books, but will apply undoubtably to other writings as well. The passage is as follows:

"And again, you shall be ordained to assist my servant Oliver Cowdery to do the work of printing, and of selecting, and writing books for schools, in this church, that little children also may receive instructions before me as is pleasing unto me. And again, verily I say unto you, For this cause you shall take your journey with my servants Joseph Smith, jr., and Sidney Rigdon, that you may be planted in the land of your inheritance, to do this work.'

"And in Section 57, paragraph 5, you find the following:

"And again, verily I say unto you, Let my servant William W. Phelps be planted in this place, and be established as a printer unto the church; and lo, if the world receiveth his writings (behold, here is wisdom), let him obtain whatsoever he can obtain in righteousness, for the good of the Saints. And let my servant Oliver Cowdery assist him, even as I have commanded, in whatsoever place I shall appoint unto him, to copy, and to correct, and select, that all things may be right before me, as it shall be proved by the Spirit through him. And thus let those of whom I have spoken, be planted in the land of Zion, as speedily as can be, with their families, to do those things even as I have spoken.'

"This associates the two men together, not only in writing school books, but in other writings and publications as well. It is hardly to be thought that in as important a matter as the publication of the paper that Oliver Cowdery was not in some way associated.

"Taking into consideration the statement made in The Evening and the Morning Star, volume 1, page 16, (reprint) which reads as follows:

"On the revelations we merely say, that we were not a little surprised to find the previous print so different from the original. We have given them a careful comparison, assisted by individuals whose known integrity and ability is unexcusable. Thus saying we cast no reflections upon those who were entrusted with the responsibility of publishing them in Missouri, as our own labors were included in that important service to the church, and it was our unceasing endeavor to have them correspond with the copy furnished us. We believe they are now correct. If not in every word, at least in principle.'

"Here we have a positive statement that in the publication of these revelations Oliver Cowdery's labors were included.

"For these reasons it is now my opinion that Oliver Cowdery was the editor at Independence, and was the author of the statement found in both the original and the reprint of The Evening and the Morning Star.

"I do not know why the correction was made in the June number of The Evening and the Morning Star, published at Independence, but it was in the time of trouble just before the paper was suspended by the act of their enemies. And the first opportunity thereafter, was improved by Oliver Cowdery in printing the correct form of 'Articles and Covenants of the Church of Christ,' when this number was reprinted at Kirtland, also corrected in the reprint of volume 1, number 1.

"If you question the sincerity or honesty of Oliver Cowdery and others engaged in this work, the Book of Commandments itself would be as unreliable as other publications, for it passed through the same hands that the Doctrine and Covenants passed through. I am inclined to accept all their work, and that they intended to be, and were, honest in the first publication, doing the best they could with the facilities at hand, and when discovering that errors had been made they frankly confessed their mistakes and proceeded to correct them.

"If you have lost confidence in the men, I do not see how you can stand by the Book of Commandments, which they published, as being the standard and only correct rendering of matters in question.

"I have gone into these particulars simply to give you my reasons for accepting the Doctrine and Covenants as the correct publication, not for the purpose of being drawn into controversy. I wish that your article addressed to Brethren and _____ breathed the same kindly spirit that your communication to me did, then I could have hopes of your being able to see where you have erred in the controversy which has had such an unfortunate ending.

"With best wishes for your future peace, I am,

"HEMAN C. SMITH."

LAMONI, IOWA, September 28, 1915.

WESTVILLE, NOVA SCOTIA.

Editors Herald: We are alone, my husband and myself, and if any of the Saints are so far away from hearing the true gospel message they will know how to bear with us. The people here scorn the name Latter Day Saint. We are trying the best we can to follow the meek and lowly Jesus. We ask the prayers of the Saints that we may be kept in the one faith, and in the oneness of the gospel.

Your brother and sister,

SIMON and NANCY BIGNEY.

AKRON, OHIO, September 3, 1915.

Editors Herald: The Kirtland reunion closed last Sunday afternoon, after lasting sixteen days. The prayer meetings were excellent. Sometimes we would dispense with the preaching at 11 a. m. and continue the prayer and testimony meeting up to the noon hour.

There were present a large number of young people, and take them, as a whole, we have reasons to be proud of them. They were active, in full force at the prayer and testimony meetings. Truly, the Lord is raising up an army that will carry on the work to victory.

While the weather was wet and cool, we had no hard rains. The Saints were cheerful. I heard less complaints than at any reunion I have attended under similar conditions.

There were present, part of the time, four of the Quorum of Twelve, G. T. Griffiths, R. C. Russell, U. W. Greene, F. J. Curtis; the latter only remained about three days. Bishop E. L. Kelley was on the ground most of the time, and Bishop E. A. Blakeslee the last two days; also Bishop Becker, and his counselor, Brother Topping, were present all the time. Three of the Order of the Evangelists were present: Father Squires, whose home is in Kirtland, the writer, and A. D. Angus, of Philadelphia; the latter came with a party of four from Niagara Falls, in an automobile, remaining one week. W. E. Peak, R. Baldwin, E. Stone, F. J. Ebeling and others of the missionary force, J. C. McConaughy, Brethren Burdick, Bozarth, Matthew Liston, and a large number of the local officers were in attendance. The ever faithful, patient and long suffering Sister G. T. Griffiths cheered the hearts of many by words of inspiration; not always able to walk to and fro from the services, she was assisted by kind hands; earnest prayers were offered in her behalf, as for others of the sick and afflicted. Sister E. L. Kelley was present most of the time, and by her quiet, humble, wise way, left a lasting impression on the minds of old and new friends that she still has the work at heart.

The Saints and friends of Kirtland were glad to have Sister U. W. Greene present; she was able to come by the kindness of a friend; none were more surprised to see her (nor more pleased) than her companion. Brother and Sister Greene had lived in Kirtland for several years; moved to Boston five years ago, so as to have better educational advantages for their children. To me it was a pleasure to see those sisters present whose hands have been tied in caring for the home and loved ones, while their companions have been out in the vineyard of the Lord, at home and abroad; they have made the greatest sacrifices, and their reward is sure. There were others whom I thought of who would have been welcome, could they have been present.

To me the reunion was a blessing, for the spirit of peace and love was present. In several of the services tongues, interpretations of tongues, prophecies and visions were enjoyed. The preaching was not above the average, still good. The privilege to worship in the Temple I believe was appreciated by all; especially those who had not the opportunity before.

All who visit and wish to go through the building must register, and a neat sign reminds them that an offering is expected to help defray the expense of an attendant. Many cheerfully give a little; a large percentage of the visitors go away well pleased with what they have seen and learned of the building and the faith of the Saints. I am sure that the one in charge of the Temple has more people to present the gospel to than any one missionary in the field, for seven days in the week, from early morn to evening, in the spring, summer and fall months, there is a constant flow of visitors, and the number will increase largely. In one day, during the reunion, there were one hundred and twenty-five visitors, none of whom were members of the church. One day J. D. Rockefeller and his brother, William, and their party, one of which was Mr. Carnegie, visited the Temple. John D. comes quite often with a party of seven to nine.

The temple speaks for itself, that it has in its design more than human wisdom. The corner stone was laid in 1833; it was dedicated in March, 1836; over eighty years ago. It is the only house upon earth built by divine command and approved of by the Lord. Precious and marvelous are the manifestations of the Holy Spirit, in that a little child, in its mother's arms, spoke aloud, Hosannah, hosannah to God and the Lamb. I have had the privilege to hear three good, honest, truthful men, say they were present at the dedication and heard that little child speak; also angels were seen. One of the three persons referred to was Brother L. W. Babbit. He worked on the building as a carpenter, and gave every tenth day as tithing. Often I have heard that good man, who was a member of the High Priests' Quorum in the days of the Martyr and in the Reorganized Church, speak of the wonderful endowment of 1836. He saw in the form of a human tongue of fire, the power coming down and resting on the heads of individuals, and as soon as the tongue would come in contact with the person's head he would arise to his feet and speak or sing in tongues. This is in harmony with what was witnessed on the Day of Pentecost, and there appeared unto them cloven tongues as of fire, and it sat upon each one of them.

The first day of the reunion, just before retiring, I was meditating upon the precious spiritual experiences of the Saints in the Temple, the house of the Lord, in the early days, and wondering what were the possibilities along the same line for this reunion. I became very anxious for a renewal of those blessed experiences, and in as earnest and humble a way as I could, I prayed and felt the presence of the Holy Spirit, and with much freedom I continued in prayer, and was given to understand that it was possible for us to enjoy during the reunion what was enjoyed in former days, and to the same degree, but three things were necessary: first, humility, second, true faith, and third, love. With these conditions the heavens would be opened and commune with us. I related the experience in one of the first prayer meetings, and urged all to try to comply with the conditions, that is, get down in humility, with faith, before the Lord, clothed with charity, for unless we could get in that frame of mind, we could not receive what there is in store for us. While we did not as a whole receive as much as did our forefathers, I am grateful that the same Spirit, with its gifts and blessings, was present, and our hearts were made glad.

While Kirtland is three miles from the railroad, the conveyances to and from Willoughby, the nearest railroad point, were good; automobiles ran some days every hour, at the reasonable price of twenty-five cents. Every day the conveyances make two trips each way; and the trunks were taken to and fro for fifteen cents each. When we consider the privilege of holding the services in the Temple where there is ample room upon the three floors to hold the various services, and with beautiful grounds and good water, I would make Kirtland the permanent place for the reunion, as the grand old building and the grounds are free of charge.

Holding the reunion over three Sundays divides the crowd, for some come the first week, and others the last; not many can afford to take in the sixteen days. I believe that ten days would bring as many together as the sixteen, and would be less expensive, so far as boarding the missionary is concerned, and would not keep them so long out of their fields.

In conclusion, I think it advisable to say to the credit of Brother and Sister Liston and their help, that the meals were always ready, right on the dot, and plenty to eat. The reunion committee, Bishop Becker and his counselor, Brother Topping, did all they could to make the reunion a success. Brother French could remain only a few days.

Your brother,

WILLIAM LEWIS.

CONVENTION PARK, HERMOSA BEACH, August 28, 1915.

Editors Herald: Thinking that you would like to hear from our Southern California reunion, I take the liberty to write. While the reunion is not quite so well attended as last year, yet we have held some very splendid meetings, and the preaching has been of a very high order. The speakers so far have been Elders J. W. Rushton, V. M. Goodrich, T. W. Williams, J. E. Yates, M. H. Bond, R. O. Self, R. T. Cooper, N. T. Chapman, Albert Carmichael, and the writer. I was very fortunate in being permitted to preach the first sermon before the big guns got started. Brother Rushton is loved and appreciated by all, and is looked upon as a strong man, a leader and organizer, and we are looking forward to big things in our district this year. The Saints seem more united than they have been for years, and a sweet, peaceful influence is with all of our meetings. It makes us feel glad to have Brother and Sister Albert Carmichael with us again. Our district conference was held last Monday, presided over by the missionary in charge, V. M. Goodrich, and the district presidency. A very peaceful and harmonious spirit prevailed. Brother Rushton proved himself to be a capable man as a presiding officer. His smiling countenance and cheery manner won the love and admiration of all.

I had the pleasure of performing my first baptism in the ocean yesterday. A man and wife who live at San Bernardino who have been attending our church and reading our books, came to the reunion and asked to be baptized. The man requested that Brother R. T. Cooper officiate, and his wife requested that I should officiate. Both desired to be immersed at the same instant, which request was granted. Brethren Rushton and Bond thought it one of the most beautiful baptisms they had ever witnessed. The crowd of Saints on the shore and the rolling waves in the background helped to make it beautiful.

I enjoyed reading your new tract. We believe your move in regard to tracts is a good one. I hope that we can develop a systematic plan by which we can distribute tracts over this district where they will do the most good.

Our branch work at San Bernardino is doing nicely, and the attendance is improving all the time.

With kindest regards to you all, I remain

Your friend and brother,

G. H. WIXOM.

News from Missions

Travel Notes---Number 2

My last was written, I think, from reunion grounds, at Portland, Oregon. Taking leave of Brethren Rushton, Pitt, Cook,—they going north to the reunion to be held at Centralia, we left on steamer the morning of August 4, in company with Brother Harry Howell, for Hood River, Oregon. It was a perfect day, and amid splendor of scenery for which the Columbia River is noted, and outrivaling in the writer's opinion, the Hudson of New York in this regard, we were welcomed by the Saints at Hood River, and by request spoke in their chapel that evening.

The following day we were taken by Brother Chapman in an auto through the famous Hood River apple orchards, and within close range of the famous Mount Hood, where perpetual snow and fruit and flowers at once greet the vision.

Returning the evening of the following day to Portland by train, we bade a hasty good-by to the family of Brother Shippy, who had so kindly administered to our comforts while in that city as their guest and started on a two-night-and-a-day journey for San Francisco.

Of our daylight journey through the Cascade Range of mountains, a use of adjectives, or attempts at description as they impressed us, of their grandeur and sublimity, we will make no attempt.

Saturday morning we landed at Oakland, and amid the fog and damp and chill of a San Francisco summer day morning the first real introduction to "sunny California" was being shown to the man "from Missouri," with the luck of having an altogether necessary overcoat upon his back to protect him from the sun's rays that were not there.

However, these short-lived discomforts disappeared quickly, as we landed at the pier, and our suit case was grabbed almost before we knew it by our genial and smiling Brother Davis, who had been commissioned to pilot the stranger and pilgrim to the pleasant home of Brother and Sister Anthony, where obligations are still due, for the generous and kindly hospitality shown during our visit to the world's fair and exposition in that city.

We also desire to express our appreciation and gratitude to Brother and Sister Tordoff of Oakland, for entertainment and kindnesses shown us while in that city. Our visit to the California University, the library, Greek theater at Berkeley, where Margaret Anglin was rehearsing for the play of "Impogenia," and other pleasant experiences in that city are not forgotten.

The great fair, any detailed description of which will not by us be attempted, with the war in Europe materially subtracting from the great success that must inevitably have come to its projectors, is, as we are, up to date, informed, far from being counted a failure, as witnessed by the throng that attended during our all too brief stay, and as has been since reported.

The beauty of architectural genius, and the magnificent color scheme that has been so successfully employed; the avenue of palms and tropical settings, of flower and fern display; the exquisite statuary groupings; and the night visions of beauty; display of glittering gem-clad "Tower of Jewels," supplemented by the electrical fountain displays, and all accompanied by world-famed bands of music, almost enveloped the senses in an illusion that we were realizing a view of the tales of the Arabian Nights, Aladdin's Lamp, the tales of the Orient, or the fairy stories of our youth.

Some of the buildings seemed notoriously deficient, however, in display of exhibit material, and none seemed crowded; but no one attending that great exhibition will be able to say that he has seen or sensed all of its wonders. Of the Canadian display, an exception must, in justice, be noted: Nothing approaching it in completeness, or beauty of detail, has ever been seen in the history of world expositions. It is, of itself, an exposition worth going far to see.

California has, of course, expended a vast amount of money upon the construction of a beautiful building in which to display its wonderful resources and products of fruit and grain, as also its scenic possibilities. And of the fair, as a whole, it may be stated that had the horror that has already deluged Europe in blood been prevented, it must inevitably have eclipsed anything ever before attempted by man. Trains crowded with tourists are reported, and also confirmed by our own observations and experiences, and it is said that but for the war in Europe the railroads would not have been able to take care of the traffic.

It was with misgiving and considerable anxiety that we parted from the "Jots Man" in San Francisco, as he undertook the journey for home. We understood later that he had made up his mind to stay with us a while longer, and to those who know T. W., it is understood that when the old veteran makes up his mind to anything it is not an easy undertaking to make a change.

Saturday, August 14, in company with Brother and Sister Anthony, we left, with Brother Baker, from Oregon, in his car, for the reunion at Irvington. A lovely ride of sixty miles through tropical scenery brought us to the reunion encampment, where provision for our comfort and entertainment had been duly provided for.

The reunion was generally voted a success, and the "best ever," as we have understood. The preaching by Brethren Rushton, Carmichael, Pitt, Bruner, and others of the general or local ministry, was of a generally high order, and pleased, according to taste, education, or fitness as to the needs of all; while spiritual comfort and enlightenment marked nearly all of the meetings given over to prayer and testimony. Priesthood conferences, conducted mostly by Brother Rushton, were of an interesting and profitably educational character.

We also had the pleasure of renewal of acquaintance with old-time and faithful Boston Saints, such as Sister Glover, and others whose names we do not now recall; Saints from different parts of the country where we had ministered in gospel work, who had come to California for temporary or permanent abode, in the interest of healthful climatic conditions, etc. Saturday, the 21st, we bade the camp a reluctant good-by, returning to 'Frisco with Brother Baker in his car.

Sunday we accidentally were delightfully surprised by running into our old-time Chicago associates in gospel work, Brother and Sister Burwell, and spent a fine day with them at the fair, and a visit to Sutro Park, to the Cliff House, and to rocks where the seals and sea lions may be seen most any time of day sunning themselves.

During the day while at the fair with Brother and Sister Burwell, we were privileged to enjoy the novel experience of listening to conversation over the Bell Telephone system from New York and Coney Island, hearing plainly the talk of the New York man, as well as the sound of the roar of the surf of the Atlantic Ocean.

We would not neglect to mention the pleasant acquaintance and association with Brother and Sister Davis, and also with Professor George N. Briggs and wife, while interesting ourselves in their work connected with the educational department of the world's fair exhibit, and the commendable effort that has been made for church representation by our people.

Tuesday, the 24th, found us upon the early morning train, bound for Los Angeles. A not altogether interesting country is encountered in a railroad journey through this part of California until we approach the southern end of the trip, where the road skirts the seashore for some distance, where the light of a full moon threw its silver sheen over the waters of the Pacific, forming a picture of beauty that we shall not soon forget.

A stranger, and a pilgrim, in a strange and unknown country, getting out of a belated train in a strange city after midnight, and figuring mentally upon a prospect for hotel accommodations, would you think it strange if we were taken back several feet, and the breath nearly knocked out of us, when Brother Rushton "rushtoned" down upon us and grabbed our suit cases, while a trio of "jolly good fellows," in the persons of Brethren Carmichael, Cooper, and Doctor Mather, formed a background upon the platform, of a decidedly novel and interesting character to the "man from Missouri," who was "being shown" something that he least expected, especially at that time of the night,—or morning?

An hour's moonlight ride amid new scenes, in the fine machine of Doctor Mather, and we were in the midst of the Latter Day Saint camp at Hermosa Beach: a partial night's rest, and nine o'clock found us in the large reunion tent for prayer service, which, as we remember it, abounded in blessings of a spiritual character that stimulated our sense of the goodness of God, notwithstanding our human weaknesses and failures.

Of the Hermosa reunion, or so much of it as I was permitted to see, I am persuaded that the Lord had his way a considerable portion of the time. And for social cheer, brotherly and sisterly interest, as well as intellectual and spiritual instruction and encouragement manifested, this will rank well with other reunions that I have been permitted to attend.

I trust that I may be permitted to speak of the wonderful privileges enjoyed for surf bathing at Hermosa Beach, and the art of swimming, in which I was accounted something of an expert in my boyhood days. I found in the keen enjoyment of the glorious surf of the great Pacific Ocean, that this art was not altogether forgotten, and for which, notwithstanding pleasant eastern memories, the Atlantic, with its romantic and pleasant associations, will have to yield the palm.

This writing finds us at the home, and as the guest of Mayor George Wixom, in the city of San Bernardino, and of which we may have something further to say.

September 25, 1915.

M. H. BOND.

Central Nebraska

We have been busy dispensing the gospel message to the people of Foster, Nebraska, for nearly three weeks. The writer had access to the Presbyterian church. They gave us a good hearing, and men and women of all faiths and occupations were in attendance. They gave us a hearty welcome, which we do not always receive, so we appreciated their kindness very much.

We endeavored to set our faith before them in plainness, with some interest manifested on their part. There are just four Saints living in Foster, Brother and Sister Lynn and Brother and Sister Babcock. So you see there were only four of our faith to help make up the congregation. But the church was fairly well filled most of the time. This was due in a great measure to the righteous living of these Saints, who hold the respect of their town people. So they come in for a share of the credit for the good feeling manifested, and we hope that lasting good was done, and that the seed sown may bear fruit in the Lord's due time.

In gospel bonds,

W. M. SELF.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, 227 McGee Avenue.

News from Branches

Lincoln, Nebraska

Lincoln and suburbs has a population of perhaps sixty thousand souls or more, and is a clean, moral place in which to live. One suburb, College View, is the home of the Advent Sanitarium and Union College; another suburb is Bethany, the home of Cotner University, owned and controlled by the Christian Church; and yet another is University Place, wherein is situated Wesleyan University, which school is now said to be self-supporting. Lincoln also has many of the State institutions, a military academy, several business colleges, and last, but not by any means least, the Nebraska State University and State Agricultural School (called the State Farm). This university ranks high among the universities, and is one of the best in the West. To this school come annually hundreds of young men and women to better prepare themselves for the life work before them. Lincoln is also a prosperous city, and in building takes third place with all the cities of the country the past year—and still she is building! It is a fine railroad center, in the midst of a rich agricultural country.

About eight years ago, a few Saints gathered together in a private home and organized a Sunday school. They moved after a considerable time to a hall down town. After a few years had passed by, a small branch was organized, which now numbers sixty-eight souls. It was our good fortune this summer to have sent to us Brother J. A. Dowker. It had long been a hope among us that some day we might have a little church of our own, but no special move in this direction had been made. However, when Brother Dowker had been here but a little while, he fully sensed the situation and set himself the task of finding a suitable location on which we might build.

After experiences many and varied, a lot was secured and work begun almost immediately, with the result that we now have in process of erection a neat little church wherein we may worship and hope to win others to come and worship with us. Surely in a city of this size, we should have a place where those who will, may hear the gospel. The church is being built of granite-faced cement blocks, and we think it will present a nice appearance. The preacher, Brother Dowker, is doing all of the work possible, and we hear such exclamations as this, "What! a preacher work? Why, I never heard of such a thing?" But let me tell you, the preacher is not losing any friends by his willingness and ability to work. The Lord will reward him.

On Wednesday evening, September 22, at eight o'clock, the ceremony of the laying of the corner stone was carried out. The congregation sang at the opening, "Redeemer of Israel." The prayer was followed by a trio, by Brethren Dowker, Higgins, and Snow. This was a pleasant number enjoyed by all. Brother H. A. Higgins, president of the district and bishop's agent, was present and made a very pleasing and appropriate address, which was followed by a few pointed and timely remarks from Brother Dowker for the benefit of the strangers present, as to who we were, and what we as a people believed. The stone was laid by Brother Dowker, and is a very beautiful white stone with the full name of the church engraved upon it, also the year. While standing watching the work, I overheard some one say, "He can handle a trowel, too!"

At the close of the ceremonies the Ladies' Aid served ice cream and cake. While no charge was made for this, several dollars were contributed. There was a goodly number of strangers present, and we believe that now they have met us they will come again. It was to me both a solemn and joyful occasion. We are few in number and realize that perhaps it means hard work and sacrifice, yet I believe we all feel that it is a joyous sacrifice, and we also feel that we will get help from those who are both able and willing.

Perhaps, dear readers, you think this a long introduction, but you know it is only now for the first time, that we are putting Lincoln "on the map," so perhaps you will forgive us this once.

We have Sunday school and church services Sunday forenoon and Religio Sunday evening, followed by preaching services. As we have to hold our meeting in a hall we have no mid-week services.

The Ladies' Aid are busy these days. Just now they are preparing to "dip" the shingles for the new church. They expect thereby to make the shingles last longer, look better, and by doing the work themselves to save a neat little sum. And I think they will like to say they did some of the work on the church. This is only a beginning.

Brother Dowker and perhaps some others are looking forward to attending the musical institute to be held in Omaha the latter part of October. Brother Dowker is expected to prepare a paper or address for the closing session.

Those of our singers in Lincoln who wish to prepare themselves to sing in "The Messiah" next spring are fortunate to have the opportunity for training in the same in the Saint Paul's Oratorio Society, under the efficient leadership of Professor Steckelberg. This chorus holds two rehearsals weekly.

BLANCHE I. ANDREWS.

1726 South Twenty-seventh Street.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes

OHIO.—Wellston, September 18 and 19. Conference mostly given over to educational work. Resolutions were passed that district provide reunion, following committee elected to make necessary arrangements: Missionary in charge, district president, A. W. Kriebel, H. E. Moler, H. P. Kelley. Five children were blessed; H. P. Kelley ordained elder. Adjourned to meet with First Columbus Branch, Columbus, Corner Tompkins Street and Medary Avenue, February 12 and 13, Charles E. Rebert, secretary.

POTTAWATTAMIE.—September 25 and 26, Underwood, Iowa. Reports: Boomer 90, loss 2; Carson 51; Council Bluffs 387, gain 11; Crescent 172; Hazel Dell 65, loss 6; Loveland 24; North Star 144. Secretary's bill $1.70, ordered paid. Treasurer reported balance on hand last report 70 cents, collection being ordered to provide deficit. Bishop's agent reported: Receipts, $1,846.48; disbursements, $983. E. H. Carlile, H. J. Hansen, D. D. Smith appointed to audit agent's accounts for 1915. Local choristers and organists appointed delegates to musical convention at Omaha, October 23 and 24. Preaching by J. W. Wight, W. E. Haden. Adjourned to meet at Council Bluffs, last Sunday in January, business session to be on Monday. J. Charles Jensen, secretary.

EASTERN OKLAHOMA.—August 28, Grannis, Arkansas. Reports: Grannis 203; Fanshaw 44; Shawnee 128; Jacksonville 81; Wilburton 289; Manchester 98. J. C. Christensen elected president, J. E. Kelsey, secretary-treasurer. Following was passed: "We, the district conference in session at Grannis, Arkansas, the 28th day of August, 1915, petition the several branches of said district to create a sinking fund for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the missionaries laboring in said branches, and the expenses of district conferences, said fund to be placed in the treasury of each branch." Motion prevailed that Wagoner Branch be disorganized at discretion of president of district and missionary in charge, members of said branch to place their names with most convenient branch. Adjourned to meet at Wilburton, Oklahoma, in February, date to be fixed by missionary in charge and president of district. J. E. Kelsey, secretary-treasurer.

The Bishopric

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT

To the Saints and Friends of the Northeastern Illinois District: Please take notice that upon the resignation of Bishop James F. Keir, of the Northeastern Illinois District, and recommendation of the appointment of Robert N. Burwell, of Dolton, Illinois, that the said Robert N. Burwell has this day been duly appointed bishop's agent in and for said district, and authorized to perform all the work usually required of the bishop's agent within the district of his appointment.

The Bishopric take pleasure in commending James F. Keir for the faithful work he has performed the past number of years in and for said district, and bespeak for him the good will and wishes of Saints and friends in his labors and new fields of work that he has arranged to carry out. Also that he may be specially blessed and directed of the Lord in accomplishing a good work in behalf of the church.

We also take pleasure in commending the new agent, Robert N. Burwell, to the Saints and friends of the Northeastern Illinois District, and bespeak for him a helping hand from each member and friend in said district, that the work may move on and all may be blessed together in the Master's service.

As ever, interested in the work of the Master,

Very respectfully submitted,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 1, 1915.

Conference Notices

Kentucky and Tennessee, October 30 and 31, Bethel, near Cottage Grove, Tennessee. Send branch and local officers' reports to S. E. Dickson, not later than the 25th. J. R. McClain, president.

Minnesota, November 6 and 7, Minneapolis. Have reports in hands of secretary, Lester Whiting, Ottertail, Minnesota, by November 1. B. S. Lambkin, president.

Convention Notices

Northeastern Nebraska Sunday school and Religio, October 15, Blair. Mrs. M. A. Peterson, secretary, 2708 North Twentieth Street, Omaha.

Eastern Iowa, Religio, October 15, 10 a. m., Fulton. Clarence Heide, secretary.

Quorum Notices

HIGH PRIESTS

Will all those who have changed their address since last report to the quorum please send to undersigned their present address? We expect to issue and mail the 1916 program in the near future, and are anxious that no member shall fail to receive a copy; be prompt, brethren, and thus aid your secretary in the faithful discharge of his responsibilities in serving you.

Your fellow servant,

ROB'T M. ELVIN, Secretary.

LAMONI, IOWA, September 25, 1915.

Branch Name Changed

This is to state that name of Wheatville Branch has been changed to Soldiers Grove, to conform to name of the town, Soldiers Grove, Wisconsin. A. Davenport.

To Locate Members

We wish to locate the following members whose names are on South Boardman, Michigan, Branch records: Ellen N. Hanson, Addie Beeny, Angeline Cronbright, Henry Harper, William Mook.

F. W. HASTINGS, President.

Two-Day Meetings

Undersigned announce two-day meetings in branches named. Auxiliaries will be represented in these meetings. Elders appointed have full charge. Those unable to attend will appoint substitutes. Pittsburgh, November 13 and 14, Warren E. Peak, Samuel Winship. Wheeling, December 4 and 5, A. H. D. Edwards, Jasper Dobbs. Wheeling, March 4 and 5, 1916, John Edwards, William Richards. Steubenville, November 20 and 21, O. L. Martin, Willard Allen. Steubenville, January 22 and 23, 1916, O. J. Tary, John Martin. Wellsburg, November 27 and 28, A. H. D. Edwards, David Collin. Wellsburg, February 26 and 27, 1916, O. J. Tary, John Edwards. Fayette City, October 30 and 31, Warren E. Peak, John Carlisle. Fayette City, January 29 and 30, 1916, J. A. Jaques, James E. Bishop. Glen Easton, November 6 and 7, O. L. Martin, O. J. Tary. Glen Easton, February 5 and 6, L. A. Serig, John Martin.

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS, Minister in Charge.
J. E. BISHOP, President.

Fisher, Oklahoma, October 23 and 24. J. T. Riley.

Died

WARNOCK.—Eliza Jane Warnock, born in Toronto, Ontario, November 30, 1876; died September 16, 1915, Cleveland, Ohio. Baptized in 1898, Cleveland, Ohio, by F. J. Ebeling. She was an active worker in church and Sunday school for many years. While upon her summer vacation about six weeks ago she was taken ill with what was finally called Dearings disease. Medical skill was baffled, and she did not rally. Her hope was strong in the promises of God, and she bore splendid testimony to the gospel and its wonderful hope. Funeral at Saints' church, Cleveland, sermon by U. W. Greene. A large circle of relatives and friends are left to mourn, but with a glorious hope.

McMANN.—Grace Loraine McMann, born, Toledo, Ohio, December 9, 1891; died September 17, 1915, at Toledo, leaving father, mother, brother, to mourn their loss, together with a large circle of friends. Baptized March 28, 1903, by V. M. Goodrich, at Toledo. Was member of Damascus Review, of the Maccabees. About two weeks before her death she was taken with what appeared to be a slight ailment, but which soon developed into blood poisoning. Funeral at the home, sermon by Elder U. W. Greene.

ZIMMER.—Mary A. Zimmer, born Fayette County, Illinois; died Anna, Illinois, September 16, 1915, aged 63 years. Deceased had resided near Anna, Illinois, for many years, moving to DuQuoin a few years ago. Baptized by P. I. Plum. Survived by daughter, Mrs. Bennett Edwards, Willisville, son, Walter, DuQuoin, stepson, J. J. Zimmer, Willisville, sister, Mrs. Fred Katzner, Benton, Illinois. Services by G. E. Meisenheimer, at Ava, Illinois, Saints' Church. Interment at Ava Cemetery.

SMITH.—Lucinda Smith, born Plattsburg, Missouri, September 5, 1835; died Kansas City, Missouri, September 9, 1915. Married Mr. James Smith, Plattsburg, in 1852. To them were born 6 sons, 6 daughters, husband and 4 children preceding her. Baptized by Elder Merchant, at Plattsburg, in 1872. Deceased lived a devoted life. Came to Kansas City a few years ago and made her home with her daughter, Sarah Carstensen, who tenderly cared for her until death. Services in charge of C. A. Selbe, sermon by F. C. Warnky, at Bennington Avenue Church. Interment in Plattsburg by the side of her husband.

Book Reviews

LABOR IN POLITICS.—The Socialist party, 803 West Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois, 25 cents. A paper-bound book of 202 pages. The purpose of this volume is best set forth in the language of the introduction: "This little volume is an attempt to find out why it is that labor has stood for three quarters of a century, and stands even to this day, helpless to improve, through legislation, its conditions in the shop and in the home. It is an attempt to find out why labor has been so ineffective in politics as to permit the United States to become the most backward of all the great industrial nations in laws protecting the life, limb, and health of the worker; in social legislation for the benefit of all the people; in civic purity and improvement; in the ownership of public utilities, and in the building up of the commonwealth. . . . In order to throw some light upon the causes of the political helplessness of labor in America, I have endeavored to examine critically the political methods of labor in this country, and to contrast them with the powerful and effective methods of labor in Europe. I have done this in the hope that such a study may help the workers here to devise ways and means of making themselves felt in the political life of our nation, and hasten the development here of a powerful democratic movement, which will not only force such legislation as has been achieved by the workers abroad, but will go beyond even that in the interest of the people."

His Pleasure

HUBBEL. Do you see what you have done? You have turned my children against me.

MRS. H. Go on. Preach away. Preach to your heart's content. (Rises and faces him angrily) You will drive me away from you next.

HUBBEL. Yet will I do my duty even then.

MRS. H. Your duty, your duty! Is it the duty of a father to act the hypocrite?

HUBBEL. A hypocrite? I?

MRS. H. Yes, a hypocrite. You prate about the children's pleasure. What about yours? When you were young you disgraced your whole family with your folly.

HUBBEL. But I repented.

MRS. H. Yes, when you had had your fill of it. And then you got religion. But what kind of religion? The kind that preaches, eternally preaches, but is void of charity. The whole world is twisted to you now, you've harped so long upon its "pleasures." What of your own? What of the pleasure it affords you to make money—yes, and withhold it from the needy? Are you perfect? —"The Pleasures of the World," by John Preston.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver, Assistant Editor.
Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:

T. W. Chatburn Passes	- - - -	953
The Flight of the Aeroplanes	- - - -	953
Be Constant	- - - -	954
Current Events	- - - -	955
Notes and Comments	- - - -	956
Hymns and Poems	- - - -	956

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:

Trine Immersion	- - - -	957
Science of Happiness, by F. J. Ebeling	- - - -	960
Faith That Endures, by E. D. Moore	- - - -	961

OF GENERAL INTEREST:

Doctor Hillis in Trouble	- - - -	964
Doctor Hillis's Confession	- - - -	964
A Hard Saying	- - - -	965
You Can't Beat the Game	- - - -	966

LETTER DEPARTMENT

O., R. Miller—Heman C. Smith—Simon and Nancy Bigney—William Lewis—G. H. Wixom.	- - - -	966
--	---------	-----

NEWS FROM MISSIONS

M. H. Bond—W. M. Self.	- - - -	971
------------------------	---------	-----

NEWS FROM BRANCHES

Blanche I. Andrews.	- - - -	972
---------------------	---------	-----

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT

	- - - -	973
--	---------	-----

The New Folder Tracts Are Popular

Just recently the HERALD announced the printing of an edition of two new folder tracts. From the ready response and the words of commendation received, the Bureau of Publicity is pleased to announce that a second large edition is now being issued. There are still a number of communities not heard from who should secure some of the folders for distribution. They are distinctively tasty, and will be read where a plain tract would not. They cost a little more than the ordinary kind, but are worth the difference. It will pay to use these liberally.

Folder Number 1

Gives a brief epitome of the history of the church—just enough to properly inform and yet be read by the average busy person. One page is devoted to pungent proofs that we are both evangelical and orthodox.

Two full-page illustrations—one of the Quorum of Twelve in a late session at Independence, Missouri, and the other good picture of an audience in front of the Independence church.

Folder Number 2

Gives a short history of the First Presidency of the church, especially of the presidents. There are excellent pictures of Joseph the Martyr, President Joseph Smith, and President Frederick M. Smith.

"What we believe" occupies one page on the back.

Part of the editorial appearing in the Kansas City Journal concerning the life of Joseph Smith is included in the tract.

The printing is done with a pleasing sepia ink on a pretty India-tint plate paper. The size when folded is three and a half by eight and a half inches—convenient pocket size.

The price is 20 cents a dozen; $1 per 100; $7 per 1,000. Always order of

HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE, Lamoni, Iowa

GRACELAND COLLEGE BONDS

In order to place the finances of Graceland College on a better basis, those having the financial responsibility of the same have thought best to issue bonds to the amount of $35,000.00.

These bonds run from July 1, 1915, to July 1, 1920, and bear 5 per cent interest, payable semi-annually.

They are offered to the Saints and to any investor as a first-class investment.

These bonds are secured by a first mortgage on real estate valued at about $62,000.00.

Each bond is valued at $100.00. We earnestly invite the attention of any having money to invest to investigate this proposition.

You will be not only putting your money in a safe place (as the whole church is back of these bonds as well as secured by mortgage) but you will be helping the work of the church.

Address all communications to

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, Lamoni, Iowa

Beatrice Witherspoon

1,000
Copies
Sold
Before Publication

Price
$1.00
Postpaid

The book is now ready. Those who have been awaiting this announcement may now send in their orders.

This absorbing and true story of the eventful life of Mrs. Emma Burton will appeal to all who admire Christian devotion and are interested in the struggles to maintain it.

The author has had enough experiences to make several books, but has selected the best and put them into only one.

It will be an inspiration to the young and a comfort to the aged—all ages will be benefited and enjoy the reading.

There are 21 chapters, 383 pages, 7 illustrations from photographs, all on good book paper and well bound in dark green cloth.

Order of HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE, Lamoni, Iowa

THE TWO-STORY BOOK. Excellent gift book. One story by Mary Leland Carter and the other by Elbert A. Smith. Especially recommended for inquirers. No. 247, each .....50c

GOOD HOTEL BUSINESS

Leading hotel in Lamoni, for sale. Baths, running water in every room, good run of business; location near depot. Easy terms to right party. Address W. C. Jones, Lamoni, Iowa. 37-4t

DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE.—No teacher should be without a good Bible dictionary and this one is one of the very best. Over 800 pages, with colored maps and 440 illustrations. Give one for Christmas. No. 185.....$1.60

OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL. Book of 29 sermons by Elder Joseph Luff. A very popular book and should be freely read and loaned. Nice type, easily read. No. 248 ..... 75c.

For Sale

A Lamoni home for sale, five rooms, closets, cellar, unfailing well; located within less than half block of Saints' church. ROB'T M. ELVIN. 39-2t

FIRESIDE TALKS WITH OUR GIRLS. Every young girl will profit by reading this book published by the Woman's Auxiliary. Wholesome teaching easily read. Order number 213, each .....30c

LOOSE-LEAF BINDER. The binder that holds any or all the new standardized report blanks. Size of sheet: 8 1-2 by 11. Highly commended by those who have used them. Every church worker should have them for reports and minutes. Four posts, durable buckram binding. Order No. M-EA1 1-2R, each .....$1.90

COMPENDIUM OF THE FAITH. A valuable reference book for students. Has the best quotations from Inspired Translation of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants on important church doctrines and subjects. Order No. 141, each .....75c

“CUT IT OUT!” Steer clear of this flood-and-drouth trouble that is the bug-a-boo of the farmer's life! Farm irrigated land and be your own weather man! You know the kind of bumper crops you can raise when you can turn on just enough water at just the right time. Irrigated farmers raise bumper crops every year. I know where you can purchase good irrigated land on mighty attractive terms and where the water supply is ample. Shall I send you literature and tell you more about it?

S. B. HOWARD, Immigration Agent

Room 413 Q Building, Omaha, Neb.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamoni, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, OCTOBER 13, 1915

NUMBER 41

Editorial

A RE-"EXAMINATION OF CAMPBELLISM"

Something over a year ago a criticism appeared in The Christian Evangelist that might with propriety have been considered at the time. More recently in the Word of Truth this criticism was discussed and further unjust comments were made. This latter article adds insult to injury; yet endeavoring to exercise the spirit of forbearance, we present our cause.

We refer to a quotation published originally in The Christian Evangelist and reproduced in the pamphlet by Elder E. E. Long, entitled "The Failures of Campbellism," and concerning which reproduction the criticism is made. It will be necessary that the article of Elder Long appearing elsewhere in this issue, and entitled, "Anti-Mormon Polemics Offended," be read in connection with this discussion.

In order that the animus of our critics may appear, and for other reasons which will develop, we quote first from The Christian Evangelist, and then from the Word of Truth:

The unscrupulous method of "Mormons," in carrying on their propaganda, is well illustrated in the fact to which our attention has been called by a correspondent in Nebraska, who sends us an extract which the "Mormons" are using in a pamphlet which they are circulating. . . . All this, and more of the same kind, in the same editorial, the author of this "Mormon" pamphlet had before him when he garbled this extract! Is any body of people that adopts or approves this unprincipled method of defending its cause worthy of the respect of honest people?—Elder J. H. Garrison, in The Christian Evangelist, May 21, 1914.

In their efforts to prove that Alexander Campbell taught the doctrine of an universal apostasy, and that his brethren have held him up before the world as a divinely inspired leader in the restoration of primitive Christianity, the Latter Day Saints have resorted to tactics that would put a tenth-rate lawyer to shame and make Ananias blush. One of the most heartless and inexcusable instances of such work is to be found in a garbled extract from The Christian Evangelist of March 21, 1895, which appears in . . . "The Failures of Campbellism," (p. 101), by E. E. Long. . . . Mormonism is so blind to common honesty that it charges upon a man a belief which he expressly disavows and has stated only for the purpose of refutation!—Mr. Shook, in Word of Truth, May 20, 1915.

The criticism is that Elder Long has garbled the quotation mentioned, and that it does not properly represent Mr. Garrison. We grant in the utmost frankness that it would have been better could the entire article in the Evangelist have been secured and considered, and which would have been done had the Christian Publishing Company complied with Elder Long's request when he asked for a copy of the Evangelist. (We note in passing that when Elder Long asked for a copy of the editorial it was evidently thought not practical to furnish it, but when Elder Shook wanted it, it was forthcoming at once.) That there was no intention, however, to work injustice, and that every other care was exercised, is evidenced in the statement on the fly leaf of "The Failures of Campbellism":

To Whom It May Concern: We the undersigned hereby certify that we have verified with the originals from which are quoted the quotations appearing in this tract with the exception of those from the Millennial Harbinger, volume 1, page 271, and volume 1, page 251; The Christian Evangelist for March 21, 1895; Chambers, and The Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge; and, barring oversights and typographical errors, if any, we verily believe the same to be true and correct, to the best of our knowledge.

J. F. GARVER.
E. E. LONG.

State of Iowa,
ss.

Decatur County.

Sworn and subscribed to by J. F. Garver and E. E. Long before me this 24th day of December, 1913.

(Seal)

G. W. BLAIR, Notary Public.

This statement was made and sworn to in the fear of God, that all concerned might know that the quotations mentioned were not verified, so that should they or any of them be erroneous in any way, it might also be known that it was not so from the careless work or malicious intent of the author of the pamphlet and his helper.

OUR COMPLIMENTS TO MR. GARRISON

We have admitted that it would have been better could we have secured a copy of the Evangelist. Will Mr. Garrison do as much? He has abundant opportunity so to do. He says "a correspondent in Nebraska" sends him "an extract" from a "Mormon" pamphlet. Referring to the editorial in The Christian Evangelist from which the extract was taken, he says: "All this, and more of the same kind, in the same editorial, the author of this 'Mormon' pamphlet had before him when he garbled this extract. Is any body of people that teaches and approves this unprincipled method of defending its cause, worthy of the respect of honest people?"

Yet, it is very clear that our friend has written his criticism with only the extract before him, or else, more grievous still, having the entire pamphlet he has overlooked or disregarded the sworn statement given above. Charity suggests that the former and lesser evil is the case, since he adds, "any body" "defending its cause," after this manner, when "The Failures of Campbellism" is not a defense of any cause, but a direct frontal attack on the cause instituted under Mr. Campbell. In the language of Mr. Garrison, Elder Long "garbled." Mr. Garrison has garbled, if he has not done worse. At best, then, the honors are even.

OUR COMPLIMENTS TO MR. SHOOK

In the article quoted from the Word of Truth by Elder Long the effort of Mr. Shook is clear—it is to discredit our people and faith. If he has taken the pains to secure a copy of "The Failures of Campbellism" he knows of the sworn statement as made, and that it was not the purpose of Elder Long to misrepresent Mr. Garrison, but rather to come at the underlying influences in the movement under Mr. Campbell to restore the church, and to show the conception of Campbell and his immediate collaborators. This is further borne out in the statement of Mr. Garrison, that there are two conceptions—the one given being that of Mr. Campbell. These tactics are so common, especially to Mr. Shook and many of this brotherhood, that they need no further examination. Disregarding the direct counsel of God, whose servants they profess to be, which requires that they hold their neighbor's reputation and good name a thing as sacred as they do their own, these men seek to besmirch the character of another in the hope that they may discredit the message he bears.

And they never fail to take advantage of the term "Mormon." As if it were a sweet morsel, they roll it under their tongues, hashing it and rehashing it, and why? Simply for the advantage of the memories it revives and the prejudice it arouses; and all for the same purpose—down with "Mormonism!" Anything to kill the influence of the party holding to the faith as restored in latter days, the most effectual way being to seek by insinuation or innuendo to associate them with an apostate institution, obnoxious for its departure from the purity of the message as enunciated by Joseph Smith, our acknowledged prophet.

WHO IS OUT OF JOINT?

Mr. Shook says that the quotation appearing in "The Failures of Campbellism" "sounds somewhat out of joint with what Campbell and his brethren have written." His contention is that Campbell did not claim "an universal apostasy," and that he did not "make a new beginning in church building." We repeat the quotation from the Evangelist, and, in addition to what Elder Long gives in his article, follow it immediately with what Campbell and his brethren have said.

That the religious world had so far apostatized from the New Testament ideas of the church as to have been utterly rejected and disowned by Christ, so that he had no church in the world at the time the current reformation was inaugurated and that with the organization of congregations under the teachings of the leader of this movement, he made a new beginning in church building.—The Christian Evangelist, March 21, 1895.

We quote now from the Christian System and the Christian Baptist, by Alexander Campbell:

Since the full development of the great apostasy foretold by prophets and apostles, numerous attempts at reformation have been made.—Christian System, Preface, p. 3.

Tired of new creeds and new parties in religion, and of the numerous abortive efforts to reform the reformation; . . . a few individuals, about the commencement of the present century, began to reflect upon the ways and means to restore primitive Christianity.—Ibid., p. 5.

The object of this volume is to place before the community . . . the principle which was inscribed upon our banners when we withdrew from the ranks of the sects.—Ibid., p. 8.

This plea and effort . . . was hostile to those creeds . . . because those human institutions supplanted the Bible, made the word of God of noneffect, were fatal to the intelligence, union, purity, holiness, and happiness of the disciples of Christ, and hostile to the salvation of the world.—Ibid., p. 9.

The Apostles Paul and Peter foresaw the rise of sectaries and sects; and both of them, it is worthy of remark, distinctly connected the sects with sectarian teachers: for all sects have been originated by false teachers or by corrupt men. Sectaries, it would appear, occupy the same place under Christ that false prophets filled under Moses.—Christian System, p. 109.

I am assured that all sectarianism is the offspring of hell.—Christian Baptist, p. 238.

The Lord Jesus will judge that adulterous brood, and give them over to the burning flame, who have broken the covenant, and formed alliances with the governments of the earth.—Christian System, p. 310.

Mr. Campbell says there was a full apostasy; that, tired of the creeds of the day, a few withdrew from the sects and sought to restore primitive Christianity; that they warred on these human institutions, the work of which, incited by false teachers or corrupt men, was fatal to the interests of the disciples and hostile to the salvation of the lost, the sectaries occupying the same place under Christ that the false prophets filled under Moses, being the offspring of hell, which adulterous brood will stand condemned at the last day. Strong language this! And surely it represents Mr. Campbell as holding to an universal apostasy, which had so far corrupted all as to make necessary a new church building, which work he entered upon.

Isaac Errett, a contemporary of Alexander Campbell, and recognized as one of the leading lights of the movement, in a pamphlet published by the Standard Publishing Company, and entitled, "Our Position," on page 11, says:

The Church of Christ—not sects—is a divine institution. We do not recognize sects, with sectarian names and symbols and terms of fellowship, as branches of the Church of Christ but as unscriptural and antiscritural, and therefore to be abandoned for the one church of God which the New Testament reveals. That God has a people among these sects, we believe; we call on them to come out from all party organizations, to renounce all party names and party tests, and seek only for Christian union and fellowship according to apostolic teaching.

This, too, is a little strong in its handling of the sects, but it is hardly in the same class with the following by Doctor J. R. Howard, also an authority on the movement under Mr. Campbell:

As we have shown, corruption, division and apostasy have done their evil work; and his church, which his apostles left pure, undivided and uncorrupted, wearing his name alone, and observing his ordinances, worship and commandments, has apostatized from him, "left her first love," and become an abominable sectarian organization, called the Roman Catholic Church, full of loathsome corruptions and cruelties and evils and abominations, and has persecuted and tortured and evil treated and put to death his faithful followers, until their blood has flowed in rivers and oceans, and cried to heaven for vengeance upon this apostate church! Nor is this all. She has "committed fornication with the kings of the earth," and has, by this illicit intercourse, played the harlot and become the mother of a numerous progeny of illegitimate daughters, wearing other names than that of Christ, as "Episcopalian Church," etc., full of the spirit and corruptions of the old scarlet "mother and mistress of all" such "churches." And these daughters have "played the harlot" too, and produced a brood of illegitimate granddaughters to the old mother, as the "Episcopal Methodist Church," and others in the same category, the blood of the old grandmother in their veins, and full of her spirit, traditions and corruptions! Hence the Lord Jesus Christ, when he comes the second time, to be united to his bride, the church, will disown every one of these corrupt, unauthorized religious organizations remaining—will reject every one of them, and will recognize but the one true church, wearing his name, to the exclusion of all others. And fearful will be their destiny! It will be that of great Babylon herself—that of "the beast and the false prophet," in Revelation 19.—Sketches and Writings of Benjamin Franklin, pp. 218, 219.

No question here about a full apostasy, nor was it any wonder Mr. Campbell et al withdrew from them when this was the way in which their work was viewed by him and his fellows!

From these quotations it is evident that the early movement set on foot by the Campbells was a protest against a complete apostasy, and was indeed a new beginning in church building. That some one is "out of joint" is clearly evident, and it need not be suggested that it is Messrs. Garrison and Shook.

SPIRIT LIVES ON

Now while the methods of the Evangelist represent a change from the older school as well as from present schools of Campbellism, the spirit of the institution lives on with this periodical. We quote from The Christian Evangelist of November 20, 1902, the first verse of a concluding article by one George H. Combs, entitled, "The gospel of charity and the plea of the disciples":

From the beginning we have declared that our mission as a separate and distinct religious body is to restore the church founded by the divine Master, to restore it in all the fresh and unmarred beauty of its creed, its ordinances, its life. This is our great aim. In part we have succeeded, but not wholly. We have restored the apostolic church in its creed and ordinances. Doctrinally we are sound and unassailable. Holding only to the creedal statements of the New Testament, enthroning those ordinances in the church which by the common consent of Christendom are of divine authorization, clothing New Testament doctrines with New Testament words, speaking where the Bible speaks, silent where it is silent, we can not be wrong. Ours is doctrinally not only the ultimate protestantism, but the ultimate religion. There can be no plus ultra.

Here it is—the restored church—founded by the divine Master, separate and distinct from all other religious bodies, enunciating the creedal statements of the New Testament—the ultimate protestantism, the ultimate religion, and, happy thought, the plus ultra, for under Mr. Garrison and his contemporaries the institution has been carried, doctrinally, at least, to the uttermost point of perfection! This is the spirit of Campbellism from A to Z—beyond us and our final achievement there is no possible point! All others fail, for is it not true that they can not succeed unless they come to Christian union—under our banner, the plus ultra?

A PASSPORT TO FAVOR

Now the position of Mr. Garrison as set forth in the article by Brother Long is that Catholicism and Protestantism departed more or less from the doctrine of Christ, causing divisions to a degree and retarding the progress of the gospel; that the Church of Christ, still in existence, having grievously departed from the simplicity and purity of the gospel message, God called Thomas and Alexander Campbell to point out these evils and to plead for unity by a return to the doctrine of Christ.

In this contention Mr. Garrison has left the beaten path of Campbellism. He is, however, like Mr. Campbell in this: "When we drew up our prospectus for our first publication," says Mr. Campbell, "we chose the title Christian Baptist rather than 'Baptist Christian' as 'a better passport into favor'" (Millennial Harbinger, New Series, vol. 3, p. 338). Mr. Garrison has chosen to court favor with rather than disown the sects, as "a better passport into favor" with them.

GLASS HOUSES

It would seem that those who criticize another for alleged misrepresentation would exercise care in such criticism, lest they themselves unjustly represent the other, especially when their discussion goes to a constituency from which, from the very nature of things, he is barred. In failing to do so, and in openly attacking his character and seeking to cause him to appear as a malicious purloiner of their religious convictions, they rear about themselves houses of glass, through which they are seen in their true light, and which fall away from them in a fair investigation.

We have learned to bear and forbear with those who hold to the adage "All is fair in love and war," and who in their professed love for God and their fellow men are predisposed to wage unceasing war on what they persist in denominating "Mormonism," by means fair or foul, their greatest effort being to blacken character that thereby they may heap discredit upon the witness borne.

Possessing our souls with patience, we may leave to the judgments of God who knows the hearts of all men, the administration of justice and the final triumph of truth.

J. F. GARVER.

---

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

ISLAND TEMPLE.—It is announced that the Utah church is to build a temple on the Hawaiian island of Oahu.

REBELS SURRENDER.—An agreement has been reached between Haitian rebels and American officers, for the delivery of all rebel arms.

SUNDAY CLOSING.—Chicago saloon men are in a furore over orders by Mayor Thompson to enforce the Sunday closing law.

TO MAINTAIN MINISTERS.—The Protestant churches of America are in the midst of an effort to create a retirement fund of fifty million dollars for the support of aged ministers.

CAUTIONING TURKEY.—The United States Government has notified Turkey that public sentiment in this country is such that unless the massacre of Armenians ceases, friendly relations between America and Turkey may be threatened.

GULF CASUALTIES.—The number of dead from the gulf storm reported last week, has grown to three hundred and fifty. Over two thousand are said to be destitute in the territory between New Orleans and the mouth of the Mississippi.

NAVAL BOARD AND PREPAREDNESS.—The new naval board of advisors on the 7th selected Thomas A. Edison for chairman. Addressing the board on the 6th, President Wilson said: "I think the whole Nation is convinced that we ought to be prepared, not for war, but for defense, and very adequately prepared."

BANKERS INDICTED.—Officers of the Riggs National Bank, of Washington, which recently brought injunction proceedings against the United States Treasury Department, have been indicted for perjury, on the grounds of denial in the injunction plea that the bank had engaged in stock market transactions.

RECORD CROP.—Government report indicates a record crop for the United States. Wheat, oats, and barley produce the largest yield ever recorded, with corn surpassed only by the crop of 1912. The combined estimate yield of these four grains is 5,781,682,000 bushels, valued at $3,702,756,000.

WILSON TO WED.—The engagement of President Woodrow Wilson to Mrs. Norman Galt, a Washington widow, was announced on the 6th. Mrs. Galt, thirty-eight years of age, is said to be a descendant in the ninth generation from the marriage of John Rolfe and Pocahontas, the Indian maiden who in early colonial days, it is alleged, saved the life of John Smith.

CLERGYMEN SCARCE.—So many German clergymen have gone to the front that the Government and a number of denominations are said to be perplexed regarding methods for meeting the situation. A plan to detail army officers wounded and unfit for military service, is objected to by some on the grounds that these officers are lacking in proper piety for religious work.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—A Zapata defeat near Mexico City and a Villa defeat in Sonora are reported. Villa's army is said to be disintegrating. Yaqui Indians have taken La Colorado, Sonora, a mining town, and massacred women and children. Order seems to have been restored along the international border. Conferences between Secretary Lansing and representatives of the different factions in Mexico have continued. Following a conference of Secretary Lansing and pan-American diplomats on the 9th, the secretary made an announcement which assures recognition of the Carranza Government.

"ARABIC" CASE ADJUSTED.—Germany has acceded to the demands of the United States for settlement of the Arabic case. In a note presented the 5th, it is stated that while the German submarine commander thought the Arabic intended to ram the submarine, yet the good faith of the affidavit of the officers of the Arabic to effect that it was not the intention to ram the submarine, is not to be doubted. The note states that the attack of the submarine was

(Continued to page 997.)

www.LatterDayTruth.org

Original Articles

ANTI-MORMON POLEMIC OFFENDED

In the Word of Truth for May 20, 1915, appears an article, "Some Mormon garbling," by Charles A. Shook, in which a case is sought to be made against the Latter Day Saints in general, and myself in particular. The "current reformers" have made a new "discovery" which has stirred their "atrabilarious" propensity to renewed activity, and the Campbellite volcano is again in eruption, sending forth a cloud of dust and ashes in a vain attempt to befog the minds of any who should chance to read "The Failures of Campbellism."

On page 101 of the "Failures of Campbellism," I use an extract from the Christian Evangelist just as it appears in "Parsons' Text Book," page 174. I wrote to the Christian Publishing Company for a copy of the paper containing the extract but was unable to get it. In using the extract I had no thought of charging the editor with holding to the "conception" in it. I did not know whether it was an editorial or not. It was one of three such references which I was unable to compare with the original, and it is so stated in the affidavit published in the front of "Failures of Campbellism." I simply used it for what it was worth. I am frank to admit that as it stands the "extract" does not correctly represent Editor Garrison. But it does correctly represent Alexander Campbell and many of his followers to this day, Garrison and Shook to the contrary notwithstanding.

To be absolutely fair with them, and for the benefit of the brethren who may have to meet this blustering criticism, I give the article in full. It is as follows:

SOME MORMON GARBLING

By Charles A. Shook

In their efforts to prove that Alexander Campbell taught the doctrine of an universal apostasy and that his brethren have held him up before the world as a divinely-inspired leader in the restoration of primitive Christianity, the Latter Day Saints have resorted to tactics that would put a tenth-rate lawyer to shame and make Ananias blush. One of the most heartless and inexcusable instances of such work is to be found in a garbled extract from the Christian Evangelist of March 21, 1895, which appears in two of their works, "The Failures of Campbellism," (p. 101), by E. E. Long, and "Parsons' Text Book," (p. 174), by A. H. Parsons, both of which may be obtained of the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, for the sums, respectively, of twenty cents and seventy-five cents. The extract referred to, as it appears in these two books, is as follows:

"OUR RELATION TO OTHER RELIGIOUS BODIES

"That the religious world had so far apostatized from the New Testament idea of the church as to have been utterly rejected and disowned by Christ, so that he had no church in the world at the time the current reformation was inaugurated, and that with the organization of congregations under the teachings of the leaders of this movement, he made a new beginning in church building."

On the face of this extract, it seems to teach an universal apostasy, "so that he had no church in the world at the time the current reformation was inaugurated"; and, also, the restoration of the church, or kingdom, through Campbell, as "he made a new beginning in church building." As this sounds somewhat out of joint with what Campbell and his brethren have written, I determined to ascertain whether it was right or wrong and, accordingly, wrote to the Evangelist, inclosing the quotation and asking for an explanation. To my inquiry, I received the following reply from its author, J. H. Garrison, which reveals a depth of Mormon knavery that is practically unfathomable:

"SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI, May 14, 1914.

"Mr. Charles A. Shook,

"Eddyville, Nebraska.

"Dear Brother:

"Yours of 11th inst. has been received, and as the editorial from which the extract you gave was from my pen, the letter has been referred to me for reply. It is one of the most unprincipled and conscienceless instances of garbling which I have ever known anybody to be guilty of. I am inclosing herein a copy of the editorial, which I have made from the files, so that you can see exactly the connection in which this passage occurs, and my repudiation of it as narrow, sectarian conception that can not be indrsd by people making the plea for Christian Union, which we are making.

"I am greatly obliged to you for calling our attention to this matter. I am taking the liberty also, in my 'Easy Chair,' of calling attention to this perversion of the whole intent and purpose of my editorial. I certainly wish you success in all your anti-Mormon efforts, for Mormonism is a menace to Christianity and to civilization.

"Very fraternally yours,

"J. H. GARRISON."

The following is the first part of this editorial by Doctor Garrison with the extract mentioned in bold type so that the reader can see at a glance how it has been wrested from its connections to serve the diabolical purposes of Mormonism:

"OUR RELATION TO OTHER RELIGIOUS BODIES

"It makes a great deal of difference how we conceive of our relation to the other religious forces of Christendom. There are, at least, two possible conceptions on this subject. One is that the religious world had so far apostatized from the New Testament idea of the church as to have been utterly rejected and disowned by Christ, so that he had no church in the world at the time the current reformation was inaugurated, and that with the organization of congregations under the teaching of the leaders of this movement, he made a new beginning in church building. The other way of conceiving of our mission and work in the world is, that the various religious denominations in Christendom, including both Roman Catholics and Protestants, had, indeed, departed more or less from the doctrine of Christ and the apostles, and to such a degree as to cause divisions contrary to the mind of Christ, and to greatly retard the progress of the gospel; that Christ's church, though still in existence, was divided and had grievously departed from the simplicity and purity of the gospel; and that as God had raised up men in the past, both in Judaism and in the church of Christ, to call the people back to a purer faith and worship, so now, in the early part of this century, he called Thomas and Alexander Campbell to point out the evils of division among his people and plead for unity by a return to the simplicity and catholicity of the doctrine of Christ."

Instead of Doctor Garrison holding to the first view, he held to the second, and, in the next paragraph of his editorial, speaks of the first as "narrowly and bitterly sectarian," and declares that it "begets a pessimistic feeling," "hems our sympathies," "prevents us from rejoicing in the success which is crowning the labors of those who follow not with us," and that "it tends to self-righteousness and spiritual pride." And yet Mormonism is so blind to common honesty that it charges upon a man a belief which he expressly disavows and has stated only for the purpose of refutation!

I am not going to claim that every disciple of Christ would state the subject of the apostasy just as Doctor Garrison has stated it, but I have yet to find one, from the Campbells down, who has ever held that the church which our Lord founded upon the rock ever went into a total and universal collapse, so that faith was extirpated and the means of salvation taken out of the reach of men. The Bible plainly teaches that during the Dark Ages, even, there was a remnant who kept the commandments of God and had the testimony of Jesus and to this Campbell, Garrison and all other right-thinking men agree.

As the books from which this extract has been quoted are two of the biggest guns in the Mormon arsenal, and as they are frequently employed by the Mormons in public discussion, it might not be a bad idea for the anti-Mormon polemic to preserve this article for future use.

Editor Garrison says: "It is one of the most unprincipled and conscienceless instances of garbling which I have ever known anybody to be guilty of"; while Mr. Shook says it "reveals a depth of 'Mormon' knavery that is practically unfathomable." These men have been so long engaged in their nefarious warfare against the Saints, and they have indulged so freely in "tenth-rate lawyer tactics," that it has become second nature for them to judge others by themselves. If Editor Garrison will read Cumorah Revisited and compare it with that which it seeks to "expose," he will find that his friend, Mr. Shook, is guilty of the same offense many times over, and he should be the last man in the world to make such a charge against another. But it is usually the rogue who can exclaim, "Stop, thief," the loudest.

I positively deny any intention on my part to misrepresent them. Heaven knows it is not necessary to resort to such tactics to defeat them, even if it were allowable. I regret exceedingly that I did not have the editorial in full when I wrote, as there is much in it that I could have used to advantage that does express Mr. Garrison's "conception," and I would have deprived him of even this little flareback. However, I am willing they shall have all the consolation they can get from it, as out of one hundred and seventy-five references to Campbellite literature, or more, this extract seems to be the only one they could find on which to base a criticism, and that one was specifically mentioned as not having been compared with the original, so, of course, I could not vouch for its correctness. I will promise them, however, that in the next edition of "The Failures of Campbellism" this extract will be corrected and the whole paragraph, as it appears in the Word of Truth, will be inserted, with appropriate comment.

But since my motives have been called in question, it is only fair that what I said in connection with this extract be presented also. Beginning on page 100 of "The Failures of Campbellism" we read:

But suppose it were true that the gifts were to cease as argued above. That "mystical body"—the church—of the first century DIED and was BURIED beneath the theological rubbish of the Dark Ages, and was not in existence at the time this reform movement began. From the Christian Evangelist, March 21, 1895, we make the following excerpt:

Then follows the extract in question, with the following comment:

In the light of the foregoing we maintain that the "supernatural attestation" of the Spirit would be necessary to establish the divinity of the "new church" and identify it with the "body" of the first century. They have dug up a "body" which they assure us is the identical church of the apostolic age, but it does not look nor act like the first church. Measured by the New Testament body, it is not even a good counterfeit.

Now, did Mr. Campbell and his collaborators teach that the modern church as represented by the sects of his day was "rejected" and "disowned" by the Lord? Did Mr. Campbell make a "new beginning in church building"? And are there any of Mr. Campbell's followers who hold that conception to-day? We shall see. Mr. Garrison says there were two possible conceptions of the matter, but that the first was "narrowly and bitterly sectarian." I care not what he thinks about it, but what did Mr. Campbell say and think about it? Mr. Garrison and his "progressive" brethren have abandoned the original "plea" of Campbell, Franklin, Rowe, and other stalwarts, and are found "confederating" with the sects whom Mr. Campbell branded as the harlot daughters of Rome. But there is still a large number of Mr. Campbell's followers who hold to the original "concept," regardless of Mr. Garrison's opinion.

Now listen!

This movement, which took on, in 1809, the public form of a voluntary Christian association, finally developed into the organization of churches to restore, as it was then expressed, "in letter and in spirit, in principle and in practice," the faith and discipline of apostolic times.—Reformation of the Nineteenth Century, p. 360.

If it was necessary for Mr. Campbell and company to "restore" the faith and discipline of apostolic times, "in letter and in spirit, in principle and in practice," then the church of apostolic times was not in existence, and Mr. Campbell DID make a new beginning in church building. If it did exist, there was no necessity for their attempted restoration. Mr. Thomas Grafton, one of Campbell's most ardent admirers, and a devoted progressive, says:

In his protest against religious error, he was not simply a reformer, he was more than a reformer. Instead of trying to put a new piece of cloth into the old, wornout garment of theology, he cast it aside altogether for one which, though ancient, was without rent, and as strong and beautiful as when first wrought out by the hand of God. Instead of reformation, he attempted restoration,—to replant in the fertile soil of the nineteenth century the church of the first century.—Life of Alexander Campbell, p. 230.

If the old, wornout garment was “cast aside altogether,” and he attempted to restore the church of the first century, did he not make a new beginning in church building? But hear Mr. Campbell himself:

The worshiping establishments now in operation throughout Christendom, increased and cemented by their respective voluminous confessions of faith, and their ecclesiastical constitutions, are not the churches of Jesus Christ, but the legitimate daughters of that mother of harlots, the Church of Rome.—Millennial Harbinger, vol. 3, p. 362.

Thus it is seen that Mr. Campbell's conception was precisely that referred to in the “extract” in question. If, as Mr. Campbell asserts, the churches were not the churches of Jesus Christ, it is quite certain they were “rejected and disowned by the Lord.” Mr. Shook says he has yet to find one, “from the Campbells down, who has ever held that the church which our Lord founded upon the rock ever went into a total and universal collapse, so that faith was extirpated and the means of salvation taken out of the reach of men.” Mr. Shook is either grossly ignorant of Campbellite history, or he is making a mischievous attempt to distort the facts, as the following from the pen of John F. Rowe will prove:

None of these creeds, whether Catholic or Protestant, tell a man how to become a Christian. They tell a man how he may become a Catholic, a Lutheran, a Reformer, an Episcopalian, a Presbyterian, a Methodist, a Baptist, perchance. There is not a confession of faith in existence that ever saved a soul. As human compositions, one is just as full of light and knowledge as another, and just as efficacious in the salvation of the soul. They all originated in the councils of men; they were digested in the heat of human passions, they were concocted and planned by envious and rival theologians; they become the symbols—and insignia—of rival princes; they have always engendered strife, hatred, malice, bigotry, intolerance and persecution, and will continue to do so until the end of time. There is no Christian love in them. There is nothing in them that will unite the people of God and make them one people. The mind of God is not found in them, and the Spirit of Christ does not breathe through them.—Reformatory Movements, pp. 51, 52.

If there was no Christian love in them, and if the mind of God was not in them, and if the Spirit of Christ did not breathe through them, then they had about reached the point where faith was “extirpated.” John F. Rowe was in close fellowship with Mr. Campbell and probably understood his “concept” as well as Mr. Garrison or Mr. Shook. But Messrs. Garrison and Shook find it convenient as a passport to favor to confederate with the sects that Mr. Campbell branded as an “adulterous brood,” and the “offspring of hell.” They have a perfect right to repudiate Mr. Campbell if they so desire, but they have no right to charge me with knavery because I quote from Mr. Garrison's pen to show what Mr. Campbell and others believed and taught.

But Mr. Garrison is grossly inconsistent. In the same editorial paragraph he says that “as God had raised up men in the past, both in Judaism and in the Church of Christ, to call the people back to a purer faith and worship, so now, in the early part of this century, he called Thomas and Alexander Campbell to point out the evils of division among his people and plead for unity by a return to the simplicity and catholicity of the doctrine of Christ.” Jesus, the apostles, and early Christians repudiated Jewish sectarianism in toto, and made a new beginning in church building. If the Campbells were called of God as were the early Christians, they did exactly right to repudiate the modern sects, and Messrs. Garrison and Shook are everlastingly wrong when they confederate, and they are found transgressors when they repudiate the teachings of God's chosen servant.

That so-called “Mormonism” is a “menace” to an apostate Christianity I am free to admit, having observed the results of close contact for twenty years, and participated on several occasions in a comparison with Campbellism before the public. Campbellism can not endure the test, therefore is a menace. But it remains for Mr. Garrison, or any other “anti-Mormon” polemic, to show where the gospel of Jesus Christ as preached by the Reorganized Church is a menace to civilization. If a fragment of the truth as represented by Campbellism is a good thing for civilization, certain it is that the original article, untrammelled by sectarian restraints, is infinitely superior.

This our joy is fulfilled.

E. E. LONG.

* * * * *

ETERNAL LIFE FOR RIGHTEOUS ONLY

[The brother who wrote this article has since joined the church. He still holds that the righteous and the brethren referred to by Christ in Matthew 25 are one and the same. He rejoices in the provisions of the gospel, however, which extend to every man somewhere and sometime the opportunity of obedience and life eternal.—EDITORS.]

The writer is a subscriber to the HERALD but not a member of the church. He believes that the doctrine as taught by the Latter Day Saints is more in line with the Bible than any other doctrine he has become acquainted with (that is, the principles of the doctrine), but there are some things taught by some of the elders that he can not see any proof for.

I have been reading the Gospel Messenger, a book of sermons sold by the church, and while the author sets forth some grand thoughts, and uses language easy to understand, I can not agree with him in the argument he makes on Matthew 25: 31-46, where he makes the statement that those people Jesus refers to as sheep on his right hand are moral people of the world, the same as the young man mentioned in Matthew 18: 16, who got salvation because he kept the commandments. He says that they had not obeyed the gospel and were not entitled to as great a reward as those called brethren. We will notice that those mentioned in Matthew 25, namely, the sheep, or the blessed, are called righteous and the forty-sixth verse tells us that they entered into life eternal.

If the Bible is true and Jesus meant what he said when he called them righteous, we have no right to call them moral. If they were moral Jesus would have said so, and man has no right to add to or take away from God's word, for his word is truth. Webster says the word righteous is living and acting in accord with right, and free from guilt and sin. In Isaiah 60:21 we read, "Thy people also shall all be righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified"; and in Matthew 5 we are told "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness."

We also read that Christ came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance. If those on his right hand termed sheep were moral people, they certainly were not converted, therefore were sinners. But Jesus says that they were righteous, free from sin and guilt; if so they must have obeyed the gospel, for Paul says that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, for therein is the righteousness of God revealed.

THE RIGHTEOUS ARE GOD'S PEOPLE

I find in reading the Bible that the word righteous always refers to the people of God; if they were righteous they must have been baptized, for Jesus told John that it was necessary to be baptized to fulfill all righteousness. Will some of the elders kindly tell me how I can become righteous without baptism? In Matthew 25:46 we read that the righteous received eternal life for their reward. Jesus says that this is eternal life, that they might know him the only true God and Jesus Christ whom he sent. If man can become righteous and get eternal life without obeying the gospel, why did Jesus send his ministry out into the world to proclaim that gospel?

And Jesus said, I am the way, the truth, and the life, no man cometh unto the father but by me. If Jesus told the truth it would be impossible for those on his right hand, whom he calls the blessed of the Father, to come to the Father, unless they obeyed the gospel, for we read that both life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel. If those who obey not the gospel are strangers to the commonwealth of Israel, how could they be entitled to a kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world? Paul says, the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Jesus says, If you keep my commandments and endure to the end you shall have eternal life, which gift is the greatest of all the gifts of God. If those termed sheep in Matthew 25, or those on his right hand, were moral people, and never obeyed the gospel, how could they be entitled to eternal life, if eternal life is the greatest of all gifts of God? How could the brethren mentioned in Matthew 25:40 get any higher reward or greater gift than those termed sheep?

I claim that sheep, the righteous, and the brethren, or those he calls the blessed of the Father, are the true followers of Christ. In the tenth chapter of John, Jesus says that his sheep hear his voice and follow him, and he says, I give unto them eternal life (which is the greatest of all the gifts of God). Jesus says his Father gave them to him, and that they shall never perish; and in John 17:2 Jesus says he gave eternal life to those the Father gave him.

The word blessed is defined in Matthew 5:8. Jesus says: "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God"; also in Revelation 20, John says, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." Also Revelation 14:13, we read, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord; and in Revelation 22:14 we are told, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." (See Psalm 1, also 119:1-4; 128:1.)

Jesus tells us in Luke that the brethren are those who hear the word of God and do it, and the same writer tells us that the blessed are they that hear the word and keep it. Would not the brethren and the blessed be quite closely related?

Now let us notice a few people that the Bible says were righteous. Abel was righteous, Noah was a preacher of righteousness, Abraham, Enoch, Elias, Moses, Daniel, Zacharias and his wife Elizabeth; and Paul said there was a crown of righteousness laid up for him. We could mention more, but it is not necessary. Could it be possible that those old worthies never obeyed the gospel? We read that Noah preached the gospel, and according to Elder Roth's article on the antiquity of the gospel, it has been preached since Adam's day. If so, surely these old worthies were not ignorant of the plan of salvation.

On page 318 of the Gospel Messenger, the elder states that the righteous were surprised, for they did not make any pretense of serving God. I have never made any pretense of serving him either; would I be called righteous according to the Scriptures? Remember that in Proverbs 3:32 we read that his (God's) secret is with the righteous, and in Psalm 34:17, the righteous cry and the Lord heareth them. And in Ecclesiastes 9:1 the wise man says the righteous and the wise are in the hand of God. In Numbers 23:10 we read, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my end be like his."

In Matthew 13: 43 Jesus says, "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." In Luke 23: 47 we are told, "Now when the centurion saw what was done, he glorified God, saying, certainly this was a righteous man."

If the Bible is true, and the word righteous means free from guilt and sin, certainly those on his right hand were not sinners or moral, therefore they would be entitled to eternal life, which is the greatest gift of God. Now if those were good moral people on his right hand, whom he calls the blessed of my Father, they were not righteous; but Jesus tells us in Matthew 25: 37, they were righteous, which I will believe.

THE RICH YOUNG MAN

Again, the young man mentioned in Matthew 19: 16 was promised eternal life for keeping the commandments. It could not be the ten commandments (the Mosaic law), for the Bible does not promise eternal life to anyone for keeping them. They were only a schoolmaster to bring men to Christ. But if the gospel has been preached since man's disobedience in the garden, the young man must have had the privilege of the gospel, or of obeying it, for both life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel. So it would be impossible for the young man to get eternal life unless he obeyed the gospel. If he could get eternal life by simply obeying the six commandments mentioned, why did he go away sorrowful?

I believe the young man spoken of was like a great many of the so-called Christians of to-day. When it came to parting with this world's goods he fell short. Jesus weighed him in the balances and he was found wanting, but he will not be lonely in the great beyond, if there be one. He will have company. Jesus says, Where your treasure is there your heart is also.

Jesus told his disciples that the rich can hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. If the young man's heart was set on his earthly treasures, he certainly would be entitled to terrestrial glory, which Webster says means pertaining to or existing on the earth, living on the ground, representing the earth. Had he not fallen short when Jesus weighed him, he would have been entitled to the celestial glory, which Webster defines as heavenly, dwelling in heaven, an inhabitant of heaven. If the young man had fed the hungry and given the thirsty drink, clothed the naked, visited the sick, and those who were shut up in prison, he would not have had such great possessions to cling to. But he would have had a treasure in heaven, and the king would say, Come ye blessed of my Father; as he will to those on his right hand, whom he calls righteous, and the righteous Jesus says will shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father.

Had the young man heard Jesus preach the sermon on the mount, he would not need to have asked such a foolish question. In Matthew 6 Jesus says, "No man can serve two masters: for either he hate the one, and love the other; . . . ye can not serve God and mammon." In verse 31 Jesus says, "Therefore take no thought, saying, what shall we eat? or, what shall we drink? or, wherewithal shall we be clothed?" To be sure the young man said he loved his neighbor as himself, but that does not make it so, and he went away sorrowful, for he had great possessions. He was certainly serving mammon (riches), not God. Now if he received eternal life for simply obeying the moral law, why can not I?

ONLY ONE WAY TO ETERNAL LIFE

Paul says that the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Jesus says eternal life is the greatest of all the gifts of God, and if man can get eternal life without obeying the gospel law, he would not need Jesus for his Savior. But Jesus says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life (eternal life): no man cometh unto the Father but by me." And again, how could those on his right hand whom the King bids "Come, ye blessed of my Father," come to the Father unless they came in and through the name of Jesus. If there is more than one way to gain eternal life or to be saved I can not find where Jesus or the apostles taught it.

"There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death" [not eternal life] (Proverbs 14: 12). Webster says morality is the practice of moral duties apart from religion. I am personally acquainted with some infidels who are good moral men, but if the Bible is true they will have to be reconciled to God by being buried with Christ in baptism, and that would make them his brethren, because they would be doing the will of the Lord. If baptism is for the remission of sin, they would be called blessed, for blessed is the man whose sins are blotted out. Therefore they would be righteous, because righteousness consists of doing right, free from guilt and sin, and Jesus says that the sheep hear his voice and follow him, and again he says, Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man which built his house upon a rock.

If there is only one plan of salvation, how could a moral man be saved unless he adopts the same plan the righteous man does, for he that climbeth up any other way is a thief and a robber. If the righteous will inherit a kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world, would it not be the earth when it is restored back to its former or primitive beauty, just as it was when it rolled from the hand of the Creator?

THE NEW JERUSALEM

We read that the earth will be cleansed by fire. And the Apostle Peter tells us that God will send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you, whom the heavens must receive until the time of the restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

In Isaiah 65: 17 we are given a description of this: "For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth;" and John the Revelator tells of the same creation in Revelation 21. John also saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, and God is going to dwell with the Saints, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall wipe all tears away from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, there shall be no more pain, for the former things are passed away, he beheld all things new. And John says that city had no need of the sun, neither the moon to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

Now notice: The nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it. Will not the righteous be there? And Jesus says, "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God, and there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie, but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life of all good moral people will be there. What would be the use of the gospel if morality saves me?"

LIFTING THE CURSE

My understanding of the Scriptures is that in the beginning the earth was pure, for we read that God made the earth and gave it to man for his inheritance; and had man remained pure and not become sinful, he would not have lost his inheritance. God being merciful provided a plan of salvation, and through obedience to that plan (the gospel) man can come in possession of that which he once lost. God has these things in store for all who will be obedient.

After man sinned the earth was cursed, and it began to produce thorns and thistles; death, sickness, pain and sorrow followed in its wake, and man was driven out of the garden to toil and slave for an existence. But Paul says, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him" (1 Corinthians 2: 9). Those who love him will keep his commandments, for his commandments are life everlasting (or eternal).

I believe that this was the kingdom that Jesus meant was prepared from the foundation of the world. Jesus says in John 14, he went to prepare it again. But Peter tells us in Acts 3 that the heavens must receive him until the times of restitution (or revelation) of all things spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began; and when he gets it prepared he will say, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit a kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world. The Prophet Amos tells us that he will return unto them a pure language at that time. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have a right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.

ONLY RIGHTEOUSNESS BRINGS ETERNAL LIFE

I notice that the elder makes the statement that those on Christ's right hand (the sheep) were good moral people, as was the young man mentioned in Matthew 19: 16; and again he makes the statement that they were righteous, and were surprised that they had served the Lord. I can not understand how they could be both moral and righteous. Anyone that keeps the moral law only could not be righteous, because righteousness comes by the hearing of faith, and without faith it is impossible to please God.

Paul tells us in Galatians 2: 21, "If righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain," and again in the third chapter, twenty-first verse we read, for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. Does this teach eternal life for all moral people? The Bible says no.

One brother makes the statement that the sheep and goats and brethren are three different classes of people. Let us see. Jesus is speaking of something that will take place in the future. He says that he will gather all nations before him, and will separate them (all nations) one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats, and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Now we have three parties, the sheep and the goats, and the Son of man and his angels. If he sets part on his right hand and the others on his left, the only place for the brethren would be either with the sheep or goats, for he only has two hands. The little boy said he saw two coons up three trees; now if he had seen three coons up two trees there certainly must have been one tree with two coons in it. Luke says the brethren are those that hear the word of God and do it, so we will have to call them righteous, and place them on Christ's right hand with those he calls blessed of my Father.

Webster defines the word eternal, without beginning or end, of existence everlasting. Jesus says, Straight is the gate and narrow is the way and few there be that find it. But if the young man spoken of and all moral people will get eternal life, it would be a wide gate and a broad way that would lead to everlasting life. But Jesus says the wide gate and broad way lead to destruction.

In 1 Timothy 6: 12 Paul tells Timothy to lay hold on eternal life, and in the 17th and 19th verses he tells him to charge them that are rich in this world to not trust in uncertain riches, but in the God who sends us richly all things to enjoy, and to do good works and be willing to distribute (not like the young man) and to lay hold on eternal life. I can not find where any are promised eternal life, only those who are obedient to the gospel or God's divine law; nor can I find where eternal life is spoken of in the plural.

Man in his natural condition is necessarily apart from God, and in order to get eternal life he must be reconciled to God, if the Bible is true; if not, there is no argument. But if it is true and Jesus is the author of salvation, why not believe him when he says that the righteous shall shine forth as the sun (not the moon) in the kingdom of their Father (Matthew 13: 43). And when he says that eternal life is the greatest of all gifts of God, why not believe that? And when he says, I am the way, the truth and the life, no man cometh unto the Father but by me, why not believe that? Could anyone tell me where I can obtain higher evidence? And if life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel, where is the proof that a moral man can inherit eternal life? Or if Cornelius, spoken of in Acts 10, being a devout man, had to obey the gospel to have eternal life, how could the young man mentioned in Matthew 19: 16 get eternal life without obeying the same gospel? Or is Jesus a respecter of persons? And again, if those on his right hand called the sheep were ignorant of the gospel, would ignorance save them? If ignorance is bliss, would it not be folly to be wise?

Where is the proof that a seven-eighths Christian will be saved, or is there such a thing as a fifty-percent Christian? Do not the Scriptures teach that only the pure in heart shall see God? Does the Bible promise any reward to a hypocrite? If man was perfect before he sinned, would he not have to become perfect to be redeemed? Jesus says, Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. If man had to become as innocent as a little child to be saved when Jesus said it, is it not true to-day? If not, why not? Is not this earth when cleansed from all unrighteousness man's inheritance?

The Bible tells us the righteous shall inherit the earth, the meek shall inherit the earth, and such as be blessed shall inherit the earth. But where does the Bible promise a moral man any inheritance, unless he becomes reconciled to God, through the gospel: God's plan of salvation.

Jesus says, "There shall be one fold, and one shepherd" (John 10: 16).

A NONMEMBER.

THE SABBATH AND GOD'S REST

DID THE CHILDREN OF ISRAEL ENTER INTO GOD'S REST BY KEEPING THE SEVENTH DAY AS A SABBATH?

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest.—Matthew 11: 28, 29.

There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God.—Hebrews 4: 9.

We learn from the foregoing that those who have espoused, truly espoused, the cause of true Christianity, can be said to have entered into the rest of God. Seeing therefore, there is a rest, it behooves us to find what is necessary to do in order to enter into that rest. A detailed study of the subject would reveal many things, too much to be said in this short article. I shall confine myself to whether it is necessary to keep the seventh-day Sabbath to enter into that rest.

We find by reading Galatians 3 that there was a covenant delivered to Abraham in the long ago, that four hundred and thirty years afterwards the "law" was added because of the transgression of the people: That this, Abraham's covenant, was a thing of faith; that those who receive the Spirit (the Holy Ghost) receive it "by the hearing of faith" (Galatians 3: 2). By reading Romans 8 we learn that it is essential to have this Spirit, or else there is no life in us.

In Galatians 3 we learn that we do not receive this Spirit by the works of this law of transgression; that no man is justified by the "works of the law"; neither was there any life therein. And that this law can not disannul the covenant made with Abraham, which appears to have been the gospel covenant, for in verse 8 we find the thought expressed that the gospel was preached to Abraham.

Now we find here that the gospel and law are clearly and distinctively different things. We find this expressed in Hebrews 4, that the gospel was preached to the children of Israel at the time of their exodus from Egypt. But they would not receive it. So God added the "law" as a schoolmaster to bring them to Christ (Galatians 3). And he also swore in his wrath they should not enter into his rest.

Under that law they were required to keep the seventh day, as a Sabbath. Did they? Yes, very zealously. Did they enter into his rest by keeping that Sabbath? No. For the writer of Hebrews says, "If Jesus had given them rest, then he would not afterwards have spoken of another day" (Hebrews 4: 8).

The question comes to us, What other day? Just previously he has been speaking of the seventh day. Now he speaks of "another day." Are we justified in concluding that the words "another day" exclude the seventh day? I think so. It is a noted historical fact that the Jews kept the seventh day. Did they enter into God's rest? Did they enter into his rest by keeping any part of the law? No. By what then, can we enter into it? By obedience to the gospel.

Christ says: "Come . . . ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." There was no rest promised in the law, no life in the law. It was a "ministration of death." Why then cling so tenaciously to its death-dealing carcass?

To get this before us a little more clearly, we illustrate by the following: Suppose to-day I go into contract with you that in ten years time I will deed you a farm. Now say that in three years hence you desire to farm this piece of land and we draw up a lease, and you then begin to farm my land. Suppose some of the terms of the lease are identical with portions of the contract. The lease would not abrogate any part of the contract, and when you come into possession of the ownership of the land it would be by the contract and not by the lease. And when you come into possession of the land you would then be bound by what was in the contract, and no part of the lease would be binding upon you. True, you may be required to till the land in a good husbandmanlike manner under the contract as well as the lease, but if so, it would be because this contract required it, and not because the lease required it. And so in the case under consideration.

We can not steal, but it is because the gospel covenant forbids it, and not because the law forbids it.

Now the question comes to us, Does the gospel covenant say "remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy," or does it say "another day"? We, as Latter Day Saints, are specifically commanded to keep the Lord's Day, or first day of the week, by latter-day revelation, which is confirmation of the statement in Hebrews, "another day."

To the law and the testimony, and if they agree not, it is because there is no light in them. We have taken this matter up in the light of the law of the gospel, "the perfect law of liberty" and accordingly conclude that "another day" than the seventh day is the Sabbath under the Christian dispensation.

G. W. LINDSEY.

No one is any higher up or lower down in the scale of righteousness than his thoughts are. They are, therefore, the standard of his morality, the gauge by which his worth to the world is measured. He can, in his mental home, entertain angels or devils, as he sees fit.—Dallas News.

Faith lights us through the dark to Deity.—Sir W. Davenant.

Of General Interest

THE CZAR'S "BELOVED JEWS"

The pessimistic utterances with which some editorial observers met the Czar's promise to his "beloved Jews" have been only too sadly, it appears, justified by events. The condition of the Jews in Russia has not only not been ameliorated, but, as we learn from the Russian press, even made worse. Neither their loyalty to the Government at home nor their acts of bravery on the battle fields have moved those in authority to soften the rigor of the "temporary rules" which have made the life of the Jewish subjects of the Czar full of suffering and persecution since 1833. The Novoye Vremya (Petrograd), a notoriously anti-Semitic organ, publishes, without comment, the following letter from a Jew:

In vain, painful efforts to find in my mind and in my conscience an answer to the grave questions which life at this moment puts to me as a Jew, I address myself to you, believing that your sense of justice will help me find an explanation which I am seeking.

As a man of very moderate political views I was particularly happy to see all my brethren, not excepting those holding the most extreme opinions, united in the struggle against the enemy.

I see a woman whose husband has gone to the war who, not having means of subsistence, can not, however, take advantage of the hospitality offered her by relatives, merely because these relatives live in a city where she has no right to reside. I see a high-school boy whose native town is in the hands of the Germans: his relatives, who live at Petrograd, are anxious to take him, a local high school is willing to admit him, but all this is impossible of realization, because he has no right to stay at Petrograd. I see hundreds of young men excluded as Jews from the Russian universities, just as the German universities exclude Russians. I hear to-day that the rule to put in all Jewish passports the special marks of the holders, which has not been enforced for the last twenty years, is beginning to be enforced now, and within the last few days several persons who have the indisputable right to reside in the capital have been expelled. This measure is only one of those by which the administration endeavors to limit still more the possibility for Jews to come or to stay here. Involuntarily a question rises: Has not the administration more urgent cares, more vital tasks, at present?

I stand perplexed before these contradictions of life and ask myself: Who wants all this? In whose interest and for the sake of what justice is such a burden placed on the back of the population at such a terrible time? Is it possible that nobody ponders over the thought, what a tragedy is created in the soul of every Jew by the conditions under which he must live at this grave moment? Is it possible that nobody has thought that this tragedy can not help preventing us from concentrating all our moral strength on the one thing on which it must now be concentrated?

The Ryetch (Petrograd), commenting upon this letter, says:

The Jews not only make great sacrifices, but also show wonders of bravery on the battle fields, and many of them have been rewarded with the military decoration. Such conduct, of course, is of no special merit; it is a sacred duty to the fatherland, and the Jews could not act otherwise. . . .

But although the Jews have done their duty to their fatherland with the greatest zeal and the utmost exertion of their powers, the attitude towards them has not changed in the least.

Touching upon the disabilities enumerated by the writer of the letter, the Ryetch continues:

The variety of such facts can, to our regret, be multiplied indefinitely. It is still more sad that this variety includes also those who have shed their blood for the fatherland. One wounded on the battle field does not acquire new rights either and has no right to live "without the Pale." Having recovered from his wounds, he, too, like that woman, may remain without shelter. For the law makes no provision for the wounded, and knows no exceptions. . . . But in the previous war the attitude was entirely different, although that war developed unfavorably to us. It might therefore seem that the concessions to the Jews are caused by the desire to influence them, and such a supposition is injurious to the prestige of the Government. Now, when our gallant troops gain such brilliant victories, when all are enthused with the deepest faith in our triumph, now, it is obvious, any concessions can not be understood otherwise than as an act of generous justice, as a new proof that the call to forget the internal strife is being realized, as the reawakening of confidence in our power, in the internal strength of the empire.

Speaking about the rumors regarding the granting of various rights to the Jews, which are circulated abroad, the Ryetch remarks that, "unfortunately, these rumors, to use the common expression, do not conform to reality." Prince Paul Dolgorukoff, writing in the Russkiya Vyedomosti (Moscow), has this to say about the condition of the Jews in his country:

The moment has come to put the question regarding the status of the Jewish race. The inconsistency between the obligations which the Jews owe to the Government and their deprivation of rights in the country has always existed; but in this war it has become so keen that it is impossible to keep silent about it. Hundreds of thousands of Jews are shedding their blood for the grandeur of Russia, and in the meantime they are deprived of the rights of which no Russian subject can be deprived otherwise than by a court, as a punishment for a crime. This position of a six-million population makes itself felt in all manifestations of our life.

The so-called "Pale of Settlement"—Poland and the southwestern region—has been the first arena of the military operations. The well-to-do people, merchants and manufacturers, have been ruined; the poor, laboring class has been deprived of bread. The invading enemy compelled both the former and the latter to flee. But whither is one to flee? Nearest and easiest of all, to the other cities of the Pale. But the war has worked havoc there, too. The breadwinners have been taken to the war, trade and commerce reduced. The safety valve which usually alleviates the condition of the poor there, emigration, is now closed. And into the midst of these wretched and oftentimes starving people come from one side refugees from the frontier districts, and from the other those expelled from Germany and Austria. . . . What these new elements bring can be understood without further words. . . .

Russia is great, and great is the soul of the Russian people. There is enough place and bread in Russia for all her sons. Many have relatives and friends who would gladly give the refugees shelter at this stormy time; for many there might even be found some work. But, in accordance with the rules in force, the authorities must see that no one who has not the "right of residence" settle without the Pale.

Still more violent does the clash between life and the rules appear when it immediately concerns the participants of the war. Many thousands of wounded Jews are now scattered all over Russia, including cities outside the Pale. Their relatives can not be with them or even come to them for a short time. And if a Jew soldier dies, his relatives are deprived of the possibility of paying him their last tribute, or must violate the law and reside "secretly," without being registered.

Prince Dolgorukoff then asks pointedly:

Is all this necessary to great Russia, who has been summoned to liberate nations and races from foreign oppression? The complete repeal of all these restrictive rules must go through the legislative institutions. But their relaxation during the time of war, at any rate, would be possible right now.—Translations made for The Literary Digest.—The Literary Digest, February 6, 1915.

* * * * *

AFTER WARDEN'S SCALP

Thomas Mott Osborne, the "reform warden" of Sing Sing penitentiary, is said to be slated for dismissal, and the following serious charges have been brought against his administration of the penitentiary:

Prisoners are allowed to talk to each other, to wear loud socks and tan shoes, to attend the funerals of their wives and mothers, and to look like free men, while one prisoner was permitted to enter the death house during the time Becker was in it.

On the other side of the ledger is the fact that insanity has been cut in two, that the number of cases for disciplining has been reduced fifty per cent, that the men sleep soundly all night instead of moaning and moving about, that the output of the prison industrial plants has been increased twenty per cent, and the number of attempted escapes has been diminished under the honor system, which permits convicts to leave the prison without escort. It is said that part of the industrial efficiency is due to the cancellation of contracts which savored of political jobbery and favoritism.

In a situation of this kind, with many naturally hostile to decent treatment of convicts, and others having their personal fortunes affected, it is surprising that nothing more than technical violations of unimportant prison rules can be brought against the Sing Sing warden. But the fight is not upon him personally. It is against his system. The cry is not, "Oust Osborne but perpetuate the honor system." The demand of the anti-Osborne men is for a strict disciplinarian, who will teach the convicts that they were born criminals and must not be treated as men.—The Des Moines (Iowa) Register, August 11, 1915.

Mothers' Home Column

EDITED BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS, LAMONI, IOWA

ADVISORY BOARD OF WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Mrs. S. R. Burgess, president, 5920 Etzel Avenue, Saint Louis, Missouri; Mrs. B. C. Smith, vice president, 214 South Spring Street, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Carrie Maitland, secretary, 1326 Sampson Street, Des Moines, Iowa; Mrs. J. A. Gardner, treasurer, 707 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. A. L. Yingling, West Waldo Street, Independence, Missouri; Mrs. Anna DeJong Smith, 2903 Sullivan Street, Saint Louis, Missouri.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF DEPARTMENTS

Home and Child Welfare Department, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, 724 South Chrysler Street, Independence, Missouri; Literary and Educational Department, Mrs. Lydia Thomas Wight, Lamoni, Iowa; Eugenics Department, Mrs. Jennie Studley, 17 East Cottage Street, Roxbury, Massachusetts; Domestic Science Department, Vera Goff, Sanitarium, Independence, Missouri; Sewing and Aid Department, Mrs. Edith Cochran, 1107 Powell Street, Saint Joseph, Missouri; Young Woman's Department, Mrs. J. A. Gardner, 707 South Fuller Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

Home and Child Welfare Department

NOVEMBER READING.—ADOLESCENCE

A group of boys on their way from school reached a corner where the oldest, a boy of about thirteen, turned from the others to go to his home. A rapid gain in height during the past few months had made him noticeably taller than his companions. Before leaving them he suddenly reached out and sent one hat after another flying from its owner's head. Amid exclamations of displeasure the boys scrambled for their hats while he ran away.

"I never before saw Herbert do a thing like that," was the wondering comment of a friend of the family who happened to observe the incident.

"Mamma," the boy said, as he entered the house, "I feel just like pitching into somebody!"

His mother had a ready answer. "If you will pitch into those plums out there under the trees you can earn some money. Mrs. M—— telephoned to ask if we could send her some, and if you will take them to her you may have half of the money to put with your camera fund."

"I'll do it," was the emphatic rejoinder, and the boy was off to his task.

Fortunate boy! and fortunate mother to have at hand a task with an incentive suited to the need of the time. Not that the money incentive is always the best, but it was a good one at this time.

We might wonder if this mother ever knew how for a while her boy tormented the other boys. She did know because he told her. In one of their confidential talks he said: "I don't want to be so mean! I don't see what makes me do such things." And then the way was open to give encouragement in gaining self-control as only an earnest, sympathetic mother knows how. A little later there were those who saw the boy was getting steadied for the conflict of the trying years ahead, and this being true, there would be a gain extending to all of coming life.

Another mother said of her fourteen-year-old son: "I don't know what to think of that boy lately. You know how obliging and reliable he has always been, but now he has so many accidents. He breaks things and stumbles and sometimes seems really reckless. I wonder what has come over him! Do you suppose all our care and teaching have been in vain?"

With scientific light upon the subject we may answer, "No, indeed, but they should be supplemented with sympathetic, intelligent treatment now."

How little has been the understanding possessed by many of us, probably by the majority, from which to answer such queries or to deal wisely and justly with children in this trying stage of their development. What does the average person know of the changes, the dangers, the temptations, the strivings, the aspirations, "the importance and the promise" of adolescence? The term adolescence indicates the change from childhood to manhood or womanhood.

A little book published by the Arthur H. Crist Company, Cooperstown, New York, is The Boy and Girl Adolescent Period, by Emma Virginia Fish. This book sheds a great deal of light upon this vital and difficult subject. It is written for busy parents and teachers and we recommend it as being most interesting and helpful.

In the "Foreword" of this book, Miss Fish says, "'Adolescence' is a comparatively new word, and signifies the period bounded, loosely speaking, by the years twelve and twenty-five. This book treats only of the first half of the period, as the years from twelve to eighteen form the most difficult time in which to deal with the growing boy and girl. If these years are safely passed, the latter part of the period may be safely trusted to take care of itself.

"What the man or woman will be is largely determined by the training and environment at this time. If the training is to be wise and sympathetic, the active boy, the emotional girl, must be studied and understood by the parents. Never less than at this time should two children be treated alike. The physical condition, the intellectual bent, the emotional tendencies, the religious convictions of each separate child must be understood before the parent or teacher can guide successfully the young lives just emerging from childhood.

GROWTH PERIODS

In our study of bodily growth we have learned there are special growth periods, the nineteenfold increase in the weight of the body from birth to complete development not being acquired regularly but at certain well-defined periods; and that the two periods of most rapid growth both in weight and stature occur just after birth and during puberty, the time when the sex function is established—from twelve to fourteen years.

We have seen that the body passes through "crises of development, during which the forces of the organism are all devoted to its rapid transformation," and that "the period fraught with gravest dangers and characterized by most remarkable developments is that of pubescence and adolescence." We may recall the statement of Doctor Hall concerning the growth of this period: "The annual rate of growth in height, weight and strength is increased and often doubled and even more. Bones and muscles lead all other tissues as if they vied with each other; and there is frequent flabbiness or tension as one or the other leads. Nature arms youth for conflict with all the resources at her command—speed, power of shoulders, biceps, back, leg, jaw—strengthens and enlarges skull, thorax, hips, makes man more aggressive and prepares woman's frame for maternity."

Of this important growth period Miss Fish says: "Girls shoot up rapidly from twelve to fourteen, and boys usually from fourteen to sixteen, although we have all seen many boys of thirteen as tall as those of sixteen. . . . If the muscles grow faster than the skeleton the youth becomes clumsy and awkward, lacks control of his movements, runs against everything, drops whatever he touches, and tumbles over it in trying to pick it up.' Although he may not show it, he is very sensitive to ridicule of his clumsiness and needs sympathy to tide him over. If the bones increase in size rapidly 'growing pains' result from the unwonted stretching of the muscles."

OTHER PHYSICAL CHANGES

"As the boy grows angular, the girl gains in muscular tissue, the hollows fill out and she begins to grow attractive-looking. . . . With this external growth come development and change in the internal organs. The arteries and heart increase in size, which causes better circulation, the skin grows more sensitive, and sight, smell and taste become keener. Enlargement of the larynx and elongation of the vocal chords cause the boy's voice to change. The beard begins to show itself in 'adolescent down,' the shape of the head changes and the features take their final form. The change in features is often quite marked and if this occurs it is important, for it frequently indicates change of character and disposition. . . . The changes in the sex organs of both boys and girls are the most important and lead to health or disease, both mental and physical, according to proper or improper development and care. . . . The brain reaches its complete size at thirteen or fourteen and the efforts of nature in other directions seem to exhaust for awhile the powers of the mind and our boys and girls have periods of stupidity and dullness apparently unaccountable."

UNDESIRABLE TRAITS

"Some undesirable traits are the outgrowth of all this upheaval of mind and body. Perhaps the most trying to parents are irritability and stubbornness. Even in the best-brought-up children there will be times when crossness, sullenness and stubbornness will crop out. They may come from internal causes—the youth has 'queer feelings' and does not know why, feels at odds with himself and all the world, loses self-control and becomes cranky and disagreeable,—or they may be the result of delicate constitution and overstrained nerves. . . . in one family a girl . . . began to manifest this irritability but from its first cropping out she was reasoned with, told how unpleasant it was to others, . . . how unhappy she made the home folks who were doing their best for her, and that she should use self-control and not give way to her feelings. The consequence is, while some of her schoolmates are fretful, disagreeable and selfish, she is gaining a happy way of doing things and learning to be unselfish by doing willingly what her home folks desire. . . .

"Another trying trait is the 'know it all' spirit." The boy thinks his parents "old fogyish," the girl is certain she does not need her mother's warnings in regard to matters of health, or proper associates, or suitable dress. "Both sexes are conscious of the dawning of new powers within them and the strong nature wishes to exhibit them as soon as possible. Amusing conceit is often the outcome which, if allowed to develop unchecked may lead to vanity and an overbearing conceit very undesirable. . . . But self-confidence must not be wholly destroyed, for it is one of the foundation stones of success. A proper estimate of himself, based on the honest acknowledgment of his possibilities, talents and weaknesses will keep the youth on the middle ground between that humility which will prevent his making any ventures at all and the boastfulness and pride which will cause him to overestimate his abilities, and thus invite failure.

"Along with the smart age comes the slang age, for the expanding mind craves expression in some strong and novel way. . . . If the training in refined language has been thorough throughout childhood, this slang phase will soon drop away if not encouraged.

"When appearing in the normal child, these various unpleasant traits incident to growth and development need cause no great anxiety, for most of them are only on the surface—excrescences as it were—and with careful guidance will either pass away altogether or find their own proper places as necessary parts of the complex thing we call character."—The Boy and Girl Adolescent Period.

This paper is the first of a series on the subject of adolescence. The preceding series furnished the basis for study of bodily growth and the conditions affecting it. This course was entered upon more than a year ago with the purpose of leading to the study of adolescence. Much more was found to engage our attention than at first was contemplated. Believing it to be the desire of those who take up this study to have the best information obtainable upon the various topics the readings have consisted largely of extracts from acknowledged authorities. This practice will be continued in the present course, of which this number is but introductory. The next reading will deal with other manifestations of the awakening powers in adolescence. CALLIE B. STEBBINS.

The Children's Home

EDITED BY HEMAN C. SMITH AND CALLIE B. STEBBINS,
LAMONI, IOWA

Opportunity

How many of us in this life are absolutely lonely because we feel that others are doing nothing, or caring nothing, for our welfare. We become morbid, sullen, and discouraged, uncompanionable, and unlovable, because no one cares for us, while we overlook the opportunities to be happy, glad and have perpetual sunshine in our path, because we have not discovered that the secret of happiness lies in blessing others, and that no one can be lonely or sad who improves the opportunities lying all around the path of life, just beyond our selfish environment, to make others happy.

We enjoy the society of those we bless more than we do the company of those who bless us. Truly has it been said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." If those who are sad because no one cares for them would care for others more, their sadness would soon flee and contentment and peace would be their perpetual inheritance. The opportunities are many and varied, and they are within our own keeping, and not contingent upon the pleasure of friend or foe. The blessed results come not by the acts of others but from acts of ourselves. The great storehouse of love and kindness is crowded with blessing; the key of opportunity is placed in our own hands and we are invited to partake at our pleasure upon the principle announced by our divine Master: "Freely have you received; freely give."

A modern writer whose expression always discloses a rich heart feeling so deep that to hear or read his words convinces one that the heart has been softened by the divine touch, has said:

"There is on earth to-day altogether too much suffering and sorrow for any man, himself beyond the distress of physical wants, to 'carry a lonely heart.' There are too many tears to be dried, too many sobs to be checked, too many naked limbs to be clothed, too many empty stomachs to be filled, too many hopeless and heartsick men and women to be encouraged, for a man, stalwart in health and powerful in finances, to . . . "carry a lonely heart."

On one occasion John Randolph, of Roanoke, spent the night at a southern home. On the following morning he mounted his horse in a group of slaves and was about to ride away when the mistress of the home presented him a subscription list for the benefit of the Armenians. Hastily returning the paper to his fair hostess, John Randolph waved his hand over the group of slaves, and said: "Madam, the Armenians are at your own doors."

At the door of every human being opportunity is knocking; it is not always the opportunity of building libraries or of founding collegiate professorships; but it is the opportunity of giving words of comfort and of cheer to men and women who are struggling under heavy loads and who in many cases need but a word to inspire them to new and holier effort.

Some one has written that "nothing is more odious than that insensibility which wraps a man up in himself and his own concerns and prevents his being moved with either the joys or the sorrows of another." The man who so incumbers himself has wasted his best opportunities and has "carried a lonely heart"—even unto the grave.

Men obtain the best from life when they cultivate those tender sentiments which cluster around the eternal truth: "I am my brother's keeper." Confronting every human being is the duty to grasp every opportunity not only to advance public interests but to ameliorate individual misfortune.

For years, and for years, in the nurseries of America tired children have been lulled to sleep by the sweet music of a mother's song; for years, and for years, that song has been the choicest of the nursery rhymes; it has refreshed sweet mother singers, relieved troubled fathers, and given to the little ones for whose benefit it was sung an inspiration and a guide for their future life. Every man and woman who has grown up within the memory of that tender verse has had the inspiration to make the world happier and better; every human life whose conduct has been molded along the lines of that simple song, has provided material contribution to the sum of human happiness. Every man and woman who has profited by the lessons of that little verse has made a reasonable success in life, even though wealth and position were denied. In every hour of our existence every one of us needs to be reminded of that song. Written in letters of gold it should be displayed in the apartments of every king, of every public official, of every busy merchant, of every man and of every woman who needs to be reminded that it is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die. Like a sweet echo from the past, as a stirring reminder of the present, as a high inspiration for the future, the simple words of this little song come to us to-day: "Little drops of water, little grains of sand, make the mighty ocean and the pleasant land. Little deeds of kindness, little words of love, help to make earth happy like the heaven above."

Encouraging Incidents

One good brother who has already contributed liberally towards paying the Children's Home debt now makes a further proposition, viz: That he will give as much more as any other party will contribute not exceeding five hundred dollars.

This is certainly a liberal offer and opens the way for the paying of a thousand dollars on the debt and thus bringing us near the desired end, of a debt-free home. Anyone able to do this has an opportunity of lifting a great burden, and of being a blessing to the children who are and who may become members of the Home Family. If you can not give the five hundred do not hesitate to give what you can either on debt or current expenses as you may direct.

One sister from the sunny south, sixty-eight years of age, having no money to give sent us a box of fancy work made by her own hands to sell and apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt. Such interest and spirit of consecration upon the part of church members generally will soon wipe out this debt and every other with which the church is burdened.

We are certainly encouraged by these expressions of unselfish interest and members of the board, who have felt a weight of responsibility and care, feel stronger for this cheerful solicitude for the success of our work.

Letter Department

Active Workers for Christ

As workmen in the cause of truth and professors of virtue and knowledge, we should become skilled in our profession, become doers of the word, not only professing, but living it. To become skilled then, in the laws of a higher life, is to live a life that is efficient in all its parts. To be effectual in a movement of this kind it becomes necessary that we first acquaint ourselves with ourselves, and if possible ascertain our possibilities and limitations, becoming familiar with our own strength or weakness, as the case may be, that we may be able to build character, and build wisely.

We should learn at the beginning that patience should characterize our efforts along this line, knowing well that it requires time to develop anything that is of strength or durability; and if our brother or sister fails to reach at once the height of our aspirations we should not condemn him, but have patience and speak kind words that will give him or her courage.

We must be very careful of our words, and be as gentle in manner as possible, for a soft answer turneth away wrath, where grievous words stir up anger.

If our brother fails to see our viewpoint we must not condemn him or judge him, but rather have much patience and charity. He will in all probability grasp the truth at some future time when things are made clearer to his mind. One must be free from evil thoughts if he would bless others and uplift himself. It is not what we claim to be that counts in the Christian life, but what we really are. We must sacrifice many pleasures and comforts rather than offend our fellow men, and thus develop the very best in life.

In determining our course in life and what we shall do, God long ago gave us to understand in unmistakable terms that we should reach our decisions by the power of his Holy Spirit. He said, I will show you where to go. He who walks without guidance walks outside the path of duty. No one need walk in doubt and uncertainty. God wants us all to stand in that relationship to him that we will pursue no other course than he would have us do. When disappointments come and the heart sinks almost to despair, remember that Christ suffered, before you. A single and true yearning for God to rule, to dictate, to direct our lives individually and collectively is our positive need, if we would be approved workmen for Christ. We must not seek after worldly pleasures, but seek for the old paths wherein is the good way, and walk therein and find rest for our souls.

Let us as workmen in Christ's vineyard begin our labors to-day, while it is yet time. The great Now is the only time we have in which to live and do. Perhaps to-morrow's possibilities may never come to us. DAISY BELL FAULKNER.

Of Passing Moment

NUMBER 8

We enjoyed and experienced a glorious time throughout the Religio and Sunday school conventions. The program was most excellently arranged, the business successfully accomplished, and the quality of the entertainment was of a very high order. The needs of every class and condition of mind were provided for in this mighty effort to uplift the nature and character of organized instruction.

My own feeble effort seemed to be the only feature that lacked. I felt the power of this contact. I realized the power of organized force. I conceived the thought, and in my soul I longed for the shores of my native land, so that we might bring forth a glorious son of promise for the Sunday School Association.

I am happy to inform you the son was born alive on August 2, 1915, a fine, healthy offspring. We have named it "The British Isles Mission Sunday School Association." And we intend to bring it, or send it, to the next General Convention for its blessing. The news of its birth has brought joy and gladness unto our mission. The greetings that we are receiving are full of hope, and many are desirous of assisting to nurse the new baby. By the time you are permitted to greet him we trust that he will be a fine, healthy, promising son, one that his august parent will be proud to receive, and to whom the parent will be willing and ready to give his full share of inheritance. We feel encouraged, and we wish to encourage all others engaged in such work, and those who may desire to be thus engaged.

We are also longing for the time (which is not far distant) when a baby brother will be born to the Sunday School Association. We have already provided the name. We intend to give it the title "Zion's Religio-Literary Society." We think that will be a pretty name for the second member of the family; and if we should be blessed with a further increase we could very reasonably add the name of "Social Purity," together with "Graceland Extension," and so on. I see no reason why we should not be blessed with such a happy and thriving family. Do you?

On Sunday, April 4, I missed the morning session of the Sunday School Convention, having been invited by President Elbert A. Smith to take part with him in the opening service at the Coliseum, where I assisted in the first of the series of services held by Bishop R. C. Evans of Canada. Bishop Evans, preached with all the old-time fervor of soul for which he is known, the subject of the hour being "Jesus, from the cradle to the grave." Bishop Evans preached three times on Sunday, and each evening during the time or period of the conference, and upon each occasion that I visited the Coliseum I found every seat filled. This interest was maintained throughout. The conference closed April 17, and as the Bishop had three more sermons to deliver, it was arranged that they should be given in the Brick Church instead of the Coliseum, as many of the Saints left Lamoni at the close of the conference. We had to be on time on the Sunday to get a seat in the church, which was filled to overflowing at all the services, many having to stand throughout.

Bishop Evans baptized some twelve people at the close of the afternoon service. I just took a peep into the basement of the church where the baptisms took place, and it was crowded to the doors, in fact many could not get in.

At the close of the Sunday School Convention our minds were naturally directed to the great event of the coming morrow, when the General Conference of 1915 would be upon us. The news of the illness of President Frederick M. Smith cast a shadow over all our minds, for we all desired to have him with us. Personally I longed to meet Brother Smith if possible before the conference opened, but I had to bow to circumstances, disappointing as they were. It is now a matter of history that he was not permitted to attend the conference; but we rejoice that he recovered his health and in due course was set apart to the great and honored position as President of the church. I had the pleasure of meeting our brother after the conference, However, custom has taught us to think that all things happen for the best, but in my experience I am not able to always believe that they do so. It is true that circumstances do sometimes govern us; but there are times when we can govern the circumstances to a very large extent.

Your brother,

W. H. GREENWOOD.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, September 3, 1915.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA, August 20, 1915.

Editors Herald: It is six years since I entered the waters of baptism, and I must say these years have been happy ones, although, like other Saints, I have my ups and downs. I take care that there are more ups than downs, so desirous am I to walk in the narrow way that leadeth to eternal life.

Since I became a member of the church, I have seen many changes. One who is dear to me obeyed the invitation of our Master. I shall never forget the day, nor how pleased I was. I was more desirous than ever that she should become my companion in life. I realized my anticipations, and am now the father of two lovely children, a boy and a girl. We desire that as they grow older they may be of use to the work, both being dedicated to that purpose.

Whereas I was backward in many things, I can see improvement, and it should be this way. We have the Holy Spirit to help us, and besides this we have the teachings and help of the church, and I consider that after six years if one can not see an improvement in his life, something is lacking.

One of the first means by which I was started in the work was the Religio. I served as secretary for six months, and since then as president and vice president at different times. I have served on almost every committee connected with Religio work. I express my thankfulness for this institution whereby I have been qualified somewhat for the demands laid upon me.

Another help has been the Sunday school. How I love the school, the teachers, and instruction received! I now have a class of fine scholars, and desire that God will use me to help them.

I was baptized by Brother A. C. Barmore. With my older brother and sister, I investigated the work. We had Bible class for some months. Oh, the beauty and sublimity of the gospel as unfolded by our brother! At length the day came for us to be baptized. We were convinced of the marvelous restoration. We wanted to know more of the precious word. We felt as though we could convert the whole of Melbourne, but we were young and inexperienced. We were zealous, but time has told us that we must wait patiently, meanwhile striving to do the part which God has given to us. Our hearts were made to rejoice when a younger brother was baptized, and since then another brother has entered into the church. Three of us hold the priesthood, and we are desirous of advancing and improving our time and talents.

Praying that many precious souls may be gathered into the kingdom, I am,

In gospel bonds,

CHARLES R. WALTON.

BLISS, IDAHO.

Editors Herald: The third annual reunion of the Idaho District was held with the Hagerman Branch, in the gospel tent, commencing August 20. The entire missionary force of the district was present, together with Saints from nearly every portion of the district, the attendance being larger than at any previous reunion. Brother Peter Anderson was with us.

Prayer services were held each morning at ten o'clock, Sundays excepted, when Sabbath school was held, sacrament service being held at two p. m. At all of these meetings an abundant degree of the Spirit was present.

Organization of the district Religio was effected.

S. D. CONDIT.

OSBORNE, KANSAS, September 14, 1915.

Editors Herald: The annual reunion of Northwestern Kansas met at Lebanon, September 3 to 10. While the attendance of the district was not what we had hoped, yet those who were permitted to be present received full compensation spiritually, as the Lord gave to us of his Spirit in a satisfying manner, and peace and harmony prevailed throughout, without molestation from any source. We were favored by fine weather.

The conference convened on the 6th. Reports were received from Homestead and Twin Creek branches. Report of bishop's agent was referred to auditors to be reported on at next conference. J. B. Ansley, of Twin Creek Branch, was ordained an elder. Officers elected: F. F. Taylor, president; J. B. Ansley, secretary; Sister H. O. Turner, treasurer. By motion conference was ordered to be held every six months, next conference to convene at Union Star Church, March 10 to 12.

This is the first time a reunion has been held at Lebanon. The Saints of that vicinity are faithful, and much will be accomplished in that part of the field if they continue faithful.

J. B. ANSLEY.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, September 15, 1915.

Editors Herald: I am truly thankful I am a Latter Day Saint, and can say with positive assurance that I know this work is true. As the days and hours go by, I realize more and more the need of faithful and righteous living.

I was born and raised in the church, and from childhood have witnessed the manifestations of the Spirit, some of them being for myself. All my life I have been greatly blessed and severely tried, but the blessings that have come after patient endurance of trial are truly greater than before. I confess with shame that there have been times under trial that I have murmured, but when I repentantly prayed for forgiveness, I was blessed with peace.

When a girl, I was an operator in a telephone office with a hundred or more other girls, the majority of whom were Catholics. There were only four of us Latter Day Saints. Sister May Sterk, through whose influence I secured the position, came one day to see the manager and ask how we were getting along. She was much pleased to see his face light up with a bright smile as he said, "If you have any more of those little Latter Day Saint girls, send them around. They are the best operators I have." I should like to have told the manager that if I were one of the best girls he had, it was my religion which made me so.

This gospel is the greatest thing in life. I feel that having it, I have everything on earth and in heaven.

The Lord has given me one of the best of companions, and I want to be a true helpmate to him in the work which the Lord has recently said is for him to do. We have three dear little ones, a boy and twin girls, and God has wonderfully blessed me in caring for them, especially with strength and patience, for which I daily pray. The Lord has fashioned their immortal souls, and I want to rightly care for their bodies and watch the development of their minds and help them mold beautiful characters.

It is said that to be a mother is to be in partnership with the Lord. I want to fit myself for that partnership. As motherhood is a profession, life's supremest event, and one of the greatest and noblest callings on earth, I want to do my full duty, and above all things I want to be a wise mother. I feel that I know little, and am only a child in the kindergarten of the Lord. If I can be as good a mother to my little ones as my mother was to me, I will rank among the best.

I daily pray for the Lord's help in performing this great and responsible task. As Brother Pement said in one of his letters: "I find that my task is indeed a hard one, and I also find the hand of the Almighty back of me, and I am determined that I will and shall succeed."

Remember me in your prayers, as I pray for you.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. CATHERINE BOOHER.

CLAYTON, NEW MEXICO, September 18, 1915.

Editors Herald: From March 1 to 17 I labored in the Snake River Valley, Idaho, where I baptized seven, at Blackfoot. I then went to western Wyoming, where I remained five days. Learning that my mother was very ill and not expected to live, I started for Independence, Missouri, on March 22. I found her weak, but slowly improving. She did not fully recover, and eventually grew worse, and was finally taken to the Sanitarium at Independence, where she is at present.

It was also necessary for me to go to Independence at that time to look after matters before the bishops' court. I attended the General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa, where I was appointed to labor in New Mexico. Circumstances over which I had no control, including sickness in my family and a delayed business transaction, prevented me from going to my field as soon as I should have done.

Desiring to do all I could to assist in the salvation of souls, I continued to labor in Idaho and western Wyoming. The Lord blessed my labors, and I baptized one more at Blackfoot, and one at Aberdeen, Idaho. On July 20 I was called by telegram to the Little Wood River country, Idaho, to preach the funeral sermon over the remains of Brother Oscar F. Ward. While in that country I did some preaching, and baptized three, who reside at the Muldoon flats.

Having to go within forty miles of Hagerman, Idaho, I could not resist visiting the Hagerman Saints. I spent Sunday, August 1, with them, and preached for them at night. Early next morning Brother J. M. Durfee took me in his automobile to Buhl, Idaho, from where I went to Filer to visit Saints I had not seen for some years. I held some meetings in Filer and vicinity, and baptized four, which makes sixteen baptisms for me since the first of March in Idaho. I also baptized two people in Nebraska while en route to General Conference.

Since coming to New Mexico I have labored in the vicinity of Clayton, in Union County, in a country schoolhouse. The attendance has been good, and the people seem to be interested in spiritual things. They listen attentively to my discourses. I feel encouraged to continue the work here until I have done all I can to instruct the people in that which pertains to life and godliness. There are two families of Saints near Clayton, those of Brethren A. L. Ratcliff and D. A. Pendleton. I am making my home with Brother Ratcliff and family, who live one mile east of the Clayton depot.

I expect to visit other places in the following order, unless conditions necessitate a change: Tucumcari, Roy, Montoya, and Tularosa. I want to say to the Saints who reside at these places, I will try to reach each place in its turn. I trust I may have the cooperation of every man and woman who bears the name of Saint, to the end that we may be blessed of God, and with his assistance be able to bring precious souls into his kingdom.

By letter from Sister F. Henson, of Tucumcari, New Mexico, I learn that Brother J. M. Simmons is laboring in that vicinity, having recently arrived from San Antonio, Texas. I am glad he was sent to labor in New Mexico, for we need all the assistance we can get.

I want to say to the Saints among whom I have labored in the past, I am just as much interested in your welfare now as I was while with you. I trust I may still be remembered by you in your prayers, and my prayers are ever for you.

Cakeville, Lincoln County, Wyoming, home address.

In gospel bonds,

A. J. LAYLAND.

CLAYTON, UNION COUNTY, NEW MEXICO, present field address.

News from Missions

At the Exposition

The interest in our exhibit at the fair still continues. We are able to interest crowds each day to whom we present the gospel and distribute our literature. There is only one unpleasant feature about it, and that is, so many have confused us with the Utah "Mormons." Every few minutes we hear the remark "Mormons"—sometimes, in an undertone, and sometimes loud enough for many to hear, and then they generally shy off to one side and walk past quickly, as though afraid of being contaminated. One of us reply, No, we are not the "Mormons"; this is the Reorganized Church, with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, and to those who stop to hear, we add, We have no affiliation with the Utah church; they are followers of Brigham Young, who departed from the original faith of the church and led a part of the people to Utah, soon after the death of Joseph Smith, and introduced polygamy, etc. Some question if the Utah people really do believe those things now. This necessitates us informing the people what the doctrine of the Utah people is.

This is very unpleasant, as it is not at all agreeable to have to talk about the faults of others, but it seems necessary in order to defend ourselves. When the situation is made clear, the people are generally pleased to learn the difference, and thank us very heartily for the information imparted, and accept our tracts gladly. A number of school-teachers visit the Palace of Education, and they express themselves as being surprised in learning of the two churches, and are pleased to learn that polygamy was no part of the original church.

This constant remark "Mormons" necessitated a change of some kind, in our exhibit, so we finally decided to put up three signs, "Not the 'Mormons.'" This has proven a help, as the people who are at all interested in religion stop to investigate, and find out who we are. We get away from the Utah doctrine as quickly as we can, and tell them of the angel message, and it is truly wonderful how attracted the people are by the truth when they are able to see that we have nothing to do with the Utah church. I wonder how long we will have to bear this reproach?

The attendance at the exposition is falling off somewhat. The weather continues fine. Beautiful sunshine every day. Not a drop of rain since we came.

Sister Bessie Holling and Sister Lillian Ewing have kindly assisted us at times at our exhibit. Brother J. W. Rushton has been with us a week, but left Saturday for Sacramento.

Sister Pitt assists every day, and is as enthusiastic as ever. She can hold the attention better than I, and she never tires telling those interested of the beauties of the gospel. May we have your prayers, that the fruit of our labors may be apparent some day.

In gospel bonds,

F. G. PITT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, 281 Castro Street, September 28, 1915.

Eastern Colorado

The conference of this district has just closed, and I can truly say that it was one of the best conferences I ever attended. A very large representation of Saints from the various parts of the district met at Wray on the evening of September 2, in joint Religio and Sunday school session. A fine program was rendered, which was well received. On Friday, the 3d, business sessions of Religio and Sunday school were conducted in the forenoon and afternoon respectively. In the evening there was a program, with round table work. In all these sessions the Spirit of Christ was visibly felt, bringing sweet peace and cheer to all.

On Saturday morning at nine o'clock, the Saints met in prayer service, which meeting was well attended, and the spirit of unity was very marked in the prayers and testimonies. At ten o'clock the conference met for business, as at two-thirty. These sessions were of real interest to the Saints, as was evidenced by their attendance. While there was considerable discussion of various resolutions, there was also clearly demonstrated the sweet spirit of true brotherly love.

On Saturday evening, Brother J. Charles May gave a very interesting discourse on angelic ministration. At ten forty-five Sunday, Brother Ammon White delivered a splendid discourse. At this meeting there were a number of other church people present, and from expressions, the effort was well received by them. The two-thirty prayer and sacrament meeting proved to be very spiritual. The gifts of the gospel were manifested in prophecy and admonition, to the comfort of the Saints. The writer spoke in the evening to a large congregation, who gave the best of attention.

In bonds,

AKRON, COLORADO.

J. R. SUTTON.

Lamoni Stake

The rain prevented meetings in the tent at Avery, last Saturday and Sunday, but on Saturday two were baptized at Frederic, Brother Elijah W. Reeves, and the son William, of Brother Jesse Davidson. On Sunday we held Sunday school and two services in the home of Brother James Archibald.

Came to this place on Wednesday and have held three services. Will go from here to Humeston for a couple of services, and from there home to prepare for winter. Much indifference is in evidence here, as in every place we have ministered this summer. Should there be a need of missionary effort anywhere in the Lamoni Stake, please let me know by earliest convenience.

The hastening time is here and the sifting processes are at work. God grant that none may be lost who desire to be saved; but many are being affected by a love of the world, and some are drifting farther and farther away, so that church services have but little attraction for them.

Believing in the ultimate success of Zion's cause, and the salvation of those that endure to the end, I am praying and hoping to endure.

Still with the armor on,

J. F. MINTUN.

CHARITON, IOWA, October 2, 1915.

News from Branches

Guilford, Missouri

Guilford Branch is still alive and moving onward and upward. Our new church is completed and is a thing of beauty, and we hope it may be a joy for ever. Brother R. Lorensen had the honor of preaching the first sermon in the new church. Brother O. W. Okerlind commenced a protracted meeting in it September 19, and will close October 3. Last Sunday he baptized six, namely: S. E. Jobe, Mrs. Myrl Jeffries, Lettie Jeffries, Harold Anderson, Levitt and Cleo Kent. We have had fair crowds, considering the weather.

It is arranged to dedicate the church October 17. We are expecting Brother Elbert A. Smith of the Presidency, and Brother F. M. Sheehy, minister in charge, to be present and in charge of the dedicatory exercises.

We hope as a branch to maintain the true Christian spirit in all of our acts, and to work together in harmony with the spirit of the gospel of Christ, to the end that we may influence others to investigate the gospel, and join in with us in our work for the Master.

May the good Master bless his people, is our hope.

October 2, 1915.

W. B. TORRANCE.

Lamoni, Iowa

This place always takes on a livelier aspect with the opening of the school year. The college attracts a considerable number of the best young people from various communities throughout the church. The public school, especially the high school, draws from a wide local radius. The social, athletic and forensic activities of these young folks bring in people from other places as well as take us along to watch the outcome.

The church services are largely attended by these young people, and they and we are benefited very much. This community appreciates association with these students, and the students usually appreciate the advantages we seek to supply.

Sunday, October 3, was observed with the church as College Day. The day itself was glorious, and the enthusiasm of the people found expression in very liberal contributions to Graceland College. The total has reached over $1,000.

The entire collection of the Sunday school—except the birthday offering, which always goes to the poor—was given over to the collection for Graceland, and amounted to $67.62.

At the eleven o'clock hour, the service was in charge of Elder J. F. Garver, secretary of the college board of trustees, Reverend E. F. Partridge, pastor of the local congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church, offering opening and closing prayer. The addresses were by Professor George N. Briggs, president of the college, and W. A. Hopkins, president of the State Savings Bank of Lamoni. The song service was in charge of Miss Ferol Leggett, teacher of vocal music and oratory at Graceland. The local choir was largely augmented by the two glee clubs from the college, together rendering special numbers and giving much spirit to the appropriate congregational songs.

During the service it was announced that the Lamoni Commercial Club had raised about $580 by cash subscriptions from the local business men. Last year they had done much for the college by paying the expenses of a local experimental plat on the college farm, under the direction of the State agricultural authorities at Ames.

The balance of the thousand dollars was raised by the collection at this meeting and some private subscriptions that came in later. Lamoni certainly appreciates the value of Graceland College and wishes to do all in its power to help her succeed.

In the evening the Epworth League's regular study subject was on education and the student's problems. At this meeting, which was in charge of Professor Reed, one of the faculty of Graceland College, there were a number of interesting speeches. Among the number were Reverend Partridge, the pastor; President Briggs; Professor Irwin, the superintendent of schools; Professor Trisler, of the faculty of the schools. There was a large attendance of our people, as well as of the members of the Methodist Church. Since the teachings of our college are nonsectarian, those not of our church appreciate the work Graceland is doing, often as much as our own people.

The public schools of this city are under the supervision of Professor C. E. Irwin, a young graduate of Graceland, and an earnest church worker. He brings into our schools the best ideals of our church and college, along with those gained at a strong State university and elsewhere. He is supported in carrying into effect those ideals by a strong faculty, among them being twelve members of our church.

Recently a meeting was called by Brother Irwin of all interested parents and patrons of the public schools for the purpose of organizing a parent-teachers association, such as has flourished here in other years. There was a good attendance and much enthusiasm. Professor Briggs was elected president of the association, and it was decided to hold monthly meetings, with perhaps some in the evenings that the fathers may the easier attend. It is hoped this association may formulate and carry out programs that will fully coordinate the responsibilities of home and school.

Some time ago the branch voted to install the individual communion service for sacrament. On last Sabbath it was first used, and gave complete satisfaction. There was no confusion nor disturbance occasioned by the change, and there are surely no regrets in the action taken.

The Religio holds its meetings on Friday evenings this winter rather than on Sunday evenings as was arranged for last year. The attendance is good and the programs educational, with well-laid plans for their continuance.

The monthly meetings of the priesthood have been working on some interesting phases of subjects arranged by a program committee composed of one representative each from each order of the Aaronic priesthood and one for the eldership.

There may be other such meetings desirous of taking up some specific work, and we offer the program for their benefit:

PROGRAM OF STUDY FOR THE PRIESTHOOD

Ourselves:

- What we ought to do.
- What we can do well.
- What we now know.
- What we do not know.
- What we ought to know.

Others:

- What the members (of the church) desire.
- What the members seem to need.
- What the members will do.
- What the members expect of us.

Our Church:

- Organization.
- Distinctive features.
- What we lack as a church.
- Church literature published.
- Church literature needed.
- Additions promised by revelation.

Other Churches:

- Organization.
- Difference in creeds.
- How to meet their objections.
- Geographical and numerical differences.

The Bible:

- General makeup of the book.
- Various versions.
- Origin of the King James Version.
- Other Bibles.
- Higher criticism.

It is the intention to work up outlines of these subjects as they are briefly taken up, that those who desire to further delve may have a good foundation. It is intended that the whole program cover a year or eighteen months, when details may be taken up. The special duties of the various offices have heretofore been extensively covered, and while none may fully sense all his duty, getting at it in another angle may better emphasize certain features.

There are many other items which might be of interest to the general church, but we must desist till some other time.

E. D. MOORE.

CURRENT EVENTS

(Continued from page 980.)

against instructions, disavows the sinking of the vessel, expresses regrets for the loss of American lives, and promises indemnity to the families affected. It is further stated that stringent orders issued to submarine commanders assure the prevention of a recurrence of the incident.

LABOR STRIFE SETTLEMENT.—Adjustment of Colorado troubles is progressing. Representatives of the employees have indorsed the plan submitted by J. D. Rockefeller, jr., the action to be ratified by direct vote of the miners. This plan provides for an organization of miners, who must not be affiliated with the United Mine Workers. Camps are to elect delegates in five districts, the delegates from each district to select committees on industrial cooperation and conciliation, safety and accident, sanitation, health and housing, recreation and education. The company retains the right to hire and discharge, but agrees to post a list of offenses for which dismissal may be made without notice. Permission to hold meetings, to buy supplies anywhere, and to employ check weighmen is conceded. An eight-hour day under ground, and a nine-hour day above ground is provided. The company agrees to abide hereafter by the mining and labor laws of Colorado. John R. Lawson, labor leader, convicted of murder in connection with the late labor strife in Colorado, has been released from the county jail at Trinidad on $35,000 bail, pending appeal.

EUROPEAN WAR.—Interest in the European war has shifted from the western front to the Balkans. An ultimatum by Russia demanding that Bulgaria break with the central powers having been answered unsatisfactorily, the representatives of Russia, France, Great Britain, Italy and Serbia, received their passports. The Bulgarian ministers to Italy and France have been handed their passports. A large part of the Bulgarian army has been massed on the Serbian frontier. The anticipated Austro-German attack on Serbia has begun. Advance guards crossing the Danube have met with sharp defeat and heavy losses. While Greece, under formal protest by her premier, but with the tacit consent of the Government, has permitted the landing of French and British forces at Salonika, yet the King of Greece has forced the resignation of Premier Venizelos, after the premier was given a vote of confidence by the Chamber of Deputies, being unwilling to support his war policy. A new cabinet has been formed. The allies continue to land forces at Salonika, these troops hurrying across Grecian territory to join the Serbian army. Rumania seems at present bent on continuing friendly relations with all the belligerents. The German offensive in the east against Dvinsk makes little headway. A new Russian offensive has developed in the south, and in the center Russian aggression continues. The British report victory in Mesopotamia. Germany gained slightly in the west the first part of the week covered by this report. Terrific artillery firing and infantry charges in the Champagne regions have been the occasion of heavy losses, with the advantage reported with the French. A British and a Danish steamer have been sunk by German submarines.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

FORGETTING AND BUILDING.—Note the statement in the Current Events column of this issue under the side heading, "Island Temple" and read Hosea 8: 14.

NORTH PHILADELPHIA INSTITUTE.—We are in receipt of an announcement of the North Philadelphia Institute for the season of 1915-1916. The principal of this institute is our pastor in that city, Elder Walter W. Smith. The courses offered are normal, preparatory, commercial, music, domestic art, physical training, kindergarten, and social welfare. There are classes in the afternoon and evening. The motto is, "For those who must work, but are willing to study." The same mail brings us the "Saints Advocate" for October, 1915. This is an attractive four-page leaflet, published by the Saints in Philadelphia. The front page contains an invitation to the seventy-sixth anniversary service and Sunday school and Religio rally Sunday, October 3, with a program of the services. The inside pages are taken up with a history of the church. The fourth page contains a picture of the local church building with announcements of regular services and invitation to attend.

Miscellaneous Department*The Bishopric*APPOINTMENT OF AGENT

To the Saints and Friends of the Youngstown-Sharon District, Ohio: Please take notice that upon the organization of the new district herein referred to Elder Martin Ahlstrom, 90 North Oakland Avenue, Sharon, Pennsylvania, has been appointed as bishop's agent to act in and for said district.

We hope and trust that the Saints and friends within this new district may remember the bishop's agent of the same and help and sustain him and the work of the Master as he moves forward to perform his labors. Brother Ahlstrom will travel through the district as he is able and present matters relating to the financial work, and he will be pleased to communicate with any in the district touching the law and usage as found in the divine Word.

Commending him to the Saints and friends and asking for him the help and good will of each and every one as he labors for the Master's cause, I am,

Very truly and respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 8, 1915.

APPOINTMENT OF AGENT

Saints and Friends Located Within the Boundaries of the New District Known as the Northwestern Ohio District:

Please take notice that upon the recommendation of the conference making provision for this district, Brother E. L. Uhlrich, 712 Adams Street, Toledo, Ohio, has been duly appointed to act as bishop's agent in and for said district.

We hope and trust that the Saints and friends may earnestly and willingly move forward to the assistance of the new agent in his work in the district, and that all may move forward to fulfill the law of Christ as it relates to each individual in the church touching financial work and duties. Asking for Brother Uhlrich, as the agent and helper in said district, the united support of the Saints and friends, and wishing full success in the work of the Master in the new district, I am,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 8, 1915.

Conference Minutes

BRITISH ISLES MISSION.—Met in annual conference, North-eastern Manchester, July 30, 6.30 p. m., W. H. Greenwood in charge, with R. May and J. W. Taylor as associates. Officers, committees, priesthood, and districts reported. Application of J. H. Sykes to withdraw notice of motion, granted. Time was granted Sunday school workers to meet at conclusion of conference business on Monday. At 10:30 Sunday, with W. H. Greenwood and R. May in charge, John A. Judd, W. R. Armstrong, and Thomas Jones were the speakers. A baptism occurred at 11.30. J. W. Taylor immersed Rose Lillian Bolton and Dorothea Gray, of East London. Fellowship meeting at 2.30, R. May, James Baty, and W. H. Greenwood in charge. The gifts of tongues and interpretation and prophecy were enjoyed, the Saints being warned and exhorted to more diligence and holiness of life. At the conclusion of this meeting J. W. Taylor baptized his little daughter Florry. At 6.30, with W. H. Greenwood in charge, J. W. Taylor and R. May were the speakers. At 10.45 Monday, W. H. Greenwood presided. Seventh Quorum of Elders reported. Work of high priests reported by W. R. Armstrong. Questions bearing on finances of mission answered by R. May, which proved satisfactory. Request of James Schofield for mission to do something at Hyde, was referred to mission and Manchester district authorities. Following was passed by rising vote: "Resolved, That we, as members of the British Isles Mission, favor the continuance of Bishop May in this mission, and request the general appointing powers to extend the five years appointment amongst us, if compatible with circumstances. His labors are appreciated, and we believe he has the entire confidence of the Saints here." At 2.45 mass meeting of Sunday school workers was held, with W. H. Greenwood in charge. Following resolution was passed: "That the Sunday school workers of the British Isles Mission, now in mass meeting assembled, organize ourselves into the British Isles Mission Sunday School Association, and this association become a part of the General Sunday School Association." The following Sunday school officers were selected: W. H. Greenwood, superintendent; Abel Hall, secretary. All Sunday schools by motion were invited to join this association. Resolution passed inviting General Superintendent of General Association to visit British Isles this year, and on his failure to come, inviting some other representative. Resolution passed requesting Zion's Religio-Literary Society to authorize Brother Wells or whoever may be appointed to represent the General Association in this country, to assist Religio work also. Delegate from this mission to next General Conference was authorized to represent Sunday School Association at General Convention. Conference met Monday evening, W. H. Greenwood presiding. Motion was passed sustaining general church appointees U. W. Greene and associate W. H. Greenwood as president of the mission. Following mission officers elected: W. R. Armstrong, secretary; R. May, financial secretary and treasurer. Bishop May was sustained as book agent, with power to appoint an assistant. W. R. Armstrong sustained historian. Bishop R. May, J. W. Taylor, R. W. Armstrong sustained by unanimous rising vote. J. E. Meredith reelected auditor for 3 years. Two pounds was donated Northeastern Manchester Branch, with thanks for use of their meeting room for the conference. Secretary authorized to forward following resolution to First Presidency: "Resolved, That we, the officers and members of the British Isles Mission, present to the presidency of the church, as organized at the late General Conference, assurance of our entire confidence and support, and pray that they may be physically and spiritually blessed in performing the very responsible and sacred duties of their office and calling."

During the evening a fellowship meeting in charge of Thomas Jones and John A. Judd was held, the gifts of the Spirit being manifested in a marked degree in tongues and interpretation, prophecy, vision, and exhortation. The Saints were blessed and strengthened and encouraged to continue in confidence, notwithstanding the increasing perils by land, sea and air, and renewed attacks by him who knoweth that his time is short. In parting, the Saints all agreed in exclaiming that the conference was the best in all respects yet held. W. H. Greenwood, president; W. R. Armstrong, secretary.

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.—Reunion grounds Centralia, Washington, August 7, 10 a. m. Sister Irene Emslie elected auditor for 3 years. Reports: Seattle 292, gain 19; Roslyn 37; Westminster 59, gain 8; Chilliwack 48; Centralia 108, gain 11. Treasurer reported: Receipts $2,123; expenditures, $1,362. Bishop's agent reported: Receipts $806.45; expenditures, $617.25. C. N. Heading, Centralia, Washington, ordained elder. Sunday school and Religio reported progress. By-laws adopted, branch officers and others concerned to receive supply. Arrangements made to hold next reunion at Centralia, in August, 1916, William Johnson, L. S. Rhodes, John Hartnell, F. W. Holman, George Appleman, selected as committee. The reunion was a success. Chief among the speakers were Brethren Rushton, Pitt, Terry, Shippy, Swenson, Slye, Johnson. Those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, Tacoma, Castle Rock, Nanaimo, may have letters by applying to F. W. Holman, secretary, 4233 Bagley Avenue, Seattle.

Convention Minutes

WEST VIRGINIA.—Sunday school, Goose Creek, September 3. Reports: Mount Zion, Clarksburg. The Shinston was disorganized. Election: Joseph Biggs, superintendent; Frank Baker, assistant; Katie Ross Carpenter, secretary; Ethel Jarette, treasurer; Brother Hammond, librarian; Lucy Griffith Johnson, home department superintendent. Adjourned to meet at Clarksburg. Katie Ross Carpenter, secretary, Cairo, West Virginia.

GALLANDS GROVE.—Sunday school and Religio, Gallands Grove, Iowa, September 24. Standard of excellence adopted. Religio president resigned, and Lillie A. Marks was chosen to fill the vacancy. Interesting talks were given the young on the temporal law and recreation and amusements. Floy Holcomb, secretary.

Conference Notices

Spring River, Pittsburg, Kansas. City Auditorium, November 6 and 7. Mollie Davis, secretary.

Convention Notices

Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana Sunday school, Saints' chapel, Galien, Michigan, October 15. Starr Corless, secretary.

Eastern Maine, Sunday school, October 30 and 31, Jonesport. Business 2.30 p. m., Saturday. This will be our first district Sunday school convention. We hope for a good attendance. John F. Sheehy, superintendent.

Two-Day Meetings

Flora Fountain, 9 miles west of Lancaster, Grant County, Wisconsin, October 23 and 24. Those coming to Lancaster Friday notify James Edgington, Lancaster, Wisconsin, R. F. D., whether you will arrive at 11.30 a. m., or 5.30 p. m., so that teams can meet you.

Died

FOWLER.—Lewis August Fowler, born Amboy, Illinois, April 29, 1857; died September 28, 1915, Kansas City, Missouri. Baptized at Amboy. An elder, and at time of death he was president of Fourth Kansas City Branch. With his father's family, moved to Iowa in 1875, removed to Saint Joseph in 1897, and to Kansas City in 1904. December, 1878, married Harriet Brill. To them were born 3 sons, 5 daughters: Mrs. Alace McLees, Mrs. Minnie McLaughlin, Frank A., Louis M., Wilbert H., Mrs. Lulu Holliday, Misses Vida and Marie, who reside with their mother at Kansas City. Services by George Jenkins, Stone Church, Independence, Missouri, A. H. Parsons in charge. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery.

MURPHY.—Samuel P. Murphy, born May 28, 1871, Pinkneyville, Illinois; died West Mineral, Kansas, August 19, 1915. Married Maggie Dershan, July 13, 1890. Born to them 1 son, 1 daughter, who, with his companion, mother, 2 brothers, 1 sister, survive. Funeral by George Jenkins. Interment in Stone City Cemetery.

NEWTON.—Minnie Newton, born September 18, 1881, Van Wert, Iowa; died Chanute, Kansas, September 19, 1915. Married Thomas E. Newton, January 28, 1899. Baptized October 25, 1903, Nevada, Missouri. Leaves husband, 1 son. Services by George Jenkins. Interment in Rich Hill Cemetery.

BRADLEY.—Sarah Bradley, born near London, England, March 8, 1833; died at the home of her daughter, Mary King, Denver, Colorado, September 26, 1915. Came with her mother to Nauvoo, Illinois, when 6 years old. Baptized in her youth, she remained faithful until death. Services at Saints' church, Pleasanton, Iowa, by M. M. Turpen. Interment in Hamilton Cemetery, near Pleasanton, by the side of her husband.

BRADSHAW.—Maria Bradshaw, born in England, July 18, 1884; died September 20, 1915, about eight miles from Exline, Iowa, leaving husband, 3 daughters, Mrs. Betsy Adamson, Hiteman, Iowa, Mrs. Hannah Stanwich, Mrs. Catherine Starks, of Washington; 2 sons, Arnold of Hocking, David of Keokuk, Iowa. Services at Methodist church, Albia, Iowa, Parley Batten in charge, sermon by E. B. Morgan, Hiteman choir furnishing the music.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Elbert A. Smith, Editor; John F. Garver, Assistant Editor.

Published every Wednesday. Subscription price $1.50 per year in advance.

When payment is made, the date on the margin always shows the time to which you have paid, or the time when your subscription expires.

If not changed within a month after payment is made notify us.

This paper will be promptly discontinued at date of expiration.

All articles, letters for publication, notices, etc., and communications concerning the same, should be addressed to "Editors Herald." All business letters should be addressed to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, and all remittances should be made payable to the same.

All errors in the filling of orders or rendering of accounts should be reported immediately as receipts for money received are sent within two days after reaching the office.

Marriage, death, and birth notices: Marriages, $1 per 100 words or fraction thereof. Deaths, 100 words free; above that number, 50 cents per 100 words or fraction thereof. Births, 40 cents per 75 words or fraction thereof. To insure prompt insertion, make remittance with notice.

For advertising rates apply to the business department.

Entered at post office, Lamoni, Iowa, as second-class mail matter.

Subscriptions received for "Zion's Ensign," also orders for all "Ensign" publications.

CONTENTS

EDITORIAL:
A Re-"Examination of Campbellism"	977
Current Events	980
Notes and Comments	997
ORIGINAL ARTICLES:
Anti-Mormon Polemic Offended, by E. E. Long	981
Eternal Life for Righteous Only	983
The Sabbath and God's Rest, by G. W. Lindsey	987
OF GENERAL INTEREST:
The Czar's "Beloved Jews"	988
After Warden's Scalp	989
MOTHERS' HOME COLUMN
Callie B. Stebbins.	990
THE CHILDREN'S HOME	991
LETTER DEPARTMENT
Daisy Bell Faulkner—W. H. Greenwood—Charles R. Walton—S. D. Condit—J. B. Ansley—Mrs. Catherine Booher—A. J. Layland.	992
NEWS FROM MISSIONS	995
F. G. Pitt—J. R. Sutton—J. F. Mintun.
NEWS FROM BRANCHES	995
W. B. Torrance—E. D. Moore.
MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT	997

Something New For Latter Day Saints

A professional writer, and member of our church, whose pen-name is "John Preston," has written a play, called—

"The Pleasures of the World"

This is something new in the way of church literature, and will give many a branch the vehicle for legitimately entertaining its young and also raising funds for special purposes, that it desires.

No Religious People will appreciate this play as will our people. It is a frank discussion of

The Pleasure Question

from all sides; and not a "sermon." It is because we believe in the originality and thought-progressiveness of Latter Day Saints that we are offering it for sale and presentation.

This Comedy-Drama

does not pretend to solve the "pleasure question": it merely presents the various phases of it—frankly—illuminatingly—humorously. The idea was taken from a sermon.

Several Large Branches have already made arrangements to produce this play and are very enthusiastic over it.

The Holiday Season

is a good time to produce it. And it is because there is only one "setting," which any stage or platform will accommodate. The scene is the interior of an ordinary living room. There are six men and six women characters. It takes 2 hours to present the 3 acts.

Easy to Produce

Between 60 and 75 pages

Nicely bound

Per copy, 25c, postpaid

Read it

And you will want to produce it.

Herald Publishing House

Lamoni, Iowa

Beatrice Witherspoon

1,000
Copies
Sold
Before Publication

Price
$1.00
Postpaid

The book is now ready. Those who have been awaiting this announcement may now send in their orders.

This absorbing and true story of the eventful life of Mrs. Emma Burton will appeal to all who admire Christian devotion and are interested in the struggles to maintain it.

The author has had enough experiences to make several books, but has selected the best and put them into only one.

It will be an inspiration to the young and a comfort to the aged—all ages will be benefited and enjoy the reading.

There are 21 chapters, 383 pages, 7 illustrations from photographs, all on good book paper and well bound in dark green cloth.

Order of HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE, Lamoni, Iowa

THE TWO-STORY BOOK. Excellent gift book. One story by Mary Leland Carter and the other by Elbert A. Smith. Especially recommended for inquirers. No. 247, each .....50c

DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE.—No teacher should be without a good Bible dictionary and this one is one of the very best. Over 800 pages, with colored maps and 440 illustrations. Give one for Christmas. No. 185.....$1.60

OLD JERUSALEM GOSPEL. Book of 29 sermons by Elder Joseph Luff. A very popular book and should be freely read and loaned. Nice type, easily read. No. 248 ..... 75c.

BOOK OF MORMON MAPS. Every teacher of the lessons in the Junior Religion Quarterly should have a set of these maps. The set contains six maps prepared by the church committee on archaeology. No. 182. Per set.....15c.

CHRISTMAS RECITATIONS. A book you will need for Christmas time. Contains 228 recitations for the season, in poetry and prose, by leading authors. No. 183, each .....15c

FIRESIDE TALKS WITH OUR GIRLS. Every young girl will profit by reading this book published by the Woman's Auxiliary. Wholesome teaching easily read. Order number 213, each .....30c

LOOSE-LEAF BINDER. The binder that holds any or all the new standardized report blanks. Size of sheet: 8 1-2 by 11. Highly commended by those who have used them. Every church worker should have them for reports and minutes. Four posts, durable buckram binding. Order No. M-EA1 1-2R, each .....$1.90

COMPENDIUM OF THE FAITH. A valuable reference book for students. Has the best quotations from Inspired Translation of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants on important church doctrines and subjects. Order No. 141, each .....75c

“CUT IT OUT!” Steer clear of this flood-and-drouth trouble that is the bug-a-boo of the farmer's life! Farm irrigated land and be your own weather man! You know the kind of bumper crops you can raise when you can turn on just enough water at just the right time. Irrigated farmers raise bumper crops every year. I know where you can purchase good irrigated land on mighty attractive terms and where the water supply is ample. Shall I send you literature and tell you more about it?

S. B. HOWARD, Immigration Agent

Room 413 Q Building, Omaha, Neb.

THE SAINTS' HERALD

Official Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints

Entered as second-class matter at Lamon, Iowa, post office.

"If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."—Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 36.

VOLUME 62

LAMONI, IOWA, OCTOBER 20, 1915

NUMBER 42

Editorial

BOOK OF ABRAHAM AGAIN

A discussion of Joseph Smith's translation of what is known as the Book of Abraham, provoked first by the publication of a pamphlet written by Reverend F. S. Spalding, entitled "Joseph Smith, Jr., As a Translator," has been revived recently in connection with differences arising from the administration of the University of Utah. With the matter in question touching the University of Utah, and the effect of the work of Reverend Spalding on the Utah church, we have nothing to do. We only note the discussion in passing to the announcement of the reproduction of a former article by the Editor of the HERALD, discussing Reverend Spalding's pamphlet, to indicate the utter unreliability of the criticisms growing out of Reverend Spalding's work.

Professor Edgar James Banks sets the pace for the religious press in The Christian Herald of June 23, 1915. Some astonishing data is here presented, the most striking thing in connection therewith being that a large part of the matter is not founded on fact, though the learned professor with a little careful investigation should have been able to come at the truth in the data referred to.

Concerning the Book of Mormon our critic says:

Accompanying The Book of Abraham are several illustrations of the Egyptian documents which Smith pretended to have translated, and which he claims were written by Abraham. They are genuine ancient Egyptian documents, as any scholars familiar with the Egyptian characters may see at a glance. Smith seems to have obtained the documents from a sea captain. The hieroglyphic inscription is very short, but Smith's translation of it covers thirty pages of printed matter.

A point is here attempted from the fact that the inscriptions referred to are brief, while the Book of Abraham covers thirty pages. The facts, as set forth elsewhere in article by the Editor, already referred to, show that these inscriptions are not represented as comprising the text, but are facsimiles taken from drawings accompanying the rolls containing the text.

Again Professor Banks says:

At the time Smith's translation was made no man could prove that it was not correct, for the hieroglyphs could not then be read; but now they are as easily read by scholars as the page of an English book.

We call attention to how easily the noted scholars have not read the hieroglyphs, as shown by the Editor of the HERALD, evidencing the fact that the same can not to-day be as easily read as an English book.

And again our critic says the Book of Mormon represents the American Indians as "one of the lost tribes of Israel." Now the Book of Mormon does no such thing. It represents the Indians as being "a remnant of the house of Israel." The lost tribes have their location elsewhere, being referred to by the Savior while upon this continent as "other sheep."

And, finally, our learned friend says:

It is said that Smith was inspired by an Egyptian mummy to make the translation, for at that time scholars were unable to read the Egyptian hieroglyphs.

This reference has the familiar swing, "It is said." And it is about as substantial as other things said. A withered, inanimate, and very much dead Egyptian mummy inspired Joseph Smith! Be it said to the credit of the professor's discretion, that he cites no authority for this statement, and for the very good reason that there is none. "Anti-Mormon dope" must be getting alarmingly scarce when it has to be spread as thin and as far as this.

Such are examples of the discussion in various quarters of matters thought to have connection with the Book of Abraham, and indirectly with the Book of Mormon and the faith of the Saints. These meaningless and unfounded criticisms are being hashed and rehashed by the press of the country, and taken as gospel truth by that portion of a gullible public ever ready to receive without question anything reflecting upon the Saints and their message. That people can be so led is a matter easy to be understood, for it has always been so. That those who elevate themselves to the position of intelligent leaders continue in such a campaign, is a matter which distresses men who love justice and an impartial discussion of the movements of the day.

It is because of a revival of the Book of Abraham discussion, and to answer inquiry, that we reproduce in this issue the editorial of Elder Elbert A. Smith, appearing first in the HERALD of June 4, 1913. In our opinion this article answers effectively the criticism of our friends, recent as well as that of some little time ago. We commend it to the Saints who may have overlooked it heretofore, for their personal reading, and for circulation among their interested friends.

J. F. GARVER.

"JOSEPH SMITH, JUNIOR, AS A TRANSLATOR"

A REVIEW OF THE WORK PUBLISHED BY BISHOP F. S. SPALDING

[To answer inquiries, as stated elsewhere in this issue, we reproduce the following editorial, appearing formerly in the HERALD of June 4, 1913.—EDITORS.]

"Joseph Smith, Jr., As a Translator," is the title of a pamphlet recently published by Right Reverend F. S. Spalding, D. D., Bishop of Utah, representing the Protestant Episcopal Church. This pamphlet is an attempt to discredit the Book of Abraham, and through it the Book of Mormon, and contains the findings of eight prominent students of Egyptology, who have passed upon facsimiles of certain plates appearing in the Book of Abraham.

We have delayed making any extended reference to this book for two reasons: First, because the questions discussed involved a knowledge of the ancient Egyptian language; and second, because the attack was directed primarily against the Utah Mormon Church. However, in regard to the first consideration, we have concluded that what is needed is not so much an expert knowledge of Egyptology as an application of good common sense to the principles involved. And we are not prepared to concede that the worthy bishop has a monopoly of this valuable commodity. In regard to the second consideration, abundant time has been given the representatives of the Utah church to reply to the attack, and they have not failed to avail themselves of the opportunity.

There remains yet a third consideration which prompts us to write at this time. Though we may not be particularly interested in the fate of the Book of Abraham, yet when any defects that are supposed to have been found in it are used as a basis for an argument that the Book of Mormon is of spurious origin, the matter becomes one of common interest to all believers in the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. They may not be interested in the Book of Abraham particularly, but they are interested in the arguments based upon these supposed defects.

HISTORY OF BOOK OF ABRAHAM

The history of the Book of Abraham (which book has been published by the Utah church, as a part of the Pearl of Great Price, originally having appeared in Times and Seasons, March 1 and 15, and May 16, 1842,) is thus presented by Bishop Spalding in his pamphlet, the quotation being from the history of Joseph Smith:

On the third of July, Michael H. Chandler came to Kirtland to exhibit some Egyptian mummies. There were four human figures together with some two or three rolls of papyrus covered with hieroglyphic figures and devices. As Mr. Chandler had been told I could translate them, he brought me some of the characters and I gave him the interpretation, and like a gentleman, he gave me the following certificate:

"KIRTLAND, July 6, 1835.

"This is to make known to all who may be desirous, concerning the knowledge of Mr. Joseph Smith, jun., in deciphering the ancient Egyptian hieroglyphic characters in my possession, which I have, in many eminent cities, showed to the most learned; and, from the information that I could ever learn, or meet with, I find that of Mr. Joseph Smith, jun., to correspond in the most minute matters.

"MICHAEL H. CHANDLER,

"Traveling with and Proprietor of Egyptian Mummies."

Soon after this, some of the Saints at Kirtland purchased the mummies and papyrus, a description of which will appear hereafter, and with W. W. Phelps and Oliver Cowdery as scribes, I commenced the translation of some of the characters of hieroglyphics, and much to our joy, found that one of the rolls contained the writing of Abraham, another the writing of Joseph of Egypt, etc.

We understand that the rolls of hieroglyphics mentioned in this extract, together with the mummies, were afterward placed in a museum in Chicago, where they were destroyed by the great fire of 1871, so that the original text from which the Book of Abraham was translated is not now in existence. However, there were certain facsimiles made from plates or drawings which accompanied these rolls, which were published in the Times and Seasons in connection with the text of the Book of Abraham, and to these drawings Joseph Smith appended an explanation of their meaning. These facsimiles, three in number, Bishop Spalding has submitted to eight well-known students of the ancient Egyptian language. These students are: Doctor A. H. Sayce, Oxford, England; Doctor W. M. Flinders Petrie, London University; James H. Breasted, Ph. D., Haskell Oriental Museum, University of Chicago; Doctor Arthur C. Mace, Assistant Curator, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York; Doctor John Peters, University of Pennsylvania, in charge of expedition to Babylonia, 1888-1895; Reverend Professor C. A. B. Mercer, Ph. D., Western Theological Seminary, Custodian Hibbard Collection; Doctor Edward Meyer, University of Berlin; Doctor Friedrich Freiherr Von Bissing, Professor of Egyptology in the University of Munich.

These savants are unanimous in rejecting the idea that Joseph Smith's translation or explanation of the plates is correct, but do not agree among themselves as to the correct translation.

BISHOP SPALDING'S WORK UNIQUE

Bishop Spalding's approach to the subject under consideration is unique, in that he admits for argument's sake the existence of the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated; but he proposes to challenge the correctness of the translation, by attempting to prove that Joseph Smith was not a Doctor Petrie says that this is an embalming scene; Doctor Breasted says it is a resurrection scene. Doctor Meyer thinks the reclining figure is a cadaver; Doctor Bissing sees in it the rising god Osiris. Doctor Breasted thinks the bird represents Isis; Doctor Petrie says it is the hawk of Horus; Doctor Peters says it is the soul of the dead man; we suggest still another interpretation, see context.

competent translator of ancient languages, and attempts to support that argument by the case in point, that of the Book of Abraham. He is also unique in his treatment of the question, in that he approaches it with an apparent spirit of fairness and candor, and avoids all personalities and low reflections upon the life and character of Joseph Smith and his parents and associates, which have been so disgusting and prominent a feature of "Mormon exposés," in years past. In fact, he says:

Those who attacked the Mormons felt moved to publish everything they could discover or invent to the discredit of "Joe Smith" and his parents, while those who believed in him replied with a partisan record of virtues of life, and miracles of power.

And he pays Latter Day Saints the following tribute:

A rather careful reading of the controversy leads this writer to the conclusion that the Latter Day Saints set an example of dignity and courtesy which their opponents rarely followed.

He also has this to say about the Book of Mormon:

If the Book of Mormon is true, it is, next to the Bible, the most important book in the world. This fact has been appreciated by the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and by them alone. . . . On the other hand it is inexcusable that the book has never had the serious examination which its importance demands.

He confines himself closely to his effort to discredit the Book of Abraham, and, assuming himself to be successful in that work, bases upon his supposed success the argument that the Book of Mormon is equally unworthy of acceptance as a divinely inspired record.

OUR POSITION

In considering this little pamphlet we shall take the position that the worthy bishop has not been entirely successful in his effort to discredit the Book of Abraham; and second, even if he were entirely successful in his effort to discredit the Book of Abraham, that fact would not affect the Book of Mormon in the least.

The Book of Mormon must be considered upon its individual merits. Whether the Book of Abraham stands or falls, it can not materially affect the fate of the Book of Mormon.

The Book of Mormon was a divine revelation, and Joseph Smith's ability to translate it was a divine gift. He did not study it out, or work out any alphabet or attempt to get at its meaning by the ordinary mental processes of study in an attempt to interpret from one language to another.

The case of the Book of Abraham was quite different. Bishop Spalding himself quotes Joseph Smith as saying:

The remainder of the month, I was continually engaged in translating an alphabet to the Book of Abraham and arranging a grammar of the Egyptian language as practiced by the ancients.

This is taken from his diary, and we find another entry as follows:

Tuesday, 17, exhibited the alphabet of the ancient records to Mr. Holmes and some others. Went with him to F. G. Williams to see the mummies.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 605.

This shows conclusively that Joseph Smith had studied out an alphabet and a grammar, with the aid of which he believed himself to be capable of reading the Egyptian language. In fact this occurred at the very time when the "School of elders," at Kirtland, with Joseph Smith at the head, was engaged in a study of the ancient languages.

DOCTOR BISSING'S VIEWPOINT

Doctor Bissing, of the University of Munich, one of the authorities quoted by Bishop Spalding, seems to share this view with us. He says that he has been interested for a long time in Joseph Smith's supposed translation of Egyptian texts, and adds:

A careful study has convinced me that Smith probably be-

(Continued to page 1005.)

CURRENT EVENTS

SECULAR AND RELIGIOUS

INDORSE PLAN.—With comparatively little opposition, the miners employed by the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, have accepted the Rockefeller plan for organization and the control of labor conditions.

FILM COMPANY DISSOLVED.—Federal Judge Oliver B. Dickinson, in a recent decision at Philadelphia, holds that the Motion Picture Patents Company together with other concerns manufacturing films is an illegal combination which must be dissolved.

FOR NATIONAL BUDGET.—A campaign for a national budget has been launched by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Sentiment among commercial organizations is said to be strongly in favor of action at the coming session of Congress.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Villa and Zapata supporters are said to be falling away from these leaders. The United States Government has held up at the international border a shipment of munitions to Villa, which act is thought to presage an embargo on arms to factions resisting Carranza. Americans are under instruction from the United States Government to leave territory controlled by Villa.

CHINA THREATENED.—It is announced that Japan, basing her claims on the agreement of last May, has notified China that unless her demands regarding jurisdiction over Koreans residing in Chentau, Manchuria, are accepted, Japan will pursue her own course, using force if necessary. China maintains that Chentau is not mentioned in the agreement, and does not come within the provisions thereof.

SUED FOR LIBEL.—Action has been begun against Doctor Newell Dwight Hillis in Brooklyn, by his nephew, Percy D. Hillis, who demands fifty thousand dollars damages for alleged libelous statements which he charges his uncle caused to be published in Brooklyn and Portland, Oregon, intimating that Doctor Hillis had agreed to pay obligations of his nephew, due to loss in the lumber business, and which plaintiff avers injured him in his business standing, reputation, and good name. Frank L. Ferguson, former chairman of the board of trustees of Plymouth Church, and for five years manager of Doctor Hillis' business affairs, denying necessity for his testimony in this libel suit, in an affidavit alleges that Doctor Hillis made "quick fabulous profits" from selling British Columbia timber claims to ministers and other friends. Doctor Hillis denies all these allegations, and says the situation will be cleared up in the court proceedings.

EUROPEAN WAR.—The Austro-German forces have advanced into Serbia and have taken Belgrade, the capital. Claiming that her neutrality has been violated, Bulgaria has declared war on Serbia and has begun an attack. Serbia has declared war on Bulgaria. The Serbians are offering stubborn resistance on both fronts, and their enemies are paying dearly for the ground gained. Additional British and French troops are being landed at Salonika, and contingents from both countries have engaged the Bulgarians at a point in Serbia near the Bulgarian line, and about nine miles north of the line between Serbia and Greece. Entente warships have blockaded the Bulgarian Ægean seaports. The Russians have retaken territory in the vicinity of Dvinsk, coveted and long fought for by the Germans. The Russians have also made important gains over the Austrians in eastern Galicia. The Germans have made slight gains south of Riga. The British have made slight gains in France. The French and Germans both claim gains in this territory. Fifty-four persons were killed and one hundred and fourteen injured by a German Zeppelin raid on London the night of the 13th. The total casualties to date in England from German air raids since the war began are: Killed, one hundred seventy-seven, injured, four hundred sixty-three, the great majority of whom have been civilians. The British naval forces have been active recently in the Baltic and North seas. British submarines have sunk ten German ore-bearing steamers in the Baltic, and are said to have seriously interfered with the ore trade between Sweden and Germany. Two German destroyers have also been sunk, and twenty-four German trawlers have been taken or destroyed during the past month. Replying to representations by the Serbian Government urging that the Bulgarian attack on Serbia is an act of aggression contemplated under the treaty between Greece and Serbia, and requesting the Greeks to enter the field against Bulgaria, the Greek Government contends that this treaty is purely a Balkan affair, and does not cover the conditions of a general war, being calculated only to preserve the equilibrium of the Balkans, and to apply in cases of isolated Bulgarian attack on either of the contracting parties. King Constantine of Greece in a statement to the Associated Press announces that while Greece can not permit a menace to her integrity or the freedom of her people, yet he hopes to keep the country aloof from the war. Germany has suspended postal service and stopped food shipments to Rumania.

---

Men have a superstitious idea about reading the Bible. They carry texts as Indians carry amulets, thinking that God will bless them to their good. The mere reading of the Bible, or carrying texts, will do no good. A man may own a farm, and yet go to the poorhouse. His land must be cultivated.—Beecher.

---

Men have a touchstone whereby to try gold, but gold is the touchstone whereby to try men.—Fuller.

"JOSEPH SMITH, JUNIOR, AS A TRANSLATOR"

(Continued from page 1002.)

believed seriously to have deciphered the ancient hieroglyphics, but he utterly failed. . . . He probably used Athenasius Kirsher the Jesuit's work, and there found a method of reading the old Egyptian signs very much like his own.—Joseph Smith, jr., As a Translator, pp. 30, 31.

Kirsher (or Kircher), who lived 1601-1680, was professor of mathematics, philosophy and Oriental languages at the University of Wurzenburg. He was one of the pioneers in an effort to unravel the mystery of the ancient Egyptian language, his work along that line now being discredited.

We use this simply to indicate that it was possible for Joseph Smith in 1835 to have worked out a system by which he seriously believed himself capable of translating ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics. Bishop Spalding's own witness seems to conclude that Joseph Smith professed to have studied these things out, instead of claiming to translate by virtue of a divine gift, as in the case of the Book of Mormon, and that he was honest and serious in the matter.

BOOK OF ABRAHAM MUST STAND ON OWN MERITS

The Utah people have accepted the Book of Abraham as a divine production and have regarded the Pearl of Great Price, in which it is published, as one of their standard church books.

The Reorganized Church has never indorsed the Book of Abraham or accepted it as a standard church work, and has never seen any reason to regard its translation as anything more than a human performance. Consequently the bishop's attack strikes us at a different angle, and we are not particularly concerned with its effect upon the Book of Abraham. Even if he is successful in proving that Joseph Smith's translation is unreliable, that does not affect the Book of Mormon.

In his attempt to get at the Book of Mormon in a roundabout way, he has gone so far around that apparently he has lost his connections.

The Book of Abraham was not adopted by the church in the days of Joseph Smith, or put upon the plane that was accorded to the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants. The only language that we are aware of that could be construed to indicate that it was regarded by Joseph Smith as a revelation is that quoted by Bishop Spalding in which he says: "Truly we can say the Lord is beginning to reveal the abundance of peace and truth."

This may or may not have been intended to apply to the Book of Abraham. And even if intended to so apply, he may have had in mind truths which he believed that he had been able to study out of this ancient record with the aid of the alphabet and grammar which he had arranged.

If he was unsuccessful in his attempt as a student to unravel the Egyptian language, he was only one of many who were equally unsuccessful. But his failure as a man in his very human effort to study out this record does not prove that the Lord made any failure in revealing the Book of Mormon and directing in its translation.

HUMAN ERRORS VERSUS DIVINE REVELATIONS

The Apostle Paul received certain divine manifestations, and the revelation of the divinity of Jesus Christ was granted to him in his remarkable vision upon the road to Damascus. At a later date the apostle studied out certain matters and reached conclusions, particularly upon the question of marriage, which he says in his epistles were not directed by the Spirit and were not given him of God. Proof that the Apostle Paul was wrong as a man in the conclusions that he studied out would not in any way discredit the truthfulness of that which he had received by divine revelation.

OUR WORK NOT TO BE OVERTHROWN SO EASILY

We must remind Bishop Spalding that the fate of that which the world chooses to term "Mormonism" is not to be determined by the findings of eight scientists. If religions were thus to be disposed of we fear that many of the great central truths of Christianity would soon be overthrown.

Would it not be possible to secure the opinions of eight leading scientists who would affirm that there is no evidence to support our belief in the resurrection of Jesus, and that belief in that great event is belief in that which is contrary to the ordinary processes of nature? In fact, on similar authority many people have asked us to abandon our belief in the Bible as an inspired record.

Bishop Spalding does not permit the conclusions of certain scientists to overthrow his belief in Christianity, but goes calmly on representing one of the great "Christian" denominations.

While due respect should be accorded to the findings of science, and we have no word to say against scholarship and learning, we shall go steadily on, like Bishop Spalding, pursuing the even tenor of our ways. The church that we represent rests upon foundation stones of truth that these scientists have never touched.

There is a cloud of witnesses affirming the truthfulness of the great latter-day work that is not to be affrighted and dispersed by the findings of eight men on an isolated work that has not vital connection with the church and her teachings.

"AN ACT TO ABOLISH DIVERSITY OF OPINION"

We now approach the proposition that the bishop is not entirely successful in his attempt to discredit the Book of Abraham. His critics find many flaws in the findings of his eight scientists, some of which are of considerable importance.

King Henry VIII, spiritual head of the Episcopal Church, at one time caused an act to pass Parliament, entitled, "An act to abolish diversity of opinion."

Bishop Spalding evinces a desire to resurrect this old act of Parliament, and would have all Latter Day Saints immediately conform to the opinion held by himself and his eight scientists. But alas, so great is the perversity of humanity, he can not enforce King Henry's will even among his little group of scientists. Even there, that horrid and detestable thing, "diversity of opinion," creeps in.

Herewith we reproduce the first of the three cuts submitted to these students of Egyptology.

Joseph Smith says that this represents an attempt by an idolatrous Egyptian priest to offer Abraham as a sacrifice.

Doctor Petrie says that it is an embalming scene, "The well-known scene of Anubis preparing the body of the dead man."

With this Doctor Peters agrees, saying that the plate "represents an embalmer preparing a body for burial."

But Doctor Breasted says that it represents a resurrection scene, "Osiris rising from the dead."

WHEN DOCTORS DISAGREE

When doctors disagree, who shall decide? If Doctor Breasted has a right to differ from the learned Doctors Petrie and Peters, Joseph Smith had a right to differ from all three. It can not be both an embalming scene and a resurrection scene; one must be wrong; perhaps both are wrong. Until this matter is settled among the doctors we may venture the opinion that Joseph Smith may be right, and that it is neither an embalming scene nor a resurrection scene, but a sacrificial scene.

Referring to figure 2 in this plate, Doctor Petrie, of London University, says that it "is the dead person."

Doctor Meyer of the University of Berlin, says, "The body of the dead lying a ba' (bier)."

Doctor Bissing, of the University of Munich, says, "The dead man is lying on a bier."

But Doctor Breasted, of the University of Chicago, says, "Number 2 depicts a figure reclining on a couch, with a priest officiating and four jars beneath the couch. The reclining figure lifts one foot and both arms. This figure represents Osiris rising from the dead."

When Chicago and Berlin and Munich disagree there is a possibility that Kirtland may be right. Doctor Petrie's undertaker becomes Doctor Breasted's priest (Joseph Smith also said that it was a priest). The common corpse that Doctor Petrie and Doctor Meyer and Doctor Bissing see, is to Doctor Breasted the God Osiris rising from the dead. Doctor Breasted's courage in differing from his infallible colleagues across the waters stiffens the backbone of the trembling layman in the presence of such learning. Here is a possibility for different readings! It is not so clear as we had supposed from the bishop's introduction! We had thought that it was all settled and fixed by concerted action of eight great scientists before whom we should be dumb. But here are differences that require explanation.

If learned Egyptologists of the bishop's own choosing, men who minister ever at the right hand of knowledge, see things so differently, that whereas one beholds a cold cadaver where another sees a rising god, we may yet withhold our anathemas from the head of Joseph Smith for having seen in the same figure Abraham lying upon an altar.

HAWK OF HORUS? OR POE'S RAVEN?

The figure marked 1, appearing on this plate, in the form of a bird, is said by Joseph Smith to represent the angel of the Lord.

Doctor Petrie says that it "is the hawk of Horus."

Doctor Breasted says, "A bird, in which form Isis is represented."

Doctor Meyer says, "The soul in the shape of a bird flying above it."

Doctor Peters says, "The soul (Kos) is flying away in the form of a bird."

Here again we find a wide range of renditions, from Petrie to Peters. We have our choice: The hawk of Horus, Isis in the form of a bird, and the soul of the dead man (dead man or rising god Osiris, which was it?) flying away in the form of a bird. Which shall we take in preference to the explanation offered by Joseph Smith? Which would the good bishop prefer us to choose? An attempt is made by one writer to explain these differences by saying that this remarkable bird might have represented any or all of these things,—a sorry explanation, which if allowed to stand, opens the way for us to insist that the versatile fowl may also have represented that which Joseph Smith says it represented. But hold, we are seized with another thought! This free expression of divergent opinions emboldens us. This bird may even be Poe's raven. And even now it may be croaking to the good bishop, "Nevermore!"

B. H. Roberts comments upon this conflict of opinion among the scientists, and is reminded of the dialogue between Polonius and Hamlet:

Polonius, the tiresome old courtier, has been sent to bring Prince Hamlet to the presence of his mother, then—

"Hamlet: Do you see yonder cloud that's almost the shape of a camel?"

"Polonius: By the mass, and 'tis like a camel, indeed."

"Hamlet: Methinks it is like a weasel."

"Polonius: It is backed like a weasel."

"Hamlet: Or like a whale?"

"Polonius: Very like a whale."

"Hamlet: Then I will come to my mother by and by."

All right, bishop, for one, I will change my belief in Joseph Smith's translation of these Egyptian plates, "by and by," perhaps, but it will not be until there is more harmony among your Egyptologists.

POSSIBLE PREJUDICE AND HASTE

Other features to be considered are possible prejudice and lack of careful consideration. We have no copies of Bishop Spalding's letters to these men, so do not know his method of presentation. Even scientists are human, and the scientific mind is not always free from prejudice.

It develops, for instance, that though Doctor Peters is set down as of the University of Pennsylvania, he has, in fact, not been connected with the university for about twenty years past, and is now rector of Saint Michaels Church, in New York City. This is the same church that is represented by the Right Reverend Bishop Spalding.

We would have more respect for the decision of Doctor John Peters of the University of Pennsylvania, in this matter, than for that of the Reverend John Peters of Saint Michaels Church. For Reverend John Peters of Saint Michaels Church is a leading representative of one of the great churches whose enmity Joseph Smith incurred by declaring that their creeds were wrong and an abomination in the sight of God.

Without in the least reflecting upon the good intentions of Reverend Peters, we fear that in this matter it would be impossible for him to prevent his religious right hand from knowing what his scientific left hand was about.

Doctor Von Bissing, of Munich, evidently gave the matter careful thought and respectful consideration, as he says that he had been interested in it "since a long time," and he concludes that Joseph Smith studied out his interpretation just as any student might have done, and that he was serious and honest in the belief that his interpretations were genuine and correct.

But others of this group of Egyptologists, we greatly fear, dismissed the matter with greater haste and contempt than was consistent. Doctor Mace gives it one paragraph of fourteen lines, three more than it receives from Doctor Sayce. Doctor Mace says, "Joseph Smith's interpretation of these cuts is a farrago of nonsense from beginning to end."

This is strangely like the spirit of E. D. Howe, who says of the Book of Mormon, "The God of heaven, that all-wise Being, could never have delivered such a farrago of nonsense to the world."—Howe's work, p. 19.

The appearance of this rather unusual phrase, "a farrago of nonsense," may not indicate that Doctor Mace drew his conclusions from E. D. Howe, though if these two sentences, so nearly identical, were to be found in the Book of Mormon and the Manuscript

Found it would confirm many in the belief that Solomon Spalding was indeed the author of the Book of Mormon.

CONCLUSION

To recapitulate: There is no vital connection between the Book of Abraham and the Book of Mormon. The power to translate the Book of Mormon was a divine gift, and the translation went on with the aid of the Urim and Thummim. There is nothing to indicate that divine help was even claimed in the translation of the Book of Abraham, certainly the Urim and Thummim was not used. Everything thus far brought to light indicates that Joseph Smith went at this work as any man might have done, in connection with his studies of ancient languages. Though it were to be demonstrated that his translation of the Book of Abraham is utterly unreliable, the Book of Mormon would not be affected. But because of possible haste and prejudice, and because of the contradictory readings returned by these eight scientists, we are not prepared to concede that the bishop has carried his point even to the extent of discrediting the Book of Abraham.

Again, there are thousands of evidences supporting the great latter-day work that are not touched, and can not be touched by a scientific consideration of an isolated fragment of translation having no vital connection with the work in general and forming no part of the church system of belief. Indeed, great though our regard for science is, we can not conceive of any condition arising under which the verdict of eight scientists upon a given question could overthrow this work. ELBERT A. SMITH.

Original Articles

THE WORK OF GRACELAND COLLEGE

(Address given by President Briggs on College Day at the Saints' church, Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday, October 3, 1915.)

The disciples should lose no time in preparing schools for their children, that they may be taught as is pleasing unto the Lord, and brought up in the way of holiness. . . . A word to the wise ought to be sufficient, for children soon become men and women. Yes, they are they that must follow us, and perform the duties which not only appertain to this world, but to the second coming of the Savior, even preparing for the Sabbath of creation, and for eternity.—The Evening and the Morning Star, vol. 1, pp. 7, 8.

I have read you an extract from the first number of the first volume of the first periodical ever issued by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, "The disciples should lose no time in preparing schools for their children, that they may be taught as is pleasing unto the Lord, and brought up in the way of holiness." This shows the position of the church from the very beginning. I shall now read you an extract from a very recent number of one of the official publications of the church.

The gospel is educational in the broadest and completest sense of the word. Christ came that we might have life, and that we might have it more abundantly. Obedience to the life-giving principles and teachings of the gospel will develop men and women physically, mentally, and spiritually; and as they thus grow they will be led out into broader fields of activity and greater usefulness. The possibilities of advancement are unlimited, inasmuch that the gospel may be truly called the highest school in the universe.

These two extracts epitomize the position of the church on the subject of education. For nearly a century it has stood for and approved every need educationally. At no time in the history of the organization has it failed to do everything within its power for the advancement and progress of every community where it has had any influence or has had a branch.

WHAT GRACELAND STANDS FOR

Graceland College, as an instrument of the church, stands for exactly these same things: a combination of the development of the intellect and the soul, the growth of the mental together with the spiritual and religious. Unless Graceland College stands for these two things, there is no justification for its existence. There are many institutions of higher learning in this country which stand for the former, that is, the intellectual and mental; but there are very few which stand for the combination of the intellectual together with the spiritual and the religious to the extent which seems to this organization to be highly desirable.

It is not necessary for me to say to you who have lived here in this community for the past twenty years, or for any considerable portion of that time, what the influence of Graceland College has been in the way of civic and social betterment, moral and religious training. You have a keener appreciation of its great worth to the community and to the church at large than many farther away have. You know of the hundreds of students who have attended from this locality, from many States of the Union, and from some foreign countries, who have returned to their homes and look back upon their associations in Lamoni and her environment as one of the brightest and most helpful experiences in their lives. Such, indeed, was my own feeling after having spent four of the happiest and most profitable years of my life in Lamoni some time ago.

I belong to the profession of teachers, and when I can illustrate a point at issue by a concrete case I always prefer to do so. On the last mail reaching Lamoni yesterday afternoon I received a letter from one of Graceland's ex-students, which is so pregnant with the general feeling of all Graceland's alumni and ex-students that I feel you will be interested in hearing it this morning.

Dear Brother: I am inclosing $30 for Graceland College. I have contemplated doing this before, but next Sunday being Graceland College Day, it was brought to my mind, and finding myself in a position to do so, I thought it would be a good time to send it now.

Having been a student there myself four years ago, when I took my business course, I know what Graceland stands for and what her ideals are. The value of Graceland, especially in helping one spiritually, is inestimable, and I always have a good word for her and wish I could do more to promote her advancement.

With best wishes for a successful future for Graceland,
I am,
Sincerely,

This is a sample of the letters being received at the college, and of conversations which members of the faculty have with students wherever they meet them and in whatever line of work they find them engaged. It shows the spirit of the particular purpose for which Graceland College was established and has been conducted by the church for the past twenty years.

Of the divinity of the work in Graceland College there is no doubt. Not only does it have the approval of God, but many ministers of this church have repeatedly told me that they never enjoyed any greater portion of the divine Spirit than when presenting the interests of Graceland College to the various congregations of this church scattered throughout this broad land. And you all know of many instances of students and members of the faculty taking up the work at Graceland College in response to the call of God.

Graceland has always been a small institution in point of numbers, but large in aspirations, ambitions and accomplishment. When we think of the great numbers whose interests, heart and thought are centered on Graceland College this morning, with their prayers going up to God for the future welfare of this institution, that she may yet minister to thousands of the young people of the church from all the corners of the world, make them better, more useful, more efficient in the performance of their life work, we realize the magnitude of her possibilities. Without divine approval we would realize the hopelessness of the task before us; but with that approval and the hearty cooperation and assistance of all interested in this institution, we have no fears for the outcome.

If you could have been with me for the past several years, visited the many institutions of higher learning in this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Canada to the Gulf; universities, colleges and normal schools, in all of the States of the Union with the exception of five, and then returned to Lamoni and contrasted the conditions under which these institutions are conducted, the environment in which the students of many of them are living, their attitude towards life, towards their Maker, and towards the future, you could not help but approve of the entire situation as it exists here in Graceland College and in the environment of Lamoni.

THE JUNIOR COLLEGE

The majority of students in institutions of higher learning in this country are not in the large universities. It is true there are a few institutions with thousands of students in attendance, but they are few in number compared with the many smaller institutions scattered throughout the United States. This is especially true of the first two years of the college course. It has been found that the contrast between the high school and the college is so great that it is very important that the first two years of the college course be spent near home in an environment as nearly like the environment of the home and the high school as possible.

The junior college idea is warmly championed by the United States Bureau of Education, by the State Department of Education and by our State University. When I told Doctor Claxton, the United States Commissioner of Education, when I resigned from the United States Bureau of Education, of the work I was going to enter upon, he said he knew of no more fertile field nor of any greater opportunity for doing an important piece of educational work than in the organization and supervision of a junior college.

I am confident that there is a place in the general scheme of education in this State and in this Nation for the junior college, and that Graceland College will take its rightful place in the list of institutions doing that class of work. Of course, it is confidently believed by the officials of the college and by all interested in the work, that there is a greater future for this institution than merely that of doing the first two years' work of the college course; but the ambition of the trustees and the faculty for the present is to do those two years' work and other lines of work in which she is now engaging in a way which will commend the institution to those having charge of the work of institutions of higher learning in this country, so that when the time comes for greater undertakings we shall have their assistance and co-operation.

The United States Commissioner of Education has pointed out on a number of occasions that a large proportion of the eminent and illustrious men of this country come from small colleges. They are not graduates of the great institutions of learning, but have come from the small institutions, where they have had the personal guidance and advice of the members of the faculty in a way which is absolutely impossible in the universities with thousands of students in attendance, and in many cases such large classes that no personal attention can be given to individual students.

So much, then, for the cultural side of a college education, for the mental uplift, the edifying effect and the justification of a university course of study from the standpoint of the broad outlook on life which it gives. I believe you all, as members of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, fully appreciate the benefits of a college education from that standpoint.

FROM A FINANCIAL STANDPOINT

To-day is Graceland College Day, the day on which the question of the finances of Graceland College is presented to the members of the church, and I take it that it will not be out of order this morning to discuss the question of a college education from the financial standpoint, from the question of its value in dollars and cents.

Some have felt that they could not afford to give their children a college education, that they would have to content themselves with a common school education, or at most with a high school education; that the sooner their children were able to make money to support themselves and assist in the support of the other members of the family the better it would be for all concerned. They have even thought it would be of material benefit to put their children to work at the age of fourteen or sixteen years, or at least to permit them to go to work as soon as they desired to do so. There comes a time in the lives of most boys and girls at about the age of fourteen to sixteen when they desire, as they express it, to "be doing something," and in many instances they are permitted to leave their school duties to enter upon life's work very deficiently equipped for it, usually at an entering wage of from four to eight dollars per week.

A recent investigation was made into the careers of two groups of boys; one group leaving school at the age of fourteen years, having completed their common school education. The average annual wage for the first year received by those fourteen-year-old boys was two hundred dollars. Four years later, at the age of eighteen years, they were receiving an average annual wage of three hundred and fifty dollars. The other group of boys continued in school until they had completed high school, graduating at the average age of eighteen years. They then entered upon their life work at a beginning wage of five hundred dollars per year, or an excess of one hundred and fifty dollars over that received by the boys who left school with only a common school education.

The investigation of these two groups of boys was continued until the age of twenty-five years, when it was ascertained that these boys who left at the age of fourteen were only getting at the age of twenty-five an average annual wage of six hundred and eighty-eight dollars; while the boys who completed their high school education were receiving at the age of twenty-five years an annual salary of fifteen hundred and fifty dollars, or nearly nine hundred dollars per year more than the first group of boys. For the entire period of eleven years during which the boys leaving school at the age of fourteen years worked they received a total average wage of five thousand, one hundred and twelve dollars each; while for the seven years during which those boys who left at the age of eighteen years, having completed their high school education first, were employed, they received a total average wage of seven thousand, three hundred and thirty-seven dollars each. Does an education pay from the standpoint of dollars and cents?

Some years ago the publishers of "Who's Who in America" investigated the education of some ten thousand, seven hundred of the most eminent men in this country. As a result of that investigation it was learned that not a single man of that number came from that body without an education; that of those with only a common-school education one out of nine thousand had reached such an important position in the affairs of the country as to be classified among the more than ten thousand most illustrious men then living; that of the high school graduates one in four hundred had contributed enough of importance to the world's knowledge and welfare as to be classed among the ten thousand most eminent men of the country; while from the college-bred men one out of every forty was considered of enough note and prominence to be so classified. From the standpoint of eminence does a higher education pay?

Again. I had occasion while connected with the United States Bureau of Education, in preparation for the exhibit of the United States Government at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, to investigate the average wages received by the uneducated and the educated adults of this country. It was learned that the average active period of life in the United States is forty years; that the uneducated adult earns on the average five hundred dollars per year, which for his active period of forty years brings him a total income of twenty thousand dollars; that for the educated adult the average salary received is one thousand dollars for forty years of active life, bringing a total income of forty thousand dollars. This difference of twenty thousand dollars has, other things being equal, been made possibly because of twelve years of schooling, of an average attendance of one hundred and eighty days per year, or a total school attendance of two thousand, one hundred and sixty days. If this attendance at school makes possible an income of twenty thousand dollars in excess of that received by the uneducated adult, it means that for every day spent in school the individual made possible the earning of nine dollars and two cents. The conclusion then drawn by the United States Bureau of Education is that for every day a boy or a girl stays out of school to earn less than nine dollars and two cents he is losing money, not making money.

AN INSTRUMENT IN GOD'S HANDS

If these are facts with the world at large, why are they not true with us? If we as a church accomplish what we hope to accomplish, if we really do what we expect to do, if we bring about the reforms which we are determined to bring about, we must have trained men, must have organizers, must have practical men of affairs, who understand and see conditions as they really are, who are capable of laying hold of the possibilities the secular world has to offer in every calling, in every profession, in every business, combining these valuable things with that we believe to be the best, spiritually and religiously, which the world has ever known, dominating and driving them with that spiritual force and power which will make of them better use than has yet been seen. To such an end does Graceland College hope and confidently expect to be an instrument in the hands of God.

* * * * *

THE HIGHER LIFE

LITTLE SERMONS TO SAINTS.—NUMBER 11

BY F. J. EBELING

If the gospel we have espoused does not bring us up higher in spirituality, it is because we have not let it have its perfect work in us; for the very nature of the gospel of Christ for which we profess so much reverence, is calculated to bring us higher and higher above the grovelings of this world. In Philip-pians 3: 13, 14, Paul exhorts the brethren to move up higher in these words:

Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

The only thing Paul had in mind was to press forward to his high calling in Christ Jesus. He had set his mark high, even that of Christ, and all other things he had forgotten. He fully appreciated the truth of the statement of his Master: "Ye can not serve God and mammon." He was trying to forget the things that hindered, and to remember the things which would advance his spiritual growth. How much unlike Paul we are. We too often forget the things we should remember, and remember the things we should forget.

If a brother or sister injures us, do we forget as readily as we do a good thought we got out of a sermon? In order to press forward to the prize of our high calling, we should have our minds so full of the good things we hear that we have no room for the evil things.

When we sing that soul-stirring hymn, "Redeemer of Israel, our only delight," are we fully cognizant of its meaning? If the "Redeemer of Israel" is truly our "only delight," then we will never be found doing or saying anything to injure anyone for whom he laid down his life. Our minds, our thoughts, our conversation will be upon him, and the interest of those for whom he gave all.

This is the paramount evidence of a higher life. If we can not see any good in our brother or sister, it is because there is no good in us. Our action toward our brother is the greatest spiritual barometer. Just in proportion as we arise into the spiritual heights, just so much good we will see in each other. If we have high ideals of the higher life, we will be more concerned in elevating our brother and sister than in pulling them down. If there is any truth in the old saying that misery likes company, it reaches its climax when a brother tries to injure another. It is because he is down that he wants some one to come down and keep company with him.

An individual who is succeeding in the higher life will take pleasure in beholding his brother and sister making the same progress, and will extend to him or her a helping hand whenever he can.

Jesus could always see the good in everything. Of the Pharisees he said, Except your righteousness exceeds the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye can not enter into the kingdom of God. It is told of him in some histories, whether true or not it represents his beautiful character, that in passing a crowd one day, he saw in the midst of the people a very ugly dog, that everybody was speaking about. Some, knowing the reputation Jesus had of always seeing good in everything, asked what he thought of the dog. Looking him over carefully, he remarked, "He has lovely teeth!"

How sadly different man is. If there are a hundred good points in his brother and one bad one, he will almost invariably see the bad, to the practical exclusion of the good. Were we to put a pure white sheet one hundred feet square on the wall, and in the center put a black mark as large as a cent piece, and ask a hundred people what they saw there, ninety of them would say, "I see a black spot"; notwithstanding the white sheet would be a thousand times larger they would overlook it and see the black spot. That is too often true with us. We are looking too often for the black spots in our brother and sister instead of the white, which is the righteousness of the Saints.

When we are looking for the good in our brother we will look in at the big end of the spiritual telescope and all the good there may be becomes very small, but in looking for the bad we look in at the little end and all becomes magnified. But if we are living the higher life, we will reverse the telescope and the good will become larger and the bad smaller.

Booker T. Washington, in one of his famous speeches, in pleading for the white man to help uplift the colored race, used an illustration which would be well for all to take to themselves when trying to keep another down. He said when he was a boy of sixteen he could throw down and hold in the gutter any boy of his town, but in order to do so he had to get down in the gutter with him. And just so, if one tries to keep another down in the gutter of evil-speaking, slander or injury of any kind, he must do it by getting down there himself. If we are manifesting fruits of the higher life we will get down into the gutter only long enough to help men up to a higher standard, and with the magic touch of an encouraging word, will arouse the little good there is in them that eventually may be the making of them.

A man living in the stone age before the world knew anything about the value of iron ore, if he had been asked what a ton of iron ore was worth, would see little value in it. As man advanced, blast furnaces were invented and the ore melted into pig metal; ask a man of that time what iron ore was worth, and he would say ten dollars per ton. As man still further advanced in the scale of intellectual development, the bessemer steel process was invented. Ask a man of those times the value of a ton of the steel, and he would probably say thirty dollars. Ask the man how much it would be worth a ton made up into gun barrels, and he would say five hundred dollars. As time advanced in the sciences, watch springs were made from the product of that ore which the first man valued so lightly, worth thousands of dollars in watch springs.

As man advanced in the scale of intellectuality, the greater value he could see in a ton of iron ore. And so it is true in spiritual advancement. The higher we advance in the divine life, the more value will we place on that piece of clay, with a soul. Hence to place little value upon it is to live in the stone age spiritually.

Sometimes we find a member who has ascended very rapidly to the "high mark," but who gets a backset and begins to descend, and as he does so he begins to remember the things of the past because of the amount of tithing or time he has put into the church. But the one who is constantly climbing, the more he puts into the church the better he feels, and will not be concerned whether anyone knows it or not.

The individual who is making the spiritual progress God would have him, will not be up to-day and down to-morrow, but will move forward, preferring to fall in trying rather than fail to try.

As the mineral is absorbed by the vegetable, and the vegetable by the animal, so will the animal with us, or the human, be absorbed by the divine. Sometime along the eternal march the human must be subordinate to the divine. God has always been reaching down and beckoning us to "come up higher." To this church comes the gentle invitation to come up higher. Why not heed and enjoy much of the divine here and now? The choicest fruits always grow on the tops of the trees, where the sun touches.

When God wanted to commune with Moses, he told him to come upon the mount. When Jesus wanted to commune with God he went upon the mount. And there the Devil went also, for be assured he will never go into the valley of sin to drag us from the pinnacle of righteousness, because he has men there already and does not need to look for them in the high place. When the Devil goes to find a Saint of God he knows he will have to go to the high places. Hence he always went on the mount or the pinnacle and high places to tempt Jesus Christ, for he well knew he would never find him in the low places. When God communed with Peter, James, and John, it was on the high places. When God wanted to give that wonderful vision to John on the Isle of Patmos, he first invited him to "come up higher." And so if we expect to commune with God we must attain a high spiritual plane. While these references are of a temporal character, they have a forceful suggestion for the Saint to climb unto the mountains and pinnacles of spirituality if he would commune with God.

We are living far too low on the service of carnality and worldly pleasure to receive the many blessings in store for the Saints of God. The higher we arise in the spiritual realm, the more unobstructed is the force within us for good.

How wonderfully this was demonstrated when experimenting with wireless messages. After demonstrating the feasibility of this wonderful agency, men were constantly encountering difficulties from currents and cross currents of the earth's surface. Then came the discovery they were too low, and to succeed they must arise above these currents. So they went to Newfoundland, and there upon the highest mountains, erected their plates, and immediately success followed by sending an intelligent message to a friend one thousand miles away.

The application is simple, we are living on the surface where the currents and cross currents of unbelief, bad feeling, selfishness, and unholy criticisms interfere with the blessings due as if we were living above them. Therefore instead of looking back over our mistakes and failures of the past, and those of our brothers and sisters, we should "apprehend but this one thing," forgetting those things which are behind. (Anything which deprives us of enjoying communion with God.) And reaching forth unto those things which are before, "Even Jesus Christ" and all that pertains to his great mission of true service to man.

Let us attune our hearts and minds to God, arising above the grovelings of this world to an attitude of giving service, and happily receive all that God has for us, here and hereafter.

* * * * *

IMPEDIMENTS TO THE PROGRESS OF TRUTH

There are factors that either stimulate or hinder the onward march of truth. In considering some of the forces that have a tendency to retard truth, we must bear in mind that environments are constantly changing, so there will be changes in the impediments. There are some impediments as lasting as time itself. Of these we desire to speak.

IGNORANCE AND SUPERSTITION

One of the greatest impediments is ignorance, associated with superstition. These two always go hand in hand. These factors have been in the world from the days of Adam until now, and will continue until we know all things, even as we are known. Men have groped in darkness and superstition until truth to them has become heresy. The Master spoke a truth which reflected the condition of the age in which he lived, when he said, "The light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not." (John 1: 5.) He could see in the lives of men that they were engrossed in ignorance and superstition.

When considering the events surrounding the birth of the Savior, we are led to wonder why men rejected him as their redeemer. His miraculous conception, the supernatural attestations of his divinity, preceding, attending, and following his birth, should have outweighed all criticism. Yet these events, instead of convincing men of his divine sonship, became stumbling stones in their pathway. To the mind of the Jew, the manner of Christ's conception, being without precedent, was preposterous. As a result he must be condemned as a child of fornication. Here we see demonstrated by the conduct of men, steeped in ignorance and superstition, a blind opposition to truth which resulted in desolation and ruin. Christ was rejected because he was misunderstood.

The more men have known truth the greater has been their love for it. The more humanity has been enslaved by ignorance the greater has been their opposition to truth. The Savior had to break down the barriers to progress, by combating the erroneous teachings of men. His message met with stubborn resistance, especially from leaders in religion. From this class of religious bigots came the most violent of the awful persecution which not only nailed the Savior to the cross, but continued the work of persecution until it had destroyed the church with its leaders. These false teachers to a large degree molded public opinion. Naturally the people looked to them for counsel and advice. They were "blind leaders of the blind." Both classes were under the curse of ignorance, so the Master and his evangel found no place in their lives.

History repeats itself. In the restoration of the gospel in the latter days, the most bitter opposition from which truth has suffered has been from men who were supposed lights in different religious bodies which they represented. These men exerted a wide influence on religious thought. As a result, men's minds were darkened which caused them to turn away from the teachings of Christ, as found recorded in the Holy Scriptures.

We have only to go back in history a few years to learn that mobs have been headed by ministers who claimed to represent the meek and lowly Nazarene. These mobs were usually composed of the most ignorant and depraved characters of the communities in which the outrages occurred.

We suggest that the direct causes tending to these conditions were: Ministers who desired to retain their hold on human conscience and human activities sought to kill that which opposed priestcraft in all its forms, which would have liberated men from the fetters of priestly domination, and creeds. These conditions are likely to continue to the end of time, as foretold by the Apostle Paul in his letter to Timothy: "But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived."—2 Timothy 3: 13.

Truth has suffered more as a result of ignorance, than from any other cause.

FALSEHOOD

One of the most prolific weapons used by Satan in opposing truth is falsehood, especially that which comes from a lying tongue. Men have been made to suffer untold agonies as the direct result of lying. So Satan has been on the alert to deceive by means of falsehood. When Eve first heard the voice of the tempter it was when he gave expression to a lie. Adam and Eve, being deceived thereby, became miserable. From that time on Satan has been faithful at his post of duty. Thousands, yea millions, have become his willing servants in framing and circulating lying reports to make man more miserable.

The Master and his work have suffered much from this very prolific source of trouble, not only in the past but also in modern times. So long as the Adversary can control the hearts and minds of men he will succeed in getting into circulation that which will poison the minds of the honest seeker after truth, thereby hindering the establishment of righteousness in the world. Truth has nothing to fear, so comes boldly forward to the emancipation of the race. But falsehood raises its slimy head from under cover and never dares meet truth face to face. Man has often shown a disposition to believe a falsehood rather than believe that which appeals to his better judgment. Men will die for a falsehood when they will not live for the truth.

Persecution of the church in the days of Christ and the apostles came about partially because of the falsehoods circulated derogatory to the character of its founder and his representatives. They had to meet the lying statements that were urged by the opposition. They stood ready to defend themselves, but then as now their accusers were not ready to meet them openly. Many were the bitter experiences of these servants of Christ, suffering even death itself as a result of the lying of others.

When we come to modern times we find Satan exceedingly busy circulating stories that were made out of whole cloth. Because men were ready to testify that God was really doing something for people now, they were at once the subjects of attack from lying tongues by those who attempted to blacken their character, thus preventing truth from filling hearts and minds with peace and happiness. Satan, realizing the message of life was impregnable and could withstand all the attacks made upon it when its precepts were examined, knew that one of the best ways of rendering it void would be to prejudice the minds of men against the persons who had the courage to stand in its defense.

When only a youth, Joseph Smith testified of the impartiality and goodness of God, told the world the heavens were again open, and the Divine One had once more revealed his will to erring man, he was made the object of attack. Every lying statement which was possible for men to invent was hurled against him. As the truth planted in the hearts of men began to grow and produce fruit, the venom of men also increased until they resorted to more drastic measures, which resulted in the death of this servant of Christ, and he went to a martyr's grave.

NEW DANGER ARISES

A new danger is seen slowly rising on the horizon, a most deadly enemy, from which truth has suffered. From within the ranks false leaders appear, seeking to destroy the church. Soon we find the pure, unsullied truths which composed the gospel of Christ turned into corrupt and abominable doctrines. Men, once in the front ranks among the standard bearers of Christ, are now engaged in the practice of that which is soul-destroying. These men were once valiant in their testimonies, denouncing evil in every form until they had gained the confidence of the church. But Satan has succeeded in corrupting their hearts until they are made to reel under the intoxication brought about by their corruption.

Instead of standing for purity, they have embraced the doctrine of polygamy. Blood atonement was also fostered, and men who opposed these vile leaders were removed by death, that their evil designs might be freely indulged. Instead of the endowment of the Spirit of God, which brought light and peace, they went into secret works of darkness, taking oaths and obligations contrary to the will of Jehovah. Under such conditions the faith of thousands was made shipwreck. Soon to all parts of the world was carried the news of corruption which came to the church.

A little band of true worshipers stood firm. As they went out to again lift the warning voice, calling on men to repent, they were met with the accusation that they, too, were corrupt. These fearless workers plead for the faith once delivered to the Saints, but the stigma is so great that many honest men turn from the truth. Thus the servants of Christ labor against great odds, in almost every city and hamlet where they go. The news precedes them that "Mormons" are corrupt, and all Latter Day Saints are the same. Men and women everywhere have heard something detrimental to the character of these messengers of the gospel, and the message which they bring.

As the lone missionary goes into the city numbering its thousands, he finds no elegant church edifice in which to invite men to hear the gospel. In some of the cities even the streets are denied him. As a last resort he must be content in approaching men privately, only to be told, "I don't care to hear of your corrupt doctrine. I have heard enough already."

Because of the pernicious doctrines which have been taught, the way of truth is evil spoken of. The fruit of evil-doing is yielding its abundant harvest, trailing the banner of truth in the dust.

This same prophet, whose name was to be had for good and evil, not only suffers from enemies outside the fold by heaping vituperation on his head, but those who profess to be his friends and extol him as a prophet and martyr aid the rabble by accusing him of the blackest crimes.

WEALTH AND PLEASURE

There are other factors which guard the way to the tree of life, namely, wealth and pleasure. Men in their eagerness to obtain the wealth of the world forget that there are some things upon which no valuation can be placed so far as dollars and cents are concerned. "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Matthew 16:26 is still one of the burning questions of the age. Man goes in quest of gold and faces death itself to gratify his ambition.

This awful desire for wealth shuts out the better desire for eternal life. Men thus involved in the whirlpool of commercial life allow the spiritual man to die from a lack of proper food. James shows us the logical outgrowth of the greed for wealth. Listen while he speaks:

Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days.—James 5:1-3.

Paul saw a danger in the closing days of earth's history, through which we are now passing. He said men shall be "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." (2 Timothy 3:4.) Statistics show that upwards of a billion dollars are expended annually in the United States to provide amusement in the moving picture shows alone. Add to this the enormous sum spent in the theaters, baseball, football, racing of all kinds, and other sports, and we must conclude Paul's statement was true. The world at large has gone pleasure mad. Men will deny themselves the bread that sustains life and spend their hard earnings to satisfy an abnormal desire for pleasure.

Truth in every stage of its existence has been compelled to combat these various evil forces. Everything which could be formulated in the mind of Satan has been hurled against that which will finally emancipate the race. But we anticipate a day when every impediment will be removed and truth alone will stand the arbitrament of time. Lord, hasten that glorious day, is our humble prayer.

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

Of General Interest

LIQUORS NO LONGER "DRUGS"

Whisky and brandy have hitherto been officially classed as drugs in the United States Pharmacopœia, the authoritative list of medicinal preparations recognized by physicians. In revising this list the committee directing the work voted to remove whisky and brandy from it. Discussing the matter, the editor of Weekly Drug Markets (New York) says:

The announcement that the committee of revision have voted by the narrow margin of 26 to 24 to exclude whisky and brandy from the forthcoming edition of the United States Pharmacopœia will be looked upon by many in the trade as the culmination of a controversy that has been the subject of much discussion. Many druggists have sold these liquors for medicinal purposes under the customary restrictive measures imposed by the national and State authorities, being guided in their action by the belief that they had a right and duty to supply all medicinal remedies, and that as whisky and brandy were officially recognized in the Pharmacopœia they were in good standing as "remedies."

But the sentiment has strongly developed within recent years, among reputable pharmacists and medical men, that liquors should be deleted from the Pharmacopœia on the ground that they are not distinctly medicinal agents, and are not necessary in the production of official medicinal preparations. In the present Pharmacopœia, neither whisky nor brandy is directed to be used in the manufacture of other preparations, so that their retention in the official guide up to the present time must be considered solely on the ground of their possible use as medicinal agents. In the face of the sentiment as to the actual remedial value of these spirits, from a medical point of view at least, it would seem that "Othello's occupation's gone."

The fear has been expressed in some quarters that this elimination may make it impossible for druggists after January 1 next to sell whisky or brandy without taking out a saloon license. But this contention is largely problematical. Many druggists will welcome the failure officially to recognize these spirits as an excuse to relieve them from taking out a license and its accompanying restrictive regulations which have proved so onerous to well-meaning men. We have heard many druggists declare that the quantities of these products sold by them in response to legitimate demands were inconsequential, and from such sales they never realized, directly or indirectly, enough to pay the cost of the special tax certificate required by the internal revenue authorities. One can well believe that as a matter of financial interest such sales have not been worth the effort and responsibility they cost, while as a nuisance and demoralizing agency they have always required caution and discriminating judgment.

With the elimination of whisky and brandy from the Pharmacopœia, the fact that the druggist does not keep them for sale as medicines can not be urged as a blot upon his professional reputation. The liquor situation has been one of the most unsatisfactory subjects with which the druggist has had to deal, and the pharmacist who does not wish to have himself classed as a liquor dealer, or subject himself to espionage or the risks of prosecution for acts he can not foresee, will undoubtedly indorse the verdict of the Pharmacopœial revision committee.

---

The Staff

AUDENTIA ANDERSON, OMAHA, NEBRASKA

Hymns We Love

"Onward, Christian Soldiers"

The words and music of this stirring processional hymn were composed by the Reverend Sabine Baring-Gould, Curate of Hoby Bridge, England, in 1865, under the following circumstances:

On Whitmonday in a neighboring Yorkshire village, a great school festival was to be held, in which his school was invited to participate.

The place of celebration being some distance away, the curate thought it would be an excellent plan to have the pupils march to the singing of some suitable hymn. He searched in vain for something appropriate. His failure was fortunate for our hymnology, for out of the sheer necessity of the case, as the time was drawing near, he determined to write something himself, befitting for the special occasion. On the Saturday night preceding the celebration, he composed this now well-known hymn, little dreaming that its use would become world-wide, and that his name, as its author, would be a household word. He was only faithfully performing the duty of that present hour.

"It was written," he modestly says, "in a very simple fashion, without a thought of publication. I wanted the children to march to singing, but could think of nothing suitable, so I sat up at night resolved to write something myself. 'Onward, Christian soldiers,' was the result. It was written in great haste, and I am afraid some of the lines are faulty. Certainly nothing surprised me more than its great popularity."

It has surely "fitted" many and numberless occasions. It is said that when peace was expected to be declared between the British and the Boers a certain chaplain telegraphed to Lord Kitchener from the Orange River Colony, stating, "I am the acting chaplain, and shall conduct divine services in several camps to-morrow, may I ask if the hymn 'Peace, perfect peace' would not be a most appropriate one to sing?"

"Please yourself," telegraphed Kitchener, "but I think 'Onward, Christian soldiers' quite as good at this time, and perhaps more appropriate."
VIOLA V. SHORT.

Symphony Orchestra and Leadership

(Prepared and read before the Musical Institute, at the late General Conference.)

Since a very few minutes only are allotted to me to discuss a subject in which could be included many volumes of written thought, surely I can be forgiven if I do not dwell at length on any one phase or subdivision of my topic.

It has been my good fortune to enjoy many of the weekly concerts given by the Philharmonic Orchestra of New York this season, and to be associated with some of its talented members, and I can appreciate now, more fully than before, the sacrifices these men make to give to the world their interpretation of the highest forms of music.

We speak of the orchestra as a great and magnificent instrument, and we are thrilled by its eloquence and capabilities. Our great masters of the Romantic School, and the nerveless untiring modernists have used it as a means of expressing the endless variety of their musical thoughts.

It is unfortunate that the majority of attendants at symphony performances miss the opportunity that is always afforded them by not becoming more familiar with the individual value and mission of the factors which go to make up its sum total. The rudimentary knowledge at least could be gained, and in gaining it the student would find an intellectual enjoyment; his ears would be opened to a thousand beauties never before observed.

Like the organist, ever on the alert to combine different stops to produce the pleasing effects, the composer knowing well the characteristic timber of each instrument, finds his most exquisite pleasure to combine what we might term the primary colors in such a way as to produce indescribable effects—which is the highest form of art. And we, as interested listeners, should try to study these effects in order to get a glimpse into the mental workshop, so to speak, of the composer. Then, in addition to the effect that the listening would have upon our emotions, we would find our intellectual faculties would be agreeably excited, and the performance would be one of permanent benefit.

To the mind of a composer, the orchestra always presents itself as a combination of four groups of instruments, generally termed choirs. The string quartet, as it is collectively called, comprises the violins, violas, violoncellos and double basses. It is the only choir of the orchestra that has a numerous representation of its constituent units, and three fourths of the orchestra is made up of stringed instruments. This was not always so, but is the fruit of development in the art of instrumentation, which is the newest department in music.

The wood winds, or more plainly interpreted, the wind instruments of wood, comprise the flutes, oboes, clarinets, and bassoons. Third, the wind instruments of brass, trumpets, horns, trombones, bass tuba. The fourth choir includes the instruments of percussion, kettle drums, big drum, cymbals, triangle, bell-chimes and accessories—which we often refer to as the battery!

It is to be regretted that the various qualities of these instruments and means of expression can not be more deeply gone into, as time does not permit. Collectively speaking however, we can in the twinkling of an eye be transferred from a wild tumultuous storm of furious potentialities, so stirring that we are torn almost asunder with conflicting emotion, to the soft, sweet murmurings of the summer's southern breeze, while a few more measures might drop us into a field of rollicking lambs, or roaring lions, so absolutely marvelous are the possibilities of some combinations.

The qualifications of a symphony orchestra drummer would discourage the average youth from studying for this important role. He must have an absolute sense of time, rhythm, and a keen sense of pitch, for often his part calls for a change of pitch in one or both of his drums, in the space of a few seconds. To shut out the roar of ninety or a hundred instruments and drum in a new key, which the orchestra may require him to play, is an extremely delicate task for any man, and if you watch one of those lads at work, you know he has no time to cry for help.

A few words concerning the conductor, upon whom rests the success of a performance, and then I will try to quit, which will be hard for me to do, for the theme is all-absorbing one with me.

The old-style hand clappers, feet stampers, human metronomes, are a nightmare of the past. The modern conductor is a mediator between the composer and the audience. He is the greatest living virtuoso of the day, playing upon the greatest assembled instrument of all time. In place of the keyboard he plays upon men, and plays on a hundred instruments instead of one. No one composer can ever introduce sufficient signs for musicians to follow. Some one individually, peculiarly fitted, extremely sensitized, must anticipate the very thought, mind and will of the composer, and so tone down or build up the various choirs or individual tonal effects that we can classify the combined result as an intelligent interpretation.

Great honors are conferred upon one whose work is of such high quality. He is a man of stupendous power, and I might add, he is a rarity. In Europe he travels from city to city, conducts other societies than his own, and critics discuss his readings as they do performances of great pianists and singers.

At this stage of my talk, allow me to digress enough to impress upon choir directors one necessary factor of their work. Don't permit your work to rest when you have acquired the art of beating time correctly! Seek to analyze, to interpret, to subdue and round out a well-balanced effort in your choir work. If the brass and percussion choirs of the orchestra would permit their full volume of tone to escape, half the tense crowd of listeners at a symphony concert would drop dead of sheer fright, while the balance would run for the exits; and yet how often do we find in the enthusiasm of choir work a row of tenors red in the face trying to reach that high A, or die in the attempt, while the basses are destroying every tone-carrying quality they have by trying to keep pace with the tenors!

Let us endeavor like the symphony orchestra conductor to work hardest at the rehearsals, and by a system of signs communicate our desires to our singers, instead of looking like a thundercloud at a section who have misconstrued our desires, and scaring them into a worse effort by the ominous scowl with which we encircle our countenances.

Last, but not least, personality and magnetism enter largely into the qualification of leadership. Define it as you will, its simplest meaning is the faculty or capacity in a leader for creating a sympathetic relationship between himself and his men, which enables him by prearrangement, technical, conventional or otherwise, to imbue them with his thoughts and feelings regarding a composition, and through them to reach the audience. A love for the work in hand, genuine enthusiasm, a deep-seated knowledge and the power to impart this, is the basis of action for one disposed to mold the efforts of others.

The need of the general musical movements of the church is for leaders with the stated qualifications, but above all, clad with the armor of God and endowed with a deep understanding of one of the greatest of Christ's virtues—humility!

ALBERT N. HOXIE.

The Staff

With the entrance of October comes the rushing, cooling blasts of autumnal winds, causing the leaves to scurry over the pavements, ripened fruits to fall from the parent stems, and pedestrians to hasten their loitering steps, buttoning their coats closer under their chins, as they go. Mothers watch the heedless children with anxious care, crying, "Don't go out without your sweater!" while fathers interview the coal men, regarding with equal anxiety the price and quality of the winter's supply of comfort.

College and high school students vie with the children of the wards in application and acquisition, and stay-at-homes are looking up from their fruit-canning and wondering, "What shall I study this winter?" Women's clubs are holding opening meetings, and schedules of study and research are everywhere being filled out. It's in the air, some way, and thus the choirs are breaking off ambitious bites, trusting to luck and hard work, that success will follow their attempts to masticate and assimilate. Neglected instruments are being taken from the closet, overhauled, refitted with strings and mouthpieces, and entrance fees into some good study orchestra are being paid,—fees that spell privilege and opportunity!

In our own circles privilege and opportunity are being spelled and offered, freely and urgently, for is not the invitation broad enough? "Whosoever will." Our choirs need you; our orchestras need you; our music clubs need you; and not only do these organizations need you, but YOU NEED THEM! You can not afford to let these musical opportunities pass you by unheeded, for God said "cultivate." And your spiritual self needs the development he knew would follow a compliance with this command. So open your door to the call. Get your neglected gifts out of their tissue paper wrappings, and remember that the servants who used and multiplied the talents were the ones commended. These gifts brighten with use, and soon reflect the glory of the Giver, if they are used with joy and complete consecration.

Too many of us have not yet been converted musically; we have not learned the full consecration needed. We have not fully realized that we get out of music, as of every other good thing in life, just what we put into it! Half-hearted, spasmodic interest means half-way, undependable and slipshod music; while earnest, wholehearted and consecrated effort, steady application, and unswerving faithfulness, mean advancement, proficiency, and increased ability to both understand and enjoy oneself, and to give out and cause uplift and happiness to others—the real mission of music.

AUDENTIA ANDERSON.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, 2009 Locust Street.

Bulletin Number 1

[The "Bulletin Number 1," except the title-page, published and sent to district choristers, is here reproduced for the benefit of all interested and engaged in the choir movement. The title-page announces as national director, Albert N. Hoxie, 179 Madison Avenue, New York; assistant national director, Edward C. Bell, 2817 University Place, Saint Louis; editor of "The Staff," Mrs. Audentia Anderson, 2009 Locust Street, Omaha.—EDITOR.]

ANNOUNCEMENT TO CHORISTERS

The General Choir Movement was inaugurated by the Church Presidency during the General Conference of 1912 at Independence, Missouri.

This movement was motivated by a desire to coordinate the work of the various local choirs so as to make possible better choral and congregational singing at conferences and conventions, district and general.

The use of uniform music makes possible the assembling of district choirs. The work of a district is intrusted to a district chorister, which office is under the direction and appointing power of the general chorister.

This suggestive graded course was adopted by a representative gathering of district choristers in joint council with the directors of the choir movement, and is the outcome of numerous appeals for music suitable for the choirs of average ability. We therefore recommend the earnest consideration of Grades 1, 2, and 3 for the smaller choirs, and Grade 4 and upward to the choirs of experience.

A Christmas Cantata, Grade between 2 and 3. "The Morning Star" John Spencer Camp.

A well-arranged and interesting work, founded on a beautiful German choral. Just the thing for your Christmas service. Single copies, 35 cents, postpaid. Per dozen, $4 postpaid.

THE ORATORIO OF THE MESSIAH, BY HANDEL

This is the work selected for use at the 1916 General Conference. We urge that in addition to the time given to the study of this greatest of oratorios in ensemble work, a great individual consideration might be given in study and anticipation of this great event.

Single copies, postpaid, 45 cents. Twelve or more, 40 cents each; transportation charges additional.

To secure uniform editions, we suggest that your orders be placed with the established firm of Theodore Presser Company, music publishers, 1712 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. All orders must be accompanied by remittance of check or money order, and mention made of The General Choir Movement, Bulletin Number 1, Graded Course, to secure the special rates and privileges contained herein.

GRADES

Grade 1. The Gospel Message No. 1, 13c (postpaid, in any quantity).

Grade 2. "In heavenly love abiding." W. E. Brown. 10c. "Softly now the light of day." Fred Schilling. 8c. "Rejoice ye." Charles B. Blount. 15c. "The roseate hues of early dawn." Alonzo Stone. 12c.

Grade 3. "Father, thy children bow in adoration." Arthur Sullivan. 12c. "The earth is the Lord's." Carl Pflueger. 15c.

"Be glad, oh, ye righteous." Bruce Steane. 12c. "Oh, Lamb of God." R. M. Stults. 15c.

Grade 4. "Light at evening time." Sidney Dalton. 10c. "Oh, sweet breathe the lyres above." Chopin-Shelley. 12c.

"Seek ye the Lord." J. V. Roberts. 5. "Pleasant are thy courts." C. W. Henrich. 12c.

Grades 2, 3 and 4 are subject to a discount of 33½% in any quantity, postpaid.

GENERAL CONFERENCE SERIES, 1916

(Grade 4) "How beautiful upon the mountains." Charles G. Buch. 12c.

(Grade 4) "Rejoice in the Lord." Horatio W. Parker. 12c.

(Grade 4) "The soft Sabbath calm." Barmby Schelley. 8c.

(Grade 4) "The earth is the Lord's." James H. Rogers. 12c.

(Grade 4) "All hail the power of Jesus' name." J. Lamont Galbraith. 12c.

(Grade 4) "Gloria in excelsis." (Mass in B Flat.) Farmer. 5c.

(Grade 6) "Festival Te Deum." Dudley Buck. 30c.

SPECIAL NOTICE

The Conference Series will be bound and indexed as heretofore. All orders, however, must be placed before October 1. Price 75 cents in any quantity, postage prepaid. Single Nos. in any quantity at prices indicated above less a discount of 33½% per cent postpaid. This is the music which is to be sung by the combined choirs at the General Conference, Independence, Missouri, 1916.

For General Conference

The following selections from the "Messiah" are to be used at the 1916 General Conference.

No.	Title	Page
4.	And the Glory of the Lord .....	10
9.	O Thou that tellest good tidings .....	32
12.	For unto us a Child is born .....	46
17.	Glory to God .....	60
22.	Behold the Lamb of God .....	79
24.	Surely He hath borne our griefs .....	87
26.	All we like sheep .....	95
33.	Lift up your heads .....	116
44.	Hallelujah! .....	158
53.	Worthy is the Lamb .....	195

With Our Correspondents

HOOD RIVER, OREGON, September 23, 1915.

Editor Staff: I am indeed grateful to see the subject of music in the columns of the HERALD, as this is one part of our church work that is neglected, and I sincerely trust that the choristers and orchestra directors in all localities will awaken to the great need of development in the musical line, and improve our Sunday school, Religio and church services.

Music is a large part of each service, and is just as essential as a good lesson or a discourse, and when I say music, I mean the production of harmony, the blending of the soul into the theme and the recitation of the words given with expression. Singing is talking on a musical scale. Do we carry on a conversation void of emphasis? and speak all of our words in the same pitch, not giving any special force to our subjects? No! Then why should one sing without feeling, merely keeping strict rhythm, and repeating the words parrotlike?

Our Saints' Hymnal contains some beautiful selections, the harmony thereof being inspiring and food for the soul of the music lover. But the prayerful hymns are sometimes sung as though they were marches, and the songs of greeting rendered in a dragging way.

I have had the pleasure of attending several of our reunions, and I notice our congregational singing is of the slurring quality, especially when carrying the high notes. This effect is beautiful when rendered in its proper place, but must be given in unison and not in a zigzag way.

One more point. Dear singers, when approaching a word in your song with more than one syllable, inhale sufficient breath to sustain the tone, and do not take a breath between syllables.

I do heartily implore our people to put forth their greatest efforts to uplift the standard of our singing. See that the choristers are competent. Do not sacrifice this glorious work because you wish to favor one who is popular. And do likewise in the organization of your choirs. Select material, and devote one evening each week to choir work. Some call this practice, but I say it is work. And give ten minutes of each service to song service. If you will teach your choir to sing, your choir will gradually teach the congregation.

May God bless and multiply our talents, is the sincere prayer of,

Your humble sister,

SADIE E. WARD.

721 June Street.

---

Letter Department

RICHMOND, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, August 30, 1915.

Editors Herald: My last was written from Kalgoorlie, Western Australia; this is from a point nearly two thousand miles from that place.

I returned to our headquarters in Subiaco, on July 9, and on the following Wednesday received a telegram calling me to the bedside of my dying mother. I was in a strait between my unfinished work in Western Australia and my duty to my aged parent. The latter prevailed, for I realized that one has only one mother, and this was my last opportunity to do her honor, whilst, if permitted, I might in future have the chance of finishing my work in the field referred to.

After traveling for six days, I arrived at home eleven days before my mother passed into the unseen, this event occurring on Sunday, August 1, at 3 p. m. Brethren Butterworth and Kippe conducted the funeral arrangements, and we all felt a deep sense of peace and comfort in that mother was at rest after some years of suffering, which confined her to an invalid chair. She was a faithful mother to us, and also a Saint, doing her duty in both capacities according to her light, strength and intelligence.

I am now laboring about home in connection with the Victoria District, awaiting the decision of our new missionary in charge as to my future. It is a long and expensive journey back to my field in the west, but I am perfectly willing to go back for another year if the authorities so decide. Hard as the field was, I became attached to it and to the Saints there, and I feel that possibly mutual good might come to us by a continuance of our associations.

Brother Argent, who went there with me, is still laboring on alone in that field. He needs our prayers and support. He is a good young man, and we were sorry to part, but the responsibility may make him.

Everything, including the mission work, is slow at present. Militarism takes first place everywhere. The drought has broken all over the continent, and a good season is anticipated. This may set trade going and increase the people's wealth and optimism, with the result that normal conditions may soon again obtain. Until then, I don't expect to see much mission progress.

A misunderstanding occurred in regard to the name and personality of the Jones called to the patriarchate. In the SAINTS' HERALD it was reported as John H. Jones, and knowing of no other John H. Jones in the church in Australia, some naturally concluded it was myself. Some wrote to me to that effect. When Brother Butterworth arrived he informed us that it was Brother John Jones, of New South Wales District. I was rather relieved to learn that it was not I who had been so called to assume that responsibility. My best wishes go to the other Jones in his new calling, and I trust God may inspire him for the new duties. We are pleased to welcome Brother Paul M. Hanson and wife to Australia, and trust their mission will be blessed of God.

The Victoria district reunion takes place about September 25. This will be the first meeting of that character in this district.

Trusting that progress of a lasting character may be the experience of all in the coming time, and that the long-looked-for establishment of Zion may be converted from theory into actuality, is the desire of,

Your brother in the one faith,
J. H. N. JONES.

---

TYRONE, OKLAHOMA, September 2, 1915.

Editors Herald: We wish to know if there are any Saints living in or near Liberal, Kansas, or Tyrone, Oklahoma. I, with Brother James A. Miller and family, have just moved to Tyrone, Oklahoma, and would like to find some of the Saints.

Your brother in bonds,

CHARLES F. ORR.

---

BERKELEY, CALIFORNIA, September 19, 1915.

Editors Herald: My heart is full of gratitude to God for his goodness to me in all my travels, and also for the blessed experiences I have had, not the least of which was the privilege of attending the reunion at Irvington, the first I have ever been able to attend. I was there all the ten days, and to my soul it was a feast indeed. How I did wish all the dear Saints I have left behind in Canada and in England could have been there to hear the grand instruction that was given upon several occasions by Brother A. Carmichael, concerning the temporal law of the church, as well as the grand sermons by Brethren J. W. Rushton, J. W. Davis, from Hawaii, (both of whom I had previously heard preach in Oakland, of which branch I am now a member), also Brethren F. G. Pitt, M. H. Bond, Brooner and others. It was good to listen once more to the voice of Brother F. G. Pitt, whom I had not met for I think over fourteen years.

I can not refrain from telling how deeply I was impressed by the testimony of our aged Brother M. H. Bond. Oh, such a soul-stirring testimony! and such grand admonition from a veteran of the church! He spoke with all the earnestness and fervor of his being, and the power of the Spirit accompanied every word. I shall not soon forget that Wednesday morning prayer service that, together with the insight given into the financial working of the church, alone would be worth the effort to be there. Truly this is a grand work, we all should be proud of.

I believe there will shortly be some rapid strides made in the church. We are living in the hastening time, and therefore must look for such.

I was glad to read the letter in this week's HERALD from Sister Roderick May. I am sure Brother May has had uphill work to do what he has in London, England, for I know it needs lots of patience and perseverance to accomplish much there. I trust that God will bless their efforts and bring them success in their labors for him in these trying times.

I was in Canada four years, less one month, and arrived in California May 29 last. Am thankful to find wherever we go the same spirit of freedom is enjoyed when the Saints meet together, and I am happy to say I rejoice in the work of God as much as I ever did. I know it is God's work; he has given me abundant evidence of its truth, and as long as he has work for me to do I wish to live. When I feel my work is done I shall be willing to go yonder.

I would like to say to the Saints in London District, I would like to hear from any of them. None of them are forgotten by me. I am enjoying better health now than when in England. Though I am nearing my seventy-fifth milestone, I feel there is yet a work before me. May I have grace to do it as unto the Lord, who has led me time and time again where I have found work to do for him, which though in weakness, yet I have seen the fruits thereof.

May God help us all to do our part in his great work, is the prayer of your sister in Christ. ESTHER FURNESS.
1805 California Street.

News from Branches

First Chicago

Presiding Elder Harry Passman occupied at the morning service, the theme of his very able discourse being "Rich men" from the fifth chapter of James. Brother James F. Kier gave us an excellent talk this evening, his subject being: "Have faith in God." He, together with his family, is to depart soon for Independence, where he is to enter more thoroughly into the activities of his office. A farewell sermon next Sunday afternoon is to be dedicated to their departure.

Yesterday our three branches here were well and orderly represented in the two-hour temperance parade that passed through the downtown streets, our banner bearing our name in full with the words "We Are 100 Per Cent Dry"—the beginning of the end.

To-morrow evening the South Side church will be turned over to the Dry Chicago Federation, with Superintendent G. F. Rinehart as presiding speaker. Announcements are being handed out bearing our church's name, which I trust will afford us good advertisement.

The young men of our branch are organizing a chorus and are looking forward to an orchestra. We firmly believe in the words of admonition, cultivate the gifts of music.

The Religio has recently instituted a district paper, although the name has not been decided upon. We enjoyed the reading of the first issue on last Tuesday evening by our very able editor, Brother G. A. Worrell.

We are pleased to report a gradual advancement toward a more perfect spiritual condition and have several zealous workers in our midst.

W. W. REESE.

Burlington, Iowa

Burlington has been quietly busy since last report, and while there have not been many items of general interest, we feel that progress has been made.

During July, the chief item of interest was our monthly sacrament service,—the first after the arrival of our new pastor, Brother D. J. Williams, and his family. At this service a prophecy was delivered, giving instruction and promise to the branch, and assurance to Brother Williams of his call to this place, and promising abundant blessing to his work among us.

Our tri-district reunion, held at Muscatine during August, was not so largely attended from this district as we had hoped, but Brother and Sister Williams and daughter, and Sister Maggie Wright, who attended from here, reported good meetings and an enjoyable time, even though the attendance was not large. Brother E. B. Morgan, now laboring in the Eastern Iowa District, accompanied Brother Williams to Burlington at the close of the reunion, and spoke for us here Thursday evening, August 26. Two of our Sunday school workers, Sisters Jule and Anna Ortleb, attended the Plano reunion, and reported an enjoyable time there.

The day before our district conference and conventions, October 1, Brother O. Salisbury of Des Moines was in Burlington, and spoke for us Thursday evening. He planned his work so that he could attend the conference with us, and added materially to the interest of the sessions.

Brother Williams remained with the Rock Creek people until Friday following conference, to hold with Elder C. E. Harpe, a week's meetings there, and missed a short but most enjoyable visit of a day and a half which Brother Elbert Smith made to Burlington on his way home from the Joy conference. Brother Smith arrived just a little before noon Monday, October 4, and his time was busily occupied until Tuesday evening, visiting among his former flock, whose regard for our first pastor continues as warm as during his ministry among us. He finished with an evening with the Plus Ultra class,—the ladies' organized Religio class, where he gave us one of his characteristic short talks, full of inspiration, smiles and good things. Brother Briggs of Des Moines, who had been in Burlington on business since Sunday, was also with us for the evening, and followed Brother Smith with a short talk that was full of feeling and genuinely helpful. The only touch of regret to the evening was that we didn't have Brother Williams with us to overbalance the proportion of "seven to one."

Auxiliary work is doing well, though it has made no startling strides. We are just beginning the plan of holding a monthly joint executive meeting, in an effort to advance and to coordinate the work of the branch and its auxiliaries. Increased interest, consecration and desire for progress on the part of our workers promises well for the future.

Tuesday, October 12, was Brother Williams's birthday, and the manner in which it was celebrated seemed to be somewhat unexpected by both Brother and Sister Williams. It was the regular time for the meeting of our North Hill Aid and Home Class, who extended an invitation to all the ladies of the church to meet with them. This aroused no suspicion, for Brother and Sister Williams have met with them a number of times before, and the two aids have plans on foot for a bazaar later in the season; so the shock came only when the curtains were drawn at the close of the study hour, disclosing the table in gala attire for the occasion, and birthday candles burning. After refreshments were served, Sister Martha Weishaupt, president of the North Hill Aid, at whose home we met, presented Brother Williams with a purse, in token of the love, confidence and good will of those present and some who could not be. Brother Williams's response bespoke the brother in very deed, and the little break in his voice as he spoke of the strengthening of the bond that unites us, brought tears to more eyes than his own. We feel that there are few men who could win so practically the unanimous confidence and good will that Brother Williams has done in the short time he has been with us, and as he expressed it yesterday, it was his supreme desire (as it is ours) that the association might continue as it is now, and that thereby the Master's work might be forwarded and his name be honored.

The men were not to be outdone, and in the evening the men's Religio class, of which Brother Williams is the teacher, organized as the "United Workers," met with their president Mr. John Laubscher, and when Brother Williams arrived on the scene presented him with another remembrance and token of esteem. Some of the Plus Ultra girls who had been present at the function in the afternoon followed with Sister Williams, and though perhaps the regular order of the evening followed by the United Workers was somewhat disturbed, the time was spent most enjoyably "in joint session," and we separated feeling that it is indeed good to meet together in such a way.

October 13, 1915. °

CORRESPONDENT.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original

The Gift of God

The light that fills thy house at morn,
Thou canst not for thyself retain;
But all who with thee here are born,
It bids to share an equal gain.

The wind that blows thy ship along,
Her swelling sails can not confine;
Alike to all the gales belong,
Nor canst thou claim a breath as thine.

The earth, the green outspreading earth,
Why hast thou fenced it off from me?
Hadst thou than I a nobler birth,
Who callest thine a gift so free?

The wave, the blue encircling wave,
No chains can bind, no fetters hold;
Its thunders tell of him who gave What none can ever buy for gold.

—Jones Very.

Mother's Face

Dear face, deep furrowed by the hand of time,
And long familiar with each passing care—
Dearer by far to me than those more fair,
That still abide in youth's seductive prime,
Or wax not old in some congenial clime—
Not all the charms of beauty famed and rare
With thy sweet, gentle features can compare,
For ever hallowed by a love sublime.

Thou first ideal of my infant eyes,
To be adored as I have older grown—
Revered and loved the more the better known—
May thy enraptured visage ever rise,
To cheer me in the way where duty lies,
And be a solace when the tears have flown.

—Stoughton Cooley.

Zion

A harbor of refuge from tempest and wave,
A haven of rest for the true and the brave;
The glory of God for its shield in distress,
Where none shall grow weary and none shall oppress.

The seas are enraged, travailing in pain,
And numerous the wrecks submerged in the main;
There's safety, alone, in that haven so blest—
The Zion of God, the places of sweet rest.

The beacon which shines through the mist of the night
Envelopes this harbor in wondrous light;
Its rays are directed afar o'er the sea,
Wherever distress and affliction may be.

The signals for help are reaching the shore
From craft that can battle the tempest no more.
The Zion of God, alone, can send aid,
For strong are the boats for service there made.

Then hasten the day, O Father, divine,
When standards of nations shall mingle with thine;
Shall come to the harbor where billows surcease,
And anchor for ever at Zion in peace.

AUSTIN M. DOBSON.

Life

Let me live my life from year to year,
With forward face and unreluctant soul,
Not hastening to, nor turning from the goal,
Not mournful for the things that disappear
In the dim past, nor holding back in fear
From what the future veils, but with a whole
And happy heart, that pays its toll
To youth and age, and travels on with cheer.

So let the way wind up the hill or down
Though rough or smooth, the journey will be joy
Still seeking what I sought when but a boy,
New friendship, high adventure, and a crown.
I shall grow old, but never lose life's zest,
Because the road's last turn will be the best.

—Henry Van Dyke.

Reincarnation

It can not be that he who made
This wondrous world of our delight,
Designed that all its charms should fade
And pass for ever from our sight;
That all shall wither and decay,
And know on earth no life but this,
With only one finite survey
Of all its beauty and its bliss.

It can not be that all these years,
Of toil and care and grief we live
Shall find no recompense but tears,
No sweet return that earth can give;
That all that leads us to aspire,
And struggle onward to achieve,
And every unattained desire
Were given only to deceive.

It can not be that, after all
The mighty conquests of the mind,
Our thoughts shall pass beyond recall
And leave no record here behind;
That all our dreams of love and fame,
And hopes that time has swept away,—
All that enthralled this mortal frame,—
Shall not return some other day.

It can not be that all the ties
Of kindred souls and loving hearts
Are broken when this body dies,
And the immortal mind departs;
That no serener light shall break
At last upon our mortal eyes,
To guide us as our footsteps make
The pilgrimage to paradise.

—David Hanks Sickels.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes

LITTLE SIOUX.—Magnolia, Iowa, October 2 and 3. Statistical reports showed gain. Adjourned to meet at Logan, Iowa, February 5 and 6. J. W. Wight edified the Saints with his exhortations, and Amos Berve helped to swell the good feeling that existed. Charles J. Smith, secretary.

LONDON.—Ontario, Canada, October 9 and 10. Reports from 11 branches showed membership of 858, net gain for 12 months, 45; ordinations 9. Reports were promptly forwarded and everyone brought marks of encouragement, numerically, and we believe spiritually. The conference was a success. Bishop R. C. Evans officiated in the laying of the corner stone of the new church the London Saints are erecting, the mayor of the city, some of the aldermen, and J. F. Curtis assisting, also W. I. Fligg, formerly president of the branch, but recently returned from the Canadian West. A good time was had, and an excellent offering gathered. Bishop's agent reported tithing over $3,500 for the year. J. L. Burger sustained president, with G. C. Tomlinson and J. C. Mottashed first and second vice presidents respectively. Resolution passed that district arrange a reunion of its own, committee being appointed to attend to same. Preaching by J. F. Curtis, S. W. L. Scott, R. D. Weaver, R. C. Evans, was excellent. Bishop's agent and secretary sustained; C. Deuscling elected member library board; Ruby Jenkins, of Thamesford, recommended for district chorister. Adjourned to meet with Stratford Saints, second Saturday and Sunday of October, 1916. P. H. Phillipin, secretary.

EASTERN MAINE.—Corea, October 2 and 3. Report showed increase of membership. Corea Branch organized by G. T. Griffiths in July, showed an increase of 5. Jonesport and Addison also reported. Bishop's agent's report approved. Meetings were of high order. District chorister was elected and we look for this district to get in line with the musical department of the church. We have plenty of good talent which we trust our able leader, Herbert Rogers, will be able to use. Preaching by Elders Koehler, Ebeling, Foss, Knowlton. Adjourned to meet at Jonesport in November. John F. Sheehy, secretary.

